crevice about the house where water could creep in, and we have learned that there is only one dry place in the house large enough for a bed. It has been very unpleasant indeed. I have gone about the house for days with skirts tucked up, wearing high ankle shoes and rubbers. Mattings were saturated and bare floors were pools of water notwithstanding the many pans and kettles that were set about to catch the water. Having doors and blinds closed, together with the leaden gloominess of the atmosphere, made the house so dark that one could not read, write, or sew. Had it not been that Bro. John had glass put in one of the front windows, it would have been darker still. Because of the noise of the rain on the iron roof we had to fairly shout when speaking to each other. So we wandered from one place to another and looked at it. The mountain stream was swollen to a rushing river that overspread the flat around about it several times. Ultimately the embankment gave way and down it came with a rush. This stream empties into the harbor, and such a constant flow, together with heavy, continuous rains, has raised the waters in the harbor so that when the tide comes in there is not room enough in the harbor, and it, too, overspreads portions of the street and several of our dooryards, and continues so up to the present writing. There were a few fine days of late and we all thought it had cleared off for good, but yesterday was a bad day again, and it still looks rainy. The merchants are utterly disgusted; no trading going on. Their small sacks of salt are threatening to become water and leave; their sugar is like molasses sugar, and rust, mold, and mildew pervades in shops as well as in dwelling-houses. At the Paumotu, the bufa won't dry. Neither can the divers dive in rough or rainy weather, so there is a general suspension of work. Fears are entertained that the March tides will do much damage unless there is a decided change of weather. The one good feature about this kind of weather is, that it is much cooler than when the sun shines.

The World's Greatest Show.

The Iowa State Fair is beyond question the greatest live-stock show in the world. Last year there were exhibited over six hundred and fifty head of cattle, this being only about fifty less than were shown at the Great Fat Stock Show, at Chicago last fall. The number of cattle to be shown at the State Fair this year will doubtless be greater than ever before, and, in order to accommodate the increased number, a large cattle-barn is being erected in addition to the many already on the grounds. Besides the regular premiums offered in the cattle department by the Fair management, special premiums are offered by the American Associations of the Short Horn, Aberdeen-Angus, and Hereford Cattle-breeders. These special premiums are very liberal, and will have the effect of bringing out representatives of some of the very best herds in the west. With the erection of the Stock Pavilion, making additional facilities for the showing and judging of this great show of live-stock, the Iowa State Fair presents the greatest inducements to stock-raisers everywhere to attend.

The laughter of life is its sunshine, and this would be a dull old world without some happy natures to lighten the pathway of those that plod always in sorrow.—Metaphysical Magazine, for June.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

"Let not the heart a future grievance borrow,
Nor o'er our path one faintest shadow lay;
Let not the clouds that may arise to-morrow Obscure the fairer sunshine of to-day."

"A TON would fall heavily on one man, would crush him to the ground; but twenty men could handle it with all ease."—J. C. Hitchcock. The above is very true and many a man has been crushed because the other nineteen did not do their part.

"ONE really interested person can interest many others and soon get enough to make the work a complete success. We can point to branches of the church, the outgrowth of a Sunday-school, which was in turn, the outgrowth of the interestedness of one person. The Home Department points in this direction. This is for you if you have not begun already."

THE Tenth Triennial International Sunday-school Convention will convene at Denver, Colorado, beginning June 26, closing June 30. It will probably be one of the greatest Sunday-school meetings ever held in America, and possibly in the world, although it is not the "World's Convention." There are to be representations from the whole of the United States with all its outside possessions. The Dominion of Canada, Mexico, and Cuba. The chairman of the entertainment committee in Denver expects there will be twenty thousand visitors from abroad at the convention. The program is a good one and will well repay any of our Sunday-school workers who can make it convenient to attend to do so. Several of our workers, among them the General Superintendent and his First Assistant, will attend. Very low rates on all railroads are given. Ask your local agent what they are. Entertainment there will not be free unless perhaps you have a friend there, but will be very reasonable, ranging from one dollar per day and upwards. A review of the work of the convention will be given through the department.

THE season for reunions is fast approaching. What have you done to represent the Sunday-school department or the Religio at these meetings? It would be expecting too much to expect complete success with your Sunday-school work at these meetings if you do not carefully prepare for it. The Lord helps those that help themselves. If preparation is not now being made or has not been made, it is time it was done at once. Whatever you do, do well. Let it be that which the workers and the schools need most. Make your work very simple and practical. It is all right to tell a young worker what he ought to do, but do not forget to tell him how to do it too. The how is often more important than the ought to.

I like the plan of holding real sessions of Sunday-school on camp grounds. It gives the people a chance to see how the work can be done. It is a reality then, not some one's theory. The experienced workers can make the session a very good model. And from it the less experienced worker will be able to get more that will be of practical benefit to him than he could possibly get from hearing the same process told about. But we must have our institute work too. There are several or many subjects that we can not illustrate at a camp-meeting. These we must talk over. But the successful leader will not do all the talking. He will so direct the trend of the talk that many will feel like talking or questioning about it, and they will too. We have seen our most timid workers induced to take a part in a round table discussion on some practical subject. Try it. Use the blackboard to outline the work or rather to make note of the points as you pass them by and at close of work make a summary or review of what you have done, remembering that it is not theory but practical work; not how much but how well that we want.

Make your work of the pleasant good-natured kind. I like to see the pleasant happy side of life all that I can. There is enough of the doleful, tiresome, or disagreeable in this world that we can not prevent without making or allowing any of it ourselves. It is a fact that the leader or instructor that can keep his scholars feeling well, or even jovial will be able to get the most work out of them, and therefore accomplish most. And it is not necessary to carry a funeral face at all times simply to be religious. If we have a genuine true religion, we will be too happy for that. "Be cheerful in your warfare."

I have often wondered if the lack of real cheerfulness was not the secret of our failures many times. How often it is that the cheerfulness of one individual will lighten up the whole crowd. A sort of heaviness of spirit or even a feeling of gloom will give way to the sunshine of a single smiling face. This being true, let us arrange to leave behind for a little season the many things that tend to make our lives tiresome and disagreeable, and go to the camp-meeting and see if we can not both cheer and be cheered, help and be helped, love and be loved. These meetings come to the bodily-tired and worn-out Saint as an oasis to the traveler in the burning desert. They are calculated to rest us, to refresh us, and actually make us better men and women. We learn there to admire and follow the better traits of our brethren. To love our brethren better because we know they love us. And last, but not the least, we learn to love our blessed Redeemer better. He has cheered us when we were despondent, comforted us when we were in sorrow or distress. He has provided for our wants, forgiven our sins, and promised a reward to the faithful. He has blessed us but we have not always returned to give him the thanks. We have often been admonished to do right but have gone on in the same old ways. We have grieved him and he has wept, still he is ever ready to forgive and bear us up if we will. Who is it that is not happy in these thoughts?

THE General Superintendent and his assistants will be available for much of the reunion work if we can know of it in time to make proper arrangements for the same. Write us at once where and when your meeting will be and we will do our best to provide for you. If you can not give the exact date, give it as nearly as you can. This will be of much assistance to us. Let us hear from you as soon as you can give even approximate date.

Editors Herald: Since I came into my field I have made two new openings and had a fine interest, and some will obey the truth soon; especially at this place. I find it a hard battle to open new places in this field, but I expect to spend the entire summer in opening new places. It requires hard work and lots of patience and considerable money. I will ask the Lord for strength and try to exercise patience and trust the Saints and friends will help on the financial line. If any one thinks this is an easy mission I hope the church will send him next time.

My confidence in the work is being confirmed as I go along. I rejoice at the prospects before the church, and although the church may face opposition we have nothing to fear.

I would like to hear from the Saints in South and North Dakota informing me of openings where they reside and I will try to fill as many requests as time and finance will permit.

May Zion soon be redeemed and the Saints dwell in peace in their own land.

Editors Herald: Although not in my regular field I have been busier in a sense than if I had been. It was but natural to use the time that will elapse before starting to my field in visiting. However, there has been as much preaching. Have done the former during the day and the latter in the evening. The weather has been very warm, which has made it much harder. I am glad, however, that I am able to be thus active instead of being in the condition of our brother J. W. Wight. I only wish I could divide with him the opportunity I have in reference to visiting. It is almost too much for me. It is no easy matter to travel around over the country on foot ten or fifteen miles every day and then preach in the evening. It is nice to be popular, to have a host of friends and admirers who besiege one on every hand anxious to shake hands or invite one to stay with them all the way from a few hours to a day, a week, or a month. None are so exacting as old friends and schoolmates. Every one thinks you must make it your particular business to come and see him, which makes it hard to do equal and exact justice to all. However, I am enjoying myself immensely, as much indeed as one can when so much exertion is required.

The farmers are very busy just now, and in traveling from place to place I discommode them as little as possible. Altogether I regret only one thing and that is that I have not more time to spend here. It is so encouraging to be where there is no danger of being misunderstood or misrepresented.

I came to this place the 4th instant, and have been preaching ever since. The people are taking great interest. Dozens would be baptized if we could remain a few weeks or months. The work here is in better condition than ever before. This is largely due to the labors of our worthy brother, M. R. Scott, Jr., who is loved by all. The branch president, Bro. David H. Baggerly, brother of J. M. and son of V. D. Baggerly (now deceased), is doing efficient work.

Last Sunday I had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. Robert E. Davis. He is mail and freight agent at this place for the Louisville and Evansville Mail Company. Said company is one of those having an interest in the navigation of the Ohio River. Bro. Davis is an energetic young man but is hindered by a tendency toward consumption which not long since had reached the second stage. He adopted, however, what is commonly called "the outdoor" treatment and is now on the road to recovery. This plan has been recommended by some for years but has been questioned by reputable physicians who, like other mortals, are conservative and afraid of any "new departure." The science of medicine is like theology. Discoveries in the former are usually made by quacks and old women. Discoveries in the latter are as a rule made by heretics. Soon after Bro. Davis adopted the course referred to, a regular physician said, "That consummate fool will die in a little while," but time has added another to the list of false prophets. The theory still appears to be true. This is because it is based upon natural reasons. It assumes first of all that consumption is a house disease and is caused and intensified by sedentary habits. It exists least, if at all, among those who lead a free and adventurous life. Therefore, to prevent or cure it we must get near to nature's heart. Bro. Davis' practice consists of taking as much exercise as he can stand in connection with sleeping in the open air. The sleeping place, however, should be in as dry a place as practicable. In this case the cot is placed on a porch where it is kept and occupied summer and winter. The coldest weather doesn't drive the occupant in, but rainy weather, especially when the rain blows in on the bed, does. Yesterday a reporter representing the Indianapolis News interviewed Bro. Davis. He took all the particulars in the case, including photographs of the house and bed. This was done not to inform the world of something new, but to furnish evidence of a practical test demonstrating the utility of the plan.

Bro. James M. Baggerly and I start for Louisville to-day.

There we separate. He goes to Canada and I gradually make my way over the range and across the sea.

I have implicit confidence in God and his work.

Editor Herald: I am busy at work, am trying to tell the gospel story to the people of this part. I am now preaching three miles east of Jamison in Bro. Willey's neighborhood; began meeting at his schoolhouse Wednesday evening, calculating to hold only over Sunday, but when Sunday came some requested continuance, so I left it to a vote, and several hands went up, so what could I do but stay? There were Methodists, Baptists, Christian Scientists, Catholics, and Brethren, so you see that if a Latter Day Saint preacher holds his congregation he must be on his guard or he will offend some one. My audience has grown from the time I began, till last Sunday night there were not seats enough for the crowd, so lots of them stood outside and looked in at the windows. Yesterday I spent the day at Methodist and Christian homes. Had a nice time and was made welcome and heartily invited back again, and to-day I am invited to dine with a Christian Scientist. I am enjoying good liberty. There are only a few Saints here, but they are Saints in deed and in truth.

Some are interested and we think some will come into the church before long. Brethren, let us improve every opportunity afforded us for the advancement of this great latter-day work.

Will close my meeting at this point Thursday night and start Friday to Lucas to quarterly conference. May the gospel roll forth, is my prayer.

H. J. THURMAN.

DAYTON, Ohio, June 18.

Editors Herald: June 2 I came to this place, but on account of the street fair did not do anything till the 7th, when I began preaching on the streets. This was the first time I ever tried anything of the kind, and I really dreaded the undertaking. But as it was the only thing to do, we put on a bold face and made the effort. Wednesday, the 11th, Bro. V. M. Goodrich joined me, since which time we have occupied alternately. We are having good crowds with increasing interest. No time since entering the ministry have I enjoyed better liberty than here.

We have sold one copy each of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants to a gentleman who told his wife he had heard the gospel for the first time. He lives twenty miles out of the city and has invited us out to his place to preach, so the way seems to be opening to get the work in new places. Satan is on the alert, however, and has already sounded a warning cry of "Mormons," but we are counteracting it by circulating tracts explaining to the people who we are.

We have announced for this evening to show the origin of "Mormonism" and place polygamy where it belongs. The Utah elders are in the city and have been out to hear us, but have had nothing to say.

We stirred some of the "shepherds" up Monday evening when we spoke on authority. One colored preacher who represents nobody but just "called of God to preach the gospel" was to hear us, also an Adventist who said we were as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal," and neither of them would read a tract. One woman, also "called of God to preach," said she saw us in our place; that we were at the foot of the ladder while she was at the top. But judging from her philosophy she is a "little lower than the angels" yet.

We are feeling well and contented. But I unwisely overtaxed my voice the first evening, as I had not done much preaching since General Conference and was not in condition for such work; and it is harder here, anyway, on account of the noise of street-cars. I have learned a lesson and will try and profit by it in the future. I rather like street work now and will never be idle for the want of a place to preach again, especially in the summer season. We can reach many good, thinking people this way that we never would in a church or hall.

Dayton is a hustling city of eighty-five thousand population, with more than nine hundred factories. It is a "religious town," judging from the number of large church spires that reach toward the sky, but the Catholic Church seems to predominate, as she is represented by about thirty thousand communicants.

The United Brethren publishing house, bookbindery, and general headquarters are here also.

Other features might be mentioned, such as the National Soldiers' Home, with about six thousand inmates. The Public Library is not to be overlooked either. I have spent several hours in there gathering ammunition to combat the hosts of "Mystery, Babylon," especially of an archæological nature. As about all the leading works from Humboldt up to the last one are to be found there. We called on the president of the board to see about getting the Church History and Book of Mormon placed there also, but he referred us to the librarian, who is out of the city for a while, so we gave it up, for a time at least. I think the Saints should see that our representative works are in every library in the country, as a great deal of good may be accomplished in that way.

APPLETON, Alabama, June 14.

Editor Herald: The HERALD and Ensign are the only preachers we have, except that once in a while Bro. W. J. Booker passes through the country and stays all night with us. The people will lock us out of the schoolhouses and will not allow us to hold meetings in their churches. I give my old HERALDS to those I think will read them, and some will carry them home and lay them in the fire to keep the family from reading them. There is no preaching of ours near us. I talk and plead with my neighbors to stop long enough to hear the glorious gospel, but they will not. It has got so that it makes them mad to mention the latter-day doctrine. I feel good when I know the HERALD is in my house.

There has been no rain here in nearly four weeks. Crop prospects are not good. Prices of everything in the food line are very high.

G. H. SHELL.

HAMLET, Kentucky, June 16.

Editors Herald: I reached my field the first of May and have been active, but the people are very busy in this country, some not done planting corn and setting tobacco yet, so our crowds have been very small and we have had to travel over considerable territory and do a great deal of "fireside preaching." And I am not sure but that did lots of good while we were among the Utah people. They can stand talking upon the differences much better than to hear us preach upon them. It gives them a chance to ask questions (and they ask them, too), and then you can take the books and read to them and make them understand. I think we will reach the honest ones after while. I think there are some good, honest people among them, and they are getting too much light for Utahism.

We are now at Davis Chapel, the place of the White-Braden debate. On Thursday night, just after the benediction was pronounced, there were three or four shots fired about fifty yards from the arbor where we were. On Friday night after we left there was some dirty work done at the arbor. On Saturday night, when I had talked about forty minutes, they opened fire on us from ambush, firing eight or ten shots right into the arbor among women and children. We could hear the bullets cut through the brush over our heads. Several said they felt the wind of the bullets pass them, but only one felt the lead. Bro. Hardman Lamb was shot in the knee, the ball striking the kneecap and ranging up. The doctor took the ball, a thirty-two caliber, out just above the knee. His leg is not broken, but I fear the cap is fractured. He has suffered considerably with it. Everything is at a high pitch and I fear the-worst has not come. The Saints here are young in the cause and are not in a condition to stand too much of that kind of treatment. Some of our brethren and friends were out yesterday trying to get bloodhounds to trail the intruders, but failed to get them, so they are still at large. I hope they will be brought to justice, but the officers are making no effort to find out who they are.

I preached Sunday at eleven a. m. with excellent liberty, but at four p. m. I never felt as much of the power of the Devil around me in my life as I did at that time. It seemed like there was a heavy pressure coming from every direction. There are some here who want to be baptized before we leave, but I do not know now whether they will or not, as they are not well and we will not stay here as long as we expected. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

W. R. SMITH.

ATCHISON, Kansas, June 17.

Editors Herald: Conference of Northeastern Kansas District just closed. Everything went pleasantly. Bro. S. J. Madden was chosen district president and will call on the different branches. Bro. Dunning and myself will go to the western part to commence labor. Will be glad to confer with any who want us to call on them where good is likely to be done. The field is large and laborers few, consequently we want to labor where our work will be most effectual.

I have been associated with Bro. S. J. Madden since the 20th of last month; we labored some in Leavenworth, preaching in the private houses of Bro. Smock and Sr. Weise. Bro. Buckley, the only officer here, is trying to keep up weekly meetings.

Also labored in the country east of Leavenworth sixteen miles, in a Brighamite church building. They have about thirty members here. They treated us very kindly, furnishing oil and house. We gave them two sermons on succession. No very strong resistance to what was said. While here we made our home with Bro. Alma Dodd. His wife and four children were baptized by Bro. Madden. Have been blessed in our work.

GEORGE W. BEEBE, JR.

KIRKSEY, Kentucky, June 12.

Editors Herald: I see from the HERALD and Ensign that the elders as a rule got into their fields this year sooner than common. This, to my mind, is a step in the right direction. From what I can learn, the force in this mission is doing splendidly, except myself and Bro. James M. Scott. We were assigned to Eastern Tennessee and North Carolina to labor together. So far we have not been able to do much. I got to South Pittsburg, Tennessee, May 30, but failed to meet Bro. Scott as had been arranged, sickness of his wife keeping him at home. I was called home the next day after I got to my field. Our little five-year-old girl was accidentally killed the day I left home while playing with a buggy. The shock to my wife was so great she came near dying. But she is much better now. I will start back to my field next week. Think I can go this time with better feelings than I had before I started the 29th of May. A dreadful feeling was on me for weeks before I left home; never felt worse in leaving. But this has almost entirely departed. Trust I may enter the field again with faith and courage to push the work with all my energy. From what Bro. Scott writes me, guess I will have to labor alone this year.

If there are any Saints in Eastern Tennessee and North Carolina who want my assistance in the work, they can correspond with me at South Pittsburg, Tennessee. I shall try to open new fields this year. I think there are few Saints living in my field, but I shall try to bring others into the fold, or cast the bread on the waters that it may be gathered days hence. I trust I may have the prayers of the Saints that I may be kept from the power of the evil one. I have had to pass through some hard places in this country to get the work before the people. Have been shot at six or eight times; struck once with a stone; hit several times with eggs; my life threatened numbers of times. But I thank God that out of all these perils he has delivered me and given me favor in the eyes of the world. Nearly all who treated me so badly have since become my friends. The voice of the angel of the Lord to me once while I was contending with sixty-five or seventy men who had sworn they would kill me if I undertook to preach any more in that country, was, "Overcome evil with good." So the matter is settled with me as to the best way to meet the enemy. Good is the only thing that will overcome evil. I feel confident the elders will have but little trouble in the places where I have been traveling for the last few years, as the people are mostly friendly now.

I trust the work may soon move forward and occupy higher ground. I trust the elders in this field will make it a point to get the Saints they meet to take the church papers. Unless the Saints read the church papers they are not able to fully represent the work when called on to do so. Do not forget the outsiders, either. I have persuaded some to take the HERALD and Ensign who to-day are members and can ably represent the work.

So far I have received no copies of Bro. Heman C. Smith's book, Truth Defended. What is the matter? Are you all like Bro. James Adair, of Swan, Kentucky, think it is worth the money and more too?

I have arranged a debate to be held in November with Elder Dick Beel, of the Baptist faith, at Murray, county-seat of Calloway County, Kentucky. This will open the work at that place if it comes off.

If all the debates Bro. I. N. White has held with Elder Braden have been as successful as the one at Davis Chapel, Kentucky, last fall, it is time the Disciples were calling Braden off the track. Brn. W. R. Smith and Fields have been laboring of late in Trigg County, Kentucky, where I held the debate last fall with Elder Alcon, of the Utah church. Bro. Smith reports some nearly ready for baptism. He is fully able to show them some of Brigham's tricks.

The Saints here in Kentucky and Tennessee are looking for Bro. Joseph to meet with them this fall at the reunion at Oakland, Kentucky. We think he ought to give the South a visit this fall. It would please the Saints greatly and would assist the work to some extent.

I ask the Saints and friends in Western Tennessee and Kentucky to write me once in a while and keep me posted in the progress of the work. Will be glad to hear from any of you. With love to all the Saints and friends,

C. L. SNOW.

FREEWATER, Oregon, June 10.

Editors Herald: When I last wrote I lived in California. One year ago last May, I started with my family for Alberta, Canada, to get some of the cheap land which was so highly recommended and extensively advertised. We stayed about two months, and then came here. We made a mistake in going to Canada. We were advised by some not to make the move. But go we would, and now we must suffer the consequences. We not only lost our dear friends and about all our earthly possessions, but we lost a darling boy, our youngest, who was taken from us after we had been in Oregon one month. I firmly believe that had we stayed in California and continued to observe the law of tithing and where we would not be tempted to place our sick in the hands of doctors and druggists, we would now have our little home and darling boy.

We found no Saints, and of course no people with whom we could fully enjoy worshiping, but after attending the services of a few different denominations we decided that the Congregational pastor came the nearest to preaching without fear of the world, and so we commenced attending regularly at his church and Sunday-school. He took a very decisive stand against the saloons and other evils of the town, and as a consequence was sorely persecuted by the evilly disposed and forsaken by the greater part of the members of his church. He was so completely left without support that he was obliged to leave, which he did after serving a little over a year. He was a very radical man and had very advanced ideas on the Scriptures. One thing more than any other, perhaps, for which he was persecuted, was his denunciation of doctors and druggists, believing that God would heal all sickness. He also attacked secret societies and many other things over which the world is very sensitive. We were surprised to find a man in a sectarian church preaching such things. My wife often told him he ought to be a Latter Day Saint and he seemed always pleased. After we had attended his services awhile he asked us to join with them, but we told him we could not renounce our allegiance to our church, and he said that would not be necessary. He said as we had no services of our own we could join in fellowship with them until some of our elders came and established our faith here. We told him that Latter Day Saints did not partake of the sacrament with any of the denominations. He said that did not matter; it would be all right if we did; it would do us no harm; as much as to say it would do us no good.

Well, we joined with them and have just found out that "joining in fellowship" means more than we were led to believe. He seemed to have respect for our church all along until a few days before he left he gave me a little booklet entitled, "A stone in a hat," which he wanted me to read and answer. I read it and found it a gross attack on Joseph Smith and the church. It said that Joseph Smith translated the plates, or claimed to, by means of a stone which he had borrowed of a friend, and placed in his hat, and then looking in he was enabled to translate the characters on the plates into English. Then it tried to prove the fallacy of his revelations as he (Joseph Smith) once had a revelation commanding that some leaders in the church were to go to a distant town and sell some property for the church, and as they were unsuccessful in making the sale, it was evident something must be wrong, so Joseph went to the Lord about it and the Lord told him some revelations are of God, some of man, and some are of the Devil and that this one was of the Devil, hence their failure.

Another charge was that Joseph Smith introduced polygamy into the church himself and that volume 1 of the SAINTS' HERALD contained an acknowledgment of it. These and other charges were in the little book which I told him in a note I sent him that I would not attempt to answer, but would send him a copy of Etzenhouser's Book of Mormon and its translator. But I told him in my note that I had seen plenty of such stuff before and was always pained to see it go out into the world. I said I cared not what was brought up against them, I believed that Joseph Smith was lied about and that he founded the true church. The next day he sent a reply which was mighty sharp. He came right out and declared that Mormonism was a fallacy, and that it was the greatest imposition on the world since Mohammed, and that unless we renounced Mormonism he advised us to withdraw from fellowship in their church. We were shocked and surprised for a time. I called to see him the next morning, and he was very sorry, he said, for writing so sharply, and advised me to still work with the Sunday-school and other church work and not teach or try to promulgate any Mormonism, as my influence was too valuable and that we could not afford to burden ourselves with that stigma. He said I had better not try to get our elders in here, as it had been tried and was a failure. I tried to reason with him, but he seemed confident of his attitude, so I left him. Last Sunday my wife was elected secretary and I librarian of the Sunday-school and I was also chosen teacher of the senior class.

Yours in the faith,

WM. H. BIRSELL.

SLOAN, Iowa, June 16.

Editors Herald: Last year I labored in the Nodaway District with J. S. Snively, and while we had some discouragements we had some encouragements, and I found some warm-hearted Saints there. May God bless them for their kindness.

This year finds me in Little Sioux District. I was privileged to attend the General Conference at Lamoni. I was blessed and strengthened, and started into the mission field this year with renewed energy and zeal. I started out the first part of May. I went to Maple Landing and preached five or six times. The crowds were small, but I enjoyed telling the gospel story.

From there I went to Sloan, where I found a few Saints struggling hard to keep up an interest. They miss Sr. Efnie Winegar, but what is their loss is some one's gain. How we wish she were here now to help us in the tent services.

From there I went to Sioux City, where I found a little band of Saints laboring faithfully to keep the work moving, with Bro. M. P. Berg as their leader.

I stayed with them until June 3, then came home a few days to attend the district conference. I had not met with the Saints in the city before and was glad to make their acquaintance. I found Sr. Townsend making arrangements to go to Beloit, Wisconsin, where her husband is, and regret that he left home a few days before I reached there. The Saints will miss them, as also will the missionaries, for we all find a home there while in the city, and are made welcome. We had a good conference.

This writing finds H. N. Hansen here with me at Sloan with the tent. We commenced meetings yesterday with a fair turnout, but can not tell what the results will be. I expect Bro. J. C. Crabb in a few days to help in the services, and Bro. Hansen is going to the city to be with them over Sunday. We have plenty of calls for preaching, and the work seems to be moving on nicely in Little Sioux District. Dear Saints, remember me in your prayer.

OMAHA, Nebraska, June 18.

Editors Herald: I inclose a little booklet ("Alexander Campbell on the Book of Mormon") reprinted and circulated by our friend of the Christian Church of this city, W. T. Hilton, thinking you might like to see it. I have sent home for my Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon, from which the quotations are evidently made, so I can more readily examine the positions assumed. I think I shall reply to some points in discourse soon. This may be the commencement of the war which our Christian friends talked of waging in this city against the Mormons this season, as published in one of their papers last spring. The reprinting of this old attack against the Saints by Alexander Campbell seems to me to indicate that our Christian friends are out of material for a new line of argument with which to attack "the faith once delivered to the Saints."

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 18.

Editors Herald: The Honolulu, New Zealand, and Australian missionaries expect to sail from San Francisco, via S. S. Ventura, July 24, and those going to Australia are due in Sydney, August 15. Will Bro. Dixon or any of the brethren in New Zealand write to D. E. Tucker or P. M. Hansen, addressing them, G. P. O. Auckland, where we are due August 11, giving these pioneer missionaries any information they may deem necessary. Bro. Barmore and I will go on to Sydney, and if agreeable to Bro. Butterworth, Bro. Barmore will go directly to Victoria to labor, so that he may be addressed, G. P. O. Melbourne, Victoria, United States of Australia. In time either Bro. Butterworth or I will likely go to New Zealand. After consulting with each other we will very likely issue a joint pastoral through the Australian Standard. In the meantime I trust that we will all remember the importance of the work intrusted to our care and act energetically in harmony therewith.

Bro. Tucker and Hansen go to New Zealand to open up the work. They will need the sympathy, prayers, and financial aid of the Saints scattered abroad. If the Saints will write them and inclose financial aid it will certainly be appreciated. Theirs is one of the most prodigious tasks yet undertaken by the Reorganization. Address them Auckland, New Zealand, till they notify you. My mission address will be Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, care of Geo. Lewis.

It may be explained that New Zealand extends one thousand miles north and south. Bro. Dixon and Rennie live in the southern part of the country. Auckland is in the northern portion. You will at once see the necessity of helping these brethren what you can. I look for good results in this mission, and so soon as I am physically able hope to help bear the burden of opening up in the heat of the day.

Am in bed while I write, but hope that this long siege of acute rheumatism shall have been sufficiently eradicated that I may sail with the others as above noted.

CORMORANT, Minnesota, June 14.

Editors Herald: I send you a clipping from the Fergus Falls Journal concerning the death of Elder Chauncey Whiting, the last remaining counselor of Alpheus Cutler. Elder Whiting was well thought of by all who knew him, and seemed to be an honorable man of the earth. He was eighty-two years and eleven months old at the time of his death. He united with the church before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, but after their death he followed the fortunes of Alpheus Cutler. Being in Clitherall holding meetings at the time, I was requested to preach his funeral sermon, which I did on Monday, June 9, to a large gathering of relatives and friends; there being thirty teams in the procession to the grave, showing that he was respected by those who were acquainted with him. Surely he will receive an honorable man's reward.

I am now on my way to the Northern Minnesota reunion to be held at Frazee, beginning the 20th, and holding over two Sundays. Have been holding meetings on the way here, and while at Clitherall preached ten times in nine days. Have two appointments out for to-morrow, and may continue a few days if interest demands.

Bro. E. Hayer and I left home the 25th of April for our fields of labor, but parted company at Pipestone, Minnesota, he going through the Dakotas on his way to the reunion and I coming this way. I feel that my coming by Clitherall was providential. I am feeling well in the work and the Lord is blessing me in preaching the word. To him be all the praise.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, June 19.

Editors Herald: I am ever watching for the HERALD and Ensign. I have taken both for four years and it would be hard for me to do without them. They cost me nothing and I pay for them when I get them. The reason is, I take the money I formerly used to buy tobacco and coffee, and that will not take one eighth of the money. I can buy books, and I feel healthier than for years, and my mind is clearer and my hearing is improving. I find that we must make some sacrifice and we must put away these things that are useless, as well as pay tithing. The lawyer said the greatest command is to love the Lord thy God with all thy might, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself, and the Lord said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Then we ought to put away all these things that are of no use, and not trust in what we have, but think that all we have is the Lord's and we are stewards over it. When he comes he will require us to account for how we have used it. When the time comes to gather, we who are of the land of Zion will have to be doing what is right or we can not stay. We may have a home, but the pure in heart are to inherit the land, then if I am not one of them I can not enjoy my home. I have a home here, and I hope to stay, and to this end I will ever strive. I know the evil power has tried to destroy me, but I believe God's word to be the word of life. Let us all do all we can for the cause.

I see some have not paid so much tithing last year as before, and some none; but I was glad to see some more coming in to help the work along. As for me, I have nothing to live for now but to try and do the will of God, and if I do any one wrong I will do all I can to make it right when they will show me by the law of God. I have many times tried to think that I could not serve God aright and I would not try, but I have made up my mind to do all I can and will get my reward for what I have done. Pray for me that I may receive my hearing, that I may be able to help more.

F. T. DOBIE.

LYDIA, Texas.

Editors Herald: We are having some very hot and dry weather at present. Some are anticipating another drought. Corn crops are very fine if we can only get rain in a few days. Bro. E. L. Henson and I are doing all we can to preach the gospel. We are holding meetings every Saturday and Sunday and at night through the week. We are having good crowds and fine interest, and scores seem ready for baptism, but the people get so near the kingdom and can not get any nearer.

My heart leaps with joy when I think about the wonderful change that has taken place in this country in regard to the gospel. Some fourteen years ago when Bro. J. D. Erwin began to preach in this country there was a howling mob, and eight years ago when I began to tell the angel's message, I had eggs thrown at me, efforts were even made to put a snake on me. I thank the Lord that such is not the case to-day. It seems the angels have gone before and prepared the way, and there are calls from all parts of the country for preaching. The citizens take us by the hand and say, Come, Bro. Erwin, and preach for us. They feel that a great day is about to dawn. And so I think the gospel has a bright future in this country.

Another bright feature is that the Saints of Eastern Texas upon the whole are noble people and in the vicinities where they live they are looked upon as good people. I pray the day will come when the Saints will number thousands in Eastern Texas.

Bro. E. L. Henson is doing good labor with me. His future is very bright if he will live faithful.

Ever praying for the success of Zion.

E. A. ERWIN.

HAZAEEL, Ohio, June 19.

Editors Herald: I am here following a good work done by L. R. Devore last winter. He baptized some fourteen persons here, others are near. Brn. V. M. Goodrich and Elmer E. Long are faithfully at work in Dayton doing street work and having interest. Brn. Beatty, James E. Kelley, and H. E. French are pushing the work in Columbus, while Brn. J. L. Goodrich and S. J. Jeffers are at Ironton or vicinity. Thus all are actively engaged in this district.

H. E. MOLER.

MORRISON, Oklahoma, June 17.

Editors Herald: I reached my mission field the latter part of May. This being in the time of the heavy rains, which flooded the country, little could be done. I reached here just as the people began the wheat harvest, and those disposed to attend our meetings could not. So our progress has been quite slow. I have held a good meeting, however, at the Oakgrove Branch. Closed our efforts last night. The attendance was small, but trust some good was done. The Saints of this branch, by their honorable walk before the world, are doing what they can to advance the cause. Elder H. C. Hughes, formerly of about forty miles northwest of Lamoni, Iowa, is the president of the branch. He has bought one half section of land here, a beautiful farm in quite a good state of cultivation, and from appearances is doing well temporally as well as spiritually. Bro. A. P. Bly is the priest of the branch and also Sunday-school superintendent. The school seems to be prospering. In fact this little branch is trying to keep pace with the leading developments of the church.

I go from here to Stillwater the latter part of the week. Would say to the Saints in Eastern and Northern Oklahoma, Write me in relation to the needs of the work, or where openings can be effected. My mission address, Hunnewell, Sumner County, Kansas. Home address, Lamoni, Iowa.

ISAAC BAGGERLY.

GARFIELD, Oregon, June 1.

Editors Herald: We live where we have no church privileges, being isolated from the Saints, and our settlement is small. We have a small Sunday-school, but the people do not take much interest. Bro. C. E. Crumley was here a short time before General Conference and did some preaching. The people would like to hear him again. It was the first of the restored gospel they ever heard here, and they say he is the best speaker they ever heard. Our nearest branch is Hood River, Oregon, about eighty miles.

I am studying the books and papers and growing stronger in the faith daily, doing what I can for the cause. My wife and oldest daughter were baptized on March 1 by Elder C. E. Crumley. I was baptized in Kansas, in August, 1885, by A. H. Parsons. I ask the prayers of the Saints that we may ever be faithful, and that some may be brought into the fold from this part of the globe.

R. S. COOP.

ALICE, Indiana, June 20.

Editors Herald: I am feeling well in the work. Large crowds and good interest. Some will be baptized here Sunday. The brethren are all busy doing all they can to build up the kingdom and establish truth in the land. Prospects are good all over the district for a good work being done this year. Three debates pending. The adversary is hard at work, a sure sign of good being done. May the Lord bless you in the work, and ever keep you in the arms of love, mercy, and protection.

G. JENKINS.

DENVER, Colorado, June 19.

Editors Herald: June first found me at Canon City, where I had gone in response to a request from Bro. Alma B. Chatburn to be there that day and assist him and Miss Angeline Laws to embark on the sea of matrimony. After partaking of luncheon with them in their quiet little home all prepared for housekeeping, I departed for Pueblo, arriving in time to attend the Sunday evening service. They were just ready to begin preaching, and insisted that I should occupy, which I did with fairly good liberty.

Friday Bro. J. W. Morgan joined me, and we held services over Sunday; but the attendance was quite small each evening, except Sunday evening, when it was quite good. On the 8th we organized the Pueblo Branch with thirteen members. They will have five or six others when they obtain their letters of removal. Priest H. L. Ashbaugh was ordained to the office of an elder and chosen president of the branch, and Bro. John V. Woolsey was ordained to the office of a priest. These with Sr. Minnie Woolsey as clerk and Bro. J. D. Jackson as treasurer constitute their corps of officers for the present. Their place of meeting for the present is at Bro. Ashbaugh's house, 1632 East Sixth Street, but they hope to get the use of a hall for Sunday services in the near future. Any of the brethren who may be passing through there and can stop off will be gladly received by the Pueblo Saints.

From Pueblo we went to Rocky Ford. The busy season forbade our holding services during the week, but we spent the time, I believe profitably, in visiting the Saints in that locality. Sunday, June 15, we met at the house of Bro. Gregory in Rocky Ford and organized a branch to be known as the Rocky Ford Branch. We had nine members to organize with, but the branch will have about twenty-two members when all have obtained their letters of removal. Elder John Brennan was chosen president, Bro. Fred Petrie priest, Bro. Elmer Petrie teacher, and Sr. Jennie Bozarth clerk.

Bro. W. T. Bozarth lives in that locality and much credit is due him for his efforts in getting the Saints to locate there, making a branch organization possible. He is striving hard to arrange his business affairs so as to be able to enter the missionary field again, this fall. Ill health has kept him out of the field for a few years past, but this western climate has been of such great benefit to him that he thinks he will be able to do active missionary work in this climate without suffering any great amount of inconvenience. The desire of his soul is to be in the missionary field, and we will certainly be glad to welcome him to the work.

The Rocky Ford country offers some good inducements to those who may wish to try this western country for a change of climate. The Saints who have located there are doing well, but the nature of the crops raised and the seasons require men to hustle if they would succeed. The slow, easy-going man might do better some place else.

Bro. Morgan departed on the 17th for Gardner, New Mexico, to engage in a ten-night discussion with Reverend Strickland of the Church of Christ. I hope the debate may be the means of opening doors for preaching the word in that locality.

The prospect before us in this field is quite encouraging, and we trust we may have many good things to report to you during the year.

Dear Herald: While we can not report a great number of additions, I think we are permanently advancing all along the line. I have visited Richhill, baptizing one, Nevada, Fort Scott, Veve, Eldorado Springs, and Coal Hill, and have tried to urge the Saints onward. Our conference was held at Coal Hill last Saturday and Sunday. We had a peaceful, spiritual feast. Our missionary in charge, Apostle I. N. White, was with us and gave us grand instruction. Our missionary force were all present, and all went away rejoicing. Our district reunion begins here August 9, and will hold over the 17th. Bro. I. N. White will be with us, and possibly Bishop Kelley. I go from here, in company with Bro. J. N. Stephenson, to hold forth in the courthouse at Osceola. Crops are fine in this part of the State, and the people seem cheerful. Two were baptized at our conference. I desire to do my best in the great work, and am hopeful of final triumph. May we keep our lamps trimmed and burning.

JAMES MOLER.

BEVIER, Missouri, June 23.

Editors Herald: I am in the field doing what I can to advance this great latter-day work. I entered my new field May 25. Held meeting at Higbee, Missouri, one week; on to Huntsville, Missouri, one week; thence on to Bevier to attend conference June 14. We had a splendid conference, Bishop Kelley was with us, and he put in two rousing sermons, and gave some sound advice to the Saints concerning their duty.

Bro. J. A. Tanner and I continued the meetings all the week. I closed last night with a fine congregation. I find some fine people, noble Saints in this district. We have only two missionaries and a tent, a buggy and a horse. How we will manage it is bothering my mind at present. O what a demand for preaching everywhere! What do young men want to quit for?

O the love of money is the root of all evil! Will money buy us a part in the millennium with Christ? No, no! Let us work and pray.

J. D. ERWIN.

NANTYGLO, Wales, June 11.

Editors Herald: I have just commenced missionary work. The outlook is encouraging. We are four missionaries in the field. Bro. William Lewis, sub-missionary in charge, understands the nature of the work,—the right man in the place. The Saints in general like Bro. Lewis. He says he is a natural coward about preaching on the streets, but I do not believe it now, because he is firing away now first rate.

At Penygraig and Tonypandy the local officers are doing their best to assist. Bro. Pierce is doing well at tracting. He has done a considerable amount at Nantyglo, Brynmawr, and Aberaman. At the latter he has preached on the street a few times. We have to meet with Utahism nearly everywhere. Some one or other wants to hang it on to the fair name of our church. All some folks know about Latter Day Saintism is polygamy. Bro. W. Lewis has a good tract explaining its origin and its condemnation by divine revelation in Bible, Book of Mormon and in this dispensation. The apology from Mr. Jarman to Bro. William Newton is famous for breaking the ice for us to bring the scriptural side to bear more heavily against the apostasy in part of the latter days. Could Bro. Newton let us know if Mr. Jarman's apology was given publicity through the press, and what papers? I have not had any challenge to it yet, but may get some. I have read the book "Hell upon Earth" and know the quotations are there in favor of the Reorganization. We have to draw the line now a little; all that used to be done in Utah is not carried on now. I got into my hands a manifesto from Utah but on the cover pages were advertized books, "Polygamy as Taught by Latter Day Saints," and several others defending objected doctrines. I showed it to one of their elders, and he said he did not know of such books.

I do not think our path will be smooth here; the way seems hedged up with prejudice and indifference in many places. But this is a work of faith, brethren and sisters, and we can all engage in it, one by tithes, another by offerings, and another by sacrifice, and all by living our religion. The outlook is encouraging because many are willing to labor to fulfill God's command to preach the gospel as a witness. Paul says the gospel is life unto life, or death unto death; but it can not be either unless it is preached, leaving the results with God. It says in Enoch's prophecy: "And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city."—Doctrine and Covenants 36:12. It means that before Christ's second coming the gospel is to be preached abundantly, as with a flood. The word explains itself. The work is in its infancy as to accomplishing its end to reach all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples. Yes, men of every tongue shall minister before our God. The work is great, the laborers few, as it was in Christ's day.

I was encouraged by an occurrence recently while over at the Aberaman Branch on Easter Sunday. A son of Sr. Evans, of Hirwain, came to ask Bro. Lewis, the president of the branch, to administer to his wife, who lay at death's door. Her system had been running down for months. She had pneumonia, and typhoid fever had set in. It was a sad house; five children there, and the mother in a dying condition, given up by the doctor. We anointed her, amid cries of "Lord have mercy on my soul!" There was a reason for that. We rebuked the disease in the name of our Master. The good sister tells of the knowledge she received of this work by the preaching of Bro. Heman C. Smith. But she had neglected it, and that was the reason of her cries for mercy and forgiveness. She had neglected God-given knowledge. When I was over here a week or so ago I heard her and her husband in a meeting desiring baptism, testifying of a knowledge that this is God's work. It shows that God works in a mysterious way. It was about four years since Bro. Smith was here. It proves that Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but He who said, "I will hasten my work in its time," gives the increase.

I hear that Bro. Davies is in Scotland; will be in Wales soon. May God help his struggling Zion to live a life of beauty.
55 King Street. THOMAS JONES.

KNOX, Indiana, June 23.

Editors Herald: I wish to call the attention of the brethren and friends to the fact that this church has no hirelings, but that the elders are sent out without purse or script to deliver the angel's message. The Saints should remember that these brethren deny themselves the pleasure and comforts of home and family, trusting that the brethren and friends for whose benefit they labor will not forget to minister unto their wants. But is it not a fact that very frequently the Saints and friends neglect to provide sufficient expense money, or in other words properly provide for the brother? A very little effort on the part of the brethren would make it very easy for them to meet all these expenses, which if they neglect makes it a hardship for the elder to provide for his own traveling expenses or compels him to walk.

Some time ago I learned of an elder who had traveled nearly seven hundred miles, preached on an average more than one sermon every other day for sixty days, gave lectures, administered, and performed several baptisms and by overwork became sick. Had large and very attentive congregations, and when the brother was obliged to return home he was short in his cash account over twelve dollars. It appears to me that this is very wrong, and the Saints should be put in mind of what their duty is to these traveling elders.

I ever pray for the upbuilding of Zion, and desire an interest in the prayers of the dear Saints. HENRY MOCK.

Reunion Notices.

The Fairview Branch, near Delta, Colorado, has concluded to hold a reunion of its members and all Saints in Western Colorado, and has set the date July 25, 26, and 27. We extend a cordial invitation to all missionaries passing through or in this part of the Lord's vineyard to try and be present and help us make the meeting a success. M. L. Schmid.

Oklahoma reunion will convene August 8, at Dover, Oklahoma, on the main line of the C., R. I. & P., and last ten days. An excellent grove one half mile west of town is where the reunion will be held. We expect to again hire a cook and run a boarding-tent, which will be run on the cooperative principle. This will relieve the sisters of much care, anxiety, and many times downright drudgery. Pasture and other accommodations no doubt can be secured very reasonably. Saints, lay aside your temporal affairs for this short season, and come with prayerful hearts, with a sincere desire to come nearer unto God, and our spirituality will be renewed and our faith and confidence in the great latter-day work will be stronger and more firmly established. A cordial invitation to be present is extended to all Saints as well as the public. District conference will be held in connection with the reunion, August 15. The branches should formulate their reports correctly to be handed in on time. Address all letters to the reunion committee, R. M. Maloney, Sealing, Oklahoma; James Yates, Guy, Oklahoma, or S. S. Smith, Redmoon, Oklahoma.

Annual reunion of Clinton District, Missouri, will be held at Roscoe, St. Clair County, beginning August 9, and will continue over two Lord's days. We desire to have a spiritual feast, and request all who possibly can to attend. Those who can, come prepared to provide for themselves and camp on the grounds. A nice grove, good water, and a good people. Hay, straw, wood, and grain will be on the grounds at reasonable prices. Pasture will also be provided at reasonable rates. Elder I. N. White will be with us, and possibly Elder E. L. Kelley. All are welcome. James Moler, President of District and Committee.

The Southwestern Iowa reunion will be held at the same place as last year in the Greene Grove three and one half miles south of Tabor, Iowa, beginning August 16, closing August 24. The local branch will have full charge of the arrangements and will give notice of their conveniences as soon as same can be provided for. The success that the brethren there have made with the meeting the two years past assures us that we may expect an enjoyable time. Begin now to plan to come. P. W. Frederickson, J. Frank Greene, Frank Becksted, Committee.

Annual reunion of Des Moines District will be held at Newton, Iowa, August 15-24. The committee in charge will endeavor to make complete arrangements and the Saints of the district are urged to attend. Necessary details in regard to the meeting will be published soon. A. A. Reams, Chairman Committee.

The special attention of branches is called to the fact that subscriptions will be required to meet expenses as the treasurer is without funds. Half-fares of visiting elders will be paid as heretofore. Brn. G. T. Griffiths, Peter Anderson, and J. W. Rushton, of the Twelve, and all the missionaries will be present. We are looking forward to a good time.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Northeastern Missouri District, Greeting: Not forgetting your noble efforts in tithes and offerings the past year, when, notwithstanding the failure of the crops caused by the drought, you increased your efforts and came to the rescue of God's work, I appreciate your kind favors of the past. The Lord has greatly blessed us this year with plenteous rain and prospects are good for a fine harvest. This is indeed encouraging to the farmers. Let us appreciate God's kindness towards us, and impart the Lord's portion out of what he has blessed us with. Let us see the name of each member of the district in our next annual report. Scattered members of this district, do not forget to send your tithes and offerings to the Bishop's agent. Let us all work together and send in our mite no matter how small it is. Do not withhold your tithes and offering because it is a small amount. Remember the widow's mite. Her offering was more than all that the rich cast in the treasury. They gave a portion out of their abundance and had plenty left, but the poor widow gave her living. The small amount is equal in proportion to the large amount with God. May his blessings continue with you all. J. T. Williams, Bishop's Agent.

Release From Mission.

Bro. R. W. Davis, appointed to labor in the Northwestern Kansas District, at the late April conference, is, for proper causes, and at his request, released from said mission field. His place will probably be supplied by the missionary in charge. Lamoni, Iowa, June 19, 1902. Joseph Smith, President. I. N. White, Missionary in Charge.

Died.

BLACK.—Charles J., son of John A. and Sr. Sada Black, was born at Richhill, Missouri, November 9, 1899, and died at the home in Omaha, Nebraska, June 10, 1902. Funeral services were conducted at the home of its grandparents, Bro. and Sr. S. S. Black, Omaha, on the 11th inst., by Elder C. E. Butterworth. He sleeps in Jesus.

PROPER.—At his home near Tawas City, Michigan, June 5, 1902, Samuel S. Proper. He was born August 14, 1826, at Gainsborough, Lincoln County, Ontario; came to Michigan with his family in 1882; was baptized by W. J. Smith, January 31, 1884. He will be missed, as he was a faithful brother. Wife, one daughter, three sons, and other relatives mourn. He slept peacefully until the change came, with the hope of a glorious resurrection. Coal Miners, Members of the L. D. S. Church.

The Independence Coal Mining Company, Independence, Missouri, which is composed of Ellis Short, William Crick, and R. May, will sell three fourths of its interest to members of the church. This is being put on the market for the mutual benefit of the present owners and those who wish to become stockholders.

Moneyed combines, labor unions, and strikes, when dictated to by unprincipled men, are a menace to many an honest man, and by taking a share in this Mining Company the miner will have steady work—for it is the intention to run the mine the year round, union scale wages, or as may be agreed upon—he will be free from the arbitrary wishes of strikers, and he will also be deriving benefit from the dividend resulting from his share.

There will be a position open for a manager, also for a pit-boss. These two men will be expected to buy several shares.

This mine has a good wagon trade. It is located twenty-one (21) miles east of Independence, on the Missouri Pacific Railway, and is accessible to Independence and also to Kansas City, which is the best market in the West.

The Company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. The stock capital is $8,000, one hundred dollars ($100) per share, fully paid up; but it will be necessary to increase this four thousand dollars ($4,000) in order to have a working capital and put in a coöperative store. Each miner is expected to take one or more shares.

The prospects for success are very bright, as the lease runs for twenty-seven (27) years for eighty acres of land, royalty ten cents per ton, and as much more land as the stock-holders desire, for we hold the key to thousands of acres of land.

The mine is in fair working conditions; its capacity is room for about ninety (90) men. It is "Long Wall Work," has good top, and a shaft forty-seven (47) feet deep.

The vein is seventeen or eighteen inches thick, which is the average thickness of coal in the Lexington Coal Mining District; and the coal is a first class quality, being a little better than the average grade of coal.

Now, the prospects for miners to buy shares and take hold in this mine are good, but they must act at once, for the season will soon be upon us when we will have to operate the mine.

The men who are operating this mine will have permanent work, and they will also have the association of honest, upright fellow-workmen, as only good and upright men will be allowed to own shares.

There are houses on the ground which belong to the Company and more that are at their disposal.

Brethren, improve this opportunity. Do not hesitate until it is too late.

ELLIS SHORT, President.

MRS. WILCOX'S IDEA OF A GOD OF LOVE.

In the Chicago American for June 9 Mrs. Wilcox writes in answer to a correspondent who asks how she would reconcile the idea of a God of love with the awful disaster at Martinique and the recent flood calamity at Galveston, Texas. In her answer Mrs. Wilcox says some things which are worthy of some consideration, though we do not agree with all she says. Our readers will note that she believes in the idea of reincarnation, and plainly states that she believes that we go from planet to planet to renew the cycle of our lives. Some of our people who usually delight to speculate concerning our existence before we were brought to this sphere, and what we shall be after we leave this life, may find pleasure in analyzing the positions taken by Ella Wheeler Wilcox in the article mentioned, which follows:

THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF GOD.

I am asked by a correspondent to explain how I reconcile the idea of a God of Love with the awful disaster at Martinique and the recent flood calamity at Galveston, Texas.

Simply by my belief (or knowledge) that this life counts no more in the eternal scheme of lives than a moment counts in a century. We have lived a hundred times on various planets—we shall live hundreds of other lives. One incarnation is of small consequence in the eyes of the Creator, and death means only transition.

It is no indication that our Maker loves one being more than another because that one is allowed to live to be a hundred years old and the other dies in early youth. Long life is often a great disaster if the individual to whom it is granted has not learned how to be happy.

A small child receives a severe bruise and suffers for an hour or a day, and a slight scar remains. The man of fifty, looking back, does not count that experience as important. Neither will the matured soul count this life or its sudden exit from it of vast importance as it looks back. Yet the impress of its experience here will be left. Experience is the object of all life.

We came from the Great All Source, and we are returning to it. That we can make the journey for ourselves and others happier and more beautiful by an absolute, unswerving faith in the God of Love back of all things I know. That a belief in our own divine origin and our oneness with God will mold circumstances to our liking I also know. But the way to such molding is long and the path steep, because it leads over the bowlders of self, and we must chisel our own stairway through the rocks. But God awaits us at the summit.

The great trouble with the most of us is that we magnify our petty lesser selves and desires and tasks, and ignore our real selves, and then doubt the existence of a God because our lesser selves suffer some disappointment or pain, which need not have come to us if we had recognized the divinity within.

God made millions of worlds—millions of planets. No man can make one—or even explain how the beginning began. Therefore the most reasonable explanation is that he whom we call God made all.

We were there in the beginning—and we always shall be. We have been evolving through every form of nature. We have reached a higher form than ever before, and we have millions of years ahead of us in which to attain still higher attributes.

Our reason has developed, and we know that small strips of land between two large bodies of water, and valleys shut in between seas and volcanoes, are not safe abiding places, if we care to keep on living this life. No matter how "extinct" a volcano may seem; no matter how calm the sea, history shows us that neither the mountain nor the sea should be trusted. Yet reasoning, sensible human beings built a large city on a strip of land and called it Galveston; and others built in the valley below the "extinct" volcano and called it St. Pierre. I do not see that the calamities which befell both places reflect on the "God of Love" any more than it would reflect upon him were you and I to take a daily walk along the parapet of a suspension bridge, and finally fall over and drown.

A man built a tiny boat and took to himself a wife, and induced her to attempt to cross the ocean with him last year in that boat. Both were lost at sea. Yet why blame God or declare he does not exist because of that?

The magnificence of this vast universe is beyond the scope of human intellect. One glance through a telescope at the heavens is enough to make the most brilliant being on earth sink back in unutterable awe. Yet poor, petty, pusillanimous creatures are daily and hourly sitting in judgment on the Creator of all things because a hail-storm destroyed a harvest, or a lightning stroke killed a cow, or death claimed a child, or a thief robbed the house!

Be still, and be ashamed, O petty cavilers! Look up and out at the glory of creation, and know that God lives, and that you are part and parcel of him, and nothing can befall you once you acknowledge this truth that all is ultimate and universal good. God is love. Glory be to God for ever!

STARR ON SUPERSTITION.

Professor Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, has expressed his views on superstition in this country. Recently he said before his class in anthropology:

In enlightened America there are shrines where relics of the saints are worshiped as objects of supernatural power, while in such countries as Mexico the grossness of religious superstitions is absolutely amazing.

All faiths that profess to cure disease by other than natural methods are examples of the survival of the superstition of the middle ages. In fact, the sway of superstition at the present time seems to be gaining ground, and in spite of the talk that this is an age of science, a reactionary tendency toward the beliefs of three centuries ago is actually evident.

"JOSEPHITE OPPOSITION."

In the letter column of the Deseret News, issue of June 9, semi-weekly edition, there appears the following under the heading "Josephite Opposition," written by Joshua P. Terry, from Cedar Rapids, Iowa:

The readers of your valuable paper will remember that in our last report to you, Elder Thomas E. Birch and I were meeting with considerable opposition from the Josephites in Council Bluffs. They challenged us to debate again and again, but we followed the counsel given us to have nothing to do with them.

We are satisfied this was the better way. When they found they could not draw us into a debate they followed us around, wherever we went to preach, whether on the streets or in the country, and when our meetings were over, hastened to fill the people's minds with terribly distorted stories.

Though they tried hard to have us do so, we would not remain to listen to their abuse and misrepresentations. We attended earnestly and faithfully to our own business.

KING EDWARD STRICKEN.

The people of Great Britain and the world have been much concerned about the condition of King Edward's health for some days past. Almost on the eve of his coronation he was stricken down by disease and was compelled to undergo a surgical operation, and for some time his life was hanging by a thread. However, at last reports he was gaining in strength and hopes rose that he would pass safely through the crisis. The coronation exercises have been indefinitely postponed. Great preparation has been made for them, and the English people have been put to great expenses which will be lost now; but they rejoice that their king still lives, and they are looking forward to the time when he will be successfully crowned. Various prophecies which have been pronounced concerning the life of King Edward have caused him some worry, and the worry had something to do, it is thought, with his collapse. One of the prophecies was in effect that he would rule as king but would not be crowned. The king's health has been the topic of news for the world for days.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In a letter to President Smith, dated at Kansas City, Missouri, June 23, F. C. Warnky wrote: "We are making progress here very nicely under the direction of J. D. White, city missionary. Yesterday was a busy one for me. In the morning I attended Sunday-school at Chelsea Branch; at eleven a. m. preached in the grove just below Chelsea Park to a good and attentive congregation. At 12:30 p. m. I assisted Elder How, president of Chelsea Branch, in baptizing five persons; at two p. m. with Bro. How confirmed the five baptized and blessed three children; at three p. m. attended prayer-meeting at Second Kansas City Branch, and confirmed the son of Bro. John Grainger who was baptized in the morning by J. D. White; at eight p. m. preached at Second Kansas City Branch; and during the day administered to five sick. Thursday I go to Holden to assist Brn. Hulmes and Parsons in a protracted meeting there."

In a letter to Joseph Smith, dated at Elkhorn, Wisconsin, June 24, Henry and Laura E. Southwick wrote: "You will find inclosed ten dollars on the dream; five for my wife and five for myself, as the personage did not tell me that we should pay for others. Each one, as he said, should pay one dollar, and I believe he knew what he was talking about. I also believe that the dollar will be forthcoming to each one who will pay heed to the admonition given, and also to receive the blessings that were to follow."

Bro. Joseph Marsh writes from Austin, Nevada, the 24th inst.: "Last year I was at Tonaph all the year, and distributed quite a lot of tracts and books, and was talking quite often to some gentlemen and ladies. I have more books I intend to give away when I get there. That is quite a large camp and it is only a little over a year old. I wish an elder was there, as I think he would have a good hearing. Anyway there is a good people there. Our children, too, are there. Wife and I are here in Austin. Wife is sixty and I am sixty-six years old. I have lived here forty years."

Bro. Levi Gamet, Norfolk, Nebraska, June 25: "Bro. R. O. Self and I came here last Saturday with the district tent and are trying to dispense the word of life to all who will come to hear. Our largest audience was last night, when I counted twenty adults besides ourselves. Not a very large turnout for a city of three thousand inhabitants. The daily News kindly gave notice of our meeting in its Monday issue, and the two weekly papers promised to publish notice of our meeting, but they are not issued till Friday. Bro. Self and I Monday canvassed part of two streets and distributed "Questions and Answers" and invited people to attend the meetings. We are camping out, and at midnight last night a rain with considerable wind caused us to roll up our bed to keep it dry and to be otherwise vigilant till the storm had passed. But that all passes for experience. Bro. Self is a new man in the field, but goes at it in earnest."

On June 19 T. J. Sheldon wrote from London, England: "I have reached London at last. I find the work very much run down, but I am not discouraged. Since coming to this land I have been very much blessed. I have been much directed by the Spirit. I opened out a new place, Rothend. I baptized two, Bro. Ely and wife. Brother Ely is an ex-captain of the Salvation Army—a splendid man. I opened a mission hall there. It will be supported, I think."

Under date of June 21 Charles E. Crumley writes from Luda, Oregon: "The work is in a hopeful condition in Coos County. Three whole-souled people allowed me to bury them with Christ in baptism at Bandon, June 11. They have the spirit of the work. Others are on the way to the gate, and some are only waiting until I can get to them to open it. I will soon have Bro. George E. Harrington with me, and then we shall be able to pull a bigger load. The last conference has encouraged me, especially the part I missed by leaving with Bro. Harris."

Bro. Henry Ellis, Llanelly, Wales, June 14: "There is great need for laborers in this land. In this town there are thirty thousand inhabitants. We have a little church of our own and not one here to hold up the banner of King Immanuel only myself and a couple more local officers, who reside about six or seven miles away. Like those of old in Macedonia, we cry, Come over and help us. We are expecting, shortly, to have our esteemed Bro. Griffiths with us again, but in my humble opinion one man should be appointed permanently in this place, and we are willing to help support any good worker who will come among us. I would esteem it a favor if you would notify the Saints that I am appointed Bishop's agent for the Western Wales District. I hope the Saints will not forget the temporal law. The Lord has said, It is a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people. Various and many are the promises in connection with this law, and I am a living witness that the Lord will open the windows of heaven if the Saints will comply with the conditions given. One and all should remember those who have left homes and loved ones and gone forth in the conflict to advance the cause of truth. Saints, do not let it be said of us, Inasmuch as ye did it not unto these my brethren, ye did it not unto me. But when we go to receive the reward let it be said unto us, Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

J. W. Morgan is holding a debate with Elder Strickland, at Gardner, New Mexico.

In a copy of the Craighead County Sun, published at Jonesboro, Arkansas, issue of June 19, sent us, we note a short article entitled, "Statement of Faith," in which D. R. Baldwin tersely sets forth some of the beliefs of the Latter Day Saints.

Last week we failed to note that our foreman, R. J. Lambert, made a visit to Independence, Missouri. He was accompanied by his wife, and they were there from the 12th to the 21st. He was at his work in the composing-room again Monday, the 23rd.

Bro. C. E. Butterworth has sent us a little pamphlet entitled, "Alexander Campbell on the Book of Mormon." It is a reprint of an article by Alexander Campbell which appeared in 1831 in the Millennial Harbinger. This reprint is by W. T. Hilton, Omaha.

Sr. Annie E. Archer sends five dollars to be "put in God's store-house, to help carry on this latter-day gospel of Christ." She has been a member but a little over two years.

James E. Entrekin writes from Cavanac, Alabama, June 17, that Reverend A. J. Rhodes, of the Christian Church, has been holding services there, but does not seem to be pleasing the people. Bro. Entrekin thinks one of our elders if there now could do much good. Two elders were there some time ago, but did not remain long.

Bro. George H. Hilliard writing from San Antonio,

Texas, reports some interest during the reunion at Pipe Creek, Texas. Nine were baptized and others interested. He left for San Bernardino, California, on the 26th, expecting to be there over Sunday the 29th; and Los Angeles, July 6. Other California, Oregon, and Washington appointments will be furnished the HERALD for publication.

The Canada mission is making rapid progress of late. Elder R. C. Evans, acting for the Bishopric in the London District, reports a nice sum for Graceland College; and Bro. J. H. Tyrrell, Bishop's agent of Chatham, Ontario, has forwarded a good sum to the Special Consecration Fund. After all, the English and Canadian Saints are moving in the front rank in the Master's work.

The editor of the Messenger, of Owensville, Indiana, in his issue for June 26, quotes from the Book of Mormon the passage which states that there shall not any man have save it be one wife, and then says: "Still polygamy is taught and practiced among the people who claim this book is a true revelation, and profess to follow its teachings." The editor has misstated facts, as we know of a church of about fifty thousand communicants who are ardent believers in the Book of Mormon and who have always advocated strict monogamy, and have persistently fought against the vile practice of polygamy. The probabilities are that the editor of the Messenger knows of the Reorganized Church, yet does not feel disposed to render us justice by calling attention to the fact that there are people other than in the Utah Church who believe in the Book of Mormon, and who are living up to the teachings of that book in regard to polygamy.

By letter of Gomer T. Griffiths in another column, we note his book on the priesthood will be on sale July 20. His address is Temple, Ohio.

The Earl of Dunmore has cabled to this country denying the report that he and his wife have abandoned Eddyism.

The Brooklyn Eagle has issued a neat "Summer Resort Directory" for 1902, 72 pages, the pages being seven by ten inches. It contains illustrations of interesting places, and descriptive articles, besides the alphabetical directory. The Eagle is selling its directory for five cents.

Patriarch A. H. Smith arrived at Lamoni on June 27, thus terminating his long trip which began about one year ago. He is in fairly good health and is glad to be at home once more, though he has enjoyed many things on his trip. We think much good will result from his mission to Australia and the Society Islands, as well as to Honolulu. His secretary, Bro. Gould, is at present at his home visiting his wife and child, the latter having been born while Bro. Gould was away on the long journey. We are glad to have Bro. Smith and his secretary with us again. No doubt we shall hear from them something of their work while away.

We have received from the secretaries of the Quorum of High Priests their list of names and addresses of members of the quorum. We note that the quorum now has a total of one hundred ten members. A goodly number. We are glad to see the various quorums growing.

Arrangements have been made whereby T. W. Williams will represent the HERALD Publishing House at the Southern California reunion. By consulting him the Saints can determine how their accounts stand. He will also have a sample stock of books for inspection and sale.

This part of the country is having a superabundance of rain at present. Last year our summer was exceptionally hot and dry. This year June was exceptionally cool and wet. We seem to have passed from one extreme to the other. The heavy rains have injured the wheat and oats, but corn is prospering.

The senior editor of the HERALD, who has been in Michigan for about two weeks, is expected home this week. He, in company with Heman C. Smith, has been attending some of the Michigan conferences.

We have received several invitations to attend graduating exercises at some of the law schools of the country. We note that Arthur and S. A. Burgess, of St. Louis, sons of Bro. S. R. Burgess, have this spring graduated from the St. Louis Law School; and John D. White, of Independence, Missouri, one of the Stake presidency, has completed the course of the Kansas City Law School and received his diploma. We congratulate the young brethren. Bro. Arthur Burgess, being not yet of age, though granted a diploma, will not receive it from the school authorities until he reaches his majority.

The Board of Publication has retained Sr. M. Walker as editor of Autumn Leaves and Zion's Hope, and appointed F. E. Cochran as assistant editor on both. The Board is making efforts to more fully illustrate both the Leaves and the Hope, and we trust the Saints will second the efforts of the Board.

In a recent automobile road race from Paris to Vienna, Marcel Renault, a Frenchman, covered the distance, eight hundred twenty-five miles in fifteen hours and twenty-two minutes, or at an average rate of about fifty-one miles per hour.

J. A. Gunsolley went from the conference at Lucas, Iowa, to Denver, Colorado, to attend the great Sunday-school convention there. He was to be joined by T. A. Hougas. Bro. Gunsolley has not yet returned.

The Clarinda, Iowa, Chautauquan Assembly will be held August 7 to 21, and offers a very strong program. These assemblies are becoming very popular, and Clarinda seems to be up to the times. Persons in this part of the country who contemplate attending one of these assemblies will do well to look up the Clarinda attractions. We have received their program, which is lengthy. Persons who desire to see it may do so by calling at our office.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH? — NO. 1.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

“Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Despise not prophesyings.”—1 Thess. 5: 21, 20.

Because of an effort made by the enemies of Joseph Smith to defame his character, it has been next to impossible to get many people to give him more than a passing thought, and often that one thought is clothed in silent contempt. If his enemies have represented him correctly, and presented him to the public in his true light, then no one should be blamed for being disinterested, nor for considering him unworthy of further notice. But his enemies have not represented him properly. One's friends may often fail in that regard, much more one's enemies. The latter are almost sure, as might be supposed, to misconstrue the meaning of words and distort the intention of every act to suit their purposes.

We can assure the reader, in advance of the proof which we shall subsequently furnish, that Mr. Smith's acts were so public and his words so plain that it is not a difficult matter to determine that he was really a good man and one greatly to be admired, both for his own virtues and his loyalty to God and his fellow men. Many of his opposers appear very ridiculous when their writings are compared with the facts. Others a little more clear-sighted, yet not more honorable, have resorted to misrepresentation in order to make out a case against him. Still others, with no intention, perhaps, of doing the man an injustice, have drawn largely from the two former sources and are caught in the same snare.

With all due regard for the feelings of others who may believe differently than we do, and also those who pity us in what they think to be a delusion, we kindly ask and earnestly request that our side of the question be candidly considered. The old declaration, “Let us reason,” has settled many a perplexed question when properly applied.

Some one has said,

“He who will not reason is a knave.”

“He who dare not reason is a coward.”

“He who can not reason is a fool.”

Bible believers are expected to accept and practice the words of Paul which we have set at the head of this chapter, “Prove all things.”

In order to prove all things satisfactorily it is necessary that we use our reason. Hence this text is closely allied to the adage above.

Honor, if nothing more, should provide us with a desire to know and to know aright.

In this short treatise we are fully aware that we are not able to do the subject half justice, but we can, at least, try to throw a little light on the matter for the benefit of those who would do as they would have others do unto them.

All will admit the possibility of there being another side to this question than the one told by the enemies; and not only the possibility, but the probability.

In view therefore of the probable other side, we desire to submit a few brief points and hope they may be calmly and carefully studied. Not with a desire to find fault, for it exists in all the works of man, but with a desire to get at our own meaning from our own words, as also to obtain the truth of the matter herein discussed.

We are confident that we shall not only be able to show a probable other side, but clearly and distinctly show that Mr. Smith's words have been misconstrued, his acts distorted, his character maligned, and those who believed with him persecuted well-nigh unto intolerance.

After we have shown how easily one could be prejudiced by first hearing evil stories, and suppose that which is good to be “evil and only evil continuously,” as stated by the gifted Wisconsin poetess, we desire to show the purity, simplicity, and grandeur of Mr. Smith's teaching.

Usually when people desire to know the truth concerning any church or society, or even a political organization, they will read the articles of faith, the declarations of principles, or, if a political party, the platform of the respective associations. It is always best to allow each one to interpret the meaning of his own production, and most people do that. Indeed, justice can not be done in any other way. But when the work of Joseph Smith is being considered, or rather, rejected, many people scarcely ever ask:

What were his writings?

What articles of faith did he subscribe to?

How did he interpret them?

What did he say for himself? etc., etc.

We do not write this in a complaining mood, but simply state the facts, as all who read these lines, whether friend or foe, will doubtless admit without very much hesitation. It is sufficient with many to read some dime novel, or some ridiculous book written expressly to make money; or still worse, the bitter writings of some apostate; or worst of all, the revengeful writings of those who have been expelled from the church for immorality or other crimes. This latter class were too bad to hold fellowship longer in what many ignorantly suppose to be the lowest and most vile church in the world, and yet their writings are accepted as the diamond truth and their offerings drank in with a relish, it seems, or else there would be no sale for their books.

Mr. Smith is now dead, but his words and works yet live, and his friends desire to place them in contrast by the side of what his accusers have said, and let the public examine each. Let them look on the one picture and then on the other, and after comparing them with the facts, decide for themselves as to which really represents the man. We do not wish to suppress the writings of his enemies. We do not at all desire to mar that picture. We would rather preserve it to present in contrast with the real.

Others may, so long as they are in this world, judge their neighbors by the biased testimony of their enemies, but such work will not be very acceptable with our Creator who requires every one to deal carefully and justly with his brother man. Nor will such a disposition be very pleasing to his neighbors. In further consideration of this thought, perhaps no wiser saying was ever penned than one by Solomon, the master-builder of the temple of God:

"He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him."

In this age of boasted intelligence it would be quite humiliating to many, no doubt, to admit that they are far behind the ancients in some things at least. But it is a fact that since Joseph Smith appeared as a reformer and restorer, many people are guilty of judging him before hearing him; the very thing Solomon said was both shameful and foolish. It is lamentable that many have not advanced one step in this regard since the son of David, knowing the weakness of men, wrote the above declaration.

Another than Solomon, "a ruler of the Jews" and one of the lawmakers of his nation, also saw this weakness in man, even among those of note, and though living two thousand years ago was more thoughtful than many to-day. When Jesus was being tried before Pilate this man saw what many fail to see; that is, that it was unjust to condemn a man without first giving him a chance to speak for himself, and so he asked:

"Doth our law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth?"

This question should have silenced those who clamored so loudly for the law, but it had little effect, as such questions always have on those who are drunken with madness. How many mistakes have been made in the past because men became intoxicated with rage and shut up their minds against reason. Many grave mistakes have been made in the past because of a failure to hear equally patiently the accused as well as the accuser. The most alarming mistake in all the world's great history was because of this failure, when the Son of our Maker and Preserver was murdered in cold blood. The best blood this world has ever drunk was ruthlessly spilled by the order of those who would not reason correctly; who then as now seem to be everywhere present.

What a lesson to us who are brothers to those who committed that crime!

It is time we were beginning to profit by past experiences. With respect to Joseph Smith we must face the facts. Fancies will no longer avail with the thinking class. Facts are as they are and not as some would like to have them. Those who will not listen, or read, or reason, who will let prejudice darken their intellect, would have done the same had they lived in Jesus' day; hence they must be classed with those of like spirit and of like disposition. Kind reader, let us ask you, if in the past you have been prejudiced against Mr. Smith, that you lay it aside long enough to determine for certain whether he was really a good or a bad man. Be kind enough to hear patiently both sides of this question.

It is both our privilege and our duty to seek by all honorable means to secure a hearing. We know that the gospel which was recommitted to earth and to the church over which Joseph Smith presided will bear every legitimate scrutiny and criticism. Nor do we hesitate to invite investigation.

It is considered very cowardly to attack a dead man, and as Joseph Smith is not alive to speak for himself, there is not much honor, it seems, in many of the vile attacks of his accusers. It does not require a great deal of bravery to attack a dead lion. However, as many attacks have been made, and a very large majority of them since his death, his friends desire to speak a few words in his defense. It is right that witnesses for the accused be heard as well as for the accusers. If the court of public opinion does not grant us that privilege here, then it becomes our final duty to appeal to the supreme bar of Him who was born in Bethlehem to judge every man with "equity and truth."

Do not think this matter can be put aside by a puff of the breath, a wave of the hand, or a stroke of the pen. We are satisfied that a thorough investigation will convince the most skeptical that this is no small matter. It has nobly withstood all the opposition that could be brought against it from every quarter for the last seventy-five years. It is true beyond a doubt that no church since the days of our forefather Adam has suffered more persecution. Such lying! such slander! such contempt! and more recently, such ostracism! And yet it has withstood it all and grown healthily all the while. It has in it the elements of success. Satan and his aids have not been able to overthrow it in this world and they will not be able to do so in the next, though many who believe the truth may not be able to abide in it. The Reorganization has more than doubled her membership in the past twenty years.

While many were of the opinion that with the murder of Joseph Smith his work was for ever obliterated, yet we see now that that was not a right way to settle the matter, and hence it was not settled at all. But those who tried to overthrow the church by killing its founder were no more mistaken than those who now try to solve the problem by biased evidence. Such a solution of the problem is like smothering a fire with combustible material. It will only be a matter of time and the fire will be greater than ever. Truth only laughs at such work and grows fat all the while. Nor will it avail to pay no attention to it, for truth is aggressive and will continue to turn and overturn all things until every error is made ashamed. Surely Mr. Smith's accusers are in a sad plight, a dilemma with many horns. Take whichever one they will, they seem to get gored by the others. To murder the man seems not to check the progress of his work. To lie about him seems but folly, as a lie is sure to be found out. To seem disinterested is worse than either of the other plans, for that would permit the supposed evil to grow and flourish in their very midst. The battle having been started is on for good, and there is no cessation this side of the judgment day.

To assist those who will read and who desire to know the truth of this matter long this side of the judgment and reap the benefits in this life we offer our services on the following points:

First, by cross-examining some of the witnesses for the prosecution; or, more properly speaking, the persecution.

Second, by answering some of the stories told to deceive.

Third, by answering objections said to be biblical.

Fourth, by introducing disinterested witnesses to prove Mr. Smith's character good and entirely above reproach in the different localities where he lived.

Fifth, by introducing court decisions, one from the Supreme Court of the United States, and one from the Supreme Court of Canada.

Sixth, by calling attention to many passages of Scripture which refer to a latter-day dispensation—"the dispensation of the fullness of times" which Joseph Smith was divinely appointed to begin.

Seventh, by quoting Joseph Smith's own words.

Eighth, by giving many of his prophecies.

Ninth, by giving many of his sayings on temperance, war, governments, and other matters.

Tenth, by giving his phrenological indication.

Eleventh, by giving many newspaper articles which refer to the Reorganization.

It will only be necessary to cross-examine a few of the witnesses on the other side in order to show the fatal flaws in the foundation of the entire structure which the enemy has built. It is impossible to properly answer the question, "Who was Joseph Smith?" without examining the work which he established under direction of the Almighty, and which the world has nicknamed "Mormonism," a name afterward and now quite commonly accepted by another church, and for a long time mostly located in Utah, with headquarters at Salt Lake City. We trust the reader will keep in mind this difference, and in the proper place we will show more clearly why this distinction should be made.

The most public points, no doubt, connected with the church, were:

The death of Joseph Smith: time, place, and manner.

The settlement at Nauvoo near where he was killed.

The introduction of polygamy, if by Joseph Smith or some one else after his death.

We have not space enough in so small a work to reproduce all that has been written on these three points in encyclopedias, histories, other books, and newspapers since the death of Joseph Smith fifty-eight years ago; but we will quote some of them which will give a general idea of the confusion that exists concerning this whole matter as told by the other side. To make the matter plain at a glance, we italicise the mistakes in the following extract:

Volume 16, page 826: "Accordingly on the 27th of June, 1844, he [Joseph Smith] and Hyrum were put in Carthage jail, but the same night a mob broke into the jail and shot the two men dead."

Johnson's Encyclopedia says they were shot next day after they were put in jail. This would either make them shot June 28 or put in jail the 26th. Ann Eliza, nineteenth wife of Brigham Young, in writing her life says Joseph Smith was shot July 7, 1844. Beadle and others say June 27, 1844.

The Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colorado, February 18, 1894, in mentioning the death of John L. Hildreth, says: "In 1849 with his parents and the family, he went to California, from Hannibal, Missouri, and from Salt Lake his party were guided by Joseph Smith, afterward chief prophet of the Mormon Church."

Reverend B. D. Alden, writing in the Colesburg, Iowa, Review, August, 1897, says: "Smith received a revelation on polygamy in 1845." The year after his death.

Surely we have dates enough in the above so that there would be no escaping the conclusion that he was really murdered. If one date fails then we could accept another. Quite a safe course for error to take, but it is not very satisfactory to those who desire to know the facts. Just where and how and when Mr. Smith was killed is very difficult to determine. Especially when. Whether it was June 27, 1844, or July 7, 1844, or 1845, or 1849, or 1852, or 1856, or 1857, is an unsettled question, judging from the foregoing. Here is a range of thirteen years difference in time. Is it possible that the enemy could come no closer than that in giving us the exact date? How reckless! It seems some writers were more after the money than the facts. Whether he was shot on horseback, in bed, or in a jail is not clearly shown. Whether he had just moved from Ohio, or just arrived from Missouri, or whether he had lived long in Illinois when he was murdered does not appear. Whether he introduced polygamy in 1831, or 1845, or whether he did not teach it at all is a puzzle, judging from the above witnesses.

Certainly some of these statements are wrong. All can not be right. Which ones shall we reject, and which ones shall we accept?

These few points are among the most public in examining this matter. If such difference exists on such public matters, what shall we say of things of lesser note? What a medley of confusion from the proud literary talent of to-day! Too proud to stoop to the humble Latter Day Saints and obtain from them their own history. We have yet to see one encyclopedia or one history that has published, over the signature of any accredited representative of the church, our history as it really is. Ordinarily if these same authors, or any one else for that matter, desire to know anything of the Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, or any other denomination, they at once write and get the official literature of the respective churches and study that, or else listen to their authorized representatives. But if the books quoted above are taken as the standard of evidence in this case, then it is very certain that the ordinary rule has not been applied to Joseph Smith and the Latter Day Saints. On almost every page, and in nearly every paragraph, these writers exhibit their lack of information when writing of what they are pleased to call "The Mormons."

We would be glad to know that with the nineteenth century there passed away the disposition to accept assertion for proof. We write "assertion" because most of the above-mentioned books do not attempt to give proof, but simply assert and assert and then turn and assert that their assertion is true. Let the reader now take up any leading encyclopedia and read the first few paragraphs under the article "Mormons" and see how they utterly fail to give proof. Some assert that Joseph Smith was "lazy and vicious and sprang from a family of the same sort," but fail to give us the proof. Others assert that he "was a thief," but fail to give us the proof. Others assert that he was a money-digger, but fail to give us the proof. Others state that he copied the Book of Mormon from Solomon Spalding's manuscript, but fail to give us the proof. Others say that he taught and practiced polygamy, but fail to give us the proof. All of these stories, all of these assertions have been answered, no doubt, a thousand times, and that, too, before they appeared in these latter works. It is hardly possible that the denials should not have been seen by these publishers, and yet they fail to even mention that Latter Day Saints deny these assertions. What may be said of histories and encyclopedias may also largely be said of other books.

In order to build a lasting structure of any kind, it is necessary to clear away the rubbish first and get down to bed-rock. So in this matter we desire to make another attempt, which may be called the thousand and first, to clear away the vile rubbish stories that we may get down to the bed-rock of truth. It would be of little use to offer proof, however conclusive, to those whose minds are full already of evil stories to the contrary. They may honestly believe the stories to be true and therefore shut up their minds against anything else; or, if listening at all, do so with considerable reluctance and disfavor. True, we might proceed with the affirmative argument and pay no regard to vile stories and silly yarns. So, also, might a man build a house on the sand or rubbish, but the washing away of the sand and decay of the rubbish would reveal his folly in a fallen structure. We think it best to answer these stories first; or, at least, enough to reveal the uselessness of the others, so that the reader himself may clear his own mind of the others. Then what may follow can be more clearly viewed and with less prejudice.

About the first cry that greets our ears where we have not been properly heard before is,

"Old Joe Smith the false prophet!"

Hence the second headline of our article, "Was he a false prophet?" Such argument (?) as that is not apt to convince many of the followers of Joseph Smith that they are really following a false prophet. On the contrary it rather indicates that if the opponents had any better proof they would use it. Sneering and ridiculing are from beneath, and the Devil always uses them against those who are opposed to his principles. No one should indulge in such work except the disciples of his Satanic Majesty. Indeed, no others do that kind of work. Many who are thus sneered or howled at are strangers in the community and have feelings the same as other people. Alas! that man should so deal with his brother. What good does it do one man to wound the feelings of another? But to the point, "Was Joseph Smith a false prophet"? What false prophecy did he utter? Let his accusers produce it or cease their accusation.

If he uttered prophecies that came true, then he was a true prophet.

If he uttered prophecies that failed, then he was a false prophet.

If he uttered no prophecies at all, then he was not a prophet at all in any sense, either true or false.

But he is charged with being a false prophet. Let us have the proof, please. We hope to present full many that did come true ere we rest our pen. So far the enemies have failed to present the false one. Their case is evidently a lost one. The word false should in some way be connected with those who falsely accuse the innocent, and cause them thereby to suffer. In such case it would read something like this:

"I will be a swift witness against . . . false swearers."—Mal. 3: 5.

Or this one:

"False accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. . . . Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men."—2 Tim. 3: 3, 8, 9.

If this cry came always from the rabble, we could expect nothing else; or, if it came always from those who make no religious profession it would not be so bad, but it is a shame that it comes too often from the churchman and frequently from the clergy.

That we may the more easily determine the spirit operating in the hearts of those who employ this kind of tactics to bless (?) the supposed erring, let us suppose the man to be a Methodist. Let us suppose again that he was to arrive a stranger in some town or village and immediately the cry was to salute his ears, "Old Jack Wesley the ranter." What would be his feelings when the tables were turned? Or suppose the case was the same, only the man was a Baptist and his ears were filled with the cry, "Old Jack Rodgers the dipper." Or still another a member of the so-called Christian Church is offered this malediction, "Old Aleck Campbell the spouter." All of these expressions come from one source not hard to determine. Shame! shame! that such things should exist in our fair land among the brothers of one common family. Rather let us reclaim those whom we think to be in error with kindness.

THERE are no persons so forlorn and so much to be pitied as those who have learned in early life to look to public positions for a livelihood. It unfits a man or boy for any other business, and makes a kind of respectable vagrant of him.—Grover Cleveland.

PREFER loss before unjust gain; for that brings grief but once, this for ever.—Child.

THE NEED OF A PRACTICAL PRIESTHOOD.

The intent of this paper is to attract the attention of the ministry in general to the divine wisdom of our Lord manifested in giving to every man his own work, and if possible awaken them individually and collectively to a deeper interest in the work of God now committed to their trust.

I first cite attention to Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand."

In this same section we are told in paragraph 1: "There are, in the church, two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic;" and in paragraph 11: "of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods."

The several offices evidently means every office in these two priesthoods, so when we read, "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence," it has reference to each and all, whether they stand in the office of the First Presidency, Patriarch, Twelve, Seventy, Bishop, High Priest, Elder, Priest, Teacher, or Deacon. Each are bound by the law of God to learn his duty and act accordingly, in all diligence, or stand condemned, there being no alternative. Those called to these positions of trust are not the only ones served, but are servants to the body to minister every bodily necessity. Herein lies justification and sanctification, or condemnation and rejection both to the servants and the body whom they serve, speaking of them collectively and not individually.

The special work to the body assigned the several officers occupying positions in the church according to divine arrangement, is set forth in a general way by Paul in his address to the Ephesian elders, Acts 20: 28: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood;" and by Peter as follows: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, . . . Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."—1 Peter 5: 1-3.

The impression Peter sought to make upon the minds of the primitive ministry, and which I hope by this paper to make upon the minds of the brethren present, was early and deeply imbedded in his soul. The heart of the Master burned to accomplish this very work in the hearts of all his people, educating Peter to it in the following way. We read John 21: 15-17:

"So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep."

Peter's heart, full of love for Jesus, burst under the strain of this experience. He felt vexed, thinking perhaps by the Lord asking the question the third time that his answer was doubted or disbelieved; but not so; Jesus knew of Peter's unfeigned love, but by repeating his question and the words, "Feed my sheep," riveted a thought in Peter's soul that he never forgot. Jesus laid particular stress on this part of Peter's effort to bless mankind. Let us all take the lesson, especially those who are called to be the standing ministry to the church for it becomes their special work to feed both lambs and sheep. The duty of the church to the world is directly under the supervision of the Twelve and Seventy. They must learn their duty and act in their office, in all diligence; likewise all high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. None are exempt from duty until released by the Lord. In Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9 the word of the Lord comes to us, "And again I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that every man, both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might, with the labor of his hands, to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded."

God gives command that both priesthood and members go to with their might in the interests of Zion's cause, but brethren, what response shall we make to this command of God? Might we not easily infer in case we do not respond as heartily and as fully as God requires that we will ever be in an imperfect condition lacking full enjoyment? O that we may each catch the spirit of the poet and labor with all our might, mind, and strength, while we sing of Zion, lovely Zion:

Put all thy beauteous garments on
And let thy excellence be known,
Decked in the robes of righteousness
Thy glories shall the world confess.

What an inspiration this hope is! Brethren of the ministry, shall we ever attain to that degree of excellence? And what of the Saints? Shall we as the custodians of sacred trusts, and teachers of the way of life, disregard the holy admonition and neglect learning our duty; or knowing it, refuse to act; or acting, do so in a careless, indifferent manner? God forbid. Rather let Israel and her holy priesthood arouse to active service, presenting their bodies a living sacrifice unto the accomplishment of all things commanded them of God. But the whole must act in concert in order that success may come to the whole, for according to the measure we mete out unto others, the Lord not excepted, so it is measured unto us again. The completeness or perfection in the divine arrangement for the uplifting and sanctification of all men is nicely, clearly, and forcibly expressed by the Apostle Paul in the following scripture: "From whom [Christ] the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Ephesians 4: 16.

Though the church be divinely organized, it is compacted, unified, or made solid and compact, by that which every joint supplieth, and the increase of the whole is dependent upon the effectual working of every part. What a beautiful figure! True of the natural body of man and equally true of the spiritual body of Christ, every joint supplying something to the comfort, health, and general usefulness of the body. Again, there are in the physical man many parts or organs considered vital—the heart, lungs, brain, liver, stomach, kidneys, etc., and upon the action of these depends the general health, strength, and usefulness of the body. Each part has its specific work, and no organ is so made that it can do its own work and the work of another. The heart is in no sense expected to do the work of the lungs, nor the lungs the work allotted the heart. Independent, yet dependent on each other, are all these parts. If all parts are conformed to, and are working agreeably with the laws that govern, there is no loss of health or power, but if one or more organs are diseased, there is a corresponding weakness noticeable. Is not this also true of the church? the priesthood being the vital parts so necessary to the existence and perfection of the body. Where there is a failure upon the part of the servants of God to do their duty there is a falling off in power and blessing, while other parts, capable of no more than their own specific work, are more or less overtaxed. For this reason the success of the body is dependent upon the effectual working of every part.

Brethren, where do you stand? Are you learning and doing your duty? Active or inactive, which? It matters not what office you hold, God and the church expect you to do your part. Let the faithful double their efforts and the careless repent of their slothfulness, fall into line, and with their brethren, push the good work on to completion. However imperfect my pleadings with God for Israel's cause, I shall continue to hope that the day is nigh when all who have received a commission to act in the name of the Most High shall have in their souls the spirit under which the poet wrote:

Stand up! stand up for Jesus!
Ye soldiers of the cross;
Lift high his royal banner,
It must not suffer loss.
From vict'ry unto vict'ry
His army shall he lead,
Till ev'ry foe is vanquished,
And Christ is Lord indeed.

In conclusion, brethren, be admonished by the word of the eternal God as given to the church found in Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1:

"But, behold, verily I say unto you, there are many who have been ordained among you, whom I have called, but few of them are chosen: they who are not chosen have sinned a very grievous sin, in that they are walking in darkness at noonday."

Again, section 116, paragraph 2: "Be ye very careful, for many elders have been ordained unto me, and are come under my condemnation, by reason of neglecting to lift up their voices in my cause, and for such there is tribulation and anguish."

Once again, in section 60, paragraphs 1 and 2, we read: "Behold, it pleaseth me, that you have come up hither; but with some I am not well pleased, for they will not open their mouths, but hide the talent which I have given unto them, because of the fear of man. Woe unto such for mine anger is kindled against them. And it shall come to pass, if they are not more faithful unto me, it shall be taken away, even that which they have, for I, the Lord, ruleth in the heavens above, and among the armies of the earth."

IT IS NATURAL FOR CHILDREN TO BE CRUEL.

You have, perhaps, read that Mrs. Isabelle Bailey, of Palmyra, New Jersey, was cruelly tortured by three little girls. The unfortunate woman was eighty-five years old, paralyzed, and confined to her bed.

The three children, two of them eight and one eleven years old, tormented the poor woman in a brutal manner, of which details shall not be published here. The helpless woman ultimately died and the children were charged with murder.

This horrible story is mentioned in the hope of concentrating the minds of mothers on the fact that children are naturally more cruel, more vicious, than grown people. The children mentioned in this case were, of course, abnormal and unusual monstrosities. But they serve to illustrate the fact that infancy and childhood duplicate, in the individual, the primitive animal life on earth.

Many children are brutally punished and ruined for life because ignorant parents imagine that childhood is naturally pure and innocent and good and that a child which misbehaves must be abnormally wicked. If parents knew more about the physical and mental development of their children they would be better fitted to have charge of them.

It is a fact taught by embryology that the human body before its birth passes through numerous stages of development which correspond exactly with the lower forms of animal life. After birth the child develops mentally in the same way, passing through inferior mental stages and reaching a state of benevolence, honesty, truthfulness, and self-restraint only as a result of long education and wise control.

A perfectly truthful child probably never existed. All childish races of savages are incessant liars and thieves. All children passing through the primitive stages of mental development are naturally given to deception, and even to theft, especially when they are frightened by the consequences of truth and when things which they desire are denied them.

All children are cruel—and there is no greater brutality than confiding a helpless animal to the tender mercies of a young child. There may be a few exceptions, but they are very rare, and there is no reason why parents should expect their particular children to be the exceptions.

You may see a man of mature age, kind-hearted, absolutely benevolent and just. And you may learn that when he was a baby he bit his nurse, lied, and was cruel to animals and to other children.

But parents are stupidly egotistical and believe that their pretty children ought to be born morally perfect. This moral perfection can be obtained only as the result of education. Do not expect your children to be models of virtue.

Do not brutalize them by punishments and contempt because you discover that their primitive mental life duplicates the mental conditions of inferior animals. Set them a good example, and by education make them what you want them to be.

The ignorant and stupid belief that children are born naturally good accounts for the brutality of many fathers and the ruin of many young lives, making cowards of children, accentuating their untruthfulness and cowardice and their cruelty through a desire for revenge.—Editorial in the Chicago American for June 16.

THERE is need for each one of us every hour in the twenty-four to help brighten the world for others less fortunate than ourselves.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE MORAL ASPECT OF AN ACT OF GOD.

Under the above caption the London Spectator (May 17) engages in the current discussion of the Martinique calamity in its relation to a divine Providence. Adverting to the question as to how far such disasters are to be considered acts of God, the Spectator reasons as follows:

“The consideration of instances shows that a disaster arising from a pure act of God is extraordinarily rare, and that as the standard of prudence rises, as the storehouses of experience expand, as the knowledge of the laws of nature increases, even these rare instances tend to disappear. Many accidents that formerly would have been attributed to the act of God would now be rightly referred to gross personal negligence. Surely, therefore, we may have faith enough in science at least to believe that the day will come when men will no longer be afflicted by the dread of sudden and irresistible acts of nature that can not be foreseen, or if foreseen, can not be prevented or forestalled. Is it, for instance, too much to suppose, had there been in the town of St. Pierre a high standard of prudence, a large accumulation of experience, and an adequate (and quite attainable) knowledge of the laws of nature in their application to volcanic conditions, that this outburst could have been prophesied with certitude months ago, and the entire population removed to some safe place for temporary refuge?

“If this is true, the ‘so-called act of God’ takes on a new aspect. By means of such acts, through dread of such acts, the human race is compelled to develop to the utmost its highest intellectual and its deepest moral functions. We can imagine without irreverence the Creator saying to the created: ‘I have given you inherent power to control and use all the forces of nature; if you do not choose to develop that power these forces will slay you.’ It will scarcely be denied that it is in the contest with nature that the highest intellectual faculties of man have been developed. It is less obvious, though equally true, that it is in that same conflict that the deepest moral faculties have been also evolved. For nature has a way of creating new and subtle problems that require for solution not merely intellectual, but also extraordinary moral qualities. The laws of supply and demand, for instance, have created great cities and industrial districts which have in their rapid growth developed appalling social problems, such as overcrowding and chronic pauperism. These new problems involve the year-long misery, suffering, and degradation of vast multitudes, and not merely—for one may use such a word in such a comparison—the one great awful pang of an instantaneous ‘act of God.’ Such social problems are acts of God as truly as the volcanic upheavals in the West Indies, and indeed have more than once been accompanied by social volcanic horrors more fearful than those which we mourn to-day. To solve such problems, such acts of God, needs the highest human intelligence, the noblest human sympathy, love, and self-sacrifice."

It is customary in reasoning upon great evils, indeed, all evils, to construct a logical dilemma, one horn of which excludes God's plenary power and the other of which impeaches his beneficence. Referring to this form of argument, the Spectator says:

"If the superbest manifestations of human nature are involved in the attainment of empire over the forces that are exhibited in the working of natural laws, then it would appear to be the mere negation of reason to say that because terrible pain and loss and vicarious suffering are involved in the conflict there can be no God, or that if there be one he is either not all-powerful or not wholly moral. It is not necessary to solve the mystery and apparent cruelty of vicarious suffering in order to justify the ways of God with man. It is by results that man is able to justify to himself the sufferings of this present world. He is appalled and horrified that the flowing fire of Mount Pelée should have fallen upon the just and upon the unjust; that innocent babes and saintly men and women should have been overwhelmed in the company of the sinners of the fated city. But with reflection the judgment modifies. We do not know, though knowing human nature we may surmise, what acts of sublime heroism, what deeds of noble repentance, may have taken place in those dreadful minutes of destruction; but we do know that a disaster of this kind will set science to work to devise warnings and safeguards that will render life among volcanic ranges safer; and we do know that already the thrill of sympathy through the world is awakening self-sacrifice, and is drawing together in joint effort for the sufferers alien races long embittered by clashing ambitions and the sound of war. Thus, even applying the slight test of near results, we see, in this extreme case, that the passion for humanity need not hopelessly descend to the denial of God. If this is so, we may surely affirm the moral aspect of every act of God. In a word, we have no more cause to deny the existence of God because of a great and violent catastrophe than we have when a swollen stream drowns a home-going laborer on a dark night. The difference is not in kind but only in degree. Nor, again, if we can trust God's purpose in the smaller mutations of life, is there any sufficient reason to doubt it in the shock of earthquake? If we are to turn materialists, we must find a better reason than that conveyed when death is simultaneous, sudden, painful, terrific, and multitudinous."—The Literary Digest, June 28, 1902.

True Charity.

I gave a beggar from my little store
Of well-earned gold. He spent the shining ore
And came again, and yet again, still cold
And hungry as before.

I gave a thought, and through that thought of mine
He found himself, the man, supreme, divine,
Fed, clothed, and crowned with blessings manifold,
And now he begs no more.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The Grass.

The grass so little has to do—
A sphere of simple green,
With only butterflies to brood,
And bees to entertain.

And stir all day to pretty tunes
The breezes fetch along,
And hold the sunshine in its lap
And bow to everything;

And thread the dews all night, like pearls,
And make itself so fine—
A duchess were too common for such a noticing.

And even when it dies, to pass
In odors so divine,
As lowly spices gone to sleep,
Or amulets of pine.

And then to dwell in sovereign barns,
And dream the days away—
The grass so little has to do,
I wish I were the hay.—Emily Dickinson.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"There is a song now singing,—
Catch but its sweet beginning,
And you will still its notes prolong:
For ever, ever learning
Yet never quite discerning
The deep, full meaning of the song!"

"It tells of love undying,
Before which grief is flying,
Like mists swept by the sun along.
Oh! how earth's sorrow leaveth
The heart that here receiveth
The holy music of the song!"

Awake and Arise.

Awake and arise, O ye children of Zion;
The Lord your Redeemer looks down from the skies.
The work he has given to you must be finished;
Then gird on your armor. Awake and arise!
The promise to those who comply with God's wishes
Brings peace, joy, and gladness each time we repeat.
Then why will we tarry? O why will we slumber?
Then awake and arise. Never yield to defeat.

If the past has been mingled with trials and losses,
If the present is fraught with deep sorrow and pain,
O let us not tarry or faint by the wayside,
But onward march on, till the vict'ry we gain!

We have for a Leader, Lord Jesus, our Savior,
The Day-star of hope, our Redeemer and Friend.
When the vict'ry is won we shall gain life eternal.
Awake and arise, and endure to the end!

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, Dec. 10, 1901.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri.

Dear Sisters: I have been impressed to write in the past, but to-day I have asked myself the question, Can I benefit any one? Then I thought if all the sisters would think the same, our Home Column would cease to be interesting. I have been reading it first, and have been helped. Regarding the work of Daughters of Zion, I can not agree with all, yet I find it is much pleasanter to talk kindly to the children, and that when I have scolded and had to punish them it makes me feel very badly. But I get very much discouraged at times after I have been talking and persuading them to be obedient children and then have them do something that makes me feel like all I have done has been in vain. But we must not give up.

As I listened to Bro. Henry Stebbins talking to the children here last Sabbath morning, it being Children's Day, I was greatly benefited, as I hope the children were also, as well as the young parents. He said as parents we would have to give an account of how we raised our children. As we would stand at the judgment bar of God we would be asked, "Where are those souls I intrusted to your care?" Would we be among those who would hang our heads and say, "They have gone the downward path"? Or would we have them with us and say, "Here they all are, dear Lord; all bright and shining lights"? As I meditate on this and how far I feel I am from being what I would like to be, and having my boys what I desire them to be, I feel as I often pray, "Lord, lead me by thy hand, even as a child is led." Then I feel when I can keep humble and prayerful I have nothing to fear. But we have so much in our natures to overcome. Sometimes I fear we as parents expect more of our children than we should. When I see old and middle-aged people who have not learned to control themselves, I think we should set a more Christlike example before our children, then we could expect better results.

Not long since a sister wrote to the Column and advised us to read Mr. Abbott's books. I have just finished a book which contains much food for thought. I have decided to read more of the good literature we have in our city library. I have always made the same excuse that many others make, "I haven't the time for reading anything but the church papers." But I presume if you should go to see them you could find some fancy-work that has taken up much of their time, as it did mine. I have laid it all aside and think it much more beneficial to spend more time in good reading. I have been living in the city nearly two years, and am just getting used to the noise so that I can set down to read a piece and think over it. I have thought I never could read and have it do me as much good as when I lived in the country, when I would often read a piece to my father and he would say, "Read it over again. It was so good!" and we would get more good out of it.

I thank the many writers of the Home Column for the good advice and instruction we have received through the Column. We always read Sr. Emma Burton's writings with interest. I pray that the Saints may be prepared to pass beyond this life as our dear brother, M. T. Short, did. I think such peace worth much to all of God's people. To die happy has been my desire, and to die happy we must certainly live a life of love and sacrifice.

MARY J. HOPKINS.

The Sacrifices Of Children.

Nearly every one has at some time been touched by the uncomplaining sacrifices which children in families of a certain order are called upon to undergo. The saintly child is out of fashion in literature. The frank little freebooter who holds himself rather scornfully aloof from the interests and virtues of adult life is a favorite child at present. The saintly type is really persisting, however. One of the funniest and most impressive of little maids springs to mind. The brilliancy and the celerity of her intentions, give a strangely inspired appositeness to mature thought in her unconscious, apparently haphazard remarks. Her mother, whose one care she is, is of a radically opposite type. When their ideas conflict, as not unfrequently they do, the daughter, aged six, is able to accept an ultimatum with a resigned, sweet-tempered indulgence, dashed with a shade of amusement, even when a visit to country cousins is the privilege at issue.

There are persons fond of exercising mastery who fancy a child is well trained when its powers of reason and volition have been completely subjugated. Often the voice of God directs the child against the will of the parent, whose eyes are hidden that he may not see, whose ears are shut that he may not hear. There are children dying by half-inches in the city who might thrive in a country environment. They are sacrificed ruthlessly to the parent's choice of residence. There are fathers, if not mothers, to whom a new book or a new horse for themselves appeals incomparably more strongly than a new book or a new wheel for the boys. "That's papa's book; you must not touch it," a small girl says: while the boy chooses what he calls "Animals of a quiet neighborhood" from the Sunday-school collection, with uncomplaining recognition that what he reads conscientiously concerns no one.

The self-sacrificing parents are known to us all. There is, however, a class which, from lack of heart, sympathy, education, tact, judgment, insight, generosity, perpetually sacrifice their children, running athwart their latent possibilities with unthoughtful vetoes and disastrous countermands. The individuality, the genius the child may possess is alien to their own natures, and they labor blunderingly to eradicate it. Somehow the right of a child to the perfection of its own temperament should be secured, as well as some reasonable opportunity to act upon his environment in the fashion his instincts and intuitions direct him as conducive to his own welfare. To summon to this world a child soul with whom to be always warring at cross-purposes of wrongful adaptation is a horrible abuse of the parental office.—Exchange.

How Can We Interest Latter Day Saints in the Sunday-School?

Some are interested and some do not seem to be. The statistical reports of the branches, showing the number of members compared with the reports from the Sunday-schools, show a sad lack of interest in the latter. The question then is of prime importance.

It does not seem possible that a people believing in the blessings and gifts of the gospel and the early coming of the Master should be negligent of any duty that would increase their joy and efficiency in his kingdom.

WHAT IS THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL?

Is it not one of the helps which St. Paul said God had placed in the church? The nursery of the church? Is it not what the seed-bed is to the garden where the seeds of eternal life may be sown in the tender, receptive heart of childhood? Are not the earnest, faithful workers in the Sunday-schools doing fully as effective work as the elders who go forth to preach the gospel? Are they not preparing subjects for the kingdom of God in whose souls the work shall blossom into hope at an early age before they shall have found pleasure in sin? Is it possible there are Latter Day Saints who are not interested in this? Yes, there are plenty of them who do not realize what this work is. There are elders also who will tell you "I am no Sunday-school worker." And it is painfully apparent that they consider this department of God's work as of minor importance, something that anybody may attend to without their aid. But to the question, "How can we interest Latter Day Saints in Sunday-school work?"

First, get the eldership to take the matter up and let all teach the importance of the work. Teach that it is God's work—a work to which all are called.

Second, choose for officers those, and those only, whose hearts are in the work,—real, live, active workers in the great cause of man's redemption; those not easily discouraged and who are determined to succeed.

Third, let every teacher be chosen with special reference to fitness for the position. Faithful, prayerful, earnest persons,—lovers of the work. Those who will bring to the work whole-hearted, prayerful effort.

Fourth, make your school what its name implies: an educational institution, a place of real literary entertainment and merit. Let no discussion degenerate into a jangle, but let everything be conducted in an orderly manner. Let the superintendent and teachers have the lesson so prepared that they can teach it readily in an intelligent and an impressive manner. If, after all, there be Latter Day Saints who still take no interest in the work and persuade them to come. Tell them of Jesus and his love; how they are called to take part in this great work; how disappointing and discouraging it is for Saints to fail in the line of duty. May God bless your efforts to the extent that all may realize the importance of Sunday-school work.

"Should We Make an Effort to Place a Library in Our Sunday-School?"

Perhaps it will be well to name some of the benefits derived from having a library, to know whether we want to make an effort in this direction or not.

First, it increases interest and attendance in the Sunday-school. Children come to Sunday-school as visitors and see the other children selecting books to take home with them; they want one. When told that only scholars are privileged to take them they are likely to join and you thus gain the privilege of teaching the gospel to them. They become interested and tell others they like to go to the Latter Day Saint Sunday-school.

Second, we have the privilege of

to read. This would prove a great benefit to the children. If they have never had anything to read but trashy story papers, it would be the means of helping them to read something of some benefit to them, something that will make their minds grow. It is not natural that man should live on one kind of food, and what is true of the body is true of the mind.

Third, we have the opportunity of

in homes where it has never been. True, the "Good Literature Committee" could do this work, but the literature that is distributed by this committee is not, as a rule, read by the children. The object of the committee is one thing, the object of the library another, yet all work together for the great cause in which we are engaged.

If we can, by means of the library in the Sunday-school, bring one soul to the light of the gospel, will it not be worth our time to make an effort to secure him? Are we not willing to make a little sacrifice and give a little time to the work of the Lord?

The question might arise,

HOW CAN WE SECURE ONE?

Books cost so much we can not afford it. If we could take a special collection each month, or even each quarter, and lay aside for the library fund it would only be a short time until we could purchase a few books. One at a time is better than none at all. Our home libraries are furnished by adding one book at a time. There are a great many sets of children's books which can be purchased very reasonably and are books of good reading, each story teaching the children good morals.

I do not understand that we need only the church books, for the little ones can not understand them, and if pure reading is given them they will learn to enjoy it. Then we should make a strong effort toward securing libraries. Let us see what advancement we can make this conference year and make a report of the same.

How many farmers are there who think some new cultivator, that will make their corn better, costs too much? Why not be as anxious that the children's minds have the proper cultivation also? If it were possible for us to see the good accomplished through the library, I think we would be like the farmer, purchase if possible.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines as to how the work progresses in this city of nearly half a million of souls. Since I as district president re-started the work here two years ago last April under very adverse circumstances, the labor has been incessant so far as the Sunday services were concerned. Occasionally I had assistance from our missionary in charge, Bro. C. A. Butterworth, and others of the eldership who might happen to be in town on business, and I was very glad to have them occasionally. During the two years there have only been three baptisms here, but there have been altogether about twenty members from different parts of the state who have migrated to the city, and at our district conference held at Hastings in April last, when the Patriarch was with us, it was resolved to organize a branch in Melbourne, which was done by Bro. A. H. Smith on Sunday, May 4, 1902. The writer was chosen branch president; Brn. W. Mackie, priest; G. J. Hailey, teacher; Ralph Leyland, deacon, and G. Millard, clerk, the last-named being the first-fruits of the labor here in the city. There are many indications that in the near future there will be an ingathering to the church, which is wholly dependent upon the conduct of those already in the church. We have some promising young members who, if they will be humble, will in the future do good work for the Master. That depends entirely on their conduct and walk before God and man.

I have noticed in HERALD for November 27, 1901, in Lectures on Church-History.—No. 8, that Bro. Heman C. Smith gives an explanation of what has often puzzled me and on which I have argued at times with some of the brethren. In Doctrine and Covenants 83:4 the statement is made: "Therefore . . . and the holy priesthood also." What troubled me was this: Right down throughout the Bible we find men officiating in the ordinances, who, if the Melchisedec priesthood was taken wholly away, must have been doing the work of that priesthood and holding only the Aaronic priesthood, but since the evidence he has produced shows that "the office of elder does not carry with it the full power of the Melchisedec priesthood," I can understand how the office of elder was still extant, although "he took Moses out of their midst, and the holy priesthood also."

I have just received a letter from W. J. Haworth saying he had been requested to come here from New South Wales to assist in this state. He will be welcome, and I only wish that about fifty more were let loose in Melbourne. I would guarantee to keep them all busy. But I suppose we must be thankful for small mercies. But really I think it about time Victoria had a little of the labor available in Australia. In the past it has appeared to me that in some way or another New South Wales has monopolized the whole of the laborers, and why it should be I do not know, and never have been able to understand, but have noticed at times that when recommendations from district conference have been sent to General Conference, that has been the last heard of them. That may be good policy, but I doubt it.

There seems to me to be a better understanding of the duties of the members throughout the whole district obtaining. Being a wide district, embracing the whole of the state of Victoria, I can not visit all parts of it; but from communications received from many distant places I have arrived at the conclusions above, and pray that God may enlighten our minds so that we may meet with divine help to assist us all to "come up higher."

Our missionary in charge has been very ill for a long time, but by last advices was improving. God hasten the time when he will be with us again, is my prayer. Praying and hoping for Zion's weal,

I am, in the one faith, Yours,

Editors Herald: Bro. Gomer Reese and I have been making an effort at the Reese Creek church, preaching sixteen sermons, holding Sunday-school three Sundays and one sacrament meeting. This special feature of the work is neglected through this section. A number of the Saints have not partaken of the sacrament for from one to two years, and one brother told me it had been fifteen years since he had. No wonder that many are spiritually dead. God has said (D. C. 59: 2): "Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day. . . . Remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord." Jesus says: "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever. . . . For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." "Verily, verily, I say unto you [the saints], except ye eat the flesh [bread] of the Son of man, and drink his blood [wine], ye have no life in you." It seems to me that no Latter Day Saint can afford to neglect the house of prayer, for surely it is a great source of life.

We began preaching here last Thursday evening in the court-house. We are having a fair hearing, but find the court-room rather an inconvenient place for religious services. The Saints have purchased a gospel tent for the district and we hope by this means to reach many that we could not otherwise. On yesterday we went up the Bridge Canyon, held preaching services and Sunday-school, baptized three and confirmed them, and returned to preach at the court-house. Quite a crowd out. By the way, one millionaire among them. We continue two or three evenings longer and then close, waiting for the tent. Will go from here to Helena, Deer Lodge, and on to Bitter Root Valley to hold a reunion and conference.

I will relate a dream I had at the time of April Conference, before I knew where my mission field would be. Some of the Montana Saints may see its application. I dreamed I was sent away to the northwest, to an open field, which looked to me rather barren. I asked, "What is there here?" and I was informed that there was work to be done. I looked to the right and left—and stood in a quandary of mind. My attention was called to a measure of apples, almost a bushel of them, nearly all one size. They were plump and solid. About one in every dozen was ripe with a golden color, ready for use; the balance rather green and looked like it would take some time for them to ripen and become ready for use. But I thought most of them could be brought to that condition in time, with the proper care and attention. What does this mean?

Yours in bonds,

Editors Herald: This has been a year of experience to me, and some events that have transpired will be bright to my mind should I live to be very old. The late General Conference presented so many bright pictures that they appear to me so often, and when I saw those young men march forward for ordination to positions where the good Lord had called them, I prayed in my mind, "O Lord, bless them in their labor whereunto thou hast called them." The love of God's Spirit which filled my heart at that moment, and the assurance that the good Lord will do his part is stamped on my memory.

The President with forty years of experience, with the Holy Spirit to assist him to instruct and advise his counselors—surely all will be well. How grand it is to labor where the Lord has called. Surely no one would wish to occupy in the church where the Lord did not wish him to labor. So there is no one to offer a complaint but work together in love, praying for the success of each other.

I have been blessed in presenting the gospel, and I find it easy to comply with the temporal law and in presenting to the Saints the necessity of taking a forward step, to send in their surplus, and many are arranging to do this. Why not keep in pace with the body of Saints that are moving along, "falling in line," in every good work?

While in Young County I preached the funeral sermon of Bro. and Sr. W. A. Bennett, who have passed on to their reward.

My heart swells with gratitude to our heavenly Father for grace and strength to stand. I feel so weak and trust the Lord may give me strength to do good.

ALDERSON, Indian Territory, June 24.

Saints' Herald: This finds me visiting nearly all the mining towns of Indian Territory, looking after the interests of the work and preaching as opportunity presents, getting acquainted with the people and preparing the way for the pitching of our gospel tent in all these towns. We have no branches in these mining towns except Wilburton and Coalgate.

Our gospel tent is already in Wilburton awaiting the return of Bro. Harder from Lamoni, who is appointed to labor with me in the tent. Saints, if you want the gospel tent in your town, let either or both of us know. Address of both, Wilburton, Indian Territory. I am now preaching in Alderson. Last night two Baptist preachers were out to hear me. Just one year ago this month one of them put me out of his house about nine o'clock at night for being a Latter Day Saint. It was four miles in the woods from town. I made my way to the house of an Indian, where I was very kindly received, a bench given me on which to sleep, and a quilt. At the close of the meeting last night my Baptist preacher came to the stand and said that before he and his brother preacher would believe the signs were to follow the believers he would have to see it proven before the congregation; that they would get a bottle of poison, and if that did not kill me they would believe. I told him that if the Devil were standing where he was he could not be more in unbelief; that a wicked man always asked for a sign. He then challenged me to debate. I told him we had order in our church, and that if our missionary in charge would allow me I would meet him.

I am getting in good work this way, visiting each town, all new places; so I keep busy, crying repentance to the people. I am also writing some of our church history for our town paper. I commenced April last. I find a great many people beginning to inquire into our work as a consequence.

May the God of heaven bless our gospel tent that the honest in heart may be gathered into the kingdom of God.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, June 24.

Editors Herald: My book on Priesthood will be on sale July 20. Flexible leather binding $1.00; all orders to be sent to my wife, by post-office order, Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio. This work, entitled "Exegesis of the Priesthood," is an exposition of the origin, lineage, rights, and authority. The duties of the officers are defined and classified. Also contains plates showing the divisions and the various lines of authority in the priesthood. Also divine instruction to the ministry through the Martyr and the present president of the church, with an appendix on the presidency of the church. It contains many other items of interest to the general reader. This work has been compiled with a view to help all classes of officers to understand in detail the duties of their own calling and those of their brother ministers. And we think it of equal importance to the membership, as they should be acquainted with the duties of the ministry that they may be able to show due courtesy to those whom the Lord has called and authorized to be his servants.

Since conference I have been busy assisting in this part of the vineyard as circumstances have permitted. Expect to take a short tour with Bro. Greene in this mission soon. The weather is cool and pleasant; plenty of rain; everything is growing nicely except corn which needs more warmth. Anticipate starting for my mission the middle of next month.

DALLAS CENTER, Iowa, June 26.

Herald Readers: The district conference of the Des Moines District was held at Runnells, Iowa, the 14th and 15th instants with good attendance, and a commendable earnestness shown. Business all conducted peacefully. Two were baptized on Sunday. Conventions of Religio and Sunday-school associations were held just previous to conference, with fair interest manifest, and good was accomplished. The Saints at Runnells cared for the large attendance with comparative ease and pleasure.

I remained for three nights following, preaching at the chapel and assisting the district president in trying to correct some errors and remove evils, some of long standing. Commendable support was given by some of the branch officials, and all laboring together made it more pleasant for each. Where one neglects or shrinks from duty it always adds increased burdens to others. It is where each labors in the sphere appointed that the work is most easily accomplished.

Previous to and at the close of my labors at Runnells I labored in the Capital city of Iowa, and feel that some encouragement has been given the Saints, and a few are much more interested. Finding that the church publications were not represented in the public library I have secured the three volumes of Church History, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Inspired Translation, and The True Succession, all of which have been submitted into the hands of the committee for receiving gifts for the public library, by whom they will be examined and report made to the board of trustees who will take final action to-morrow. The chairman of the gift committee and librarian have been very kind, and seem to be willing to do the proper thing by us. The papers of Des Moines have been very kind in publishing notices and articles thus far, all of which has been duly appreciated.

I came to this place Tuesday and began services, associated with Bro. George Shimel that night in the park, use of which had been granted us by the mayor, and who kindly volunteered to see that order was observed. Bro. and Sr. Ward Christy had made all necessary preparations and the results so far show that their efforts have been acknowledged of God. Sr. Goodwin, formerly of Cleveland, Iowa, and Bro. Christy's family are all the Saints here; but the prospects are good for additions. While the weather has been cool and damp, yet over fifty were present the first night and over twice as many last night.

Last Sunday the Presbyterian minister had announced that a Mormon evangelist was coming to preach Joseph Smith and Brigham Young, and instructed his members not to attend, and since then the M. E. minister has advised his members likewise, but the people come anyhow, and seemingly a deep interest has taken possession of the people.

J. F. MINTUN.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 23.

Editors Herald: I presume some of the readers of our valuable paper will be interested in a brief account of the way things are moving here. We held our first outdoor service yesterday afternoon in Wade Park, where there is a commodious stand, nearly surrounded by seats to accommodate a thousand people at least.

Several of the Saints were present from Kirtland, who, added to our own little band, constituted quite a force. Bro. Richard Baldwin, who was passing, and Brn. Eben Miller and David Allen were on the stand with the writer, and took charge of the services. As soon as the singing began the crowd began to gather, and continued to assemble till several hundred were seated. The 20th verse of the 10th chapter of Luke was taken as a text. The question, "Is your name written in heaven?" introduced the subject. The more momentous one, "How shall I obtain the writing of my name on the page so white and fair?" was soon propounded, and the answer begun only (in one discourse), to which nearly all that vast audience listened with attention, till the time, limited by other services, announced for five o'clock was occupied. We promised to resume the subject next Sunday, and so continue till the question shall be fully answered. It is needless to say that we all left the ground rejoicing; the Kirtland Saints returning home. At seven o'clock, we repaired to the hall for our regular service, where a new subject, "The missing link examined," was begun. The attendance was good and attention the best.

This "missing link" is not the one with which Darwin would connect the chain of evolution from the ape to the height of human intelligence, but one which concerns us infinitely more. There is in this city an association, known as "The Utah Gospel Mission," led by one Reverend Doctor Nutting, who has been for some time lecturing in several churches of the city, on Mormonism, waging an indiscriminate warfare against everything bearing the name of "Latter Day Saints."

In a lecture given in February last in the Lake View Congregational church, at which Bro. Wm. George was present, the speaker referred to the generally accepted theory, that Solomon Spalding's "Manuscript Found" was the origin of the Book of Mormon, saying that this theory had been confidently denied by the Mormons, and said, "Now we have the missing link;" presenting a book which he offered for sale, urging all to read it. This "missing link" was expected to connect the chain of evidence proving the "Manuscript Found" to be the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Bro. George at the close of the meeting went directly to the speaker, and bought the book, which proves to be nothing better than a revision of Reverend M. T. Lamb's "Golden Bible," written some years ago against the Book of Mormon, under the new name of "The Mormons and their Bible."

Feeling it a duty to make a defense we sent a notice, with explanation, to two of the city papers, one of which promised to insert the article as written; the other promised to write up something from it. A careful search in three issues of one of these papers did not find the promise kept. Further than this, we can not say at this writing but the subject was put on our bill-board at the door, and a few non-members were present; among them a reporter of one of the above-mentioned papers, who obtained from us, after meeting, some notes for writing us up. What may appear, remains to be seen.

An invitation for preaching service at the home of a family, not Saints, next Friday evening, came to us yesterday, the lady's mother being with them, Sister Leabo, who came from Oregon some three months since. By a visit of Sr. Gardner, from Bay City, Michigan, with friends in the city, who have been with her to our meetings for two Sundays past, and at whose home the writer has paid one visit, we are invited to hold our weekly prayer-meeting next Wednesday evening. We are greatly encouraged, feeling that some lasting good must come from these opportunities.

Editors Herald: We have had a good rain. Good crop prospect at present. I am now holding forth at this place. Good hearing to-day. This is where I met Reverend G. W. Spurlock of the Christian faith in debate last fall. According to turnout we have not lost anything in meeting Reverend Spurlock. The Brighamites are operating south of here a short distance.

Editors Herald: We are trying to live faithfully, but have not had the privilege of meeting with the Saints or attending church for the last two years. We would be glad to see any of the elders, and think we could get the schoolhouse for preaching. We live three and one half miles west of Sumner, on the railroad. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

MRS. ALFRED KENNICUTT.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, June 25.

Herald Readers: For the last four weeks I have been holding forth on the city square with an immense crowd, being ably assisted by Elder J. C. Chrestensen, Priest Quimby, Teacher William Duemler, and our ever faithful, true Seward Gray to help in singing. I have spoken from a chart every night, which assisted greatly in helping to hold the attention of my hearers. I never had better liberty in presenting the word, and I believe we have done much good. Several of my audience are very much interested, among them some of the best business men in town. This interest and large crowds have resulted in an order from the city mayor that I must get out further into the square and take the people off the sidewalk or I should be arrested. So you must not be surprised to hear of the Englishman being taken to the calaboose. It is a clear case of persecution, for the Salvation people and others occupy every night, and the police just keep the walk open, and they have never been told to keep farther back. I had an interview with the mayor. He gave me to understand it was none of my business what order he gave concerning others, I would have to get farther back. I never get nearer than ten to fifteen feet from the sidewalk, and the walk is twenty feet wide at that point. I was told by a leading lawyer that there was no case against me, and if I got into it to come to him. I think it would be easy to trace the whole thing to the Ministers' Alliance. I expect to continue and keep a respectful distance from the sidewalk, and if they arrest I shall not be the first.

There is quite an interest in the city in behalf of the visit of Brother Joseph and we hope it will do much good. We are expecting the largest crowd this church has ever seen. I had the pleasure to-day of entertaining the Salvation Army captain and his wife. They seem very nice young people and are much interested in our work.

If any one has old HERALDS and Ensigns or Glad Tidings we should be glad to have them sent. We need tracts very much.

I wish to call the attention of the Saints to the fact that I am still Bishop's agent, and as God has blessed us this year with the prospect of the best crop we have seen for many years, let us not forget to help with our mites.

Editors Herald: With Bro. and Sr. Green I expect to go to Longwood this afternoon, where conference begins day after to-morrow. I baptized a very promising lady in the Thames yesterday, after which Bro. Green and the writer confirmed her at the water's edge, he being spokesman. Others have been brought near, and talk of obeying before long.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

SHERIDAN, Missouri, June 23.

Editors Herald: We are here with the tent, and have pitched it just south of town on a lot in the new addition. Held first service Saturday evening. About four p. m., Saturday, Bro. Stead received a note from Elder J. D. McClure inviting him to speak in the Christian church Sunday at eleven a. m. or 8: 15 p. m.; subject, "Identity of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Bro. Stead chose the evening hour. Elder McClure spoke at the morning hour upon the identity of "The Church of Jesus Christ." The house was well filled at the evening service to hear Bro. Stead.

When the sermon was concluded Elder McClure arose and said in part: "We have invited the brother here to speak to the people, given him our house, our congregation, and I think I have been charitable to him. Yes, even gave him a subject to speak upon. And I hope you are not disappointed. I am. I am disappointed. I certainly expected the brother to bring his inspired books, and identify his church as organized in 1830, and reorganized in 1860. Now I want to say to you people that they have inspired books. They have the Inspired Translation, by Joseph Smith, who was ordained a prophet, seer, and revelator by Peter, James, and John. And they have the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, revelations of God to these people."

This was said in a way calculated to prejudice the minds of the people. Continuing he said: "I want to show you people what they teach, what Joe Smith taught. I want to show you people, in the sixth chapter of Genesis, where Adam was baptized by water, put under the water. Why, you effusionists are not in it at all. Now I want to ask the brother if he will meet me here in this church, night about, commencing next Friday night, and I will bring their inspired books and show just what they teach," etc.

In reply Bro. Stead stated that he had met Elder McClure at Newcastle last December, and had challenged him to a fair and honorable public discussion, on church propositions. Bro. Stead read the propositions, after rehearsing how McClure had treated him at Newcastle. Bro. Stead told the people that he was ready and willing to meet Elder McClure, in a fair and honorable way, where each would stand on an equal footing in defending their respective positions; and that he was ready and willing to meet McClure on propositions that were equally fair to both. But would not go there to wrangle with him, as he knew him too well.

McClure then announced that he would lecture against us beginning next Friday night, announcing his subjects. He made a great show of fairness to work on the sympathy of the people and gain their favor.

Bro. Snively came yesterday morning, and attended the services with us. He will remain awhile and help us. One of us will attend the lectures, so that we can reply in the tent.

McClure would not accept the challenge to honorable discussion. Any one can see the unfairness of his offer to speak night about, as he would have unbounded liberty in presenting just what he pleases against us, and we would have to defend our positions, while he would not have to defend a single principle or teaching of his organization. There are indications of an interesting time.

We are staying with Sr. Gates and husband, just south of town. This sister is the only Saint living near here at present. We are made to feel welcome and hope the Lord will abundantly bless them for their kindness. We are very grateful for their hospitality.

Thus, this part of the world "do move" at present. We await the outcome in full hope and confidence of the triumph of truth.

On the firing line,

JOSEPH C. VAUGHN.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, June 23.

Editors Herald: I love the work. I was born in the church and have never belonged to any other, but at times I have not lived as faithfully as I should. I was born in 'thirty-seven, and in 'thirty-eight my father started to Missouri with his family from York-state and died on the road. He practically gave his life for the cause. My mother went on to Far West, and she and her family of five children were with those who were driven from there. I was baptized soon after Joseph and Hyrum were killed when I was between eight and nine years old. We went with the Saints to Winter Quarters, passing through all the hardships of the poor Saints who went there, and how hard they were only those who passed through them can realize. But if I can gain a crown at last I will be satisfied.

I joined the Reorganized Church about 'sixty-one, so you see this church is my home. I desire the prayers of the Prayer Union in my behalf, that I may be healed if it is the Lord's will, as I have been very much afflicted.

SARAH THOMPSON.

RADCLIFF, Ohio, June 28.

Editors Herald: I have recently organized a Sunday-school at Hazael, Meigs County, Ohio, with Bro. Homer H. Young, superintendent, and Bro. J. W. Moore, assistant. This will be their first effort in this direction, and they may have to struggle for a time. They are all poor people and have no supplies at all, only they have raised enough money to send for some Gospel Quarterlies. Now if it would be proper, I would like to appeal to those schools that have an abundant supply of Testaments and Hopes, more than they really need for their own use, if they will send some to these people it will be a great help and an encouragement to them. Even old, worn Testaments, and back numbers of Zion's Hope will be greatly appreciated by them, and those sending them would be doing a good work. Any one feeling to help these beginners can send their donations of supplies to either Homer H. Young or J. W. Moore, Hazael, Meigs County, Ohio.

To the Saints of the Ohio District I would say: Inasmuch as the District Sunday-school Association has been neglected here for some years, let us begin to work for its resuscitation and reorganization. Think over the matter, and come to the next conference prepared to do something in this direction.

Two persons were baptized at Hazael on the 24th inst. Bro. L. R. Devore will be glad to hear of the work moving on in this place. There are about fifteen newly-baptized members there now.

By motion the conference unanimously indorsed the recommendation and ordered that he be ordained to the office whereunto he was called. On Sunday morning, June 8, under the hands of Apostle F. A. #### Pastoral.

Having received my letter of appointment to labor as missionary in sub-charge of the Birmingham District, I desire to say that I have entered upon my mission, and shall be very pleased to hear from any of the scattered Saints and friends in the district as to the prospect for missionary work where they reside, and I will try and look after the same. As I was elected at our district conference as president of the district, all matters in the branches so requiring will receive my attention. All elders and priests not connected with branch duties should move out as directed by the missionary in charge. See HERALD for May 14, page 494. May God bless the laborers in their work. Address me at 67 Danvers Road, Narboro Road, Leicester, England. William Ecclestone.

Oregon and Nevada: According to Bro. Luff's pastoral the following brethren were appointed to this field: Elders Arthur Allen, W. A. Goodwin, George E. Harrington, and myself. Elders Allen and Goodwin have been working at Hood River and Arlington since they came into the field. They now go to Condon, Oregon. From there they will go to Portland, where they will set up a tent. From there if they get through in time they will work up the Willamette with the tent and reach Bandon reunion, August 29. Elder George E. Harrington, of Independence, Missouri, is expected to arrive early in July and will work with me. We will perhaps work in Southwestern Oregon until Bandon reunion. After that we will try to supply the general demands wherever they may be. Brethren Allen and Goodwin will probably work in Condon and Malheur Counties in fall and winter. Saints or friends who desire preaching or wish to learn of our movements, can write me at the address below. As your district president, I wish to make a little appeal to you, brethren of Oregon district. We have purchased a tent 25x50 feet with 7-foot walls. It cost $55. Of this $22.50 has been donated up to date. This leaves us in debt $32.50, which debt must soon be paid. There may also be some little incidental expenses. The reason for making this purchase before conference is, that we were making arrangements to use the old tent, but discovered it was too rotten for use. Most of the tent work must be done in the next two months. Will the Saints of the district respond and help us pay for it. It is a great advantage to Oregon to have a tent. Send money to me at Bandon and if there is a surplus I will turn it over to district treasurer. Oregon has not been self-supporting. The Bishop has been supplying your agent with funds to support the two missionary families in the district. A few have been zealous observers of the tithing law; others have not seemed to feel the necessity of helping along this line. This is as much one of God's laws as baptism. The Bishop's agent for Oregon is Bro. Alma Morris, Lebanon, Liun County. Send your tithes or offerings to him. Bandon Branch will hold a reunion of its members who are scattered over two or three counties, at Bandon, August 29 to September 7 inclusive. Saints and friends everywhere are invited. For information write to me, the branch president, or to Bro. David E. Stitt, priest. Bring your tents and come help us make it a success. We expect the big tent to be there, and the district missionary force. We hope for Bro. Luff to be with us. Remember, Saints, that it takes money to bring the elders to you. Brn. Allen and Goodwin will be among strangers in the valley, and tent work there is expensive. May God abundantly bless our labors and give his Saints power to be a holy people. Charles E. Crumley, Sub-missionary in Charge. Bandon, Coos County, Oregon.

Sr. Conover has for some time been numbered among the employees of the HERALD Publishing House and was an efficient and industrious worker. #### Died.

DELONG.—Bro. Isaac N. Delong, of heart disease, at Cleveland, Iowa, June 21, 1902, aged 59 years, 1 month, 20 days. He was born in Marion County, Indiana, May 1, 1843. Married to Miss Editha Brooks, February 17, 1866, and as a result of this union, thirteen children were born unto them (seven boys and six girls), eleven of whom are living, and all but two were present at the funeral service. About twenty-one years ago, our brother heard and obeyed the gospel, in which faith, with its glorious hope, he was faithful until death. He was ordained an elder in April, 1887, which position he held and was seeking to magnify at the time of his departure. He served three years as a soldier in the Civil War. So far as we know, Bro. Delong was a kind and good husband, father, and citizen; a brave and faithful soldier; and last, but not least, a courageous, faithful, and patient soldier in the army of the Lord. Memorial services in the Saints' church, June 23, by J. R. Lambert, assisted by J. R. Evans. A large and attentive audience present.

JOHNSON.—Sarah Aveyard was born April 16, 1824, at Hope Hill, Lancashire, England; married William Thorley, July 12, 1845, in Stockport, England; emigrated to Salt Lake City in 1854 and to California in 1855. Her husband having deceased in 1860, she was married to Augustus Johnson, October 23, 1869, who died in 1896. She died at Merced, California, March 18, 1902. She was matron of the Merced County Hospital five years. Was a member of the "old church," later uniting with the Reorganization. She was full of love and good works; never too tired to answer a call of distress.

BAILEY.—Truman Bailey was born August 12, 1819, in Pittsford, New York; died June 20, 1902, at Lamoni, Iowa. He had been a member of the Methodist Church for fifty years. Funeral services at the house, June 21; sermon by Elder S. V. Bailey.

ALLEN.—June 14, 1902, at her home in Ogden, Utah, Sr. Ellen F. Allen. She was born in Ogden, November 18, 1859, and was the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Wells Chase. Married to Mr. M. H. Allen, November 1, 1882. To them were born five children, four, with her husband, remaining to mourn the loss of a loving wife and mother. She was baptized March 31, 1873, by David H. Smith, and many loving tributes by neighbors and friends testify to the excellency of her character and the faithful keeping of that covenant. She "being dead, yet speaketh."

ASHBAUGH.—At Kansas City, Missouri, June 17, of stomach trouble, Charles Walter, son of Bro. C. W. and Sr. Eva Ashbaugh, aged 2 years, 7 months. Funeral sermon at the home of Bro. O. Hughes by Elder F. C. Warnky, assisted by Elder J. D. White.

When the Beebes and Waddell first brought the restored gospel to Florida, their home was among the few opened to them. She was among the first in Florida to obey the gospel, being baptized by T. H. Waddell, March 15, 1868. One of earth's noble women, full of faith and good works. Interment at the Saints' burial ground, at Coldwater; services by S. D. Allen.

Coal Miners, Members of the L. D. S. Church.

The Independence Coal Mining Company, Independence, Missouri, which is composed of Ellis Short, William Crick, and R. May, will sell three fourths of its interest to members of the church. This is being put on the market for the mutual benefit of the present owners and those who wish to become stockholders.

Moneyed combines, labor unions, and strikes, when dictated to by unprincipled men, are a menace to many an honest man, and by taking a share in this Mining Company the miner will have steady work—for it is the intention to run the mine the year round, union scale wages, or as may be agreed upon—he will be free from the arbitrary wishes of strikers, and he will also be deriving benefit from the dividend resulting from his share.

There will be a position open for a manager, also for a pitboss. These two men will be expected to buy several shares.

This mine has a good wagon trade. It is located twenty-one (21) miles east of Independence, on the Missouri Pacific Railway, and is accessible to Independence and also to Kansas City, which is the best market in the West.

The Company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. The stock capital is $8,000, one hundred dollars ($100) per share, fully paid up; but it will be necessary to increase this four thousand dollars ($4,000) in order to have a working capital and put in a cooperative store. Each miner is expected to take one or more shares.

The prospects for success are very bright, as the lease runs for twenty-seven (27) years for eighty acres of land, royalty ten cents per ton, and as much more land as the stockholders desire, for we hold the key to thousands of acres of land.

The mine is in fair working conditions; its capacity is room for about ninety (90) men. It is "Long Wall Work," has good top, and a shaft forty-seven (47) feet deep.

The vein is seventeen or eighteen inches thick, which is the average thickness of coal in the Lexington Coal Mining District; and the coal is a first class quality, being a little better than the average grade of coal.

Now, the prospects for miners to buy shares and take hold in this mine are good, but they must act at once, for the season will soon be upon us when we will have to operate the mine.

The men who are operating this mine will have permanent work, and they will also have the association of honest, upright fellow-workmen, as only good and upright men will be allowed to own shares.

There are houses on the ground which belong to the Company and more that are at their disposal.

Brethren, improve this opportunity. Do not hesitate until it is too late.

ELLIS SHORT, President.

RODERICK MAY, Secretary and Treasurer.

Decrease in Theological Graduates.

The number of theological students to be graduated this spring was seven hundred below the normal, and predictions are made that the number to graduate next year will be even farther below it. Fewer students from the colleges are entering the seminaries. The number of graduates this spring was 3,352, all sorts save Roman Catholic. The ability of large religious bodies, such as Methodist and Presbyterian, to absorb new men is much less than is generally supposed. And the number becomes proportionately fewer because lay effort is increasing rapidly. Causes for the falling off are being offered in great numbers. The cause least often presented, but probably nearest the truth, is the improved worldly conditions surrounding the clergy as a class. Salaries are increasing, better houses are offering to live in, elaborately equipped plants are multiplying. With these come a waning of the ministerial necessity. Ambition seeks large, not small things. Martyrdom, more or less pronounced, is always popular. Ease, good pay, long vacations, with their accompanying small responsibility, small service, are not popular, when compared with the same attainments in secular life. The Brooklyn pastor, who, receiving $7,500 a year, was surprised by his trustees with an increase to $9,000, was robbed of the heroic, for himself and for many who might come after him.—Chautauquan Magazine for July.

Meeting B. Y. P. U., Providence, R. I.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets July 7, 8 and 9 at one fare for round-trip with stopover at Niagara Falls and Chautauqua Lake if desired; also via New York City if preferred. With the present number the Forum begins not only a new volume but a new series, having been transformed from a monthly into a quarterly. The general character of the magazine is the same and its high standard is maintained, but its purposes are more specifically those of a review and outlook. It is divided into nine departments, each conducted by a specialist who writes a critical exposition of such events of the last three months as come within his own sphere. These reviews include in most cases estimates of general tendencies as well as comments on specific incidents. In the issue for July-September "American Politics" are discussed by Henry Litchfield West, "Foreign Affairs" by A. Maurice Low, "Finance" by A. D. Noyes, "Applied Science" by Henry Harrison Suplee, "The American Drama" by John Corbin, "Literature" by Frank Jewett Mather, Jr., "Architectural Art" by Prof. A. D. F. Hamlin, "Educational Events" by Ossian H. Lang, and "Educational Research" by the editor, Dr. J. M. Rice. In addition to these reviews, the new number contains three special articles of the type that appeared in the former series, namely, "Chinese Exclusion," by Hon. Charles Denby, "Germany as a World Power," by Wolf von Schierbrand, and "Sir Walter Besant," by Professor W. P. Trent. It should be mentioned that the size of the magazine has been permanently increased from 128 pages to 160.

What makes the happy relation between man and woman, is an eternally interesting question, and a clever discussion of why marriages fail, presented by Rafford Pyke in his article "The Woman's Side," is certain to receive the very wide consideration which has been given to that author's previous articles on the discussion of woman versus man. The July Cosmopolitan seems to be almost equally divided in interest between men and women. "An Experiment in Domestic Finance" is another entirely novel article which will appeal to women, while some twenty pages devoted to the "Captains of Industry" will receive the consideration of men in all classes of business. The Cosmopolitan has undertaken to present a series of brief sketches of the men who are leaders in finance, manufactures, and commerce, not prepared in an offhand way, but by writers of the greatest ability who have an exact knowledge of their subjects. The series thus far produced has attracted the widest attention. The industrial changes which have of late been occurring with such rapidity have the widest possible interest for all classes. The knowledge of these men, their derivation, leading characteristics and weaknesses throws much light upon the news of the day in which their names constantly recur.

While the press has presented an endless number of illustrations of the Mont Pelée disaster, the illustrations in the July Cosmopolitan, printed on fine paper with the most careful art, give a clearer idea of just what that disaster means than any thing hitherto presented.

DEDICATIONS AT FREESOIL AND SHABBONA, MICHIGAN.

UPON invitaton extended by the authorities of the Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts, the Editor went in company with Bro. Heman C. Smith of the Twelve and missionary in charge of the mission field in Michigan, into his field, to be present and assist in dedicatory services, by which worshiping places for the covenant people might be set apart, consecrated and dedicated for that purpose.

By instruction from Bro. J. J. Cornish, field missionary, Bro. Heman and the Editor went to their first stopping place, by the way of Chicago and Milwaukee by rail, and thence across Lake Michigan, via the Pere Marquette line of steamer and rail to Ludington and Freesoil.

We reached Milwaukee about eleven o'clock the next morning after leaving Lamoni, June 20; and as the boat did not leave the pier until 8: 30 in the evening, Bro. Heman went on a hunt after a lawyer cousin, W. W. Wight, with whom he had been in correspondence in regard to the Wight genealogies. We found him at 1003, Pabst Building, comfortably located as a practicing attorney and librarian of the Bar Association.

Never having met each other, Bro. Heman introduced himself and then the Editor, and soon the two cousins were in close conversation over the family tree and its branches, tracing back somewhere into the later years of the sixteenth century.

Mr. Wight gave us a hearty and cordial welcome, and with him we spent the day very comfortably and pleasantly, notwithstanding it rained more or less persistently all day. He took us out to lunch in a restaurant attached to the famous Plankinton House, one of the finest hotels in the West.

Mr. Wight also secured for us an interview with a Mr. Henry E. Legler, who has taken much pains to look up what literature may be found extant relating to the movement under President J. J. Strang, at Voree, Wisconsin, and on Beaver Island, one of the Manitou group in Lake Michigan.

We parted from these gentlemen with regret that our stay was so brief.

At 8:30 p. m., the Pere Marquette 2 moved out into the lake, and in the quiet and stillness of a somewhat cool evening in June, pointed her prow across the lake toward Ludington, some eighty-five miles distant. Having been up the night before we secured berths, and though the night was clear and the scene viewed from the deck was pleasant and soothing, we were soon sleeping the restful sleep of tired men, lulled to repose by the murmuring of the waters beneath the bows of the moving steamer and the scarcely felt pulsing motion of the propeller.

The early morn was cool and frosty when the boat reached the pier at the once busy lumbering town of Ludington, from which glory has departed with the destruction of the once dense forests surrounding it, and is slowly settling down into the ways of a country village, content with a few industries in wood and a few in agriculture. The region is not well suited to farming pursuits, but it will bear intelligent cultivation enforced by necessity.

From Ludington to Freesoil was but a short ride, the town being at the west end of the Northern District. There were Saints on board the train, but we did not discover this until we got out at Freesoil, where we were greeted by Brn. J. J. Cornish, J. A. Grant, and a number of others, including our traveling companions whom we did not know at the time. We were met by a cordial greeting, and were made welcome at the house of Bro. John Bennett, which became our temporary home.

A prayer and testimony meeting occupied the time from 8:30 to ten a. m. of the 21st, when the conference for the district began its sessions. These lasted till the evening when by the appointment of those in charge, Bro. E. K. Evans delivered an excellent and timely discourse, from the saying, "The bed is too short that a man may stretch himself on it, and the cover is too narrow that he wrap himself in it." It was pleasant to the Editor to listen to the voice of some one other than himself.

Sunday was occupied in social service until 10:45 a. m., when the dedicatory exercises began and were successfully concluded, the sermon by the Editor, the prayer by Bro. Heman C. Smith.

The usual evening services were held, Bro. Heman being the preacher.

The building is frame, thirty by fifty feet in size, nicely finished, and clear of all incumbrances. It is certainly a credit to those who have built it at a sacrifice upon the part of many. There are some seventeen hundred Saints distributed in some sixteen or seventeen branches. A goodly number of these were convened to aid in the work of dedication. Among them we met Bro. C. G. Lewis of Boyne City, with part of his family, Sr. Horton, the widow of Bro. Wesley Horton, deceased, of Manistee, and a Bro. Nathan Pierce who was baptized in 1842, and who had not accepted any other gospel than the one he received at his baptism. He is now ninety-four years of age, and may round out the hundred. At his request he was received into the church on his original baptism and his ordination as an elder. It was a pleasing incident of our visit and stay at Freesoil.

A run to Reed City, the home of Bro. J. J. Cornish, a restful day and night, a visit to the park and mineral springs nearby, filled up the time till Tuesday afternoon, the 23d, when we went to Coleman, where Bro. J. H. Peters resides, whose guests we were during our stay. We held services here with a house well filled with listeners.

We held two services, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, at Bay City in the Saints' chapel, not yet completed. The attendance was not large, but the spirit of the occasion was good. A circus on an adjoining block, with its horses, animals, and music, was a rival attraction; but we are not inclined to be jealous, so did not worry. Whether any who would have come to the meeting, but went to the circus instead, we do not feel to say, as our opinion was and is that there was probably no one at the circus who would otherwise have come to the meeting, hence no harm was done by its being near to the church; except the possible distraction of the minds of some by the music.

We here met Brn. Wm. Dowker, E. S. White, J. A. Carpenter, Bennett, and a number of others with whom time passed pleasantly. Brn. Cornish and Grant were also with us here.

At an early hour on Friday the 27th we met at the station in Bay City, Brn. Cornish, Grant, Smith, and Smith, and at a little past one were at Shabbona, by the way of Clifford and Deford, railway towns, and eight miles to the east of the last-named place by wagon (thirteen in the load) to Shabbona (accent on the "bo"), under the convoy and care of Bro. Thomas Brown, sometimes called "Tom," sometimes "Brownie," for short. He stopped as he passed the church, discharged the odd eleven, but took Brn. Smith and Smith to the home of Mr. John Proctor, where he, though not of the church, and his wife who is, gave us a Saint's reception. We were in time to be present at the Sunday-school convention in the afternoon, presided over by Bro. O. J. Hawn, the efficient superintendent of the district association. The convention was in a sort of quandary, from which it was extricated by the cutting of a bit of red tape, and business proceeded. There was a very pleasant entertainment in the evening, the program of which gave token of advancement and talent for progress.

We met here with Bro. Wm. Davis, president of the district, Bro. Gilbert, priest of the branch, Brn. Harrison, Dexter, J. J. Bailey, Pearson, Tedsworth, McKenzie, Andrew Barr, Hunter, Smith, Francis, David, Alma, and George Goodenough besides an indefinite number of Smiths "too numerous to mention."

The dedication was at 10:45 in charge of Bro. Wm. Davis, Bro. Buckley, chorister, Sr. Berta Johnson, organist. The opening prayer was by Bro. Davis, sermon by President Joseph Smith, dedicatory prayer by Bro. J. A. Grant.

This building is thirty by fifty feet in size, the same as the one at Freesoil, is brick veneered, and cost, estimated, one thousand dollars. It is all paid for, but is not yet seated, but will be before long. It is very pleasantly situated, supplies a want amounting to a necessity and is in evidence as to what may be done by a unity of purpose and action. The Methodist church standing not far away has been some five years in process of building and is still "on the way."

Shabbona is eight miles east from Deford, a little station on the D. O. & M. Railway. It is in rather a good part of the State, but is now suffering from excessive rains. We noticed corn, wheat, rye, oats, red clover, alsike clover, barley, and sugar beets, so conclude folks can live if they try hard, and are frugal.

This is the place where Bro. Cornish and Elder Brown held their debate, from the effects of which the neighborhood has not yet recovered. Bro. Cornish made a good impression for the work by his demeanor before the public.

The occasion of the dedication was made a holiday, that is, the countryside turned out with the result that the services were held to crammed houses, within the church, and an overflow meeting in Macebee's Hall, kindly tendered for the afternoon and evening, in the first of which Bro. W. H. Kelley, of Indiana, was the speaker and Bro. E. K. Evans in the evening. The afternoon service in the church was a funeral one, in memory of Bro. Frederick Shaffbauer, by Bro. Cornish; the evening service was by Bro. Heman C. Smith. At this meeting four were confirmed who were baptized in the p. m. intermission, by Bro. William Davis, and three children were blessed.

It was the largest religious assembly ever held in the village, and was marked by the utmost of cordiality upon the part of the citizens, outsiders as well as Saints. It was estimated that there were from eight hundred to one thousand people in attendance. Whether this is so or not, it is certain that the church was crowded to the limit, and the hall filled with the overflow.

Rain fell on Saturday night and Sunday morning, but it ceased in time for the services; and the day was a pleasant one.

There are some seventeen branches in the Northern Michigan District, and some thirty-two in the Eastern District. Six were baptized at Freesoil, and nine at Shabbona. The Saints at the latter place are entitled to credit for the ease and thoroughness with which they wrought to build. The wonder of their neighbors is, "How in the world have they done it?"

And now, writing of these events, what shall be said of the labors of Brn. E. C. Briggs, J. H. Lake, E. L. Kelley, Robert Davis, William Davis, and J. J. Cornish, in building up and fastening this belt of Saints, believers in God, Christ, and the Bible, across the State of Michigan in its northern zone from Ludington to Detroit? Bro. Cornish alone has been the instrument of adding to the church some thirteen hundred believers, the majority of whom were represented at the conferences and dedication services held at Freesoil and Shabbona. There is a strong force of young men, coming on. Such men as O. J. Hawn, J. E. Buckley, Goodenough, James W. Davis, Whitford, and others whose names we failed to get.

Besides these, there are bright minds among the young women in the Sunday-school and Religion work, Srs. McGinness, Joslyn, Bennett, Smith, Johnson, and others, whom we could neither remember nor jot down; so give them all credit in the aggregate, by the sentence, There will be a good supply of those who will be ready to take the place of the aged workers by and by.

The Editor was impressed with the outlook in these districts; and though there are some things that need adjusting there is reason to hope that the good Spirit will so be present with those who will endeavor to adjust them that the end for good to all may be reached.

SUNDAY CLOSING OF THE ST. LOUIS FAIR.

It seems that when Congress passed the act appropriating a certain sum to the St. Louis Exposition to be held in 1904 a provision was made therein that the entrance gates should be closed on Sunday. The Secretary of the Treasury, Leslie M. Shaw, before he would transmit the appropriation, insisted upon the Board of Directors of the Fair making this binding upon the management, and a contract has been signed by the necessary parties and transmitted to the office of the Treasurer. It appears that Mr. Shaw was not inclined to take any chances on the matter, and has it secure before the great Exposition is opened to the public.

The correspondence which occurred between the Board of Directors of the Fair and the Secretary of the Treasury is rather interesting, and we herewith present it. Mr. Shaw's letter to the Fair management is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27, 1902.

The President,
Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company,
St. Louis, Missouri.

Sir: This Department begs to invite your attention to Section 25, of the Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of Arts, Industries, Manufactures, and the Products of the Soil, Mine, Forest and Sea, in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, approved March 3, 1901, precedent to the payment of the appropriation therein made, that 'the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the Fair.'"

This Department is of the opinion that the contract referred to should be executed and filed in the Treasury Department before any further vouchers are paid, and the matter is, therefore, brought to your attention, in order that you may promptly lay before the Board of Directors at a regular meeting, a statement as to the necessity for the adoption of a resolution, to be made a part of your records, requiring the closing of the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the Fair. A certified copy of such resolution, as adopted, should be promptly forwarded to this Department.

The contract required by said Act, a form of which is inclosed, should be entered into at once by and between the Board of Directors of the Exposition Company, and the Secretary of the Treasury, acting for and in behalf of the United States, stipulating and agreeing that, in consideration of the payment to said Exposition Company of the sum of five million dollars, appropriated by Congress in aid of said Exposition, or so much thereof as may be found due, the gates shall be closed to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the Fair. It is requested that the matter herein referred to receive prompt attention as this Department, as already indicated, feels constrained to decline to approve any further vouchers for salaries or expenses of the United States Commissioners, or the clerical force employed by them, or other expenses, until the requirements of the law as construed by the Department, shall have been complied with.

You will please have the contract signed by each member of the Board of Directors of the Exposition Company, and transmit the same to this office.

Respectfully,
(Signed) L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The contract submitted is as follows:

THIS AGREEMENT made this            day of            nineteen hundred two, between the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, of the first part, and Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, acting for and in behalf of the United States, of the second part.

WITNESSETH; That whereas by section 25 of the Act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, entitled "An Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States by holding an International Exhibition of Arts, Industries, Manufactures, and the Products of the Soil, Mine, Forest, and Sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," it is provided as a condition precedent to the payment of the appropriation made in said Act, that the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the Fair.

NOW THEREFORE, in consideration of the payment to said Exposition Company of the sum of five million dollars, appropriated by Congress in aid of said exposition, or so much thereof as may be found due, it is hereby covenanted and agreed by the Directors of the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company that the gates to the Exposition grounds shall be closed to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the Fair.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have hereunto subscribed their names the day and year first above mentioned.

Board of Directors.
Secretary of the Treasury.

Further correspondence occurred then as follows:

St. Louis, Missouri, May 30, 1902.

HONORABLE LESLIE M. SHAW,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

Sir: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 27, 1902, inviting attention to Section 25 of the Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc.

Your letter and the draft of an agreement submitted therein, will receive prompt attention. In the meantime, as evidence of the intent of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to abide by the letter and spirit of the Act of Congress, I desire to invite your attention to the Rules and Regulations adopted in November, 1901, under and in pursuance of such Act of Congress, these Rules and Regulations having received the approval of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission. By reference to the third paragraph of these Rules and Regulations you will observe the explicit declaration that "The Exposition will be closed on Sundays."

I deem it proper to thus invite your attention to this action of the Company and Commission in order to show that we have not ignored or overlooked the provision of the Act of Congress.

Personally I have no objection to the resolution suggested by you, and shall submit it for adoption to the next meeting of the Board of Directors on June 10, if you think that our action already taken, as shown by the Rules and Regulations, adopted and in force, does not meet the provisions of the law.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Very respectfully yours,
(Signed) DAVID R. FRANCIS, President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 3, 1902.

HONORABLE DAVID R. FRANCIS, President,
Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company,
St. Louis, Missouri.

Sir: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 30, 1902, relative to the execution of a contract, as provided for by section 25, of the Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to Provide for Celebrating the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States," etc.

In reply, you are informed that it is the opinion of the Department that the evidence of the intent of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to abide by the law and spirit of the Act of Congress, as shown by the adoption of rules and regulations relative to closing the exposition grounds on Sunday, does not fully comply with section 25 of the Act above quoted, and it is therefore requested that the Exposition Company, at its earliest convenience comply with the requirements set forth in Department letter of May 27, 1902.

Respectfully,
(Signed) O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

St. Louis, June 10, 1902.

Sir: At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, held this day, your letters of May 27 and June 3, 1902, with the accompanying form of agreement in regard to Sunday closing were presented with the recommendation of the Executive Committee to enter into said agreement.

On motion the Board of Directors approved the recommendation of the Executive Committee, and authorized and directed the president to enter into the agreement.

I attach to this letter the draft of agreement, signed and executed by me, in accordance with the instructions of the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company.

Respectfully,
(Signed) DAVID R. FRANCIS, President.

Honorable Leslie M. Shaw,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

The evident intention of Secretary Shaw in the matter above recited is to have the contract upon which the Government proposes to help the St. Louis Exposition in its financial side of the Fair so clearly understood in writing that after the Fair is under way the Directors shall not go back on their agreement and open the gates on Sunday.

Whatever may be the views of Secretary Shaw regarding the Sunday and its observance, he is right in enforcing the Act of Congress in granting the concession of aid to the Fair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it regular for any one holding the priesthood to enter into discussions without consulting constituted authority, there being missionary in charge and district president near? In the absence of missionary in charge should the district president be consulted?

Before entering into discussion it is better to have the matter understood by the missionary in charge; or if he can not be reached, the president of the district. If it is a missionary he should confer with the one in charge. If it is one not in the field, the missionary in charge or president of district, as above stated.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. John E. Townes, Rosalie, Texas, the 28th ult.: "We were blessed with fine rain last night. Expect to have preaching sometime in August by Elders E. A. Erwin and E. L. Henson. Are living as faithfully as we can, and praying for all. Saints have had many blessings from the Lord. We can testify of a truth to the latter-day gospel. Our elders labor hard and earnestly but do not have time or opportunity to come our way very often."

Sr. E. P. Wheeler writes from Beggs, Indian Territory, June 29: "We are in this newly settled country, no Saints near us, and so far we have not heard of an elder near this point. We hope there may be one with whom we may communicate before the summer is gone. There are two families of us (Saints) on a lease of one hundred twenty acres this year. My son has one of same amount which we will go onto in winter, as there is another log house to be put up before we can make the move. So far the crops are doing fine. Cotton and corn are the main crop, but we have a fine variety of other vegetables, sweet potatoes, and many other good things. A very fine rain this morning will help all along. Our nearest neighbors, and the ones we lease from, are colored people and Indians, so it is a treat to have a call from a white man. These colored people, or their fathers and mothers, were slaves of the Indians, and when the Proclamation freed the slaves the Government ordered the Indians to share their lands with their slaves. That is why the negro now has land to lease the same as the Indian. The country is rapidly filling up with white people, and if there can be a good class it will be a good place for men seeking homes for their families. Already this summer there has been a small church built about six miles from us. Report is that it is free for all denominations. Time will tell when a Latter Day Saint elder gets here."

Under date of July 1 S. J. Madder wrote from Fanning, Kansas: "I am preaching three miles north of Fanning. House full and many out doors. I feel good in the Lord's work. From May 1 to June 30 I have baptized nine; two in Missouri, seven in Kansas."

Bro. S. D. Condit, Malad, Idaho, July 3: "Our conference was a success, though attendance was small because of busy times. Brn. John Condit and A. J. Layland started for other fields of labor Monday, the one to Snake River Valley and Tetar Basin by cart, the other to Bear Lake Valley and Wyoming by team, Srs. Larsen and Hansen returning with him to Logan. I remain here a little season. Expect to baptize a Mrs. Lilly to-day, and hope to lead others forward before leaving."

Sr. Ruby C. Sandidge, Bozeman, Montana, remitting money for Graceland College, June 29, says: "Having read the announcement in HERALD that one dollar from each of the members would be sufficient to raise the debt of Graceland College, and the recent vision of Bro. I. N. White, 'fall in line,' it occurred to me that a very good beginning to 'fall in line' is for each one to send in his amount, so I send mine with this. Let us not wait on the one who has more than we, but do our part and leave the rest with God."

Sr. Caroline Sandidge, Bozeman, Montana, June 29, writes: "I send a widow's mite to help lift the college debt. How many of God's children will spend, on this coming Fourth of July, perhaps many times that much and never think of what these dollars would do towards raising the college debt. Bridger Sunday-school pupils were recently favored by a good sermon from our missionary, Bro. D. C. White. He also baptized three of its pupils who had passed the age of accountability."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. J. Bailey, of Ubley, Michigan, sends to Graceland College, through the medium of Joseph Smith, an arrow-head of hardened copper, found by Bro. Bailey in that part of the country. It is really quite a curiosity, and we are pleased the brother has remembered Graceland thus. It will probably attract considerable attention in the museum.

Statistics are given in the Chicago Tribune of July 6 showing that on July 4 there were thirty-one persons killed in the United States, 2,649 injured, and property burned to the amount of $250,155.

D. A. Anderson and wife left Lamoni Tuesday morning, July 1. They went from here to Shenandoah, where they expected to visit friends and relatives for a short time, then on to Southern California to attend reunions in that part of the country. On July 24 they expect to leave San Francisco for Honolulu, Bro. Anderson's mission field. This will put them in Honolulu ready for work about the first of August. We trust success may attend them in that part of the world.

One of our young ministers in the field writes us: "The first time I ever preached, I did it not because I wished it, but because the proper authority asked me to. It so happened that it was a greater effort to climb the steps to the pulpit than it was to deliver my first 'sermon;' but the preaching part was easier because our Father put his arm around his baby boy." A little farther on in his letter he says: "You say you hope I will be blessed in my labors. That is equivalent to saying, 'I hope you will be faithful;' for if I am faithful I am sure to be blessed in my work." We trust our young brother may always be characterized by such humility and a knowledge of his dependence on our heavenly Father's mercy.

The Lucas Ledger of June 27 contains an account of the recent Lamoni Stake conference held at Lucas, Iowa. The write-up is good and fair. Among other things the Ledger says in speaking of the Saints: "These people are earnest and unflinching in their efforts to uphold moral principles and right living with all mankind."

The July number of the New Trans-Missouri Official Railway Guide has reached our desk. It is complete and handy.

George Jack wrote from "Ritchie P. O., Michigan," June 28, asking the business department to change the address of his HERALD to Lodge, Michigan. The reason for the change of address is thus tersely told: "Ritchie has gone up in smoke."

D. M. Rudd has sent us clippings from the Cresco, Iowa, newspaper, which show that he and Bro. Peterson are telling plainly what we believe and are.

Sunday morning the Lamoni Saints had the pleasure of listening to A. H. Smith as he related some of the experiences of his recent mission. He spoke for more than an hour. His talk was greatly enjoyed by the listeners. He expressed himself as being happy to be home once more, and the Saints seem glad to hear his voice once more.

Bishop Thomas Taylor of England forwards to aid of Graceland College $141.10, being contributions from Saints in the following branches: Priestly Road and Summerfield, Birmingham, Leicester, Stafford, and Sheffield. This together with former reports of English Saints shows that they are interested in the educational department of the Master's work.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH? — NO. 2.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Just why Joseph Smith is called old Joe when he was the youngest of all the reformers and but thirty-eight and a half years old when he was killed, is one of the mysteries. However there is a point in all this that must not be overlooked. It is brought out more fully in the saying of Jesus in the "Sermon on the Mount":

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

This text proves, if it proves anything at all, that all true servants of God would be persecuted. "It is impossible but that offenses will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come!"

Inasmuch as Satan has set himself to oppose the work of God in all the world, what else could we expect? It may be depended upon that he will do everything possible to overthrow the truth. Knowing this, Jesus said, "Blessed are ye, when men shall . . . persecute you . . . falsely, for my name's sake." Till Satan is bound in the bottomless pit we may be sure that he will be found at his old trade. He has had almost six thousand years of experience among men and must be about perfect in his line of work. He knows the weak points in humanity as well as in every man. The only wonder is that man has not yet learned to detect him in his snares. Many do not seem to realize that where the brightest truth is there the Devil will send the most of his darkest imps.

"Where'er the Lord erects a house of prayer,
The Devil always builds an altar there."

When we see a number of bees swarming around a flower, we know that they want to rob it of its honey. When we see a number of imps swarming around a person why can we not reason as clearly? When we hear so many ridiculous and contradictory stories about any one why can we not see that the imps have been about their master's business? We do not refer to the accusers of Joseph Smith as imps, but the evil stories and bold assertions of some very much resemble the kind of work one would expect the imps to perform.

So it was with Joseph Smith. The evil one did his very worst to overcome him and destroy his influence because he knew that the principles of Mr. Smith were in direct opposition to his own. Perhaps no deeper laid scheme was ever hatched in his council-chambers, and certainly none of more diabolical dimensions than the one he perpetrated on Joseph Smith and the Latter Day Saints. First attacking the church from without and falsely charging her with special crimes such as polygamy, disloyalty to the laws of the land, etc., afterward attacking the church within and tempting some to commit those special crimes, and finally, after leading many away to the valleys of the mountains, persuaded them to indorse those things as a part of their faith. Thus it was and is easy to think that the first charge of polygamy and disloyalty were probably true. Hence we said perhaps no deeper laid scheme was ever hatched in his council chambers. Fortunately, however, Joseph Smith is on record many times in direct opposition to those evils, as is also the whole church.

May heaven pity the church attacked by maddened bulls without and ravening wolves within. But know that through all this, kind reader, the church has stood faithful to virtue though many who disgraced the fair name of the church have been "plucked up and sent away out of the land" where they first lived, as Joseph Smith prophesied concerning the rebellious. As if to hide them from his presence, God has hid them up in the valleys of the mountains, not desiring even his creatures to look upon such corruption. If looking upon that picture at all, kind reader, look only to learn the fate of the rebellious.

Though "a lie may girdle the earth while truth is getting on her boots," yet truth is a mighty conqueror and has always won in the end. For this reason we do not fear but that the truth concerning Joseph Smith will sometime be known. Indeed we are now beginning to see all about us that error is dying "amid her worshipers."

The clergy led the way in the persecution and the laity followed. Now the laity are beginning to think for themselves and feel after the truth, and the clergy must follow, for time is a great auditor of accounts. "The mills of the gods grind slow, but they grind exceeding fine."

Though they are slow to tell where they learned the new truths, yet it is a fact that every religious advancement made in the last seventy-five years has come nearer the principles advocated by Joseph Smith. In almost every church to-day, new doctrines exist that are purely Latter Day Saint in their character. We are glad to see the world being benefited by Mr. Smith's teachings, though many may receive it unconscious of its origin. To-day many of the advanced thinkers are more nearly in harmony with Joseph Smith than they were many years ago.

One cause for the merciless persecution heaped upon Joseph Smith was that he thought far ahead of his time.

A lady missionary returning from Japan delivered a lecture in the Baptist church at Barneveld, Wisconsin, several years ago, in which she said:

"One of the greatest hindrances we meet in Japan is, the common people do not understand us, and the Buddhist priests misrepresent us, our religion, and its Founder every opportunity they get. They are the more active if they see that we are about to make an impression on some of their members. They will tell 'that Jesus was a bad man, and an illegitimate child; that he taught the people not to work, to let the morrow look out for itself, also that his followers were low and ignorant and lived all together in one place, and had all things common, including their wives.' The most ridiculous stories are told about us, and people of course believe them, because they have never been told differently. We are therefore looked upon with suspicion. And when we do get one to see the truth he will often say, 'I did not know that Jesus was the Son of God or even a good man. The priests have told us differently. I thought you were bad people and not good to associate with.'"

There was present at that lecture two representatives of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They could plainly see at a glance how much the work of the priests in Japan was like the clergy at home; how like the persecution heaped upon the Latter Day Saints and their earthly founder in perhaps more enlightened America, by overly religious people. Especially is the likeness the same with the clergy if they think there is a possibility of some of their members being "more perfectly instructed in the way of God." After all, human nature is about the same everywhere and the Devil's work is similar among all nations.

After the lecture, the missionary extended the privilege to ask questions if any one desired to do so. One of the elders before referred to arose and asked: "Do you think those priests in Japan had any degree at all of the Spirit of God when they were misrepresenting the Christian religion and its Founder?" Looking a little puzzled as to why such a queer question should be asked, she replied, "No, certainly not. They know nothing whatever of the Spirit of God." She was then asked, "If the same thing should be practiced in this country, would you not come to the same conclusion?" Thinking no doubt that the question was striking at infidelity, her face brightened and with a cadence in her voice she said, "I think I would." The elder then informed her that he represented the principles advocated by Joseph Smith and that he found the very same difficulty in this country that she had found in Japan, and thanked her for the lecture he had heard and her answers to the questions, as it lightened his burden a little. Like she, he was far from believing that such work was actuated by the Spirit of God.

No reply was given. None was needed. The least said at that particular time the better.

We have often wondered why a minister will object to his members hearing something besides their own faith. Is it because theirs will not bear comparison? Does he think more of his salary than the souls of his hearers? Or, is he afraid that they might obtain elsewhere some truth which he is incapable of bringing to them? Perhaps he considers their minds too weak to judge between right and wrong.

What an insult to one's intellect! What egotism on the part of the minister! "I know more than you do and therefore you must only go where I tell you." A mere machine!

It must be confessed that that is the most effectual way to overcome the truth, but it is not very lasting. In this enlightened age of the world it is not so effectual as formerly. Men do not now propose to be kept in ignorance. Such procedure on the part of the clergy is a certain sign of weakness.

No one in the right need fear an error. One in error may well shun the light.

Some one may ask, "As there is so much said against Joseph Smith, is there not 'a little fire where there is so much smoke?'"

While much is said against him, much is also said for him. We may suggest to those who desire to ask such questions, that it would be well to look for themselves. A second look will reveal the fact that it is not smoke at all, so do not be frightened of fire. Some one has been throwing dust in the air to blind the public, that is all, and many in their hurry to get away from the supposed fire do not stop to see whether it is really smoke or not, and hence appear very ridiculous running from dust for fear of fire. It certainly appears that when one person declares one story, and some one else another, and others tell different stories than the two former, that there is not enough fire to even make a smoke.

When so much was said in the early centuries concerning our Savior, and Peter, and Paul, in fact every man of God, it did not indicate that part of it was true. Neither does it prove that part of what is said against Joseph Smith is true.

It is true if true, or false if false, whether much or little.

"What everybody says must be true" may be a correct adage, but everybody does not say Joseph Smith was a bad man. There are thousands throughout the civilized world who are ready to testify on the other side of the question. Those who knew him best loved him most. At the proper time and in the proper place we shall show that religious zealots were his worst opposers, while doctors, lawyers, statesmen, and judges admired him for his virtues.

By careful reading it will be seen that the chief reason why so many rejected Jesus as the Messiah was because they mistook reputation for character. Reputation is what is said about a man, character is what he really is. Many to-day are making the same mistake concerning Joseph Smith.

Jesus' words to the Jews on this point are equally applicable to-day:

"Ye build the sepulchers of the prophets, and your fathers killed them. Truly ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers: . . . and ye build their sepulchers. Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute."—Luke 11: 47-49.

This would seem almost a prophecy of our time; but whether that or not, many like the Jews are ready to garnish the tombs of dead prophets and as ready to kill the present ones, because they are misunderstood.

Many flatter themselves that they are really judging Joseph Smith by his works and are constantly referring us to Matthew 7: 15, 16, which reads as follows:

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits."

Let us examine this text a little. Surely no one will complain because we desire to examine the word of God.

This text bids us to beware of false prophets but not true ones. Or why the addition, "Ye shall know them by their fruits"? Evidently that we might judge between the two. Two! Yes, two!! There is evidently a true prophet in the consideration to make the other one of the two. There is no escaping that conclusion. But our opposer sees the point no doubt, just now, and doubtless desires to drop the matter. We, however, do not desire to drop it until we shall have embellished the points in our favor, for really every point in this text is in our favor. Let us notice what Jesus did not say, that it may not be used again by our opposers. He does not say, "All coming after me claiming to be prophets will be false ones, for true prophets ended with John. Therefore, beware!" He did not say there were to be no true prophets after his time, for the simple reason that he gave a rule to tell the true from the false. This proves that there were to be true ones and that they were to be known by their fruits.

We are very willing that this rule should be applied to Joseph Smith. We are willing that he be judged by his own works. Nay, more, we are anxious that he be so tried. We do not fear the result of a candid, impartial trial. But we wish to assure the reader that his work, his fruits, are to be tried, and not what some one said was his work or his fruits.

Some one will say, no doubt, judging from popular opinion, "Surely polygamy, blood atonement, robbery, lying, stealing, and like things are enough to condemn him." Yes, a thousand times yes. If he were really guilty of one or all of these crimes he should be condemned. But was he guilty? Simply to assert that he was does not prove it. We say no, emphatically no, as all his life-work and all his teachings show, many of which we shall subsequently furnish,

Diligent search has been made by both friend and foe, and we have yet to learn of the first man that could furnish the proof that Mr. Smith was a bad man. Many disinterested parties have said that he was the best man, in many respects, they ever knew.

Very many are clamoring to tell something they heard, or something this friend, cousin, or distant relative heard. In short, to make it plain, they heard that some one else heard that somebody told them that it was reported that Joseph Smith was a bad man. Such testimony is not admissible in any civilized country. Is it possible that people will allow themselves to be deceived by such evidence?

A lady walked several miles one time to tell one of the representatives of the Latter Day Saints something she said she "wanted him to know." The elder expressing a willingness to listen, she proceeded to say that she "knew about Joe Smith at Nauvoo trying to walk on the water." That "two of her brothers were among others that removed certain planks which Joseph had arranged a few inches under the water, on which he proposed to walk, and thus show them a miracle." That she was "present the next Sunday when he attempted his deception, and saw him fall in the water and get wet when he came to the missing plank which the boys had removed." That she "heard him say that his faith failed him, was the reason he went under."

She was asked if her brothers were older or younger than she, and she replied that they were both younger. After some little conversation, the elder expressing his appreciation at meeting a living witness of that event, she was asked her age, and she said she was born in 1843. The minister informed her that Joseph Smith was killed in 1844, and that she could scarcely remember things so well when only one year old, and that her brothers could scarcely have been born at that time.

Reader, would you expect the friends of Joseph Smith to believe such testimony? If that woman was the only one who had told that story we would almost feel ashamed to refer to it here. But silly as it is, there seems to be some one ready to tell it in almost every neighborhood, and upon no better authority. For some unaccountable reason they forget that less credulous persons would ask how it was that Mr. Smith could see the planks while others standing by could not. What wonderful eyesight he must have had to see what others could not! But then he was sometimes called a seer and that perhaps (?) was the reason. And yet with his superior sight he could not see where the plank was missing. He could see the sides so as not to step off but could not see the end of the plank. Somehow they fail to consider the depth of the Mississippi River, where the deception is said to have taken place, the length of the supports necessary to support the planks, the steamboats and various rafts of logs and lumber which at that time almost hourly passed down the river. There were no railroads in that day perhaps within a thousand miles of Nauvoo, and the river being in the heart of a great nation was the chief means of transportation. And yet Joseph Smith's foot-bridge was able to withstand all this, but some small boys could remove a part of it. What a pity that he could not have lived to have erected foot-bridges every few miles along the Mississippi and other large rivers! People often make him to be a more wonderful man by their wonderful stories than his friends ever dreamed of.

While this story is only one of the many told to overthrow the work of Joseph Smith, yet if a little reason was only exercised and a few simple questions asked no one need be deceived by any of them, but at once discover their purpose and origin.

Joseph Smith was a man greatly loved by his people, and a man who greatly loved them. He fully merited all their esteem. His heart went out in great compassion for the poor and afflicted. Morning after morning he could be seen with a basket on his arm, carrying food to the hungry and administering to the wants of the sick. He was equally kind to those in better circumstances, and never seemed to be more happy than when doing good to others. He was especially kind to his family, not one of whom, be it said to their credit, ever accepted the vile doctrines advocated by Brigham Young. Not one of them emigrated to Utah. His family consisted of a wife and four sons: Joseph, Alexander, Frederick, and David. Mrs. Smith, some years after the death of her husband, married a man not of the church, by the name and title of Major L. C. Bidamon. With her latter husband she continued to live at Nauvoo and vicinity, where she raised her family to manhood. Concerning her the Nauvoo Independent published the following at the time of her death, which took place April 30, 1879:

"She was loved and respected by all her neighbors for her charitable and kind disposition. She was a good and faithful wife, a kind and loving mother, as the expression of her children and associates will verify. If such a record as she has left does not render a person worthy of a better life beyond, it is difficult to conceive how it can be done. . . . The assembly was large; almost every one knew Mrs. Bidamon, some intimately, and for many years; some but for a few months, but it is safe to say, that the respect, esteem, and love with which she was regarded by all is but a just tribute to the sterling virtues of the woman, wife, and mother, whom the community so soberly, so sadly, and so tenderly, laid away to rest on this beautiful May-day by the side of the Father of Waters, the mighty Mississippi."

Reader, imagine, if you can, such a woman being the wife in her former years of such a base impostor as Joseph Smith is said to have been. No, it stretches our credulity too much. Rather would we believe that her association with Joseph Smith helped to make her a woman of "sterling virtues," loved and admired by all who knew her. Is it any wonder that such a woman refused to follow Brigham Young—refused to accept polygamy—refused to leave her first faith? So much for Emma, the only wife of Joseph Smith. Taking a peep at him through his better half we put his maligners to shame.

It might not be improper here to hear a word from Major Bidamon:

"NAUVOO, Ill., June 10, 1897.

"My Dear Mrs. ———:

"Yours of the 3d inst. was cordially received and contents noted. In answer must say that I do not believe that Joseph Smith, so-called prophet, was a polygamist, and I form my opinion from the most reliable seers [source].

"His widow, my dear wife, always declares that there never was such a revelation by him, and the report is as false as perdition; and, furthermore, she was of that nature that she would not have lived with any man that practiced polygamy any more than a rat would remain in a burning barn. . . . I, myself, never belonged to any church, and can look impartial on both sides.

"Yours with due respect,

When it is seen that Mr. Bidamon is a disinterested witness, his testimony has the more weight.

The sons of Joseph Smith lived with their mother and stepfather until they were men grown. In 1860, Joseph, the eldest, succeeded his father as president of the church, which position he now holds. Perhaps no man in all the world's history has written half so much as he in opposition to polygamy. Two of his brothers have also written and spoken much against the "twin relic of barbarism"—polygamy. The youngest of the sons, in fact three of them, have attacked that evil almost in the dooryard of Brigham Young. If Joseph Smith's sons are "chips off the old block," then those who think he was a polygamist get little consolation from them.

We desire here to introduce the direct testimony of Mrs. Smith-Bidamon as it appears in many publications. This testimony was frequently published before her death and she could have corrected it if it had not been exactly correct.

Q.—"What about the revelation on polygamy? did Joseph Smith have anything like it? What of spiritual wifery?"

A.—"There was no revelation on either polygamy or spiritual wifery."

Q.—"Was there nothing about spiritual wives that you recollect?"

A.—"No such thing as polygamy or spiritual wifery was taught privately or publicly before my husband's death, that I have now or ever have had any knowledge of."

Q.—"Did he not have other wives than yourself?"

A.—"He had no other wife but me, nor did he to my knowledge ever have. I know that he had no other wife or wives than myself in any sense, either spiritual or otherwise."

The facts are that Brigham Young in 1852, eight years after Joseph Smith's death, caused to be read at a conference held in Salt Lake City, a certain revelation on polygamy, called patriarchal or celestial marriage. This revelation he said had been given of God through Joseph Smith in July, 1843, but that he had kept it locked up for the past nine years "under a patent lock where there does not anything leak out that should not." But it was not in Joseph's own handwriting, nor could he produce the original. It rests alone on the assumption of Brigham Young. Of this matter we may say more hereafter. Joseph's wife says there was nothing of the kind, as we have shown in her testimony.

Many persons are of the opinion that the work of Brigham Young was but the continuation of the work begun by Joseph Smith. But such persons have not given the matter sufficient investigation to be safe. The teachings of the two men were very different, as were also their characters. There are few points where the two systems of faith exactly agree, though in many things they are similar. There is perhaps more difference between these two churches than any other two churches in America. This fact is evidenced more and more clearly the more one reads. It would be unkind and ungentlemanly of us to ridicule or denounce any one who differs from us, even including the Mormons; beside, no doubt, there are many among them who are trying as best they can to live according to the best light they have. It would be unreasonable to say that there were no good people among them, but this much the facts warrant us in saying, some of their leaders were vile and vicious and some of their teachings were shocking. Some of the teachings of Brigham Young and company differed from the teachings of Joseph Smith as far as could possibly be—as far as east from west, or black from white. We therefore ask the reader to keep Utah Mormonism out of mind. It was neither the cause nor the result of Mr. Smith's teaching. Some may think us uninformed or else we would not make that statement. But the reason we make it is because we are a little informed on that point. We would scarcely write and send it out to the world unless we had the proof at hand. We are of the opinion that only the uninformed or misinformed will connect the one man with the other, or the one system of faith with the other.

This matter has been fought on every corner. The friends of Joseph Smith have maintained and do now maintain that there is no proof that will connect him with any crime, polygamy or otherwise. It has been fought in the courts of our country and each time it has been decided that the Utah church is not the successor to the one organized by Joseph Smith.

We desire here to introduce some of these court decisions for through them we get another peep at Joseph Smith and the result of his teaching. We first give the decision of Honorable Judge L. S. Sherman, in the Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, as may be found in the Journal Entry, February term, 1880:

"The Court do find as matters of fact [here we omit the description of land on which the Kirtland Temple was built and over which the suit was held] that the church in Utah, the Defendant of which John Taylor is president, [John Taylor was Brigham Young's successor] has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-God worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

"And the Court do further find that the Plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property."

AN APPEAL.

Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11: "It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portugese languages, and others, as the missions may require; these tracts to be written by those in the ministry and those of the brothers who are not of the ministry who have a talent for writing, and to be submitted to the presidency before being published. They should be short, clearly stated, and a sufficient number should be printed to furnish the traveling ministry with the quantities desirable for them to distribute."

He who rules in the heavens above and in the earth beneath hath decreed, "My word . . . shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Beloved Saints, as a minister for Christ I feel the import of this appeal, more so now than ever, since coming in contact with a number of Germans, of the necessity of just what is spoken of in the revelation.

Again: "Ask, and it shall be given." How shall the church give that which they do not possess? All the tracts (to my knowledge) published by authority of the church, save two, are too expensive to give out gratis, therefore some shorter and more clearly stated are needed for distribution wherever our people reside in a neighborhood of Germans, and they are plentiful here in America. Our German missionaries are few, as yet. Our missionary in charge asked me to push the work among the Germans (here in Pottawattamie District, Iowa). I may go, preach, or lecture among them; many wish to know more, but alas! not sufficient and "clearly stated" literature to leave with those who are seeking light. They need some more literature than we now have to guide them. Brethren, shall we be counted a slothful generation, and delay this until "some more convenient season"? Let us be up and doing.

Several things are needful to accomplish this: 1. Writers; 2. Tracts, pamphlets, books; 3. Publishing. Now let us make an effort, a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together. For aught I know, there may be much written and many may intend to write! I am now ready and willing to do what I can for my German friends. I wish to correspond with German brethren. We have a willing heart and hand, but need a little assistance financially to procure a few "good books" on American antiquities and archæology in the German language and a dictionary. Who will give me a helping hand?

To write manuscripts that will stand approved before a committee I need these helps. As you help me I help you. We are workers together. I have need of you to accomplish this.

I am at present in Cass County, Iowa. Only parts of three families in this county members. Many Germans here. We are short financially. Had we sufficient literature to distribute, the silent messenger would do his work! I long to see the day when the church can publish our own books in German, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. I have sent to Utah and procured a German Book of Mormon. As far as I have compared it with the English it is a good translation. Yet a Utah publication is suspicious to some. I would feel better to hand a friend one of our own publications, but this will take time and money. I think it would be more profitable to first publish our books and literature to send and sell, then follow up with missionaries, than to send missionaries with no books and but little literature.

I have written my conviction. I ask; shall I receive?

"For a noble cause contending,
God speed the right."

All communications to my home address will reach me. Hopefully,
MONDAMIN, Iowa.

A REALLY great man is known by three signs: generosity in design, humanity in execution, and moderation in success.—Bismarek.

EVIDENCES OF THE BRIGHAMITE APOSTASY.

Having promised some of the ministry to furnish them with a few facts relative to the Brighamite apostasy, I thought perhaps it might be well to publish in HERALD and Ensign, for the use of all who may have this matter to meet. I simply quote from the Brighamite publications, leaving the reader to compare with the works and doctrine of the church.

ADAM, OUR FATHER AND GOD.

Brigham Young said: "One thing has remained a mystery in this kingdom up to this day. It is in regard to the character of the well beloved Son of God." But he clears away the mystery as follows: "Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives with him. . . . HE is our FATHER and our GOD and the only God with whom we have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later. . . . When the virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family."—Mill. Star, vol. 15, pp. 769, 770. (Italics their own.)

JESUS A POLYGAMIST.

Orson Hyde said: "It will be borne in mind that once on a time, there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; and on a careful reading of that transaction, it will be discovered that no less a person than Jesus Christ was married on that occasion. If he was never married, his intimacy with Mary and Martha, and the other Mary also whom Jesus loved, must have been highly unbecoming and improper to say the best of it."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 259.

HIS SEED.

"What did the old Prophet mean when he said (speaking of Christ) 'He shall see his seed, prolong his days, etc.' . . . Did he multiply, and did he see his seed? . . . If God be not our Father, grandfather, or great grandfather, or some kind of a father in reality, in deed and in truth, why are we taught to say, 'Our Father who art in heaven?' How much soever of holy horror this doctrine may excite in persons not impregnated with the blood of Christ, and whose minds are consequently dark and benighted, it may excite still more when they are told that if none of the natural blood of Christ flows in their veins, they are not the chosen or elect of God."—Ibid., p. 260.

GOD IMPERFECT, BUT PROGRESSIVE.

At the funeral of President Snow, Elder John W. Taylor said: "Just imagine for a moment the idea that through the principle of eternal progression we can ultimately become like our Father and God! . . .

If all things are added unto you, ultimately you will become like our Father and God. It is true, however, that when you reach the position he occupies to-day, He will be that much further ahead of you, and it will be still said to you, Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."—Conference Minutes, pp. 91, 93, 1901.

WHY THEY PRACTICE POLYGAMY.

"If ye abide not that covenant [polygamy], then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory."—Revelation (?) on polygamy, supplement to Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 32.

Orson Pratt said, August 29, 1852: "We will show you that it is incorporated as a part of our religion, and necessary for our exaltation to the fullness of the Lord's glory in the eternal world."—Ibid., p. 18.

AN INDEPENDENT GOVERNMENT.

Brigham Young: "If Utah was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State, and we chose to introduce slavery here, it is not their [the government's] business to meddle with it; and even if we treated our slaves in an oppressive manner, it is still none of their business and they ought not to meddle with it."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 40.

"They have succeeded in making us an organized Territory, and they are determined to make us an independent State or Government, and as the Lord lives it will be so."—Ibid., p. 40.

"We are now doing but little besides taking care of ourselves, but the kingdom has got to be taken and the Lord Jesus come to reign here."—Ibid., p. 42.

"Here let me ask the old Saints a question. Have you ever seen a temple finished, since this church commenced? You have not. The Lord says, 'Be patient and gather together the strength of my house.'"—Ibid., p. 42.

Again: "Brother Heber said to you, if the time has come, designed by the Lord Almighty, for the thread to be cut between this people and the residue of the world, then the Lord will suffer our enemies to clip the thread; and I am with him in that sentiment. But if the time is not come, the Lord will not suffer them [the army] to come. If He designs that traffic should continue between us and them, that we shall have the privilege of bringing our immigration, of preaching the gospel and saving the people, let me tell you that they will not come; God will stop them."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 168.

Heber C. Kimball: "When the United States have done their best, then other nations will tackle us, and so things will go on, until every nation is brought into subjection to the kingdom of God."—Ibid., p. 275.

Again: "The kingdom of God is set up in a degree: it is in embryo, and it will continue to receive strength. The child has proclaimed its liberty, although it has not got its full growth. The child is free; but he has got to whip out all the wicked and bring them into subjection to the kingdom of God, or to the kingdom of his Father. We are the boys that are being brought to this test."—Ibid., p. 276.

And again: "How good it is to reflect that the day has come in which we have declared our independence. This we have done because the Lord God has said it to his servant Brigham. We are independent of those troops and those poor, miserable, ungodly scoundrels that they call civil officers. . . . The Lord has said to Brother Brigham, 'Say to them, before all Israel, in my name, They can not come in here.'"—Ibid., vol. 6, p. 128.

John Taylor:

"We'll burst off all our fetters, and break the Gentile yoke, For long it has beset us, but now it shall be broke: No more shall Jacob bow his neck; henceforth he shall be free, In Upper California: O! that's the land for me," etc.

"We have got to do it."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 191.

Ezra T. Benson: "When the standard of freedom is raised, we shall bid all classes welcome to the rights and privileges of liberty. . . . There is not a master-spirit on the earth at the present time who dare take this stand and raise the flag of liberty, bidding welcome to all nations, except President Brigham Young. . . . The standard of liberty is about to be unfurled."—Ibid., vol. 6, p. 182.

DO AS TOLD.

Compared with the above the following sounds rather queer: "We are in a land of liberty; and our fathers have taught us—especially those born in America, that every man and woman and every child old enough to speak, argue, read, reflect, etc., must have minds of their own, and not listen to anybody else. They are taught to shape their own opinions, and not depend upon others to direct their thoughts, words, or actions. . . . Such views, though entertained by the human family at large, must be checked in this people."—Brigham Young, ibid., vol. 6, p. 41.

Heber C. Kimball: "If you are told by your leader to do a thing, do it. None of your business whether it is right or wrong."—Ibid., p. 32.

Again: "Can you live your religion, except you do as you are told? I have said, again and again, that if we live our religion, and do as we are told, those men [the army] will never come over those mountains; for we shall slay the poor devils before they get there."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 163.

PROPHETS.

Heber C. Kimball: "The church and kingdom to which we belong will become the kingdom of our God and his Christ, and Bro. Brigham Young will become President of the United States. . . . And I tell you he will be something more; but we do not now want to give him the name: but he is called and ordained to a far greater station than that, and he is fore-ordained to take that station, and he has got it; and I am Vice-president, and Bro. Wells is the Secretary of the Interior—yes, and of all the armies in the flesh."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 219.

Again: "We will yet save the Constitution of the United States. We will do it, as the Lord liveth."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 216.

And again: "We shall prescribe a course for the United States to take after this. Well, you do not believe that, do you? Do as you are told, and see if it does not come to pass."—Ibid., vol. 6, p. 37.

Brigham Young, in 1852, made the following prediction concerning polygamy: "It will sail over, and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priest-craft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people."—Supplement to Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 31.

In 1856 he said: "In the days of Joseph it was considered a great privilege to be permitted to speak to a member of congress, but twenty-six years will not pass away before the elders of this church will be as much thought of as the kings on their thrones."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 40.

FIGHT.

Heber C. Kimball: "Send 2,500 troops here, our brethren, to make a desolation of this people! God Almighty helping me, I will fight until there is not a drop of blood in my veins. Good God! I have wives enough to whip out the United States; for they will whip themselves."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 95.

"Listen to the counsel of God and those men that are placed here; and if you will do that, I can promise you, in the name of Israel's God, and by virtue of my calling, that you never shall be swerved aside, and our enemies shall be overcome every time before they cross that Big Mountain, if we have to do it ourselves. . . . We intend to kill the poor curses ourselves, before they get to the Big Mountain."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 135.

Again: "The Lord says, 'In the last days it is my business to fight the battles of my Saints.' If it is his business, he will take his children to do it; and we are his children. You may think that comes right in contact with the revelations of Jesus Christ; but it is not so. Why does our President, our Governor, order out 3,000 men to be in the mountains? To fulfill your prayers. What do you pray for? 'O Lord,' say you, 'I ask thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to hedge up the way of our enemies, that they may never come here.' We had to send some 3,000 men to fulfill your prayers. Who is going to fight the battles of the Lord, if not his people? They have got to stand in defense of this kingdom and church of God in the last days.

"If our enemies are prevented from coming here, they are prevented because of the Saints of God. Would they have been prevented from coming here if our brethren had not gone out there and hedged up their way? God will take his few valiant servants in the last days, and with them use up the world and bring every kingdom and dominion into subjection to the kingdom of God."—Ibid., vol. 6, p. 51.

"'Well, now,' some one says, 'What good does it do for two or three thousand men to be in the mountains?' Why, I don't know that it is any of our business. It says, 'Uncle Sam can not come. We are ready; we are on the spot.' Well, what else? It gives those men an experience that they can not have on any other principle. They are getting an experience—for what? To cultivate them for something greater, which will come next year; and if it does not come then, it will come sometime."—Ibid., vol. 6, p. 33.

"We have told you all the time they [the soldiers] will not come."

"When it is necessary that blood should be shed, we should be as ready to do that as to eat an apple. That is my religion."—Ibid., p. 34.

"As Bro. Taylor says, you may dig your graves, and we will slay you, and you may crawl into them."—Ibid., p. 35.

Orson Hyde: "Do I believe that the United States will be divided? Yes, I do; and the prayers of all the Saints throughout the world should be to that effect; for they wage war against the kingdom of God, and have fallen upon that stone with an army; and let them be broken, even according to the words of Jesus."—Ibid., p. 13.

SAVIORS ON MOUNT ZION.

How does the following compare with present conditions? The Gentiles have taken the city of Zion; Brighamites are scattering to the north, south, and west, and wheat is being shipped by the carloads into Utah from other States every year.

Heber C. Kimball: "Lots of my kindred will come to me, and Bro. Brigham's will come to him, as Joseph's father, and mother, and brethren came to him in Egypt. As that is true, this is, as the Lord liveth. The Lord says that saviors shall come upon Mount Zion in the latter days. Mount Zion is here in the tops of the mountains."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 175.

Again: "I am very thankful that so many of the brethren have come in with handcarts; my soul rejoiced, my heart was filled and grew as big as a two-bushel basket. Two companies have come through safe and sound. Is this the end of it? No; there will be millions on millions that will come much in the same way, only they will not have handcarts, for they will take their bundles under their arms, and their children on their backs, and under their arms, and flee."—Ibid., vol. 4, p. 106.

"We are now going to work to lay up our grain, and we are building storehouses to store it away in; and we shall not only store away grain but other things that will keep; and the day will come that you (strangers) will have to come to us for bread to eat; and we will be your saviors here upon Mount Zion. You don't believe it now; but wait a little while, and you will see that it will come to pass."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 9.

After nearly fifty years Utah contains about 275,000 people, many of them being Gentiles.

"But the day will be, and it is right at our doors, when thousands and millions in the United States and in the old countries will come to us and render to us all the rich things that this earth affords, in exchange for food."—Heber C. Kimball, ibid., vol. 5, p. 255.

CHRIST COME TO SALT LAKE TEMPLE.

Brigham Young said, April 6, 1853: "But what are we here for, this day? . . . To lay the foundation of a Temple to the Most High God, so that when his Son, our Elder Brother, shall again appear, he may have a place where he can lay his head, and not only spend a night or a day, but find a place of peace, that he may stay till he can say, 'I am satisfied.'"—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 33.

THEIR PRESIDENTS NOT ORDAINED.

Brigham Young said: "Who ordained me to be First President of this church on earth? I answer, It is the choice of this people, and that is sufficient."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, p. 320.

Orson Pratt: "President Brigham Young and his two counselors received no new office by being taken from the Quorum of Twelve and appointed to other duties. . . . They [the First Presidency] receive no new office, but are chosen by the priesthood and appointed; they are not ordained but are appointed to preside."—Speech in Salt Lake City, Oct. 5, 1877, published in Deseret News.

C. W. Penrose: "No man is ordained President of the Church."

F. D. Richards: "In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, no one has ever been ordained to be President of the Church."—True Succession in Church Presidency, p. 154.

Brigham Young's doctrine on blood atonement, etc., is plainly set forth in the last-mentioned work by Bro. H. C. Smith, also in the tract, "Necessity for a Reorganization," by H. O. Smith, and other works, consequently need not be quoted here.

AS TO REVELATION.

Although they annually sustain from twelve to fifteen revelators, seers, etc., no revelation has so far come to the people since the organization of the Brighamite church in 1847. True, their Doctrine and Covenants contains what is called the word of the Lord to Brigham Young concerning the organization of "Israel's Camp," etc., but this organization had been effected nearly a year prior to the giving of this so-called revelation, according to "Life of Brigham Young."

President John Taylor also presented a so-called revelation in October, 1882, in the which promises are made to the effect that their "enemies should not have dominion over" them. Shortly the prosecution of the polygamists was started, resulting in their imprisonment, disfranchisement, confiscation of property, and finally their promising to quit polygamy, and their asking for amnesty at the hands of their "enemies."

The Brighamites have commenced to discover that "where there is no vision, the people perish," and complaints have been made concerning this lack of revelation. George Q. Cannon referred to this in the following manner: "Some have deceived themselves with the idea that because revelations have not been written and published, therefore there has been a lessening of power in the church of Christ. This is a very great mistake, as we will find out sooner or later. This church has been continually led by the spirit of revelation. The spirit of revelation has been here in our conference. The addresses that have been delivered have been made under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and they are the word of God unto this people, binding upon them, and they will be judged by these words that we have heard."—Conference Report, October, 1900, p. 64.

CHOOSING PRESIDENTS.

The editor of the Deseret News states the rule in this way: "The Quorum or Council of the Twelve has its President, who is the senior member of that body. This seniority is that of ordination into the Quorum. It is not seniority of age nor of ordination to the Apostleship that brings the Presidency of the Quorum, but of ordination or reception into that body."—Semi-Weekly Deseret News, Oct. 14, 1901.

We have not been able to find such rule in the revelations of God, nor has such rule been followed. Thomas B. Marsh was among the last ones ordained in 1835. See Millennial Star, volume 15, page 210. Nor has this rule always been followed in Utah.

AS TO ORGANIZATION.

Without any authority in the law, the Brighamites went to work and organized more than one hundred quorums of Seventy, placing seven presidents over each quorum, and seven to preside over the whole.

THREE GLORIES.

Contrary to Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7, the Brighamites teach that there are three degrees of glory in the celestial kingdom, and, in order to obtain the highest, a man must have a plurality of wives.

ALL MANNER OF SIN.

Providing they have been married for all eternity, to one or more wives, they may commit all manner of sin, excepting the shedding of innocent blood, and still be permitted to enter into their exaltation, and become gods in eternity. See document on celestial marriage.

Numerous other false and corrupt doctrines might be cited, but the above ought to be sufficient to show that the people of Utah have been misled, deceived, and have departed from the pure, original principles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

PETER ANDERSON.

WOE TO THE LAND SHADOWING WITH WINGS.

(Isaiah 18: 1-6.)

The Reverend Doctor R. C. Shimeall, of the Presbytery of New York City, treating upon Isaiah 18, on page 305 of his book, the "Second Coming of Christ," says: "This passage, instead of 'Woe to,' etc., should read, 'Ho! the land of overshadowing wings,' etc. This prophecy refers to that nation which shall hold a maritime preëminence over all others, and which can refer to none other so emphatically as to the United States of America." Reverend Doctor Shimeall is the author of eight or more literary works, and is a very prominent writer and historian.

I now present a clipping from the SAINTS' HERALD for September 1, 1897, which is of special worth in this connection:

A WORD IN A FIT PLACE.

A copy of the Armory, published at Boston, Massachusetts, by H. L. Hastings, for August, has been sent us by some friend of the cause. In it is an article from Israel's Messiah, entitled, "A Refuge for Persecuted Jews." From this article we quote the following:

"Rabbi Isaac Leeser, of Philadelphia, the translator of the Hebrew Bible, says that the prophecy in the eighteenth chapter of the Prophet Isaiah, 'Ho! to the land with spreading wings, which is beyond the rivers of Cush, that sendeth on the sea ambassadors, and in vessels of gomeh messengers over the face of the waters,' is a prophecy relating to America. Standing where the prophet stood, and looking 'beyond the rivers of Cush,' or Ethiopia, the first land we strike is the western world. And this land,—the very name of which was then unknown,—with its emblem, the eagle with 'spreading wings,' whose ambassadors are all sent by sea, in the swiftest ships, has opened to the sons of Israel such a refuge as no other land afforded for 1700 years. Into this land the teeming multitudes of earth have poured at a rate unexampled in history; and in this land was first enunciated the grand doctrine that all men were created free and equal; and that Jews as well as Gentiles had 'a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' Some other nations have since ceased to persecute the Jews, but the statute books of the United States of America have never been stained with laws against the exiled sons of Israel; and here for the first time since their dispersion, was an asylum opened where the Jewish wanderer could find rest, justice, and right."

The following from the International Cyclopedia will be of interest to all who believe that the Prophet Isaiah, in the above-named chapter, was referring to the time, place, and work which would be done by this nation, and this church in this last dispensation:

"Ethiopia, the biblical Kush. Originally, all the nations inhabiting the southern part of the globe, as known to the ancients; or rather, all men of dark-brown or black color, were called Ethiopians. Later this name was given more particularly to the inhabitants of the countries south of Libya (see gen. hist.) and Egypt, or the upper Nile, extending from 10 to 25 degrees north longitude, 45 to 58 degrees east longitude—the present Nubia, Sennaar, Kordofan, Abyssinia."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Lie still in the darkness,
Sleep safe in the night,
The Lord is a Watchman,
The Lamb is a Light.
Jehovah, he holdeth
The sea and the land—
The earth in the hollow
Of his mighty hand.
All's well in the darkness,
All's well in the light,
The Lord is a Watchman,
The Lamb is a Light."

If I Could Only Know.

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."

—1 Peter 5: 7.

If I could only surely know
That all these things that tire me so
Were noticed by the Lord!
The pang that cuts me like a knife,
The noise, the weariness, the strife—
What peace it would afford.
I wonder if he really shares
In all these little human cares,
This mighty King of kings!
If he who guides through boundless space
Each blazing planet in its place,
Can have the condescending grace
To mind these petty things.

It seems to me, if sure of this,
Blent with each ill would come such bliss
That I might covet pain,
And deem whatever brought to me
The loving thought of Deity,
And sense of Christ's sweet sympathy,
Not loss, but richest gain.

Dear Lord, my heart shall no more doubt,
That thou dost compass me about
With sympathy divine;
The love for me once crucified
Is not the love to leave my side,
But waiteth ever to divide
Each smallest care of mine.—Selected.

The Anti-Cigarette Movement.

"Is this where the lady is who helps boys to stop smoking?" asked a boy caller of nearly two years ago at the Anti-Cigarette League headquarters in the Woman's Temple, Chicago. "Yes," I replied, "I am glad to help boys who smoke." We sat down, and he told me his story. He was an office boy in a building nearby, and had heard about the Anti-Cigarette League and me, its Superintendent, through a boy in the employ of Marshall Field & Co., whom I had helped to give up cigarettes. My young caller, a boy of sixteen, who had been smoking for about two years, told me with a look of apprehension that he was about to lose his "job" if he did not give up cigarette smoking, and he said that he had tried and tried, and could not do it. He said, "I can't remember anything any more; I can't even remember where I put my hat if I lay it down, and forget to do things I am told, in the office." This boy proved to be a typical case of cigarettism, and his experience has been that of thousands of others, many of whom I have known personally in the four years in which I have been working among the boys of Chicago. I saw this boy was desperately in earnest and seemed to be sincerely desirous of breaking the chains that bound him. He was a Sunday-school boy, but like thousands of others, was in a Sunday-school where, evidently, but little attention is being given to the cigarette and other evils which are breaking down the moral characters of the boys much faster than the religious teaching is building them up. I asked him if his Sunday-school teacher knew that he smoked, and he said, "Yes, he asked me once if I didn't smoke cigarettes, and I told him that I did." I asked the boy what his Sunday-school teacher said or did about it, and he told me that he said "It is a bad habit, you should not do it," but never referred to the matter again in the class or elsewhere.

I took the boy into my private office, and talked earnestly with him seeking to arouse the heroic in his nature, and we knelt together and prayed for God's help in the great struggle against appetite. He went out with a new light in his eye and erect head and a very determined look upon his face, which was in a great contrast to his downcast look and shrinking attitude when he came in. I gave him some lemons for lemonade when the appetite should come upon him, and asked him to come in and see me every day, which he did. Victory was in his face for several succeeding days. On Monday morning he came in very jubilant, saying, "Yesterday was my hardest day, but I did not smoke: I kept saying 'I will conquer; I will conquer; I won't smoke!'" On Tuesday and Wednesday victory was his. On Thursday morning when he came in I was busy, but I saw the enemy had triumphed. As soon as I could get to him I took the poor boy's hand in mine, and I said, "Oh, Frank, how did it happen?" and he told me the story of his defeat. He said, "I lost my mind yesterday; I could not think of anything but cigarettes, and I went out and smoked thirty-five before I stopped." The shame and remorse shown by the boy were pitiful indeed. From that time on his efforts to abstain from cigarettes were a series of defeats, although everything that could be done was done to help him. He was placed under medical treatment without avail, and was treated by a cigarette specialist, but smoked on, and it seemed there was no help for him and for such as he. One day, when I was leaving the office, to be gone a couple of weeks, he asked me if I was to speak to any boys while I was gone, and if so, asked me if I would not warn them never to begin. He said, "Tell them they will have to suffer for every bad thing they ever do." This he knew by awful experience, for he was a victim not only of cigarettes, but of other vile habits, as we found out in studying his case. The cigarette leads in most cases to personal impurity.

The cold, clammy condition of Frank's hand when I would shake hands with him always made me think of the death sweat. One day I stepped to the lavatory and washed my hands, which the boy noticed, and asked me why I washed my hands, and I told him that the poison of the nicotine he smoked was unpleasant, and I wanted to get it off of my hands, and he said, "Well, I thought so." He was exceedingly sensitive about his condition. I went to see his employer, who told me that he was the best office boy he had ever had in his office until he became stupid through cigarette smoking. He bore with him long, but finally had to let him go, and the boy became in the chronic "out of work" condition in which so many cigarette smoking boys are finding themselves these days. It has been some time since I have seen Frank, as we had to give him up as a hopeless case.

While there are many cigarette fiends who seem to be past redemption, at least from a human standpoint, I am glad to be able to say that there are thousands of young Americans who once tampered with the cigarette, but who now look upon the "deadly" with fear and disgust. The Anti-Cigarette League is helping rapidly to turn the tide against cigarette smoking. We appeal to the manliness, the good sense, the patriotism of young Americans to take a stand against this filthy and debasing habit, and splendid results are seen. The Anti-Cigarette movement is rapidly spreading over the nation, and should be pushed in every community. While the work of rescuing smokers is a great and needed one, the most important work is that of prevention, and here our work is telling most effectually. Our little paper, the Boy, which we give at the low price of ten cents a year in clubs of thirty and more, is having great influence upon thousands of boys. Sample copies sent on request.—Lucy Page Gaston, Founder and Superintendent of Chicago Anti-Cigarette League, in Life-Boat.

Prayer Union.

Sr. I. M. Tippins, of Wallace, Alabama, writes that she has two children, but that they are not living as closely to the Lord as they should, hence she desires the prayers of the Saints in behalf of herself and the children. She writes that she was afflicted with asthma from the time when she was three years old until about fifteen years ago, when she was administered to and healed. She therefore has confidence in the prayers of the Saints.

The Ideal Teacher.

Lightly considering this subject before us, we might at a first casual glance form the conclusion that, in order to reach the perfectness of that which is perfect, or in other words, to reach the height of ideality, it would be necessary to have ideal plans, ideal surroundings, and ideal material to work with. Take the carpenter, for instance. If he has poor tools with which to do his work, he will make a poor showing of his ability as a carpenter though he be ever so competent in his profession. Or take a master workman in any line of business and let him labor under disadvantages and he will find a long and tedious road before him ere he attains perfectness. Such thoughts as these might occur to one's mind as the necessary prerogative, and it appears a very reasonable one also. To my mind the "ideal teacher" is the one who can and who will adapt himself completely to the circumstances and conditions which surround him in whatever place he is located.

The "ideal teacher" will take the raw material, unfavorable circumstances, unnatural conditions, and go to work with a will and a firm determination to do the best he can, to conquer all the odds that may be against him, no matter what their nature may be, if it be possible. His class may be an unruly one, hard to manage, hard to get interested in lessons, or even may not care for the Sunday-school at all. The scholars may be full of prank and all kinds of mischief; sometimes, perhaps, get the best of their teacher, too. Methinks I can see in my mind's eye the ideal teacher telling these same boys (with class-book laid aside for a moment or two) how, when he was a boy like them, he used to place pins in the chair his teacher occupied that he might enjoy the teacher's surprise, and other little things, too,—just as his class of boys are doing now.

Some children think their Sunday-school teacher never did a naughty thing in his life; never disobeyed parents, or got dirty hands and face, and surely never did as boys and girls do these days. Now the reason for children thinking such things is, many teachers make the mistake of forgetting their own childhood days, and when a pupil seems unmanageable, instead of trying to place themselves in the pupil's condition, they try to pull him to theirs. And while they are good, and competent to teach, they fall short of idealism, simply because they shoot over the mark they are aiming at. The "ideal teacher" will find a way to reach the seemingly hopeless ones of his class; find a way to reach the standard of each pupil's reasoning, and find a way to master all the difficulties that would arise in a class of healthy boys or girls, whose fertile minds are ever on the alert for something new and a little fun attached.

I understand the "ideal teacher" to be one who will labor under difficult surroundings, and find a way to rise above them whatever their nature, condition, or circumstances.

I do not wish to be understood to mean that the "ideal teacher" does everything perfectly, makes no mistakes, or is beyond comparison. That idea of the matter would be very discouraging to many of us, I believe. The idea I desire to convey to this convention, and what I comprehend the "ideal teacher" to be, is one who might be found among any rank of Latter Day Saints' Sunday-school workers; one who might be deficient in education; one who has discovered he does not know it all, and is willing to learn, as he is willing to teach others; one who prepares his lessons to suit his class and not to suit the Quarterly always; one who is humble and does not forget to pray, and takes Jesus as his guide in all things; one who "studies to show himself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

How May Our Convention be Made Profitable to Each School in the District?

A convention should be composed of Sunday-school workers from each school, and in arranging the program, provision should be made to use all who are present, if possible.

The work done by those to whom special work is assigned, should solicit the closest attention of all present.

The nature of the work should be such as will meet the most pressing demands of the district or schools. This work should be presented in the most practical way, that all present can carry with them notes of the important points brought out in the papers, talks, or illustrations.

Each school should select to represent it, such delegates as will most correctly represent the needs of the school and gather information such as the school needs. By these delegates should be sent such inquiries as will assist them to work more in harmony with those principles agreed upon by the General Association, either through its officers or convention.

In the arrangement of the program the interests of each school should be considered. Each school should send suggestions relating to subjects to be considered at the following convention to the president of the district association, as soon following the last convention as it is possible for them to do. Whatever of value the convention may develop note should be made of same by the district officials, and then when visiting the various schools they should give a practical talk to the officers and teachers and to the school as they may note the school is most in need of.

Schools that may not be represented at the convention, should either be visited and given assistance from the instruction given at the convention, or, if visitation can not be had, an epistle of instruction and counsel should be sent to them.

Remembering the many pleasant and profitable associations I have enjoyed in the convention work in your district I pray that success may crown your every effort at this convention.

Your brother,
J. F. MINTUN.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, June 26.

Editors Herald: At last writing I was at Galesburg, Missouri. Since then I have been moving southward, stopping at different points in Missouri and Indian Territory, until at present writing I am at the above-named place.

Brn. H. O. Smith, G. H. Hilliard, John and Charley Harp, W. H. Davenport, and myself have just closed a very successful conference and reunion, which lasted ten days. While there were not many present, God verified his promise that where two or three are gathered together in his name there he will be in their midst.

I find that down in this far-away south land God has a people whom he recognizes and blesses with the Spirit of the gospel, and they can stand up in the congregations of the Saints and give evidence that they know this is the work of God. Bro. Hilliard's presence among the Saints seemed to have an inspiring influence. He gave us several spiritual sermons in his unique style, and left for California with the best wishes of the Saints and friends. Brn. H. O. Smith and John Harp are remembered in high esteem by all.

This seems to be a hard mission to prosecute as it is so rough and mountainous, and at present they are experiencing a very severe and protracted drought in this part of the country, and when we consider that last year was dry, it makes it very hard on the Saints living here to pay much into the church treasury.

Not long since Bro. H. O. Smith and the writer visited the old Mormon camp, as it is known here by everybody, both Saint and sinner, where the indomitable Lyman Wight colony existed and flourished for a few years in the 'fifties, and where the writer, then only a boy of seven years, took his departure with the remaining part of what was then known as the Lyman Wight company, to the North, where they went with the expectation that Young Joseph would come and take his father's place, and where most of them became connected with the Reorganization and proved loyal to that society until death overtook them. As we stood on the old site and saw only the rock foundations of the old houses, we were filled with thoughts of the past, and we wondered what the result would have been if they had remained there and proved loyal to the original tenets of the church. The effects can never be known.

The work here seems to be onward.

REYNOLDS, Illinois, June 28.

Editors Herald: Shortly after Millersburg conference, Bro. E. A. Davis and writer took charge of the district tent at Illinois City, Illinois, where it had been for four weeks before, and on account of a lack of finance came to this place, the Holmes brethren, at Buffalo Prairie, bringing us overland by wagon.

Our people have been represented here only as some one not authorized to do so has done. From experience you may be able to judge.

Tenting has not the pleasures one would imagine, especially when it rains from three to six evenings in a week. People are not willing to expose themselves for something they do not really know about. So you see it is no wonder ye missionaries are not in sympathy with the "dry weather" prophet (?) of last fall.

The people of this locality seem to be inactive on all lines of religion or church work. In fact, very little interest is displayed for good. They say, "We've all the religion we want." Some one has aptly said, "Small bottles are soon filled." I often wonder if our capacity is increasing, or is it on the decline. We find friends among the people and can correct their thoughts and attitudes toward the church, and maybe good can come to them later on. Will try and leave it so the next man here will not suffer on account of any works of ours.

We learn from Bro. J. Arthur Davis that one was baptized at Eliza, Illinois, last Sunday.

We note with pleasure the advances along the line of workers and pray for you all.

O. H. BAILEY.

THALIA, Texas, June 25.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a word from these dry, parched regions of the Southwest would be of interest to some. Bro. Renfro and the writer came into this part the 21st, and have been holding meetings each night and twice on Sunday. We begun with small congregations but they have increased each night. Taking into consideration that this is a new field, and but little preaching ever having been done here, we feel encouraged to press forward. The Baptists are giving us the use of their nice church and organ, and with Sr. Alice Skinner as organist, we are getting some interested. Last night one gentleman gave his name for baptism, and I think perhaps several others will be ready at the hour appointed.

The hot southwest winds are blowing every day now, scorching every green thing, and if rain does not come to our relief in a few days a total failure in crops will be the result all over the State.

I feel very much encouraged in the Master's work this year, notwithstanding the perilous times that seem to be upon us.

I have promised the people of Elam, Dallas County, to hold a two-week meeting near that place, beginning July 12. The people of that section are very much interested, and are anxious for the meeting, although there are no Saints there except two noble sisters I baptized the first day of this present month. I would like very much to have several of the missionary force assist me in this meeting at Elam. It is a new place, but plenty of friends to take care of us. The people have offered to build an arbor and make all necessary arrangements to make the meeting a success.

I wish that Brn. S. W. Simmons and Ed Henson could come and assist me at that time, as Brn. H. O. Smith, R. Wight, and several others are attending conferences and reunions further south and can't be with us. If either of the brethren mentioned can come, write me at Ft. Worth, 1308 Fifth Avenue, till the 8th of July, and after that at Elam, Dallas County, Texas. Come to Dallas, and then out on the T. & N. O. to Elam, ten miles southeast, then inquire.

T. J. SHEPPARD.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 25.

Editors Herald: Last evening the local Religio held its regular session in the Bellevue Avenue chapel, Bro. John D. Suttill presiding. It was also the occasion of a welcome visit from the Attleboro-Plainville Religio, a good representation being present. Bro. Jas. T. Mackinnon rendered nicely a violin solo and Bro. D. F. Joy (after the regular lesson in charge of Bro. Fred Roberts), read a very fine paper on "Archæology." It was brief, pointed, and comprehensive. The session, a short one, closed early to adjourn to the home of Bro. and Sr. George H. Gates, 14 Craven Street, this city, where a farewell reception was given Bro. and Sr. M. H. Bond, about sixty being present to say the regretful farewell, only for a time, we hope, to the one who for two years or over has shared the joy, sorrow, and success of the oversight of the work of God in the city of Rodger Williams. The work locally is on a better footing under Bro. Bond's wise direction than the writer, by fourteen years observation and three or four years residence here, ever knew it to be. The remembrance of the good work of Bro. and Sr. Bond was had by the presentation of a fine book on American literature, and a handsome vase hand-painted by Sr. Evelyn Joy. These tokens of remembrance were the contributions of local Saints and friends. During the evening, cake, strawberries and cream, were served to the company. With the song, "God be with you till we meet again," the time to say farewell came.

On Wednesday evening, June 18, before the regular social service, Elder M. H. Bond baptized the Misses Lily Fillmore and Tillie Clark, both members of Sr. Bond's Sunday-school class.

Children's Sunday was observed June 22, by appropriate exercises at 10:30 a. m., and 6:30 p. m. Elders M. H. Bond, U. W. Greene, and George W. Robley addressed the children at the morning service which was in charge of Elder Gates. At the eventide a concert was had by the children, under the direction of Superintendents Fred Roberts and Otis Toombs. Bro. Adolph Leckney had charge of the music, assisted by Sr. Laura Fraser as organist. Elder U. W. Greene and family left Monday last en route from Brooklyn, New York, for Temple, Ohio, their present headquarters.

Elder George W. Robley has already begun his local missionary work, which promises progress.

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

HAMILTON, Scotland, June 19.

Editors Saints' Herald: On Saturday, May 31, at 1:20 p. m., the steamship "Columbia," of the Anchor Line, moved slowly down the Hudson River bearing a large number of passengers from America to Glasgow; among whom were Brn. John Davis, George W. Thorburn, and the writer. This was the maiden trip eastward of this magnificent new steamer. She is five hundred feet long and carries eight thousand five hundred tons burthen; her average speed is seventeen and one half knots per hour and about three hundred eighty miles in twenty-four hours. We had a very pleasant voyage. The weather, while exceptionally cold for the time of the year, was calm and pleasant until within about three days journey of Glasgow, when the sea got just a little rocky and the rolling swells caused more or less inconvenience; not only in regard to pedestrianism, but also in regard to the digestive functions. Bro. Thorburn paid tribute to Father Neptune, but Bro. Davis and I escaped.

We had two hundred second cabin passengers, nearly all hailing from Scotia's Isle, most of them returning after many years absence to see their friends and relatives. Of course Presbyterianism was in strong evidence as also was Scotch whisky. On Sunday, June 1, we conducted divine service both morning and evening, the writer occupying in the morning, and preaching the first sermon on board the vessel. Bro. Davis occupied at night. If we had been anything but Latter Day Saints, doubtless we should have been favorably received; but because we belong to the sect everywhere evilly spoken against, we were thenceforth quarantined by the process known as social ostracism. Bro. Davis, who had the portrait of his wife and two little children in a small button attached to the lapel of his coat, became the cynosure of all eyes, because (so "they" said) that was the likeness of his three wives. One elderly lady before we separated had the courage to ask him how many wives he really had and seemed relieved considerably when the reply was made, "Only one, madam." Sometimes it seems rather bad that the follies and crimes of the people of Utah in causing "the way of truth" to be evilly spoken of bring opprobrium upon the innocent.

On Saturday evening, June 9, we sighted Tory Light, revealing the fact we were in touch with the Irish Coast. On Sunday morning at three o'clock we were in Moville and landed the Irish passengers, etc. By five a. m. we were steaming out of Lough Foyle, steering for our destination. We had a glorious experience, the morning sunlight bathing the rugged hills and mountains of Scotland in golden radiance. Some of our fellow passengers could scarcely contain themselves as one scene after another passed us as in a panorama. "There's Ailsa Craig" was the cry as we sailed by the stately, towering rock guarding the entrance to the Firth of Clyde, whose rugged face was literally covered with sea-gulls. Of course they easily detected the Island of Arran which, in my judgment, contains some of the most romantic scenery I have ever seen. We also saw the "Big Comrie" and the little or "Wee Comrie." Rothesay Bay was also in for its share of honors. When at last we reached Greenock and took on board the pilot we indeed felt we were home. After an hour sail up the River Clyde we at last were docked at the Queen's Docks about 2:30 p. m. We were met by Bro. James Wilson of Glasgow and after the tedious waiting for government inspection to see if we were carrying spirits or tobacco we at last got away, and by six p. m. were driving home to Hamilton. We arrived at seven p. m., found all well and glad to see us once again.

Bro. Davis stayed the week and took in some of the sights. Preached several times for us in the open air and left us for his field in Wales last Monday morning.

We have got under way once again with the work in Scotland, preaching on the streets in Hamilton, Glasgow, and Carluke. We intend concentrating in Glasgow. Brn. Thorburn and Arber will labor there all summer in open air preaching and distributing tracts, and as early as practicable get a hall.

I enjoyed my experiences in America and desire to express my deep gratitude to all who ministered to my comfort. Everywhere I went I was received with that cordiality and hearty welcome so characteristic of the Saints. I was more than pleased to meet personally so many of the brethren in conference, whose names have long been familiar, and felt glad to be associated with such a company of earnest, intelligent men, whose time, strength, and faculties were consecrated to the glory of God and emancipation of the human race. I trust that all the promising features with which we enter into another conference year of labor will be more than realized. We have had many clouds, many difficulties, many disappointments, and many sorrows, but under the benignant influence of God's love they are dispelled and disappear.

I believe, however, there is a great need for the deepening of spirituality, both among us as individuals as well as in collective bodies as branches and districts. One great need in branches was pressed upon me all the time and that was the want of able presiding officers. I am not casting reflections nor criticising any person or place in particular, but in general the need of the times seems to me to be men who, possessed of an intelligent understanding of the church law, will administer that law in righteousness and faithfulness. Converting souls is comparatively simple, but nurturing the flock and educating them is a task which apparently has not been attended quite as much as its importance demands. In the judgment of the writer we should better conserve the interests of the work by endeavoring to educate the branch officers in regard to their duties and responsibilities. It does not seem right or just to ordain a man to any office and allow him to be elected to a branch office without an adequate conception of what is required of him. All the evils we have to contend with so far as I can see do not arise from the opposition outside of the church; but purely and simply we are suffering as the church always has suffered because of the misunderstanding and ignorance of the members of the church. This evil ought to be counteracted, for it is a suppurating sore through which is oozing our vitality as a body. If intelligence is the glory of God, then we enhance his and our own glory, both now and eternally, in proportion as we increase our intelligence and put that intelligence into practice for good.

Fearing lest I become burdensome to your readers, I conclude with best wishes.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Editors Herald: I am here doing tract work from house to house; so are the Utah elders. We have a hall for Sunday nights. I send you marked copy of Aurora Beacon. Sr. J. S. Stone, Escanaba, Michigan, wants to know if there are any other Saints there. If so, would like to find them.

Saints' Herald: I am near the above place, which is my field address. I came to Morganton on the morning train, June 27, and rested with my brother Spencer that night, and then came south below the mountains and appointed preaching; but the people said they would rather hear me talk than preach, and I began to talk, and told them the difference between the "Brighamites" and the "Josephites" the best I possibly could. I have not preached any yet, though I am ready and will preach everywhere I can. If any of the Saints can send church literature I will be pleased to receive it, and will distribute it the best I can.

W. H. PREUIT.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 5.

Dear Readers: On June 17 I boarded the train for Oklahoma with a friend who was going to visit his homestead. After traveling for about two days we arrived near May, at the home of Bro. C. H. Blakesley. On arriving there I did not know they were brethren in Christ, but soon discovered that. Although they have many adverse circumstances, I believe they are trying very hard to be diligent in the cause and for its advancement. A Sunday-school composed of many different sects, meets at their home. This brings them in closer contact with the world than they would be otherwise. They have not had much time nor chance to teach the gospel since their arrival there, but expect by the aid of the prayers of the Saints and by some tracts and literature of the church which may be scattered among them to convert some of the honest in heart at that place. I had the opportunity of saying a few words in defense of our glorious gospel, and tried to encourage them as best I could to strive onward. I could plainly see that all, young and old, should try to know more about the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I enjoyed myself very much and felt very welcome. I desire to see every one become better every day.

Your brother,

HESSEL VANDERFLUTE.

The July Country Life in America is a vacation number with suggestions for many things to do and to see in midsummer. Articles on dogs and horses, summer homes, garden making, camping, and varied topics of the outdoor world in July, form a superbly illustrated number, as usual, of this large magazine. "Wyndhurst," a picturesque summer home in the Berkshire Hills, is the country estate feature this month, and "Japanese Gardens in America" shows how the quaint and weird fantasies and the vegetation of the Japanese can be naturally adapted to small areas of landscape gardening; while the Home Making article this month deals with architectural details as illustrated by "Doorways of Old Salem," showing the possibilities at small cost. Among the leading articles, "A Plea for the Pony" considers the desirability of the various sorts; "The Beagle" is a comprehensive article on this little hunting dog, including a series of remarkable photographs of the pack in action; and Neltje Blanchan, in "The Life of the Ruby-Throated," tells how our little hummingbird flies from near the Equator to as far north as the Arctic circle, every summer, in search of flowers. "Vacation Days" is a calendar of the occupations, sports and nature study of the month, and other articles give "Some Hints for the Amateur Camper," directions for playing the game of "Hare and the Hound" across-country, horseback, on a paper trail; facts about polo ponies, and helpful advice about many subjects. "Midsummer Fruit" deals thoroughly with the growing of blackberries, dewberries and other varieties, in which John Burroughs tells how raspberries are successfully grown. The number is timely throughout and is a remarkable issue of a magazine which is both very useful and very beautiful.

Pastoral.

To the Officers and Members of the Northern California District, Greeting: Will the officers of each branch in this district write to the undersigned concerning the condition of their branches. That the general work of the district may be forwarded with greater surety, we urge the necessity of activity among the officers of each branch, in order to enhance the growth of spirituality and purge the work from all that is sinful. It will not be possible to visit the branches as often as might be desired on account of other pressing needs, but care will be taken that the work does not suffer in any of them on that account if possible to avoid it. We have purchased material for a tent, and the sisters of Sacramento have performed the labor, so the tent is now nearly complete and takes the place of the one discarded last year. It is nearly 20x40 feet, of good canvas, and the total cost is about $25, of which we received a few small contributions before purchasing the material. Will the branches please take steps to contribute enough for this expense? A very small sum for such a tent. We have also started an extra subscription list for the college indebtedness. Our share to raise beside what has been raised, would be something over $200, I believe. I have secured extra subscriptions from members of Sacramento Branch for about one fourth of this amount, and earnestly request each branch to start a list for their members, that our full duty may be discharged. Those not accessible to their branch please send by letter their subscriptions to the undersigned. May God bless you all in your labor and sacrifice for his cause. Your colaborer, A. B. Phillips, District President, 2418 M Street, Sacramento, California.

lowing are the prices: 10x12, $1.25; 12x14, $1.35, with freight added. All applications with money inclosed must be in by August 10. Matter of freight to be settled at reunion.

Conference Notices.

Eastern Colorado conference will be held at Wray, Colorado, August 16, 17.

Address Wanted.

Will any one knowing the whereabouts of William Jackman please notify me at once. John Siddall, Clerk of Plainville Branch, 17 Orange Street, Attleboro, Massachusetts.

Married.

GAMET-BADHAM.—At the residence of the bride's parents, near Henderson, Iowa, Wednesday, May 21, 1902, Bro. Herbert Gamet to Sr. Grace Badham, Elder D. Hougas officiating. The happy event was witnessed by a number of friends and relatives, who wished the young couple a long, happy, and prosperous life. Supper was served and enjoyed by all, after which the guests dispersed. Elder Hougas had married the father and mother of the bride twenty-five years ago, and her two older sisters recently. He takes great interest in their welfare, as he had baptized them all.

Died.

LEATHER.—At Fall River, Massachusetts, June 19, 1902, Mary Leather. Born November 24, 1829, at Stockport, England; baptized at Fall River, Massachusetts, November 3, 1867, by William Cottam. Funeral service conducted by Elder Holmes J. Davison at her home. Three daughters and a son survive her. The sister has been sick for many years, but through all her sickness her faith in the gospel work never wavered. A few weeks ago through an accident in leaving the gas jet open she was almost asphyxiated, since which time she has been failing rapidly. Interment at Oak Grove Cemetery.

ELIFSON.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 24, 1902, Mr. Oliver H. Elifson, aged 66 years, 11 months, 20 days. Bright's disease was the cause. He was a brother of Sisters Hans Hayer and Oliver Hayer, Sen. He had many other near relatives in the church, but was not a member himself. His life was one of honesty and integrity, so that he may well be counted among the "honorable men of the earth" (D. C. 76:2). By his request his body was taken to Mission, LaSalle County, Illinois, for burial, Bro. Oliver Hayer, Sr. Hans Hayer, and others accompanying it to that place. Before departure from Lamoni a brief sermon was preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, and at Mission Bro. F. G. Pitt spoke to the Saints in their chapel.

PETERSON.—At New Hope, California, June 17, 1902, of old age, Sr. Mary Peterson, aged 87 years, 3 months. She leaves four sons. Joined the Utah church in Sweden in 1852. United with the Reorganization in 1866. Funeral services by Elder J. C. Foss.

JOHNSON.—Magdalena Johnson, at Sandy, Utah, June 27, 1902. She was born April 25, 1844, at Wange, Christianstads, Län, Sweden; baptized September 14, 1901, by Peter Anderson. She was firm in the faith of the gospel of Jesus Christ and of a glorious resurrection. She left a bright testimony with her children.

SLADE.—Sr. Mary, wife of Mr. J. L. Slade, departed this life June 11, 1902, at her home in Angola, Indiana, and was laid to rest in the Teeters Cemetery, near the Saints' chapel in Clear Lake Township, Steuben County, Indiana. She was one of those who came up through many tribulations, having lain sick for nearly one year, dying as she had lived, firm in belief of the latter-day work.

The Baby and the Brigands.

Miss Stone's third paper on her experiences with brigands, which appears in the July McClure's, is certainly the best part so far of this extraordinary narrative. It is devoted entirely to the birth of Mrs. Tsilka's baby and the events of the first weeks of its life in captivity. It is a story that only a woman could write, and as Miss Stone has written it no one can read it unmoved. McClure's, however, knows always how to go its best one better, and at the end of the article is the startling announcement that in the August number Mrs. Tsilka herself will tell the story of the coming of the "little brigand."

Coal Miners, Members of the L. D. S. Church.

The Independence Coal Mining Company, Independence, Missouri, which is composed of Ellis Short, William Crick, and R. May, will sell three fourths of its interest to members of the church. This is being put on the market for the mutual benefit of the present owners and those who wish to become stockholders.

Moneyed combines, labor unions, and strikes, when dictated to by unprincipled men, are a menace to many an honest man, and by taking a share in this Mining Company the miner will have steady work—for it is the intention to run the mine the year round, union scale wages, or as may be agreed upon—he will be free from the arbitrary wishes of strikers, and he will also be deriving benefit from the dividend resulting from his share.

There will be a position open for a manager, also for a pit-boss. These two men will be expected to buy several shares.

This mine has a good wagon trade. It is located twenty-one (21) miles east of Independence, on the Missouri Pacific Railway, and is accessible to Independence and also to Kansas City, which is the best market in the West.

The Company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. The stock capital is $8,000, one hundred dollars ($100) per share, fully paid up; but it will be necessary to increase this four thousand dollars ($4,000) in order to have a working capital and put in a coöperative store. Each miner is expected to take one or more shares.

The prospects for success are very bright, as the lease runs for twenty-seven (27) years for eighty acres of land, royalty ten cents per ton, and as much more land as the stock-holders desire, for we hold the key to thousands of acres of land.

The mine is in fair working conditions; its capacity is room for about ninety (90) men. It is "Long Wall Work," has good top, and a shaft forty-seven (47) feet deep.

The vein is seventeen or eighteen inches thick, which is the average thickness of coal in the Lexington Coal Mining District; and the coal is a first class quality, being a little better than the average grade of coal.

Now, the prospects for miners to buy shares and take hold in this mine are good, but they must act at once, for the season will soon be upon us when we will have to operate the mine.

The men who are operating this mine will have permanent work, and they will also have the association of honest, upright fellow-workmen, as only good and upright men will be allowed to own shares.

There are houses on the ground which belong to the Company and more that are at their disposal.

Brethren, improve this opportunity. Do not hesitate until it is too late.

ELLIS SHORT, President.

RODERICK MAY, Secretary and Treasurer.

Address all communications to Independence Coal Mining Co., Independence, Missouri. 25-4t.

At least one of the great monthlies may be fairly described as a news magazine in the broadest sense. The Review of Reviews deals with real "news values" from month to month, and keeps abreast of all the current developments that are essentially important and vital. Take the July number, just issued; from cover to cover it is packed with comment on "live" matters,—facts, problems, and issues that interest the public to-day, and are likely to interest it for days and weeks to come. The various phases of the great anthracite coal strike are presented from four distinct points of view; the British national attitude after the conclusion of the South African peace, and on the eve of the coronation festivities so sadly broken off, is fully described; the retiring French premier, Waldeck-Rousseau, and his successor, M. Combes, are sketched for the first time by an authoritative pen in an American periodical; the characteristics of the new president of Princeton, Woodrow Wilson, so unexpectedly chosen to that office in June, are clearly outlined by a college classmate; questions about West Point and its future, suggested by the centenary just celebrated, are answered by a member of the corps of instruction; the methods adopted by Kansas farmers for solving the problem of labor-supply in the wheat harvest now in progress are fully discussed; and the remarkable edicts just issued by the Empress Dowager, establishing a system of colleges for China, are set forth in detail. The Philippine problem, the Cuban crisis, the isthmian canal situation, the work of Congress, the Atlantic shipping trust, the new American shipbuilding combination, the crop prospects of the season, and the South American revolutions are some of the other topics covered by this number. Nowhere will one find the vast total of the world's actual news of a month so clearly stated or so well interpreted as in the American Monthly Review of Reviews.

Subscriptions received for Zion's Ensign, also orders for all Ensign publications.

The average person who picks up a railroad time folder does not realize the enormous amount of work which the preparation of such a publication involves. The big Burlington System, for instance, has a general time folder made up from sixteen different division operating time tables. The folder contains 2,000 names of towns, gives the schedules of over 500 trains, and whenever there is a change in time, sixty thousand figures have to be carefully checked and corrected.

The July Woman's Home Companion contains much seasonable matter, both in fiction and feature. A humorous story of the War of 1812, "The Battle of Quahaug Neck," opens the number. Rheta Childe Dorr writes of "The First Declaration of Independence." "The Independence Hall of To-day" is an article by Mr. Landon Knight. Two charming outdoor articles are "Little Journeys to the Woods and Fields" and "Making a Country Home," while the double-page feature shows scenes on an old New England farm. W. G. Bowdoin, the art critic, contributes an article on the painter, J. G. Brown. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "Woven With the Ship," is continued, and there are three short stories by Will N. Harben, Onoto Watanna and Joe Lincoln. The departments are full of interesting matter. Published by The Crowell Publishing Co., Springfield, Ohio; one dollar a year; ten cents a copy; sample copy free.

The Iowa State Fair is preeminently an educational institution. It furnishes to the farmers and stock raisers of Iowa an opportunity to see what careful breeding and culture will do in raising the standard of both live stock and grains. At the State Fair are annually exhibited the best the State produces. The stock raiser can see representatives of the best herds in the country and by talks with the exhibitors learn much that will be of lasting benefit to him in the betterment of his own herd. By a single trip to the State Fair he sees what it would take him weeks of time, many miles of travel and great expense to see otherwise. He goes home inspired with the idea of improving his own cattle, horses, swine or sheep as the case may be, thus adding to his own wealth as well as that of the State.

As with the stock raiser so it is with the raiser of grain. The farmer who visits the State Fair sees for himself what the careful selection of seed and tillage of soil will do toward the improvement of both the quantity and quality of his crops. The Iowa State Fair presents actual examples of what is being accomplished in this line, both in the raising of grain and live stock. Every farmer in Iowa should make it a point to visit the State Fair, August 22-30.

Perhaps the most striking article in the World's Work for July is Commander "Dick" Wainwright's story of the Naval Academy at Annapolis of which he is superintendent. The pictures with which Miss Francis B. Johnston has illustrated the famous veteran's article are as fine a series as the World's Work has ever published. Donald Murray, the well-known inventor, tells, with illustrations, the vividly interesting story of the great cable systems of the world—how they draw together the various nationalities and countries with a band of wire. Timely articles that add to an unusually full series of editorials are those on Martinique, the Real Issue of the Coal Strike, and a fair presentation of the Philippine problem from President Roosevelt's Memorial Day address, Senator Hoar's famous opposition speech, and a clear statement of conditions in the islands by James A. Le Roy, who has just returned to America. The financial article this month in the important series the World's Work is publishing, is on the methods by which financial panics are now prevented in Wall Street. The rest of the magazine is filled with concise, clearly written articles on specific subjects, many of them illustrated, including the story of the Americanizing of two boys of cannibal ancestry, by S. P. Verner, who brought them to this country; the new English method of lifting up saloons, by Doctor W. H. Tolman; the White House as a Place of Business—the Routine of the President's Labors, by Waldon Fawcett; A Giant Farm in the Middle West—a Farm as Big as a Connecticut County, by C. H. Matson, and a description of the picturesque country along the Northwest Border, by Bailey Willis of the Geological Survey. Full-page portraits illustrate Doctor H. Morse Stephen's article on Living American Historians, and there are short articles on The Ministry as a Profession, by Reverend D. M. Steele; The Revival of the Handicrafts, by Charles Barnard, and The Art of Praising Living Men, by George Perry Morris. The March of Events is longer than usual, and Among the World's Workers shorter, but both are interesting.

The Futility of Worry.

Worry is a habit, like biting the finger-nails, turning in the toes, or talking slang. It comes in time to be not only a habit, but a sinful indulgence, almost as hurtful to peace of mind as overeating, or a violent temper, or scandal and tale-bearing.

The mind readily falls a victim to bad mental habits. To make much of small things is to belittle life. To magnify and give importance to little evils is to distort out of all reality the actual things worth living for. When the peace of a whole family is upset because the breakfast coffee is cold or some one has mislaid the morning paper things have lost due proportion. The effect is simply ludicrous to the unimpassioned looker-on. To those embroiled in the jars and jangles there is only a sort of helpless misery, which is anything but a subject for smiles.

To be happy one should look at the evils and worries of life as if from the large end of an opera-glass, thus diminishing them; while for pleasant things the small end of the glass should be held to the eyes, so magnifying what is enjoyable.—July Woman's Home Companion.

Will Yellow Journalism Last?

Will modern or yellow journalism last? Not in its present state. It has sufficient financial backing to last for a time; but the American public can't be fooled all the time, and there is even at present writing a tide of reversion setting in which will slowly but none the less surely compel the abandonment of many of the methods at present in vogue. Talent will replace charlatanism; men who can think and write thoughts, instead of men who can invent and amuse, will find their way into the offices of the yellows; and when reflection and foresight take the place of imagination and foolhardiness, yellow journalism will turn pale and become white. In so far as it represents enterprise it has come to stay, but as a periodical of permanent and persistent protest it will not survive the present generation. The American reporter will become a professional man, a scholar and a gentleman, and not a professional meddler, amateur detective, and inventor of plausible impossibilities all in one. American journals will be newspapers, and not, as a well-known journalist now styles them, "picture books for children."—Catholic World for July.

CEASE CONTENTION WHEN QUESTION IS DECIDED.

We commend to the attention of the HERALD readers the communication of Bro. Joseph R. Lambert found in this issue. Especially do we request a careful consideration of what he writes in regard to the attitude of the majority with reference to the minority.

This will apply in all questions upon which two or more opposite views are held and advocated. So that whether a man may be one with those of the larger or smaller number, at the final determination of the matter it should be dropped. The man who votes with the smaller number must be considered to be as honest in conviction and contention as are those whom he opposes and who may prove to be with the larger number. It must be conceded, also, that the desires of those who may be in the minority, no matter how few these may be or how numerous the majority, are just as great for the good of the whole and the supreme success of the church as are the desires of those who hold opposite opinions to them.

Success in a contention earnestly waged as frequently tries the manly and Christlike virtues of the successful man as does defeat. Defeat may and very often does help to purify a man's thoughts and sanctify his spirit, increase his patience, and enlarge his understanding. On the other hand success has a tendency to foster a feeling of self-sufficient complacency sometimes fatal to one's usefulness as it makes a man impatient of opposition and contradiction to the injury of his influence upon others. It sometimes causes a man to become unduly impressed with his own importance and thus makes him arrogant, and hard to be approached by those who may differ from him, but who would be willing to reason on the differences existing with a view to correction if they were in error, or the other view be shown to be the better one.

The members of the majority should be very careful to show due regard to those with whom they have been in difference, and when the matter decided is in their favor should show no spirit of elation, or assume any airs of superiority. He is the nobler man who in success can preserve an unruffled mein, having in his mind no unwholesome recollections of the struggle in which he has been engaged, in his heart no feeling of exultation to the injury of his opponent.

Just as he will expect the minority to bear defeat without rancor or resentment, so should he bear success with magnanimity. Indeed it is the noble contestant who can give his hand to the defeated in warmth of sympathy and admiration for his vanquished antagonist.

Mosiah wrote thus:

"Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people. And if the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you; yea, then is the time he will visit you with great destruction, even as he has hitherto visited this land."—Mosiah 13: 4.

Notwithstanding it may be that the voice of the people may not commonly desire the wrong, it is possible that such might occur; and in such emergency whoever might stand for the right, though he stood alone, would in time be vindicated and receive a reward.

In our work he who stands with the minority is as entitled to respect and consideration as he who stands with the greater number, but no more so. Both act upon their convictions, and he who stands with the greater number is as worthy of praise and commendation for standing for what he holds as principle as is he who may stand with the smaller number, or alone. Either may be right, both may be wrong.

It may require a little stronger degree of courage to stand with the few or alone, that courage being the result of conviction, but it is the same sort of courage, that of conviction, which actuates those who may be in the larger number. It is a mistake to suppose that superior courage, or a greater sense of conviction moves the minority than actuates the majority. It is, also, a grave error to assume that those who are with the majority are moved by improper motives, or vote as they do just to be with the larger number. No such sentiment should be indulged.

Bro. Lambert's statement is proper and we hope will be productive of good. We shall try to exercise the right of discrimination and give place only to what may be conducive to good.

Accusations, recriminations, and all sort of reflections upon the acts of those who may differ from us after the controversy is over are out of character and unbecoming, and in the language of one of Bro. T. W. Smith's articles of long ago, "Quit it."

OLD minds are like old horses; you must exercise them if you would keep them in working order.—John Adams,

FIRST CHOICE OF BOOKS.

The Denver Times recently sent the following question to a number of people, requesting answers for publication: "If you were sentenced to solitary confinement for life, and the judge allowed you one book, or one author's work, as your only companion and solace, all the remaining years, what book would you take, and why?"

Among others to whom this question was addressed was Bro. J. B. Roush. His answer and reasons appeared in the Times for July 6:

THE BIBLE—BOOK OF MORMON.

In the full enjoyment of liberty in a world full of books, some of which are more or less inspirational, the Bible is to me the best of books, and were I placed in a condition which gave promise only of solitary confinement for the remainder of my earthly existence, the Bible would evidently be prized more highly by me, first, because it would give me information in regard to God, who could visit me by his Spirit or his holy angels as he did the ancient saints when they were incarcerated or banished for the gospel's sake. As I would read of the experiences of the former-day saints, especially of John on Patmos, I would take courage and comfort in contemplating that what God had once done for man he might do again, and as he had given such a remarkable demonstration of his power and willingness to aid individuals in the extremities into which they had been crowded, that under like conditions he might repeat himself, and all this in the light of the statement that he is unchangeable. Second, because it would teach me how to live to make the best of my condition and to come into communication with a power which could not be locked out by walls or prison doors. As I could hope for nothing from an earthly source, I would want a book to read that could give me the most information in regard to what I might obtain from the heavenly source. Third, my hope would, necessarily, center in a future life, and a book that would tell me the most about it and how to live to obtain the best possible condition when my short period of incarceration was ended would be to me preëminently the best book and afford me the most comfort. Hence my first choice would be the Bible. If I could not have the Bible, my second choice would be a book which would approach nearest to the Bible; so my second choice would be the Book of Mormon, because it tells of the same God and the same Christ as the Bible, and of the same gospel as the power to save. As the Bible is a history of the dealing of God with the people who lived on the Eastern Hemisphere, so is the Book of Mormon a history of the dealing of God with a people who once lived on the Western Hemisphere and of whom the American Indian is a degenerate son. Because the Book of Mormon approaches nearest to the Bible of any book in the world known to me, it would be my second choice of books.

J. B. ROUSH,

Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

In the Times of July 5 the question is published with the following explanation of how it came to be raised:

At the Lawyers' Club in New York City some months ago, there were sitting about one table several men of national reputation in their separate line.

There was John J. McCook, one of New York's brilliant attorneys; Colonel Evans, president of the Wells-Fargo Express company, and William C. Beer, president of the Fire Engine trust.

The topic under discussion was the relative value of classic and modern literature.

A story had just been going the rounds that Bidwell, the man who robbed the Bank of England, after three years confinement in a convict prison without a scrap of reading matter of any description, had, through the intercession of the American minister, been permitted one book, as the means of preventing his mind from giving way under the strain of solitude.

Bidwell himself said: "When I came in from the day's grind, and saw on the cot in my silent cell that volume of Shakespeare, it transported me instantly, and without preparation, from purgatory to the seventh heaven. The elation was so great that for a week I suffered from nervous hysteria. I could not compose myself to read; I could only fondle my one great treasure!"

This story of Bidwell's emphasized the need of books to the man shut in upon himself. The question narrowed down to what manner of books supplied the greatest need. The living application set the men about the table to thinking a second time over the conditions imposed in just such a proposition as that at the head of the column.

For fully ten minutes not a word was spoken, and then, when each man had pondered carefully the prospect of being buried alive with but the one book of his choice—not a man mentioned a current work, and only one or two a modern one.

The same question was brought up at a Denver Sunday evening, more as a diverting topic than as a serious one. After the first round of jests, the entire group sobered down to earnest consideration of what proved to be a most engrossing subject.

The staunch admirer of Kipling on any and all occasions weakened on sober second thought and went back to Shakespeare as a twenty-year companion. The Poe enthusiast was compelled to admit that six months close confinement with that erratic author would contribute more to his mental undoing than the years of solitary confinement. He decided on Gibson's "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire" as the one work which would furnish food for reflection for the score or more of years that might be left him.

The possibilities of the work; its entertaining, instructive and, above all, its lasting qualities, are the points which weigh most in its favor under the conditions imposed. Second thought changes very materially the first impulsive answer in almost every instance.

ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

We give a very pleasant dissertation on the subject of future punishment, which is quite reasonable as well as readable.

We add to it an extract from the Book of Mormon, which all lovers of that book will recognize.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

The books recently published by Dr. Agar Beet, professor in the Wesleyan theological school, have given prominence to the doctrine of future punishment, such as it has not had for many years. Doubting the natural immortality of the soul, he doubts the perpetuity of soul-life in the wicked after their final condemnation to everlasting punishment. The weight of his learning and influence will undoubtedly be used by annihilationists as favoring their teaching. We do not understand him, however, as advocating the philosophy on which they base their notions—a philosophy which is a species of materialism, whether intended to be so or not.

In our judgment the Bible teaches that the soul of man is a distinct creation, differing in essential qualities from the body, capable of a separate existence, destined to live in a separate state, and ultimately to be clothed upon with an immortal body, with qualities unlike those possessed by the body it now inhabits. It appears, too, that some relation must be maintained between the mortal body and the immortal body, so that it shall be a resurrection body, and not a newly created body. To the Apostle Paul this was a "mystery," and we would not pretend that it is less than that to us.

As to the soul of the unregenerate it is enough to say that we are unable to perceive that it differs in essence, or in the intrinsic properties of its being, from the soul of the man who accepts Christ and experiences spiritual regeneration. The difference is moral and not physical, relating to the spiritual condition and not to the inherent nature. It is not a part of the body in the good or the bad; and since our Lord declared so positively that the soul does not die with the body we must believe it immortal. There are those who can "kill the body," but are "not able to kill the soul," or else the divine warning was useless and meaningless.

It also seems clear to us that in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the Savior drew aside the curtain that hides the unseen world so as to disclose the actual state of the dead, and particularly the state of the unsaved dead, showing them to be in conscious being, in full possession of their memory, conscience, and reasoning faculties, and aware of the causes of their lost condition. Their souls were not asleep, but very much awake. Of course, we do not attempt a critical analysis of this, or of any other scripture bearing on this subject, but take such view as impresses itself on the mind of the reader who looks at the language of the Bible as intended to be interpreted in a plain, common-sense way, by those who read it for instruction and edification, and not to find support for a previously fixed opinion.

In the same way we read all the scriptures bearing on the subject of future punishment. They appear to be plain enough and the terms expressive of the place and condition of the unsaved, and those expressive of the duration of the punishment of sin, alike point to an unending retribution. The "unquenchable fire," "the everlasting fire," the "lake of fire," the "worm that dieth not," however figurative in fact, all mean the same thing and are quite too strong as metaphors or symbols to be applied to any physical calamity or to any temporary punishments or any reformatory chastisements. They point the every-day reader of the Bible to a final dispensation of penalty which is properly called "everlasting punishment." The argument on this subject based on the use of terms expressive of duration, is ably presented in the supplementary chapter on the "unpardonable sin," in Bishop Merrill's book, entitled "The Crisis of this World."

There is no doubt that the agitation caused by Dr. Beet's publications, together with the activity of persons tending to "liberalistic" ideas, has produced a trend of thought requiring, or at least justifying, a re-examination of the grounds of our beliefs in this line. The result will be that the old foundations will stand. This much-abused doctrine of eternal punishment will not be driven out of the church by jibes and sneers nor by the sober criticism of candid men. We sympathize with those who find somewhat in their sensibilities that shudders at the severity of God's judgment against sin, but reading the divine warnings and the denunciations of obduracy in the Bible, we are constrained to recognize the fact that human sensibilities are not the standard by which to measure the heinousness of rebellion against God. Nor can we consent to set human wishes and will over against the testimonies of the word of God. Guided by that testimony we trace the ungodly to a death in impenitence, to conscious torment after death, to a "resurrection of damnation," to a final judgment before the great white throne, and to a sentence: "Depart ye workers of iniquity," with the record closed in the words: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—Northwestern Christian Advocate, June 18.

tion? Now whether there is more than one time appointed for men to rise, it mattereth not: for all do not die at once: and this mattereth not; all is as one day, with God; and the time only is measured unto men; therefore there is a time appointed unto men, that they shall rise from the dead: and there is a space between the space of death and the resurrection. And now concerning this space of time. What becometh of the souls of men, is the thing which I have inquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing of which I do know. And when the time cometh when all shall rise, then shall they know that God knoweth all the times which are appointed unto man. Now concerning the state of the soul between death and resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, etc.

And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil; for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord: for behold they choose evil works, rather than good: therefore the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house; and these shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping, and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their iniquity; being led captive by the will of the devil. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked; yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection. Now there are some that have understood that this state of happiness, and this state of misery of the soul, before the resurrection, was a first resurrection. Yea, I admit it may be termed a resurrection; the raising of the spirit or the soul, and their consignment to happiness or misery, according to the words which have been spoken. And behold, again it hath been spoken, that there is a first resurrection; a resurrection of all those who have been, or who are, or who shall be, down to the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

J. S. LEE AS A "REFORMER."

In 1899 a controversy arose in Nebraska between Joseph S. Lee, an elder of the church, and the officers of a branch and the general officers in charge of the field. This controversy resulted in Elder Lee attacking the branch and the church upon certain well-established positions in such a way as to require action upon the part of the church by which the license of Elder Lee was demanded and he disfellowshipped. He then essayed to create a diversion among the membership at different places in favor of his views, with the avowed design of reforming the church in its doctrinal lines.

We wrote to him twice sending to the last address known to us. Our letters failed to reach him, nor did we hear anything of him after, until quite lately when we received a written appeal from Sr. Lee, his wife, asking assistance from the church for the reason that her husband had abandoned her, and left her in need. Rather a sad comment on a scheme of reform, is it not?

D. R. BALDWIN LECTURES ON ARCHAEOLOGY.

In the Blade for June 27, published at Walnut Ridge, Arkansas, "Correspondent" writes of the lecture by D. R. Baldwin on the subject of archæology. He says:

That lecture recently delivered by Reverend D. R. Baldwin on archæology was appreciated by all who heard it. He does not pose as an orator, but gets after philosophical facts in a manner pleasing to hear. We were escorted farther back into the labyrinth of antiquity, introduced to more ancient geography, treated to a more profuse display of ancient American characters and hieroglyphics from crumbling temples and tombs and moldy mounds, the same being diligently compared with the Egyptian, demotic, phonetic, hieratic, and Hebrew alphabets, than has been our lot before. The Professor also displayed a patient comparison of words from the Hebrew and Indian tribes, rehearsed striking legends and traditions of the latter and shelled out clear, definite applications to many obscure passages of Scripture. It was an educational feast: whether we indorse the manner in which he dovetailed the Book of Mormon into it or not.

DECREASE OF CATHOLICS.

The following published statistics show a decrease in the number of Catholics in the United States:

Bishop Slattery of the Catholic clergy is responsible for the following statistical statement: "Roman Catholics in the United States 1902, 10,976,757. Roman Catholics in the United States in 1890, 8,301,367. Apparent increase of Roman Catholics in twelve years, 2,675,390. Roman Catholic immigrants during the twelve years, 2,705,184."

This shows a loss of 29,784, without reference to any possible increase from conversion and births.

A prominent priest of Washington, District of Columbia, says of this subject:

"The woeful phase of this revelation is the terrible increase of Atheism. It is a fact that only a small portion of the Catholics fall away from the church by apostasy to the sects. They drop from the ranks of the church into the ranks of Atheists, and their children grow up absolutely godless."

SOME of the benefits of a college and good schools to a community are shown by the letter following making inquiry of the conditions at Lamoni. This is but one out of many like inquirers. And yet, some people ask if the college is any special benefit to our town.

MAPLE HILL, Iowa, July 5, 1902.

MR. E. L. KELLEY, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: I would like to be informed regarding the schools of Lamoni, both Graceland and graded schools. I wish to move to some college town, wholly for educational purposes. To what extent is music taught, vocal and instrumental. Please advise me.

Very truly yours,

W. W. PITKIN.

CORRECTION.

In last HERALD, page 669, second column, fifth line, should read that Bro. S. J. Madden wrote, etc.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. I. N. Roberts writing from Escatawpa, Mississippi, June 30: "Baptized three more yesterday and others are near. We are improving slowly but more surely than ever before. I am now permitted to see the fruits of my last year's work developing among the Saints. Some are still grouchy and perhaps always will be. The Word of Wisdom hurts some very much, but others are leaving off the coffee drinking and tobacco chewing and smoking. May the Lord bless them is my prayer. I just closed a two-day meeting here. Had a joyful time. Meetings well attended; interest good. Still dry and hot. Hard on little folks like me."

Bro. J. B. Roush, Denver, Colorado, the 6th inst.: "I go to Minturn for Sunday, the 13th; Grand Junction the 20th, and to Delta for reunion the 25th to 27th."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received the first copy of the Southern Banner, published by J. L. M. Campbell, a Catholic priest of Dallas, Texas, in the "interests of truth."

The Saints' Home is indebted to Mr. E. D. Briggs for his efforts with the manufacturing company which he represents for assistance in obtaining a new six foot Champion mower. The Home has eighty acres of grass to cut and was in need of a good machine.

The newspapers state that some three hundred American Mormons (of the Salt Lake church) met in Copenhagen, Denmark, July 5, and dedicated a church building as a nucleus for proselyting in the kingdom. Among them was Ex-senator Frank J. Cannon and his brother.

In the Aurora Daily Beacon, for June 27, published at Aurora, Illinois, the work of Bro. A. J. Keck in that city is spoken of, and the reporter states that Bro. Keck has made plain to the people that there is a great deal of difference between the Utah church and the Reorganized Church.

Joseph Smith is away from home and the HERALD Office, attending the reunion at Springfield, Missouri. Bishop Kelley was with him, but returned Tuesday. The reunions in Missouri seem to be running full blast this year, evidently making up for the number that were postponed last year on account of the drought.

Sr. A. J. Young writes that Mr. James Doty, of Livermore, will be on the grounds with pure olive oil for sale at the reunion to be held in San Jose, California, September 12.

No. 68 of the Brooklyn Eagle Library has been sent us. It is "The United States and the Philippine Islands;" speeches in the United States Senate.

On Sunday morning last Bro. J. W. Wight preached his farewell sermon to the Saints at Lamoni. He gave us a good doctrinal sermon, which was enjoyed by all present, we believe. With considerable feeling he bespoke for those he left behind thoughtful consideration, seeming to think far more of the trials to be met by them than those he would have to meet on his long journey. He also called attention to the fact that the elders going to open up the work in New Zealand were undertaking the greatest mission since the beginning of the Reorganization. These ministers, he said, would need all the aid we could give them. On Monday morning Bro. Wight took his departure for his mission, expecting to be gone from home about eighteen months. He with others expect to sail from San Francisco the 24th of this month.

It is expected that there will be a representative of the HERALD Office present at the Branard Reunion, Missouri, and the Saints in that part of the country can renew their subscriptions there, or subscribe, and buy what books, etc., they may wish from the HERALD stock.

The departure of Bro. Wight on Monday for his foreign mission reminds us once more that this year our elders are undertaking more foreign missions than for some time past, and the Saints must arouse to the fact that these elders must be supported that their work may be effective. Let us remember the elders who are at the front taking the brunt of the battle for right and for the faith we so love.

Bro. Richard C. Kelley, who has been reading proof in the HERALD Office for some time past, left us last week for a sojourn in Nebraska before returning to his studies at the State University of Iowa.

Bro. J. F. Mintun has succeeded in getting space in the Des Moines Leader for June 21, setting forth differences between us and the Utah people. His article will do good.

Bro. Terry, who has lately gone to Oakland, California, has appeared in the Enquirer of that place in defense of the work. His article was called out by an article in the Enquirer of the 23d ult., which reported a sermon by Reverend Vosburgh, a Baptist clergyman, in which he preached on "Mormonism." Bro. Terry made good use of his opportunity.

Our readers will find in company with this week's HERALD the minutes of the General Conference of 1902, in supplement form. The publication of so large a volume is a heavy expense, and we trust it will be appreciated proportionately.

FACTS AND SUGGESTIONS RELATING TO THE LAW IN CHURCH TEMPORAL WORK.

FOR MEMBER AND MINISTER.

A half year has passed since the article "Duties, Responsibilities, and Faith of the Saints" was sent out by the Bishopric, and although it has met with the approval of having been a step in the right direction, it will not be amiss to supplement its statements by suggestions of practical work that will aid our giving "more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip."

Men and women to accomplish any undertaking of merit, must be diligent workers in the same. Church building forms no exception to the rule. Of all teachers of mankind Jesus Christ stands foremost in enjoining a practical exemplification of the principles laid down in his law, and he is the boldest denunciator of those whose profession in him is manifest only "with the lips."

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 16.

Referring to the religion of the Pharisees he says: "But do not ye after their works: for they say and do not."—Matthew 23: 3.

"And he answered and said unto them, My mother and my brethren are these who hear the word of God, and do it."—Luke 8: 21.

"Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 7: 19-21.

"And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6: 46.

However ready we may be to excuse in ourselves neglect, or failure of duty, because of the inconveniences lying in the way of discharging the same, or on account of a lack of faith and courage on our part in the work, one thing is certain, that eventually all must answer for what they have done before the great unerring Judge, who has advised us that the law is certain and must be obeyed: "And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak."—John 12: 50.

The Psalmist gives testimony of the character of Zion's children in conversational inquiry as follows: "Lord, . . . Who shall dwell in thy holy hill [Zion]?" The reply is given, "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart."—Psalms 15: 2. To work righteousness is to keep the law. Jesus when seeking to fulfill the law when he came to John at Jordan insisted that it should be administered. "For," said he, "thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."—Matthew 3: 15.

Righteousness is the fulfilling of the law of God, both in that which relates to spiritual things and that relating to temporal affairs; and Christ the pattern and chief citizen of Zion when her glory shall have arisen, fulfilled the law in all things. Truly no others can abide in his tabernacle, then, than they who have diligently kept his law.

It is not only the duty of the minister to go and preach to the people, as did John the Baptist, but a duty rests upon the people to hear and conform thereto; and so it is stated in the record, that they came to John and asked, "What shall we do then?" Not only the people did this, but Jesus himself came urging that he be not found lacking in complying with his Father's commandments. What more forcible example could Jesus have given his followers, showing the absolute merit attaching to the law, than that of his persistent pleading with John, that he must conform to the same.

There exists a like urgent necessity for complying with the law relating to temporal matters as there is for any other part, and Saints should not only seek to comply with this law when it is convenient and easy, but persistently urge that they fulfill it, as did Jesus at Jordan. No one has witnessed the anxious, earnest inquirer for baptism courageously enter the waters in our Northern winters, after possibly making a grave through a few feet of ice, without commendation of the firmness of purpose in the individual to do the Master's will; and not only man but God recognizes and blesses such; but do we ever stop to consider that if our devotional aims and purposes are less earnest and anxious after that we have entered into covenant relationship with God than they were at the time, then we have fallen below the standard set up at our baptism? Jesus spoke to saints when he said: "But seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6: 33, I. T.

As children of the kingdom are we prepared to take the consequences of a failure to carry out this command?

Compliance with God's holy law and ordinances brings due reward to the one obeying, not to some one else. It is the means of working righteousness whereby men and women honor God and enter upon the work of sanctification; and this sanctifying work comprises duty in everything, temporal and spiritual. The apostle could truly say when urging the saints at Philippi to observe the law of giving: "Not because I desire a gift, but I desire fruit that may abound to your account."—Phil. 5: 17.

The church needs an awakening in many parts to the fact of the supreme necessity of following more closely the law of Christ; not that ever we would become formal and clerical; but rather, as children of light, seek to glorify and honor the Father by walking in the light; or, in other words, by fulfilling his commandments.

It is true that already there are a goodly number of the Saints who are thus striving to honor the law and bring about the establishment of the kingdom of our blessed Lord by diligently observing these things; and if so many, then it follows all can. Why not all? The law relating to the "building up" and "establishment" of the kingdom should be as universally complied with as the ordinances of baptism and confirmation. Think of the situation of one who would refuse to comply with either of these. But it is of duties touching giving and aiding God's work of which the apostle speaks when he writes: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality."—1 Timothy 5: 21.

"The unity of the Saints," includes unity of faith, unity of work, unity of interest and devotion in the work of the Lord, and there can be no place for the lazy and indifferent, or the fault-finder; these are they of which it is written, "It shall not be a land of Zion unto you."

GOSPEL PREACHING.

Ministerial work in order to be effective must be carried on as directed by the Master; a failure to follow according to the pattern laid down makes a poor follower indeed of our Lord, and the work of such must fail. The successful elder does and must labor "without purse or scrip;" in this way God can and will work with him. While it is true that it is a more humble and dependent method of work, it is also true that in this way men must exercise more divine faith and they are necessarily, in a Bible sense, more closely allied as "workers together with God."

When once in his mission field the minister moves out unselfishly, bearing the message of good will to all, he is charged, "Freely you have received, freely give." Extend a helping hand to all; the downcast, the sick, the lost, the found; rich and poor; God sends him out to help, not to loaf; he is to give "without money and without price." Then, why should not the people feed and clothe him? Justice and duty between man and man require that this be done. And it is from such a righteous standpoint that Jesus proposes to judge and reward preacher and people; "For I was a hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me;" "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matthew 22: 35-40.

It may be asked, Does this apply to those within the church or to those without? The answer is, that it is applicable to all; make it just as broad as is the command to preach the gospel, "to every creature." Where there are Saints, of course they should be foremost in this good work. Simply giving the meal of victuals does not discharge our full duty under this law. There should be a free-will effort to help in the extension of the gospel work at every opportunity by both Saints and friends of the cause, and the minister should not be permitted while in his work to turn to the Bishop for incidental expenses or help, but this is discharged by the joint interest of the people. It may be said it will be felt as a burden. My reply is that the burden is much greater where there is neglect of these things. A more diligent care on the part of the people in these matters, will bring manifold more blessings when they are in need of the same, of wisdom, faith, healings, and the prophetic gifts.

In church work elders as the laity should not run beyond their means; and if they are hindered in their work because we do not perform ours it is easy to see that the blame rests not simply upon one, but all who are thus neglectful. A very little care on the part of each and every one makes the gospel free and no great sacrifices demanded either; for what we gain is greater than our loss. On the other hand, neglect of these things brings a great burden upon the financial department of the work of which it should be entirely free.

At the close of the last fiscal year when the elders' individual reports came in, and the little balances due them were summed up, it was found to make a total of over five thousand dollars. This was for incidental expenses which should have been met by those for whom they labored, but was not. The final burden of discharging the obligation then fell upon the general fund, which in great part is contributed by those who do discharge their duties to the traveling and local ministry, for these as a rule who contribute of their tithes and offerings under the law are also forward to perform their work in helping the local and incidental work. The extra burden then is thus borne by the very ones who have discharged their full duties already. What will be said of the distribution of the rewards in such cases? Well did Jesus liken the kingdom "to five wise and five foolish virgins."

Lest the thought may be overlooked, I repeat, that the order of the minister should be that of the law, to travel "without purse or scrip," and where his necessary expenses are not met he should stop where he is until the reasons are fully determined and not proceed to the incurring of further expense to be paid by the Bishop subsequently. It will be much better to settle as we go along, and if it can not be done then, we can wait and take our bearings. Possibly the new expense should not be incurred. Sometimes there is entirely too much haste in the missionary going from place to place. At least no missionary in the ordinary case should go beyond the rule, and bring in a claim against the church at the end of the year. Where the settlement of the balance is to be made by the Bishop we prefer that it be done at the time that it is made, so that we may reasonably know where we stand financially. If a debt is incurred that the church is to be held for let it be reported at once. The reasons for this rule are so self-evident it will not be necessary, I trust, to dwell upon it.

Besides the expense attaching to missionary gospel preaching, there is the additional of maintaining and building, upon the ground preached over. To convert men and women and then not care for them is to fail of our duties under the law. Christ not only said, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," but he also said and charged specially to "Feed my sheep;" "Feed my lambs." Must we not do this? Home work is as essential as the foreign; neither must be neglected. For this reason we have church pastoral work; church educational work; church care for the poor; church work in laying the foundation of Zion. Can any one be excused from lending a helping hand? Truly the Master of the house "has given to every man his work." And it is also stated that he has "commanded the porter to watch." And whether we desire it or not the "porter" will no doubt perform his work and give due report. Is it not then hopeful to the Saints to know that Christ has not only provided for work, but that he has also established a watch whereby every one will receive a just reward for his faithful work?

Since the April conference there has been paid of the college debt the sum of twenty-two hundred dollars. This is an excellent showing for the workers. But what of those who are not helping? Shall not every one be found urging as did Jesus at Jordan, that he or she fulfill this part of the law? We are receiving for the college upon the regular subscription and of the one-dollar offerings. All are for the Lord's work, and no doubt prompted by his divine guidance. It is suggested in this, however, that parties in branches who wish to carry the one-dollar offering plan into operation have the president of the branch prepare them a list and visit every member and take every name in the branch before sending in. Also make due report of what has been done to the president of the branch so that he will know just how many in his branch are aiding.

for the present year is the running expense account. To this I ask also a careful consideration. There is already due a large balance for running expenses the past two years. To carry on the work the present year we must have special help. The college is not endowed. It would be a blessing to the work of the Lord if it was properly endowed. But time will provide for this. There will be at the least seventy-five young men and women seeking the advantages of this institution the present year, if the church does its duty in preparing for them. We can not justly say, Go somewhere else and get your education. To do so is to injure our own work and lose the coöperation and work of our own children. Let us not be compelled to ask the world to do what is our own duty—train our own children. But we need twenty-five hundred dollars for the work if we do it ourselves. This is a large sum. Yes, but stop and think. It would be a very large sum for two or three children, but it is not for twenty-five times that number. It is common for parents to spend from five to eight hundred and even a thousand dollars a year, toward educating a child, in tuition, board, special expense, railroad fare, etc., and they do not complain; in fact consider the money well invested. But the sum asked for Graceland to help all of these girls and boys, who can not otherwise help themselves, amounts to less than thirty-five dollars each. Is it a big sum then? Is it not right to consider the good being done with our means?

Have we not twenty-five good broad-hearted philanthropists among us who can and will do this work and end the question at once? While collecting for the liquidation of the debt, it occurs to me that it will be far better for this special work to call for twenty-five special volunteers, and I would like to have their names at once to place upon the roll; the money they may send in, in two or three months as it may best suit themselves. And this request is not even confined to the brothers; the sisters may also enlist. Can we have the names within thirty days, and thus avoid any further appeal in this line to raise it? Remember that in furnishing the one hundred dollars you help seventy-five young people to nine months of schooling. This is \$1.33 $\frac{1}{3}$  each. Can you make better use of the money? "He that giveth to the poor shall not lack; but he that hideth his eyes, shall have many a curse."—Proverbs 28: 27.

The present year is one of great undertakings on the part of the church, and its work is onward. The foreign and home mission expense has been such as to require extra labor and work to meet the same. But the Lord is remembering his work and will care for those who strive to help in the building. We appeal to you in behalf of a united effort in sustaining this work. No one is asked to do more than he can do; but each and every one is asked to do what he can and in the Lord's way: "Every one who offereth a gift willingly," let him bring it.

As ever, a helper in Zion's work,

E. L. KELLEY, Bishop.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH? — NO. 3.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

This decision was made according to the facts brought before the court. It might be well for some of our literary men who so flippantly charge the church organized by Joseph Smith with believing in polygamy to read up a little.

There are many who have a faint knowledge that there are two or more divisions of what they are pleased to call "Mormonism," but that there is not much difference between them. It will be noticed, however, that the court has said that the Utah church has "largely" (not slightly) departed from the faith advocated by Joseph Smith.

We here mention some of the differences between what we will call the Utah church, under the leadership of Brigham Young and his successors, and the Iowa church, under the leadership of Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith.

1. The Iowa church believes in one God as revealed in the Holy Scriptures, in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

The Utah church believes in a plurality of Gods and that Adam became a God and is the only God with whom we as his descendants have to do. See Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 50.

2. The Iowa church believes that Jesus the Christ was truly begotten by the Holy Ghost as revealed in the Scriptures.

The Utah church believes the words of Brigham Young on this point, when he said, "Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, . . . Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost." See Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 51.

3. The Iowa church believes "that the doctrine of a plurality and a community of wives is a heresy, and opposed to the law of God."

The Utah church makes polygamy a very prominent point in its faith. Though compelled to abandon its practice in public, it yet believes the principle to be the correct rule of marriage.

4. The Iowa church holds very tenaciously to the Holy Scriptures, and all officers and members are amenable to that law.

The Utah church places the officers above the law and Brigham Young is on record as saying that "the books were not worth the ashes of a rye straw," and giving as his reason that they had the "living oracles." "Obey counsel" is an almost daily sermon in Utah.

5. The officers in the Iowa church are similar to the officers in the Utah church; that is, their titles are similar, but their official duties are much different. Judge Philips, of the United States District Court, says: "It has changed the duties of the President and of the Twelve and established the doctrine to 'obey counsel,' and has changed the order of the 'Seventy or Evangelists.'"

6. The Iowa church believes in obeying the law of the land and assisting to elect good men to office.

The Utah church has seen nearly a majority of its leading men either imprisoned or fined for transgressing the law.

7. The Iowa church believes that God is the avenger of wrongs, but that in case redress is sought here it should be done through the laws of the land.

The Utah church has had a Danite band, called also, Avenging Angels, to redress wrongs. One of this band, John D. Lee, was executed by the United States Government for his part in the Mountain Meadow Massacre.

8. The Iowa church does not believe in any secret organization in the church, or any secret doctrine or practices.

The Utah church has a secret order called "Endowments" with grips and signs and terrible oaths; one of which, the writer has been informed, declares to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith.

9. The Iowa church grants to every man the privilege to come into the church or leave it, leaving that matter between him and God.

The Utah church has advocated a doctrine and one of the worst and most diabolical among any civilized people which, in reality, is nothing short of human sacrifice. As announced by Brigham Young, February 8, 1857, as follows:

"I could refer you to plenty of instances where men have been righteously slain, in order to atone for their sins. I have seen scores and hundreds of people for whom there would have been a chance (in the last resurrection there will be) if their lives had been taken and their blood spilled on the ground as a smoking incense to the Almighty, but who are now angels to the Devil. . . . I have known a great many men who have left this church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle's being in full force, but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 220.

10. In the matter of church support the Iowa church believes the Bible doctrine of tithing and interprets it as follows: First, it must be wholly and entirely voluntary. Second, it should be one tenth annually after all expenses are paid. Third, those who have no increase may give freewill offering, and those who have much may consecrate of more than they have need.

The Utah church advocates a system of tithing which is quite compulsory and requires one tenth of all income, not counting out expenses.

11. The Iowa church believes that in case God, through the Holy Spirit, should reveal anything to the church as in former days, it must pass through the different grades of offices, and be accepted by them and the membership before it is binding as a law, and even then it must not contradict any former law of God in the Holy Scriptures.

The Utah church, placing the officers above the written word, makes virtually the mind and whims of the officers the law. Many laws have been given in a very compulsory way—polygamy among others.

This latter difference perhaps is the greatest one between the two churches. It opens the door for any absurd thing or any vile doctrine any leader may be tempted to enforce. Not so with the Iowa church, for all are subject to the law, which is unchangeable as God himself.

We have given the foregoing differences between the two churches, not that they are all, but they are all of much importance. There are many of lesser import that we have neither time nor disposition to here mention. As we said before, in some things the two systems of faith differ as widely as can be, as far as east from the west, as black from white.

We have sought diligently to discuss calmly these differences with the Utah people, but have not succeeded in anything of any importance. We wish here to reproduce some instruction given by the Presidency of the Utah church to their representatives. It will show that they are aware that they have departed from the original faith and dare not face the facts:

CARD TO THE ELDERS.

To the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Dear Brethren: Certain parties who appear to be anxious for notoriety, and who desire to take advantage of the prominence and achieve the dignity which discussion with the elders of this church would give them, have sent to representative elders of the church challenges to hold discussion upon the doctrines and the validity of the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. People of this kind in California and elsewhere have of late been very persistent in demanding an acceptance of their challenge, the question for debate, as they put it, being:

“First, Was Brigham Young the lawful and legitimate successor of Joseph Smith (the Seer), to the prophetic office and presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?”

“Second, And is Utah the appointed place for the gathering of the Saints in the last days, as spoken by the prophets of God, including Joseph Smith, the Seer?”

We take this public method of saying to all our elders that we consider it entirely unnecessary for the vindication of the principles of the church, or to prove the authority of the priesthood of the presiding authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to resort to any such method for their vindication. We leave this for the Lord to prove and sustain, and we think it folly to submit the claims of our church or the priesthood to the arbitrament of man. The Lord has said, “By their fruits ye shall know them;” and to these we can confidently point, feeling satisfied that the people who are seeking for truth and looking for the evidence which the truth always furnishes, can more readily obtain this knowledge by calm investigation and close observation than by controversy.

It is our counsel, therefore, that any elder who may have received and accepted such a challenge, take no steps whatever, towards meeting his challengers, but that he leave them severely alone.

No elder in such a position need feel that any responsibility or discredit will attach to him for declining any discussion into which he may have been drawn; such responsibility we freely assume. We wish it to be further understood that this is our counsel to all of our elders at home and abroad.

Your brethren,

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
GEORGE Q. CANNON,
JOSEPH F. SMITH,

First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.—The Deseret Weekly, June 2, 1894.

This instruction speaks for itself. One would hardly suppose that leading men would advance an idea that a better understanding could be had by examining only one side of the question. Such instruction comes not from wise men, but from those who fear the light of investigation and comparison. Our aim in reproducing this “card” while discussing or answering the question, “Who was Joseph Smith?” is to show that he was not responsible for Utah Mormonism as they themselves pretty well know.

We next introduce the decision of Judge John F. Philips, of the United States District Court for the Western Division of Missouri. We have not space to reproduce it all, but such as bear on the points at issue we excerpt. Speaking of polygamy he said:

Its first appearance as a dogma of the church was in the Utah church in 1852. . . . In view of the contention of the Salt Lake party, that polygamy obtained in Nauvoo as early as 1841, it must be a little embarrassing to President Woodruff of that organization when he is confronted, as he was in the evidence in this case, with a published card in the church organ at Nauvoo in October, 1843, certifying that he knew of no other rule or system of marriage than the one published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants [below we give this rule verbatim], and that the “secret wife system,” charged against the church, was a creature of invention by one Doctor Bennett, and that they knew of no such society. That certificate was signed by the leading members of the church, including John Taylor, the former President of the Utah church. And a similar certificate was published by the Ladies' Relief Society of the same place, signed by Emma Smith, wife of Joseph Smith, and Phoebe Woodruff, wife of the present President Woodruff.

Here we have the decision of a judge who had listened patiently to all sides of this question, and he decided, like all others must do when the evidence is all and properly considered, that in the matter of polygamy Joseph Smith was not guilty.

We here produce the rule of marriage referred to above. This rule was adopted by a general assembly of the church held in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1835. Joseph Smith presided over that gathering. It was published the same year in a book called Doctrine and Covenants. Another edition was published in 1846, two years after Joseph Smith's death, which proves that the church yet believed in that rule.

Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed, by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." And when they have answered "Yes," he shall pronounce them "husband and wife" in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him: "May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and for ever. Amen."

The clerk of every church should keep a record of all marriages solemnized in his branch.

All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled. Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.

As said before, this was the law of the church over which Joseph Smith presided, until at least two years, and doubtless longer, after he was killed. But to show directly from the pen of Joseph Smith how he looked at the matter, we call attention to the following notice, which appeared in the official church paper called the Times and Seasons for February 1, 1844, a little over five months before his untimely death.

NOTICE.

As we have lately been credibly informed, that an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by the name of Hiram Brown, has been preaching polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the County of Lapeer, State of Michigan.

This is to notify him and the church in general, that he has been cut off from the church, for his iniquity; and he is further notified to appear at the Special Conference, on the sixth of April next, to make answer to these charges.

JOSEPH SMITH,
HYRUM SMITH,
Presidents of said Church.

A month and a half later the following appeared in the same paper signed by Hyrum Smith, and of course with the knowledge of Joseph his brother:

NAUVOO, March 15, 1844.

To the Brethren of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, living on China Creek, in Hancock County, Greeting: Whereas, Bro. Richard Hewitt has called on me to-day, to know my views concerning some doctrines that are preached in your place, and states to me that some of your elders say, that a man having a certain priesthood, may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here: I say unto you that that man teaches false doctrine, for there is no such doctrine taught here; neither is there any such thing practiced here. And any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine, is culpable, and will stand a chance to be brought before the High Council, and lose his license and membership also: therefore he had better beware what he is about. . . .

HYRUM SMITH.

We feel that we can reasonably dismiss this point as having been proven over and above what any honest investigator ought to require, that in no sense was Joseph Smith a polygamist. However, to help out a little further that the reader may be prepared to answer all the sophistry of the Utah representatives, we append a clipping from the Kansas City Daily Times for April 11, 1898:

SAINTS AND MORMONS.

At the evening service J. W. Wight of the Rocky Mountain division, whose work has been among the Mormons in Utah, preached. Elder Wight first went into the Utah country when the feeling was so high that his life was many times in danger. He is probably better qualified than any member of the church to explain the difference between the Utah church and that of the Latter Day Saints, who are thought by many people to be identical. In showing some of the more radical points of difference, Elder Wight has contributed the following article to the Times:

"One of the facts to be made prominent in this question of what the world calls Mormonism, is the distinction existing between the reorganized Latter Day Saints and the people in Utah under the successive leadership of B. Young, John Taylor, and W. Woodruff, the now existing president of the organization in Utah, met with the accepted axiom that a sweet fountain can not send forth bitter water; therefore there must have been something peculiarly bitter in the faith or doctrine that could produce such bitter results as have obtained in Utah. The elders at the conference here, all seem ready to tell one that it was not the doctrine that produced the results, but the turning from it that made possible the awful evils seen in the valleys of the mountains, and instead of being abashed by the axiom will turn it in their favor by the argument of a parallel. In the dimly distant past they will cite you the fact that there was an occasion when the Greeks murmured concerning the financial conditions existing in the church, as seen in the sixth chapter of Acts, and that the apostles told the people to choose certain wise men whom they might ordain for the especial purposes contemplated, and that one of these very ones—Nicholas—afterward went away into the grossest of evils—polygamy—as seen in his history.

"And here they argue that if it be true that the doctrine established in 1830 by revelation, as they claim, is false, because Mr. Young and his followers, who at one time were in the true church, went into polygamy and other false doctrines, then it is also true that the doctrine of Christ and his apostles is false, because the man Nicholas and his fellows, belonging thereto, afterward went into polygamy. But here they argue, strange as it may seem, that instead of being a proof in favor of the falsity of their faith it is in fact a proof that their church is right, because of the fact that out from its fold there went forth just such a pernicious teaching as that fostered by Mr. Young and his fellows.

QUOTES PAUL AS AUTHORITY.

"Paul, say they, wrote the saints at Thessalonica that 'That time shall not come except there come a falling away first.' And in fulfillment of this prediction they point to the fact that 'Utah Mormonism' is the real and direct fulfillment of that prediction.

"The doctrine as seen in their text-books was one of monogamy as seen in the Doctrine and Covenants, sections 42 and 49. In the former section, and I may say your correspondent has been privileged to see it, the statement is made: 'Thou shalt love thy wife with all thine heart, and cleave unto her and none else.' In the latter section the statement is made: 'Whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God; therefore, it is lawful that a man should have one wife. And all this that the earth might be filled with the measure of man, and answer the end of its creation.'

"The Book of Mormon in the second chapter of Jacob says: 'Truly David and Solomon had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. . .

Therefore shall no man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none.' And as if to add emphasis to these already strong statements, and as it were a bagatelle of that which was yet to come, the church, as early as 1835, went on record by making a statement in what they called the 'marriage section,' as follows: 'Inasmuch as this church is accused of the crime of fornication and polygamy, we declare, that we believe, that one man shall have one wife and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.' And in the very same section, in their marriage covenant, the statement is made: 'You, both mutually agree to become each other's companion, husband and wife, and to observe all the requirements belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other and from all others during your lives.'

'Here, they argue, was the marital law of the church up to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844, and therefore could not have produced the result in Utah, but that Brigham et al. had to leave such teaching in order to enter into the practice of that which was its direct opposite.

AS TO POLYGAMY.

"One of the most venerable and patriarchal of those in attendance at the conference is Apostle E. C. Briggs, who was sent to Utah as early as 1863 in our effort to reclaim that deluded people. He and others who have since gone there have been able to give to your correspondent some interesting features of the work in Utah. From these it is learned that in order to fasten the question of polygamy more securely in the minds of their adherents the leaders in Utah early began to teach that Joseph Smith was its author. Even could it be true—which they do not admit—they will tell you that it would not make it true if Mr. Smith did introduce its practice.

"The doctrine is so contrary to the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants—their standard text-books—that they claim that even if it could be proved that Mr. Smith taught or practiced it and would therefore be for them to stand by either the books or Smith, and on this point they propose to stand by the books rather than any man. But it will be well enough to examine this matter a little more in detail. Young and his followers, in order to make their claim hold good, say that Smith practiced the crime as early as 1841, by that year marrying as his first plural wife one Louisa Beaman, and that he married several others soon after. Naturally the Reorganized elders ask for the issue that would likely have resulted from such union. Here they tell us that the Utah people make a complete failure in their efforts to bolster up such a claim in not being able to produce the progeny. And when it is learned that in later years some of these same women became the mothers of other men's children it does seem a clincher in favor of the position taken by the Reorganization.

"But another feature to be noted is the peculiar nature of their testimony. One woman, Eliza D. Huntington, is said to have married Smith on the 27th day of October, 1841, having previously been married to one Jacobs. Andrew Jensen, Utah historian, says that after she had borne Jacobs two children—and he says nothing about their being twins—that the marriage, not proving a happy one, she got a divorce from Mr. Jacobs and married Smith, as above noted. The inconsistency of the claim is in the fact that by the county records of Hancock County, Illinois, it is shown that she was married to Jacobs on March 7, 1841, so that, to have borne him two children (even though they were twins—which even the Utah church does not claim), then got a divorce and married Smith in seven months and twenty days, was even too miraculous for the Saints to accept. And upon just such a false basis as this has Mr. Young and his fellows tried to prove that Smith was a polygamist.

"The first child born in polygamy was on the 19th day of June, 1845, as noted by Utah historians themselves, and here these Independence conveners will apply the well-established adage that the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and that as this first polygamous product was fostered at the door of Mr. Young, by his own historian, and was not born till within nine days of one year after the death of Smith, that, therefore, Young was the real author of the 'twin relic,' as proved by themselves.

"In answer to the query as to how it was that women in Utah actually claim to have been Smith's wives, one is met with the statement that this was simply an afterthought, and accomplished by the Utah men marrying the women for 'time,' and in the same ceremony sealing them to Joseph for 'eternity,' and thus they became Joseph's 'wives.' Married to him after he was dead! In their efforts to ameliorate the condition in Utah, brought into existence by the fostering of such crimes of polygamy, Adam-God, blood-atonement, etc., the Reorganized Church should be seconded by all good people."

In February, 1880, E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop of the Reorganized Church, with his brother, W. H. Kelley, President of the Quorum of Apostles in the same church, visited the old neighbors of Joseph Smith living in the States of New York and Ohio to obtain what they knew of the man. Their testimonies were published at the time and a statement of E. L. Kelley appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD, of March 15, 1880, a part of which some years after appeared in the Chicago Inter-Ocean by E. T. Dobson, of St. Joseph, Missouri. It is as follows:

After canvassing the statements here of these men, I feel a good deal like Colonel R. G. Ingersoll when he offered the gold for the evidence of Tom Paine's dying declarations; and I now affirm that if any of the great newspapers of the day, like the Chicago Times, Tribune, or Inter-Ocean wish to test the truth of these statements and publish the facts by a correspondent through their columns, I will undertake the task of accompanying their correspondent and if the general integrity, uprightness, honesty, and patriotism of these men [Joseph Smith and the leading Latter Day Saints] are not maintained by the evidence, I will forfeit to the one the one hundred dollars in gold.

Here is a chance for some of our leading encyclopedias to make a little to pay the printer; at least enough to pay the railroad fare of a man to visit the places and make at least a show of justice. Suffice it to say that thus far the money has not been called for.

The same assembly that indorsed the marriage ceremony before referred to also accepted the following as a revelation from God through Joseph Smith. Whatever may be the opinion of the reader concerning present revelation, or God's unchangeability, it must be admitted that these sentiments were in exact harmony with the mind of Joseph Smith whether inspired or uninspired. There is no escaping the conclusion that it was at least the sentiments of the church over which he presided:

Again, I say, thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die. Thou shalt not steal; and he that stealeth and will not repent, shall be cast out. Thou shalt not lie; he that lieth and will not repent, shall be cast out. Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repent not, he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out. Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

It would be difficult to find anything more moral or upright than the above. No one need be ashamed of these principles. But these are the very principles that are opposed when people oppose the work of Joseph Smith. All his teaching and all his life was on this same elevated moral plane. Those who believe him to have been otherwise do not know the man. They know only a man of straw made by Satan to deceive, as we now proceed to prove.

Joseph Smith began his religious work in the State of New York. He afterward moved to Ohio, thence to Missouri, and thence to Illinois, where he was murdered June 27, 1844. We desire to give below the testimony of two or more honorable and disinterested witnesses from each State whose word would be taken in any court.

NEW YORK.

The first witness we shall introduce is Mr. Thomas H. Taylor, LL. D., of Manchester, New York. Mr. Taylor is an infidel and occasionally lectures on that subject. He was one of the original parties with John Brown at Harper's Ferry. Also fought in the Northern Army in the late Rebellion. Being questioned if he knew the Smiths and early settlers throughout that part called "Mormons,"* he said:

I knew them very well; they were nice men, too; the only trouble was they were ahead of the people, and the people as in every such case, turned out to abuse them because they had the manhood to stand for their own convictions. . . . Smith was always ready to exchange views with the best men they had.

*The terms "Mormon" and "Mormonism" are opprobriums, generally applied to the Latter Day Saints and their faith. It was first used as a reproach and finally crept into print generally. Many use it to-day, no doubt, without thinking of reproach, but the church from the first has refused to be called by that name.

First, because it is a reproach.

Second, because the church refuses to be called by any other name than that of Jesus Christ.

The name of the church under Joseph Smith was the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" but shortly after the death of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young so changed the faith and polity of the church, that many, including the family of Joseph Smith, utterly refused to go with him or accept his changed faith; nor did they follow him to Salt Lake. Out of the membership of two hundred thousand, only a few thousand went to Utah. Those who remained, consisting of many officers as well as members of the original faith, reorganized the church. Soon after Joseph Smith's oldest son became president and established headquarters at Plano, Illinois, not far from Chicago, but later moved to Lamoni, Iowa, where the printing and general business of the church is transacted, and where many of the leading men now live. The name of the present organization is "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The Utah church has quite generally adopted the name "Mormon," but the Reorganization more especially reject it since the departure of Brigham Young and the addition of his new and vicious doctrines. The name, though quite long, is both expressive and explanatory. God's people in all ages of the world were called saints. By reading Ephesians 4:12 we learn the word saint does not mean a perfect person. Saints living in former days were surely former day saints. Those living in latter days are as surely latter day saints.

. . . To tell the truth, . . . he knew more than they did, and it made them mad.

But a good many tell stories about them being low people, rogues and liars, and such things. How is that?

I have had a home here, and been here, except when on business, all my life—ever since I came to this country, and I know these fellows; and they make these lies on Smith because they love a lie better than the truth. I can take you to a great many old settlers who will substantiate what I say, and if you want to go, come to my place across the way, and I'll go with you; . . . but you will find they don't know anything against those men when you put them down to it; they could never sustain anything against Smith.

Here is the testimony of a man who could look impartially on both sides, and his testimony is evidently true. He was an honorable man and received aid from such influential men as Gerret Smith and Wendell Phillips, a great anti-slavery writer. Of that matter he said: "I have seen such work all through life, and when I was working with John Brown for the freedom of my fellow man, I often got in tight places; and if it had not been for Gerrett Smith and Wendell Phillips and some others who gave me their influence and money, I don't know how I would have gotten through."

According to this man's testimony, religious zealots and those who could not answer Mr. Smith's arguments, together with those who love a lie better than the truth, were his worst enemies. As we proceed we hope the reader will note carefully the kind of men that opposed and those who favored Mr. Smith. As we have said, doctors, lawyers, judges, and statesmen were his friends. Clergymen and those who could be gathered from grog-shops and ditches became brothers to oppose him, while religious zealots took up the refrain and echoed it far and wide.

We next introduce the testimony of Orlando Saunders, living near Manchester, New York. On being asked concerning his acquaintance with the Smiths he said:

Well you have come to a poor place to find out anything. I don't know anything against these men myself.

Were you acquainted with them Mr. Saunders?

Yes sir; I knew all of the Smith family well; there were six boys; Alvin, Hyrum, Joseph, Harrison, William, and Carlos, and there were two girls; the old man was a cooper; they have all worked for me many a day; they were very good people; Young Joe (as we called him then), has worked for me, and he was a good worker; they all were. I did not consider them good managers about business, but they were poor people. The old man had a large family.

In what respect did they differ from other people if at all?

I never noticed that they were different from other neighbors; they were the best family in the neighborhood in case of sickness; one was at my house nearly all the time when my father died; I always thought them honest; they were owing me some money when they left here. . . . One of them came back in about a year and paid me. . . .

How well did you know young* Joseph Smith?

*This expression Young Joseph refers to the founder of the church—the subject of our sketch. His father's name was Joseph Smith as was also his son who since has become his successor.

Oh! just as well as one could very well; he has worked for me many a time, and been about my place a great deal. He stopped with me many a time, when through here, after they went west to Kirtland; he was always a gentleman when about my place.

The above will answer the evil story that Joseph Smith was a low, lazy, dishonest boy, springing from a family of the same sort.

Some of the books written to cast reproach on Mr. Smith charge him with being a chicken-thief and a sheep-thief. We almost refrain from relating that such an assertion appeared recently in the Christian Herald over the signature of General John Eaton in a series of articles entitled, "Mormonism of To-day." It is wonderful how much self-assertion some men can make. One man, not General Eaton, however, attempted to give the proof, and that the sheep was stolen from a Mr. William Stafford. Below we give the statement of Doctor John Stafford, son of William Stafford above referred to. He resides now in Rochester, New York. Answering the question as to the character of Joseph Smith, the doctor said:

He was a real clever boy. What Tucker said about him was false, absolutely.

What about that black sheep your father let them have?

I have heard that story, but don't think my father was there at the time they say Smith got the sheep. I don't know anything about it.

You were living at home at the time, and it seems you ought to know if they got a sheep, or stole one from your father.

They never stole one, I am sure; they may have got one sometime.

Well, doctor, you know pretty well whether that story is true or not that Tucker tells. What do you think of it?

I don't think it is true. I would have heard more about it if it had been true. I lived a mile from the Smiths. . . . They were peaceable among themselves. . . . Joe was illiterate. After they began to have school at their house he improved greatly.

If the above is the strongest evidence, and it is all that we have seen, that exists to prove that Mr. Smith was a sheep-thief, then he need have no fear at the judgment. We are only too glad to defend such a character as Joseph Smith bears. Our hearts go out in great sympathy for him. What must have been his own feelings when he heard such things? What must be the feelings of his posterity now? Oh shame! that such books should exist, and shame that newspapers and encyclopedias should take up the reproach and slander the innocent.

As the most important period of Mr. Smith's life was spent in the Empire State it might be well to introduce one more witness, that of a lawyer and a statesman, Mr. Reed. This statement was made by Mr. Reed before the State convention in Illinois in 1844, to which convention Mr. Reed was a delegate. In 1830 when certain religious bigots, who could not resist the strength of Mr. Smith's arguments, resorted to persecution and had him arrested for disturbing the peace, Mr. Reed was employed as counsel to defend the accused. He tells of the trial fourteen years after in the following vigorous language:

Those bigots soon made up a false accusation against him and had him arraigned before Joseph Chamberlain, a justice of the peace, a man that was always ready to deal out justice to all, and a man of great discernment of mind. The case came on about ten o'clock a. m. I was called upon to defend the prisoner. The prosecutors employed the best counsel they could get, and ransacked the town of Bainbridge and county of Chenango for witnesses that would swear hard enough to convict the prisoner; but they entirely failed. Yes, sir, let me say to you that not one blemish or spot was found against his character. He came from that trial, notwithstanding the mighty efforts that were made to convict him of crime by his vigilant persecutors, with his character unstained by even the appearance of guilt. The trial closed about twelve o'clock at night. After a few moments deliberation, the court pronounced the words "not guilty," and the prisoner was discharged. But alas! the Devil, not satisfied with his defeat, stirred up a man not unlike himself, who was more fit to dwell among the fiends of hell than to belong to the human family, to go to Colesville and get another writ, and take him to Broome County for another trial. They were sure they could send that boy to hell or Texas, they did not care which; and in half an hour after he was discharged by the court he was arrested again and on the way to Colesville for another trial. I was again called upon by his friends to defend him against his malignant persecutors, and clear him from the false charges they had preferred against him. I made every reasonable excuse I could, as I was nearly worn down through fatigue and want of sleep, as I had been engaged in lawsuits for two days and nearly the whole of two nights. But I saw the persecution was great against him. And here let me say, Mr. Chairman, singular as it may seem, while Mr. Knight was pleading with me to go, a peculiar impression or thought struck my mind, that I must go and defend him, for he was the Lord's anointed. I did not know what it meant, but thought I must go and clear the Lord's anointed. I said I would go; and started with as much faith as the apostles had when they could remove mountains, accompanied by Father Knight, who was like the old patriarchs that followed the ark of God to the city of David. We rode on until we came to the house of Hezekiah Peck, where a number of Mormon women had assembled, as I was informed, for the purpose of praying for the deliverance of the prophet of the Lord. The women came out to our wagon, and Mrs. Smith among the rest. O my God, sir; what were my feelings when I saw that woman who had but a few days before given herself, heart and hand, to be a consort for life, and that so soon her crimson cheeks must be wet with tears that came streaming from her eyes. Yes, sir, it seemed that her very heartstrings would be broken with grief. My feelings, sir, were moved with pity and sorrow for the afflicted; and on the other hand they were wrought up to the highest pitch of indignation against those fiends of hell who had thus caused the innocent to suffer.

The next morning about ten o'clock the court was organized. The prisoner was to be tried by three justices of the peace, that his departure out of the county might be made sure. Neither talents nor money were wanting to insure them success. They employed the ablest lawyer in that county, and introduced twenty or thirty witnesses before dark, but proved nothing. They then sent out runners and ransacked the hills and vales, grog-shops and ditches, and gathered together a company that looked as if they had come from hell and had been whipped by the soot boy thereof, which they brought forward to testify one after another, but with no better success than before, although they wrung and twisted into every shape, in trying to tell something that would criminate the prisoner. Nothing was proven against him whatever. Having got through with the examination of their witnesses about two o'clock, in the morning, the case was argued about two hours. There was not one particle of testimony against the prisoner. No sir, he came out like the three children from the fiery furnace, without the smell of fire upon his garments. The court deliberated upon the case for half an hour with closed doors, and then we were called in. The court arraigned the prisoner and said: "Mr. Smith, we have had your case under consideration, examined the testimony and find nothing to condemn you, and therefore you are discharged."—History of the Church, volume 1, pages 101-103.

Mr. Reed, though always a friend of Joseph Smith, was never a member of the church. He, however, testified to what he knew, and the reader will do well to accept his testimony.

These were the first two of the fifty-six annoying trials at law that Joseph Smith passed through during his short life. Not once was he found guilty. We doubt if there is a parallel in history, where one should pass through fifty-six trials at law and never once be found guilty. These lawsuits furnish the rabble and suborned witnesses material for talk, and judging from public opinion, many persons prefer to believe that side rather than the decisions rendered. They, however, in return, would very much object to being treated in that manner themselves. We will let these testimonies be sufficient to show what Mr. Smith's character was in the State of New York.

HOLD THE FORT.

Vacation is as trialsome a time as the Trustees of Graceland are called upon to experience, for the reason that there is a constant and necessary running expense, and no immediate income, and so many of the opinion that while the school is not in operation there is no need of money. This is an unfortunate mistake upon the part of some. The building and its contents, as also the grounds, are needing constant care during the three months that school is not in session. We also have to make repairs and preparation for the next college year. At present we are getting out the catalogue for ensuing year, all of which require means.

Will those who can, be kind enough to grant assistance that we shall be able to "hold the fort," and keep the flag of Graceland to the breeze, with honor to the church and success to the institution?

Please do not forget your opportunity to reduce the indebtedness, and thereby save to the church what would have to be paid out in interest.

A little effort upon the part of the many would soon remove the irksomeness and put the college upon a safe footing for usefulness, for with the debt wiped out, a stronger corps of teachers, increased number of students, and Graceland will be a power for good in our church work.

Neglect not the fort-holders, but send us the sinew of war, and we abide your faithful servants.

THE PART THAT DIET PLAYS IN GOOD HEALTH.

The word diet is so closely associated in some minds with gruels and crust-coffee, with limitations of quantity and variety of food, with so many fallacies with regard to appetite, that some knowledge of the physiology and hygiene of digestion is of advantage.

Children who are forming new tissue require proportionately more food than adults, and especially more proteids, which actually form parts of the body, while carbohydrates and fats are used only as fuel to furnish heat and force. By proteid is meant complex compounds of nitrogen, such as are contained in muscle, glands, and the seeds of plants, hence including cereals, flours, meals, etc. Three fourths of lean meat consist of water, and as there is also some fat and carbohydrate as well as mineral matter only one sixth is proteid. Dry meals and flours contain from seven to sixteen per cent of proteid. Carbohydrates include starches, dextrines, and sugars, all of which are digested into glucose before being of use to the body. Thus there is no need of being afraid of glucose or other sugars, except that when concentrated they are somewhat irritating, and it is not wise to furnish any digested food to the healthy body, the work of digestion being just as necessary as any other form of exercise. Fats and oils need no definition.

DAILY NEEDS OF THE HUMAN BODY.

|--------------------|---|---|
| 1. Inorganic Foods | } | Water, two quarts, about one quart being contained in ordinary foods. A moderate excess of water is rather beneficial.Sodium chloride (common salt), one ounce.Other mineral matters, iron, phosphates, sulphates, etc., are also necessary, but the exact amounts are not known, and sufficient is introduced in any mixed diet. |
| 2. Organic Foods   | } | Proteid, four ounces.Carbohydrates, fifteen ounces.Fats and oils (which differ mainly in melting-point), three ounces.  |

Of late much has been written about condensed nourishment, and the prophecy has been made that the time is not far distant when the soldier or tourist may carry his day's ration in his vest pocket. Such a statement is precisely as sensible as to say that a supply of fuel for an engine and the material for minor repairs may be carried in a pill-box. Not to mention water, which may be obtained almost anywhere, the body requires daily about twenty-three ounces of dry food. Not only is it as yet impossible to compress this amount into a minute package, but there is every physical reason for believing that salt, sugar, dry starch, and dry albumen represent nearly the limit of condensation that can ever be reached by any amount of pressure. A considerable variety of food is necessary to provide the needed amount of iron and various other mineral matters for which no special appetite is felt, such as warns us of the deprivation of water, salt, and other foods. It is better to rely upon a normal appetite than upon scientific estimates of the amount of various foods required.

Many persons have an idea that certain foods are essentially "strengthening" to mind, body, or both, and that a reserve fund of nutriment may be laid up by eating excessive quantities of these foods. Except that considerable quantities of fat and minute quantities of carbohydrates are regularly deposited in the body, so that a healthy person or one acutely attacked with disease may safely fast for a few days, and that a person in apparent health may have eaten a deficient quantity of some particular food, and thus require a relative excess of that food for some time, this notion is utterly fallacious.

It is somewhat doubtful how far the craving for salt is a healthy appetite, and how far it is abnormal. The appetite for the fuel-foods, carbohydrates, and fats is greater in cold weather and during periods of physical strain. Theoretically both of these classes of food are equally good producers of heat and force. Practically the body can digest only small quantities of fats, and must rely mainly on carbohydrates. Sugar being nearly or quite digested carbohydrate food is especially valuable to furnish fuel for exposure to cold or muscular strain.

Proteid is required mainly to compensate for wear and tear of tissues, and the demand is nearly constant without regard to exercise or mode of life, though of course varying somewhat according to habits of exercise, exposure, etc. The commonest and most serious dietetic fault of Americans, and of the wealthier classes of all countries, is the consumption of excessive quantities of meat. The cereals, including breadstuffs, contain approximately six times as much carbohydrate as proteid. Other vegetables and fruits contain smaller proportions of proteid, while milk, which is used considerably even by adults, contains a little more proteid than carbohydrate. Thus, if the proper amount of carbohydrate is taken in the form of breadstuffs, vegetables, milk, etc., there remains at most a deficit of one and one half ounces of proteid, represented by nine ounces of meat. This quantity is to be still further diminished if eggs, custards, etc., are eaten.

An average hearty meal may considerably exceed this amount, while many persons eat meat three times a day, and few are so temperate as to use it at only one meal. The principal danger is not in the excess of proteid, but in the waste matters contained in all meat, and in poisonous products of decomposition, for a great deal of meat, including most game and most meat served at cheap restaurants, is partly putrefied. The attempt to disguise this state by frying or by adding large quantities of pepper and other condiments increases the danger, as the meat is then still more irritating. A safe rule is to eat hot meat only once daily, taking no more than the equivalent of a small chop, and to eat cold or warmed-up meat, fish, eggs, etc., at only one other meal, leaving one meal free from animal food except small quantities of milk.

Some substances commonly served are positively injurious. All drugs, such as alcoholic liquors, tea, coffee, chocolate and irritating spices, should be allowed only as flavors, never in sufficient amount to produce characteristic effects. Cheese contains many putrefactive poisons as well as numerous living bacteria. If cooked, as in Welsh rabbit, most of these poisons as well as the germs are destroyed. The under crust of pie, hot breads, which revert to dough upon being chewed, and many twice-cooked articles are irritating and indigestible. The fibrous portions of plants, seeds, etc., are also indigestible, but are comparatively or quite harmless, since there is no attempt at digesting them, and no irritating chemical substances are produced from them. They are of value in stimulating the movement of the intestine, and are a very rare cause of inflammation of the appendix, though dangerous to those who have had such attacks. As constipation is the common ultimate cause of inflammation of the appendix, seed-fruits and similar articles are a perfectly proper part of the diet of healthy persons.

Many persons, especially middle-aged women, lapse into a state of chronic poisoning simply because they do not take enough water to wash impurities through the system. Although water should not be used to bolt unmasticated food, experiments prove that gastric digestion is more rapid when the stomach contents are moderately diluted, so that if little fruit and little of other beverages are taken a glassful of water should be sipped in the course of each meal. A glassful between meals, one at night and one before breakfast completes the quantity of water needed daily.

Not more than one quart of food and drink should be introduced into the stomach at once. The following rules may well be observed:

1. Plenty of water, but not too much at any one time, especially not with meals.
2. Plenty of fruit.
3. No drugs except small quantities of tea, coffee, and chocolate, and spices for flavor, not for physiologic effect.
4. No putrefied meat, very little meat prepared by frying or double-cooking, small quantities at not more than two meals daily.
5. Thorough mastication, leisurely habits at the table.
6. No eating between meals. . . .
7. No alternation of abstinence and excess. Use candy, fruits, desserts, etc., in moderation, at the end of meals.
8. No overloading of the stomach at any time.
9. No etiquette which forces one to eat improper foods. . . .
10. Arrange your meals so that you can enjoy them. Don't try to eat a hearty breakfast so early that your stomach is not awake. . . . Don't starve yourself. Don't imagine that you can grow strong on foods that you dislike. . . .—A. L. Benedict, M. D., in Woman's Home Companion.

The "Diamond in the Rough."

Written for and dedicated to Sunday-school Teachers,
by C. D. Meigs.

A diamond "in the rough,"
Is a diamond—sure enough,
For, though yet it may not sparkle,
It is made of diamond stuff.

Of course, some one must find it,
Or it never will be found,
And then some one must grind it,
Or it never will be ground.

But when it's found, and when it's ground,
And when it's burnished bright,
That diamond's everlastingly
Just flashing out its light.

O! teacher in the Sunday-school,
Don't think you've "done enough,"
That worst boy in your class may be
A diamond in the rough.

Perhaps you think he's "grinding" you!
And possibly you're right,
But it may be you need grinding,
To burnish you up bright.

The Mission of the Library.

"To have or not to have?" This is the question often asked about the library. In a city well equipped with a public library, and where the books are even distributed in the schools, the question arises: Shall the library be continued in the Sunday-school? Is not the need fully met? Careful investigation proved that under these favorable conditions there was still a place for the Sunday-school library. Children too young to go to the public library, or too remote from it were eager for books. Many of the poorer homes were brightened by the books, and many a child from better as well as poorer homes had something ennobling to read on the Lord's Day. If this was found to be true under such circumstances it is far more necessary to maintain a library in remote places and in Sunday-schools which are oftentimes the one center of elevating influence in a community. The emissaries of evil are constantly spreading bad literature with lavish hand. It behooves Christian people to meet it and indeed precede it by good reading. Form in young children a taste for the pure and true. Sensational trash will then have no attraction for them.

Reading matter for children should be interesting and entertaining. Stories of pure, simple home and school life, of innocent childhood, of high ambitions and lofty purpose, even when overdrawn and beyond reality have an ennobling influence, for ideals must be kept high.

There is a wide range of books from which to select. Stories well told are numberless, and are always in demand by boys and girls. Biographies and histories interest boys and teach many useful lessons. A Sunday-school teacher may do valuable work in directing a scholar's reading.

If one is far removed from book-stores he may send to any one of the large denominational publishing houses telling the amount of money to be spent and asking that a selection be made. As there is usually a man especially in charge of this work one can feel sure that this will be wisely done. Another way is to send for a list of books from several publishers and make a selection. New books are not always the best. There are standard stories which never lose their charm and are always in demand.

In order that library cards be preserved paste inside the cover of the book a strong brown envelope into which the card will easily slip.—The Sunday School Superintendent.

PLAN for a Rally Sunday after the summer vacation. Send postal card invitations to every member of the school to be present. Review day is a good time to utilize in this way. Have a bright, interesting review. This may take some planning and effort but it will be profitable.—Sunday School Superintendent.

Three Essentials in Blackboard Work.

After using the blackboard for more than thirty years, Professor De B. K. Ludwig, superintendent of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Sunday-school, Philadelphia, says of it that "variety, brevity, and simplicity" should be aimed at in Sunday-school blackboard work. He is accustomed to use two sides of a swinging board. On the first he has a keynote or an outline of the lesson; on the other side, which he turns during the teaching period, he keeps at the top some word, picture, or device for the lessons of the quarter, adding one after another as they come along. On the rest of the board he works out his review, with the help of the school, in various ways, from Sunday to Sunday. The first side is prepared with care as to lettering and colors, but the reverse is done rapidly and with less elaboration, in the presence of the school, as the scholars respond to the superintendent's questions. Pictures are very seldom attempted.—Sunday School Times.

Sunday-school Thermometer.

The "Sunday-school Thermometer" device is a sort of wall chart, home made or purchased, for indicating the rise or fall of weekly attendance and weekly offerings. It is a large drawing representing two thermometers, with red tapes which can be raised or lowered. Inquiries having recently come concerning the method, it may be noted that E. C. Romine, 728 Huntington Street, Philadelphia, furnishes a chart of strong paper (10x40 inches), mounted on rollers, at one dollar. In ordering, the present average attendance and offering of the school should be mentioned.—Sunday School Superintendent.

Letter Department.

REDMOON, Oklahoma.

Editors Herald: Arriving in Oklahoma from General Conference, I entered vigorously upon my mission work for the new year. On May 12 I began my first debate with R. B. Shannon, of the Christian Advent faith. We signed propositions for eighteen sessions of two hours each. I affirmed Joseph Smith to be a true prophet sent from God, and the Book of Mormon, Inspired Translation of the Bible, and Doctrine and Covenants to be of divine origin. Then Elder Shannon to affirm the negative of the above for six nights, thus giving me twelve sessions on the same subject and ample time to put the matter plainly before the people. The third and fourth propositions were on the soul-sleeping question and were of three sessions each.

I led on the affirmative with excellent liberty. This seemed to surprise my opponent, and in one of his first speeches he remarked that he saw "he had a 'Case' on his hands, whose tongue was loose at both ends." He used Lamb's "Golden Bible," Beadle, Kirby, Bays, and Toney's works against the church. He did not try to answer my Biblical references, saying the first two propositions were not on Bible subjects. We had four different chairmen and there were perhaps a dozen points of order raised. Every one of these was decided in our favor. The settlement was largely Advent; and one of Elder Shannon's own members said that he had failed to prove that Joseph Smith was a false prophet; and that the arguments he used against him would prove any of the prophets of old to be false. At the close of the eleventh session, Elder Shannon, having affirmed Joseph Smith a false prophet for five sessions, requested that we drop the sixth session and proceed with the soul-sleeping propositions. On account of losing some time by rain we consented.

Brn. Maloney, Durfey, and Crawley all rendered assistance during the debate. Bro. Crawley having made a special study of Adventism, was of great assistance. Our crowds were not very large most of the time owing to busy season and heavy rains. The debate was held at Richmond, Woodward County, Oklahoma. We made many friends, and left some near the door of the kingdom, while the Saints were rejoicing in the truth.

Just before the debate, I was afflicted with a large carbuncle on my neck, which was very painful and not sufficiently recovered so that I could stand straight when I began debate. I have another now which is so severe that I am confined to the house. I hope to be able soon, however, to be about the Master's business. I contemplate a trip to Indian Territory. The last quarter has been one of the busiest of my experience. In my drive across Oklahoma I visited four branches and find the work advancing. The Saints seem desirous of living their religion. God speed the happy day when we all "practice what we preach."

Hopeful in the conflict,

HUBERT CASE.

Editor Herald: Bro. J. W. Peterson and I came here two weeks ago, and after a few days delay secured the use of a vacant lot on which to locate the district tent, and after erecting it we have been doing all we could to get the people out to hear us. We chalked the walks and published notices in the papers, but as yet have only had small attendance. The weather has been so cold until the last few days that it was not really comfortable sitting in the tent. We secured an oil-stove heater that helped some. There are two weekly papers and one twice-a-week paper here, and we have secured and used considerable space in each of them. A few are thinking, and we hope to set more to thinking before we leave. We are sowing to the best of our ability and willingly leave the results with God.

Bro. Peterson lectured on the language, habits, and customs of the Society Islanders last night, and managed to get in a good many good words for the church. After it was over I heard one man say to another, "I wouldn't have missed that for five dollars." D. M. RUDD.

WATERFORD, Ontario, July 1.

Editors Herald: I arrived in the Canadian Mission Friday, June 20, and attended the Longwood conference, in Chatham District, the following day. The warmth with which I was greeted by both officials and laymen served to cheer my then rather drooping spirits, and is indicative of characteristic Canadian good fellowship. Already I am feeling "at home" in the mission. At the conference, President Evans, the invincible, was present, also Patriarch J. H. Lake, Canada's "grand old man." It is said here that Bro. Lake never really did belong to Michigan; that Canada simply loaned him out at usury, and it is vaguely hinted that the writer is the "usury." Possibly, and it may be that the lesson will serve to close up the loan business indefinitely.

However, I am feeling well, and hope to labor acceptably. The fairness, justness, and infinite worth of the Christian scheme appeals to me more as the years come and go. My finite brain almost reels at times, as I hold in contemplation the lofty aims and vast purposes of Divinity's plan for the effecting of a perfect happiness for a world, or perhaps a system of worlds. And when I recall the fact that as yet I know really nothing of the real purposes of the master Mind, I can not but implore a measure of his inspiration.

The fact that I seldom contribute to the columns of the HERALD is not to be understood as evidence of a lack of appreciation of my privileges as a citizen of the great Christian commonwealth. Other writers, more forceful than I, furnish all the food for thought which we may require. My permanent address is now Waterford, Ontario, box 649.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Arkansas, July 5.

Dear Herald: On June 13 I went to a schoolhouse near Nettleton to preach by the request of Sr. Gregg and her husband, who belongs to the M. E. Church. On account of sickness neither were permitted to attend. I preached three times to a full house, baptized her brother, a young man, and promised to return when crops are laid by.

My next point was Sedgwick, thence to Walnut Ridge, where my work was well reported by the press.

On the 23d I walked to my daughter's, near Portia. I was grievously surprised to find there my wife holding in her arms a dying babe, our only grandson. I took the child immediately and labored hard for ninety minutes to save him alive or to tide him over. The room was thronged with unbelieving relatives and sympathizers. My wife and I suggested the church ordinance; the parents consented; but because they manifested no faith I did not administer. The powers of unbelief were compact and oppressive. Oh, how I wrestled with them! I felt inclined to flee to the cover of the wood with the sweet little bud where I could be alone with God. For once I certainly discerned why Elijah took the widow's dead child into a room by himself, and why Peter put the widows all from the room where Dorcas lay, and why all the minstrels and people were put forth from the room where the ruler's daughter was laid. Ah! were it not for the power of unbelief heaven would be very near. We buried him the next day.

Six weeks ago I was led to place into the hands of Professor Benjamin F. Chandler, of Portia, Arkansas, the Book of Mormon and say, "In the name of the Lord I make you a present of this book." With an appropriate rejoinder he made known his appreciation. On June 25 I visited him. He had read the book; he bought the Manuscript Found, and read my Doctrine and Covenants what little time he had, with avidity. Says he is going to continue his investigation. This is the geometrician who seems disgusted with the approximations of the higher mathematics. He boldly controverts the statement that "two magnitudes may approach each other indefinitely or infinitely." If I understand his position, he claims to have found the bonanza that the scientific world has longed for and hunted since the days of Adam; namely, the exact relation between the diameter and the circumference of a circle; the exact relation of the perpendicular lines to the sides of all species of equilateral triangles; the exact relation of a diagonal line to the sides of a square, etc. If this old philosopher had the fulcrum (money) upon which to rest his lever he surely would revolutionize the science of trigonometry, or prove to the world that he is mistaken. His strong aversion of approximations and his wonderful attachment to demonstrated facts will evidently enlist his energies in the Church of Jesus Christ restored. I can not but pray that means may be forthcoming to enable him to benefit the world with his proposed text-books.

Portia is the great watermelon nucleus of Northern Arkansas. Hundreds of car-loads are annually shipped from this point. A tremendous average is now in sight; some farms have sixty and sixty-five acres in melons; occasionally one hundred dollars and more, net, is realized per acre for cantaloupes and melons.

Next week I go to Oconee by the request of Mr. Privette (a prominent member of the Christian Church) to give a lecture on American Antiquity and the Book of Mormon. Mr. Privette was our timekeeper at the debate at Oconee last winter with Professor Fry. Near the close of the debate Mr. Privette gave me to understand that his position had become unsettled; that he was not so sure that he had the whole truth as he had thought in the past. God alone knows the sequel.

There was never known a more flattering prospect for crops in Northern Arkansas than at present. Cotton is a perfect stand and profusely loaded with squares, some beginning to bloom. Corn stout and dark, and by the way it stood under the fierce yanking wind of the 28th gives evidence that it is "rooted and grounded" in good soil. So may we be established and prosper in the soil of eternal truth. D. R. BALDWIN.

SOUTH PITTSBURG, Tennessee.

Editors Herald: I have been here hardly long enough to tell what can be done, only I think to some extent I have taken in the situation. Bro. J. M. Scott reached this place June 13; I landed the 20th. I found him busy trying to get the work before the people; had aroused just enough interest to get the only house in town open to us, closed. I thought perhaps this would not interfere with our work, so we arranged to have preaching in a grove near by in a brother's yard. But this only resulted in having a very nice young man turned out of employment as clerk in a dry-goods store. He was forbidden by his employers to attend our meeting, was the report. But the young man was one of the brave boys who crossed the great deep to help set a nation free. After getting an honorable discharge from the Philippines he sailed back to his mother country to enjoy the freedom that had been won by our forefathers. So it would be useless to say he attended the meeting. So the people would not come out there.

Then we moved up to Jasper, and as all but one private house were closed against us, we began Wednesday night with a small turnout; announced meeting till over Sunday. Saturday morning Bro. Scott thought best to leave me at Jasper and return to Pittsburg where we made the first effort. He got a private house in the main part of town and began a new effort, but found the people more determined not to hear our claims. I continued at Jasper till Monday. Was able on Sunday to get a good turnout and some interest. Think we shall be able to plant the seed in some good ground at that place. I came back here and found Bro. Scott still at work but much discouraged. The climate here does not agree with him.

Now I will tell you what I think it will take to open the work here, if it can be done at all. The elders will have to take their grips and start out afoot and go from house to house and talk with the people and labor with them at home until we can get an opening to preach in public houses. So as I am not of the sort that tries to excel in number of sermons, if there is such, I shall do the best I can and leave the result with the recording angel to place to my credit the number of times I try to talk to the people and cause them to investigate our work. I do not know whether I shall be able to stand the walking part of the work or not, but if God requires me to labor here and was the one who prompted the sending of me here, I have faith to believe I will be able to stand every hardship I may have to pass through. The strong lime water here has kept me sick ever since I came, but I keep able to go about with my work. I will stay here till over Sunday, as we have a call to preach in a private house in the west part of town. Next week Bro. Jacob Gross and I will start to travel together, if Bro. I. N. Roberts so arranges with the Bishop. Bro. Gross is a man who can do as much if not more good here than any man the church can send. He has been able to bring some nice people into the church here since he was ordained by Bro. T. C. Kelley, February 19, 1896. He seems to have partaken of some of T. C.'s wisdom.

A word as to Bro. J. M. Scott: I never saw a man I liked better for the short acquaintance I have had with him. He is an able defender of the truth. After looking over the prospects here he thought perhaps the mission would not suit him. The weather is very hot here and he thought he would not be able to stand the bad water and hot weather together with the amount of walking it would be necessary for him to do. Altogether, with his best judgment telling him this was not the field for him, after counseling with Bro. Gross and I as to what we thought about his remaining in this field under these circumstances, and after we were satisfied as to his integrity and willingness to labor wherever he could do the most good, we gave our consent for him to return to Indiana, and I asked Bro. Roberts to give him an honorable release, for I feel confident he is entitled to one, and I am sure he leaves the place with the good wishes of all the Saints who met him at South Pittsburg and Jasper. He started home July 1. When the time came for him to take the train I almost regretted that I gave up for him to go. The more I learned of him the better I loved the man. He would have been a great help to me this year. I learned some good lessons from him that will help me in the future. May the mercies of God ever attend him in all his mission of love, is my prayer.

SANDY, Utah, July 2.

Editors Herald: I left my home at Far West, Missouri, May 27, for my field in Utah. I stopped off at Delta, Colorado, with Bro. and Sr. Sam J. Howery for one week, and, thank the Lord, they are strong in the faith, and have a good home, and they always remember the missionary. They have a good president in that place, Bro. M. L. Schmid, a new church, and a good branch. May the good Lord bless them all. I shall always remember them and the prayer-meeting we had.

I arrived in Salt Lake City, June 7, with Brn. D. E. Powell and J. W. Roberts, and we soon found our good brother, T. Thorson, president of the branch, in Salt Lake City, and so I stopped with him, and the brethren, with Bro. C. W. Hedilius, and then we took in the city and preached the gospel, and we had a good time while the brethren stayed. I have labored in the city for about three weeks, and then out to Murray, and from there to Sandy, to Bro. James Wardle's, and I found a good many Swedish people in this place, and a few that belong to our church; but most of them are Brighamites; and so we have it up and down about Joseph Smith and Brigham Young.

Have been richly blessed of the Lord in my ministerial work, and feel hopeful and happy in view of the future of the church and its work. Strict compliance with the laws and order of the Lord as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants will bring success in all church work. Purity of life in acts, words, deeds, and thoughts, both in and out of the pulpit, must be constantly had by all the ministry in order to please God and build up the church solidly and in the righteousness of Christ.

If any of the Utah Saints desire me to come and preach where you live, you can address me at Salt Lake City, Utah, Box 168.

CHICAGO, Illinois, July 6.

Saints' Herald: I can not give grandeur enough to my words to express my love and desire for this great latter-day work. It is beyond words to express. I was at two picnics on the Fourth. One was a Saints' picnic and the other a harness-makers'; and what a contrast! One a united family in Christ where a brotherly love exists which only a true follower of Christ can feel; while the other, a united brotherhood of leather-workers, where liquors were sold and dancing going on. I am glad to state I did not stay long at the latter place, as I did not feel at home there, and I understood there was a fight after I left. A good lesson is to be had sometimes in a comparison of this kind, as it shows us the difference of associations.

I am glad to say the Saints are taking active hold of the work here in Chicago by way of street work. Bro. Clare Sherman gave an illustrated street talk Wednesday night and did quite well for his first effort. Bro. Clare is fine in this line and has donated quite a number of his paintings to the church work here, which the Saints appreciate. Bro. Bond is still away. It seems as though our elders in charge here are away too much. With nearly two million souls in Chicago it looks as though we ought to have two active ministers or elders whose whole time could be devoted to church work.

We do not forget Bro. Terry's efforts here, also Sr. Terry. May God abundantly bless them wherever they go. None can know them but to love and respect them.

Editors Herald: The firing that was returned on the mob at Davis Chapel was by outsiders and not by the Saints as has been reported through the newspapers. The grand jury found no bill against them, so I have heard.

W. R. SMITH.

July 8.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from Genoa, the place where Bro. Godbey and I were mobbed last winter. While there I baptized four precious souls, one a Widow Thompson, seventy-nine years old, a lifelong member of the Methodist Church, and mother of the H. B. Thompson who was with Bro. Godbey and I when attacked by the mob; also a young doctor and his wife and a lady by the name of Thompson who lives in Kenova, West Virginia, and was there on a visit to friends; all of them among the leading citizens of that place. The mob is still muttering threats, but all was peace while I remained. There are a number of others there who will obey in the near future, I think. This makes fourteen baptized at that place since last October. Bro. H. R. Harder and myself organized a branch there last fall, and a better, more devoted lot of Saints can be found nowhere. I start at once for Fayette, Summers, and other counties in my field.

ESMOND, North Dakota, July 4.

Herald Readers: In company with Bro. Perchie and old Grandpa Leitch, an old-time Scotchman born in 1816 and baptized at eighty years of age, we passed a quiet day at the home of Bro. Axel Nelson, reading and singing and listening to grandpa's rehearsal of how he overcame the tobacco habit at eighty-six years of age. What an example for many young men!

We are sorry we can not report everything all right in the Dakotas. We rather feel impressed to utter a word of warning and exhortation to the Saints. The spirit of speculation is rife throughout the whole country, and in many places the people are so taken up with business and amusements they have little time for the gospel.

By letter from Bro. Case we learn he is having fair interest in the South State, for which we are thankful. Bro. F. A. Smith writes us definitely that he will be with us from July 14 to 30. In order that as many as possible of the scattered ones may have opportunity to hear him, we make the following appointments: Clifford, July 14 to 20; Leeds, July 21 to 24; Dunseith, annual branch meeting, Saturday, July 26; Sunday morning, eleven o'clock, preaching; Bottineau, half-past seven in the evening. Monday evening, 28th, preaching at Bro. Gordon's, section 25, township 163, range 82. Tuesday afternoon, business meeting, organization of new branch and contemplated erection of church building.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us come together in prayer, devotion, and sacrifice, and erect this the first Latter Day Saint church in the Dakotas.

We wish to remind a few delinquent ones that the date of expiration of subscription to College Fund occurred July 1. Let us pay up the old, and give another strong, united pull throughout the whole church to clear the balance.

For fear of being dubbed an inveterate beggar, I will leave the subject of tithing for a future occasion.

In the warfare,

PLAINVIEW, Texas, July 3.

Editors Herald: I have located on the plains, Hale County, Texas, about one hundred seventy miles from Beaver, Wichita County, the nearest church. This is a fine country, fine lands, and about one hundred miles east of New Mexico line. Portalas would be our nearest railroad town, over on the Pecos Valley Railroad.

The settlers here in Texas, or Hale County, are seemingly well-disposed citizens; seem to be religious as a rule. I find openings here to preach to good, attentive congregations. Some seem to be investigating. I heard that one young man said the sermon I preached at the schoolhouse on last second Sunday was the best he had ever heard in that schoolhouse. The Baptists were preaching there, and he was a member of that church. If everything is favorable there may be much done in planting the seed of the kingdom. I am nearly alone; only a few members here. I am afflicted, started by a fall a few years ago. Pray for me that I may be restored to health and strength in my left leg and foot, that I may be active and strong in the strength of our heavenly Father to do my work here in my probation, and for the members here to be strong and valiant in the conflict.

Your brother,

E. BATES.

POND CREEK, Okla., June 30.

Editors Herald: I have been much impressed by the many excellent articles in HERALD and Ensign; especially the article by G. H. Hilliard, the Midnight Cry, and the letter from M. R. Scott, Sen., on the different dispensations. They both contain many beautiful thoughts.

I rejoice much when I read of the revelations of the Lord to his servants. Many times I am called upon to explain the restored gospel to my many friends and acquaintances here and to make an explanation of these parables. There should be no division in these matters. If the explanation is not given in the revelations to the church it should be sought. James says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

In the twentieth chapter of Matthew the parable of the kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man who is a householder who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. I saw and heard that beautifully explained by Bro. I. N. White with his chart, in his debate with Clark Braden at Alma, Illinois. I understand the five prominent dispensations have been Adam, Noah, Moses, Jesus, and Joseph. The application Bro. Scott makes of this parable is quite feasible and harmonizes with Bro. I. N. White's; viz., Adam in the morning, answering to six a. m., in the great day of salvation; Noah in the third hour, answering to nine a. m.; Moses in the sixth hour, answering to twelve, noon; Jesus and John in the ninth hour, answering to three p. m.; Joseph in the eleventh hour, answering to five p. m.

Matthew 20:8: "So when the even was come, the Lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, "Call the laborers, and give them their hire." It seems here the servants are rewarded at the end of the even or eleventh hour dispensation, which is one hour, from five till six, when the householder comes, verse 12, "Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day." The shortest dispensation.

It is a blessed privilege to live in these the latter days. It seems reasonable from the parable that the eleventh hour dispensation would finish God's preparatory work, including the restoration of the gospel, the downfall of Babylon, with the coming of Christ and the reward of his saints, with the consummation of the following: "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."—Rev. 19:7. "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

Now take the parable of the ten virgins, the midnight cry, Matthew 25:6: "At midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The gospel was restored in the eleventh hour dispensation by the Prophet Joseph, and they wrought but one hour. Notice, this is the shortest dispensation, from five p. m. till six p. m., one hour. The Lord is to make a short work upon the earth; he will finish his work and cut it short in righteousness, in this the dispensation of the fullness of times. Acts 3:19-21: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

Dear Saints, let us be faithful servants that we may receive a good reward when the Lord of the vineyard comes.

I often have people say to me, "The parable of the vineyard proves a person can be saved on his death-bed, as the thief on the cross, when the Savior said to him, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." I ask them where paradise is. They say, "Heaven." I ask them to turn to Ephesians 4:9, 10: "(Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things,)" etc. 1 Peter 3:18-20: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight souls were saved by water," etc.

Also 1 Peter 4: 6: "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit." At one time the people said, "Master, we would see a sign of thee." He said to them, "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." And he said to Mary after he had risen, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father." It seems to me the Scripture is very plain on that. I heard one preacher say in trying to account for the answer to the thief on the cross, that Jerusalem was the heart of the earth, and the places of burial were beautifully kept, and were called paradise; that the Savior meant they would be in the tomb in paradise together. The argument seems so weak to one who understands the restored gospel.

I met a man a few days ago who said he belonged to the Church of God. Their church paper is the Gospel Trumpet, published at Moundsville, West Virginia, the same people who had a tent here last summer. They preach something like the Saints; claim to have gifts (at least of healing). He said they took no medicine and drank nothing but water. He said the millennium came when Christ came. Every man was resurrected when he was converted; born again, sanctified. I told him the Scriptures taught that Satan would be bound throughout the thousand years reign, or millennium, that he should not deceive the nations, but I thought he was abroad deceiving the nations in great wrath, for he knows he has but a short time. He said Satan was bound when Jesus came. I told him I belonged to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He laughed at the idea of the church being reorganized when Christ said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." I told him I understood that passage of Scripture differently to what he did; that when Jesus rose from the dead he made that possible; that he died for all mankind to be justified in due time, but every man in his own order; that when the last of the dead were raised, then would be brought to pass the saying, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" 1 Corinthians 15: 22-26: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

These thoughts came to me, but I would like more light. Jesus will perfect the kingdom and turn it back to the Father that he may be all in all. Then will his prayer be answered, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Then will be the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Christ built his church upon the gospel; the law of the Lord, which is perfect, converting the soul; the perfect law of liberty spoken of by James, which if a man continued therein he shall be blessed in his deeds. Then will the promise be verified: "My doctrine is not mine, but his [the Father's] that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." The Holy Spirit would reveal it, not flesh and blood. I told this man the Scriptures foretold an apostasy and restoration (Dan. 7: 21, 22; Rev. 13: 7, 8; Dan. 2: 44; Rev. 14: 6, 7, and many other places), and that the church was in the wilderness twelve hundred sixty years, but he suddenly became in very much of a hurry to go. Said he had heard our people preach.

It seems the enlightenment of the age is leading many of those most learned in the wisdom of man or the things of this world away from God, Christ, and the Scriptures; not only men of science turning away from God, but many others, even professed Christians. Is there not great need of divine guidance at the present time when there are so many different churches, so many deceiving powers? Is there not great need of another revelation from God to guide man? The world says, "No; the Bible is sufficient;" but they are departing from God and deny the divinity of Christ and his doctrine, immortality, the gospel. Out of the mouth of two or three witnesses is every word established. We have the three witnesses in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, the latter-day revelations to the church. I have perfect confidence in them, for I followed the instructions of James, "If any of you lack wisdom," etc. I asked for wisdom; asked to know if Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and the latter-day revelations true. In a vision I saw Joseph Smith, and had the assurance that the books are true.

Dear Saints, the Scripture is being rapidly fulfilled. The time draws near when the bridegroom will come. O that we may all be ready! A few mornings after I was baptized the Lord verified his promise to me in a vision. I saw him coming in the clouds, and others were with him. I was on my knees with arms extended and praying that I might be accounted worthy to ascend. I felt my unworthiness. After a while I started to ascend, and some one ran along and tried to hold me back. I started up, and awoke repeating the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. The thought I got from it was, that some would try to hold me back, but I must have charity for them. I thanked the Lord he had shown me this and that I might be permitted to better prepare myself for that great day, his glorious appearing. I read a beautiful sermon by President Joseph Smith on charity. It was just what I had been praying for. Dear Saints, we must all come up higher, live more consecrated lives, obey the commandments of the Lord as given by his mouthpiece, the prophets, or we can not abide his glory. We will have to be more like Enoch and his city, who walked and talked with God, or his glory will consume us when he comes with all his holy angels. Zion must be redeemed, and it can not be but by the celestial law. Those who do not have faith to pay their tithes and gather to Zion and keep the celestial law will be left out when the arm of the Lord shall fall upon Babylon. How I long to go to Zion and live among the people of God, where we can have church privileges and my children be taught the ways of righteousness. I realize we are influenced by our surroundings, especially the young. Pray for us that we may be given wisdom in all our efforts to advance the cause of Christ and that we may be instrumental in saving many. Pray that I may have more faith, and that I may be restored to health and live to see my children all obey the gospel.

I have a great deal of literature loaned out. The Christian preacher is reading the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and a great many other books and papers. I have had several nice talks with him and his wife. They are nice young people. Pray that they may see the truth and obey it, and all the others to whom I have an opportunity to explain the gospel.

The Christian preacher said he would like to hear a debate. I told him I would like for him to hear our elders preach. He said yes, he would like to hear them; he liked to investigate everything. I do wish the tent could be brought here this summer or fall. I believe we could get a good audience, as a number have said they would like to hear our elders preach. I could use much literature if I had it. I thank the dear Saints for the literature they sent me some time ago. I sew them in books where they are continued; loan them time and again.

Will some of the dear sisters call on my sister, Mrs. Ida Gillham, No. 1038 Porter Avenue, East St. Louis, Illinois. I explained the gospel to her, but she was sick when she last wrote, and I have not heard from her for some time. Fear she is sick.

With prayers for the upbuilding of Zion, and all God's people,
I am, Your sister, MRS. EFFIE J. MCCULLOUGH.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Lamoni Stake, Greeting; Dear Brethren and Sisters: Having been appointed to labor in this field as an evangelical minister, I shall be pleased to receive the hearty support and coöperation of the Saints and friends, while I attempt to perform the duties which belong to my new office and calling. These duties you will find quite comprehensively defined in the communication received by President Joseph Smith and indorsed by the church in April, 1901. Of course I can only perform duty as my ability, physical and otherwise, will permit.

While I feel keenly the weight of new and important responsibilities, I am pleased to say to you that I am well satisfied with my new calling. The way of duty becomes more and more clear. There is, indeed, a distinct and important work to be done in this office and calling to the glory of God and the salvation of modern Israel. So far as I have gone in the discharge of duty, the same confirming and enlightening influences of the divine Spirit which attended me when acting in other offices and callings has been with me, leaving in my mind no room for doubt. Nevertheless, I am not yet ready to give blessings as provided for in the word, though I hope to be ere long. I am not doubting, but must move as I receive light and become prepared. When ready to perform this duty the Saints will be duly notified.

While I accept the definitions of duty as given in April, 1901, I do not believe that God has any ministerial position in this church where it is not the privilege of those occupying therein (and sometimes their duty) to speak and act for the right as they see it. You will, I trust, agree with me when I say that it is the highest duty of man to seek to be right, honestly and earnestly, and then act upon his convictions. For me, I can see no other course, no matter in what office I am called to act.

There seems to be a kind of traditionary belief that the giving of blessings by the laying on of hands is the most important duty of an evangelical minister, or patriarch. I do not agree with such belief; for, important as the giving of such blessings may be, and doubtless is, it does not equal the duties of preaching the gospel to the Saints in such a manner as to confirm them in the true faith, correct their wrongs, and revive their interest and efforts in all gospel work and duty; and the giving of counsel (when sought) on important matters, and under embarrassing conditions.

Many has expressed their opinion concerning the late General Conference. To me, in some respects, it was extraordinary and peculiar. If right, it will stand; if wrong, it will come to naught, sooner or later, and we will suffer loss. We respect and honor a majority vote, but can only concede it to be right when it is found to be in harmony with truth and demonstrated fact. "But you may be wrong." True, and as soon as I can find out that I am wrong, with God's help, I will confess and forsake it. But it does not necessarily follow that a person is wrong because he may be wrong. There have been times when, as a result of reviewing the past as carefully and critically as I knew how, I have felt peace and gratitude that my name stood with the minority. One thing is certain, I think. If the war is over; if the decisive battle has been fought and won, it is unnecessary, unbecoming, unsaintlike, unbrotherly, undignified, and unmanly for the victors to continue to make strong and reflective statements against their opponents. But if made, the HERALD is under no obligations to publish them; for if it can refuse the publication of any matter intended for its pages and properly defend its position, then it could and should, as we see it, refuse to publish such matter as is herein referred to, under the circumstances herein described. At the end of a prolonged and unpleasant conflict, when the victors have gained all that they contended for, and the matter is declared by themselves to be permanently settled, it is commendable, Christianlike, dignified, manly, to remain quiet and enjoy the fruits of our victory. Moreover, this gives proper evidence to every thoughtful person that we are, of a truth, in favor of unity and peace, and that we do at least possess the merit of having an intelligent and abiding confidence in that for which we have been contending.

It must be, and is, very consoling, in the midst of the conflict, when confronted with strong opposition and wrong, to know that the great work set forth in the standard works of the church is divine, and therefore true; or true, and therefore divine. This knowledge, dear Saints, in the sense of giving intelligent satisfaction to every soul, is within the reach of all Saints. But in order to secure it and retain it as an abiding and ever increasing blessing we must be very faithful, humble, and true. Pay no attention to the pride, follies, and sins of the world, except to avoid them. In this sense we must be a peculiar and separate people. It is our privilege to live so as to enjoy the blessings of this "glorious gospel," see and enjoy the good and merit which are found, more or less, with the members and ministers of the church, also avoid being deceived by men, false influences, or devils. "Wherefore, let every man beware lest he do that which is not in truth and righteousness before me."—D. C. 50: 3.

So far as I may be able to encourage and help the Saints in their warfare (which is not ignoble, but glorious), I will cheerfully and gladly do so. And in closing, I commend to your careful and prayerful consideration the statement and promise of the following text; and may the good Spirit influence your minds while you read and think thereon:

"But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."—Matt. 24: 13. Also D. C. 45: 10: "And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver."

Your brother and coworker in the cause of our Redeemer,

J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 9, 1902.

To the Saints in Canada, Greeting: In order that systematic and energetic labor may continue to be performed, it has been considered advisable to apportion the following territories to the brethren herein mentioned. Counties of Bruce, Grey, Simcoe, and Dufferin as far south as Riverview to John Shields, James L. Mortimer, and R. C. Russell. Manitoulin Island and north shore of Lake Superior to George C. Tomlinson and Benjamin St. John. Counties of Victoria and Haliburton to T. A. Phillips and S. W. Tomlinson. The Niagara peninsula as far west as Hamilton and Selkirk to Frederick Gregory, Alexander McMullen, and Walter Bennett. Counties of Norfolk, Brant, Southern Oxford and Eastern Elgin to R. C. Longhurst, J. A. Blackmore, and E. A. Goodwin. Counties of Huron and Perth as far south as Rostock and Mitchell to A. E. Mortimer. Chatham District to D. MacGregor, George Green, Alvin Knisley, and J. M. Baggerly. County of Wellington to R. B. Howlett. Manitoba and the west will be provided for in the fall. The first named in each case is appointed sub-missionary in charge, who will receive the quarterly reports of his collaborators and in turn report to the missionary in charge. The Saints and friends living in above-named fields will make known to their respective sub-missionaries in charge the opportunities for labor as may be manifest in the regions round about. Scattered Saints residing in other localities will report similarly but to the missionary in charge, and we shall do our utmost to meet all demands. Having a large and fairly efficient local force throughout the mission, the Saints are particularly exhorted to sustain them by their faith and prayers, suffering them to deal with the incidental difficulties rather than call for those who may be higher in authority. By so doing the missionary will be permitted to utilize his whole time and talent in the God-intended work of opening up new fields. In conclusion let me say that it shall be my avowed policy to meet every issue with an administration of the law of the Spirit, seasoned with sympathy for the sinner and encouragement for the weak, while from the strong I shall hope to gather strength and support. With confidence in my coworkers and interest in the mission, I remain, your brother, Daniel MacGregor. Box 648, Stratford, Ontario.

USE OF TOBACCO AND THE SACRAMENT.

We know of no specific declaration in the word which states that an officer who uses tobacco shall not administer the sacrament, i. e., ask a blessing on the elements of bread and wine, or pass the same to the members in sacrament meeting. Nor do we know of any rule which forbids that one so using tobacco to partake of the emblems when passed.

The nearest to such command or rule is found in the expressions, "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord."—Isaiah 52: 11. "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully."—Psalms 24: 3, 4.

These statements are renewed in different forms in the revelations to the church; but none of them that we are aware of are prohibitive.

The Word of Wisdom, as we have hitherto written, is "not by commandment, nor by constraint." Hence no restriction is made requiring an officer to refrain from administering the sacrament who may use tobacco.

It is an unclean habit, beyond question, but it is not wise to go beyond what is written. Propriety would dictate that any officer who expects to officiate in the ordinance of administering the sacrament should wash himself clean and see that his clothing is clean when he engages in the service.

The church at one time tried to make abstaining from the use of tobacco a test of fellowship. By an action of the High Council, Kirtland, Ohio, February 20, 1834, it was declared that no official member in the church was worthy to hold an office, "after having the Word of Wisdom properly taught to him," if he neglected to comply with its requirements. This action of the council has not been reaffirmed by the Reorganized Church; nor was it after the church was driven from Missouri, that we are aware of. However, at a meeting held about May 28, 1837, at Far West, Missouri the following obtained: "Resolved that we will not fellowship any ordained member who will not, or does not, observe the Word of Wisdom according to its literal reading."

This is found in the Millennial Star, No. 1, vol. 16, published at Liverpool, England, January 7, 1854.

This has never been reaffirmed by the Reorganized

Church, except in regard to the general field, the Twelve some years since deciding that they would not appoint, nor sustain any one who was addicted to the use of tobacco or intoxicating drink. Some branches have adopted as a rule that they will not choose to act as officers of the branch men who use either tobacco, or liquors as a beverage.

There is no other specific rule on the subject that we are aware of.

While we admit the right of the church to make such rules governing general conduct as may be deemed needful for the well-being and security of the body, we doubt the propriety of establishing a prohibitive constraint where the Lord makes none, as we believe is the case in the Word of Wisdom as it stands in our standard book the Doctrine and Covenants.

"Wisdom is justified by her children." Until the church shall reaffirm or readopt the action of the council of 1834 at Kirtland, and the action of the meeting at Far West, in 1837, it is not considered that these are binding as rules for the church.

DEDICATION AT SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.

This is a hopeful and an inspiring token of spiritual progress that in the locality of Wilson's Creek and Fort Wilson, where one of the fiercest and bloodiest battles of the "Civil War" (civil war, indeed!) was fought and General Lyons was killed and Sigel made a hero, in a region over which war's dread alarms and its devastating forces ravaged as contending armies surged to and fro, so few years ago, there should now be an army division of an entirely different host contending earnestly "for the faith once delivered to the saints." And as a result of a steady and persistent invasion, a spiritual tabernacle, a religious resting-place, a chapel should be built and consecrated to the benefit of man and the service of God.

Such is the spectacle presented in the caption of this writing.

Sometime last year, 1901, an effort was put forth and was successful in erecting a building to be occupied by the branch at Springfield as a worshiping place, on a site located on the north side of the railway and the city, only a little way east on the same street from the little old store building in which a few years since the branch was organized. It is fairly central so far as the Saints are concerned, and is in a neighborhood where a congregation is quite easily secured, so far as the few out of the many in a city of thirty-five or forty thousand people care to make inquiry after the ways of life.

Brn. Sparling, A. M. Baker, I. N. White, O. B. Thomas, J. C. Chrestensen and others have battled over the length and breath of the district, having had strong support from Brn. Wm. R. Pickering, Middleton, and others, who gave the work moral tone and prestige among them of the outer world.

Arrangements had been made, bills paid up, house painted and garnished, dignitaries invited, notice sent out, and the date of district conference meeting chosen as the time for dedicating the building.

By invitation Bishop E. L. Kelley and the Editor left Lamoni July 11 and reached Springfield in time for the opening service of conference, Saturday the 12th. The hours of the day were occupied with the general business of the district and an interesting family talk in the afternoon by Bro. I. N. White, missionary in charge, who was in attendance and in charge in pursuance of duty and the voice of the Saints.

In the evening at eight o'clock Bishop Kelley preached an excellent and inspiring discourse illustrative of the beauty and necessity of a fulfilling of all the law. This closed the first day of the session.

The services for dedication were announced for eleven o'clock, Sunday, July 13, and at this hour the house was comfortably filled. Bro. I. N. White was in charge of the services. Bro. Henry Sparling had the song service in hand, with Sr. Hughes at the organ. The sermon was by the Editor, the dedicatory prayer by Bro. Kelley.

All passed off pleasantly. The day was fine, warm but not excessively so. The house was filled but not crowded. A spiritual blessing of peace and contentment and a degree of exaltation made the hour a momentous one for the branch and the district.

Bro. James C. Chrestensen was the president of the district, but at the conference Bro. A. M. Baker was chosen to succeed him, and Bro. Chrestensen was selected as secretary.

At this meeting we were privileged to meet Brn. E. L. Kelley, I. N. White, Henry Sparling, A. M. Baker, J. T. Davis, and William Roach, of the missionary force, with Brn. Merritt, Rhodes, Gray, Anderson, Taylor, Quincy, Duemler, Hughes, Omans, Chrestensen, Waterman, D. W. Thomas, Middleton, and W. R. Pickering of the local brethren, albeit Bro. Pickering was but a sojourner for the time, though he had been a citizen of Springfield and a charter member of the branch at its organization.

Some five hundred members of the church comprising the district were represented at the conference; a remarkably good representation for so short a time as it appears the Saints have been occupying. It has not been many years since there was not a member in the region known to the church; but now, a band of earnest men and women are at work endeavoring to exemplify before the world and each other that they love the Lord and their fellow men in Christian endeavor to preach the gospel by precept and example.

Three gave themselves to the Lord's work in baptism, administered by Bro. Sparling, under the charge of Bro. White, in the waters of Doling Park, the local pleasure resort of the place; a spot where from a cave in the rocky hill a spring of excellent water pours out into a lake in beautiful and rugged surroundings, and to which Bro. Sparling has been permitted the privilege of entry, with others as we presume for such baptismal purposes.

What of the labors of love which have made it possible for Saints to gather "into the regions round about" (two hundred two miles southeast of Kansas City and Independence, Missouri), to teach, expound, exhort, and invite all to come to Christ, and to assemble unafraid and unmolested in a city of thirty-five thousand people in the prosecution of their work to dedicate to the worship of God and the service of their fellow men, and locate a landmark of so striking significance as the little chapel must prove to be.

The afternoon of Sunday was devoted to a sacramental service in which the branch offered the bread and wine to their visiting brethren in meekness and love. At the close of the services a little lad, Franklin by name, was blessed, and Brn. Taylor, Andersen, and Davis were ordained to the office of elders by recommend from their respective branches and the order of conference; it was a pleasant and an impressive close of a "good meeting."

In the evening of Sunday the Editor occupied with good liberty, the house full to its capacity, and numbers on the outside, the weather being fine though warm.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

"For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again."—Jesus. (Luke 6: 38.)

"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you."—Jesus. (Mark 4: 24.)

"For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—Jesus. (Matthew 12: 37.)

I desire to say a thing that may startle some of you; but it must be said, for the time has come to speak, and gradually and as rapidly as possible to unfold the whole counsel of God.

I stand here to-day as a Prophet and as a Priest and as a Ruler.

I stand here to-day as Elijah the Restorer, and say that Christ is our High Priest, and in the Christian church there must be a priesthood.

On the same page right-hand column, will be found this:

A prophet, however, who rises up and tells you that he is a prophet, is a prophet of the gutter, like that wretched Priddle, who throws all around this place his wretched little lies. He is a prophet of the slums, a prophet of the brothel, a prophet of adultery, a prophet of damnation.

On page 370, same issue, Mr. Dowie is called by his own authority "Elijah the Restorer of all things," and "that Prophet of whom Moses spoke."

NO EFFORT, NO SUCCESS.

In our religious life, or more properly speaking our spiritual endeavor, it would be well for us to be thoroughly impressed with the correctness of the above statement, No effort, no success.

The apostle was of the opinion that the things which are not seen are understood by the things which do appear; that is, that by a sort of parallelism, or comparison those things stated as appertaining to the invisible (to the physical vision) may be partially comprehended, or wholly understood, things seen affording a basis of reasoning upon which understanding or knowledge may be established.

Paul writing to the Philippines gave them this counsel: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippines 4: 8.

The latitude here given is quite a wide one, and affords ample scope for the exercise of the best talent in thought at our disposal.

But thought means effort, for there is a discrimination to be made as to the things coming into observation and demanding thought, as to whether they are proper, profitable, or worthy subjects to occupy our time and attention.

Painstaking labor in all manual pursuits is the only way to perfection of performance. There is no employment which is honorable and remunerative, in which it is not essential that the brain shall conceive the right way of doing the work required, and the hands, feet, and bodily powers shall each and all, severally and collectively, be educated by careful training and use to perform each task required to reach the best, the truest, the completest result, the finished product.

The finished product of the gospel, and the Holy Spirit as a teacher, is a Christian, a true follower of Christ, of excellent character at home, and excellent reputation abroad.

It is not hard to see, then, that unceasing effort is needful to success in achieving, what each must earnestly desire, a perfected character in Christ Jesus.

We do not echo the sentiment of the couplet,

"Still to go on and know the Lord,
And practice what we know,"

for the reason that this asks us to practice an individuality; but, taking what may be the hidden and spiritual meaning of the verse, still going on to know the things of the Lord taught in the word and by the Spirit, concerning our life and conduct in temporal and in spiritual affairs and pursuits, practice what these enjoin, thus being perfected by the word and the Spirit into a perfect man in Christ Jesus.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Mrs. E. W. Orr writes from Clay Center, Nebraska, under date of July 9: "We have no branch here but are trying to do missionary work with tracts, papers, and books, and by never failing to give a reason for the hope that is within us whenever opportunity occurs. We will give freely and care for while here a missionary to come and preach for us. So many here have never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon, but have read "Doctrines and Dogmas." D. H. Bays has been within about fifteen miles of us, as pastor of the Christian Church there, and has held some of his lectures in about nine miles of us. He is gone now, but I would like so much to have the people hear the truth."

J. H. Tyrrell wrote on July 14 from Chatham, Ontario: "R. C. Evans is here; has succeeded in stirring up quite an interest. He has baptized four, and more are to follow. He hits hard at Babylon's idols. Some get mad, some glad. Yet they give him the credit of being a clever preacher. It looks like the work is going to move onward in Chatham City."

Noah N. Cooke on July 13 wrote from St. Louis, Missouri: "The work of the Lord moves on very well in this part of his vineyard. Good spiritual meetings."

Under date of July 15, T. W. Chatburn wrote from Twin Lakes, Wisconsin: "We are doing fairly well. Fine crowds and considerable interest. Have a dozen calls or more for preaching. The citizens of Elmwood have planned a grove-meeting for me, and are waiting for me to set a date. Not a Saint there. Since I was there last winter other preachers have been there, and of course the "Mormons" caught it. Messrs. Groot and Kelley, the store men, tried to have Mr. Wolf, the Methodist divine, formulate his objections and they would send them to me, but he did not seem to believe in discussion, etc. So the men mentioned have planned that I shall answer in grove-meeting. So it goes. Have letters from Ono, Madison, Tomahawk, and Porcupine, asking, "When can you come?"

Bro. I. N. Roberts reports work of thirteen men in his mission. They preached three hundred nine sermons, an average of nearly twenty-four. Thirty baptisms, four new openings. Two men failed to report. Highest number of sermons reported fifty-five, lowest none. "I am busy," writes Bro. Roberts, "as I can be, and the heat is awful to bear, but my health is good. The work is spreading out so there is no need of our men saying they can not find places to preach."

M. H. Bond writes us from 804 West Adams Street, Chicago, Illinois, July 18: "We have just secured rooms at this address, but can hear nothing of household goods. The strike may hurt us seriously in this regard. Things moving fairly well here, so far as we have had opportunity to become acquainted."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Chicago Record-Herald of July 7 states that the total drink bill of the United States last year, including all wines, beers, liquors, and beverages of every description, "soft" as well as "hard" drinks and mineral waters, amounted to $425,504,167.

A new paper devoted to Latter Day Saint interests has made its appearance. It is the Gospel Echo, published at Denver, Colorado. It is a little four-page paper, "delivered at the chapel, Twenty-second and Arapahoe Streets." Its announcement is signed by "K. S."

A historic tower in Venice has collapsed. The campanile of St. Marks Cathedral fell on July 14, after standing one thousand years. It was three hundred twenty feet high, and was long noted as one of the architectural treasures of the Old World. In the morning a fall of stones within the tower gave warning of the impending disaster. The day previous a longitudinal crack appeared, and measures were then taken to keep the immediate vicinity of the tower comparatively free from persons, thus avoiding probable great loss of life. Venice keenly feels the loss of its historic relic, and efforts are being made to raise funds to rebuild it.

In our letter column this week will be found a very interesting letter from Sr. Mamie Suttles, written from Dublin Gulch, Alaska. It simply yet interestingly portrays the experiences of a band of Saints in the far-away north. Sr. Suttles' letter will be especially welcome to the Omaha Saints.

Bro. Burton has sent us from the Society Islands a copy of a new publication he has published there. On the title-page there appears the following: "TE PARAU TUATAPAPA O TE TERE RAA O ARITANA H. TEMITA I TEIE PAEAU O TE AO NEL. NA TEKAKAHU." If any of our readers know what it is or means they know more than we do. However, we place it in the library and extend to Bro. Burton our thanks.

Bro. H. O. Smith in his quarterly mission report states that in the quarter forty-seven have been baptized and five Sunday-schools have been organized. Thirty-two men report one thousand ten sermons, an average of nearly thirty-two each. Two failed to report. The highest preached by one man was eighty-five, the lowest seven. Bro. Smith says the men have done the best this quarter since he took charge of that mission. "Altogether," he writes, "their work is commendable. I can see much improvement all along the line, and the Saints are doing better."

Original Articles.

A REJOINDER.

The undersigned was favored with a copy of the Evening and Morning Star, a monthly religious paper published at Independence, Missouri, by the brethren of the Church of Christ. Said paper contains an article entitled, "The Book of Abraham," which article gives occasion to this reply, for several reasons. First. The author of the article makes incorrect charges against Elder Heman C. Smith. Second. He or she also makes incorrect charges against Joseph Smith, the Seer, as to his connection with the Book of Abraham. Third. He or she makes incorrect charges against the teachings of that book.

These are some of my reasons for taking up my pen in defense of what I believe to be right and to the exposure of what I believe is wrong and erroneous.

The writer of said article starts out by referring to Elder Smith's reply to Elder Haldeman and quotes the following statement of Elder Smith: "What if Joseph Smith did translate the Book of Abraham? There was nothing wrong in translating the book." And then says: "He laid stress upon the word translating, leaving the audience to infer that Joseph Smith's connection with the Book of Abraham did not go beyond a mere translation of it. Elder Smith allowing his hearers to infer a thing which he knows, or at least ought to know is not susceptible of proof."

The above strikes the casual reader to be rather inconsistent, because, if it can not be proven from the history before us that Joseph Smith's connection with that book was not more than that of a translator, how then can it be proven that his connection was more than that of a translator, when history does not so inform us? The writer was present and heard Elder Smith, and he failed to notice wherein the audience was left to infer. Elder Smith asked a simple, straightforward question, "What if Joseph Smith did translate the Book of Abraham? Was there anything wrong about that?" What say ye? Is there anything wrong about translating? Is it not possible for a man to translate without giving sanction or indorsement to that which he translates? Whether Joseph Smith believed in the contents of this translation or not we are not informed; whether he ever presented it to the church for its sanction or not, we are not informed. What is there, then, in Elder Smith's question that gives any ground for inferences more than we have now without the question? Where no positive proofs exist it would have been folly for Elder Smith or any one else to take a position either for or against something not susceptible of proof, which is already admitted by the author of that article concerning this question.

The writer quotes from Millennial Star, volume 15, which we shall not repeat in full here, but only refer to that portion specially emphasized. Joseph is here made to say in reference to this Book of Abraham: "Truly can we say, the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth." Great stress is laid upon this, by putting it in capital letters. But before I proceed, I wish to call attention to the fact that this volume of the Star is a Utah church publication, from which this extract is taken, published in 1853, the year after this wonderful so-called revelation on polygamy was first made known to the church, and which is published in No. 1 of this same volume, and is entitled, "Revelation given to Joseph Smith, Nauvoo, July 12, 1843." My dear reader, do you believe this to be true? Do you really believe that Joseph Smith ever gave that revelation? Yet it is here in this volume 15, No. 1, that you, my friend, have used in quoting from. We have heard of putting words into somebody's else mouth. We might truly say that that has been done in this instance, but have never heard that it could be done after their death, let alone eight years after death. But if such a thing is possible, would it not be equally easy for the same parties to interpolate so as to cause a man to say more than he really did say? While the quotation may be true, yet I am extremely suspicious when anything is brought before me for examination through such a source as that.

But if true, it is perhaps not more than lots of others would have said. Ever since I can remember, scientists and others have been searching for lost manuscripts, which the apostles and others of the early Christians have written. Some have been found and are believed to be authentic, hence a new revelation of God's will to men. Will such discoveries not have reason to say, "Truly can we say the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth"? Why find fault with Joseph Smith for saying that which others under like circumstances might have said? He did not claim to have discovered them. We are told in volume 3, page 774 of Times and Seasons, that they came from Egypt, and were discovered by a Frenchman, Antonio Lebolo by name; and in the Messenger and Advocate, volume 2, page 234, we are told the same thing by the same parties with this addition, that before Mr. Lebolo's death he willed to a nephew in Philadelphia, a Mr. Chandler, the mummies and papyrus which he had found in Egypt. They were accordingly sent to New York where Mr. Chandler took possession, and was there referred to Joseph Smith by a stranger, who told him that Joseph possessed some kind of power or gift by which he had previously translated similar characters.

In time to come Mr. Chandler became acquainted with Joseph Smith, and he writes this certificate, found on page 235 of the Messenger and Advocate.

KIRTLAND, July 6, 1835.

"This is to make known to all who may be desirous, concerning the knowledge of Mr. Joseph Smith, Jr., in deciphering the ancient Egyptian hieroglyphic characters in my possession, which I have in many eminent cities shown to the most learned; and, from the information I could even learn, or meet with, I find that of Mr. Joseph Smith, Jr., to correspond in the most minute matters."

(Signed) "MICHAEL H. CHANDLER."

"Traveling with, and proprietor of, Egyptian Mummies."

Here we have the testimony of one not connected with the church, that Joseph, though not learned according to the wisdom of the world, possessed the knowledge and power by which he could decipher ancient writing, even in the most minute matters, equal with the most learned, and yet somebody down this side of seventy years from thence finds fault with him because he exercised that gift.

Well, but, says my friend, "It is a heathenish production," and, "by his act became in a great degree its sponsor, and as such should be held responsible for any ill effect the church may have suffered through its introduction."

What wonderful logic this is! Webster says a sponsor is "a surety; one who binds himself to answer for another, and is responsible for his default."

We have shown the origin of this book, that it came from Egypt and is alleged to have been written by Abraham, possibly others. Now because Joseph Smith translates it, and is alleged to have hoped for additional information of past ages, like others would have done, therefore he becomes responsible for its defaults, if such there are. Apply the same logic to others, and where does it land us?

Let me call your attention to another Book of Abraham. The item is taken from the Chicago Tribune and will be found in the SAINTS' HERALD for 1899, page 18. The first paragraph is as follows: "Professor G. Nathaniel Bonwetsch, of the University of Göttingen, has just translated into German a remarkable work, 'Apocalypse of Abraham,' an English version of which is made public here for the first time. He found it in a roll of parchment in the library at Moscow, Russia, written in old Slavic, the language from which the Russian is derived. He traced the story back to a manuscript of the fifth century, also in the Moscow library (No. 172)."

Then follows a portion of the translation of the manuscript, which shows the idolatrous condition and surroundings of Abraham while in his father's house.

Now because this manuscript contains heathenish doctrine, or rather is a history of heathenish doings, is it fair to accuse Professor Bonwetsch of being the sponsor of this relic because he translated it and possibly gave some credence to its contents? If not, is it fair and right to accuse Joseph Smith of being the sponsor of this document because he might have given some credence to its contents?

The argument made that because Joseph Smith translated it, and it rested under his encomium (praise. Where and in what manner did he praise it?), therefore it should receive deep consideration of his followers, is a very poor one, and a direct insult to his followers. No man is warranted in following any man or set of men in theory or in practice unless that theory or practice is in harmony with true principles and appeals to good common sense.

The charge is made that the Book of Abraham is a "heathenish production." I suppose the reason is, because it teaches a plurality of gods. So far as the acceptance or rejection of this book is concerned, I remain neutral; but to me it seems that such a charge is uncalled for, unless the writer wishes to make a wholesale charge against all the standard books of the church because they also teach a plurality of gods, especially the Bible.

But perhaps the writer would not have made the charge if he or she had read the book and understood what was read. Therefore let me call your attention to a portion thereof as found on page 720, volume 3, of Times and Seasons. It appears from paragraph 22 that a council was had in heaven between somebody, and it was there decided to create an earth, and thereupon place those intelligencies that existed with God before the world was, but in case that they did not keep their second estate, it was necessary for some one to redeem them, hence we find this language in the 23d paragraph: "And the Lord said, who shall I send? And one answered like unto the Son of Man, here am I, send me. And another answered and said, here am I, send me. And the Lord said, I will send the first. And the second was angry, and kept not his first estate, and, at that day, many followed after him. And then the Lord said, let us go down [who went down? The Lord and the one which he had chosen.—S. K. S.]; and they went down at the beginning, and they organized and formed, (that is, the Gods,) the heavens and the earth. [What Gods? The Lord and the one he had chosen.—S. K. S.] And the earth, after it was formed, was empty and desolate; because they had not formed anything but the earth: and darkness reigned upon the face of the deep, and the spirit of the Gods [the Lord and his anointed.—S. K. S.] was brooding upon the faces of the water."

The following paragraphs tell us what these gods did, but they are the only gods spoken of in the Book of Abraham, and if that is heathenish doctrine, then the Bible is heathenish, because it tells us the very same thing. In Genesis we are informed that the Lord said, "Let us [to whom is he speaking? To his anointed, the One whom he had chosen from before the foundation of the world] make man in our image, after our likeness," etc. But you may say that it was only man that Christ assisted in creating, hence in answer I refer you to John 1:3: "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." And again, Colossians 1:16: "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in the earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."

In the Book of Mormon, on page 97, small edition, we have the following: "And as I spake concerning the convincing of the Jews that Jesus is the very Christ it must needs be that the Gentiles be convinced also that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God."

"Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that are in them."—B. of M., p. 440.

"Now Zeezrom saith again unto him, Is the Son of God the very eternal Father? And Amulek said unto him, Yea, he is the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth, and all things which in them is."—B. of M., p. 235.

"And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things, from the beginning."—B. of M., p. 147.

While a great many like passages can be adduced of a similar character, these ought to suffice to show that Christ is co-equal with the Father and is called God and is God, hence we may rightly apply the term Gods, because where more than one exists the term becomes plural, yet nothing in the term "gods" would necessarily imply more than two. Hence the charge of "heathenish" falls to the ground so far as that point is concerned, because if we accept the testimony of the Bible and Book of Mormon writers in reference to Christ, we must accept him as God. Why not criticise the Bible on the plurality of gods, as there is more there to prove this point than in the Book of Abraham? I shall present a few and leave it for my friend to deal with. "God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods." "I have said, ye are gods; and all of you are children of the Most High." Ps. 82:1, 6; see John 10:35. "Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people."—Ex. 22:28.

"And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can show it before the king, except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.—"Dan. 2:11.

At the close of the article the writer of the aforementioned article says: "For it is quite certain that the plurality of gods doctrine could not have existed in the church, had not Joseph Smith translated and introduced the Book of Abraham to the notice of the church."

The writer does not state whether this belief in the "plurality of gods doctrine" is confined to a belief in God the Father and God the Son. If more than that, your correspondent is not aware that such a doctrine was ever a part of the teachings or beliefs of the church. What the followers of Brigham Young may have taught and teach since the death of the Seer no one ought to hold the Reorganization responsible for, neither will we attempt to defend their dogmas and practices. In closing the writer refers to the SAINTS' HERALD, volume 3, number 1, as containing a reproduction of the Book of Abraham, and takes for granted that is an indorsement of that document. I had really thought that journalists and literary people knew better than that; but for fear I may say too much on this point, I will close for the present.

Yours very truly,

S. K. SORENSEN.

RELIGIOUS VIEWS OF THE MARTINIQUE CALAMITY.

How can the horrible catastrophes by which tens of thousands of lives have been destroyed in the West Indian Islands be reconciled with the thought of a loving God? This question, which is being seriously discussed by several of the religious papers, raises anew a problem of some importance. The New York Truth Seeker, the organ of the Free-Thinkers, has the following to say on the subject:

"It was the Lisbon earthquake which shook Voltaire's faith in a God who governs, who pervades all places and ages, and who has established a direct relation between himself and mankind. He was compelled to ask, What was my God doing? Why did the Universal Father crush to shapelessness thousands of his poor children, even at the moment when they were upon their knees returning thanks to him? The tragedy of St. Pierre ought to drive a sincere Theist insane.

"How the Christians can reconcile such an appalling calamity as this volcanic eruption with the conception of a good God who cares for his children, and without whose watchful supervision not even a sparrow falls to the ground, is one of those things which astonishes men who think. The inhabitants of St. Pierre were literally burned up and buried in the white-hot mud which came from the crater and dropped upon the town. Such an act occurring through personal volition of any being would stamp that being as a demon of infinite cruelty. Nothing could equal it except the creation of a hell in which billions instead of thousands are to burn for ever. There are no words in any language which can describe such a being."

The calamity at St. Pierre is viewed by many of the inhabitants of neighboring islands as a judgment of God. "While in St. Lucia," declares an officer of the British steamship Horace (as reported in the New York Herald), "I heard several of the residents telling one another that they believed the destruction of St. Pierre was a terrible punishment sent by the Almighty on account of the wickedness of the city." A New York clergyman, the Reverend Doctor J. B. Remensnyder, has not hesitated to draw a similar conclusion. In a recent sermon on "Providence and Biblical and Recent Catastrophes," he compared the calamity in Martinique to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. He said further:

"A whole land is often saved from terrible calamities on account of the churches and praying people, and this world itself is but saved from flames that to-day would lick the very heavens and wrap the very highest mountain-tops in tongues of fire on account of the little band of God's elect who are in it, and who fear His name, and whom He wills not to harm."

Such views as this, however, are prominent because of their very isolation, and are anything but representative. Yet all of the religious papers seem ready to admit that there is a grave problem involved. Says the Boston Pilot (Rom. Cath.):

"Why, oh, why, asks some troubled Christian, should these joyous, simple, believing people meet the fate of the godless and unspeakably wicked Pompeii and Herculaneum of old? Why is darkest London spared, while St. Pierre perishes? There is no better answer than that implied in the question of our esteemed contemporary, the Catholic Citizen, of Milwaukee: 'Why do cities seat themselves in these volcanic valleys? Why do men expose their lives and the lives of their families to the dangers of such location?' As the rain falleth upon the just and unjust, so will the deluge of fire and lava overwhelm impartially saint and sinner in its progress. Christian faith finds its comfort, in such calamity, in the thought of life everlasting; the conviction that God's mercy overshadowed all the horror; and that the innocent and the penitent souls entering into the place of refreshment, light, and peace, through that awful trial by fire, say now with the apostle: 'The sufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared with the glory to come.'"

The Boston Watchman (Baptist) says:

"This problem baffles the author of the Book of Job, and all the discoveries of science and the light of the Christian revelation do not resolve the thick darkness that settles about it. When trouble comes for which we can see no moral antecedent and no good result, the irrepressible cry bursts from every human heart, 'Why?' And there is no answer but the answer of Job: 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.'"

"From our point of view the events of life are often wholly irreconcilable with our faith in the divine goodness. And yet we do not lose our faith. We believe that God is working out for us and for the race purposes of goodness that we can not understand. That, it seems to us, is the Christian attitude toward this problem. Christianity does not resolve it, while it makes many other solutions of it untenable. But Christianity, in its revelation of the Father, inspires a confidence in him that is not shaken by our inability to understand his way."

The Pittsburg Methodist Recorder insists that great good follows even in the footsteps of the worst calamities. "With the earthquake's shock," it declares, "human nature asserts itself and a thrill of sympathy moves all hearts. The nation is richer because of the wealth of affection and charity which it poured out for these cities sitting desolate and in distress." And so disaster, while it is to be deprecated, yet "shows the better side of human nature and makes us respect ourselves and our humanity more." The Church Advocate, an organ of the "Church of God," published at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, takes a decidedly original view of the "wholesome moral effect" produced by cataclysms. It says:

"They teach us how insecure are the most stable earthly things. The everlasting hills shall be removed. The earth itself shall perish, but the word of the Lord endureth for ever. They remind us of the approaching end. And they may suggest how the final conflagration may originate. True, we do not positively know how. Yet it is our conviction that the fire for which the heavens and earth which are now kept in store, and by which the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up, is of natural, and not supernatural, origin. For there are allusions to volcanic fires as a mode of final destruction in certain very striking expressions in Revelation, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and even in Luke. And even the very nature of the soil of Italy, and of some of the groups of islands south of the Philippines and the Lesser Antilles has forced on many a mind in different ages the thought of physical preparedness almost for such a catastrophe. 'Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh.' These events are not any less of God because between him and them are natural causes of whose existence the divine will is the cause.

—Literary Digest, June 7, 1902.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY'S aim was "to smite all humbugs, however big; to give a nobler tone to science; to set an example of abstinence from petty personal controversies, and of toleration for everything but lying; to be indifferent as to whether the work is recognized as mine or not, so long as it is done."

MATERIAL development, however marvelous, will never usher in the Golden Age.—Abraham Lincoln.

Original Poetry.

In Memory of M. T. S.

(By his widow.)

I thought that I should weary walk,
 In midnight darkness all the while,
 When gone from me your fond embrace
 And the sunlight of your smile.
 Yet when you passed through glory's gate
 There shined a beam of radiance fair,
 And as, alone, I kneeled to pray,
 Heaven never seemed so very near.

And now I tread the border land,
 And lean upon His arm of might,
 That bore you safely all the way
 To the immortal fields of light,
 And marvel at my strength and trust—
 My blessed portion day by day.
 The sun still shines, the flowers bloom,
 Though you from us are gone away.

I joy to think this peace is given
 In answer to the loving prayer,
 You promised, if allowed, to make
 For me when you were over there.
 Blessed thus of God, shall I repine,
 And cast a gloom o'er all around?
 Nay, rather tell the sons of men
 The hope that's in the gospel found.

This was your mission and your joy,
 Until the wondrous summons came;
 When gladly, like a tired child,
 You bowed, and blessed his holy name.
 In dreams I soothe your fevered brow,
 I live again the torturing pain,
 And wake, to joy that you are free,
 To suffer nevermore again.

And when upon that heaven-lit shore
 You'll stand to gladly welcome me,
 The halo of that sacred hour,
 The brightest of my life shall be.
 Till then, I shall not see thy face,
 For mortal ken can not perceive;
 But comfort cometh in the thought,
 Like us, thou, in His care, doth live.

"The Winecup's Vice."

(In sympathy with a friend.)

Alone, alone I sit to-night,
 With no kind heart of cheer
 Except the tender infants, who,
 Reposing, know no fear.
 I list, although in vain for him
 I watch, but he's not there;
 That dreaded wine cup, oh! its sting!
 How dare he enter there?

The clouded sky of dusky blue
 And fretting wind both say,
 "We sympathize, kind heart, with you"
 But yet, why must he stay?
 How can he leave me thus to-night?
 I know his heart is true,

Hark! there's his footstep! No, 'tis gone!
 Oh! Father, bear me through.

I hear the bustle in the street,
 And danger's at the door;
 Yet there's a faithful hand that keeps
 Sweet peace for me in store.
 'Tis six long years since Hymen's bars
 Were drawn aside for me.
 That day my life was all possessed
 With richest luxuries.

Sleep on, my darling babe, sleep on;
 Draw closer to my breast.
 Although the night is dark and wild,
 Thou, tender one, shalt rest.
 Our fire is out, our house is dark.
 Let all this warning take:
 To never bleed a loving heart
 All for the winecup's sake.

The Calling and Duties of an Evangelist.

BY C. DERRY.

O God, what am I? what my father's house that I Should consecrated be to such a sacred work—
 Awful responsibilities and solemn duties—
 As those to which I now am called and set apart,
 To bless thy Saints, a father to the weak and helpless ones,
 Encourage the strong, comfort the distressed,
 And help the weary their great burdens bear?
 I, too, am weak; no strength in me inheres,
 Nought but utter weakness can I claim as mine!
 Wisdom and knowledge were not my birthright;
 If ought of these I have, they came from Thee.
 Prescience is not mine; I dimly see the past, much less
 Can I point out their future in the womb of time,
 Or tell the lineal chain from which they sprung,—
 Open to their gaze the rich gifts thou hast in store
 For them that faithful prove, on whom my hands are laid.
 Nor can I seal the blessings thou alone can'st give,
 Unless thy Holy Spirit gives the binding power,
 And in the heavens seal what's sealed on earth.
 My spirit fails, and my whole nature shrinks with awe
 As I gaze upon the high and holy plane where he must stand
 Who in the sacred name of Christ essays to bless
 His fellow man, and as the mouthpiece of the Holy One
 Give peace and joy to the sad and sorrowing heart.
 His hands must needs be clean from sin's corroding stain,
 His purpose pure, his faith in Christ be firmly set,
 And his whole life devoted to thy sacred cause,
 Nor love of filthy lucre e'er inspire his soul.
 But for Thy glory must he live, and that alone.
 O God, my Father! In Jesus' sacred name I plead
 For strength to bear the burden now upon me laid.
 Supply my every need,—unyielding faith, courage,
 Wisdom divine, and knowledge of thy love and truth;
 Power to discern betwixt the false and true, evil and good—
 Help me to walk the path the lowly Savior trod.
 I need Christ-like humility to bear without complaint
 Whate'er may come, be it weel or woe, joy or pain,
 With my whole heart resigned, to say, "Thy will be done."
 O! fill my heart and soul with Christ's transcendent love
 That I my life may give, mankind to bless and save,
 Laboring in meekness and with patient love divine,
 The perfect measure of my creation, here fulfill.
 That I, with all the faithful, may be gathered home
 And hear the joyous plaudit from the Master's lips, Well done!

Selected Poetry.

Song.

He that is down needs fear no fall;
He that is low, no pride;
He that is humble ever shall Have God to be his guide.

I am content with what I have,
Little be it or much;
And, Lord, contentment still I crave,
Because thou savest such.

Fullness to such a burden is
That go on pilgrimage;
Here little, and hereafter bliss,
Is best from age to age.

—John Bunyan.

Helping the Weak.

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee.
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in Thy employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good Seem my nature's habitude.

—John G. Whittier.

Death.

Death is delightful! Death is dawn,
The waking from a weary night
Of fevers into truth and light;
Fame is not much, love is not much,
Yet what else is there worth the touch
Of lifted hands with dagger drawn?
So surely life is little worth:
Therefore, I say, Look up; therefore,
I say, One little star has more Bright gold than all the earth of earth.

—Joaquin Miller.

Fate.

Nuffin' gwinter stop 'em—
De chilly rain kin fall
An' de tree kin keep a-moanin'
As it scrapes agin de wall,
An' de clouds kin keep a-climbin'
Till da fills de sky wif gloom,
But when it's time foh roses,
Why de roses gwinter ter bloom.

Trouble gwinter to find you,
'Tain no use to run,
But dar's boun' to be some blessin's
When de trouble all is done,
An' de joy is jes' as certain
As de day of sorrow's doom,
Foh when it's time for roses,
Why de roses gwinter bloom.

—Washington Star.

Optimism.

I'm no reformer; for I see more light
Than darkness in the world; mine eyes are quick
To catch the first dim radiance of the dawn,
And slow to note the cloud that threatens storm.
The fragrance and the beauty of the rose
Delight me so, slight thought I give its thorn;
And the sweet music of the lark's clear song
Stays longer with me than the night-hawk's cry.
And e'en in this great throw of pain called Life
I find a rapture linked with each despair
Well worth the price of anguish. I detect
More good than evil in humanity.
Love lights more fires than hate extinguishes,
And men grow better as the world grows old.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in Chicago American.

The Lord's Prayer.

The following beautiful composition was found in Charleston, South Carolina, during the War of Secession. It was printed on very heavy yellow satin, and is quite a literary curiosity.

Thou to the mercy-seat our souls dost gather,
To do our duty unto thee, Our Father,
To whom all praise, all honor should be given,
For thou art the great God Who art in heaven.
Thou by thy wisdom rul'st the world's whole frame;
For ever, therefore, Hallowed be thy name.
Let nevermore delay divide us from
Thy glorious grace, but let Thy kingdom come.
Let thy commands opposed be by none,
But thy good pleasure and Thy will be done,
And let our promptness to obey be ever
The very same In earth as 'tis in heaven.
Then for our souls, O Lord, we also pray.
Thou wouldst be pleased to Give us this day
The food of life wherewith our souls are fed,
Sufficient raiment, and Our daily bread;
With every needful thing do thou relieve us,
And of thy mercy, pity And foryive us
All our misdeeds, for Him whom thou didst please
To make an offering for Our trespasses.
And forasmuch, O Lord, as we believe
That thou wilt pardon us As we forgive,
Let that love teach, wherewith thou dost acquaint us,
To pardon all Those who trespass against us;
And though, sometimes, thou find'st we have forgot
This love for thee, yet help, And lead us not,
Through soul or body's want to desperation,
Nor let earth's gain drive us Into temptation:
Let not the soul of any true believer
Fall in the time of trial, But deliver,
Yea, save them from the malice of the Devil,
And in both life and death, keep Us from evil.
Thus pray we, Lord, for that of thee from whom
This may be had, For thine is the kingdom,
This world is of thy work its wondrous story,
To thee belongs The power and the glory,
And all thy wondrous works have ended never,
But will remain for ever, and For ever.
Thus we poor creatures would confess again,
And thus would say eternally, Amen.

—Thomas B. Haines, in Anamosa Prison Press.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

What Makes a Home?

Lady Aberdeen, in a recent address before the National Council of the Women of Canada, at Toronto, said:

"What is that indefinable something that makes a home; that reveals itself in the books and pictures, in the arrangement of the rooms, in the preparation for a guest, in the tones of the children, in the expression of husband and wife? We can not describe it, but we recognize it at once when it is present, and no house can be truly a home without some measure of it. We do not need just houses, where we can eat and sleep heartily, but we want homes, full of rest and peace and beauty and refreshment."

THERE is much, very much of good homely common sense tersely and plainly put in the following article, to which if mothers would only give heed the coming generation would be a wiser and a better one. O, how many a life has been ruined by the failure upon the part of parents to teach their children to love and honor labor! This is the less excusable because it is something which can be done by almost every mother, no matter how poor or how uneducated. Think of it, mothers.—ED.

Does It Make Boys Effeminate to Do Girls' Work?

What miserable creatures we would be if on a bed of sickness we lay with no one to attend us but a son who had not the slightest knowledge of simple medicine or the preparation of plain meals. At a time like this, what is the use of other learning?

For instance, a husband has lost his companion. He has no relative or friends near, and can not afford to hire help. He spoils more food than he eats, as well as injuring his and his children's digestion. He might have saved all this trouble and his hard earnings, if, in leisure time, he had done a little housework for his mother or wife; learning to cook on hygienic principles, as well as with lard and fire.

A few young men have gone on a pleasure trip to yonder mountain. Their cook is suddenly obliged to leave camp. It is supper-time. They know nothing of the culinary art, not having learned when boys. Now they wish they had occasionally assisted mother or sister when the latter was suffering with headache or tired from overwork. What a sorry-looking mess they concoct for a meal! Methinks I can scent burnt potatoes, meat, and stale coffee. The boys are disgusted and break camp.

It makes a boy more manly to help with any part of the household duties when assistance is required, sew buttons on his clothes, etc., just as it makes a girl more womanly to help her tired brother or father with any of their work she is capable of doing, or throw a ball, jump the fence, practice law, medicine, lay out parks, and do many kinds of brain work hitherto thought to be only man's work. Perhaps the day may come when woman's strength, also, can cope with man's in heavy mining, bridge-building, rowing, digging, etc. There are many women whose great intellects should have been put to work studying astronomy, designing, chemistry, and like uses.

Many of our professional cooks and bakers are men. Does this of necessity make them effeminate? A man who is not weak in brain will be manly under any circumstances. The word effeminate or feminine does not mean the same as when woman's sphere was limited to house-work, weaving, crocheting, the days when grandmother's coffee and bread were better (?) than in this progressive age; days when it was immodest to take the safe and comfortable mode of riding astride, be seen in public without a chaperone, or stand before an audience to speak.

Only ten years ago a woman was thought bold to ride a bicycle; indeed, it so appeared because of that fetter called custom or propriety. Let us try not to wind too much of its lace adornment about us, lest we can not extricate ourselves when exercise of reason demands. Since woman is enlarging her sphere, why not the opposite sex do likewise?

A child of four or five years is able to sweep a little, dust, wipe light dishes, bring in wood, set table. When seven or eight, he can be taught to mix biscuit, fry steak, garden, wash, iron, etc. In return have a romp with your child, or amuse him in various ways. Occasionally help him with his lessons; you can question him on spelling and arithmetic while he is washing dishes, and there will be no time lost, besides taking his mind from his work. He will know, then, that mother is full of love and anxiety for him and he will work with vim and pleasure. If he should be of the unthinking kind, tell him you are sewing, washing, cooking, and caring for him in sickness and health, and that a mother's and father's thoughts are with their children wherever they go, or whatever they do. They will then show, always their gratitude by loving and caring for their parents. Study your children's faces and manner and do not overtax them with work or learning. Be careful after a long walk or when they have otherwise exerted.

The theory of a physician acquaintance is that to rest one should change occupation instead of ceasing work. A titled English lady has given the use of several acres and a home for the benefit of girls studying agriculture and farming. The girls are given all they make from their experiments. They are also taught the use of tools and must make their own chicken coops, mend fences, etc. They are given certificates when they graduate.

The Master said, Go on in knowledge. Compel the boys to spend an afternoon each week in the kitchen annex of the city schools in the frying-pan drill; also show them the use of simple herbs and medicines. To accomplish this, leave out a part of the time devoted to botany, astronomy, or some study least needed. Some of the boys will protest, fume, foam, play truant until time, custom and increase of their sex in the kitchen will bring them to see it is as essential as football, rowing, racing, hunting. Perhaps some of these boys can lengthen the days of an invalid mother or sister by assisting at home. If they love their mother and wish to keep her with them to counsel in joy and sorrow or even for her presence, they will not indulge the thought of housework making them effeminate, but will be thankful for more knowledge and usefulness, for the future, when they, too, will have families; especially if their wives know little or nothing of housework.

One of the manliest fellows I know, who is a favorite in his profession and in the best society, helps his wife about the house. He seems always ready to assist her to a second cup of chocolate, or to get up from the dining-table to supply a missing article. He is seldom too tired to start a romp with wife or baby.

It seems natural to a girl to take the broom from a weary mother and finish sweeping. Why should it be less natural for a boy to be thus thoughtful? There are homes the atmosphere of which is repelling. Why? because neglected early training made the future for its inmates. Influence is a great word in which our daily actions figure. Habit will fix itself for ever upon us if begun early and persisted in. Let us take care it is not that of tobacco, profane language, anger, too great grief in affliction, or trouble, betting, gambling, laziness and other evils. Commence young as the understanding unfolds, and form a perfect manhood and womanhood. "Go on to perfection."

Yours for advancement,

REGINA ROHRER MORTON.

Prayer Union.

Mr. Mollie A. Flory, of Guernsey, California, desires an interest in the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union, if it is God's will, that she may be restored to health. She has felt impressed the time would come when the Lord would manifest his power in her behalf and restore her to health and knows he is able to heal her affliction and hopes and prays the desire of her heart may be granted.

Sr. A. Mellon writes: "My niece, Mrs. Lenora Campbell desires the prayers of the Saints and of the Union that she may be healed of a lump on her wrist without having to have it cut off, if it be God's will."

The Sheep of the Flock.

By C. D. Meigs.

We oft hear the plea for trying to keep
"The Lambs of the Flock" in the fold,
And well we may; but then what of the sheep?
Shall they be left out in the cold?

'Twas a sheep, not a lamb, that strayed away,
In the parable Jesus told,
A grown up sheep that had gone far astray,
From ninety and nine in the fold.

Out in the wilderness, out in the cold,
'Twas a sheep the good shepherd sought,
And back to the flock, safe into the fold,
'Twas a sheep the good shepherd brought.

And why for the sheep should we earnestly long,
And as earnestly hope and pray?
Because there is danger, if they go wrong,
They will lead the young lambs astray.

For the lambs will follow the sheep you know,
Wherever the sheep may stray;
If the sheep go wrong, it will not be long Till the lambs are as wrong as they.

And so with the sheep we earnestly plead,
For the sake of the lambs to-day,
If the lambs are lost, what a terrible cost,
Some sheep may have to pay.

—From the International Evangel.

The International Convention.

The Tenth Triennial International Sunday-school Convention was held in Denver, Colorado, June 26-30, 1902. It was a convention of Sunday-school people from all States of the Union and the United States' possessions, the provinces of Canada, Mexico, Cuba, and Great Britain. More than two thousand representatives were present from outside of Denver. It was probably as fair a representation of the talent of the Sunday-school world as we will ever have together. There were among them men and women of lifetime experience, broad-minded, with deep thought, and earnest in the work. And while with some it was very plain that the "D. D." and dollars was what put them there and held them there, it is also beyond question that with others there was a real, genuine love for the work and a desire that right should triumph over wrong that drew them and bound them to their posts of duty. There are those whose experience and study has secured for them a usefulness that is a real treasure to them and to those with whom they may chance to come in contact. And there are others who have had as much experience, are as broad-minded, have studied as deeply, and, possibly, work as earnestly, and yet from their inability to forget their title, to lose self in the thought before them, and to reduce the matter to the practical, fail to confer upon others what there really is in them and to win the respect and admiration for their earnestness that seems to be necessary to do the greatest amount of good.

The public worker, minister or teacher, who can not carry with him an influence that will impress his auditors with his sincerity and earnestness in his work will accomplish but a fraction of the good he could accomplish were these qualities apparent. Such are the thoughts that pass through our minds as we listen from time to time to the various types of scholarly men and women that come before us at a gathering like the great International Sunday-school Convention.

WHAT WAS DONE.

While the business of the convention was of a necessity very heavy, it was so well digested by executive and nominating committees that but little time, comparatively speaking, was occupied therein. This gave the major part of the time of the convention proper to the discussion of subjects pertaining to the methods of working in the States, counties, townships, or schools. Here is a suggestion for our consideration. How long will it be till we must delegate much of our business to committees? When have we not been compelled for the want of time to pass upon business without due consideration or omit entirely? Committee work is in many respects much more thorough than is possible in open convention. And it often happens that the best interests of the work is conserved by not discussing in open convention that which the convention has no information about. Let us give this a due consideration.

Several items of very general interest were decided, some of which we will note. Some of them will determine the general trend of Bible study for the next seven years, as they were instructions to the International Lesson Committee. It will be remembered that at this convention the committee, whose duty it is to select the "International Lesson Texts," was appointed. Its selections direct the study of several millions of people. Its course is therefore one of extreme importance.

THE QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.

There have for some time been going the round of the press reports to the effect that the Lesson Committee was favorably considering the omitting of the quarterly temperance lesson. The reports were given such credence that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union took action, protesting against such omission. At the convention, Doctor John C. Potts of Canada, stated in behalf of the committee that they had never contemplated any such change and that the rumor was groundless; and that unless the convention saw fit to so instruct, the lessons would go on as heretofore. And so it was left.

DEPARTMENTS OF WORK.

Just prior to the International Convention at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1899, the Primary Teachers' Union petitioned the convention to instruct the International Lesson Committee to provide a one-year optional course of lessons for very young beginners. This request was granted. At this convention they asked for a two-year course. Another request came from somewhere to prepare an advanced course of Bible study for those who were beyond the lessons of the general school. It was urged that so many of our boys that leave Sunday-school could be held if an advanced course of study was provided them. The "Resolutions Committee" considered these matters but did not take very kindly to either of them. They looked upon them both as "entering wedges" that would sooner or later lead to the destruction of the entire uniform lesson system. They recognized that something needed to be done to hold the boys and girls in the school, but did not think that the advanced course would do very much toward accomplishing the object. They recommended that the "optional course for young beginners" be prepared, but to be published without bearing the stamp of the International Committee. The advanced course was not favored at all. This part of the report was adopted by the convention with a very hearty applause.

The custom has been with the International Committee to select six months lessons from each the Old Testament and the New Testament alternately. Thus they would study one line of lessons for six months, then lay them aside and take up another line for the succeeding six months. At the end of this period they would return to the former line. It was urged that the periods of alternation be made longer, even to one or two years. This was left, however, to the discretion of the committee.

"WHAT THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION HAS DONE TO HELP

was the subject of a very complete discussion by a Western worker. Among the many points made were: "It gave us our State organizations, and in turn our county, township, and local organizations; it gave us our Home Department, our Cradle Roll, and our House to House Visitation; it gave us our International Lesson System, by which we all study the same lesson on the same day. From this uniform study of the lesson we have a common ground upon which we can meet and at once open a conversation with any worker from any distant section of the country. His mind has been active on the same line of thought as ours. He has given recent and extended study upon the same passage of Scripture that we have been thinking about. His prayers have been made for more light upon the same theme as has ours. We meet, and, though entire strangers, this bond of uniform study has created for us a tie that binds us in love one for another. An enthusiasm, a zeal, and a love for the work is created thereby that otherwise would never exist." These were in substance some of the thoughts in the paper.

And we wonder how many of our workers have ever taken occasion to recount what the General Sunday-school Association has done for the Sunday-schools of the latter-day work. With this, maybe, as it is with individuals, we received blessings but fail to recognize from whence they came. Like as in scriptural times, about one in ten of us moral lepers will, when cleansed, return to give the glory where the glory belonged.

The General Association was organized at a time when the Sunday-school work was in a very crude condition. Schools were few and in poor working order. The want of better discipline, better methods of teaching, better lesson helps was keenly felt. Those having the work in charge were wise enough to know that by a united effort they could devise plans that would bring order out of chaos, so they set about the work, and the present organization is the result.

At first there were no lesson helps of any description published by our people. To improve this condition a series of question books were prepared for primary and intermediate grades. These, with the compendium for the seniors, served us a very good purpose for a while. But it was soon very apparent that the books were becoming monotonous and, too, that much better methods of teaching could be employed than were possible with either of the books then in use. Then a little leaflet or lesson-help was published and was used but a short time, as it easily paved the way for the crowning effort in that line—the Gospel Quarterly. This was at first published in two grades only, senior and intermediate. Soon a primary grade was added, but which ran on a distinctly separate course of lessons, as was also the intermediate grade a little later on. This gave us three or more distinct lessons in the school at one time, a condition by no means desirable. After considerable consideration of the question of lesson uniformity, the General Convention decided by almost a three-fourth vote to have the lessons of all three grades upon the same text. And thus it has been since. These with such other improvements as might be expected could be made, have given us a lesson help that stands without a superior. And just the amount of good that this one development of the association's work has done, God alone knows.

The General Association has given us our district associations and in turn local schools. It has given us our district convention with the institute feature of work for the promoting of methods. It gave us what for a while was known as the Interstate Institute which served the double purpose of disseminating methods and establishing the institute feature in the district work and at the reunions, an improvement. It has in numerous cases aided in the work of district conventions by helping plan for them and by visitation of its officers. It has given free Quarterlies to all church missionaries, and to schools financially unable otherwise to exist. And last, but by no means least, it is now ready to give the Home Department to all who will avail themselves of the privilege. Many more things might be recounted but it is not necessary here. We give these things that you, with us, may rejoice and be grateful.

"Josephite Opposition."

Brother Joseph Smith: The "Josephite opposition" noticed in SAINTS' HERALD of July 2, and as originally published in semi-weekly edition of the Deseret News for June 9, needs correction in some of the things enunciated. Having been located at Council Bluffs last year in the interest of church work, we are quite familiar with the character of the opposition referred to by Mr. Terry, of the Utah church.

The Utah eldership claimed to be representatives of the only true church on earth, and in the light of original Latter Day Saintism, we challenged the verity of the statement, and offered to debate with them publicly the following resolution: "Resolved that Utah Latter Day Saintism, upon vital principles of faith, represents a total apostasy from the original faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as taught from its organization down to the death of Joseph Smith." Elders Wadman and Terry and all others refused to discuss any question of difference whatever, and they beat a hasty retreat whenever it meant a defense of their position, or an ignominious runaway in the face of a fair investigation. It is true that we answered them at every opportunity, either on the street corners or elsewhere, for the reason that we felt morally bound to defend the integrity of the faith as defined by church standards as against the evils taught in the name of the church by the Utah regime. We hold that if the books are correct in their ethics, then Utahism is wrong in its moral and spiritual teachings.

Our Utah friends would expatiate upon what is termed first principles, the ancient apostasy, and the latter-day restoration; but they did not want the people to know about their polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-god theory, or their political shortcomings. We said, "If you will preach all of your fundamental principles of faith to the people, and explain the differences between the two churches, we will not make any special attack upon you more than we make upon others." This they have failed to do hence it is our duty to tell the people the facts in the case, and this is why the Utah elders evade discussion; for discussion means a defense of polygamy, blood atonement, and the Adam-god theory upon their part. They must either defend or deny these doctrines or do neither by running away from public investigation.

Elder Terry and his associates prefer the latter method, as he says, "We are satisfied this was the better way." In this he follows, as he says, "the counsel given us to have nothing to do with them." We, however, did not decide to have nothing to do with them, but rather preferred to meet them on the street corners, in union chapels, or anywhere else where we could set forth to the people the Utah doctrines of polygamy, blood atonement, and the Adam-god theory as set forth in their own standard books. This is too much for the elders, and they prefer to give up their appointments in "union chapels," on the street corners, or anywhere else where "Josephite opposition" has the right, under the law, to expound original Latter Day Saintism, and expose the corrupt philosophy of "Brighamism," rather than defend their own fundamental doctrines before the public. Our Utah friends, however, seem to enjoy better liberty in dilating upon the merits of their system of faith in some hall or church where "Josephite opposition" is excluded by virtue of their authority and exclusive jurisdiction.

Our aim has always been to treat these men with exact fairness and justice. When inviting them to attend our services, where the differences between them and us in religious faith were under consideration, we always told them that if we misrepresented them as to what they believed, or misquoted their church books, we would give them the opportunity to correct us then and there. Could we offer anything fairer than that? We have never misrepresented the faith of the Utah church and have only set forth their teachings as found in their own books. Whenever they say that their books teach false principles and that they will discard these principles as being antagonistic to true Latter Day Saintism, then we will let them alone; but so long as they believe in polygamy, blood atonement, and the Adam-god theory, and hold these doctrines as being true, they must defend them, deny and repudiate them, or run from investigation.

It seems a little curious to us how Elder Terry knows that we filled the people's mind "with terribly distorted stories" when, as he says, they "would not remain to listen to their abuse and misrepresentation." He admits that personally he can not know the facts, yet charges us with abuse and misrepresentation. Is it misrepresentation to read from the different volumes of Journal of Discourses the teaching of Brigham Young, O. and P. P. Pratt, Grant, Kimball, and others, touching the doctrines before mentioned? Is it misrepresentation to read section 132 of the Utah Doctrine and Covenants containing the so-called revelation on celestial marriage? Is it abuse and misrepresentation to quote the words of Woodruff, Snow, and others, from Juvenile Instructor, "Historical Record," Deseret News, etc., in which these men affirm the divinity of polygamy, and predict the overthrow of the people or nation that interferes with its practice? If Mr. Terry is correct, then Utah publications and Utah leaders are responsible for this abuse and misrepresentation, for in all of our attacks upon Utah theology and morality we have used their authorized church publications, and used the words of men whom they revered as inspired apostles and prophets to prove our several propositions.

Has it come to this, that honest men evade investigation of their principles for fear of results? Or is it that this church and these men who flee from chapels, street corners, and other places, in order to escape an investigation of their principles, are conscious of the falsity of their doctrines and the weakness of their position? Having spiritually diseased members in their body, they do not want them exposed to the public eye by the folly of their own teaching, or by the immutable facts of God's word.

PELICAN LAKE, Minnesota, July 7.

Editors Herald: Leaving home April 25, in company with Bro. E. A. Stedman, our first stop was at Eagle Grove, my former home. Bro. Stedman stopped over Sunday and Monday; preached both evenings to the people, and his efforts were well liked by them all. I was required to stay over the next Sunday, and made an effort to feed them with the bread of life on Sunday again. The work at Head Grove is suffering for lack of some one to preach to them. They are holding Sunday-school every Sunday with Sr. Ella B. Hayer as superintendent.

Pipestone and Hills, Minnesota, was our next stop. I again joined Bro. Stedman at the latter place, where the brethren secured the opera hall for five evenings with quite good attendance, Sr. West assisting us nobly with her musical talent, which we indeed appreciated. One of the brethren put up large posters in different places with the following notice: "The sect everywhere spoken against will be represented at the opera hall this evening at eight o'clock." This seemed to work well; had the largest attendance we have had for years; several new faces of those recently moved into town. I believe good was done.

Returning to Pipestone, held three meetings to small crowd. Again we separated, Bro. Stedman going to Minneapolis and Clitherall, and the writer to Dyce, South Dakota, a new place for our people and claims. A Mrs. Vickerman, who had been investigating our claims, for four or five years, became satisfied the work is true and desired to unite with us. I went there, held five meetings, and baptized the sister May 30. All went well. The tongue of slander and falsehood was not altogether silent while there. Especially was this true with those who were not there. House full almost every meeting, with invitation to return sometime in the future.

The 30th I left for Madison, South Dakota; reached Bro. and Sr. A. C. Stone's, a home indeed for the traveling missionary. While there held four meetings; small attendance. Leaving there June 5, for Newark, South Dakota, we arranged for meetings on Sunday, the 8th, at half-past two and eight p. m. After the afternoon service we met at the edge of Artesian Lake to attend to the ordinance of baptism, the candidate Mrs. John Grant, a much respected lady of that vicinity; well spoken of by all. About sixty or seventy were in attendance at the baptism, and during the administration there was not the least disturbance of any nature. It seemed more like a funeral than anything else. The good Lord blessed us. The evening service was fine, the Lord meeting with us again to our joy and comfort. We closed by singing, "Let us walk in the light," by request of a young lady.

Leaving there the 13th for Pelican Rapids, I joined Bro. E. A. Stedman again, battling away in the schoolhouse in this neighborhood. We held in all five meetings, then off to Frazee conference and reunion, where we had a glorious time indeed. Bro. F. A. Smith and T. C. Kelley were there, giving us some very profitable instruction in their preaching. The meetings were well attended throughout both by members and outsiders. Church building is the talk there now. About two hundred dollars have been raised thus far.

Came back here the 30th. Have been holding some meetings. Bro. F. A. Smith and E. A. Stedman stopped off one night on their way to Clitherall. We were sorry they could not have stayed longer. On the 5th two were baptized here. Held two meetings on the 6th, one more came and demanded baptism. We buried her in the waters of Pelican Lake. Several others here are fully convinced but say they are afraid they can not live as they should and would bring a reproach on the work: have seen so many mistakes by others. I am sorry this is true. Our people should try to set examples to others; not only lay members, but those who are representing the work, both local and missionary. Our preaching has but little effect if by our example we tear down the good we may seek to do. May God bless and keep us always in the line of duty until the Master says, "Come home." For the truth and right I am,

Yours in the conflict,

ELI HAYER.

HAMBURG, Iowa, July 12.

Editors Herald: Since leaving my home and loved ones May 8 I have been greatly blessed in preaching the word and officiating in the duties and requirements imposed upon me as an evangelist. God has been with me and truly verified his promise to me as his humble servant, in granting unto me the spirit and power of this office and calling. To him be all the praise.

I have labored in Hamburg, Shenandoah, and Mill Creek. Attended our district conference and did work in Tabor Branch, and made a trip to Fairbury, Nebraska, to assist in the dedication of a little church with Bro. Waldsmith which the few faithful Saints and outside friends have built under trying circumstances in which to worship God and present the great truths of the gospel to others. Long may they live to do the Master's will.

We returned by way of Wilber. Stopped off a few days and preached a few times, and visited some of the old-timers of that place, finding them still in the faith, and rejoicing in the truth and hope of life eternal promised of God to his people.

From thence to Nebraska City. Spent one week visiting most of the Saints with Bro. Waldsmith, whose company was greatly appreciated, as we had labored together so many years prior to that time in the branch and other places in the district locally, and passed through many experiences, some very pleasant and others very hard to endure. But God was with us and enabled us to stand the test. We attended meetings, preached some, and gave blessings to not a few, who were glad to see me and I was equally thankful to meet with all of that place. Bro. Mark Forscutt kindly rendered valuable service as scribe for those who received blessings. We enjoyed ourselves hugely in his company, with Bro. Waldsmith and others. I was kindly cared for by all the Saints of that place and liberally helped on my way.

Crossed the river from there to McPaul, and was in company with Bro. Caffall. Held two preaching services, Bro. Caffall doing the preaching. And should have held more but for the rain. He also preached twice the following Sunday in our church near Thurman. We all three had an excellent time with Bishop William Leeka and others talking over the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

I held three meetings in different parts of this branch the following week with good success. Had excellent liberty in talking and hearing from the Saints. Was ready for preaching the following Sabbath, but the rain prevented all from coming out, so put in the time with Bro. Leeka, seeking to learn our duty by searching the Scriptures and the revelations of God to us as a church and people.

Following week held three meetings in the Tabor Branch. The good Spirit was with us. I find this the best method of working, especially during the busy times, when the folks are scattered and unable to come to the general place of meeting. I go to them and get two or three families together, preach to them, hear them talk and pray, and thus get them prepared and more anxious to come together on the Sabbath day to worship our God.

Spent Sunday with the Saints of the branch. Preached in the morning, Bro. Adolph Madison at night. Brn. Fry and Madison have been at home for a few days on account of the rain, which makes it very bad for tent work. Bro. Fry is ready and ever willing with Bro. Madison and determined to do what they can for the advancement of this noble cause.

I came here Thursday, July 10. Attended the prayer-meeting last night. Preached the word. Expect to stay next week holding meetings and doing what I can to strengthen and build up the Saints and interest others as much as possible in the work. Shall visit Bartlett and Shenandoah before our reunion and maybe some other place or places as the Spirit may direct.

We have been very sorry to hear of the sickness and inability of our beloved brother, J. W. Wight. For him we, with many others of this district, have earnestly prayed, and are assured that the Lord of the harvest has heard our prayers. Blessed be his holy name! We shall greatly miss our brother at our reunion; but trust that Bro. Scott will be able to attend by that time, August 16. His presence will greatly cheer the Saints, and as an able defender of the faith and expounder of the word and doctrine of Christ will, we are sure, make up the deficiency. We hope for the best and shall labor to this end, and trust that others who have been requested and invited to be with us will not fail.

I ever pray and labor for the good of the cause.

HENRY KEMP.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, July 11.

Editors Herald: Since reaching here on May 6, we have been busy trying to advance the work. We have been preaching on the streets and in cottages, and trying hard to get a gospel tent, which we have succeeded in doing at last. We have a nice new tent twenty-six by forty feet with seven foot walls, and thirty nice folding seats, six feet long, which we made ourselves. Have them all painted and in very nice shape. We erected the tent to-day and expect to begin operations on Sunday, the 13th. Saints and friends have come to our rescue, both with money and work. The outfit all complete cost about one hundred fifteen dollars and we have it all paid for except seventeen dollars; many thanks to the Saints and friends who have assisted us, and may God reward.

The work here is not moving very rapidly, but we hope to move wisely so our work will not need to be undone, and will try and not let zeal overrule our wisdom. We can see room for improvement here as well as elsewhere. The Saints are mostly young in the work, but with few exceptions are willing to learn. Brn. Barmore and J. M. Baggerly were with us in June, and gave us some fine sermons, which were appreciated by the writer at least.

My health has been very poor since I came South, and I am sorry to say is still getting worse. I am not able to sit up all day now, but am doing what I can. I have been gradually getting weaker for some time, but the needs are so great I can not find a stopping place, so will work on while I have strength. I have no appetite and the food I do eat seems to do me no good. I am trying to endure my sickness patiently; but I need relief soon.

This is a very prejudiced place, and people have been humbugged so much in religion that they are very shy of any that seems to be new to them.

Pray for us that we may get strong in body.

J. W. ADAMS.

SACRAMENTO, California, July 11.

Editors Herald: The next morning after close of General Conference I started for the mission field in California, arriving in Sacramento, April 25, several hours late, occupying the pulpit there the two following Sundays, and baptizing one, Sr. Laura G. Surles, who had been a member of the Utah church, but received the truth after the facts were shown her. The Reverend Thompson of the United Brethren Church cordially extended the use of their baptismal font for the occasion. We met about a year ago for the first time and conversed freely concerning our respective faiths, and he has invited me to exchange pulpits with him.

I next went to Dayton, about one hundred miles from Sacramento, where we held preaching and testimony services, at which the Spirit was present in remarkable power. In the evening I preached at Centerville, twenty miles from Dayton, and continued services there for eleven nights, baptizing four on the following Sunday at Chico, where we were compelled to go for a convenient place to perform the ordinance, although it was fourteen miles from Centerville and seven from Dayton where two of those baptized reside. I trust the Lord and his work will grow dearer to them from day to day as they now rejoice in the restored gospel.

June 1 was occupied at Sacramento again and arrangements were made to have our district tent shipped to Chico, where we went and started a series of meetings on the 7th, which continued nearly four weeks. Bro. Keeler came over from Fruita, sixty miles distant, and assisted for one week, after which he was called to Oakland by duties there.

On June 16 we met in public discussion in Chico, Elder Joseph E. Robinson of the Utah Mormon church; he is the president of their mission on this coast. We have not space for details, but from all we have heard through outside sources, it is conceded that we clinched our points and that they failed to meet them. He stated before the audience of about two hundred that he could not stay there, but his brethren (of whom there were five present) would be there and would meet us in discussion and fight it out if it took all summer, but after the evening's debate closed and about half-past eleven he absolutely refused to keep his promise, saying: "I am not going to put my men in the breach," and "I am not going to leave my men in the hole." He said he was sorry he had held the debate; that they would not have done so but the ones who first signed the proposition did not know that they had been commanded not to debate with the Josephites. One of their own elders admitted to me in the presence of Bro. Keeler that Robinson did wrong to pretend that he was willing to meet us as he said before the audience and then afterward flatly refuse to keep his word. The debate has done our cause some good in Chico, the local paper admitting that we made the point that polygamy was no part of the original faith. Several, not our people, have requested the privilege of signing their names to a certificate that Robinson agreed to meet us, and publish it in the paper that all may know he has broken his word. Perhaps we shall do so later.

Bro. Hammer was ordained an elder on June 8 and has assisted much in the work in his locality during the past two years, having previously labored as a priest.

During tent-meetings I baptized three, the result of the services, and leave others investigating our faith. Preparations are now being made for a series of tent-meetings here with our new tent, and later we hope to make an effort in Santa Rosa and other places. The Lord has greatly sustained me spiritually, for which I am thankful.

TABOR, Iowa, July 12.

Editors Herald: The work in the Fremont District is moving steadily onward. While we may not report as many baptisms as some other fields, the church is growing in influence and favor among the people. The name of the church has been made honorable wherever the Saints are known by their faithful and upright lives, which makes the work of the preacher much easier. In new places, however, prejudice is strong, but in so far as this is removed by the preaching of the gospel, the cause is being strengthened.

The missionary force of the district has been somewhat crippled through sickness preventing two of our brethren from entering the field. May the good Master send them relief as they may desire, that they may once more take up the work. The district tent was operated for about three weeks at Red Oak with encouraging results. On the last Sunday there, June 22, we were made glad by Bro. W. H. Kelley dropping in on us unawares. On account of the weather being wet and chilly services for the day were held in the house of Bro. Ware adjoining. Bro. Kelley preferred to listen during the afternoon service, but was induced to preach in the evening, which he did to the satisfaction of all, reviewing much of what had been previously preached and confirming the same. The next morning he moved on toward his field of labor in the Rocky Mountains. Our next effort will be at Randolph.

Preparations are being rapidly made for our coming reunion, which will be held near Tabor, August 16-24. Fine grounds, water good and plentiful, meals to be had upon the ground, telephone connection, and rural mail delivery, with other conveniences. We look for a larger attendance than usual judging from present indications. We would be glad for a larger representation from the Pottawattamie District to help swell the numbers. Will not the Saints there make up their minds to come and spend a few days with us? Brethren, come and get acquainted with us and we shall all enjoy ourselves the better. Saints, look out for special announcement in the church and local papers.

Editors Herald: The missionaries have begun tent work in this place. Bro. J. D. Stead came July 4 and took possession of our sanctum in our absence, and July 5 we erected the tent purchased last year. Bro. Stead preached in the evening to a fair audience. Bro. Vaughn spoke Sunday at eleven o'clock to a few, with good interest. Bro. Stead spoke in the evening to an increased audience; some of the best people in attendance. I hope that good will be done in this place, because much labor has been done here. Sr. Vaughn is reported sick at this writing. It is to be hoped she will speedily recover, as Bro. Vaughn has been transferred to the Northwestern Kansas District and is to leave for his mission field about July 14. We are sorry to lose him.

Bro. J. S. Snively came this evening in time to occupy the evening hour, but services were cut short by the appearance of a storm which only resulted in a light rain.

All well at this writing, so far as I know.

RAYMOND, Idaho, July 9.

Editor Herald: I am still aboard the old ship Zion battling for the truth. On April 21 I was called home from Lamoni, Iowa, by the severe illness of my wife, and was detained at home for some time. But I am happy to say that she has so far recovered that she is able to attend to her household duties. And while her health is not so good as it was before her illness, yet I feel grateful to our heavenly Father for his loving kindness in sparing her life and blessing her with the degree of health and strength that she now enjoys.

I have labored principally in Idaho since my return to this mission, and last month I baptized four precious souls into Christ. On June 28, 29, I attended the Idaho District conference held at Malad City, Idaho. Elders S. D. and J. H. Condit, of the missionary force, were in attendance also. The conference passed off pleasantly, and in some respects was the best conference that I have attended in the district. Elder S. D. Condit remained in Malad City, where he expected to labor for a short time. Elder J. H. Condit started for the Teton Basin and Jackson's Hole country, while I came on to the Bear Lake country. From here I expect to go west to the Snake River country, visiting Soda Springs and other points between here and there; but how far west, or what places I may visit, will have to be governed to some extent by financial conditions. The prospect for gospel work in Idaho and Wyoming is good, and I believe that much good will be accomplished if we live and labor faithfully.

MALLARD, Iowa, July 14.

Editors Herald: Observation teaches me that Galland's Grove District, which comprises twenty-one counties in the northwestern part of Iowa, is one of the richest farming districts in the State. To-day the great fields of wheat, oats, barley, corn, and other cereals testify of its productiveness.

While the Saints are keeping pace with their neighbors in the accumulating of the "mammon of unrighteousness," they are also "growing in grace" and in the knowledge of the great work of God. Since the General Conference I have visited all the branches in the district except two, also many Saints in isolated places; and have found that personal visits as well as public sermons favoring the law of tithing is a good way to get that part of the gospel of Christ before the members.

There is a growing disposition on the part of many of the Saints to comply with the temporal law. This is as it should be.

I have found instances where the parents failed to comply with the law of tithing, but the children are not making that mistake. As a district we are hopeful of good results, not alone in church finances, but in every other department of gospel work.

Elder J. M. Baker and wife are still doing tent work in Cherokee. Bro. W. H. Kephart closed a successful meeting at Rodman, which is a new place. One was baptized, while many others were counted near the door of entering in. Elder J. R. Sutton has been diligent in sowing the gospel seed with Harlan as his objective point. Bro. "Tommy" Jones has demonstrated his faith and zeal in the Master's cause by opening up new places.

The town of Mallard is to be treated to an extra Religio and Sunday-school convention, convening Friday, August 8, at fifteen minutes past eight in the evening, continuing over Sunday. The convention work will be in charge of the district officers. A noble band of Saints live in and near Mallard, and we believe good will result from the sessions.

A grove meeting has been announced to be held, Sunday, August 10, at Bro. E. Ford's, five miles west of Mallard.

The next place in which I am expected to labor is thirteen miles from here, but the distance and time it takes to reach there seems short when Bro. D. King cries "all aboard," for his swift driving team soon carries you there.

I have been kindly received by all, and truly hope the blessings of God will abide with all his Saints.

When sending tithes and offerings address me at Deloit, Iowa. In branches where you have Bishop's agents, please favor them.

C. J. HUNT.

DUBLIN GULCH, Northwest Territory, Alaska,
May 13, 1902.

Editors Herald: Knowing that the Saints, especially at Omaha and Valley, would like to hear from us and what we are doing in this far away, frozen northland, I thought the easiest way would be to write to the HERALD rather than individually, as I am almost afraid I promised to; but my excuse is the inconvenience; no ink or pen, and even paper scarce. I have no way of sending a letter to Dawson, three hundred miles away, but am in hopes some prospector or bushman (hunter) may wander here and I would have the opportunity of getting it mailed.

Last August eight of us started for the Klondike, our little grand-daughter, Okla Rawlins (a babe), making the ninth soul. But Bro. Archie Brown was taken sick on the train and was obliged to return home upon arriving at Green River, Wyoming. By his son returning with him we were only delayed at Seattle two days. We engaged passage on the ocean steamer, City of Seattle, and about ten o'clock at night she glided out to sea. How I did wish it was daylight! It looked like a leap in the dark, and the fast-receding shore and the lights all looked so safe—much more than that watery trail ahead of us. Some one has made the remark upon seeing the ocean, "Here is something there is enough of," and that is just about what I thought at that time. However, we had a pleasant voyage, and as we mingled and conversed with the passengers we did not neglect, when opportunity offered, to tell them the glorious news that had budded, blossomed, and was fast ripening in these last days,—the restoration of the gospel,—and of many of the details that make up the whole. We found one especially interested gentleman (whose card gave his profession as "attorney at law"), who sat up till a late hour asking questions and reading some in our books, the testimony of the three and eight witnesses seeming to have a peculiar significance for him.

On the fifth day we arrived at Skagway, where we only stayed over night. Not much to be seen there, however. We visited a curio shop where were exhibited old Russian brassery; coffee-pots, lamps, etc., and if being battered and worn denoted age, they were indeed old. Articles of all kinds, elaborately beaded by the native Alaskans, were also displayed in profusion.

The next day we took the narrow gauge railway for White Horse. We glided caressingly around the rocks, through tunnels, some places a wall of solid rock on one side, and a yawning abyss on the other. One gentleman said that he came over that road at a time when a boat was being freighted over, and he became so uneasy, half expecting the train to topple over, that he stood on the platform steps with one foot in the air ready to jump. Well, we were not that nervous, but were glad, nevertheless, when the little engine ran panting to the little Yukon town of White Horse. The men folks, previous to this, had left the train at Carribou Crossing, intending to get their boat, and float down to the town. They would also have to "shoot" the dangerous White Horse Rapids, a feat the women did not care to participate in. In a couple of days the brethren came stalking in the hotel, very wet and tired. They had just got through the rapids that go mad about a mile south of the town. Brn. Hollingsworth and Gillespey declared money would not hire them to come through there again.

At this place we bought and shipped on the steamer Eldorado a large outfit of tools, clothing, and provisions and Bro. Hollingsworth went along to look after the goods, which were to be unloaded at Stewart Island. Bro. Suttles wanted to know if Abbie and I would not prefer going on the steamer. Oh, no! we would go in our own boat. How both Abbie and I afterwards did regret the choice of boats; but she did not say so much as I about it, at least I did not hear her.

Our boat was twenty-four feet in length with seven-foot beam, and wore a coat of red paint; and as we drifted lazily from the shore down the tawny Yukon, a four-hundred-twenty-five-mile journey, I anticipated a pleasant trip, and so it was for that afternoon. We camped that night on an island at the edge of Lake Labarge. This lake is thirty or forty miles long and from three to four miles wide, and at times and seasons gets alarmingly rough. The morning showed us rough water, very different in appearance from the evening before. However, they concluded to start; so, seating ourselves, with Bro. Suttles at the sweep, Rawlins and Gillespey at the oars, they pulled from the shore. It was right then I got my "best" scare, for it appeared in spite of the frantic efforts of our oarsmen we would be drawn on the rocks, and oh, such rocks! In my mind's eye I can yet see those churning waters as they would dance and leap over the gray boulders, and hear their loud bellowings. "Power, boys; give me power," cried the steersman, and then we gained, and parted company with the borders of the lake, and all breathed more freely. The sail was then hoisted, and the wind being in the right direction we sailed, but again we were to be made uneasy, to say the least. The waves grew more turbulent. The wind arose in its might. Abbie grew seasick and had to lie down. I thought of the warning of being "many dangers" on the waters in these days, and I held little Okla close to me and asked my husband if he could not get to shore. "No; we are safer here than to try a landing," and indeed it appeared so.

But such a state of affairs could not last always, and with thankful hearts we left the sprightly Labarge and glided out on the smooth but exceedingly swift waters of Thirty-mile River. We raced along past the skeleton of a wrecked steamer, (not a cheerful sight,) her white ribs exposed, her head inclining wearily shoreward, and the water pouring in and out of her broken sides. We passed steamers, large woodpiles corded high (fuel for the steamboats), creeks, and rivers that vomit their waters in the ever receiving Yukon.

At length Stewart Island dawned on our vision, and there stood Bro. Hollingsworth watching for us. Bro. Suttles led the way to a small cabin and said, "How do you like the house that Jack built?" "Very well," was answered. A Yukon stove (sheet iron) stood in a corner, which threw out a grateful warmth. The cabin was small, but it was home for a while. In about two weeks we were at the mouth of the McQuestion River, some of our party going in the steamboat Prospector, and the red boat was poled and pulled up by the rest of our party. As the steamer reached the shore Indians came running up seemingly from all directions, not even their stoic features disguising their curiosity. They looked at us with wide open eyes, winking only when actually compelled to, and in return we interestedly regarded them. A Canadian police came and politely helped us up the slippery bank. On the morrow we rowed across the river and began our ascent up the McQuestion. Now going up a stream is very different than going down, in more ways than one. The McQuestion is fearfully swift and very crooked, with rapids at every zigzag. With a stout rope, and a windlass in case of necessity, the men battled every foot of ground going up stream; and when we arrived at "Forty-mile Cabin" we concluded to cache the goods and stay until the river was frozen over and then sled the remainder of the distance, as the weather was getting cold, and the water was freezing along the edges of the stream. The days also were drawing to the point when we only had about five to six hours daylight.

It was while at this cabin we witnessed the stampede to Duncan Creek. One day on starting after a pail of water, I saw a considerable crowd of men with dog teams rounding the bend. They were crying, "Mush! Mush on!" and I called to Abbie, for the brethren were at the McQuestion and I did not look for or expect any one in forty miles of us. Many men passed and repassed the following month, staking claims. They went all kinds of weather. The jingling of bells and the yelping of the Malamot and Siwash dogs, and men scurrying along helped to break the tedious monotony.

While at "Forty-mile," many meals my daughter and I prepared for the travelers, and when favorable opportunity offered a chance to say a few words on the subject nearest our hearts we did so. I never remember an instance when talking about the gospel, that impatience or disregard was shown. One time during conversation with a gentleman on this same subject, I handed him the Book of Mormon for examination, saying that the Indians were descendants of the Jews. Hearing an exclamation of surprise, I turned around and looked into the startled eyes of a young half-breed attendant. Then we talked to him for a short time of his race. I still in memory see his long, straight hair, his black, starry eyes, and the expression of intense surprise on his face.

In January we left and went thirty-five miles farther north to Five Cabins. We were tied on a sled, and as we trailed over the frozen McQuestion I smiled grimly as the thought came to me, "Suppose the ice breaks with us and we go in the river?" and I tugged at the rope arms that encircled me, but I guess my husband intended for us to stay with the sleigh, whether at the bottom of the river or over a cliff.

This was a "white march." Every tree, leaf, or twig was laden with snow. A storm came up, and the men with parkay-hoods pulled well over their faces braved the fierce north-blown sleet and snow. It grew dark. Bro. Suttles lighted the lantern. The dogs scampered no longer. The men were tired and so were they. Bro. David (the forerunner) had a blazing spruce-wood fire made for us. On arriving at the Cabins the clearing around the buildings looked like giant mushrooms where stood the stumps of trees, each one supporting a great head of snow. There was home again for six weeks.

It was at this place that a mad-dog rushed in our cabin. Running out again he entered the next place and sprang at the men, but strong hands held him secure, and he was chained, where he frothed and leaped, and in the morning the men put an end to his sufferings. Surely the Lord protected us that night; for as I stood on the bank of the river admiring the beautiful moonlight, the animal came up the bank and was at my side when I raised the wooden latch, and entered at the same time, I never suspecting his condition.

On a clear, stinging cold morning we started for Dublin Gulch, and as we rounded the bend we abruptly came to the very door of the cabin that Jack built four years ago. "Here we are, and you are the first woman, either white or red, that has ever been on this creek, I fancy."

In a few days the men went hunting, and pretty soon the muffled detonation of a gun was heard, and shortly after Bro. Suttles came, holding up two fingers and saying the Indian words, "Hi, oh muck-a-muck" (plenty to eat). He had killed two moose.

It continues daylight for some months to come; is fast setting in; only a few hours dark at this writing, and mosquitoes are coming; are a terrible pest in this country. They say that "they almost eat you up after a while."

The men went on one more trip to the mouth of the McQuestion, one hundred eighteen miles away, and in about two weeks were back with heavy loads of provisions. While away on this journey Abbie had a fall, and a badly-sprained ankle was the result. It is not all right yet, but hope it will be soon. Oh, we were so glad to see them! We were so lonely here by ourselves and Bro. Hollingsworth. Bro. Rawlins, his face all smiles, told us he had seven SAINTS' HERALDS on the load. Good news indeed! The sergeant at the "mouth" sent us a bundle of papers and magazines and we read hungrily for a while.

Not so long after this my husband and I arose at four in the morning (daylight there), and with dog team started to climb Dublin dome, the highest mountain in our neighborhood, eight miles away. We went until it became so steep we abandoned the sled, and at last, almost out of breath, I stood upon the most elevated point. As I gazed I exclaimed, "I have seen Alaska!" "Yes, and that great blue mountain you can see in the distance is beyond the great Mackenzie River that flows into the Arctic Ocean," said Bro. Suttles. As the wind had full sweep around the stony head of the dome we did not tarry long, and coming to the sled we tobogganed down.

May 19.—I must hurry and bring this letter to a close, but I still have a little more to tell. The men are busy making sluice-boxes, a tripod to hold a chain pulley, also a boat to carry us down the river to where we left the red one, where at "Forty-mile" she was pulled on the frozen shore, face upwards and beaten full of snow, a strange object for the timber wolves to sniff and stare at, and where the wolverine and marten may track up her white coverlid. Spring is here—is in the air. The glaciers are unlocking themselves and are creeks again, creeping along to find the rivers.

May 24.—Sluice-boxes are in place, and the creek is sweeping unrestrainedly over her bouldery bed. The men are busy throwing out rock preparatory to turning on the hydraulic hose. We hope to do well here, not only for our own sakes but for our beloved church also. Sluicing season is short and we must start away from here reasonably early, for if we do not come home this fall we intend to winter in Dawson if all is well.

This is a land of cold and gold, the home of the moose and caribou, and plenty of fish in the rivers, especially the salmon. There is also plenty of room and plenty of gloom. It takes money to come here and once here if you have a brawny arm and willing hands, you might in time receive compensation for your many hardships endured. Dear Saints, good-bye, and do not forget that a few of us, of the same faith yearn to see you and will as soon as practicable.

"In far away Alaska Where the Yukon waters flow"

MAMIE SUTTLES.

MANCHESTER, Texas, July 9.

Editors Herald: For about two weeks I have been laboring in the eastern part of Red River County, Bro. Erwin in the western part. Because of the press of the work we have been separated for about two weeks. I have been making an extra effort in the Sunday-school work for the past month. It is new to most all the Saints in this part, but from the way they take hold of the work I do not think that it will always be new to them. I have organized two schools recently, and although this is a time when money is very scarce here they made up enough to purchase books and records so they could conduct their schools along lines laid down in the by-laws of the General Association. This is quite encouraging to us who have worked so hard to get the Sunday-school work started in Northeastern Texas.

I have not been able to visit all the schools in the district, nor have I communicated with them as I would like to because of press of other work. I would be pleased to meet as many of the Sunday-school workers at district convention in Arkansas commencing August 8 as can possibly come. We will have one or two business sessions in order that we may more thoroughly organize and come to a better understanding of our duty. I pray for a profitable time.

Bro. Erwin and I have enjoyed the Spirit to a goodly degree in our missionary work this year. The outlook for an ingathering in the near future in this part of the field is very good.

Crops of all kinds in this part of Texas are splendid. The people should be thankful to the Lord for such. This summer has been very warm. This being a heavily timbered country makes it very oppressive. I am feeling well in this great work and hopeful for its near triumph.

Editors Herald: This beautiful afternoon, after having driven over the surrounding country and seeing the bountiful crops that are being harvested, and recognizing in this God's goodness towards the children of men, I wonder if the servants of the Master will reap as bountiful a harvest of the souls of men.

Elder T. R. White, my colaborer, and myself are holding meetings here in a private house with fair interest. Will continue over Sunday. Monday, with the help of Bro. White's faithful missionary horse, "Dan," we expect to go to Lowry City, Missouri, to make preparations for a grove meeting, to begin Thursday night, four miles northeast of town. Owing to the busy season our crowds are not large. We expect larger crowds later in the season.

Editors Herald: I see in the HERALD, volume 11, number 28, page 275, an appeal for means to print tracts for other nations and the brother asks, Shall I receive? God's word says yes, and I say yes, when the HERALD takes it in hand and says that the money will be used to that end. I am poor, but I will give fifty cents, and if every one will do the same according to their means, that will bring a good fund. If that is not enough, come again. If I can not preach I want to help those who can and will when I see it is needed, and I think that is a good way to convert anyone that is honest, to get them to read the word of God and then do just as Joseph Smith did, ask God in faith for wisdom, and say like Jacob, I will not let thee go except thou bless me. I know that some will not give, but this is the work of God and he will take care of it.

F. T. DOBIE.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, May, 1902.

A word to the silent preachers who come month after month to us who dwell away out here on those fragments of coral and soil that dot the Pacific Ocean, bringing the same words of cheer and instruction, reproof and correction, that those who dwell in the center stake of the land of Zion are favored with, thus doing their part in helping all, wherever they may be, to arrive at the same standard of righteousness. We appreciate those helps, and look eagerly forward to the time of their arrival as a time of feasting; though I fear I treated friend HERALD a little coolly at first, when it made its appearance in the new dress, by letting it rest on the table while I spent whole evenings with the Ensign. For truth to say, it seemed so distant, so reserved; not at all like the same dear familiar-faced HERALD. I was two months in getting myself adjusted to its new features.

But however reserved the appearance may be, it is plain that the new dress has not diminished or impaired its spirituality. Some of its contents are like a flame of inspiration. Let us find, if we can, an epistle or chapter written by any one of the former apostles that will reflect a greater degree of inspirational light on its line than that recently written by Apostle G. T. Griffiths concerning foreign missions. The spirit of it was beautiful, elevating! It seemed to me like a new beginning of the latter-day work. How I then wished it were possible to reverse the great engine of time, and cause the years to roll backward and give to us two our youth again, that we might at least hope to take part in the great drama that loomed up to the spiritual view, bright with possibilities that beckoned the cheerful worker like the Macedonian cry. I never before felt the force of the promises of God to his ministry in these last days, as at that moment. What more could one ask? It stirred again within me the spirit of energy that has of late been waning, in spite of every effort to retain and maintain youthful order. To go to India as a missionary's wife has been my dream from childhood. But alas! Youth with its vigor and enthusiasm has fled and ripening years are creeping on apace. India has not been attained, neither have other anticipations and conquests that seemed just a little way in the future from 1873 when we retraced our former steps, somewhat, and made a new start for the heavenly kingdom, with the one purpose at heart; viz., to make known the restored gospel and its saving power. But while some grow old, others are coming forward better prepared, and the gospel will go forth. And it seemed to me while reading the above-named article, that the time was at hand, even at our doors, when "this gospel of the kingdom" would be sent to these nations spoken of by Bro. Griffiths.

Following close upon those words of preparation, came the last revelation; and while musing upon it the sad features as well as those that were pleasing, both documents blended themselves together in my mind as being two parts of one revelation. The calling of those young men to the Quorum of Twelve was but another note of prelude or step of preparation to bring to pass the work portrayed by Bro. Griffiths. And glancing onward in line with the same thought, it would scarcely be a prophecy to say that those young men were not called to take the places of those faithful veterans who previously occupied to rest at ease in Zion. Oh no, there is labor and sacrifice, for them, as well as the honor of being chosen vessels to bear the gospel to the nations of the earth, and bring to pass much righteousness to the glory of God.

While I listened to my husband reading the recent revelation and the words of the President of the church when presenting it to the body, it brought to my remembrance a vision I heard Bro. D. S. Mills relate years ago. The portions I remember were these: He saw himself with many others on board of a staunch, newly built ship. Bro. Joseph Smith was the captain. The ship had sailed well for a time, then gradually slowed up until she was at a standstill. Upon looking over the sides to discern the cause, it was seen that she was surrounded by drift-wood in a solid mass. Efforts were made to free her, but for a time they were fruitless. Some became dissatisfied and clambered over the side of the ship and walked away out on the driftwood of great timbers, and were seen no more. The delay seemed tedious, though the captain manifested no irritation, and frequently spoke words of reassurance to those on board. Presently the masses of floating timber broke asunder and the ship took a sudden start and sailed so fast that some became alarmed again, and settling their hats more firmly on their heads and buttoning their coats about them, occasionally one would make his way to where the captain stood with helm in hand, and say in anxious tones of inquiry, "Is she not going too fast, Bro. Joseph?" His only answer, as he straightened himself more erect, if possible, and making an impressive gesture with his arm as he pointed to the compass, was, "Look!"

Now, dear HERALD, I feel almost ashamed for having jotted down those thoughts. It may not be exactly in keeping with her position for an handmaiden to speak thus concerning the things that pertain to the work of the servants, and remembering too that these things of which I have spoken will probably have been witnessed to, recorded, and gone into the past before this reaches you. However it will be another testimony.

SISTER E. BURTON.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, July 3.

Editors Herald: I feel impressed to express my appreciation and thanks for the spiritual food we receive through the columns of the HERALD and Ensign. They are both welcome visitors in our home, and their precious columns are read with much pleasure and then passed to a dear old sister who lives near by who reads them in her lonely hours and then distributes them among her friends.

For the past four weeks we have had the pleasure of a visit from Bro. G. H. Hilliard, who has delivered a number of eloquent sermons while in our midst. He also attended our district conference and reunion at Pipe Creek, and we feel that he has accomplished much good while in this district. Our reunion was a success and many eloquent and instructive sermons were delivered by Brn. G. H. Hilliard, H. O. Smith, Romanan Wight, and John Harp, Brn. Hilliard and Smith doing most of the speaking. At the conclusion of the afternoon services on Sunday, the last day of the reunion, Bro. John Harp led nine into the waters of baptism, six of these being of one family. There were many faithful Saints on the ground, and all seemed to enjoy the spirit of love for one another and seemed amply paid for their efforts in attending.

After returning to San Antonio Bro. Hilliard preached to us the following two nights, and the next morning departed for Los Angeles, California. We have secured a nice large hall here in the city for Bro. H. O. Smith to lecture six nights in succession on the Book of Mormon, beginning on the 5th inst.

San Antonio is a beautiful city and we feel there is much good to be accomplished here, but as yet we have no church or place to worship, hence it is so hard for the elders to get the gospel properly before the people. My desire and prayers are that some day we may have a nice church in San Antonio.

We all feel encouraged and desire to remain faithful. And I believe if the Saints will heed the instruction given by Bro. Hilliard in his sermon the morning of June 21 that there will be more love and unity among them. I trust we may have the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister,

CORA CURTIS.

LAMIRA, Ohio, July 5.

Editors Herald: Myself and family are still among the living, striving to keep God's laws and live faithful. There are only four Saints living at this place, an aged brother and sister, my husband, and myself. We are not discouraged as yet. We meet on the Sabbath day and have prayer-meetings; but we feel sad at times when no one else will meet with us. There was a branch here at one time, but it is disorganized and has been for quite a number of years. Some moved away, some died, and some strayed from the path of rectitude and right. Our nearest branch is Wheeling, West Virginia. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that we may not become discouraged, that our neighbors may learn the ways of truth and join with us, and that we may have a branch here again and a house of worship erected. We formerly lived in West Virginia near the village of Glen Easton and belonged to the Fairview Branch, in which husband was a priest. We moved to this State two years ago last November and bought a small farm of fifty-six acres. The Lord blessed us in many ways. We knew no one; every person was strange to us, but we soon had many friends. Every one seemed friendly and very kind and good to us, and we had not a hard feeling toward any person and did not know that we had an enemy in this world that would want to do us an injury. But one cold night last winter at half-past twelve o'clock we awoke and found our barn wrapped in flame. By a very narrow escape we got the dumb animals out of the stable, which was underneath the barn. The fire consumed all our grain, about six hundred bushels, all our hay, straw, fodder, machinery, wagon, carriages, all of our farming implements, beside some goods that belonged to husband's father. Our loss is estimated at two thousand dollars. We carried no insurance, as we insured once and the company broke up. Since that we have had some loss in cattle, also had sickness in the family and have passed through a great many other troubles that are sore and grievous to bear. But we try to place our trust in God though it seems hard, and hope that what we have lost will be restored to us in his own due time.

This year has brought us many troubles, but we feel to sacrifice many things that we may have the HERALD in our home. We do not feel as though we could do without it, nor without Zion's Hope for our children. We took the Ensign last year, but do not feel able to take all three of them this year, but trust that we may be able again in the near future to have the Ensign in our home. I love to read the church papers, and rejoice to see how God's work is prospering on the earth, and trust that it may until the end shall come.

There are people here of nearly all denominations, and they have all been good and kind to us. Professors and nonprofessors have aided us in our loss, but we have not received any help as yet from any of the Saints except husband's father and Bro. Lucas, who lives near to us, who has been a father to us ever since we lived here. Some of the Saints have visited us, and we were glad to see them. Among the number were Elder O. J. Tary, of Wheeling; Elder F. J. Ebeling, of Conneautville, Pennsylvania, and Elder James Craig, of Glen Easton, who has preached us some strengthening and encouraging sermons. We are glad to have any of the Saints come and see us. I love all the Saints. When we bow in our family circle to ask God to help us to live faithful and thank him for all the blessings he has bestowed upon us, we never forget to ask him to remember all of the Saints everywhere and bless them. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that we may have patience to bear the trials and disappointments of this life, that we may be able and worthy to gain eternal life in the world that is to come.

Your sister,

ESTELLA WAYT.

LAMONI, July 17.

Editors Herald: It is possible some may wonder why I am not on duty in my field, hence I feel it my duty to tell them that sickness prevents me. My wife has been seriously afflicted since December and continues to be, and hence I am not able to attend to missionary work. But we still believe in the God of miracles, who is the same now as in days of yore and whose power is not confined to time or place; hence we still trust him though he may slay us. But while we are passing through the trying ordeal of suffering, we are often led to wonder why his children should continue to suffer so, and many times it is those who are engaged in missionary labor whose work is hindered thereby.

I can assure the Saints of the Fremont District that I am anxious to be doing my heavenly Father's work, but our anxiety and worry will not lessen our obligations and responsibilities of home duties, and care of the one or ones who have claim upon our care.

I desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my companion, that she may be healed.

Secretary's financial report: receipts, $2.36; expenditures, $5.69; due secretary, $3.33. Auditors reported secretary's and treasurer's reports to be correct. In the evening short speeches were delivered by Elders Gregory, Buschlen, A. E. Mortimer, and R. C. Evans, Maggie MacGregor, Maggie Hildreth, Lizzie Morrison, and Ernest Long. A collection, amounting to $5.80, was taken up for the Religio, and one for district expenses amounting to $3.60. Adjourned to meet again Friday, 10 a. m., prior to next conference at same place.

Pastoral.

To the Officers and Members of the Northeastern Illinois District; Greeting: After an absence of five years, I find myself back to my old field again. During these five years many changes have taken place. Some noble workers have finished their tasks here, and have gone to their rest. New ones have moved in and taken their places. Some have grown tired of the conflict, and have laid down their armors, and have joined the great throng of careless, indifferent souls. These with other changes, too numerous to mention here, make this field a very different one from the one I left, which I then considered second to none in the church.

I have not yet been able to visit all the branches in the district, but my visits thus far have given me both pleasure and pain. Pleasure with meeting old-time friends, who are still holding on to the "rod of iron;" pain to meet with so many who have grown careless and indifferent.

It would be humiliating to name all the discouraging features of the work in the district, therefore I shall refrain. An index to the situation, however, may be found in the published minutes of the late conference, which shows that in this district of some ten branches, but three reports of officers outside the missionary force were received. Now, brethren, this ought not to be. Just think of it! A large district like the Northeastern Illinois District, and only three officers reporting. For some reason, the spirit of indifference is robbing the life from the churches, and we all have great need to arouse ourselves lest we be found among the foolish virgins when the Master comes.

In order to arouse the membership it is very essential that the officers should be active. Our teachings, in order to be effective, must be by example as well as by precept. We must be examples to the flock. The greatest enemy that we have to contend with now is indifference. We can not afford to give way to this spirit. Indifference results in inactivity, and inactivity means death. Let any member of our body remain inactive, and it will die. The same is true of the "body of Christ," the church.

In order that our work shall be acceptable to God, it is very important that we follow the Lord's directions. Among other things, the Lord says: "Let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling."—D. C. 83:21. Therefore if you be an elder, stand in that office and labor as an elder. If a priest, stand in that office and labor as a priest. Let the teachers and deacons do the same. But let not the elder seek to occupy the priest's office, nor the priest the teacher's office, but let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling. This commandment means something, brethren. Our gifts and callings differ. Every man is to be ordained according to the gifts of God unto him. If this is done, and then all work in their own offices, our work will be successful and a better condition of unity will prevail. There may be circumstances when this rule can not be fully complied with without injury to the body. If so, and we have to deviate, it will be the exception that governs. We are referring to the rule, which should govern, as far as possible.

Every branch, no matter how small, should have a stated time for holding business meetings. In these meetings the branch officers should report to the branch and such business transacted as may be necessary. In small branches, or where the membership is scattered, once in three months may be often enough. But the officers of the branch should meet for counsel at least once a month, no matter if there are but two or three. At these counsel meetings the priest, teacher, and deacon should give their reports to the presiding officer, and the officers counsel together relative to their work. To assist in this matter, I have prepared some blank reports, which I will send to each branch, and earnestly ask that they be used as suggested. I will also send to each branch president a blank for him to fill out as his report to district conference. In these reports he will state the number of regular services held, about the average attendance, the number of times he has preached and attended services, the number of families visited, and also report as to the activity of the other branch officers, as well as the general spiritual condition of the branch, also its needs.

Every elder in the district should be sufficiently interested in his work to at least report to district conference. If you are doing nothing, say so, and let us know the cause. Perhaps we can help you. Priests who are not branch officers should also report. In this way the local workers will be recognized by the general church, as well as the missionaries. In some instances local workers may be accomplishing as much, and even more than the missionary, and the church at large should know who their workers are. Therefore, brethren, do not fail to report at next district conference, which convenes in Chicago, September 13.

It is very encouraging to see the zeal manifest among some of the local workers, especially in this city. This, with the assistance of the able missionary force of the district, should make our work a success all along the line, indications of which are already manifest.

I shall be pleased to be placed in communication with all the local workers, and shall be glad to render any help within my power. May the good Spirit direct us all, and make our work a success, is my prayer. In gospel bonds, F. G. Pitt, President of District. No. 3515 Rhodes Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Bishops' Notices.

To the Saints of Northern California I send this greeting, trusting the blessing of God is with you and that the same "anxious care" with reference to the gospel's success, is with you to stimulate you to the performance of those things which are therein named, and that your souls are acted upon by that holy influence that prompted you to enter the ranks of "a people who are everywhere spoken against." We realize that there is need of sterling rectitude to come from the popular to the unpopular. A recognition of something to be gained somewhere. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." In the recognition of the superiority of "our gospel" we should be as the man spoken of in Psalms 1: 1-3, that we, each of us, form a part of that mystical body of Christ, a part of the "family of God on earth," of whom the family in heaven also forms a part, to which we expect to some day be joined. When we consider that worth alone,—as God views worth, will insure us this, and place us beyond failure, let us seek to be, both temporal and spiritual, all that divine love and provision and opportunity extended can expect. As an individual, I realize that to find opportunity wasted and results lost, when those results are what we really want, will bring anguish of soul.

I thus speak that we may be aroused to an examination of personal conduct in word, thought, and deed. Do not be deceived; God is not mocked. What you sow that you will reap. These conditions can not be changed. With all due reverence, God himself can not change them, for it would necessitate a change in him, which can not be. Let us see to it, then, that we honor his law, which relates to us altogether, temporal and spiritual. "What God hath joined let no man put asunder." Equality in temporal things brings equality in spiritual things, and where one does not exist neither does the other. A great many think that the spiritual has precedence, but if they are joined they are of equal importance. We are to "desire the sincere milk of the word that we may grow thereby." Its real meaning, its implied meaning, and all it means, that we may get the substance of it. Let us stand together in the financial demands of the work, "That my work be not hindered, saith the Lord." No, do not let us hinder, but help. I take this means that I may reach you all, which I could otherwise not do. May peace abide. In bonds, Charles A. Parkin. No. 3010 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco.

Reunion Notices.

Through the kindness of Eben E. MacLeod, Chairman of the Western Passenger Association, reduced rates, on the certificate plan, have been secured over the lines in the association in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, Nebraska, and North and South Dakota, to those attending the annual reunion at Dow City, Iowa, from September 5 to 15. It will be necessary to pay full fare on going trip, and certificates should be procured from the local agents of each road over which you pass in going to Dow City. Those coming via Arion, Iowa, must not fail to procure certificates from that point to the reunion to make their certificates cover the entire route from starting point to the reunion. If we succeed in securing one hundred certificates where the going fare exceeds fifty cents before the time limit expires, you will be able to return over route covered by certificates for one third regular fare. Certificates will be issued from September 5 to 11 inclusive, when the time limit expires. Those attending the reunion after the expiration of time limit will receive no benefit from reduction in rates. We were successful in securing rates last year, and there is no reason why we should not succeed this year if we are careful. Let no one fail to procure the necessary certificates in coming to the reunion, even though he must return too soon to be benefited by the reduction in rates. Let us learn to live and labor to benefit others, as, in so doing, we demonstrate the good and power manifest in practical Christianity. We came very near failing to secure reduced rates last year because a number attending the reunion failed to secure the required certificates because individually they could reap no benefit by so doing.

A number of the leading ministers of the church will be present to help make the reunion a success, and a cordial invitation is extended to any and all others to attend and take part with us, especially those laboring in the Galland's Grove and Little Sioux Districts who are near by. We have used our best judgment in sending out invitations to those of the ministry, but we have so many good, able men that we could not invite all, even if it had been wise to do so. Those attending must decide for themselves as to where duty and the best interests of the work demand their presence. We make this statement with the thought in mind that to every true soldier of Christ duty comes before pleasure.

We have done and still expect to do all in our power to make this coming reunion a success, and, so far as possible, give satisfaction to all concerned.

Come early and bring a good feeling and the Holy Spirit with you. Charles E. Butterworth, in behalf of Reunion Committee.

Des Moines District reunion convenes at Newton, Iowa, August 15, and will continue nine days. Everything promises well for a large attendance and a successful meeting. These reunions have been successful in the past and we believe that this one will be. It is the place where the Saints should gather to be taught and instructed in the necessity of executing the covenant we have made with God by sacrifice. The gathering time has come, and these reunions prepare us for the great reunion when those of all times and places will meet to worship God and glorify his holy name for ever and for ever. This meeting is not for the Saints of the Des Moines District alone, but an invitation is hereby extended to any outside of the district who may wish to join us, especially to those in Eastern and Southern Iowa who may not be nearer any other reunion. Unto all who may desire to meet with us we would say, Come. President Joseph Smith will be present at the meeting, and other leading elders of the church. Tents and board will be furnished as per notice in HERALD of July 16. Newton is located thirty-five miles east of Des Moines and is easily reached over the Rock Island Railway. The Critic is a magazine greatly to be prized by book-lovers. It keeps abreast of the times in the developments of literature. The July number contains many interesting things, among which might be mentioned "Dumas the Elder," by Gribble; "Literary Landmarks of New York," by Hemstreet; "Lenox in Literature," by Mallary.

The Limitations of a Minister.

He may not speculate; what broker would respect the man who wore a "cassock" vest into a bucket-shop? He may not write saleable books; the kind of books he can produce do not bring large "bounty." He may not lecture at high prices; at least, not if he does his work at home. He may not even be born rich; at any rate not without vitiating his usefulness as a pastor to large multitudes of people.

Again, his remuneration is not in terms of popularity. To some natures—always to shallow ones—this would be "wages" enough; but the irony of fate appears in that those who strive after popularity never get it. In about the same way that "Kissing goes by favor," so popularity goes, not to those who consciously strive for it, but to those who unconsciously merit it.

The appalling thing to consider is the methods often resorted to gain popularity. Some of these appear in advertisements every Saturday of themes for Sunday sermons. For example, in one column of one issue recently appeared the following: "Did Lot Like Salt? or, The Vice Crusade in Sodom;" "Take it by the Tail, or Samson's Revenge;" "Theme—Gossip; Text—'Ephraim Feedeth upon Wind.'" The insignificant thing is that these very men who on Sunday "court a smile when they should woo a soul," are the same who on Monday attend Conferences of Clergy to discuss problems such as "Why are the churches not filled?" and "How to get men to the service." Shades of Wesley, Huss, Savonarola, all the saints and all the martyrs! Why should such churches be filled? and what have sober, serious, honest, earnest-minded men in common with such "Popular Preachers?"—World's Work.

CONFESSION AND THE SACRAMENT.

It is an easy matter to misunderstand what men say and what they represent in regard to customs. In many of the branches, notably the larger ones, it is the custom of the presiding officers when administering the sacrament to give an opportunity at the opening of the meeting and before the blessing of the emblems for any one who may have desire to make statement, confession of wrong-doing or anything which may tend to prevent them from partaking of the sacrament acceptably, and asking forgiveness of those whom they may have offended.

This does not apply to the general membership or those who may not have been guilty of injury to their fellows, but simply refers to those who may be conscious of having done something to offend others, or contrary to church rule. The intention of giving the opportunity is to allow such persons the privilege of making the matter straight before partaking of the sacrament.

We learn that some have misunderstood this and have taught that all persons present should, before partaking of the sacrament, make confession like this: "If I have injured any one, I ask them to forgive me." Obviously this is an error, and necessarily would be productive of considerable confusion; and if the assembly was even moderately large it would be impracticable for all to do that. For instance, if there were twenty persons present, it would take twenty or more minutes if each followed this rule; if forty persons, forty minutes; and if two hundred, two hundred minutes, or more than three hours, which is longer than sacrament meeting holds.

It is not to be presumed that in any ordinary branch of the church where the sacrament is administered at stated periods from time to time, any considerable number of the membership, nor the whole of them, would have been guilty of doing wrong to their fellows, nor guilty of such breaches of the law and rule of the church as would necessitate such confession, the occurrence of such breach of law or wrong-doing against persons being the exception and not the rule; and unless a person had been guilty consciously, it would be unnecessary and childish to make such confession.

The general custom should be as it is in most branches—for the presiding elder to give a brief time in order that should there be any one who desires to make such confession he may have opportunity; but he can not and should not with propriety require any or all present to make such confession, but leave it to the judgment of the individuals themselves.

We hope that this may set right any mistakes that may have been made in this matter.

THE EDITOR AT KANSAS CITY AND INDEPENDENCE.

In returning from the dedication services at Springfield, Missouri, the Editor stopped at Independence and Kansas City, by the way, and stayed over Sunday, July 20, and attended Sunday services of the Sunday-schools of Kansas City Branches and suburbs, and the Religio, held in Budd Park in the northeastern portion of the city, and preached at the same place at three o'clock in the afternoon.

The forenoon exercises by the Sunday-school and Religio were very interesting, the day was a fine one, the grounds were beautiful, the audience appreciative, and the affair passed to the enjoyment and satisfaction of all.

At night the Editor spoke in the church at Independence. The attendance was good and the interest excellent. Whether the preacher did his part it is not competent for the Editor to state.

While in Independence the Editor was the guest of Bro. Alexander McCallum, whose wife is the daughter of the Editor. At Kansas City he was entertained at the home of Bro. W. R. Pickering, 512 Walrond Avenue.

DEBTS AND RESTITUTION.

Persons who before entering into the church, may have been in debt, or who may have wronged others by fraud or deceit, or have stolen and have not made restitution or been punished for theft, should by all means pay their debt or debts, or make proper arrangements for payment if possible to do it; rectify the wrong so far as it can be done, seeking pardon of those wronged, making restitution so far as lies in their power; make restoration of the article stolen or paying for it its equivalent value in money; pay a suitable interest on the debt unpaid, according to the legal rate of the State where debt was contracted, or a less rate if accepted by the creditor. It is not necessary to pay a usurious rate of interest as a penalty on either debt or restitution. Usurious interest is any amount paid over and above the specified rate established by statute; in some States this is six, in some eight, in others ten per cent.

If a debt is old, outlawed, or the person to whom it is due is dead or can not be found, an effort should be made to find the legal heir of the creditor and payment be made to him. To a man intending to be honest an honestly contracted debt will never be outlawed. He will pay it sooner, or later, when it is in his power to do it.

If a man has stolen and has not made restitution before he comes into the church he should do so as soon as he can thereafter. If he has done any other wrong he should make the wrong right if he can. If, however, the thing stolen can not be restored, because of the lapse of time, or the changed conditions surrounding the parties, then the repentance must be a ceasing to do the wrong and a learning to do and a doing of the right.

If the wrongs committed are of such a nature that no restitution can be made for good reasons, and this class of wrongs is a large one, then there can be no previous restoration or subsequent making of them good; in which case the "sorrow for sin," the humble penitence, the honest effort to forsake and shun even the appearance of evil, must be taken as sufficient and the wrong-doer relieved of responsibility. Nothing impossible should be exacted.

If persons to whom debts are due are pleased to compromise and take part of their debt, or forgive the debtor, it is sufficient. The same is true of cases where the one to whom the debt is due, or his representative can not be found. The same is true in case one against whom wrong has been done will pardon the wrong without demanding a restitution, or a penalty, when confession is made and pardon is asked by the wrong-doer.

In all this it must be remembered that it is not in the province of the elders to extend hope to murderers, known to be such, that their sin of murder will be remitted by the administration of the rite of baptism. We do not say that the rite should not be administered in any case, but we are not warranted in holding that murderers shall escape answering to God in the judgment for murder. He who commits murder with "malice aforethought," must expect only what mercy God as Judge in person may extend. So far as is known to us, all classes of those who shed the blood of their fellow men must answer for that deed in the great day.

Killing in self-defense, or in defense of home and family is not murder, and some kinds of manslaughter are not murders; and these may be expiated and some hope of remission be extended and entertained through obedience to the gospel ordinance where repentance is thorough and the witness of the Spirit given of acceptance by the Master.

Jesus asked his Father to forgive his murderers. The Book of Mormon has an exhortation to a certain people to "repent of all their murders;" and it may be possible that God has retained in his own right some way of final escape for such offenders as those referred to in the Book of Mormon and those for whom clemency was asked by Jesus.

FROM THE FIELD.

F. A. Smith reports for his mission. Forty-four men have reported to him a total of 1,096 sermons, an average of nearly twenty-five sermons each; twenty-nine baptized; one Religio and two Sunday-schools organized; three new openings. Bro. Smith has ordained one evangelical minister. He writes: "The Saints manifest an active interest in the work wherever I have visited so far. Many have expressed themselves as encouraged and strengthened to renew their efforts to help the work along and live higher spiritually than in the past. Nevertheless there are some discouragements to meet. Some of the force have been hindered by sickness and other causes, keeping some out of the field entirely, and making others very late in getting into their fields. While as a rule the whole force has done well, all things considered, rainy, cold weather which has hindered the holding of meetings is reported from all parts of the field this spring. Some little opposition from the outside has been felt and so far as possible met. The brethren have made free use of the secular papers wherever they could find an opportunity to good advantage."

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER ON "MORMONISM."

In our letter columns this week, Bro. J. F. Mintun speaks of an article in the New Times for July 17, published in Dallas Center, Iowa, over the signature of G. D. Gurley. The article is as follows:

A serpent charmer gave wonderful exhibitions of handling deadly vipers with impunity. He did it with perfect composure and confidence: the fangs had been drawn. But in one instance he made a fatal mistake. He angered a viper whose fang was not drawn as he supposed. It struck it into his flesh. He died an agonizing death.

The serpent of Mormonism is around Dallas Center, inviting people to play with it. This is not the loathed and dreaded viper of Utah it is said. The deadly fang (polygamy) that viper carries has been drawn out. So it is a harmless snake. It might be answered to this that sensible people do not play with snakes to test whether they have poison fangs or not. There is enmity between the seed of the woman and the serpent tribe. But in this case it is well for people to know the fang is not drawn. The poison fang in Mormonism is not polygamy. It is the diabolical lie and fraud of the Book of Mormon itself, claiming to be a true and later revelation from God and on an equality with the Scriptures. Polygamy is a small item compared with this monster imposition of the Devil. Along with this there is a claim of the Mormon leaders—Joe Smith Mormons, Brigham Young Mormons and the whole dozen tribes and factions of Mormons—the claim to perpetual inspired revelations. These become a part of the Mormon Bible. There is room under this latter for the Devil to foist any new iniquity upon his dupes through Mormon leaders acting as his agents. It may be the right to other people's property by cut-throat violence and robbery as Joe Smith and this banditti attempted at Independence, Missouri, or it may be polygamy or any caprice Satan prompts them to.

That any in an enlightened Christian community like this should go out to hear a propagator of Mormonism reveals the fatal weakness of human nature. Mankind are very susceptible to being made dupes. Curiosity gets the mastery over prudence. I know it will be said nothing was preached contrary to the Bible. It is not the policy of Satan to show horns, cloven-foot and tail on his first entrance. He comes in the garb of an angel. Polygamy is not put to the front by his sneaking emissaries in Europe. That is promulgated after the poor dupes are in Mormon thrall in Utah. The Book of Mormon is not put to the front in Iowa, when they enter a community. The Bible is preached. The poison fang of the Devil (Book of Mormon) with its contents comes at a later stage when the silly and susceptible dupes are sufficiently hypnotized to accept anything offered by the spiritual hypnotizer.

G. D. GURLEY.

The foregoing article, together with Bro. Mintun's account of his reception by Reverend Gurley shows the latter to be possessed of a rank spirit of persecution. But a worthy cause has nothing to fear from men of that class, and Bro. Mintun will undoubtedly make friends as a result of the trouble.

SAINTS PERSISTENTLY LIED ABOUT.

No people has ever been more steadily lied about, misunderstood and misjudged than the Latter Day Saints. No matter how small the group, nor where obedience to the tenets taught by the elders began, no matter how good people they had been in other beliefs and among other believers, the day they accepted the faith, that day they became the objects of evil surmisings, suspicion and misrepresentation. They were good men and women before, but by change of faith they became bad—so said their enemies.

A late writer has written: "That 'Mormonism' has been a hotbed in which 'liars, thieves and blacklegs' have been hatched there can be little room for doubt—and this product has by no means been confined to the Salt Lake contingent of that institution."

This writer was for a quarter of a century a member of one band of believers in so-called Mormonism; and we are safe in saying that during all those years he never heard lying, stealing, swindling, gambling, or any thing else that goes to make up a blackleg, taught or defended, publicly or privately. He knows that he was never asked to teach, or defend conduct of the sort referred to, by any officer in the church under whose rule, or with whom he labored in the field, at home, or abroad. And that no written precept or rule of faith, belief, or practice of such nature was known to him during his stay with that people; nor can he now point to one requiring it.

Why then should he thus write? Did he become a thief, a liar, a blackleg, from any teaching or practice, known to him during his association with men and women who believed in "Mormonism" so-called? If so, and he was an honest, upright-minded man when he became identified with them, why did he not become acquainted with the facts of such villainy long before the quarter of a century was past, and expose it by item, day and date, and names of the wrong-doers, and have them brought to justice in the courts to which he as a citizen of the United States had access?

It is passing strange that a man can accept the doctrines taught by the elders of the Reorganized Church, and continuing in the fellowship, accept call and ordination into its ministry, labor for years in such ministerial association; and, after getting into personal trouble and disrepute, suddenly awake to the awful situation that the dogmas are bad, the doctrines devilish, the ministry dishonest, the people corrupt or dupes, the leaders deceivers, and "liars, thieves, and blacklegs," the results of its teachings and culture.

What a travesty upon the personal honesty, integrity, and acumen of the individual such a case as this presents to the average thinker, surely there must be some underlying reason for such a departure from faith; what is it?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Mary C. Turner wrote from Leoti, Kansas, July 11: "We are still without a preacher here. I thought it must not be time for the trump to sound here was why we are left without. But I think it is time now, as there is no Methodist minister here, as the one who was here has left. So if one of our men can come, now is the time. Who will come? If one could only come to stay!"

Under date of July 21 I. N. Roberts wrote from Bay Minette, Alabama: "I had a fine meeting at Theodore, Alabama. Baptized eleven there last week, and ten the week before at Three Rivers and vicinity. I never felt better, and am doing all I can. I am having good meetings here, but the heat is hard to stand."

Sr. Annie Harris writes from Salina, Kansas, July 20. She and her husband live nine miles west and one north of Salina. She says: "I would be glad if an elder should be passing through here to have him call on us; and if he could preach here it might do good. I have a babe I desire to have blessed and administered to, as she has never been a strong child."

F. M. Sheehy wrote from New York, July 23: "Just come from seeing Brn. Gomer and Anderson off. They left at ten o'clock this forenoon, in good cheer and spirit. They were to occupy stateroom with two other ministers. Brn. George Potts and John Gillespie were also present to bid them God-speed."

D. C. White wrote from Bozeman, Montana, July 24: "Bro. W. H. Kelley and I just closed a twelve-day tent meeting in this place. Interest only fair, but we hope good was done. We go from here to Helena, and then on to Woodside (in the Bitter Root Valley) to commence tent meeting August 2, to continue till the 18th or longer. Saints are feeling well up through this section, and crops are just fine, the best for years. The Lord is surely blessing this part of the country. We feel hopeful in the work."

S. D. Yandes of Chicago says concerning the new book, "Book of Mormon Talks:" "It certainly is splendid. Every household should have one. I regret that we are not wealthy enough as a people to give them to those who will not purchase them outside the church as it is proof positive in its aim and ought to be the means of convincing the honest and intelligent and remove prejudice and ignorance."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We learn by letter from Bro. S. J. Hinkle at Stillwater, Oklahoma, July 19, that Bro. E. L. Kelley is expected to be present at the reunion in Oklahoma beginning August 8.

Ward Christy, of Dallas Center, Iowa, has appeared in print in a local paper, in defense of the work.

Sophia Reeder writes from Knerville, Montana, July 9, that she and her husband are members of the church, but there is no branch there. She would be glad to have some of the elders stop there, and would help secure a house to preach in. They are alone, and enjoy reading the HERALD.

Sr. Mary A. Hines, who has been at Nevada for some time past, desires us to say to our readers that her address is now Independence, Iowa.

The Board of Publication was in session July 23. Bro. T. A. Hougas attended, coming into Lamoni on the early morning train and leaving on the noon train. He was on his way to the East, expecting to go as far as Maine before returning. He is doing missionary work in the interests of the General Sunday-school Association.

Last week we mentioned that Bishop Kelley returned from his visit to Springfield, Missouri, on Tuesday, July 15; but he did not come until Thursday, July 17. President Smith did not return until Monday, July 21.

The Avant-Courier, of Bozeman, Montana, in issue of July 18, speaks of the protracted meetings at that place which Brn. W. H. Kelley and D. C. White held. The article notes the difference between us and the Utah church.

A sister, living somewhere in North Dakota, writes feelingly, asking the prayers of the Saints in behalf of herself and her two sons. It appears that her sons have either already contracted the drink habit or are in the way of doing it, and she is much worried over it. We do not know who this sister is, as she does not sign her name to her letter; but this only makes the appeal the more touching. She closes, "If there is faith, if there is power, I pray you, my brothers and sisters, help me to pray."

DO YOU WISH FUTURE HAPPINESS?

It has been a matter of profound wonder to me of late years, because I have given it more thought, to observe the conduct of men; how they go heedlessly through life, as if there were no such person in existence as a Supreme Being, or, rather, as if they were entirely independent of him. These same men are keen to note business chances, and pursue its details as if all depended upon their success in that line, when in reality it is only an auxiliary, or an assistant. They are exceedingly keen to note the best methods for the accomplishment of the end sought, also make careful study of methods presented so as to make no mistake with reference thereto. But when it comes to matters of the great future life they are totally indifferent. Some of these are not to be blamed on account of the conduct of those or of some making a profession of religion. And some have compared the creeds with the book of God, found them at great variance and have become disgusted with the whole matter. But when the truth is presented, they are wary of the source and are like some others in the past.

But we read in the book that "it is the will of your heavenly Father that all should be saved," that all shall have perfect happiness in the world to come. It is his will, but he will not compel them. He allows them to act upon their "agency" which he gave to man in the beginning. He said: "You may not do this," but if you do, death will follow. I forbid, but I will not prevent. Every business man knows that to accomplish a specific end, specific means must be adopted. That man comes into this world ignorant, that what he knows he has to learn. During his ignorance of divine duty or service which he owes to his Father, the faults he commits in his ignorance are not imputed to him, but when the light of truth comes to him, as a dutiful child, he is expected to receive and put in practice.

The object in placing us in this life is to teach us all things that pertain to life and godliness, and to give us more extended life, or to give us life in perfected environments. How can this be done, but in one way? If some other way, then something else will be the result. It is a fact that man did live before this life, as the Scriptures inform us that, "We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits and live?" "Inasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, it became him [Jesus Christ] likewise to take part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had power over death; that is to say the Devil." Language could not be plainer to indicate preexistence. Christ is in all things like unto his brethren and he and the children took upon them, as living beings, flesh and blood, or added to them the condition of flesh and blood. And Job says: "The Lord fenced me about with sinew and bones and flesh." And Christ said: "A body hast thou prepared me." Me, my life, independent of the body. And "the dust shall return to the earth as it was and the spirit shall return to God who gave it." To return is to go back, the same in both instances; the dust returns and the spirit returns, too. Hence, it is perfectly proper to say that God placed us here for the purpose of allowing us to prove ourselves and bring us in contact with conditions which could not be out of the body, hence to teach us. His ways are the best. He is wiser than we, as we learn from an examination of our own person, of which he is the creator. He proposes to give us a changed body which can not die any more, and to place us where we will be perfectly happy. Is it unreasonable to expect it to be done in any way other than he has prepared? Children can not dictate to their Father.

Now he has prepared three conditions in the other life and they are for us to choose which we will have; but whichever we choose we must obey the laws that pertain to that kingdom. "Every man in his own order;" whichever condition he merits by obedience. "They that are Christ's at his coming." Here is a plain statement that those who belong to Christ shall come from the dead "at his coming." How shall we belong to Christ? "He stretched forth his hand towards his disciples, he said: Behold my mother and my brethren." To be a disciple then, is to be his brother. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." If we are "into" Christ's kingdom or body we surely belong to him, hence "where I am there shall my servant be." And as he is "one with the Father" in the highest glory, the disciple will be too. The Savior made it very plain as to how we can "fulfill all righteousness" when he, standing upon Jordan's banks, said: "Thus it becometh us." That is in this way, by being "born of the water." And he came "straightway up out of the water," so he must have gone down into the water, and he is the "Leader," which implies followers. He tells us that "this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." "All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." Here, then, is brought to view that to know God it must be done through the Son, and in order to be with the Father—in the highest glory—he must seek the favor of Christ, "if ye love me keep my commandments." "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, and I will love him and manifest myself to him." "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." They would not only be disciples but his "indeed;" his accepted, worthy, obedient, pleasureable disciples, and shall know the truth that will put them in condition to be where he is, for "where I am there shall my servant be." And hence it is plain, if we believe the Bible and in Christ, that it is through complete surrender to the divine purpose (not as men have interpreted in the past, not according to the creeds of men, for "in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men"), we can most assuredly obtain an entrance to the highest glory, to enjoy that which words are weak to express. But it must be done according to the divine will and prearrangement or it can not be done at all. "Ye must be born again."

"THE MIDNIGHT CRY."

"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 1: 18.

"Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob."—Isaiah 41: 21.

When the time comes that we can all see as the Lord sees, then we shall "see eye to eye;" "see as we are seen and know as we are known." But that time has not yet come: it is one of the things for which we are still waiting, hoping, and praying. The Lord has told us when that shall be, in this text: "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."—Isaiah 52: 8. The Revised Version renders this, "when the Lord returneth to Zion." But the Lord will not return to Zion until he shall establish, or "bring again Zion;" for the Psalmist says: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Psalms 102: 16. And the Lord says again: "The Redeemer shall come to Zion."—Isaiah 59: 20. We gather from the foregoing that Zion must be "built up," the Redeemer must "come to Zion," and come, too, "in his glory," before Zion's watchmen shall "see eye to eye" in all things; and, until that time comes, inspired apostles and prophets will be necessary, in the church, "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." See Ephesians 4: 8-13.

I am glad, however, that this difference of opinion does not exist to any material extent respecting the avowed doctrine of the church. Where the church has spoken, respecting the principles of the gospel, her watchmen are practically "in the unity of the faith." But when it comes to the meaning of parables, the interpretation of visions, the application of certain texts of scripture, the fulfillment of prophecy, and many other things of that nature, more latitude is given to individuality. Hence, if we should differ on these things it must not be taken for granted that we are divided on the faith and doctrine of the church, for such is not the case. So much by way of preface.

In Matthew we have this parable:

And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five of them were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Lest there be not enough for us and you, go you rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, You know me not. Watch therefore; for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.—Matthew 25: 1-12, I. T.

This parable is simply an illustration or comparison thrown in by the speaker in the latter part of a lengthy discourse; and to understand it we must know the speaker's subject, his position respecting his subject, and the particular thought which he is trying to make clear to the minds of his hearers. It will be necessary, therefore, to briefly examine the preceding chapter. I shall quote from the Inspired Translation.

In Matthew 23: 38-41 the Savior had said to the people of Jerusalem: "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate! For I say unto you, that you shall not see me henceforth, and know that I am he of whom it is written by the prophets, until ye shall say, Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord, in the clouds of heaven, and all the holy angels with him. Then understood his disciples that he should come again on the earth, after that he was glorified and crowned on the right hand of God."

This served as an introduction to the subject. Now, begin with Matthew 24: 1 and carefully read verses 1, 2, and 3; then we have this: "And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be which thou hast said concerning the destruction of the temple, and the Jews; and what is the sign of thy coming; and of the end of the world? (or the destruction of the wicked, which is the end of the world.)"—Matthew 24: 4.

Then the Savior, beginning at verse 5, goes right on telling the disciples of their sufferings and persecutions and of the tribulations, sufferings, and final destruction which shall come upon Jerusalem and her inhabitants, right along till we reach the end of verse 20. Verse 21 reads: "Behold these things have I spoken unto you concerning the Jews."

Having answered the first question the Savior proceeds to the second: "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" Now, do not forget the subject:

The Savior then says: "And again, after the tribulation of those days which shall come upon Jerusalem, if any man shall say unto you, Lo! here is Christ, or there; believe him not."—Verse 22. (Italics are mine.) He then says that "in those days" there shall be false Christs, false prophets, wars, and rumors of wars; but he warns them to "be not troubled;" that "the end is not yet."—Verse 25. No, "the end is not yet." His elect must "be gathered from the four quarters of the earth."—Verse 28. "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations."—Verse 32. The "abomination of desolation" must again "be fulfilled."—Verse 33. The "sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven."—Verse 34. All these are signs or evidences of the nearness of our Savior's return; and he tells us that "this generation, in which these things shall be shown forth, shall not pass away until all I have told you shall be fulfilled."

Taking up the main thread of his discourse, again, he says: "And as I said before, after the tribulation of those days, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn. And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."—Verses 37, 38.

Yes, he shall come; but some one, or ones, shall come before him: "For the Son of Man shall come, and he shall send his angels before him with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together the remainder of his elect from the four winds; from one end of heaven to the other."—Verse 40. His elect must all be gathered.

Then he uses the parable of the fig tree, to show them how the elect may know when "he is near, even at the door."—Verses 41, 42. Then he compares the days just before the coming of the Son of Man with the days just before the flood (see verses 44, 45), and shows that "one shall be taken and the other left," from the different occupations in life; the same thought illustrated by the "ten virgins." He also speaks of having some "faithful and wise servant" "over his household," at that time, "to give them meat in due season."—Verse 52. Just before his coming, mind you. But he shows that it is possible for "that evil servant" to come to the conclusion that, "My Lord delayeth his coming;" and that, if he should do so, and go into wickedness, his Lord would unexpectedly come upon him, cut him off, along with hypocrites, and that "thus cometh the end of the wicked."—Verses 55, 56.

There is no break in our Savior's discourse, no

departing from the subject, no jumbling of events together which are in reality two thousand years apart. Nothing of the kind. From verse 27 to verse 56 he is speaking of the days and events immediately preceding his coming, occasionally mentioning the grand culmination of those events; and he makes no break whatever at the end of this chapter. He goes right on in chapter 25 and says: "And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes."—Matthew 25:1. When? "Then at that day." He is not telling them what the condition of the kingdom of heaven shall be from the time he goes away till he returns; that is not under consideration at all. He is answering the question: "What shall be the sign of thy coming; and of the end of the world?" He has told his disciples ("for mine elect's sake."—Matthew 24:29), that this gospel of the kingdom must be preached again; that his elect must be gathered together; that a "faithful and wise servant" must be appointed to give his household meat in due season; that he will come when "that evil servant" is not looking for him and cut him asunder; that "there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth," and that "thus cometh the end of the wicked," and then adds: "And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes." Not after the wicked are cut off; not after the Savior comes; no, not after he comes; but it is to be "at that day," just before he comes. But what is to be? Why, "the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins." What ten virgins? Ten virgins "who took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." The kingdom is not like ten virgins scattered all over creation, who have never been invited to the wedding. No; the ten virgins to whom the kingdom of heaven shall be likened "at that day," have already taken their lamps, "and went forth to meet the bridegroom." Even the "foolish virgins" had taken their lamps with them; but they took no oil. But the wise ones had taken "oil in their vessels with their lamps." The bridegroom "tarried" and those virgins "who went forth to meet the bridegroom" "all slumbered and slept." When the cry was made, at midnight, announcing the approach of the bridegroom, and inviting or commanding them to "go ye out to meet him," those wise virgins already had their lamps, and had plenty of oil with them, too, in their vessels; they did not have to go and buy oil, after the midnight cry was made. They were ready and waiting, with oil in their vessels, when the cry was made; they had gone forth "to meet the bridegroom," and had made the necessary preparation beforehand. Not so with the foolish ones. They too had gone forth "to meet the bridegroom," and had taken their lamps with them; but they "took no oil with them." The fact that they say "our lamps are gone out," carries with it the thought that their lamps at one time, had been lighted. But now they "are gone out," there is no oil in them, and there is no time for them to prepare: no time to get ready. They tried to get ready; they went "to buy" oil, but before they returned the bridegroom came, and "they that were ready" (please note that) were permitted to enter. When "the midnight cry" is made there will be no time for buying oil; no time to prepare for his coming; no time for putting on the "wedding garment." The preparation must be made beforehand; you must have oil in your vessels; you must "be ye also ready."

Something over seventy years ago the angel brought the everlasting gospel and committed it to men on the earth; the Church of Christ was organized, under the direction of our Savior, thus bringing it "out of the wilderness," "out of obscurity, and out of darkness;" and men were commissioned and sent forth to preach "this gospel of the kingdom" to all nations, as a witness that the end will soon come; that "he is near, even at the doors." Is that "the midnight cry"?

"And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins."—D. C. 45:10. This revelation was given in February, 1831, nearly a year after the church was organized, and it places the fulfillment of that parable still in the future. Not only is it still in the future, but as in Matthew 25:1, he tells us just when it shall be fulfilled: "And at that day when I shall come in my glory." He does not talk as though it was then being fulfilled, and had been in process of fulfillment for nearly two thousand years. He says it shall be fulfilled "at that day." Not exactly at the moment he comes; not in the one event of his coming; but in "the day" of his coming.

In section 63, speaking of the resurrection of the righteous dead, and of the righteous who shall be living at that time being changed, the Lord says: "These things are the things that ye must look for, and speaking after the manner of the Lord, they are now nigh at hand; and in a time to come, even in the day of the coming of the Son of Man, and until that hour, there will be foolish virgins among the wise, and at that hour cometh an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked; and in that day will I send mine angels, to pluck out the wicked, and cast them into unquenchable fire."—Section 63:13. This was given in August, 1831, and it says it is still "in a time to come," "even in the day of the coming of the Son of Man;" and that, when the time comes for the separation, "I will send mine angels."

Again: "The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth; yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom."—Section 65:1. When "the keys of the kingdom of God" were "committed to man on the earth," the call was to "prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom."

Next I quote section 108:1-5:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the Lord your God, and hear the word of the Lord concerning you. . . . Wherefore prepare ye, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves; gather ye together, O ye people of my church, upon the land of Zion, all you that have not been commanded to tarry. Go ye out from Babylon. . . . The time has come when the voice of the Lord is unto you, Go ye out of Babylon; gather ye out from among the nations, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee unto Zion. And let them who be of Judah, flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house. Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon. But verily thus saith the Lord, Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back, lest sudden destruction shall come upon him. Hearken and hear O ye inhabitants of the earth. Listen, ye elders of my church together, and hear the voice of the Lord, for he calleth upon all men and he commandeth all men everywhere to repent; for, behold, the Lord God hath sent forth the angel, crying through the midst of heaven, saying: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths strait, for the hour of his coming is nigh, when the Lamb shall stand upon Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty-four thousand, having his father's name written in their foreheads; wherefore, prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him.

Yes, the Lord says to his church, and also "unto the nations," "unto all people:" "Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom." But this call is made to "all nations;" to "the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea," and "unto foreign lands." This is a general call, and is "unto all people," saint and sinner. But it is "the call and opportunity for preparation;" not the midnight cry of Matthew 25:5. In this call the Lord tells the people to "prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord;" "prepare ye the way of the Lord;" "prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom." And that is what we learned from section 65:1: that when "the keys of the kingdom of God" were "committed to man on the earth," the call was: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the coming of the Bridegroom." True, he says: "Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him;" but he immediately adds: "Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord." "Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you." This is "the day of his preparation." And, in preparing for the great day, they must go "out of Babylon," "out from among the nations;" that is part of the preparation. But there is to be but one place for his people (except Judah) to go, in order to get out of Babylon, and that place is Zion; and hence he says: "Go ye forth unto the land of Zion." Gather ye together, O ye people of my church, upon the land of Zion." To "go out of Babylon," then, and go "unto the land of Zion," is part of the preparation. When they go to Zion, they go there to meet the Bridegroom; and, when they get there and finish their work of preparation, are waiting for the Savior to come, then "the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." The kingdom of heaven will then have gone forth to Zion, the place to which the Redeemer shall come" (Isaiah 59: 20), and where the marriage supper of the Lamb shall take place, and will be waiting for that midnight cry; just as the ten virgins had taken their lamps and "went forth to meet the bridegroom," and were waiting, at the house where the marriage was to take place, ready to go out and meet him on the way when his near approach should be announced. But while it is true that the saints of God are to go forth unto the land of Zion to meet the Bridegroom, and are now being called to go there, for that purpose, it is also true that the meeting will not take place in Zion. When the Savior comes, and that midnight cry is made, they will go forth and meet him on the way, return with him, and go "in with him to the marriage."

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God [the midnight cry?]; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then they who are alive, shall be caught up together into the clouds with them who remain, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. Why will they be caught up into the clouds? Answer: "To meet the Lord in the air." When? Answer: At the sounding of the "trump of God," when the Lord shall "descend from heaven." Again:

"And the saints that are upon the earth, who are alive, shall be quickened, and be caught up to meet him. And they who have slept in their graves, shall come forth; for their graves shall be opened, and they also shall be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven: they are Christ's, the first fruits: they who shall descend with him first, and they who are on the earth and in their graves, who are first caught up to meet him; and all this by the voice of the sounding of the trump of the angel of God."—D. C. 85: 27.

They do not wait in Zion till the Lord comes to them; but, when the angel sounds the trump, the midnight cry, they go out to meet him on the way: "in the air," or "in the pillar of heaven." "And all this by the voice of the sounding of the trump of the angel of God."

And again: "And the trump of God shall sound both long and loud, and shall say to the sleeping nations: Ye saints arise and live: ye sinners stay and sleep until I shall call again." Section 43: 5. This shows the sounding of the trump to be a message from heaven; it says something to the dead, at least; and, as the living saints are to be caught up to meet him, as well as the dead, "by the sounding of the trump," it requires no great stretch of the imagination to see in it a message to the living, too! a call to go out and meet the Savior in the air.

"But before the arm of the Lord shall fall, an angel shall sound his trump, and the saints that have slept, shall come forth to meet me in the cloud; . . . and the saints shall come forth from the four quarters of the earth."—Section 45: 7.

All by the sounding of the trump. The restoration of the gospel by the angel may be the midnight cry; but, to me, it seems far more reasonable, more in harmony with the revelations of God, that "the voice of the archangel," "the trump of God," which comes to God's people, after they have gone forth to Zion to meet the Bridegroom; it seems more reasonable to me, I say, that this "trump of God" which goes to his saints in Zion and calls them to go out and meet the Bridegroom on the way, "in the air," "in the pillar of heaven," is the midnight cry. It is more reasonable because the kingdom of heaven, then, will be like ten virgins that "went forth to meet the Bridegroom;" but, until God's people do "go forth unto the land of Zion," I can see no comparison.

Turn again to Doctrine and Covenants 85: 23-27: "Therefore, tarry ye, and labor diligently, that you may be perfected in your ministry, to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time, as many as the mouth of the Lord shall name, to bind up the law, and seal up the testimony, and to prepare the saints for the hour of judgment, which is to come."—Paragraph 23.

Keep this in mind and read paragraphs 20 and 21, and you will see that they were to organize, sanctify, purify, and thus prepare themselves for some special work. That special work was "to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time;" "to bind up the law, and seal up the testimony;" and "to prepare the saints for the hour of judgment, which is to come." Did they go on that mission? Six months later the Lord said to his servants:

"Therefore, I commanded you to tarry [section 85:

23], even as mine apostles at Jerusalem; nevertheless my servants sinned a very grievous sin; and contentions arose in the school of the prophets, which was very grievous unto me, saith your Lord; therefore I sent them forth to be chastened."—Sec. 92: 2.

No; that commission was not then executed, neither has it been done since then. But it is to be executed in the future, for it is to be said unto the wicked, "ye obeyed not my voice when I called to you out of the heavens, ye believed not my servants; and when they were sent unto you ye received them not; wherefore, they sealed up the testimony and bound up the law, and ye were delivered over unto darkness."—Sec. 108: 13.

The elders are to be endowed with power from on high and sent forth among the Gentiles "for the last time;" and then they are to "bind up the law, and seal up the testimony;" and they are also to "prepare the saints for the hour of judgment." That testimony has not yet gone forth, and God's judgments are not to be poured out upon the nations until it does. Come back now to section 85: 25: "And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people." Yes, there are to be earthquakes, thunderings, lightnings, tempests, and the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds; and, during this time, there shall be groanings in the midst of the earth, men shall fall down and not be able to rise; all things shall be in commotion; men's hearts shall fail them, and fear shall come upon "all people." This is all to follow "after your testimony;" after His servants have gone forth "for the last time," to "bind up the law, and seal up the testimony." But that is not all; there is something else to follow:

"And angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of our God is come: behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."—85: 25.

There is to be another call from heaven, then, after the restoration of the gospel, inviting or commanding to go forth to meet the Bridegroom; and this call is to be after the servants of God have been sent forth "for the last time;" "after your testimony." But I do not understand this call to be the midnight cry. It seems more like a fulfillment of this: "And he shall send his angels before him with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together the remainder of his elect from the four winds; from one end of heaven to the other."—Matthew 24: 40. But, whether it is the work referred to in this verse or not, it confirms the thought that the sounding of the trump of God is a message from heaven, and is for the living as well as the dead; that it is not simply the blast of a horn. It says something; it says that the Bridegroom comes, and it says to go forth to meet him. But there is another trump yet to sound:

And immediately there shall appear a great sign in heaven, and all people shall see it together. And another angel shall sound his trump. . . . And he shall sound his trump both long and loud, and all nations shall hear it. And there shall be silence in heaven for the space of half an hour, and immediately after shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded, as a scroll is unfolded after it is rolled up, and the face of the Lord shall be unveiled; and the saints that are upon the earth, who are alive, shall be quickened, and be caught up to meet him. And they who have slept in their graves, shall come forth; for their graves shall be opened, and they also shall be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven: they are Christ's, the first fruits: they who shall descend with him first, and they who are on the earth and in their graves, who are first caught up to meet him; and all this by the voice of the sounding of the trump of the angel of God.

This, to my mind, is the midnight cry: it is "the trump of God" which calls the kingdom of God, on the earth, to go forth to meet the Bridegroom. All preceding calls are calls to prepare, to make ready. But now the preparations have been completed; God's servants have been sent out and have borne their testimony "for the last time;" they have "sealed up the testimony and bound up the law;" they have "prepared the saints for the judgment of our God;" the saints have gone forth to Zion "to meet the Bridegroom;" they are there in Zion waiting for the Savior to come, just as the ten virgins were waiting for the bridegroom; the wise ones have oil in their vessels, while the foolish have only their lamps; when the midnight cry is made (the trump of God sounded) there is "silence in heaven for the space of half an hour"—time for them to "trim their lamps;" and then the wise ones, who took oil with them, go forth to meet the Bridegroom "in the air," descend with him again to the earth, and go "in with him to the marriage." "And all this by the voice of the sounding of the trump of the angel of God," the midnight cry.

But we are told, Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5, that God's elect "shall not be asleep." True, they will not be asleep in sin, in darkness, spiritual blindness. But it is just as legitimate to sleep the right kind of sleep, and at the proper time, as it is to eat. We sleep to take rest. God's elect will have finished their work; his servants will have bound up the law and sealed up the testimony; will have gone forth for the last time; will have prepared the saints for the hour of judgment, so far as they could; they will be gathered to Zion, waiting for the Savior to come; and they will be made ready for his coming. Why not rest? What else is there for them to do? The parable does say they shall be asleep: it says the ten virgins "all slumbered and slept." But there was no blame attached to them for having slept; no regrets, no accusation of being derelict in duty; nothing of the kind. So far as the parable gives light on their sleeping, it was the proper thing to do; perfectly legitimate. The Psalmist says: "Then the Lord awaked as one out of sleep."—Psalms 78:65. But the Lord did not awake from spiritual blindness; he had never been in that condition. Read the preceding verses, and you will see that the Lord had simply kept silent and looked on while certain events were transpiring; took no part in them till the proper time; and, when the time came for him to act, he is represented as waking up and taking an interest in those things. Now, as no blame seems to attach to the ten virgins for going to sleep, so far as the parable shows, why not let their sleep represent a condition (the condition in which God's people shall be when the midnight cry is made) similar to that in which the Lord was before he "awaked as one out of sleep"? They have done their work and, like the Lord, in the verse just quoted, are silently looking on—spectators of passing events—while the judgments of God are being poured out upon the people. And that condition of silent inactivity, while the testimony of earthquakes and tempests and famines and thunderings and lightnings is following "after your testimony," is very properly represented by the ten virgins when they all "slumbered and slept." God's people will simply rest, and that will be the proper thing for them to do. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him."—Psalms 37:7.

The parable of the talents is quite different, in some respects at least, from the parable of the ten virgins: it was given for a different purpose. Luke helps us out on that, so far as relates to its object, at least:

"And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because the Jews taught that the kingdom of God should immediately appear."—Luke 19:11. Then follows the parable of the talents and, so far as the main points are concerned, substantially the same as given by Matthew. It was given "because the Jews taught that the kingdom of God should immediately appear." His disciples seem to have entertained the same opinion, too, for they asked if he would "at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel." See Acts 1:6. I know the Savior says, after giving them the parable of the ten virgins: "Now I will liken these things unto a parable."—Matthew 25:13. But what "things?" To say that he meant to liken the ten virgins going out to meet the bridegroom unto a parable, would make him say: "I will liken the parable of the ten virgins unto a parable." Liken a parable unto a parable! No, that won't do. He says "the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins;" but he does not say that the kingdom, "at that day," shall be likened unto the parable of the talents. Please remember that the ten virgins represent the kingdom of God, "then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes;" and that the parable of the talents is to represent "these things," and that it was given "because the Jews taught that the kingdom of God should immediately appear." One represents the kingdom of heaven, "at that day;" while the other represents the Savior, as going away "to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return" (Luke 19:12); represents his committing his goods to his servants, receiving his kingdom, and returning and reckoning with his servants.

"Now I will liken these things unto a parable." "These things;" plural number. But what "things?" We must now go back to the very beginning of this discourse: yes, to that which introduced it: "Then understood his disciples that he should come again on the earth, after that he was glorified and crowned on the right hand of God."—Matthew 23:41. They understood just what the parable teaches: that he would go away and "receive for himself a kingdom, and return"—"after that he was glorified and crowned." Beginning with this thought, that he should go away, and that the Jews should not see him again, and know him, till he was "crowned" and did "return;" beginning here, being questioned by his disciples, the Savior preached his discourse. He illustrated the condition in which the world will be, just before and at his return, by the condition of the world just before and at the flood; he illustrated the condition in which his church would be, just before and at his return, by the condition of "ten virgins who went forth to meet the bridegroom," just before and at the coming of the bridegroom; and then he goes back and illustrates the whole subject of his discourse, "these things," by the parable of the talents. The parable of the talents includes the parable of the ten virgins; but the parable of the ten virgins does not include the parable of the talents.

I should like to say something about "the church in the wilderness," but remembering the wastebasket I think it will be prudent to desist or at least defer.

Selected Poetry.

All.

There hangs a saber, and there a rein,
With a rusty buckle and green curb chain;
A pair of spurs on the old gray wall,
And a moldy saddle—well, that is all.

Come out to the stable, it is not far;
The moss-grown door is hanging ajar,
Look within! There's an empty stall,
Where once stood a charger, and that is all.

The good black horse came riderless home,
Flecked with blood drops as well as foam,
See yonder hillock where dead leaves fall;
The good black horse pined to death—that's all.

All? O, God! it is all I can speak.
 Question me not—I am old and weak;
 His saber and his saddle hang on the wall,
 And his horse pined to death—I have told you all.

Which Are You?

There are two kinds of people on earth to-day,
 Just two kinds of people, no more, I say.
 Not the sinner and saint, for 'tis well understood
 The good are half-bad and the bad are half-good.
 Not the rich and the poor, for to count a man's wealth
 You must first know the state of his conscience and health.
 Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span
 Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.
 Not the happy and sad, for the swift-flying years
 Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears.
 No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean
 Are the people who lift, and the people who lean.
 Wherever you go, you will find the world's masses
 Are always divided in just these two classes.
 And oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
 There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.
 In what class are you? Are you easing the load
 Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
 Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
 Your portion of labor and worry and care?

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Sweet sympathy and love go forth together,
 And count as nothing the vast breadth of space,
 They speed o'er mountains snow-peaked in the ether,
 And find the ocean but a narrow place."

Like a Cradle.

Like a cradle rocking, rocking,
 Silent, peaceful, to and fro,
 Like a mother's sweet looks dropping
 On the little face below,
 Hangs the green earth, swinging, turning,
 Jarless, noiseless, safe, and slow;
 Falls the light of God's face bending
 Down and watching us below.

And as feeble babes that suffer
 Toss and cry, and will not rest,
 Are the ones the tender mother
 Holds the closest, loves the best—
 So when we are weak and wretched,
 By our sins weighed down, distressed,
 Then it is that God's great patience
 Holds us closest, loves us best.

PAPEETE, June 22.

Sister Walker: Will you permit me to say through the Column that I have received a number of kind letters from thoughtful sisters of various places all the way from Sacramento to Nova Scotia that I am not yet able to answer personally; but thank all for their remembrance of us. A good letter is next to a face to face chat, and very cheering in this quiet place. Do not think for one moment, Sr. Jennie, that I have forgotten our good visit at your house, nor the dainty lunches we had with just our two selves, when the children were at school and the men folks not at home. But best of all was the quiet "heart to heart talks" about good things, and good people, and the good they were doing. Nor do I forget Sr. Lulu either. Hope sometime to write to you both, also Sr. Ethel, and many others who so kindly welcomed us into their home circle while traveling in California; and others, too, from whom we received cordial invitations, and were made the recipient of kindness in other ways. For instance, hot biscuits on a cold morning when one is living in a tent, and more substantial aid as well. Many an hour have I lived all those incidents over again, recounting every pleasing moment.

We have been alone for nearly four weeks. Bro. and Sr. Gilbert started off again to make a tour of a few islands of this division. We had enjoyed their visit with us since conference, very much, and when they left I was too lonesome to eat or work or do much else that day but brush away the tears. They had started once in the same boat that Bro. A. H. Smith and company came down from Kaukura in, but met a strong east wind at Point Venus, so remained there a week, then came back and went to Tiona and rested up a week or so. Then a nice large boat was going to Makatea, where they first wanted to go. The captain, being an elder in the church, very willingly took them. We would have felt worse to see them going off in a boat, had it not been that the voice of the Spirit spoke to Laura in our Sunday afternoon meeting prior to their first starting, bidding her not to fear, for the Lord would be with her, and would protect her, that they should have a smooth sea and a pleasant passage, and also commending her faith that would oftentimes be a stay and strength to her husband. And those words were verified in regard to their trip, which was an unusually quick and pleasant run, though our little missionary woman was seasick. She is making fair progress in the language; but ought to be about twice as hardy in physical strength to cope successfully with the hardships to be encountered in this mission as a traveling elder's wife. The work here is moving on slowly. With the progress of the work in the home land and other missions we would almost think it was not advancing at all out here, were it not for a backward glance occasionally by those who have been over the ground and who have with zeal and courage pushed the work.

Personally my missionary work is about double what it was before, yet it is mostly done in this one place and house, so it seems to me as if I were not working at all. Our Sunday-school lessons for the year are now in the hands of the printer. They are gotten up this year altogether on a new plan from what they have been; more after the method of the Gospel Quarterly, abbreviated and simplified. No direct answer is given to any question, but all are contained in a short lesson story, out of which the scholars must glean them for themselves.

I hereby extend thanks to some one for a new Quarterly received this mail; and to Sr. Palfrey for Constitution and By-laws, also magazines; and to Bro. Mintun for his letter of correspondence to the societies. I will forward it to Bro. Gilbert at Kaukura to translate to the society. In the nature of things here, I fear a few societies only will have access to them. The facilities may be better after a while. Our regular mail is cut off from the Paumotus. The steamer Southern Cross was run on a reef and became a total loss, and as such calamities seldom come alone, a large bark with a load of coal from New Zealand, in entering this harbor was run on the reef some distance inside the lighthouse, and sunk in a few hours.

Consul Doty's family go to America this month to make their permanent home in San Francisco. We are sorry indeed to lose them. He has been to us, as Bro. A. H. Smith said, "Kindness itself." His mother and sister, who have been out here for some time on a visit, honored us with their presence to an afternoon tea; and at another time, the mother and wife upon a similar occasion. It seemed so like home to have American company who did not seem like strangers at all, so social and genial were their manners. Nor were those all the tea-parties we have had!

The vahine (wife) of Metuaore and the metua vahine (mother) of our Bishop's counselor (Luis), a real motherly old lady, ate supper with us twice last week. They kindly came and worked all the afternoon at mending my matting on the front room floor; weaving the splits of pandances leaf just as we darn stockings. I invited them to stay and eat with us, which pleased them very much. They had heard from others, who had from time to time taken a meal with us, that there were some very good things to eat over here (mona mona) sweet, very much like what Metuaore had to eat in America. It did us good to see how pleased and happy they looked as they started home with a smile on their faces. And I was no less pleased to have the ragged places all taken out of my matting and made like new. Be it understood, though, that I had a nice new mat to put down over this torn one when we had company. These mattings are made all in one piece, and whatever size they are ordered.

The day after to-morrow is King Edward's Coronation Day, and while I have been writing, a small procession passed along the street with martial music, bearing food (pigs, chickens, etc.), to the British Consul, who is going to make a feast for the British subjects, and wind up the entertainment with an elaborate ball in the evening.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to all to write us as often as they may, and if no recompense is received in this life theirs will be the greater in the life to come.

Love to all,

EMMA BURTON.

How To interest A Class of Boys.

The first point in considering the question of interesting a class of boys, is very much like the old recipe for cooking a hare, "First catch your hare." If the boys come one Sabbath, stay at home the next, "go to see their uncle in the country" the third, and come again the fourth, they will neither be interested in the school, the lesson, nor the teacher.

First, then, make them come regularly. If the school does not offer an inducement in the way of banner classes or rewards, do it yourself. Get them to come regularly one month, and you will not have much trouble the second.

Second, as "it is a poor rule that won't work both ways," go regularly yourself: don't let a rainy day, a headache, or a combination of the two, keep you home, if you can possibly go. Nothing can be more demoralizing to both parties than an intermittent attendance on the part of the teacher.

Having settled the preliminaries, there comes the far more important, far more difficult question of securing each boy individually. And here comes the "tug of war."

It is of no use to go and sit down before your class,—pretty, polite, well-dressed young lady though you may be, even with your lesson well studied, and well arranged in your mind. You must get acquainted with your boys, and, if one "breaks in" on your fluent sentences, with a remark about his "grandmother being awful old and tottery, we are expecting her to drop off, any time," don't snub him with a "we will return to the lesson," for he has to be his grandmother's grandson all the rest of the week, and he ought to be a gentle and respectful one—he will be far more apt to be so, if his Sunday-school teacher remembers that that boy has a grandmother, and inquires for her from time to time.

Find out how your boys live at home. Get their ideas on all practical questions suggested by the lessons—and boys, as a rule, are not slow to give them—and soon you will be able to see which boy is inclined to prevaricate, which is the selfish one, which is the leader and which is led; which one is under dangerous influences, and which one is the "honor bright" sort of a boy, whose good heart and good temper continually inspire you with new vigor and courage. To the honor of boyhood be it said, he is always there—I never found a class without him.

Having added a third requirement, let us consider the subject of teaching the lesson to all these varieties of the genus boy. Of course no arbitrary rules can be laid down, too much depends upon circumstances; but this I have noticed, I have gone to my class with the lesson thoroughly prepared, the time, geography, details, sidelights, and deductions, all clear in my mind, ready to be presented in the most conclusive way, and the result was at best an ill-concealed lack of interest that was most discouraging. I have gone again with lesson as well studied—far be it from me to decry that—but studied to fit each boy, and fortified with one or two well-chosen "stories," with the time and scenes brought down to their own streets, homes, and occupations. The result was the keenest interest, and a personal application of it that surprised me. Bible stories of Bible times may be very vivid to the grown up mind, but to the average boy they are a long way off. If you tell one of these excessively alive little fellows that the Lord Jesus Christ taught these lessons eighteen hundred years ago, in a little town in Asia he will be very apt to say, as one of my boys did in fact, "That's an awful long time ago," and I accepted the rebuke, and ever since have endeavored to teach them, that, so far as they are concerned, Christ meant his lesson for American boys of the nineteenth century!—Sunday School Times.

The following article was sent us with the request that we give in connection therewith our personal opinion of the matter. But owing to the fact that it is expected that during the year there will appear articles for and against it, we do not think it would be fair to give our opinion at the present time. But here is an expression from an earnest worker from the outside, one who is not biased except by his love for the Quarterly and the good it has done. Read and reflect.—ED.

"An Interesting Question."

I have heard that there was a question raised at the last General Convention of the Sabbath-school, as to the advisability of doing away with the Quarterly and placing in its stead a "book of instruction," and that the matter was deferred for a year so that the question might be discussed through the columns of the HERALD, and see the general feelings of the entire body interested. If this is the fact and we are at liberty to air our private views on it, I believe it is only proper that all interested should have a voice in it, as it seems to me it is a very important question to settle in regard to Sabbath-school interests, that is, if I understand the meaning of the change. I am and shall be very much interested in the question, especially if the Quarterlies are to be set aside, unless this new instructor will cover the ground in a better way. We have looked upon the Quarterlies as being just the thing, and can not see where they could be better supplanted by any change. However, we suppose, if it is the leading minds in Sunday-school work that are agitating this change they must have good reasons for the suggestion and we shall look with interest to see the side of the question taken by those who are in favor of the change. We think it is but proper that we have a voice in these things as we can not get to the General Conventions, and that we can thoroughly understand what this means so that at our district conventions we can canvass the question and instruct our delegate to vote to our taste. We will all agree that this is the right way to give us all a vote in this and some other great questions touching Sabbath-school work.

For myself I have no argument to present in favor of nor against this new instructor, until we learn more of it, and even then we shall not again write about it, but will leave this for those with greater minds to present and discuss. It may be argued that the Sunday-school has now grown to be a "man," and that we put away "childish things," and that stronger meat is required, but to us we feel that if the Quarterlies are continued as they are, they are "up to date" in the matter of educating the young, old, and also the new converts that are constantly teeming into the church. What better thing could we have for people who are newly brought into the church than to attend our Sunday-schools and hear the gospel made plain and simple as it is in the Quarterlies? If it is argued that older members in the church need something different from the Quarterlies, that will surely not interfere with them yet having them. Why not try and get out a Book of Mormon Quarterly? And even if it is out of the question to have such, in our present condition, are there not many thoughts and points referred to from Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants in the Quarterlies? Now do not consider us as opposing the idea of advancing a step (if it is advancing) by doing away with the Quarterlies and having in their stead an instructor. We would not like to oppose anything better, but in our humble opinion we would not like to see the Quarterlies set aside. Why not stick to them, and if there is something as good or better, is it not possible to still have both and give the body the privilege of its choice? Hope you all understand us as not being prejudiced against any new step. No, but it is because the Quarterlies have filled the bill so well and completely, to our way of thinking, and our love for them is the cause of our writing.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, July 15.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a letter from "slow Philadelphia" will not be amiss at this time. Sometimes, however, it is called the City of Brotherly Love. We think the people here might be slower than they are, and it would be most impossible to have too much brotherly love.

Our noble cause, whose interests we are here laboring to promote, is moving slowly. We hope the direction is upward and onward. Sometimes we almost feel that our efforts are in vain. Yet to us is given "the keeping of the lights along the shore," and with the favor of God we shall continue to "teach, preach, warn, expound, and invite all to come to Christ." We can not help it if they fail to come. But we can keep the light trimmed and burning both in precept and example that will illuminate the pathway that leads to the "way of true life." The grandeur of this work, its manifest divinity, its perfect accord with reason, its agreement with all true science, its complete harmony with all truth, and lastly but by no means leastly its effect and power for good strongly exerted and impressed upon this present life, to change, reform, correct, and guide aright impels one with the idea that it forms the basis of the true life, that not only gives promise of the life that now is, but the life which is to come. So may we all take courage and go on. "Fear not; the cause is good." We have a number of earnest and faithful Saints here who are willingly engaged in doing what they can to assist in the work, and may we remember that we have been admonished that no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, and temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care. May God help us so to be.

We have been favored of late by short visits from our colaborers, J. W. Rushton, M. H. Bond and wife, and our minister in charge, F. M. Sheehy. Bro. Rushton preached for us at four different services, to three of which we went through a rain. They were well attended, however, and interest was excellent. The Saints will be glad to welcome him here again. Bro. Sheehy gave us his lecture on the Book of Mormon, its reflected light on the discoveries and developments in the sciences illustrated, at our Religio meeting. It was well received and we are confident it did much good. We hope to have more from him along this line ere long. Bro. Bond spoke for us once very acceptably. May he have success in his new field.

Bro. Sheehy left to-day for other parts of his large field. His timely counsel, good advice, and pleasant association were beneficial to us all. He preached three times for us last Sunday.

On Sunday, June 22, we engaged in a session of debate lasting two hours, before the Radical Liberal League in this city. My opponent was Elder Samuel Harrison of the Utah church. We give the elder credit for his courage. Perhaps he has more of it than some of his brethren who will not discuss the differences between us. Several missionaries of his church were present, also many of their members who reside in this city. From the way and manner in which these men and women defend the doctrine of polygamy, one would think with them it is far from being a dead issue, "thing of the past," etc. The elder said the time would come when the law of God would be put in full force with all that God has commanded. We suppose that, with them, includes polygamy, Adam-god, blood atonement, predominating priesthood, etc., though they have but little to say of these three last innovations. A young elder last winter told me he knew very little about Adam being God. I replied to him that Brigham Young had so taught. He said, "Very well, if Bro. Brigham taught it, it is right, for I can testify that he was a prophet." Thus it is readily seen to be hard to reason with those who can not "see when good cometh." The usual argument was used to prove the righteousness of polygamy. A great point seemingly was made when with an air of a successful disputant the elder read of the Prophet Nathan, 2 Samuel 12: 8, how he gave wives unto David, etc. He had been reading their favorite from the Book of Mormon, "If I will raise up seed I will command my people," etc. I showed first, that Nathan was recognized in the revelation on polygamy, given by B. Young, as the one who held the keys of that power, like Brigham claimed to. That he was the same kind of a prophet as was Brigham. That since the "Spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets," it would be quite natural for him to say, Thus saith the Lord, I gave thy masters wives," since in all probability he was a polygamist himself. Then to put the cap sheaf on the thought, I read from the Book of Mormon, that David's wives, and Solomon's, too, were an abomination in the sight of the Lord. So it was Nathan, not the Lord, that gave them to him. He wanted to know how I would feel sitting down in the kingdom of God, with an old polygamist, like Abraham. I cited him first to the truth that Hagar was not recognized as Abraham's wife (Gen. 21: 12), and to the fact that Isaac was recognized as "thine only son" (Gen. 22: 15-17). "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." Consequently Abraham was not a polygamist. He was a sinner. Since all manner of sin may be forgiven, after the penalty is paid, forgiveness sought and obtained, restitution made, pardon secured, when Abraham goes through the fire which will purge the dross and comes out cleansed of his iniquity, purified from his sins, I will not object to sitting down with him in the kingdom, and only hope that may be my privilege. I told the audience I could understand why these people were so bold in advocating the doctrine. For the revelation which enjoins its observance in which they believe, says, "If ye abide not that covenant then are ye damned." No one can enter into glory who rejects it. That so far as I was concerned I would rather take my chances with the multitudes of sinners in Hades than to undertake to live with fifteen or twenty women; that if I should undertake it I would be sure of a hell on earth; that it would without doubt be the means of sending me there after I died; that I did not wish to take any such chances. In closing my side of the question I said: "Polygamy debases the race; corrupts the man; degrades the woman; brutifies the relations between the sexes; withers the holiest affections of the human heart; desecrates the family hearth; turns love into lust; men into despots; women into slaves; it is a violation of the eternal laws of our physical and moral nature, a sin against society, a crime against God." For shame! that the work of the gospel in this the last dispensation should be so impeded and hindered because of those who "have forsaken the right way, and gone astray following the way of Balaam, Brigham, and the doctrine of the Nicolaitans. Truly are they "wells without water," promising liberty and alluring with great swelling words while "they themselves are the servants of corruption." The corruptness of their institution was never more apparent to me than now. They have put such "spots and blemishes" upon this work as time will scarcely be able to remove—caused the way of truth to be evilly spoken of. When we think of how this work has stood amidst violence from within and from without, it is a strong testimony of its divinity. May we not permit our love of the good cause to grow cold because iniquity doth abound, nor fret because of evil-doers.

We are keeping a close watch on the productions of the press in general wherever reference is made to the latter-day work. We have written many letters and sent tracts setting forth the difference between the two churches. Whether it will result in doing any good we do not know. However, we have determined that we shall do our part in making known our position. We can only do that which is within our power to do. We can offer our protests against misrepresentation and acts of human injustice and contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and finally, with a conscience void of offense, submit our cause to the righteous judgment of him before whom we must all appear. I often think of the saying of that illustrious and much beloved man of God, W. W. Blair, namely, "When the murky clouds of prejudice, and the blinding mists of falsehood and superstition shall have passed away the character and work of Joseph Smith will appear in honor, and millions will revere him as a martyr." And now may Israel's hosts be up and doing, working while the day lasts, walking while we have the light to illuminate the way, that we may not be found sleeping but watching when "he cometh."

BOZEMAN, Montana, July 17.

Editors Herald: After the close of the General Conference, on April 30, I returned to Kirtland, Ohio, to look after matters there, and some other points in the East, preparatory to entering my new mission field. Sunday, May 4, I was at Richmondale, Ohio, at Bro. Spaun's. The day was bright and beautiful and Sr. Spaun took me to Limerick in their private carriage, a distance of seven miles, where I aided the Saints in their services during the day, enjoying the hospitality of Bro. T. J. Beatty and family, earnest defenders of the faith. The brethren are trying to keep alive their Sunday-school and other meetings, although their number is small. This is where I met a Christian minister of the Barton W. Stone way of thinking, over twenty years ago. He was an experienced disputant and knew how to turn a point, and had it not been that we carried better guns and ammunition than he did he would have made his point. Latter Day Saint lyddite, so to speak, exploding in the arena of sectarian theology scatters it to the four winds and gives people a view as to where the right lies. The atmosphere has been clear there since.

The 7th I attended the evening prayer-meeting at Bro. Ed Miller's in Kirtland, Ohio, Brn. Rushton, Griffiths, and Lake being present.

The 18th I assisted Brn. Robert Miller and Smiths in conducting their services, morning and evening, at Cleveland, Ohio. There were bright, pleasant faces in attendance and a good spirit prevailed. There is good in Cleveland.

The 25th I spent in Washington, District of Columbia, at W. H. Pecks. Sr. Peck is a member of the church and her husband is broad-minded enough to recognize good wherever found, though not identified with any religious order. The evening was spent at Annaconda with the Grand Army folks in company with Mr. Peck and son. Listened to an excellent and appropriate discourse from their standing minister—Methodist. There was a courtesy and friendliness extended by these people that made one feel at home. Soldiers are at home with soldiers; and it turns out that it is no discredit to a man to be a defender of his country as well as a defender of the faith. The following day I spent in Baltimore, Maryland, on business, meeting again, after many years, Bro. W. J. Urback, of 323 Biddle Street, spending an hour pleasantly at supper with the excellent family. They are interested in the faith, but have but little encouragement given them as they are comparatively alone.

June 1 returned to Lamoni, Iowa. The 21st I started for Bozeman, Montana. Stopped on the way at Red Oak, Iowa, over Sunday following, with Bro. and Sr. Merritt, where I was kindly received. Brn. Charles Fry and A. Madison had been holding meetings here in a tent for a fortnight and I aided them in their services during the day. It was a cold, damp day, so they had to abandon the tent and hold services in a private house. Bro. Fry preached a nice ethical discourse in the afternoon. My effort at evening closed their services here for the present. Brn. Fry and Madison are well spoken of; are clean, nice, and promising young men, and if faithful can not fail to be useful, although their efforts here were not crowned with much success.

I tarried a few days at Macedonia with James; not feeling the best, concluded to have a traveling companion, so had my daughter Belle join me here, and she is taking in the Montana sights, aiding in the tent services here with the other young folks of the place and learning how the elders manage things when out on missions, helpful as a girl can always be.

We arrived here at Bozeman on the "glorious Fourth of July" and was met at the depot by Brn. Reese Wells and Gomer Reese who had anticipated our arrival. This was a pleasant surprise, as we were not certain as to meeting any one. We were soon at the residences of Brn. J. H. Wells and Gomer Reese to find homes and genuine Saints. Soon met Bro. Thomas Reese and family, Sr. Amy James Wells and their little bud of promise, together with the young folks. Rather a pleasant ending after a long and tiresome ride, when we were prepared to be left to hunt our way the best we could if we did not chance to meet Bro. D. C. White, and he was away at Deer Lodge. Bozeman was celebrating; the main street well filled with people from the country who came in to spend the Fourth. Flags and bunting were in profusion and Bozeman in her gay attire, Old Glory floating to the breeze. Here was another surprise. Instead of a little trading point on the railroad, of a few hundred inhabitants, made up of cowboys, half-breeds, Indians, etc., Bozeman contains over four thousand inhabitants, is well built, with elegant school buildings and other public improvements, with signs of wealth and prosperity everywhere, and a population, as seen on parade on the Fourth, in appearance and dress that might be taken for inhabitants of the best cities in the East. The snow-clad mountains to the south and east and grand "Old Baldy" towering high to the north, puts Bozeman in the midst of enchanting scenery that attracts the eye at once. We are just a little taken with the appearance of things, and if the long winters do not greatly counteract, then Bozeman is a good place to live. The atmosphere is cool and bracing and crops are first-class. The people seem to be prosperous-looking after worldly things. Such is the point of introduction in our new mission field.

Last week Bro. Thomas Reese carried me with horse and buggy to Reese Creek, where I met a number of the Saints and friends. Held a few meetings in the church with some interest. This is an old landmark, where the gospel has been preached many years. Some of those gathered out here have moved away, some died. Enough remain, however, if full of zeal and earnestness, to keep up meetings, but they need encouragement and help.

A new tent has been provided by the Saints in which to hold meetings, which was put up here in Bozeman last week by Brn. J. H. Wells, Thomas Reese, and D. C. White and meetings started. Services continue each evening this week, Bro. White and the writer alternating as speakers. The audiences are not large but we are trying to not "despise the day of small things" and going ahead all the same. The young folks are doing their part well in the song service.

Bro. Gomer Reese is at Bitter Creek in the western part of the district and reports favorably of the work. Reports from Brn. Sawley, Pender, Swenson, Chase, and Condit, of Utah and Idaho, are encouraging, so there are indications of success in the Rocky Mountain Mission.

We received no mail here until recently; it lodged on the way and all came at once. So if any have thought we are non-appreciative or derelict in duty this will explain.

We have not got the lay of things sufficiently to arrange a program, but try to keep in touch with chief interests. Am beginning to get a little of the old-time vigor and vim into discourses, so conclude that I am improving physically out in this mountain air and wonderland. One thing, there is no danger of sweating one's self to death, especially nights and mornings. Bro. D. C. White is well and doing excellently. Brn. J. H. Wells, Thomas Reese, Reese Wells, Robert Esgar, and others, and not a few of the sisters are doing what they can to support the work here, and socially seem just like Saints, which is good enough.

Having caught up to date with this long letter, we may require less space hereafter. No. 542 West Lamme Street, Bozeman, Montana, is our present address.

Fraternally,

WM. H. KELLEY.

HAVERHILL, Massachusetts, July 15.

Editors Herald: The district tent has been in operation here for about six weeks. Brn. I. M. Smith and H. J. Davison in charge with occasional help from the writer. The local brethren have done all they can in advertising and getting the matter before the people, but very few come out to hear the old gospel story. Pleasure groves, sea-bathing, beach attractions, base ball, etc., take the masses, and the few who are not attracted by these allurements seem to have no desire for the truth. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" certainly represents the condition of the world to-day, notwithstanding they "have a form of Godliness."

Bro. Davison has left here to join Bro. W. W. Blanchard at High Ridge, Connecticut, in tent work. Bro. I. M. Smith is under the weather with a severe cold—unable to occupy. We are looking for Bro. Robley to join in the effort here so that I can be released and attend to other matters claiming my attention.

I have just received a dunning letter from the business manager of HERALD Office for money owing for books ordered through me for Saints in the district. This is unpleasant for me to receive matter of this kind. Now Saints remit to me at once what you owe me for books so that I can straighten out this matter. In future please hand me the wherewith when placing the order. Don't get offended and try and do without the church publications because your attention is called to these matters, but deal fairly with your business manager so that the Board of Publication be not hindered in its work.

R. BULLARD.

The Scandinavian Mission

Having been appointed in charge of the above mission, perhaps a few lines from me will be expected and in order.

While it might be considered in order to urge Scandinavian Saints to make a special effort to sustain that mission, I feel timid about so urging from the fact that the church is one, and that Scandinavian, German, and Saints of other nationalities are doing their part in sustaining all missions undertaken by the church; but if those who are especially interested in the mission, without neglecting their duties to the church in general, feel able and willing to aid us financially in the work over there, we shall accept their assistance as a great favor. Donations may be sent to the Bishop, or direct to his agent for the mission, Bro. Peter Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway. The authorities over there are as a rule very careful about money matters, and donations will be sure to reach the right party.

Reports from Brn. Muceus and Enge are quite encouraging, and we are in a fair way to gain a foothold in Norway. Sweden, Norway, and Denmark contain a population of nearly nine millions, and are among the most enlightened countries of Europe. In order to get our work and cause properly before those people we should have the standard books of the church translated and published. To do this requires time and money, and of necessity a protracted effort. The Brighamites at first made a fair effort to correctly translate the books and represent the latter-day work, but since the introduction of polygamy in Utah, in 1852, efforts have been made to bend the standard books to support that doctrine, and their later editions of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are quite perverted, so much so that I would not advise their circulation by our people.

In order to secure an impartial investigation upon the part of the people it will be necessary to clearly draw the line between us and the Brighamites. To accomplish this in as speedy a manner as possible I have written an address to the people of those countries, briefly setting forth our claims, doctrine, and the main points of difference. This we hope to be able to print in large numbers, for distribution there and in America, wherever Scandinavians are found. Saints in America who have relatives and friends in the Scandinavian countries can aid us materially in this by sending us names and addresses of such, with a little money for postage, so that we could send copies to them by mail, and thus being furnished with their addresses, call on them when convenient. Help us at once, so that there be no delay. The address will be published in both Swedish and Danish-Norwegian.

Saints, let us more diligently heed the instructions to circulate tracts among the people indicated, and see that the active ministry constantly have a supply on hand.

Until further notice mail matters may be sent to me in care of Bro. Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway. Peter Anderson. Kirtland, Ohio, July 19.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, July 13.

Bro. Kelley: Inclosed find express money-order for five dollars to apply on lifting the Graceland College debt. Until of late I have not given much thought to the debt of the college; but for the last week it has bothered me daily. I could not get rid of the thought, so I made up my mind to send two dollars; then I thought that was too little to bother with, and I did not see my way clear to send more, as I have a large family, and living expenses are very high at this time in Kansas City. So I talked the matter over with my wife, telling her that I believed that the Lord wanted me to place my name on that record as one who desired to comply with his commandments, when he spoke through his servant that we as his Saints should pay that debt. I wish I could send more; will try to add my little mite later. I am feeling good at this time that I have complied with the promptings of the Spirit. Love to all God's people.

JOSEPH R. LEWIS.

1757 West Prospect.

CHEROKEE, Iowa, July 20.

Editors Herald: We are here at Cherokee, husband and I, still striving to hold forth the banner of King Immanuel. But it has been so cold and has rained so much since we have been here that it has been almost impossible to get the people to come to the tent when it is so damp and cold. Our attendance has not been very large, but the attention was good. We have canvassed the town quite thoroughly, distributing tracts, talking and visiting whenever opportunity permitted us to do so. They have moved the tent to-day, in the west part of town. I am in hopes this change will cause the weather to clear up and the tent to be filled to overflowing. Yes, I would like to see the whole city converted. But we must ever be ready to say, Lord, thy will, not ours, be done.

I find this is hard, tiresome work, but I am only keeping the promise I made to the Lord. I will tell you how I came to make this promise, as it might be of benefit to some one. About three years ago my husband met with a severe accident. He was thrown from a load of hay, the wheel passing over his head, breaking blood vessels, causing the blood to flow from one ear, nose, and mouth. I was quite frightened when they brought him home all covered with blood. I sent for the elders and had him administered to, but he got no relief. I then sent for the doctor. He came, and as he could not stop the bleeding he called another doctor, and they did all they could, but it did no good. The doctor then came to me and said they had done all they could; that I had better send for my folks; that he could not live till twelve that night. But I felt all the time that he would get well; that God had called him to do a work, and I felt sure he would spare his life. I had him administered to again but to no effect. Right here let me say, husband was making arrangements to go into the missionary field, and it was quite a trial for me to give him up and let him go. But when I saw death so near I thought it was a great deal better to let him go and see him once in awhile than to lose him altogether. And I said, "Lord, spare his life; I will help him all I can in this work." A short time after this I heard, as it were, a voice say:

The Great Physician now is near;
The sympathizing Jesus.
He speaks the drooping heart to cheer,
Oh hear the words of Jesus.
Go on in faith, ye Saints, go on;
Fear not, the cause is good.

I went into the room where he was, and oh, the peace that I felt! My burden was gone. The thought came, "Send for the elders." It was three o'clock. I said, "Will some one go for the elders?" One brother said, "You had better ask Bro. Baker if he wants to be administered to." I asked him; he nodded his head. Bro. Derry and Bro. Rudd came and administered to him and the bleeding stopped right away. This is a testimony to me that I never can forget, and this is why I go from home to help whenever I can. I have been from home the last three summers and the Lord has wonderfully blessed me when I try to do his bidding.

Hoping and praying for the advancement of truth,
Your sister,

JENNIE BAKER.

Editors Herald: In the minutes of the Idaho conference for June 28 and 29 there should have been 5 baptisms accredited to J. H. Condit instead of 3. Also Teton Branch, and Teton Basin, not Tetar.

A sisters' aid society was organized at Malad the 12th inst., Sr. Stella Williams, president; Sr. Annie Richards, vice-president; Sr. Beatrice Thomas, secretary, and Miss Blanche Wilkes, treasurer. We hope to see good come of it.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, July 20.

Editors Herald: Our church was dedicated on Sunday, July 13. Large attendance and the best of order, and the good Spirit was present. Brn. Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and I. N. White of the Twelve were present. Bro. Joseph spoke Sunday at eleven, also in the evening at eight. Those outside the church whom I have heard express themselves were well pleased with Bro. Joseph's sermon, and said they could not see why the other churches fought us so bitterly. Bro. Kelley offered the dedicatory prayer. The prayer and testimony meeting was well attended and some strong testimonies given. At the close of this meeting one child was blessed by Brn. Joseph and Kelley, and three elders were ordained by Brn. Kelley and White.

Sunday evening the church was crowded and close attention paid to the speaker. Monday morning there were three baptisms performed by Bro. Sparling. We are glad that Sr. Duemler has come into the work, as Bro. Duemler has been a faithful worker while he was all alone in the work. Sr. Duemler will be a great help to the work here. We had the blessed privilege of spending the day with Brn. Joseph, Kelley, White, and Sparling in our own home. While my sister is not a member of the church, she loves to have the brethren visit with us, and I still hope on.

Our branch is growing slowly and the work is onward here. I close by saying, Come again, brethren, all of you, and you will be made welcome.

Yours in the faith,

MOLLIE THOMPSON.

DALLAS CENTER, Iowa, July 19.

Editors Herald: I sent you on yesterday a copy of the New Times, published here, with an article entitled, "The Poison Fang," written by the Presbyterian minister, G. D. Gurley, and I now inclose a circular that I had printed and circulated throughout the town last night, which will show you what has been done. The town is stirred, and much interest and excitement exist. The leading Presbyterians are deploring the condition of things, and several have come to Bro. W. Christy, and volunteered the statement that they did not approve of what their minister had done, and while previously to this they had not thought to attend the services, they now intended to do so. Some of the business men have even offered money to prosecute Mr. Gurley for slander. Indeed, it is one of the foulest expressions I have ever seen in print from a minister of the Prebyterian Church.

When Bro. Christy and I went to see him yesterday, he invited us in, and immediately said, "I suppose you have come to talk on the "Mormon" question. I told him I had noticed his unkind attack on the "Latter Day Saints" and their faith, with the un-Christlike spirit he had shown in his language. He could only say, "fraud;" "the serpent of Mormonism," and such expressions. I asked him what proof he had for the use of such expressions. He said, "Proof! Don't need to prove it. History says it is a fraud. It is and has often been proven a fraud."

I replied, "It has never been proven by evidence that would be accepted in the courts of the land. I now have propositions to present to you to give you a chance to show the proof you have that it is a fraud."

"That oft-exposed fraud, the Book of Mormon," he said. "I haven't any time for such work," he said, and refused to receive the propositions, pushing them back to me.

I asked him if he had "ever read the Book of Mormon." He said he had seen it. I again asked, "Have you read it?" He replied that he had "no time to read the old fraud;" that he did not read "obscene literature." I soon had him confessing that he did not mean obscene, but he meant fictitious literature. He said toward the conclusion that he would as soon "associate with the Brighamite Mormons as the Joe Smith Mormons." He soon told me that he wanted to hear no more from me.

Rain prevents meetings in the park, so we have it at Bro. Christy's residence where a few of the more interested ones attend. Brn. McCoy and Turpen are with the tent at Fraser and having large audiences. Bro. George Shimel was compelled to ask release from missionary work on account of sickness in family, that seems to be continuous. He needs the prayers of the Saints, that he may receive release from affliction's bondage, and be free to minister the word, for he is well liked, and his labors would be a great help to us.

J. F. MINTUN.

OMAHA, Nebraska, July 18.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. E. Butts and the writer held a two-day meeting at Decatur on the 12th and 13th, which was very good, all things considered. One sister was baptized and others are believing, but it might be difficult to say when they will obey, though we hope it will not be long. Bro. Oscar Case did some good work in this district and he is remembered with kindness by the Saints. Brn. Huff and Donaldson are holding some successful tent meetings about six miles south of Valley, where they will continue for a while. Bro. James A. Donaldson occupied here in the city while the writer was at Decatur, and his efforts are appreciated.

Bro. J. G. Munsell and a few Saints assisted me in holding a few tent meetings here in the city, which were not as well attended as we had hoped they might be. However, we appreciate the efforts of all who helped. Brn. J. Guy Munsell and Edward Rannie are, with their helpers, trying to make the Religio work a success here in the city. Bro. John F. Weston and other branch officers are trying to discharge present duties as the opportunities present themselves. The Religio Society on the 16th inst., and the branch on the 17th, both passed resolutions requesting Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, at his convenience, to visit the Omaha Branch as evangelical minister and for the performance of any and all duties pertaining to his high and holy calling, as it may seem wise to him so to do.

There is some sickness among the Saints here in the city, but the health is good, all things considered. There are a few of the members who might, perhaps, manifest a little more zeal and spiritual life to the good of themselves and the work if they would try to do so. However, we are very thankful for the spiritual life manifest and for the good, consistent Sunday-school, Religio, and church workers that we have, and for the good work being done by them. Bro. F. R. Schafer and family are about to move from Emerson, Iowa, and locate here in the city, which will make an addition to our good workers. God will reward each and all for all good work done and recognize and bless and honor each for individual worth and the development of Christlike characters. It matters but little to us how much we may be misrepresented or misunderstood so long as we know we are in the right, for our suffering here is but of short duration. And soon, if doing no evil, we shall be ushered into the presence of Him who knows and understands the thoughts and intents of the heart and never makes a mistake in judgment nor fails to give a just and proper reward. There and then we shall be understood and known; and, if our lives have been pure and we have been loyal to God and true to our covenant of adoption into the family of God; if we have with all the powers of body and soul endeavored to do all that we could to bless and save suffering and fallen humanity; if we have tried to encourage and help each and all; if we have improved upon the talents given to the best of our ability, whether they have been one, two, or five, we shall be accounted worthy to enter into the presence of the Just One and behold the face of God in righteousness. Then we can rest and rejoice in Christ our Savior and thank the Father for the light, peace, joy, knowledge, wisdom, love, power, glory, and eternal life which we have received and enjoy because of the merits of him "who spake as never man spake." Then, if not before, we shall see as we are seen and know as we are known, for so testified Paul of old.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

KNOBNOTER, Missouri, July 18.

Editors Herald: On June 25 I closed my labors in Kansas City for a while and joined Brn. G. H. Hulmes and A. H. Parsons at Holden, Missouri, where they had the big tent in operation. Bro. Parsons having other duties to perform, left us immediately following my arrival. We preached every night to large and interesting congregations, which proved to be quite unsatisfactory to some of the divines, especially a Reverend D. D. Martin, of the M. E. Church, who made himself quite officious on the streets to set the people right and to inform them that these Latter Day Saints and the Utah Mormon church were all the same. It happened that he had quite a large crowd around him in front of a blacksmith shop when Bro. Hulmes and myself came along on the opposite side of the street, when quite a hurrah went up, and we heard the voice and saw our faithful teacher of the branch, Bro. Cornelison motioning his hand, saying, "Bro. Warnky, come over here, quick!" We hesitated. The invitation was repeated several times, and we went over and found the reverend telling how certain doctrines of the Latter Day Saint Church were blasphemy. We asked him if he would publicly meet us in a discussion and try to prove his assertions. He said he would; some of the propositions he would meet himself, and others he would get Mr. Clark Braden to meet. Bro. Hulmes asked him if he was willing to defend his own doctrine. He said he would. Some questions for discussion were presented, when he publicly denied that the first article of faith in the M. E. church was that they believe in a God without body or parts. (We did not fail to get an M. E. Discipline and read it to the blacksmith and others, a few days later.) He was determined that the wording of the questions for discussion should be just as he wanted them, so Bro. Hulmes wrote down as follows: 1. No mode of baptism can be proven beyond a possibility of a doubt. 2. No person is saved or lost by being baptized or not being baptized. 3. The sayings of James as recorded in 5th chapter, 14th and 15th verses, carries with it no power to heal the sick in the church of to-day. The propositions he wanted us to meet Mr. Braden on were: 1. It is blasphemy to believe that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God. 2. It is blasphemy to believe that the Book of Mormon contains the word of God. Bro. Hulmes wrote the propositions out, and I signed them for our church and left them at the blacksmith shop for him to sign. Bro. Hulmes saw Bro. I. N. White and he consented to meet Mr. Braden on these propositions at Holden. Up to the day we left Holden, July 10, he had failed to sign his own proposition and come to time as he said he would. His excuse is (we have been informed), that he first wants all the churches in Holden to indorse him and then he will show up Latter Day Saintism. Of course we know how the Baptist and Christian churches will run to him on the subject of the mode of water baptism. The affair will result in good to our cause.

We came to Knobnoster on the 10th and received a hearty welcome by Bro. Weidman, officer of the branch, and all the Saints. We have preached here every night to from fair to good congregations. Wednesday Bro. Hulmes baptized one man. Some others may unite with us ere we leave. The Saints here are very much in need of an active elder to be located here.

We shall continue our meetings here until after Sunday; then we intend to go to Warrensburg.

F. C. WARNKY.

BOWIE, Texas, July 14.

Editors Herald: I came here the 12th; commenced meetings that night to a good congregation, and have kept it up. The house was full last night. There were people out to hear who had not been to church in eight years. This is a new place; the first preaching ever done here, and they seem to like it splendidly.

I came here from Ford County. I had a splendid meeting there; baptized one good man, and left others near the kingdom. I have been laboring with Bro. T. J. Sheppard since May until two weeks ago, when he went to Dallas County.

I feel well in the work of the Master. Have had good liberty and been blessed with the Spirit in speaking, for which I am thankful.

I find in this country that the churches have divided and are in confusion, and Babylon is falling, and the honest in heart will accept the truth. I hope and pray that the time will come that there are elders enough to answer the calls. I never saw a better time in my life to get the gospel before the people than now, as they are willing to listen and investigate.

I will begin labor in Comanche County, Oklahoma, in August, and I desire to get acquainted with the Saints of that county, and kindly ask them to write me at Olds, Oklahoma. They will have nearly all their schoolhouses done by that time, and I expect to put forth every effort possible to get the gospel before the people, and ask the Saints, if any in that county, to write me, and I will give them a call. We will do all we can. At Olds there are thirteen members of the church, and I hope to be able to get the gospel before others that they may obey. Hope the missionary in charge will be able to give us a call in September and look at the condition of the Saints for a branch to be organized.

B. F. RENFROE.

ROSETTA, Idaho, July 13.

We are a little band of Saints living in the northern part of Idaho, debarred from the privilege of Latter Day Saint preaching except through our church papers, and they are very strengthening. They encourage us to our duty.

There are seven Saints here and we are all striving to do our duty. We have prayer and testimony meetings every other Sunday, which are very strengthening. We are trying to let our light shine to the world. I think if we had one of our elders here he could do a good work. There has never been any preaching here by our elders since last fall a year ago, Bro. Albertson was here and preached five sermons, which did much good, strengthening the Saints and encouraging them to duty. We have been looking and praying for one of our elders, but for some cause they do not come. It may be our fault. If there could be some elder sent we will provide for him and try and pay his way back. Our means are quite limited but we will do all we can to help forward the work. We have been looking for Bro. Layland, Bro. Sawley, or Bro. Condit, but they do not come. I would have written to them, but I do not know their addresses. We are anxious to hear the gospel sounded once more.

I. R. BUTLER.

WEST SURRY, Maine, July 13.

Dear Herald: It has been several months since I have written, yet in those months I have suffered everything, and I can stand it no longer. January 22 I was silenced by I. M. Smith. Since that time I have done wrong in doing and saying things to reap revenge on others, not realizing where it was leading me until I found myself stranded and without the Spirit in many ways. I still feel as I did at first. I can not see that I was dealt with justly. Never at any time or by any one have I ever received one word of encouragement, except from U. W. Greene. He did not have much time to talk, but he said the right things. At the time he talked to me I intended to give up everything and did not pay much attention to him; but try as I would I could not get his words out of my mind. At last I knelt down and asked his God to help me, and he has, for I felt I had no God to go to that I could call mine, for I had not kept his law. I tried to think I never loved his law like others, but I can not make myself believe it. I did and still do love his gospel. I must and will try and return and gain favor with him and his people. I blame no one but myself. I do not ask for sympathy. I only ask for justice and mercy.

O, elders of this glorious gospel, I hope you never will realize as I have the need of a few encouraging words. If I could have had just one letter, just one hand to steady me when I was so weak and discouraged, how it would have helped me in the dark time I have passed through. Without the Spirit, the light in us becomes darkness, how great is that darkness! I think I realize it. To all whom it may concern, I state, I have repented and humbled myself before God, and am willing to before his people. I ask forgiveness of all God's people, and wherein I have helped to trail the banner of truth in the dust I will try harder than ever to help raise it to honor. If this comes to the notice of Brn. F. M. Sheehy and I. M. Smith, will they please send me their addresses.

S. G. CUNNINGHAM.

DETROIT, Michigan, July 21.

Brother Joseph: Inclosed find one dollar as my part on college debt as suggested by the divine personage which talked with the dear sister; also one dollar for my mother, Mrs. Jane Couser, and one for my sister, Sr. Maggie Shore. I am so glad to see so many promptly fall into line by responding with their one dollar, and also the one dollar for others who have not their own dollar. I desire to quickly fall into line, so that when the commander calls "halt" I shall be among that number to receive promotion. I am sure there are many who think they can not pay their dollar who could do so by a little sacrifice and self-denial. I ever pray and trust and hope for the redemption of Zion.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, July 21.

Editors Herald: We dedicated our new tent Sunday, the 13th. We pitched it in South Louisville and conducted meetings about a week with very poor interest. Bro. Heman C. Smith was with us on the night of the 17th, and preached an edifying and strengthening discourse to just a few of the Saints. Bro. Smith was in company with our beloved brother, George Jenkins, of Southern Indiana District.

Well, we are laboring in a new part of the city, and the result is as usual. There has been a great deal of dirt thrown at the work by a Presbyterian preacher who is pastor of the M. E. Church in South Louisville. It seems to me that any kind of religion will do in this city but the religion of Jesus Christ. The Methodists take a Presbyterian preacher as a pastor and he warns all of the members of church and Sunday-school not to come out to hear "those Mormons," for they use a novel for a Bible and they teach polygamy; and he went from house to house and warned the people against us. I met him yesterday and gave him a good rub; tried to get him to make a public fight of it by letting the public hear both sides of the matter, but he would not; yet will stand behind his own pulpit and throw dirt at us.

Well, we will push the work along the best we can and just preach the gospel and God will look after the results. Bro. J. W. Adams is pretty well used to having hard things said about him, as well as myself, so they can not stop us that way. It takes more than hard things said about him to make him look downcast. Why, he just laughs at it, as if it did him good. But he has not been well for several weeks, and he looks as if he hadn't had a good square meal since he has been in the South. Well, being so thin, he doesn't get so much of the heat.

Bro. J. M. Scott was with us two nights at the tent and preached one good discourse for us. We hope to see the work grow here this year, but this is a hard city to work. They wanted to charge us twenty dollars for a small lot to set the tent on one month.

Editors Herald: The hope of the true gospel is yet growing with me. The more I labor in this cause of redemption the more I want to, the better I understand it, and the more beautiful it seems to me. I labor, not with an unholy ambition, but to be humble and meek, to lead a life that will commend me to our heavenly Father, to build up a character that will have its influence in this world. My talent is not great, yet what I have I hope to improve, doing all that my hands find to do. I find there is no stopping place in this work, but "onward and upward" is the watchword. Yes, there is work for all. The Sunday-school, the Religio, the Daughters of Zion, the Gospel Literature Bureau, etc., furnish work for all. Why falter? Why hesitate? Why loiter while the sound of the Captain's command, "Onward and upward!" is heard? The promises of God secured to the faithful are soul-cheering in this world of trial. To battle on is gain, to loiter is loss. "What will a man give in exchange for his soul?" Let us move onward, laboring, continually studying to show ourselves approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

We look forward with cheerful anticipation for the future of Zion, and hope that Nodaway District will develop many standard-bearers of King Emmanuel. I am aware that our talents and energies should not lie dormant while the call is coming for laborers. Steady, valiant, persistent workers are needed. Spasmodic persons are hurtful to the body.

Our district reunion will be held August 9-19 at Barnard, which we hope will be a soul-cheering affair. We pray that it may be so.

I received a letter the other day from Sr. Martha Keene, of Cantrall, Illinois, who in company with her husband moved there from Barnard, Missouri, last September, stating that Bro. Thomas Keene, her husband, died on the 5th inst. Bro. J. C. Foss will remember that he was holding services in the Christian church in Barnard, when Bro. Keene came to him and said, "That sounds just like the gospel." At this time he renewed his covenant, and has lived a faithful life up to the time of his demise. May God bless the aged widow and grant unto her the desire of her heart in regard to her children who know not the gospel. May the looked-for Herald find her children.

W. B. TORRANCE.

NECEDAH, Wisconsin, July 18.

Editors Herald: Since writing last we have had visits from a number of elders, including A. L. Whiteaker, A. V. Closson, M. F. Gowell, and district president, W. P. Robinson. These brethren have worked earnestly for the advancement of the gospel in this place. Prejudice seems to be slowly giving way, and several are interested. One man is reading the Book of Mormon and said when borrowing it, "If it is what they claim it to be, I'll join the church." Several others have read the book and all declare they find it contains no dangerous teachings.

The last series of meetings seems to have made a deeper impression on the people than any other series. This does not reflect on any of those who have labored here in the past. All have had their share in preparing the minds of the people for the gospel to take effect.

Elders Robinson and Gowell are the ones who have been with us latest. They have preached several times in our schoolhouse to small but attentive congregations. Bro. Gowell is still with us but intends leaving the first of next week, Bro. Robinson having left a day or two ago. To a small branch of Saints as we are, struggling to get the truth before the people, the visits of these elders are very helpful. Their words of advice, warning, and encouragement are at once an inspiration and a benediction; an inspiration to put forth our best efforts to accomplish the work the Lord has set for each to do, an inspiration to meet bravely and prayerfully all obligations, all duties, and to make of cares a joy in serving the Lord. A benediction by helping us to feel that our earnest efforts are accepted by the Giver of all good and showing the mercies and blessings of God unto his people.

We are looking forward hopefully to the convening of our next district conference, which is to meet with us. We feel that much good will be accomplished by the conference being here. We are few in number but are all endued with the belief that one of the most practical ways to get the gospel before the people is to be living epistles that all may read. We still keep up all our meetings. We have preaching every Sunday night by either priest or teacher when no visiting elder is present. Cottage prayer-meetings are held every Wednesday night; sacrament the first Lord's day each month; Sunday-school and Religio regularly. We feel blessed in all our efforts for good.

IVA FISHER.

DENVER, Colorado, July 21.

Dear Herald: We are not all dead neither all sleeping; the prospects are, I think, as promising for good in this great city as they ever have been since I became connected with the work here. There is plenty to do, in fact more than can possibly be done by the number there are to do it. Denver is a great resort both for Saints and sinners and it is very necessary that our work should be advertised and kept before the public all the time that all may be left without excuse. The space in the newspapers for church advertising is very limited, and it is for this reason that we began the publication of the Gospel Echo, not to interfere with other church publications, but to advertize our local work throughout the city and the Eastern Colorado District. We are sending it to quite a number throughout the State and a few outside who we think are interested in our local work. We are distributing from two to four hundred every week in the city, thus advertising our place of meeting and the time of such meetings, hoping thus to increase the attendance. The attendance on the part of the Saints is, we think, improved, especially at the Wednesday night prayer-meeting, some of which of late have been quite spiritual.

Bro. J. B. Wildermuth has lately come to the city to do missionary work, and Bro. Charles E. Willey is with the tent at Cripple Creek. Bro. H. A. Stebbins is with us at present. The Sunday-school and Religio work is moving along very nicely.

We are here to stay, and propose if this city does not know of the truthfulness of the gospel it shall not be our fault.

E. F. SHUPE.

WESTON, Iowa, July 14.

Editors Herald: To-day our worthy young brother, P. M. Hanson, starts on his far-off mission to New Zealand. He leaves a beautiful home with a loving father, mother, brothers, and sisters, and goes into a strange land and among a strange people to preach the gospel. I have known him from childhood, and he is worthy of the position he holds in the church as well as the love and confidence of the Saints.

Most of the Saints of our branch here at Hazel Dell gave him some means to help him on his mission, but some felt we had not done all we could, so we had a surprise-party for him last Friday evening and presented him with a nice book-satchel. We spent a pleasant evening at his home. Just before we left, Bro. J. J. Christensen, our branch president, offered a fervent prayer, and I believe all went home feeling well repaid for the little sacrifice we had made, and felt that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Bro. Peter Anderson visited our branch some time ago. He leaves his family and goes out in a cold world to preach the gospel. Think what a sacrifice these brethren are making to advance the work of God. Dear Saints, what are many of us doing if we expect to reap the same reward with our brethren? God will require some sacrifice at our hands, and when I hear the Saints bear testimony and tell how much they love the work and desire to see it roll on, but neglect to pay their tithing and are accumulating wealth in great abundance, I can not but think they love their riches more than the work of God. Some will excuse themselves and say the tithing money is not used right, and so neglect their duty. Dear Saints, let us not deceive ourselves, for each one will have to give an account of his stewardship here below. May God help us all to do our duty and show our faith by our works.

Your sister,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN:

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, July 20.

Editors Herald: The Providence Branch at its recent business meeting elected Elder George H. Gates as president. About the only other change was the election of Bro. John D. Suttill as presiding teacher. The local Religio business session held July 8 resulted in the reelection of its corps of officers with the exception that Bro. Daniel Joy was elected vice-president. The Sunday-school made only one change in its officers for the ensuing term, that of electing Bro. J. D. Suttill as superintendent.

Elder Frank O. Coombs of the Plainville Branch, Massachusetts, occupied the Providence Latter Day Saint pulpit three times of late to the spiritual and intellectual profit of those present.

Bro. Otis Toombs, 315 Oxford Street, Providence, of the local Religio, has been appointed superintendent of the gospel literature bureau for the Massachusetts District Religio. He desires the names of those to whom gospel literature could be sent, such as HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, etc., within the limits of this district. All literature as above should either be mailed to him or he should be notified of literature that any one may have to devote to his department, and he will then notify where to send same. Prepayment of all postage and inclosure of stamps for letters requiring replies and orders for literature will be acceptable at all times, when convenient.

The Attleboro-Plainville Religio held a very successful reception on the anniversary of its organization as a local at the home of the Sisters Staples, Plainville, Massachusetts. A well-rendered program of vocal and instrumental music, readings, etc., was had, after which all adjourned to the lawn where a number of tables were laden with cake, ice-cream, and lemonade. Several of the Providence Saints were present.

After the inner man was amply supplied, innocent games were enjoyed by old and young.

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

STRATFORD, Ontario, July 20.

Saints' Herald: I wish to tell you good news from Stratford. For years the few Saints here have been paying rent for a hall to meet in, and have been compelled to meet in places with unattractive surroundings because unable to pay higher rent for better place. Some time ago, however, they purchased a lot in a nice part of the city, with a little frame house upon it. They obtained possession on May 1, and from that time until the house was converted into a neat little white church, a busier handful of people has seldom been seen. They, with the help of Rostock Saints, turned the building with the end towards the street and raised it about three feet. They then met each evening after six and on holidays and worked till a late hour with hammer, saw, and paint-brush until it was completed, the ceiling raised, doors moved from sides to ends, windows arranged in church-like style, wainscoting put all around, and painting done inside and out. It has seating capacity for seventy-five. The repairs cost ninety dollars besides their own work.

We had hoped to have Elders R. C. Evans, J. H. Lake, and D. MacGregor with us on the occasion of the opening on July 6, but were grieved to learn that the two former could not come, as they had other appointments out. Elder MacGregor, however, arrived and had charge of the services. A number of Saints from Rostock, McKillop, and St. Marys were present, and a good time was had, notwithstanding the intense heat.

To others our house of worship may appear very insignificant, but to us it seems a veritable paradise; and I venture to say there is more heartfelt gratitude and true admiration expended upon it by the sixteen Saints that meet there (most of whom are young people working out) than there is upon any church in the city by its congregation. And the thought that some day it will be altogether our own, when we get the debt paid, is a cheering one.

The Saints are humble, united, and happy in the work.

Your sister,

MAGGIE MACGREGOR.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Local Ministry of Southern Missouri District: Having been appointed president of the district, I desire to do my duty. In our labors we should have some object in view. During the present quarter let us each strive to become more thoroughly consecrated to the Lord's work and to build up the Sunday-school work. These are the primary steps. We must not let our talents lie dormant if we would grow spiritually. If Saints can find nothing else to do in their respective localities, possibly they can attend a sectarian Sunday-school, where they can spend some of their time on the Lord's day. Saints, do not let your children grow up without a knowledge of this gospel. Teach them at home as well as at Sunday-school, so that when they arrive at the proper age, they will request baptism. Let the branch officers please observe the following rules: 1. Do not permit dead branches to cumber the vine. This does not mean to "cut and slash" prematurely. Let all necessary labor be performed. 2. Let the presiding elder of each branch make as many pastoral visits during the quarter as possible. 3. Will the branch priests please visit the house of each member during the present quarter. I would suggest that where there is more than one priest in a branch, that the branch elect a presiding priest and assistants. This calls all into activity. 4. Will the teacher of each branch see that there is no iniquity in the church and that each member does his duty. 5. Five days before our next conference, let all the branch officers report the following items to the branch president, and let him send the same to me at Ava, Missouri: Number of pastoral visits. Number of priestly visits. Number of cases under process of adjustment by teacher. How many cases should be adjusted. Let the deacon report his labor also. We desire to visit as many of the branches as possible in connection with our missionary work. May the Lord's cause prosper and his Saints grow in strength. In gospel bonds, A. M. Baker, District President.

Statement and Request.

To the friends and patrons of Graceland College: Greeting: In behalf of the Board of Trustees of Graceland, relative to the work imposed upon them as servants of the church as duly chosen and appointed by the General Conference, I wish to state: We meet with much in our labor of a discouraging nature, and of a disinterestedness from those who we have a reason to trust and believe could, should, and would be helpful to us in the discharge of our needful duties. To illustrate: Some time since we made a request for the field address of the appointees of the late General Conference, as also for membership list of certain quorums. To this appeal, of the 358 missionaries Brn. Arthur Allen and K. Seli, and the Fourth Quorum of Elders, and one quorum of priests complied with our request.

We have published at a considerable expense the annual catalogue for 1902-3, and have mailed a copy to each of the missionaries, mostly to their home address. Now as the catalogue is issued for use in advancing the material interests of this church institution, we humbly and respectfully request the families of the missionaries to remain the catalogue, and we further ask of the Saints who receive a copy that if you have no immediate use for it, please be for us in this instance a colporter, by handing to some one who now, or in the near future may be conditioned or desire to gain advanced or an higher education.

More especially do we urge upon the Saints in this consideration of selecting a place of obtaining a college advancement, a location and institution, where the student may have the opportunity of the Sabbath-school, Religio, church, and society wherein faith and knowledge of the restored gospel may be maintained and increased.

In this age of multiplied uncertainties, contentions, and egregious errors in the religious realm, and the corruptibility of a wicked and sinful world, parents can not be too careful to grant their children such guidance and protection as is possible for them to supply, and the nature of their responsibility to their offspring demands.

Saints, this is a far more important question than many have thought it to be, and be advised that those who by long discharge of duty, and experience, and have as watchmen upon the towers of Zion, and as close observers of the trend of times and events are most likely to be your best and truest advisers.

We need students for this church institution of education, and we are not in possession of any known fact why the household of faith should not furnish these students.

As a final but quite important part of the request: if any person receiving a catalogue having no use therefor, and for reasons is unwilling to aid us by giving to some one else, will you please mail to me and oblige.

For Graceland,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

I have been informed by President Joseph Smith that he or Bishop Kelley will be present with us at our district reunion at Fulton, Kentucky, sometime in October. By mistake the report has gone to the HERALD that our reunion would meet at Okeland, Kentucky. This mistake I wish to correct now, and state that a new tent will be bought and the reunion will meet at or near Fulton, Kentucky. The date I am not able just now to give, but let all remember the place of meeting and the month, and the correct date will be given later on. I am informed that there has been money enough subscribed to buy the new tent, and we trust that all those who have put their names on the subscription list will promptly remit the same to the treasurer by August 1 or as near that date as possible. If there is some one who would like to donate some to the reunion you may do so by sending in your mites to Bro. J. R. McClain, Fulton, Kentucky, who is the treasurer of the reunion committee. There will be other expenses to defray besides the tent, so let all who can help do what they can and God will be the rewarder. Let all remember our reunion and labor and pray together for its success. The committee is making arrangements to get some one to have a boarding tent on the grounds. A large crowd is expected to attend, and we want accommodations for all. Committee: D. W. Cook, President; J. H. Winn, Secretary; C. L. Snow, John Adair, J. R. McClain.

Every one had good words for her, for she was a minister to every one who needed help. Funeral from the house July 17 by Elder J. R. Sutton; burial at Grove Hill Cemetery.

The Precocious Child.

The genuinely precocious child is very rare. Parents are seldom justified in attributing to their children powers which are transcendent. The vanity of so doing would be harmless in itself if it did not sow a crop of terrible mistakes in the treatment of the child which tends to its bodily and mental undoing. The signs of brain fag in a child, says Dr. Grace Peckham Murray, in the August Delineator, are easily read, and the warnings should be heeded at once. Parents should ever be watchful that the growth of the mind should not be made at the expense of the body, and the body at the expense of the mind. The child's mind is bound to be active about something; that is its normal condition. The mischief comes from overtaxing it with matters which are beyond its comprehension, or gorging it with impressions that at best the child can only partially comprehend.

Books Received.

"Coals from the Altar," by Reverend H. T. Davis, published from the office of God's Revivalist, Cincinnati, Ohio, is a book of incidents of Christianity's workings applied by the author to illustrate the necessity of devoting ourselves to Christ's precepts. The book tends to revive one's love for Christ and right-doing.

"Life of Charles G. Finney," by A. M. Hills, is also from the press of God's Revivalist. The object of the author, as gathered from his preface, seems to be to present such incidents and facts from the life of Mr. Finney as shall teach the reader how to be a successful "fisher of men." Mr. Hills, the author, is president of Texas Holiness University.

Tact With Children.

When my little daughter was about three years old I one morning requested her to bring a certain cup from the dining-room into the nursery. From one of those impulses of contrariness that arise in all youthful hearts at times, she saw fit to refuse. Without saying a word I left the room and went about other matters. Returning after a short interval, I said very gravely and gently, "Do you know what I have? I have a little girl who does not love me." Instantly the child started up, dropping her playthings, and saying, "Allie's going to get that cup," ran out and brought it in to me. Evidently her conscience had been active while she had been left alone, and without any exterior influence having been exerted, she had come around to the right frame of mind. Unquestionably this experience, tending to self-control, was more beneficial than if forcible pressure had been brought to bear upon her conduct. For before obstinacy had fairly sprouted it died away of its own accord.—Florence Hull Winterburn in the August Woman's Home Companion.

Last Days of Pompeii is the attraction for the evening at the Iowa State Fair, August 22 to 30. In this wonderful pyrotechnical production of the horrible destruction of the beautiful city of Pompeii by old Vesuvius, the spectator is an eye witness to the recent terrible disaster to the city of St. Pierre, by Mt. Pelee.

UTAH SUPREME COURT ON MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

The following editorial we take from the Deseret Evening News, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for Monday, July 21:

In the case of Annie F. A. Hilton, appellant, vs. Rosa P. Roylance, respondent, and the other two cases which are relative thereto, the Supreme Court to-day, in a unanimous opinion, reversed the decision of Judge Hall, who tried the cases, and ordered findings and decree entered according to such reversal. The case is of vast importance to the people of this community, and determines the legal status of persons who are "sealed for eternity" under the ceremony of the "Mormon" church.

On about December 1, 1872, plaintiff, who was then Miss Annie Armitage, was supposed to be on her death bed, and the ceremony performed was known as "sealing," whereby they were to be husband and wife after death. Miss Armitage recovered from her illness, and, on March 19, 1873, she and Doctor Park signed a document known as a "Church divorce," whereby they agreed to dissolve all relations which had existed between them as husband and wife. After this she married William Hilton, now a Salt Lake policeman, by whom she has ten or twelve living children.

Doctor Park, during his life time, deeded certain property to Rosa P. Roylance, and this action was brought to recover title to one third of said property, to which Mrs. Hilton claims she is entitled as the legal widow of John R. Park, deceased, and also for a family allowance pending the determination of the suit. She alleged in her complaint that she never relinquished her rights in said real estate and is still the owner of the same. Judge Hall decided that John R. Park and plaintiff never became husband and wife, and hence she was not entitled to any part of the premises in controversy.

Justice Bartch delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court to-day and Chief Justice Miner and Justice Baskin concur in the same.

The principal question to be determined, according to the opinion, is, were John R. Park and Annie F. Armitage lawfully married on December 1, 1872?

On that point the opinion holds that "Without further reference to the evidence in detail there can be no doubt that both parties intended to be 'sealed,' whatever that may include, and that they both mutually consented to the 'sealing ceremony.' Whether 'sealing,' as an ordinance of the church of which both parties were members, embraces the marriage status, under the laws of matrimony, or whether it instituted simply a marriage, under the doctrine peculiar to that church, for eternity, remains to be seen. The most important inquiry on this branch of the case is, what is meant by the term 'sealed' or 'sealing ceremony.'"

"The proof as to the meaning of the terms being unsatisfactory at the trial, the only other source of information would be the works of history and the church records and journals. Because such works were excluded from the evidence in the court below we do not think we are precluded from reference to them to ascertain the particular meaning or sense in which the 'Mormon' church used the terms 'sealed' or 'sealing ceremony.'"

Alma C. Barmore wrote from San Francisco, California, July 24: "Brn. Wight, Tucker, Hanson, Bro. and Sr. Anderson, and the writer are here ready to sail. Our ship was to have sailed at ten a. m. to-day, but will not start until six p. m."

Reference is made in the opinion to Whitney's History of Utah, vol. 1, page 212, and the "Revelation on the Eternity of the Marriage Covenant including plurality of wives." As a conclusion the opinion holds that, "It is thus clear, according to the revealed law, that, to be 'sealed' was to be married for time and for eternity, and that the 'sealing ceremony' is a marriage ceremony, which is good at common law, the part referring to eternity, as we have seen, being regarded as simply surplusage. The 'sealing ceremony,' performed in this case, established the marriage status and created the relations of husband and wife.

The church divorce is admitted by counsel for respondent to be null and void hence there is nothing to determine on that point. The opinion therefore holds that Mrs. Hilton was lawfully married to John R. Park and upon his death became his legal widow, and as such is entitled to her share of his estate. It is ordered that the decision of the lower court be reversed, and findings and decree be drawn up in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court. The decision of the lower court is affirmed, however, in the matter of not making Mrs. Hilton a family allowance from the estate pending litigation.

As a matter of fact we may not in this brief report have all the evidence presented on the trial of the case, and therefore write only upon presumption. There can be no question but what the court is right in holding that a marriage under the sealing ordinance referred to as practiced by the church in Utah is a common law marriage, and binding upon the parties thereto, providing the parties had a legal right to contract in marriage. If they had not such legal right, but either had a companion living undivorced by legal authority, the marriage would be void.

As a matter of course the courts of the land could not take into consideration and recognize a simple ceremony of sealing for eternity between individuals having no legal right to marry and call that sealing a legal marriage, as the courts deal only with mundane affairs, and not those which are celestial. We believe it to be correct usage for the courts to recognize such marriages between those who may legally marry as common law marriages; for in all States and Territories where marriages may be solemnized by church authorities, such marriages are legal, and the court does not necessarily question or take cognizance of the manner in which they may be solemnized.

In 1835 the original church declared upon this subject, and publicly stated what officers of the church were authorized to celebrate marriage, and further stated that all legal marriages performed between persons before they become identified with the church should be held sacred and fulfilled; also that persons desiring to be married by other than church authorities should have such privilege.

The courts could not properly attempt such nice discrimination and undertake to say that some church marriages were for time and others for eternity; that those for time were within the jurisdiction of the court, those for eternity were not. The general presumption of the court would be that any marriage performed by the church authorities was for time, and therefore within the jurisdiction of the court.

The court in its findings does not say that no such marriage or sealing is authorized by the church, but it does say, "That neither a sealing nor a marriage for time, whereby the parties are to become husband and wife for this world only, nor a sealing or marriage for eternity, whereby the parties are not to become husband and wife until after death, that is in the next world, was authorized by this revealed law, and hence any and all such unauthorized marriages would be a violation of the revelation and would subject the contracting parties to the penalty provided for disobedience, for the express revealed covenant is that sealing or marrying shall be (both and not one or either) for time and eternity."

"This distinction of the court brings this question of sealing as a marriage ceremony for time to the front as an issue, and to our thinking presents the issue forcibly; and should set parties who have entered into covenant under such ceremony for time, or for time and eternity, to thinking; for if the so-called revelation on celestial marriage is to be taken as the sole rule under which marriage by sealing is held to be a practice of the church, and permissible and legal as are other statutory enactments, all ceremonies performed under it must be in accordance with its direct provisions, and not otherwise.

In the same Deseret News, for July 22, is a somewhat lengthy review of the case, in which the editor among other things says:

In order to reach these conclusions the court had to go outside of the record of the case, and consult reports of discourses and writings of some of the leaders of the church. In doing this the court formed opinions which may be in accord with what the judges read, but those works treated only one side of a somewhat complicated subject. Ordinarily, the sealing ceremony in a marriage for eternity includes time as well. That is to say, the words, "for time and all eternity" are usually expressed, and time is comprehended in eternity. But the inference which the court has drawn from this, and from explanations of it in sermons and writings of church authorities, is incorrect because based upon a consideration of but one side of the question.

In this church there are numerous cases of sealing in which the parties were united for time only, and not for eternity. This is so well known by members of the church, and by many people who are non-members, that there is widespread amazement at the declaration of the Supreme Court of the State that no such marriage or sealing is authorized by the church. The statement of the court as to this point is not true, as thousands of witnesses could testify if necessary.

On the other hand, it is also a mistake to say that "sealing or marrying shall be (both and not one or either) for time and eternity." A sealing may be solemnized for eternity and not for time. This is not explained in church writings, perhaps, or proclaimed in public discourses, but is a matter of religious faith and practice that concerns only the individuals who formed that relation. It is something over which the courts have no jurisdiction. It is for the world to come and not for the present state of existence. It does not involve a principle of civil law, and therefore the opinions of lawyers and judges have no effect upon it, and it is out of their province.

The editor subsequently says:

The decision of the Supreme Court in reference to the validity of a church divorce when the parties had been legally married, is perfectly correct. The church never claimed the right to divorce parties to a legal marriage and thus usurp the functions of a civil court. After a legal divorce has been obtained the church may perform its part in the separation so far as its spiritual authority extends.

The editor further says:

If the ceremony between Doctor Park and Miss Armitage was simply a sealing of the parties to take effect only in a future state, there was no marriage between them under the civil law. If they were sealed for time and all eternity, the union was a marriage before the law to all intents and purposes, and nothing but death or the decree of a civil court could sever that "time" relation. If the evidence had been conclusive as to this fact, the decision of the Supreme Court could not be legally or rationally complained of. But being based upon a misunderstanding of church doctrine and only partial information derived from works outside of the records in the case, it is open to criticism by the press and the public, and the comment upon it editorially in the Salt Lake Tribune is an impartial and sensible review of the case.

In endeavoring to reach a basis upon which to found its decision the court was under the necessity of going outside of the records in the case, and of this the News editor in issue for July 22, complains. For this complaint there is no just ground; for if Methodism is to be understood by the writings and teachings of John Wesley and Doctor Watson, and Catholicism to be understood by the teachings of the Vatican, as well as by its history, then Utah Mormonism must be understood by the teachings of President Brigham Young, his coadjutors Jedediah M. Grant, George Q. Cannon, Wilford Woodruff, and other leading lights in that church, and also by such documents as may from time to time have been issued in defense of the position of the church as being the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The court had the undoubted right to seek for a rendition of church dogma from such teachings outside of the record in the case which was being considered; for upon the proper understanding of the basis claimed for a foundation upon which this sealing ceremony of marriage was performed the court must depend in order to make its renditions coincide with right and justice.

We believe the court to be right in the statement that the revelation does not contemplate sealing as a marriage for time only, and that if practices of the church have obtained of a different character of which no public knowledge has been given, there has been an unnecessary amount of secrecy observed in regard to it.

The validity of the marriage covenant is based upon the fact that the unity between the two parties contracting is publicly acknowledged, and upon this basis the courts act.

The statement made by the editor, that the decision of the court in regard to church divorces being void is correct, seems to be singular under the circumstances; for if a marriage for time and eternity in any and all conditions is not a legal marriage, what is the advantage in holding to such marriages against the contention that they are unprovided for in the law of God, under the practice of plurality of wives?

If the teachings and writings of the leading elders of the Utah church are not to be taken as correct expositions of the principal tenets of that church, by what rule does the editor of the News presume to say that the court was in error in assuming that such teachings were necessarily explanative of the belief and practice of the church in regard to marriage, and sealing for time, or for time and eternity?

BRO. MINTUN DEFENDS THE WORK AT DALLAS CENTER.

Last week we reproduced from a Dallas Center paper an attack signed by G. D. Gurley. Bro. Mintun in his letter told of issuing a challenge to Mr. Gurley. The challenge was published, and in reply Reverend Gurley published the following:

A REPLY.

A thousand times exposed fraud like Mormonism is not to be discussed. It is to be peremptorily dismissed. When it comes with its low grade fiction book and silly story of Joe Smith's plates and glasses, asking us to accept it as infallible revelation from God, we can only answer the blasphemy and affront to our intelligence in the terse but decisive language of the Master: Get thee behind me SATAN.

Concerning Mr. Gurley's article and his conduct, Bro. Mintun in the New Times, of Dallas Center, Iowa, issue for July 24, wrote as follows:

That Reverend Gurley could not say that he had not received the proposition for discussion, I mailed a written copy, with some requests as to rules governing, so that he might see that nothing unreasonable had been required of him, and for the further reason of doing unto him as I would wish to be done by.

In calling me or my brethren names, he is only following out the practices of the ministry that were in opposition to the gospel in the days of Jesus Christ, when they called him "devil," "deceiver," "blasphemer" etc.; and in harmony with what Jesus Christ said would be done unto his disciples in the following language: "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household."—Matthew 10: 25. But there comes from his precious lips the comforting words, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."—Matthew 5: 11. It is because we know what is said against us is said "falsely," and "for his sake" who has sent us forth to declare the gospel as again restored to earth, as saith the word of God, that we rejoice.

All that God says is equal, whether in Palestine or in the land of America, and the Book of Mormon contains many things which God inspired his servants upon this land to teach, from 600 B. C. to 400 A. D., and contains some of the words of the Lord Jesus Christ which he spoke when his voice was heard by that branch of the house of Israel that came to this land in fulfillment of John 10: 16.

I can not understand how that any person could be lead to say that "polygamy is a small item compared with this monster imposition of the Devil" (meaning the Book of Mormon), unless for the same reason that Mr. Gurley says it, which is, because he has never read the Book of Mormon, and does not know what is in it. It may be because the Presbyterian Church has admitted some of the Mohammedans into their church with their wives, and thus acknowledge the recognition of polygamous marriage in the following action of Dr. Morrison of the Presbyterian General Assembly held at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, who represented the synod trial cases and special legislation, who "held that the recognition of polygamous marriages by the church in India was an absolute necessity," and said, "Any other rule would rule David out of the church," that Mr. Gurley thus expresses himself. Had he believed the Book of Mormon he would have known that what David did in having "many wives and concubines" was "abominable" before the Lord, and that in "the church" there was no place for men who would commit such abomination.

Mr. Gurley says, "The claim to perpetual inspired revelation" gives room "to foist any new iniquity." Is it a fact that when God did reveal himself to his people in Bible times that such danger existed? It is inferred by this statement. If no such danger existed then, why should any more danger exist now? Such statement comes from a lack of faith in the unchangeability of God. Being unchangeable he will always speak to his people, just as he always has done, and can not contradict himself or vary from what he hath said; and no one believing in the Bible or Book of Mormon, and the Latter Day Saints believe in both, could believe that because God speaks to his people there was any danger of an evil being foisted upon them unless they were unfaithful to God and his service, and like the Brighamites pay no attention to what was written in the word of God. The Book of Mormon says, "He [God] can not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; neither hath he a shadow of turning from the right to the left, or from that which is right to that which is wrong," and concerning morals says, "And, again, the Lord hath commanded that men should not murder; that they should not lie; that they should not steal; that they should not take the name of the Lord their God in vain; that they should not envy; that they should not have malice, etc."

The charge of "cut throat violence and robbery" against "Joe Smith and his banditti" shows a disposition of one who "loves a lie" which has been told by others but is briefly answered by General Alexander W. Doniphan who was associated with all the difficulties arising because of the Latter Day Saints settling in Missouri, who said, "The majority of them [Latter Day Saints or Mormons as he termed them] were intelligent, industrious, and law-abiding citizens. While the Mormons resided in Clay County, they were a peaceable, sober, industrious, and law-abiding people, and during their stay with us not one was accused of a crime of any kind."—From the Kansas City Journal.

Mr. Gurley refers to the fact that "the Bible is preached first and the Book of Mormon comes at the later stage." Why not? The Latter Day Saints have always believed and believe now that the Bible should be first. By it is that which they believe and preach sustained. By it are the claims of the Book of Mormon proven; but not the claims that some falsely say are claimed for it. By it is it proven that God will continue to reveal his will to man as long as there is any one worthy of his notice, and it is possible to save them. By it can it be proven what is from God, and what is from the Devil. By it are we taught to bless them that curse you, and to pray for them who despitefully use you; and from the Book of Mormon do we find support for all these precious truths. So every other church presents the Bible first, why not the Latter Day Saints when it is their belief that it should be first. Other churches bring in their confessions of faith and disciplines after teaching the Bible, and why should they not if they believe them. The only real difference besides the difference in the nature of the contents is the Book of Mormon claims to be brought into existence by the power of God, and the confessions of faith and disciplines by the wisdom of man.

It can not be said truthfully that those who have been and are attending our services and carrying out the injunction of Paul to "prove all things," are "silly dupes;" but are such as, I trust, will, if they have found that which is good, hold fast to it, and if they find any good they will, with the same consistency, hold fast to that, and as freely reject any error or wrong, and assist to expose it. Nothing can be judged good or bad, right or wrong, until proof has been furnished sufficient to convince them that such is the case. Jesus Christ says "Truth shall make you free." People of the Utah church are accused of being bound by what their leaders say, and this is true. This is considered by some to be a great evil, and yet those same parties will believe in binding their members to do just what they say. How much less evil is it for people to be bound by what their ministers tell them to do or not to do in Iowa than it is in Utah?

REVEREND M'MILLAN AND THE SPALDING ROMANCE.

It is always a surprise to those who are interested in the latter-day work to notice the manner of statement and argumentation adopted by certain religious writers who make attempts to account for the origin of the Book of Mormon and the rise of the church, organized April 6, 1830.

As a specimen of what is referred to above, we quote from a tract written by Reverend D. J. McMillan, D. D. It is one of a series headed, "SOCIAL SERVICE. Series D.—ANTI-MORMON," published at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York. "Historical Sketch of Mormonism."

Under the subhead, ITS ORIGIN, on page 5, referring to Sidney Rigdon, this Reverend McMillan writes:

Then he was for a time pastor of an independent church in Pittsburg, and making the book-store and publishing house of Patterson and Lambdin a place of frequent resort, became somewhat familiar with their business. Among the manuscripts was a novel written by Solomon Spaulding, and called "The Manuscript Found." He advanced the theory that the Indians in this country descended from two colonies, one of which came from the Tower of Babel, the other many centuries later from Jerusalem. Mr. Spaulding died without having his novel published. Mr. Rigdon became deeply interested in this novel and must have copied it and changed it by introducing many passages of scripture so as to make it appear to be a revelation from God. But his stay in Pittsburg was short. He started westward on an independent mission. He preached that the latter days were at hand, and that God was about to reveal new truth to his chosen few. He soon had a flourishing church near Mentor, Ohio."

We italicise the above quotation from the word must to the word revelation for the purpose of emphasizing the cool manner in which it is assumed that Patterson and Lambdin had a manuscript novel written by Solomon Spaulding, and the equally cool and easy assumption that Sidney Rigdon "must have copied it."

This bare assumption is taken as proof that the supposed writing of Solomon Spaulding called the "Manuscript Found," had been duly identified and proved to have been written by Reverend Spaulding, to have come into possession of Messrs. Patterson and Lambdin and there to have been copied by Sidney Rigdon, pastor of an independent church in Pittsburg. Instead of establishing such a line of sequent events as this, by proofs, the ground is covered by assumption, Mr. Rigdon "must have copied it." That is decidedly clever.

Mr. Rigdon says, No; but Reverend McMillan, says, Yes; and, of course, what Reverend McMillan says goes in orthodox circles, for is he not a very reverend gentleman?

Not satisfied with the suppositions above stated, the Reverend McMillan presents the second line of suppositious statement, as follows.

The family of Joseph Smith claims to be of Scotch extraction and to have lived in New England ever since 1700. The mother of Joseph was a fortune-teller. Both parents were illiterate and superstitious. They were among the people in Vermont who, during the first decade of the present century, followed a strange delusion under the leadership of one Wingate. By the use of an instrument which they called "St. John's Rod" the followers of this impostor claimed to be able to discover gold, silver, currents of water under ground, and medicinal roots and herbs, and to cure all manner of diseases. Like the victims of all such delusions they banked with unlimited impudence upon the "Lost Tribes of Israel," and promised a gathering of the favored people of God, and a "Latter-day Glory" far exceeding the glory of former days. The whole movement proved to be a scheme of a band of swindlers. Wingate, the leader, was arrested, but escaped from justice, and the movement came to an end.

Joseph's birth occurred at a time when the Wingate movement was at its height. Ten years later his parents removed to Palmyra, New York. Here Joseph grew up in a home without refinement. His parents were ignorant, indolent, and intemperate. He had health and strength, an active mind and a vivid imagination. Being without school advantages he followed his own crude ideas. He was fascinated with the wild romance of Captain Kidd, and with a company of youthful followers he would hunt at night for buried money in the fields about his father's home. He is said to have had a religious turn of mind, and during a revival he was exercised very deeply on the subject. His imagination, his superstitions, and his religious excitement combined to create wonderful visions in his untutored mind. He was about fifteen years of age when he began to see visions and dream dreams. These experiences continued through seven years. During four years of this period Joseph was absent from his father's house seeking employment in various capacities, in Pennsylvania and elsewhere. His movements for two years can not be definitely traced. But during his absence he was for a time in the employ of Wm. H. Sabine, at whose house the widow of Reverend Solomon Spaulding, was making her home. In the garret of the house was stowed away in an old trunk Mr. Spaulding's "Manuscript Found" referred to above, which she had received from the Pittsburg publisher after Mr. Spaulding's death. Soon after Joseph's return to his father's home, he was visited by Rigdon, from Mentor, Ohio. Whether they had met during Joseph's absence, we do not know. The two doubtless became known to each other through a mutual friend, Mr. Parley P. Pratt, who was a traveling tinker and a preacher of some ability. Mr. Pratt plied his two-fold vocation between Palmyra, New York, and Mentor, Ohio. He knew and admired Mr. Rigdon,—indeed was frequently a member of his congregation. After this visit of Mr. Rigdon's—which was early in the summer of 1827, Joseph said that he was told in dreams and visions, that he was chosen of the Lord to be a great prophet to restore the Gospel which had been taken from the world many centuries ago. He went so far as to declare that an angel came into his room at midnight, awoke him and read to him five chapters of the Bible, and afterward took him to a hill which he called Cumorah. The hill is four miles from Palmyra, and is at present the property of Admiral Sampson. There Joseph claims to have discovered the wonderful plates, and unearthed them by the help of the angel. He describes the plates as bound by rings, in the form of a book, and concealed in a stone crypt or vault where they had been hidden from this wicked world 1,400 years. The plates he says were four inches wide and eight inches long, and about the thickness of an ordinary sheet of tin, forming a book about six inches thick.

This second supposition makes Joseph Smith to have access to this very celebrated "Manuscript Found," while an "illiterate, unlearned boy," barely turned of twelve years of age while at work for a brief period in the family of Mr. Sabine, a relative of Mrs. Spaulding, the said manuscript being in a small hair trunk at Mr. Sabine's house, having been returned to Mrs. Spaulding at Mr. Spaulding's death. Mr. Spaulding died at Amity, Pennsylvania, in 1816. Joseph Smith was born at the close of the year 1805, December 23; so that, if the manuscript was returned to Mrs. Spaulding in a reasonable time after her husband's death, it would be during 1816, when Joseph Smith would be but eleven years old, when he had access to said hair trunk. This supposition is too glaringly inconsistent to be entitled to a moment's belief.

In order to connect Sidney Rigdon with this second line of supposition it is assumed that he visited Joseph Smith in New York in 1827. Of this suppositious visit no proof has ever been made. But Reverend McMillan treats it as a matter established, and thereafter reasons from it as a proved fact. It is a most unreliable and mischievous way of reasoning, and such men as Reverend McMillan should be ashamed to resort to it.

This second line starts out with a falsehood. The family of Joseph Smith does not claim a Scotch origin; for it traces back to one Robert Smith from England, and his wife, and locates them in New Hampshire, in 1631.

Again, the family were not followers of one Wingate and Reverend McMillan places him in the narrative without an evidence.

Reverend McMillan dignified the common "witch hazel" "divining rod," in use all over the country in the region and time when and where the Smiths lived, and which is even now used in frontier places to locate wells, underground streams, and among superstitious miners to locate veins of metal, as being "St. John's Rod," a name we never heard given it before. But Reverend McMillan should know that Joseph Smith was neither the first nor the last who has tried to find Captain Kidd's reputed buried treasure, or to find water or mineral wealth. We have no knowledge that Joseph Smith ever did such a thing, but if he did, what of it? Was it a crime? Did Farmer Stool, for whom Joseph Smith worked, break any law of God or man searching for minerals in the hills of Pennsylvania? Surely no.

In all that supposed labor and superstitious hunting after water and metals, there was no mixing of religious fervor concerning the "Lost Tribes of Israel," or "The Latter-day Glory." These were an aftermath of McMillan's conjecture. The movements of Joseph Smith from his birth to his death have been kept record of, and no two years elapsed without his whereabouts being traced by those interested in him, or whose duty or pleasure it was to know of him and what he was doing.

But this interval of "two years" is clearly an invention to furnish a provocation for the supposition that during it Joseph Smith copied the Manuscript Found in the possession of Mrs. Spalding, while that good lady was living at W. H. Sabine's place, and to allow for a possible concoction of the Book of Mormon scheme.

Reverend McMillan remarks: "The two doubtless became known to each other through a mutual friend, Parley P. Pratt, who was a traveling tinker, and a preacher of some ability."

Reverend McMillan supposes it by his "doubtless;" that is, it is not to be doubted, and therefore it is so, authenticated and proved.

Elders Rigdon and P. P. Pratt agree that they two met after the Book of Mormon was in print, Pratt being the one who presented the printed volume to Elder Rigdon in the fall of 1830, after its publication.

It is not a little curious that there has not as yet been a definite settling upon one or the other of these suppositious origins for the Book of Mormon, and we can only account for it upon the hypothesis that the man did, who, while hunting, saw a calf which he thought might be a deer, so he took aim and shot at it, as he afterward said, "In such a way as to miss it if it was a calf, but hit it if it was a deer."

COST OF CHURCH AT SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.

In the hurry of the occasion of the dedication at Springfield, Missouri, we failed to get the items of the cost of the building, or the aggregate of the whole. Bro. Sparling has sent it to us; and for the purpose of encouragement to the Saints of other places who may contemplate building we give it below:

The aggregate cost of the building, seats, and furniture, etc., was $882.65. The work was principally donated. The church is built of dimension stuff, two by six, sixteen inches apart, boxed on the outside, then covered with building paper and weather-boarded. Inside it is wainscoted four feet from floor, then three coats of Agatite plaster, wood-work oil finished. It is in fact a good plain building.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. L. Rust wrote from Gladstone, Illinois, July 26: "I do not often hear preaching, and seldom see any of the Saints, though my house is open to those who might call, and for the elders who might come to preach. I have the consent of the trustees of the M. E. church to hold meetings in it, if any of our elders come this way. I acknowledge receipt of Graceland College pamphlet and photo of building. I will frame the picture and hang it on the wall to remind me the oftener of Graceland College. I am always glad to get the HERALD and keep posted on the progress of the church. It is a welcome visitor."

A sister wrote to Bro. R. M. Elvin recently as follows: "Inclosed please find two dollars for Graceland to assist in 'holding the fort.' I only wish we could make it twenty-five dollars instead, but like the widow, can only place a mite, as it were. May divine favor rest upon all who have taken upon them the name of 'Saint,' and that each may perform every duty, is my prayer."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

James D. Porter wrote from Pilot Knob, Indiana, July 28: "I baptized twenty-five last week, at Oriole, Perry County."

Brn. Cooper and Wildermuth have encountered the Utah elders in Elgin, Illinois. By a clipping from the Courier, of that place, sent us by Bro. Cooper, we notice that our brethern are making plain to the people that there are vast differences between our doctrines and those of the Utah church.

C. L. Snow wrote from Tennessee, July 17, that he had been at work in that part of the country for some time, and that though his meetings were well attended the people did not seem willing to accept the gospel. They seemed satisfied with the religion they had.

The Dayton Herald, Dayton, Ohio, for July 21, speaks of the work of Brn. Goodrich and Long in that city. The distinction between us and the Utah people is made clear.

Two interesting publications which reach our desk regularly are the Annals of Iowa and the Iowa Historical Record. The first is published by the Historical Department of Iowa, at Des Moines, and the latter by the Iowa State Historical Society, of Iowa City. Both are quarterlies and are devoted to the interests of Iowa history. The Annals is now nearing the close of the fifth volume of its third series, and the Record is in its eighteenth volume. The student of Iowa history, and others interested in the developments of our state can not afford to be without these two publications.

Sr. Gomer T. Griffiths requests to announce that Bro. Griffiths' book on Priesthood was delayed a little at the printers, but is now ready for distribution and she is prepared to fill orders.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH?—NO. 4.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

OHIO.

The following from Judge Samuel Murdock of Elkader, Iowa, as published in the Dubuque Daily Times, April 13, 1893, is plain and to the point. Mr. Murdock was raised in Ohio where Joseph Smith lived, and went to school with children who were reared in that faith. He afterward moved to Iowa where he served one or two terms in the State Legislature and for many years served as county judge in Clayton County. He died but recently at his home, an honored and well-respected old man. He was considered the chief political speaker in Northeastern Iowa. A man also who had made a great collection of Indian relics and lectured occasionally on "The Mound-builders." In faith he was a Catholic.

Editor Dubuque Daily Times; Dear Sir: In your article on the Mormon church contained in your issue of April 12 you say: "It was founded by an ignorant, dissipated member of a vicious family which had a well-earned reputation of being thieves and drunkards, etc." Knowing your reputation for kindness, fairness, and sympathy, I do not believe that you would willfully or knowingly inflict a pang or a pain in the bosom of any one of our fellow creatures unless it was done without a knowledge on your part of the true facts in the case.

I have no more sympathy or feeling for either branch of the Mormon church than you have, but I have a strong sympathetic feeling and friendship for some of the Smith family, who are still living, and to whom your language above quoted, does great injustice, and I also know that when you hear from me a few facts, your kindness will prompt you to repair in some manner the wrong you have inflicted upon them.

Kirtland (Ohio) is situated in the county in which I was raised from youth to manhood, and at the time Smith and his Mormons settled there I was nearly man grown, and some of them were my immediate neighbors, with whose children I was often schoolmate, and I often met their prophet, Joseph Smith, although I was not personally acquainted with him. . . . I lived among the daily talk of the "New Faith" or "Latter Day Saints," as they were sometimes called at that time. From the time they settled in my county until they left it, I must say that during all that time I never heard Joseph Smith called a thief, a drunkard, or a vicious man, even by his worst enemies, and my recollection of him to this day is that he was a tall, graceful, good-looking man, continually wearing a smile on his face for every one, and that he was a kind-hearted, generous friend and companion.

SAMUEL MURDOCK.

In the above we leave out a part which refers to William Smith, Oliver Cowdery, etc., as our aim is only to discuss the work and character of Joseph Smith. The above letter contains much praise for other members of the church, but we have neither room nor desire to quote it all. The language of Mr. Murdock shows him to be a kind-hearted, honest, fearless man. He could easily have drifted along with public opinion and closed his eyes when he saw the innocent made to suffer, but he chose to speak out even though histories, encyclopedias, and daily papers were against him. We wonder how many when they read these lines will dare to stand for the right as he did?

We next call attention to the statement of I. P. Axtell, a large farmer and a director in the First National Bank, of Painesville, Ohio, for many years; a man of energy and experience and as early as 1844 was a member of the Whig convention at Baltimore which nominated Henry Clay for President of the United States:

When did you come to the country, Mr. Axtell?

My father moved here with his family in 1830. I was a boy then.

What was your father's business?

He was a Baptist minister, and kept a hotel then.

Did you know Joseph Smith?

Yes, sir, I've seen him many a time; he was often at my father's house; and I, with many young people, often went to Kirtland to see him and his people. I knew his father also, who at the time I knew him had charge of the Kirtland Temple. He took me with others through the temple at one time. He appeared to be a fine old man.

When did your father become acquainted with Mr. Smith?

In about six months after he came to the county he first met him; he went out of his way six miles to see Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. He said he found them in Kirtland Township, they had been there but a short time and occupied a small log house. He found them to be quite intelligent men, and he said, pleasant talkers, and quite free to converse upon their religious views, which at that time was known as the "new sect." My father always said Joseph Smith was a conscientious and upright man.

Did you know any other person of the new society?

O, yes, a great many. I knew Mr. Pratt very well. He was a smart and a square man all around. Those men were neither knaves nor rogues; that is my opinion of them. I suppose some of them may have been. It was just as in all bodies of the kind, there will be some bad ones, but I don't know of any that were. There were a good many stories circulated that I know to be false. At one time an ox was found in Kirtland Township, killed and skinned; and there was a great to do about the Mormons having killed it. My brother was sheriff at the time, and with others went up to investigate the matter, and he said there was not the least evidence which showed that the Mormons had any hand in the killing of the ox. Persons around, however, who hated their religion, would tell that they did.

How was it that people did not like them? Were they not good citizens?

Yes, they were as good citizens as those of any society. It was the fanatics in religion that tried to drive those men out. There was a great many conservative men in our county at that time who held these fanatics back, and if it had not been for this they would have gone in and killed them all. But our intelligent and honorable citizens prevented this.—Palmyra to Independence, pages 335-337.

To impress this thought indelibly on the mind of the reader we repeat a part of this man's testimony: "Yes, they were as good citizens as those of any society. It was the fanatics in religion that tried to drive these men out."

The above statement is the exact truth, not only of that time, but also in the days of the New Testament writers. It was the Pharisees, the most fanatical and hypocritical who were first and last to persecute our Savior and his followers. In fact, the first murder that was ever committed was by a man who had offered sacrifices. The most bitter of wars have been religious wars. Religion has caused perhaps more bitter feelings than any other thing in the world. True Christianity, however, has never shed one drop of blood except in self-defense. Religion may be one thing, Christianity another. We do not wish to be understood as saying that all others except Latter Day Saints are bad. Far from it. There is perhaps no church in the world that looks as kindly on their religious neighbors, but it is an undisputable fact that every persecution, and every slander, and every misrepresentation against Joseph Smith, with but few exceptions, are traced to religious bigots. We are sorry that it is so, but we can not help it. In writing of this matter we must state the facts. We are glad to know, however, that fanatics and bigots and zealots are growing less, and the churches are growing more liberal every day. May the time hasten along when all will be willing to do unto others as they would that others should do to them. While there are yet many fanatics who refuse to reason in many of the churches, yet there are many as honest and devout as the world ever contained, but even these will not object to going on unto perfection, even though it can be more nearly accomplished in the Latter Day Saint Church than in any other.

Below we give the testimony of another disinterested witness as published in Zion's Ensign of Independence, Missouri, in March, 1899:

AKRON, Ohio, March 9, 1899.

I, the undersigned, was born in York State, in the town of Sharzee, on March 9, 1816. In 1819 my father moved to Huntington Township, Chittenden County, Vermont. In 1835 he moved to within four miles of Akron, Ohio, which locality has been my place of residence till the present. On the Dodge farm, three miles north of New Portage, we lived from 1836 to 1839. This was on the line of travel westward of the Latter Day Saints in those days.

A more honest, nice people I never met. They bought supplies of my father and camped in front of our house near a large spring. A camp would remain for days sometimes.

Public meetings were held in New Portage, in the residence of a Mr. Palmer; also in a warehouse. When the weather would admit, in open air; also in tents and barns. I attended their meetings often. Honesty, morality, and right living were characteristics of their teaching, and their practice conformed to this. I never knew one to fail to pay for what he got. Father had much, too, they could have stolen, but we never missed a thing.

They were quiet and orderly, especially on the Sabbath. They were a people who were well brought up, were good society, and I felt lonesome when they would break camp.

Various ones, Palmer, Baker, Whipple, Brunson, Griffiths, and Taylor owned farms; also some others, whose names I can not recall. They all were good citizens.

I heard Joseph Smith and his father, the patriarch, both preach. They preached good morals and manifested the same in their lives. I don't know why they were so misrepresented; there was no cause for it; they were perfect gentlemen.

I knew Oliver Cowdery, heard him preach often; he, too, was a gentleman, and his preaching good and of an elevating influence on the rising generation.

My parents at that time were Free-will Baptists. They often took some of the campers who were sick into the house and cared for them. I never have belonged to any church.

My object in this statement is simply to tell the facts in the case as in any other matter within my knowledge.

MISSOURI.

From Ohio Mr. Smith and a large number of his followers moved to Jackson, Clay, Caldwell, and other counties in Missouri. It was in this State that persecution ran wild and the Saints were attacked frequently with great brutality and robbed and plundered. Their homes were burned, their stock killed or driven away, their crops destroyed, their wives and families insulted and driven out in the snow, and finally at the point of the bayonet were forced to sign over their titles to lands which they had paid for to satisfy the demands of the mob. Joseph Smith was arrested, together with several of the leading men of the church, and for several months confined in a damp, filthy dungeon awaiting a trial that never came, as he was released after his people had all fled from the State. Men, women, and children were shot or cut to pieces with corn knives. The mob spared not old, helpless men, who had fought for their country in the Revolution, or boys scarcely old enough to reason. Women gave birth to children in the snow and many died of exposure. It was from this same State of Missouri that the James and Younger gang afterward arose. Men from here figured largely in the war with the Corn-crackers, as they sought to establish slavery in the State of Kansas, and here was the seat of the bush-whackers during the Rebellion. Is it any wonder that a company of people, so different in sentiment and practice, were driven out by them?

The first witness from this State, whom we wish to introduce to testify in behalf of Joseph Smith, is Joseph H. Reynolds, who was a brother of the governor of the State of Missouri in 1843. Not only was he a brother of the governor, but State agent in the case of Joseph Smith as the following will show:

Executive Department, City of JEFFERSON.

Know ye that I, Thomas Reynolds, Governor of the State of Missouri, having full trust and confidence in the integrity and abilities of Joseph H. Reynolds, do hereby constitute and appoint him as the agent of the said State of Missouri, to proceed to the State of Illinois, for the purpose of receiving from the proper authorities of that State, one Joseph Smith, Jr., charged with treason by him committed against the State of Missouri, and as having fled from justice to the State of Illinois, and I do hereby authorize and direct said Joseph H. Reynolds to convey said Joseph Smith, Jr., from the State of Illinois, and deliver him to the custody of the sheriff of Daviess County in the State of Missouri.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Missouri.

Done at the city of Jefferson this 13th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-three.

By the Governer,

THOMAS REYNOLDS.

JAMES L. MINOR, Secretary of State.

—Church History, vol. 2, p. 664.

The above Joseph H. Reynolds, who was the brother of the Missouri magistrate, wrote a letter to Joseph Smith, July 29, 1843, after a long and expensive trial between Joseph Smith and the State of Missouri as to the guilt of Joseph Smith. This letter is still in the possession of the Church Historian, a part of which is as follows:

On my return from Nauvoo I found Governor Ford absent on public business at Rock Island, from whence he did not return for a week after I arrived. I presented him a detailed report of my investigations, in which the fact is fully established that neither you nor your people were guilty of any violence or disorderly or unlawful conduct whatever; but that throughout the whole of the unpleasant scene connected with your arrest, and the ill treatment which you received, your and their conduct was that of peaceful, law-abiding, and good citizens. He is perfectly satisfied on that point. . . .

As to the other points, I can assure you, with perfect confidence, that with the evidence now before him, he will issue no more writs—that he will be perfectly satisfied that the demand in Missouri is not only unjust, (as he before believed it to be,) but so palpably illegal and contrary to the meaning of the Constitution as to release him for ever from all obligation to give you up, and enable him to justify himself before the world in refusing to do so.—History of the Church, vol. 2, p. 707.

From Bancroft's History of Utah, page 164, we copy the following: "But when the testimony on both sides is carefully weighed, it must be admitted that the Mormons in Missouri and Illinois were, as a class, a more moral, honest, temperate, hard-working, self-denying, and thrifty people than the gentiles by whom they were surrounded."

Quite a tribute from so honorable a source, and quite a band of honorable people to follow such a dishonorable leader as people often believe Joseph Smith to have been. But think of it; does it look reasonable that he could have been a bad man, and be retained as leader of such a people?

Mrs. Austin, in her book entitled "Mormonism," on page 58, has the following: "The members now numbered (1831 at Kirtland) about one hundred persons, the greater part of whom were the brightest and best of the community, merchants, lawyers, and doctors."

By this we see that the Latter Day Saint Church was not started by the low and ignorant, as thought by some. Doubtless, as they increased, they gathered into their ranks men of like ability.

This sect, under the leadership of their prophet, Joseph Smith, made their first important settlement in Jackson County, Missouri. . . . Here their numbers increased to 15,000. They were a peaceful people and others flocked to their community. . . . This extraordinary growth (10,000 at Nauvoo) and the peculiar manner and doctrine of the Saints, raised the hatred of the people round about, who in abilities, refinement, and culture were by no means equal to the Mormons.

Does it not look just a little strange that people of superior refinement and culture could have been deluded by a fanatic? Fanatics do not reason. Yet the Latter Day Saints, including Joseph Smith, have always been and are now willing to compare their faith with any other from a Bible standpoint. Does that look like delusion? Rather, say it is those who revile them without a cause, and who will not read or listen to anything but their own faith that are deluded—that are fanatics.

The following is taken from the Kansas City Journal republished in the SAINTS' HERALD for July 1, 1881:

There is probably no man in Western Missouri who is better acquainted with the various causes of the difficulties between the citizens of Jackson and Caldwell Counties [Missouri] and the Mormons during the years of 1833 and 1838, than General Alexander W. Doniphan, then a resident of Clay County, but now of Richmond, Ray County, Missouri. . . . After a few introductory remarks, he related the following:

"I came to Missouri in 1830. . . . The Mormons came in 1830.

"What kind of people were the Mormons?"

"They were Northern people, who, on account of their declining to own slaves and their denunciation of the system of slavery, were termed 'Free-soilers.' The majority of them were intelligent, industrious, law-abiding citizens. . . . While the Mormons resided in Clay County, they were a peaceable, sober, industrious, and law-abiding people, and during their stay with us not one was ever accused of a crime of any kind."

General Doniphan is now in his seventy-third year, but is still hale and hearty. He is a man of fine appearance and intellect, and is well known and highly respected all over the State.

One more testimony and then we pass on to notice the character of Joseph Smith and his people in Illinois:

Statement of Mr. E. S. Sebree, of Blendsville, Missouri, made May 21, 1895:

"I was born in Kentucky, in 1816, and came to Missouri in 1835. I was a member of the State Militia that went from Liberty, Clay County, Missouri, to Far West, in Captain Moss' company, and was present at the surrender of Joseph Smith and others on the public square in the city of Far West; and was with the detail and went to Liberty with them as guard, where they were placed in jail in the month of November, 1838.

"Joseph Smith was, in my opinion, a good man. I never saw or heard anything to the contrary. As for his being a thief, murderer, or a bad, vicious man, I did not believe it then, nor do I believe it now. He was a fine appearing man, and would compare favorably with any other minister of my acquaintance. I never heard anything of the doctrine of polygamy. It was not talked of, nor heard of, to my knowledge; and the Latter Day Saints, as a class, in my opinion, was as virtuous a class of people as I ever saw; not a taint of suspicion of any kind did I ever hear against any of them so far as prostitution was concerned.

"I do not belong to any church; and have no motive in making this statement only that the truth may be known; neither am I prejudiced in favor of the Latter Day Saints, for I was a proslavery man, and naturally opposed to the free-soil ideas of the Latter Day Saints, which, in my opinion, was the cause of their expulsion from the State of Missouri.

ILLINOIS.

In a work entitled "Figures of the Past" by Josiah Quincy we find the following on pages 376, 377:

It is by no means improbable that some future text-book for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the nineteenth century exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means improbable that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written: Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet. And the reply, absurd as it now seems to most men now living, may be an obvious commonplace to their descendants. History deals in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who establishes a religion in this age of free debate, who was and is to-day accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary from the Most High—such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets.

Mr. Quincy was a relative of John Quincy Adams, and graduate of Harvard College, class of 1821. He, in company with Honorable Charles Francis Adams and Doctor Goforth visited and interviewed Joseph Smith in May, 1844, forty-three days before Mr. Smith was murdered.

Following is the testimony of one who knew Joseph Smith at the time of his death:

MACON, Missouri, August 3, 1896.

This is to certify that I, T. F. O'Daniel, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and that I lived in Warsaw, Illinois, during the "Mormon War" or Nauvoo troubles. Was well acquainted with Joseph Smith the prophet, and regarded him then, and do yet, as an honest, upright man, conscientious and fearless in what he deemed right. I have heard him teach and preach in Nauvoo, but never heard him or any one else teach or speak of polygamy being a doctrine of the church; in fact, I did not know of anything of that kind until in after years it came from Salt Lake City that the Mormons were practicing polygamy.

I further state that I am acquainted with the facts leading to the killing of Joseph Smith, at Carthage jail, and know the men who were in the mob. The real cause, in my opinion, was that the Saints were all "Whigs," or anti-slavery men, and voted the anti-slavery ticket, which finally led to the troubles, and final killing of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

From Governor Ford's message to the legislature, dated December 23, 1844, we extract the following:

Justice, however, requires me here to say, that I have investigated the charge of promiscuous stealing, and find it to be greatly exaggerated. I could not ascertain that there were a greater proportion of thieves in that community than any other of the same number of inhabitants; and perhaps if the city of Nauvoo were compared with St. Louis, or any other western city, the proportion would not be so great.—Message of the Governor of the State of Illinois; see also Church History, vol. 2, p. 646.

It must not be forgotten that many other people than the Latter Day Saints lived in Nauvoo, and at the particular time Governor Ford made his investigation the enemies were making an extra effort to prove them guilty. Many things were stolen and lodged in the city and charged to the "Mormons," but there is no evidence that any member of the church was among the thieves that Governor Ford refers to. But admitting that a part of them were, it is not wonderful, seeing that they were only human; but the question is, Did the church teach stealing, or did Joseph Smith advise it? There is perhaps no society in the world but what there may be found in it some who do not observe the law, but that is no fault of the law. Governor Ford, however, pays a high tribute to the followers of Joseph Smith when he says not so great a proportion of thieves was found in Nauvoo as in other western cities. In connection with this the following from the pen of R. Etzenhouser as published in Zion's Ensign for April 29, 1899, indicates what kind of people the teachings of Joseph Smith made. It is but natural that his followers should be like himself. Judging of him by his character, by his teachings, and by his followers, we decide in his favor. We present next a statement from the pen of R. Etzenhouser:

In 1885 the writer of this, while urging Latter Day Saint claims at Viola, Iowa, with others, had vehement opposition from Reverend Nathaniel Pye, of the Methodists, who, with Beadle as a basis, argued that the early church were a set of criminals of the deepest dye. Since it was but forty-one years from 1844 to 1885 it was not too long for many yet to be found in the penitentiary who were in for life sentence. A man of age, twenty-one, in 1844, in 1885 would be but sixty-two.

Out of the thousands resident at Nauvoo a large number went into Iowa; from these, if criminals, a good crop for the penitentiary should have been harvested by the sickle of law. Moreover the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints had been represented in the State for about thirty years by quite a membership. If Latter Day Saintism is a factory producing criminals, then here was a field twice sown in plentiful abundance, covering forty-one years. It would be the legal privilege, as well as heaven-born duty, for the good people of Iowa to send every criminal among them in that "secure abode"—the penitentiary. So just to see how Latter Day Saintism could stand that kind of a test, I repaired to the Anamosa Penitentiary. Not a Latter Day Saint was to be found, causing my joy to be larger than my surprise.

The Anamosa Journal of August 27, 1885, gave extracts from the Warden's Biennial Report, in which occurs under the title,

The accomplished and able writer, Bancroft, who has made as thorough a study of this subject as any who have thus far dealt with it, says: "Whatever may be said of Joseph Smith, it must be admitted that he was a remarkable man. His course in life was by no means along a flowery path; his death was like that which too often comes to that of a founder of religion. What a commentary on the human mind and the human heart, the deeds of those who live for the love of God and man, who died for the love of God and man, who severally and collectively professed the highest holiness, highest charity and humanity, higher by far than any held by other sect or nation now or since the world began—how lovely to behold, to write and meditate on their disputings, their cruelties and injustice, their persecution for opinion's sake, their ravenous hate and bloody butcheries."—F. M. Sheepe, in Providence, Rhode Island, Journal, June 25, quoting from Bancroft's History.

We have been thus particular to remove objections based on false reports, circulated against Joseph Smith, and have shown that if he was a servant of God, he but received from the world what might be expected.

According to the philosophy of Jesus, which is as follows, the same thought is presented: "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15: 19.

No better proof could be given that the work Mr. Smith performed and the life he lived was after the divine pattern, at least was not of the world inasmuch as he received only their hatred with few noble exceptions. Of course it does not prove that he was right, simply because he was opposed by the world, but it does testify very largely in his favor that their persecutions were based on false reports. Jesus said again, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely." It must be remembered that Jesus referred to the Pharisees and Sadducees as the world. So to-day those who do that kind of work, whether in the churches or out, are certainly not of God and are therefore of the world.

We have been asked why these reports were not contradicted before now, if they were not true? They have been vigorously denied from the very first; but the enemy that actively circulated the stories as actively subdued the denials. Even the talented Mr. Talmage permitted a scathing, erroneous article to appear in the Christian Herald, from General John Eaton, to sadly misrepresent the facts concerning Joseph Smith and all the begging and imploring that we could do, would not induce him to permit us to correct them, nor would he do so himself. What system would not be misunderstood under such inhuman persecution? When General Eaton's first article on "Mormonism of To-day" appeared in the above-mentioned Christian Herald, in which Joseph Smith was denounced as being everything but a gentleman, and especially charging him with chicken stealing, the writer wrote him and asked for further information on that point; stating that in the various books, Encyclopedias and newspapers no mention was made of stealing chickens. We told him that we were anxious to learn the facts and asked him who Mr. Smith stole the chickens of. We asked that for the sake of justice to Mr. Smith that he would not follow the old way, but give the proof of his assertions, as it would be more gratifying to many. But if he did not care to publish the proofs for fear of making his article too long, would he be kind enough to answer whether he would furnish or sell the proof for personal benefit. No answer was received to that letter. We wrote him again in January, 1897, pointing out the difference between the Reorganized Church and the one in Utah, as he had failed to make any distinction in his second article, calling his attention to the decisions of Judge Sherman and Judge Philips, and asked that in simple justice, both to himself and to the Reorganization, he make a distinction between the two churches. Those who read the articles know it never was done. Others wrote him to the same effect about the same time, also to the editor, asking space to reply. Our official church paper, the Saints' Herald, published at Lamoni, Iowa, also asked that a distinction be made, and afterwards, from the pen of T. W. Williams, published a series of replies; but still General Eaton goes on in his blind career, deceiving and being deceived. No man is worse deceived than he who is deceiving himself. None are so blind as they who can see but will not. Kind reader, do you think such a writer should be believed? But then the General is taking the wisest course for error to take—the only course it can take and be safe; i. e., shut itself away from investigation and just criticism.

CO-OPERATION VS. STOCK COMPANIES.

I note with special interest the contents of the HERALD Supplement of June 18, 1902.

I have been an interested student of sociology for years and when I see a move among the Saints looking to even a partial solution of the vexed question of "capital and labor" I am all attention.

I do not wish to say anything which may cast reflection on the promoters, or question the purpose of the "Independence Manufacturing Company," but in studying the prospectus, questions arise.

I believe in coöperation. It is the ozone of the Twentieth Century. Trusts are a striking evidence of one kind of coöperation. They indicate coöperation in production but partizanship in distribution. No Latter Day Saint can indorse this kind of coöperation.

That we will not have an ideal coöperation under our present system passes without question, however, the purpose of the brethren to do the best they can is laudable and should meet with encouragement, providing they do not introduce measures which will prove a source of evil.

Coöperation is not a monopoly. The difference between the two is fundamental. The one aims at the interests of the masses; the other contends for the interests of the classes. Coöperation stimulates people to help themselves. It contemplates the well-being of the entire community and should not injure any person or interest. It is a substitute for competition. In coöperation people contribute, employ capital, pay expenses of the business, and then divide the profits in dividends on labor, or on goods which are handled or produced. The profits and savings effected through coöperation are shared by the producers and consumers in proportion to their product or labor. Coöperation aims at equal distribution of the profits of industry among the participants. Coöperation pays the profits in dividends on labor, the trust pays profits in dividends on capital. The trust is a combination of capitalists which practices extortion upon producers likewise consumers that they may pay larger dividends on capital.

A joint-stock company is a convenient plan whereby the ownership of a business is divided among a number of persons. This concern is run to make profits on capital in the same way as a private individual business is run. Each share is entitled to one vote. In this way capital controls the management as well as the profits. Under coöperation each member has only one vote, regardless of the number of shares he may hold, and the profits are divided on labor or purchases. Under coöperation it is the people who rule and share in the profits. Under joint-stock companies it is capital which governs and eventually it will absorb the entire profits. Coöperation deals with men; stock companies deal with dollars.

There are two ways of doing business. First. Where money counts and dollars are the index of power. Second. Where individuals stand equal in the administrative affairs of the organization. An attempt to coöperate under the former will only end in the same train of economic and social wrongs which have followed stock companies everywhere.

Share holders in stock companies can hold any amount of stock that they can get hold of and are entitled to one vote for every share they possess. The reader will readily see that the Independence Manufacturing Company is simply a stock company and can not, under its present provisions, stand for complete coöperation. The Rochdale plan of coöperation has thus far proven the best ever devised. It provides for but one vote to a shareholder regardless of the number of shares he may hold. Profits are given, not in proportion to the stock held, but in proportion to the labor contributed or goods purchased. I apprehend that the brethren have made their organization conform to State laws whereby they can have the benefits of State protection granted to stock companies. It were better to have a simple and equitable coöperative association.

Where one member can hold any amount of shares it is within his power to buy up 5 per cent of stock when he becomes sole administrator of affairs. This would be correspondingly true if three or four should pool their interests.

The clause in the prospectus which I particularly object to is: "A corporation is managed through a board of directors, elected by the shareholders, each shareholder having one vote for each share of stock he owns multiplied by the number of directors to be elected.

"He can cast his total number of votes for one candidate or distribute them among two or three candidates as he may see fit, such votes to be cast in person or by proxy."

Certainly this company has the right to make such provision if the majority of the stockholders so determine but when they say, "The Independence Manufacturing Company is not an institution of the church, but an organization composed of members of the church whose object the church has indorsed as being in direct line with the workings thereof in that it is a means whereby the Saints can secure employment and find investment for their capital, however small, in a business that will bring them good returns. And from this standpoint the church has felt justified in helping us by subscribing stock," it is our privilege to consider their institution. I have never learned of any action of conference providing for the purchase of stock in this company. Is the last statement correct that the church, as an organization, has purchased stock? Nowhere in the revelations of God to the church has he provided for an organization "whereby the Saints can secure employment and find investment for their capital, however small, in a business that will bring good returns." Is it not presumptuous to say this is the object of the church? To have legitimate and equitable coöperation this clause, which provides for representation according to the holdings of stock, should be changed, allowing only one vote to each stockholder. The provision for a multiple of votes corresponding to the number of directors to be chosen only intensifies the trouble. For instance, suppose I had five shares and Bro. B. has fifty. He is interested in the selection of Mr. C. as director; I am opposed. Allowing that there were ten directors to be selected; multiply his holdings (fifty shares) by the number of directors (ten) and he would have five hundred votes to cast for his candidate. Now multiply my number of shares (five) with the number of directors to be selected (ten) and I would have fifty votes to offset his five hundred. This would seem unjust.

Any coöperation carried on within the church, which includes any of the main features of stock companies regardless of the good intent of the stockholders, will fail in effecting the object sought for and will be a disappointment and coöperative failure in the end.

Zion can not be built up save on the principles of equality, and a business which grants power according to the "almighty dollar" standard can not be the best method. A true Latter Day Saint coöperative company should not provide to bring "good returns" on money invested. All of the profits, save what is necessary for extension of business, should either go to the laborers who produce the commodities or to shareholding patrons.

It is apparent to my mind that the two organizations recently effected at Independence are but the beginning of a number of institutions which will spring up in the church. As stock companies they are legitimate and come under the same head as all other business institutions in the world. As an expression of true coöperation they can have no legitimate claim, unless they change their rules of representation. Employment for Saints is not the ideal of the gathering and the building up of Zion, but rather employment whereby laborers will receive all they earn and where capital is but an incidental servant of the toiler, its true creator. Where those who hold capital or shares can dictate terms to the toiler or regulate his share of the profits one might as well work for the present corporations. True, our brethren actuated by the Spirit of the gospel, would undoubtedly endeavor to be more humane but they would be in the competitive field, and unless they secured service at a corresponding wage with that granted by other institutions they could not afford to sell at the same price in the open market.

Respectfully submitted,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

THE RELATION OF THE RELIGIO TO THE CHURCH.

In every avenue or avocation of life open for the entrance of man wherein he finds a field of usefulness, a means whereby he may supply his material wants or where he may gratify ambitious desires for fame and renown, if he wishes to be successful in the line which he has chosen, he must first pursue a course of preparation previous to taking up said work. What individual would expect to obtain a position where he would be required to give instruction in the higher mathematics or sciences and be unlearned in the rudiments of these branches? What gardener would be willing to trust his valuable plants and shrubs into the hands of one unskilled in the use of the pruning knife and who was ignorant of the science of agriculture? Or what individual unlearned in the use of oars would be able to stem the fearful waters in the midst of a storm and rescue others from the sinking ship? It is just possible that he might be the means of saving some, but how many more might it be in his power to save were he fitted for the service? What disastrous results might follow to one ignorant of chemistry should he undertake to experiment along that line? Or what person unskilled in the use of weapons and unlearned in the tactics of modern warfare could enter into the military service and stand equal with those who had been put through a thorough course of training, who were awake to every signal and command, active and skillful in the use of their weapons, accurate in aim, and alert to every sign of danger? In fact, no person would be accepted into their ranks without he was prepared, unless the country was in extreme danger and there was no time for preparation.

I repeat, that in any line of work we must have at least some preparation, the necessity of which in the ordinary avocations of life people do not question. But I have been led to wonder at the peculiar view taken sometimes in regard to God's work. How often has the view been taken in the past that in this work there is no great need for preparation; that when God wishes to use us he can do so anyhow. It is true that God may use us as instruments in his hands for good when we are only partially prepared for the work which he intrusts into our hands, but is that any argument to prove that if we had studied more to fit ourselves and were more qualified to take charge of the work that we would not be the means in his hands of accomplishing more? We think not. How much better may we be able to prune the vine and work among the branches and with less loss or injury to it if we are a skilled and careful laborer in his vineyard.

A few years ago there came the cry, "Behold, the field is white ready for the harvest," and the statement was, "my laborers are few." Then it was that the bugle call resounded abroad for the gathering in of the forces for the defense of truth, and strong, earnest souls rallied forth to the standard, and with willing hearts and courageous spirits unfurled her banner and stood undaunted in her defense. They were brave and noble soldiers that were called out on the spur of the moment. To-day circumstances are different with us. The standard of truth has been firmly implanted and we should be cognizant of the fact that in some way we may be called upon in its defense, and simply because others from the necessity of the case have had to enter into the work without much preparation, is that any reason why we who have the opportunity to prepare ourselves should not take advantage of it? For a long time in the church there had been a crying need for more preparation, and it was in answer to this that the Religio stepped out and began its work. Slowly it grew at first, for there was the backward cry, "No need of it," but it was founded on principles of right and could not be torn down. It was soon seen that it filled a long-felt want in the church and was accepted by the church in time as an auxiliary, or in other words a helper, an assistant, and it stands in such relation to her to-day as a helper and an assistant in preparing those who are to take part in the great work of the restoration of Israel in the latter days. It is to the church to-day what the military posts are where the soldiers are received and drilled for actual service; it is the preparatory school where every one may have the opportunity to enter in and become familiar with the principles, laws, and commandments of the kingdom of God. It affords us better opportunities than we have ever before had in obtaining knowledge, and is a means whereby we may educate ourselves along various useful lines of work.

As the Religio is largely composed of young people, we have as young people rejoiced in the fact that we have been acknowledged by the church in this light, that of an auxiliary or helper in the divine cause of the salvation of mankind, and we are anxious to keep up to that standard that as such we may ever be considered by her. We are anxious that our work may be thorough, that our students may be active and alive to the importance of the work at hand. God himself has acknowledged the work and has said that upon it he has placed his seal. Religions, how often do we stop and think of what it really means to be in the kingdom of God; of what responsibilities and duties that involves, and that as being engaged in the Religio work of its importance in assisting in bringing about the redemption of mankind and of the work of the establishing of Zion? Is not the work a great one? Is not the end to be attained grand beyond measure? Let us as Religions think seriously of the relation in which we stand to the church. Let us see to it that we do nothing unworthy of such relation. If we are to be assistants let us not forget that the Lord has said that "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things, whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care," and if we desire as a society to keep up our record as an assistant in this great work, we must strive individually and collectively to seek to cultivate the virtues enjoined that we may be worthy of our trust.

From our ranks in time will be chosen those who will go to the front ranks of the battle, some who will be as picket-men at the out-posts of duty, some who will be called upon to serve as officers and commanders, and some, perhaps, to more humble, but none the less honorable positions of performing little duties, administering to the wants of others, and caring for those in need. And let us ever remember, that however great the position or arduous the tasks imposed, that we should not complain, but trust that where burdens are heavy added strength will be given. Neither let us complain because the work we are called upon to perform seems to us so small, the place so humble, but let our hearts swell with gratitude that we are privileged to do even the humblest task in his kingdom.

So may the Religio and Religions ever move forward, "Onward and Upward," in assisting in the onward march and progress of this great latter-day work; so may our experience in the Religio teach us to sacrifice our all for the sake of the advancement of truth, to diligently work for it, to live for it, if need be to die. And oh, as the result of our work in the Religio may we live better lives, may it lessen our mistakes in the future, may it enable us to be willing helpers, skillful in warfare, efficient and competent laborers in the Lord's great field, so that when the harvest is over "we may come rejoicing bringing our sheaves with us."

THE ATONEMENT.

A certain class of religious journals appear much distressed that the new Statement of Doctrine adopted by the late General Assembly, reiterates the old-fashioned Bible doctrine of the atonement.

Language is incapable of conveying any meaning unless both Old and New Testaments teach vicarious salvation. It is the scarlet thread which runs through precept and ritual. No process of unraveling can dispense with it which does not destroy the fabric into which it is assiduously woven. If it be "immoral," as a well-known divine has lately designated it, then the whole book is immoral; for it is as truly a part of the Apocalypse as of the Gospels, and as much in evidence in the Psalms as in the Pentateuch.

And why, indeed, should it not be, since it runs parallel with the history of mankind? There is no such thing as a self-made man, or a self-saved man. The very alphabet over which the lisping child is poring to-day has cost the world before him generations of toil. The citizenship we enjoy is not of our invention or desert, but must be accepted as a free gift. For the safety of the humblest citizen there sails a fleet of iron-clads. He may be without distinction, and physically he may be less strong than a good-sized mastiff; but his insignificance is lost sight of in the greatness of the republic. Behind him lie Bunker Hill and Gettysburg. Vicariously he is America and America is he.

We may be glad that the Bible presents religion along these lines. No disciple is judged by his own petty attainments. Our poor, weak, broken lives are "hid with Christ in God." When Admiral Dewey was accorded a magnificent reception in New York City upon his return from Manila, men forbidden to set foot upon American soil walked proudly up Broadway behind regiments of regulars, preceded by bands of music. What works of piety or power had made them the guests of the republic? None whatever; but the Admiral said, "These Chinamen are my friends. They stood by me when I needed friends; and if I am honored by the city they shall share my honors." The conqueror threw over them the splendor of his own fame.

The defenders of this doctrine have been at times its worst foes; because they have insisted in presenting it in some unscriptural form or phraseology. When men tell us that "one drop of Christ's blood would suffice for the redemption of all mankind," we see how little the disputant may understand spiritual realities. No man can understand Gethsemane by counting drops of blood; nor Calvary by standing beneath the cross with a stop-watch to time the exceeding, bitter cry of the Son of God. There are some things true which you can not prove by the multiplication table, and some things precious which you can not weigh with scales. There is no nice balance of the cross against the fires of Gehenna; no one can say how many dying groans a flag is worth. But this we know—that unworthy in ourselves we may be accepted "in the Beloved," and "through his stripes we are healed."—The Interior, July 3, 1902.

Children.

Come to me, O ye children!
For I hear you at your play,
And the questions that perplexed me
Have vanished quite away.

Ye open the eastern windows,
That look towards the sun,
Where thoughts are singing swallows,
And the brooks of morning run.

In your hearts are the birds and the sunshine,
In your thoughts the brooklets flow;
But in mine is the wind of autumn
And the first fall of the snow.

Ah! what would the world be to us
If the children were no more?
We should dread the desert behind us
Worse than the dark before.

What the leaves are to the forest,
With light and air for food,
Ere their sweet and tender juices
Have been hardened into wood—

That to the world are the children;
Through them it feels the glow

Of a brighter and sunnier climate
Than reaches the trunks below.

Come to me, O ye children!
And whisper in my ear
What the birds and the winds are singing
In your sunny atmosphere.

For what are all our contrivings,
And the wisdom of our books,
When compared with your caresses,
And the gladness of your looks?

Ye are better than all the ballads
That ever were sung or said;
For ye are living poems,
And all the rest are dead.

—Henry W. Longfellow.

Faith.

O God, whose thunder shakes the sky,
Whose eye this atom globe surveys,
To thee, my only rock, I fly,
Thy mercy in thy justice praise.

The mystic mazes of thy will,
The shadows of celestial light,
Are past the power of human skill;
But what the Eternal acts is right.

O, teach me in the trying hour,
When anguish swells the dewy tear,
To still my sorrows, own thy power,
Thy goodness love, thy justice fear.

If in this bosom aught but thee
Encroaching sought a boundless sway,
Omniscience could the danger see,
And Mercy look the cause away.

Then why, my soul, dost thou complain,
Why drooping seek the dark recess?
Shake off the melancholy chain,
For God created all to bless.

But ah! my breast is human still;
The rising sigh, the falling tear,
My languid vitals' feeble rill,
The sickness of my soul declare.

But yet, with fortitude resigned,
I'll thank the inflictor of the blow;
Forbid the sigh, compose my mind,
Nor let the gush of misery flow.

The gloomy mantel of the night,
Which on my sinking spirit steals,
Will vanish at the morning light,
Which God, my east, my sun, reveals.

—Thomas Chatterton.

Notice to Stockmen.

Those intending making an exhibit at the coming Iowa State Fair, August 22 to 30, will kindly write Honorable S. B. Packard, Marshalltown, Iowa, Superintendent of the Cattle Department of the Fair, stating the number of stalls they desire reserved for their exhibit.

The cattle exhibit this year will be large, therefore those contemplating an exhibit will do well to reserve their space at once.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

TO THE heart-yearnings, to the spirit's eager inquiries, to the intellect's restless speculations, there is but one response—faith! What we can not know now we shall know hereafter.—Edwin B. Russell.

Two or Three.

There were only two or three of us
 Who came to the place of prayer,
 Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
 But for that we did not care,
 Since, after our hymns of praise had risen,
 And our earnest prayers were said,
 The Master himself was present there
 And gave us the living bread.

We knew his look in our leader's face,
 So rapt and glad and free;
 We felt his touch when our heads were bowed
 We heard his "Come to me!"
 Nobody saw him lift the latch,
 And none unbarred the door;
 But "Peace" was his token to every heart,
 And how could we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
 From the weary shoulder fall;
 Each of us dropped the load of care,
 And the grief was like a pall;
 And over our spirits a blessed calm
 Swept in from the jasper sea,
 And strength was ours for toil and strife
 In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
 To the little place of prayer,
 Outside were struggle and pain and sin,
 But the Lord himself was there;
 He came to redeem the pledge he gave—
 Wherever his loved ones be,
 To stand himself in the midst of them,
 Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
 And our hearts had grown so warm
 It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers,
 And not like the crash of a storm.
 "'Twas a time of the dearest privilege
 Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
 As we thought how Jesus himself had come To feed us with living bread.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

Responsibilities of the Young Women.

There is a subject which has pressed itself upon my attention, and which is of great magnitude to those whom it concerns. Articles upon it may have been presented, argument exhausted, but if so, I have never read them. The theme is: The position or attitude the young women of the church should take in the performance of their part of the command to be "laborers together with God."

To my mind the lofty position in which these young women have been placed by the great Creator should be understood that the nobility and grandeur of their position may appear in its true light conspicuous to them.

First, then, wifehood and motherhood are clearly to be their destiny, as provided by Him who is too wise to err and too kind to permit unnecessary suffering. Too many occupy these conditions as the inevitable, rather than with that appreciation that should fill their souls at the opportunity, and thus these superior privileges become life's drudgery, instead of being supreme joy.

Let the young woman who would be happy and fill her destined place as designed by infinite wisdom take upon her the exalted position with appreciation that she is able to fill it, and not with the intention of evading any of its responsibilities or privileges.

Many women make a fatal mistake in seeking to avoid the responsibility imposed in motherhood. I say fatal, because it robs them of the accomplishment of what the supreme Mind intended or prepared for them. God has prepared the conditions so that all the suffering necessary shall be eclipsed in the joy that shall intervene. Pleasure couched within the scope of marriage—as destined by the Author—are too frequently abused and extended beyond the intention, and the result changed from joy to sadness and dissatisfaction. Some, seeking to avoid the natural and intended results, ruin their own lives and destroy those of others, placing themselves—as pertaining to eternal life—in jeopardy.

Let the young ladies of the church be taught the high and solemn dignity of wife and mother. Its responsibilities and that all that pertains to it shall be fed and sustained by unselfish love of filling the place destined by a loving Father instead of performing abstract duty.

Many a young wife sleeps the long sleep of death by reason of a desire to escape in part the consequences of her marriage responsibilities, and that furnishes the greater reason why the young women of the church should clearly understand the responsibilities of maternity.

What shall guide in the selection of a husband? That which is to bring the culmination for which marriage was instituted. A girl should love for that which is enduring. The man's character and disposition should be studied. If she loves for dress, a home, convenience, beauty, fashionable or cute, winning ways, when these things depart, if they should, the love goes with them.

The gospel should be the basis of measurement. If a young man comes up to the standard laid down by 2 Peter 1: 5-7, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, if these be in him and abound, he shall "never fall," and the wife may rest assured she can depend upon him, and there will be no divorce in that family.

If the young women of the church will aim to bring themselves up to this standard, too, there will be no complaint when it is necessary for them—as ministers' wives—to remain at home and care for their offspring, and the Lord may give them just as many as he sees fit. When the solemnity, the holiness, the relevancy and purposes of marriage are understood, and a strong effort made to put them in practice, the doors against divorce will be shut.

My dear young sister, ponder these few thoughts over, and if you are not profited by them you may say I am a false teacher. For your success in life, now and hereafter, shall ever be my prayer.

Bro. J. Arber writes from 126 Petershill Road, Springburn, Glasgow, Scotland, July 19: "We have removed from Bothwell to this city. We are much nearer our work, preaching on the street nearly every night in the week. We have secured a hall situated at 54 Charlotte Street. We operated there last Sunday for the first time. There are prospects of a branch being raised up here by faithful and persistent effort. There are a number of nice people interested in our work. We are hopeful of success."

General Superintendent in the Field.

The General Superintendent is now in the field on a tour through Southern Indiana, Ohio, and the East. Will not return till about the middle of September. And as it is a very difficult matter to get mail regularly while moving about, it may be that some of the correspondence will not get the necessary prompt attention, but will do the best we can with it.

On the 25th of July we met with the workers of the Southern Indiana District in their first convention at the meeting-house near Derby. The meeting was not large, owing to a mistake concerning its announcement, and the work is not yet fully appreciated by all the patrons of the district. There are some obstacles to overcome and considerable work yet to be done ere the district will have attained the standard of excellence desired by our fellow workers there who are working earnestly and untiringly to develop the Sabbath-school interests. But in spite of the obstacles in the way and the newness of the work there, they have made progress that is excelled by few, even of the older district associations.

It will be remembered that this is the district to which we came last September and hurriedly effected an organization one evening at the close of a preaching service. The outlook was not flattering and our hopes were not built high. Sufficient opportunity had not been given to properly work the matter up. Or, at least, so it seemed to us. But we can not always judge with certainty with our conception of things. God's work does not always move exactly as we think it will. Four out of the five schools reported, making an excellent showing of the growth of the work there. Of these five schools, the district superintendent, Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., together with his assistant, Bro. W. C. Marshall, and others organized four since the meeting in September. They show an attendance of near fifty on an average. And when we consider that these brethren are both church missionaries and of necessity away from the branches much of the time, we are led to believe that they let pass no opportunity to build up a Sunday-school where it could be done.

The convention passed off nicely and a very good interest was shown. An extra session was called for Saturday morning to consider various questions pertaining to the work. Adjournment was had to meet the Friday morning preceding the next district conference, a move in the right direction. This will give them three sessions for business and other work of development.

May the good Lord bless their efforts for good.

A Plea for Permanent Work in Our Sunday-school Text-books.

How may we make our work permanent?

"I have chosen you . . . that your fruit should remain."—
John 15: 16.

That we need a better system of grading in our Sunday-schools is a self-evident fact. How to attain to that system is the question. We answer, by using the same wisdom (or at least as much wisdom) in our issuing Helps for the study of the lessons for the Sunday-schools as we show in our secular work.

In our day schools there is a course of study prescribed for each grade, and the pupil's place or grade in such schools is usually determined by his familiarity with that portion of the work that he puts behind him. And this familiarity is usually determined by examinations.

How is it in our Sunday-schools? Here the pupil enters, and if there is a class of about his own age, he is generally placed therein, and promotions usually depend more upon the age than the ability and knowledge of gospel subjects that the child has developed. Should this be so? And yet our reader may ask, "How can it be otherwise?" I am frank to confess that with our present system of lesson helps anything more systematic in the grading of the Sunday-schools looks difficult to me; hence the necessity of improving our system of helps. Please notice that I do not find fault with our Quarterlies. I think the present editor does well under the task imposed. The fault is in the system she is forced to work under. Why should there be a constant effort to teach something new or different to pupils entering our primary classes just because they enter at different periods in the history of our Sunday-school work? Is it not the everlasting gospel that we seek to teach? And yet such is the case now.

I can remember when our primary classes were studying of the birth and life of Jesus. And what better subject for the little tots can you have than the "Story of the Babe of Bethlehem"? But if my child happens to have just come to the age that he has made his entrance into the primary class with the commencement of this present quarter, lo! he is put to studying the Acts of the Apostles, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pauline Epistles; or, rather, his Sunday-school teacher and also his mother are put to work to solve the problem of "How in this world can I interest the tot and teach to him these subjects?" Is it not simply an effort upon our part to make our babes keep pace with the research of the older ones in these gospel subjects? It so seems to me. I am convinced that this ought not to be. The gospel never changes and all need to know the same facts that pertain to this great salvation.

There certainly should be a system in the presentation of these subjects to every pupil and class in our Sunday-schools, so that the result of a child entering as a primary and continuing in our Sunday-schools until the course was covered would be a symmetrical development of his knowledge of the gospel and sacred history. The instruction to the apostles from the angel of the Lord, was to "Speak . . . to the people all the words of this life." Shall we do less in our teaching of our children?

To obtain this result let us have a selection and preparation of the subjects with a view to their especial adaptation to the class or grade to be taught; and let the work of preparation and printing be such that when the course of study adapted to one grade be completed that we may have those lessons issued in book form. By so doing we can gradually work into a system that will make practicable the matter of grading by a system of examinations. And in time with very little more expense, if not less than we would incur under the present regime, we will be prepared for a complete course of study commencing with the promise of the Babe of Bethlehem and covering the history of the race as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Church History, not excluding other "good books."

"But," says one, "We will get into a rut!" Not necessarily so, for while the facts of the gospel never change, the teacher should bring the same individuality into his work that the eldership is expected to in his. And also there may be issued from quarter to quarter leaflets containing suggestions of new methods, and sidelights as they are discovered or developed in this latter-day development. Does the Latter Day Saint elder get into a rut in his continual presentation of the same truths of the "everlasting gospel?" Not if he is "led by the Spirit." No more need the Latter Day Saint Sunday-school teacher. Let us remember that Christ chose his apostles, not only that they should bring forth fruit, but that their fruit should remain; and if he has chosen us to do this work of the latter days, let us make it permanent.

With a prayer for the full fruition of this work in the symmetrical development of it in its every part, I am,

Your coworker in Christ,

A. M. CHASE.

Editors Herald:—I have been busy about my Master's cause. The last thirty days has been the busiest time I have had since I have been in the field. Preached thirty-five times, baptized four, and did considerable other work. Most of this work was in new places. The Lord has blessed me with light and liberty, so that from one to three sermons I have had the majority of the congregation in our favor. If have had from twenty-five to three hundred in attendance. Surely this a ripe field, and indications are now that hundreds of as good people as there are anywhere will soon be brought into the kingdom if the field is carefully looked after. I have always observed one rule or tried to: that is to treat others as I would wish to be treated. I generally give them to understand on the start I did not come to abuse them for not believing as I do, but to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. That makes us friends. Then they will give us a hearing. We know what the results will be when we get a hearing. I hope whoever follows in these places will preach the word and let others alone and then when we are attacked we can defend and have all in our favor.

Last week I held an arbor-meeting in Johnson, a little town of about three hundred inhabitants. The arbor was built by the people, free for all. The Holiness had just closed Sunday eve, and I commenced Tuesday night and continued all week with fine interest.

Saturday night we met on time and lit up. I put up my chart, The Narrow and Broad Ways. I was sitting back waiting for the time and watching the crowd come, when to my surprise a man walked in and laid a big family Bible on the stand. I walked down to where he was, spoke, and found he was a Campbellite preacher and that he had an appointment for that night and next day at eleven. I told him I regretted there was a conflict; that I didn't know of his appointment. I saw he had the appearance of a fair, honest man; said he wanted to do what was right, and was willing to divide the time. We agreed. He occupied first, using only fifteen minutes. I then took up the subject of future destiny of man for one hour. He then told the people to come out at ten and he would get through in time for me to have the hour at eleven.

His effort Sunday was to exhort the Christians to live a Christian life every day, and referred to statement I had made the night before about the sheep and goats. Now he said Jesus is not here for me to do anything for him personally. But he said, Here is this brother, pointing to me. If I administer to his needs that's doing it unto Christ. He heard me four times; told Bro. Crawford I gave the best explanations on the gospel he ever heard and that he would investigate our work. He is just a farmer, lives there and preaches for them.

I closed Sunday night; subject, Book of Mormon to the coming forth of this work. The people found we had something solid. Sr. E. Parsons is the only member we have there at present. She is a widow and invalid. Has three grown sons and one daughter at home. Through their influence and help we got the work started. I wish some of the Saints would send this sister some HERALDS, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves. She will read and give to others. Post-office, Johnson, Indian Territory. I commence to-night in the town of Ada.

Yours for the faith,

W. M. AYLOR.

Editors Herald: I saw by the SAINTS' HERALD some time ago that if all the members would pay one dollar to help pay off the church debt it could be out of debt. And I love this latter-day work and am one to want to see it prosper and roll on, for I know it is the true church; so I will send in my one dollar to help a good cause.

WALTER E. GOREHAM.

DAYTON, Ohio, July 28.

Editors Herald: After about three weeks absence I returned here on the 21st inst. and resumed the effort on the street begun some time ago by Bro. Long and myself. Have been all alone so far as help with the preaching is concerned, until last evening, when Bro. Long dropped in and gave us one of his rousing sermons. Sr. Goodrich is with me assisting in the song service, which is a great help indeed. We are having a good interest, and it looks like much good may be done. We are having strong opposition. Bro. Warren purchased a tent, also an organ to be used in the tent, but as yet we have been unable to secure a lot upon which to pitch it. Property owners seem to have too much "religion" or do not want "that kind of doctrine preached" on their lots. However, we shall continue on the street until we get a suitable place.

I arranged a chart and erected it upon the street. Its effect is simply wonderful; worked like magic; increased interest and numbers fourfold. I think if our elders who are doing street work would try this method they would be much pleased with results. I inclose a clipping from the Dayton Herald so you may see about how the press views our labor, also the labors of the Utah elders in comparison. The press and many people are beginning to understand quite well the difference between us. I do hope and pray that we may soon have a place for the tent. By the use of the organ, our music will have added a much needed factor.

Bro. Long started for Springfield after service last evening. Thought he would return next Sunday. Hope he will. By letter from Bro. Jeffers, our district president, dated the 24th inst., I hope to have his help for a while.

I am personally invited by Reverend Gillispie, a Presbyterian, to attend a Mormon lecture on next Thursday eve. I promised to be there. Campbellites and Presbyterians have joined to down Mormonism, so he tells me. He speaks in their church, by request. Reverend Gillispie tells me he labored in the "salt lands" for twenty years. This is why I suppose the Campbellian desires his services. It looks like a fight is on, and we know not the end, but we feel that the Lord is our strength.

V. M. GOODRICH.

SPIRIT LAKE, Minnesota, July 25.

Editors Herald: Since last writing I held a successful meeting of about three weeks at Rodman, Iowa. The gospel message was well received by many and the prospects for future work are surely good. I baptized Sr. Lucina Fritz. She is a daughter of Mr. and Sr. Fenn, who no doubt will be remembered by Bro. E. C. Briggs and other early missionaries, whom they took into their home in the early 'sixties in Utah when Brigham Young told them he would not be responsible for their lives fifteen minutes if they stayed in the territory, and they had to seek the protection of the United States troops. Sr. Fenn was baptized in Provo, Utah, in 1864 by Elder Atwood, of the Reorganization. They were then robbed of all their goods by Kimball, Bullock, and others and compelled to get back to the States the best they could, guarded by United States soldiers. Sr. Fenn saw the mutilated bodies of Bro. Parrish and his son as they lay in the street where they were left by destroying angels, Potter and others. Bishop Johnson finally ordered the bodies of the "apostate dogs" buried.

From Rodman I went to Burt, Kossuth County, where I found the good people ready to hear more of this latter-day gospel. I could only hold services on Sundays on account of rain and the busy season. This is a dairy country. Milking makes it too late to attend meetings.

I next called at Ledyard. Found all friendly and ready to listen to the gospel message.

I am now engaged in meetings on the north side of Spirit Lake. This is a splendid farming country and well settled, but it is twelve miles to the nearest railroad. I am stopping one half mile over in Minnesota. I have two appointments one mile over in Minnesota, one in the Methodist church and one in a schoolhouse, and I also have an appointment in a schoolhouse in Iowa. I am stopping with relatives. I have many of them here. The people here have never heard of our church before, but the gospel message is being well received by good and attentive congregations.

OMAHA, Nebraska, July 24.

Editors Herald: Lest we forget and stray from the old paths; I thought it would not be amiss to call the attention of the Saints to General Conference Resolutions, No. 168. "That in distinguishing between official and non-official members, the term lay member be not used." I have noticed that on two occasions during the present year the term laity has been used in communication to the Saints. And it is occasionally used by the elders when preaching in the branches. I think it has been used in my hearing more in the last three years than in the previous twenty-two of my membership.

LOS ANGELES, California, July 23.

Editors Herald: Our reunion at Orange was a success spiritually. In point of attendance it was one of the smallest we have ever held, due, undoubtedly, to the location of the grounds. When once reached it is, however, an ideal grove. The large, spreading oak and sycamore trees; a rich carpet of fallen leaves; a high elevation beyond the range of fogs or heat was all that could be desired. Brn. Luff, Hilliard, Barmore, and Anderson were present in addition to our own local force. The preaching ranged from fair to excellent. The contrast between "liberty" in preaching and where "one has not the Spirit" was particularly noticeable in several instances, and but impressed the observing Latter Day Saint that in spiritual things man without God's help is weakness personified. Bro. Hilliard's bugle sounded long and loud and in no uncertain tones to "come out of her, my people." There was no sacrifice of selfish feeling or ambiguity of language in dealing with the questions of gathering, consecration, and equality with him. A Latter Day Saint who listens to Bro. Hilliard and then continues to live for self is surely impervious to argument or spiritual intuition.

Bro. Luff gave us several excellent sermons which were fully appreciated by everybody. One effort in particular moved nearly every one to tears. His physical condition was below normal and he should have been in bed instead of in the stand. He left feeling considerably improved. Brn. Barmore and Anderson show marked evidences of growth, and from present indications will serve the church faithfully in their new fields. May God bless and preserve them for years of service.

Editors Herald: I am at Thayer, where I met Braden in debate last January. I commenced meeting on the 17th in the park, and have held every night but one since. The attendance is not large—running from fifteen, thirty-five, to one hundred. Almost everything seemingly that could be thought of is now started up in "full blast" to keep the people away. They seem to fear that I will pull the wool over their eyes if they come to hear me.

I close on the evening of 27th, and go to Woodside, some eighteen miles away. Elder James T. Davis, who was ordained at Springfield, recently, is assisting me in the meetings. He has been preaching on the streets at three in the afternoon, and announces me at the park for eight o'clock service. By this means many are hearing the word.

I continued the preaching services two nights at Springfield

Trees are loaded with peaches here, and the McNair peach farm four or five miles away, is an immense affair. They advertise for three thousand men and women to pick peaches from July 25 to August 15. When I came here ten days ago, I thought I liked peaches; but they have lost much of their charm to me—altogether too "common." Needing rain here badly. One little shower since I have been here, which gave me rest from preaching that night. Some of the overplus you Iowans are having would be welcomed down in these "rockies." Still in the faith, and nobly cared for by the Brn. Bootman boys and their good wives.

Editors Herald: We are striving earnestly to do all the good we can under the present circumstances. Bro. Sands, our elder, is still in Dallas, Texas. We know not when he will be here. He thinks he can not be with us before next year.

Sr. Webber, our Sunday-school superintendent, was married July 20 to Doctor W. H. Abington, of Beebe, Arkansas. Doctor Abington is not a member of any church, but rather leans toward the Christian faith. He is an honest man, well respected, and is always a defender of that which he thinks to be right. Sr. Abington left for her home at Beebe Tuesday night. Oh, how can we do without her in our Sunday-school! She was also a teacher of the primary class. We intend to do our best to keep the Sunday-school going. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may not get discouraged, that each and every one may realize there is a work for us to do no one else can do for us.

I am poor in this world's goods, but my prayers are that I may always be at the post of duty, ready and willing to lend a helping hand whenever a good deed can be done. I have been afflicted two or three months with nervous trouble and poor circulation of the blood, sometimes so badly that I can not sleep more than three or four hours at night. I ask the prayers of the Saints in my behalf that if it is God's will I may be healed of this affliction. I feel that my life is well worth living so long as I have a sin to overcome. I want to come up higher and follow the footsteps of my Savior. My prayers shall ever be for the redemption of Zion.

Your sister,

BEULAH JOHNSON.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, July 21.

Beloved Brother: It seems to me that I am constrained to write you in humble acknowledgment of God's love and kindness to us, in permitting us to come into his holy presence and pray, petition him, in his stupendous majesty, infinite wisdom and goodness, and he has condescended to listen and answer our humble cry to him for assistance and direction in all things pertaining to duty and desire to accomplish much good that others may be partakers of his bounty, love, and provision, in this life and in the one that is to come.

And when I stop to think that this mighty King and Creator of all things is so powerful and yet so gentle, so glorious and yet so easy of entreaty, my heart, yea my being, is thrilled with joy unspeakable and full of glory at the realization of it, and of the certainty of a fullness being mine upon conditions within my reach.

O! how my soul yearns to see mankind accept this wonderful scheme by which they, too, may become possessed of the same divine influence, and have the expansion of vision and understanding by which life shall take on new and beautiful conditions. I realize, however, that I am not required to be overcharged concerning them, but to make legitimate effort to have them see and understand and comprehend and then my duty is done.

Still, I feel there is something beyond abstract duty calling upon me when I am advised to love my neighbor as myself. I am intensely interested in myself, and so I must be in my neighbor. If I can become filled with divine love—which is my privilege—it will go out and respond to every demand, let it come from whomsoever it may. Who but those breathing the atmosphere of divine influence can appreciate the sublime words of Peter, "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost For the promise is . . . to all that are afar off"?

It seems to me the time is at hand for greater spiritual endowment than ever, if the Saints will just live and practice what is taught by the Church of Jesus Christ restored in these latter days.

I thank God more than words can express for my awakening from darkness into the marvelous light brought to earth by the angelic messenger. I realize your work is great and taxing on your strength, but he will keep you to the end, and superbundant joy will be part of your reward.

In bonds,

Editors Herald: Our branch is in a very prosperous condition. We have a church building completed and dedicated. We hold Sunday-school every Sunday at ten, preaching at eleven, and prayer-meeting in the evening at eight. We have an elder, one priest, two teachers, and one deacon in the branch. We hope some of the traveling ministry will call on us soon, as there is a new place here to open up the work. I wonder where Bro. J. T. Davis is. He opened up the work near here at West Liberty schoolhouse last spring, also organized a Sunday-school there. As I was with him they chose me for superintendent and Bible class teacher and my wife for primary teacher. We have a very good attendance. I have also preached to them a few times. As a preacher I am a new beginner, having been ordained but about six months. I have preached ten times and assisted in several other meetings. I hope I may be an instrument in the Lord's hands in doing much good.

Several from our branch attended conference at Springfield. We also had the pleasure of getting acquainted with Brn. Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, and I. N. White. We know that God has chosen men that have stood by him in many trials and temptations. We hope the gospel may reach all the honest in heart.

Yours in Christ,
OSCAR ENSLEY.

ORIOLE, Indiana, July 28.

Editors Herald: Bro. James D. Porter came here in May; held several meetings and baptized and confirmed two into the kingdom. When he left the people were deeply interested. The Holy Spirit worked wonderfully. He came back here July 16; preached fifteen sermons. He has thoroughly set forth the doctrine, and baptized and confirmed, in the two series of meetings, twenty-five members. I think there are yet several whom God will call. Bro. Peter Flinn, from Crawford County, Indiana, is with him this time. We now have thirty members.

Brn. Porter and Flinn left here this morning, going to Pilot Knob, where they will hold a series of meetings. May the Lord ever bless them as he has here.

The people are beginning to get their eyes open, but there are some who can not endure sound doctrine.

Brn. Porter and Flinn left an appointment here for August 15, when they will hold a few meetings. I think there will be a branch organized here when they return. There is a great deal of work to be done here. The harvest is great and the laborers are few.

May God bless his children everywhere.

Your brother in the one faith,
JOHN N. BERNARDI.

Editors Herald: Since I last called upon you I have preached at several places in Robertson and Burleson Counties. Had good interest. Baptized and assisted in confirming three precious souls. At our district reunion we had a good meeting; a good turnout and interest all through. Outside of our district officers we had Brn. H. O. Smith and R. Wight, who did some good preaching.

Bro. John Hawley traveled with me about a month this summer. He is a good companion. He left us after the reunion "until the millennium," as he said. I aim to hold three series of meetings in August, one in Grimes County and two in Burleson. Interest in the good cause seems better in our section this year. I will let you hear later on.

Yours in the conflict,
E. W. NUNLEY.

BRANDON, Kentucky, July 31.

Editors Herald: We came here the 29th inst., but on account of rain (which was much needed) we have done but little in the way of preaching, but hope we may be able to do some good here, as there are some who seem to be interested and will probably obey before we leave.

We expect to visit the Utah people again ere long. I think some of them will be ready to accept the truth when we go there again.

The mob threats are still raging about Davis Chapel, not only against the elders but against the laity as well, as you will see from the following notice which was placed on the schoolhouse door, and published in some of the newspapers without protest from the editors against such conduct:

"To Laity: Take notice. You will leave your smoking houses in fire and run in fire that is hotter than hell-fire, for it will be mixed with shot for entertaining Mormon elders.

"KENTUCKY REGULATOR."

So you see it is a little critical there yet. By letter from one of the brethren there I learn we are threatened at another place about ten miles from there, where we have been preaching at what is known as the Pugh Schoolhouse. It is said by our enemies there that the mob at Davis Chapel got off so easy that they will give us the same kind of a reception. Others, our friends, say if we will come they will guard us while we preach, so everything is not as lovely here as one might wish, but we expect to do the best we can under the circumstances, using all the wisdom God has given us. It is trying on a man's spiritual condition as well as his mental to go through such trying times. I hope the Lord will protect the band of Saints that has been planted there, and that there may be no more serious trouble in that vicinity. We sincerely request the prayers of the Saints that the Lord will protect us and that the work may still prosper here.

Your colaborer,
W. R. SMITH.

Fair August! Indolence leads her by the hand and Pleasure and Laughter run before her. Poppies deck her loose-blown tresses, and from her horn of plenty fall the red and golden fruits of the early harvest. The merry chatter of the brook is softened beneath her spell to a gurgle of lazy contentment. Over wood and field her mystic presence weaves a subtle change. The erst-while busy bee hums drowsily, as it were, his own slumber-song. The breezes have lost their wonted sportiveness and stir the pine tops with languid sighs. The very wash of the sea on the shingle is subdued as if the great restless ocean itself had succumbed to the mystic influence and would be at rest. Of all the months of the whole year this is the month of rest, of relaxation and recreation, of dropping the burden and "jes loafin'." Even the farmer finds time for a picnic or a day to spend a-fishin.—Country Life in America.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends in Northwestern Kansas District: Having been sent to this district by our worthy missionary in charge, Bro. I. N. White, in place of Bro. R. W. Davis, to labor the remainder of this conference year, I take this method of informing all that I am in the field. All who desire missionary work done in their respective localities, please write me, stating opportunities, needs, prospects, etc., where preaching is desired. As there are only two missionaries appointed in this district, and the field large, we must necessarily bestow our labors where most needed. And this information, together with what we already know regarding conditions in this field, will greatly assist us in arranging our work so as to labor where most good is likely to be accomplished. We can not reach all this year, but will do our best, seeking to be guided by the Spirit of the Master and wisdom given us. Expect to begin tent work as soon as practicable. We need and ask the hearty cooperation of all, both ministry and members. Let the local ministry who can, move out, under proper directions, supplementing the efforts of the missionaries, and assisting in the spread of the gospel of Christ. We recommend a careful reading of the "Pastoral" by Bro. I. N. White, especially that part relating to the "God bless you," etc. Remember our district reunion which begins, I am informed, August 28 at Gaylord. All make a special effort to be there the first day, and come prepared to stay and have a good spiritual time. And in all your good efforts for the Master do not forget Graceland. I am taking subscriptions. Send or hand me your donations. Will receipt you for same. Would like to get every name in the district on our list. Names and amounts given will be published in Bishop's Annual Report. Those living in the district desiring to write me, address me at Downs, Osborne County, Kansas, Care Box 31. Others may address me at Rea, Andrew County, Missouri, Box 46. Mail will be promptly forwarded directly to me in either case with but little delay. Your brother in the gospel, Joseph C. Vaughn.

Appointment of Bishop's Agents.

FOR THE WESTERN TEXAS DISTRICT.

The Saints and friends of the Western Texas District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will please take notice that upon the resignation of former Bishop's agent, Bro. O. D. Johnson, and the recommendation of the district conference, Bro. John Harp has been appointed Bishop's agent of the Western District of Texas. Bro. Harp will receive and receipt for tithes and offerings in the interest of the church, making out report to the Bishop from time to time and perform such other work as belongs usually to agents. We sincerely trust that every one interested in the Western District of Texas may see that they have contributed to the furtherance of the work, and confer with the Bishop's agent, Bro. John Harp, aiding him in his work. We feel thankful to Bro. Johnson for his aid and work in the office of agent in the past, and trust the Lord will bless him in every effort for the good of his work. Remember to address Bro. John Harp, at 109 Big Foot Street, San Antonio, Texas. Commending all to the mercies and blessings of the Lord, I am, Very respectfully, E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop.

THE SOUTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT.

To the Saints and Friends in the Above-named District: Pursuant to notice of the action of the district conference of the Southern Indiana District, upon the request of the present agent, Bro. David Hurbaugh, that he be released from the work of Bishop's agent in said district for the present time, and also the recommendation made by said conference that Elder John J. Boswell, of Wirt, Indiana, be appointed Bishop's agent in his stead, notice is hereby given of the appointment of Bro. Boswell, and he will act as the agent of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church in and for the Southern District of Indiana, performing all the duties usually belonging to the office of agent. We earnestly hope and pray that each and every member in the district may feel it necessary to aid the work of the agent and help him to move forward in his work, trusting the Lord will, in his own time, reward every one accordingly as his labor shall be. We take pleasure in certifying to the faithfulness and material aid given by Bro. Hurbaugh in the work during his agency, and trust the Lord will remember him and make him useful in other fields of church labor. Trusting the Lord will remember and bless all, I am, Very respectfully, E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop. Lamoni, Iowa, July 30, 1902.

Edwin T. Dawson, Ione, Amador County, California.

Reunion Notices.

For the Dow City Reunion tents can be rented as follows: 10x12, $1.50; 12x14, $1.75, and 14x16, $2.25; for setting up each tent, twenty-five cents additional. Reunion commences September 5. Place your order as early as possible, and send money if convenient. All correspondence in regard to tents should be addressed to A. H. Rudd, Dow City, Iowa.

The Northern Missouri Reunion, to be held at Stewartsville, September 5 to 14, has the promise of reduced rate from the several railroads, on the certificate plan, from points in Iowa and Missouri north of the Missouri River, from which the local one way rate to Stewartsville is $4.50 or less. To get full benefit of reduced rates over these several roads it will be necessary to procure a certificate the same as if you were going to our General Conference. One hundred persons will have to attend before these certificates will be signed by the joint agent at Stewartsville, Missouri. Those coming to Cameron on the C., R. I. & P. will purchase tickets to Cameron, getting a certificate from place of starting, and then purchase ticket to Stewartsville from Cameron, getting the second certificate. The officials of the railroads are very kind in granting this favor, hence it will be necessary to comply with these conditions. Crops are just splendid in this part of Missouri, in the "regions round about the land of Zion." To the many Saints who are thinking of gathering, this will be a good opportunity to attend the reunion and see "the promised land." Charles P. Faul, Secretary.

Oregon Saints and friends are invited to attend the reunion of Bandon Branch, at Bandon, August 29 to September 7. We will have with us, Providence permitting, Elders Joseph Luff, George H. Hilliard, Charles E. Crumley, Arthur Allen, and W. A. Goodwin. With these brethren with us we will certainly have a glorious time. Saints from various parts of Coos and Douglas Counties are expected to come with their tents. The large district tent will be here to hold our meetings in. Saints, it will cost us money to bring these elders here and help them on their journey again. The Bandon Saints will do all they can, but we are very few. If some who are unable to come because of the pressure of work wish to help the ministry on this occasion, please send your donation to D. E. Stitt. It will be much appreciated. Besides a spiritual feast and a time of refreshing, we offer you the attractions of a very picturesque beach, agate hunting, fishing, etc., for which time will be given. D. E. Stitt, J. H. Hunt, S. N. B. Hunt, Committee. Bandon, Coos County, Oregon.

To the Saints of Spring River District: Our reunion begins August 15. It will be held one mile north and three quarters west of Angola, Kansas, at Ryans Grove. Angola is on the M. K. & T. railroad. Those coming from the west, change cars at Coffeyville, Kansas; from the east, change at Mound Valley, Kansas. Joplin and vicinity, take Frisco line; leave Joplin 8 a. m., change cars at Mound Valley. Those wanting conveyance from Angola must notify J. H. Davis at Angola what train they will come on. To meet every train would take too much time and incur too great expense. Those who notify committee will be taken to the grounds free. We have secured good pasture, plenty of water and shade, with rates at three cents per day for each horse. There will be a boarding-house on the ground for all who want to board. Meals not to exceed ten cents per meal. Brn. E. L. Kelley, Ellis Short, I. N. White, John Kaler from Australia, the missionary force, and locals will be in attendance for speakers. A stream of water runs through the grounds. God has blessed this country with bountiful crops. Dear Saints, make a little sacrifice and come and enjoy yourselves with spiritual food for the inner man. Order your tents from J. M. Richards, Pittsburg, Kansas, R. F. D. 4. By order of committee, F. C. Keck.

Two-Day Meetings.

A two-day meeting will be held at Boyne City, August 23 and 24. All are invited to attend. Good speakers will be in attendance. R. W. Hugill, President of Branch.

Married.

SPRINGER—ALLEN.—At the residence of Bro. Charles H. Barrows, and the home of the bride, Lamoni, Iowa, at 8 p. m., July 30, 1902, Mr. John Wirt Springer, of Des Moines, and Sr. Mamie A. Allen, granddaughter of Father James Whitehead, of Lamoni, Iowa, were joined in bonds of marriage, President Joseph Smith officiating. Cards announce that they will be at home to their friends at their home in Tegucigalpa, Central America, after September 1, 1902.

Died.

EVANS.—John Hyrum Evans, fourth child of Bro. and Sr. John R. Evans, of Old Cleveland, Iowa, was born November 29, 1864, at Willard City, Utah. While working in a coal mine four miles north of Chariton, Iowa, July 19, was hurt by falling of large timbers, which caused death at 7 a. m., July 23, 1902. March 25, 1889, he was married to Miss Sarah Burch by Elder John Watkins. His wife, three boys, and three girls, besides an aged father and mother, two sisters, and four brothers, mourn. He was exceptionally kind to his family, and loved by all who knew him. The funeral took place from the Saints' chapel, Lucas, Iowa, July 24, and, it is said by all, was one of the largest in Lucas for many years. Sermon by F. M. Weld. During the service the Spirit of God was felt in a marked degree, although he, like many other Saints' children had put off obeying the gospel until too late. He fully intended to obey, and always was a firm believer. A large representation of Odd-fellows took charge of the burial at the cemetery, as he was a member of that order.

VILLERS.—Sr. Hannah Alice Villers was born March 12, 1861, at Carrollton, Carroll County, Missouri; died July 26, 1902. Was married to Bro. James Villers, January 21, 1877. To this union were born seven boys and four girls, one preceding her to the better home, leaving husband and ten children to mourn. Funeral at the Haven church, C. E. Hand preaching the sermon to a full house, July 27, at 2 p. m.

TOZER.—William, son of Mr. William H. and Sr. Esther A. Tozer, was born January 14, 1900, and died at their home, seven miles southwest of Waterloo, Nebraska, July 30, 1902. Funeral services were conducted at the Britton M. E. church, at 2.30 p. m., Friday, August 1, by Elder C. E. Butterworth. Willie was their only child, and the large attendance at the funeral shows that the parents had the sympathy of the entire community. They have hope in Christ.

THOMPSON.—At the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. Grace Nail, sixteen miles southwest of Wilber, Nebraska, July 26, 1902, Sr. Love S. Thompson. Funeral service at the Saints' chapel, Wilber, sermon by J. W. Waldsmith, the church being crowded to its utmost capacity. She was born September 7, 1822, at Lee, Rockingham county, New Hampshire. Was a consistent member of the M. E. Church over twenty years. Baptized October 23, 1881, by R. M. Elvin, and continued in the faith till death. She was married April 12, 1847, to Gustavus Thompson who remains to tread the path of life alone.

HOLVEY.—At Bevier, Missouri, July 23, Elizabeth Holvey. Born March 9, 1834, at Merthyr, South Wales; came to America in 1841; united with the church October 19, 1895. She lived a faithful life. Five sons and two daughters mourn. Funeral from Saints' church, in charge of Elders J. A. Tanner and F. T. Mussell.

BEAL.—At his home at Grove Hill, Bro. Dexter Beal, April 21, 1902. He was born November 26, 1815, at Pittsford, Vermont. Bro. Dexter was the first one to demand baptism when the work was first started at Grove Hill by Elder John Shipley in 1889, and continued faithful to his covenant. He leaves three sons, one daughter, and one brother to mourn. Funeral from the ## Mosquito Extermination.

What shall we do with the water-garden which appears so perfectly suited for raising mosquitoes? Shall we fill it up, drain it off, or pour oil upon its troubled waters? If his pond should prove as great a source of pleasure to the reader as mine has been to me, he will be loth to adopt any of these radical measures. Repeated and diligent search had failed to reveal the presence of any mosquito larvæ in my pond, and this seemed all the more strange when in the quiet waters of the brook, not fifty feet away, I discovered thousands of active "wigglers." It seemed probable that the goldfish were holding the mosquitoes in check in the artificial pond; while in the brook the insects were breeding in comparative safety.

To test the correctness of this theory, I took from the pond a small goldfish and placed it in an aquarium where it could feed upon mosquito larvæ and under observation. The result was as anticipated. Whenever they were dropped into the water the "wigglers" disappeared in a short time.

When it is once understood that goldfish are useful as well as ornamental and comparatively hardy, it is to be hoped that they will be introduced into many small bodies of water, such as lily-ponds and water-gardens, where mosquitoes are likely to breed. In my experience these fish can easily be reared in any sheltered pond where the water is shoal and warm.

How Labor is Organized.

But the greatest of all American organizations is the National Federation—the American Federation of Labor—of which Samuel Gompers is president, with headquarters in Washington. A great combination of national and international unions, with yearly conventions of delegates, a staff of well-paid officers and organizers, an extensively circulated magazine, this federation includes nearly all the great national and international unions. The American Federation of Labor was founded in 1881 and is now made up of eighty-two national and international unions composed of 9,494 local unions, 16 State Federations, 206 City Central labor unions, and 1,051 local unions not attached to national bodies. The total membership is over 1,250,000—a body of men united for the single purpose of advancing the cause of labor, and yet taking no political action. This number represents something more than three-quarters of all the trade-unionists in America. The Federation is supported by a small tax on affiliated organizations, its receipts last year being $71,000, its expenses $68,000, mostly for salaries and organizing expenses, and for the annual Convention. Its chief work consists in securing legislation in the United States Congress, in harmonizing and directing union effort in the struggles common to all union labor; in using its influence in securing the use of union label goods and in behalf of certain kinds of strikes, and in urging union labor everywhere to refuse to purchase goods manufactured or sold by "unfair" concerns. Every month a long list of these "unfair" houses appears in the American Federationist under the heading "We Don't Patronize." Not infrequently it is able to prevent ill-advised strikes. The Federation has been instrumental in securing the passage of many laws which have greatly improved the condition of American workmen. A bare list of them is evidence enough of the remarkable rise in standards during the last twenty-five years of wages, comfort, and independence among the workers of the country.—Ray S. Baker in World's Work.

The Friars in the Philippines.

Judge Taft's mission at Rome resulted in a defining of the basis upon which it will evidently prove feasible to settle the land question, and to dispose of various other disputes relating to charitable, educational, and ecclesiastical property. As to the withdrawal of the friars, it must be remembered that this is a matter of no immediate concern to the American authorities. The people who are most inflexibly determined that these Spanish members of the religious orders shall leave the islands are Catholic parish priests and the whole Filipino body of lay members of the church. This hostility is so great that the friars have not for several years been able to occupy their lands, or to officiate in any way in the parishes where they were once powerful through the support of the Spanish Government. It is not difficult to understand, on reflection, that the Vatican should dislike to be put in the position of making a direct agreement to withdraw the friars. In the first place, this might be offensive to important elements of church support in Spain; in the second place it might be regarded as humiliating to the great world-wide orders of which these particular friars are members. What the Vatican would prefer would be to have this whole subject left to the discretion of the church authorities, to be worked out gradually, and without any show of compulsion or pressure. It would probably be regarded as a violation of the treaty of peace with Spain if the United States should forcibly remove the friars from the Philippines. The great point, as it seems to us, is gained when the friars' titles to agricultural lands are extinguished by the payment of a fair compensation. The Vatican could have no motive for wishing to have the proceeds of the sale of these lands used for the reestablishment anywhere in the archipelago of wholly unwelcome members of the religious orders. On one pretext or another, these friars will inevitably be withdrawn, and they will naturally go either to Spain or to the South American countries. Judge Taft's sojourn at Rome will have proved fairly successful in the end.—From Review of Reviews for August.

Graded Text-Books for the Sunday-School.

Action on the above question at the last General Convention was as follows: A petition was presented by the Des Moines, Iowa, District, that, "Whereas, There is a demand for a Sunday-school lesson text in more durable and convenient form, and Whereas, The lesson text would be better with more extended notes, extracts, comments, and references, and Whereas, we believe that a Sunday-school lesson text-book would bring about a more perfect and uniform system of graded schools, and Whereas, We believe that a lesson text-book could be issued at less expense than the lessons now cost, Therefore, We, the Des Moines, Iowa, District Sunday-school Association petition the General Association to take steps to provide for the issuing of a graded Sunday-school text-book for use in the schools of the church." After the reading of the petition the following motion was offered: "Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that graded text-books fully descriptive of the gospel shall be published as soon as practicable to take the place of the Quarterlies when so published." Further consideration of the question was deferred until the next Annual Convention, to be made the special order for 7.30 of the evening of the first day. A motion prevailed, "that Brn. J. A. Gunsolley, A. M. Chase, J. W. Wight, W. N. Robinson, J. F. Mintun, and T. A. Hougas prepare papers expressing their individual views as to the work of graded text-books during the coming year to be published subject to public inspection." The General Superintendent was, on motion, requested "to keep this matter before the superintendents of schools and of districts that the question may be agitated and thoroughly canvassed." Recognizing the question pending to be of vital importance to the Sunday-school cause, I place the matter as it now stands before the workers, that the question may be considered with deliberation and wise action had thereon when the question is brought up for disposition. THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

James 5: 14, 15.

Our Hope, a paper published at Mendota, Illinois, by the Western Advent Christian Publication Association in its issue for July 2, page four, has an article written by one Elder A. E. Hatch, from Leon, Iowa, attacking the church at Lamoni, for its belief in the theory of healing of the sick by anointing and the prayer of faith.

This writer gives as his incentive for writing, that he "spent the day with an Adventist family" at Lamoni, and that in "one home across the way a lady was dying with a cancer and suffering terrible pain which a physician could have relieved; but the elders of the church had been called and the sister was left to suffer without medical care."

It is possible that there is in Lamoni, a lady dying of cancer, but we are not informed as to her name, place of residence, or whether she is a member of the church which the writer assails.

He writes:

In the district where I am pastor, is the town of Lamoni, Iowa, the well-known headquarters of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Here is a church that pretends to possess miracle-working power, and yet I think it can safely be said that there are more cripples in Lamoni than in any other town in Southern Iowa.

This will be news to the citizens of Lamoni, especially, to those who are members of the church.

The church at Lamoni does not "pretend to possess miracle-working power." The only pretension is that they, the church, believe that the power to work miracles is still possessed by God and Christ, as it was in Old and New Testament times. There has never been any claim made by the church that the miracle-working power attached to individuals, or that such power was subject to the whim, wish, or will of any man in the church, officer or otherwise.

There are no more cripples in Lamoni according to the number of its inhabitants, than in any other town large or small in Southern Iowa, or in the entire State, leaving out of course, towns where asylums for the injured, helpless, and insane are to be found.

There are probably more indigent and infirm aged people in the town who are members of the church, than in any town of similar size in Southern Iowa for the reason that there is a home for the old folks of the church located there, but there is not a cripple among them. But this astute writer who tarried in our town for a "day" could not do the church the justice of noting this proper asylum in his notes.

Bro. F. C. Keck wrote from Angola, Kansas, the 29th ult.: "I baptized two last week, one a preacher's wife."

Writing further in regard to his own church, this writer says:

One of two things must be true; either the church is very weak and has no power with God, or else the passage has been wrongly interpreted. It is not enough to hide behind the fathers of the Adventist movement, and declare that they believed thus and so. Like other people we have our history, and have accumulated traditions, which are no safer to follow than those of other people.

The passage referred to is James 5: 14, 15. "Is any sick among you?" etc.

This writer goes on and makes the first eight verses to apply to the present "industrial conditions." Verse nine he applies to the present confusion and division of creeds, parties, etc. Verses ten and eleven he applies to the prophets, citing the case of Job, especially, and stating that "the church is negligent of prophecy and almost wholly ignorant of the Old Testament." Verse twelve, this writer makes to apply to the "profane and oath-bound conditions of the present time." Then he very skillfully skips from making a literal and material application to the conditions of the present period and changes his theme thus:

Thus far in the chapter (that is from verse one to verse twelve. —Ed.) present conditions have been pointed out and religious advice given, why then does the writer suddenly change to put us up a prescription, and give us a medical hint when his object is plainly religious.

This is not even an ingenious wresting of the text. It is, on the contrary, a very transparent effort to make the text comply with one of those traditions which have accumulated since "the fathers of the Adventist movement" taught. It is a very apparent effort to get away from the clear meaning of what the apostle wrote.

If the chapter from the first to the twelfth verse inclusive, is a matter of religious instruction and applicable to the present conditions, by what sort of partisan and sectarian bias does the writer make the rest of the chapter to appear to be anything different than the obvious meaning of the words imply? The writer hesitates at the thirteenth verse about in this way, using his own words: "Likewise in regard to the pleasure-seeking tendencies, which are now carrying the mass of the people away from the church. This pleasure is not denied the child of God, but he is told to sing psalms."

"Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms."—James 5: 13.

The pleasure to which the writer refers which he states is not denied to the "child of God," would seem to be covered by him in the expression "which are now carrying the mass of the people away from the church." From what he states after in his article, the inference would seem to be fair that the things which pleasure seekers seek after are open to the child of God, "let him sing psalms."

The meaning of this text is obvious. "Is any" of you in mental trouble, or afflicted with sorrows of any sort not involving sickness of body, you are to seek for relief by prayer, communing with God, as a child of God. This is literal and real, and applicable to all.

But when the writer approaches the fourteenth and fifteenth verses he evidently becomes desirous of getting away from a practical application of the apostle's obvious and plain meaning. "Is any sick among you?" What sort of sickness? Evidently sickness of the body. Here is the writer's view:

Sickness is all about us. It has always been so, but now more than ever. The world is growing old, and with this old age come forms of sickness and germ disease unknown to earth's youthful days; and to the sick the inspired writer would give a bit of religious and not medical advice. On two conditions the inspired writer makes a promise. First, that the sick man shall call for the elders of the church. It is not that the elders induce him to call them, he must call them himself. They may read to him and instruct him, but he must do the calling. Second, it must be the prayer of faith, and that faith must be on his part, and of that faith the elders are not to judge. The elders may pray and anoint, and God will judge whether it be the prayer of faith.

So far this writer against the faith and practice of the Saints in giving expression to his view of his own belief on the anointing with oil and the prayer of faith as a healing ordinance, has unwittingly written like one of us would write.

1. Sickness is prevalent.
2. Diseases unknown to us years ago are fastened upon men now.
3. One that is sick must send for the elders.
4. If prayer is offered it must be the prayer of faith.
5. The faith essential to be exercised must be on the part of the sick.
6. The elders may not discriminate whether the sick has or has not faith of the right sort.
7. The elders' part is to pray and anoint.
8. It is the part of God to hear the prayer, take notice whether it is the prayer of faith, and
9. And to answer as his wisdom may direct, the power being his, and his only.

Not many among us could have done this better. But, now comes the diversion and corruption of the text.

These conditions fulfilled, the promise has a three-fold statement. First, the Lord will "save"—not heal—the sick.

"He that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved." That is, by the plan of salvation. The Son of Man came to save that which was lost, according to the plan of salvation. "What must I do to be saved?" That is, how can I obtain salvation? Salvation everywhere means salvation. How then does it become medicine here? It is very plain that God here offers to the sick salvation. Second. "And the Lord shall raise him up." When will God raise men up? "And I will raise him up at the last day." This is resurrection. Third. "If he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." Plainly this is forgiveness. Then what does God promise? Salvation, resurrection, and forgiveness.

If there ever was an attempt to becloud the minds of the believers and to divert the attention of the readers of the writings of James from the truths therein contained, this is one. But it is a clumsy effort.

In an endeavor to throw discredit upon the faith and practice of the Latter Day Saints, this writer distorts the text and injects into it what does not belong there.

1. The writing is that of the Apostle James. The words of the text are the words of James, not the words of God. The writer weaves in a promise of salvation which he qualifies thus, "That is, by the plan of salvation." James was not writing a dissertation on the gospel plan of salvation, but was writing to his "brethren," concerning matters appertaining to their everyday life and conduct. Besides this, put the construction on the passage which this writer does, and it makes far more out of it than Latter Day Saints ever claimed for it. By his construction it offers forgiveness of sins, salvation and resurrection through the anointing with oil and the prayer of faith. The Saints believe that forgiveness of such sins as a sick disciple may have committed is extended to him through the answer of God to his fervent prayer of faith, and by virtue of his observance of the rule referred to by James, just as the word of James states it. But the statement is that of James, and is beyond question, an affirmation of the rule of faith and conduct given by Christ to the disciples. It is in direct harmony with the Lord's command given in Mark 16: 18: "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

There is no promise of salvation, forgiveness of sins, or resurrection from the dead in this direct statement of the Savior. It is a plain statement that the believers shall be followed by the laying on of hands as a means to the end that the sick may recover. The words "the prayer of faith shall save the sick," can mean only recovery from their sickness; a relief from the fatal consequence of disease, a respite from pending death of the body.

This writer seeks still further to wrest the meaning of the text, James 5: 14, 15, by dilating thus:

"Do I deny divine healing? By no means, but it does not appear in this passage till verse sixteen."

Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much. God may heal, but it is conditionally. He will only do it when it is for his glory. The time of universal healing is not yet.

Does James any more mean the healing of the body in verse sixteen than he does in verses fourteen and fifteen? The writer so seems to imply; but why object to prayer and anointing with oil as a medical treatment in verses fourteen and fifteen, and admit prayer to be a medical remedy as found in verse sixteen.

Again: Does this writer mean to be understood as stating that those who are sick and who call for the elders, are not to receive any relief from their physical suffering and distress by the anointing with oil and the praying over them? He seems so to write when he attempts to show that a spiritual or soul salvation only is meant by the words, "the prayer of faith shall save the sick;" and abruptly quotes "He that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved." About as much as to say, He that endureth sickness unto death shall be saved. "That is, by the plan of salvation;" adds this astute expounder of Scripture. There is a whole lot of comfort in such a thought. O, yes, poor, tried, and tempted sick man, believer in the Lord and his power, call for the elders, they will anoint you with oil, as a sort of spiritual chrism, and pray over you the prayer of faith, you being the one who is to have the faith; you will not receive any physical relief from your sickness and suffering, but you will receive salvation ("that is, by the plan of salvation") and be resurrected and receive forgiveness of your sins after you are dead. This brother writing in Our Hope, gives you this exegesis of James 5: 14, 15, and says of it: "It is very plain that God here offers the sick salvation."

Saved from what? James carries the conviction that it is from sickness; the writer states from sins. The well as well as the sick are saved from their sins "by the plan of salvation;" and are offered forgiveness of their sins and the resurrection at the last day. What is the need to offer this to one who has already believed, received, and acted upon the saving conditions of the plan of salvation? James was not writing on the gospel themes but giving direction to the brethren on every-day affairs. It was not a promise made by God that James wrote. It was the understanding that James had of what God through Christ had instituted as a means of giving relief from sickness and pain of the body not of the Spirit.

Again, note, the writer says the one sick must call for the elders, and the prayer must be the prayer of faith, the faith of the one who calls for the elders. And yet James wrote not a word about the sick man engaging in prayer. It is the elders who shall anoint and the elders who shall pray, it is the prayer of the righteous man who prays for his suffering brother that "availeth much." Of what avail is the anointing with oil or the praying over the sick man, if no faith is to be exercised by those elders who anoint and pray? If there is no benefit to accrue to the sick, no relief to follow, why do it?

The Latter Day Saints believe the Savior's enactment stated in Mark sixteenth chapter. They believe that it is the privilege of the sick to call for the elders, whose duty it is to go when called and it is possible for them to do so. They believe that the power by which the sick are healed is subject to the direct supervision of the Lord, and is exercised in accord with his wisdom. That the Lord sends the healing forces at his will, or withholds them at his pleasure. They do not believe that men possess and exert miracle-working power at their own discretion, or will. They believe that here and there in the church, among the believers, there will be some who have received the gift to heal, and to be healed, as stated by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4. They believe it to be the duty of the elders to go when called to the bedside of the sick, anoint them with oil, pray over them, laying hands on them, and then leave the matter and the issue in the hands of the Lord.

It does not destroy their faith that all are not healed, or that some die; they have the promise of Jesus in regard to it, and with that they are content.

That some are not healed to whom the elders administer is freely conceded. Will the writer in Our Hope contend or even assert that all who are treated by the doctors recover? He knows that they do not. He knows that many to whom the most skillful physicians administer die in agony and pain. He knows that there are many placed on the dissecting or emergency table for operations for relief of their ills, who die under the doctors' hands, and many linger for a time and fade away and die. Why do not he and others who find fault with the faith and practice of the Latter Day Saints, but hold to human remedies administered in accord with human direction and wisdom, lose faith in physicians and medicine because all do not recover? Can he give any rational answer to this query? We think not.

We do not know who the lady in Lamoni dying of cancer is. If the writer will inform us we will make an inquiry in regard to her. He leaves the inference that she is a member of the church at Lamoni. Is she?

He further says: "Another home was quarantined under scarlet fever."

Suppose that is true. Whose fault was that? It was done by order of the Board of Health under State law. The Saints are law-abiding and submit to such regulations as are provided as safeguards against the spread of disease.

He says further in regard to those quarantined: "They could have a doctor but would not. They would have the elders but could not. Strange that divine providence has made no provision for such a case."

The Saints are living in the troublous times near the period of the coming of the Savior. They are surrounded by a mass of unbelievers, men like this writer in Our Hope who object to the exercise of their faith, and under a system of laws the result of special legislation. By these laws the Saints with all other citizens are constrained to employ physicians, or run the risk of prosecution, in case death results from sickness. In times of epidemics the elders are often obliged to take this risk, and this writer in Our Hope knows this, or he is too ignorant to write on the subject under consideration.

It is astonishing what a man may learn in "a day." We have been living in Lamoni twenty-one years, have administered by anointing with oil and in praying over the sick in hundreds of instances, and have never known one in which the sick have been left without care and proper nursing. These are especially enjoined on the people of the church.

We are thankful that notwithstanding the attacks of such men as this Elder A. E. Hatch, A. M., who tarried for "the day" in Lamoni, and afterwards wrote his article, the Saints prefer to trust to the words and promise of Jesus Christ than to be beguiled therefrom by the weak sophistry of such men though they may affix "Master of Arts" to their names.

We conclude in the language of the writer himself that "the church is very weak and has no power with God," when it fears to hold to the word in its plainness and has to resort to such sophistry as is shown in this attack.

PAUL'S LETTER TO THE LAODICEANS.

There is in the Church Library an edition of the New Testament which was published in 1602, and contains the New Testament Scriptures in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and German. In this book, after Paul's Epistle to the Colossians, there is a book which does not appear in the Testament as usually published to-day. It is called, "Paul's Epistle to the Laodiceans." It consists of one chapter only, and is as follows, as translated by two of the employees of this office. The translation was made from the German version.

EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE LAODICEANS.

1. Paul, an apostle, not of men, neither through a man, but through Jesus Christ, to the brethren at Laodicea.
2. Grace be with you, and peace, from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ.
3. I thank the Lord Jesus in all my prayers that you are steadfast and persistent in good works, and await the promise of the day of judgment.
4. Do not permit yourselves to be disturbed by any idle talking, which under the appearance of truth ventures to alienate you from the truth of the gospel, which is being preached by me.
5. But God will now grant, that those who are of me may be of good service in the fulfillment of the truth of the gospel, and do the best works, which are fitting to eternal bliss.
6. But now my bonds are loosed, which I suffered for Christ's sake; for which I rejoice in my heart.
7. For I know that this tends toward eternal salvation, which is done through your prayers and through the help and aid of the Holy Spirit.
8. Whether in life or death, Christ is my life and death my joy.
9. And God himself in you will grant mercy to you, that you may have the same love one for another, and be of one accord.
10. Therefore, most beloved ones, as you have heard of the coming of the Lord, accordingly think and act also in the fear of God; in this way you will gain eternal life.

11. For it is God who works in you.

12. And everything which you do, do without sin.

13. And, that which is best and most pleasing, most beloved ones, rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, and guard yourselves against every uncleanness of spirit.

14. Let all your prayers and petitions be open before God and stand firm in the mind and intent of Christ.

15. But everything, whatever is true, chaste, pure, modest, right and loving and pleasing to every one, that do.

16. And what you have heard and received, preserve in your hearts; thus you will have peace.

17. Greet all brethren with a holy kiss.

18. Let all the holy brethren greet you.

19. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

20. See to it, that this epistle be read also in public at Colosso and that you also read the one to the Colossians.

C. A. BUTTERWORTH'S HEALTH BETTER.

The following letter which appeared in the Gospel Standard for July 15, 1902, will be of much interest to our readers, especially those who knew how very ill Bro. Butterworth was at the time he was ordained an apostle by Bro. A. H. Smith:

SOMERVILLE, Victoria.

Dear Editor:—To all inquiring Saints I wish to state that I am gradually improving in general health, and on a fair way to recovery; but it will be some time before I am able to proceed with missionary work. I wish to sincerely thank the Saints for their kind remembrance of me in time of trial, for it is then that we feel the need of sympathy and the prayers of God's people, which are much availing if they walk in harmony with the restored gospel. I was warned that the present trial would be long and hard; and in the darkest hour a voice said, "Be patient and all will be well," which afforded me much peace and comfort during the weary hours. These chastisements which at the time of administration seem very grievous, should be welcomed as messages of love and blessing in disguise; for we read on the sacred page that the Lord chastises "for our profit," and he designs to cleanse and purify as gold purged in the fire these tabernacles of ours, that they may be suitable abodes for the Holy Spirit. Thus we learn that in the midst of affliction God is preparing us for something better, which otherwise we could not have attained. We should then press forward towards the mark of our high calling with this fact before us, that, whether in darkness or in light, in sunshine or storm, "he that overcometh" and "endureth to the end" shall hear the "well done, enter into the joy of thy Lord." The Master's joy will be equally as great if not greater than ours when the gates of the Celestial City shall open wide to admit the conquerors in the great battle of life. Let us watch, fight, and pray, that the entrance may be sure.

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Hannah A. Moffit wrote from Page, North Dakota, July 21: "I ask one and all to pray for me that I may ever be found at the throne of grace and worthy of God's love. I also ask you to pray that my husband and family may obey the gospel in its purity. I feel that 'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light.' I want to say to those who are in doubt as to there being a true and living God, that there is. I feel as sure of it as if I had seen him. It is our unbelief that keeps us in the dark. Let us draw near to God and see what will be the result. If we are humble and sincere God will reveal himself to us. I can see and realize the wonderful power of our Creator. I suffered many things when I was an unbeliever, but I thank my heavenly Father that he spared my life so long and suffered me to see the true light of God. Pray for me, that by my examples others may be blessed."

Bro. W. A. Smith, Akron, Iowa, August 4: "Bro. J. C. Crabb and myself are holding meetings at this place in the gospel tent. Commenced Friday night. We have fair audiences and interest. Please remember us before our heavenly Father. When we close here we expect to go to Sioux City to look after the work there."

Bro. J. F. Curtis, Pueblo, Colorado, the 31st ult.: "We are having good success with the tent in this place. Good crowds and good interest, and we have enjoyed good liberty in presenting the word. Bro. C. E. Willey and I are laboring together."

Osra J. Hawn wrote from Carsonville, Michigan, July 31: "I am with the tent at McGregor. Splendid interest. I baptized four Sunday, making seven here since our conference in June. Several more are ready. I am feeling splendid in the work."

Bro. John Hawley writing from his home, Ravenwood, Missouri, August 1: "Bro. Joseph; you may release me from missionary labors. I can do all I am able to do in my district. I do not think I will take any more missions till the millennium, and by that time I hope to be all right. Some elders think as soon as they die, they go to preaching to the spirits in prison; but I was never caught on that tin hook. I look for everything to move off right if we do right."

Joseph Ferris of Oakland, California, says of "Book of Mormon Talks": "I have carefully read 'Book of Mormon Talks' and I think that it is simply grand. It proves the divinity of the Book of Mormon to perfection."

J. B. Roush wrote from Denver, Colorado, August 6: "Just arrived at home last night from a trip to Western Colorado. Was privileged to attend the reunion at Delta the 25th to 27th and enjoyed a pleasant season with the Saints there. Bro. J. M. Stubbart and I did the preaching for them. They decided to hold another reunion next year. Last Sunday, with the assistance of Bro. Stubbart, we organized a branch at Fruita, to be known as the Fruita Branch. Bro. David B. Tomlinson was chosen to preside, with Bro. Alfred A. Fausett as priest and Sr. Clara Snook clerk. The branch has about twenty members to start with; Bro. Stubbart baptized three there a few days ago. Some others are about ready to unite with the church at that place. This makes four branches we have organized in this mission since the first of January."

Bro. F. M. Cooper wrote from Lyons, Wisconsin, August 7: "I preached here twice last Sunday, and every other evening so far this week to increasing congregations. Go to East Delavan for Sunday, then return to Illinois. I am alone in the ministerial work at this time. Am anxious for the success of the Lord's work everywhere."

Under date of August 3, James Powers wrote from Thornville, Michigan: "The HERALD is a welcome visitor at my home. Often when I have been in clouds the HERALD has revealed new light to my soul. The branch of which I am a member has become disorganized until we have not an officer to preside over us. Paul tells us to obey those who rule over us, but we are void of the ruler to obey in the Flint Branch. The apostle said to be edified and perfected by the rulers. The people in Flint are beginning to seek the truth, and the condition of the branch there should receive consideration. The Book of Mormon is just as true as gospel. It teaches the same as the Bible, and we need both to convince both Jew and Gentile. Oh, if the people would only read the book and judge for themselves, and not let others judge for them."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

J. A. Gunsolley, secretary of the Board of Publication will represent the HERALD Publishing House at the reunions at Roscoe, Missouri, and Angola, Kansas. He will have a good line of books as well as the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Hope subscription lists.

The Associate Editor enjoyed a very pleasant sojourn with the Saints of Council Bluffs, Sunday, August 3. He derived benefit from his visit, and hopes the benefit was mutual.

One of Iowa's best educators, Doctor William M. Beardshear, died on August 5. He was president of Iowa State College, at Ames, Iowa, and to his tireless efforts in behalf of the school it owes to a large extent its present prosperous condition. Doctor Beardshear was a comparatively young man, apparently having many years of usefulness before him. His death therefore is to be deplored.

In our last issue the little article on page 783 entitled "Mosquito Extermination" should have been credited to the Country Life in America.

Sr. Mamie A. Allen, a granddaughter of Father Whitehead, deceased, and who for many years was a resident of Lamoni and a teacher in the public schools for a number of years, was married July 30 to Mr. J. W. Springer. The newly-married couple will be "at home" after September 1, Tegucigalpa, Central America, as we learn by the announcement cards sent out by Bro. and Sr. Charles H. Barrows, at whose home they were married. Sr. Barrows is a sister of the bride. Mr. and Sr. Springer have the good wishes and congratulations of the HERALD.

In the Joplin Daily Globe, of Joplin, Missouri, for July 27, there appeared an article by L. M. Davis, under the heading of "Mormon Missionaries at Work Endeavoring to make Converts in many Counties in Missouri." The article describes somewhat of the Utah elders, and tells the readers that the Book of Mormon "was written by Joseph Smith in 1828, and is a corrupt version of Spalding's 'The Manuscript Lost.'" In the issue of the Globe for August 3 M. S. Frick, in an article entitled "Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is not Connected with the Polygamous Mormons, but is in Fact an Enemy to that Sect," corrects some of the errors made by the first article, and clearly points out the differences between us and the Utah people. It is well that Bro. Frick has thus clearly set forth our position, for we have a goodly representation in and around Joplin.

THE RESURRECTION.

While standing by my father's bier, gazing into that cold, cold face upon which death in his passing had photographed a pleasing smile, Acts 26:8 came rushing into mind when Paul demanded, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" With your permission I desire to go upon record in a few thoughts intensified by the sad occasion.

Concerning the spirits of Saints who have departed or may depart this life we suffer little or no distress. The spirit of the gospel has taught us they are in the paradise of God in close proximity with the Savior "waiting the redemption of their bodies." What a thought indeed! We gaze and wonder. Soon to be committed to the dark and lonesome grave. The fingers of decay will soon strip that face of its beauty. That noble manhood will go into corruption and soon be dissolved into dust. We can not help shedding tears. We remember the Master wept at Lazarus' tomb. In a sense we regret that it should be "appointed unto all men once to die." God set it as a penalty, and yet we can not rejoice in it. Our faith being exercised, relieves us of our fears concerning the spirits of saints. That same faith should with equal certainty dispel our grief and fears in regard to the body; for, though apparently destroyed, the word is, "together with my dead body shall they arise." The Lord's love to his saints is a love toward their entire manhood. He chose them, not as disembodied spirits, but as men and women arrayed in flesh and bones—even the hairs of the head are numbered. He assumed our perfect manhood, and in this he gave evidence of his affinity to our physical manhood as well as to our spiritual. If Jesus only emancipates the spirit it would seem he has not destroyed all the works of the evil one. Death should not have a solitary trophy left in the dismal grave, or it could not be said with consistency, "Oh, grave, where is thy victory?"

Surely it is a joy to think Christ through the resurrection will redeem man in his entirety and bring about the salvation of body and spirit to glorify his holy name. Yea, this very body which has been a clog and hindrance to the spirit and an arch-rebel against the sovereignty of Christ in so many ways, shall yield him homage with voice and brain, with hand, and ear, and eye. This is the hope of the saint, and we rejoice in it, in a great measure. But oh, the flood of difficulties that come sweeping on and deluge the mortal mind, and we oftentimes cry, "Is it true?" Can it be "possible?" At such times our text is exceedingly needful indeed: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

No doubt they reasoned then as we do now, that there is no analogy in nature; absolutely so; or so nearly that it is a safe argument to build upon. There are similies, things that we can compare in a great measure, but no true analogy, we think. It is said that sleep is the analogy of death and our waking is a sort of resurrection. The figure is fairly good, but far from being perfect, for in sleep there is still life and is manifest to the man himself in dream, and all who look upon the sleeper may see him breathe or feel the heart beat. In real death there is no pulse, no sign of life, nor does the body remain intact as does that of the sleeper. Imagine a body ground to atoms and mingled with dust, and then if it could awaken at your call it would be an analogy. But a mere sleep from which one may be startled, while it is an excellent comparison, is to my mind far from a true type of the resurrection.

We hear frequently mentioned the development of the insect as a striking analogy, the larva, the man, and the butterfly, the simile of the resurrection. I find no fault with the picture. It is instructive and interesting. But it is not good argument or logical. Take up the larva, and in it you will find the perfect creature only in a dormant condition. But crush it to atoms, dry up all its life juices, bruise it into dust and cast it to the four winds; or utterly dissolve it by chemical process, then call it back into a beautiful butterfly, and you would have seen a true analogy of the resurrection.

Nor is the analogy of the seed sown much more conclusive. Paul uses it as an apt type and the emblem of death. "The seed is not quickened except it die," but death is the dissolution of an organization into its original particles or elements. The seed begins its dissolution, falls back from its organization into its own elements, but a life germ is left and the crumbling organization becomes its food from which it builds and grows. Who can discover a life germ in the corpse? Where in the putrid body is it? Is it in the brain? The brain is almost the first to disappear. The skull becomes empty and void. Is it in the heart? That also has a very brief duration, much more so than the bones. Not even a microscope could detect any vitality in the disinterred body or dust or its ashes. Think of those antediluvians buried before the flood, or swept away by it! Surely the wonder increases when we try to think in what strange places the particles of those bodies may be in. Some left in deep ravines where no hand could reach; or washed away by the swell of tides into the deep caverns of earth; or lying on the pathless desert where only the vulture's eye can see; or buried under mountains of rock. In fact, where are not man's remains? Who can point out a spot on earth where the crumbling dust of Adam's sons is not? Is there a wind that blows but what is whirling along particles of what once was human? Is there a wave that breaks upon the ocean's shore but what holds in solution some relic of man? Moreover, men have been eaten by wild beasts; devoured by fire; eaten by fishes, and relished by men. Think how widely are scattered the atoms that once built up human forms, scattered as wide as the poles of earth are asunder, one particle blowing across the Great American Desert, another floating on the wild Pacific Sea. Where is the body of Paul, or of Festus who sent him to Rome, or of the emperor who condemned him to die? Think of the myriads that have been buried in China, a country swarming with men and for six thousand years the soil has fattened from human bodies. Think of the millions that have perished from plague, earthquake, famine, and war. They lie beneath every tree, enriching the soils of every clime, washed by the tides of every ocean.

And yet, O wonderful miracle! "Thy dead men shall live." Not one of woman-born but must stand again on earth. "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." "Bone shall come to his fellow bone." "This is the whole house of Israel." "They shall stand up a mighty army," "and be made kings and priests and reign on the earth." Surely it wears the aspect of the "incredible."

The resurrection stands alone. There is no analogy for it and but little written that can be brought to bear upon it save the scriptural texts that must be taken for granted. Grant a God, and no difficulties remain. "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" The Infinite; the Almighty; the Creator of all things. Grant that he is, and is omnipotent, and has said the dead shall rise—impossibilities and incredulity banish at once. It is but little use to run to reason for weapons against unbelief. We must have faith in God. Man's word is not the ultimatum, neither is God's word only true when finite reason approves of it. Is God's word only to be taken when we can see for ourselves and therefore no need of revelation at all? One word from God outweighs to us a library of human lore. God has said it! The dead shall arise, therefore, a thing not incredible to us. Make it more and more mysterious and harder for reason to compass, yet we rejoice in believing great things concerning a great God.

When Paul uttered those words he was talking to a Jew. He said, "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest." Paul knew Agrippa had the testimony of Job, of David, of Isaiah, of Daniel, and of Hosea. God had fully and plainly promised in the Old Testament a resurrection of the body, and that fact should be quite enough, and Paul knew it was good reasoning for Agrippa, if the Lord had said it, it should not longer be counted a thing incredible that God could raise men from the dead. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, to the resurrection of life," etc. There are many things we can not explain, yet we believe. Who in the days of packhorses and camel caravans could have understood flashing a message across the sea from England to America? It is reported of natives of tropics, when told water will freeze solid, hard as stone, so men and animals could walk on it, mountains in open seas, that they were astounded. To telegraph without wires; to speak to friends by voice hundreds of miles away, would have been as hard to understand a thousand years ago as the resurrection is now. Everything is wonderful until we become used to it. After the resurrection we shall regard it as only a divine display of God-power, as many other things now. No doubt we will wonder at God's power as much in the resurrection then as we do in his creation and providences now. We shall grow accustomed to our new work as knowledge increases with eternal days. We were only born but yesterday. What a miracle! Who can explain it? We know but little yet. God's works require more than three-score and ten to comprehend and understand the eternal ages. That which astounds us now will have become a familiar theme of praise.

The gospel and doctrine of the resurrection are presented to men to put a division between the good and the bad. "He that is of God heareth God's words." "My sheep hear my voice and follow me." Then the sheep are known by their believing in what God hath said. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Then what is there in reality to weep for in this death? Better cheer our hearts in prospect of our own departure, for we too must soon pass away. There is no discharge in this war. Let us meet death as a passing incident, for it is not death but the resurrection to which we aspire through the gospel of Christ.

Then come, old age; come, the faltering step or trembling hand; come, changed form with feeble mind; come, all the forces that go to make up the last great change! We feel secure in our gospel faith and the blessed Spirit that takes of the things of God and reveals them to us. We do not account it an incredible thing that God should raise the dead. Good-bye, dear father. We shall meet again.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Having removed the secular objection before introducing proof on that line, it becomes necessary next to answer the supposed scriptural objections before giving the proofs on that line. If we would see clearly we must keep our windows clear of rubbish and dust. Also if we shall be able to help the reader to see this matter clearly he must lay aside all prejudice, for no man can see clearly through the windows of the soul with a biased mind. We are well aware that proof would be of little worth to those who look through objections based on the biased stories of their fathers.

It seems to the writer that one church accepts a part of the Bible and are prejudiced against another church who accepts another part of the good old book, and that most people are guilty of this offense without realizing it. More especially is this true when Joseph Smith and his doctrine are up for consideration. We can not blame people for being prejudiced, seeing so much has been said on the other side; but we hope all who see these lines will lay aside that evil and read and investigate for themselves.

The Latter Day Saints have claimed that few men have honestly investigated their faith prayerfully who did not admire it for its purity. On the contrary, others have examined it with a feeling of hatred and have seen only what to them seemed error. The reason of this failure to see correctly was because the things of God are only seen by the Spirit of God and their feelings of hatred excluded that Spirit from their hearts. We shall always feel that those who refuse to examine the facts concerning Mr. Smith, if they have time and opportunity to do so, are really breaking one of the commandments of God which we set at the head of this article and which we now repeat:

"Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Another part of the words which we have selected as being appropriate to our position is:

"Despise not prophesyings."

This is as much a commandment of God as the rest of the text, and being in the New Testament and written to the followers of Christ is applicable to all who profess to be his followers to-day. If the apostle saw into our time, it is no wonder that he wrote this commandment. It seems that the most despised in the world to-day are those who claim divine help and guidance. There are doubtless few in the various Protestant churches who could truly say that they do not despise prophesyings. For the benefit of those few and as many others that desire to keep all the commands of our heavenly Father, we offer the following points necessary in search for truth:

While God expects us to use all the reason we possess and as much more as we can implore him to give us, yet we must not set our judgment against his in matters we do not understand. We realize this fact in all the walks of this present life. One example, for instance: We do not know how it is that food taken into our stomachs becomes flesh,—live flesh, and bone, and blood, and brain,—and yet we know it is so. We do not understand it, and yet we must conform to this law of nature or we can not live. So also in the gospel there may be many things that we do not fully understand, and yet it would be the essence of folly for the creature to criticise the Creator. For us of the earth to seek to change the laws of Him who created this world as well as every other is as the raving of mad men. God has said, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

Surely the great Master Mind of the universe knows that which is best, and as surely would give us only that which is best. It is the height of wisdom on our part to obey our heavenly Father, therefore, it is best for children to obey their earthly parents, and for the same reason. Seeing that we know so little, and seeing that our thoughts and ways are not as God's it is not wonderful that if God has a prophet or prophets in the world to-day that they should be despised. Indeed that is one sign of their genuineness, as we have written before. The Devil would of course oppose that which is so clearly in opposition to his ways. Surely if unpopularity is one sign of a true prophet, Joseph Smith has a bright start in the right direction.

When he was arrested the last time, on a false charge as every one knew, he was aware his end had come though he had been in places many times more dangerous; and though he had the promise of the governor to protect him till the trial was over, and though many companies of the State militia were there for that purpose, yet, when he departed under a strong guard for the place of trial, which proved to be only a place of slaughter, he bade his family good-bye mid sobs and tears, telling them that he was "going like a lamb to the slaughter" and that he "would not see them again in the flesh." This prophecy was literally fulfilled. He and his brother were killed by a mob, a very unlikely thing, seeing he had such promise and preparation from the governor for his protection. He went to the slaughter willingly, and in that act a man with only half an eye can see that he was not an impostor—was not a hypocrite. He believed what he taught, and gave his blood to seal his testimony that God was always the same and willing to speak and direct his children in all ages alike.

Some may wish to ask, Do you really believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God? We answer this question, No, and Yes.

We do not think he was perfect.

We do not think he was infallible.

We do not think he was inspired at all times.

We do not think he was more than a man.

We do not think he was different than other prophets.

Indeed we do not think that any of the prophets of old were perfect, infallible, continually inspired, nor more than mortal men. So our answer depends on the understanding of the question as to what he thinks a prophet is. Allow us to explain our meaning and we say, we believe he was inspired at times of the Holy Ghost to reveal the mind of God. In this light we say, Yes! With the popular meaning of the word prophet, we say, No! But in saying, Yes, it must be understood that God is unchangeable, so, also, is the gospel; so that any prophet to-day must be in harmony with God's word. For this reason the church holds the right to examine all communications purporting to come from God before they could be accepted as true. Instead of being an enviable position (as some might imagine), a position where he could lead and direct at will, or, as said by General John Eaton, "being prophet was entitled to all obedience;" instead of all this it is really the opposite.

We could not, therefore, follow Joseph Smith or any other man any further than he or they followed Jesus Christ.

Those acquainted with the true Latter Day Saints know that they make the gospel the law to govern the church, and not the mind of any man.

Let us next proceed to answer some of the leading objections against the possibility of prophets in this present age of the world. In doing so we wish to be fair with our opponents and treat their objections kindly and honestly.

One may wish to ask, Is it not contrary to the Bible to expect prophets now? We answer, No, positively no! for,

God is just the same to-day as he was anciently.

His ear is not dull.

His mouth is not dumb.

His love for man is not abated.

He loves his younger children as much as the older ones.

His Spirit will have the same effect on man to-day as of old.

We can not say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost—by revelation.

To receive the testimony of Jesus is to receive the spirit of prophecy, for so an angel has declared. (Rev. 19: 10.)

If we do not have this testimony, if we do not know that Jesus is the Christ, we have no promise of eternal life, for Jesus has said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—St. John 17: 3.

In harmony with this Paul said, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Rom. 8: 9.

Then if we must know that Jesus is the Christ, and if we can not know it only by the Holy Ghost, which is the Spirit of revelation, then in what light do we stand if we reject present revelation?

By these texts it will be seen that not only Joseph Smith, but every man and woman who is in possession of the Holy Ghost, could receive testimony—revelation from heaven—bearing witness to their spirits that they are children of God. That would be present revelation in the truest sense of that term.

We will now prove that it is not only in harmony with the Bible to have prophets to reveal the will of God to the church to-day, but that to believe otherwise would place us out of harmony with that book, and out of favor with God.

We have already answered in part the statement that there were to be "no more prophets after John the Baptist," and in further proof we will quote St. John 16: 13: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come." We repeat the latter clause, "he will show you things to come."

Surely, if the Spirit was to show things to come it would make prophets of those who were thus blessed! Not that they could prophesy when they pleased (no man ever did that), but only when God pleased; i. e., only when God revealed to them things to come. Unless those who urge the above objection can prove that the Spirit of truth was never given after the days of John the Baptist, their case is lost. And if professed Christians to-day believe that the Spirit of truth is for them they can not escape the conclusion, that it will do its work according to the Savior's promise; that is, "will show things to come,"

Again we have in Acts 21: 9, 10 the following: "And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy. And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named Agabus."

Nothing could be more plain than the fact shown in this text that there were prophets in the church of Jesus Christ long after the death of John the Baptist. But to make the matter doubly plain and sure, we will refer to the advice of an early Christian prophet in 1 Corinthians 14: 31: "For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted."

It would seem from these texts that prophets really began in earnest when Christ came, or, rather, when the Holy Ghost came. If, as Peter said. "Holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," then why not men who receive that Holy Ghost in the Christian age, even though that age reaches to our day, be moved to prophesy as well as those of old? Indeed, we read in Acts 19: 6, that such was the case: "And when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."

Surely no one, after taking the second thought, will still insist that prophets ended with John the Baptist. Such thought is squarely against both the Bible and history. From Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 5, chapter 7, page 175, who wrote the history of the early Christian church from the birth of Christ until his time A. D. 324, we copy the following: "Others have the knowledge of things to come, as also visions and prophetic communications; others heal the sick by the imposition of hands, and restore them to health. . . . 'As we hear many of the brethren in the church who have prophetic gifts, and who speak in all tongues through the Spirit, and who also bring to light the secret things of men for their benefit, and do explain the mysteries of God.' These gifts of different kinds also continued with those that were worthy until the times mentioned."

This was written of the time between A. D. 161 and 180. From this it will be seen that there were prophets in the church long after John the Baptist, long after the ascension of Jesus, and long after the death of the first apostles. In fact it was the intention of God that they should be in the church until the end of time or "until we all come to the unity of the faith," as written by Paul in Ephesians 4: 8, 11-13: "When he ascended up on high, . . . he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, [saints were not infallible then] for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith."

Another objection is: "We have the word of God and therefore we do not need prophets now."

Oh! no; that is a wrong conclusion as well as a mistaken statement; besides, that would make God changeable. We have in the Bible only a history of the word of God, not the word itself. What we need now is the word of God direct to us. This we could not have if there were no prophets or revelations now. Because some one has written what God has said in the past, even though they wrote by inspiration, it does not necessarily follow that we were to hear no more from him. If so, it robs God of his attribute of love, makes him changeable, and forbids the full operation of the Holy Ghost. To say that we do not need prophets now is purely an assertion without divine sanction. The truth of the matter is that though we now have the New Testament we are worse off than the primitive Christians, in some things at least, for we do not agree on its meaning. In case of disagreement, why may not God be allowed to interpret his own word? Why may he not further explain what was perhaps imperfectly written or imperfectly translated of what he has said in former ages? or restore what has been lost? Many in the world, though wanting to be Christians, are puzzled to know which one of all the churches is right in its interpretation of the plan of salvation. Why may not God speak and tell them which? Positively no two churches can differ and both be right. Certainly if there was ever a time when there was need of a prophet it is now. So the statement that we need no more prophets, because we have the Bible, is erroneous and unreasonable.

The Scriptures show that there were to be prophets in our day, in proof of which we refer the reader to Joel 2: 28: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions."

The Prophet Joel had been speaking of Palestine, and had predicted that a curse of drought would rest upon it for many years, but that the curse would be removed and afterward, "the former and latter rains would be restored," the land would again yield as in former times, and their sons and daughters would prophesy. This prophecy has been fulfilled in the century just closed since 1852. In our father's boyhood days, that land was still a wilderness, parched and dry; even the Arab scarcely pitched his tent there. To-day it is indeed "blossoming as a rose," so much so, that the Jews who have recently gathered again on their fatherland, are just on the eve of establishing a government of their own as in former times. The following will prove our statement correct:

Eighteen centuries of war, ruin, and neglect, have passed over it. Its valleys have been cropped for ages without the least attempt at fertilization. Its terraced walls have been allowed to crumble, and its soil has washed down its ravines, leaving the hillsides rocky and sterile. Its trees have been cut down and never replaced. Its fields have been desolate. Its structures pillaged and all its improvements ruthlessly destroyed. A land of ruins without man or beast. Everywhere on plain or mountain, in rocky desert, or on beetling cliff, the spoiler's hand has rested.—McClintock and Strong's Ency., Art. Palestine.

From the Chicago Record of June 14, 1895, we copy the following under the heading

CHANGES IN THE HOLY LAND.

The history of nations has in the past been much affected by climatic changes, and in turn climatic changes have almost invariably been brought about through man's agency. Compare the once fertile Palestine in the time of Solomon with the arid, treeless Palestine of to-day; or the once beautiful Persia, in the time of Cyrus, with the present hot and sterile Persia; and the Messopotamian Valley when it supported the vast population of Assyria and Babylonia, with the sunburnt plains and scenes of ruin and desolation there to-day. Nowhere on the globe was there a richer alluvium than in the valley of the lower Euphrates—a spot which was the cradle of the human race, and where for long centuries, to within perhaps a thousand years ago, the soil yielded abundance for the wants of the vast populations. But now mark the change. When Babylon was at the zenith of its power and was the pride of Chaldees' excellency, Isaiah pronounced the following prophecy: And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' pride, shall be as Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited from generation to generation: neither shall the Arab pitch his tent there; neither shall shepherds make their flocks to lie down there; and their house shall be full of doleful creatures; and ostriches shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And wolves shall cry in their castles and jackals in the pleasant palaces, and her time is near to come and her days shall not be prolonged. And I will sweep her with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts.

For a thousand years or more this prophecy has been literally fulfilled.

Of the Holy land Isaiah has said:

Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briars; [margin; burning] yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city: because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks; until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest.—Isaiah 32: 13-15.

Notice that the "for ever" was to end when the "Spirit should be poured out from on high." This prophecy certainly has been fulfilled in our day, as all who are acquainted with the past know full well. But Joel was speaking of a latter time—of a time when this curse should be removed and the "wilderness be a fruitful field." He saw what should be after all this.

Let us determine further from history something of this curse, its removal and the restoration of the former and latter rain. The above-quoted article from the Chicago Record speaks more particularly of Babylon and Persia and that they are yet parched and dry, but says little of Palestine of to-day and that little seems to be an oversight, for Palestine has recently, it is said, become more fertile than California. This seems wonderful that amid all that arid expanse of country one little section should again become a "fruitful field," and the vast surrounding country continue under the curse. Yet, so it is, and so it was prophesied.

From "The Truth Defended" by Heman C. Smith, we quote the following extract of a sermon preached in Birmingham, England, May 29, 1897, by Reverend G. J. Emanuel:

Six hundred and thirty years ago, Nachmanides, a name illustrious in Jewish literature, went to the Holy Land at the age of seventy years, and this is how he describes Palestine and Jerusalem: "Great is the solitude and great the wastes, and to characterize it in short, the more sacred the places, the greater their desolation. Jerusalem is more desolate than the rest of the country. In all the city there is but one resident inhabitant, a poor dyer, persecuted, oppressed, and despised. At his house gather great and small, when they can get the Ten Men (Minyan). They are wretched folk without occupation and trade, pilgrims and beggars, though the fruit of the land is still magnificent and the harvests rich. It indeed is still a blessed country, flowing with milk and honey. Oh! I am the man who has seen affliction (Lamentations 3:1). I am banished from my table, far removed from friend and kinsman, and too long is the distance to meet again. I have left my family, I have forsaken my house. There, with my sons and daughters, and with the sweet and dear grandchildren, whom I have brought up on my knees, I left also my soul. My heart and my eyes will dwell with them for ever. But the loss of all these is compensated by having now the joy of being a day in thy courts, O Jerusalem! visiting the ruins of thy temple and crying over thy ruined sanctuary. There I caress thy stones, I fondle thy dust, I weep over thy ruins. May he who has permitted us to see Jerusalem in her desertion bless us to behold her again built up and restored when the glory of the Lord shall return to her."

So spake Nachmanides in the year 5027. We are now in the year 5657. How different is the sight which now greets the eye in Jerusalem. Nachmanides found but one of our race permanently residing there. There are this day many thousands. In the house of that one man public prayers were said when the Ten could be got together. Now synagogues great and small abound. Shall we then not believe that Zion will be rebuilt in the sense that the land of our fathers shall be our land again. . . .

If we want our faith stimulated, if we would see actual steps taken towards the restoration of our people to their old home, we must go away from the holy cities—Jerusalem, Hebron, Safed, Tiberias. We must leave the cities and go to the land. There is vitality there, and work and hope. There can be seen schools, industries, colonies. A mile outside the Jaffa gate at Jerusalem is the school presided over by Nissim Behar. The boys learn languages, but also carpentering, cabinet-making, metal work, coach-making. There they make or repair all manner of machines, pumps, coffee and flour mills, sewing and weighing machines, and to show you that civilization is making way in Palestine, bicycles too. The pupils of this school find employment all over the East. Near the city of Jaffa is an agricultural school "Mikveh Israel" (the Hope of Israel), founded by Charles Netter twenty-seven years ago. There, besides languages, mathematics, and chemistry, the lads learn agriculture, they grow oranges, vines, fruits, corn. They make their own wine, most excellent, and make their own barrels. Fifty of the past pupils are officers in various colonies; fifty are proprietors of their own lands. On the colonies of Baron Rothschild and those recently established by the Chovevi Zion Associations many hundreds. I shall not exaggerate if I say thousands, are working, growing corn and all fruits, making wine in large quantities, cultivating mulberry-trees, rearing silkworms, and spinning silk, manufacturing perfumes. In addition to these large colonies actually established, tracts of land are held by Baron Rothschild which gradually will be brought under cultivation. Shall we then not hope and believe?

When solitary pilgrims traveled there, to kiss the stones, to embrace the dust and to die, our people living then, if living it could be called, in hourly danger of death, believed that Palestine would again be peopled by the race of Israel! Shall we then doubt, we who live in freedom, respected, prosperous, able at our ease to go, as pleasure-seekers, and see for ourselves, and to behold with rejoicing the work of restoration well begun, and waiting only our united help to increase it and make it more successful. O brethren! the thoughtful and the religious of all nations believe that the land of Israel is destined to be Israel's again. Are we only to doubt, and question, and deny? We all spend so much on ourselves, we all waste so much, shall we not spare something for this good work? If the tens of thousands of our race, all the world over, who enjoy every luxury, if the hundreds of thousands who are self-supporting and have something to spare would combine, it would not be long before the land of Israel would be giving sustenance to thousands of Jewish agriculturalists, living as in times of yore, each man under his own vine and his own fig-tree. Understand me. With the united help of Israelites, Palestine will in time be filled with flourishing communities of our people, no longer massed in cities, no longer recipients of charitable gifts, but spread over the land, a brave, sturdy body of peasant agriculturalists, feeding their flocks, cultivating their fields, tending their vineyards, gathering in their fruits, and prosperous, contented, happy. This will be. God has said it. "The land is not sold in perpetuity. The land is mine, and I have given it to the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."—Palestina, for June, 1897.

We also give the following quotation from "The Truth Defended" taken from Palestina for September, 1897, in describing the "Judaean-Palestinian Exhibition at Hamburg." It says:

The exhibition was opened with much solemnity on the 29th of June, amidst the concourse of a number of distinguished guests, including representatives of the general exhibition, the promoters of the enterprise, the leaders of the Jewish congregation, as also representatives of the local press. The visitors, who minutely inspected the exhibits, were conducted over the place by the members of the committee, Mr. Glucksmann, late a pupil of the agricultural school at Jaffa, supplying the necessary explanations. Every guest received a copy of Mr. Bambus's interesting pamphlet on "the rise and present condition of the Jewish villages in Palestine."

The exhibition was opened to the public at one o'clock, and the whole afternoon and evening streams of visitors poured in.

The exhibition presents a splendid view. The entrance to the building forms the representation of a colonist's cottage. On passing, the visitor is surprised by the view of a diorama, showing in the foreground a street of one of the colonies, in the background a portion of Jerusalem; palm-trees, olive-trees, orange-trees, almond-trees, and pomegranates appear in full bloom. The space to the right is occupied by an exhibition of cotton textures, manufactured by the pupils of the agricultural school at Jaffa; by silkworm-cocoons, silks, carpets, and a splendid array of carvings in olive and cedarwood. The left is reserved for the exhibition of all sorts of field produce, as wheat, barley, sesame, durrah, lupines, peas, beans, lentils, and several varieties of excellent potatoes. Lower down, there are samples of oranges, honey, olive oil, eau-de-cologne, various sorts of wine, grapes, liquors, jams, etc. It was impossible to exhibit young vines, for reason, that there exists, as yet, no convention with Turkey in regard to precautionary measures against phylloxera. The growth of asparagus was, in the Jewish colonies, only commenced four years ago; yet, the samples prove a careful treatment, and promise good results for the future.

Most interesting are the above-mentioned large trees. Mr. Glucksmann, on leaving Jaffa on the 16th of May, took with him twenty-four trees from the Jewish villages of Rishon L'Zion and Ekron. On being shipped, a splendid olive-tree unfortunately fell into the sea. The trees were first transported to Alexandria, where they had to remain for some time, till they were despatched to Hamburg by the steamer Rhodos. When they were still in Alexandria, a large concourse of people assembled at the harbor every day for the purpose of admiring them. They suffered, of course, somewhat during their transit from the colonies to the coast, the shipping at Jaffa, and the reshipping at Alexandria, as also from sea-water. But Mr. Glucksmann's precautions and constant care triumphed over all difficulties. The pomegranate, ethrog (citron), and pineapple-trees are in full bloom, the olive, jucca, orange, and palm-trees show a beautiful and fresh green foliage. The local press is profuse in their praises of this side-show, by which, they say, the horticultural exhibition has gained a most interesting feature.

The following published in 1853 will also illustrate the hand of God upon this land:

I know not whether you are aware of the fact, but it is one that is fully authenticated, that the "latter rain" returned last year to Mount Zion—a rain that had been withheld, so far as our information goes, ever since the dispersion of the people. And he who has brought back the "latter rain" in its season, will also give the "former rain" in its season; and these returning showers of earthly blessings are the harbingers of returning showers of spiritual benediction from on high.—Reverend Hugh Stowel, in Scottish Presbyterian Magazine, 1853; see also Zion's Ensign, December 30, 1897.

The above will show when the first rain fell, as stated in the Record, "in a thousand years."

In D. A. Randall's "Handwriting of God," page 19, occurs his introduction to Doctor Barclay of the Disciple Church, missionary to the land of Palestine, and resident of Jerusalem twenty years, but resident at Jaffa at the time of Randall's visit:

"The country about Jaffa is certainly a most delightful one. Extensive plains, covered with luxuriant vegetation, stretched along the shore of the sea, and far into the interior. Large orange groves were just yielding their luxuriant harvest of golden-colored fruit. Such oranges I had never before seen, and had no idea they ever grew to such great size. The ground was dotted with flowers of every hue, and the air was vocal with the music of birds."—"Book Unsealed," p. 23.

From the Literary Digest, as published in the SAINTS' HERALD for May 1, 1896, we clip the following:

The attempts to restore the glory of Palestine and to rebuild within its limits a Jewish nation are not making as much noise in the world as formerly, but they are steadily proceeding none the less. A number of colonies have been planted there, and they even have an organ published in Jerusalem. This organ, Mich Foh Merez Israel, publishes accounts of the progress of colonists, and in a recent number gives details which are of considerable interest. We translate as follows:

"The number of Jewish laborers in the colony of Sichron Jacob, ten miles from Haifa, is seventy-one. Of these fifty-one are German-speaking Jews and the remainder Spanish Jews and Jews from Gemen. As to their nationalities fifteen are natives, twelve are from Roumania, and the rest come from Russia. Twenty of the total number have families, the others are unmarried. Most of these laborers migrated to Palestine eight years ago, and at that time their yearly income was derived as follows:

2 received 300 francs.	1 received 630 francs.
1 " 350 "	1 " 659 "
1 " 400 "	2 " 700 "
15 " 450 "	7 " 720 "
27 " 500 "	2 " 900 "
21 " 600 "

Ten, also, had from three hundred to one thousand francs in cash. Five were owners of real estate. The number of the colonists [other than laborers] in this settlement is sixty-two, and all of these have families. The monthly aid received by each person from the administration of Baron Edmund de Rothschild is twelve francs per head; those who bring their grapes to the wine distillery receive fourteen francs per person. The vintage of Sichron Jacob for 1894 yielded

Indian grapes.....	10,797 kilograms.
Arabian grapes, white.....	169,278 "
Arabian grapes, black.....	23,948 "
Various.....	40,540 "
	234,558 "

"These grapes yielded 138,000 liters of wine. The average harvest of each colonist was 8,000 kilograms of grapes, and there were some who brought 20,000 kilograms to the distillery. The wine is sold at three francs per ten liters.

"The school of one hundred pupils has five classes.

"There are nineteen persons in the colony of Em al Gamel, and in Shayj eighteen are to be found. The aid they receive under the Baron's administration amounts to thirty-six francs per family.

"Good news comes from Upper Galilee, where the silk industry is progressing and affords steady work to fifty people, besides giving work to many families in Zefath, for learning how to weave is acquired in a short time. In order to get water-power to the manufacturers, two brooks are going to be connected.

"The condition of the colonists in Meshmor Hajarden [the Watch on the Jordan] is very bad, and as they are unable to pay the Arabs for watching, the stealing [by the Arabs] goes on as before. In the Gedera [Fence] colony, between Ramla and Jerusalem, the settlers have begun to produce cognac from the grapes and the prospect is good.

"The government has allowed the American Shovj Zion [Returners to Zion] Society to colonize its members in the Holy Land."

Having introduced the above disinterested witness, we will now make the application of Joel's prophecy; but before doing so let us quote the text again and also give the contexts so there will be no room for just complaint:

Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed. And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy. Your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions.

This prophecy speaks plainly that "afterward," after the land began to yield as in former times, then their sons and daughters were to prophesy. Does this not prove conclusively that there were to be prophets in our times?

Some may say, that prophecy was fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost, and that Peter says so. We answer, No! Peter does not say that at all. He simply says the Spirit then received on that day was the same Spirit spoken of by Joel. Surely no one, after looking the second time will say Joel's prophecy was fulfilled on Pentecost. No one will say that at the risk of his reason, that all flesh was gathered together in that "upper room," or that the Spirit of God was then poured out on all flesh, or that some fell asleep during so interesting a meeting and dreamed dreams. Peter quotes this passage a little different, however, than we now have it in Joel's book. He quotes it as follows: "But this is that [Spirit] which was spoken [of] by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." - Acts 2:16, 17.

Where Joel said "afterward" Peter said "in the last days." Doubtless Peter understood that the afterward was to be in the last days, and prove, when taken in connection with the facts concerning Palestine in the last few years, that there were to be prophets in our day.

Another objection urged by some is: "The Bible contains all that God ever intended to give for man's instruction, and pronounces a curse upon any one who would add to it."

Those who urge this objection, it appears to us, are very much mistaken, for several reasons:

1. The Bible does not contain all that God gave, or caused to be given to man. There are twenty or more books referred to in the Bible which are not there now. See Numbers 21:14; 1 Samuel 10:25; Joshua 10:13; 1 Kings 4:32, 33; 1 Kings 11:41; 1 Chronicles 29:29; 2 Chronicles 9:29; 2 Chronicles 12:15; 2 Chronicles 20:34; 2 Chronicles 26:22; 2 Chronicles 33:19; Jeremiah 30:32; Jeremiah 51:60, 61; Daniel 12:4; 1 Corinthians 5:9; Colossians 4:16; Jude 3.

2. No such thought is presented in the Bible that God caused to be written all that has been spoken. We have in the Bible the names of many prophets, yet not one of their prophecies. Saul, the first king of Israel, together with a great company came to a hill and "the Spirit of God came upon him and he prophesied among them." See 1 Samuel 10:10, 11. Yet we know nothing of their prophecies. Even in the New Testament there is mention of prophets and prophetesses, but we have nothing of their words. So it is a great mistake to say that the Bible contains all that God has spoken by his holy prophets.

3. The Savior, when in dispute with his satanic Majesty, said: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." By this we plainly see that life is dependent upon bread, both earthly and heavenly. As natural life is sustained by the bread of earth, so spiritual life is sustained by the bread of heaven—his word by direct revelation, and not merely the history of his word. To read the history of some great feast would not satisfy our appetites, neither will our souls be filled to read of some spiritual feasts as recorded in the Bible. Natural life is not sustained by food given and digested eighteen hundred years ago, neither is spiritual life sustained by the bread of life given then.

The Heritage.

The rich man's son inherits lands,
And piles of brick, and stone, and gold,
And he inherits soft, white hands,
And tender flesh that fears the cold,
Nor dares to wear a garment old;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One would scarce wish to hold in fee.

The rich man's son inherits cares;
The bank may break, the factory burn,
A breath may burst his bubble shares;
And soft, white hands could scarcely earn
A living that would serve his turn;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One scarce would wish to hold in fee.

The rich man's son inherits wants,
His stomach craves for dainty fare;
With sated heart he hears the pants
Of toiling hands with brown arms bare,
And wearies in his easy-chair;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One scarce would wish to hold in fee.

What doth the poor man's son inherit?
Stout muscles and a sinewy heart,
A hardy frame, a hardier spirit;
King of two hands, he does his part
In every useful toil and art;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

What doth the poor man's son inherit?
Wishes o'erjoyed with humble things,
A rank adjudged by toil-worn merit,
Content that from employment springs.
A heart that in his labor sings;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

What doth the poor man's son inherit?
A patience learned of being poor;
Courage, if sorrow come, to bear it.
A fellow feeling that is sure
To make the outcast bless his door;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

O, rich man's son! there is a toil
That with all others level stands;
Large charity doth never soil,
But only whiten, soft white hands—
This is the best crop from thy lands;
A heritage, it seems to me,
Worth being rich to hold in fee.

O, poor man's son! scorn not thy state;
There is worse weariness than thine,
In merely being rich and great;
Toil only gives the soul to shine,
And makes rest fragrant and benign—

A heritage, it seems to me,
Worth being poor to hold in fee.

Both, heirs to some six feet of sod,
Are equal in the earth at last;
Both, children of the same dear God,
Prove title to your heirship vast
By record of a well-filled past—
A heritage, it seems to me,
Well worth a life to hold in fee.

—James Russell Lowell.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"God's power no limit has; his love no stint;
And he hath willed a "shall be" for us each
Above what we can either ask or think,
Beyond the dream of finite mind to reach."

Dear Column: I am far from our chapel for three months, and when not permitted to speak to any of the Saints, I feel it a duty to write. I think I will be able to write some things that will do good and benefit and encourage others in the good work of God; if so, I am well paid. I find it easier to do right when with good people, the Saints, like an oak in the midst of the forest is protected by the surrounding timber from the storms. As Bro. Hilliard said in our meetings, that "it is just as natural for the Saints to want to be together, and live together, as it is for water to run down hill and find its level."

When I am far from the branch I feel indeed isolated and my trials and temptations are many, coming up like a flood, but we must do right at all times and in all places, so I have the promise to be blessed (Revelation 22: 14; James 1: 12). I feel blessed more when I fast and pray every Sunday. I find that in Ezra 8: 21, 32 that a fast was kept and the result was that the Lord protected them from their enemies in the way. I understand by Acts 13: 1-3 that the church which was at Antioch ministered before the Lord and fasted and the Holy Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." "And when they had fasted and prayed and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." We see these brethren were called by revelation to preach, and after fasting the answer came.

And again I find in Mark 9: 28, 29 that the disciples could not cast out the devil because that kind cometh not "but by fasting and prayer." They evidently had not been fasting at that time.

I am glad that some of the Lamoni Saints, after visiting our branches, could see the need to pray for the scattered Saints. It is true our branches are scattered Saints, but when I am living in or near the branch I do not feel in such a scattered condition as when far from it and not permitted to attend meetings for several months. I believe the time is in our day and while we are living that all those branches of the church will be gathered to Zion to dwell on our homes and to sit under our own vine and fig tree, and that it is only a few years or less till the Lord will come to dwell with us there, and Zion, the pure, will be caught up in the air to meet the Lord and all the holy angels, while the wicked are burned and the earth made new. Isaiah 24: 6; Revelation 21: 1, and Doctrine and Covenants. How good the Lord is to do all this for the good and benefit of his people, and how good and obedient we should be to him. We certainly ought to be willing to forgive each other and to do as near right by each other as we are able.

All the cities and towns that I have seen are increasing and improving rapidly. Sin and crime are also on the increase, and not only men, but men and women are deceiving and being deceived, and some of our chosen and most loved comrades, after being directed to them by the inspiration of the Almighty, have turned from us, because they were not of us, and because they gave up to the temptations that cometh "because of the word," and wanted God to turn to their ways instead of them following his ways, and left us mourning and sad and full of grief. They had not that love mentioned in 1 John 4.

I have often prayed to be delivered out of my sad and lonesome condition in life, and on the 25th inst. the Lord spoke to me by inspiration, and said, "I will not leave you comfortless." The third of March the Lord spoke to me and said, "You must trust in God, and not in medicine; the Saints must come up to this high plane with Jesus Christ; he never used medicine to heal anybody; you must have complete trust and confidence in your heavenly Father." The Lord often speaks to his children and when he does so his voice is kind and we can hear every word, and he never leaves us in doubt. We always know it is him. Brother Albert Haws preached this complete faith and trust in God without human aid in our meetings.

I see, in 1 Chronicles 17: 3-15, that the Lord spoke to Nathan, and in 28: 3 God spoke to David. In 15: 4, 15, he spoke to Jahaziel after prayer was offered by Jehoshaphat. To Manasseh 2 Chronicles 33: 10. God spoke much to Joseph Smith and others in our day. Some of you remember that, in 1880, I wrote to the Hope about the plainness and truth of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. They are the same and I believe the same to-day. It seems to be common for our young preachers to do their preaching in the branches and their first sermon, of half an hour or so, with an elder present. I think I can prove this to be a mistaken idea. When at the reunion at Oakland, California, Bro. Alexander H. Smith said, "If a young preacher take an elder with him he will trust in the elder and not in the Lord; but if he goes without an elder, then he will trust in the Lord. It would be my advice to any young preacher, starting out to preach the gospel, to go by himself and trust in the Lord, and take the Bible for the standard of evidence, and go where the gospel had not been preached." I am only a member, but I loan and distribute papers and tracts.

Your brother and friend,

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

WE desire to call the especial attention of all to the Home Department matter now just out. Notice of prices will be published later. It is a subject that should be examined by every Sunday-school superintendent, missionary, and member not connected with a school, as well as by all others. It is for the benefit of all who are not permitted to attend the regular school. Send for the leaflet and see what it is.

THE General Superintendent will work through the reunion season in the far East, the First Assistant Superintendent, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, in the interior States, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, etc., and the Second Assistant Superintendent, Bro. A. Carmichael, will "hold the fort" on the Pacific Slope.

KEEP your school in a cheerful mood. There is nothing that will be more productive of good in the way of increasing interest, increasing attendance, and the amount of work done, or diminishing the burdens, if burdens they are, than a happy, cheerful condition. "Let a little sunshine in."

THE superintendent that does not give his school a variety in work, treat them to an occasional happy surprise, or in some other way break up the monotony that will naturally follow if a certain program is continuously followed, will soon find his work growing tedious and interest on the wane. Vary and brighten up the work a little.

THE General Superintendent, after bidding farewell to the Saints of Southern Indiana and promising to try to return again at their next convention, crossed the Ohio River and turned his face toward the Ohio District. Arriving there, meetings were held at Vale's Mills and Creola, with fair turnout and good interest. This was done with a view to creating an interest in a district organization which we hope to effect at the forthcoming district conference in September. There are near a dozen schools in the district and most of them are in thriving condition, and it seems too bad that they should be missing the benefits of a district organization. Let all interested help to work up an interest among the local school workers and see that a good representation is sent from each school to Creola and help to organize the work at the time of the district conference, September 13, 14. Watch for the notice thereof.

From the Ohio District we moved on to the Philadelphia District. Stopping at Baldwin, Maryland, we found the district conference in session. And though it was not a Sunday-school convention, the brethren very kindly turned over Sunday morning to the regular school session and the eleven o'clock hour for a talk on Sunday-school work by the General Superintendent. The attendance was not large but the interest was very good. May it so continue.

Moving on to Philadelphia, Monday, we met with the workers in their elegant brick chapel there. This district is small, there being but two branches and schools in it, but there is a future for the work here. Many odds to contend with, but a noble work being done. We bid them "God-speed."

Our Part in God's Work.

The gospel of Christ is not confined to a chosen few, but to all people, Jesus, in sending forth his ministry said to them, "Preach the gospel to all people." It is so extensive and so far-reaching in its character, that men of every rank, regardless of age, may find some part to perform. He has told us in these latter days that "the field is white, already to harvest; therefore, whoso desires to reap, let him thrust in his sickle and reap with his might." That invitation has been accepted by many. Some have reaped until the Lord has said, "It is enough," and called them home; others are still at work. Volunteers are steadily enlisting as laborers in the great harvestfield.

Not only those who hold the priesthood are called to do a work, but all who enter into a covenant to serve the Lord. And he has places of usefulness for all, if we prepare ourselves for those places.

EACH HAS A WORK TO DO

that can not be done by another. The different organizations in the church are furnishing work for many, and the privilege of doing good in the home, the most important place, is open to all. Not all are called to do the same part in the gospel work, but each has his own individual labor to perform. Those who are performing the noblest part in spreading the truth and making the greatest sacrifice, are often the least known. The true spirit does not seek for fame or honor, or to display self ability, but tries to improve the opportunities given, and give help where most needed. This is the grander and deeper side of the gospel, and the place we must occupy, if we desire God's recognition.

Of the different organizations in the church mentioned, we believe

because it takes the little child and teaches him the truth, and continues that teaching through youth and maturity, making the life of Christ ever more near and dear to him. It has a place for every one from the little one in the infant class to the grandfather in the Bible class. There the gospel plan is instilled into the child's mind and he learns to love and serve his Creator in the days of his youth. There he is brought in close touch with the Almighty and taught concerning his ways and his dealings with man.

Let us heed the admonition of Paul to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

THERE ARE VARIOUS WAYS

in which we can labor. Though we can not go out into the mission field ourselves, we can assist and encourage those who are out, and our reward will be the same. We can pay our tithes and offerings, in order to keep those in the field upon whom God has placed the responsibility of preaching the gospel. Our faith and prayers are all right in their places, but they will not clothe and feed the elder's child, or pay the railroad fare. The many appeals which come to us through the church papers, should not be passed unheeded. This privilege of self sacrifice should be taught to the little ones in our homes and in the Sunday-school. We should encourage and help the children to obtain their Christmas offerings, and aid them to cultivate the spirit of giving something for our Savior who has done so much for us. I believe this is the most cheerful and purest offering that comes into our kind Bishop's hands. And when we are gone and our eyes are closed to the scenes of this life, may our work still live as monuments of true devotion, fidelity, and sacrifice.

MRS. FRANCES EBELING.

Editors Herald: Now-a-days this is abundantly "the land of sunshine," while some flowers also abound. The thermometer has played in the shade (the sunshine would be too warm) up to the 117th degree mark, 110 degrees being a frequent occurrence. This, with other hindrances, not a few, handicap work, the ministerial line included.

Time on its eternal march works its changes. Here where Brn. D. L. Harris and Thomas Daily did faithful service changes are occurring. Ranks being thinned and more left to be done by those remaining if the cause shall be maintained as it should be.

At Tulare, the center for years for these parts, the death of Sr. Twaddle two years or more since seems not only to have been felt by the branch as a whole but by individuals as an irreparable loss. Such was her energy and activity as to seemingly have had no duplicate then or since. She is said to have afforded a home for the missionaries, her horse and buggy at their disposal, and that anything to be done within her ability to forward the gospel, her chief delight. Hers seems to have been a life of doing.

Last March Sr. Mary Clark was called from her warfare to rest, Bro. Clark removing to his daughter's at Oakland. They had maintained a home for missionaries for years and were mainstays in the work, their home, the place for the weekly prayer service. Aged and in adverse circumstances, enfeebled in health, they were nevertheless a tower of strength to the work, and are correspondingly missed. The removal of Bro. Chas. Deuel and wife was the loss of two more unusually energetic workers.

Sr. Keeler is one of the last baptized by Bro. Daily about a year ago and who in that brief year made such spiritual advancement that the closing days of her life must be enshrined in memory by those enjoying participation in them as glorious realizations of gospel promise.

Bro. Joseph Flory, president of branch and resident fifteen miles distant from Tulare, has done well, circumstances considered. Will the ranks, thinned as they are, close up the gap and march on in the conflict to final victory? How clearly the workers appear to view and what they did when they no longer remain to do!

The object lesson of what others could do remains.

Brn. Luff and Hilliard passed San Franciscowards dealing out a hearty handshake to two of us to be distributed liberally, no doubt, with others. Bro. Keeler, whose energy to push gospel work seems to accumulate with his years, is in Humboldt County at work. Though alone, so far as known to me, he ordered a tent forwarded. Bro. A. B. Phillips, whose clean survey includes economy, projected the making of a tent. The sisters of Sacramento, Paullike, ventured as tent-makers, the result being a new tent at small cost, when those given an opportunity to share have responded. Better tents and much money saved is possible on such plan.

While at tent work with Bro. Phillips, Bro. J. B. Carmichael had his satchel, books, and clothes stolen. Sacramento Saints made good the loss, so the report indicated. Alameda was their next point for tent work, and moving toward the reunion as well. Forty days only till the reunion at San Jose, opening as it does September 12. Bro. J. B. Carmichael, 54 Colfax Street, San Jose, California, is chairman of committee, and Bro. John Swenson, 662 Willis Avenue, San Jose, California, secretary, who, no doubt, will in due time, if not already, give due notice in detail in HERALD and Ensign and the necessary information. Brn. Luff and Hilliard are fully expected present, their service not only highly desirable, but necessary. Let the Saints of the two districts rally. Ten days at the reunion can be a great help to you, you can help much to the success hoped for there and in the influence radiating from reunion work. While so many of the principal or leading men of the church may not be there—remembering it is God's work and his promise to meet with his people is never slackened or withdrawn all spiritual wants are provided for.

Since, at the last General Conference, more complete organization was effected and in that central section as well as locally, beside efforts aside from the wholly spiritual for Zion's advancement, our work everywhere should feel the impetus. To this end reunions are held—let us attend—embrace the opportunity. Bro. Carmichael is at liberty as chairman of committee to devote the needed time on the ground, previous to the time, September 12, to have complete all necessary preparation.

The Central District tent has not been in operation for want of help and a rheumatic shoulder that has almost prevented work on my part. Fresno has again been left out so far as opening the work there is concerned. It is yet on the map, however. The impracticability of the arranged-for fall conference at Fresno is almost complete and still growing. This may be considered at a called business session at reunion. "What various hindrances we meet."

Hay and grain crops light this year. The fruit crop good, but unfortunately the Saints but slightly the owners.

INDEPENDENCE, Oregon, August 3.

Editors Herald: In the Independence Enterprise for July 31 there appeared the following:

"There is to be a controversy between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the parent branch. It will begin this evening at the tent in the grove. Elders Allen and Goodman will present the Reorganized side and Elders Jansen and Richards the other side of the controversy. Everybody welcome."

The editor is authority for the article, and I have asked him to correct the statement that "Brighamism" is the "parent branch."

Bro. Arthur Allen and writer pitched the district tent here at the request of Bro. and Sr. H. H. Jaspersen who are caring for the "missionaries" every want "temporarily." May the Giver of all good keep and reward them! We have held eleven services up until the present time, with fair attendance and splendid interest. On Wednesday evening, the 30th, two Brighamite elders, Jansen and Richards, came to our meeting, and as they were present we announced that the following evening we would show some of the peculiar differences between us, thinking that no better time would come, as they could then have an opportunity to hear and reply. This announcement called forth the clipping inclosed. A good crowd was out and paid us rapt attention, while your writer briefly portrayed the rise of the church, laying stress upon the departure by Brigham Young, et al., the doctrines of polygamy, Adam-god, blood-atonement, all of which had their inception in the fertile brain of Brigham Young and a few dupes, proving by witnesses from the Utah church that Joseph Smith was dead years before the church had any knowledge of these doctrines. After the close the Utah elders were offered the tent in which to reply, but declined by saying they did not feel competent to defend their cause, but they were looking for their missionary in charge, F. S. Bramwell, who would debate with us. They also said that at St. Anthony, Idaho, the Josephite elders flatly refused to debate with their elders. How is this, brethren, in Idaho? Let us hear from you.

From the favorable comment received we judge considerable prejudice was removed and some dark things cleared away. We are both well.

W. A. GOODWIN.

DALLAS, Texas, August 8.

Editors Herald: At present writing everything in the Texas mission seems to be flourishing. The missionaries all seem to be busily engaged trying to answer all the calls made in the different parts of the State for preaching. Bro. Sheppard and the writer are at present in and around Dallas and have many calls for preaching in different parts of the surrounding country. Bro. Sheppard has just completed a very successful debate about ten miles east of Dallas at a little place called Elam Station, with one McIntire, of the Christian Church. They were affirming their respective churches as the church fashioned after New Testament description, and if I am allowed to judge, McIntire was overwhelmingly defeated. Was well pleased with results. The discussion consisted of ten sessions, five on each proposition.

I find Bro. Sheppard a very pleasant and agreeable traveling companion indeed. I am more and more impressed, as my experience in missionary life increases, with the wisdom of the command to go two and two. The traveling elder's life is lonely enough when associated with a traveling companion, and then oftentimes one gets sick and is unable to respond to appointments, and where there are two that condition is overcome. I find in this mission many warm-hearted and faithful Saints and many that are very near the kingdom, but for some reason they are neglecting the call. But all there is for us to do is to labor and wait. Some must "plant and some must water, but God giveth the increase." We are anxious for the hastening time to approach, when God's ministry will be endowed with a greater degree of his power, so that the world will be effectually warned and the Saints will have made that permanent improvement necessary to entitle them to be called the Zion of God, or in other words, the pure in heart. There are many things here, as well as elsewhere, that are practiced that keep us beneath our privileges. One of the chief obstacles in the way of improvement morally and intellectually is that very pernicious habit of using tobacco. When we see our dear sisters persist in that soul-destroying habit of dipping snuff, it makes one feel heartsick. It is said by some that I am a tobacco crank, but I can't help it, for when we come in contact with the sallow and pale expression consequent upon the use of that poisonous drug, known as snuff, as used by these Southern Saints (chiefly the sisters) we are made to ask ourselves, How long will this practice continue? But it is encouraging to know that some have quit its use and others are striving to break away from the practice.

Some of this country has been terribly drought-stricken, but of late there has been an abundance of rain. The rain came too late to do the corn any good, and since the rain has come the insect known as the ball weevil has been working on the cotton, and in many localities the cotton crop has been cut short. So it seems that God's word is being verified in every particular. It seems that the world would begin to wake up and see the terrible condition that awaits it, but it is written "When the Son of man cometh will he find faith on the earth."

I would like to have the Saints in Texas correspond with me as to the chances for preaching in their localities. Don't fail to let your wants be known and we or our brethren will wait on you.

Your brother,

R. WIGHT.

WOODBINE, Iowa, August 4.

Dear Herald: The good news the church papers bear makes the heart glad. The message of the angel to the shepherds was "Good tidings of great joy" and it was for all people. And the message borne by the angel to the Palmyra Seer is a repetition of the same "Good Tidings of Great Joy, which shall be to all people." It sounds just as sweet and heavenly to a sin-laden soul, when declared by the inspiration of the holy One, and brought to the heart, as it did then. It has never lost its power to gladden the soul, and enlighten the understanding, and prepare mankind for the presence of, and fellowship with, God and Christ, whose wondrous love it makes known to a dying world. It is good to be a messenger of that "good tidings of great joy." It thrills the heart of the messenger, it converts the souls of those who receive the message. In delivering this message the messenger is thrice blessed, and they who receive it are led to the portals of eternal life.

There can be no grander, nobler calling than to be a coworker with God and Christ and the holy angels. One of the grandest evidences I have of the divinity of this latter-day work is in the divine blessings I have always received, in the proclamation of this message of "good tidings." They were with me in my youth, in mature manhood, and now, in the sunset of life, when the eyes are dim, and the things of earth have lost their value, the divine power attends me still, and my heart o'erflows with love and gratitude and untold joy, because of the power of truth, and the faithful performance of my heavenly Father's promise made to me when I was called to this work. I can not boast of accomplishing much in the conversion of souls, but I can boast of the power of truth to make glad the heart, and bless the soul of him who labors diligently to make that truth known to his fellow men. I have heard and read the cry of "Delusion" from press and pulpit, from the professedly pious and the avowedly impious, for more than half a century. I have been branded as a "false teacher," "false prophet," and even a "latter-day devil," many times; but these cries fall powerless upon the ears of him who has drunk in the "glad tidings of great joy," and whose eyes have seen the light of the Sun of righteousness, and whose heart has felt the cheering beams of that light quickening his soul, giving to him evidence of the verity of God, and of the saving power of Christ, as set forth in his glorious gospel; and we pity the poor souls so darkened that they can not discern the light, "who call light darkness and darkness light, good evil and evil good."

It would almost seem that our endeavors to show them the light is vain, they are given up to the vain traditions of men, and some to the doctrines of devils, and they appear to have no desire to see the true light. Yet we are commanded, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." And again, "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." So I shall continue to sow the good seed of the kingdom, and leave the result with God and those to whom the message is sent, knowing that if I remain faithful to the end, the reward of eternal life is sure.

I stepped into a tabernacle of the Holiness people the other night. There seemed to be earnest devotedness to their work, and the hearers hung upon the lips of the "evangelist" with all the expectant zeal that could be imagined,—drinking in every word that fell. His topic was drawn from Matthew 15, "The Syrophenician" or "Woman of Canaan," and her daughter, also the miracle of the loaves and the fishes, showing that "nothing was too hard for God." He gave utterance to some truths, but he conveyed the idea that where it was said by the woman, "My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil," that it was not a real, personal spirit from the infernal regions that troubled the daughter, but the girl was a wicked girl, disobedient, reckless of her virtue, and that in answer to her mother's prayer she was converted, and other mothers whose daughters were given up to sin would, if they would go to Jesus with the same zeal, devotedness, and persistency, have their daughters won over to Christ, or "made whole." His rendering of this narrative was a direct misrepresentation of the text. A woman or man given up to sin and the corruptions of the world do not in their indulgence in these things realize any vexation. They have "pleasure in unrighteousness" (2 Thessalonians 2: 12). "They that count it pleasure to riot in the day time" (2 Peter 2: 14). The vexation comes when they are grown weary of that corruption, and they see their folly and return to God, but it is not the Devil that is vexing them then, it is the consciousness of their guilt and unworthiness that grieves them. Mark in his seventh chapter gives us plainly to understand it was a personal devil; and Jesus said, "The devil is gone out of thy daughter;" "She found the devil gone out and her daughter upon the bed." But this so-called evangelist wanted us to understand that God would do everything for us; there was nothing for us to do but to come to Jesus, thus ignoring the Scriptures which demand that we shall "Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well" (Isaiah 1: 16); "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13); "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16); "Repent and be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38); and many other like passages. God does not recognize man as a machine, but as an intelligent being capable of receiving and obeying law, and he has been pleased, as a loving Father, to reveal to us the law of life, and upon our reception of, and obedience to that law, our well-being here and hereafter depends. Hence we are commanded, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling."—Philippians 2: 12. Not by works of our own devising, but by doing those things which God has commanded.

The preacher gave an instance of a woman's conversion. She attended a revival, heard the preaching, but was "poker backed," would not keel in prayer, was stubborn, hard hearted; but a woman of her acquaintance was converted and began to pray for her conversion, but the "poker backed" woman would not bend; she sat erect, stubborn, but the converted sister began to cry. Then the heart of the "poker back" relented, and was melted down, and found religion; but after the conversion she told the "evangelist:" "It was not anything that you said in your preaching that did it; but when I saw her cry, I knew she meant it." This confession seemed rather damaging to the preacher's boast; he was not in it; it was not even the prayer of her friend; it was her tears that had wrought the wondrous change. Who will deny the power of a tear? But to what was she converted? Or by what? Not to God, nor by his word, but by a tear.

This little story was drank in by the majority of the audience as evidence of a real conversion to God. The general tenor of the sermon was made up of such vain philosophy, interspersed with a few truths and some witticisms; but God's plan of salvation had no part in it. Truly did Paul say, "They will not endure sound doctrine."—2 Timothy 4: 3. And Jesus, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15: 8. I would to God that all of our people appreciated the truth as those people seemed to appreciate the chaff that fell from that preacher's lips, and were as full of holy zeal as these people are of their blind zeal devoid of knowledge. It is high time for us to awake; for if Christ's words, in his parable of the fig-tree, and his appreciation, in Matthew 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21, have any meaning, then the time of his coming draweth nigh.

I am trying to comply with the injunction of Paul to Timothy (2, 4: 5), but as yet have not availed myself of any opportunity to administer in all the departments of that calling, but I do seek to give comfort by the preached word, and to revive the work in the hearts of the Saints, so far as my instrumentality can be successful in that work. I do not believe that we should seek to the patriarch as some would run to a fortune teller. We should have a higher motive than mere curiosity, and furthermore we should be careful to live so as to claim God's blessing, for unless we do, we shall come short, though a thousand patriarchs bless us. God's blessings are on condition of our faithfulness to him, and those conditions can never be changed. Be it understood, I am far from insinuating that any do seek to the patriarch from any unworthy motive, but I can see the possibility of doing so, hence I utter this word of caution. Even patriarchal blessings are not a passport into the celestial kingdom; they may reveal what blessings are in store, if we are worthy. But our entrance into the celestial kingdom depends upon a living faith that brings forth the works of righteousness, that endureth unto the end.

I ask the earnest prayers of my brethren and sisters that I may labor acceptably in the duties whereunto I have been called, and that I may continue to be a blessing to my fellows, in pointing out the way of truth, in upholding the hands of the faithful in every department of the work, in strengthening the feeble knees and comforting the depressed.

CHARLES DERRY.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, August 5.

Saints' Herald: A visit to Council Bluffs by Frederick M. Smith was the event of the past week with the Saints here, many of whom have never seen him whom the Lord has lately called to occupy in the leading quorum of the church. President Smith gave some timely advice to the Saints in our forenoon sacrament meeting and preached to a well-filled house of Saints and friends in the evening. His listeners gave good attention and his remarks were well received by all. For one we were assured by the Spirit that Bro. Smith is the right man in the right place. Your visit, Bro. Smith, was highly appreciated by all. Come again.

A. BLUFFITE.

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, July 28.

Editors Herald: Inclosed please find part of a letter from a Methodist friend.

Some time ago there appeared an article in the HERALD entitled, I believe, "The Mother of Harlots and her Daughters." I had the issues containing this article sent to, I am satisfied, an honest seeker after truth. Perhaps the following extract from a letter of said party may suggest some good precautions to be taken when approaching "outsiders":

"I was surprised at you calling my attention to the article, but it seemed to be the writer's aim to set forth the sins of all the churches but his own, and to hold his up as a beautiful and holy thing, too sublime to be appreciated by the common herd. To believe our church and our religion is the nearest correct is very commendable and highly proper. Not for one minute could I believe that the Wesleys were bad men; however, the customs in those days were different to ours, and they may have done things that are to-day condemned.

"Again the writer says that one man requested a Methodist conference to allow the practice of polygamy! Such an audacity, such absurdity I can not believe any Methodist to possess. Admitting it to be true, it seems to me a very inappropriate thing for this writer to take polygamy for his text since the world, as yet, makes no distinction between Latter Day Saints and Mormons, and the latter name seems almost synonymous with polygamy.

"Do not think I was displeased with having you call my attention to this, for I certainly was not. I know it was sent with the best motives. I was hoping it would be something to bring me nearer to the cross, thus my disappointment."

The above brings forcibly to my mind the words of revelation, "Preach nothing but repentance to this generation," and those beautiful words by the apostle, "Christ and him crucified."

LOS ANGELES, California, August 1.

Editor Herald: I wish to heartily commend the article on "Graceland College" in current number of Autumn Leaves from the pen of Bro. Fredrick M. Smith. It is timely, pertinent, and clearly disclosed the purpose and utility of an institution of this kind. When two years ago I wrote an article advocating practically the same plan and purpose my suggestions were taken as visionary. There is a sense of satisfaction in knowing I was not wrong and that one of the Presidency holds to the same position.

The benefit to the church through Graceland College is not to be counted in dollars and cents but rather in accentuated and quickened morals, intellectual expansion and spiritual utility on the part of Budding Ephraim.

Let the faculty be the very best whatever else is done. Inclusiveness and not exclusiveness should be our motto; contributive good rather than accumulated gain. We will continue to do what we can for Graceland.

Yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

DORA, Oregon, July 30.

Dear Herald: I wish to express my thanks for the spiritual food I find in the HERALD and Ensign. The HERALD is a welcome visitor at my home and the Ensign at sister's home. I do not know what we isolated ones would do, especially through the long, rainy winter months, if it were not for the "silent preachers." What a pleasure it must be to those who can go to preaching services every Sunday, and oftener if they wish. Though we have only a few sermons during the year, yet we are not complaining, but we know how to appreciate them when we do hear them. Only five of us here, but are strong in the faith. We feel the Savior will care for us if we are faithful, and we are trying to be. We have things to contend with. The more the contention the stronger it makes us. How many of you sisters have had your own brother say you were disgracing him and for no other cause than that you were a Latter Day Saint? But if all our earthly relatives and friends would turn from us I would not give up my hope in this latter-day gospel.

Bro. Crumley has preached some for us. He is a very good man. We are accused of worshipping him, but I think not. Oh how sad it made us all feel when we heard of Bro. Harris' death! Our loss and heaven's gain. Dear Father, our prayers are for the widow and orphans.

Saints' Herald: Please send me the SAINTS' HERALD. I intend to send for lots of literature in a short while. The persecutors are after us, and prejudice runs high. They seem to think we and the Utahites the same, or a great many do.

Your sister for truth,

MRS. LIZZIE SKINNER.

JONESBORO, Arkansas, August 7.

Dear Herald: I awoke on the morning of June 17, and silently said: Father, I have finished my writing for the present, and am ready to take the field. I am invited to work at three points; namely, Pocahontas, Evening Shade, and Jonesboro. I am unable to decide where to go first. Now, therefore, I placed myself in the hands of God, as well-worked clay in the potter's presence. In Jesus' name I asked to be directed. Throwing myself into a receptive attitude I awaited results; presently the thought came, flashing dimly at first, then clear and distinct, "place Washington's birthplace opposite the three towns and a cancellation of the greater number of letters will decide the matter." I arose, took tablet and pencil, and soon knew which way I was to go. After breakfast and parting prayers, I shouldered my books and chart and started on foot for Nettleton, a distance of sixty-five miles.

On the morning of the third day I reached Sedgwick, collected one dollar of an old debt, with which I bought ticket and rode to Jonesboro, thence, on the next morning, to three miles east of Nettleton. I had preached three sermons there one month previous. I announced a series of meetings to begin that night. At an early hour the teams commenced gathering in. Encouraged at first, supposing I was to have a big meeting, and started to greet them, but perceived some kind of a nigger in the fence and halted. Soon I was apprised, by a Baptist parson, that "weans have the use of this house every Sunday night, a standin' apintment for prayer-meetin' and we ain't goin' ter give way fer nothin'." I apologized for the mistake (?) I had made. The house gradually filled up; they resurrected the defunct prayer service and after consuming what time they wished the house was dismissed, and warned to "beware of false prophets." A general visit now began. Discovering that about twenty were patiently holding their seats, I commenced preaching; the rabble slowly and noisily moved away. The next day the song-books were all taken from the house, and the day spent securing Parson McClain to conduct a counter meeting at Neadham Schoolhouse, where wholesale misrepresentations were indulged in.

On the third day the good people, who entertained me, furnished a horse and buggy and placed in my hands a letter of introduction and invitation explaining matters to Mr. Neadham which I delivered. This stirred up a hornet's nest. The very atmosphere became impregnated with hard epithets, insults, and savage threats. The community was in a high state of fermentation, but, "The wrath of man" was made to praise the Lord. The operations of the two Spirits were clearly manifest; love, peace, and pardon prevailed in the camp of the Lord, while the following will illustrate the agitations of the opposing camp: On a certain night a Mr. P., "and others, got religion," he prayed, shouted, and thanked God that he was so gloriously saved; the next day he told certain ones, whose names were on the letter I had taken to Mr. Neadham, that said Neadham had promised fifty dollars to help prosecute them. On the third night this Mr. P. was made to "eat his words" (take back this statement and acknowledge the lie) before the same congregation that witnessed his salvation three nights before.

Several points were made apparent to those who became interested. First, that the rabble became enraged and transcended all bounds of reason without cause of provocation; therefore, it must be an inspiration from some unseen source. Second, that it must be from an evil source to produce such disgusting results.

Third, Satan is hardly apt to oppose his own with so much vigor, therefore, this must be the work of God that he is fighting.

I preached sixteen sermons and received many invitations to return. Several stated themselves ready for baptism if others, who were much interested, would go with them.

I thought a little time for more mature consideration should be given, and agreed to return again later on. My next point is Pocahontas and vicinity. The editor of the Sun interviewed me, yesterday, and I furnished him a concise statement of the matter, which he promised to publish.

SOMERVILLE, Victoria.

Editors Herald: It has been a considerable length of time since I contributed anything to your columns; but a sense of duty impels me to acknowledge some of the favors received through the gospel, and also by the visit of Bro. A. H. Smith. I have been laid up for about four months, the most trying time of my ministry, but received comfort and peace of mind by the Spirit's direction that all would be well in the end. Although I was unable to be at any of the services held by Bro. Smith, yet I hear from all quarters that his short visit among the Saints has been greatly appreciated, and will be of lasting benefit. His coming and going has been like a dream, although there was plenty of reality in it, and a good look at his countenance during the few short hours spent with our family, was a pleasant sermon to me. One I shall never forget. The pronunciation of "peace and blessing" be upon this house, and "the good-bye at the door," made the parting quite hard enough. Before he left Victoria the cable message arrived directing my ordination to the apostleship, which was one of the last things on earth I should have guessed the message contained.

What a message for a struggling sick man to receive! How did Joseph know but what my illness might have carried me to the cemetery weeks before? I slowly read the cablegram over, and was left alone to pray and meditate over its contents. I saw no angel, I had no vision, but a calm heavenly feeling pervaded my soul that took away all feelings of fear or resentment, and I submitted to the ordinance, trusting, as I have from the beginning, that the Lord is both able and willing to qualify for the office desired to be filled. When I became a citizen of the Lord's house, my whole desire was to know in an unmistakable way just what he required at my hands, and in due time the satisfactory answer came, in which the Lord said, "I will send thee forth to the islands of the sea, and there you shall declare my gospel." It was at the General Conference of 1888 that I was appointed to Australia, and unqualified in every way, excepting size, I ventured the task, and have been kept here ever since. Shortly after my arrival I was ordained to the Seventy by Bro. J. W. Wight, and after he returned to the States, I was left in charge of the work.

While visiting among the Saints at Nambucca, New South Wales, the following prophecy was given through one of the brethren, which indicates far more to me now than it did then: "Verily thus saith the Lord unto thee, my servant, Cornelius, I have heard thy prayers concerning this mission; behold, I will give thee power in time to come, to prosecute the mission of the Australian Colonies to a fuller extent, for I, the Lord, have many people here to be gathered out, and you shall have the privilege to see it fulfilled, saith the Lord. Amen." Power to act is conveyed by ordination, and to me, it is indicated in the above.

When the HERALD came containing the late vision to the church I felt fully satisfied with its divinity, and was pleased beyond measure to see the tried and true servants of the "Twelve" raised a little higher, where they may look over the heads of the present quorum into fair fields of new thought and investigation. Some one must occupy the new field for evangelical work, and why not men, who, through long years of faithful experience, have proven themselves worthy? It was indeed gratifying to see the new appointments for Australia, and to know the church was in a position to send us aid. We will look with fond expectation for the arrival of the new missionaries, and pray that their labors may be crowned with many sheaves, while far from present friends and native home. Bro. Wight I know, and am glad he is coming for he will be able to assist me greatly in the new undertaking. The outlook all along the line at present is good, and I think there will be an increase in the harvest this year. Bro. J. Jones lately baptized three Utah sisters at Adelaide, West Australia. This is a new opening, and the work is spreading. I am still unable to move out on account of my cough; but hope soon to be well again.

Peace and prosperity be with you.

WOODSIDE, Montana, August 2.

Editors Herald: We arrived here on the evening of the 1st and are pleasantly cared for at the home of Bro. John Johnson, waiting for the tent which was shipped to this place nearly a week ago from Bozeman. The people are said to be interested, and are expecting a two-week meeting. We are announced at the schoolhouse for this evening and to-morrow, thus filling in the time while waiting for tent.

July 27 was our last Sunday for the present in the Gallatin Valley. Brn. Thomas Reese and D. C. White held forth at Bridger, and Bro. Gomer Reese and writer at Reese Creek Church. There was a good interest at the latter place and a favorable report came from Bridger. With proper care and effort the work can be carried forward to success in the Gallatin Valley. There are some things to be overcome, however.

Tuesday morning, the 29th ult., we left Bozeman for this place. The Saints had been very kind to us during our stay there, so it seemed like leaving home on leaving Bozeman.

Our route lay via Helena, Montana, where we arrived about eleven a. m., and concluded to tarry over and improve the opportunity for viewing some of the attractions of the city. On alighting at the depot there was a disappointment at the general view of things. There was a cheerless, unattractive, and desolate appearance to the whole scene before us. There was no city in sight. It was said to lie off to the southwest in the foothills. We were soon on the electric car and moving in that direction to meet with a ten-cent fare and no transfers. We were soon in the famed city of the miners' homes, built on "Last Chance Gulch." It loomed up gratifyingly. Houses of brick and stone indicating wealth and prosperity. The streets narrow like early Boston. The wealth of the community is still gathered in large amounts from the "everlasting hills" where men have contended and struggled for right of possession for years. Minerals are said to be in abundance in the mountains yet. Prospectors may hope to "strike it rich" as in the past.

While in Helena we were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hawk. They have been living in the city about twenty years. He is from Ohio, is in the government employ, owns a sheep ranch—seemingly prosperous—a typical Montanian. Miss Minnie Kelly, of Glenwood, Iowa, was visiting there also. She is a cousin of Mrs. Hawk.

In the afternoon we visited the new capitol building. It is well built, would be a prize in any community. Built of steel and stone, at a cost of about seven hundred thousand dollars. Everything up to date. The following day we visited the smelting furnaces, where the crude ore from the mines is changed into bullion. Took supper with Sr. L. P. Benedict, from Logan, Iowa, a firm Latter Day Saint. Just the kind that one feels at home with right away, and she is proud of her faith as all good Saints are.

A visit to the bath in the evening where the water comes out of the mountains, both hot and cold, a plunge and safe return to Mr. Hawks at eleven p. m., concluded our sightseeing here.

We learned, however, that Helena would be a good place for tent meetings later on.

At noon, the following day, we left Helena and spent the afternoon on the train, among the hills and mountains of the Rockies, moving and seeing until nine p. m., when we arrived here, tired enough.

Later, Monday 4th. We had two services here yesterday with good audiences in attendance, and met with the Sabbath-school in charge of Bro. Whitney. There was a sufficient number of pupils present to encourage and insure success if opportunities are improved.

August 7. Tent meetings are now in progress each evening with attentive audiences. All well.

WM. H. KELLEY.

ALTON, Missouri, August 5.

Editor Herald: This evening finds me left alone, speaking as to my co-helpers, and I feel to send you a few dots and dashes from this historical part of the Southern Missouri District. Not far from this place is the noted spot where the mob a few years ago made the untimely marks of heathenism, which Elder H. Sparling can give in detail; but things have been changed about the place. The mobbers have all disappeared, and in their place is found great concourses of interested listeners to the servants of God, who tell the angel's message with no uncertain sound. No doubt your readers have seen sketches of our grand and good conference, which will be long remembered by those present.

After the close of conference Bro. I. N. White and myself took train for Thayer, Missouri, where we held the fort for some time. Bro. I. N. White spoke at the park nights, and the writer on the street days. From there we went to the Woodside Branch and remained for a week. Here good work was done, and two souls were led into the kingdom, while many more seemed very near.

I felt quite sad this morning to feel the parting hand of Bro. I. N. White, yet I was not long idle, for I soon found my books; but ah! I at last felt to go aside from the abodes of men to seek wisdom, and while pleading for divine aid I remembered the Babe of the Manger, and as I arose from my secret place I fancied I saw him taking leave of his disciples, while thousands could behold him. Now his feet left the rugged boulders on the top of Mount Olivet, while his hands were outstretched over the multitude in token of the peace he was leaving with his brethren. The admonition was given, "Tarry ye in Jerusalem, until ye receive power from on high." And he soared aloft with the divine favor of his Father, which was the life-giving source. He ascended higher and higher, while every eye was turned heavenward. The clouds grew brighter around him, and finally he was hidden from the gaze of all, but, listen to the note, Jesus my all to heaven has gone, and there were two angels standing in the midst of his disciples, inquiring, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing into heaven?" while the heavens are singing all should praise the name of Christ, and the Father bade him welcome at his right hand. And now the blessed thought,

My faith looks up to Thee,

Thou Lamb of Calvary.

Editor Herald: The elders closed the tent services here on the 25th with no visible good having been accomplished. They had a fair turnout part of the time, with the exception of the last two nights, when there was not enough out to hold services. On Saturday the writer moved them to Rosendale, but what the results will be remains to be seen.

Sr. Vaughn, wife of elder J. C. Vaughn, has been very low, nigh unto death, but is much better at this writing. The rest of the Saints are well except Bro. C. C. Nelson's youngest boy at Guilford.

With hope for the final triumph of God's work, I am,
Your brother,
R. F. HILL.

A Romance of Valley Forge is the title of a story by Sr. Eleanor Waldorf Kearney, the first number of which will appear in the September Autumn Leaves. Some, who have read the manuscript, pronounce it the best story she has ever written.

The Friars and the Taft Commission.

"When we look at matters dispassionately, it seems to be certain that the Friars of four of the religious orders can not go back to their holdings. As Cardinal Rampolla says, 'their presence would provoke trouble.' Their usefulness as preachers of the gospel or as ministers of the sacraments is at an end in their former parishes. The reason is, and the only reason is, because they allowed Spain to use them as her political agents, and the hatred against Spain was directed particularly against the friar representatives of Spain. It is a great pity that the circumstances are such, and we can only deplore the fact that the great religious orders, who evangelized and civilized the islands of the East, should have allowed themselves to be placed in such an unenviable position. Here is the problem as the United States Government faces it. It is an extremely delicate one to handle. The Friars, however, in view of their noble work of three centuries, are deserving of the greatest consideration, and any attempt 'to deport them,' 'rudely to expel them,' would make for them a thousand friends and would recoil on the heads of the principals in the act of expulsion. Rome is very wise in doing it all gradually. Let the waves of feeling that now surge about this question subside, and in time the Friars will go themselves, and their places will be taken by priests of nationalities other than Spanish, or by native Filipinos trained under American auspices.

"The outcome of the negotiations of the Taft Commission is really more successful than Secretary Root would have it. If it had resulted as he desired, there would have been no end of complications, recriminations, and bitter feelings. As it is, the Friars, seeing that their usefulness is at an end and their places are being filled by others more suitable, will voluntarily go back to their homes in Spain."—Catholic World Magazine for August.

Schmidt and Sr. Agnes Mathieson were united in matrimony by Elder O. B. Thomas. The evening was an enjoyable one to the few present, notwithstanding that the unexpected absence of Bro. Thomas from the city, so hastened the anticipated happy day as to forbid the necessary preparations for entertaining a larger company. May a long and happy life attend the bridal pair.

Died.

EYE.—At Denver, Colorado, July 27, 1902, Bro. Samuel H. Eye, aged 68 years, 9 months, 22 days. He was born in West Virginia in 1833. Married in 1856. His wife and three sons survive. He united with the church in 1879, being baptized by Bro. Nelson Vanfleet in Dickenson County, Kansas. By his request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral sermon. They were in the same brigade early in the Civil War, but unknown to each other. The Grand Army also officiated in the services. Bro. E. F. Shupe had charge. The Denver Saints miss him greatly.

BRANNAN.—At Denver, Colorado, July 25, 1902. Walter L., son of Mr. John and Sr. Ella Brannan, aged 42 days. His hold on mortality was frail and his spirit passed sweetly to the better land. Bro. E. F. Shupe had charge of the services, and H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon.

FARNSWORTH.—At his home, Fall River, Massachusetts, July 15, 1902, Robert Farnsworth. Born September 29, 1813, at Tyl-desley, Lancashire, England; baptized at Fall River, July 15, 1867, ordained an elder July 22, 1867. Has since been president of Fall River Branch several times. He has been an invalid for many years, which has hindered him from any active service, but prior to that he was an energetic worker, one of the first laborers in the Reorganization in Massachusetts District, honored and loved by all who knew him. Funeral services at his home, July 17, by G. W. Robley; interment at Bristol the 18th. A son and daughter survive him.

Sr. Edson leaves a husband and two children, father and mother, sisters and brothers, to mourn her great loss. She was loved and respected by all who knew her; a true Saint indeed. Laid to rest in the home cemetery at Spicer, Minnesota, July 24; funeral at the Presbyterian church of that place, the room being full of attentive listeners to hear, for the first time, a Latter Day Saint elder preach. Sermon by Eli Hayer.

BROWNING.—James A. Browning, at Ogden, Utah, July 25, 1902. Funeral sermon by C. F. Middleton and A. M. Chase. Interment at Mt. Olivet, Salt Lake City. Deceased was born near Nashville, Tennessee, November 16, 1833. He was the father of ten children, as follows: Mrs. Ella Redfield, Mrs. Pauline Higgins, Mrs. Lulu Clayton, Wm. J. Browning, Charles Browning (of California), D. F. Browning, G. Wesley Browning, Frank Browning, Justus A. Browning (of Idaho), and Orla Browning, nine of whom survive him, also several grandchildren, his wife, Sara McGany Browning, and son D. Fred Browning, having preceded him. He was a kind and devoted husband and father, beloved and respected by all who knew him. Many of the ministry will kindly remember him. His home was always opened to them as long as he had a home. He will be greatly missed by those who knew him best. He lived a good Christian life, and was ready and willing to answer the great and last call and went very quietly and peacefully.

"Vacation Number" of the Chautauquan Magazine.

The August issue of the Chautauquan is a "Vacation Number," rich in fiction, art, travel, and other reasonable features. The leading story is by the most famous of woman writers in Germany, Marie von Ebner Eschenbach, "The Barons of Gemperlein." A Chinese short story, "Marriage Predestinate" (Gum Gwoo Kay Gwoon) is also an exceptional magazine feature. An account of the marvelous achievements of Bernini: The "Modern Michelangelo," with numerous photographs of his masterpieces, is contributed by Felicia Buttz Clark of Rome. Bernini's statue of David, executed before he was eighteen years of age, forms the frontispiece of the magazine. An illustrated descriptive tour of the "French Juras," the less familiar but most picturesque region bordering on Switzerland, is furnished by Caroline S. Domett. The Shortia galacifolia has been rediscovered in South Carolina by enthusiastic botanists. Harriet E. Freeman tells the story in charming style under the title, "How Two Women Found the Shortia." An illustrated paper on "The American League for Civic Improvement" sets forth a remarkable present-day movement toward a more beautiful American Life. Professor Edwin Erle Sparks trenchantly discusses the proposed gift of a statute of Frederick the Great to the United States, in the light of the history of our relations to the great German. Few stories of real life will thrill the reader as much as that of "Anita-Garibaldi," wife of the famous leader of the Italians. The version by Lena Lindsay Pepper is thoroughly effective. "Highways and Byways" includes editorial comment on: The Fifty-Seventh Congress. Irrigation—Reclaiming an Empire. Civil Government for the Philippines. The Isthmian Canal Bill. Equal suffrage in Australia. The Virginia Constitutions vs. Democracy. Purer and Greater Democracy. Prohibition vs. Interstate Commerce. Taxing Franchises as Property. Tendencies in University Life. The Anti-Trust Crusade. Progress of Compulsory Education. Israelite Alliance. Missionary Bishops. With cartoons, portraits, and other illustrations.

There will appear in the September and October numbers of Autumn Leaves some fine pictures of Colorado and California scenery. Those who do not take the Autumn Leaves are missing some good things.

Almost every one who has read H. G. Wells's scientific romances, has felt that they had a peculiar quality of reasonableness all the author's own. One does not find in Mr. Wells' work the burlesque scenes and farcial characters of Jules Verne's work. The great difference between Jules Verne and Mr. Wells is that the latter was trained in scientific methods of thought while the former was not. Before Jules Verne took to romances he wrote operatic libretti; before Mr. Wells took to romances he was a pupil of Huxley in the Royal College of Science. The Cosmopolitan for August presents an article on Mr. Wells and his work which will prove interesting, not only to those who have read this author's books, but also to those for whom this pleasure is in store.

Everyone almost has seen a circus as it appears from a seat in the tent, but there are few who have traveled with the company day and night, studied the inner life of the circus folk and the thousand details that make up the organization of a modern circus. The August Cosmopolitan's article "The Organization of a Modern Circus," elaborately illustrated with photos specially taken by the Cosmopolitan's staff photographer, reads to the layman like a chapter from the Arabian Nights. Much has been written about how America's millionaires accumulate wealth in their business hours, but little has been said about how these interesting individuals spend their millions in their hours of leisure. The August Cosmopolitan's illustrated article on "Divisions of Some Millionaires," gives an interesting view of this side of the millionaire's life.

As the population of the great cities expands the problem of how to secure for everybody the privileges of the coast, which does not expand, has become a more and more vexing one. Mr. Sylvester Baxter, who was intimately concerned with securing Boston's magnificent system of public beaches, contributes to the Cosmopolitan for August an illustrated article which can not fail to attract the attention not only of legislators but also of the citizens at large to whom this subject is a very close one.

ELIAS—ELIJAH.

The following correspondence is handed to us by Bro. Joseph R. Lambert, of Lamoni, by consent or request of Bro. La Rue.

We believe the reply of Bro. Lambert covers the ground of the inquiry as concisely as practicable, and is substantially the view the elders have taken so far as is known to us. We believe this to be the general view as understood by the leading minds, though no declaration has been made upon it. We think it to be correct.

Our thanks to Brn. Lambert and La Rue.

LAMONI, Iowa, August 9.

Bro. Joseph Smith: By request of Bro. W. E. La Rue, I herewith submit to you a bit of correspondence which is self-explaining. If you will read the papers in the order in which they are marked, all will be plain.

Your brother,

J. R. LAMBERT.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, July 23.

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother: On last Sunday evening we had a question box opening in place of a sermon. A number of very interesting questions were asked, among them the following: "Upon searching the Inspired Translation we find apparent duplicity of testimony with regard to Elias. John 1: 28 states that Christ is Elias. Then we read that on the mount of transfiguration Moses and Elias appeared to Jesus, Peter, James, and John. Has Elias a double meaning, or in what manner can we explain this apparent contradiction?" Christ says John is Elias. Matthew 17: 13, I. T.

Another question was this: What is the teaching of this church in regard to the second coming of Elijah? Please explain St. John 1: 28.

I was thinking I had read somewhere in some of your writings where you gave an exposition of this matter. Perhaps it was some one else. I may be mistaken. At any rate will you give it your attention, if you have the time and are well enough? If not refer it to Bro. Heman or Editor HERALD, and give me a solution of the matter and the proper way to meet it.

Could you not write an article for the HERALD on Elijah and etc? Head it as you see fit. The ones who asked these questions are our people, but were followers of Elijah II., Dowie.

Fraternally yours,

W. E. LA RUE.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 27.

ELDER W. E. LA RUE, Philadelphia, Pa.;

Dear Brother: Your communication of the 23d inst. was received on the 25th. Concerning your questions, will say that I have never given special attention to the topic to which they relate. Have never given "an exposition of this matter." Will simply call your attention to a few points bearing on the sub-

One of the missionaries writes to Bro. R. M. Elvin as follows: "I received catalogue of Graceland College and thank you for same. I shall speak a word for Graceland whenever I can do so. I have read your special appeals and earnest pleadings on behalf of our dear Graceland for several years and have been much touched with them—any heart that would not be touched would certainly be a heart of stone. I inclose order for $— to help pay the debt, — for wife and — for self, and wish I could send ten thousand instead of — dollars. In many years of missionary work there have been times when expenses of self and family had to be met out of our own resources until we felt too poor to assist any further, in financial matters, but thanks to our loving Father in heaven; for he hath blessed us and enriched us in spirit and otherwise until our sacrifices look insignificant when compared to the abundant outpouring of his blessings upon us. We have three darling little children that we desire to some day receive the benefits of Graceland, and if we had none we would still feel to help for the benefit of others. I hope the debt will soon be paid; I shall strive to do my part till it is paid."

ject, and then, if you desire, will refer the whole matter to the editor of the HERALD.

1. Any one sent of God to restore the truth, and through this means prepare the people to meet God, is an Elias. It does not follow, necessarily or logically, that because the name is applied to more than one person, that there is, therefore, any "duplicity of testimony." Elijah was the Elias of his time; John the Baptist of the time of Christ, and Joseph Smith, so far as human instrumentality is concerned, of the last dispensation.

2. John 1: 28, I. T., contains some statements made by John, in which he very properly, and modestly, puts Christ at the head. Partial statements are misleading. Let us hear all that the witness has said on this point: "And he confessed, and denied not that he was Elias; but confessed, saying; I am not the Christ.

"And they asked him, saying; How are thou then Elias? And he said; I am not that Elias who was to restore all things. And they asked him, saying, Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No."

In this connection see Matthew 17: 9-14. Verses 13, 14 read as follows:

"But I say unto you, Who is Elias? Behold, this is Elias, whom I sent to prepare the way before me. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist, and also of another who should come and restore all things, as it is written by the prophets."

Certainly Christ was all that any one of his servants was, and more.

3. What constituted John the Elias of his time was the fact that he was sent "in the spirit and power [authority] of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."—Luke 1: 17.

I think the view expressed by W. W. Blair, in Joseph the Seer, first edition, pages 98, 99, is a good one. That is, it is probable that Elias (Elijah, Hebrew) was the angel who directed John in his ministerial work. And then, when the set time had come, John the Baptist ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, authorizing them to preach the gospel and minister in all its outward ordinances. Thus Joseph and Oliver moved out "in the spirit and power of Elias."

4. I am not aware that the Scriptures mention any "second" coming of Elijah, although it is quite evident that he was to do a work in the capacity of an angel, for the salvation of man, after his departure. The church, as a body, has never spoken on this subject, but from what is written we may infer what the teachings of the church are.

In the revelation of 1823, among other things, the angel said: "Behold, I will reveal unto you the priesthood by the hand of Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 13.

"After this vision had closed, another great and glorious vision burst upon us, for Elijah the prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us, and said: 'Behold, the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi, testifying that he [Elijah] should be sent before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse. Therefore the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands, and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors.'"—Church History, vol. 2, p. 47.

So, Joseph Smith was the Elias of this generation in the same sense that John was of the generation in which he lived, with this difference, that Joseph was called at the "times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 21.

In Doctrine and Covenants 34: 2, we read that Sidney Rigdon was sent forth even as John, to prepare the way before the Lord, "and before Elijah which should come," etc.

In all the foregoing, I see no "contradiction," no "duplicity;" and I conclude that Elijah, or Elias, also John, came in the capacity of angels, and that Joseph Smith, the Seer, was sent forth as the great restorer "in the Spirit and power" of Elijah, or Elias.

If you desire me to make any further use of your letter by referring it to Heman C. Smith or to the editor of the HERALD, please let me know and I will gladly do so.

Your brother in hope,

J. R. LAMBERT.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, August 7.

ELDER J. R. LAMBERT, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother: Your esteemed favor of the 27th ult., was duly received. Please accept my sincere thanks for the explanation you kindly offered. Your views appear to be very reasonable and throw much light on the important subject. The matter of the coming of Elijah (Hebrew) (Mal. 4: 5, 6) or Elias (Greek) is now a subject of considerable inquiry among Bible students. It has been brought more before them of late because of the claims extraordinary of the Reverend J. Alex. Dowie, to be that august personage.

I should like very much to see this subject definitely explained through the HERALD in the near future. It does not matter to me who does it. It might be well for you to refer these letters to the Editor and ask him to give his opinion on the matter. Any way you may see fit to dispose of the subject will be satisfactory to me. As ever I remain,

Hastily and very respectfully yours,

W. E. LA RUE.

THE BARNARD REUNION.

On Saturday, August 9, the Associate Editor and his wife left Lamoni bound for Barnard, Missouri, to attend the reunion of the Nodaway District, which had been announced by bills and notices in the HERALD to begin on August 9. On reaching Barnard that evening, however, we found that for three days Barnard had been in possession of the immense crowds which had come there to enjoy the annual three-day picnic held on the grounds which had been engaged for the reunion, and as the crowds did not leave the grounds until late in the evening, the reunion committee was unable to do anything in the way of preparing the grounds. It had been hoped that the grounds could be prepared in time for meetings Sunday. Sunday morning was introduced by a rain, and no meetings were held until Sunday afternoon, when a short business session was held and organization effected by choosing Frederick M. Smith president, E. S. Fannon vice-president, Will T. Ross secretary, and appointing the reunion committee (composed of William Woodhead, E. S. Fannon, and W. B. Torrence) as committee on finances. Short speeches were then made by various ones of the ministry present, the order of the meetings as arranged by the president and his associate was announced, and the meeting closed.

The order of meetings as observed with some variations to suit conditions was as follows: At nine in the forenoon prayer services; at eleven o'clock, preaching; at half past two in the afternoon, services in charge of the young people; at a quarter to eight in the evening, preaching services.

The preaching at the reunion was done by J. D. Stead, Henry Kemp, J. A. Gunsolley, Will T. Ross, J. S. Snively, R. K. Ross, E. S. Fannon, R. M. Jeffries, John Hawley, and Frederick M. Smith, and was well received by both members and outsiders. Certain it is that those who were in attendance had no reason to be in doubt as to the position taken by the speakers and we trust that the people of Barnard and vicinity have a better understanding of the Latter Day Saints as a people, and of what they believe as a church. Bro. Stead started the preaching, he occupying the hour Sunday evening, the 10th, and J. S. Snively closed the preaching services on Sunday evening, the 17th. Throughout the reunion the brethren of the ministry seemed to enjoy good liberty, and we believe that good was done among both outsiders and members.

The prayer services were characterized by a spirit of quiet peace,—a source of much strength and encouragement to the participants.

Under the direction of J. A. Gunsolley, who represents in an official way both the Sunday-school Association and the Religio Society, the Saints enjoyed on Monday and Tuesday afternoons practical demonstration of the work of the Sunday-school and Religio. The latter was practically unknown to the Saints of the Nodaway District, as that district is without a Religio organization,—a condition which, we trust, will not continue long. We hope this feature of church work so demonstrated at Barnard Reunion will arouse the young Saints of the Nodaway District to activity along this line. Arouse yourselves, young Saints! Bro. Gunsolley left the ground Tuesday evening bound for Roscoe, Missouri, but the young people of the camp, under the direction of Will T. Ross, Sr. Anna Ivy, and W. B. Torrance, urged by others, kept things moving in fairly good shape. They held a prayer-meeting Wednesday afternoon, in which they were richly blessed and greatly encouraged. Thursday and Friday afternoons were devoted to Sunday-school and Religio work, and the young people turned Saturday afternoon over to the reunion management, and it was devoted to preaching services. We trust that the Nodaway District will profit by the work of these five afternoons, which were given over to the young people by the reunion management. We shall certainly regret it if the Saints there do not take advantage of the impetus gained and push the work of the Sunday-school and Religio with energy.

The reunion on the whole was a success, but it could have been made more prolific of good to the Saints. The committee was not so ably seconded in its efforts as it should have been. Surely there should have been more tents on the ground. Reunions are meant primarily to reunite the Saints. To make the reunion as successful as possible, therefore, as many as can should camp on the grounds and lend their assistance by presence and participation.

We are sure, however, that none who were present at this reunion regret having been there. It was a very pleasant occasion. The coöperative boarding tent was an experiment, but a successful one. The committee had secured the services of Nels Hansen (whose wife is a Latter Day Saint), an experienced and excellent cook, who managed his affairs in a way which greatly pleased and satisfied all who ate of his nicely prepared meals.

The plan on which the tent was run was strictly coöperative. At the close the total expenses were divided by the total number of meals, and the cost of each meal thus determined. It was a success.

On the whole the reunion was a success, and we greatly enjoyed our sojourn among the Saints of the Nodaway District, and feel benefited thereby. We trust the Saints were, also. We shall remember with pleasure our trip to Barnard.

The citizens of Barnard treated the Saints very courteously, and we never saw better behavior at a reunion than there. Only a few slight disturbances occurred.

Whether or not the Nodaway Saints will hold another reunion next year remains to be seen. A committee was appointed to determine the general sense of the district, and action will be taken probably at their next district conference. We trust the committee will find a spirit of hearty coöperation.

WM. S. GODBE DEAD.

William S. Godbe was one of those who many years ago raised a revolt against what they believed to be priestly tyranny in Utah. The movement was called the "Godbeite;" for what reason we do not know, unless it should be that he was one of the most aggressive of those engaged in it. If we remember correctly, there were associated as leaders of the movement, W. S. Godbe, W. H. Harrison, T. Y. Shearman, and H. W. Lawrence. Of these, we think H. W. Lawrence is the only one left.

We met these men at the house of Bro. Peter Rensimar, in Salt Lake City, in the fall of 1876, and had a very pleasant conversation with them upon the conditions into which "Mormonism," so-called, had fallen. Their movement at that time failed of its intended results. One cause of its failure as expressed by one of them in that conversation was to this effect: "We had thought and trusted that a priesthood of love would have been sufficient, but we have learned that a priesthood of power as well as of love is necessary."

In the Deseret News, of Salt Lake, for August 7, 1902, we notice a short obituary of Mr. Godbe, a mere notice of the services held in the First Congregational church in that city, in charge of Henry W. Lawrence; Judge Goodwin being the speaker to pay the tribute to the life and character of the passing individuality. The funeral was held August 6, so that Mr. Godbe likely died some two or three days before that.

Some of the HERALD readers who may have known Mr. Godbe will be interested in knowing of his departure for the land of spirits.

THE following from the Mexican Herald, of Mexico City, Mexico, August 4, 1902, sent us by Bro. Mervens, will be of considerable interest to those who like to study archaeological evidences:

NOTED DISCOVERIES.

Discoveries of remains of past ages are constantly being made in different parts of Mexico, but the latest, and, perhaps, the most interesting for some time is the unearthing of the huge skeleton of a mastodon near the station of Apaseo, where the National Railway has a gang of men engaged in making a cut for the new line.

M. B. King, one of the assistant engineers engaged at this point, was in the city yesterday and he said that while blasting in the side of the mountain an almost perfect skeleton of a mastodon had been uncovered from beneath a stratum of hard lime rock. Over the lime rock was also a stratum of volcanic formation which indicated that the animal had been buried centuries ago. The skull of the animal measured thirty-eight by sixty centimeters, and one of his tusks measured one and five hundredths meters.

Aside from the skeleton of this animal are a great many human skulls and other bones, also many stone dishes, all of which, judging from the formation of volcanic and lime rock under which they were found, indicates that they were buried centuries ago, when this valley consisted principally of volcanoes.

Indian arrow-heads resembling those common among the Apaches of the United States were among the relics taken out of the ground, and so far as is known these are the only arrow-heads of this character which have ever been found south of the Rio Grande. The camp is in charge of F. Winsted who is preserving a collection of the relics to be presented to the authorities.

"It is regarded through that part of the country as one of the most wonderful discoveries which has ever been made in Mexico," said Mr. King. "The railway officials have visited the scene and the huge skeleton of the mastodon which constitutes a fossil in the side of the mountain makes a wonderful sight to anyone who visits the cut. The bones of other animals which have not been identified have also been found in the cut, and it is expected that within the next few days many more wonderful discoveries will be made."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of August 8, Bro. La Rue wrote from Philadelphia: "Our conference at Baldwin, Maryland, August 2 and 3, passed off pleasantly. T. A. Hougas, General Superintendent of the Sunday-school Association, was with us. His instruction and pleasant association was very acceptable. He occupied Monday evening at the church here. Bro.

W. Atkinson was ordained as teacher, and the ordinations of H. H. Bacon as elder and A. D. Angus as priest were also approved by the conference. Sr. Mary B. Matthews, of Nottingham, Pennsylvania, was present at the conference. She is eighty-six years old, joined the church in 1842 and is yet firm in the faith she then espoused. She was well acquainted with Joseph and Hyrum. She bore a very interesting testimony. I asked her: 'When you joined the Reorganized Church were you rebaptized?' 'No, oh, no!' she said; 'they told me I need not do so, as there was no difference—it was all the same. And I have found it so.' After sixty long years in the service of the Master, may she at last have rest and peace among them who 'have kept the faith of Jesus.'"

Bro. I. N. Roberts writes from Pollard, Alabama, August 7: "Twenty-one baptisms in the last two weeks—and the good work still goes on. Remember me."

Bro. S. S. Smith, writing from Dover, Oklahoma, August 11: "Reunion in progress here at present. So far the attendance is light, but we are hopeful a better attendance will be had at the latter part. Bishop E. L. Kelley is here and giving saint and sinner sound and profitable instruction."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

E. M. Martin sends seven dollars twenty-five cents for the Graceland debt. The amount was collected in the Sunny Glen Sunday-school, Iowa. The remittance was accompanied by twenty-nine names, the donors.

By clipping from the Daily News, of Chicago, sent us by William C. Cummings, we note that Samuel W. Packard, who has been Dowie's attorney for some time past, has dissolved his contract with Dowie, and has withdrawn from the Christian Catholic Church. Bro. Cummings reports that four of Dowie's members have joined the South Chicago Branch and are earnest members. They were converted by street preaching and Bro. Cummings says: "So I say God bless the street work."

Bro. Mintun seems to be very busy among the newspapers and reporters.

Sr. C. D. Gerrish, writing from North Hancock, Maine, states that the Saints there have for some reason been shut out of the church (some local edifice) and the schoolhouse, and are now trying to build a house of their own in which to have services. They are but a handful, a dozen or so, but they have the framework labor donated, but lack siding and finishing stuff for the inside. Any who feel to help them send to George W. Homer, or C. D. Gerrish, care of Seth Hodgkins, North Hancock, Maine.

F. E. Cohrt wrote from Griswold, Iowa, August 9, that he had just reached there with the district tent, and would be there until September 1.

Original Articles.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

DELIVERED AT THE SAINTS' CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE,
MISSOURI, SUNDAY EVENING, JULY 20, 1902.

Reported by Belle Robinson James.

I trust that what I may have to say to-night may be profitable to all. While I am not impressed with any particular subject in a doctrinal sense, that portion of God's word that presents the thought that God hath not left himself without witness unto the world, suggests to me a line of argumentation that it may be well that we look at for a little while.

If it be true that God hath not left himself without witness, and the argument is good in that he hath sent his rain upon the just and the unjust alike, is one evidence that he has made provision for the material wants of man, and that when he hath decreed seed-time and harvest, he hath provided the rain and the dew, that the fruitful earth will give forth to the labor of man that by which he may be sustained, and it is strongly suggestive of the character of that testimony which the witness is endowed to bear, that these provisions of his kindness prove to us that human nature to-day is as human nature was at the time that the law was organized or instituted. For if we gather from the plains of the past that which sustained human nature and compare it with what is gathered now from the plains of the present, we discover that they are alike, evidently intended for the support of the same kind of men and women as were placed upon the earth and for whom the rains were instituted and the law made. This appertains to the world at large and it may be truthfully said that no man is left without this peculiar testimony borne in upon his consciousness that God hath had regard for man and hath ordained the ways of his living.

I am impressed with the thought, however, that the old Mosaic declaration is a true one, that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established," and if I make application of this text to-night, by virtue of the thoughts which are suggested by it, it seems to me that I will have spent the few minutes that I will address you with some degree of profit, at least to those of us who are willing to think.

Under this rule of law, even the life of man might be taken, or if an individual were accused of crime, and two or three witnesses testified against him, it would be considered that in whatever might have been testified against him, the witnesses had borne testimony to the truth, and under its operation men must answer the penalty of their crimes unto their fellow men. I am left to wonder if indeed that statement be true that it applies unto principles throughout all the generations of the past until now, whether God intended it should apply to us in a spiritual sense; whether in regard to our spiritual affairs, our spiritual endeavors, our spiritual hopes there has been such a creation, a provision that God has provided means for a like number of witnesses against men, for we surely can not be content with the one if the principle as such be operative now.

I am addressing you from a stand upon which lies the Bible, the Scripture, what is understood to be the "written law," and so far as the New Testament portion of it is concerned, it is called "The last will and Testament of Jesus Christ, the Savior," the Mediator of a new covenant, which was instituted to take the place of the old, because that which was old was wrought and finished here, and according to the statement made by the Apostle Paul, the comers unto this older covenant could not be made perfect. If we separate the old and the new, and call the old "one" and the new "two," we have two witnesses, and if by virtue of the institution of the new covenant the old were so abrogated, we still have but one witness, but the binding of the two together make them one in our hands.

We may or may not be a fortunate people in this respect. Whatever may happen to our neighbors in regard to their reverence for and observance of the things which are found in the Scriptures, we are left without excuse, as I think will be made clearly plain when you will remember what has been given to the church by virtue of revelation in which it is said, we "shall take the things which are written in my scriptures to be my law to govern my church, and he that doeth according to these things shall be saved, he that doeth them not shall be damned if he continue."

We have a good deal of disrespect shown in regard to the Bible in the world around us by those who may be classed as the irreverent men around us, and we have a more subtle disrespect shown to the word of God on the part of those who are striving to eliminate from it things which do not seem to comport with their human intelligence or their preconceived notion, until by the "Higher Criticism" some more stringent characteristics of the word of God, if they be not abrogated, they are stated to men in such a way as to lessen their vitality, injure their force and relegate their opinions unto the past. He is an unfortunate man who undertakes to apologize for God. We can neither make one hair black nor white, so far as our anxieties are concerned; we can not change the laws nor the seasons at our will. We are under obligation to take what comes to us in this material world with a direct knowledge that we can not avert the inevitable and we ought cheerfully, at least, to acquiesce in what is given us that is good, and bear with what patience we can whatever may be irksome in its character.

Regarding this as one witness, we might spend a good deal of time in inquiring as to what it testifies to, what is the nature of the testimony. We may briefly state that it is a characteristic statement of what God has done for men, showing forth the influences that he has brought to bear upon men to make their lives purer and better, and to bring them into relationship with himself. And it is strikingly significant in regard to those to whom the Scriptures may have at first been presented, that the after-history warrants the statement made by the historian that God should have said that they did not regard his covenant and as a consequence it did not produce for them what he intended it should.

I am satisfied that God did not intend to leave this world without a further and completer testimony, and that he, having been the author of that statement, that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses should every word be established," that he would observe this rule in dealings with men. I might cite you to a good many things that were testified to under the old regime, but it seems to me to be sufficient to cite you to the consideration that when the people were in bondage he undertook to relieve them from their bondage, and he sent them the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night; he sent them the healing influences, and he wrought with Pharaoh for their deliverance, and protected them in their migration, and yet so indifferent were that people to the character of the testimony which was borne by the witnesses, that the greater mass of them perished miserably in the wilderness, while only a very few of the faithful ones were saved.

In the meridian of time, he chose to send his Son, and in order that he might make more binding, if possible, the testimonies of the past concerning himself, he makes the sending of this Son conform to the prophetic declarations which had been uttered concerning him, so that the people of the time in which he came were left without excuse; if they mistook his character or misunderstood the nature of the testimony which he bore to them. He was not an inanimate witness to the world, the testimony which he bore was clearly a living one, and in his own person he brought to bear the power of the Godhead, in bearing a truthful testimony unto the children of men, and they disregarded him, and they are disregarding him to this day.

It is not for the purpose of finding fault with my Christian friends, Christian believers in other faiths than those which we have espoused, it is not my purpose to endeavor to make light of their faith or their beliefs, but it is a fact that is accentuated by the attitude of a great many so-called believers in the word of God, that there is a persistent, and I may say an irreverent effort made to so soften the nature of the testimony which these witnesses have borne, including the Son of God, that men's consciences shall be lulled to ease and that these shall take it for granted that those things which have been uttered by the divine presence, and through the ministration of his Holy Spirit and the Master when he came, are to be shown to be of non-effect, that it was not intended to operate upon the period of time in which we are living, was not intended to apply unto those men who live at the present time: in the great excess of their knowledge and their wisdom and the wonderful advancement which men have made in the world, it was not intended to apply to them, but in the times of the ignorance of the people it was intended that this law should be strictly observed, but when there came this advancement it was not to be that way.

Whatever others of our neighbors may gather from the work; whatever they may consider to be binding upon themselves; however much or however little of it they may choose to believe, the people whom I am addressing and in whose behalf I speak as a minister among them have no excuse, for they have been enlightened as to the character of the testimony which the old scripture bears unto us and mankind with us. They have been enlightened as to the character of the testimony of Jesus Christ and the Spirit which accompanied him, and as a consequence they can not plead ignorance when the judgment shall sit upon them, and if they have failed to understand his mission, if they fail to understand the testimony which he has borne, it is because they have lived, whether consciously or unconsciously in an unfaithful condition and have not given due credence to that which the witness has testified to and have not read with sufficient attention those things which have been testified of.

I frequently hear the statement made from the stand and among the Saints upon the floor of the prayer and testimony meeting, that, "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not in accordance with this word there is no light in them," and apply it to whomsoever it may have application to in their minds, but do they make this statement always with the direct understanding of what the law and the testimony are? If they do not, then they may misjudge the individuals whom they propose to thus minister unto in their judgment. The law must clearly be taken and the commandments which have been given of God at any period of the earth's history that were calculated to bear upon all mankind alike.

The law must be that portion of the enactments written which have application unto mankind as using the word in the generic sense, and if there be promises connected with the commandment, then the promises do not attach as written in the law until the conditions precedent have been fulfilled. As a consequence we ought to be more careful how we say of our neighbors, "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to that, it is because they have no light in them."

Now the testimony—what is it? The testimony of Moses and the prophets is to us. The testimony of the history of God's dealings with men; these things were written of olden time concerning things which men did both in Israel and out of Israel, that is the testimony. Then the Spirit bore witness, too, in the days that are past among the people of God, concerning the dealings of God and his handiwork upon the nations and the people that compose the great mass of mankind. That is the testimony, and if we are faithful hearers of that testimony, we must regard that testimony as truth, and only by the truth can we be saved. We sometimes are largely found fault with because that we have assumed that there has come to us a book called the Book of Mormon. Well now, so far as this book is concerned, it is but the secondary witness, the second witness. If this witness we introduced had discredited that which had been testified to before, if the testimony that is found in this book had disturbed the relationship which should exist between God and Jesus Christ and mankind to whom they testify, it never would have survived the publication of the first edition, never would have become the target of so much that has been said in the past and is being said now, but the very fact that it testified of that which had been testified of before, the very fact that it testified of those things which had been testified of prior to that time, comes home to us with additional force when it is said to us by virtue of the Spirit and force of the revelation of our own time, "Thou shalt take the things which are written in my Scriptures and in the Book of Mormon, and these shall be your teaching, as you are moved upon by the Holy Spirit." Have we any excuse, then, in reference to this witness?

What is the grand truth which is borne witness of in the Book of Mormon? What is the central thought? I will not say the "Golden Text," but what is the central thought from the opening of the book till its last chapter? It is that Jesus was the Christ, that he was the Redeemer, that he was sent of God unto the human race to ameliorate the condition of ignorance into which they had fallen, to reach out the helping hand to them, and lift them above the conditions in which they might find themselves by virtue of the departure of mankind from the commandments of God. It was intended to fortify the people to whom these latter commandments came by virtue of the revelation from God against the attacks of the adversary from without, against the attacks of unbelief from within, and to so establish them upon the few fundamental truths upon which the great gospel plan of salvation was based that they would not be easily seduced upon the right hand or upon the left; would not be moved upon by every wind of doctrine, nor by every careless teacher that might come among them, nor by every band that might gather themselves together and say they are the people of God.

I am surprised that men are led in this and that direction, and being deceived by careless testimony and careless rendition of the word which we have, let go the things which are testified of in the Bible and in the Book of Mormon. I am surprised. I am surprised again when I find that some things that are but secondary, so far as the teaching of the Bible and the Book of Mormon are concerned, are allowed to assume primary importance, and those who may seek thus to see them, lose sight of every other consideration in the book and make these few things, or this particular thing, the chief thing in all their teaching, and as a consequence fail to give that credence to those things which they should have heeded and become careless in their lives.

Now in order that I may make it plain, let me cite you to one or two things that I have in mind. We believe in the healing of the sick by the laying on of hands. In some instances these healing elements of the body is made the primary consideration in the thoughts of men in some of their organizations, and they leave out all the rest of the spiritual work, that which has direct reference to the spirits of men and has relation to their lives here and their lives hereafter, in conditions of trial and strife you may say below, but over yonder in conditions of happiness, contentment and peace. Now I am sometimes surprised at that. What are these elements of the body? They last but a little while. It is appointed unto man to die. It is said that every man and woman that lives to the age of forty-five years has the seed of the disease of which the individual will perish developed in their bodies, and sooner or later the time must come that this insidious disease will work its effect and the individual must die. Now what does it matter of what particular disease I may die? This body must return to the grave; it must go down either in some purging sickness, or it may be stricken out of existence at one moment of time without pain; it may lie upon a bed where pain and distress and sorrow and suffering may be the effect upon the flesh, and yet the spirit may bear its trial and triumph in the hour of death and the individuality be accounted just as good as though it had never suffered pain and had never died the death of the body.

I am surprised, sometimes, that men prize healing from their infirmities above their spiritual advancement. It can be but secondary at its best. If it had not been, why should the Savior have said, "He that believeth on me shall not taste of death"? What does this mean? Does it mean that man shall not die? No, but it means that so far as the fear and dread of approaching dissolution they shall be taken out of the mind of the individual, it shall not have supreme power over him.

Again, it is, as I understand it, the testimony of both the Old and the New Testament Scriptures, and the testimony of the Book of Mormon, is to the effect that individuals may so live up to the teaching of Jesus Christ while they are here, that they may realize spiritual standing with him; when that is once accomplished they shall be for ever standing with him and no matter what may be the character of the events of this life, no matter what may be the destruction that awaits the earth, its burning nor its throes of agonizing dissolution, these individuals who have thus established relationship with Jesus Christ are his, and he has said to the Father, "Thou hast given me them and I have kept them," and if he did keep them, he will keep those who covenant with him now, no matter if the worlds go to destruction in their throes of dissolution, those individuals who have established covenant relationship with God through Jesus Christ need never fear that their spiritual standing is involved and will follow the destruction of the material things of this world.

Do you not remember what the Master said, as recorded in the 24th chapter of Matthew when speaking of the things and the time when they should transpire of which he had informed them concerning the temple, "Not one stone shall be left upon another, they shall all be thrown down"? I have lived to see a temple erected in the name of God by a people who were supposed to be the church of God or the people of God. I have lived to see that temple desecrated and not one stone left upon another that was not thrown down. And it followed but the fate of the one away over yonder in the eastern country that had become polluted, it had been desecrated, not one stone was left above another. And why should we make the building of a temple the first and primary thing of importance in this latter-day work? Why should we make every spiritual blessing turn upon the simple fact of the erection of a temple, a building made of stone and mortar by human hands? Why should we make that first in our consideration? Why should we make it first in our consideration that a people should be gathered into one spot and there, by virtue of an investiture from Almighty God receive the endowment of spiritual righteousness that will make them sanctified in God's sight without an effort upon their part to make themselves worthy to dwell in a band of such a character as that? Why should we do that?

I remember one of the old-time Saints, I remember standing by his side when a prophecy made concerning him was ringing in my ears through its reiteration by those who clung to his fortunes and assumed that he was one upon whom the mantle of leadership fell, and the prophecy was that his trowel should ring upon the walls of the temple in Zion. That man was such a slave to tobacco that he wore a common cotton shirt with a turn-down collar and from his chin to his waist, his beard and his clothes and his sleeves were literally stained with tobacco juice, and by his side as I stood by him, on the floor was a milk pan that was filled with the filthy remnants of the weed that had passed through his lips. I said in my heart, "If the trowel of that man ever rings upon the temple in Zion, it will be a spiritual trowel and in a spiritual land and a spiritual temple." Men who build the temple, wherever it may be built, it being the secondary consideration in the great process of making men religious and sanctifying them before God, must be pure-minded men, must be upright-minded men, must not have the filthy lucre of this world clinging to their fingers obtained by unholy or unrighteous means; they must be honest men; they will likely be poor men in the largest sense of the term, but they will be faithful witnesses for God, first of the establishment of his gospel in these latter days; secondary to the bearing of a faithful testimony unto the children of men, that by virtue of the restoration of that gospel there has been born anew upon the earth among men the hope of life and salvation; not merely the healing of the ills of the flesh, but the ills, the spiritual ills by which the soul shall become purified not only in the sight of God but before all men; when these distinctions that now separate men will be thrown down, when there shall be a better and a more widely spread universal love of man for his fellow man.

Now that is what I look for. I look for spiritual advancement. I look for spiritual sanctification among the people of God. I look for a brighter, nobler aspiration to move them by day and by night. I look for the time to come when there shall be not a conformity to the principles of honesty because it pays in a commercial sense, but because it has become the innate and governing principle among men, honest in dollars and cents, honest in fair dealing with their fellow men, honest in spiritual convictions between them and their fellows both in and out of the church, when we will quit using these harmful and degrading adjectives by which one man's character is made less by our words and another man is exalted by our words.

I have not forgotten that in the New Testament Scripture, made doubly sacred to us by virtue of the rendition of giving it to us in what we call the "Inspired" Scripture, that the Master has said unto those who were chosen to preach his gospel, "Ye are my witnesses, and ye shall testify of me," and why? Why, because "that ye have received of me and ye shall receive of me." When by virtue of the return of the days of revelation in our own period of time this was renewed, there was said unto us by the voice of revelation, "Ye are my witnesses." What is the character of the testimony that we are bearing?

A few of us met in a park over in Kansas City to-day. What is the character of the testimony which we, as a people, bore over there? Is it to be but the evanescent effect that may have been made by our songs? Is it to be by the possible presentation of some of the glittering aptitude of our speech by which we may have sought to create a favorable impression upon those who might have heard us, or was it not intended by the assembly over there and what we sang and did in our gathering back there to testify before God of the hope that is within us, and to testify to those that are without that here is a people who are striving to do the will of God, to become righteous administrators of a righteous law, and to bear such a testimony unto the children of men that it would bear comparison with that of the ancient men who lived in the Old Testament times, should be characteristic of that which was borne by Christ and his disciples in pursuit of teaching the children of men the same hope of life and salvation? Was it intended to be a living representation of that wondrous spirit of life that was to be given to those who should obey Christ in the time in which we live? Now I know that these questions are pertinent to the issue and to the hour. I know that the eyes of the world are turned upon us, and we have given recognition of it time and again when we have asked the world to take cognizance of what we are presenting to them and for their consideration. But mark you, unless the testimony of our lives, both in public and in private shall be of such a character that it testifies as did the Savior, as did the disciples, as did the ancient holy men of old, our witness will be counted as against us, and the great effort that we are striving to make will fail insomuch that our hope will be deferred.

I was permitted only a few days ago to stand before a band of people out in the woods of Michigan—where there had been woods, but where the industrious hands of men had taken from the land that which God had caused to grow so wondrously—and now they are compelled to turn their attention to something else. But from the western shore of the State of Michigan to the eastern confines of the same in the land called the northern portion of it, there have been at work men who have been sent out under the ministration of this latter-day work who have made a band clear across that State, the witness being borne unto the children of men. What is the character of their testimony? It is that God hath sent messengers unto this world, revived again the gospel of the Son of God, and has given witness unto those that are obedient that Jesus was the Christ and that in due time he would come again, receive unto himself those who are prepared and who had borne a faithful record before him.

Have you never heard it said in behalf of those who should bear testimony in the prayer and testimony meeting that a record was kept of those who were valiant in testimony? Was this alone the testimony of the lips, the testimony of the voice, the testimony of the words? Let me tell you there is many a faithful brother and sister whose voices are not heard in the prayer-meeting but whose lives are complete testimonies before the children of men and in the sight of God, and when the time shall come, that which they have borne witness to, that testimony which has been borne will stand more clearly to their credit than the loudest testimony of some of us who love to be heard.

And now, in order that we might not be left without the third witness, the Lord has graciously seen fit to speak to us in our own language from time to time. He has clothed the third witness with testimony bearing power, and in order that we should not mistake the first, and in order that we should not mistake the second, he hath in the third borne record of that which he had given us before, and in order that we might not mistake that which had been given to us by virtue of that testified to us by the first and second and third, he has opened the windows on high and has sent down unto us and with our spirits and into our hearts and minds the testimony that bears witness to us individually, each one, and that testimony is like the testimony that Jesus bore concerning his Father, that whatsoever he did he did it because his Father had told him. Whatsoever we do, we must do because his Son hath told us to do it.

Now I feel grateful that I am permitted once again in my time to visit you, to greet those of you whom I have labored with years and years ago, with whom my lifelines have been cast from my early ministry until now, and with whom I anticipate to walk cheerfully, contentedly, and socially to go until it shall be my privilege to go out into the great beyond or to miss you here, you having gone before; but we must meet again, and let us see to it that whether we meet in the flesh or meet in the spirit we shall have so borne witness that when the witnesses' testimony shall be compared there shall be no conflict between that which Jesus has testified to and that which we bore witness to, that those may agree. Never mind what attraction may be upon the right hand or upon the left; never mind what fragmentary things may be presented to you; never mind the "Lo, here," and "Lo, there," that may be uttered in your hearing. If you find that which is better elsewhere, it is your privilege to take it, but let me tell you, do not accept that which is fragmentary, and let go that which is everlasting, which is eternal. Be careful that you do not exchange away that which is good for that which is not good, that which is best for that which is not best. See to it that you be careful not to do that, because if you do, what will you do with the testimony that the Bible shall bear against you in that great day? What will you do with the testimony that the Book of Mormon will bear against you in that day? What will you do with the testimony of the witness that shall be borne against you by the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the revelations given to the church? What will you answer? What can you answer to the witness which the Spirit of God has given you that this is the work of God? What will you do with it?

Let me exhort you. Be patient, be faithful, be true. Forget not what has been borne witness to you. Forget not those who have testified who have gone before. Forget not the hosts of witnesses by which you are surrounded. Run with patience the race that is set before you, and you will find peace, comfort, joy, happiness here, and bye and bye complete contentment and a reception over there on the other side when you will be counted with the hosts that have gone before of the good and the redeemed of all earth.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH? — NO. 6.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

We must have the bread of heaven direct and personal, as we must have earthly bread direct and personal. We can not exist spiritually without personal and immediate revelation.

We can not do better in support of this fact than to quote the words of Frederick William Robertson, and the comments of E. E. Bisby, in the Arena of New York City, one of the leading magazines in America, in the issue for January, 1896, pages 187, 188:

The God of the mere theologian is scarcely a living God. He did live, but for some eighteen hundred years, we are credibly informed, that no trace of his life has been seen. The canon is closed. The proofs that he was, are in the things that he has made, and the books of men to whom he spake, but he inspires and works wonders no more. According to the theologians, he gives us proofs of design instead of God, doctrines instead of the life indeed.

Mr. Bisby commenting on the above says:

Never was there a truer statement of a false theology, a theology from which the world must break away or wander in endless night. The denial of present-day inspiration comes from the identification of inspiration with infallibility. Herein lies one of the strangest inconsistencies of religious logic. Theologians claim absolute biblical infallibility, but deny present-day infallibility; they, therefore, feel obliged to deny present-day inspiration. It will be a great day for the human race when it is freely admitted that infallibility is not the necessary logical consequence of inspiration. To acknowledge the every-day presence and power of the Holy Spirit as the spirit of revelation and truth, and with the same breath, to declare revelation ended and sealed, is the height of absurdity. Theologians feel this, and in order to escape, they tell us that the Bible is a special revelation, a revelation having the especial credentials of the Almighty such as miracles and minute predictions. They acknowledge that God is always the same, that his years fail not, that he is no respecter of persons, that he is the common Father of the great brotherhood of man, that in him we live and move and have our being, and yet by predetermination, he waited several thousand years after the dawn of civilization before he began his so-called special revelation, and then sealed it up in one of the darkest hours of the world's history. It is this erroneous view, this false conception of God and revelation which has retarded progress and is the great danger of the present hour.

By a superficial view of Revelation 22:18, our opponents affirm, as stated above, that God would pronounce a curse on any one that "Will add to the prophecy of this book," which word book they interpret to mean the Bible, notwithstanding the New Testament was not then compiled. By so doing they are compelled to throw out St. John and also the three general epistles of John, for they were written by the same man after he wrote the book of Revelation.

This text simply and only shows that the book of Revelation is the one referred to, and that man only is forbidden to add to that book, but that God is not prohibited from speaking when he pleases.

Another objector quotes 1 Corinthians 12:31, as being against us. It is as follows: "But covet earnestly the best gifts, and yet show I unto you a more excellent way."

From this it is argued, that a different plan than having tongues, prophecies, and revelations is sought to be established by Paul. If our objectors had quoted the three previous verses they need not make such a mistake, for a mistake it is. For their good and ours we will insert them here:

And God has set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret? But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way.—1 Corinthians 12:28-31.

To make the matter more plain, suppose every one in the church, "all" spoke with tongues and no one interpreted, would they be edified? and if so where would be the teachers and other officers? If they were "all" prophets where would be the apostles? Paul wished here to repeat what he has been telling them "all these worketh that one . . . spirit dividing to every man as he will." See verse 11. He wanted them to see that it was better to have a variety than to be all of one kind, or for all to receive but one gift. That is plainly what he meant by "a more excellent way." We are certain that that was his idea for he continues to perpetuate the possibility of the gifts of prophecy and tongues in the subsequent chapters as follows:

"Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied. Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues."—1 Corinthians 14:1, 5, 39, I. T.

In the last verse we have the same word "covet" as in the twelfth chapter. In one place he says "covet the best gifts," in the other, "covet to prophesy." This shows that Paul regarded prophecy as one of the best gifts and looked upon it as one that was not to pass away until that which was perfect had come.

While it was possible for them all to prophesy, yet the better way—"more excellent way"—was to have a variety.

Who will dare to say that the Holy Ghost will not impart to man to-day the same gifts (prophecy among the others) as then. Has God changed?

The following article, though quite lengthy, answers so completely the sophistry of our opponents, that we can not do better than insert it here. It will bear rereading:

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

The present age is noted for daring steps towards universal unbelief. Not only are these taken by the professed unbelievers, but the more covert and dangerous ones by those who profess belief. Any departure from primitive Christianity, either in organization, doctrines, or blessings, should be regarded as a step towards point blank unbelief. If we discard a part of what God placed in the church, we certainly are preparing our minds and the minds of those who follow in our footsteps, to discard the whole. One step taken, it is easy and natural to take another in the same direction; and the result is the completion of the journey toward the dark and cheerless land of atheism.

No more daring step in this direction has ever been taken than that taken when it is said that there is a more excellent way than the exercise of the best gifts God ever placed in his church. This position says in fact, that though the Holy Ghost is one of the highest, holiest, and most powerful agents that has ever blessed the souls of men, yet the state of the church when it directly communicated with it was low and barren, as compared with that more excellent state when this holy agent ceased to act directly upon the souls of men; and when if it acts at all, it is so indirectly that it scarcely affects the recipient at all. It says that while the full blaze of sunlight is poured upon the world, it is dark and almost lifeless; but when that sun becomes obscured that it can not be seen, and the effects of its rays indirectly reaching the world are so feeble that they can scarcely be noted, then the world is in its palmy days, teeming with the varied forms of animal and vegetable life.

The theory referred to is based upon the thirty-first verse of the twelfth chapter of first Corinthians, which reads: "Seek earnestly the best gifts, and yet show I unto you a more excellent way."

The apostle is here pointing out without question a way more excellent than some other way. The force of the declaration we do not seek to avoid. But what we object to is the substitution of the word "state" or "things" for the word "way," making the apostle say, "I show unto you a more excellent" state of the church, or "I show unto you more excellent" things, than the spiritual gifts. The theory is obliged to substitute one word for another, violating every known rule of just and honorable warfare, before it can make headway at all; for the apostle is manifestly referring to the "way," that is, manner or style of doing something, not to a condition or state. The apostle just preceding the language spoken, had written, "Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret?" Then without answering these questions says, "Seek earnestly the best gifts, and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." That is, "yet," notwithstanding, all do not speak with tongues, all do not prophesy, etc., I show, I do now show unto you a more excellent way, which is the exercise by each one of his own proper gift. The apostle does not say I will show unto you a more excellent way, but I show, I do now show unto you a more excellent way, which more excellent way is more clearly pointed out in the twelfth chapter of first Corinthians.

To the position that the apostle means a more excellent way than the exercise of the best spiritual gifts, we oppose the following objections: There can be nothing better than the best; to say that by descending from the best to a "better way," we improve our condition, is only to do violence to the plain meaning of simple words. In the realm of spiritual power and moral influence, nothing better, nobler, or more efficacious has ever been brought to bear upon the souls of men, than the Holy Ghost; there can then be nothing better than its gifts.

Paul compares the church with all the gifts which God had set in it to a perfectly organized body, capable of the highest and most complete spiritual development; therefore, inasmuch as taking away from that which is perfect always renders it imperfect, taking away from the church any of the gifts which God placed in it, instead of changing it from imperfection to perfection, would change it from perfection to imperfection.

Three of the gifts included in the language, "Seek earnestly the best gifts," are faith, wisdom, and knowledge. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." "To know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent," is "life eternal." Then to banish these three gifts from the church is to cut off the hope of salvation, which, though it may be in the estimation of unbelievers a more excellent way, in the estimation of all true believers is a less excellent way. It will not do here to interpolate the word "miraculous," and make the apostle say, miraculous faith, miraculous wisdom, miraculous knowledge; for this is a bold attempt at perversion. The apostle says no such thing; and whoever attempts to put such language into his mouth, boldly attempts to pervert the word of God. If it is said that this is what the apostle means, and therefore we have the right to supply the word miraculous, we answer it is not what he means, for it is not what he says. Moreover, the working of miracles is a separate gift mentioned separately by the apostle; showing that he did not mean to be understood that the faith, knowledge, and wisdom he spoke of were to be regarded as miraculous, any more than all of God's manifestations and blessings to the world are miraculous, that is wonderful, to those who do not believe.

Unless a dead man is more perfect than a live one, the church is not more perfect without these inspirational gifts than it was with them. As noted already, the apostle compares the church as organized with inspired officers and the gifts of the Spirit, to a perfectly organized body. Therefore, inasmuch as the taking away of the members of a body, disorganizes and kills it, so the taking away of the gifts of the Spirit and the inspired officers of the church would kill the church; therefore the lifeless trunk, moldering to dust, is not to the believer a more excellent body, than that with all its limbs and joints acting as the all-wise organizer, God, intended they should act, presenting a body capable of the highest and best attainments. In this connection we quote the vigorous language of William Howitt in his "History of the Supernatural," volume 1, page 230: "How is it that those who contend for the cessation of miracles, do not see the argument and feel the logic of St. Paul? If his illustration be worth anything, then a church which has not for its members, persons possessed of all these varied gifts, is no more a church of Christ than a body is a human body without its members. A Christian, living church, must have members qualified and endowed from the Spirit, with all these gifts, or it is destitute of its members. They are no more living, real members, than a wooden leg, or an artificial hand, or a glass eye is a real member of the human body. A church must have its spiritual members, living and complete, or it is no body of Christ. It may call itself what it will, but that will not make it any more a church."

John Wesley, in his notes on the New Testament, when treating of the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth chapters of first Corinthians, says: "He describes first the unity of the body, verses 1-27; second, the variety of members and officers, verses 27-30; third, the way of exercising gifts rightly; namely, by love, verse 31, and chapter 13 throughout; and adds fourth, a comparison of several of the gifts with each other, 14th chapter."

It will be noticed that Mr. Wesley held that the thirty-first verse of the twelfth chapter, referred to a way of exercising the gifts, not to a way of conducting the affairs of the church without them.

In the Quarterly Review of April, 1884, we find an article from the pen of J. H. Garrison, in which occurs the following in regard to the illustration used by St. Paul in the twelfth chapter of first Corinthians: "The whole tenor of the chapter in which the illustration occurs is to show the unity of aim in all the diverse operations of the same Spirit. Just as the members of the human body, animated and controlled by the human spirit, make one body, so the various members of Christ's body, animated and controlled by the Holy Spirit, are one spiritual body."

If the apostle meant that he would after the writing of the thirty-first verse of the twelfth chapter, point out a more excellent way, he never fulfilled his promise. He never did afterwards point out a more excellent way. It is argued that he fulfilled his promise in the thirteenth chapter; but upon examination it is seen, that while he points out a more excellent state of the believers than the one they occupy in this life, he nowhere points out a more excellent way, style, method of exercising or doing anything. He says: "Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away."—1 Corinthians 13: 8.

From this it is clear that the passages to the more excellent state referred to, involves as well the vanishing away of knowledge, as the cessation of tongues and prophecies; and unless it be claimed, either that the church knows nothing, or knows all things, then it can not be maintained that it is in that more perfect state; for the vanishing away of knowledge can only mean one of two things; the cessation of knowledge altogether, or the reception of such complete knowledge that an incomplete or partial knowledge is swallowed up therein. It will be difficult for any church to maintain the position that it possesses a fullness of knowledge; and it will be equally as difficult to prevail upon any church to acknowledge that it is without knowledge altogether; so no church can maintain the position that it is in the more perfect state.

That the apostle referred to states of believers here and hereafter, is evident from the fact that he states that he occupied the imperfect state when writing, and should occupy the perfect state in the future.

"For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part, but then I shall know even as also I am known."—1 Corinthians 13: 12.

Paul could not have inherited the two states of the church supposed by the theory in question; for he being an inspired apostle, and having direct communion with God, angels, and Jesus Christ, his very presence would obstruct the wheels of progress, and prevent the ushering in of that glorious day when direct communion with God should cease, and the perfect church should appear. The apostle clearly shows that he refers to a time when partial and imperfect things shall be exchanged for those which are full and perfect. A variety of imperfect languages will be exchanged for a pure and perfect language. Prophecy, foretelling future events, will no longer be needed, because the future as well as past will be before the all-comprehensive vision of the glorified saints. The partial knowledge which we now possess shall be swallowed up in the fullness of knowledge which we shall then receive. As the partial light which the stars and moon provide for us at night is swallowed up and vanishes away before the full light of the morning sun; so the partial things enjoyed by the saints in their imperfect state of mortality, will be swallowed up and vanish away in their perfect state of immortality.

"Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face."

If the apostle's language was a prophecy that the church when the spiritual gifts ceased should enjoy a more excellent state, we demand to know when that prophecy was fulfilled. The theory in question proceeds upon the supposition that the passing away of that which is imperfect is caused by the coming of that which is perfect; hence, we should look for perfection just in proportion as apostolic inspiration and primitive gifts passed away. Just in proportion as direct communion with God ceased, in just such proportion according to this theory we should look for the perfect state of the church to be inaugurated. A shift, however, is here made, and we are told that it is not the church that is to be perfect, but the law of the gospel. This assumption, however, fails to remedy the defect complained of; for the apostle places the coming "of that which is perfect," and the seeing "face to face," as contemporaneous events, the latter being the inevitable result of the former. So the coming of that which is perfect spoken of by the apostle, will be attended by that condition of the saints in which they no longer see through a glass darkly, but "face to face." Three things are inseparably connected by the apostle; the passing away of imperfection, the coming of perfection, and the seeing "face to face." This seeing face to face is manifestly a perfect seeing, as is shown by the imperfect seeing being compared to seeing "through a glass darkly." If the facts of history show, that instead of light and unity increasing in the church as the spiritual gifts were withdrawn, darkness and disunity increased, accompanied with all kinds of blasphemous heresies, the theory in question fails. What are the facts of history in this regard?

Doctor Conyers Middleton says on page 530 of "Healing of the Nations:" "After the year 220, from thence to 250, the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit did decrease and grow less in comparison of the time preceding. And at the latter end of that period, Origen acquaints us, that though in his age the gift of prophesying still remained, yet it was decreased, and not in the same measure as in the foregoing age."

In Waddington's Church History, volume 1, page 209, we find the following: "But it was an error to confound the three earliest with the three following centuries; as if the same had been the government, spirit, and discipline of the church from the age of Saint Clement to Saint Gregory. We find the first of these periods was somewhat removed from apostolical perfection; but in the second the distance is incalculably multiplied, and that, not only according to the customary progress of unreformed abuses, but also through changing the principles in the administration of the church, which preceded every other cause."

Fleetwood's Life of Christ, page 668, contains the following: "Constantine, though not yet baptized, called himself "the external bishop of the church," (without any protest from the Catholic bishops, not even the bishop of Rome,) and changed its whole constitution to conform it to the new constitution of the state. This baleful union of the Catholic Church with the state, is the true origin of the Roman Catholic Church; but its apostolical and holy character, as the church of Christ, perished. The glory was departed."

Of commentators' views we have only room to offer a few extracts. First, Newton: "The Empire was idolatrous under the heathen emperors, and then ceased to be so under the Christian emperors, and then became so again under the Roman pontiffs, and hath so continued ever since."—Cause and Cure of Infidelity, page 144.

John Fleetwood, speaking of the fore part of the second century, says: "The Christian world of this period, was fast forgetting those apostolic cautions, and drifting away into a darkness that might be felt."—Life of Christ, page 636.

James Challin: "Surely there is something in Christianity higher and deeper than the exhibition of it now known. The results as they appear to our eyes can not be what its author designed only to reach."—Elements of the Gospel, page 67.

Barton W. Stone: "Sectarianism, which is only another name for heresy, sprung out of the apostasy, and the parties named themselves according to their own fancy."

Alexander Campbell: "The Lord Jesus will judge that adulterous brood, and give them over to the burning flame, who have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant, and formed alliances with the governments of the earth. The meaning of this institution, or covenant, has been buried under the rubbish of human tradition for hundreds of years; it was lost in the dark ages, and has never been until recently disinterred, and, since the grand apostasy was completed, to the present generation, the gospel of Jesus Christ has not been laid open to mankind in its original plainness and simplicity. A veil in reading the new covenant has been upon the hearts of Christians, as the apostle declared it was upon the hearts of the Jews in reading the old covenant at the close of that economy."—Christian System, p. 189.

A "grand apostasy completed," and a veil over the eyes of the people in reading the terms of the new covenant, do not bear much resemblance to seeing "face to face."

If it is claimed that Paul's prophecy has been fulfilled in the work of the Reformers, we say first, that the Reformation came too late for such fulfillment; for as shown before, the passing away of that which is imperfect, which this theory supposes to be the state of the church when it enjoyed direct communion with God, was to be immediately followed by the coming of that which is perfect. No lapse of hundreds of years between the two events was contemplated. This is a sufficient answer to this assumption. But, if the position is still adhered to, we ask which one of the Reformers fulfilled the prophecy of the apostle? Which one of them established a church, which is either possessed of all knowledge or of no knowledge at all? Almost all of the Reformers, except Alexander Campbell, believed in the miraculous manifestation of God's power, and deplored the loss by the church of the spiritual gifts. If Alexander Campbell's work was a realization of the fulfillment of Paul's supposed prophecy that the church should enter a more excellent state when deprived of the spiritual gifts, a double interest should center upon the facts connected with the present state of that work. In an article headed, "Can We Divide," written by J. H. Garrison, a representative man of the Disciples, or Christians, published in the Quarterly Review for April, 1884, a representative paper of that movement, the following interesting language is used:

"The time has come, however, in our own history, when the principles we have been so zealously urging upon others, must submit to the supreme test of self application. If they do not stand this test—if they fail to prevent division in the ranks of their own advocates under circumstances similar to those which have caused division among others—they will stand convicted of impracticability, if nothing worse, at the bar of public sentiment. A ship may cross the Atlantic in fair weather and on a smooth sea, and yet be fatally defective in some essential point of seaworthiness. But when the faithful vessel has plowed its way through mountain billows whipped into fury by the dark wing of the tempest, and engines, pumps, propeller, rudder, hull, masts, rigging, compass—all have stood the test of the storm-king's fury, and have landed the precious cargo safely at the desired haven, then, and not till then, does it command the full confidence of sailors and ocean voyagers.

"It can not be denied that we are now on trial before the world, and before God, on this fundamental feature of our religious movement. Our failure at this point would be a grievous blow to the growing sentiment in favor of Christian unity throughout the religious world. Nay more; it would send back into cheerless infidelity many who have been groping their way out of the tangled maze of doubt by the light which our position has thrown upon their path."

The sum of these extracts is this: The Disciple Church is a mere experiment, and if it proves successful, it will live to do good; but if it proves unsuccessful, it will be a great injury. What it will result in, is a matter for the future, and that alone, to determine. This from the best of authority, settles the question under consideration against the Disciples. I will, however, offer one more quotation, from the pen of Clark Braden, in the same number of the Review:

"Will our papers stop falsifying the teaching of the Bible, the plain declarations of the son of God, and all sense, and stop jabbering the stuff about 'pieces of days being counted for whole days,' and cease retailing this papal falsehood that Jesus was crucified on Friday and lay in the tomb thirty hours?"

No other church having had the audacity to make the claim in question, no other need be considered.

There is a logic, superior to all other logic, the logic of events. When facts and theories stand opposed to each other, theories must fail. Theories do well enough as playthings for the would-be wise; but when exploded by facts and still adhered to, they become the "heritage of fools." The theory in question supposes, and the supposition is vital to its existence, that the spiritual gifts and miraculous manifestations attending the gospel in the days of the apostles, were to cease when the apostles and those to whom they communicated these blessings were dead. If, therefore, the facts are that these gifts did not cease at the time supposed, but continued for a long time thereafter, the theory wanting support in evidence, falls to the ground.

Irenæus, who lived at the end of the second century, says: "Far are they—the churches—from raising the dead in the manner the Lord and his apostles did, by prayer; yet even among the brethren, frequently in a case of necessity, when a whole church has united in much fasting and prayer, the spirit has returned to the ex-animated body, and the man has been granted to the prayers of the saints."—Eusebius, p. 214.

Irenæus says again: "Some most certainly and truly cast out demons, so that frequently those persons themselves that were cleansed from wicked spirits, believed and were received into the church. Others have the knowledge of things to come, as also visions and prophetic communications. Others heal the sick by the imposition of hands, and restore them to health. And moreover, as we said above, even the dead have been raised, and continued with us many years. And why should we say more? It is impossible to tell the number of gifts which the church throughout the world received from God, and the deeds performed in the name of Jesus Christ, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and this, too, every day for the benefit of the heathen, without receiving any, or exacting any money."

He says again: "We hear of many of the brethren in the church who have prophetic gifts, and who speak in all tongues through the Spirit, and who also bring to light the secret things of men for their benefit, and who expound the mysteries of God."—Eusebius, p. 215.

Tertullian, who lived in the latter part of the second century, in his work "De Anima," says: "We had a right after what was said by St. John to expect prophesyings; and we not only acknowledged these spiritual gifts, but we are permitted to enjoy the gifts of a prophetess.

"Let some one be brought forward here at the foot of your judgment seat, who, it is agreed, is possessed of a demon. When commanded by any Christian to speak, that spirit shall as truly call itself a demon, as elsewhere falsely a god."—Apology, 23.

St. Cyprian, who was a pupil of Tertullian, and who suffered martyrdom in A. D. 258, says: "There is no measure or rule in the dispensation of the gifts of heaven, as in those of the gifts of earth. The spirit is poured forth liberally, without limits or barriers. It flows without stop, it overflows without stint."

He invited Demetrius, proconsul of Africa, to witness the exorcism of demons. "You may see them by our voice, and through the operation of the unseen majesty, lashed with stripes and scorched with fire, stretched out under the increase of their multiplying penalty, shrieking, groaning, entreating, confessing from which they came, even in the hearing of their own worshipers, and either leaping out suddenly, or gradually vanishing, as faith in the sufferer aids, or grace in the healer conspires."—Life of Cyprian's Deacon Pontius, 17.

Origen was contemporary with Cyprian and says: "There are no longer any prophets, nor any miracles amongst the Jews, of which there are large vestiges amongst the Christians."

He argues against Celsus thus: "By the use of the name alone of God and Jesus, we too have seen many set free from severe complaints; from loss of mind, from madness, and numberless such other evils, which neither man nor devils had cured."—Book 3, 24.

Eusebius in the commencement of the fourth century says: "Who is he who knows not how delightful it is to us that through the name of our Savior, coupled with prayers that are pure, we cast out every kind of demon? And thus the word of our Savior, and the doctrine which is from him, have made us all to be greatly superior to the power which is invisible, and impervious to inquiry."—Eusebius, p. 340.

St. Ambrose, who lived to the end of the fourth century, in his fourth epistle, says: "You know, ye yourselves saw that many were cleansed from evil spirits, very many on touching with their hands the garments of the saints, were delivered from the afflictions which oppressed them. The miracles of the old time are come again, when by the advent of the Lord Jesus a fuller grace was shed on earth. St. Augustine, who lived to near the middle of the fifth century (430), bears ample testimony to the continuation of the miraculous powers in the church then."—Hist. Supernatural, vol. 1, p. 148.

"St. Jerome, also living in the fifth century, relates numerous miracles, such as the restoration of the sight of a woman who had been blind for ten years, the instant cure of the bites of serpents, of paralytic persons, of the casting out of devils, etc. Sulpicius, in his dialogues and life of St. Martin in the fifth century, relates a number of miracles, which he professes to have seen himself."—Ibid., p. 448.

This line of evidence is strengthened and enforced by all the early historians of the church, who had a much better opportunity to judge of the weight that should be given to the testimony of the Fathers referred to. We have a series of five historians of the church, reaching from the apostolic times to the end of the sixth century, Eusebius, Socrates, Scholasticus, Sozomen, Theodoret, and Evagrius. Eusebius quotes Hegesippus, and Papias, who went before him; Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret, all treat of nearly the same period of time, from about A. D. 300, to A. D. 445; Evagrius advances from 431 to 594 A. D.; yet all maintain the same great doctrine of the copious existence and free exercise of the miraculous power in the church during those six centuries.

Grotius, the great jurist, John Locke, the great moral philosopher, and Doctor Ralph Cudworth, were perfectly satisfied of the historical authenticity of the miracles recorded by the early Fathers.

When this array of testimony is presented, nothing is opposed to it but an unsupported denial. What does such a denial mean? 1. That the evidence submitted can not be met and overcome by any contradictory evidence. 2. That the witnesses can not be shown to bear false testimony. 3. That the case in favor of the continuance of miracles long after the theory in question supposes them to have ceased, is made, and can not be in any way overcome. 4. It asserts that the very historians upon whom we rely for the canon of Scripture that these same theorists assert is absolutely perfect, are not only unreliable, but absolute falsifiers. When two parties enter court, one affirming and the other denying certain things, and the affirmative offers a host of witnesses to prove his position, whose veracity is unimpeached by any evidence, and the negative offers no evidence whatever, it does not take a very astute judge, nor one very extensively learned in the law, to tell which way the case should be decided.

Miracles, then, did not cease at the time this objection affirms they were to cease. Facts well attested and absolutely impregnable, are opposed to this theory. It is therefore as false in fact as we have before seen it is in logic. If we should say to a man, "You are not able to raise a hundred pounds from the earth," and he immediately steps to a substance of that weight and raises it, how much is our bare assertion worth? The theory in question says that miracles ceased with the apostles and those upon whom they laid their hands; the facts are that they did not so cease. How worthless then the theory.

There is, however, an attempt made to bolster up the falling fabric, by the assumption that the twelve apostles were called by Christ, and endowed with miraculous power, in order to the giving through them to the world of a perfect law, the law of the gospel; and that when this perfect law should have been given, then inspiration was to cease, because it had done its work. This supposition will be found, however, upon examination to only make the matter worse. It is erroneous in the following respects:

The supposition that the giving of a perfect law to the world was the work of the apostles, is untrue. In the last chapter of Matthew the Savior gives the apostles their commission: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

Just what the apostles were commanded to teach and introduce to the world as the doctrine of Christ is here pointed out; namely, "all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Jesus then had already given the full and perfect law of the gospel; and the work of the apostles was to teach that law to the nations of the earth. If, then, the object of inspiration was the giving of this perfect law, it should have ceased with Christ.

The twelve apostles chosen by Christ were Simon, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Thomas, James, Simon called Zelotes, Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot. After Judas Iscariot's traitorous act, Matthias was chosen to take his place. The twelve above enumerated, then, with Matthias in the place of Judas Iscariot, were sent forth to give to the world a perfect law. Let us note carefully their work. Of this twelve we have writings from Peter, John, James, and Jude; but not a word of either preaching or writing from any one of the others. If Christ chose twelve men to do a certain work, he evidently designed that each of those twelve should do a certain part of it; else his wisdom in selecting so great a number is at fault. If that work which those twelve men were to do was the giving to the world of a perfect law in the form of the New Testament Scriptures, then all the preaching and all the writing of every one of those twelve inspired men must be preserved and given to the world in order to accomplish the work designed. If the object of inspiration is the communication to the world and the perpetuation in the world of a perfect law, then whenever inspiration operated upon any one of those apostles in preaching, writing, counseling, or advising, whether in public or in private, such preaching, writing, counseling, or advising, must be preserved and given to the world, or the work will not be accomplished. If this position be true, the object in inspiring the twelve apostles, was to produce through each one of them a certain effect, the sum of all these effects to be the perfected gospel. Inasmuch then as nothing is perfect if any of its parts are lacking, if any of the inspirational writings, preaching, counseling, advising, or exhorting of these twelve apostles is not found in the New Testament Scriptures, such New Testament Scriptures, according to this theory, do not contain the perfected law of the gospel. To illustrate: Suppose twelve men are called to build a certain building, each one being assigned to a certain portion thereof. A fragment of the work of four of these men is preserved, and not one particle of the work of the other eight; would any one but a modern theologian tell us that such a building is perfect, even as perfect as God himself could make it?

If the communications through these twelve were to constitute a perfect law, then any addition from any other source would make such law imperfect; for either adding to or taking from that which is perfect, renders it imperfect. In the New Testament we have the epistles of St. Paul, who was not one of the original twelve whom Jesus called to give the perfect law of the gospel to the world. There is no account of his being called to fill the place of a transgressor, and the fair presumption is that he was called to fill the place of one who had done the work which Christ designed he should do, and had fallen asleep. Clearly, then, according to the position under review, the writings of Paul are an addition to the perfect law of God given through the original twelve. His writings then should at once be rejected. The great building of heavenly truth was completed by other hands. Did this perfect building need another story, an addition on the top of its roof, or a side room or two after its completion according to the design of the all-wise Architect? There is also no proper place for the inspiration of the Apostle Barnabas; no chance for the exercise of the inspirational gift which Paul exhorted Timothy to exercise; no opportunity for the exercise of the inspirational gifts that were in the church; these would all be unwarranted usurpations, or useless plays; attempts to stand in the shoes of the first twelve apostles, and in their stead add beauty and completeness to the great building of God's truth. Such are the absurdities to which false theories lead; such the vanity of trifling with the plain promises of God.

We enforce our objections to the theory in question; that is, the cessation of the spiritual gifts, by the promise of Christ in the sixteenth chapter of Mark: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc.

Every attempt has been made to get rid of this passage of scripture; every excuse originated for regarding it as spurious. Yet the late revisers of the New Testament, upon a thorough and scholastic review and comparison of all the manuscripts of the gospel of St. Mark, concluded it was genuine.

In this passage of scripture three distinct promises are made by the Savior, into which one and the same element enters: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe."

The same kind of belief essential to salvation, will cause the signs to follow; the same kind of unbelief which is damning in its tendency, will cause the signs not to follow. He that believeth with a proper belief and is baptized, may be saved; he that does not believe with this same kind of belief, shall be damned; and these signs shall follow those who believe with this same kind of belief. The promise of these blessings here occurs in such a connection, that to avoid its force and applicability, we must also avoid the force and applicability of the promise of salvation. If one is general, the other is also; if one is limited as to time or place, the other is also; if the promise of the signs following the believers was applicable only to the apostles, the promise of salvation upon the terms set forth, was applicable only to the apostles. Any attempt to separate these three promises, and make one of any broader application than the other, is arbitrary and unwarranted.

Thus we see that the attempt to avoid the force of St. Paul's reasoning destroys the church by lopping off its members; the attempt to confine inspiration to the twelve apostles destroys the validity of the New Testament, for not even a majority of the twelve lawgivers is heard therein; and the attempt to avoid the force of Christ's promise that the signs should follow the believers, destroys the hope of salvation. Thus this theory proceeds, abandoning the plain promises of God, and leading the way to absolute unbelief."—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 46, no. 17.

Another objection urged is: "We have advanced in science, literature, and art, why not in the gospel of Christ? Why not the one as well as the other?" We answer: because one is perfect and emanating from a perfect Being, was always perfect; the other is more or less imperfectly discovered by man. To outgrow the "perfect law of the Lord"—the "everlasting gospel" (Revelation 14: 6) is to outgrow perfection and become imperfect. And that is what the sectarian world, it appears to us, has been doing for centuries; that is, outgrowing perfection.

Another will doubtless say: The Scriptures were able to make Timothy wise unto salvation, then why not us? But it must be remembered that Timothy did not know anything of the New Testament, for the best of all reasons, it was not then in existence. Then, shall we say that the New Testament is unnecessary, seeing it was written mostly after that time? If the New Testament did not destroy or change the plan of salvation, would anything that God would give to-day destroy or change it? Certainly not. It would but confirm it.

Another will say: I can not accept any prophet who does not die in Jerusalem, for Jesus said: "It can not be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem."

By turning to this text in Luke 13: 33, it will be seen that Jesus spake this of the ancient prophets. For he, himself, did not die in Jerusalem, neither did Paul or Jude or the Revelator. They all prophesied and yet they all died outside of that city.

We will answer one more objection and then enter upon the direct proofs. This objection is based upon a text found in 1 Corinthians 13: 8-10, and reads as follows: "Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies they shall fail, whether there be tongues they shall cease, whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

From this text it is argued by some, that in the future from that time, prophecies were to fail, and tongues cease. So they were, but when? Has the time come yet? We answer, No. For they were each to continue as long as knowledge. No one will claim that knowledge has yet vanished away, besides they were all three to continue until "that which is perfect is come." That time has not come yet, so far as language, prophecy, or knowledge is concerned. If it refers to the perfect One, then he has not yet appeared personally, and spiritually, he is no more here now than then. If it refers to the gospel, as some think, then we answer: The gospel was perfect then, and had been from the beginning, and could not become more so. It is further evident that the Holy Ghost was to continue in full working power when men would open their hearts to receive it, until the perfect One should come the second time without sin unto salvation, and establish peace and perfection upon the earth.

If there are three persons in the Godhead, as we most surely believe, and one is "unchangeable," the other "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," then what shall we say of the third? Is not his nature similar? We think so. So that those who obtain that spirit will as surely obtain its gifts, prophecy among others.

Having noticed so many objections, thought by some to be biblical, and having shown that most of them are in favor of present revelation and the others not against that idea in the least, let us see what the Bible says of a latter-day dispensation—a work Joseph Smith was chosen to begin.

Many are of the opinion that the dispensation introduced by Jesus was the last, but Paul speaks of a "dispensation of the fullness of times" in the following language: "That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are in earth, even in him."—Eph. 1: 10.

The dispensation here referred to certainly was not the dispensation of nineteen hundred years ago, for that was a scattering, nor was it the fullness of times, that is, when all times should be full. At that time there was to be another dispensation when all things in Christ would be gathered together in one, both in heaven and on earth. That would also necessitate a resurrection, so that the ultimate result of the dispensation of the fullness of times would be the resurrection.

PRINCIPLES OF NUTRITION.

In one of the bulletins issued from the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., we read: "The problem of proper nutrition has always been of great importance, yet scientific study of this subject is comparatively recent. . . . In recent years the development of this subject has been very rapid, a large number of investigations have been carried on under the auspices of this department, the agricultural experiment stations, and various educational institutions, and many facts of interest and importance have been learned. And now, since the government has wisely placed these facts within our reach, it is our purpose to take such of them as we can best use, and present them for the consideration of the Daughters of Zion, since we know that the health, pleasure, and economy of our households depends so much upon the kind of food we prepare for them.

We quote from the Farmer's Bulletin, No. 142: "The chemical substances of which the body is composed, are very similar to those of the foods which nourish it. . . . From fifteen to twenty elements are found. . . . The elements are so combined as to form a great variety of compounds in both body and food. The most important kinds of compounds in the body and in foods are protein, fats, carbohydrates, mineral matter, and water. The functions of these compounds in the food, are to build and repair the various tissues of the body and to supply it with heat and muscular energy."

In our last reading, food was divided into two classes, inorganic and organic. Water and mineral matter, or ash, as it is sometimes called, are the inorganic food. About sixty per cent of the weight of the body of the average man is water, it being a component part of all the tissues; so it is an important part of our food, though it does not supply energy to the body. The other inorganic food, mineral matter, supplies little or no energy, and constitutes only five or six per cent of the weight of the body. It is found chiefly in the bones and teeth. The organic foods are so called because they are obtained principally from the organic; i. e., the animal and vegetable world. They are divided into three principal groups—protein, fats, and carbohydrates. Of these, protein forms about eighteen per cent, fats about fifteen per cent, and carbohydrates only about one per cent of the weight of the body of the average man. Protein is familiar to us in the lean and gristle of meat, the white of eggs, the gluten of wheat, etc. "Fats occur chiefly in animal foods, as meats, fish, butter, etc. They are also abundant in some vegetables, as olives and cotton seed. They are found, too, in some cereals, notably, oatmeal and maize, and in various nuts. The carbohydrates include starches, sugar, and cellulose or plant fiber, and are found chiefly in the vegetable foods like cereal grains and potatoes; milk, however, contains considerable amounts of milk sugar, which is a carbohydrate. . . . Sugar and starches, which are very abundant in ordinary food materials, are important food ingredients because they form an abundant source of energy, and are easily digested. They may be, and often are, transformed into fat in the body."

Some things are repeated here that have been given in a former reading; but we know the value of repetition, and that it is necessary to have a good understanding of elementary terms in order to enlarge our knowledge of any subject.

From what has been said of the relative proportion of the different compounds of the body structure, we might conclude that the carbohydrates should form a very small portion of our food; but after we have examined more into the uses the body makes of its food, as we shall do later on, we shall see that they should form a large portion of it. And now we quote entire from the aforesaid bulletin, an illustration of, "The Body as a Machine," which will prepare us to understand the effects of different kinds of food upon the body, and the uses to which they are put:

"Blood and muscle, bone and tendon, brain and nerve—all the organs and tissues of the body—are built from the nutritive ingredients of food. With every motion of the body, and with the exercise of thought and feeling as well, material is consumed and must be resupplied by food. In a sense, the body is a superior machine. Like other machines it requires material to build up its several parts, to repair them as they are worn out, and to serve as fuel. In some ways it uses this material like a machine; and in others it does not. The steam engine gets its power from fuel; the body does the same. In the one case, coal or wood, in the other food is the fuel. In both cases the energy which is latent in the fuel,—the potential energy, as it is called in scientific language—is transformed into heat and power. When the coal is burned in the furnace a part of its potential energy is transformed into the mechanical power which the engine uses for its work; the rest is wasted in the heat which the engine does not utilize. Likewise the potential energy of food is transformed in the body into heat and mechanical power. The mechanical power is employed for muscular work. The heat is used to keep the body warm, and when more is generated than is needed for that purpose it is wasted, as in the case of the engine.

"One important difference between the human machine and the steam engine is that the former is self-building, self-repairing, and self-regulating. Another is that the material of which the engine is built is very different from that which it uses for fuel, but part of the material which serves the body for fuel also builds it up and keeps it in repair. Furthermore, the body can use its own substance for fuel. This the steam engine can not do. The steam engine and the body are alike in that both convert the fuel into heat and mechanical power. They differ in that the body uses the same material for fuel as for building and also consumes its own material for fuel. In the use of fuel the body is much more economical than any engine.

"But the body is more than a machine. It has not simply organs to build and keep in repair and supply with energy; it has a nervous organization; it has sensibilities; and there are the higher intellectual and spiritual faculties. The right exercise of these depends upon the right nutrition of the body.

"The chief uses of food, then, are two: (1) To form the material of the body and repair its wastes; and (2) to yield heat to keep the body warm and furnish muscular and other power for the work it has to do. In forming the tissues and fluids for the body the food serves for building and repair. In yielding heat and power it serves as fuel.

"If more food is eaten than is needed, more or less of the surplus may be and sometimes is stored in the body, chiefly in the form of fat. The fat in the body forms a sort of reserve supply of fuel and is burned in the place of food. When the work is hard or the food supply is low the body draws upon this store of fat and grows lean.

"The principal tissue formers are the protein compounds, especially the albuminoids. The albuminoids include substances similar to the white of egg, the lean of meat, the curd of milk, and the gluten of wheat. The albuminoids of food are transformed into the albuminoids and the gelatinoids of the body. Muscle, tendon, and cartilage, bone and skin, the corpuscles of the blood, and the casine of milk are made of the albuminoids of food. The gelatinoids of food, such as the finer particles of the tendon and the gelatin, which are dissolved out of the bone and meat in soup, though somewhat similar to the albuminoids in composition, are not believed to be tissue formers; but are valuable in protecting the albuminoids from consumption.

"The proteids can be, and to some extent are, changed in the body into fats and carbohydrates, and in this and other ways they supply the body with fuel; so that they are not only used for building and repairing the body, but also serve as fuel. Thus, a carnivorous animal, as a dog, and an omnivorous animal, as a man, can live on lean meat, having power to convert its material into muscle and its energy into heat and muscular power; but such one-sided diet is not best for either.

"Fats are a more concentrated fuel supply than carbohydrates, though the body can transform carbohydrates into fats.

"The different nutrients can to a greater or less extent do one another's work. If the body has not enough of one kind of food it can use another. But, while protein can be burned in the place of fats and carbohydrates, neither of the latter can take the place of albuminoids in building and repairing the tissues. At the same time the gelatinoids, fats, and carbohydrates by being consumed themselves protect the albuminoids from consumption.

"Heat and muscular power are forms of force or energy. The energy latent in the food is developed as the food is consumed in the body. The process is more or less akin to that which takes place when coal is burned in a furnace. For the burning of the food in the body or the coal in the furnace, air is used to supply the oxygen. . . . As various kinds of coal differ in the amount of heat given off per ton, so various kinds of food and food ingredients give off different amounts of energy; that is, have different values as fuels in the body."

We have been considering food as a source of heat and muscular power. There is no doubt that intellectual activity, also, is somehow dependent upon the consumption of material which the brain has obtained from food; but just what substances are consumed to produce brain and nerve force, and how much of each is required for a given quantity of intellectual labor, are questions which the physiological chemist has not yet answered.

Note of Explanation.

Our readers will have noticed in the Reading for August, that the author suggests a small quantity of meat as part of the ordinary diet for each day; also that he denounces as positively injurious alcoholic liquors, tea, coffee, chocolate, and irritating spices, and only allows their use as flavors. We trust that no one will think because of our having presented this article to our readers that we overlook the teaching of the Word of Wisdom concerning those articles, for we do not. Indeed we look upon it as the highest authority by which to regulate our diet, and with the knowledge we have of the injurious effects of even a laste of liquor, we do not think it safe to tamper with it even as a flavoring for our food. If we except extracts, we do so because the taste of the liquor is lost in the extract.

The last reading was selected for its all-round liberal and consistent teachings in the matter of food, and as we thought, its almost complete harmony with the Word of Wisdom. Explanation of our position would have been made at the time, but for the thought that discussion, would bring out its fallacies and give opportunity to present with more force the greater light we have received, when we see how nearly the wisdom of this world is approaching to the standard that has been given to us.

The General Superintendent in the Field.

Our next objective point was the beautiful little camping ground at Silver Lake, Massachusetts, where the Massachusetts District held its reunion August 9 to 16. In a forest of pine on the shore of the lake, sparkling and clear as crystal, we found the camp of happy Saints. The location is ideal. We do not know what could be done that would add to the comfort of camping there. And the Saints, appreciative of the lovely, quiet retreat, were making the best of it in both a spiritual and social way. Our few days stop there was a real treat, coming, as we had, from a protracted tour of several districts of rough broken country or of the hurry and bustle of large cities. It gave ample opportunity to overcome the fatigue of a long tour of broken rest and constantly changing scenes.

Opportunity was given to present the Sunday-school work in several ways. Sessions of Sunday-school were held in which all seemed to gladly take a part. In fact it is not always that we find as ready a response from so large a percentage of the camp as we found here. The workers of the district are alive to the interests of the Sabbath-school movement, and they have profited by what they have been able to accomplish heretofore. May they continue as well as they have been doing.

Institute work was done as time permitted, with good interest manifested therein.

We were pleased to note the work done by the Religio at the reunion. As we learn that the district organization is of recent creation, and that this is their first appearance in public as such, the showing was a very creditable one. And while, individually, we are swallowed up in another line of work, to the practical exclusion of all else, we are, nevertheless, deeply interested in the success of the Religio. It occupies a sphere not occupied by any other organization, and does a work that no other has ever attempted to do. And when the forthcoming lesson help on the Book of Mormon is in the hands of the worker, the mission of the Religio will be better appreciated because of the perceptible results of its work that will follow.

Primary Teaching.

I shall venture to say that greater responsibilities, and with more lasting results, devolves upon the teacher of the primary department than that of any other department of Sabbath-school or any other branch of church work.

As the child enters school it commences its religious career, and, it necessarily begins in the primary department, and here, also, begins a remarkable era in the child's life. This era can be a success or a failure just as the teacher wishes to make of it, for within her hands is the character of each boy and girl; she can make or mar it just as she chooses.

A CHILD'S MIND IS QUITE FLEXIBLE

and every remark and expression made by the teacher there makes its impress. Therefore the necessity of a careful and patient primary teacher for character building is indeed very, very delicate work. One has every Sunday chance to spoil a character, and for fifty-two Sundays in a year.

A primary teacher should,

TO BE A SUCCESSFUL TEACHER,

be a paragon of love, patience, and purity to every boy and girl under her control. The teacher who possesses these attributes is evidently a successful teacher, while the one who does not is doomed to failure. If a teacher does not love her pupils, she can not hope or even expect to win their love. And if she does not win this she can not center their attention upon the lesson. Therefore she fails.

And we all know what

a flighty, impatient teacher makes. If she can not control herself, she can not hope to long control others. A teacher may say that she sometimes feels out of moods and really gets disgusted at her naughty boys, but she does not need to express her feelings in her countenance; she may conceal them. Children are excellent readers of expression, and as Goldsmith has aptly said, that if in the morning the teacher has a scowful expression, the child can read the day's disaster in her face. Again a teacher lowers herself in the estimation of her pupils if by an outbreak of her temper, or as the little boy says, "gets mad" she says some rash remark and loses that self-commanding respect which she can never hope to regain. Some one has truly said that "patience is a plant that grows not in every garden," yet its fruit is of such lasting importance that we should at least make a desperate effort to cultivate it.

As to the duties of a primary teacher many will tell us that is to get the child to thoroughly understand the lesson; but this I consider quite an inferior duty when compared with more important ones. A child may know his lesson ever so well, for the time being, but how long will he remember it? Probably not until the next Sunday. And within a month he could not recall a thought that was contained in that lesson. As he learns easily he also forgets easily. So I do not see where the real and lasting good comes in being so particular about having the child learn his lesson so thoroughly when he is retained so short a time. I rather believe as the poet has said, that "we should not ram it in and cram it in just because its head is hollow."

I have even heard some teachers make the remark that they would not attempt to teach a class that had not previously studied their lesson, but would make them sit and learn it. This teacher may call this and say the child will never again come with an unprepared lesson. But it is rather too strict to receive my approval. The pupil will soon forget the lesson he has learned, but he will never, no never, forget the impression that the teacher made upon him. I could not now tell the subject of a single lesson that I learned while in the primary department, but I could give from memory an excellent character sketch of every teacher that ever taught me. I could tell whether she was cross or kind, and could tell what impression she made upon me.

Some may ask, What method should then be adapted

WHEN THE CHILD DOES NOT KNOW HIS LESSON?

I should suggest that the teacher would not scold the child, but she should censure him kindly and gently and thereby not foster negligence. She should then tell the entire lesson story with much simplicity. Then question the child, and if she has had his attention he will be able to answer the questions just as well as if he had previously studied his lesson. I, of course, would not sanction this sort of recital for every Sunday, but by my experience I have found this a better way than harassing the child and having a thunder cloud expression and thereby so frightening the child that he would be unwilling to attend school when, for some unavoidable reason, he could not possibly get his lesson. A child should feel that he has just as much right to attend school when he has not his lesson as when he has, and he should receive just as many smiles and kind words from his teacher.

I consider the greatest duty that a teacher has to perform is to

and when she has done this she has accomplished a task greater than the entire twelve Herculean tasks. Many children do not like Sunday-school, but attend simply because it is their parents' wishes. But as a child gets older he will not always obey his parents, so we find him discontinuing to attend Sunday-school; therefore, it is absolutely necessary that we should get him to love Sunday-school while he is in his infancy. A teacher should first do this by winning the confidence, admiration, and love of her pupils. If a pupil admires his teacher he will naturally long to be in her presence, and will hardly be able to wait until Sunday comes. If a teacher can twine herself about her pupils in this way she can naturally win their attention and can thereby teach them the sweet truths of the gospel. If a child in his very infancy learns to love and cherish church and church work and has planted or ingrafted within him the pure love of Christ, he will not decrease with increasing years—for as the twig bends, so the tree inclineth.

Letter Department.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 11.

Editors Herald: Inclosed find an article written by the editor of the Dallas Center Local, to which I replied, which reply was published without comment or objection, and is also inclosed. A reporter representing the Capital interviewed me, but woefully misrepresented what I said, and I called to ask for space for reply which was cheerfully granted. I called on all three dailies of the city to-day, and all cheerfully accepted notice of the coming reunion, and all requested a brief report of each day's session.

I have placed in the library of the city three volumes of Church History, the Inspired Translation of the Bible, the Book of Mormon (large edition), the Doctrine and Covenants, and the True Succession in Church Presidency, with the SAINTS' HERALD for one year, all paid for by Saints of Des Moines. These books are now being classified in catalogue under the heading of "Latter Day Saints."

Prospects are growing brighter for missionary work in this city.

Elder D. H. Bays has made an attack on the Book of Mormon in language which I have thought he was unwarranted in using, and has had it published in the Baxter New Era. He concludes with this statement: "Whatever the origin, I stand pledged to prove the Book of Mormon a gross fraud before any intelligent audience who may be desirous to have the proofs." To this I replied through the same paper, inviting him to fulfill that pledge in public discussion. In a letter just received he calls my attention to some previous propositions some one else presented, but does not express himself willing to accept of his own, and give a chance for denial. I have written him that I stand pledged to deny any such a proposition, but if he is not willing to stand to his pledge I have nothing further to say at present.

Preparations are going on rapidly for the coming district reunion. I go to-morrow to assist committee at Newton. Fifteen tents have already been ordered. Large tent will be at Newton to-morrow.

Some severe cases of sickness here, especially in Bro. T. Robinson's family, but all are getting better.

J. F. MINTUN.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, August 9.

Editors Herald: It seems proper that the ministry of the church should be heard from now and then, and I notice that some improve the opportunity quite frequently, while the much larger number of the brethren seldom inform us of their labors. Perhaps their failure to write is because they have no special good news to communicate; or, perhaps, hesitate, thinking that those best qualified should be the ones to write. At any rate, it seems that out of the hundreds of the ministry less than ten per cent are the regular contributors to the HERALD. I am not writing to find fault, but I think there is room for improvement.

I should not now write, but it is a long time since I saw anything from the Little Sioux District, and we do not wish any one to think that we are altogether dead. It is true we can report nothing great or marvelous, nor do we find that all who should be Saints as active and energetic in the work as they ought to be. The things of this world, such as riches and pleasure, engage the attention of some to such an extent that the things of the kingdom are not thought of or participated in only in their spare moments, and then, of course, without spirit and without life, and without such blessings as might be enjoyed. However, I am glad to say that the majority of the Saints love the work, and strive to let their light shine, and they are the ones who really enjoy their religion.

The work here has been hindered much by incessant rains, floods, and impassable roads. We started tent work at Sloan, and from there to Sargeants Bluff, and it has recently gone to Akron, Brn. J. C. Crabb and W. A. Smith being in charge. When heard from the outlook was favorable.

Bro. D. A. Hutchings was recently at Milnersville preaching in a union church. My time has largely been taken up looking after the work as district president, unraveling some unpleasant matters. How the work might prosper, and how successful we might be in our labors among men, if all would be careful not to bring reproach upon the cause.

At Sioux City a little band of Saints are striving hard to bring the truth before the people. They have rented a room and have it neatly arranged for their meetings, it being quite a burden on so few. It is hoped that they may be amply rewarded for their efforts, and be permitted to see the work more firmly established in that city. The branch in Missouri Valley is in a critical condition, being without a place in which to worship, and there seems to be a lack of unity and energy to bring about a better state. The other branches are in better condition and are mostly doing well.

At Bigler's Grove the Saints have a church building, at least I am so informed, it being the only branch in the district that I have not hitherto visited.

I trust that Zion's cause may prosper and that we may each feel the full responsibility of the work in which we have enlisted, and so labor that our efforts may meet with the approval of the Master.

Your brother,

H. N. HANSEN.

GRAND JUNCTION, Colorado, August 11.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have written for the columns of your worthy paper, I will try and give a brief account of myself. I left home April 28, and arrived in Denver the 30th. I stayed there a few days waiting adjustment of matters between Bro. Roush and Bro. Luff as to who should have charge and direct affairs in this mission. Bro. Roush was finally persuaded to take the oversight with what assistance in that line he could get from Bro. Morgan and the writer. I then went to Colorado Springs and assisted the brethren some in the work in the city and in starting the tent near by. While there I took a run with Bro. Morgan and wife to the mining district of Cripple Creek and tried to cheer up the Saints there. My next stop was at Buena Vista, where a couple of the isolated Saints reside. I tried to preach, but could get no one to hear, so had to satisfy myself visiting. I next stopped at Minturn with Ed. McKnight and wife. They are not members of any church, but they are kind-hearted people, and treated me well. I preached but once there, owing to circumstances, but I effected an opening that will surely result in good. One lady named Buffehr and her mother attended my meeting and became very much interested. They invited me to call on them, which I did, and had a pleasant time conversing on gospel themes. The result was, I sold them a Book of Mormon and they took the Ensign and I left them a number of tracts. Mrs. Buffehr writes to me since that she longs for the day when she can become a member of the church, and she says that she believes her husband will join when she does. I sold three Books of Mormon there, and two took the Ensign.

My next point for labor was at a sawmill camp near Meeker. Bro. and Sr. A. J. Taylor were there and two of their sons, one a member, and the other believing, but could not see his way clear to join. Poor fellow has died since. How sad it made me feel. He was so kind and good and believing, yet died outside of the kingdom. He intended to join, but was awaiting a time when he could live better. I told him he better join then and live as well as he could, but he thought it best to wait awhile longer. I left some other parties there investigating. I next came to Fruita and labored in some of the schoolhouses near by and where the Saints live across the river from Fruita. Here Bro. Roush and I organized a branch with twenty-two members. Yesterday I baptized another promising young man to add to the number. I baptized four in all for this branch since coming into this valley. Sr. Eva Hoyt, Bro. and Sr. Hoyt's little girl, Bro. Lorin P. Snook, Sr. Snook's little boy, Bro. D. F. King, aged forty-nine years, and Bro. Wm. Keneday, yesterday. Two of these were baptized August 3, the day we organized the branch. We also blessed Thomas B., son of Bro. and Sr. A. A. Fausett that day.

I went to the Delta Reunion in company with Bro. Roush, and while Bro. M. L. Schmid, the branch president, had the principal oversight of the meetings, Bro. Roush and I did the preaching. We expected Bro. Henry Stebbins to have been with us, but he failed to show up. While the attendance was not large, all enjoyed themselves very much, and by a unanimous vote they said they wanted another next year. Bro. Roush and I, while there, administered to a number of sick, which sickness hindered several from attending the reunion. We also blessed James and Charlotta, children of Bro. and Sr. Lyman Hubbard.

I have just closed a short series of meetings here in Grand Junction, the metropolis of Western Colorado. I secured the court-house and advertised in three daily papers and at the Advent church, and others that we thought would be interested, we called on personally, but about all that came to the meetings were a few Advents; and yesterday, being Sunday, none of them came, so five of the Saints and myself and one old gentleman who happened to drop in was the audience in the evening. The afternoon meeting being not so well attended, we did not hold service. So it goes.

I wish to say for the benefit of our president, Joseph Smith, and Henry Stebbins, and others it may interest, that while engaged in inviting parties to attend the meetings here, I fell in with a Mr. C. Goodrich and family who once lived in Plano, Illinois, when the headquarters of the church was there. They lived in Bro. Dancer's house and worked in the machine shop. They were personally acquainted with Bro. Joseph and speak very highly of his integrity and honesty. They said that no one could listen to him speak and believe that he did not mean what he said. They told of the time when Bro. Joseph left Plano; how the Saints met and made his wife a present of a set of china-ware; and how, after the Saints got through with their offering, an outsider arose and said the outsiders had something to offer, and presented Bro. Joseph with a gold-headed cane, purchased by subscriptions all from non-members. They said that Joseph could only express his thankfulness in tears. They also spoke very highly of Bro. Stebbins, and of their intimate acquaintance with him. When I told them that Bro. Henry was in Colorado they expressed a great desire to see him and wanted me to tell him if he ever gets on this side of the range, they want him to call on them. I hope Bro. Henry will note this. They also spoke of Brn. Pitt, John Scott, E. C. Briggs, M. H. Forscutt, and others. While these people are not members they can be counted as friends.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

SPARTA, Michigan, August 7.

Editors Herald: I came to this place last Friday and found Bro. C. E. Irwin here with the tent telling the people the gospel story. Of course we chimed in and assisted with rather good liberty, with both good-sized and small audiences. There are five church organizations here, and everything seems to attract the minds of the people that can be thought of. A few are interested. Bro. F. T. Field lives here and is helping to bear the burdens. His wife, Sr. Field, with her mother, Sr. Norton, as well as some others, are doing all they can to make the meeting a success. We have been cared for by Bro. and Sr. Dresser who are anxiously and earnestly investigating. Sr. Dresser is a daughter of Sr. Waller and niece of Sr. Crooks who will be remembered by the Clear Lake Saints as well as by many other Saints, as a mother in Israel.

Since General Conference we have labored most all the time in the country, and have traveled with horse and buggy to save expenses. We have occupied from one to five times a week. Many times the farmers were so busy they could not attend very well, there being so much rain it delayed their work and did much damage to their crops, as well as hindered gospel meetings; however, we have only missed one Sabbath. We can not tell how long the tent will remain here. Will stay as long as the interest justifies the expenses.

We go to Lansing, Michigan, to attend the two-day meeting the 9th and 10th, if the Lord wills. Then we want to open up a new point north of Jackson, Michigan, and one west of there if we can get a house and a hearing. Also other points if we can this summer and fall and get the foundation laid for a winter's work. We trust the Saints everywhere will do all they can to help spread the gospel, as we believe the fullness of the Gentile times is coming in, for truly men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. The cares of the world and deceitfulness of riches are robbing many of their best interests. Iniquity abounds and the love of some is waxing cold, but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. I am glad it is an individual matter. Hastily, Your brother in the battle for eternal life,

G. A. SMITH.

GLEE, Missouri.

Editors Herald: This leaves me busily preaching at this place to large crowds, good interest. I find this to be a ripe field for labor. Bro. George Essig moved here about two years ago, opened up the work in several new places, suffering much persecution. Shortly after he moved here some one tried to kill his oldest son, George Essig, Jr., by running a horse over him. He is now a member of the church. Bro. George Essig and family are fast living down prejudice. Persecution is giving way and many seem anxious to hear the gospel. I've been out now about three weeks with buggy and horse (Gospel John) given to the district by Bro. George Fry of Bevier, Missouri, preaching to the farmers of Chariton County, Missouri. I held two weeks at Lagonda, Missouri, to an overflowing house. Four baptisms and many others almost persuaded. Houses too small for the crowds. Some outside on the grass. "Gospel John" is getting fat on the good pastures. Many farmers all over these rich Missouri counties never heard a gospel sermon. Bro. George Essig has done much good here in Chariton County preaching both in English and German. Several German people in these parts. Bro. Essig could do great good in this county if he had a mission, so that he could devote his entire time to gospel work. He speaks both the English and German languages.

I can reach hundreds of farmers with "Gospel John" and buggy. I have not heard from my co-worker, J. A. Tanner, for some time. Hope he is doing well.

In bonds,

ELLENSBURG, Washington, August 5.

Editors Herald: I thought it time to write a few lines to let you know my whereabouts. June 28, after getting my grips packed, I went to depot to get my ticket for my mission field, and found my permit would only take me to Billings, Montana, so had to wait till I could get another. So I took my family and started for Cherokee to see my mother and some other relatives, and assist what I could in tent work, which was in charge of Elder J. M. Baker. I spoke twice while there with fairly good liberty. Bro. Baker is doing what he can for the work at that place, but it is a hard place to work. My family and I left Cherokee for Dow City, July 5, and on account of a heavy fall of rain did not get home till about one o'clock that night. I attended church in Dow City next day, which was Sunday, and spoke twice at that place. Felt quite well in my efforts. Wednesday, July 9, myself and family started to my mission field, and had a very pleasant trip. Arrived at Ellensburg the 12th of July and found my brother and his wife waiting for us at the depot. I then spoke three times in a schoolhouse near my brother's place. While at my father's I found a house to rent for my family to live in. I then went to Roslyn to see the Saints there and found a real lively little flock, and a neat little church, ready for dedication as soon as they can get some one to attend to it. I stopped with them over two Sundays and held meetings. While there, fairly good interest. I believe some are near the kingdom. The Saints there are very kind to missionaries and remember them in a financial way, as they gave me nine dollars and fifty cents to help me on to other fields. They realize it takes money to travel on the train. I left there August 4 for Ellensburg and stopped to see some Scottish Saints. Their names are Bro. and Sr. Schopman and Sr. Taylor, the latter handing me one dollar to help the missionary. I found them very kind Saints and glad to see a missionary.

We like this country quite well; some ways better than Iowa, and some we like Iowa the better. The climate is excellent, but there is lots of dust, as there is no rain here.

Brethren remember me in your prayers, for I need the assistance of our Father who is in heaven. I shall never forget the kindness shown by the Saints in the Galland's Grove District, and will send my regards to them as I can't write to them all on the account of time and expense. May the blessing of God rest upon all his children, is my prayer.

A Word From Wales.

Canton, CARDIFF, Wales, July 25.

Brother Editor: It is nearly six months since I have sent you any word. I learn that some are making inquiry, and have sent me word to give them some news, either personal letters or through the HERALD or Ensign.

I was very much pleased with the work done at the last General Conference, and was in hopes that Wales would get a larger force; still we are thankful for small favors. We are now holding outdoor meetings, and the interest, judging from the large crowd of people at the services, is good. We have been holding forth at Penygraig and Tony Pandy for two months on the streets. I spoke about thirty times, Bro. Thomas Jones once, and Bro. John Davis about twenty times, and in all fifty-one times on the public streets. Brn. Davis and Jones at Bryn Mawr, I at Nantyglo. They are having good interest. Bro. F. J. Pierce is hard at work tracting and preaching. Bro. Frank is a faithful worker in the tract work. He goes from house to house, leaves tracts and then calls to exchange them. Surely good ought to come from that kind of work. Brn. Davis and Jones are a strong team, and will do good work. Bro. Davis had a very unpleasant time at Pandy. Some of the crowd got to pushing and tried to discourage him, and the brethren made the remark, "Well, they will not come back again." But they did not know that these brethren could not be run off with such low down work. To the surprise of some, the brethren were there to speak again, and they had the good will of the leading men, some of which had declared that there would be no more of such rowdyism, and there was none, with the exception of some asking questions when they should not.

To avoid having contention on the streets we must do all we can to keep order. If you give the people to understand that you are there to present the truth as you comprehend it, and if they wish to ask any questions to kindly do so in writing, and hand them to you and the next evening you will read the questions and answers, and if your explanation is not satisfactory, for them to call at your home, giving your address, or that you will call at their homes; and if they wish to reply to what you have said, they can do so after you get through. But do not enter into free for all debate on the streets, and cause contention, and stay out late hours and block up the passway.

One evening at Pandy I spoke first, Bro. Davis was to follow. I went on to explain the mistakes of Brighamism, and that the true Latter Day Saints did not teach polygamy, and that the books forbade it; also that Brigham Young was not the successor to Joseph Smith. While I was speaking, a Reverend Lamb, the minister of the English Baptist Church, held in his hand a book, and he wanted to read extracts from it to the large crowd that was so orderly listening to what I was saying. I told him to please keep quiet until we got through, that we were there by appointment, and that it was our meeting; but he was very unruly, talking and growling, disturbing the peace of those that wanted to hear. After I had concluded my remarks I said that I would now give way to Bro. Davis. At this Mr. Lamb, only in name, came forward, and said: "No, Mr. Davis shall not speak.

I am going to expose you." I again said that he could not speak; if he wished he could announce some other evening. "No," he said, "I have a right to speak. You are foreigners. I am a British subject. These people have not come out to hear you." "Well," I said, "if the people insist on hearing you this evening, we will give way." At this many cried out, "Go on, let him speak some other time." I turned to Mr. Lamb and said, "It is true that we are foreigners, but of native birth." And I said, "If you or any other person should come to our land, the United States, and should be treated with such unkindness as you have manifested towards us, I would blush at such conduct." "Hear! hear!" was heard all around at this time. To show the people that at home where we were known we were respected, I asked Bro. Lot Bishop, who held the SAINTS' HERALD in his hand, to read the statement from Bevier, Missouri, where the Baptist and M. E. ministers took part in our conference. Bro. Bishop made the remark that it was very strange that a pond of water some three thousand miles wide should cause such a difference in the feelings of the Baptists over in America. They respected the Saints, but here in Tony Pandy they would mob them. To again lower himself in the estimation of the people, Mr. Lamb cried out very loud, so all could hear him, "That is a lie, not a word of truth in it." I said, "Mr. Lamb, that is no argument or proof, simply your say so." But he said, "I know the Baptist will not mix with your people," as though we were not worthy. I turned to the people and said "I have good reasons to believe that that which Bro. Bishop has read is true, and that the kind spirit that was manifested by the two ministers towards the Saints, and the saints unto them was, in my judgment, commendable." That we were believers in the thoughts, "open Bible, free pulpit, do unto others as you would they should do unto you," and for evidence of my faith in that said, though I was a poor man, and did not believe in betting, I would give five pounds to some poor widow and children in Tony Pandy if Mr. Lamb would prove it was not true. On the other hand if I would prove it was, he was to give the five pounds. The people here can then appoint a committee. I then turned to Mr. Lamb and asked if he would put up the five pounds, so some poor widow and children could have some good out of the matter; but he thought too much of the money, and too little about the needs of the poor, so he would not accept. And again the crowd gave the poor man the shame.

Will Brn. Tanner or Williams or Musselman get a statement from those ministers? I shall then publish it. The next evening Mr. Lamb was on hand to expose Mormonism. He talked ninety minutes, called the old, old Spalding story up, but made very poor effort. He claimed to be the master of six languages.

Bro. Davis was going to reply. He had made an excellent start when the police inspector said, "You must stop." It was not just the right way. We should have had a chance to reply, and many so expressed themselves. The inspector is a member of Mr. Lamb's church. I have since called on the police department, but we are forbidden the privilege to hold meetings on the streets in Pandy. There is much dissatisfaction among the people because of the action of the inspector. Others are permitted to hold meetings. Many came to us and said, "rent a hall, and we will help to pay for it." But we can not get any. We are in hopes that before another year we will have a room of our own. We are still doing what we can to get means to build. Some few from the States have sent us of the needful. Will others fall in line? We need a house of worship very badly.

We have sent Mr. Lamb a kind invitation to meet us in public debate, but he is silent. It is now nearly ten months since we came to Wales, and what good has been done, I think is little. Brighamism has done its work. It is true, as was said in the dream, the people here are in a measure justified for their prejudice. I called on a Mr. Nash at Pontypool, cousin to Bro. E. B. Morgan, of Lucas, Iowa. He is a man of influence and considerable means. When I was talking to him of the church, and the effort we were putting forth, he replied that he had seen so much of the wickedness of those that claimed to be Saints that he had no use for them. He went on and said that his two sisters and brother and mother were members, and they went to Salt Lake, left his father, and himself here. He stated that the missionaries advised his mother to go to Zion, and leave her husband if he would not go with her. The family ties were severed, family broken up, shortly the mother died, while the father was thousands of miles away. When if the law and order of the church had been observed they would not have thus been separated. I stated to Mr. Nash that the law of the church said not to persuade the wife to be baptized against the will of the husband, much less to advise a separation.

I then called on a party in Blockwood. Here I was informed of the husband leaving the wife and children, and going to what they called Zion (which is the pure in heart) never to return. I only mention this to show the style of Brighamism. I am more than ever convinced that before much can be accomplished, so far as getting additions to this church is concerned, that the people must be convinced that Brighamism is not the true Latter Day Saintism. When this is done the church in Wales will move on. In my short experience with the work in this land, I have enjoyed much liberty in speaking or explaining that the church is not responsible for the wickedness that has been done by wicked men. Oh what a pity that the church, whose mission is to bless mankind, should be stained with the deeds of wicked men! Surely the Lord did reject the church, for like Paul of old, Joseph foretold that which has come to pass; first, that the church would be rejected; second, that the Saints would be scattered; third, that their children should return and build up the waste places of Zion. With the Stakes of Independence and Lamoni established, and with hundreds of Saints in good old Far West district, surely is evidence that the Lord is at work with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. And the only temple that has been acknowledged by the Lord in this age, where the power of the Spirit and the presence of the angels of God were enjoyed, is the property of this church. And the Inspired Scriptures, that the Lord said in Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 15, should be preserved in safety, is also the property of this church. The very fact that the most of the Inspired Scriptures were left in the care of the widow, Emma Smith, and by her delivered to the Reorganization, is evidence that the Lord approved of the church, for he said, they should be preserved in safety.

There has been some additions to the church in this land of late, and I know of many that are convinced of the truthfulness of the work. One great drawback to the work here, that is, the missionary part, is that the people are not well prepared to keep a person over night. I was promised the church near Merthyr. At one time it was called the Saints' Home, for all in that neighborhood were Saints, and many of their grandchildren are now living there, and seemed to be anxious to hear the gospel. So I went up, and to my surprise, I could not get a place to sleep. The houses are so small, and the people have not yet learned to do what we have done at home when company came, that is, make beds on the floor. The old sayings came to mind, "There is as much room under the bed as on top," and "where there is a will there is a way."

In the appointment of missionaries to this field it would be wise to appoint those with small families. I hope the time will soon come when there will be found in this field a large force with their families. All should come to stay at least two years, and as fast as they can get men here on the ground to put them out in the field.

Times here now are not near so good as they were ten months ago. They have had thirty per cent of a drop in wages. With the close of the year the contract that has been in vogue for the past six years will be at an end, and there are some changes to be presented.

So far as the spiritual outlook is concerned, it is good. After we get the sting of the past, the cries of Brighamism explained, the work will go on all right.

It is more expensive to live here than in St. Joseph, Missouri. The prevailing prices in Cardiff, a city of 180,000 people, are: Flour, two dollars and fifty cents to two dollars and seventy-five cents per one hundred pounds; new potatoes, seventy-five cents per bushel; beef, sixteen to twenty-five cents per pound; mutton, ten to twenty cents; pork, fourteen to sixteen cents; veal, twenty to twenty-five cents; bacon, best home cured, not smoked, very nice, twenty cents; second grade, sixteen cents; hams, fourteen to eighteen cents; butter, twenty-five to twenty-seven cents; eggs, twenty-five cents per dozen for fresh stock, imported, twenty cents per dozen; tomatoes, twelve to twenty cents per pound; fresh cabbage, three cents for small head; strawberries, twelve to twenty cents per pound; gooseberries, extra fine, six to eight cents per pound; red currants same; apples, ten to fourteen dollars per barrel.

"Blessed of the Lord be Joseph's land," said Moses. I always did think Moses said the truth, but when I go to the market here, and think of ours at home, I repeat the sayings of Moses.

I forgot to say that poultry is very high; chickens, twenty-five to twenty-eight cents per pound; dressed ducks, twenty-five cents; turkeys, twenty-five cents; in winter run to thirty cents; geese, twenty-four cents. Well, I have said enough. This has been a cool summer. Can sleep under blanket and quilt.

Editors Herald: A short trip through the Oklahoma and Indian Territories has been the occasion of noting some excellent crops and fine advantage of land and climate in these comparatively new settlements, and the further fact that the white man after all is destined to be the dominant possessor.

Oklahoma is rapidly filling up, but opportunities are still open to those who will quietly enter and await patiently the time to purchase a home. In the Indian Territory many are leasing the lands at small rental for the term of five years, with promise of opportunity of purchase, but it occurs to me that they are on much better terms than the owners of the land if they never purchase as they will get the value of the farms by working them within the time named.

The reunion of the Oklahoma Saints began on the 8th inst. at Dover. Attendance small but was increasing toward the middle of the week. Brn. Hubert Case, George Montague, and W. P. Pickering in charge, and supported by Elders I. P. Baggerly, D. S. Crawley, S. S. and T. J. Smith, S. J. Hinkle, Bishop's agent; and just upon my departure, Bro. Aylor and others. Well, this is sufficient to hold the fort, and no doubt the reunion will do great good. There were a few helpers among the local elders and priests present also.

At noon on the 13th I arrived at Roscoe to find the Saints in the Clinton, Missouri, District engaged in reunion work, Brn. I. N. White and James Moler in charge. They are further supplied with tent in which to hold meetings which the Oklahoma Saints did not have. The missionary force present are Elders Mannering, Silvers, Stephenson, Quick, Welsh, and Ammon White, possibly others, who are not at the moment recalled. Elder J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, in the special work of the Sunday-school, and Bro. George W. Beebe, Sen., Bishop's agent, with a number of local helpers also on hand, and at work. The attendance of the public is good and altogether there are omens of success.

The greatest hindering causes to the progress of the work where I have been are twofold.

First, a lack of such general interest on the part of the Saints as will move everyone to help.

Second, the failure of so many to take the church papers.

This last, to an extent, is the leading cause of the first; a lack of interest. There is no family of the Saints but should take either the HERALD, or Ensign, or both. Then there are the Leaves and the Hope for young people. The whole can be had for four dollars per year with a number of little extras thrown in. Four dollars is a small pittance to pay out for the education of our children and ourselves in the ways of the Lord. People fail to value the publications at what they are worth and are too much given to the "mammon of unrighteousness." We should awake to the fact that we lose much more than we gain by being penurious over the reading supplies for ourselves and families. Boys and girls will read something, and if we do not furnish them the best, they will take the poorest. It is said the "Law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Do we fail to keep the line of communication open so that we shall not be able to receive when it comes? These leading church papers should be found in every house. No exception. Those who are too poor may receive for the asking. They need not fail to have by them that which supplies spiritual food for themselves and an evidence to their neighbors in behalf of God's work because they are poor in this world's goods. Why not ask for that which will furnish mental and spiritual life as well as for the bread that perisheth. Let us all make use of our powers and privileges. Send for papers at once.

J. W. WALDSMITH.

ELDON, Iowa, August 4.

Dear Brother: I find that I have another dollar that freely and charitably goes to spread the broad banners of truth in the mighty gems of love and mercy to those that now live, and to unborn multitudes that may come hereafter. There are so many disappointments that have heralded cries to the nations at large, but the Scriptures say not to go after them. My God is not in the desert, he is not in the secret chambers. He has never hid himself so that faith and humble pleading could not reach his mercies. He stands an unchangeable mediator before the Father to plead for fallen man. His mercies prevail, for those who will, may come and drink in the pure waters of love and mercy. There are no nonessentials with God, for righteousness and truth are the attributes of his divine love, and extend from eternity to eternity.

When my mind reflects upon the condition of blindness that has fallen upon the different creeds, in that they place God in the secret chambers, and in the desert, and then openly ask him to answer their prayers, for where there is no answer from God the people perish. This style is incompatible with truth, which is the word of God. Oh merciful God, break the dark chains that bind the revelations from mortal man, so that the bright gems of the Holy Ghost may brighten their minds with the illuminations from heaven to earth. The time has fully come when the different creeds will separate themselves from us, and cast our names out from among them, and this only stimulates me to the fact that that is no faith at all, that rejects the true faith of God.

They cease to receive any revelation from God, not knowing that revelation is the true light of God, and is one of his attributes and can not change, nor fail in any age of the world. If he saved man and woman in one age of the world by one faith, and in another age of the world by an entirely different faith, then he would be a finite God, and a respecter of persons; but he has never given any account of the change. This is wholly incompatible with truth and righteousness, for God's mercy endureth for ever and ever, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. Let God be true, if it proves every man a liar, for God is not mocked. And he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting, and if there is no spirit, they can not reap life everlasting, then works, faith, and the spirit are dead letters, for where one ceases the others also cease. But, the word says, "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake with other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance." Men now pray for the spirit, and then deny the effects that are to follow. This in my mind is high treason and mockery before God. But, brethern, I perceive you are to superstitious in all things.

Oh, may the latter-day kingdom roll on until it has filled the whole world, and men and women will not fall by the wayside, and be tossed to and fro, but that they may learn the heights and depths of God's infinite mercy.

Yours in love,

B. S. SHAUS, M. D.

AN INCENTIVE TO RIGHT LIVING.

Peter, in writing to the Saints of his time, among other things wrote thus: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"—1 Peter 4: 17, 18.

The word ungodly is defined in the dictionary to mean as follows: "1. Not godly; not having regard for God; disobedient; wicked; impious, sinful. 2. Polluted by sin or wickedness."

The word wicked is given to mean thus: "1. Evil in principle or practice; deviating from morality; contrary to the moral or divine law; addicted to vice or sin; sinful; immoral; profligate; said of persons and things; as a wicked king; a wicked woman; a wicked deed; wicked designs. 2. Cursed; baneful; hurtful; bad; pernicious; dangerous."

From this it will be seen that while the words ungodly and wicked are used as synonyms, there is yet a difference. A man may be ungodly and yet not be vicious, sinful, or wicked in either intent or practice. A man may be an upright, conscientious, charitable man in the world, neither wicked nor corrupt in his conduct, and still fail to be obedient to God, not having obeyed his gospel, as it is stated in the seventeenth verse; and we suppose this to have been the apostle's intent and meaning, to draw a distinction between those who are not obedient to the gospel but were otherwise good men as the world courts goodness. Jesus said he came not to judge the world, but to save the world. John 12. He came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. Those who were righteous under the law were to be judged by the law; but the Saints by the gospel and the testimony of Jesus. Hence we can see that the object had in view by Peter was to offer, as an incentive to the Saints to live better lives, the fact that judgment for human conduct for good or misconduct for evil and loss, or punishment, must begin at the house of God; and if those who had been living righteously according to the law, as they understood it, fared badly unto barely escaping condemnation, what must be the fate of those who had not obeyed the gospel, were disobedient to God? And those who were wicked; evil in principle and practice; what sort of fate would be theirs?

This seems to be the principle features of the passage; the text of verse 17 giving the clue to verse 18. The ungodly, those who had not obeyed the gospel; the wicked, those who were in principle and conduct evil and wicked; what is to be their fate in the judgment? Therefore, the Saints should obey and live godly lives, in order to be safe in that day of judgment.

JOHN R. WINDER IN THE NATIONAL MAGAZINE.

In the National Magazine for August, in the department called "Phases of American Affairs," John R. Winder, of the First Presidency of the Utah church, has an article entitled "Mormonism Not a Menace," in which he shows the attitude that church takes towards the United States Government, attempting to disprove that there is any menace in any phase of Mormonism. There are two passages in this article which we wish to place before our readers without comment. The first appears near the first of the article, as follows:

It is our belief that here, upon the North American Continent, is to be reared Zion, a New Jerusalem, to which scattered Israel will flock from all nations, to prepare for the coming of the Messiah. The present gathering of Mormon converts from those nations sprinkled with Israelitish blood, especially the blood of Ephraim, which, it is understood, has been mixed for centuries with the Gentiles, is preliminary to the building up of Zion. The converted Gentiles will join with the Ephraimites in rearing the Holy City, one of the capitals of the Kingdom of God, while the Jews will return to Palestine and rebuild Old Jerusalem, the other capital. Then will be fulfilled that passage of scripture, "The law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." The chosen site for the city of Zion is Jackson County, Missouri, where a colony of our people settled in the summer of 1831, and began to lay the foundations of Zion by the practice of a communal system known as the United Order, designed to establish unity and equality, to do away with pride, poverty, and iniquity, and make ready for the glorious advent of the Redeemer. Self-will among the Saints and persecutions from the outside, resulting from a misrepresentation of the motives inspiring them, prevented the full accomplishment of the project, and caused the expulsion of the colony from that section and the suspension of operations under the United Order. It is still in prospect, however, and every faithful Latter Day Saint looks forward to the eventual return of the church to Jackson County, and the building of a city and a temple unto God upon that consecrated soil.

The exodus of the Saints to the Rocky Mountains, and the establishment of "Stakes of Zion" in this region, are only preliminaries to that end.

The article closes with the following:

Mormonism stands for education, enlightenment, progress; for the development of the whole man, mentally, physically, morally, and spiritually. Even that part of our religion which has been so much misunderstood, so much misrepresented, inasmuch that we have been compelled to abandon its practice—I mean what is commonly called polygamy, which we hold to be the restored system of Patriarchal Marriage, practiced by Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Gideon, and other ancient servants of God—even this had as one of its main objects the improvement of the race along the lines indicated; though it also had reference to the hereafter, to celestial exaltation, where, according to our belief, family relationships formed here in obedience to divine law, are perpetuated. Having laid aside this principle, out of deference to the law of the land, it is not our purpose to reinstate it, so long as that law remains in force against it. We bow in submission to the edict of our government, and, appealing to God, angels, and men for the rectitude of our intentions, we leave with the makers and executors of the statutes framed against this feature of our faith, the responsibility for the prevention of its practice.

MR. KINSMAN'S DISCOVERY.

A certain Doctor Kinsman has made a discovery, so he thinks, which in its general features will be of considerable interest to our readers.

The only comment we choose to make on the subject is this. To us the word man means the whole race both men and women. The record has it thus:

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."—Gen. 1: 27.

They were created together, and by divine decree made one flesh. Genesis 2: 24.

Paul writing to the Galatians, 3: 28, wrote thus:

"There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

So, we need not worry over Mr. Kinsman's discovery.

It is discouraging to observe that one Mr. Kinsman, an expert biblical student of Erie, Pennsylvania, has been carefully investigating the Old and New Testaments, and after going through the Bible from lid to lid comes to the conclusion that no women get to heaven, as he finds no reference to them as being in the celestial regions. Further than that, although we frequently characterize persons of the other sex as angels, the characterization has no celestial significance. They are merely earthly angels. Mr. Kinsman finds no record of feminine angels in heaven. In every case the angel is a man, specifically defined by the masculine pronoun. Mr. Kinsman's discovery is by no means new. Other scholars have observed the same strange silence in the Bible as to women in heaven, but they have been so pained by the discovery that they have kept quiet about it, being in doubt what effect upon the sex a proclamation of it would have.

Mr. Kinsman also professes to be troubled over his discovery, old as it is, but he comforts himself with another discovery which may possibly be new. At least no one has yet announced it, we believe. He finds no evidence in the Bible that women go to the other place. From one point of view this is comforting, but it is not entirely satisfactory. It also suggests a harassing perplexity, for if women do not go to heaven and do not go to the other place, where do they go? Mr. Kinsman is also troubled about this and expresses a doubt whether it will ever be known.

It is not likely that he will be allowed to have the last word. Of course, there are no women in the other place, but it is not safe to assume there are none in the celestial world until the other and interested side has been heard from. If Mr. Kinsman will apply to Miss Anthony, or Mrs. Stanton, or the Chicago Woman's Club he will have his doubts speedily resolved and find that in the next world, if not in this, woman has just as much of glory as man and just as large a representation among the higher intelligences—probably larger, for the Bible affirms it was man, not woman, who was created “a little lower than the angels.” The inference as to woman is clear enough.—Chicago Tribune, August 7.

“COFFEE HEART.”

As there has been considerable said of late in the HERALD concerning the Word of Wisdom, the following which appeared in the Literary Digest for August 16 will be interesting to our readers:

“Medical examiners for life insurance societies have added the term ‘coffee heart’ to their regular classification of the functional derangements of that organ,” says The Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette. “Its effect is in shortening the long beat of the heart. Coffee toppers, they say, are plentiful, and are as much tied to their cups as the whisky toper. The effect of the coffee upon the heart is more lasting, and consequently worse, than that of liquor.”

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

John G. Smith of St. Louis, Missouri, says: “I have read all of ‘Book of Mormon Talks,’ and appreciate it very much as an excellent and well-written book. ‘Orion’ is a splendid writer. I recommended its being read by old and young.”

I. N. Roberts, under date of August 11, wrote from Harp, Alabama: “I had a very fine meeting in Florida resulting in twenty-one more additions to the church. They are of a good class of people. I am to return there in the near future and complete the work begun, also to organize upon a more permanent basis than is now. Four have given their names here and others very near. House is large and well filled at each meeting. The Baptists are running a big meeting within four or five miles of us, but it does not affect us in our work. My health is good, but I feel run down from continual labors and extreme heat.”

Bro. I. N. Roberts, writing from Harp, Alabama: “My health is good; but I am feeling much fatigued from constant work and the immense heat. It seems to get hotter every day. The work is coming up slowly but firmly. A better class of people is coming now, and I have great hopes of more permanent work than ever.”

Joseph Smith wrote from Newton, Iowa, August 19: “This is the fourth day of reunion; first day wholly free from rain. Attendance not large, but all is going nicely. Prayer services good; preaching excellent. We have just listened to F. A. Russell, of Grinnell, a young soldier, but one with armor on.”

S. Tomlinson writes from Gooderham, Ontario, August 20: “I baptized three more here last Sunday, the 17th, young people, their parents belonging to the church.”

Under date of August 20 R. O. Self wrote from Clearwater, Nebraska: “We have just closed a very peaceful conference here, of the Central Nebraska District. Peace and harmony prevailed. The word was preached by James Caffall, Levi Gamet, and the writer. The Saints were strengthened and rejoiced in the restored gospel. The weather has been fine, with but little rain to hinder. We are using the tent.”

W. S. Pender writes from Provo, Utah, August 19: “Replied last night to a lecture on the ‘differences’ between us and the Utah church, delivered by Mr. Stubbs, counselor to the bishop in the Page neighborhood, near Provo. Had splendid audience and interest. They have secured Judge Booth, who will lecture to-night and Friday night, and Bro. F. L. Sawley and the writer will reply. Religious monotony in that district is thoroughly broken. People asked for tracts freely last night. Saints are well and happy.”

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Some one in Webb City, Missouri, sends us a dollar bill to apply on the HERALD, but fails to sign his name. Who is it?

The Maryville Tribune, of Maryville, Missouri, in its issue for August 14, made very favorable mention of the Barnard Reunion, though the editor got some things a little mixed. However, it was fair in tone.

The Sentinel, of Aurelia, Iowa, in its issue for August 8, mentions that Elders J. M. Baker, J. R. Sutton, and C. J. Hunt were holding tent-meetings there. In connection with the news item our epitome of belief is given.

By a marked copy of the Beacon Journal, of Akron, Ohio, we note that Elders Schmidt and F. J. Ebeling have been busy in that place, and have succeeded in making clear to some at least that we are vastly different in some respects than the Utah “Mormons.”

E. H. Durand writes from Flatwoods, West Virginia, August 12, that the debate between Elder G. H. Godbey, of the Latter Day Saints, and Elder Kirkman, of the so-called “Campbellites,” had just closed. This debate, he writes, is the first of five.

W. S. Macrae reports nine baptized at the reunion at Euclid, Arkansas. A good meeting was had. He says the South is a ripe field now. He has baptized fifteen since August 3, and more are about ready.

James McKiernan writes from Farmington, Iowa, that John H. Willis, of this place, and Alice Gelatt, formerly of Lamoni, too, were married August 16, at Farmington.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College has announced that Ernest Ritson Dewsnup will assume the duties of president of the school in September, 1903. He will direct the affairs of the school from abroad this year. We congratulate the Board upon securing this excellent young brother for the school.

WHY I AM A LATTER DAY SAINT.

We are commanded in Holy Writ to "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear" (1 Peter 3:15). In this day of many creeds and of much opposition to the truth, amid the deafening cries of "Delusion!" "False Prophet!" "Imposture!" etc., that are going up from every religious press and pulpit in opposition to the little handful of people called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I feel it my duty to give a reason for the hope that is in me, by telling the world why I am a Latter Day Saint. First, I will state briefly what that hope is. It is what Paul called "the hope of eternal life, which God, that can not lie, promised before the world began."

At an early stage of my life, through reading the word of God, I was led to seek to know how I could secure that hope in my breast, and have it as an anchor to my soul. It is true I had read my Bible, which all Christendom claimed to believe and take for their guide, but unfortunately the hundreds of different sects interpreted that Bible so differently, and taught so many different and conflicting theories as to how to obtain that hope of eternal life, that it was sufficient to obscure the mind and confuse the understanding, for how could I assume to know the true meaning of that which, all claimed, required men of profound learning to interpret? And when I found these learned men so widely differing and conflicting in their interpretations of God's word, well might the mind wonder, "If God had spoken at all, why not in such plainness that the weakest could understand?"

The first ten years of my life were under Episcopalian influence. From that time until I was about seventeen years old I was confined to none, but attended different churches as inclination led me. When about seventeen I was led to hear a controversy between a Baptist minister and a Congregationalist known in England as an "Independent." After canvassing both sides of the question, as set forth by these learned men, I concluded the Baptist came nearer to Holy Writ in their belief than the "Independents," and I cast my lot in with that people, and remained with them until I was twenty-one years old. In the meantime I heard of a people whom the world at large nicknamed "Mormons," because they believed in the Book of Mormon. The real name of the church, as I afterwards learned, was "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." It is true, what I heard about them was in no wise flattering to them. In common parlance, they were "deluded fanatics," "the dupes of an impostor," "a false prophet," "a money-digger," "a horse-thief," and "an ignorant fanatic." This was the character of this people and their leader as declared from every pulpit, echoed by the press and re-echoed by the masses, religious and irreligious, for all combined to speak evil of the Latter Day Saints.

I had never imagined that the popular verdict could be false, and especially when founded upon the solemn declarations of men who professed to be ambassadors for Christ. So I accepted the common verdict and avoided their meetings until I was nineteen years of age, when one Sabbath I concluded to go and hear them, though like one of old who said, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" I did not expect to hear any good. Only a few people were present, and those were of what the world calls "the lower classes." Two preachers occupied the hour. They wore no canonical vestments, no sacerdotal robes, no white neckties or anything that would indicate that they were of some holy order, but their apparel was that of the workingman, and their hands indicated sons of toil. I listened to their teachings; the Bible was their text-book, and to it they appealed to prove that their teaching was divine. My acquaintance with the contents of that sacred record from my childhood compelled me to acknowledge that, so far, they were in complete harmony with it. But when one of them said the Baptists had no authority to baptize, my impulsive nature rebelled and I immediately left the hall. It had not occurred to me that no man could be an ambassador for Christ without being called and qualified by him. I had read how God had called prophets and sent them forth to declare his will; that "there was a man sent from God whose name was John;" where Jesus declared, "I come not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." I had been taught by tradition that it was necessary for men to be called of God by revelation in those days, but it was not necessary now, hence I could not accept their view.

A year rolled by before I could make up my mind to listen to them again, but curiosity led me once more to their meeting in the same hall. My views of the character of the people were unchanged, but I knew nothing but the popular outcry that would stamp them as the deluded followers of a false prophet. This time the hall was filled. They were commemorating the death and suffering of the Savior of the world, after which the meeting resolved itself into a prayer and testimony meeting, in which the members gave expression of their faith and hope as well as supplicating the throne of grace for needed blessings. I had many times read the beautiful story of the day of Pentecost, but never expected to see a repetition of it, though many times I had heard, and joined in the prayer, that God would send a "Pentecostal shower," but none expected a literal answer to the prayer. But here among this despised and lowly people I saw such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit as I had never seen nor dreamed of seeing. There was no confusion, no uproarious shouting, no distortion of the features, no writhing of the body, but the calm and gentle influence of the Spirit of God thrilled every soul, and I, obdurate and unbelieving as I was, felt its thrilling touch, and I could not but exclaim, "Verily, this is a Pentecostal shower!" And if I could be thrilled with the divine influence, what must have been the joyous experiences of those devoted believers whose whole faith was centered in a God and Christ who was willing to reveal and manifest himself unto all who seek unto him in his appointed way! These men and women, like the unlearned Galileans on the day of Pentecost, gave utterance to languages that they had never learned, not in incoherent grunts or discordant sounds, but calmly spoke, as their faces beamed with intelligence, in languages that sounded far more sublime than any language I ever heard. Interpretations were given in the same calm and orderly manner, no one intruding or endeavoring to speak while another was on the floor. There was an earnestness and zeal manifest in the speakers that was evidence of their candor. It was not merely the elders who were the mediums through whom these manifestations came, but the membership were blessed with like gifts.

Twelve months after this I was invited by an opponent to this people to go and hear a debate on the Saints' doctrine. I still remained with the Baptist Church. I went expecting to see their faith disproved by the word of God; but was disappointed, for in spite of the superior learning and eloquence of their antagonist, I was forced to the conclusion, by the plain and simple reasoning of the Latter Day Saint, backed by the word of God, that whatever the people might be, their doctrine was none other than the doctrine taught by Christ and his apostles. Yet it was possible for a people to have the letter without the spirit of the gospel, and my skeptical mind could not be content with what I had seen and heard. I now felt the necessity of seeking light from God, for I always believed that he would hear and answer prayer. I continually searched the Scriptures and asked my heavenly Father to guide me, for I felt unable to determine by my own limited wisdom so important a matter, and the opinions of the learned clergy of all sects were so at variance with each other that I could no longer rely upon them. This was my constant prayer, "O Lord, if the Latter Day Saints are thy people, lead me to them. If they are not thy people, lead me from them. I want to do thy will." I earnestly sought to know the will of God that I might do it and obtain eternal life. I placed myself entirely in his hands, believing that my heavenly Father would not give his child a stone when he asked for bread.

The more I searched the Scriptures and sought unto God for guidance, the more I was drawn to the people whom all the world despised, until my way was made plain, and I gave myself unreservedly to God through obedience to his word: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:16). "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:38). "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22:16). And, dear reader, as I now stand, far advanced in the sunset of life, I bear this solemn testimony that as I arose from my watery grave in which I had been buried by a servant authorized of God, I felt, for the first time in my life, the quickening influence of the Holy Spirit bearing witness to me that my sins were forgiven, through the efficacy of the precious blood of Him who died on Calvary's mount; and my heart and tongue burst forth in pæans of praise to God for his redeeming love; and as holy hands were laid upon my head, that the Holy Spirit might be given as an abiding Comforter, as well as a present witness that I was born of God, my joy and peace and gratitude to God were too great for utterance, and I realized that I was "born again," a new creature in Christ Jesus, that I might "walk in newness of life" (Romans 6).

And I declare with all solemnity before God, that to my mind "all things had become new." I had a new faith, a new hope, founded upon the eternal promise of God. My desires were changed, from the groveling things of earth to the things of heaven, God, and Christ. I loved righteousness and hated iniquity. The Bible was a new book to me. I read it now by the light of the Holy Spirit instead of by the flickering, uncertain glimmer of comment made by the sects of the day, which were so contradictory and changeable that they only clouded the mind with uncertainty. I could see the divine Being as presented in the revelations he had made of himself to his children, not as the nondescript being set forth in the creeds, as "without body, parts, or passions" "whose center is everywhere and his circumference nowhere." Not as a monster who created one part of humanity to obtain eternal life, and another part to sink to eternal damnation, or to use the exact words of the Westminster Confession, section 3: "By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death."

I could now understand the plain and simple declaration as found in the divine history of the creation as delivered unto Moses by the inspiration of the Holy One: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness" (Genesis 1:26). "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him" (verse 27). Again I could comprehend that beautiful declaration of Jesus Christ as found in John 3:16: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Again, "For God sent his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved" (John 3:17). Here I learned that the Creator and Ruler of the world is a God of love, seeking the salvation of all mankind, and not a respecter of persons. He created man an intelligent being, only "a little lower than the angels" (Psalms 3:5). And he set before him the way of life, and when man proved himself unworthy of that precious boon, he renewed the promise of eternal life through his Son Jesus Christ on conditions of obedience to the unchangeable law of God. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men" (Titus 2:11). "Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth" (1 Timothy 2:4). I learned that Christ "gave himself a ransom for all" (verse 6).

I learned also that the conditions under which mankind is to obtain eternal life are: Faith in God, as he has revealed himself to man, not as the creeds represent him (Hebrews 11:6). Faith in his being, his character, his commands, and his gracious promises. Faith in Jesus as the savior of the world, in the great atonement made by him, in his death and resurrection, in his teaching and glorious example; not a mere professional faith, but a living faith that leads to obedience to all his commands, and submission to his ordinances, that lays hold of every promise made to fallen man. A faith that leads to repentance, the forsaking of sin, the renouncing of Satan and all of his works and ways. A faith that bows to the divine decree, "Ye must be born again" (John 3:1), as Jesus explained it to Nicodemus: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God" (verse 5). A faith that accepts the declaration of our risen Savior, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:16). That faith that believes our "heavenly Father will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him" (Luke 11:13; see John, chapters 14, 15, 16). Which he gives to all "them that obey him" (Acts 5:22), for so is the divine promise to all (Acts 2:38, 39; 8:14, 19; 19:1, 6; Hebrews 6). The faith that the three thousand had on the day of Pentecost, and which the publicans had when they "justified God" in forgiving their sins, when they were baptized by John for the remission of sins (Luke 7:29), but which the Pharisees did not have, for they "rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him" (Luke 7:30). The Samaritans had that faith when Philip had "preached Christ unto them" and "the things concerning the kingdom of God" (Acts 8). The eunuch possessed it when he demanded baptism at Philip's hands, having received the testimony that Jesus was the Son of God. Cornelius manifested that faith when, having received the Holy Ghost in confirmation of Peter's testimony, he obeyed the command to be baptized (Acts chapters 10 and 11). Paul proved his faith by his works when commanded by Ananias, the messenger of Christ, to "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22:16). And this same apostle declares, "He [Christ] saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost," thus proving the divinity of the declaration of Christ to Nicodemus (John 3:3, 5 and Mark 16:16). Yes, dear reader, I learned that we must possess that faith which acknowledges and leads us to obey all the commandments and ordinances of God, which he has given unto us through his Son Jesus Christ, and that faith must be manifest in our obedience thereunto, for James says, "Faith without works is dead" (James 2:20). I learn from this chapter that a mere profession of faith in Christ is an empty and vain thing, and Christ has emphasized this truth, declaring, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven (Matthew 7:21).

It is an insult to the infinitely wise, loving, and unchangeable God to charge him with giving laws and ordinances that are not essential to be obeyed and that have no bearing upon our present and eternal welfare. My research, observation, and pleadings with God for light, and a careful comparison of modern Christendom, as also the doctrine and practices of the Latter Day Saints with the word of God, taught me that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was the only church that honored God by a full and complete acceptance of his revealed will. Christ said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." By testing those fruits by the word of God I became assured that my salvation depended upon my obedience to the whole truth and nothing but the truth, for it is written, "Men shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Eternal life is the boon for which I seek, and which God has promised, and it is also written, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments" (Matthew 19:17). Again, "Blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it" (Luke 11:28).

But the church teaches me it is not enough to enter into covenant with God in the ordinance of baptism; it is not enough to receive the Holy Spirit as the seal of my adoption, the "earnest of our inheritance" (Romans 8; Ephesians 1). But having entered into covenant with God to serve him, by being buried with Christ in baptism and rising unto newness of life, thereby having dedicated and consecrated my whole being unto God, I must keep that covenant by continuing in all that is pure and holy; for the promise of eternal life is unto them only that endure to the end, and the promise is sure. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Again, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Thus the Eternal pledges his unchangeable word to reward the earnest faithful laborers for their fidelity unto the end.

Moreover, our heavenly Father, knowing all the evils that assail his children both within and without, and the utter weakness of our natures, has made ample provision in the gospel to sustain and strengthen us, physically and spiritually. This fact the world at large seems to be ignorant of, or they explain away the true meaning and purpose of these divine helps. They declare, for instance, that the Holy Ghost with its attendant blessings was only intended at the farthest for the apostolic dispensation, and some claim they were for the twelve apostles only. Yet it can not be disputed that man is much the same in all ages of the world; that the same evils abound to-day; that there can be no compromise between God and Satan, good and evil, truth and error; that Satan is the same implacable foe of God and man, and that to-day every device that his implacable and fiendish nature can invent and bring to bear against humanity to destroy it from the face of the earth and subject it to his infernal dominion, is and will be brought into operation. It must be evident to every thinking mind, whose eyes are not blinded by the dark veil of ignorance and error, that if any of the people of God needed the helps which God has provided to bring his children to such state of preparation as to enable them to come into his presence and abide in his glory, the same helps are needed by his children to-day.

While Christ was on the earth he not only preached the gospel of the kingdom of God, but he manifested the power of that gospel to bless the physical nature as well as the spiritual, and when he sent out the twelve and the seventies he commanded them to manifest the same power. (See Matthew 10, Mark 3, Luke 9, 10.) And when he had risen from the dead and gave the great commission to preach the gospel, "He said unto them, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover" (Mark 16: 15-18). Mark you, this promise was not simply to the apostles, it was to those to whom the apostles were sent. He gave to these apostles a commission to "preach the gospel to every creature." Will any believer in Christ doubt the fulfillment of the first promise? Is it not to "every creature" that complies with the conditions, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"? Is the next promise less emphatic, "These signs shall follow them that believe"? Surely if one promise of the Lord Jesus is good the other can not fail to be, for "God is not a man that he should lie, nor the son of man that he should repent." "For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance (Rom. 11: 20). He will never fail in his promises to his believing children. God has never taken back that promise. He never will. The gospel is to all the world—to every creature. If every creature believes the message and obeys, then the promise is to them. It is not enough to say, We do not enjoy it. If we do not, the fault is our own, not the Lord's.

One grand evidence that humanity needs these blessings is, that whenever any pretended healer rises up in his own name, scouting every gospel condition, and demanding no obedience to God, the whole world runs after him, presenting their maimed limbs and emaciated bodies, pleading for the panacea which their physicians have proved themselves unable to give. Yet strange to say, when one comes in the name of the Lord, presenting the claims of the gospel as the unalterable conditions upon which these blessings can be received, he is rejected as an impostor, a false prophet, and every evil epithet that can be hatched in the vocabulary of hell is hurled at him, and they persecute him to the death. Such is the inconsistency of men, blinded by human theories and "doctrines of devils."

I have found the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is established on the rock of eternal truth, the word of God. It holds every promise of Jehovah as unailing and unfaltering as his eternal throne. Saul of Tarsus rejected the Christ, denounced his apostles and saints as impostors, ridiculed the idea of miraculous powers being given to men, and persecuted the believers as heretics. He was blinded by the Evil One, but after the Christ had appeared to him, and the spiritual as well as the physical scales had dropped from his eyes, he gladly accepted the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and became one of the strongest advocates for "the way that was everywhere spoken against," and having partaken of these divine blessings he became an able expounder of the gospel, and has left on record an exposition of the blessings promised by Jesus, showing the operations of the Holy Spirit; and for what purpose they were given, and until that purpose is answered they can not be dispensed with.

Paul's writings are professedly admired by Christendom largely on account of his great learning, but they tell us that those portions that treat of the operations of the Holy Spirit in dispensing the spiritual gifts promised by Jesus and particularized by Paul have reference or pertain to that age only. Yet, inconsistently with this claim, they contend the Holy Scriptures as a whole were given as the guide to mankind in all coming ages. If this latter claim is true, and we shall not question it, it must follow that all the commandments, ordinances, and promises given by Jesus Christ and taught by his apostles are in force to-day. For Paul emphatically declares that "The gifts and callings of God are without repentance" (Romans 11:29); that is, God does not repent his decrees and purposes. And Peter was shown "that God is no respecter of persons" (Acts 10:31), and James declares that with God there "is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." The Almighty declares himself thus: "I am the Lord, I change not" (Malachi 3:6); and Paul affirms, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever" (Hebrews 13:8). By reading the 12th chapter of 1 Corinthians I find these divine gifts referred to, as distributed to the various members of the church by the Holy Spirit, "dividing to every man severally as he will." The church is compared to the human body, and as the various powers or qualifications are given to each member of the body to enable it to perform its proper function, each member being dependent upon its fellow members, so in the church of Christ each member is given his or her proper gift by the Holy Spirit, to enable them to fill their several places in the mystical body of Christ, and each member is dependent upon his fellow member, and all are dependent upon the Spirit of God. And Paul assures us that as God hath set every member in the human body, as it pleased him, so, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues" (1 Corinthians 12:28), and in the eleventh verse we are told, "But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." Please bear in mind that "God hath set them in the church." Paul in Ephesians 4 tells for what purpose they were set there. He says: "Unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. . . . And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." Now, please observe the purpose for which these gifts and officials were given: "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Now please notice how long they were to continue in the church: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Are the Saints all perfect yet? Has God a ministry to-day? Can they minister effectually without these divine aids? Does the church need edifying to-day? Can it be truly edified without the means that God has appointed? Have we all come in the unity of the faith? Have all attained to the knowledge of the Son of God? Can human learning and human wisdom give us that knowledge? "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost" (1 Corinthians 12:3). See Matthew 11:27; 1 Corinthians 1:21; 2:6-11. Has any part of the so-called Christian world attained unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ? Let us compare or measure ourselves by the grandeur and infinitely glorious excellences of the character of our crucified and risen Redeemer, and we sink into nothingness, before the immeasurable stature, of holiness and purity. Instead of attaining to his divine fullness, we are empty and barren, hence we need these God-given aids to-day as much as they were needed in apostolic times. When we have attained to that perfection—the measure of the fullness of Christ—these helps will be no longer needed. Then we shall realize the truth of Paul's saying, "Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge [partial knowledge], it shall vanish away," or be lost in the great sea of knowledge, that shall then be unfolded to our view. When we "know even as also we are known," then we shall be in the full enjoyment of eternal life. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3).

I have been told by theologians that these gifts and apostolic and prophetic callings, etc., were to serve as the scaffolding to a building, and when the building is completed the scaffolding is removed. If this were true, they would be needed to-day as much as in former times, for the building is not completed. The work is still going on. When it is completed the Master will come and receive it unto himself. The philosophy referred to is false, from the fact that the scaffolding forms no part of the building, being separate and apart from the real structure. But Paul says, "God set them in the church," not around it, or up against it, for the workmen to stand on, but in the church. These theologians forget also that apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers were workmen in this mystic building of God, and as the little coral insect is said to build mighty reefs and rocks in the ocean, themselves forming a part of these mighty structures, so these apostles, etc., are built into the mystical body of Christ and eternally form a part of the same. Truly, the work of God is a "marvelous work and a wonder!" Verily the wisdom of the wise men perishes when they oppose it, and the understanding of the prudent men ceaseth, because they know not God and understand not his counsels.

But light has come into the world, God has remembered his church in the wilderness, and again sent forth apostles and prophets, divinely authorized evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and they are declaring that ancient gospel with all its attendant blessings and gifts of the Spirit, to prepare the way before the second coming of the crucified and risen Christ, to prepare the earth for his righteous and glorious reign, in fulfillment of his word spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began, and confirmed by his own mouth while here in the flesh, declared by angels and testified of by holy apostles, as the truth was witnessed unto them by the Holy Ghost. Yes, dear reader, that same gospel is restored, not in letter only, but in power, as foreseen by John in the heavenly visions on the Isle of Patmos (Revelation 14.)

Having heard the divine message I am trying to obey it, and after fifty-five years of experience in trying to walk the "strait and narrow way, that leadeth unto life," I testify that God has been faithful to his word and has given me every promised blessing that I have lived worthy of. And because I have proved God and Christ to be true in forgiving my sins, giving me the Holy Spirit as "the seal of my adoption," "the earnest of my inheritance" in "the purchased possession," whereby I am enabled to cry, Abba, Father, I say, because of this, I am emboldened to give you this testimony as the reason why I am a Latter Day Saint. I pray God that the scales of darkness may be taken from the eyes of the whole world, that they may see the true light that now shineth, and follow its lead unto the end of the "strait and narrow way," for it surely leads unto eternal life. For He is true who has promised and is abundantly able to save unto the uttermost all who trust in him.

It may be thought that because the Church of Latter Day Saints believes in and expects the manifestations of the Holy Spirit in the manner promised by Jesus, and set forth by Paul and other apostles, that she is ready to accept anything that seems to be supernatural. Nothing can be farther from the truth than the above idea. She realizes the fact that in the universe there is a good and an evil power, the former seeking to uplift and save humanity, the latter seeking to drag down and destroy humanity. Hence she recognizes the warning given by Jesus Christ: "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves" (Matthew 7:15). Again, "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. . . . And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. . . . For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." (Matthew 24:4, 6, 11, 24.) If there were no such thing as evil supernatural powers the above warnings would be idle, useless, without meaning. Paul, in speaking of false apostles, assures us that, "Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness" (2 Corinthians 11:14; 15). This apostle tells us that one shall be revealed, "whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thessalonians 2:9).

There was shown unto John a power that "doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven" (Revelation 13:13). This apostle says, "I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty" (Revelation 16:13, 14). The church of Christ being warned of these false influences is also armed with the means to detect these evil powers. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said the Savior. It will not be deceived by the sacerdotal garb, or "sheep's clothing," nor by the sanctimonious look, pious groans, nor with a show of sanctity expressed in pious phrases. The God-given standard is, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isaiah 8:20). Again, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God" (2 John 9). See also 1 John 4:1-3. Hence, that which will not bear the strictest scrutiny under the unerring light of the Spirit and word of God must be rejected.

The warning of Christ against false prophets is used by theologians to show that there were to be no more prophets after Christ and his apostles. Did it ever occur to their minds that no warning against false prophets would be needed if there were no true ones? Would men put forth a counterfeit dollar if the government had not authorized a true and legal dollar? If the legal dollar had been done away with as no longer needed, would counterfeiters waste their time in coining and circulating a spurious one? God wants us to discern between the true and the false, hence he has warned the church, not against the true, but against the false prophets; and for this purpose he has given to the church the gift of the "discerning of spirits" (1 Corinthians 12:10), as well as his revealed word, so that she is doubly armed against imposition, let it come in what garb it may. So long as she is upon the watch-tower, ever mindful of that which God has commanded, she can not be deceived.

Prior to the ushering in of this latter-day work, all professed Christendom denied the existence of supernatural power as being manifest among men in those days. The writer with his brethren have time and again been challenged to work miracles as an evidence that the doctrine we taught was divine, they, at the same time, declaring "that all supernatural gifts were done away, and that our doctrine was from beneath," yet, "If we would only work a miracle, they would accept the doctrine" they declared as damnable, "as being divine." But Christ commissioned his apostles to preach the gospel as the means of convincing and converting the world, and the signs promised were to follow their belief in that which the apostles taught, not to go before, as a means of convincing unbelievers. God proposes that men should be brought to him by faith in and love for the truth, while the supernatural gifts were intended as helps and means of comfort, growth, and protection of the true believers in Christ Jesus. The world rejects the plain and simple truths of the gospel. No sooner does the church of Christ gain a foothold on the earth than spiritualism springs forth as the means of communication, not between God and man, but professedly between departed spirits and men living in the flesh, and millions flock to the dark ensign, and ministers, judges, statesmen, rulers, doctors, and men and women of every standing in the world become its devotees and worship at its altars. But all deny communication with God. Then Christian Science, hypnotism, mesmerism, and many others of like brood, raise their dark escutcheons and people of every grade flock to them, and conclude they have found the great panacea for every human ill. Verily Christ's warnings are needed! Strong delusion has taken hold upon the world, and the millions swallow it down as a sweet morsel. They are willing to believe a lie because they have pleasure in unrighteousness. But "that wicked" shall be consumed and destroyed with the brightness of the coming of the Lord Jesus, when he shall come to claim his bride, the only true church of God, whom all the world despise. Then shall be ushered in the reign of righteousness for which God has been preparing his people through all the ages. Then shall "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ" (Revelation 11:15). Then shall burst forth that glorious anthem from the lips of the redeemed of all ages: "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth. . . . Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever" (Revelation 5). Then, "they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Revelation 7:16, 17).

Reader, now is the day of preparation for that glorious reign, and God has provided every means in the gospel essential to your preparation. Accept the proffered terms, obey the gospel, keep your covenant with God, endure to the end, and eternal life in the celestial kingdom of God is yours. Because the truth of that gospel has been engraven on my heart, I remain a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. "Go thou and do likewise."

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH? — NO. 7.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Another text quite like this one is in Acts 3: 20, 21, and reads as follows: "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: Whom the heavens must receive until the time of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

What is this "restitution"? Evidently the gathering together, spoken of by Paul, above referred to. And when is it to occur? When Jesus has ended his stay in heaven as stated above. The heavens must retain him until that time. The restitution evidently includes the restoration of the gospel in its first purity, the authority from God necessary to administer its law, and all things spoken by the prophets concerning this matter.

We propose now to examine some of these things which the prophets have spoken. We call attention first to Malachi 3: 1-4, which reads as follows:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in days of old, and as in former years.

The coming of the Lord here spoken of certainly was not his first coming, for he did not come suddenly to his temple, nor did any one have any difficulty to stand when he then appeared, neither did he come as a judge or a refiner. Neither did Judah bring forth a pleasant offering, nor did he purify the sons of Levi. Every expression in this text shows that it was the second coming of the Messiah that is referred to and not the first. When the disciples asked Jesus about the Elias he said: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things, but I say unto you that Elias is come already. . . . Then understood the disciples that he spake unto them of John the Baptist."

The disciples doubtless had in mind the text we have given above in Malachi 3:1-4, as also another in the fourth chapter, which we now wish to couple with it: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." —Mal. 4:5, 6.

These two texts speak of the same person, the forerunner of Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, but not a word, not an idea, not a hint is contained in either of them that John fulfilled all these texts, or done all the work appointed him, nineteen hundred years ago. To make the matter plain we will separate the points contained in the above three texts, each by itself.

1. Elias was to come.
2. John the Baptist was the Elias.
3. Jesus said he "is come already," present tense, as well as "shall first come," future tense.
4. He was to precede "the great and dreadful day of the Lord."
5. A messenger is to come before the Lord comes suddenly to his temple.
6. A messenger is to precede the coming of the Lord when he comes as a "refiner" and a "purifier."
7. That John did not do the first time he came all that was prophesied of him.
8. That he must finish his work in the last days just before the coming of the Lord.
9. As a preparer of the way of the Lord he was to precede both the first and second advent.
10. That at some time he was to "restore all things."
11. That he did not so restore anciently.

This thought is the same presented by Peter, where he speaks of the "restitution of all things," and where Paul says "the dispensation of the fullness of times." We desire the reader to notice these texts closely on this point; i. e., that they all speak of a "restoration," a "restitution," hence we should look for a restored church, not a reformed one.

Mr. Charles Wesley, although one of the reformers and a founder of a great church, looked for a final restoration of the church of Christ in all its glory, as will be seen by these lines, of which he is the author. Italics mine:

"Once he in the Baptist came,
And virtue's paths restored;
Pointed sinners to the Lamb;
Forerunner of the Lord.
Sent again from Paradise,
Elijah shall the tidings bring:
Jesus comes; ye saints, arise,
And meet your heavenly King

Previous to the dreadful day
Which shall thy foes consume,
Jesus prepare thy way;
Let the last prophet come."

Some one may ask, Do you claim that Joseph Smith was the Elias or John the Baptist come again? Not at all. Why then do we refer to these texts when considering the life of Joseph Smith? Simply this; he was ordained under the hands of John the Baptist, and commissioned to do the very work spoken of in those texts—authorized to restore the Church of Jesus Christ.

Moses and Elias appeared to Jesus in the presence of Peter, James, and John on the mount of transfiguration at the beginning of that dispensation. It is no more wonderful that Elias should appear to Joseph Smith at the beginning of this—the dispensation of the fullness of times. God works like himself in all ages of the world. If the world will not receive it, it is none the less true. John certainly was to come in our day, whether people set their faces against that fact or not. Why could he not have appeared to Joseph Smith as he claims? Is it impossible? All are compelled to say "No." Then if not, why not? Well, one may say, It could be true, of course, but I don't believe it. But what has one's belief or disbelief to do with the facts? It is the facts that should concern us and not what some one may think of them. Let us hear the testimony of Mr. Smith himself as to the facts, also the testimony of one other who was an eye-witness:

While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterward that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized, I baptized him first, and afterward he baptized me, after which I laid my hands on his head and ordained him to the holy priesthood, and afterward he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us upon this occasion, and conferred the priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament. . . . It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.—History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 34-36.

While the world is consoling itself that God no more sends his messengers to earth, he moves steadily forward and continues his work as in former times. The clergy will doubtless continue to assert that God has changed, that he has no more work for the angels, that they are all mustered out of service, and the world will continue to believe it, and never ask for the proof. One fact, however, stares us directly in the face. John's work was not completed eighteen hundred years ago. If he did not appear to Joseph Smith, will the world be any more ready to accept him if he should yet come? He must come. He must finish his mission. He must prepare the way of the Lord at his second coming.

Let us next hear what Oliver Cowdery, a New York school-teacher, has to say of this same event. Let the reader notice the nature of these testimonies. These men saw with their eyes; they were eye-witnesses. They heard with their ears; they were ear-witnesses. They felt in their hearts; they were heart-witnesses. They felt the angel's hands upon their heads and testified to what they knew. There was no room for deception.

The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted, and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked-for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! What wonder! What amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the blaze of day: yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeams, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened, we gazed, we admired! 'Twas the voice of an angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls and we were wrapped in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled for ever.

But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hands the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow servants in the name of the Messiah I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon the earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."—History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 37, 38.

The men who bore this testimony suffered all manner of persecution, but to the last, even in the face of death, they still maintained its truthfulness. There is no reason why this testimony should not be believed, and in it we have the fulfillment of Malachi's prophecy concerning the messenger John as quoted above.

Another passage of scripture in harmony with the ones noticed above is found in Zechariah 2: 2-4: "Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

Several times Jerusalem has been rebuilt and inhabited, but not until since 1853 has it been inhabited "without walls." This of itself locates the fulfillment of the prophecy in our time, and it will be noticed that the prophet saw that a young man was to make the proclamation because of instructions from an angel.

Joseph Smith was so informed by an angel and did so proclaim when only a youth, besides he afterwards sent one of the elders of the church to Palestine to bless the land and pray the Lord to remove the curse.

Following is the instruction of the angel to the young man, Joseph Smith, concerning this matter; also the prayer of Orson Hyde on Mt. Olivet, October 24, 1841:

While I was thus in the act of calling upon God, I discovered a light appearing in the room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside, standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor. He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; nor do I believe that anything could be made to appear so exceeding white and brilliant; his hands were naked, and his arms also a little above the wrists. So also were his feet naked, as were his legs a little above the ankles. His head and neck were also bare. I could discover that he had no other clothing but this robe, as it was open so that I could see into his bosom. Not only was his robe exceedingly white, but his whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. The room was exceeding light, but not so very light as immediately around his person. When I first looked upon him I was afraid, but the fear soon left me. He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Nephi. That God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people. . . . After telling me these things, he commenced quoting the prophecies of the Old Testament. He first quoted part of the third chapter of Malachi; and he quoted also the fourth or last chapter of the same prophecy. . . . In addition to these he quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying that it was about to be fulfilled. He quoted also the third chapter of Acts, twenty-second and twenty-third verses, precisely as they stand in our New Testament. He said that that prophet was Christ, but the day had not yet come when "they who would not hear his voice should be cut off from among the people," but soon would come.

He also quoted the second chapter of Joel from the twenty-eighth to the last verse. He also said this was not yet fulfilled, but soon would be. And he further stated that the fullness of the Gentiles was soon to come in.—History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 13-15.

The reader will notice that these references by the angel plainly refer to the rebuilding of Jerusalem and its escapement from Gentile oppression. The above communication was given September 21, 1823. Let the reader search the history of Palestine at that time and see if there were any signs of what we now see. Look again and see if the angel told the truth when he said these prophecies were soon to be fulfilled.

Search and see that the Turks had then passed a law making it a crime punishable with death for any one under the government of Turkey to embrace Christianity. In 1844 the combined powers of Europe compelled Turkey to revoke that law. Did Joseph Smith prophesy correctly by the authority of an angel in 1823 when he said the time would soon come when Jerusalem should be rebuilt, and the Jews regathered? With only half an eye we should be able to see that the work of Mr. Smith in this matter plainly harmonizes with these passages referred to above.

Three years before the ironclad law in Turkey was revoked, Joseph Smith sent Orson Hyde to Palestine to bless the land and pray God to remove the curse and gather the Jews. He arrived in due time in the Holy Land and wrote the following prayer on Mt. Olivet:

Now, O Lord, thy servant has been obedient to the heavenly vision which thou gavest him in his native land; and under the shadow of thine outstretched arm, he has safely arrived in this place to dedicate and consecrate this land unto thee. For the gathering together of Judah's scattered remnants, according to the predictions of the holy prophets, for the building up of Jerusalem again after it has been trodden down of the Gentiles so long, and for rearing a temple to thy name. Everlasting thanks be ascribed unto thee, O Father! Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast preserved thy servant from dangers of the seas, and from plagues and pestilences which have caused the land to mourn. . . . O thou who didst covenant with Abraham, thy friend, and who didst renew that covenant with Isaac, and confirm the same with Jacob with an oath, that thou wouldst not only give them this land for an everlasting inheritance, but that thou wouldst also remember their seed for ever. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob have long since closed their eyes in death, and made the grave their mansion. Their children are scattered and dispersed abroad among the nations of the Gentiles like sheep that have no shepherd, and are still looking forward for the fulfillment of those promises which thou didst make concerning them: and even this land, which once poured forth nature's richest bounty, and flowed, as it were, with milk and honey, has, to a certain extent, been smitten with barrenness and sterility since it drank from murderous hands the blood of him who never sinned.

Grant, therefore, O, Lord, in the name of thy well-beloved Son, Jesus Christ, to remove the barrenness and sterility of the land, and let springs of living water break forth to water its thirsty soil. Let the vine and the olive produce in their strength and the fig-tree bloom and flourish, let the land become abundantly fruitful when possessed by its rightful heirs: let it again flow with plenty to feed the returning prodigals who come with a spirit of grace and supplication; upon it let the clouds distill virtue and richness, and let the field smile with plenty. Let the herds and flocks greatly increase and multiply upon the mountains and the hills; and let thy great kindness conquer and subdue the unbelief of the people. Do thou take from them their stony heart, and give them a heart of flesh, and may the sun of thy favor dispel the cold mists of darkness which have beclouded their atmosphere. Incline them together in upon this land according to thy word. Let them come like clouds and like doves to their windows. Let the large ships of the nations bring them from their distant isles; and let kings become their nursing fathers, and queens with their motherly fondness, wipe the tears of sorrow from their eyes.

Thou, O Lord, didst once move upon the heart of Cyrus to show favor to Jerusalem and her children. Do thou now also be pleased to inspire the hearts of the kings and powers of the earth to look with a friendly eye towards this place, and with a desire to see thy righteous purposes executed in relation thereto. Let them know that it is thy good pleasure to restore the kingdom to Israel—raise up Jerusalem as a capital. . . . —Autumn Leaves, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

People may think as they may of this prayer, but it must not be forgotten that the Bible says the prayer of a righteous man availeth much, beside Mr. Hyde was himself shown in vision that the Lord required him to perform this work. Let the daily reports that come to us of the wonderful productiveness of that land since 1853 answer whether the above prayer was answered, and whether the angel correctly informed Joseph of its near approach in 1823. Let the thousands of Israel, now safely located upon the land of their fathers, answer as to whether Joseph was a true prophet.

None of the reformers made such predictions, nor did any man aside from Joseph Smith. If he was a fraud in this matter, so also was the Lord, for he began at once to fulfill the prophecy and remove the curse and gather the Jews to the land of their fathers.

In harmony with this is the following from Isaiah 11: 11, 12; also quoted by the angel:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

In the days of Cyrus, several hundred years before Christ, the Lord set his hand the first time and gathered Israel back from the Babylonian captivity—only from one country; there they remained until they were carried away captive about 72 A. D. and after, and have remained as wanderers in all nations until our day. Recently the Lord has set his hand the "second" time to gather them home from whithersoever they have gone. Notice closely that Isaiah here says "in that day he will also set up an ensign" for the nations. The ensign could refer to none other thing than the kingdom of God—his church—and it was to be set up among the Gentiles and not among the people of Israel. God has always been especially interested in the salvation of his people. Anything looking thereto would be his work, his church, his kingdom, his ensign.

"There can be no order without organization," therefore whatever God would do would be in an orderly organized manner. Hence Jesus said, "I will build my church." Matthew 16: 18. "Order" is said to be "the first law of heaven," and it is doubtless true. If, therefore, God had a work in the world it would be a work of order. If order, then organization. If an organization, then a church, kingdom, or ensigns.

Some will object and say that Jesus never organized a church and he certainly was of God and taught the things of God. That Jesus taught the things of God is true; he also "built" or organized a church, for he says in Matthew 18: 15-17.

Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established, and if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he shall neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican.

Will the objector please tell how a matter could be told unto the church if there was no church? And how transgressors could refuse to hear the church if it could not act in such matters? This text shows most clearly that there was a church in Jesus' day and that it had organized form—that it was capable of acting on matters coming before the body. To settle this point completely, in the minds of those who think with our objector, we will refer to one more passage as recorded in 1 Corinthians 12: 28: "And God has set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."

From this it is clear that there was a church when apostles and other officers were placed in it. Having noticed then that there was a church in Jesus' day, and that it must have been an organization, we still think that God's effort among men to save them, no matter what name, whether church, kingdom, body, household, or ensign is an organization. The ensign therefore referred to in the text where it says, "God will set his hand the second time to gather Israel and set up an "ensign," is his church. The words set up means evidently to establish—to organize.

We have shown that the Jews began to gather to their home land immediately after the restoration of the former and latter rain, or since 1853. In the days of Ezra they were gathered back the first time; to-day they are being gathered back the second time. God has set his hand indeed the second time to accomplish that work and organize anew his church and kingdom on earth.

The early Methodists believed in their day that this ensign had not yet been set up, when they used to sing

"Almighty God of love Set up the attractive sign."

Again they looked forward to the gathering of the Hebrews to their home land, for in the same song they sang

"Oh call the Hebrew home,
From East and West and North and South,
Let all the wanderers come."

The work of Joseph Smith corresponds to all these prophecies in time, place, and condition, and is especially interwoven with the Jewish movement, in gathering to their own land and building up their city. It dovetails in with all the recent important history of the world for God has been in both.

But let us discover something more in the Bible about the "ensign." In Isaiah 5:26-28, we find the following. We italicise a few words only to call special attention to them lest they be overlooked, but we have no intention of changing the meaning; indeed, we fail to see how calling "special attention" could change the "meaning," as some seem to think: "and he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly: None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken: whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind."

Who ever heard of "horses with wheels"? Surely we all have in latter days—since 1827. We have both seen and heard the iron horse—the locomotives and their wheels indeed like a whirlwind. This last clause in the above quotation will locate the time when this prophecy was to have its fulfillment—when this "ensign" was to be "set up".

There are other points also in this text that will help us to determine the time. One is, those who travel would do so with "speed swiftly," but in thus traveling none should be "weary or stumble among them." At this time when people could travel in this way on horses with wheels like a whirlwind God would "lift up an ensign afar off"—"at the end of the the earth." This not only shows when but where. The end of the earth would certainly be at the farthest point, and of course, going from Jerusalem would land us in America. It would also be from afar off.

This text could not be applied to the work done by any of the reformers in Europe or those who try to trace their origin back to Pentecost or before. For their work was set up long before the "horses with wheels like a whirlwind" appeared, nor were they organized "afar off"—at the end of the earth, when men could come with speed swiftly. Some of their efforts may have been at the end of the land, but not the end of the earth.

A few years ago the question was asked if we had a "purely American church," and one of the leading daily papers answered something like this: "The only American church we know of is the one founded by Joseph Smith."

This ensign is also spoken of again by Isaiah in his eighteenth chapter and first three verses as follows:

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bullrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled! All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye. . . . For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, etc.

First we notice that, this event was to transpire before the harvest (Jesus said the harvest is the end of the world) and so soon before, that the bud was to be perfect. Another thought is, it was to transpire at a time when ambassadors could go "swiftly" on the water. This brings us to a time later than the invention of steamboats, and even later than that, for it was not until 1819 that the first steamboat, The Savannah, crossed the Atlantic Ocean. The description of the people and land fits the Jewish people and their land, and it will be noticed that the swift messengers were to go to that people and not to come from them. Furthermore it is shown that the land upon which this ensign was to be raised would be located beyond Ethiopia. In the third verse of the next chapter but one, in the same book, it seems that Isaiah had been three years in Egypt and Ethiopia. It is probable that Isaiah was in Egypt when he uttered the above prophecy of the eighteenth chapter. In the record of those times we find that North Africa was called Ethiopia with the exception of Egypt. If, therefore, there was a land beyond Ethiopia from Egypt it would again point us to America, and the expression "shadowing with wings" may either refer to its physical shape or the eagle wings on the insignia of our government. The expressions all harmonize with what is said in other places about the latter-day ensign. But we wish to notice what is meant by the word mountain in the above text: "He lifteth up an ensign on the mountains." By turning to Daniel 2:35 we read that "the stone became a great mountain and filled the whole earth." In the forty-fourth verse Daniel, divinely directed, gives the interpretation of this word mountain to mean kingdom. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."

Here we have God's interpretation of the word mountain to mean kingdom or nation as all may see by reading the entire chapter. In that light in simple epitomized form the passage in Isaiah 18: 1-4 would read: In the land of America and the nation of the United States God would, in our time, set up his church.

In connection with this we refer next to Isaiah 2: 2, which reads: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills."

In other, and we believe, legitimate words, In the last days the kingdom composing the house of God will be established (set up) in the highest (top) civilized nations (mountains) and shall be exalted above the lower nations.

Micah 4: 1 contains the same language. This was true of the work Joseph Smith established by the commandment of God in the United States and not only in the United States, but in New York, the banner, the "Empire" State of the Union, the very top of civilization then. If this text does not refer to a special work of God in the last days—a special dispensation—we are sure that words can not express that thought.

Having mentioned God's interpretation of mountain in the above text, let us refer again to Daniel 2: 28 and 44:

But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days. . . . And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever.

From the above we learn that "in the latter days" a divine kingdom or church was to be set up. This latter-day kingdom was not to be thrown down nor given to another people. It could not have reference to the primitive church of Jesus Christ, as some think, for that was thrown down, the entire flock was destroyed (Acts 20: 29). They turned away their ears from the truth (2 Timothy 4: 4). Only a little while was the light with them (St. John 12: 35). The kingdom was taken by force with violent hands (Matthew 11: 12). Jesus said, "The kingdom shall be taken from you and given to another people bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matthew 21: 43).

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

PAPEETE, July 23.

Dear Sister Walker: I conclude it will be more profitable to write to you this evening, than go to hear native preaching that I can not understand. I had no letter from you last mail, and am wondering if all is well with you. I am getting my mail matter made up before the steamer arrives; for in two, or at the most, three days afterwards, we leave here for the Paumotus for a few weeks; therefore we do not expect to be able to send any mail next month. I am pleased to tell you that we both are real well and in better spirits than we have been since our arrival here, nearly a year ago. We feel the benefit of the influence that went out from the last conference. Metaphorically speaking, a pebble was dropped in the spiritual waters during that gathering, and the waves have circled outward, the world over, and, I believe, will reach the heart of every live Latter Day Saint, no matter on what part of the earth he dwells. By their onward sweep we too have been borne upward into the light of greater activity in minor duties, those that have not heretofore seemed so essential, and, perhaps, were not. I have been impressed to urge upon the sisters here a greater activity in their preparations to meet the Lord, not a preparation in spiritual things alone, but the spiritually temporal matters; to keep somewhat in touch with the body of the church, for Zion's children were marching onward and making clear the way before them.

But strange to say, this uplifting wave did not come to us with the reading of conference news, not until a month or so later, though I enjoyed the reading. The reports to the various conventions, or rather from the various organizations, were in my estimation unusually good. To the "Gleaners," my heart responded in a fervent, "God bless them in their noble work." Sr. Hulmes' report to the Daughters of Zion, was very interesting, and bespoke the spirit and progress of that department of the work. Also that of Bro. Gunsolley to the Religio. While reading it, I entered more into the spirit of the Religio than ever before. Was much interested in Sr. Salyards' report; am glad she wrote it in full. Her implicit faith, and energetic effort to accomplish her arduous task, carries a spirit with it that has, and will nerve other arms, and inspire other minds to do likewise. And last, but not least, the synopsis of the General Superintendent's report, manifesting such a spirit of devotion to the Sunday-school work, and not vaunting it above its position.

There were a few small figures in the treasurer's report, that brought to me a thrill of gladness, for I accepted it as a second step towards the fulfillment of a mental vision, or foreshadowing of events, that was given me in the year 1899, while here in Papeete, in which I saw the auxiliaries of the church, organizations for good, consecrating their surplus funds to the church. Each year as their books were balanced and their immediate necessities provided for, the surplus was cheerfully put into the hands of the Bishop. Not as a gift, but as their reasonable service, as keeping the law of consecration of surplus. And, in so doing, they received from the Lord a happiness that I have not words adequate to portray, though I was permitted to both see and enjoy it for the space of three days. A peaceful, trustful tranquility; free from all party spirit, jealousies, or self (society) aggrandizement. Free from the fear or worry of "troubulous times" on the earth; for all were of one heart and one mind in their working together for the spreading of the gospel, and the redemption of Zion. And great peace was theirs.

As I saw it at that time, the work would commence at Independence in 1901. Whether that was the first time the Sunday-school at Independence placed their surplus in the hands of the Bishop, I do not know. But I saw them do so at that time, and learned afterwards that they did so. The next year another of the leading departments of the Sunday-school work sent in a surplus. I then thought it to be the Lamoni school,—but it has proven to be the association—and from those noble examples, one after another did likewise, until it embraced every organization, and every Sunday-school that had a surplus. Prior to that time, I had not thought of the law of consecrating surplus being applicable to the societies of the church as well as individuals, but I saw it plain enough then. And why would it not be so? All are working in their various departments for the furtherance of the Lord's work. All are members of the church as well as of their society. All want the rich blessings of the Master upon their work. And could it be so, if moneys accumulated, either directly or indirectly from the members of the church, beyond what was needful for carrying on the beneficial work of those societies, lay idly in their coffers, while the wife and family of many a traveling elder was suffering privation because there was not enough in the church treasury to remit to them their allowance? No! That would be self aggrandizement in the form of societies, and the Lord has spoken against such, "be it whomsoever it may be." This law of consecrating surplus shields the church in all its departments from such a position and levels all to the common standard of "their necessities." When we all bring ourselves to that celestial law, then, indeed, will the glory of the Lord rest upon the people of Zion, and the shield of the mighty God of Jacob go with those who go without the camp bearing the message of truth and salvation to the nations of the earth, who have not yet heard of the marvelous work of this latter-day dispensation. Perhaps, in handing the surplus into the hands of the Bishop, neither of those above named did so from the view that the law was applicable to them. Yet I believe it is the beginning of that glorious work among our noble young people of the church, some of whom are consecrating every mental power and every practicable moment to their department of the work, simply because they love the work, and their duty lies in the department in which they have been chosen to occupy. And yet the watchword is "Come up higher!"

Bro. C. J. Spurlock requests the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of himself and Bro. Harry Thomas. They are in their mission field, sick.

Sr. Ballenger, Woodbine, Iowa, desires the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her little grandson, who is very sick. He has been administered to but is still sick, and it is feared he will lose the use of one of his limbs.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

It seems that no matter how well a system of work may be planned and executed, or how good the results of such system and work may be, there is always a class of people who are not satisfied. They would have it otherwise. They are so full of a spirit of supposed progress, or discontent, that they are quite blind to the fact that great advancement may have been made, and that we may now be enjoying all the improvement and advancement compatible with the present conditions. There never was and probably never will be a human institution that does not have its defects. We work in an institution awhile and become painfully aware of the defects therein. We see a new plan, and, not having tried it, its defects are not so manifest. We then hastily conclude that the new plan would be an improvement over the old. Then, forgetful of the beauties of the old, we are eager to install the new.

Thus we find with reference to our present lesson system and Quarterlies for the Sunday-school. It is not our purpose to discuss the merits of the question here, but to introduce a clipping from the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, in a report of the great International Sunday-school Convention, at Denver, Colorado. The same spirit of restlessness is seen amongst the people of the other denominations as that with which we must now contend. Note carefully the disposition of it by the International Convention. We think the editor strikes the key-note to the situation when he said, "The pressing need of better teaching . . . was ever present;" "The ideal lesson system is not going to work a revolution in the Sunday-school. The ideal teaching force alone will solve all questions and clear the path of all difficulties."

LESSONS FROM THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

"Advanced teaching, not advanced lessons," was the clarion call that went up from the delegate-representatives of over twenty million Sunday-school workers assembled at Denver in the Tenth International Sunday-school Convention. "I wish I could believe that the exodus at a certain age from the Sunday-school is because the lessons are not difficult enough," was the canny comment of the Chairman of the Lesson Committee. This was after he and the Convention had listened to able and various suggestions as to the lesson situation and its needs, including the oft-heard claim that young people are leaving the Sunday-school because the lessons are not up to their advanced standards. But, as was forcefully stated by the editorial head of one of the largest denominations in this country, "if it's hard work they want, we can give them such work on the uniform lessons as will make their heads ache." . . .

And so the mature, thoughtful conviction of the Sunday-school workers of the world, as expressed at Denver, is that the positive gain and the yet unsounded are such as to imperatively demand its continuance for the present. A Beginner's Course, for the little ones who are unable to read, is a thing by itself. It is intended for those younger than the primary age, and the marked success of the one year's course of lessons issued by the International Lesson Committee last December, and carefully tested by many classes during the first six months of this year, would seem to settle any doubt as to the wisdom of providing such a course. The largest gathering of primary teachers ever assembled made an urgent request of the International Convention that a two years' Beginners' Course be provided, replacing the one year's course now standing, and this request was heartily granted. The Lesson Committee, before leaving Denver, took steps to issue a new two years' Beginners' Course next spring or summer, looking toward its actual use at the beginning of the year 1904.

POSSIBILITIES OF THE UNIFORM LESSON SYSTEM

The spirit of the Denver Convention was in no sense a self-satisfied spirit. There was no air of complacency there, no indication that any one felt that Sunday-school work had "arrived." There was a restless, eager, noble discontent with present attainments, and noticeable determination to go on to yet unreachd goals.

THE PRESSING NEED OF BETTER TEACHING,

graded teaching, advanced teaching,—call it what you will,—was ever present, and urged by radicals and conservatives alike. Superintendents and teachers went home fired with a new zeal to exalt the teaching work of the church as it has never yet been exalted. Teacher-training as a distinct, organized form of Sunday-school work has come into vigorous existence, and the beginning is only yet seen. Given an army of trained Sunday-school teachers, systematically studying the child and the Bible, and the question of what lessons are needed, and how they shall be chosen, will solve itself with surprising ease. The ideal lesson system is not going to work a revolution in the Sunday-school. The ideal teaching force alone will solve all questions and clear the path of all difficulties.

While the Uniform Lesson System was stanchly adhered to as offering far greater possibilities for Sunday-school progress than any other system suggested and discussed, here again there was no thought that there is not room for steady improvement in the

CHOICE AND PLAN OF THE UNIFORM-LESSON SELECTIONS.

A comparison of the later series of lessons with the earlier series shows how the later Lesson Committees profited by and improved upon the work of their predecessors. To the Sixth Lesson Committee the Sunday-school world confidently looks for the same substantial progress as that which characterized the Fifth. The great achievement for which the Fifth Committee will go down into history, and which did more to silence adverse criticism than any other one act of any Committee, was the offering of the eighteen months' study of the Life of Christ from the Four Gospels. There was historical continuity, completeness, scholarliness, biographical interest, adaptability. There was no scrappiness, disjointedness, nor sacrifice of history to homiletics. History and homiletics were both there in full measure.

To be sure, the Life of Christ as told in the Four Gospels is an exceptional subject even in the Scriptures, and all its conditions can not be duplicated elsewhere in the Bible. But the principles that underlay that course of study can be applied elsewhere. One great reason for its notable, universal success as a Sunday-school study was its completion of a definite period of Bible history. The urgent need of this element in the planning of future courses of lessons was wisely emphasized at Denver. The Sunday School Times has already voiced the regret of Sunday-school workers at such breaks in the study of completed periods as occurred in the Old Testament lessons of 1901 and 1902, and in the lessons from the Acts in 1902 and 1903. It is therefore rejoiced to be able to announce that the new Lesson Committee, while its plans are as yet, of course, wholly tentative, is preparing to apply the principle of studying the Bible "by completed periods," even farther than has yet been done. For this the Sunday-school world will rise up and give thanks.

The Denver Convention will go on record as silencing for all time the baseless attacks of unknowing ones concerning the International Convention's attitude toward temperance. Every man, woman, and child in the great audience hall thrilled with responsive enthusiasm as Dr. John Potts, Chairman of the Lesson Committee, thundered forth his denunciation of the unfair assaults upon the Committee. "The grandest temperance organization on the top of the earth is the Sunday-school, and the activities connected with the Sunday-school. . . . Every Sunday-school in the world is true to the principles of temperance and total abstinence." The roar of applause that burst from the convention will be heard round the world. Even if at some future time the true friends of total abstinence believe that it can be taught more effectively in the Sunday-school without the interrupting quarterly temperance lessons than with them, no man can ever again question the motives or the convictions of the organized Sunday-school workers of this continent as to temperance. For the present, as reported last week in these columns, the quarterly temperance lessons are continued unchanged. . . .

And out of this sea of differences, these shoals of untried systems, the radicalism that would wreck, the dreaded dead-weight of conservatism that would allow of no progress, the convention moved on triumphantly, harmoniously, united under a new leader who will have the support of every section of the vast field, holding fast to that which past experience has proved good, eager for new things yet unattained, ready to try all that seems worth the trying. It was an object lesson that will not be forgotten. It was a rare exhibition of what determined unity of heart and spirit can do toward settling differences of opinion. The Denver Convention will be historic for its unity of spirit when all human indications pointed the other way.

Letter Department.

CHICAGO, Illinois, August 18.

Editors Herald: Of the many to us interesting events that a truthful history might record since leaving Providence, we may only hint at or give briefest reference to; but our diary reads thus: Wednesday, June 25. Last day in Providence; nice day; bought tickets for New York; finished packing household goods; bid the dear Saints of Providence good-bye, our last adieus being waved as the steamer bore myself and companion away from sight and sound of voice of dear friends and relatives who had come with us as far as they could to say good-bye.

The night previous, a reception had been planned for us, at which the house of Bro. and Sr. Gates was crowded. Speeches and refreshments and attempts to be cheerful, but poorly concealed the sadness, not to say gloom, felt by (I think we may safely say) the most of all present. Valuable tokens of love and affection were, with speech from Elder George Gates, presented, to remain with us as a remembrance and reminder of ties formed in the years of association with those we have known and loved and trusted; and it related still to us by ties that prove at once their divinity and superiority over the fleshy happenings which we honor with the name or title of brother and sister.

It was a somewhat stormy and rough passage to New York. Found rest at our Brooklyn home—Bro. Squires.

Grant's Tomb, Coney Island; finished a talk with Utah elder, of what I think I may properly term, the Brighamite faith, were events of the second-day sojourn in New York. Left for Philadelphia Saturday, and found a home with Bro. George and Sr. Flora Smith, our old Providence associates in gospel work. Preaching on the Sabbath by Elder F. M. Sheehy and the writer in their fine new church here.

Monday "took in," in company with Bro. La Rue, Carpenter and Independence Halls and viewed the interesting relics associated with "the times that tried men's souls," and revealed the character of those men whose history shames so much of the attenuated and emasculated patriotism of our day and time. Visiting the Art Museums, and a fine concert at Willow Grove Park by Victor Herbert's Orchestra finished an enjoyable and interesting day.

Tuesday. The United States Mint, Girard College, and the fine plant of the Philadelphia Tapestry Mills, of which Bro. Zimmermann is partner, and a lecture by Bro. Sheehy on American archæology, etc., completed our day's pleasure and work—for work it is, as travelers know.

Wednesday, eleven a. m. Off for Washington, District of Columbia. A pleasant welcome at the home of Mr. Peck. The stay in this city will ever be a pleasant memory. The Congressional Library, National Museum, Bureau of Engraving-Printing, where they "make money" faster and possibly more of it than any place in the world—postage, postals, etc., Ft. Myer, Arlington, the magnificent site and old mansion of General Robert E. Lee, Mount Vernon, the tomb of the "Father of his Country," steamer rides on the Potomac River, with reminiscent features of the war of 1860-4, are among the principal interesting features of our visit to the National Capital.

Saturday, eleven a. m. We are moving westward toward Pittsburg. Were pleasantly entertained at the comfortable house of Bro. Tom Hatfield and his excellent wife, and also at the home of Bro. Harry, and his mother, Sr. Thomas.

Sunday morning. We were very cordially greeted by their "new minister" and our friend and brother, David Krahl. Preaching, morning and evening, in their nice new chapel.

At eight a. m. Monday, we are off for Cleveland, and there found rest and welcome, after a hot and dusty ride, at the home of Bro. and Sr. George, and we deem it a pleasure to record the deserved prosperity and peace that we witnessed and shared in this saintly home. Bro. and Sr. George have stood by the work in Cleveland and are positive factors in its growing success.

Tuesday. A pleasant ride to Willoughby, and pleasant welcome to and at the home of our brother, E. W. Bond, spent the day with Sr. B. visiting old friends and neighbors in their beautiful place, once our home.

Wednesday. Over to Kirtland for a brief one-day visit. Prayer-meeting at night in the Temple, and a one-night sojourn with Bro. and Sr. Griffiths. Found missionary in charge, Elder Greene, wrestling with the everlasting nightmare and continuously troublesome proposition of many of the missionary force,—the resettlement after removal into something that resembles house-keeping if not homekeeping.

Friday. We pack and pick up our grips for the last stage of our journey, and are off for Chicago, where we arrived at ten p. m. and found welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. Good, where for two weeks we shared their generous hospitality, while we wrestled with the propositions of house hunting, and haunting all the depots for household goods delayed and diverted from original routes on account of strikes, etc.

At date of present writing we are comfortably "settled" long enough, we hope, to get "rested" from the affliction of another removal. And while we are not especially charmed with some things about this city, yet we are willing to say that it is not the worst place to be found. We are pleased with our experiences with the Saints of Chicago, converted to this great latter-day work, and earnest and zealous to publish it to the world. May wisdom, tempered with zeal, be given to profitably direct.

Elder Heman Smith has been with us; his visit timely, pleasant, and profitable. Sr. Etta Hitchcock, of St. Louis, General Secretary of Religio Association, with Sr. Grace Anderson, old time St. Louis friends, are with us on vacation visit.

By invitation of Sr. Royce, of Baroda, Michigan, we expect to take a "sniff" of country air for two or three days of next week, and may Sunday with the people at Galien, Michigan. Cheap Lake fares make this trip practicable as well as pleasant.

Not only for the general reader of the HERALD, but for the many friends who have requested us to "write," this hastily written epistle must, for the present, suffice.

Our trip westward from Providence, while necessarily tiresome, was made very pleasant, with scarcely an exception, by the fine and hospitable reception of Saints, and the exceptional opportunities for sight-seeing in some of the principal cities of our great country. Urged by our sense of obligation to the people and church, our pleasant visits everywhere were curtailed to the briefest possible stay.

Especially was Sr. Nellie pleased with Washington, and we have sufficient reason to believe that the church was served and good done while there.

Have enjoyed liberty in presenting the word while here. Am well received and feel that it would be a sin not to try and be cheerful and happy.

M. H. BOND.

NEWTON, Iowa, August 19.

Dear Herald Readers: In purview of the fact that several have advised that Reverend G. D. Gurley should be prosecuted in the courts of the land because of his false and bitter attack upon the faith of the Saints made through an article published in the New Times, of Dallas Center, contrary to advice and counsel I have given to the Saints and friends immediately interested, and not wishing to be considered presumptuous I sought counsel of those in direct authority of such matters among whom was Bishop E. L. Kelley, whose letter I give in full for the benefit of all who may have become interested. The letter is as follows:

"ROSCOE, Missouri, August 15.

"ELDER J. F. MINTUN, 202 5th Street, Des Moines, Io.:

"Bro. Mintun: Your note of 7th inst. calling attention to efforts of the friends and Saints in vicinity of Dallas Center to have you enter suit for the prosecution in the courts of the land of one G. D. Gurley, for his lying assertions against the Saints, received here, and with published statements of Mr. Gurley duly considered. His venomous attack seems to be of the character of that of Demetrius, the silversmith against Paul, and the probability is that he is stirred by a like selfish motive as was the worshiper of the heathen god, who attacked Paul and the gospel which Paul preached, for the villifier of Paul made money from the 'shrines' which he sold of the heathen deity. Is it because Mr. G. D. Gurley's 'craft' is in danger, that he has lost his temper, and made an attack that he is too unmanly to engage to jointly lay the differences before the public? Possibly he remembers the result of the joint discussion between Alexander and Paul.

"But notwithstanding the abuse Paul and his Christian brethren received he did not undertake to have the controversy adjusted through the courts of the realm. And with us, however just the claim may be against an individual, whenever it involves religion or politics it is seldom that full justice has been meted out by an appeal to the process of the courts of the country.

"The jury to which appeal is properly made is the public, in the neighborhood or vicinity of the outrage, and the American public will eventually render its verdict, and its sentence has been in the past to strike down the craven idols set up by the pretentiously pious. We need not fear them. I suggest that you keep the old flag of gospel truth flying around Dallas Center, and this will dismantle Mr. Gurley's place of supposed security. From his article I notice that after all this is the secret of his bitter attack,—you preach too much Bible. He can not stand that.

"Does Mr. Gurley forget so soon who it was that extracted his 'polygamous fang' of the serpent from the 'Mormon' system? Was it not 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' that expended its funds and kept its committee at the sessions of the Forty-seventh Congress until the accomplishment of the passage of the bill against polygamy in the Territories? As one of that committee I am fully conversant with the work done, and the means used to accomplish it, which, too, received complimentary references, both from the President, and the Chairman of the House Committee having this special legislation in charge; and prominent among the weapons that worked the overthrow of polygamy were the Book of Mormon and the revelations of Joseph Smith, which Mr. Gurley so hysterically denounces, and falsely assails as the 'Mormon Bible.'

"The ignorance of the man could be more pitied if he showed the moral courage to step forward and honorably meet the issue, and either become informed or maintain his assertions. But his position is that when you bring light and darkness together, that it is the light that must give way, not the darkness, and so he advises the people not to hear. This is the old spirit that caused the crucifixion of the Christ, and the death of the apostles. Is the principle which brought death then, the principle of life with Mr. Gurley now? Has Satan enthroned himself as Mr. Gurley's god? Jesus said, when the Jews exhorted their followers not to hear him, 'For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved.' And Mr. Gurley stands off and cries, 'Mormon snake,' and urges the people not to hear. How this sounds like the old cry that drowned the speech of Paul, 'Great is Diana of the Ephesians.'

"I suggest that unless your character is attacked personally, that you move right ahead in your work as a gospel minister; but you are at liberty when an attack is made against you personally in language actionable per se, to employ the best counsel you can get in Des Moines, and proceed against the party at once.

"We must trust to God, and the truth we preach as the defense of his church: 'our weapons are spiritual.'

"Hastily, in the cause of truth,

This letter fully expresses the views I have previously expressed personally, and by publication, upon the subject of prosecution, and believe it expresses the spirit of Him whom we have sacrificed self to serve. To "rejoice and be exceeding glad" when "men shall revile you, and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake" can not be expressed in prosecution, and when such action is taken in a case in which we are accused falsely as in this case, we do not acknowledge as we should our faith in the word which says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay."

Desirous of faith, humility, and wisdom, that I with patience may run the race that is set before me, I am,

Yours in hope,

J. F. MINTUN.

CHATHAM, Ontario, August 11.

Editors Herald: Bro. James Baggerly who has just lately entered upon his labors in the Canada mission, has done some good preaching here. He baptized one young lady, and made many friends. The Chatham Sunday-school had a picnic on August 11. They went out to the lake shore with the Cedar Springs Sunday-school. It took three large wagonettes and two other rigs to get us to the lake. The weather was fine, and a real good time was had. Cedar Springs Sunday-school always does their best to entertain us while there. We appreciate the same.

OGDEN, Utah, August 18.

Editors Herald: Our work is moving on a little here, though slowly. Yesterday we had the pleasure of baptizing and confirming a family of four,—a father, mother, and two sons aged respectively thirteen and sixteen years. They are relatives of Bro. Joseph Clapp, of Lamoni, and his name is Frederick Wesley Clapp. They heard the first principles preached in Arkansas by the Utah elders and obeyed them. When they came to "Zion," as it is called, they found other principles that they could not accept, and as the result of reading our literature and listening to our sermons here they have obeyed the injunction to "Come out of her, my people."

Some time since, we organized a class for the study of the Book of Mormon, and devoted each Sunday evening from seven to eight o'clock to the study of that book. One week ago we decided to develop it into a full fledged Zions Religio-Literary, and our first program will be rendered the 21st inst., and hereafter Thursday evening of each week will be devoted to that service.

We are still holding open air meetings on the public square opposite the city hall, and at our last one, Friday evening, our subject was "Baptism and Rebaptism, or Renewing the Covenant." Of course we stirred up the eldership of the Utah church. We could not help it. We elicited from them the fact that the form used in their rebaptisms is, "Having authority from Jesus Christ I rebaptize you in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Amen." Of course they were at a loss to present scripture for this proceeding until I read to them—to help them out—from a sermon by Brigham Young. As they accept his sayings as scripture they then were "thoroughly furnished."

We are trying to keep the work moving here and each Sunday make a journey to Plain City, ten miles distant, and assist the Saints there in the Sunday-school organized by Bro. D. L. Harris while he was here. My day yesterday was full: two sermons, one Sunday-school, one Book of Mormon meeting, four baptisms, and a confirmation meeting where we confirmed the four baptized and blessed one baby—all in Ogden, and a journey of ten miles on my wheel to Plain City and meeting with the Sunday-school there did not leave us much spare time.

We are well and looking forward to the reunion at Salt Lake City, which will meet September 5.

Editors Herald: Lest you might think the writer neglectful of duty in failing to give you a news item now and then, I drop the following: Began tent work in connection with Bro. W. A. Smith at Sloan; then to Sargents Bluff, then to this place. Interest at the Bluffs and Sloan was hindered by too much rain and cold.

Brn. Hansen and Hutchings had held, from what we heard, some interesting meetings at Sloan, before W. A. and the writer arrived. But too much rain dampened the zeal of both the preachers and the people. The interest here so far has been good, the tent on last evening being filed (as Paddy said), both inside and out. W. A. went to Sioux City on Saturday last, and is expected back to-day.

We have been preceded here in years gone by, by Elders Charles Derry, Joseph R. Lambert, J. W. Wight, Hubert and Oscar Case, and Hansen. Taking that in connection with the long time residence of Sr. Christy at this place, there is no wonder that the people turn out. So far the Christian denomination here has treated us with due respect. They, on last evening, appointed their service at half past seven, so to attend ours at half past eight. And they must have come in mass, by the number present.

The Christian people here seem to be studying the Bible; a thing needful for all. Of course we do not expect to baptize any of their members, but we like to have them come out just the same.

It came near frosting here last night, and had it done so, great damage to the corn crop would have been the result, as corn is not in roasting ear yet. The wheat crop is splendid, both in this part of Iowa and in Dakota.

There is "much water" here, being situated on the Big Sioux River, and at a mill-dam at that, but we are not assured as yet that any will be baptized.

We are all getting used to the HERALD in its new dress. It looks all right for summer, but it may look rather light for winter. And the Hope is so thinly clad; but I hope it will not freeze to death the coming winter. By the way, have we not enough talent among the Sunday-school workers to fill up our little Hope with reading matter? Or will nine tenths of the articles in it continue to be signed at the bottom, "Selected"?

In the conflict,

J. C. CRABB.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, August 16.

Editor Herald: Please allow me space in the HERALD for a few lines to let you know how we are getting along at Coalgate. We have our church completed, and seated with six dozen chairs, and it looks very nice. It cost about three hundred and sixty dollars.

Bro. S. W. Simmons has been holding meetings here for sixteen nights, and the result is that we have an addition of four new members, three adults and one young lady about thirteen years old. We thank the Lord for it all, and we can now worship God in our own house, and thank him for the gospel. We expect to hold meetings each Sabbath if the Lord will permit us. I ask the Saints everywhere to give us their faith and prayers, that we may be able to contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints.

Bro. Simmons did a great deal of good here in showing the differences between us and the Brighamites, that we have had to contend with so much, at this place. May God help us to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, is my prayer.

Editors Herald: To-day is Sunday and I am situated in a most interesting spot along the Detroit River, near its head and nearly across from Detroit City. I baptized four and confirmed them here this forenoon, as a result of my work which has been less than a week in duration. I came here from Tarrington last Tuesday, where I had been laboring with Elder MacGregor for two weeks. He remained to finish up, and it is possible he may join me here sometime during this week. While there on the 6th instant, I baptized one in the waters of Lake Erie, who was confirmed by Elder MacGregor.

I preached twice yesterday; a funeral sermon in the afternoon, and another sermon at night by special request. This afternoon I walked about seven miles, return trip, and preached a sermon with as good liberty as I ever had, and am to preach again this evening. I expect to baptize four or six more inside of another week.

Bro. MacGregor and I canvassed Tarrington from house to house distributing tracts. There are honest ones in Babylon who can be reached by proper methods.

I am feeling good and enjoying my work.

Editors Herald: The first of five debates to be held in this district has just closed, Elder G. H. Godby representing the Latter Day Saints, and Elder Kirkman representing the "Campbellites."

I am at this time in an entirely new field. The Utah elders preceded me here some little time ago. Some five miles from where the debate was held they were egged, and were driven out of the country.

There is much interest manifested here and many are anxious to hear the gospel. I hope to do much good here.

A number of years ago the Seventh-day Advents were here and had quite a number interested in their work. I understand they had a good school at Newark, but it burned down several years ago, since which time the interest has lagged. Now the people are anxious to hear the gospel and I hope for good results.

Editors Herald: We are still busy here. We look for some baptisms soon. Our reunion is appointed for Salt Lake City, September 5. This week has been a gala week, and so our street meetings have had to stop; but we commence again to-night.

Inclosed find notice of death of Mr. James A. Browning. The funeral was July 26, from the Third Ward meeting-house. Our effort was well received there. Am well in the work and plenty of work to do.

Editors Herald: The writer and Elder T. A. Phillips came to this place from Finelon Falls, July 18, and began revivals in a log schoolhouse, one and one half miles out of the town, holding forth at night, until about the latter part of July, when Bro. T. A. left for Tory Hill. I continued the meetings as usual, assisted by the local elder, Jacob Stailey, who opened the services for me, and did what he could in that line. I was kept very busy, as I visited every day most, from house to house, and find this one of my best methods to bring souls to Christ. Last Sunday two precious souls were added to the fold; one a promising young man formerly a Plymouth brother; the other a young lady. Both bore a very feeling testimony after confirmation, thanking their heavenly Father for their acceptance with him and the restored gospel.

I have sold over five dollars worth of books here. The young man here mentioned has equipped himself with the three standard books, and is well pleased with them. We hope much good will be done here.

Bro. Phillips reports on August 6 very good attendance at Tory Hill. This is an old, tried field, and the work is suffering from the unwise action of some. O for a closer walk with God.

Editors Saints' Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this side of the briny deep will not be amiss at this time. On the 21st ult. Peter Anderson and the writer bade farewell to loved ones and started for our far-off mission. We stopped one night with William Ruston at Brooklyn, and a number of the Saints met at the house of Joseph Squires. A pleasant chat was had together and singing was indulged in. Bro. Sheehy offered a feeling and an earnest prayer for our welfare and safe journey across "the deep blue sea," and the rest of the Saints said, "So mote it be." It was good to meet with brethren of like precious faith, as it cheers and comforts our hearts and stimulates us for the work that the Lord has assigned us to do in his kingdom.

At ten o'clock the next day, the 23d, the magnificent steamer Saint Louis, of the American Line, with us on board steamed out upon the mighty ocean. The pier was covered with people who had come to see their friends off. The scene was pathetic and touching, as the great ship moved out from the pier and the band playing pathetic airs. Handkerchiefs were waving, and tears flowing freely from the eyes of many, both those on the vessel and those on land. We could see the faces of Brn. Sheehy, Potts, and Gillespie until the crowd disappeared from view. It was but few hours until we were beyond the sight of land. And all we could see for the next eight days was water and sky. Occasionally a few fish jumping out of the water here and there, and one large whale made its appearance which caused quite a sensation among some of the passengers. Only once in a great while would we pass other vessels, and when the announcement was made that a vessel was in view the passengers made it a point to get on deck as soon as possible. The passing of vessels on the ocean is an interesting spectacle. The great steamers salute each other by lowering and raising of flags, and the passengers wave handkerchiefs, and all seem pleased to see each other. The ocean was calm from Wednesday till Sunday morning when we experienced a swelling sea which caused considerable sickness among the passengers. The voyage was not as pleasant as a year ago. However, Bro. Peter and I escaped seasickness. We were able to have our three meals a day notwithstanding Bro. Peter was in his bunk one whole day. I had contemplated about six meals a day part of the time, that is, three down and three up.

We arrived in Southampton about two days late. The boilers of the Saint Louis were in a bad condition, which fact we were ignorant of when we started. But it seems that the first-class passengers found it out, as only a few crossed on her. And to make the matter worse, they made their passengers embark at ten o'clock at night, which does not speak very well for the officials of the American Line Company. I would advise the Saints who have occasion to cross the Atlantic to go by way of the Cunard and White Star Lines, as they have better accommodations for second-class passengers and make better time.

The mission conference convened in Birmingham on Saturday evening, inst., and continued over the 4th. There was a large representation of the brethren, Scandinavia, Scotland, Wales, London, and all parts of England being represented. And we truly had a glorious and profitable time. The business was transacted orderly, and in the spirit of brotherly love. The social and preaching services were of a high order. The Spirit of the Lord was present in a marked manner from the beginning to the close of the conference. Hence good was done by our coming together. Bro. Enge was present from Norway; and Bro. Peter Anderson rendered us acceptable service. Bro. Sheldon was there with his smiling face and reported progress in London. Bro. Rushston with his co-laborers in Scotland, namely, Thorburn and Arber, gave a good account of the work there. Bro. William Lewis with his associate workers in Wales, John Davis (who, by the way, is doing well in his new mission), Pierce, and Jones were on deck with good news from the land of leeks. Brn. William Ecelestone and William H. Greenwood of the missionaries in the Birmingham and Sheffield districts respectively, were in attendance and reported favorably of the work in their charge. Of the local brethren, Bishop Taylor and his two counselors, Dewsnap and Caton; also the two patriarchs, Batty and Greenwood, with over thirty other elders, besides a great number of priests, teachers, deacons, and members. All were amply provided for and accommodated by the Birmingham Branch. The character of the business done will be reported in due time by the secretaries, Armstrong and Mather. The official list was as follows: Three apostles, two seventies, four high priests, one bishop and his two counselors, two patriarchs, and between thirty and forty elders, and about fifteen priests. I am pleased to report as one of the presidents of the conference that the brethren acquitted themselves as ministers of God and I was proud to be associated with such noble and able men.

Present omens indicate a bright future for the work of the Lord in this country. Of course, the success of the work depends largely upon the faithfulness of the Saints and the diligence of the ministry. Sin abounds on every hand, and it will be a constant struggle for the Saints and ministry to keep away from the temptations by which they are surrounded. Our safety is in adhering to the admonition of the Savior, "What I say unto one

I say unto all, watch and pray." We sincerely trust that the ministry will double their diligence and strive by the aid of God's Holy Spirit to magnify their calling before the Lord and his people, and thus make themselves "workmen that need not be ashamed,—approved of God."

Dear Saints, please bear in mind that the Lord has given us a bishopric in this mission to receive our tithes and offerings; and remember that on them has the Lord placed the responsibility of caring for the poor and looking after the ministry and their families. And he has placed upon us the responsibility of placing in their hands the means that will be necessary to meet the above demands.

The church has assigned quite a number of missionaries to this field and it devolves upon you to see that their wants are provided for, and that their families are supported with the necessaries of life. Therefore, I pray that the Lord will abundantly bless you in basket and in store, and that you will willingly impart of your earthly substance, as directed in the laws of the Lord, as the Lord shall prosper you from time to time.

The ministry of this mission have a hard and trying task before them, as they are expected to go from house to house with the message of life. And we ask that you support these brethren by your faith and prayers, and with the means that are necessary for their comfort and welfare. Praying God's sweet peace to be and to abide with you all, I remain, your well-wisher and co-laborer in Christ Jesus.

Editors Herald: Bro. Arthur Allen and the writer pitched the district tent in this city of about four thousand on August 9. Held nine services. On Sunday, the 17th, the writer spoke at half past two on the Book of Mormon, and after the services received orders for four copies of the book. Interest here is fine. We leave for Roseburg to-night to join Bro. Crumley, and we with Brn. Luff and Hilliard will go to the Bandon reunion.

W. A. GOODWIN.

LOW BANKS, Ontario, August 13.

Editors Herald: Bro. Walter Bennett and I are laboring in this place at present. We find very little interest. Last week in an endeavor to secure a place for preaching we had a walk of twenty miles, round trip, with no success. In a few places we have access to schoolhouses, but interest is not such as to demand our services. We are now giving our attention to bettering the condition of the branch, and this is not before it is needed. Our success even in this is yet a question, but we hope the Saints will be admonished to live nearer to God, letting their light shine so that men may see their good works and glorify God. There must be this improvement upon the part of the Saints or their mission will never be a success in any way, for salt that hath lost its savor is good for nothing but to be cast out.

On the 2d and 3d of this month we were privileged to meet with the Waterford Saints in their two-day grove meeting. The weather was excellent and the services pleasant and edifying. Brn. R. C. Evans, J. H. Lake, E. A. Goodwin, Joseph Blackmore, Alex. McMullen, and Walter Bennett of the missionary force were present and each contributed his mite to the satisfaction of the Saints and friends. Monday following a number of Saints congregated at Bro. Yerks' and spent the day pleasantly in outdoor exercises. The kindness of host and hostess and other members of the family was much appreciated and will be remembered by all. Credit is due to Elders Goodwin and Yerks for much of the success attending the meeting. Their untiring efforts and the hearty support of the brethren made success possible. We would like to see other branches alive to the good within their power to accomplish, and manifest a willingness to sacrifice, if necessary, for the good of the work and the salvation of the people. Two-day meetings are a power for good when properly managed and other conditions favorable.

FRED GREGORY.

TARKIO, Missouri, August 14.

Editors Herald: Saturday evening, August 9, as I was nearing Cameron, Missouri, where I had expected to spend the Sabbath, a stranger in a strange land, it suddenly occurred to me to run on down to Stewartsville, fourteen miles west, where there was a branch of the Saints. This, accordingly, I did, purchasing my ticket during the short period of stoppage at Cameron.

Upon inquiry at Stewartsville I learned that Bro. J. W. Adams had just returned from his mission field, and I made my way to his home, where I found the elder, "glad to receive anybody from headquarters." To say this hospitable brother and his wife made me feel very welcome indeed, is to put it mildly, and to express their kindness to a wanderer very feebly.

Bro. Adams was compelled to return home for a much needed rest, demanded by the state of his health; but he was improving, and had consented to preach morning and evening on Sunday, at Pleasant Grove Branch, six miles north of Stewartsville. The writer accompanied him on that day, and much enjoyed the drive and the companionship. On the way he pointed out to me the various homes of Latter Day Saints and I was much surprised as well as pleased to learn that in a radius of six miles there are four Latter Day Saint meeting-houses, at each of which gather fair-sized congregations on the Sabbath Day. And in this splendid farming tract are miles of farms, all owned by Latter Day Saints. It stirred my heart, and caused me to remark to Bro. Adams, "Surely we are in the 'regions round about!'"

We arrived at the Pleasant Grove church in time for the closing exercises of the Sunday-school, after which Bro. Adams preached to an interested audience, which was rather small because of the threatened rain. We had the pleasure of taking dinner with the president of the branch, our well-known and genial young brother, C. P. Faul. He is as earnestly engaged in the work as ever.

The evening meal was eaten with Bro. and Sr. Uphoff, and at eight o'clock Bro. Adams again addressed the Saints with much liberty and feeling.

This day of mingling with the Saints instead of being spent as many of my Sabbaths of late have been, among strangers and alone, was a great blessing to me, and it passed all too quickly away. If ever the chance presents itself again, to spend the Sabbath with the earnest and kind Saints at Stewartsville, the writer will surely avail himself of the opportunity. The more I see of the world, its ways, and its follies, the more I can and do appreciate the society of the Saints and the beauty of the gospel they so truly love. Its power to cleanse us of impurity and of sin is unlimited, if we are but willing to do our part, to be watchful and prayerful and to let the Holy Spirit perform its sacred work in us. We are all anxious for Zion's redemption. Let us each see that one, at least, of the Saints is faithful and earnestly striving to fit himself to be a qualified citizen of that longed-for kingdom when it shall be fully established.

Earnestly desiring the rapid advancement of our just cause and craving an interest in your supplications to the Most High,

I am, your brother,

B. M. ANDERSON.

How are children so often able without injury to swallow such sharp things as pins, needles, tacks, and bits of glass? Recently the matter has been explained by the investigations of Doctor Alfred Exner, of Vienna, who has conducted an elaborate series of experiments with dogs and cats, pigeons, frogs, and turtles. Says The Saturday Evening Post, in an article entitled "The Digestibilities of Pins:" "The secret, as disclosed by Doctor Exner, lies in the fact that, when a pointed or sharp-edged body comes into contact with the lining of the stomach or intestine, the part touched contracts and puckers so as to thicken itself in that place. At the same time it withdraws itself in such a manner as to form a little pocket, and gradually twists the object around so as to turn the edge or point away, pushing the thing along. In this manner needles are turned so as to keep their points away from the membrane, and it is the same way with a pin or a piece of glass. As a rule, the delicate lining suffers no injury, and such a thing as a perforation of the intestinal wall is exceedingly rare."—The Literary Digest for August 9.

Essays on primary and intermediate classes by Srs. Maggie Richards and Mattie Morgan were valuable. Collections to the amount of $2.01 was taken up. The convention donated $5 to Graceland College. Also $10 to district tent fund. Adjourned to meet at Salt River at call of president.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Southern Indiana District and Louisville Branch, of Louisville, Kentucky: Having been appointed Bishop's agent for the above territory, I make a special appeal to the Saints for their help. I am making an effort to get the name of each member upon the Bishop's book. My success depends upon the willingness of the Saints to help.

This is a day of "sacrifice," and all saints should do their part. God has made provisions in his law that give each member of the household of faith a chance to express his appreciation to the Giver of all good for blessings received. To say we thank God for all the blessings we receive, and God bless the brethren who are acting as propagators of this great latter-day truth, does not express the appreciation that God expected to be prevalent among the members of his church. Our expressions of faith should be accompanied with works.

God has given a financial system to govern all that we are in possession of in this present life, and it is a pleasure to say that the Infinite One has not exacted impossibilities. The tithing system, when looked at in a practical way, can be observed by each one. In the first place, it is God who gives us our life and all the surroundings thereof; we are indebted to him for this, which can be liquidated by a reasonable service.

You will note a moral man tries to pay all his obligations or give value in exchange with his fellow associates. The Christian man or woman must observe all the moral code, and go still farther; that is, observe the Christian financial system which God has ordained and which Christ said should not be omitted, and the latter-day prophet declared "should be observed until the coming of the Son of Man." Saints can observe the tithing law in any avocation in life. The sister who takes her eggs and butter to the store, can easily ask the merchant for an item of dozens and pounds, and at the end of the month make a calculation and ascertain how much belongs to the Lord. This rule will work with the farmer for his grain and herds. Also for the mechanic, the man and woman in the mills, machine shops, printing offices, mining, banking business, pensioners, etc. We have no right as Saints to expect to be blessed by the Lord unless we are willing to be governed by the mandates he has given us, for it is written, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"

I hope to hear from each member in the district, individually, or through branch collectors, and will take pleasure in issuing receipts for tithes and offerings, and in placing your name upon district book.

Let us try to make our district self-sustaining, and more, if possible. When we have done that which is our duty to do, then we have done right, and God will do his part. Home address, Wirt, Indiana. J. J. Boswell, Agent.

IS THERE A REMEDY?

The following is from the Inter-Ocean, of Chicago, for August 25, and is suggestive:

LABORER'S PLACE IN CHURCH.

Warsaw, Indiana, August 22.—The insinuation in the sermon of the Reverend George L. McNutt that there was no church for the laboring man created a stir to-day at the National Winona Bible conference, and was the main topic of conversation among the ministers and lay workers gathered there. The Reverend Mr. McNutt's views were severely criticised by the majority of the pastors.

The passages in the Reverend Mr. McNutt's address complained of are a series of pertinent questions as follows:

"Is it not a fair question whether or not the laboring man is calling for his God with justice? Is it not a fair question whether the mission church in our modern cities is not the largest fraud ever perpetrated in the name of Jesus Christ? It may be that the workingman will go to hell if he does not go to the mission church, but he reserves the right to go his own way. Matthew suggests a possible misunderstanding of routes.

"On the day after Easter, 1902, Boston papers had large space devoted to the remarkable gowns worn by fashionable women in the leading churches of Boston. The papers handled the services exactly as they would a ball. Did the common people hear him gladly on that day?

NOT A WAGE-EARNER ON THE ROLL.

"It was not long ago that I went to an Indiana town where there was a great deal of complaint that the laboring people were getting far from the church, and found in that city of fifteen thousand that the leading church had not a solitary wage-earner on its rolls, though that town was essentially a town of wage-earning people. What was the reason?

"I have often been asked point blank why the different classes should not separate for religious services—why should the mistress and her maid, and the manufacturer and his men go to the same church when their tastes were so different? I have not reached the point where I have learned that redemption from sin and growth in grace were essentially a matter of taste, requiring a different bill of fare.

"Maybe it is coming, maybe it has come, that to meet the taste of its patrons the gospel train must have a Jim Crow car added to its equipment. I hope not, and I am not looking for the job of conductor on such a car. Has the wage-earner representation in the management of our church? I do not mean in mission churches placed in sections of the city where only laboring classes live, but in those churches where all could come. If the wage-earner has no part in the management of our church, are we not forgetting the lesson of the revolution—taxation and government without representation?

PLEADS FOR CHURCH EQUALITY.

"If the wage-earner and his wife have no recognition in the management of our church why should they go to church where men and women of cultured and commercial classes monopolize, dominate, direct, and dictate? Do we ever and always give a man with work-worn clothes, who has the grime of six days burned into his flesh, as much consideration as we do 'his superior?' Why then do we fail to see him at church on Sunday and why do we find him seeking other places on Sunday? Personally, I have tasted something of the bitterness of the wage earner's situation.

"Because my clothes were old and worn I have been given the back seat and hidden behind posts and pillars. Yes, I have been taken as a thief and led out. Quite to the other extreme, but equally as offensive.

"The grime of the honest toil when imbedded in the flesh and defying soap and a visit to one of our churches in the garb of a laborer, would be a wholesome lesson for some of the men who bewail how the laboring classes are running to Sunday baseball and to saloons. The church is cursed to-day by a spirit of caste that is the outgrowth of educational ideals that the great object in life and education is to learn the trick of dodging the world's rough work."

WORKED AS A DAY LABORER.

The Reverend McNutt delivered lectures at Winona this and in previous years. Several years since he left the pulpit to become a day laborer that he might by actual experience become acquainted with laboring men, their trials, temptations, and circumstances. He has just received a call to become pastor and leader of a laboring man's church at Marion, Indiana, a new movement and project.

The management of the Winona assembly and summer school placed a ban upon Dowieism to-day and issued summary orders prohibiting the distribution of Dowie literature. Two women were distributing circulars, but were stopped as soon as the character of the literature became known to the management.

The board of directors voted to-day to construct an electric railroad between Warsaw and Winona, and a company will be incorporated at once. The Reverend A. C. Zenos of the McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, was one of the principal speakers at the conference to-day. Among others were the Reverend E. J. Bulgin of Chicago, the Reverend George R. Stewart of Cleveland, Tennessee, the Reverend John Balcom Shaw of New York, and W. C. Pearce of Chicago.

If there is any place in which the various caste differences, now unfortunately prevalent in society, ought to be sunk out of sight and be not allowed to obtrude upon the minds and peace of men, it is the church, where it is supposed all appear on the common level of man, an equality before God, with whom it is clear there are no distinctions except fitness and unfitness, worthiness and unworthiness.

But what a comment upon the current religion of the M. E. Church of to-day. Had an unfortunate follower of Joseph Smith, in the exercise of full intuition of the Spirit, drawn so dismal a picture of this cotemporaneous church, it would have been charged to his ignorance and bigotry; but a man like the Reverend George L. McNutt may throw stones at his own household and it is accounted as the result of his desire for the good of men, and his love for God.

We are now as for the last forty years of the opinion that nothing but a return to the teaching of the apostles and the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, will make it possible for the preachers to so school their congregations to the fact that in Christ "there is neither male nor female, neither bond nor free, but all are one;" "for God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth."

REUNION AT NEWTON.

The Senior Editor and wife attended the Newton, Iowa, reunion, held on the fair-grounds, one half mile south of the railway station, from August 15 to 24, inclusive.

Through the unpromising condition of the weather the attendance was small from the start, some seventeen to twenty tents, with some beds in the Art Hall, being occupied by those staying on the camp grounds. These grounds are very pleasantly located, on a rounded hill, with some shelter from the wind and sun by a growth of hickory and oak trees, so that tenting was not bad, as tenting goes. The Editor and family took the chances of a stay on the grounds rather than go back and forth over the muddy road and wet sidewalks into the village.

The committee, Brn. H. A. McCoy, A. A. Reams, Ward Christie, Earhart, and Richison, had made excellent arrangements for the entertainment of the Saints and friends attending, including an eating hall, under the charge of an excellent cook, whose well-prepared food was duly appreciated by all.

It rained so often and so inopportunately that nobody of the citizens of the place saw fit to brave a wetting for the first four or five days of the session. This was aptly improved by the Saints who gathered at each service determined to make the most of the situation at all events. On Wednesday, the 20th, it seemed to clear, but just after the supper hour, a sudden storm-cloud came up, and before the big tent could be made secure, one of the poles was broken, and the wall of the tent torn in a half dozen places. But, by letting the top fall, further damage was avoided. Not being able to get a pole that evening, service was held in the Art Hall, and a very profitable service it proved to be,—if those present spoke truthfully after it was over.

Some of the prayer and testimony meetings were very spiritual, the Spirit being present in excellent force to the great comfort and enjoyment of the Saints.

The weather for the last four days of the session was good, and though but few of the outside world were present up to the 20th, a much better attendance was had at the closing services, though it can not be said that there was a crowd at any time. It was emphatically a Saints' reunion.

The Sunday-school and Religio occupied their full share of time under the excellent guidance of Brn. J. F. Mintun and A. A. Reams, who are men well fitted for such work.

Brn. Alexander H. Smith, his secretary, Leon Gould, Fred A. Smith, missionary in charge, J. F. Mintun, H. A. McCoy, J. S. Roth, F. A. Russell, C.

J. Peters, with a number of others made up the rank and file of the forces, including the Editor, of course.

Credit was due to the committee for its effective work in making the reunion a success. There were three baptized during the session.

YEAR OF COMING OF CHRIST PREDICTED.

Bro. Eben Miller sends us the following clipping from the Cleveland Plain Dealer for August 22:

Fairmont, West Virginia, August 21.—James M. Morris, a wealthy land owner, is working on a book entitled "The Time of the End, According to Bible Chronology," which will make its appearance soon. It predicts startling things for the next few years. Morris is a noted prophet. It is claimed that he predicted forty years ago the war with Spain, the trouble between Great Britain and the Boers, the Galveston horror, and the holocaust at Martinique. He says that in 1931 will occur the resurrection of the righteous dead, and in 1941 Christ will come for the second time and the millennium will dawn.

THE Tabor Beacon, of Tabor Iowa, for August 29, 1902, has the following at the close of a notice of the reunion at that place:

The organization of the reunion was effected at half past two Saturday. F. A. Smith was chosen president and A. Badham and D. Hougas assistants. A. E. Madison is the secretary. The ministry present are: F. A. Smith, M. H. Forscutt, R. M. Elvin, Henry Kemp, J. W. Waldsmith, Charles Fry, and A. E. Madison. Bishop E. L. Kelley arrived Wednesday from Lamoni. Some inconvenience was caused by the delay in arrival of the tents. Several loads of them reached here Saturday night about nine o'clock and by midnight most of these were set up and occupied. The camp is well equipped with every convenience necessary for the comfort of those in attendance. Green & Snow, of Tabor, conduct an excellent stand and eating house; Gaylord Bros., the livery and feed barn. There are also two barbers and a boot black upon the ground. The first census of our little city was taken Monday morning. It showed the following facts: There were fifty-one tents used as dwellings, three for other purposes, seven covered wagons, and two hundred and fifty-six inhabitants. These numbers have been added to since and will be given again the last of the week.

It is estimated that fifteen hundred people were in attendance on Sunday.

THE Capital, of Des Moines, for August 27, notes the close of the reunion at Newton as follows:

SAINTS' REUNION AT AN END.

Camp Ground, Newton, August 27.—The Saints' reunion session closed last night with a large crowd in attendance. The campers, with many others who attended the services, expressed themselves well satisfied with the meetings and the results. Three were baptized, two children blessed, and scores became better acquainted with the faith of the Latter Day Saints, and can more fully sympathize with them in the special efforts they are making and have made to correct the errors and evils of Utah Mormonism. A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Cook, the superintendent of fair grounds and through him to the Jasper County Fair Association, for the use of the grounds. President Joseph Smith, his brother, A. H. Smith, and nephew, F. A. Smith, will sojourn in Des Moines to-night and attend services at East Sixteenth and Des Moines Streets.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A young Nebraska brother writes to Bro. R. M. Elvin, as follows: "Please accept inclosed check and apply on debt of Graceland. Sent as the result of a favor from the Lord."

A sister sends a dollar for Graceland and says: "I have been doing washing for other people and made a little. I will send my dollar. Wish it was more, but am thankful that I can send this much."

Concerning "Book of Mormon Talks," Bro. R. Etzenhouser writes: "I examined with much interest and satisfaction the work 'Book of Mormon Talks.' I regard it as a very valuable addition to our literature; more suitable, perhaps, to young people than the older, but containing useful information for all, and in some features serviceable even in debates. I commend it heartily."

Bro. W. S. Macrae writing from Dorcheat, Louisiana, August 25, to Bro. R. S. Salyards, says: "Bro. Grimes and I are in a new place preaching to interested listeners. The leader of a mob that was formed to run us out came out to hear, and after the first sermon resigned his position. We hear they are reorganizing, but we have no fears. About twenty-five baptisms in my field since May 15."

I. N. Roberts wrote from Harp, Alabama, August 16, to Bro. R. J. Lambert: "I am having an interesting time here. Will baptize some to-day, ten I believe have come forward; others are near. This is the roughest place I have struck in my field. The house is well filled each night, and many are interested. The good Lord is standing by me, and of course success is sure. I have already baptized over forty souls, some of the best people the country affords."

Sr. Kate Ward of Marengo, Illinois, says: "We few Saints here—Bro. David Brand and wife, my children and myself, and one or two others—have been hoping to have a series of meetings held, but our hopes seem not as yet to bear much fruit. We had a few sermons by Bro. F. M. Cooper some weeks ago, and expected the district tent to come. A few were interested by the few sermons heard. There is no doubt that the elders of this church are the best preachers in the world. I hope and trust Bro. Cooper may return, and that a few may be 'gathered in,' so that the few of us may have company. Those who heard Bro. Cooper declared they had never heard better preaching in their own churches, and are anxious to hear more of it."

Under date of July 31, G. R. Wells wrote to R. S. Salyards from Rozelle, Sydney, as follows: "We have been benefitted much here by the Patriarch and his secretary's visit, and lost much in the returning of Elder Kaler. He is a long-headed fellow and wisdom is not absent from his deliberations, and we haven't any of such workers to spare. Saints are looking forward to the arrival of the new appointees.

Sydney branch is preparing to receive Brn. Wight and Barmore right royally. Bro. Wight's reappointment was a happy hit. He is immensely popular over here, both among members and outsiders. I see he was laid up last letter to HERALD, but bent on coming. Hope nothing will prevent, as I have withdrawn from a debate here in order to substitute him.
It is on the "soul" question with a Christadelphian Sydney champion, to take place near Sydney. I have got him to agree to debate a series with Wight here in Sydney after the above; the subjects to include the distinctive features of both our movement and his; as he teaches there isn't any present feature of the kingdom, his can hardly be called a "movement." There is nothing to move. They are waiting till Jesus comes to move things. But "J. W." will have an opportunity of examining this idea with a champion to challenge every position. I am writing J.
W. at Auckland, hoping to catch him there four days before landing in Sydney to prepare his mind. I don't believe in taking on a fight when I have a better man coming—especially when the opportunity for an immense advertisement of our work is open to us.
An urgent call has come to the missionary in charge from Queensland and he has asked me to go. I am leaving for Brisbane soon—some eight hundred miles north. This is where Elder Kaler made that splendid coup (or scoop) of twenty-seven of the best members the Brighamites had in Australia. Word from Elder Butterworth shows him improving in health. He is at Berrigan, on the border between New South Wales and Victoria, recuperating."

Bro. Henry Broadway sends over ten dollars from England, July 30, ordering a lot of tracts and books, and says: "I should have been more pleased if I could have sent a ten pound order instead of what it is, but I dare say I must be thankful for small mercies, and glad to say there are two or three sufficiently interested to order an Inspired Translation and a Book of Mormon, each of which I trust may be read with faith and prayer, that our dear Father may give them light so as to obey this glorious gospel of his dear Son. Now you will see there is two shillings and six pence added over and above the books, tracts, and Sunday-school supplies to be put to the best use you can for the work; perhaps one word or two of explanation as to why it is sent would be interesting:
One day in June last, while working at my trade as brick-layer, as I was butting a brick, either a piece of steel or brick flew from the hammer into my eye, and it became so bad I was nearly blind and was advised to go to a doctor and have it taken out; but, to tell the truth, I was afraid he might injure the eye, and thereby I might lose my sight. I thought it would cost me about two shillings and six pence, and I just thought the best plan was to try the dear Lord first, as I had far more confidence in him and said to myself, I will administer the oil and if he is pleased to remove the object I would rather ten times give the two shillings and six pence for the work, and am more than glad to tell that my prayers were heard, and in two days my eye was all right again. I would have sent it sooner, but thought it would do with the rest when I sent for the books, etc."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Plaindealer and Standard, of Ridgetown, Ontario, in its issue for August 21 speaks of the work of James M. Baggerly in that town.

The evidence that some men do not count their souls to be of much worth is the fact that they make no effort to save their souls, or in other words, to prevent the loss to themselves of all that the future life might give to them of peace and happiness in eternal life.

O-gi-maw-kwe Mit-i-gwa-ki, being interpreted, means "Queen of the Woods," and is the title of a book written by a full-blood Indian, Chief Pokagon.
It is of interest to Latter Day Saints as showing what an educated Lamanite can do in the way of literature.
Sr. Walker has been reviewing it in the Autumn Leaves. Have you read her review?

J. G. Hodges, of La Grande, Oregon, sends us a marked copy of the Eastern Oregon Observer, published at La Grande, issue of August 8, in which appeared the following notice of a "social" to be given under the auspices of one of the auxiliaries of the Utah church: "A social will be held at the meeting-house of the Latter Day Saints, Friday evening, under the auspices of the Junior Association. A program will be rendered at half past seven by the children. Ice-cream will be served and dancing will be one of the pleasures of the evening. All are invited."

The way home from Newton to Lamoni, was utilized by Brn. A. H. Smith, F. A. Smith, Leon Gould, V. Gunsolley, and the Editor and wife, by a stop at Des Moines, where on the evening of Monday, August 25, in the Saints' chapel, corner of Des Moines and Sixteenth Streets, the Editor and Bro. F. A.
Smith spoke to the little band of believers, concerning our work and its progress. We were agreeably pleased to meet Brn. Joseph R. Lambert and M. Danielson, up to the capital city on business and to see the fair. The Associate Editor also took in the fair and made a visit to the Historical Rooms, on the 26th and later. He is at present writing, September 1, absent at Chicago, with Business Manager F. B. Blair, Foreman R. J. Lambert, and Pressman J. W. Barr, on business for college and office.

THAT BALANCE.

Whenever and wherever the word balance is used the individual with an eye to business will at once snuff the consideration of a money account, and so it is. Now how much interest have you in this paper? And while I have little hope that a tithe of the church membership will ever see or read this, nevertheless I hope that those who have the opportunity and privilege to read and consider it will also call the attention of those who are not HERALD subscribers to the pith of the question.

Bishop E. L. Kelley states in HERALD for July 16, page 695: "At the close of the last fiscal year when the elders' individual reports came in, and the little balances due them were summed up, it was found to make a total of over five thousand dollars. This was for incidental expenses which should have been met by those for whom they labored, but was not."

There certainly can be no misunderstanding the teaching of the Bishop; namely, that the Saints and friends where the elders labor are to furnish the needed money to meet necessary expenses of the minister. Have I clearly stated the teaching of our Bishop? Has the Bishop truly and faithfully taught in unison with the law? If we have misunderstood the Bishop, or misstated him, we shall expect to hear from him in the near future, as to the teaching of the law. Let the rule to govern the examination be, "and in the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established."—D. C. 6: 12.

The order of the witnesses shall be as follows: "And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—D. C. 42: 5.

Be it understood that the revelations of God are never in contraposition to each other, and that it is the usual practice of the unbeliever to seek to arraign one revelation against another.

Paul: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."—1 Corinthians 9: 13, 14.

Alma: "And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, and to every needy, naked soul. And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God; and they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another, both temporally and spiritually, according to their needs and their wants."—Mosiah 9: 9.

Joseph: "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples."—D. C. 83: 16.

By the three witnesses—books—we establish that the ministers of the gospel are to have their necessities supplied. Now please turn to the Bishop's annual report, HERALD for May 7, pages 455-459. There we find the individual reports of the ministers. The total expense for the year $26,788.66; of this the Bishop and his agents furnished $12,690.84, and a balance due the elders of $4,056.93, which makes a total of $16,747.77; from this, however, the Saints should have a credit of $2,086.15 of a cash balance in the hands of the elders; but this would still leave a deficit of $14,661.62 in meeting the elders' expenses, and methinks that I hear some one say, "How can this be?" Now it is clear that if the elders had been fortunate enough to have obtained all of their necessary expenses, then there would have been in the hands of the Bishop and his agents for the care of the elders' families, the poor of God's people, and other necessary church work the amount that had to be drawn from the general fund to meet the personal expenses of the missionaries; and again, as a rule, the balance due the elder was largely borrowed from the family allowance. This usually works a hardship and an injustice upon the family, for it would seem that the sacrifice of the family to be without the presence of husband and father is a sufficient trial and sacrifice without withdrawing from their daily support to keep the husband and father absent from home.

How can the elders run behind so in their expense?

From long years of actual experience and careful observation I will try to give a comprehensive explanation:

A branch finds itself under the necessity of asking that an elder shall be supplied to conduct their Sabbath services, and they faithfully and punctually pay the elder's railroad fare every trip he makes, to the exact cent; but the elder to appear clean and becoming in the pulpit patronizes the barbershop once a week, as also has his hair cut about four times during the year. This would be an expense of $6.20 usually, but a clean face is not all that is necessary for the elder to possess to appear in a becoming manner in the pulpit, and surely he would not be considered an extravagant man should he soil one shirt and collar each week; that would incur a laundry bill of $6.76, and it would not be an over estimate to put his clothing at $30. To this should be added an amount to cover unavoidable and necessary incidental expenses. Now as the Saints, or branch only furnish the car-fare, hence the balance for the Bishop to liquidate, unless the elder should be so fortunate as to be able to "rob Paul to pay Peter," and in such case some one is doing his own duty and the duty of some other party to boot.

In that event the following has a most practical application: "Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."—Revelation 3: 11. The Christ advertises his soon coming and this means: "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 30. Saints, if we permit another to do our individual work we can not protest against that man taking or having our crown, and to be crownless signifies that we are to be without reward, and without glory, and perhaps denied the presence and companionship of either the Father or the Son; and still worse, our carelessness in the things of the gospel, while we have preference and avidity for the things that perish with the using, may result in the painful duty of the loving Master to say: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—Matthew 25: 42, I. T. O what a fearful thing that would be to overtake any one whose hope and ambition was an inheritance in celestial glory with the blood-washed multitude who in deep tribulation were ever faithful to duty even unto sacrifice!

It should not be considered that the elders who are careful in their expenditures are blameworthy because they have a balance due them at the end of the fiscal year, but rather it is an evidence of their faith and confidence in the gospel cause, and in the charity and good will of the Saints to make good the lack exhibited, for these men—missionaries—stood faithfully to the "rack, hay or no hay," trusting to the humanity and saintship of their fellow associates that constitute the rank and file of the army, for the men upon the firing line have to depend on the producers at home, and our work is mutual.

Permit me to ask if it would not be a good investment to have a safe balance in our favor in that bank that no dynamite or jimmy will affect its time-lock, and there is no danger of it collapsing and its business going into the hands of a receiver?

When the household of faith shall in the majority wisely conclude to deposit thus, there will be no unsettled balance in any of our church work.

And should the liberality of the Saints to the elders be in excess of their necessity, let the latter comply with: "And if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said."—D. C. 42: 14.

Let trust, confidence, truthfulness, and honesty be our polar star, then grace, peace, and unity shall be our daily manna.

CO-OPERATION.

Coöperation has a broader meaning than some of us give it. Some say coöperation is not a monopoly; yet in many instances that is just what it is. It is a congregating and concentrating of capital and interests. Parties that were once competitors pool their interests, whether they be laboring men or capitalists. If one hundred men with one hundred dollars each form a coöperative company, so as to get better returns for their money than they could get elsewhere, then another company consisting of ten men with one million dollars, each organized with the same object in view, both are coöperative, the only difference being in the different amount of capital and number of men.

We are prone to apply coöperation if the company represents a lot of financial weaklings struggling to create wealth, but if the company has considerable wealth we call it a big combination or trust. Coöperation is sometimes profitable to those who hold stock and oftentimes to others outside the organization. In Utah I am told it crowded out competition and left those who were not stockholders at the mercy of those who were, and in many instances the charges were exorbitant.

Again when we speak of coöperation, as applied to manufacturing, I feel reasonably sure that unless we are very careful there will be many failures. If the coöperative company pays bigger wages than his competitive neighbor and has to sell in the same market from where will come the difference in price?

Now in regard to the voting power of stockholders. Nearly every new company launched into the commercial world is largely a speculation. The men who put up the money should have the say-so in the management of that money and the conducting of the affairs of the company, so that if it should prove a failure they can not hold others blamable for such failure, whether it comes from mismanagement or otherwise. Let us try the philosophy. One man starts a factory; he owns every dollar invested in that plant. Whose right is it to manage his business? Why, you will say, it is his right and nobody's else, because he is sole proprietor. All right. Soon after he commences operating his brother purchases one half interest in this factory. How many votes should the original owner now have in the electing of officers and other business, subject to the vote of a company? You will say he holds one half interest and should have the right to cast one half of the votes to be cast. Some time subsequent to this they take in new partners, and now they each hold one fourth interest; what should be the proportion meted out to each in voting power? Holding twenty-five per cent of the interest in the plant I believe it will be conceded that each has a right to cast twenty-five per cent of the votes to be cast at the company's election, etc. If we continue to multiply the number of stockholders, where shall we strike the line at which men should not have the right to cast a proportionate vote to the stock they hold or refrain from voting?

WHOSE FAULT IS IT?

Wherever I have been among the Saints there exists one general complaint as regards the binding of the church publications. When the subject of the church literature is mentioned some one is very apt to remark, "If they would only do better binding," and bring up some example of supposed defective binding. Sometimes I think it is like an epidemic—its catching. Being a printer and knowing something about bookbinding I have taken upon myself to reply to such criticisms, and not being connected with the church publishing houses in any way, personally, I am not on the defensive.

The other day, while reading in one of my books, an expensive volume, bound in morocco with padded sides, a section of two leaves came out, showing no mark where it had ever been caught with needle or thread. This book had been handled before but the leaves had never sprung out, and it might have remained in my possession for years and never have been noticed because of the infrequent and careful use it would receive. We should not expect books used as our church publications are to last like those whose only use seems to be to adorn the bookcase. It is a credit to the Saints that the books wear out—it shows they use them. I am prepared to make the statement that the church books are above the average in being substantially bound. The same complaints were made when the books were bound at one of the best and largest binderies in the West.

Whose fault is it that the church books come to pieces? Give other books the same usage and see if they will not also come to pieces. Use them as the Hymnal is used: for a fan, bend them back beyond where the binding of any book will allow, break their backs for use on the organ and see how long they will last. The bookbinder may construct the book in the best possible manner, using the strongest glue, paste, and thread, and yet the books come apart because the paper is not strong enough to stand such strain as they are subject to. Once in a while there is a loose thread, but generally it is the paper that breaks away. I was once shown an Inspired Translation in which a number of pages did not run in consecutive order. I explained that one sheet had been folded wrong, bringing all the pages in that sheet out of their regular order, and told the brother that if he would return it to the HERALD Office they would gladly replace it with a perfect one.

Some can not understand why the Inspired costs so much more than the King James Bibles. Every one ought to know that in the production of anything quantity makes a big difference in the price, and more so in printing than anything else. Millions of King James Bibles are being printed. Not only that, if there were one-hundredth part donated towards the Inspired that there is to publishing the King James they could be distributed free.

THE WORD OF WISDOM.

I take the Word of Wisdom to be what it purports to be, that it is not a commandment, nor a constraint to members of the church, but that they may know how to govern themselves, in order to obtain a temporal salvation. In order to receive a verification of the promises attached, we must comply with all the conditions contained in said rules, keeping the commandments as well, then the destroying angel will pass over, or by us, and not slay us.

I believe in being consistent in teaching and observing this Word of Wisdom. I am satisfied that some do more harm than good in their attempts to teach it, for I read and hear that some make a "hobby" of some parts of it, and pass over other parts; for instance, great ado is made about the use of tobacco, and tea, and coffee, also strong drinks. Such persons give the members, that use the above articles, "fits," and do not say one word about that part of the word which says that it is pleasing to God, "that meat of beasts, and fowls of the air, be not used only in time of winter or famine."

I have seen such preachers sit at the table and eat meat in the summer, when they had no justifiable reason for eating it, and that too in the presence of those whom they had taught to observe the Word of Wisdom. Such practice invariably cuts the throat of all teaching which such elders do. I always think, "Oh, consistency, where art thou?"

The best way to teach the Word of Wisdom, is to teach it as a whole, for just what it is, and then exemplify that it is good by complying with it in its entirety, keeping all the commandments, and teaching the people to observe them all; then they have the promise of all blessings that pertain to this world, and the world to come. These are my views as to the Word of Wisdom. I do not observe it as a whole, but hope to later on. I do not use tobacco in any form. I do not use intoxicants, except wine for sacrament purposes, and that is made at home. I obey and teach the commandments, and do not strain at little things and swallow big ones. I am for consistency in all things, now and for ever.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH? — NO. 8.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

The one Daniel here speaks of shall be set up (established) in the latter days and positively was not to be left to other people, neither could it have reference to a kingdom which some say will be set up when Christ comes "the second time without sin unto salvation," for when he appears he is to "appear to" his church and "kingdom." 2 Timothy 4:1. When the bridegroom comes, half of his church or kingdom will be foolish (Matthew 25:1). When he comes there will be gathered out of his kingdom already existing, all things that offend (Matthew 13:41). We would hardly find offenders and foolish ones in the kingdom that it is thought that he will establish when he comes. All of these expressions show that the kingdom is to be here when he comes. Besides, this text in Daniel says, In the days of these kings (but not after them) God is to set up his kingdom.

In order to properly understand the foregoing statements of Daniel, it is necessary to examine the twenty-ninth to thirty-third verses. But it would occupy too much space here, so we will summarize in our own language and get the gist of the matter, leaving the reader to turn to his Bible and see if we are right. From the reading we learn that Nebuchadnezzar saw in a dream the image of a man whose head was of gold, his chest of silver, his sides of brass, his legs of iron, and his feet and toes part of iron and part of clay. Daniel was called in to interpret the dream, and he informed the king that God had shown him what would be in the latter days and represented the matter by a stone which he had seen that smote the image on the feet and broke it to pieces. He further informed the king that the different metals of which the image was formed represented as many kingdoms to arise after his time, and his as the head of gold was the first. That the fourth was to be divided into ten as represented by the ten toes. History informs us, first, there was the Babylonian kingdom, second, the Medo-Persian, third, the Grecian, fourth, the Roman, and fifth the ten kingdoms. Christ was born in the days of the fourth kingdom and well nigh the beginning of it, in the days of Augustus Cæsar, the second ruler of that empire, and organized his church in the days of the third ruler who began his reign about the year 17 A. D., ending it at 37 A. D. By this we see that the primitive church was not established in the days of ten kings, but in the days of one king—Tiberius Cæsar. Some argue that there were ten Cæsars and that it was then that Daniel's prophecy had its fulfillment. But there were more than ten Cæsars, beside two of them were dead before Jesus began his work, and there was no possibility of their being counted in. Others were not born until long after and hence they could not be considered a part of the ten in whose days God was to set up a kingdom. Certainly the legs of the image had not then been developed, much later the toes.

Whatever commentators may say, one thing is certain, it referred to a latter-day kingdom and was to be established by divine order. If Joseph Smith was not the man called of God to assist in establishing this work, who was? Certainly none of the European reformers were. While they done well as men, for which work none would be more ready to do them honor than the writer, yet we must look elsewhere for the fulfillment of these texts. While the reformers did well to break the bands of oppression and deliver the Bible into the hands of the people and establish freedom of thought, yet the followers of the reformers should "go on unto perfection" and accept and believe the Bible thus put into their hands, with respect to a later—a divine church.

The kingdom Daniel referred to was not, therefore, the primitive church of Jesus Christ, nor does it apply to the reformation. It is just possible that the reformation formed a number of the ten toes. Many argue that ten kingdoms of Europe receiving their power from the Pope are the toes of Daniel's image. To us that seems unreasonable as that would place ten toes on one foot and leave none for the other, besides some of the toes would now be quite as long if not longer than the leg. But let us see; Rome was divided into Eastern and Western Rome in the early centuries of the Christian era. Here we see the two legs of the image. We know them now as the Greek Catholic and Roman Catholic. From the Roman division extended down now to the foot which reaches as low, and reaches as far in time as the foot and toes, have come out Protestant fathers, Baptists, Lutherans, Calvinists, Episcopalians, and Independents. From the Greek foot have come: First, the Uniates seceded in 1590 under Igration Potosi. In a few years they numbered over four millions. More recently over three millions have returned. Second, the old believers or Starowers who consist of over five million of Russians and are sorely persecuted by the mother church. Third, the Motenagran. Fourth, the Hellenic Catholics of Greece. Fifth, Turkish Greek Catholic. Of this latter division the Encyclopedia Britannica, volume 11, page 36, eighth edition says: "There seems no probability that either the Greek church either in Turkey or Asia can again be united under one patriarch so as to become active and powerful."

It was in the days of these kingdoms or churches that God set up his kingdom or church. Rome the fourth kingdom was certainly divided both ecclesiastically and otherwise; and it was to be in its divided state that God was to inaugurate his special work. It is not wonderful that God should call upon Joseph Smith to establish his kingdom. A kind, sympathetic man, that "condescended to men of low estate," a man bold and fearless that could not be diverted from his way by persecution, slander, or even death itself. One whose character had not even the "smell of fire upon it." One who cared nothing for the theories and traditions of men, who feared God with all his house and commanded his children after him. Where could he have found a better man?

The truths he taught have stood every test, and slowly and surely is undermining all these kingdoms (churches) by infusing into them the "leaven that will eventually leaven the lump." As we said before in substance the churches are fast giving up their old ways and accepting the higher criticism and many things Latter Day Saint, though they still persecute the one who was the instrument in bringing this light again into the world. The time of their destruction is not yet fulfilled but the leaven is working and in our opinion will be accomplished sooner or later in the Lord's regular way by conversion to principles of righteousness.

Another text foreshadowing the work of Joseph Smith, or rather the work of the Lord through Joseph Smith, is found in the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah. We have not sufficient space to quote the entire chapter, but leave the reader to examine it at his leisure. In the meantime we call attention to a few points contained therein, especially that part which refers to "a marvelous work and a wonder." In order to get at the time again, as we have in former texts, we quote verse seventeen, which is as follows: "Is it not a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field?"

Here we have the same time as mentioned so often in the prophecies—the restoration of Palestine to its former fertility and the regathering of the Jews. That there may be no misunderstanding as to what the land of Lebanon is we call attention to Jeremiah 22:6: "For thus saith the Lord unto the king's house of Judah; thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon; yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited." Also Zechariah 10:10: "I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them."

As "the land of Gilead and Lebanon" is the land that is to be made "a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited," and as it is the land to which Israel is again to be gathered, there can be no doubt as to "Lebanon" being the land of Palestine—"the Holy Land."

It will be noticed that just a little while before this event God was to do a marvelous work and a wonder among certain people who were without seers and prophets, and the chief instrument in his hands to accomplish this marvelous work and a wonder was to be an unlearned man, as verses twelve and fourteen plainly and pointedly show: "And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this I pray thee; and he saith, I am not learned. . . . Therefore behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder, for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

All of the reformers were more or less wise and learned, some of them decidedly so. Therefore it will not be in harmony with the above scripture to apply it to any one or all of them; besides Palestine had not then become fruitful, nor did that event occur until long after Protestantism was born.

Unless Isaiah prophesied falsely, which we are not willing to admit, there was to be an unlearned man chosen of God in our day—a little while before Lebanon became fruitful—to bring about a "marvelous work and a wonder." Who was it? It could have been no other than Joseph Smith. No other man's work fills the description. While he is not called by name, yet the work that he really did is actually pointed out by the prophets, and time and place shown so clearly, that he who runs may read. That he was unlearned at first even his best friends do not deny. But during the fourteen years of his experience as president of the Church of Jesus Christ, he made rapid advancement in learning, and even stood far in advance of many of our best statesmen, as we shall presently show. No other man has yet claimed to be the unlearned man here spoken of, and it is now too late for such a man to arise, for Lebanon has long since become a fruitful field, but did not yield her bounties until after and only a little while after Joseph Smith established anew the Church of Jesus Christ by divine order, April 6, 1830, three years after the horses with wheels were invented and eleven years after the first swift vessel crossed the ocean, and twenty-three years before the former and latter rain was restored to Palestine.

Another passage referring directly to the work begun by Joseph Smith will be found in Revelation 14:6, 7: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come."

Just before the judgment an angel is to fly with the gospel to be preached on earth. The angel that visited Joseph Smith ordained him to preach the everlasting gospel. Not a new one but the old. So those who look upon Mr. Smith as bringing a new gospel, a new doctrine, or a new religion, simply misunderstand the man and his work.

Let us examine this passage a little more minutely that we may the better understand it. It will be necessary to refer to Revelation 4:1 where we find the following: "After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up higher, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter."

John was on the Isle of Patmos in the year 96 A. D.; there he received his revelation, so that we have positive proof that the things spoken of in the book of Revelation after chapter four represent things that were to be fulfilled since the year 96 A. D. Among other things, he saw an angel coming to earth, and that his message was the gospel, and that it was to be preached on earth (hereby we know he was coming to earth) and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. We naturally inquire, Why should an angel bring the gospel from heaven when it has been on earth continuously since the days of Jesus, as some believe? This question reveals the weakness of those faiths which claim a succession since Christ, for it would be folly to bring in something we already were in possession of. On the contrary if the gospel was to be restored to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, then it had been taken away and did not during that time (the dark ages) exist in all this broad earth anywhere. We repeat, it is certain that it was to be restored after the year 96 of the Christian era, and that, too, by an angel.

By referring to Revelation 12:14, we learn that the church was to flee away from the face of the serpent and remain hid for twelve hundred and sixty days, evidently representing twelve hundred and sixty years (verse 6). It will be well for us to inquire, Where was the church so long? Where is the place on earth where satan, the serpent, may not go? Where is the place away from his face? We answer, Nowhere among the nations, kindreds, tongues, or people of the earth. Therefore it is within good judgment to say that the church was not on earth during that time, hence the necessity of an angel restoring it. This is evidently what Jesus meant when he said: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come.—Matt. 24:14.

Some may wish to ask, What will become of those who lived during the twelve hundred and sixty years when there was no church on earth acknowledged of God? I don't know that we are under any obligation to answer this question in order to prove our position, or rather the position of John the Revelator, to be true. John's statement is true whether we can or can not answer that or any other question, but we may be able to throw a little heart ease on the subject in the Yankee style of answering a question by asking another. What became of those who lived before Jesus established the gospel? Or those who lived before the ten commandments were given? Or still greater, What will become of the heathen now living?

The answer to any one of these questions will also answer the other. Each may be answered by reading 1 Peter 4:6, as follows: "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead."

But back to the main point. The angel was to come and bring the gospel. To those who believe the Bible this fact will be readily accepted. Those who have more faith in their creed than in the Bible, doubtless will try to explain it away and spiritualize it, but we prefer to believe it as it is, and in doing so, we are in harmony with many, many passages of scripture that can not be understood in any other way.

It is only necessary here to state that no other church founder, that we know of, except Joseph Smith, claimed to have received this angel visit.

But, the reader may ask, What evidence have we to furnish that an angel visited Joseph Smith and commissioned him to reorganize the church of Jesus Christ and restore the primitive order of things? The best evidence in all the world, God's approval. These signs shall follow them that believe (Mark 16:16, 17), also the gifts of the Holy Spirit, such as prophecy, tongues, interpretation of tongues, healings, faith, wisdom, etc., but best of all—"He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine," said Jesus. So do we claim that he who doeth the will of God shall know for himself that the work Joseph Smith performed under direction of God, was of him.

If Joseph Smith was really acknowledged an impostor, it would have been no use to say to the people that "God will bear record of my work." It would have been a death-blow to his work. But thousands testify to-day that God does witness to them that this work is divine. What better evidence can you ask for? We are willing to risk our case here. We can afford to do so. So could Joseph Smith. And so he did. We leave the matter with the reader. Test and try.

To refresh the mind of the reader we will recapitulate by summarizing.

There are other texts referring to this same subject such as Zechariah 14: 7 and Psalms 85: 10-12, but we have introduced sufficient to show that God has reserved a special work for the last days. Place, time, and conditions all being so plainly pointed out that we can not escape from the conclusion that Joseph Smith was the one chosen of God to do that work. That America is the place, and between 1819 and 1853 the time.

Mr. Smith and many others bear testimony, that will stand in any court and will stand at the judgment day, that God did call upon him for that purpose. We have shown that his character was good, that the Devil tried to blacken it, but made a sad mistake by using the wrong material. A clear evidence of his divine calling was the Devil's attempt to swamp him by slandering his character. This is the Devil's testimony of the truth always. We have proven, too, that God has borne testimony of his calling by sending the former and latter rains on Palestine, and also by gathering the Jews to their fathers' land. As the disciples of Christ proved his divinity by the fulfillment of prophecy, so we have used the same weapon in favor of Mr. Smith's calling and the "dispensation of the fullness of times."

In 1830 the word of the Lord came to the church and to as many as will receive it as follows:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquity shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them. Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear: prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people [see Acts 3: 22, 23]; for they have strayed from mine ordinances [see Isaiah 24: 1-6], and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall. Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant, Joseph Smith, Jr., and spoke unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1, 3, 4.

We have noticed:

1. That many prophecies of Scripture show very plainly that the Lord was to set up his church in the last days somewhere between 1819 and 1853 at the end of the earth or on the land of America.

2. That an angel of God visited Joseph Smith and authorized him to establish again the ancient church of God.

3. That the Lord acknowledged the work by signs following all who are worthy.

4. That it is not a new faith, but the old restored.

5. That afterward the Lord acknowledged the work and called upon the world to hearken.

Unlike the reformers, who assumed authority to build churches, Mr. Smith was divinely appointed to do his work. Instead of having a secular church then—a church of man—we present to the reader a divine one, a restored one.

The Bible speaks of this kind of a church, but knows nothing of a reformation only as a preparatory step for a greater light which was to follow them.

It matters little with God as to whether man will close his eyes against these facts or not. Our belief or disbelief will not alter them, neither will it alter the Lord's plans. We must learn to face the facts and order our lives accordingly. The door is open, he who will enter in may do so, and those who will not are at liberty to do as they please. We may suggest to the reader that he make this a matter of solemn prayer. Surely He will hear those who earnestly ask him.

God is unchangeable and is as willing to hear his younger girls and boys as the older ones, and may we suggest, that he is as willing to answer, too.

We suggest a few more thoughts, especially calling attention again to that excellent article in the New York Arena, only more fully: "It is also true and demands special emphasis that God is ever the same, that revelation is continuous and eternal, that inspiration is given in all ages to all who meet the conditions, . . . and that the Holy Spirit has been given from the time of the first man, and in equal degree to all who have equally opened their hearts to him." Again on page 189: "The idea, then, of God's immediate, eternal, and inspiring presence ought to be preached and emphasized. By preaching otherwise, the race has been robbed of a glorious hope, civilization has been retarded, and tradition has usurped the throne of reason."

We do not look upon Joseph Smith as it is reported of us, for it is said, "he as prophet was entitled to all obedience," and "our faith compelled us to accept everything he said." Nothing could be farther from the truth. We accept the Bible as a rule of faith and practice, and could not, therefore, accept anything that is not in harmony with that. We could not follow any man further than he followed Jesus Christ. Nor did any of Joseph Smith's teachings advise any one to do so. He was as subject to the law as any one in the church. He was neither king, governor, or ruler of the church, but its servant. Under the regulations of church government he could not have ruled the church at will if he had wanted to, for the simple reason that the presidency of the church consists of three persons holding equal authority, of which number Joseph Smith was but one, therefore there were two others besides himself that must be consulted and consent obtained. Paul says, "let the prophets speak two or three and let the other judge." 1 Corinthians 14:29. When, therefore, the Holy Ghost inspired Joseph Smith to speak it must be judged and tried by others before it could be binding. As God is unchangeable no communication would be received if not in exact harmony with the word of God in other ages. Hence one of the fundamental principles of the true Latter Day Saints is, "The right to preside only by consent of the governed." Also the right of the church as Paul understood it for others to judge of what was revealed to the prophet.

If our enemies who misrepresent us had only read a few of Joseph Smith's communications to the church, they would have discovered this statement: "All things shall be done in the church by common consent." And had they read further they would have found that same statement repeated time and again. We look upon Mr. Smith simply as a man, no more perfect than many others, yet at times receiving the gifts of the Spirit of God for the good of the church whose servant he was as well as the servant of God. Asking the will of God for the church, giving the will of God to the church.

We can not do better than by referring again to the New York Arena, pages 190, 191:

So long as they appeal to the inspiration of the past for all authority, disclaim any right of their own to speak in the name of Jehovah, teach that revelation is finished and sealed up, so long they will go halting and their words be well nigh powerless. While they need not assume a boastful spirit, yet they should have wrought within their souls a conviction of the truths they utter, should feel that these truths are from God and that in expressing them they speak for God. They should, moreover, teach the possibility of present-day prophets and prepare the people to receive them. Let this be done, and then, when a new prophet arises, he will be quickly understood. . . . To-day the cry comes to the clergy of America as never before, Prepare ye the way of the Lord.

One would almost think from this reading that the writer was a Latter Day Saint, but such is not the case. He perhaps never met one. But his reasoning is logical and sounds like the New Testament writers. Understanding the nature of man and anticipating the times in which we live, he proceeds to point out what might be expected if a new prophet should arise and in doing so he tells the story of Joseph Smith as represented by his enemies. He continues:

But in making the transition from the old way to the new [new, because the old has been forgotten], there are some practical difficulties to be overcome. The utterances of new truth invariably brings the cry of "heresy." The honest preacher will be charged with skepticism, even infidelity. The professed friends of truth will do all they can to destroy his influence, if not by argument, by the use of opprobrious epithets.

He then quotes Bishop Wilberforce as follows:

You need boldness to risk all for God; to stand by the truth and its supporters against man's threatenings and the Devil's wrath. You need a patient meekness to bear the galling calumnies and false surmises with which, if you are faithful, that Satanic working which, if it could, would burn your body, will assuredly assail you daily through the pens and tongues of deceivers and deceived, who under a semblance of zeal for Christ, will cover or distort your words, misrepresent your motives, rejoice in your failings, exaggerate your errors, and seek by every poisoned breath of slander to destroy your powers of service.

So it was with Joseph Smith. The clergy were his bitterest opposers. He was misrepresented, misunderstood, and maltreated by religious zealots. Their words and their writings have crept into the literature of to-day and many thousands who honestly believe that they know the man, know only a man of straw.

He was not infallible. No prophet ever was. When not inspired (and no prophet was ever inspired only at times), he was like other uninspired men, and his words worth no more than others, only for the wisdom they contained. When inspired he was as other inspired men. Inspiration does not indicate infallibility in the man speaking. We can not better prove this thought than by referring again to the Arena: "It will be a great day for the human race when it is freely admitted that infallibility is not the necessary logical consequence of inspiration."

The evidences, when properly weighed, prove beyond dispute that he was a man inspired of God, to open up the last dispensation, for the good of his fellow man without fear or favor from any; doing the bidding of God, leaving the result with him, as do we.

The Prodigal.

Why should not I, in humble prayer,
Bow down and worship him

Who saved me by his tender care,
From the blighting curse of sin?

I wandered on the mountains bare,
Away on desert sands;

I did not want my Father's care,
I loved not his commands.

Out in the desert wild, I cried,
Hungry, faint, and sore,

O, Father, save thy erring child,
Come, take me home once more!

The Father left the ninety and nine,
Safe sheltered in the fold,
And hastened then the one to find,
Perishing out in the cold.

He found me in the tangle wild,
Out on the mountain cold,
And brought his erring, wayward child
Safe back within the fold.

His loving heart with pity filled,
He heard my feeble cry;
The fatted calf for me he killed,
My wants to satisfy.

And surely I must thankful be,
His praise I'll ever sing,
For in the fold he shelters me,
Sweet incense I will bring.

The World.

This world is a sad, sad place, I know—
And what soul living can doubt it?—
But it will not lesson the want and woe
To be always singing about it.
Then away with a song that is full of tears—
Away with the dirges that sadden;
Let us make the most of our fleeting years
By singing the lays that gladden.

A few sweet potions of bliss I've quaffed,
And many a cup of sorrow;
But, in thinking over the flavored draught,
The old-time joy I borrow;
And, by brooding over the bitter drink,
Pain fills again the measure:
And so I have learned that it's best to think
Of the things that give us pleasure.

The world at its saddest is not all sad—
There are days of sunny weather;
And the people in it are not all bad,
But saints and sinners together.
I think those wonderful hours in June
Are better by far to remember
Than those when the world gets out of tune,
In the cold bleak winds of November.

Because we meet in the walks of life
Many a selfish creature,
It does not prove that this world of strife
Has no redeeming feature.
There is bloom and beauty upon the earth—
There are buds and blossoming flowers—
There are souls of truth, and hearts of worth—
There are glowing, golden hours.

In thinking over a joy we've known,
We easily make it double;
Which is better by far than to mope and moan
O'er sorrow, and grief, and trouble.
For, tho' the world is a sad, sad place
(And who that is living can doubt it?)
It will not lesson the want and woe
To be always singing about it.

Worth Hiding Away.

Some things are not worth hiding away or even owning. The Psalmist, however, tells of one thing that was worth hiding: "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."

Many persons have hid away money, and when they wanted it have found that some others have known of the hiding place and have stolen it. Gone from them, never more to return.

The heart is a safe place to hide a treasure. No thieves can take it from that hiding place. And the more real the treasures that are stowed away in the heart the better for the owner of the heart.

The great mistake that David once made was in admitting his heart feelings which should not have been allowed there. That act transformed the "Sweet Singer of Israel" into a murderer.

David was wise when he did the right kind of hiding and unwise when he did the wrong kind of hiding.

In the course of a lifetime the heart takes in a great deal—that which is good, that which is bad, and that which can hardly be called good or bad.

When the heart is filled with the word of God there is very little chance for any of the trash that is prevalent to obtain admission into it.

A heart filled with that which should not be there is something like a garden filled with weeds—the little that is good is choked and can not grow. The poet must have realized that fact when he penned the words, "Take my heart and let it be for ever closed to all but Thee."

After hiding away the word, the sealing process should be immediately attended to. That will do much towards making the hiding a permanent success.

The simple reading of the word amounts to about as much as looking at thousands of dollars in the show window of a money broker—a sort of gratification without the genuine pleasure that comes from possession.

David also said, "I will run the way of Thy commandments when Thou shalt enlarge my heart." The best way to enlarge the heart is to fill it with the word. Under such conditions the clean heart grows. Sin has the effect of making the heart small. The better a man or woman becomes the larger the heart. People with small hearts are as badly suited for this world as they are for the world to come.

The true standard to judge men and women by is the size of their hearts, and not how tall they are or how much they weigh.

The heart needs feeding as well as the body. When the heart is not fed it shrivels up and makes its owner look as mean as sin.

While writing this article there comes to my mind a genuine specimen of a small-hearted man. He has the look of one who is living only for himself and has a hard time doing it. He looks miserable, and why should he not? A total failure from the first day of January to the last day of December.

What a small heart that must be that has no Christ in it nor the desires that spring up at the very thought of what Christ was, is, and will be.

Hide away in your hearts that which is worth having and sticking to. The heart is capable of being the storehouse of that which will make you wise and happy; and it can also be the storehouse of that which will make you wish you had never been born.

The word of the Lord should not be neglected by either old or young. David said, "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to Thy word."

The troubled heart needs the word; the sad heart needs the word, and the light heart needs the word. In every condition of life the word is needed every hour.

Take time to hide the word away in your hearts; keep it there as a light unto your feet, and when dark hours come to you you will not regret it.—G. R. Scott.

The Duties We Owe the Sunday-School.

"Jesus saith unto Simon Peter, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my Lambs." It is our duty to heed the admonition given and take up Peter's work. Will we sit at ease with folded hands and leave the lambs to starve? "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock."

Man is a twofold nature; he needs to be fed both temporally and spiritually. When the babe is born we feed it on temporal food, and when it grows up, it is our duty to take it by the hand and lead it to Sabbath-school and teach it the golden truths that are contained in the gospel, that its spirit may grow and develop. A child brought up in this way is "founded upon a rock" and will be able "to bear the toil and endure the pain" of life.

ANOTHER DUTY WE OWE THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL

is our presence. Thereby we show that we are interested in the cause. The Scriptures tell us that we are to learn "line upon line and precept upon precept." If we stay away from Sunday-school we will lose the "lines" and "precepts" that we would have learned if we had done our duty. Mental idleness is a parent to moral and physical degeneracy. The man who never goes to Sunday-school will never have his spirit aroused.

One thing I have taken notice of in this Sunday-school work is that the work of the many falls upon the few to do. I say it is especially true of brain work. So many are ready to excuse themselves upon the plea of no talent. This is all wrong. God is not a Pharaoh. He never yet commanded brick to be made without furnishing the straw as well as the clay. There is work for all, room for all, and all should have zeal and a willingness for service. Be true to thy task however great or small. Let this thought cheer thee: Thou art not alone with thy works. The one who gave thee thy work to do will strengthen thee.

"Lord thou callest now for workers,
Glad we come at thy command.
Give us each a worker's outfit—
Loving heart and willing hand."

"Renew my will from day to day.
Blend it with thine and take away
Whate'er now makes it hard to say
Thy will be done."

Dear Sunday-school workers, stick to the old gospel ship till she's anchored safe in Zion.

CHARLES CRAMER.

For the Kirtland District convention.

THE following from the "Timothy Stand-by" account on the subject of "Internashunal Lesson Sistim" from the Denver convention is taken from the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. It is a faithful account of the proceedings.

When the Saturday mornin sesshun wuz opined every buddy wuz in their seats and peeples wuz a standin up wherever they could git a chance, fer this wuz the time the Internashunal Lesson Sistim wuz to be tore to peeces, and if possible, wuz to be put together agin.

The convenshun wuz in fer a two-hour red-hot debate on "How could the Internashunal Lesson Sistim be Improved?" There wuz no time lost in gittin startid. Mr. Belsey frum England sed the peeples of Great Brittin wuz agin havin the Sistim docktered. It wuz good enuff fer them just as it is. He wuz in favor of "one language, one Book, one lesson."

Doctor Blackall wantid everything gradid. He wantid gradid lessons, gradid texts, and gradid scriptur, a "bread-and-milk" korse fer the beginners, and a "hickory-nut" korse fer the seenyers.

Doctor Schaufler sed the best way to improve the Lesson Sistim wuz to Go Right On Working with it just as we had done, then it would GROW.

Doctor Hazard wuz in faver of an advance korse. He sed that with an advance korse the young men what had got out of the Sunday Skool would come flockin back agin, and perhaps them what wuz thinkin of passin in their resignashuns, and pullin out, would hold on a little longer.

When Doctor Hamill got in his say on the debate I knowed he had struck oil. A feller didn't need speekticles to see that he wuz expressin the sentiment of the grate Sunday Skool world, when he sed that "the way to improve the Sunday Skool lessons wuz not by trying to grade Scriptur, but by gradin the teechin. He menshuned my beefstake argument with Superintendent Sklusive, down to Jeriko Kort House, and sed the Scriptur didn't need any gradin. If the Lord wantid it gradid it would have bin labilled and put up in packages ackordin to age. The gradin must be done by the teacher. We didn't need gradid lessons, but we did need gradid teachers. Oh, Mandy, that wuz grate!

Then Doctor Hamill turned a clinch on the nail by tellin about a grate medikal perfesser he once saw who knowed all about a man's body from hed to foot. He wuz teechin a class of very litle childern about the hart. First he drew a hart on the board; then he called a little feller up and showed him where his hart wuz. Then he told them how the hart wuz a grate pump to send the blud to difrent parts of the body. A few days afterward he herd the same perfesser teach a class of big boys and girls in their teens. He drew a hart on the board and showed its struicture and divishuns, and told them how the hart sent the blud to the lungs, so that it might be changed from bad blud to good blud, and could nurish the body. The next week he herd the same perfesser teach a class of medikal stoodents and he told them all the details about its construkshun and its fiber, and its use, and its process, and its funckshuns, and used wurd what would stump enny buddy but a doctor. It wuz the same hart all the time—but the teechin wuz gradid. Oh, Mandy, it wuz grate!

At last Doctor Potts riz and perseeded to sum up the evidence, just like as if he wuz a lawyer down to Jeriko Kort House. He wished he could beleev that so menny young men had left the Sunday Skool becaws the lessons wuzzent hard enuff. He wished he could beleev that establishin speshul lessons fer the seenyers would bring all the strayin young men back agin. He wuz in faver of one lesson fer every buddy. But if the Lesson Committee wuz to be instruektid to prepare a speshul korse fer beginners, and one fer the seenyers, he wuz in faver of havin them marked "opshunal," and not havin them brandid "Inter-nashunal."

When Doctor Hamill and Doctor Potts wuz done I felt in my bones, and knowed way down in my sole, that the Lesson Sistim wuz safe. On Monday the Convenshun took in the "Beginner's Korse" on probashun, but it wouldn't have nothin to do with the "Advance Korse."

Letter Department.

LOOKINGGLASS, Oregon, August 19.

Editors Herald: After finishing my work in California I now drop you a line so that all who asked me to write to the paper so they could hear from me, may be gratified. I left San Antonio, Texas, Thursday morning, June 26, and arrived in Los Angeles on Saturday noon the 28th. The following Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday I preached four times in the Los Angeles branch. Attended the branch business meeting Wednesday night. I then went to Downey, twelve miles south, and stayed two nights, one each, with Vanfleet's and Freeman's, preaching one night at Vanfleet's. Saturday, July 5, went to Cucamonga and preached at Frank Vanfleet's. Sunday morning went to San Bernardino, and preached twice and continued Monday and Tuesday nights. While there in company with Bro. A. Carmichael we had a real estate agent look at the real estate belonging to the church in San Bernardino, and we left it in his hands for sale. We next went to look at some land near Anaheim, owned by the church, tried to determine its value, and instructed Bro. Carmichael to sell it as soon as possible. Holding land and town lots, paying taxes on them for years, and getting no rent, and then can not sell for half perhaps what the property was valued at when turned over to the church as tithing or otherwise, is very unprofitable to the church, and I think it would be much better for the church if those owning such property would sell it themselves and turn over the price they get for it to the church. I hope all may adopt that policy, and save the church the burden and expense of looking after it, besides the loss from their valuation.

On July 11 we went to the camp grounds at Orange County Park where the Southern California reunion was held, closing Sunday the 20th. Monday went to Los Angeles in company with Bro. Luff and held meeting at night. They were all glad to see Bro. Luff and hear his voice again. Tuesday, the 22d, we started for San Francisco. We reached there in time to see the missionaries take their leave for Honolulu, New Zealand, and Australia. We remained in San Francisco and Oakland preaching in the two places as opportunity offered until the 29th, then went to San Jose, where we remained four days, preaching every night. Saturday we went to Santa Rosa, remaining over Sunday. We held three preaching services and attended sacrament meeting with the Saints there. Went back to San Francisco and Oakland; preached once more in Oakland; then on to Sacramento where we remained until the 12th, preaching six times, then north to Chico, where we held meetings two nights. This closed our work in California for the present.

Since the reunion at Orange, Bro. Luff has been all the time with me, doing his part in preaching and looking after the interests of the work under his charge. His health is poor and has been ever since we have been together, but his ambition to attend to his work and the help of the Spirit have kept him up, and the people were delighted with his preaching. It seems a pity that one who can preach so acceptably and do so much good should be so hindered and afflicted in his work. I pray God to bless and heal him.

In Los Angeles T. W. Williams with his helpers seem to be working hard to advance the cause. Bro. Earle is soon to take the field as a missionary, and we will then have another good man in the field. Bro. Carmichael is our wide-awake Bishop's agent in that district, and also a general missionary, doing his part nobly. And good old Bro. Gibson helping the local forces at and near San Bernardino, driving from place to place, teaching and encouraging the Saints and preaching as for years past. They would almost be lost without him. Then Bro. J. C. Foss, located in Santa Ana, and in charge of the missionary work in Southern California, is laboring very acceptably and looking after the interests of the work, and as yet only partially acquainted with his field; but we will no doubt hear of his accomplishing great good. Our esteemed veteran Bro. N. Vanfleet was ordained an evangelical minister for the Southern California District, which will no doubt be of great benefit to the Saints of that locality, as I think he intends to devote most of his time to the duties of his calling and office in the church.

We had the pleasure of shaking hands with Bro. R. Etzenhouser at Tulare on our way north. He is pushing the work under his charge in the Central and Northern Districts as best he can, and all know him to be one of our energetic workers. And there is Bro. Phillips, missionary and district president, and Bro. J. B. Carmichael missionary, working the tent, endeavoring as best they can to get the truth before the people in the different localities wherever they can get a hearing, and they show a deep interest in the work. Then in Oakland we have our untiring worker, J. M. Terry, located, and all who know him knows that means missions started everywhere he can work up an opening. He is an everlasting worker, and seems to be well liked by all who know him. Bro. Keeler we did not see, but he was out in the field busy as a faithful worker in the Master's cause. Everywhere we hear good reports of him as an energetic worker, pushing the work into new places as best he can. In the midst of the city we have Bishop Parkin, with his counselors Kaighin and Saxe, making their influence felt for good in our line of work, and in all lines as best they can, Bro. Parkin acting as branch president, and always ready to help every one all he can in every way. Old Bro. Haws, of many years faithful service, was at the meetings; Brn. Anthony, Lincoln, Ferris, and others in San Francisco and Oakland, Earle, Green, and others in Los Angeles. Bro. Jones and others in San Bernardino, Bro. Hawkins and others at San Jose, Bro. George Daly and others at Santa Rosa. Bro. Lawn and others at Sacramento, and Bro. Hommes and others at Chico, with a host of sisters in all those places seem to be doing what they can.

In all those places we have a lot of noble workers, and a sprinkle that could do much better than they are doing. If there is any place in the United States where men are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," California is one of those places, yet we have many as good, zealous, noble workers as can be found any where, in our ranks in California. There is room for improvement with many in the church, and much hard work needed to reach those out of the church. Spirituality is not as high as it might be in any branch I visited, but it is to be hoped some improvement will be made all along the line. I am not finding fault, for I believe the majority are doing about the best they can under the circumstances, and some are doing excellent. I trust all may be able to make a good report for the conference year. I hear many good words of commendation for those who have been here in former years, as well as the present force.

We came to Oregon the 15th, are holding services at Looking-glass now, and start, working our way to-morrow for Bandon, Bro. Luff going one way and I another. I pray God to bless his work and all his workers everywhere, and am ever hopefully at work.

G. H. HILLIARD.

Editors Herald: We are still conducting our "information bureau."

August 6, we began a series of special lectures in the Willard Hall, Brantford, Ontario, after having "lithographed" the windows of business houses in the city, also using the press and linen posters, etc. Rains impeded our work in a measure at first, but the crowd increased. Interest very good. The musical feature of the meetings was very helpful, our worthy Bro. J. Arthur Blackmore presiding at the piano with credit. So far two have been added to the church, and several others are very near and will follow soon. We have arranged for regular services in the city, which will aid the few struggling ones. Elder Blackmore is continuing the meetings the remainder of this week, while I am preparing to lithograph and otherwise bill Scotland, a smaller center near by. We are making a special effort to open as many new places as possible.

The good Saints of Waterford have bravely come forward to our assistance, and aided us much, for which we are grateful, indeed.

Scotland is rather an Adventist center, so we are informed, hence souls and sabbaths may be considered at this place. I really would like it much better if the good "defenders" would oppose us more. It is more enjoyable, and we accomplish more.

We note with pleasure the letter of our kinsman, W. A. Goodwin, as published in a recent HERALD, in which he explains methods employed by "Brighamites" to avoid debate. Same old methods, because they are the same old Brighamites. They that love the truth come to the light, but as for these men—well, it's different, evidently.

Canada is a fine field, yet we encounter a set conservatism here that is not known in the States of the Middle West. I am feeling good spiritually, and physically too, of course, only occasionally we sing "Michigan, my Michigan."

E. A. GOODWIN.

HONOLULU, Hawaiian Islands, August 4.

Dear Readers: Believing a number of you are interested in the Hawaiian Mission and our safe arrival to the same, it is with grateful hearts that we write you.

Before entering upon the duties of such an extensive and far-distant mission as ours, we felt it a duty and pleasure to make at least a hurried visit to our not too far distant relatives. Accordingly we said "good-bye" to parents and loved ones in Lamoni and made our way to Shenandoah and Tabor, Iowa. The former of these places was the home of my wife for a number of years previous to her coming to Lamoni, while the latter was her birthplace.

We made short visits among the many relatives in both places. At Shenandoah we tarried with the Saints over Sunday, preaching to them in the morning, and in the afternoon participated in their sacrament service which was certainly a time of refreshing from the Lord. We regretted the fact that we had so little time to spend at these places, but having been announced for the Southern California reunion beginning July 11, we hastened onward, meeting my brother, Oscar, at St. Joseph, Missouri, who accompanied us until we left our Western shore. From here he was a participant in our experiences. We left St. Joseph July 8, and reached Los Angeles the morning of July 11. We spent a few days at the reunion, enjoyed the communion and hospitality of Saints and the beauties of Southern California until the 18th, when we went up the coast line of railway to San Francisco.

A part of our time was spent in Oakland, the rest in Frisco until July 24, our sailing day. We were delayed eight hours by the European mail so our time for sailing was changed from ten o'clock a. m. to six p. m. A number of Saints and friends made the departure more pleasant by coming to the pier to see us off. At ten minutes to seven the ropes were all loosed and we steamed from port. As we waived our fond adieus to the friends on shore we were filled with solemn reflection.

As we passed through Golden Gate the combined rolling and pitching of the vessel was too much for Mrs. A. and me, so we were soon very sea-sick and tucked into our berths.

Bro. Wight is the best sailor of all. He did not feel a symptom of sea-sickness, and even his rheumatism, which had seriously inconvenienced him just previous to our sailing, ceased troubling him almost immediately. I can say nothing of Brn. Hanson, Barmore, and Tucker, for I was not dressed again for three days. Whether they were sea-sick, "physically indisposed," or just "felt a deep sense of resignation," I leave for Bro. Wight to explain.

Mrs. Anderson and I were just able to dress ourselves for the eleven o'clock services Sunday morning. After service we took our first meal in the dining saloon. The latter portion of our voyage was quite enjoyable. However, when at twenty minutes to one Wednesday we landed at Honolulu, we were willing to disembark. We were met at the wharf by the Saints who gave us a pleasing welcome. The "Ventura" remained here for eleven hours, so our brethren for more distant points got to see the choicest sights in and around Honolulu. They were also with us at the evening prayer-service. We were slow to give them the parting hand, but when duty called they went.

We have now spent our first Sunday here and have truly enjoyed the meetings with the Saints. Whether in Sunday-school, Religio, sacrament or preaching service, they are attentive, a commendable characteristic. I spoke last night and shall hope to be of continual use in the Master's cause. All along the way so far the Father has been kind to us and we feel willing to trust him for future needs.

Looking forward for ultimate triumph, I am,
Your brother,
D. A. ANDERSON.

POPLAR GROVE, Illinois, August 19.

Editors Herald: I have been trying to hold services in a schoolhouse here but because of the inclemency of the weather and the indifference of the people, did not have very big crowds. Have also been trying to get the privilege to meet the Utah elders publicly, but when I think I have found them they seem to be somewhere else. The Elgin papers printed quite a fair statement regarding the two churches, and I have one written for the Belvidere papers.

BOWYER, Illinois, August 19.

Editors Herald: We are still in the faith and are working faithfully for the cause, and while we have been meeting considerable opposition, yet it has not been quite so fierce as that which our good brethren have been meeting in Dixie land. No bullets have been fired toward us to mar our peace, yet the clergy have been on the alert trying to counteract our efforts. One minister after facing us in our reply to his misrepresentations of our work got his people to use the lock and key argument and then went in where doors were closed against us to expose Mormonism. As our brethren well know, it is nearly always the case when we go out to present our work in a new place that we meet with considerable opposition and the clergy seem to be very bold for a time until they learn the kind of metal that our weapons are of. In Clark County, where Bro. Paxton and I have been laboring, the ministers have been very bold in their opposition against our work, but their efforts so far have only given us an excellent opportunity to show the people the solidity of our position, and we have had large audiences out to hear us, and friends outside of the church feed us and put the money in our hand to help us on the way. The Campbellites have sent over into Indiana for one of their ministers who has met our elders two or three times in debate to come and meet us. The minister has sent me two propositions involving our church and theirs with a hole in each one to crawl out at. We have sent him two propositions which are fair and I am glad that our ministry do not have to seek the advantage of other ministers in a question in order to defend our position. All we ask is an equal show with them.

We are receiving a little money here and there on the college debt, and I am glad that some of our brethren and sisters do not forget to do their duty in a financial way. All who desire to help pay that debt and thus have it placed on record that they have done something in that regard can hand the money to me or send it to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, and they will be receipted therefor in due time. Some have one excellently well in paying in their tithes and offerings, while others have done nothing in that line. Brethren and sisters remember that you are to choose for yourself as to whether you will or will not keep the law. The law itself teaches us that it is better to make that wise and better choice. I have no complaint whatever, to offer against any, but I wish to extend my kind regards to all who have so nobly and kindly assisted me in the work with their prayers and financial aid. Our next quarterly conference will be held at Zenith, October 4 and 5. The reunion will begin the 6th, and last until the 13th. Brethren I. N. White and E. L. Kelley will be with us and Bro. Joseph Smith is talking of coming if he can so arrange. We shall know as to that later. We ask the prayers of all and we close by asking the Lord to bless all his children in return.

F. M. SLOVER.

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., August 24.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the HERALD, and see a letter from Bro. E. L. Kelley, about every family should either take the HERALD or the Ensign. That is so, and they only cost $2.50 per year. If any one will pay that for them and then ask God to bless the effort, they won't miss it, nor tithings either, according to God's word.

Now, how many who belong to the church use coffee and tea and tobacco? These things are not good for the Saints to use. The reason that I speak thus is because I have used them and found they impaired my health, and I have not used them now for nearly three years and my health is very much improved. Well, one will say, I can not do without them. Neither could I until I tried with all my might and then failed, but I did not stop trying and asking God to help me. Now, I know some will say, I can not. Do not let your faith run that way. We should not expect to receive blessings if we do not keep God's commandments. The Word of Wisdom says, "We shall receive wisdom and strength and that the destroying angel shall pass by."

We find that after we are baptized we must go on in faith or the Devil will lead us away. There are two things that a great many fail to do. One is to attend church. That is a command and a positive one. And the next is: If any brother trespass against you, go to him alone; and if he confess, thou shalt be reconciled. There are many times that that is not done, but instead we go to some one else, and that is just opposite to the command. Let us all try and do as the Lord says. My whole desire is to do the law.

F. T. DOBIE.

POINT CLEAR, Alabama, August 15.

Editors Herald: Some time ago I wrote to the HERALD stating that Reverend A. J. Rhodes was holding meeting here and was not pleasing the people. Elders W. L. and W. J. Booker, also Elder Jesse Reeder, seeing my letter came down. They tried to get the schoolhouse to preach in and were given permission, but a few hours before meeting time the one having the schoolhouse in charge decided not to let them preach there on account of Reverend Rhodes not being there, so a man living near by asked them to come over and preach at his house. They did so, and the one refusing them the schoolhouse went over to hear them, it being a lady. She was pleased so well with the preaching she kept moving her chair closer, and after church she had a long talk with the elders concerning the church and its rules, and said she had been deceived by the people.

While church was going on that night some young men stayed outside and took Bro. W. J. Booker's horse and buggy and drove it off, taking the horse out and running the thills in the ground, also stole Bro. Reeder's umbrella. But right in the midst of all this persecution Bro. W. L. Booker baptized eight the next evening at three o'clock, the writer being one. Therefore I am inclined to think that my first letter to the HERALD was of some good in helping the great cause to go onward with a stronger force. I am only too thankful to know that I have been of some good in regard to the cause, and hope that I can be of better use later on.

This place used to be called Cavanas, but the post-office was moved to Point Clear, so it is called Point Clear. We enjoy the cool, gentle sea breeze, also plenty of fish. I wish that the Saints who live far out in the woods, who never see a fish nor feel the cool, gentle sea breeze, could enjoy such a blessing. But we are to move from this place soon to what is called Back Bay Biloxi, but will still be near the water, as this place is situated on the Mississippi coast. If it is so I can after I get there, sister and myself will try to attend conference at Escatawpa, Mississippi, to be held September 7, hoping to meet many Saints whom we never saw before.

I ask the prayers of the dear Saints that I may be ever faithful till the end. May the Lord bless the Saints everywhere, is my prayer.
JAMES E. ENTROKIN.

EUCLID, Arkansas, August 19.

Editors Herald: The conference and reunion at this place is now a thing of the past, but to be long remembered by the Saints. Nine of the missionaries were present; namely, H. O. Smith, W. S. Macrae, E. A. Erwin, E. L. Henson, Peter Adamson, H. R. Harder, G. F. Grimes, J. A. Phillips, and J. W. Jackson. A. L. Newton, Bishop Short's counselor, was also present. A good attendance was had throughout the reunion. The preaching was from good to excellent. The law of tithing was presented at different times during the meetings.

The Sunday-school work is looking up in this district. Nine were baptized.

H. O. Smith gave us four lectures from his chart, on Book of Mormon, which were good. The district tent was dedicated by H. O. Smith. All things considered our reunion was a grand success. We need more of them in the South.

J. W. JACKSON.

BERRYDALE, Florida, August 4.

Editors Herald: Bro. I. N. Roberts has been holding a series of meetings at the Coldwater Branch and also at the old Santa Rosa Branch. There were fourteen baptized at Coldwater and seven at Santa Rosa. The good he accomplished eternity alone will tell. He baptized some nice young people and some good citizens. Bro. I. N. is a hard worker in the Master's cause. He is loved and respected by both Saints and outsiders.

He will be with us again the fourth Sunday in this month, and if he could stay for some time in these parts he would do a grand work here. The people of the South need such a man in every State at least, and perhaps they could inspire them to put forth an effort to do something. Bro. S. D. Allen was with Bro. Roberts and assisted him.

Hoping and praying that the seed that has been sown may bring forth a rich harvest, I remain,

Your sister,

LORENA D. MCARTHUR.

LUCAS, Iowa, August 9.

Dear Herald: I feel this evening that I should write a letter to the HERALD. I wrote a letter to the Old Country to-day, and it made me feel good as the thought came to me, Why not write to the HERALD? I do not receive the HERALD myself, but there are two brethren here that let me have theirs, so I see one or the other every week, and oh, the good letters make me say, "I am so thankful for the privilege of being a Latter Day Saint." I have received many strong testimonies which have made my faith strong and firm.

We had the pleasure of having Bro. Weld preach for us the last week of July. He spoke about consecration, and spoke well in an earnest desire to make the people understand him. I was sorry to see such a few coming out to hear him. My desire is that we as a branch may have more strength from on high to overcome the trials and disappointments, and that we may realize when we are in trouble that we are a tried people. We can not expect to receive good spiritual blessings without having any troubles at all. So, dear Saints, let us prepare ourselves when it is well with us. Let us strive to be prayerful, desiring always to have the good spirit to be with us, and then we are safe. We will have patience to be meek and gentle. We will not offend for little things, because our hearts will feel love toward all Saints; yes, and toward all mankind.

Bro. Joseph Smith also preached for us on Monday evening, the 4th of this month. I felt the sweet influence of peace. He brought things right before me that I could, indeed, say amen to, for I had had experience in that which was said. He made me say, "Why need I be discouraged when my heavenly Father is able to assist me to overcome all influences and all troubles, if we will only trust in him?" I know he cares for his children when they are in need.

We have been in this country four years, and my husband has been sick for nearly two years. Since we came here he was administered to, but was no better. He was administered to three or four times, but there was no great change until we had a conference here two years ago last June, when he was again administered to, and how the good Lord blessed him. He had five or six big holes in his right leg and they closed so nicely, and his cough left, and he regained his former strength, and is working right along. We often remember the good blessing received, and I feel to praise God from whom all blessings flow.

We have a large family of seven children. Three of our children are baptized. I try to show them good example, and teach them to pray, and not do things so that the world can say we are no better than other churches. Of course they are young yet. I do not know how they will turn out, but my prayer and desire is that I shall be able to do my part and leave the rest in the hands of God, and I believe that all will be well. While my husband was sick the Lord raised up friends for us. We had plenty of food, fuel, and even clothes that the good Saints would bring to us, and their kind deeds will be always remembered by us, and I know they will be rewarded for their good works. I just mention this because it may help some poor discouraged Saints to put their trust in God, and it may help them to renew their courage and faith.

I want to bear my testimony wherever I can have the opportunity to express the goodness of my heavenly Father, as he has blessed us, both temporally and spiritually. Pray for us that we may have strength to live faithful to the end, and we will pray for all of God's people, and for the advancement of God's work and the welfare of Zion.

Your sister,

MRS. MARGARET THOMAS.

PENSACOLA, Florida, August 17.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith and doing all I can for the glorious work of God. I have lived in this place about six months and have at last succeeded in getting my father, Elder Ed. Powel, of Milton, Florida, to hold a series of meetings here. We rented a hall two weeks ago and have held two meetings a day since that time. Well may the "heathen rage" and the people "imagine vain things" when the gospel is placed before them. Truly the gospel is the salvation of every one who believes it. This is the first time the gospel has ever been preached in this city, and of course we have a great deal to contend with, but are still holding the fort. Yesterday one sister was "buried with Christ in baptism and raised to walk in newness of life," and others are to follow soon.

My father will be called to Milton in a few days, and if any of the ministers see this and come to our assistance their services will be thankfully received. Our hall is No. 228 East Chase Street.

Your sister in the one faith,

DELILAH KELLEY.

AURELIA, Iowa, August 11.

Editors Herald: Elder J. M. Baker and wife, C. J. Hunt, and myself came here on last Tuesday, and began meetings in our district tent. Bro. Baker left on Friday to attend the Sunday-school convention at Mallard, and also the two-day grove meeting to be held at the same place. The convention to be held the 9th and 10th, and the grove meeting to last over the 17th.

Bro. Hunt is to be with us during this week, after which he will go to other parts, Bro. Baker and myself to continue the meetings here. The attendance has been real good; in fact, quite encouraging. Sr. Baker renders valuable service to the meetings in music and song. Her singing has been commended by some of the good people of this place. I find music and singing to be a great factor for good in tent work. Bro. Baker carries a double and almost triple responsibility in church work, and his estimable wife sacrifices the pleasure of being at home in their neat little cottage in Dow City, yet in all their work they are joyful, and speak inspiringly of their bright hope, knowing, of course, that for each and every sacrifice made they are working out for themselves an immeasurable weight of glory in that day.

Bro. Hunt has given us two splendid discourses along the old Jerusalem gospel line, and so I find him an all round missionary. When among the Saints, he spurs them up along financial and general duties. While among those of the world he is at home on gospel themes. Oh! would to God we had more of just such men, who seem to be ready to meet any emergency.

I find this a very pleasant field. Both the missionary and local force are men of integrity, as a general thing. The work seems to be moving along nicely, and I believe is getting a more firm and deeply-rooted hold, both in a general and a local sense.

I am not unmindful of the kindness of the Saints in supplying the needs of the missionary, both at the conference which was held at Auburn, Sac County, and at the two-day meeting at Galland's Grove. There was a good representation of the Saints present. One thing I noticed, which is a feature of encouragement, is the number of talented young Latter Day Saints who are trying by precept and example to let the world know concerning the marvelous work. And then there is a feature commendable in the older Saints here, and that is to give the young all the encouragement they can in their work.

I will speak of one thing that seems to be gaining ground among the Saints, that certainly is not of God, and that is alliance with secret order systems. James, the apostle, says, "Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." Or, in other words, we can not serve the world and God at the same time. Secret order systems, like sectarian churches, have been created for gain in both a financial and popular sense. In almost every case where the Saints have attached themselves to such orders and have supported the same by their means and presence, according to the rules of the orders, spiritual death has been the outcome according to my knowledge of facts. I have in mind a place, not far distant in this State, where at one time existed quite a branch. In later years the majority of the men of the branch became attached to secret orders, and what was the result? Spiritual death. The truth is, since the presiding officer was a member of the same order to which most of the branch belonged, when iniquity cropped out, he neither proceeded against the member offending, nor allowed others to, and so it happened when the presiding officer died the branch collapsed, and to-day exists in name only.

I hope the Saints will learn and think upon the great truth, that in Zion Christ will recognize but one great order, and that is his own dear church.

On my way out to this field over a week ago, I stopped a few days in Butler County, Iowa, and baptized a young man by the name of Fred Farr. He is a promising young man indeed, and

I believe will be useful in the church. His grandmother, old Sr. Hurd, is an old time Saint, a relative of Jared Carter, one of the first elders of the church.

Bro. Hunt and I are at present stopping with Bro. Pomroy of this place. They are making us feel at home.

J. R. SUTTON.

ALBION, Idaho, August 24.

Editors Herald: Lest you carry the impression by my silence that I have sat down by the wayside, I will say I think not. Our HERALD comes each week filled mostly with excellent food for the anxious or hungering minds. It seems that the force of missionaries in the field should rather have prior rights to your columns, but as all, old or young, should have a goodly interest in the cause you represent, and as I have not intruded upon your pages, or the patience of the Saints for some time, I offer these lines. I often think of the dear Saints with whom I sojourned in various parts of this as well as other States. Home matters seemed to require my time at present, but for this I would not be here. Wherever we are, all Saints are expected to uphold the prestige of the one we have listed to obey. Home practice is really the firing line of the church as missionaries learn. To so keep the faith in wisdom and honor before all men that we will appear consistent with fair-minded people should be our constant study, doing all things in honor to the Lord. Looking backward I can see some mistakes which the wisdom "which is pure and peaceful, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy" did not inspire.

I do not know whether it was from a long range gun or not which Elder A. E. Hatch fired into Lamoni as noted in HERALD for August 13; such shots wake up the whole line of battle, or should do so. Boast not of faith or mighty works is enjoined upon Saints, but though we live ever so consistent, and moderate before men, the critic will find what to him seems a weak point and train his blunderbuss at it.

Well, I have thought home-workers are needed fully as much as general missionaries, and thinking over the needs of my own section I have thought if there was a woman, or man and wife in the church who could be spared from their section of the country who could and would help build up Sunday-school work, who could combine vocal and instrumental music I would like to correspond with them. I believe the Sunday-school can be made a most potent factor to rear up children to the Lord, and make good church workers. I would not object aiding financially and otherwise to a good Sunday-school worker here, so a good part of her or his time could be given to church work here. In Lamoni and Independence are more workers than are needed, and missionary work covers more with this controversy for the redemption of Zion than the general missionary can reach, as his main work is termed "preaching the gospel." The gospel economy comprehends Sunday-school work as much as anything else. Workers in either department should be doers as well as oral teachers. The days are surely coming when those who do not show proper regard for the Word of Wisdom will not be commended as consistent teachers of gospel ethics. I believe the Mormon people here contend more zealously for it than our people, in many places especially, as to tobacco, tea, and coffee. If Saints can not overcome these things, are they not less than the least of all who can be called Saints? Here we have the best of water, as good milk as grass produces, as good fruit and vegetables as grows, as far as I know.

This has been a very busy season for me. One feature of my work has been to clean up my orchard of the codling-moth. I had come to the conclusion they were very much like the bugs which trouble people while trying to sleep. The woman who sets her heart to be free from them, does so. So with the apple-worm. If the orchard is kept in proper order the pest can do but little harm. Nothing that lives can survive the watchful eye and ready hands to destroy. The birds help, and spiders help, as also other agencies inimical to their increase. All combine with us to rid ourselves of so troublesome a pest. God helps those who help themselves. I can not see much consistency in preaching salvation to others while my own premises cry out against me from neglect. I have heard that cleanliness was akin to godliness, but I think it is a part of it, as the salvation of the body, and a quiet, peaceful conscience by observing to do what is pleasing to the Lord, without being commanded.

We have had a very cool summer here this year, yet crops are very fair so far as I have heard. I have read with much pleasure of the success of the work in other places and thought how nice it would be to have a good and growing Sunday-school and branch of church workers here.

But by and by, everything comes to those who work, watch, and wait.

Yours for Zion's weal,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

FULTON, Kentucky, August 27.

Editors Herald: Having seen nothing from these parts for some time, and being reminded by Bro. Hansen that the elders should occasionally give an account of themselves, I will now endeavor to do so.

This is my first mission by appointment or otherwise, having been ordained last October by Elder I. N. Roberts. Have been doing what I could for the cause since that time. I have been traveling with D. W. Cook, as we were appointed to labor together. We labored mostly among the branches until July when we went south. Have labored at Alberta, Wildersville, and Lexington, Tennessee, and various other places around Lexington. Interest generally good and meetings well attended. Baptized a fine couple, a man and his wife, the latter was formerly a member of the Christian Church.

Crops are better here than for years, cotton, the main staple, is very fine in this section, Henderson County. After the baptizing Bro. Cook and I separated, he going farther south while I returned to Fulton to order the district tent and arrange for the reunion which is set for October 4, at this place. After ordering the tent and getting out bills advertising the reunion, by the request of my sister, who lives one mile south of here, I went over and preached one night to quite an interested crowd. From there I went to Ridgway Schoolhouse, a place where none of our preachers had ever been. One of the trustees said he had no objections to me using the schoolhouse so long as I did not preach anything "outrageous;" said he would like to hear me so that he could judge for himself, as he had heard a great many damaging things about us, if true. I then told him that was the kind of people we liked to meet, those who wanted to hear the evidence on both sides before judging. I also gave him the privilege of calling me down any time he found me preaching anything but the Bible. I preached two nights to a crowded house; had good liberty. I don't suppose I preached anything "outrageous" as I was not interrupted once. I gave opportunity several times during my discourses for questions to be asked or answered. Some expressed themselves as being well pleased, others said they were surprised at our preaching as it was nothing but the Bible. I think we will be a little better understood in the future with these people.

Went from here to Knobcreek, but failing to secure the Christian church, being informed that any other denomination except the "Mormons" could use their house, I was reminded of the old adage that "birds of a feather will flock together." However, we were not to be defeated, for one of the members of this so-called Christian Church, a cousin of mine, not being pleased with their refusal, said, "Cousin Bob, you can preach at my house," which was almost in sight of the church. So we preached at her house two nights to large crowds, the house would not hold them so we preached in the yard. Mr. Austin, the proprietor of the famous Austin Springs, came to me and invited me to come over to the Springs and preach some. Another man said I was welcome to preach at his house. Friends were made to the cause on every hand, so we see again "the wrath of men is made to praise him." From here we went to Oakland where we buried two more precious souls in baptism, so the good work goes on. Will commence meetings next Sunday at Bellecity. The Saints there are going to build an arbor. Have more calls for preaching than I can at present fill, but will do the best I can until Bro. Cook returns from the south. There is great expectation over our coming reunion from the fact that President Joseph Smith is billed to be with us. It is now going the rounds of the press and is the talk everywhere. We are expecting large crowds, and would like to see as many of the Saints present as possible. This is comparatively a new place and we hope that much good will be accomplished. If those who may desire to come by rail will notify the writer or W. L. McClain, Fulton, Kentucky, they will be met at the station and conveyed to the reunion grounds. As it was voted for the reunion to be self-sustaining, will say to those who are not able or live too far away to come self-sustaining, that they will be cared for, also the missionaries. We want all the missionaries present that can possibly come, and more especially the missionary in charge. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Yours in bonds,

J. R. McCLAIN.

HAMILTON, Montana, August 26.

Editors Saints' Herald: Bro. W. H. Kelley and I began meetings August 2 at the Fairview schoolhouse, with a good hearing, and continued until the 5th when we opened up in the "gospel tent" near Woodside and continued there up to the evening of the 18th. Preaching in all twenty-one sermons. Bro. E. E. Williams, of Aldridge, preaching one. The services were fairly attended, especially on Saturday and Sunday when the crowds were large. The preaching was good, and we think no one could reasonably say that the doctrine of the Reorganized Church was not clearly defined and maintained. The very best of liberty was enjoyed by the speakers, and the Saints revived and strengthened in the faith. There are a few of the Seventh-day Advents in this section of country, so, on Sunday the 17th, I preached on the Sabbath question to a good crowd. If there was anything of the seventh-day hobby left, I guess some of them are still hunting for it. We were informed that most of the afternoon was spent in discussing the question. Some said, "Well, if that is so, we have no Sabbath." Then we were asked to preach a sermon on what day to keep, so we did on Monday night and from the crowd present, we think they must have been interested.

We then moved the tent to Hamilton, about seven miles south, Bro. William H. Kelley preaching the first sermon. Then he and his daughter Belle had to leave us, going to Deer Lodge and Utah. This we very much regretted. It is very hard for one man to hold tent services alone, preaching every night, but the Lord has been with us in Spirit and I have been wonderfully blessed. Good crowds every night. One Methodist man came to me at the close of my meeting last night with tears in his eyes, and said he had been to hear me every evening but one, and if ever the truth was preached, I had preached it. On Sunday evening a man came to me and said, "I've been preaching (or trying to) for almost thirty years, and I want to say to you that all the Theologians in the world can not down that sermon." My text was John 15:5, "I am the vine, ye are the branches."

Hamilton is a town of about fifteen hundred, with a beautiful rich valley around it. One sawmill here that cuts one hundred fifty thousand feet of lumber per day. I can stand upon the mill-dam and see hundreds of fish, some of them almost a foot long.

On Sunday the 24th, the Saints had a sacrament and business meeting and the Lord truly blessed them. Bro. J. F. Jemison, their former branch president, had moved about eighty miles away, and the Saints thought best to choose some one else to preside. There being no elder left in the branch, they chose Priest Neil C. Whitney to preside, and Ed Burrows was ordained to the office of priest and chosen as an assistant, and Norman Newell was ordained to the office of teacher. May the Lord bless both officers and members that the Victor Branch may be an example to others of Montana.

Yesterday I baptized Mrs. Racy May, wife of Philip Jemison, also baptized Wallace J. Miller, an unmarried man of about twenty-nine years. Others have said they were ready for the water, but for some reason have not come. On Sunday I and Bro. Jemison blessed Bro. and Sr. John Johnson's baby boy, naming him John Delbert. I am kindly provided for at the home of Mr. and Sr. Nelson Johnson. I expect to continue services here in the tent up to Sunday evening, August 31, making about thirteen or fourteen sermons. What will the harvest be? I go from here to Deer Lodge and on to Salt Lake City to attend the reunion of September 5, afterwards returning to Montana, visiting Greatfalls and Sandcoulee, where they are wanting preaching.

My address is Bozeman, Montana, in care of J. H. Wells.

Wishing all the readers of the HERALD, and my collaborators in the ministry success in this latter-day work, I am,

Your brother in Christ,
D. C. WHITE.

OAKHARBOR, Ohio, August 27.

Editors Herald: It is a pleasure for me to let you know that Bro. James E. Kelley, Temple, Ohio, has been preaching at Nina, the hall six and one half miles northeast of here, for over a week, and arrangements have been made for him at Locust-point Grove on Lake Erie, about four miles from where he is now. He commences at the Lake Point, August 28, continues the 29th, and Sunday the 31st, three times. We hope good results will be the outcome. The Lake location is a place of resort. He has been having fair audiences and the people speak very highly of Bro. Kelley out at Nina. We expect to have him speak for us in Oakharbor in a week or two. Will then write again.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOHN W. MOXON.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, August 30.

Editors Herald: We just closed our meetings at St. Joseph, Missouri. Had just a fair attendance. Would have had a better turnout but the Elks and Woodman baseball and the excitement down at the lake. In fact the people seemed to be carried away with the pleasures of the world. One evening there was said to be fifty thousand people on the streets to see the floral parade. This was a big week for St. Joseph. So you see the gospel would have a very slim show in such an excited place. I was assisted by Brn. Guinand, Shaw, Garlich, Bacus, and Duncan. We are making arrangements for a reunion, and think we will have a large attendance if everything is favorable.

B. J. DICE.

Autumn Leaves for September is a splendid number. The first number is a short poem by Elbert A. Smith, "Jesus in the Temple," illustrated by a fine half-tone. This is followed by "A Romance of Valley Forge," by Eleanor W. Kearney. "Questioning," by A. J. Keek, is a poem of much feeling. "Leaves from a Diary," by Elbert A. Smith, is illustrated by views from his own camera. "A Month in New York," is continued, while Fannie I. Morrison writes under the head, "Which Way?" "Around the World," "Hours with Authors," and the usual departments of Religio's Arena, Editor's Corner, and Daughters of Zion make the number replete with good things. Saints should read Autumn Leaves.

The function of education is to prepare us for complete living.—Spencer.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of the Northeastern Kansas District will be held in the beautiful Riverside Park, at Blue Rapids, Kansas, commencing Saturday, September 13, and continuing to and including Sunday, September 21. Bishop E. L. Kelley, Apostle I. N. White, District President S. J. Madden, and the missionaries of the district are expected to be present. The Blue Rapids Saints will exert themselves to make it as pleasant and profitable as possible to all who come. The committee trusts that a large number of Saints and friends will bring their camping outfits with them and will come with the Spirit of God and make this reunion as it were the gateway of heaven.

The prospect is good for a successful reunion from September 5 to 14. Several of our leading elders will be present to assist. The committee is at work for the comfort of those who may attend. The secretary has received many inquiries in regard to this, the tenth annual gathering of Saints and friends. Crops are splendid in this vicinity this year. Let's take a ten-day rest and meet with the children of God. Those coming by rail do not forget to take a certificate at the time of purchasing ticket so that all may receive the benefit of the reduced rate promised by the railroad company. Please see back number of HERALD and Ensign in notice of this reunion in regard to "reduced rates" over the several railroads. By request Children's Day has been changed to Saturday, September 13, for the accommodation of many children who will be in school. Remember this notable gathering will be held at Stewartville, twenty-one miles east of the city of St. Joseph, on the Hannibal & St. Joe Railroad.

The Kentucky and Tennessee District will hold its fourth annual reunion two miles east of Fulton, Kentucky, near Boaz's Chapel, beginning October 4, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continue over two Sundays. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

The inaugural meeting of the Seventh Quorum of Elders took place on Monday, August 4, 1902, at Priestly Road, Birmingham (mission conference), at 8 a. m. to 9.45 a. m.; Henry Greenwood, president, in the chair. Over thirty elders were present at roll-call.

The president heartily welcomed the elders present, and gave timely instructions. He noted that since the formation of the quorum one (Bro. C. H. Caton) had been ordained high priest, and two (Brn. W. H. Greenwood and William Ecclestone) had entered the missionary field. The following was resolved: 1. That we each keep a record of work from January 1 to December 31 of each year, after which report at once to the secretary of the quorum, who can then report fully to the General Conference ensuing. 2. That the order (1901) by the president to pay one shilling each, subscription for 1901-2, be confirmed. 3. That the question of any further levy be left to the president and secretary. 4. That the presidency and secretary form a committee and consult with the missionary in charge to draw rules which shall govern the quorum.

At this meeting the following communication was given by the Spirit: "I am pleased with your proceedings this day. I exhort you to continual prayer; and those who fear in their labor and calling, I exhort to cast away fear, for my Spirit shall strengthen and bless you. The Spirit of the Lord also promises to quicken your understanding, unto the dispersion of darkness; not only this, but I will open the spiritual eyes and ears of the honest in heart; for I am your Lord, your help and strength. Therefore, you shall marvel at the fruit of your labors." Thus the exhortation of the Spirit to the quorum of elders assembled. Signed by E. A. Webb, Birmingham.

Please take notice that all information in connection with the quorum, will appear in the HERALD. Will those who have not forwarded their subscription (1901-2) kindly communicate as early as possible with the secretary, S. F. Mather, 15 February Street, C. on M., Manchester.

Autumn Leaves.

We desire to call your attention to Autumn Leaves as a magazine that should be in the home of every member of the church. We have lately secured the services of Elbert A. Smith, a young man with splendid literary talent, as assistant editor, and he will devote his entire time to this work. We have commenced to illustrate our articles which adds materially to the expense of the magazine, but we believe that it adds sufficiently to the value to justify the expense. If the patronage will justify it, we expect, with the January number, to commence the use of the best book paper in the publication of the Leaves.

The magazine has no more than paid expenses in the past, and we are making these improvements and adding this expense on the strength of our faith in the Saints that they will sustain us with their subscriptions.

While we have desired that our missionaries should have the magazine we have not been able to send it to them free because our subscription list was so small that we could not afford it. In order that they may receive Autumn Leaves free we have decided to send it to any conference appointee who will send us five new subscribers for one year, cash with order. This offer affords an excellent opportunity for members in branches to send their subscriptions together and thus favor the faithful missionary by presenting his family the Autumn Leaves free.

Articles are in preparation, by some of our ablest writers, on different parts of the world which will be illustrated by pictures of some of the most interesting features. Send us your subscription now and receive some good reading for your family. The price of subscription is $1.00 per year, payable in advance.

F. B. BLAIR, For the Management.

Pictures.

We have steel engravings, 12x15, of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the martyrs, Emma Smith, the present Joseph Smith, and W. W. Blair. Price each, 15 cents, two for 25 cents.

The important announcement is made in the Arena for September that the following distinguished writers and thinkers have consented to serve on that magazine as a board of associates or contributing editors: The Reverend R. Heber Newton, D.D., Edwin Markham, Professor Frank Parsons, Eltweed Pomeroy, A. M., Professor John Ward Stimson, George McA. Miller, Ph.D., Ernest Crosby, Bolton Hall, Ralph Waldo Trine, George F. Washburn, the Reverend Robert E. Bisbee, F. Edwin Elwell, and Professor Thomas E. Will, A. M. This is a new departure in periodical literature, and should result in adding to the Arena's standing in the intellectual world. Two members of the new "board" are among the contributors to this issue—President Miller, who discusses "The School in the Promotion of Progress," and Professor Stimson, who has a "conversation" on "Art for America." Other articles are: "Newspaper Criticisms of Public Men," by Duane Mowry, LL.B.; "Our Duty in the Danish West Indies," by Hrofi Wisby; "The Philosophy of Genius," by Professor Merwin-Marie Snell; "The Mask of Charity," by Joseph Dana Miller; "Humanity's Part in the Labor Problem," by George F. Spinnery; "The Criminal Classes," by Adelle W. Wright; "Extreme Utilitarianism," by W. H. Dilworth; "The Great Conjunction," an astrological story by Florence Peltier Perry. The editorial departments are excellent, as usual—B. O. Flower's article on "The Cry of the Children" being especially fine. (25 cents a copy, or $2.50 a year. The Alliance Publishing Company, Fifth Avenue, New York.)

No archæological material of greater value and more importance was ever brought to America than that of the library of clay tablets which recently arrived at the University of Pennsylvania. Ever since the discovery of Ashurbanapal's library at Nineveh, more than twenty-five years ago, scholars have known that Babylonia once contained many libraries, for in these the copies for the Assyrian library were made. Twelve years ago Professor Hilprecht, as he rode over the mounds at Nippur, pointed out the place which in his judgement should contain the temple library. On the recent campaign the same large group of mounds south of the temple, and in close proximity to it, proved to contain the temple library of Nippur. About twenty-five feet beneath the surface was found a series of rooms, from which were taken over sixteen thousand uniform tablets. Only one twentieth part of the library has thus far been excavated. Professor Hilprecht estimates that the library will yield, when completely excavated, at least one hundred and fifty thousand tablets. The very great importance attached to this discovery is that every tablet belongs to the period prior to Abraham, for the library had collapsed under the ruthless acts of the invading Elamite hordes, 2285 B. C., which was shortly before, or about the time, the patriarch left Ur for the Chaldees. Considering what slight records we formerly possessed of the period prior to Abraham—only a few chapters in Genesis—and that here is a library of many thousand volumes belonging to that early period, we can, in a measure at least, begin to realize the importance of this find.—September Woman's Home Companion.

The best answer that can be given to the question, "Why should the girl go to college?" is the college girl herself as she goes forth equipped in body, mind and soul for her life work. Indeed, to those who know her best no other answer seems necessary. But until she and Time shall have convinced the questioners, another answer—the most obvious one, perhaps—is to be found in the declared purpose of the college; that is the intellectual. In a broad sense it comprehends not only that which disciplines and enlightens the understanding, but also whatever corrects the temper, cultivates the taste and forms the manners and habits. What girl able to secure it will not be the stronger, nobler woman for the development and training afforded by the many-sided life of the woman's college of to-day? Surely not she who has her own way to make in the world. Whatever the difficulties and problems of her field of labor, she will meet them with the power and confidence she has gained by meeting similar ones in the college world. She has served an apprenticeship to the business of life—has come to know others and, more important still, to know herself.—September Woman's Home Companion.

Autumn Leaves for September. Contents: "Jesus in the Temple" (Poem), Elbert A. Smith; "A Romance of Valley Forge," by Eleanor Waldorf Kearney; "Questioning" (Poem), by Adam J. Keck; "Leaves from a Diary," by Elbert A. Smith; "A Month in New York," by Florence Burgess; "Which Way?" by Fannie I. Morrison; "Around the World," by Leon Gould; "Hours with Authors" (Review of a story by Chief Pokagon), M. Walker; "Editor's Corner;" "Daughters of Zion;" "The Religio's Arena." Illustrations: Frontispiece, "Jesus in Temple with Doctors;" "Garden of the Gods;" "Balanced Rock;" "Cliff House;" "Which Way?"

Railroads are gradually broadening the scope of their works and their methods. There comes regularly to our desk an excellent little magazine published monthly by the New York Central Railroad, called the Four Track News. Although published by a railroad, one from its contents would scarcely know it. The contents are purely literary, and usually very interesting. Of course one of the features of the publication is to extol the merits of the country through which passes the New York Central Road, one of our most progressive and up-to-date railways. The Four Track News is a magazine of travel.

One of the most superbly illustrated journals which comes to our desk is Country Life in America, from the presses of Doubleday, Page and Co., of New York. Printed on heavily callendared paper, its excellent half-tones seem almost to be windows through which one is looking at the scenery itself instead of pictures. The September number, replete with good things accompanying the fine illustrations, has reached us, and is par excellence. Those interested in a broader country life in America should see this excellent journal regularly.

GRACELAND COLLEGE FOR 1902-3.

As noted in last HERALD, the associate editor, who is also a member of the college board of trustees, was in Chicago last week on business connected with Graceland. The object of his visit was to secure a man for the college, a man with whom the board had had some previous correspondence. The man secured is C. O. Taylor, of Milwaukee, who has been doing undergraduate and post graduate work at the University of Chicago for a number of years. He comes to Graceland highly recommended by the authorities of the university of which he is a graduate, and Graceland is fortunate in securing the services of so well qualified a man. We welcome Mr. Taylor to our town and school, and bespeak for him the hearty coöperation of all interested and concerned in the development of Graceland College.

The prospects for Graceland seem much brighter at present than for some time past, and if the Saints will second the efforts the members of the board are making for the advancement of the school, we are confident that soon we shall have a college of which we all may well be proud. Young Saints who are anticipating attending college away from home this year should seriously consider attending our own school. Graceland is prepared to give our young people a first class education, and by an increased attendance the influence of the school will be broadened.

Ernest R. Dewsnup has accepted the presidency of the college, and though he will not take active charge of the school until 1903, he will direct the affairs of the school as he can from abroad. Next year, however, he will come to the college to assume full control of the school. In the meantime we are fortunate in having Mr. Taylor to take charge of the educational work of that institution until Professor Dewsnup comes, and we are sure that those who take work with Mr. Taylor will find him eminently qualified as a college man. He has an excellent record at the University of Chicago, and we fully expect that as an instructor and professor in Graceland he will continue his good record.

There seems to be an awakening on the part of the Saints as concerns Graceland. The secretary is receiving more letters of inquiry than before, and the prospects are that the attendance will be considerably better than last year.

Allen 1-10-03

Competent instructors have been secured for the collegiate department, the business department, the shorthand and typewriting department, and in both the schools of elocution and music. So the school is prepared to take care of students in all these departments, as well as in the preparatory and normal departments.

We have anxiously looked forward to the time when Graceland would begin to move into the place she should occupy, and we trust that she is now about to begin a rapid forward march. We can not but think that all who studiously consider the question will clearly see that Graceland has a distinctive mission work to perform, one that she has not as yet fully entered upon. We certainly hope that the time is soon here when she may. When the Saints do their part in supporting the school, then the school will be prepared to do its part in this great work.

The school year begins September 15, and those anticipating attending should be here at the opening of the term so as to begin work when the classes are organized. Saints, see that your children attend Graceland.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT INJURED.

This country came near being called upon again to mourn the loss of a president. On September 3 President Roosevelt met with an accident which might have cost him his life. The accident occurred while he was being driven by carriage from Pittsfield, Massachusetts, to Lenox. In the carriage with him were Governor Crane, of Massachusetts, Secretary Cortelyou, Governor Crane's secretary, secret service agent William Craig, and the driver, D. J. Pratt. As the driver was attempting to cross some street-car tracks the carriage was struck by a swiftly moving electric car and demolished. President Roosevelt was thrown nearly forty feet, striking on his head and shoulders, badly bruising his face. He arose at once, however, and went to see how the rest of the party had fared. He found that Governor Crane had escaped unhurt, Cortelyou was badly bruised, the driver almost fatally hurt, and William Craig instantly killed. Craig had been thrown directly under the wheels of the car, and his life crushed out instantly.

President Roosevelt exhibited his usual bravery and tact. While the country grieves that so excellent a servant as was Craig should thus have his life blotted out, yet it breathes a sigh of relief and thankfulness that we are not again called upon to mourn the loss of our Chief Executive. President Roosevelt is to be congratulated upon his fortunate escape, for when one reads of the accident, and knows how severe must have been the shock which demolished the carriage and killed one of the horses, one marvels that any of the party escaped at all.

We rejoice that our President was spared.

MONT PELEE AGAIN IN ERUPTION.

Not satisfied with the terrible number of lives it destroyed in May, Mont Pelee has again claimed more victims. On August 30 it again broke forth in violent eruption, overwhelming Morne Rouge, totally destroying the town. Le Carabet, a village on the coast, near the territory which was previously destroyed, was swept by a tidal wave, and almost completely destroyed.

Nearly a thousand lives, it has been estimated, have been blotted out by this last wrathful outbreak of the troubled mountain. The recent eruption must have been more terrible in its violence than the first, as the territory devastated by the first has been widened by the last. Morne Rouge escaped the first great outbreak, only to fall victim to the last one. Surely Mont Pelee's thirst for blood is insatiable.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

On August 27 Bro. Rushton wrote from Hamilton, Scotland: "I am pleased to say we are all well in this part of the vineyard. We are having lots of opposition in Glasgow and here. Opposition of an ignorant fanatical character, which is all the more difficult to combat, for the opponents are insusceptible either to logic or evidence. The larger part if not all the difficulty is from the sect known as Plymouth Brethren. A pharasaical set, whom the late Professor Drummond, so usually charitable, designated 'Spiritual Parasites.' They are loud, blatant, narrow and insistent in advertising the fact, 'They are saved,' and that by 'blood and grace alone.' Well, their kind of salvation like some patent medicines I have handled needs lots of advertisement, and even then it is a drug in humanity's market. The trouble is we preach 'man's moral responsibility' of which Immanuel Kant said that and the 'starry heavens' filled him with wonder and awe. These people have use for nothing but blood; to attempt to do anything for salvation according to their belief, ends in death. The small part of contracted syllogisms at their disposal have long since been exhausted upon the Gibraltar of Louth and not left even a scar, so for some time past lyddite, cordite, and dynamite in the shape of filthy, virulent vituperation without any regard whatever for veracity is being hurled almost every time in the hope of either asphyxiating or shattering us completely, but Latter Day Saints have a remarkable tenacity and emphatically refuse to be silenced that way. Bro. Thorburn is much appreciated by the people. He is a good, humble, spiritual man. Our mission conference was a great success, a spiritual feast from beginning to close. My wife on Monday, August 25, gave birth to our first son. We now have a little girl and a little boy."

Bro. B. F. Renfroe writing from Olds, Oklahoma, August 30, says: "Bro. S. W. Simmons and I have just closed a meeting at Thalia where we baptized four precious souls into the kingdom of God. We are here engaged in a two-week meeting. I am feeling good in the work and the Lord is abundantly blessing me with his Spirit."

Bro. James Moler writes from Lowry City, Missouri, August 31: "We are holding here in our district tent. Large crowds in attendance, good order, and good attention. One baptized to-day. Our next point for tent work is Deepwater. Am happy in the conflict."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Henry Bell writes that he would like to have some of the elders come into that part of the country to preach. He will gladly care for those who might come. He lives eight miles west of St. Anthony, Idaho. He wrote from Parker, August 10.

A brother wrote us from Louisville, Kentucky, September 1, asking a question which he desired to have answered through the columns of the HERALD, and signs himself "A Brother." If he will make himself known to us we shall be glad to answer the question; but we usually promptly put all unsigned questions into the waste basket. Persons asking questions or sending communications for publication should always make themselves known to the editors, whether the name of the writer appear in print or not. We can not give space to matter when the author is unknown to us. Please remember this when sending in matter for publication.

W. C. Earhart writes us making some corrections of errors which appeared in the editorial concerning the Newton Reunion. He states that he deserves no credit as being one of the committee which made such good provisions for those attending. He says he was not one of that committee, but that Brn. Walter Pitcher, of Baxter, and E. J. Clark, of Grinnell, both on the committee, were not named in the HERALD. We gladly make this note of the correction.

S. D. Love wrote from Fayetteville, Arkansas, September 2, that he had baptized thirteen since May 6, all members of the Utah church but four. He baptized five of them in the week preceding the 2d. He says he has a fine interest at Montreal. He is having trouble with malaria.

Just before we go to press we learn by telegram to Joseph Smith, dated Galien, Michigan, September 8, and signed by E. A. Blakeslee, that his mother, Mrs. George A. Blakeslee, wife of Bishop Blakeslee, deceased, died on the morning of the 8th. We are grieved to learn this. The family has our sympathy and condolence. President Smith or Bishop Kelley will probably attend the funeral, which will be held to-day.

The HERALD Office force is represented at the Dow City Reunion by the senior editor, and manager F. B.

Blair. They both left last week for Dow City, together with a number of others from Lamoni.

Church Secretary Salyards left Lamoni, Tuesday, for Stewartsville, to attend the reunion there.

On Tuesday, September 2, our foreman, pressman, and business manager all returned from Chicago, where they had been to buy a press. They decided on a Whitlock, and it is expected that it will be installed and ready for work by the middle of October. The HERALD Office has needed a new press for a long time. Our pressroom when the new press is installed will be well equipped and up to date.

Bishop Kelley returned on Monday to Lamoni from his Southern trip, but left again Tuesday, headed for Galien, Michigan, to attend the funeral obsequies of Sr. Blakeslee.

By letter from Joseph Smith dated at Dow City, Iowa, September 8, we learn that there was rain on the opening day. He writes that the attendance is not so large as the past two years, but it is increasing. The prayer services are good, spiritual, and reviving.

William Lewis sends us from Wales some marked copies of the Rhondda Leader for dates of July 26, August 9 and 23, in which Bro. Lewis has articles setting forth our faith and beliefs. Bro. Lewis' article in the issue for July 26 was replied to in issue August 9, by a William H. Pollard. Bro. Lewis' article in issue for August 23 was in reply to Mr. Pollard. We trust the articles will do good.

We have in our hands now the copy for the first number of the quarterly which is to be published by the Religio Society. It is to be called Religio Quarterly, and is being edited by Louise Palfrey. We trust that the young people will realize all they anticipate from the publication of this periodical.

The copy for the next number of the Study Hour has been received by us and placed in the hands of the printers. It is now being edited by Sr. Eva M. Bailey, of Independence, Missouri. The former editors resigned after the issuing of the last number, and Sr. Bailey was selected by the executive committee of the Sunday-school Association to fill the position. Her assistants are Srs. Anna Murphy and Jennie Newton.

REGARDING ZION AND HER STAKES.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants section 98, in a revelation given December 1, 1833, as follows:

Verily, I say unto you, Notwithstanding their sins, my bowels are filled with compassion toward them; I will not utterly cast them off; and in the day of wrath I will remember mercy. . . . I have sworn, and the decree hath gone forth by a former commandment which I have given unto you, that I would let fall the sword of mine indignation in the behalf of my people; and even as I have said, it shall come to pass. Mine indignation is soon to be poured out without measure upon all nations, and this will I do when the cup of their iniquity is full. And in that day, all who are found upon the watch-tower, or in other words, all mine Israel shall be saved. And they that have been scattered shall be gathered; and all they who have mourned shall be comforted; and all they who have given their lives for my name shall be crowned. Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in my hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.

I do not understand the present stake organized at Independence to be permanent as relating to the territory to be occupied ultimately by the Zion city, but to be simply given that this vicinity may have the advantages of stake organization, which I understand to be in similitude to the government of Zion's city as it will be, and to remain until the Zion city is fully organized.

Independence now is a stake of the church; then if I understand it right the stake government will give way to that of the central city of Zion. This city to have her stakes or outlying suburbs. The term her stakes in this instance signifying, as I believe, those in the outlying districts immediately connected or in close proximity with her outlying borders. "Zion shall not be moved out of her place." Her place is, we find by reading Doctrine and Covenants section 57, paragraph 1, given in 1831, in the land of Missouri. The Lord then says, "Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the Saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile [which we understand to have meant the western frontier of the United States at that time]. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands."

I give the latter part of the quotation as it may have bearing upon some things which may be at least indirectly mentioned in this article.

The reason this country will be designated Zion and her stakes, is found in the language quoted from section 98:4. Zion centering at Independence is there unmistakably referred to, and no change is to be made: "neither shall any other place be appointed" for the specific purpose of gathering the people to the city of Zion until its territory be full. Then for a continuance of the work especially intended for Zion and her suburbs, other places adjoining or in close connection shall be appointed "and they shall be called stakes for the curtains, or strength of Zion."

To my view this by no means conveys the meaning that there shall be no other stakes appointed elsewhere that the people of the church, where residing in large numbers, may have the advantages of stake government; but it does mean that there shall be no place nor stakes appointed and recognized for the specific purpose mentioned,—that of a gathering to the city of Zion and her connecting environments called stakes or curtains for her added strength and prosperity. To show this to be correct I will refer to a few of our leading lexicographers. Referring to the use made of the term stake by Milton: "A Palisade or something resembling it." Referring to the word palisade we find: "To surround, inclose, or fortify with stakes or posts."—Webster.

Turn now to the word curtain and we find one of its meanings to be as relating to a fortification for uses of defense and strengthening—a part of the rampart which is between the flanks of two bastions borders with a parapet, etc. And again the word curtain may be from the root of court and from the sense of separating. (Webster.)

And they, the other places, after the city proper is full shall be called "stakes for the curtains or strength of Zion."

Some of our dictionaries show by diagrams the added strength given to a fortress by its curtains or walled inclosures.

Inasmuch as Zion is not to be built for the purpose of aggressive or defensive warfare, in fact they are to be the only people that shall not be at war one with another, nor have others at war with them. See section 45, paragraph 13:

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand.

That the character of the fear is not to be inspired by any material or warlike strength is shown in the previous paragraph. It is to be because of the terror of the Lord or an influence the Lord will place over them in fulfillment of his promise to them. The world will not understand it, but it will be there all the same. Also that this people are not to seek separate national and civil power or government or to have it for themselves until Christ comes, but are to be subject to civil institutions is clear from reading section 38, paragraph 5.

Regarding Independence Stake, as it is at present, it embraces the following counties in Missouri: Jackson, Lafayette, Saline, Cass, Johnson, and Pettis, six in all, and three counties in Kansas, as follows: Wyandotte, Johnson, and Miami. This is the territory embraced in the Independence District previous to the stake organization. Within this vast territory lies a picturesque and beautiful country, the center of a splendid and rich area, whose future possibilities, even from an ordinary standpoint, often causes the educated and observant traveler passing through our borders to say, "Surely here is the very center of an empire of wondrous prosperity sometime in the near future." Already the republics of South America and kingdoms of Asia and Europe and some of the islands of the sea are paying tributes of their wealth in return for the products of our city of almost two hundred fifty thousand inhabitants,—Kansas City, Missouri, as well as her connecting city, Kansas City, Kansas, of about seventy-five thousand inhabitants, both of which are rapidly increasing in wealth and numbers. These places are ten miles from Independence, being connected by the Missouri and Pacific, Chicago and Alton, Kansas City Southern Railways and the Metropolitan Electric Line, fare on the latter being ten cents each way. Another electric line to be called Kansas City Electric Line is now projected.

The boundless wealth beneath and above ground of these regions already show the folly of men placing their puny judgments upon the balances to weigh against that of the Lord who governs by his unerring wisdom, all the universe, while man can not rule his one right arm to real good advantage.

God said in 1831, Behold, here is wisdom to purchase this land. While many of the Saints have ever since been saying, "Behold, here is wisdom to purchase any, and everywhere else."

If asked why this is so, I would have to answer, I don't know except that history has repeated itself, and blindness in part may have happened to Israel in this matter, or for some other good reason which the future may develop.

Within the last ten years the advance in Kansas City property has doubled in many instances many times.

The city of Independence, with population of about ten thousand, is as at present situated about three miles from the Missouri River, and while not in sight of the river, when one catches glimpses of it from the drives below the city, the river valley is indeed picturesquely beautiful. The city has good schools, a fine high school, gas and water works, an electric light plant belonging to the city, good streets, some paved with vitrified brick, some asphalt, and others macadamized, fine sidewalks, a number of fine church buildings, free mail delivery, and last, but not least, the large Latter Day Saints' church facing West Electric Street, and being one of the first objects of interest to strangers coming from Kansas City by the Metropolitan Electric Line. It is indeed a noble monument of the courage and persistence of the Saints of this place in earlier days to start so great a work when their numbers were so much less than now. It finally, by their own untiring efforts and the assistance of kind friends who helped them in the great work, it now stands free from debt, and while for all practical purposes it is complete, the towers and some minor matters are yet unfinished. The cost of it all, including some surrounding ground recently bought by the Bishop, is about thirty thousand dollars.

We now have a membership of eleven hundred and thirty-seven, and fast increasing. We hope to have a pipe organ by next General Conference. We have a choir of whom our friends, outside of the church, say it is the finest about the city. But as we are a modest people we of course simply suggest that others say so.

To those who may be contemplating coming to this country or its surroundings we advise their counseling beforehand with the stake bishopric. Be sure all things are prepared before you, and that to a reasonable extent your work is done, and well done where you are coming from. Coming in haste without observing the Lord's advice in this respect may result in your becoming a burden upon yourself, the church, and the community. If you have not been a good, industrious, and law-abiding citizen of the church and of the city, town, village, or community where you have lived, do not come at all until you are fully reformed and have proven to the church and community you are contemplating leaving that you have so reformed. By following this advice you may save yourself car-fare and expense, and also loss and annoyance otherwise, to all concerned, as in accordance with that which is written it is not likely you would be at all content here.

Do not come expecting to find every one except yourself perfect. Remember the absurd figure cut by the old Quaker who frequently remarked to his wife, "Ruth, all the world is queer but thee and me, and thee's a little queer."

Remember, according to the promise, there is to be gathered here people of every nation and tongue. All of different habits to yours, and as you may demand consideration for your ways, so with equal fairness you should act with them. Be tolerant. Here is an excellent opportunity to apply the rule given by our Lord and Master Jesus Christ for all such cases: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

Soon after the organization of Independence Stake, I dreamed one night a dream which in itself was so real in the startling vividness of the presentation, it impressed me very much. I seemed to be in a beautiful and palacelike structure whose outer sides were supported by pillars, and within its near side, almost at my side, was a rich and handsome table. On it was a cover of glistening white, and upon that close together were fine vessels of cut glass and some similar substance of finest and richest character. Upon these, spread out in wondrous plenteousness and rich abundance, was fruit more rich and wondrous in variety than I have ever seen, and while wondering at the beauty and rich abundance, all at once, as though spread on all fours upon that beautiful table, I saw a dirty, shaggy dog eating ravenously of the food awaiting guests to partake.

It was so startlingly real that I awoke, and this thought concerning its significance presented itself to me as distinctly as the dream had been: that the table represented the abundance of God's provisions for his people in Zion in the near future, and the dog represented a class of people, who with no real loyalty to God nor to his work and church, would seek to have access to the material provisions made by God for his people, and whose presence can only be a source of depleting weakness which will need to be carefully and firmly guarded against. Such people can be of no more benefit to the church than the suckers in an otherwise healthy field of corn. They will only sap the life and vigor from the corn, and even though the corn survives, it is in a more or less depleted and impoverished condition.

At some other time I may write further in detail concerning Independence and her surroundings, including Kansas City, Missouri, Kansas City, Kansas, Holden, Lee Summit, and other places.

GEORGE H. HULMES.

THE SHEEP AND THE GOATS.

I believe the saying of the Master in Matthew 25: 33, I. T., has reference to the general judgment, for verse 33 says: "And before him shall be gathered all nations," which certainly does not occur until after the thousand year reign. Verse 34 says, "And he shall sit upon his throne, and the twelve apostles with him." And verse 42 says, "Then shall he say unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." The wicked do not go into the conditions as stated in this verse until after the general judgment. Revelation 20: 14, 15: "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

These scriptures clearly show that the time spoken of in Matthew 25: 32 is the day of the general judgment. After laying this premise, we will consider who Christ is addressing when he uses the term, "the sheep on the right hand, but the goats on the left." I am sure we shall be able to show by the three standard books that Christ is addressing his followers, his own sheep in fact, those who have obeyed the gospel, representing both the sun and the moon glories by the term, "the sheep on his right hand," and that the goats represent the telestial glory, they on the left hand.

The objection urged against the position that the sheep represent those who have been obedient to the gospel is that a certain class called brethren are here spoken of. The fact that the sheep did not know they had ministered unto Christ, having done their ministrations to his disciples, proves, it is claimed, that the sheep were not, and had not been obedient to the gospel, or they would have known Christ's disciples. Whether an individual obeys the gospel in this life, or receives it in the intermediate state, he is entitled to be called Christ's sheep. At that great judgment there will be but the two great classes: those who are followers of Christ and those who are to remain filthy still, or they who are of the telestial glory, except the sons of perdition.

I will now refer the reader to Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5:

And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given. . . . They are they into whose hands the Father has given all things: . . . whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all; whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical.

The above class are they who are made Christ's real brethren or sheep in the flesh, because of receiving the gospel in the flesh. The second class will be made sheep by obedience to the gospel in the prison house, but their's is a light borrowed from Christ and his brethren.

* Same section, paragraph 6:

And again we saw the terrestrial world, and, behold, and lo; these are they who are of the terrestrial, whose glory differs from that of the church of the Firstborn, who have received the fullness of the Father, even as that of the moon differs from the sun of the firmament. Behold, these are they who died without law; and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterwards received it; these are they who are honorable men of the earth, who are blinded by the craftiness of men; these are they who receive of his glory, but not of his fullness; these are they who receive of the presence of the Son, but not of the fullness of the Father, etc.

The above evidently represents the class who minister to Christ's brethren, who are the honorable men of the earth, but who are blinded by the craftiness of men.

Christ addresses them, saying, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." These are they who live and reign with Christ a thousand years. With Christ's brethren at the expiration of the thousand years they are permitted to enter in through the gates into the city.

Those of the many mansion or telestial glory, are the dogs, sorcerers, whoremongers, whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, who are without the gate of the city, are those who come forth in the last resurrection, when Christ shall have finished his work.

Paragraph 7:

And again, we saw the glory of the telestial, which glory is that of the lesser, even as the glory of the stars differs from that of the glory of the moon in the firmament; these are they who received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus; these are they who deny not the Holy Spirit; these are they who are thrust down to hell; these are they who shall not be redeemed from the Devil, until the last resurrection, until the Lord, even Christ the Lamb shall have finished his work; these are they who receive not of his fullness in the eternal world, . . . for these are they who are of Paul, and of Apollos, and of Cephas; . . . last of all, these all are they who will not be gathered with the saints; . . . these are they who are liars, sorcerers, and adulterers, and whoremongers, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie; these are they who suffer the wrath of God on the earth; these are they who suffer the vengeance of eternal fire; these are they who are cast down to hell. . . . But, behold, and lo, we saw the glory and the inhabitants of the telestial world, that they were as innumerable as the stars in the firmament of heaven, or as the sand upon the seashore, and heard the voice of the Lord saying: These all shall bow the knee, and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne for ever and ever: for they shall be judged according to their works; and every man shall receive according to his own works, and his own dominion, in the mansions which are prepared, and they shall be servants of the Most High, but where God and Christ dwell they can not come, worlds without end.

In the above it will be noticed that they who are to dwell outside the gates of the city are those of the telestial glory, hence they who dwell within the gates of the city are those of the celestial and terrestrial glories, who inhabit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

We will now notice one objection to the above interpretation, John 14: 2, 3: "In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And when I go, I will prepare a place for you, and come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, ye may be also." From the scriptures already adduced we can reasonably conclude that the many mansions represent the telestial glory, which should settle the question that the sheep spoken of in Matthew 25th chapter, do not inherit the mansions spoken of by Christ in John 14: 2, 3.

As to the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world we will present a few thoughts. When man was created the earth was given him for his dominion, as is clearly stated in Genesis first and second chapters, and both man and the earth were in a pure and holy state, until man disobeyed God, when he was disinherited, that is, he lost by transgression his first dominion, the earth in its pure and paradisaical condition. Man in his fallen condition could not restore the earth, nor himself to their primeval conditions. We read in 1 Peter 19: 20 that the redemption was to be purchased "with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you."

The gospel was given to man that he might be reinstated as heir, for he had been alienated by sin and must needs be readopted in order to be a son, and therefore it is stated in Ephesians 1: 13, 14 that the Holy Spirit was to be given as a seal of the adoption, "until the redemption of the purchased possession." Thus we see that Christ repurchased the possession by his death or regained for man the kingdom or dominion prepared for him from the foundation of the world. And we read in the Book of Mormon, large edition, page 63: "But, behold, the righteous, the saints of the Holy One of Israel, they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel; they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it; they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world; and their joy shall be full for ever." In this language of Jacob it is plain that the kingdom of and for the saints was prepared from the foundation of the world. Though Christ was foreordained from the foundation of the world to be the propitiation for our sins, he did not make his first appearance for over four thousand years after the fall of man; and then he came to purchase man's lost possession, and promised complete redemption in him to all who obeyed the law of the Spirit of life that he gave.

In harmony with this thought I cite Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10, where Christ is speaking of the righteous: "They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation." And again, Daniel 7: 27: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." By this scripture it is clearly seen that the saints are to possess the everlasting kingdom and that its redemption and occupation in the most complete sense by the Saints occurs when Satan is bound, sin banished, and the angel declares that time is no longer. This carries the meaning of the Christ's saying, "I go to prepare a place for you, . . . that where I am ye may be also."

Therefore the sheep will inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world, which kingdom will not be completely redeemed until Christ's second glorious coming. The sheep and the goats, therefore, I believe, represent but the two great classes, the saints of the two great glories, celestial and terrestrial, who come forth in the first resurrection, and those of the celestial glory who come forth in the last resurrection, just before the great judgment as spoken of in Matthew 25: 31, 32.

BIRTHRIGHT IN THE PRIESTHOOD.

I desire to contribute a few thoughts for your valuable columns with reference to the following scripture:

"Saying, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David."—Matthew 22: 42.

You will notice in reading the preceding verses that the Pharisees were endeavoring to puzzle the Savior by asking an important question. Jesus answered their question and also made the above inquiry.

The Pharisees thought they could answer the question and replied that "Christ was the son of David." Jesus then inquired, "If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?" This question they did not answer.

A careful study of the first question will open the fields of thought along the line of "lineal priesthood." This is what we wish to call the attention of the reader to, because the same principle was involved in the establishment of the church nearly nineteen centuries ago, as in the days of the Palmyra Seer.

The first point we will consider is the birthright. What is it? Many have presumed the birthright to be the right of the oldest son to inherit his father's property. The word itself means the right to inherit something because of one's birth—but, there is something more involved in this than a mere property consideration. The birthright means the right to hold the Holy Priesthood. Of course this right is forfeited whenever the subject becomes unworthy.

Esau sold his birthright to his younger brother Jacob "for one morsel of meat." Did this give Jacob the right to possess all his father's property? No. After Jacob had received the blessing he was compelled to leave his father's home and go to a strange land, where he labored and attained to great riches.

But Esau stayed at home and inherited all his father's property.

When Jacob received this blessing, it made him a ruler. It gave him additional authority. The blessing reads in part as follows:

"Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee."—Genesis 27: 29.

Now the right hand blessing and the birthright are identical. This is proven by the Apostle Paul: "Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears."—Hebrews 12: 16, 17. Thus when Esau sold his birthright he divorced himself from the very thing that would have been conferred upon him by his father's right hand. Esau was a transgressor, a profane and unworthy subject; therefore the priesthood was not conferred upon him.

The scheme inaugurated by the mother by which Jacob received the blessing was only the manifestation of divine wisdom.

Another circumstance is related in Genesis 48: 17-20 where the younger son receives the right-hand blessing. Ephraim receives the greatest blessing although Manasseh was the oldest. I have no history to prove that Manasseh was under transgression, but something was evidently wrong on his part or the Lord would not have departed from the established law. Manasseh was in a sense favored of the Lord, but Ephraim was more highly favored.

Neither of these boys however occupied this exalted station because of their birth. If Reuben and Simeon had been worthy they would have inherited this place. It was their birthright; but through transgression, they were not permitted to occupy.

"Now the sons of Reuben the first born of Israel (for he was the firstborn; but forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given to the sons of Joseph, the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright. For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler, but the birthright was Joseph's)."

Thus Reuben was a transgressor and was not permitted to inherit his birthright. Neither was it conferred upon his sons, but upon the sons of Joseph—Ephraim and Manasseh. "And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine. And thy issue, which thou begettest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance."—Genesis 48: 5, 6.

The sons of Joseph step into the shoes of Reuben and Simeon and their inheritance is to be reckoned after their brethren and not after their genealogy. They are to be considered the firstborn. You will notice in the blessing pronounced upon them by Jacob that Ephraim was greater than Manasseh, and his seed was to become a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth.

Now turn to Jeremiah 31: 9:

"They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble, for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn."

According to this Ephraim is the Lord's firstborn, and stands at the head of God's people upon the earth.

Now whose son is Christ?

He is the son of David, the offspring of Judah, the "bright and morning star." Christ was not a natural heir to Ephraim's blessing—the Melchisedec priesthood, for Moses spoke nothing of this tribe concerning priesthood (Habakkuk 7:14). We find the statement also in 1 Chronicles 5: 2 as follows:

"For Judah prevailed above his brethren and of him came the chief ruler, but the birthright was Joseph's."

We do not wish to take one star from the crown of our blessed Lord. It shines with greater brilliancy than any crown ever worn by any earthly king. He was and is to be the Chief Ruler. Yet Christ was only a natural heir to the Aaronic priesthood; because Mary and Elizabeth were cousins (Luke 1: 36). But before Christ could receive the Melchisedec priesthood he must be adopted into the family of Ephraim. This was done when Jesus was baptized in the waters of Jordan. Baptism is one of the initiatory laws of adoption into the kingdom. Read the following scripture: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."—Galatians 3: 27, 29.

So Christ did not abrogate the law but magnified and fulfilled, and was entitled to all the rights and privileges promised him in the Scriptures.

Well, says one, Jesus was born to be a King and High Priest. Dear reader, he was not born to occupy such positions, outside of the established law of the gospel. The Bible teaches that men are born to be prophets like Moses, Jeremiah, and John the Baptist. Yes, men are born to be preachers, and for this very reason it requires the inspiration of the Infinite One to point them out. But this does not prevent their obedience to and acceptance of the divine ordinances of baptism and ordination. Now where did Christ receive his ordination as High Priest? Says one, he didn't need any ordination. Listen: "Suffer it to be so now for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." If he didn't need any ordination then he didn't need any baptism. The following scripture plainly teaches that Christ was to be made an High Priest:

"And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec, there ariseth another priest, who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life."—Habakkuk 7: 15, 16.

Jesus then was made an High Priest, after he was born a babe in the manger—not after any carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

Was this ever realized? Yes on the "Mount of Transfiguration." There was not much carnality manifested upon this occasion. The power of endless life was manifest when Moses and Elias appeared upon that occasion. The glory of God was there. It was a wonderful scene and yet we have on record only a few words describing the event. Peter said: "It's good to be here." When they came down from the Mount, Jesus commanded them to say nothing about the vision.

What did the transfiguration represent? Did Moses and Elias appear merely for the purpose of showing themselves? Their mission was a holy one. By turning to Doctrine and Covenants, page 224, we learn that when Moses was taken from the earth, the Melchisedec priesthood was also taken, perhaps at Mount Sinai when the children of Israel made the golden calf. Moses held the keys of that dispensation, so when God let his vineyard out in the ninth hour, it was necessary for Moses to appear upon the scene, bringing the Holy Priesthood back to earth and conferring it upon Christ making of him an High Priest. Elias had to appear, because it is in the province of his mission to act as a "restorer" (Doctrine and Covenants 112: 2).

Now it is evident inasmuch as the priesthood was taken from the earth in the time of Moses that Elias should appear upon the mount also. The scribes were even looking for Elias, but they did not know him when he did come. The disciples came to Jesus upon one occasion and inquired:

"And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist."—Matthew 17: 10-12.

Inasmuch as the mission of Elias is to restore and he made his appearance in the time of Christ—it is evident he restored just what was necessary to be restored upon that occasion—the Melchisedec Priesthood.

Now we can not lose sight of this connecting link, of restoration and authority in days of Christ any more than we can discard the same principles with reference to the church as established in this the eleventh hour dispensation.

Christ said unto Peter: "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—Matthew 16: 19.

He, in connection with James and John (Doctrine and Covenants, page 75), held the keys of that dispensation. Therefore it was just as necessary for them to appear and ordain Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to the Melchisedec priesthood, as it was for Moses and Elias to appear upon the Mount of Transfiguration.

Before this wonderful event occurred, however, John the Baptist appeared in the spirit of Elias (Doctrine and Covenants section 26) and ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver to the Aaronic priesthood. John was the messenger that was to precede the coming of the Savior, to prepare the way for his second coming. (Malachi 3: 1-6.) He is that angel whom John saw flying through the midst of heaven with the everlasting gospel to preach to the nations of the earth, in the hour of God's judgment. (Revelation 14: 6, 7.)

Now as Ephraim is considered as the Lord's first-born, it is reasonable to conclude that this angel messenger in "restoring the gospel" in the last days would visit and confer the authority upon some of Ephraim's posterity. Dear reader, Joseph Smith belongs to the family of Ephraim:

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began."—Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3.

It seems that the Lord had decreed that the posterity of the Israelitish race shall be the receptacles of God's favor and authority through which all nations will reap a blessing. Jesus said "My sheep hear my voice and a stranger will they not follow."

The Prophet Ezekiel declares that this marvelous work of gospel restoration would commence with one of Ephraim's children:

"Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph [Book of Mormon], which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand."—Ezekiel 37: 19.

Thus the Book of Mormon previous to its being united to the Bible and both becoming one, was to be in the hands of Ephraim. This scripture then was partially fulfilled when Joseph Smith had the plates in his hand translating them. Much more might be said, but we refrain. We close by saying, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

PROPHECIES.

(A) THE REBELLION.

Of the many prophecies given by Joseph Smith, one given December 25, 1832, reads as follows:

Verily thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place; for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations. And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war; and it shall come to pass also, that the remnants [Indians] who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of heaven, and the fierce and vivid lightning also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath and indignation, and chastening hand of an Almighty God, until the consumption decreed, hath made a full end of all nations; that the cry of the Saints, and the blood of the Saints, shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, from the earth, to be avenged of their enemies. Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved, until the day of the Lord come; for behold it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. Amen.

Concerning this event Joseph Smith wrote January 4, 1833, thirteen days after the revelation was given, to Mr. N. E. Seaton, editor of a newspaper at Rochester, New York, as follows: "And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation."

April 3, 1843, he declared publicly that he had been shown concerning the war and where it would begin. The statement is as follows: "I prophecy in the name of the Lord God, that the commencement of the difficulties which will cause much bloodshed, previous to the coming of the Son of Man, will be in South Carolina (it probably may arise through the slave question). This a voice declared to me while I was praying earnestly on this subject December 25, 1832."—Mormonism by Elder Hyde, page 174.

Let it be remembered that Mr. Hyde was an enemy of the Latter Day Saints and wrote a book against the church, and in order to prove that Joseph Smith was a false prophet referred to this revelation. His book was published in 1857.

Many persons have tried to show that this revelation was written since the war to suit the facts, but their effort in this direction only makes the truth more apparent. The revelation was published as far away as Liverpool, England, as early as 1851, in a pamphlet entitled "The Pearl of Great Price," many copies of which are yet extant. Ann Mullholland-Davis who died recently at Lyons, Wisconsin, had the original manuscript in her possession in the winter of 1838-39 and carried it concealed about her person. Her testimony appeared a few years ago in a magazine published by the church called the Autumn Leaves. William Mullholland was Joseph Smith's private secretary, and during the persecution which arose in Missouri, partly, no doubt, because the people of that State who were slave-holders feared the Latter Day Saints would free or try to free their slaves, it was thought best by Joseph Smith to give the manuscript to his secretary, who in turn placed it in the hands of his sister, Ann Mullholland.

We wish here to digress a little long enough to notice the thought that the "Latter Day Saints would probably free the Missouri slaves." While the Latter Day Saints were wholly and entirely opposed to slavery, and doubtless in private, often opposed it when talking with their neighbors, yet they made no effort at that time to liberate them only such as they owned themselves. From the first the church has denied that they had any intention of the kind, because slavery was then sanctioned by the constitution in certain States, Missouri being one of them. The members of the church were very careful to observe the law of the land, and more especially on this point when they lived in a slave State. One of the articles of faith reads:

We believe it just to preach the gospel to the nations of the earth, and warn the righteous to save themselves from the corruption of the world; but we do not believe it right to interfere with bond-servants, neither preach the gospel to, nor baptize them, contrary to the will and wish of their masters, nor to meddle with, or influence them in the least to cause them to be dissatisfied with their stations in life, thereby jeopardizing the lives of men; such interference we believe to be unlawful and unjust, and dangerous to the peace of every government allowing human beings to be held in servitude.—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 12.

This exhibits much wisdom on the part of the church, that they would abide the law of the land until such time as God saw fit to overthrow that which was so manifestly wrong. They could not do otherwise. Nor did they, though their hearts were often pained to see human beings in servitude to their fellow man. It was doubtless this painful sight that caused Joseph Smith in the greatness of his heart and in compassion for the slaves to "pray earnestly over the matter" on December 25, 1832, and it was then that the Lord revealed unto him the foregoing information. It will be remembered that but a few years before that South Carolina had sought to withdraw from the Union but was compelled by law to abandon that idea. It has been said that it took no inspiration to tell that "slaves would rise up against their masters," but the reader will notice that at that very time the matter had been settled by law and it was not likely that one little State should again rebel against a great nation. Slaves rising up against their masters may also include the Cubans, the Philipinos, the Boers, and even the laboring men in our own country to-day. Or, it may even include the money men who are in bondage to the unions.

Returning to the main point, let us notice how the Saints were misunderstood on the slavery question and incidentally observe that there probably was such a revelation.

The following from Zion's Ensign of September 30, 1897, taken from the Kansas City Journal, of September 20, 1897, proves my conclusion correct as to the reason why the Saints were driven from Missouri:

SIXTY-YEAR-OLD PAPER.

Lexington, Missouri, September 20, 1897.—Doctor Minos Adams, of Lexington, lives in a house that once belonged to Miss Elizabeth Aull, the founder of the seminary of that name in Lexington. A few days ago he found in the attic a newspaper dated June 30, 1836, called The Far West, edited by Peter H. Burnett (afterward governor of California). Its place of issue was Liberty, Clay County. It was a copy that belonged to James Aull, who was afterward murdered in his store in Chihuahua by Mexicans. There is an account of a public meeting, held to warn the Mormons that if they do not leave Clay County, "civil war was inevitable." Among the reasons given are the following: "They are Eastern men, whose manners, habits, customs, and even dialect, are essentially different from our own; they are non-slaveholders, and opposed to slavery, which in this peculiar period, when abolition has reared its deformed and haggard visage in our land, is well calculated to excite deep and abiding prejudice in any community where slavery is tolerated and practiced." The chairman was John Bird, who was called on motion of Doctor Woodson J. Moss; the secretary was John F. Doherty, called on motion of Colonel William T. Wood. On motion of Colonel William T. Wood the preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted. Now known as Judge Wood, brother of the late Doctor Joseph Wood, the eminent physician of Kansas City, William T. Wood is still living in Lexington, partly paralyzed. Miss Ryland, a granddaughter of Governor Burnett, is at this time visiting in Lexington.

This indicates very plainly the feelings of the Missouri people. By this it will be seen that they misunderstood the church in that as well as other things. Their feelings grew more and more bitter and finally after manipulating elections and the legislature, expelled from the State by force of arms and by order of the governor those who had done them no harm nor had any idea of doing so. However, because of this feeling on the part of Missouri, many men, women, and children lost their lives, much property was burned or destroyed for the very same reason that so many lost their lives in the Rebellion twenty-two years after. Doubtless more women and children lost their lives concerning this matter than in the entire war of the Rebellion.

All of this indicates that such a revelation existed among the Saints long before the Rebellion. It was published in Washington, District of Columbia, in 1853, by O. Pratt. Also Mr. Beadle and others who opposed the church referred to this prophecy to show that Mr. Smith was a false prophet. But the war did come, it did begin in South Carolina, and slaves did rise up against their masters.

To answer whether it was generally thought at that time that war would come of the slavery question we wish now to show from probably the best authority in America on Congressional matters, that between 1829 and 1860 the idea of secession was little thought of, but during that time, yes, in 1832 when everybody thought South Carolina would not again attempt to secede, Joseph Smith and his people continued to assert that war was inevitable and that the slaves would be freed.

Let us hear what the Honorable James G. Blaine has to say with regard to whether it was thought in the United States that war would come of it. We copy the following from Twenty Years of Congress, volume 1, page 21.

With the settlement of the Missouri question the anti-slavery agitation subsided as rapidly as it had arisen. There was a second surprise to thinking men. The result can, however, be readily explained. The Northern States felt that they had absolutely secured to freedom a large territory north of Missouri. The Southern States believed that they had secured an honorable understanding—outside and beyond the letter of the law,—that new States south of the Missouri line could be admitted with slavery if they desired. The great political parties then dividing the country accepted the result and for the next twenty years no agitation of the slavery question appeared in any political convention or affected any considerable people.

From page 25, same volume, we copy: "It was plainly seen that in a large majority of the free States the Abolitionists had as yet (1840) made no impression on public opinion."

The year 1853 was politically as quiet as Monroe's era of good feeling, and when congress came together in its closing month, the president dwelt impressively upon the danger we had passed and upon the blessings that were in store for us. In tones of solemnity he declared that when "the grave shall have closed over all who are endeavoring to meet the obligation of duty the year 1853 as a period of anxious apprehension." With high praise of the compromise legislation of that year he said: "It had given renewed vigor to our institution and restored a sense of repose and security to the public mind." These words were addressed to the Congress on the 5th day of December, 1853, and it would be uncandid to deny that even in the South were heartily approved by a large majority of the people, perhaps by a majority in every State.

Although the slavery question had "subsided as quickly as it arose," and although in 1840 the Abolitionists had made no impression on public opinion and although a sense of repose and security had been restored to a large "majority in every State," yet notwithstanding the thinking men in this country had really thought three times that the slavery question was settled, Joseph Smith had said in effect three times that it was not and would not be until the Southern States should be divided against the Northern States and Slaves should raise up against their masters. Let the old soldiers answer whether this prophecy was fulfilled or not.

(B) PROPHECY CONCERNING THE CHAPLAIN OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

The following is recorded of a public meeting held in Washington, District of Columbia, by an eye and ear witness:

A great many of the members of Congress and heads of departments were present, as well as Martin Van Buren. We, of the committee from Illinois, all took the speaker's desk. And when near the close, who should come into the hall but Joseph Smith himself. We speedily got him up on the stand, and I had the honor of introducing him to that vast audience. He had just come in on the train from Philadelphia, and was tired, but he arose by the invitation of many who called for him, and on that occasion he uttered a prophecy, one of the most wonderful predictions of his life. He adverted to the statements made by George C. Cookman [chaplain of the United States Senate], declaring them to be willfully and wickedly false, and that if he, Cookman, did not take it back and acknowledge that he had dealt falsely of him, his people, and his own congregation, also that he must turn and preach the truth and quit deceiving the people with fables, he should be cut off from the face of the earth, both he and his posterity, and he said that this should be so plainly manifest that all should know it. At this, many gentlemen took out of their pockets their tablets and began to take notes of the prophecy; and Mr. Smith noticing them, "yes," said he, "write it on your tablets; write it in a book; write it in your memory; for as sure as God ever spoke by my mouth, all these things shall come to pass."

Henry Clay, Felix Grundy, Tom Benton, John Q. Adams and many other celebrated characters were present at this time. Now, instead of Cookman doing according to justice and truth, he became more virulent than ever, and laid all the obstacles in our way that he could during our stay in the city. The matter appeared to be forgotten by many, and I thought often upon the subject, having taken notes also. Soon after this there was an extraordinary excitement in the religious world, and they appointed a conference of all orthodox religions to assemble in England, at a certain time, to adopt measures of harmony between all the sects; the United States was invited and accepted a part in their proceedings to break down the partition wall that separated the various churches. George C. Cookman was elected or appointed as delegate for the District of Columbia to represent his views on this subject, standing, as he did, at the very head of the church, and Chaplain of the United States Senate. Now he, being an Englishman by birth, and his family in suitable circumstances for a pleasure trip, at the appointed time he (Cookman) thought it would be very pleasant to take his whole family with him and this he did. Both he, his wife, and all his children went on board the steamship "President," and neither the ship nor a soul is left to tell what was their sad end. . . .

(C) CONCERNING STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS.

While Stephen A. Douglas was district judge in Illinois, before he was elected to congress, Joseph Smith prophesied the following concerning him:

He is a giant in intellect, but a dwarf in stature, that he would yet run for President of the United States, but that he would never reach that station; that he would occupy a conspicuous place in the councils of the nation, . . . and that in his place he would introduce and carry out some of the most gigantic measures in the history of the nation. . . . Did he not get Andrew Jackson's fine remitted by law, a thing that was by all considered impossible? Did he not introduce the bills for the covering of Illinois with railroads, without one cent of expense to the general government? Under his management, were not the Illinois bonds raised from a condition nearly worthless to a value nearly par with currency? Did he not rule in and through the State of Illinois, work and carry out its destiny for twenty consecutive years, more than any and all other men together? Was he not always one of the greatest men in the Senate? Did he not do more for the line compromise on slavery than any other one man? . . . Did he not run for president and get defeated?"—Palmyra to Independence 313, 314.

Let the reader answer the above questions according to the facts and determine for himself whether Joseph Smith was a true prophet.

(D) HIS OWN NAME.

Among other things, he said: "My name shall be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or it shall be both good and evil spoken of among all people."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 12, 13.

Will the reader say this prophecy has not been fulfilled? Let him travel the world over and let him see for himself that Joseph spoke the truth, and then decide which class he will join.

(E) HIS OWN DEATH.

On parting with his wife at Nauvoo when he was falsely arrested and placed under strong protection by Governor Ford to guard him until after the trial, he told her that he would never see his family again—that his work was done—that he was going to rest—that the church would be broken up and scattered, and instructed her to remain with the family at Nauvoo, or take them to Kirtland, Ohio. See Joseph the Seer, page 192.

We have no need to show how all this was literally fulfilled. The most casual reader is sufficiently acquainted with the facts to see their complete fulfillment.

(F) EARTHQUAKES, TEMPESTS, TIDAL WAVES, AND GENERAL UNREST AMONG THE PEOPLE.

In December, 1832, he prophesied to the elders of the church that after they had borne testimony of the truth, and where they had been rejected God would send his testimony in the following manner:

After your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

Almost every daily paper published in the last fifty years has contained one or more testimonies of the truthfulness of this prophecy. We therefore deem it unwise to make further comment than to say, if the reader has not noticed these things heretofore his time might be profitably spent by noting the number of earthquakes, tempests, tidal waves, and the general unrest, both in earth and sky in the future.

(G) HIS PROPHECY CONCERNING BRIGHAM YOUNG.

SAN BERNARDINO, California, February 4.

Joseph Thorn, a resident of San Bernardino, California, being duly sworn, deposes and says: "I was personally acquainted with Brigham Young, late president of the Utah Mormon Church, and knew him when both he and I were living in Nauvoo, Illinois, and I heard Joseph Smith, Jr., at a public meeting in a grove east of the Temple in Nauvoo, when he had been reproving said Brigham Young for taking and using for his own private purposes church money without authority, say of him, 'If Brigham Young ever leads this church he will lead it to hell.' This he said with great emphasis.

"JOSEPH THORN."

Sworn and subscribed to before me at San Bernardino County, California, this fourth day of February, 1884.

E. H. MORSE, Notary Public.

To Whom it May Concern: Know ye that I, David Dixon now resident at Riverside, San Bernardino County, California, was personally present at a public meeting in Nauvoo, Illinois, before the building of the Temple; and there and then saw and heard the Prophet Joseph Smith while preaching, raise his hand (pointing to Brigham Young who was in the stand with him) saying: "Talk about leading this church; here is Bro. Brigham, if he ever leads this church, he will lead it to hell." There were more than a thousand people at the time; several of whom, I, David Dixon, know are now living and heard him say it.

DAVID DIXON.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed my official seal, at my office in the County of San Bernardino, California, on this 29th day of December, 1883.

W. W. SMITH, Notary Public.

—The Salt Land Heresies, pages 22, 23.

We have not space to give others of Joseph Smith's prophecies of which there are many. As we said at the beginning we can only hope to merely introduce this subject to the reader. We think, therefore, these few will suffice. Of the hundreds of his prophecies of things, both in and out of the church, not one has failed.

CHARACTER SKETCH OF JOSEPH SMITH.

Character sketch of Joseph Smith, as given by Professor Hugo Campbell, Toronto, Ontario, October 4, 1897, from a photograph placed in his hands by Elder Fred Gregory. Sketch was made without knowledge who the original of the photograph was.

If the picture is true and not flattering, as steel engravings often appear to be, the person must have possessed much more than ordinary mental power and brilliancy. The perceptive faculties are very prominently marked. Ready cognizance of facts; scholarly talent; a retentive memory and brilliant descriptive power, are qualities for which he should be distinguished. The head shows breadth enough to give much energy and force of character. Opportunity, education, and circumstances might make of him an orator and statesman. He possessed wonderful persuasive power; such a one could lead, influence, and impress the minds of others. He has much character; a high wrought organization; fine quality; can be extremely tender, gentle, kind, and affectionate, or stern, according to circumstances; but the natural leanings are much in the direction of the good and the true.

If such a nature is redeemed and devoted to the service of the truth, the good results would be far reaching. Only the worst of circumstances with treachery on the part of those he has trusted, could make him a bad man.

At the age when this picture was taken, the lines in the face are not so deeply marked as to show clearly the direction given to the faculties. Such a one requires only favoring environment to become a remarkable man and a power for good. If good, then very good and brilliant; for he is highly gifted mentally. He possesses wonderful social magnetism and is able to make his influence extensively felt. He resembles his mother and possesses much of her intuitions and instincts. The musical faculty is not easy to read in a picture; so far as can be seen, it should be of a high order, and his tastes are decidedly literary and artistic.

The phrenological examination of Professor Campbell is in harmony with what the coworkers of the latter-day Seer have claimed for him.

AGAINST CHURCH AND STATE UNION.

Congress with President as executor is as almighty in its sphere as Jehovah is in his.

I have of late had repeated solicitations to have something to do in relation to the political farce about dividing the country, but as my ideas revolt at the idea of having anything to do with politics, I have declined in every instance having anything to do on the subject. I think it would be well for politicians to regulate their own affairs. I wish to be left alone that I may attend strictly to the spiritual welfare of church.—Joseph the Prophet, page 417.

We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law.—One of the articles of faith written by Joseph Smith.

HOW TO FREE THE SLAVES WITHOUT THE LOSS OF BLOOD.

He advised in 1844 that the slave States "abolish slavery by 1850," and "pray Congress to pay every man a reasonable price for his slaves."

He further said: "Break off the shackles from the poor black man, and hire them to labor like other human beings."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 532.

In a book entitled "Figures of the Past," page 397, is the following by Josiah Quincy, from which book we have quoted heretofore:

Smith recognized the curse and iniquity of slavery, though he opposed the methods of the Abolitionists. His plan was for the nation to pay for the slaves from the sale of the public lands. . . . It might be worth while to remark that Smith's plan was publicly advocated eleven years later by one who has mixed so much practical shrewdness with his lofty philosophy. In 1855, when men's minds had been moved to their depths on a question of slavery, Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson declared that it should be met in accordance "with the interest of the South and with the settled conscience of the North. It is really not a great task, a great fight for this country to accomplish, to buy that property of the planter, as the British nation bought the West Indian slaves." He further says that the "United States will be brought to give every inch of their public lands for a purpose like this." We, who can look back upon the terrible cost of the patricidal war which put an end to slavery, now say that such a solution of the difficulty would have been worthy a Christian statesman. But if the retired scholar was in advance of his time when he advocated this disposition of the public property in 1855, what shall I say of the political and religious leader [Joseph Smith] who had committed himself in print, as well as in conversation, to the same course in 1844? If the atmosphere of men's opinions was stirred by such a proposition when war-clouds were discernable in the sky, was it not a statesman-like work eleven years earlier, when the heavens looked tranquil and beneficent? See "Joseph the Seer."

Selected Articles.

THE HEART OF CHRISTIANITY?

One of the commonest attempts now being made by persons who are trying to readjust religious formulas is to condense into the simplest and briefest form possible the essentials of religious truth. In considering what is the essence of Christianity, William Hayes Ward, D. D., in the Independent (June 12), classifies religion as a section of ethics, and affirms that the contribution of Christianity to ethics consists of the answer it gives to the chief ethical question, viz., What is man's duty? Christianity's peculiar and essential feature is the doctrine of Love:

"Christianity first taught ethics its first principle of Love. In doing that it showed that righteousness, justice, common morals are not enough. Something more vital is needed, something more positive and forceful. Not to have done wrong is something, not to do to others what you would not have them do to you; but it has in it nothing really divine. To do justice is but the neutral level of morals, not bad and hardly good."

The pagan religions and Judaism failed to be truly missionary, and could not become universal because they never made the positive doctrine of love primary and central. Love, however, to be developed, must be practically applied, and hence a conversion is required by it to service and to evangelism. Doctor Ward proceeds to eliminate as essential various things that have at one time or another been required as integral to faith:

"Christianity must be a spiritual and not a formal, ceremonial religion. As it is not national, but individual, so it is not priestly, but spiritual. It accepts God as a spirit, who must therefore be worshiped in spirit and in truth. Christianity may use days, places, and rites, but they are no part of essential Christianity. Christianity finds use for the Sabbath, but the Sabbath is not a part of Christianity. Christianity honors the church, but can exist without the church. Christianity has two or more sacraments, but can dispense with all of them and still be good Christianity, for Christianity is not a body, but a spirit, and that spirit is love."

In a similar strain Doctor Ward rules out from among the essentials of faith the miraculous conception and other miracles:

"Christianity teaches biographical facts about Christ; but we must distinguish the important from the nonimportant. It is interesting, but not important, that he came as a child. Paul never speaks of the virgin-birth, perhaps never heard of it, as the gospels had not been written in his time. Christ's miracles are interesting and throw much light on his character, but they have not the importance of his teachings and example. Those teachings would be equally valuable if Jesus had performed no miracles or had come to the earth as others come or had come full-grown. These biographical facts, however interesting and however important, are not essential to the substance of Christianity. Christ's command of love and his teaching that God is a loving Father is essential."

A person may be a Christian even though unable to believe in a future life and holding to the doctrine of annihilation; even though this involves disbelief in the resurrection of Jesus.

"Christ's resurrection is of even more importance than his death, because on it is based a considerable part of our faith in the future life; and it was of even greater importance for this reason to the early church. A belief in a future life, of blessedness for the good, and in which persistent wrong will suffer retribution, is of no little help, especially in beginning a life of self-sacrificing love; for in it self-love adds its aid to disinterested love. But a belief in the future life, and so in Christ's resurrection, is not absolutely essential to Christian character, which, as we have seen, is the really essential thing in Christianity; for only the life of love is essential. It was in a flash of excessive and mistaken oratorical fervor that Paul exclaimed, 'What advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.'"—Literary Digest, June 28.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"When He Giveth Quietness."

Oh, the hush'd and holy quiet
That Jehovah will impart
When he comes to make his dwelling
In the consecrated heart!

Oh, the hush and holy quiet!
Oh, the rest while here below!
When he comes and fills his temple,
Waves of glory o'er thee flow.

Blest the thought that our Jehovah
Deigns to dwell in hearts so low!
And his presence gives this quiet,
Which the world can not bestow.

What a rest and what a stillness,
Though without the wind may blow!
If Jehovah keeps his temple,
Nought but rest the heart can know.

—John L. Newkirk.

A Purpose.

From one end to the other of the great "boot-room" ran a ceaseless rustle of rapid work. Every man, stripped to the light gossamer wrapper, was doing his best. The company had taken a large contract. Hundreds of thousands of pairs of rubber boots would be turned off within the next few weeks, and thousands of dollars would go to the energetic "piece-hands."

The faster a man worked the more money he made. All false and useless motions were left out, and alert, active, the human machines handled the heavy "boot-trees," doing the most intricate "sticking" and "rolling" with a single touch.

At the same long table, in this eager race, worked two men. One was a Southwestern Yankee, scarred and weather-pitted, lean and wiry, whose long arms and bony fingers finished the work with a nicety and dispatch which could be equalled only by the skilled "old hands."

His mate was slender, smooth-faced, nervous, quick of motion and clear of eye. There was no odor of liquor in his breath, no tobacco-stain on his teeth.

No one there knew him. His "ticket" for the last month had been the largest in the room, and there were men working with him who had spent a lifetime at boot-making.

The Westerner had noted all his companion's points carefully, and had tried in vain to keep up with him. At last, one day during the ten minutes' lunch which the "piece-men" allowed themselves, he turned to him and said:

"Stranger, moight I ask what's yer puppus in drivin' so, and beatin' all the rest?"

The young man smiled—a bright, pleasant smile, which almost reflected itself in the grave face opposite.

"You think that my rapid work shows a special purpose?" he asked.

"Sartin I do. The mightier a man's puppus, the smarter he is. That's a reason. An' ef it ain't bein' too cur'ous, I'd jest like to hev yer air your puppus."

The young man grew grave, thought a moment, and then said: "I have indeed a mighty purpose—one which a lifetime of the hardest work can not exhaust—and yet I doubt whether you would care to hear it."

"I knowed it," said the other, "but go ahead; give it to us straight as yer please; I'm good for 't."

"Did you ever know a man to die for a friend?" asked the young man.

"Well, yes; I knowed a man in Arkansaw that took up another man's fight, and was killed."

"Not in that way, but in cool blood to take another's place—to be hated, to be sneered at, and at last to be killed, all for the sake of a friend?"

"I can't say as ever I did," replied the Westerner; "'taint exactly natur', that ain't."

"No, it isn't very natural to man," was the reply, "yet a Friend of mine for years bore all the shame and reproach of my deeds. He was hated, threatened, mobbed. His very name became a reproach. Without a home—with nothing but his innocence—he was at last put to death by those who so hated him."

The other had said nothing, but the burning of his deep-set black eyes showed that the story was not without its effect.

"One who was near him when he died," continued the boot-maker, "wrote me a letter, and in it were the dying wishes of my Friend. He said first that he forgave me everything, and that he loved me more than any other could love."

"He'd no need to say that after dyin' for yer," was the husky comment.

"One thing he wished me to do. There were others whom he loved, and who had wronged him. He wished me to go to them, and beg them to accept of his dying love, and be reconciled to him. That is my purpose."

"Stranger," said the listener, "I don't wonder that you beat us all. I don't know what yer done, that yer pardner should hev died fur yer, but I do know that yer a lucky man to have such a friend. Don't yer never go back on his memory, an'—if it ain't being too curious—mought I ask his name?"

"His name was Jesus Christ," was the reverent reply. "The letter is here in the Bible, and with his help I am working here to get money to fit myself more thoroughly to tell men his dying message, and beg them to become reconciled to him."

There was no further time to be talking, yet the young man felt that the other understood.

The next day the Westerner was not in his place, and word went around that he was off on a spree. He never came back.

Three years after this the young bootmaker, having finished his studies, was preaching in a store in the far West, when he noticed a tall, weather-beaten man, who entered and seated himself on a box. There was something familiar in his make-up, some suggestion of the past, which, however, did not explain itself until, after the sermon, he came forward, saying:

"Yer not the only man in this deestrick that's got a puppus. I've read that letter many times, an' in all sorts of places, since you brought it up to me. I've been down in the mines, an' out among the Injuns, tellin' the boys about it, an' now I'm bound for Lower Californy. Give us a grip of your hand, pardner, an' don't forget yer puppus."—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

It seems that all editors have much the same experience. We could not have described our own situation better than the editor of the Sunday School Times has done in his "Notes on open letters" for July 26, 1902. Some of our Sunday-school workers have requested their articles returned, which is not improper. Others have been offended because their articles were not published promptly, while other articles "no better than theirs" were. One district turned down by vote the sending of their papers for the department, because previously sent papers had not been published promptly. Read the following and see if there is not a possibility of there being a good reason for the delay. Another might have done better, but we have done the best we could in this line.—ED.

WHY DO EDITORS ACT SO STRANGELY?

This is an age when people want to know "why." Nothing is secure from the investigating eye of at least the American public. Of recent months even the editors—autocratic, supreme, omniscient—have not escaped the scrutinizing commissions of inquiry that are abroad throughout the land. If people don't understand how or why an editor does things, they propose to know, and the wise editor is he who gracefully and quickly responds to this inevitable searchlight of public investigation. A Connecticut contributor and friend of The Sunday School Times probably voices a question that has arisen in many another writer's mind when he courteously but relentlessly asks:

"I have always been very considerate of the editors' time, and in all my relations with them in the way of contributor have exercised great patience rather than bore them with inquiries; but, with regard to their plan of publication, I have never yet been able to arrive at a distinct idea about it. For example, they will sometimes publish a contribution right off; in another case it will be delayed six months,—perhaps a year or two. I am not now speaking of the Times alone. Comparing notes with other writers, I have found they had the same experience. For myself, for instance, I have had copy (verses) lie with the Youth's Companion until three later pieces sent them had been printed. Some things improve with age, but it always seems to writers of verse that the production has a vigor of inspiration inseparable from its birth. Besides, there are so many poets in this day, and themes so correspondingly scarce, that every day runs a risk of another genius stumbling on to your theme and winning your laurels. I do not expect the editor to give away this secret to me, and I have hoped that in the lapse of years I might discover it myself. At any rate, I hope the editor of the Times has not forgotten that he has yet two unpublished contributions of the writer that he (the writer) has been yearning to see in your delightful weekly."

From the waiting writer's standpoint it does seem a little mystifying, if not unnecessary. But from the editor's standpoint it is hardly less trying, for this reason. An editor is often more interested in the latest article he has accepted than in any other, and would enjoy nothing better than being able to pass on every manuscript to the public fresh from his own reading. Yet both he and his contributor are doomed to continual disappointment by inexorable conditions. So many and so changing are these conditions that only a lifetime in editorial work would serve to bring them all in review. For example, one manuscript must be used at a certain season only; an unexpected combination of other "must" articles, added to conditions of "space" and "fit," and the publisher's edict as to how many pages are justified just then, work together to crowd it out entirely this season. Nothing for it, then, but to wait a year, though it may have been in hand already for three months, while an article received only a week before, which could be used at any time, just makes a desired "fit," and is used immediately. One disappointed writer, one delightfully surprised writer,—both at their wits' end to explain why. So it goes. Length, subject-matter, seasonableness, other manuscripts by the same writer, other articles on the same subject, the early publication of a book in which an article in hand must appear, the death of one person, the birth of another, a coronation, a war, a peace tribunal, a sudden general interest in a certain subject,—all these and many other circumstances, added to the ever-present mechanical conditions that must be met, combine to furnish the elements in the puzzle which even a Connecticut Yankee confesses he has had to give up.—The Sunday School Times.

Letter Department.

Springburn, GLASGOW, August 18.

Editors Herald: Not having contributed to your valuable columns for a considerable length of time, I take this opportunity of doing so to let the Saints in general know that we are still busily engaged in the Master's cause. I came to the land of Scotland on the 8th of January, and since that time I have been trying to tell the story of the angel's message to the best of my ability. Many times I have felt discouraged because of the strong opposition we have to meet here, but the help of God's promises and the realization of the same have so far assisted me to overcome. God has been with me and truly verified his promise to me as his humble servant in granting unto me the spirit and power of my office and calling. To him be all the praise.

Since the return of our esteemed Bro. Rushton from the States, along with our colaborer Bro. Thorburn, we have been preaching mostly on the streets, and we are happy to say there are a number of very nice people interested, and we have every reason to believe they will join hands with us in this great latter-day work. My observation of the few who have united with the church in this land is, that they are Saints indeed, and not in name only, and such as the church may justly feel proud of. I am satisfied, too, that there was no mistake in the sending of Elder Rushton to this place, for if there is a man in the church that is in his proper place it is he. Elder Thorburn and myself, with the local aid, are trying to second his efforts.

On the second of August I had the privilege of attending the mission conference held in Birmingham, which to me was of the best ever held. We had the opportunity of meeting many old acquaintances, also of making new ones. One thing very characteristic was the unity and brotherly love that existed throughout sessions, and all parted, I believe, with a better understanding and a stronger determination to do all that lay in their power for the advancement of the truth. My sojourn in Birmingham was made enjoyable by the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Snead, Jr. May our heavenly Father abundantly bless them.

On my way from Birmingham I called at Derby, where I have a cousin whom I had not seen for eighteen years, so I thought as I had an hour and a half to wait for my train to Clay Cross, I would try and find him, which I had not much trouble in doing. He was pleased to see me and made me feel at home; his wife, too, who is a very nice lady, received me kindly. They would have me stay with them, and I was only too pleased to do so, telling them of the gospel theme. They were just delighted with what I told them and expressed themselves as being very pleased I had called. I left them some tracts and promised I would send more. I got away from them just in time to catch the last train for that night. I reached Clay Cross rather late, but was made welcome at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. William Holmes, who know how to make the missionary feel comfortable; neither do they forget that it takes money to travel from place to place. Sr. Naylor, too, was kind in remembering the lone missionary, and the bag of fruit that she put up was much appreciated upon my whole night's journey home.

My stay in Clay Cross of a week was very enjoyable, and on the Monday, I had the pleasure of joining in the coronation procession round the streets. The Saints had a very fine showing amongst the other schools. Old Bro. S. Holmes, Sr., led us, driving in his carriage. Then Bro. W. Greenwood and the writer, missionaries. Afterwards the brethren and sisters, and then the scholars. This is the first time the Saints have participated in gatherings of this kind, but I sincerely hope it will not be the last.

On Thursday morning I bid adieu to the good Saints and friends of Clay Cross and went to Sheffield, paying a short visit to Brn. and Srs. Platto and Austin and my brother George and wife, leaving there Friday night at fifteen minutes to eight, reaching home at six a. m. next day. I am more than ever desirous of seeing the work established in these British Isles. We are always pleased to see the work advance in every part of the world. We hope this gospel may reach all the honest in heart.

May God bless his children everywhere, is the prayer of your brother.

J. ARBER.

126 Petershill Road.

DEERLODGE, Montana, August 25.

Editors Herald: We concluded our tent meetings at Woodside on the evening of the 18th instant, Bro. White closing with a good effort on the Sabbath question. The audiences were fair and attentive throughout. The Saints were interested and did what they could to make the meetings a success. It was a busy time, however, right in the midst of harvest. In fact, Montana seems to be a strange country, anyway. They were making hay when we arrived here in July, and have been haying and harvesting ever since, and there is grain still standing, waiting for the reaper. Some not ripe. Judging from appearances they will be cutting grain and grass until the middle of September or first of October.

Bitter Root Valley lies north and south, with mountain ranges on either side. Is about seventy-five miles in length, and from three to ten miles wide. The stream runs northward. The valley is very productive, and crops are excellent,—wheat, oats, potatoes, hay, peas, berries, and apples. The trees are loaded with apples. Rather of a desirable place to live in, but we have not seen so much as an acre of corn during the summer.

We made our home mostly with Bro. and Sr. John Johnson, spending some of the time at Brn. E. Burrows, Nels Johnson, and W. Millers, where we were made welcome. Indeed, all of the Saints and friends who had an opportunity, extended hospitality and kindness, so it seemed like leaving home again when the time came to leave Woodside.

There is really no craze over religion, however, out here among the world, of any kind. Outing, fishing, hunting, other amusements, and business seemed to be the general aim. Religion appears to be a kind of back number with many, or something to be attended to when other things are done with.

Tuesday, the 19th, the tent was moved from Woodside to Hamilton. At evening there was a fair audience present and we made a beginning. Time having expired for my stay here, Bro. White concluded to remain and continue meetings as wisdom might direct.

On the morning of the 21st we bade the Saints of Woodside good-bye, Belle and I, and noon found us at Missoula to receive a cordial welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. Dildine. We spent the afternoon here, Sr. Eva Snodgrass giving us a drive about the city, visiting their ranch over in the cañon, returning in time for tea and to take the train at half past seven for this place.

Missoula is the best town in this part of the State. Is well located, has good public school advantages, well built, and rather a desirable place to live.

Leaving Missoula at half past seven p. m., we arrived here at one a. m. next day, train two and one half hours late. Bro. Andrew Christoffersen met us at the depot and has kindly cared for us at his home since. Sr. Christoffersen, Lucy, and Emma uniting to make our stay agreeable. Good Saints. Indeed, this seems to be a kind of natural stopping place for the elders, as the names of all who have labored here are household words.

Deerlodge is a small town built out on the arid lands of Montana. Has water supply for irrigation, a railroad, a prison in which to confine bad characters, but I notice they haven't them all in there yet. The Saints are few in number, but they own a neat little church building, and are trying to keep their meetings going. Have a Sabbath-school. Like most other places they need help and encouragement. Yesterday I preached twice in the church, with seemingly good interest, and once seven miles out of town for the Morrisites or Canaanites. Bro. Christoffersen conveying us out there. I have met with a good many "ites" or factions that have sprung up out of the latter-day work since the rejection in '44, but have never met these people before except an occasional one. Elder A. Hendrickson was in charge and invited me to occupy the morning hour. The audience was small but attentive, and proved to be devoted and zealous in their way of thinking.

Bro. Hendrickson invited us home with him to dinner and treated us very nicely. He has a pleasant family. In fact, these all seem very much like Saints—a nice people. Of their peculiar tenets that keeps them a little separate body or faction by themselves, I know but little or nothing. Like many others they likely attach much importance to something to which there is no particular importance due, and so make these of paramount importance, instead of putting them aside as a mere matter of opinion and not vital, and so join in the great and meritorious work of preaching the gospel to all the world as a "witness," and getting ready for the "great day of the Lord." The old story is revived, "One saith, 'I am of Paul,' and another, 'I am of Apollos,'" etc., when the men held in admiration or their peculiar views are in no way essential or vital to the gospel message, or necessary to building up the church of God. Time and effort wasted over contending for unimportant things. Someway when some men get "set," "established" in a given view there is nothing that can change them. So the Jew goes sullenly along to this day rejecting Christ and trying to "establish his own righteousness." Men worshipers are veritable evils in the world.

One is for Wesley, one for Luther, one for Calvin, another for Campbell, one Brigham, one for Strang, one for Cutler, one for Morris, one for Dowie, and their abstract and peculiar notions and views contending for them as though the heavens would fall if they should slacken in their persistency, instead of taking the counsel of Paul: "If a man think himself to be a prophet or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write are the commandments of the Lord" and stand on the word of God, and let men and their wise sayings and pet theories go as unimportant when considering the great plan of redemption wrought out by Christ. But there were to be a plentiful crop of false prophets and false teachers in the last days, and sure enough they have appeared. But "he that is of God heareth God's word." So "let God be true and every man a liar" so far as "isms" and pet theories are concerned and go on with the gospel work as revealed in the word.

Just received a card from Bro. White stating the interest is good at Hamilton and that he will continue meetings in the tent during the week and over next Sunday. D. C. is good for it.

WM. H. KELLEY.

NANTYGLO, Wales, August 12.

Editors Herald: I left home on May 18, my wife coming as far as Saint Joseph, and on the morning of the 20th we parted. By and by Bro. Kelley came along, "pouring in oil and wine" in a troubled heart, sympathizing, although encouraging me for the journey that I was about to take, and the mission that I was to perform. That same evening found me in Lucas, at the home of John J. Watkins. Had a cold reception (ice cream), but, the weather being warm, it was enjoyed.

It was in Lucas that I preached my first sermon in the year 1884. I was reminded by several of the brethren, with words like this: "Do you remember what the Spirit said a long time ago, 'The sons of them who are dead shalt preach this gospel'?" I said, "Yes, I remember." That was about eighteen years ago. I will never forget the struggle in my first attempt to represent this work and a great many attempts after.

I like Lucas; I heard the word of the Lord there years ago, for instance, this: "And ye young men, according as ye are faithful to me and my word, ye shall be witnesses of me and shall bear testimony to the nations of the earth; yea, some of you, whose pathway lieth in the mountains, shall cause many of lost Israel to return." This was given in February, 1882. One Sunday afternoon, Father Watkins, turned and looked at the young men on the right hand and said: "The Lord has a great work for you young men, and especially you, John." That sank deep into my heart and is there now.

It was through the persuasion of Bro. Wm. Shakespeare that I went to a meeting held in Cleveland at McDiffitt's house, when a tongue was given, and part of the interpretation went thus: "There are men here who are young in years and young in the work who will preach this gospel, and some will cross the waters." When the meeting closed Father Watkins came to me and said, "John, you are one of the young men." I remember quite a number who were in that meeting. John R. Evans, of the Lamoni Stake was there; also, E. B. Morgan, and L. W. Powell; the last two named with myself, were the ones referred to as "young men." I am sorry that those two men are not now in the great harvest field. I presume they will be able to give an account to God for their procedure. If not, they had better get into the field.

I preached Tuesday night and was to speak Wednesday night, but a storm prevented. I met quite a number of old acquaintances, all wishing me well in the work of the Lord. Thursday I went to Chariton and paid Bro. and Sr. Isaac Phillips a visit. They, too, reminded me of a statement made by T. W. Smith, when on his first mission to Australia: "There are young men here that will preach this gospel in the mountains of Wales." Then I felt that peaceful assurance, and we all felt glad in our hearts to know what the Lord had spoken he was able to fulfill. That same day I bade them adieu, and with a "God bless you" I continued on my journey, arriving at Galesburg, Illinois, in the evening, spending the evening and part of the next day with Bro. and Sr. Wilke. Then to Kewanee where mother and three sisters reside. Stayed over Sunday, and tried to speak twice; visited some with Bro. and Sr. Chisnall, mother with me.

I might say here, "God bless the mothers in Israel." There is no doubt that many a prayer has been offered to God for their sons. I often think of the two thousand and sixty in the Book of Mormon times, after their fearful struggle with the Lamanites, they were all spared, and they said: "Our mothers taught us to have faith in God." I again say, "God bless the mothers."

Tuesday, I took train for Kirtland, arriving there on Wednesday. The first one that greeted me was Bro. D. L. Allen, a former laborer with me in Washington, also Bro. L. R. Devore. He had charge of the Temple. This day I realized what I had long desired to see, the house of God, built by the command of God. To me it was a sacred day, and a sacred place. I was then escorted to the home of Apostle G. T. Griffiths. Left the next morning for New York. Sr. Griffiths saw that I got on the right train, and prepared a nice lunch for me. They had prepared a lunch for me in Kewanee, but for some cause or other it did not happen to be in time to get aboard, and either I or the lunch got left. I found Bro. Squire's home in Brooklyn; met Bro. Thorburn, and that evening, Bro. Rushton; so the next day, Saturday 31, we three, in company, left the shores of America for a distant land across the sea. Handkerchiefs, hats, flags, and a newspaper were held out in the breeze.

The next day, Sunday, June 1, came, and we went from stem to stern, hunting for the man who had charge of the second cabin. Then arrangements were made, and Bro. Rushton preached at eleven a. m. The sermon was well received by nearly all, and at night I preached, and I, John like, told them what I believed in regard to eternal judgment. By so doing I got into trouble; got the brethren into trouble, and also the passengers got troubled, too, and of course, "This man doth exceedingly trouble our city;" there, what "Mormonism;" "You ought to be thrown overboard with your doctrine." Then a Methodist minister got up and apologized.

Well, time passed on, and a talk now and then with the passengers occupied our time the rest of the day. And to my surprise the last day that we were on the boat, a lady came up to me, and asked, "How many wives have you?" She was from Texas. I said, "One; ain't that enough?" "Why! they say that you have three, and you have the pictures of them on that button." "This is the picture of my wife, and this is the picture of my little girl, aged eleven, and this is the picture of my little boy, aged seven." There is no doubt but that the picture of that little boy looked as large to them as a woman forty years old. The people looked kind of queer, and I thought it was because they were leaving America. It makes people feel queer on a boat.

We got ashore at last, about three p. m., and were glad, but the ground seemed to be loose—everything seemed to move. It took me two days to persuade myself different. Stayed at Bro. Rushton's that night. Preached two or three times in Hamilton, then bidding the brethren good-bye, I started for Wales, my field of labor, arriving at Cardiff, and was met by Brn. Gould and Trapp, and after a talk with the brethren at the home of Bro. Gould, I went to see Sr. Lewis. Stayed a few days and told all the news I had to tell them, then on to Dinas. Met Bro. Lewis in Perth, also Brn. Leat Bishop and Jones from Scranton, and got to the home of Bro. Edwards. I think I went that evening to Tony Pandey to prayer-meeting.

The next night at Penygraig (the rock head) I preached in the open air to quite a number. I think it will be all right to give you some of my experiences in Wales. Tony Pandey was my second place to speak outside, and it makes no difference whether on the boat or on the shore, some one gets offended. I raised the ire of one of the Plymouth brethren; he talked after me and I after him. The second night a Baptist minister, then an Irishman. So we had quite a time of it. At last they got to pushing and they pushed me down the hill. Then I attempted to cross the street to the other side, and a man took hold of me and pulled me back. Then they began to push again, so I got hold of a lamp-post and held on to that; then a man told me to go quick, "I hear them talking back there what they are going to do." I told him I would not go, nor did I until I got ready. I have an idea what an angry mob is. In thinking of it the next day, I felt sad to think the Lord would not be concerned in the matter and his work. My attention was drawn to my hand satchel, so I opened it and read these words: "In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them." I did not know that such a statement was in the book.

This country has good roads to walk on, but a bicycle would be better, but I have not the bike, so I walk. The pennies in this country are large but hard to get. Had a very pleasant mission conference in Birmingham, met all the brethren from America, but Bro. Muceus of Norway. Was glad to meet Bro. Enge. It reminded me of former years in Washington.

My address will be No. 55 King Street, Nantyglo, Wales.

JOHN DAVIS.

JOPLIN, Missouri, September 3.

Editors Herald: June 2 I and wife and three children landed at San Francisco, having traveled seven thousand two hundred miles by sea in twenty days. No language could describe our feelings when passing the Golden Gate, and seeing our dear native land again. We could hardly realize that nine years had rolled away since we left San Francisco for Australia.

We tarried only a few days at San Francisco to make arrangements to get reduced fares to Kansas City, which was readily accomplished by assistance of Bishop Parkin.

I met with the Saints at Bro. Saxe's home (Wednesday night prayer-meeting) and the impression of the Spirit seemed to indicate that there was a great work in that city for the Saints to perform by humble and faithful obedience to all the requirements of the restored gospel. An effort towards building a church-house in a suitable locality, would, I believe, be a move in the right direction, and I believe our heavenly Father would richly bless such effort on the part of the San Francisco Saints. The leadings of the Holy Spirit, given in answer to the prayer of faith, will always lead to success in such efforts, if faithfully obeyed.

Bro. and Sr. Parkin and Bro. and Sr. Saxe gave us needed assistance to make ready to move on eastward. "Lord reward their kindness" is our earnest prayer.

Our next stop was at Denver, where I labored one year on my way to Australia. Here the Holy Spirit told me that I should live to return again from Australia, nine years ago. Here also I was directed regarding the work that I should perform in that far-off island mission by the voice of revelation. Here we got married on the eve of our departure nine years ago; and now in fulfillment of prophecy, we are back again and are richer in that we possess many years of experience in the work and have three dear children, born in Australia, and can rejoice in the many blessings of God that followed our labors, "in signs, wonders, miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost," as promised by the Master.

The dear faces of the Denver Saints seemed so familiar that the nine years of separation seemed more like nine months. Oh, what thrills of joy went through our souls to look at those loving faces again! The tears of love in their eyes clearly indicated that the ties of Christian love formed nine years ago were still as strong as then. All seemed to have a desire for me to locate in Denver and labor in that city again. After ten days of visiting, preaching, and administering to the afflicted, we moved on to Independence, where we arrived just ten years after our departure in 1892. To us Independence is "home," and "Zion," and the most desirable place to live on the face of the earth. Here we first worshiped with God's Saints and heard the gifts of prophecy and tongues and here I was ordained a seventy and sent to the islands of the sea by the voice of revelation. O Zion, lovely land of Zion! "Beautiful for situation is Zion, the praise of the whole earth." Some of the faithful workers had gone to the paradise of rest, and we were sad in the thought that their dear faces were no longer in the assembly of the Saints, but in the testimony meeting came the message, by the voice of revelation, that in the wisdom and loving kindness of God they were called away, and that the bereaved ones would meet them again in the flesh, if faithful, in the glorious morning of the resurrection and appearing of our loving Redeemer.

We rested two weeks at Independence, and enjoyed the holy communion of loving Saints, and then moved on to city of Joplin, my field of labor, where we were received and kindly cared for by faithful Saints. Here we settled down to "home keeping" once more after a ten-thousand-mile journey. The lovely illuminated address that Australian Saints gave us on the eve of our departure is now in our front room admired by all. My hog-skin valise that the Sydney Saints gave me is in use and very much appreciated, as also is the emu egg and gold brooch given by the Daughters of Zion at Sydney. The loving hearts who so kindly ministered to our wants for nine long years in Australia, will always have a warm place in our hearts. May our heavenly Father keep them faithful to this great latter-day work.

The Lord directed me to go to Australia and also directed me to return, and has sustained and blessed all along the line of duty, and I hope to always be in the faith of duty which is the only faith of safety for Saints of the Most High to walk in. My home address is 2327 Anna Baxter Street, Joplin, Missouri.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this far-off corner of Joseph's land may be of interest to some. Since coming to our field of labor we have been trying to do what we could for the benefit of the Master's cause. Being a stranger in a strange land makes it difficult in the way of operating to the best advantage, but we can try and then see what the result will be. Bro. Powell and I labored for some time in and near Spokane, Washington, with somewhat hopeful prospects, then I leaving Bro. Powell, started for British Columbia, calling at Seattle and speaking for them there three times. Found the few Saints there trying to keep the camp-fire blazing. Then on to Lacouner, spoke once and was urged to stay there and at Seattle longer, but had to hasten on to New West Minster, only to find that Bro. Rainey's had left that day for a visit and to attend the reunion in California to be gone about sixty days. But the folks who were taking care of their place kindly kept me that night, and the next day I went to Sunbury where Sr. Butterfield and family live; was there two or three days, and Sunday spoke in their schoolhouse; but as it was the busiest time of fishing season, could not continue, so came to Vancouver. Found the Saints well and glad to see one of like faith. While here met several of the Saints, some having lately come here from the eastern part of the Dominion. They are Bro. and Sr. Clark and son and two young sisters by the name of Wilson, and Bro. and Sr. Isaac McMullen, they having lived here for some time, making in all eight Saints here at present, but are so situated so as they can not hold meetings. Hall rent is very high and the people so bitter that they will not let them hold in a private house.

Bro. McMullen's were put out of one house for having meeting there and houses are scarce, so they have to be careful, but the most of them came to his house, and we talked together and prayed and I encouraged them what I could, for the Savior said,

"He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." Then I bade them good-bye and went to Nanaimo, where Elder William Johnson lives, preached a few times, and we had a prayer and sacrament meeting and I gave them what encouragement I could, but the people who have religion want no more, and those who have none want none, so can not say that anything much was accomplished. The people will not come out. Money and pleasure seem to be all they care for. Coast scenery and salt water beaches are fine, but they will not answer the purpose of the gospel when the Savior comes; but the people will fulfill his predictions the same as the Jews did those of the prophets of old. If I were to tell my opinion I am afraid it would not be very flattering. It might sound like some of the people were creed-bound, and it may be Brn. MacGregor and Evans would bear out the statement, but they can not keep me from putting into practice Paul's teaching in Acts 20: 28.

Will go to Chilliwack in a few days, and do what I can there for the cause. If the Saints in well-located branches with their churches to meet in, could only see and feel the anxiety of the scattered Saints! How anxious and hungry they are for the word of God, and longing for the time to come when they can come and be with the Saints in a gathered condition, and enjoy those feasts that are promised to the faithful. Dear Saints let me plead with you, one and all, do all that you can to make the branch in which you live a good, spiritual, lively branch, (if you do your whole duty you can,) then when time seems to accumulate on your hands just go to your closet, bow and pray for the scattered Saints and the missionaries who have to meet the world in all its various forms of evil and the work will grow more rapidly.

My mission address is 623 Madelia Street, Spokane, Washington; home address, Stewartville, Missouri.

May God bless all the Saints is the prayer of your brother, J. W. ROBERTS.

HULEN, Oklahoma, August 31.

Editors Herald: My honest and earnest endeavor has been, and still shall be, I trust, to sow the seed of the gospel of Christ. It is with a strong and heavenly desire to follow the Master's command, and that hope which enriches the soul in eternity, together with the natural common-sense knowledge that it is right to do right, that leads me on and on in its grand purpose. I have been trying to get the people to understand the message of my mission, and how well I have succeeded remains yet to be seen. I know the gospel has been presented to them for a witness, for the Holy Spirit was there confirming the word. However, men of worldly minds do not always assimilate that food calculated to bring salvation. In the sowing of the seed, for the reason of the unproductiveness of the soil of the soul and its adaptation to the growth of tares, the grain is hindered from growing and many times from even sprouting.

Our reunion was one of profit to all that attended. Throughout the attendance was light, and if we would measure our success by that, I would call it almost a failure, for I do not believe that there were over fifty Saints who camped on the ground at any one time. Those of the Saints not in attendance missed the excellent discourses of Bishop E. L. Kelley, as well as those of the missionaries of Oklahoma.

I came to this new country shortly after the reunion closed and effected one opening that I believe will result in good. The country is new, and the people very much mixed up over religious doctrines and creeds. This is an advantage, for sectarian preachers do not have as firm a grasp when they are not bound in congregations.

Never before in my life did the rays of the sun seem to beat down so penetrating and burning to me. The grass here is dry, and the sod crop damaged greatly. No rain scarcely in this county since the last of May. The registration of heat flourishes around 105 in the shade. Lawton is now a hustling place, but my candid opinion is it is overreaching itself and will let a great many speculators down.

All the missionaries in Oklahoma are doing much good for the work, judging from reports. It is gratifying to read the reports from other localities of the great vineyard, and to know others are making such sacrifices; it stimulates me and makes me want to do more.

The good old HERALD is such a precious comfort that I do not want to be without it. Laden with its priceless truth, it is sent forth from Zion to the different parts of the earth as a factor for good to bless and strengthen the Saints in their warfare. Saints, if you are praying for knowledge do not discard one of the very factors that will edify and instruct you. You are the one that is at fault, if you do not keep pace with the church, when you do not take and read the church papers. There is no pleasure resort where we can stop off at and lay down the armor and while away many precious days; but the work and warfare is constant, and as we have started, let us continue.

Ambition many times steps to the door of our heart and asks: Why this labor, without a compensation suitable that the position, influence, and capacity of usefulness you otherwise would command? The promise of God is that the compensation is not in worldly wages, and is not given to you in this condition always; but it shall be given after the labor and toil of this life is past, and then it will be paid in full. Whatever labor we have done, how we have done it, and the character we have developed in the process of our career here, we will be remunerated accordingly. Sometimes we discriminate between a preparation for this world and a preparation for the world to come. I think we should prepare for both and in the accomplishment of the highest earthly success, emolument, and honor it need not be outside the gospel of Christ. We are too apt to think of the course of earthly study and discipline in early life chiefly as a specific preparation for our worldly business career; to gain wealth in after years. This, however important, is but a secondary purpose, for if this is only the aim for the cultivation of the mind and soul then you have largely failed, and put your life work to an improper use; for far, far above your profession and mastering, it should be your manhood and responsibility to God as a child of his. Development and culture of the mind here, in my estimation, has its highest value. But the application of it should not be entirely to gratify the desires of the flesh, but to nourish the immortal soul and build a character that will stand the test of the ages. Life's tedious pursuits should also be characterized by a development of the soul to God and his purposes which will be vindicated by honorable and righteous deeds, which portray sentiments of a noble and true manhood in a pure and holy life. I think our ultimate success in our vocation depends on character. Genius and skill unsubstantiated by character may glitter for a time, but it will vanish. The gospel of Christ, if properly obeyed and followed, will give to all a character of worth. It will change the retaliating nature into one of passiveness and meekness. It will give humbleness and will stamp the life work with a nobleness of character and true integrity of worth that adversity can not alter. It will cause sympathy for the poor and miserable of earth's creatures. It will lead us to deal justly and honorably with our fellow men. It will bring that sacred consciousness that we are indeed the children of God and are approved of him and our names are written in heaven. Above all it will develop in us the attributes of the noblest of men, with motives, thoughts, and actions blended for the grand purpose of bettering conditions here, and formulating a character corresponding to some extent with that of the Son of God, which will give the possessor the joys of eternity in the celestial glory of God.

Is there anything worth more to us? The goal of progress is farther along than the attainment of a moral character, but it means life, and a continual growth through that life, supplied by that life-giving principle, the Holy Spirit, connecting us to the "true vine," causing us to be alive, active, and progressive until a character divine in nature is attained. "And what," says Micah, "doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?" are words of so much worth to us if we would heed them. We have not accepted a thing in this great latter-day work that we are ashamed of. The work will be accomplished, for the inspiration from God has declared it, and failure never was known to God's purposes. We have nothing to fear. We have a vantage that they have not.

Let us strive still harder to attain a greater degree of righteousness for we should excel. May we so labor, live, and watch, so when the Master comes we will be ready.

Your brother,

S. S. SMITH.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 29.

Editors Herald: The Des Moines District reunion was held at Newton, beginning the 15th inst. and closing on the 28th. The large district tent was located on the Jasper County fairgrounds, and there the Saints of the district camped, eighteen walled tents being erected. President Joseph Smith accompanied by his wife, and Patriarch Alexander H. Smith and his stenographer, Leon A. Gould, arrived on Friday the first day. Rain seriously interfered with the interest and attendance at the meeting, and yet every session for the nine days was held as planned.

The reunion proper organized on Friday afternoon, Joseph Smith, Fred A. Smith, J. F. Mintun, and H. A. McCoy being chosen as presidents, and A. A. Reams, secretary. The order of service observed during the week was: prayer service at nine a. m., preaching at fifteen minutes to eleven a. m., half past two and eight p. m.

The District Sunday-school convention was held on Monday, August 18, and a good interest manifested in the Sunday-school work. Reports from a majority of the schools were received. The association voted ten dollars to Graceland College. The district religio convention was held on Wednesday the 20th. District officers were elected as follows: President, A. A. Reams, Des Moines; vice-president, Wardell Christy, Dallas Center; secretary, Alice Kramer, Beacon; treasurer, Albertus Walls, Grinnell. Elders present not mentioned above were: M. M. Turpen, J. S. Roth, and F. A. Russell.

Three were baptized during the meeting. The sermons by the different elders were gladly received by the Saints, and when the weather permitted, large congregations of people from Newton and vicinity listened attentively. Especially was this true on Sunday afternoon when President Joseph Smith preached to a large audience, showing that the doctrine of polygamy never was a part of the true faith.

The social meetings each morning were spiritual feasts for all present and all were moved with the same impulse. The voice of the Spirit was given on several occasions to individuals and to the Saints in general. The necessity of earnest and constant prayer was urged upon the Saints and the gathering was also spoken of and promises that it would soon take place.

Patriarch Alexander H. Smith occupied in his office and thirty-seven of the Saints received their blessings under his hands. The blessing is one of the higher principles of the gospel law and comes with special force to the Saints and serves to bring us into closer communion with God.

The district conference was held on Saturday, August 23. The committee in charge of the reunion conducted the boarding hall and with such satisfaction to themselves and all the Saints that it is believed that for another year all the Saints attending the reunion will come to board, and thus do away with all individual cooking on the camp ground. All expense in connection with the reunion was cheerfully met by the Saints, and only one public collection was taken. It was voted unanimously to hold a reunion in 1903 and the time and place was left to a committee of three—H. A. McCoy, Wardell Christy, and W. C. Hidy.

The reunion was a success in every particular, and such gatherings but serve to better prepare us for the great gathering, and all who spent the time together at Newton were strengthened and helped in the conflict of life and better prepared for the gathering by association with those of like faith.

Editors Herald: I feel impressed to-night, somehow, to write you a few lines, though not a great writer. We have just had our mission conference, and it has been a good meeting together of Saints. As I met with them on the Sunday, I felt it was good to be a Saint in latter days, and felt thankful to our heavenly Father for the noble men he has sent into this work to preach the gospel to all men. We had the pleasure of having Brn. Rushton and Thorburn from Scotland with us at our home, also Bro. Davis, who is in Wales just now, and we enjoyed their visit very much. They helped to give us some fresh food for thought and encouragement which was good for our spiritual body, as we sometimes get feeling a bit low in spirits. We believe meeting and talking with our brethren and sisters is a great blessing to us as there are only a few live members in our branch. We must try to keep our lamps burning that we may, by our lives, be the means in God's hand of bringing some to see this glorious gospel in its true light as we see it.

I feel thankful every day of my life that I obeyed God's commandment to be baptized by those who have power to do so. We have had many, many blessings bestowed upon us since that day. My husband and myself have been in the church over nine years, and both feel well in the work and pray ever for its advancement. We know that God is the same unchangeable God, and will bless us always. It is good to feel that he is our Father, that we can go to him at all times and places, knowing that he will hear and answer our prayers. We know that the more we try to live the life God would have us live, the easier it is. Some say it is hard living a good life, but we find it is not so. God is the best pay-master. He gives us full pay and something over.

We ever pray for all Saints and the church's welfare, that it may prosper. We ask an interest in your prayers that we may ever remain faithful and be able to bring our children up in the right way.

PITTSBURG, Kansas, August 30.

Editors Herald: Spring River District reunion has just closed, and I am sure you will be glad and rejoice with us in the blessings it afforded. Our preachers were Apostle I. N. White, Bishop Ellis Short, and Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, besides our own missionary force, Bro. Keck and his worthy associates, and a number of local brethren. The reunion was held near Angola, Kansas. We were camped in a beautiful grove on Bro. Ryan's farm, with all the beauties around us nature could possibly afford. Our heavenly Father dwelt with us from first to last, breathing his loving Spirit in hallowed influences, blessing every effort made by his servants and handmaidens. Preaching was of the missionary type by Bro. White and his field force, while that by High Priest Gunsolley was in loving, sympathetic counsel, making plain and possible a practical application of the principles of the law of life. Then came the earnest exhortation of Bishop Short to obey in deed as well as word; unity of Saints in faith, work, interest, and devotion, showing necessity and beauties of sacrifice in the work of salvation.

Prayer-meetings were interesting and spiritual. Many declared that they had received greater evidence at this reunion than they had ever received of their heavenly Father's loving interest in his people, and of the power attending the wonderful gospel of Christ.

The work of Bro. Gunsolley in interest of Sunday-school and Religio was indeed appreciative and we feel assured will result in lasting good to our district. Bro. Gunsolley was with us two years ago and his efforts then are rewarded now by the clouds of prejudice and ignorance having rolled away and given place to beams of tolerance and interest in the noble work of developing the infancy and youth of Zion.

The reunion committee made all needful arrangements for the comfort of the Saints, which we believe were appreciated. Brn. Charles Ryan, James Davis, and Gunter were almost constantly employed working for our comfort. Our Father, who only can, will certainly reward them abundantly.

Seven precious souls were buried with our Lord in baptism by Bro. Keck.

There were several heavy showers of rain fell upon the camp, but none seemed injured or annoyed.

How sublime is the spirit of brotherly love, the loving interest of God's people in one another! May heaven help us to purify our hearts that we may be in a condition to gather to Zion, and ever be with the Lord.

Hopefully,

MOLLIE DAVIS.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

By reason of a division of the territory of the Northwestern Kansas District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, it has been necessary to provide for a new agent for the Northwestern Kansas District as now constituted, and the appointment has been made and duly ratified by the conference of said district, of Bro. Frederick S. Ward, of Gaylord, Kansas, as the new agent in place of Bro. Arthur Smith agent of former district. We commend Bro. Ward to the Saints and friends of the Northwestern Kansas District and trust that before the 31st of December, the day for closing the yearly report of agents, every member of the church in the district will have performed his or her duty in arranging with the new agent to fulfill the law of Christ relating to temporal things. To attain to the blessings of the Lord in spiritual and temporal things we must obey the law in its fullness; let no one be a laggard in duty now when all should be workers. "He that is faithful in that which is least will be faithful in much; and he that is unjust in that which is least will be unjust in much." Let us fear God and keep his commandments.

To Bro. Arthur Smith, who so long filled the office of agent in the district, we extend especial thanks, and trust the Lord will bless him in the new field in whatever part of the work he shall engage. In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

GAYLORD, Kansas, September 2, 1902.

The Religio Quarterly.

LESSONS ON THE BOOK OF MORMON AND ARCHÆOLOGY, AND PROGRAMS.

Religions.—Every member should be provided with this Quarterly, as the lessons will not appear any more in the Autumn Leaves. The lessons can not be successfully prepared without it. The Quarterly is a very great improvement over the former plan of study and work. You ought by all means to have it.

Locals.—It would be a good thing if the locals would see to it that every member is provided with this first number. Let the Good Literature Committee be encouraged and assisted to put a Quarterly in the hands of each member the first quarter. The benefit to the society in increased interest and attendance will more than compensate.

Districts.—An effort should be made by districts to see that the locals take hold of the Quarterly idea and push it. The study begins with this first quarter at the beginning of the Book of Mormon. Many societies have organized since the series of lessons began and have not had the privilege of studying the first part of the book. Here is an opportunity for all to start at the first of the book together. Let us take advantage of it now.

Parents.—Your boys and girls should be encouraged, whether members of the Religio or not, to study the word of God. The Book of Mormon is an interesting study, and especially so with the help this Quarterly will give. The ancient civilization of America as well as the Biblical evidences are studied with it. With encouragement from you it will not be difficult to interest Home Visitors' Low Rate Excursion.

Sentiment inspired by patriotism has—and it is to be hoped always will afford, a one-cent-a-mile rate to enable the "Boys in Blue" to assemble in reunion at least once a year, from all points of the compass. Such a rate is authorized from all points east of Chicago to Washington for this purpose in October, 1902. Such a rate has been afforded once a year since the first reunion of the veterans of the War of '61. This especially low rate has become popular, not only for the purpose for which it was established, but for other purposes, chief among which we recognize the opportunity thus afforded to visit friends, at or convenient to the place of reunion, because of the low rate, and because of the favorable opportunity by reason of the liberal extension of time limit for return.

On dates authorizing sale of Grand Army Excursion Tickets to Washington, for the Reunion of 1902, are also authorized similar reduction in rates, from all points west of Chicago, with time limits the same as on such tickets to Washington, excursion tickets to any point in the territory of the Central Passenger Association, on or reached by the Nickel Plate Road. ## Editorial.

In the August number of the Arena there appeared an article by President Joseph Smith on the "Origin of American Polygamy." It clearly sets forth the history of American polygamy, and makes its origin clear. Speaking of the article, the editor of the Arena says: "In presenting an article this month by the son of the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, we are convinced that it will be regarded as a piece of interesting news by almost every reader of the Arena. The fact seems conclusive that polygamy was originally no part of the doctrine or practice of the Mormon church. Its introduction in later years was apparently without the sanction of its founders, and the establishing of this truth should go far to remove the present odium from the institution and to relieve our Government from the stigma of religious persecution."

PULPIT FAIRNESS.

In the Independent Times, of Hutchinson, Minnesota, issue for September 4, is a report of a lecture on "Mormonism" by a Mr. Foght. Many of the old-time errors were repeated; and the report states that when, at the close of the lecture, a "Mormon" missionary arose and asked to be allowed a few words, "Reverend Crozier asked him to be seated and stated that the Methodist church was no place in which to defend Mormonism; that there was a hall in town which could be secured for such a public meeting." With that, the paper states, he proceeded to close the services. "His course," says the reporter, "was generally approved by those present."

It appears a little strange, from the standpoint of fairness, that a Methodist church-building should be a suitable place in which to make an attack on Mormonism and yet would be unfit for a few words from a "Mormon missionary." Does it mean that the Methodist pulpit is characteristically one-sided? Does it mean that we may expect to hear from the Methodist pulpits attacks made on anything which does not harmonize with Methodism, and yet these same pulpits be closed to those attacked to make a defense? Is Reverend Crozier's action a fair sample of what we may expect from all the ministers of that church? Would not the spirit of fairness have prompted Mr. Crozier to say to that lone "Mormon

Doctor E. G. Hirsch, a noted rabbi, has recently declared that America is near an industrial war. He likens present conditions in America to those which existed in France just previous to the outbreak of the great French Revolution. He says: "The powerful of earth should realize that we are in the midst of the same conditions that existed in France and which brought on the revolution. The rich and powerful classes in France refused to take warning from what was going on about them and relied upon the power which they fancied they had. The revolution came like the eruption of a volcano, and we in America should take warning. . . . Right now we are standing over a volcano which may burst forth with all the fury of a Pelée."

missionary," "Sir, if we have misrepresented you, this pulpit is open to you for a defense?" Were Mr. Crozier placed alone in a congregation of "Mormons," and there he heard a "lecture" on "Methodism," filled with error from beginning to end, and on asking for the privilege to say a few words he were told that a "Mormon" church is no place for a defense of Methodism, how would he feel? Would he feel that the "Mormons" were at all inclined to be fair? Or would he not feel that the "Mormons" feared their intrenchments could not stand attack?

When our faith gets so weak that we can not hear another man's defense, and listen patiently, then there is something wrong.

"A SLIGHTED OPPORTUNITY."

Under the above caption the following appeared in the Millennial Star for August 28, 1902:

While in Berlin last week President Lyman, together with Presidents Hugh J. Cannon and Levi E. Young, had an interview with United States Ambassador Andrew D. White. After the business was concluded, Mr. White entered into friendly conversation with them. This was very enjoyable, as the ambassador is probably the oldest and most experienced member of the United States diplomatic corps. He has also been president of Cornell University, and through study and extended travel has gained a wealth of experience. After describing his visit to Salt Lake City in 1892 with Mr. Andrew Carnegie and their going through the then unfinished temple, he said he wished to tell them a little story that had never been told to any "Mormon" before.

When a boy he lived in Syracuse, New York, where his father was cashier of a bank. The clerks of the establishment belonged to a club, organized for mutual entertainment and development, and here they used to meet together and discuss topics of the day. One evening they had prepared themselves for the discussion of "Momonism." Some took one side of the question and spoke in favor of the new religion, and others opposed it. While the debate was in progress a stranger entered. He was dressed in gray clothes and had a traveling bag in his hand. Sitting down in the back of the room he listened attentively. At a convenient time he arose and asked the chairman if he might speak on the subject. Finding that the by-laws gave only members of the club the right to speak, this privilege was refused. The man in gray resumed his seat and listened quietly until the discussion was over and then departed. Next day the club men found that their visitor was no less a personage than Joseph Smith, the "Mormon" Prophet, and then they were sorry indeed that they had not suspended the rules and allowed him to speak, but the opportunity was gone.

A SCION OF BOONE.

The following was sent us by some one in the West. It is taken from the Daily Mercury, of San Jose, California, for September 2. It will be of some interest to our readers, because of its connection with our church history. It appears that the reporter has made some mistakes concerning the time when polygamy was practiced. This reporter has the practice introduced in Missouri in the very earliest days of the church, near some twenty years before it was first introduced, and that in Utah,

SCION OF DANIEL BOONE VISITING IN SAN JOSE.

There was a notable guest at the reunion of the Pioneers on Saturday last when Mrs. Colonel Younger introduced to the visitors Mrs. J. M. Palmer of Napa. Mrs. Palmer comes of good Southern stock. Her father was Governor Lillburn Boggs of Missouri, who achieved a unique place in history by his efforts to drive the Mormons from Jackson County in that State, the fabled Garden of Eden of the followers of Joseph Smith and afterwards of Brigham Young.

The agitation against the Mormons was accompanied by many acts of violence. They had come West from Ohio and according to "revelation" of Joseph Smith the area included in Jackson County was accorded the Garden of Eden.

Governor Boggs was importuned to ask the Mormons to move. The people were opposed to the polygamous practices then a part and parcel of the Mormon religion, and in his zeal to serve the State he was shot from ambush twice. The wounds were not serious and he recovered to be elected a second term, while the Mormon colony pursued their way to Nauvoo, Illinois, a year later to move West under the leadership of Brigham Young to Utah, where the "prophet" selected Salt Lake City as the future capital of his followers.

Mrs. Palmer came to California in 1846 with her father. The house of Boggs became famous in Sonoma County and became the headquarters of General Vallejo. At that time she was a mere girl but she remembers distinctly the raising of the "Bear Flag."

As a child she remembers the crossing of the plains. As a great-granddaughter of Daniel Boone she is justly proud of her Southern descent. In her youth she was an intimate friend of many of the early figures in the history of the State. She is a magnificent specimen of the old-time Southern woman and bears her three score years gracefully.

It seems that the editorial departments of the HERALD and Ensign have common experiences. In the Ensign for September 11 the following item appeared in the editorial column. We wish to indorse it, and hence republish it: "We occasionally receive letters in which the writers aver that they were impressed by the Spirit—meaning, of course, the Holy Spirit—to write. But when reading that which has been written as the result of such impression, the absence of that which instructs and edifies, bears unmistakable evidence that the writers were moved, perhaps, only by their emotional nature, and a desire to manifest their love for the work of the Lord; commendable in itself, but not, correctly speaking, the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit of God is one of intelligence, and when any one is moved by his influence that which is uttered, either orally, or by writing, will be edifying and instructive, and uplifting to those who hear and heed."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Mrs. Helen Sherwin, of Miami, Indiana, wrote on September 2, ordering some tracts. She says: "I could use hundreds of them if I was able to buy so many. I have tried to start a tract fund so the traveling ministry could be kept supplied, without cost to them, for I know much good can be done by giving tracts and papers to my neighbors, and strangers, too. I have found a family who is acquainted with Bro. E. C. Briggs, and his early ministry. I am trying to keep them in reading matter. They are favorable; if I can not convert them I will at least clear my skirts of their blood. That part belongs to God, anyway."

J. Arthur Davis wrote from Rock Island, Illinois, September 15: "We had a splendid conference at Canton, Illinois, yesterday."

Joseph Smith wrote from Dow City, Iowa, September 12: "The reunion is growing, there being some fifty-five or sixty tents on the ground; but it is still not up to either of the two previous years here. No sickness in the camp."

Under date of July 23, Joseph F. Burton wrote from Papeete, Tahiti: "We have just got through with the printing matter for this year. We have printed the work and instruction of Bro. Alexander to the church here, in a small pamphlet of twenty-two pages, and a new Sunday-school book of lessons principally prepared by Bro. Gilbert and Emma, who were appointed by the conference, with myself, to prepare and print them. They will be ready for mailing next Thursday, and Emma and I expect to start for the Paumotus on a schooner Friday. Bro. and Sr. Gilbert are up there now, but we have not had any way to get word to them nor from them for about six weeks. Elder Tuata, of Taenga was lately visiting his daughter in Fakarava. She is a member of the church, but her husband is a Catholic. Tuata encouraged his daughter to go to his meetings. She went, and for so doing her husband abused her. The French policeman learning the cause forbade Tuata preaching or praying in his own house or elsewhere. He wrote me of the affair and I went to see the authorities about the matter, who after hearing the matter said: 'Well, we can not put brains into the heads of the natives. They are free to pray or worship whatever they like, and neither that policeman nor any one else has a right to stop them. But what can we do? Of course he is free to worship before this.' And so it proved; for when the policeman learned that Tuata had written to Tahiti, he revoked his former order. This same thing was also lately attempted in Niau and Anaa, and possibly in other places. Such petty annoyances are continually taking place, through the efforts of the Protestants and Catholics, who, I suppose, think they are doing God service in such petty persecutions of their neighbors. Emma and I are quite well. I had an attack of the lumbago, which made me feel about ninety-nine years old; but again being free from that I feel as well as usual, and as young as I did twenty years ago."

Bro. H. A. McCoy writes us from Milo, Iowa, asking us to make correction about the Newton reunion committee. Bro. McCoy disclaims any credit, but speaks highly of the work of Brn. Pitcher and Clark. We have previously made note of the error.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In HERALD for August 27, 1902, volume 49, number 35, fourth and fifth lines should read, "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world;" also in HERALD for September 10, 1902, volume 49, number 37, in article entitled, "Birthright in the Priesthood," Bible verses credited "Habakkuk" should read Hebrews, the abbreviation Heb. misread Hab. causing the mistake.

E. Rannie writes us from Omaha, Nebraska, that the St. Louis Post-Despatch for August 31 contains the first of a series of articles about the Aztecs, an exploring party of seven persons having been sent out by that journal. Bro. Rannie thought this would be of sufficient interest to the Saints to justify notice.

A glass worker at Matthews, Indiana, has succeeded in making malleable glass. For many, many years the secret of making this glass has been sought. It was known to the ancients, but the secret was lost.

Graceland College opened its doors Monday for another year's work. Little or no class work was done that day, the time being largely spent in scheduling students. Prospects are good. Quite a number of students have come in from outside places, and the strength of the faculty insures a splendid year's work being done. At a meeting of the Board on Saturday last Bro. J. P. Anderson was made instructor in botany, zoölogy, and allied sciences. He makes a very worthy addition to the teaching force. The members of the faculty were all at their places Monday, and all seemed imbued with a determination to do a year of earnest and good work. We shall keep our readers informed as to Graceland developments.

Our business manager returned from Dow City Tuesday morning. He reports the attendance as being rather small as compared with previous years. He thought the coolness of the weather and the farmers being behind with their work were the chief factors in causing poor attendance; but we must remember that there are scores of reunions being held every year now, and hence the Western Iowa reunion can not expect to be as large as in previous years when reunions were not so numerous.

Some of the South American republics are having troublesome times. News was received, however, at Washington on September 15 that the Colombian revolution was entirely quelled, and that Colombia was again quiet. Rebellions and revolutions seem quite common in South America. Fighting in Venezuela has been quite severe. News from Willemstad, Curacao, September 13, stated that on September 11 a serious battle commenced in the vicinity of Tinaquillo, Venezuela. There were about four thousand troops on either side, the government troops being commanded by General Garrido, and the revolutionists by Generals Mendoza, Botalla, and Riera.

AMERICAN ANTI-CIGARET LEAGUE.

The American Anti-Cigaret League, which is an organization of boys and girls of the United States and Canada, now numbering over one million members, bids fair to be one of the greatest juvenile organizations that has ever existed. Already it outnumbers the once very popular Childrens' Band of Hope clubs.

As the cigaret is primarily the enemy of the youth, it is not surprising that these million pledge signers with their enthusiasm will be the greatest factor in extending the agitation which is bound to result in the passing of the cigaret as a popular habit. In fact, the cigaret smoker is already classed with the opium and morphine user, the drunkard and "the smart, tricky chap" who is not wanted in society, business, or healthy sports.

During an anti-cigaret campaign held recently in Winnepeg, Manitoba, a reporter of the Evening Telegram of that city interviewed a number of prominent local business men with the hope of ascertaining whether any of them barred the cigaret.

D. B. Hanna, Superintendent of the Canadian Northern Railway, said: "I would not have a young man in my employ, if I knew that he smoked cigarets. I consider that the effects of such a habit make it impossible for a young man to do his work properly."

J. H. Ashdown, the wholesale and retail merchant of Winnepeg, makes the following statement: "I allow no smoking, whatsoever, during business hours, and I would not knowingly engage a young man whom I knew to be a cigaret smoker."

G. R. Crow, Manager of the Northern Elevator Company, said he would not take a young man into his employ who smoked cigarets. He added that if he were able to carry out his wishes, no one in his employ at the present time should do so.

Not long ago, the Superintendent of the West Superior, Wisconsin, Railway Company discharged twenty-five laborers, because he found them smoking cigarets.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla Company has made the following public announcement: "Believing that the smoking of cigarets is injurious to both mind and body, thereby unfitting young men for their best work; therefore, after this date, we will not employ any young man under the age of twenty-one years who smokes cigarets."

The above notice is placarded all over their establishments, and the manager of the company, Charles H. Stowell, M. D., gives the following reasons for opposing the use of cigarets by minors: "It lessens the natural appetite for food, injures digestion, and seriously affects the nervous system. It creates a craving for strong drink. It is a filthy, offensive, expensive, and unlawful habit."

Dr. Stowell says close observation shows that the alert, active, and energetic boys do not smoke, while the dull, lazy, sleepy, listless, uninteresting, and unentertaining boys are found to use cigarets.

PLEDGE OF THE AMERICAN ANTI-CIGARET LEAGUE

HEADQUARTERS: 106 LaSALLE AVENUE.
CHICAGO

Desiring to become a member of the American Anti-Cigaret League, I hereby agree to abstain from the use of cigarets or tobacco in any form, at least until I reach the age of twenty-one years, and to use my influence against its use by others.

Name _____

Street No. _____

Town _____ State _____

Age _____

This card should be sent at once to headquarters for registration, after which the signer is entitled to wear the official badge of the League.

The business men responsible for this ban against the cigaret certainly know what they are about when they declare that a man who smokes cigarets can not pack beef, can not guide an engine, and can not even drive a spike or weld iron. Some employers have even declared that a man or boy addicted to this vice is unfit to draw soda-water, sell dry goods or even propagate plants. It is a matter of dollars and cents with them and as such becomes a matter of deep concern. The time is soon at hand when it will be impossible for a cigaret smoker to secure employment anywhere. When these facts are presented to bright boys and girls, no further argument is needed to convince all of them that they should leave the cigaret alone, and they readily join the League which stands for its overthrow.

No boy should be chained to this habit, when we have such splendid plans supported by public sentiment, business edicts and stringent laws. The American Anti-Cigaret League, 106 La Salle Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, will cheerfully give any further information in regard to this movement. Every city, town, and hamlet should have hundreds of boys and girls enlisted in this great crusade.

One Chicago boy who became interested in the Anti-Cigaret League, after signing the pledge and pinning a badge on his coat, started out and in a week had one hundred thirty-two new members. Every boy under twenty-one years of age who reads this, should sign the pledge herewith given and send it to headquarters.

REMARKABLE DREAMS AND VISIONS.

The promises in the Scriptures are numerous that there shall be knowledge obtained by dreams and visions of events past, present, and future. It is strange but true that hidden mysteries have been made known through dreams and visions. The downfall and growth of nations and kingdoms; the apostasy and restoration of the kingdom of God; also of temporal and physical events. I shall not say anything concerning the remarkable dreams and visions related in the Holy Scriptures, but would suggest that the reader take his concordance and look up the passages that have reference to the same, for it is very interesting and profitable and will strengthen your faith in those sacred gifts.

There are various causes for dreams, yet all dreams are not reliable. First, we dream when the mind is overtaxed by business cares. Second, because of spells of sickness and high fever. Third, you may be so unfortunate or unwise as to have unpleasant words to cause ill-feelings towards friends and neighbors. Fourth, we may overload the stomach just before retiring, and that at a late hour of the night. The above conditions are just causes for unpleasant, unreliable, and unprofitable dreams.

Again, there are what are known as evil dreams, brought about to the mind of man by the power of darkness, to mislead, deceive, and worry. To this class we will refer later on. There are, thank the Lord, good, spiritual dreams and visions that can be relied upon in this age, as well as in the days of the prophets, the Savior and his apostles. These are the gifts of God, bestowed to his people in various conditions in life, by which many things are revealed which are not always pleasant, but are profitable, cheering, and strengthening. It matters not what may be the nature of that revealed by the Spirit of God, we will have strength to accomplish it, or stand the trial we may be called upon to pass through.

Paul said that everywhere he went it was made known by the Spirit that trials and tribulations awaited him, which were not pleasant, but profitable to him. For he said that he was not only willing to be bound, as was predicted by Agabus the prophet, (see Acts 20:23; 21:11,) but was willing to die. Strength and qualification always come through the warning voice. We notice that Paul was informed of the trials that awaited him, and while it was wise that he should be forewarned, he was strengthened for the task that was before him. Foreknowledge sometimes comes by dreams and visions and is in fulfillment of the promise made by Joel, second chapter. Also the Lord says, "I will speak to you by dreams and visions," and "where there is no vision the people perish."

I do not claim but what people have dreams that are neither of good or of evil spirits, and yet the dream sometimes comes true. But as I have already stated, the only class that can be depended upon are those given through the Holy Spirit—the gift of God, and which was very largely enjoyed in former days, promised again to the old and young in the last days.

I shall now give some of my personal experiences with dreams, and in so doing, I ask, kind reader, that you do not think that I mention these things because of any desire upon my part to appear more worthy than others. I do so first, because I feel impressed to write; second, that it may strengthen and encourage the faith of those who read.

In the year 1872 I was living on a homestead in Platt County, Nebraska, when the grasshoppers came and destroyed our crops. I sent a letter to Bro. William D. Williams of Churchhill, Ohio, who was manager of one of the mines, asking if he could give me employment, as we were in destitute circumstances. He invited me to come at once. I borrowed forty dollars and started in the month of September, leaving my wife and three children in the wild prairie-home, and twenty miles from the nearest town, Columbus, a quarter of a mile from the nearest house, in a 14x16 room, part dug-out and part log; small, yet comfortable for the cold wintry months. While the sacrifice for us both was great, yet that of the wife was the greater—being alone under those conditions. I reached Ohio in safety, commenced to work, and in a few weeks time coal and iron works were beginning to close down, and I was impressed with the thought that I would give up my position under Bro. Williams, and accept one that was offered me in another mine. I mentioned the matter to Bro. Williams, and he advised me to stay, giving as a reason that his mines were as liable to run all winter as the one to which I intended to go. By this time the panic of 1872-3 was becoming quite serious. Hundreds and thousands of men were out of employment, and the prospects for me were gloomy, for the rumor was afloat that the mines in which I was working would soon close. So I again asked the consent of Bro. Williams who had been so kindly giving me employment to permit me to make the change. "Well," he says, "you can go, but if that mine should close, you will stand no show of coming back to work for me."

Now, kind reader, take in my condition and situation; a thousand miles away from my loved ones who were left upon the open prairies in destitute circumstances, with debts hanging over my head, and prospects of being out of employment. My impressions again were to leave Bro. Williams and go to the mines called Sodom; thinking that if either one should continue to work it would be the latter. I did not wish to trust alone in my judgment or impression, and could not obtain any information that was satisfactory from those in charge of mines. I made it a subject of prayer, and in answer had the following dream: I saw two boys, one from each mine. The one from the mine in which I was working held in his hand a piece of dry bread. The boy from the Sodom mines held in his hand a piece of apple pie. They asked, "Which do you prefer?" Of course, I reached for the apple pie. I then awoke and was grateful to God for the information. I was just as satisfied with the information conveyed by the humble and simple dream as though an angel had personally instructed me to make the change. And upon the strength of the information so obtained, I notified Bro. Williams that that would be my last week's work with him. Again he advised me to stay, but under the circumstances I could not. In two days after the change was made, the mine I left closed down and I was permitted to work on steady until the month of April, 1873, when I returned home to my family with debts paid, and means to support them until we had harvested the coming crop. I will state that Bro. Williams' mine worked but one and two days a week, which represented the dry bread. I did not relate the dream to any one until after its fulfillment.

The summer of 1873 was a repetition of the previous year. The prospect for crops was excellent, but the grasshoppers again made their appearance; destroyed our corn, vegetables, and even went for the tobacco, like a good old Missourian, but not nearly so filthy as some who use the weed. This was another trying time. No feed for horses, cattle, or hogs; and no sale for the same. I saw some men that had from two to five hundred head of stock that were wild—more like lunatics than rational beings, because of this great calamity. Some even cursed God. A Mr. Clark said to me, "I can not see how you take it so coolly." I answered, "I can not make things any better, but much worse if I do as others are doing." I shall trust that some way will be opened up that we shall be provided for.

I was again penniless and did not know which direction to go to seek for work. In the meantime, I wrote letters back to Ohio, and west to Carbon, Wyoming. Information came that I could get work at either place. Not knowing anything about Carbon, I concluded to go back to Ohio, but I changed my mind on the strength of a dream and went to Carbon. After reaching there, I saw that my dream was literally fulfilled. The lay of the country, the style of the houses, and the railway and pithead were all just as I had seen them in the dream. I was also informed that it was a good place to make money, for during the seven months I stayed I made from three and one half to four dollars per day. During this period I "kept batch," which was the longest seven months I ever spent. The reason I "batched" was because they wanted seven dollars per week for board and find your own lodging. I spent Christmas Day of 1874 in company with my friend, Morgan

Watkins, and ate some of the plum pudding made by him in a bachelor's hall, that tasted better to me than any I have had before or since.

Well, springtime came and I was making preparations to return home to loved ones, when the news came that in Southeastern Kansas and Southern Missouri, the grasshoppers which had destroyed our crops had deposited their eggs there in the fall, and were now hatching out by the millions, covering a territory between two and four hundred miles long and fifty miles wide, eating up everything that was green—even the grass. The general idea was that as soon as they became large enough to fly they would go east or west; if west, we would again suffer through their unwelcome visit. What should I do? Return home to put in my crop, or stay another year in that rough sinful town? Of course I was anxious to see my family, but was willing to stay; would prefer to do so than to go home and then have to return again, for in those days it cost ten cents a mile to travel on the Union Pacific Railroad, which meant eighty dollars to go and to come. At this time I needed light and some one to guide me, for I could not trust my own judgment, and the wise men did not agree. Some said the grasshoppers would not go back over the ground they came from, so that I would be safe in going home to put in my crop. The experiences of the past and the promise in the Sacred Book, "If anyone lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth liberally" gave me faith to seek for light, when I had the following dream: I saw myself at home putting in the crop. The prospect for wheat, oats, corn, and vegetables were excellent. Later, I saw the grasshoppers coming until they darkened the sun, and they fell as thick as snowflakes. "Well, well," I said, "they have come for the third time to take away our crops, and I will again have to leave home to work in order to obtain the necessaries of life." But suddenly after they had alighted a gust of wind came and they all left, and had done the crops but little damage. So on the strength of that dream I made up my mind to return home, which I did and put in the crop. In the month of June, lo, and behold, the heavens were darkened by the great army of grasshoppers. They came down as I saw them in the dream, but no sooner down than a gust of wind carried them away, and that year we had an abundant harvest.

July 23, 1902, I was sitting by the bedside of our aged sister, Anne Price, at Maerdy, South Wales, who was then laying low from a paralytic stroke, in her seventy-eighth year. I asked her if she would tell me of the experience of her late husband, Philip Price, in the explosion in 1885, to which she replied that it had all been published once. I remarked that I had heard of it, but would like to get the particulars from her. She said that Philip was working in the mine at Maerdy, which is something over four hundred yards deep, and was in the furthest part, about two miles under ground. About three o'clock in the afternoon, he sat down, and in a moment was asleep. He dreamed there was an explosion, and saw dead men on every hand. When he awoke, the dream had such an impression on his mind that he started to go out. On the way he met one of the drivers, and inquired if there had been an explosion. The driver answered, No. Well, he said, I dreamt about it, and it seemed so real, that I shall go out. The driver, like thousands of others, who did not believe in dreams or visions in these days, laughed at him and told him to go back to his work and not be so foolish. As it was so near quitting time, and having urgent work to do, he went back to his labor. At four o'clock the explosion came sure enough with death and ruin in its path. The excitement in the village was intense. Women and children were running to the mouth of the pit screaming, in hopes that their loved ones were safe.

Sr. Price, at this time, went to the Lord in earnest prayer, in the behalf of her dear husband, whom she knew was working in the extreme part of the mine. She received evidence by the Spirit that Philip would arrive home safely. She proceeded with her house work as best she could. Women came in and asked if she had not heard the sad news, and whether she was going down towards the pit. She answered, No; that she could do no good if she went, and it would be better if others did not go, for the cries of wives, mothers, and children were heartrending. Though she had received comfort by the Spirit concerning Philip's safe return, yet she could not hold back the tears because of the sad calamity that had befallen others. Bro. Price regretted that he had not given heed to the warning, and thought of her at home praying the Lord to bless and comfort her. He knew that he had a hard road ahead to travel in the dark, so in company with others, he started, but was the only one to reach the top from that part of the mine, and once again was permitted to enjoy the society of his family as had been promised by the Spirit to Sr. Price. I have been unable to ascertain the correct number of deaths, but it was between one and two hundred. Bro. Price was an elder in good standing prior and up to his death, and was highly respected by all who knew him.

I will now relate two dreams which in my judgment were given by the powers of darkness, and whose mission is to deceive, destroy, and disqualify the people of God from receiving needed blessings. In the early days of the church in South Wales, a young man of more than ordinary ability and of good standing, dreamed that he saw a casket in one of the rooms at his home upon which was laid a large silver plate with his name, age, days, month, and year inscribed. When he awoke he concluded that he had but a short time to live. He first thought to tell the dream to his parents, but concluded not to, lest it should worry them. So having kept it all to himself, the effects of which were plainly noticed, because of the change in his appearance and ways. Not being happy, sociable, and cheerful, he became despondent and distant in all his ways. His health failing he soon became the talk of all the town, and as days and weeks passed by the young man felt that his dream would soon be fulfilled. He wondered why he should have such dark and gloomy feelings. Why not be brave like Paul and Stephen who also had foreknowledge of their death? Simply because his manifestation was of the wrong source as the following will show. Father John Morgan called on him, and soon learned of the strange dream that had so wrought upon him mentally and physically. And for the first time, the young man was informed that the dream was of an evil source. Then after being administered to he was immediately relieved of his dark and gloomy feelings and praised the Lord for the happy change.

Now for the other dream: In the summer of 1877, in DeKalb County, Missouri, my wife was seriously sick when all remedies seemed of no avail. I dreamed I gave to my neighbor, Jacob Faul, the exact dimensions of a safe with a glass front, resembling a casket, which was of sufficient size for my wife had she passed away. I then awoke and interpreted the dream to mean death. My faith which all along had been strong for her recovery was now destroyed, and I was possessed with the spirit of unbelief that disqualified me to officiate effectually in the sacred ordinance. The same night my wife had a vision in which she saw the house surrounded by vehicles as though they were gathered for a funeral. A dark person inquired of her if she was ready, to which she replied: "No, not yet a little while." Turning to the east, she saw a team of white horses coming towards the house at full speed. As they approached the house the vehicles seemed to vanish away. She then turned and saw her body upon the bed, and was conscious of the fact that a separation had taken place, after which she discovered that the body and spirit had reunited. And in trying to tell me of her experience, it took twenty minutes to relate the above because of her weak and exhausted condition. I did not tell her my dream, and could find no comfort in what she related, save the coming of the white horses, which represented power or authority. The next day Elders C. A. Bishop, James Kemp, and Sr. Faul having learned of the low condition of my wife, came to the house from the same direction as the horses came indicated in the dream. Five prayers were offered, two in English, two in German, and one in Welsh by Elder D. M. Lewis, my father. My wife being anointed by father, he praying in the Welsh tongue, the Spirit of the Lord rested upon him by which he spoke in prophecy to my wife that from that moment the blessing of health would be given, and that she would live for many days and that much good should be done by her. Up to the time that father spoke, I was captured by the power of unbelief, which is one of Satan's strongest weapons to hinder man from receiving the blessings of God. And when the above promise was given, I was liberated from the unpleasant condition and partook of the gift of faith that brought the assurance of the promise made. That which had been spoken was in an unknown tongue to Brn. Kemp and Bishop; the former being mouth in the administration gave the interpretation in English to what had been given in the Welsh tongue; and in confirmation of the above promise, my wife raised from her bed and went into the garden to procure vegetables for Sr. Faul. From this time her health was good.

The reader will please note, first, my dream was from an evil source, therefore misleading; second, my wife's vision being from the true source was comforting and strengthening; third, the promise of health through the Spirit; fourth, the interpretation of that given in the Welsh tongue by one not having understood before one word of the same; fifth, the blessing of health enjoyed instantaneously and in full. Much could be written that has come under my own observation to confirm the precious gift of dreams, but will conclude with the following:

Having lived in Nebraska, isolated from the Saints, I concluded in December, 1875, to move to the Far West District, Missouri. At this time there were four small branches in the district, which were not in unity or in the spirit of the work as Saints in Zion should be. Because of this condition of affairs, I became very much discouraged and informed my wife that I would go to Decatur County, Iowa, and if the country and surroundings were satisfactory, I would send for her and the children. Then I had the following dream which I have before now related to the Saints of the above district. I thought I was standing in Stewartville, Missouri, and saw the Saints coming from all directions, locating in all parts of the district. Branches and churches were numerous, and many citizens of the country united with the church. On the strength of the above dream, I concluded to make Missouri my home. At the present time there are about twelve branches with a membership of fifteen hundred, and nine houses of worship. At the time of the above dream the membership hardly exceeded a hundred, and not one house of worship. While the above is not yet all fulfilled, there is comfort in the thought that obedience to the dream has been satisfactory, temporally and spiritually.

Therefore, in conclusion, will say that things past, present, and future are revealed through dreams and visions in this our day as well as in former days, and as foretold by the Prophet Joel: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions."—Joel 2: 28.

WHO WAS JOSEPH SMITH?—NO. 10.

WAS HE A FALSE PROPHET?

BY J. W. PETERSON.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Long before the United States saw the necessity of establishing national banks in every State, Joseph Smith advocated such an idea. In a book entitled "Joseph the Seer," page 197, we find the following as the words of Joseph Smith and the comment of the writer of that book: "For the accomodation of the people in every State and Territory, let congress show their wisdom by granting a national bank, with branches in each State and Territory . . . and the bills to be par throughout the nation. The country will then be full of money and confidence."

Of the above the writer comments as follows: "Our nation was forced to come to this at last, but Joseph had this wisdom many years in advance of the wise men of the nation as he did upon many other questions. . . . Nothing short of the Spirit of God, by revelation and prophecy, could impart such facts and information, and so plainly make known the future."

OF STATE RIGHTS.

The prophet then talked of the details of government. He thought that the "number or members admitted to the Lower House of the National Legislature should be reduced. A crowd only darkened council and impeded business. A member to every half million population would be ample. The powers of the President should be increased. He should have authority to put down rebellion in a State without waiting for a request of any governor, for it might happen that the governor himself would be the leader of the rebels." It is needless to remark how later events showed the executive weakness that Smith pointed out—a weakness that caused thousands of lives and millions of treasury.—Josiah Quincy, in "Figures of the Past," page 399.

OF TEMPERANCE.

In a revelation given to the church by Joseph Smith on Wednesday, February 27, 1833, we find the following:

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly.—Church History, vol 1, p. 279.

The "Good Templars" and "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" are lauded to the skies, most of which they are worthy, but what shall we say of Joseph Smith and his people who were far in advance of those societies both in time and matter? In 1833 when the ministers generally, thought they could preach better when aided by a little liquor and the people thought so too, Mr. Smith and his people came out squarely against it and stood for total abstinence.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

IOWA.

The Reorganized Mormon church under President Smith not only refrains from indorsing polygamy, but is perhaps the most alert and active enemy that the abomination has. As a church under this president, it is as much entitled to recognition and public favor as any of the many churches of the day, so far as honesty of purpose and action are concerned.—Iowa State Register, March 20, 1887.

From the same paper, October 17, 1892, we copy the following: "The fact is it would be impossible to have a more quiet, devout assemblage than has occupied the grove on the hill for the last sixteen days." This was written of a Latter Day Saint reunion held on the hill at Logan, Iowa, about that time.

The following appeared in the Council Bluffs (Iowa) Globe, October 13, 1892:

At Logan to-morrow the Latter Day Saints will decide upon the next place of meeting for next year. About fifteen thousand people attended the meeting at Logan, and it will be seen that the city that secures the meeting captures a big prize. Council Bluffs will make an effort to have the next meeting held here. The Chautauqua grounds are especially fitted for such, and the city could easily care for this large assemblage. The people of Council Bluffs will gladly welcome them, and the Globe bespeaks for them a generous and kind treatment in the event of their coming. The Latter Day Saints can rest assured that if they honor Council Bluffs by holding their next annual reunion here, and it is an honor to the city to be the scene of the meeting of such a body of respectful citizens, they will be given the best of treatment.

The following concerning the same gathering was published in the editorial columns of the Missouri Valley News:

These Latter Day Saints in camp in our county for their annual harvest of souls, point with pride to their open creed as evidence of their true Christian spirit, and the world can not but say: "Ye have done well, abide with us." Their devotions are genuine. Their moral lives of the best. Their presses are messengers bearing good tidings. Their loyalty leads them to place the national colors over their holy altars. . . . Tried by these signs the Latter Day Saints are worthy of a welcome as one of the forces that will at times hold high the starry banner, honor the powers that created it, gave them a home when freedom of conscience is the keystone of all liberty, of all Christianity, and of all civilization.—Palmyra to Independence, pages 298, 299.

MISSOURI.

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is holding an annual conference of the world here at the present time. . . . The people who have come have the appearance of honest, zealous, faithful men, engaged in what they conceived to be the propagation of great truths that have been confided to their care and been made their special responsibilities. They teach the cardinal virtues of the Christian religion and such as the orthodox churches hold and believe. They claim a new revelation and that the day of special revelation is not past. They invite investigation and are open and candid in their lives and conduct. It is no longer excusable to charge upon the Reorganized Church, sympathy with the polygamists. They regret the Salt Lake dogma with loathing and disgust, and teach and keep the marriage relation as sacred as other Protestant people. The sobriety of the Mormon people of this community and their testimony against all forms of dissipation does them great honor and ought to silence the tongue of ignorant criticism.—Independence (Missouri) Sentinel, April 7, 1888.

From the Independence (Missouri) Progress, for October, 1897, we clip the following:

It is not the province of the Progress to engage in any sort of religious discussion or controversy, but right is right and hurts no one. There is over the world a misapprehension of the people called Mormons here in Independence. They do not relish the name of Mormon although they accept the Book of Mormon as a part of Holy Writ. They prefer to be called Latter Day Saints of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. They call themselves Saints for short. They are bitterly antagonistic to the Mormons of Utah. The Mormons of Independence believe in Joseph Smith but not in Brigham Young, whom they detest as an apostate and despise as a deceiver. When Joseph Smith was killed, the Mormon church broke into fragments. The ambitious Brigham Young got a following and went to Utah where he perverted the original doctrine, introducing among other unholy practices that of polygamy, utterly denounced by all Mormons at Independence. The Mormons in this city are a quiet, orderly, industrious people, enjoying the good opinion of their Gentile neighbors, from whom they differ mainly in their acceptance of the Book of Mormon. Of course there is not the slightest fellowship between the communicants of the Mormon church and those of other churches here, but as neighbors there is no friction. The Mormon children in the public schools reflect excellent home training. The Saints here are good citizens and no objection could be alleged against them save their adherence to the Book of Mormon, regarded by all except Mormons as a work of fiction.

The following from the editorial columns of the daily Kansas City Star, for February 9, will be read with much satisfaction by every one who possesses a sense of justice and a love for truth:

Joseph Smith, president of the Church of Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ, lately took occasion to deny in the most solemn manner, as he has often done before, any responsibility on the part of his father, "Joseph the Seer," for the doctrine of polygamy as held by the Mormon church in Utah. He states that it was not until eight years after his father's death that the doctrine and the practice of plural marriages was introduced. President Smith speaks in this matter not from tradition and a desire to vindicate his father's memory, but from recollection of the constitution and practice of the original Mormon church in his youth. His high personal reputation and sincerity of character, well established in the communities where he has lived all his life, should lend weight to his words.

We take the following from the Kansas City (Missouri) Times, April 11, 1898:

CREED BASED ON THE BIBLE.

Easter Sunday was not observed at the Latter Day Saints' conference in Independence, [Missouri,] further than to incorporate an anthem and a few extra numbers in the song service. The chief event, both with the attending members and visiting strangers, was the address of the forenoon, delivered by Joseph Smith, chief of the presidency of three and head of the church.

This is the first time that the most distinguished of all of the officials had spoken publicly at any length since the opening of the conference, and the interest taken in his address was evidenced by the fact that a count made as the audience was dispersing showed that nearly one thousand eight hundred persons had heard him. Elder Smith's address was not in the nature of a sermon, partaking more of a general talk upon the doctrine and practices of the Latter Day Saints' religion. Though about seventy years of age, Joseph Smith has the appearance of a man fifteen years younger, is hale and hearty, and a forceful speaker. Regarded as a prophet and infallible [this statement is untrue] in matters pertaining to the faith, his utterances are listened to as almost gospel by his fellow members.

The president said, in part, that the members of the Latter Day Saints' Church were believers in the Bible, that they believed the Bible more than any other people. He stated that while there were many people and denominations who professed to believe the Bible when it was closed, when it was opened and read to them they were not willing to believe it. He asserted that the church he represented was the only church that had followed out the plan of the New Testament in having in it all of the officers mentioned in the New Testament, and which complied with the church of that book as an organization.

Continuing, Elder Smith said that the central idea of the Latter Day Saints' Church religion was Jesus Christ. That he was the basis of their faith, regardless of the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, or the claims of divine inspiration of any of its members. He said that efforts had been made to prove him a false prophet, to be shown as an evidence that the Latter Day Saints' religion was wrong, but that his own overthrow would no more affect the church itself than would the Bible be affected by proving any of the ancient prophets to be false. He stated that the people in the valley of the West (meaning the Utah Mormons) characterized him as a degenerate son of an illustrious father, because he refused to follow them in their iniquitous practices. But that upon the judgment day the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Covenants would show the works of the church and entrance to heaven would be claimed upon these and not upon such practices as polygamy.

In speaking of the claims of divine inspiration held by members of the church, permitting of revelations, Elder Smith said that in the beginning of the Latter Day Saints' work ministers of other denominations charged the church with an attempt to add to the Bible by incorporating these revelations with the Holy Writ, and that the Bible stated if any man should add to the prophecy of that book or take one jot away therefrom he should be damned, etc. He said that this was an inconsistency, because the book of Revelation was not of the Bible, but had been added.

The claim of the Latter Day Saints' Church is not that anything is being added to these revelations, but that they are being interpreted correctly, as they had never been before and as they were not accepted by the members of other denominations. The realization of the wrongful interpretation had come to Joseph Smith through the visitation of an angel who had stated that the creeds of men were wrong and were an abomination in the sight of the Lord; that he was made to see them in their true light and was instructed to preach the true gospel to all nations of every tongue. His natural conclusions were that if the nations of every race and tongue were to be preached to, they were of a necessity all wrong. Elder Smith asserted that the Bible was simply a history of the power of God that was among his people in the ancient times.

OHIO.

The following from the correspondent of the Cleveland, Ohio, Plain Dealer, April 15, 1896, speaks for itself:

To President Smith and the Delegates to the Latter Day Saints' Conference; Dear Sirs and Brothers: As your conference draws to a close and you depart to your many fields of work very soon, I want to at this time thank you for the uniform courtesy and kindness extended to me during my work in Kirtland.

I will ever regard the week just past as one of the brightest in my life. I am not converted to your faith but I part from you, feeling that my life will be better because of the week's association with noble men and women, who are doing an unquestionably good work in uplifting humanity.

I have a vastly different opinion of the Latter Day Saints than when I first came among you. Where you then had, because of my ignorance, an indifferent enemy, you now have a warm friend.

It may be sometime that I can be able to remove from the minds of others many of the false ideas they have of your society. I have in my reportorial capacity been closely associated with the many denominations, and I want to volunteer the testimony that in my judgment you are the nearest to the Carpenter of Nazareth that I have seen.

I have endeavored to make a fair and accurate report of your proceedings, and if I have offended any one I assure him it was purely an accident, and contained naught of malice.

Wishing you a large measure of success in your work of love and sacrifice,

I remain, yours truly,

GEORGE H. GORDON,
Plain Dealer Correspondent.

The following is taken from the Cleveland, Ohio, Herald, April 9, 1883:

A more devoted or conscientious body of delegates never assembled for a like purpose. Nothing can equal the persistency with which the Mormons gathered here denounce the evils of the brethren of the Utah church. The consciousness that they are continually reproached on that account evidently aggravates them greatly. Said President Smith, to your representative this morning, "We differ from them (Utah Mormons) in almost everything. They are a Theocracy. What they are told to do must be done. With us there is freedom of thought." The Honorable R. P. Harmon in speaking of the ministers present, says, "In intellectual acumen I think they stand above the average clerical assemblies.

CANADA.

The following is taken from the decision of Chief Justice Armour, of Canada:

Chief Justice Armour, and other judges concurring, said: "I have read the evidence over and find nothing contrary to the doctrine of Christ in the teaching of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." "The great trouble is the Latter Day Saints' doctrine is Christian in the highest sense, and the rest of the religious world is opposed to them because they (the Saints) cling so closely to the Bible." "It seems as though it is jealousy, not justice, that moves the action in this case." These people teach that one man should have one wife only, and they stand by that."—Palmyra to Independence, page 413.

AUSTRALIA.

The following is from the Evening News, Sydney, N. S. W., which needs no comment. It speaks plain and positive:

MORMONS IN AUSTRALIA.

To the Editor of the Evening News; Sir: I read with interest in one of your recent issues a statement under the above caption. Permit me to point out that there are two separate and distinct bodies of Latter Saints: The one with headquarters in Utah, U. S. A. (commonly called Polygamous Mormons), and the other with headquarters in Iowa State, the very heart of America. The latter are known as "Reorganized" Latter Day Saints, and claim to be the original true Latter Day Saintism.

They set up the claim of being the first church in all Christendom which sent missionaries to Utah to convert the followers of Brigham Young from the error of their way. In the article above referred to it is remarked that "some of the Christian sects, which at the present day deservedly claim general respect, were originally associated with enthusiasts, whose zeal took the most extravagant and dangerous shapes." The Anabaptists are cited as an example, and the writer then suggests that Mormonism may experience a similar transformation.

It is interesting to know that the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has been contending for the last twenty or more years that originally the church contained nothing "dangerous," though to other religionists it might have appeared "new" from a doctrinal standpoint. They claim as a fact that not until years after the organization of the church, and eight years after the death of Smith, was anything hurtful or frightful introduced—and then by Brigham Young, after he led a section away to Utah in the far west of America. The other section repudiated these innovations from the first, and moved right on upon the original principles; but for purposes of property and distinction in print they were compelled to prefix the term "Reorganized" to the name of the church. If your readers will turn to the "Government Gazette" New South Wales, also "Directory," they will see ministers' names registered under such a head.

A recent high court decision in matters of property in United States, America, sustains the contention made by the original or Reorganized Saints. The line of distinction is being recognized more generally throughout America, and the churches in Australia are hopeful that the facts will be more fully known here at no distant day. Representatives of both churches are now in Australia; but the Brighamites peremptorily refuse to meet the representatives of the Reorganized Church in debate upon the points at issue, which is very suggestive. There seems to be a movement back towards original Mormonism by the apostate section in Utah. The writer met three missionaries from Utah lately, and they stated they were not willing to defend Brighamism. The Reorganized Church claim some credit in having brought about this change of policy. This body claims a membership of over five hundred in New South Wales and Victoria. They have several chapels in Sydney and Newcastle,—and claim that they are here to stay. Yours,

A. READER.

—Sydney, N. S. W., Evening News, September 25, 1897.

Not only have we given evidence sufficient to convince those whose minds are open for conviction that Joseph Smith was a kind-hearted, noble-minded Christian gentleman, but also that he stood far in advance of the best thinking men of this nation in many things, as we have shown. It might be well to inquire whether Mr. Smith's superior wisdom was natural or whether he obtained it by revelation. To say that it was natural, very effectually destroys the old statement that he was low, ignorant, and lazy. To say that an unlettered youth would become such a sound thinker, so much in advance of other men in America, and that, too, before his thirty-ninth year, is out of the ordinary. Accepting Mr. Smith's own claims and the proofs at hand, we would rather believe that his mind was illuminated with the Spirit of God—that it did "partake of the things of the Father and reveal them unto him—it did guide him into all truth, and did show him things to come." See St. John 16: 7-13. We have proven his character good. We have answered the vile attacks of the adversary against him. We have shown text after text in the Bible which speaks of just such a work as he performed, and now we give the Bible text:

"He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son."—2 John 9.

Joseph Smith taught the old gospel as recorded in the Bible, but cared little for the so-called modern and changed Christianity. The church he organized has suffered all manner of persecution, more severe perhaps than any other church in America, and perhaps in the world; but it yet stands firm as ever and growing more solid and healthy all the while. The reader can safely trust in it. Preachers have preached against it. Teachers have taught against it. Writers have written against it. All churches have combined against it. We have been slandered, ridiculed, ostracized, and opposed, and yet we move steadily on. All the combined forces of earth and hell have not been able to overthrow it. It reminds us of Jeremiah's statement: "Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her."—Jer. 12: 9.

It has in it the elements of success to withstand all opposing forces for it is founded on a rock and that rock is the gospel of Christ. To us this is evidence that Joseph Smith was inspired to lay the foundation of the restored church of God.

Though all other churches have from time to time changed their doctrine, the true Latter Day Saints have never done so, though attacked from every quarter. This is good evidence that it is from the unchangeable One. It is in harmony with the New Testament church in organization, in doctrine, in the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and in practice. And we therefore take pleasure in recommending it to the careful consideration of all honest seekers after truth. If "by their works ye shall know them," then we conclude very readily that Joseph Smith was a man of God, a servant of God, a prophet of God.

SOME RECENT ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES IN MEXICO CITY.

(Republished by permission of Munn & Co., New York, publishers of the Scientific American.)

The unearthing of the remains of an Aztec temple in the city of Mexico last winter promises to shed much additional light upon the ancient capital of the Aztecs. The discovery was made in the heart of the city, only two squares east of the great plaza, or Zocolo, and constitutes one of the most important archæological discoveries made in years. In addition to the temple, several huge monoliths, stone idols, incense gum, spear-heads and other interesting objects were brought to light.

Some years ago the eminent archæologist, Señor Batres, of Mexico, projected a map of the city of Tenochtitlan as it existed in the year 1519, when first seen by the Spaniards. This map represented the city as an island intersected with canals running nearly at right angles, corresponding to the streets of the present city. He located on the map the various temples and public edifices of the Aztecs, all of which, of course, had been destroyed by the conquerors. Back of the great temple, or Teocalli, which occupied the present site of the cathedral and major portion of the plaza, he located a temple called Coateocalli, meaning the house of many gods. He gave as his authority for locating this temple, Padre Duran, who wrote that the temple existed on the site occupied by the property of the Acevedos. Searching the archives, Batres found among the records in reference to an ordinance regarding the supply of water, under date of October 27, 1710, that the property referred to was on the corner of Relox and Cordobanes Streets, and consequently gave that as the locality of the temple of many gods, but as the corner was occupied by a fine old building, it was not supposed for a moment that any remains of the ancient temple could possibly be in existence.

Last winter the work of renovating, or practically rebuilding the old palace occupying this corner was undertaken, for the purpose of furnishing suitable quarters for the Department of Justice. Captain Diaz, the son of President Diaz, was given charge of the work, and it is due chiefly to him that the discoveries were made. While the workmen were leveling off the patio, or central courtyard of the edifice, previous to putting down a new pavement, they came in contact with a hard solid foundation which proved to be a flight of stone steps going down into the earth. They would probably have covered them up again, and leveled off the projecting one at the desired height, had not young Diaz happened along just in time.

Diaz ordered the men to keep on digging, cautioning them to use their tools carefully, and following a line parallel with the steps, a trench was opened the entire length of the patio. At the further end of the trench, scarcely two feet below the surface the men struck what appeared to be a round, polished rock, around which they carefully worked, pulling the dirt out with their hands, till they had disclosed a monolith weighing several tons, representing a tiger recumbent, or ocelotl, ready to spring. A rude derrick was rigged up, the sculptured rock hoisted out of the hole and it was weighed and measured.

Further excavating brought to light another rock sculptured to represent a serpent's head, which corresponds with two others previously discovered, and which were the corner pieces of the great wall inclosing the great Teocalli, within which are said to have dwelt seven thousand Aztec priests. Besides the great pyramid rising in the center, upon which they made their human sacrifices to the war god, there were seventy-eight chapels devoted to the worship of special deities. After the two huge monoliths were removed from the excavation, the digging proceeded, and the dirt carefully removed, every object found was cleaned and put aside for the inspection and study of Señor Batres. The foot of the steps was finally reached at a depth of thirteen feet below the level of the present city of Mexico, where they rested on a solid base, or foundation of masonry, which was without question the level of the old city of Tenochtitlan; consequently the present city of Mexico must be some thirteen feet above the level of the original city, which presents an interesting problem to the archæologist.

At the foot of the steps many of the smaller objects were found, such as idols, remains of idols, incense gum, spear-heads, and ornaments, just as they had been thrown down by the Spanish conquerors. The stumps of two trees growing at the foot of the temple were also uncovered. These trees had evidently taken root after the destruction of the temple. They were found at irregular distances from the steps, and had the appearance of having grown spontaneously, just as the trees are growing at the present day out of the ruined walls of Palenque, and other aboriginal cities.

The recumbent tiger of ocelotl, weighs four tons. It measures two meters thirty centimeters long, one meter five centimeters wide, and ninety-four centimeters in height. Its mouth is opened, showing huge teeth and a part of its tongue, and great round eyes give it a ferocious look. It is well modeled, with the tail properly curved around on one side as the animal is often seen in life. On each side of the head is a mane resembling somewhat the pendant part of the head-dress on the Egyptian Sphinx. On its under side are vestiges of painting showing that it was originally painted with red and yellow to carry out more perfectly the idea, or imitation of the American tiger. Cut in its back is a cylindrical cavity about eighteen inches in diameter and five in depth. The sides and bottom of this cavity are sculptured with representations of Aztec figures, or warriors.

The serpent's head, identical with the other two already discovered, represents the serpent with its mouth open and the upper lip rolled up over its forehead, disclosing the upper jaw with great tusks projecting down over the under lip. It is supposed that there were four of these heads, one in each corner of the great wall, and the design corresponds to similar heads graven on the Aztec Calendar stone. On the under surface of the heads, Batres has deciphered a hieroglyphic which he calls tres acatl, the date of the foundation of the Great Teocalli.

Among the other relics unearthed was a curious little idol cut out of a dark porous stone, about ten inches in height. The workmanship is rather crude, but decidedly interesting, representing a head with scarcely any body, perhaps in a sitting posture with arms folded. The incense gum upon being removed from the earth which had surrounded it for centuries resembled pieces of bone, but when, by the simple application of a lighted match, it burned and gave off the proper perfume, it was proved to be incense.

A number of stones were fashioned in the shape of skulls, or death heads, with projections at the back as though they had been inserted into a wall. Some of them were painted white, which gave them a more horrible aspect. A very interesting relic was a piece of baked clay, a part of a foot of a colossal statue. The toes were perfectly modeled, showing the edge of the leather sandal beneath, and the knots of the thongs holding it over the instep as worn at the present day by the native Indians. Other smaller pieces of this same statue were found, and in handling them one could imagine the great war chief in full regalia guarding the portals of the temple when set upon by the Spaniards and hurled down the steps to the bottom.

All the objects found are to be preserved in the National Museum, and it is proposed by Captain Diaz to leave the patio with the excavation open, showing the remains of the temple. The very interesting question now arises, how it is that the present city is thirteen feet above the old one, as shown by the excavation.

We know that when Cortez first saw the Aztec city, he compared it to Venice on account of its being composed of islands, and having canals for its streets. With the destruction of the city, the temples and public edifices were toppled over, filling up the canals. It would seem that the Spaniards would have taken this material to build their new city, but it is evident that they did not. In building the new city they brought building material from elsewhere and built on top of the old.

Another fact demonstrated by the discovery of the temple is that the reconstruction of the city began in a very feeble manner, for the stumps of trees growing at the base of the steps show that the ruins of the temple must have remained just as the Spaniards destroyed it a long time, thus giving the two trees ample time to sprout between the crevices and grow before they were eventually buried by the debris, upon which the palace of the Acevedos was built, more than a century, or a century and a half later.

The great cathedral was not commenced till a century after the destruction of the city by Cortez, and like the palace of the Acevedos, it must have been built upon the ruins of the Great Teocalli. We can therefore conceive Tenochtitlan a ruined city for upward of a century, with its demoralized remnants of a once proud race wandering about the ruins till finally the site was accepted for the capital and the reconstruction commenced in earnest. The value and quantity of relics which are buried beneath these structures can only be conjectured. — Thomas R. Dawley, Jr., in Scientific American for August 23.

Take Time.

Take time to think:

Thought oft will save thee from the snare,
Bring thee to cooling streams and bowers,
Spare thee from nursing needless care,
Surround thee with defensive towers;
Yield thee the harvest of content,
Lift thee from dust to starry ways,
Discover comfort heaven-sent
In thy most dark and cheerless days,
Therefore, take time to think.

Take time to pray:

For when thou pray'st the vision's cleared,
The voice is toned, the will's subdued,
The dear are to thee more endeared,
And the soul's failing strength's renewed.
In prayer the purest words are spoken,
The mind receives heaven's holy light,
The heart is given the Spirit's token,
The hands are charged with wisdom's might.
Therefore, take time to pray.

Take time to praise:

Praise is the witness that you see,
Or hear, or feel, or understand,
Or trust where there is mystery
About the workings of his hand.
It is thy child-attempt to prove
Thy kinship with the hosts above,
Who, as they in God's presence move,
Praise him for his exhaustless love.
Therefore, take time to praise.

Take time to work:

Know what a privilege it is
To work with God, to have thy hand
Engaged for him, thy energies
Developing 'neath his command.
To share the stores of grace and truth
Which to his faithful ones are given;
In service to maintain thy youth,
And hear the Lord's "Well done!" in heaven.
Therefore, take time to work.

HOW SHALL WE PUNISH?

The subject of the punishment of children has been frequently before us, I know, but as it is a constant problem to those having the care of the young, it can do no harm, perhaps, to talk a little about it again.

I have been thinking much lately of the alarming prevalence of nervous disorders; their cause, and possible prevention. Among other causes I was led to wonder whether certain modes of punishment have not a tendency to work injuriously upon the nerves of children more than we realize.

There is much written about "ruling by love," which some interpret to mean that all corporal punishment must be barred, and so devise various means of correction without resorting to the objectionable rod. "I love my child too well to ever whip it," you say. Do you? Stop a moment. Does it show a lack of love to whip? True affection seeks first and always the best welfare of its object, regardless of its own personal feelings. It seems cruel to whip, so you seek some more fitting way of punishment. Perhaps the way you choose is more fitting, for the punishment should suit the offense. I would not take the ground for a moment that there should be but one way, but, perhaps, you might choose a way that would be more unkind than a whipping. You have all heard of instances of the kind, even among good and intelligent mothers.

Of course there are physical punishments which will have the same effect as a whipping, but can't some of you remember some childish naughtiness of your own, and what a relief it was to get your "switching" or "strapping" or "spanking," whichever it was, and have it over? I can, and it is a source of wonder to me, how a little switch could accomplish so much of good as my mother used to bring about by its means. I know that I do not love her any the less because she used it, rather more, for in that way she taught me that punishment always follows wrongdoing—a most important lesson for children to learn.

We need not go to the extreme, and use the rod for every offense, neither should we eliminate that form of punishment altogether. At least I think not.

Another objection is that some children will not endure a whipping. Probably not, if you wait until they are half grown before beginning it; there may be children, of course, too nervously sensitive to need such punishment. Such children, if they have been properly taught, will suffer enough from self-accusation over any little wrong they may be guilty of.

The thought I had in mind, however, was, whether there are not modes of punishment which directly affect the nerves of children. I feel certain that there are, and we ought to take this thought into consideration in dealing with those in our care. I hardly know just how to make my meaning clear. Perhaps I can illustrate briefly by giving an example. Almost any healthy child is sometimes so full of energy or "spirits," that he simply can not keep still. Then it is that he is apt to do some naughty thing before he thinks. Isn't it cruel to make such a child sit still for an hour, or some such punishment as that, in which his over-abundant energy, instead of finding vent in exercise, is "bottled up," if I may use the expression, to work upon his nerves, and make him cross, unreasonable, perhaps resentful and ready to be bad again, if he dare? It would be better to punish such a one by having him do something to carry off part of his energy such as bringing wood or water, mowing weeds, hoeing the garden, etc., if he is large enough for these tasks.

Another unwise and cruel punishment is to deprive a child of a meal, or at least of a proper amount of food. It might be all right to deny him a favorite kind for a time, but for a hungry, romping child to have to go to bed without supper is not exactly conducive to the state of mind which punishment is supposed to effect.

Another thought. "To rule by love" does not imply that a child is to be coaxed and petted over every disagreeable experience; rather, the true meaning of the expression is, that we should so conduct ourselves in training those under our care, that their love for us will rule them—cause them to desire to act according to our wishes—to have sufficient confidence in us to believe that whatever mode of punishment we adopt, it is for their own best good.

Letter that Christ Wrote.

A remarkable story comes from the Rome correspondent of the Daily Express, who sends an authentic facsimile of the wonderful Doric-Greek inscription, the discovery of which on the gateway of the old palace of Ephesus was announced to members of the Archæological Congress in Rome by Professor Bohrmann of Vienna University. He submitted the facsimile to Professor Murry of the British Museum on his return from the Rome congress yesterday, and Professor Murry declares the inscription undoubtedly genuine and of the highest possible importance, tending as it does to establish the authority of the correspondence alleged by Eusebius to have passed between Abgarus V, of Odessa, and our Lord. The letter from Abgarus runs as follows:

"I have heard of thee and of the cures wrought by thee without herbs or medicines, for it is reported that thou restorest the sight of the blind, maketh the lame walk, cleanseth the leper, raiseth the dead, casteth out devils and unclean spirits, and restoreth the health of those tormented by diseases of long continuance. Hearing all this of thee, I am fully persuaded that thou art a very God coming down from heaven to do such miracles, or that thou art the Son of God and performeth them; wherefore I have sent thee this few lines entreating thee to come hither and cure my diseases. Besides, hearing the Jews murmur against thee and continue to do thee mischief, I invite thee to my city, which is but a little one, but beautiful and sufficient to entertain us both."

Christ's reply is thus translated: "Blessed art thou for believing in me, whom thou hast not seen, for it is written of me, that they have seen me shall not believe and be saved, but they that have not seen me shall believe and be saved. But, concerning the matter that thou hast written about, this will acquaint you that all things for which I was sent hither must be fulfilled. Then I shall be taken up to return to him that sent me. But after my ascension I will send one of my disciples that shall cure thee of thy distemper and give life to all them that abide with thee."—St. Louis Republic.

The Quarterly.

With this initiatory article relating to the quarterly form of Sunday-school lessons and its advantages, I shall only present a few points briefly.

The quarterly form of lessons gives opportunity to study all the Scriptures, either chapter after chapter as they occur, as now prepared, or by way of tracing the history of a subject, and the use of all that relates to the subject, as formerly. Complaint is urged that the Quarterlies are not perfect, and do not exactly suit a certain class of minds. It certainly is not expected that anything that can be produced by finite beings will be perfect. When the Quarterlies took up the study of the history of Abraham's seed as a subject, objections were urged by quite a large minority that this was not studying the gospel, yet it was taking up one of the subjects that relates directly to the coming of the Christ, and what the purposes of God were and are, relating to the blessing of the race through Christ, and the principles of faith and repentance were taught in nearly every lesson, and this subject was treated in a manner more comprehensive than could be treated in book form, unless the work was made too large for practical use. Some would conclude that in treating that subject much might have been omitted. The editors at that time decided all could be considered to advantage. Should they have decided to have omitted certain parts of that subject it would not have suited some as well, and should they have omitted certain parts, others would have decided that should have been considered, and other parts omitted, and should other editors have been treating the subject they would in all probability have treated the subject somewhat differently, but would that have suited as well in a general way? We doubt not.

The plan of studying subjects was taken up some years ago, yet it did not suit the majority, hence quarterlies were instituted. Why should we return to that plan? Some will answer, Because we can prepare more perfect text-books to-day. Possibly we could. How long would they be satisfactory? If they suffered the fate of all other text-books, prepared by imperfect beings, they would need to be revised, according to the decision of the majority in a short time. Every revision would make the old edition partially, if not wholly, worthless, and those remaining on hand would be a loss.

We have no censorship in the church, and no application of Scripture is accepted as perfect by all. It may be thought that only such passages should be used as are interpreted alike by the leading quorums, and that interpretation decided canonical. That would necessitate work the church is not in a situation to undertake, and even if they were, to wait till the church has decided upon every subject, and its treatment, and what passages of Scripture relate to such subject, that should form a part of a text-book, such as I have heard should take the place of the Quarterly, it would be a long time before a text-book to suit that class better than the Quarterly could be issued.

In the treatment of Scripture the Quarterly becomes a text-book so far as the interpretation of texts, and that by parties who stand equal to any others in the church, and such was the Revising Committee last year. But it was argued, and is argued, that we want something we can rely upon. Nothing is more carefully prepared by the church as to "historical and doctrinal" matter than is the Quarterly, and if we can't rely upon them under the careful preparation they undergo, how could any other kind of a text-book be formed upon which we could reply?

The Quarterlies are now paying their way, helping the church financially, and supplying the needed finances to support the Sunday-school Association and its officials. These conditions could not be more perfectly met.

The Quarterly furnishes the ministry a privilege of keeping in touch with the lesson, so that wherever they may be they may associate with the Sunday-school with lesson prepared, because the same scriptural lesson is studied by every school on the same day. With text-books of subjects, such as has been suggested, and to study it as has been suggested, this could not be. To take up the subjects as they would occur in the book, beginning with the organization of the school, and as that subject was completed by the school proceed to the next, as in graded schools, would bring about confusion, one school studying one lesson, and one class studying one subject and another another, and the missionary going from place to place would have a good excuse not to attend the Sunday-school, or if attending, for not having the lesson. Besides this the missionary has all the load he cares to carry, and those who desire to keep in touch with all the departments would be compelled to carry quite a load, for there would need to be at least four, if not five or more text-books to meet the present demands.

While the Quarterly is not all in every way that I would desire, yet I can not decide that it would be an improvement to change for a text-book such as has been suggested by any whom I have heard advocate the supplanting of the Quarterly with text-books.

I shall wait till I hear the other side of this question before I decide how I will vote at the next convention when this matter is considered, but unless I hear reasons for such change superior to what I have heard I shall decide in favor of the Quarterly, and work to make it more perfect in its sphere, as knowledge shall come of changes that will be an advantage.

Other points will be brought out by those whom I am associated with to present the Quarterly side of this question, as against suggested text-books. In going on to perfection, I am,
J. F. MINTUN.

THE Home Department supplies are now ready to mail. Every school in the association should order a package and endeavor to establish this department of the work in the school. District associations should look after the matter in places not in reach of schools, and, also, see that it is taken up by the several schools. Order all supplies from the HERALD Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Prices are as follows: Leaflets of Instruction on Home Department work, 3 cents per dozen, 20 cents per 100. Record envelopes, 4 cents per dozen, 25 cents per 100. Membership cards, 5 cents per dozen, 40 cents per 100. Package containing 12 leaflets, 20 envelopes, 4 visitor's records, about enough for a school of not more than thirty members, 20 cents. These, with suitable grade Quarterly, completes the outfit. Report blanks, including the Home Department work, will soon be ready to mail.

Letter Department.

BATES, Idaho, September 1.

Editors Herald: In letter of Bro. Goodwin in HERALD of August 13, we read of the Josephite elders having "flatly refused to debate" with the Brighamites at St. Anthony, Idaho. Bro. Goodwin did not tell us who the Josephite elders were, neither who had challenged them or when. We would like the particulars and might then be able to tell how it was. We have no knowledge of Josephite elders being in St. Anthony since Bro. Anthony visited there some years ago; and we are told he held some meetings there. I have passed through there a few times the last year but have done no work till last week. I met Bro. John Condit there and we held three meetings at Willford, four miles from St. Anthony. Debates continuing each night up to about midnight and after. St. Anthony represented there by her bishop at least, but if there were or are any in that region or any of this country who have been or are ready and authorized to represent their church in debate they have been and will be accommodated so far as the Idaho elders of the Reorganized Church are concerned. Bishop Carbine of St. Anthony said he knew of no such case as complained of. The flat refusals come from the other side wherever we go. While they accept the privilege granted them in all our meetings to ask questions, or occupy part of the time with us, they will not engage in a regular debate, but when their members show courage to attend, some one is on hand to try to destroy the influence of the meeting by asking questions, bearing testimony, relating old wives' fables, etc.

We were publicly called "black-hearted Josephite wolves" Friday night before the congregation of two or three hundred and the people were warned to stay away, but the congregation was not less the next night. Perhaps some came to see tar and feathers applied, as there was talk of that. However, the only opposition was confusion in the house while we were occupying, though silence reigned while their elder was speaking.

We have come on to Teton Basin to labor until our conference of September 13 and 14 with the Cedrine Branch.

Outlook for the work is promising.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written you, and many incidents have occurred since then. I have done many wrong things, for which God knows I am truly sorry, and pray his forgiveness. I also ask the forgiveness of the Saints and ask them to pray for me that I may be able to live nearer his law in the future.

In the HERALD to-day I noticed a letter from Bro. B. M. Anderson. It called to my mind many things. He spoke of the enjoyable time he had had with the Saints, and how he did enjoy it after being shut off from their society. Saints, how little we appreciate the blessings God has given us! How hard it is to live as we should, especially out here! But God is merciful, and I feel that he has forgiven me inasmuch as I have repented, and I am sure I will make a greater struggle hereafter to overcome my faults so that I may be more worthy his blessings and the way be opened for me to get away from this place.

I ever pray for the redemption of Zion and the welfare of her people.

LAMOINE, Maine, September 4.

Editors Herald: As you have heard but little of my movements in the field in the past. I will jot a few things so you may know that I am not sleeping, but have been trying to push the gospel work as best I could. I left the Eastern Maine District June 11, in company with Bro. S. O. Foss, and we parted again at North Deer Isle, Western Maine, he to go to Dexter, and I to Mountainville, where I found a few Saints and friends trying with commendable zeal to build a chapel. As the building trade had been my business in the past I thought I could do no better than to give them a lift, so I worked some and preached for them until July 9 and then left for Little Deer Isle where I met Bro. Foss, and together we went to Vinalhaven, taken to that place by Bro. J. J. Billings, district president, in his big sailboat. We preached there about ten days with good liberty and increasing interest, and left with an invitation from many to come again. We were kindly cared for while there by Bro. and Sr. Raymond. From there we went to Stonington and held meetings until July 30. Then to Mountainville where we found that some one had set the chapel on fire; but fortunately it was discovered and put out before it had done much damage.

On August 6 we landed in West Surry, but was rained out and held but one meeting, and on the 9th we went to another part of the town, Morgan's Bay, and held two meetings. The people being in the midst of haying could not stop for meetings. Bro. Foss then left for Jonesport, his home, and I to Sedgwick, where I preached the funeral sermon of Sr. Damaris Gray. All that was mortal of this faithful sister we laid to rest in mother earth until the spirit of him who raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken her to life eternal. From there I went to Little Deer Isle and preached for them on Sunday the 18th. On the 19th I went to Bangor and attended a reunion of my regiment and made some calls on relatives in that vicinity. August 28 I started by steamer for the conference at Lamoine. Was joined on the way by Brn. Billings and Eaton. We arrived late at night, and the next day we had to take off our coats and help get the new chapel ready and seated for conference to convene on the 30th. The 29th Brn. Sheehy and Bullard came in from Boston, also Bro. T. A. Hougas. All were glad to see them. We had an enjoyable time. Brn. Sheehy and Bullard left on the 2d inst. en route to Eastern Maine conference. The few Saints here are making a strong effort to build a house to worship in, and I think they will succeed, for many of the outside friends seem to be about as much interested in it as any one. I may stop a few days and help them out, and then away again to try to sow the gospel seed. But with fairs and political lectures everywhere, the people have but little time or inclination for other meetings.

STANBERRY, Missouri, August 30.

Editors Herald: The work is moving along slowly in this part of the field. We are few in number, but we are endeavoring to keep the camp-fire burning. We have sacrament and prayer and social meeting once a month, and Sunday-school every Sunday. We started in with a primary class with six or seven and part of the time three or four, but now we have three classes with prospects of doing better, and interest seems to be manifested. We have been blessed by the advice given us by our beloved Bro. Peter Anderson, whose home is here. I know by experience that God blesses those who honor the priesthood and receive them as men sent of God. While Utahism has gone to one extreme in doing as they "are told, whether right or wrong," it is possible that we have, to some extent, gone to another extreme in not honoring the priesthood or those in authority. There is, however, a duty that is obligatory upon us all; namely, to hold up by the prayer of faith those called of God that he may deal with them as seemeth good to him.

It has now been over a year since I was ordained to the office of priest, and while I have not been blessed with any of the miraculous gifts, God has wonderfully blessed me with light and knowledge from on high, pouring his Spirit into my soul, which has enabled me to present the gospel to my astonishment. I know this work is of divine origin, and I wish that my testimony could be recorded before ten thousand angels, and that I might join in with them and sing praises unto the Most High, whose mercy endureth for ever and ever. "Praise the Lord, O my soul and all that is within me, praise his holy name," for "'tis good to be a Saint in latter days." O the warmth, the grandeur, and the magnificence of the promise: "Ye shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself," if we do his will.

How I wish that I could see some of the Saints at Lamoni whom I got acquainted with when I was first baptized, especially Brn. Heman C. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley and their accomplished families.

I do not hesitate to say that I am a Latter Day Saint and "if there are mistakes they are the faults of men." I have been criticised because of manifest positiveness in regard to this work. Why not know and be positive? I am glad that we represent something that is true and as firm and as solid as adamantine walls, and that we do not have to remain as silent as the charnel house when called upon to give a reason for the hope that is within us. When I meet with old-time Saints, who "have set to their seal that God is true," it convinces me of the divinity of the work. May God help us all to attain unto that perfection and get up into the spiritual realm that he may use us for the accomplishment of his purposes, is the prayer of your brother,

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

JANESVILLE, Wisconsin, September 9.

Dear Herald: The reunion held at this place is now history. The increased attendance over last year, the finest of weather, an abundance of preachers, the good Spirit prevailing from start to finish, all combined to make it an enjoyable week for all concerned. The coöperative dining tent, at which all the campers boarded, was a grand success, demonstrating the fact that it is the best way to care for the campers. Meals for the whole term averaged seven cents each. Much credit is due the committee, also to Bro. Dutton's family who contributed largely to the success of the meeting. Four baptized.

MARLIN, Texas, September 6.

Editors Herald: I went to San Antonio August 20; met Brn. Ed W. McRae and John Harp at the depot, who were very glad to see me. Bro. McRae drove us to his house, where we met his interesting family, and soon met all the Saints near by, which we enjoyed. Bro. Harp had arranged for meetings at Coner's Grove, a very nice place. There was a very nice pavillion there, which was soon seated and lighted. We commenced meetings on Friday night, August 22. We continued until the 31st. Held in all fourteen meetings. The turnout and interest from beginning to end was good. Larger turnout than had been for quite a long time, so people told us who lived there. None baptized, but quite a number seemed near the kingdom. The Saints were edified.

Brn. John and Charlie Harp are good companions to labor with; they are very zealous and persevering.

I left them on last Thursday. They expect to stay there until next week, then go to district conference. I left to fill an appointment in Falls County, to preach a funeral sermon of Bro. B. F. Spicer, who died March 26, 1902. After I preach a while here I will pass by home and to Grimes County. I hope to visit San Antonio again in the future. I receive fine treatment from all the Saints and friends at that place, so I am very much attached to them and interested in their welfare in time and eternity. I am behind with calls for preaching, they are so far apart in this country. Much traveling required to meet the people who will hear the gospel.

I arrived here near Marlin, Falls County, on September 6; have preached three times, held one business meeting; baptized and confirmed one to-day. Meetings closed here for this time.

District conference will meet at this place on October 11; then we expect to baptize some more at this place. The good work still moves on.

E. W. NUNLEY.

NINA, Ohio, September 5.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines that my friends, and the readers of the HERALD may know that I am doing what I can with the Lord's help.

Since General Conference I have been at Kirtland and Columbus, and now I am here in this county, Ottawa, all being in this State.

Making Kirtland my home, I assisted while there, and also at Cleveland, wherever the opportunity afforded itself.

While at Columbus I did what I could to aid and encourage the Saints, and help Bro. T. J. Beatty, who is the "father" of the work in that place. Had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with some new Saints, to us, and earnest workers. It encourages "us boys" to meet others near our own age who love the work.

After returning to Kirtland to attend to some business, Bro. U. W. Greene, our missionary in charge, sent me up here to labor in this section under Bro. O. B. Thomas.

I arrived at Oakharbor the evening of August 13, a year from the time I started on my first mission. Found a home at Bro. and Sr. J. W. Moxon's, and a home it has proven, indeed. I think that Brn. Robley, Scott, and others can testify to the hospitality and kindness found there. Bro. J. W. used to live at our home, some few years ago.

An appointment at this place, which is about six miles from Oakharbor, was arranged by telephone for Friday evening. This was the beginning of a ten-day effort, my first one, too, and not having an associate it was trying for the "boy." But the Lord blessed me with both liberty and power, and I feel encouraged to fight on.

The evenings of the 28th and 29th and Sunday the 31st I spoke at the camp grounds at Locust Point on the bank of Lake Erie, a new place.

Here at Nina I found a good Sunday-school which had been organized by, and was receiving the assistance of, Bro. Moxon and a few Saints who seem willing to do all they can. I am pleasantly quartered here at the home of Sr. Nannie Davis. Her husband, though not a member, is very kind and friendly. Many people here ask about Bro. Francis Smith.

The Lord willing we anticipate beginning an effort in Oakharbor, in the G. A. R. Hall, on the evening of the 9th. We are looking for Bro. Leonard Scott to arrive soon.

The footing of the work in this country is greatly due to the efforts and daily example of Bro. Moxon and wife, who continue to liberally assist with talent, means, and time. Their friends, Mr. Eastwood, the genial manager at the Lake Shore office, and his wife, have assisted greatly with their musical talent. Mission address, Oakharbor, Ohio, care J. W. Moxon.

Fraternally,

JAMES E. KELLEY.

DETROIT, Texas, August 4.

Editors Herald: It is indeed strengthening and encouraging to me to read the many letters and articles, written by the brethren and sisters, that appear from time to time.

The work is progressing nicely in this part of the Lord's vineyard, considering the small number of laborers here. This country is ripe for the gospel, and hundreds of noble souls are starving for the bread of life. Only two missionaries, Brn. E. L. Henson and E. A. Erwin, in this part, with the writer's assistance as circumstances permit, and that is not much, being compelled to stay at home and labor for the meat that perisheth, most of the time. Am trying, however, to assist all that is possible.

On the 16th of August Brn. Henson and Erwin returned from district conference and began a meeting at Rosalie, Red River County, which lasted till the 24th.

On the morning of the 23d in company with Bro. Henson we wended our way westward over the dry, dusty prairies about twenty miles into Lamar County, where we had an appointment. We found the good people of that section awaiting our arrival with a nice arbor prepared. They were anxious to hear the tale we had to tell, so we began meeting that night with a large congregation, Bro. Henson being the speaker. The writer spoke Sunday at eleven o'clock, and on Monday night, the 25th. On Wednesday, the 27th, I was taken very sick and was not able to attend the meeting any more. Bro. E. A. Erwin joined Bro. Henson on the 27th, so the meeting continued with increased interest and closed the 31st. One baptized and several more about ready.

May the good Lord speed the day when your humble servant will be able to do more for the cause.

P. B. BUSSELL.

BOONE, Colorado, July 19.

Editors Herald: I am not a member of the church, but am a firm believer, only waiting an opportunity to unite with this great work. It has been many long months since I have had the blessed privilege of hearing the elders preach, and they have been weary ones, too. Oh, how lonely I feel since my isolation! We did not know there were any Saints in Pueblo till we read the letter written by Mrs. Minnie Woolsey from there, and how thankful I was. Mrs. Woolsey will you please write to me, so we will learn where you are and where the meetings are held? We would be ever so thankful for the privilege of getting to attend meetings again. My parents are both members of the work.

The letter from Bro. Baker, which was in the HERALD, was read with great pleasure, but with sorrow, too, for I did not read it until he had already been to and left Pueblo. We would have been glad to have seen him. How much pleasure it used to be to have him come to see us at Maysville, Arkansas, where we lived before coming here. If you ever come out this way again, Bro. Baker, I hope you will remember to come and see us. We live twenty miles east of Pueblo.

I would be pleased to hear from any of the Saints, especially from the East and South, and to know where the Saints' reunion held a year ago in Fairland, Indian Territory, is to be this year, and what date.

MISS PEARL SIMS.

OLDS, Oklahoma, September 3.

Dear Herald: To me this is a grand work. I was greatly encouraged at the last General Conference. Went out into my mission work hopeful of good results, and never before in all of my work has the way opened so completely to my satisfaction as it has thus far this year. Calls for preaching are many. The good Lord is opening the way and providing the means enabling me to reach more people than ever before in the same length of time. Northern Texas and Indian Territory is a ripe field. I have done more preaching since conference than ever before in the same length of time, notwithstanding I have been kept at home one whole month helping to care for little Floyd, who was confined to his bed for thirty-three days with typhoid fever. He lost his speech when he began to recover and had to learn again to talk, crawl, and walk. I left him in the care of his patient mother not able to speak or move himself in bed. This was the hardest task of my life, but wife and I agreed that I must go and preach the gospel to the people who were constantly writing to me to come and preach for them.

I held two meetings at Coalgate, Indian Territory, creating quite an interest. Met eleven Utah elders in conference at that place. Called on them, had several talks with them, spoke in their conference, and offered to discuss differences. But they said, "No; debating is of the Devil." They prefer to obey counsel.

Two of our brethren, Brn. McLain and Hufford, went to work to build a house of worship. An outsider gave the lot and twenty dollars towards the house. Now we have a nice little house. Seventy-two chairs, house canvased, papered, and painted, by the efforts of these three sacrificing men. Now, brethren of the missionary force, do not pass Coalgate without stopping. You will find a welcome and something to do.

I have just recently closed a fine meeting twenty miles south of Vernon, Texas, in company with Elder B. F. Renfroe. Baptized four and left an appointment for another meeting to commence the second Sunday in September. A great many people are interested at that place. We expect to baptize some more in this meeting.

Came here to assist some old friends and preach some. Olds is two miles from Red River in Oklahoma. This is the home of several of our brethren who were among the lucky ones to draw homes in this new country.

I find Bro. Renfroe a congenial companion. We will continue together until October 1.

All who desire preaching in Southern Indian Territory, please notify me. My permanent address is Wilburton, Indian Territory.

May the good Lord continue to bless us all.

S. W. SIMMONS.

FLORESVILLE, Texas, August 19.

Editors Herald: We rejoice in this glorious work in which we are engaged as we read your columns and learn of its greatness and glory. I have not been a member of the church long, but I feel and know that its teachings are true. I feel that I am not always worthy of the many blessings which I receive, but I sincerely wish to do my Master's will. We are among the isolated ones. We seldom hear any preaching, only through your columns. Bro. Harp preached for us a few times this year. We are expecting a visit from him the last of this month. We very much enjoy visits from the elders. They are always welcome guests. Bro. Harp is a faithful worker for the cause and we pray that God will bless him in all his labors and send more like him to spread the gospel in this land.

We get the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and feel that we could not do without any one of them. When we get through reading them we give them to others who will read them. There are a few interested here, and I think that good can be done if we could have a few weeks preaching. We have but three members and our nearest branch is about thirty-five miles away. So you see, dear Saints, we do not get to meet the Saints very often, but we hope in the near future to have a branch here. Some are near the kingdom. One woman after reading an article in the HERALD, entitled, "Who Was Joseph Smith?" said it was the best piece she ever read.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may live faithfully, and that we will not be found lacking when Christ comes to make up his jewels. I ever pray for the building up of Zion.

Your sister,

EMMA JACKSON.

TORY HILL, September 1.

Editors Herald: This is my first letter to the HERALD, although I often thought I would like to write. We are in an isolated condition, yet our heavenly Father has been mindful of us in many ways; but the greatest of all blessings is that he sent us this glorious gospel whereby we may worship God in spirit and in truth, and have the inward man renewed day by day, and prepare ourselves to meet with our loved ones whom God has, in his infinite wisdom, called home. There were eight boys and five girls in our family. One brother and one sister we laid to rest years ago, long before we ever heard this gospel, while they were yet babies, and my other four brothers we have laid to rest in the past five years. Truly we can say with the prophet of old, "Our days are full of sorrow." Our youngest brother would have been eighteen years old in November next if he had been spared, but was brought home to us last Monday, August 25, a corpse. He had been living with his uncle for over two years. He asked for us all, then prayed for all his loved ones, and then for all. Said good-bye and passed away like a summer's evening. Mother and father were there when he died. He was baptized and confirmed a member of the church when he was eleven years old by Elder J. H. Lake. Elder T. A. Phillips preached the funeral sermon.

Elders T. A. Phillips and S. Tomlinson have been laboring up here in this part of the country and trying to get the Saints in good working order, although it is very hard working in branches where the Saints have grown cold. I trust Bro. Phillips' revival has aroused hopes that were worse than dead, and we will all take fresh courage in this great work of God. Elder T. A. Phillips has gone back to Finlon Falls, where he hopes to make two new openings, and Elder S. Tomlinson is preaching in a new opening called the Billings settlement. It is eight miles to where Bro. Tomlinson is preaching, but we have driven down twice to encourage the new work there. We have a nice Sunday-school and hold prayer-meeting once a week.

Your sister,

CORA RUTH ETTA DACK.

RICHMOND, Virginia, August 28.

Dear Herald Readers: It has been a long time since I have addressed any of you through the HERALD. There have been many reasons and hindering causes, but never for a moment a lack of interest. I am more and more convinced of the truth of this great and marvelous work. I am more firmly established with every wave of trial that passes over me. God is certainly vindicating his own word here in a wonderful way before the eyes of all these people who claim to be his saints, of the Apostolic church, but not all can yet see it. He has given me more liberty and courage lately, and I needed the latter especially. The pastor was heard to say in a prayer-meeting, at which I was not present, that "no one ever got filled with the Holy Ghost that did not fall on the floor." One sister, who has herself been prostrated at least twice under this power, said that what he said tore her to pieces. She went boldly to him and told him that she had searched her Bible and could not find where it taught that falling was necessary to the baptism of the Holy Ghost, but that the word said Peter and the eleven stood up and preached and testified.

"But," he says, "sister, you have been thrown down by the power of the Spirit many times."

"No sir, I have not," she replied. "Twice only. On the other occasions either some one fell against me and knocked me down, or just physical weakness prostrated me. Only twice could I say it was the Lord."

It seems he did not like it and publicly reproved her, telling the conversation, but not giving the name, and says, "I could not see the woman for the devil." So in prayer-meeting the other night she told that she was the woman he referred to, and she wanted to tell it, that no one might think he referred to any other sister.

"I was the woman, dear ones, he could not see for the devil. But did you notice God did not let him once say the devil was in me? I knew the devil was there, but he was not in me; he was on the outside tempting me, but I said, Brother, I must stand on the word, and let God be true, though it makes every man a liar. The word does not teach that it is necessary to fall to receive the Spirit."

Dear, true sister, once she was a firm advocate of the falling, too. Somehow she and some others are getting their eyes open. I arose to testify, or to say whatever the Spirit gave me, and said, "I rejoiced to hear Sr. Jane say just what she did on that line. When I first came among you, and witnessed these signs and manifestations of the Spirit, I wondered if it were of God or not, and I studied the word and could not find that it taught anything like that, but I felt it would be wise to say but little about it, lest I might be found speaking against the Holy Ghost. Once I heard Bro. D. say they were the only people who had these signs, but I received a letter from my daughter, telling of the meetings of a Methodist sect, where the people would fall and lie prostrate for hours. Now Bro. D. said this was the Holy Ghost witnessing that their gospel was the truth, yet there are others preaching exactly opposite in almost every item of faith and yet received the same witness. Now, how was this? Both could not be true, but I found the word said 'by their fruits ye shall know them.' I also found the fruits enumerated. You know what they are,—love, joy, etc. I noticed the fruits manifested by those among you who were loudest in upholding this sign, and who were oftenest prostrated, were of an opposite character. Strife, malice, hatred, confusion, etc., marked them wherever they went. And you know God is not the author of confusion. And I must testify to-night that the Spirit I received, by obedience to the gospel and under the hands of the elders God sent, was of God as I knew it produced those right fruits in me. Once when I had been evilly spoken of and mistreated, I would have been for standing up for my rights and talking back, but since I had received his Spirit, I only felt tender pity and love and could pray, 'God forgive them; they know not what they do.'"

I also told them that the trouble was that they had been pinning their faith to the outward manifestations, rather than to the word, and, when that was the case, Satan would produce the same manifestations and deceive those who were looking for signs instead of the fruits. That he would even work miracles to deceive. That was why we were told to try the spirits, that not all were of God.

Once I was prostrated. I, too, was certain it was God's power, but I did not even then think that was the first I had received of his Spirit, for I was completely submerged in the Spirit during the whole meeting, and, in fact, had been for some time previous. I testified to the fact that night that I had been completely filled with and submerged in the Spirit, but had never been prostrated under its power. That Satan tried to get me to eat, still tempting me thus: "If you arise to-night to speak, you will fall and make a fool of yourself as these have," and I said, "Well, if God wants to lay me on the floor, I am willing; no pride should be in my way." But instead of falling I felt more like standing firm. Bro. D. said: "Sister, if you do not need this for yourself, you will receive it for the sake of others as a witness."

How could I receive it as a witness for others unless it was to show them God had accepted me, and that it was truth I was contending for? After the meeting was dismissed, a sister came back for special prayer, and Bro. D. prayed. I had asked God silently if it would be a witness for the truth that in his own time, and in his own way, I might receive it. And as I went to get off my knees, some power laid me down as gently as a mother does her sleeping babe. I could not resist, nor did I have any desire to. "It has come," flashed through my mind, and with a Hallelujah that rings in my ears yet, Bro. D. knelt and taking my hand in his said, "You are my sister, you are my sister! I don't care what any one says you are my sister!" "Brethren, I always felt as if we were close kin if not brother and sister." Love these people? Yes, though they have despitefully used me since then, but they thought that would make me denounce what I held concerning Joseph being a prophet, etc., and unite with them.

Bro. D. never has thought so. While he has pointed to me three times from the pulpit and said: "I will fellowship this sister, no matter what any one says," and has told me he never again would antagonize my faith, yet the sisters have been many times frightened, especially if he seems to sanction something for which I contend. More and more clearly are they beginning to see, even talking among themselves about authority, etc.

Once Bro. D. denied the necessity for organization, saying man made a mistake when he organized the church and set officers in it. I was shocked. I knew he was trying to silence a conviction that organization was necessary and that Christ could not organize only the one body. I had sent him something to read. It was the HERALD with my article "The Soliloquy of Satan" in it, and this sermon soon followed. After about two months he said in another sermon:

"Brethren, I no longer have any sympathy with the theory that organization is not necessary; it is necessary, and should be according to the word, and we find there that prophets and apostles were in the organization, but what can we do? We can not elect a prophet, God must give a prophet. Neither can we send apostles, God must send the apostles. And we do not even have elders in our church, and if we did we do not even know their duties only that they laid hands on the sick. I tell you, brethren, we need teaching on this line. Do not be alarmed. No man has been teaching me, but the Spirit of God has." And speaking of his work he said, "One thing I know, God never sent me to baptize any one." Yet he baptized for the remission of sins, using about the same formula as do our elders.

Pray that I may be faithful and that God will send a laborer here.

The Changing Year.

Behold September! Tripping from the hills she comes and lo! the mystic spell of August's weaving breaks at her touch. Indolence flees to the mistress who has gone before, and the languor and lassitude and lazy contentment of midsummer gives way to a quickening of vital forces and the inspiration of endeavor. Fair September! Not the wealth of floral tribute of her sister months doth she bring, but of the fullness of the harvest doth she scatter on every side. Sere and yellow leaves flutter from the trees; they are her pledges in gold that there is no death, and April shall redeem them. The hills robe themselves in purple in the twilight hour and the air is vibrant with the plaint that "Katy did" and "Katy didn't." Once more the feathered hosts fill copse and grove and garden shrubbery, and if there be a new note, a minor chord, not present in their songs of the spring, therein is the promise that they go but for a little while. The clear air has in it a tonic which sets the rich blood to racing gloriously and fills with the desire of accomplishment the vigor which seeks expression in the world's work. It is the month of inspiration.—From Country Life in America.

Perhaps the most remarkable scientific discovery made in a long time—so far at least as its wonderful possibilities are concerned—is that of radium. Apparently this substance has from the beginning been giving off particles at the rate of sixty to ninety thousand miles per second, without diminution of its own force—and will continue to do so for ever. It supplies light without heat. A ray of this light conducts electricity. It converts oxygen into ozone and colors glass permanently brown. These are only a few of the properties of this remarkable substance. In The Cosmopolitan for September a brief article is published under the title, "A New Field For Speculation," and announcement is made of a prize of three hundred dollars for the best paper on this subject.

Conference Minutes.

European Mission.—Annual conference of the European Mission met in the Priestley Road meeting room, Birmingham, at 6 p. m., August 2, 1902, Apostle G. T. Griffiths, assisted by Apostles Peter Anderson and J. W. Rushton, occupied the chair. The business sessions were opened by singing and prayer. Suitable introductory remarks were made by Brn. Peter Anderson, J. W. Rushton, Bishop T. Taylor, and G. T. Griffiths. Brn. Herbert Smith and Frank Edwards, of Birmingham, were appointed conference deacons, and Bro. John Hoole conference chorister with power to choose assistants. The conference with a unanimous vote indorsed the action of General Conference in calling Elder C. H. Caton of the Bishopric to the office of high priest. Our brother, who has been 32 years in the work, signified his willingness to act in the office, after which he was ordained by Brn. G. T. Griffiths, P. Anderson, J. W. Rushton, W. Lewis, and Joseph Dewsnup, Sr. The minutes of the 1901 conference were read, after which voice and vote was accorded to all the visiting brethren of the eldership in the conference. Missionary reports were now presented: Bro. J. W. Rushton, of Scotland, reports that one branch has been organized at Hamilton with 18 members during the conference year, 4 persons have been baptized, 2 have been ordained priests, and one as teacher. He had been assisted by Elder Joseph Arber, late of Claycross, and Elder G. W. Thorburn of the Second Quorum of Seventy. The outlook was exceptionally encouraging. Bro. George W. Thorburn reports labor in Scotland, especially at Glasgow. Bro. Joseph Arber reports labor in the Sheffield District and Scotland. He had presided over the Hamilton Branch for a time and was then removed to Glasgow where he at present labors. Elder P. Muceus (Seventy) reports that he has baptized 10 in Scandinavia, confirmed 12, blessed 3 children, preached and performed other duties. He feels confident that the Lord has called him to labor in that mission. John Davies (Seventy) reports labor in Wales. His health has not been good since coming here. He has met with some opposition but is manfully contending for the right. Elder W. H. Greenwood reports labor in the Sheffield District since June 18, 1902. There were prospects of some uniting with the church ere long. He had distributed tracts and performed other duties.

District presidents' reports: Elder W. H. Greenwood reported the work in the Sheffield District as low, but there were signs of better times. Brethren were doing their duty and there were prospects of increase. Elder Wm. Ecclestone reports the Birmingham District with 4 branches and 230 members. The condition was fair spiritually. Elder Thomas Gould reported Eastern Wales with 3 branches as fair spiritually. Three had died during the year. Elder H. Greenwood reported Manchester in a good spiritual condition generally. The ministry were earnestly engaged in the work of the branches. We need tracts. We have a band of willing workers. We have gained some during the year and hope soon to organize new branches.

Isolated branch reports: Bro. J. W. Worth reports that the work has moved forward spiritually in London during the year. A few had been baptized. Bro. T. J. Sheldon had greatly helped them and there were prospects of further success. Hamilton was reported by Bro. R. W. Munro and J. Skene as having 18 members. All were working to spread the cause. Indoor and outdoor labor had been performed.

Reports of isolated ministers: Bro. A. Porteous of Hamilton, reported labor in that branch and that he was willing to continue work. Elder Joseph Bennett, nearly 77 years, desires that the work may be established in Birkenhead and Tranmere and that he does what he can. During an interval Sr. A. Green sang feelingly a solo entitled, "Moment by Moment."

Bishop Taylor's report was now presented and read along with those of his counselors, Elders C. H. Caton and Joseph Dewsnup. His agents, Elders Thomas Gould and Hy Ellis presented reports for Eastern and Western Wales respectively. A committee consisting of Elders J. E. Meredith, N. J. Weate, and Joseph Roberts were chosen to audit the foregoing reports of the Bishopric. Upon a motion to adjourn being put and lost an informal discussion followed upon the advisability of holding mission conference. At 9.40 p. m. the meeting adjourned. The doxology was sung and the benediction offered by Bro. G. T. Griffiths. On Monday, August 4, 1902, conference resumed its sittings at 9.45 a. m. A hymn was sung and Elder H. Greenwood offered prayer. The informal talk of Saturday evening on the holding of mission conferences was continued until 11 a. m. The question of the publication of a periodical in the interests of the mission was next discussed. The report of the committee on "rules governing the mission conferences" was here presented: "In considering this question we must first determine the status of the body in relation to church work and the question arises, 'Is the European mission conference a body whose functions are legislative? Is it administrative, or is it merely intended as a means whereby persons engaged in a common cause can meet and compare notes and confer in a general way?' If it is legislative it would seem only fair that all who are amenable to its laws should in some way have voice and vote in the assembly, either directly or indirectly. If its functions are administrative, then it is enough if those who are subject to its administration have voice and vote in the assembly either directly or indirectly. If it is simply a gathering of those engaged in a common cause for the purpose of social interchange of thought, and ways, and means, then it would seem the right of voice and vote in the assembly extends no further than to those so engaged. If composed of elders only, it would restrict its considerations to matters affecting elders only. If matters affecting others, such as priests, teachers, and deacons are considered, and that in a way which calls for submission to such actions, then the priests, teachers, and deacons should have equal voice and vote in the assembly. To facilitate the forming of proper rules we would suggest that your honorable assembly determine the exact power and standing of the body known as; 'The European Mission Conference.' It will then be an easy matter to determine who should or should not have voice and vote in the assembly. In any case the principle of common consent should not be lost sight of. The present scattered condition of the church is such that common consent in its widest form can not be had. Representation as adopted by the church in America seems to be the best and most suitable to our condition and if the rules of the European Mission Conference are to be altered it would be well to base them upon some such basis; all of which is submitted. Elders C. H. Caton and George Baty committee." It was here stated that a minority report upon this question would be made out by Elder E. R. Dewsnup and forwarded to the secretary at a later date. It would then be spread upon the minutes: Resolved that the matter relating to the consideration of the rules for the mission conference be deferred until the question of the continuance or otherwise of mission conferences be decided by the new body.

Bro. Enge here reported his labors in Scandinavia. He had held 36 services, baptized 3, confirmed 3, administered the sacrament, and attended to the sick. He had labored in Homborgsund and Christiansand, Norway. He had distributed tracts, preached where possible. Hopeful for the success of the work in his field. Bro. Pierce of Western Wales, said he arrived in November, 1901. He had labored and felt well and hopeful. He had delivered tracts and preached the word. He saw the need for clearly discriminating between the Utah church and ours. had met many noble and good people. Bro. T. J. Sheldon reported labor in Rothwell, Leeds, and London. He had preached 67 times, baptized 2, confirmed 3, blessed 3 children, and had ordained 1 elder. He had done open air work in Rothwell and Leeds. Hard and persistent work was needed in London and we shall succeed. Bro. Wm. Lewis reports labor in Cardiff, Lydney, Nantyglo, Aberaman, Llanelly, Penygraig, Porth, Tony-pandy. Much need for labor. Local brethren doing what they can with few exceptions. Have preached 125 times. Held open air service. No trouble to get crowds outside, but not inside. Good may be done after the mistakes of Brighamism have been pointed out. He had confirmed two, blessed 2 children, and administered to the sick. Brethren John Davies and Thomas Jones are doing all they can; also Bro. F. G. Pierce who visited from house to house and preached in the streets. He had been offered the Congregational chapel near Merthyr on Monday and Friday evenings. Hopes a missionary home may be established in Merthyr so that work may be prosecuted in the surrounding towns. The brethren are not able to obtain sleeping accommodation in this part. This is a drawback. Bro. Thomas Jones of Eastern Wales reports labor in Penygraig, Brynmawr, and Blaina with Brn. Pierce and John Davies. They had done persistent street preaching to hundreds. He had baptized 2 and performed other duties. Resolved, That the mission conference of 1903 be held as per Rules and that the place be left in the hands of the missionaries in charge of the European Mission. The assembly here arose and sang, "Redeemer of Israel."

A petition was now presented by the priests' quorum asking that the members thereof might become members of the European Mission conference. Resolved, That the priests have voice on this question. The petition was now received. Resolved, That the priests' petition be granted. There were 41 for and 4 against it. The meeting now adjourned, prayer being offered by Bishop Taylor.

At 2.10 p. m. business was resumed, "Guide us oh thou Great Jehovah" was sung and prayer offered by Elder E. R. Dewsnup. Resolved, That the chair appoint a committee of five to draft a petition to General Conference setting forth our needs as a mission conference. The president then appointed the following brethren a committee: Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., C. H. Caton, Hy Greenwood, Wm. Lewis, and T. J. Sheldon. The following report of committee was then presented, adopted, and spread upon the minutes: "Whereas we believe the work in the European Mission demands that the European Mission conference be an authoritative body within its own area, therefore be it Resolved, That we petition the General Conference of 1903 that they recognize the European Mission conference as an authoritative legislative body in harmony with the organic laws of the church, the decisions of which shall be subject in case of appeal to the General Conference. Signed, Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., C. H. Caton, Hy Greenwood, Wm. Lewis, T. J. Sheldon." The committee was now discharged with thanks.

Resolved, That this conference realizes the necessity of a church publication in this country and that this conference take such steps as in its judgment will bring about the same. Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to attend to the matter of publication and report to the next mission conference. The committee chosen were J. W. Rushton, W. R. Armstrong, and E. R. Dewsnup. Resolved, That we ask the Board of Publication to establish a book depot in this country. At this juncture Bro. and Sr. Fish and Sr. Roberts of Warrington who had been baptized by Apostle J. W. Rushton, were confirmed, Bro. Fish by Bro. P. Anderson, Sr. Fish by Bro. G. T. Griffiths, and Sr. Roberts by Bro. J. W. Rushton. The conference then adjourned for tea, the benediction being offered by Bro. W. R. Armstrong. Upon the resumption of business it was resolved that the secretary's expenses be paid by the conference. Resolved, That we are of the opinion that a visit of President Joseph Smith to this country would lend a great impetus to the work; we therefore extend an invitation to him to pay us a visit as early as convenient. Resolved, That we sustain the secretary, Elder W. R. Armstrong, and assistant secretary, Elder S. F. Mather. Resolved, That we sustain the treasurer of the mission, Bishop T. Taylor. Resolved, That we approve of the appointment and sustain the local historian to the British Isles, Elder W. R. Armstrong. Resolved, That a hearty vote of thanks be extended to Apostle Peter Anderson for his visit, instruction, and gentlemanly bearing amongst us. We wish him "God-speed" and his labors more blessed than when he last visited Scandinavia and that he may return home to his family safely when his mission has been accomplished. Resolved, That a hearty vote of thanks be awarded the brethren and sisters of Birmingham for their kindness and hospitality. Resolved, That we sustain the presidents of the mission, the Bishopric of the British Isles, the Bishop's agents, the local historian to Scandinavia, Elder P. Muecus, and the presidents of the conference. Resolved, That a vote of thanks be awarded the catering committee and deacons. Resolved, That we sustain our patriarchs laboring in the British Isles; viz., Elders James Baty and Joseph Greenwood. Resolved, That we sustain our missionaries in the British Isles and Scandinavia. Resolved, That a vote of thanks be awarded Bro. John Hoole, organist, Bro. and Sr. Green of Manchester, and Bro. and Sr. Fish of Warrington, instrumentalists and vocalists of the conference.

Bro. Griffiths here spoke feelingly and approvingly of the godly manner which the brethren had exhibited one toward the other during the transaction of business. Report of the auditing committee on bishop's accounts: They report that they find in the postage account an error of 2d.; in the railway fares 1d.; a discrepancy in casting up of one shilling in Bishop Taylor's accounts. The counselor's accounts are correct. Resolved, That we receive and adopt the report and discharge the committee.

Bro. P. Anderson now said he had enjoyed his visit to England. He had noticed the names of different brethren for years and now he was pleased to become personally acquainted with them. "You enjoy the same Spirit here that we do over there." He said he would remember his visit as long as he lived. He felt grateful for the kindness received and good he had obtained. He and his brethren would remember us.

Bro. Rushton said he had received many kindnesses for which he was thankful. He spoke as one of the boys of the British mission. He realized the gravity of the situation.

Bro. Enge said he felt overjoyed but dared not show it. He felt thankful for the kindness he had received. He had been alone—had no one to commune with, no one to shelter him. He felt very happy. Letters and HERALDS had been his chief comfort. He said that if he had not obtained his fare he would have taken the helm of a vessel to reach conference. He had had many discouragements. The man appointed with him had died.

Bro. Griffiths said it had been made known by the Spirit that Bro. Rushton should go to General Conference. The Bishop felt he ought to go. It was left to him and he felt Bro. Rushton ought to go even if he, Bro. Griffiths, borrowed the money. What transpired proved that it was right. He felt proud of him and so did the brethren there. He exhorted him to be humble, then the Lord would stand by him. He asked the assembly to remember the brethren in their hard missions.

Bro. C. H. Caton spoke feelingly of Bro. Rushton's recognition of the Lord.

Bro. Griffiths spoke of Bro. Thomas Taylor as the father of the work in this land, Bro. C. H. Caton as an Aaron, Bro. J. Dewsnup, Sr., as an honorable man and true, and a friend of the work, and with Henry Greenwood and James Baty as men of God. Much credit was due to these brethren for the great interest they had taken in the young men, for truly they had been fathers unto them. Bro. and Sr. Meredith and Bro. Swan, also others, had helped with their means.

Resolved, That the conference do now adjourn. A most enjoyable and spiritual conference was brought to a close by the singing of "God be with you till we meet again." Closing prayer by Bro. G. T. Griffiths. Sunday services. At 9.30 a. m. a prayer and testimony meeting was held in charge of Elders N. C. Enge and W. H. Greenwood. This was a most enjoyable and blessed time. At 11 a. m. a preaching service in charge of Apostles G. T. Griffiths and P. Anderson was held. A musical composition for the organ by Stainer was played by Brn. John Hoole and J. W. Green (cornet) and a solo by Mrs. Fisher, after which Bro. Anderson addressed the congregation, reading Romans 12, which he said was a good starting point. He exhorted those present to be careful in language and conduct to cultivate both the head and the heart. There was a need for growth. We should speak the truth with sincerity, devotion, and calmness. We must preach with mildness and meekness. Jesus said: "Learn of me." Jesus condemned but he knew all things. We must not condemn. At the close Elder Mather sang with much pathos the song, "Oh the best friend to have is Jesus." At 3 p. m. a social meeting in charge of Brn. G. T. Griffiths, Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., and F. G. Pearce was held. Many interesting testimonies were borne, including that of Bishop Taylor, who stated that he was the first person baptized into the Reorganization in this mission and the Lord had stood by him or he would have gone to the wall. It seemed a comparatively easy thing to be a Latter Day Saint now-a-days. It was not so one time. At 6.30 p. m. preaching services in charge of T. J. Sheldon, G. W. Thorburn, and J. W. Rushton. A solo entitled, "Count your many blessings" was sung feelingly by Sr. A. Green, after which Bro. Rushton addressed the meeting in an instructive, interesting, and rousing sermon which was much appreciated by both ministry and laity.

Addresses.

If any publication in this country epitomizes modern progress, it is the Review of Reviews. The September number of that enterprising magazine interprets significant changes in American social and industrial life in a masterly way. Little can be added to its summaries of the wonderful crop statistics of the present season, while the nation's advance in manufacturing and in the solution of great economic problems is graphically described. Altogether, the September Review of Reviews is a sort of marker in America's industrial development for the year 1902.

The World's Work for September is full of interesting and important things, notable among which is the first of Mr. M. G. Cunniff's articles on Labor Unions. Mr. Cunniff has been living among union men and he writes of the spirit of union methods as seen from the inside. Albert Bigelow Paine, the author of "The Bread Line," took a trip lately from New York to Chicago by trolley, and tells the story of his journey, illustrating it from photographs. Two strikingly illustrated articles are William Bulfin's about The United States in Latin America—the relations of this country with South America from every important point of view,—and an investigation of New Jersey—The Home of the Trusts, by S. McReynolds. Walter H. Page, the editor of The World's Work, signs An Intimate View of Publishing. Arthur Goodrich reports the frank feeling of an American business man about conditions in England, and O. P. Austin, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, has collected interesting statistics about Our Natural Foreign Markets. There are a number of well-illustrated contributions: Breeding New Kinds of Corn—striking new developments in corn culture—by W. S. Harwood; A Typical Irrigated Community in Washington—showing vividly the contrasts between the desert preceding irrigation and the fine harvests that follow it,—by Joseph Blethen; The Highest of All Railroads,—a remarkable engineering feat in the Andes Mountains,—by E. C. Rost, and The Latest Lessons in Modern Farming from Kansas, by C. H. Matson. Some interesting stories are told in A New York Clergyman's Study of the "Stranded," and Russell Doubleday's facts about Correspondence Schools and Ivy Lee's concerning Savings Banks are fresh and significant. The financial article of the month has to do with the New Realty Company in New York, and beside the vigorous editorials, including a summary of A Year of President Roosevelt and the well-depicted facts in Among the World's Workers, there are some interesting details given about American Books Abroad.

Niagara.

Stand with bowed head, and out of reverent eyes
Look on the flood of waters as it leaps
The mighty precipice, to find the deeps
Where the great tides for ever ebb and rise.
No words have we to voice the thoughts that stir
Our hearts with awe, before a sight so grand.
God speaks to us, as we adoring stand,
And makes the flood his strong interpreter.
Oh, world of waters, seeking for the sea,
The great gray sea, resistless in its spell,
That draws you ever onward: kin are we,
For since Time was, so all its annals tell,
Man dares the rocks of fate, beneath a spell
That lures him on to find—Eternity!
