THE NEW YEAR.

In entering upon the occupancy of the New Year, it may be well to take a thought of the situation.

The HERALD is the organ of a movement begun for the purpose of eliminating from the religious ideas extant the errors that had accumulated through years of doubt, fear, and spiritual darkness, so far as this could be done by teaching the Christ idea as revealed in the Bible as the word of God, and to meet and correct within the confines of the corporate body to which the work had been originally committed a dogma so specious and seductive that it had almost overwhelmed the entire work.

As we look back along the lines pursued by those engaged in the work, we see the evidences of life, energy, and true and pure devotion in the mass, and error and wrong-doing in the few; and it may be this will continue to the end of time.

The HERALD has tried to stand for what was honest and consistent in faith and practice; and if it has failed in anywise it has not been for the lack of honest motive and intention. If the methods employed have been faulty it is a matter of regret; and so often as error in method has been discovered, an effort has been made to correct it.

Shall the HERALD be continued? Is there in the church and its interests a place, a necessity for the HERALD? Is there a demand with the people of the church, a demand for the HERALD?

It ought to be known as a fact that there is but a limited field of circulation for the official paper of any religious body, and that field confined to the membership of the association in whose behalf and interests the paper is published. This is about the measure of the field of any church organ. Measured by this rule, if there was a HERALD taken by each family in the connection, rating the family at the ratio of one for every five members, there would be about nine thousand copies taken, there being only some forty-five thousand members for it to circulate among. It is doubtful if more than two hundred copies of the HERALD are taken by those outside of the church membership, as neither the faith, nor its advocates, whether preachers or organs, have any claim on the general population of the world, its chief supporters and those interested in its welfare and success being those who are the believers in its faith and doctrines and practices.

It would seem that the HERALD should have a subscription list as large as the number of families of adherents to the faith. But in fact it has something less than half as many subscribers as families. With many of these the HERALD is a necessity, with some a luxury, with others a duty, as they believe, to take it. We wish that the circulation included one HERALD for each family of Saints, and we would then feel that its mission was being recognized and appreciated.

How shall it be for the year 1902? We are starting into the second year of the twentieth century, and as the first has been fraught with great things, so must the second. Indeed, we look for an increase in things of interest for the people of God in the year now dawning upon us.

A brother writing from the field, under date of December 20, says:

"Dear Brother:—As I understood you at last General Conference to say that the cloud that hung over us would soon be broken, I feel like telling you that I have received greater light by the Holy Spirit this year than ever before. I thank God."

And this is the case with others with whom we have conversed, and with whom our labors have been associated during the year. Personally, we have felt the force of the spirit of gospel teaching in the year just come to its close to a greater extent than for some years before, and have felt very thankful that when called to stand for the Master's word to the people we have realized the truth of the statement he made, "Lo, I am with you unto the end of the world."

The outlook is fair. True, some who were in the ranks of workers have gone to their reward. We miss them, but others will take their places made vacant by death and the ranks be repleted again. And some who have walked with us will no longer do so. Some have grown discouraged and their faith has become broken. These will choose to cease bearing the burden of Christ and lay down their spiritual weapons, possibly no more to take them up. Some will hold themselves driven out by stress of conditions. They can not bear the trials to which they have been subjected, notwithstanding Paul's admonition that the Lord chasteneth every son whom he loveth.

We would that none saw the necessity to leave the faith; but such is the history of the past and will be to the end. We regret to see otherwise noble-minded men to be overcome by conditions which bring a phase of trial, and, because they are tried, to quit the faith, thinking to benefit themselves spiritually thereby. For some of them we see failure and distress.

Some leave the faith because of its restraints upon them. They do not choose to endure the discipline which is required to live good lives. And because they see some others like themselves they consort with them and are led away. Others again leave the faith because they have themselves become indifferent and careless, and seeing some whose lives are not up to the standard of right, conclude that it is because the church is in the dark, and is fast approaching apostasy. The church is to them typified by a few malcontents and spiritual derelicts who do not live as they ought and are soured and suspicious of those who do. These are busybodies, meddlers in other men's matters, malcontents, those who through jealousy see little or no good in others, backbiters and those who speak ill of dignitaries, seeking for and retailing to others like themselves the rumors, reports, and scandals which may affect in any wise the reputation of others. These are not of the church though among the members, and can only relieve the church either by repenting and becoming Christian in department, or by withdrawing from it, or being severed from it.

There have been many added to the church during the last year. Noble men and women whose God is the Lord; and who are not only willing to serve the Master, but are anxious to know how they may serve him more perfectly. With such the blessings of increase and growth have been manifested, and they rejoice in them exceedingly.

The Bishopric is striving to take a step forward in the temporalities of the law; and it should be remembered in this behalf that the Lord has caused it to be written that he has not at any time given a law that is temporal but spiritual, that is, the laws given by him are all spiritual, or are given for spiritual advancement and elevation. And in this light we should regard them. By doing this our understanding of the efforts of the Bishop will not only encourage him, but will make the matter of carrying out the law much easier for all.

Nothing will be required of the people of the Lord that is inconsistent with the promises made to them of blessings in this life, and sanctification at the end of it.

If we have done "what we could" during the year now past, we should continue to do it during the year now beginning. This is all that has been asked of us in the past, all that can or will be asked of us in the future, just to do what we can.

The year has been one of renewed activity in the field, and both the traveling ministry and the local forces have been doing well in keeping the ranks of the workers in the forefront of conflict.

With reflection upon the past there ought to be an elimination of every species of jealousy among the banner-bearers, at home and in the field, during this year. Let us put aside all "superfluity of naughtiness," and uniting all efforts make the year now opening one of the brightest and most comforting of the late decades.

CHANGE IN HERALD FORM.

With this the first number of another year and another volume, the HERALD greets its readers in a new form and dress. Necessity, which compelled the management to procure new type, accounts for the new dress, and a desire to present to our readers a paper fully up to the times has caused a change in the form. Where formerly there were three columns on a page, there are now two, widened accordingly. We feel sure that our readers will be pleased with the change, as in appearance the paper is much better, and we think our readers will also notice an improvement in the ease with which they can read the matter.

As we have made an improvement in mechanical appearance and makeup of the HERALD, so also do we desire to make continued improvement in the character and quality of the organ of the church,—we wish to grow in accordance with the growth that we as a people are surely making. Within the past year the church has entered upon a new phase of its existence, and we trust that the change in general tone of the work will find a sympathetic chord in the HERALD, that we also may be attuned to the new note of progress.

We feel proud to present to our readers an improved paper, and fully expect that the Saints will work in harmony with us to make the HERALD always representative of the people whose organ it is. We are thankful for past support, and are confident it will be continued and even increased.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

“Flowing from the beginning of time, through the ocean of human life, there has been a great current—like the Gulf Stream—of religion. It has been put in motion and kept in motion by the Spirit of God.”

This is a quotation from an excellent article from the pen of the late Henry Drummond, which we print in this issue of the HERALD, and which we commend to the reading of the Saints, the elders especially.

So far as the church is concerned, the question of Genesis has been no detrimental stone of stumbling from the start till now. The opening words, “In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth,” has carried to the mind of the Latter Day Saint, only this thought; that in the beginning of creation, whether that beginning was six thousand, six hundred thousand, or six millions of years ago, the formative work of the universe began through the creative forces of the divine will and in accord with the divine wisdom of God. Nor has it been a source of trouble whether the formative periods called days in the narrative were six days of twenty-four hours each, or six periods of formative processes of uncertain measurement of time.

We understand that the expressions, “Let there be light,” “Let the earth bring forth grass,” “Let there be a firmament,” and such like, do not preclude the entertaining of the idea that the earth was developed from a chaotic condition of matter through processes set in motion by divine command and the will of a Creator, the result of divine intention and purpose. And when we write this, we do not intend to be understood as limiting the power of God in any sense. His power extended over all existent things, the “heavens his dwelling-place,” the “earth his foot-stool.” And all things were and are subject to his will.

The expressions referred to are the dictates of his will, the divine orders which the invisible forces controlled by Deity must obey and the things decreed be wrought out; the things material and visible, brought into orderly relation each one with every and all others, according to the spiritual form existent in the mind of Deity, to fit the purposes for which each separate identity was designed.

With this understanding, the vagaries of false scientific deductions, so-called, have not disturbed the faith of the Saint, nor weakened the hope that in due time the things which are not seen may be understood by the things which are seen, and true science, like all other truths, (if the paradox may be pardoned,) be in accord with the revealed religion of Christ.

It has been held that every truth, no matter what it is, nor where seen or known, must and will harmonize with every other truth; being but a part of one completed whole, each truth will find its own place in the great chain of things temporal and spiritual in the events connected with the creation of the world and its occupancy by man. And when time passes on to the solution of all mysteries man will know what life is, and mystery will cease.

Professor Drummond takes strong, and we think fair, ground against the assertions of science in elegant clothing, and calls the method employed to set aside the Genesis of the Bible by the claim that science disputes, or denies it, a fallacy than which none can be greater. His statement is borne out by the constant accretion of evidences furnished by new and interesting discoveries, which bring the unities of religious and scientific truths into rapport and consequent harmony.

The “current” of religion put in motion by the Spirit of God, as stated in the quotation, has left its markings upon the pathways of the history of the race, and where these are brought to light they are revelations from God. And it is well that in what may be termed by us especial intervention of that Spirit, truths have been made known to us that show that in the material world, the realm of science and human achievement, there was and is agreement, not discord, between true theology and true science. That both are the result of divine intention, and that a more perfect study by man under the direction of the Spirit will bring to light of understanding the unity, harmony, and beauty of the whole.

“There is no space without a kingdom,” is the language of inspiration through the Palmyra Seer. Wherever there is a kingdom there is the principle of orderly government under benign and wise direction always adequate to the legislative, judicial, and executive requirements of the space occupied and the constituent beings governed, for their best good, existence, development, and consequent progress.

The thought that the world of material things was evolved by divine fiat from that which had no existence—made the world out of nothing—has had no lodgment in the minds of those to whom the angel message has come; but that from existent materials void of form, or purpose in existence, the Creator fashioned, created, formed into being and shape all things; the world, the earth in all its various forms and conditions, with the different animate beings designed for its occupancy, and the laws of their existence and government, reproduction and continuance, was and is the conception of the Saint taught in the latter-day philosophy.

The "current" "flowing through the ocean of human life," is indeed still kept in motion by the "Spirit of God." Two main divisions spread from this current; one, carrying in the sturdy embrace of its ever-moving forces the material affairs of the world, all which affect the races of men to the bounds of whose habitations God has set the limits; one, carrying within its powers all that appertains to the mental, moral—spiritual—elements of the human family. These two divisions once one only, in the course of time separated by man's perversity, must in due time converge and unite again, when the Son of God, by his Spirit, shall have overcome and established the reign of truth over all the earth.

ACKNOWLEDGE YOUR FAITH.

Never be afraid to state your faith, or to acknowledge your church relationship.

The average citizen has no sympathy for the man who will deny his religious faith, or refuse to defend it in a manly way when interrogated in regard to it, or assailed on account of it.

The world, that is, the men of the world, has respect for the man who will frankly avow his beliefs and state his reasons for them; but has none for the man who, when asked what his religious belief is, will evade the question, or weakly deny his church relationship because it may not have the approval of the class of people where he may be at the time, or of the one who is questioning him.

The Latter Day Saint as a rule is never afraid or ashamed of his faith or his associate believers; though he possibly may have reasons to feel ashamed of the conduct of an individual or so who may be walking disorderly, or unworthily. Even then he feels more pity than resentment for the offender.

There is now and then a man who is so impressed with the glamour of what is called respectability, or the opinion of those moving in the so-called respectable circles of society, that he hesitates to avow his connection with the church, and prefers not to be known as a believer in the doctrines of the church, for fear that it may affect his business, or social standing. We have known a few such people, members of the church, and have really pitied them while at the same time have felt the flush of shame at the idea of having any one to be mentally annoyed or distressed because of the fact that he was, or had been, a fellow believer with Christ as we had learned to know him.

It is hard enough to meet and bear the ostracism of those not of the faith, and who have no regard for one's belief; but the sensation that one has when he is made to know that another whom he has known as a fellow believer prefers not to be recognized as an associate in the faith, is one that is not easily forgotten when once felt. From the outside one has reason to expect social ostracism; but from one of the household it is a cruel experience. We have known what it is, and so write from knowledge.

If the poor, weak hypocrisy which makes a man a moral coward to the extent of being ashamed of his best inheritance, his religious convictions, for fear of the ridicule, sneers, or the self-righteous reproof of his neighbor, causes him to be mistrusted by that very neighbor, and creates disgust and contempt in the minds of his fellows, including even the very ones to whose opinions he has mistakenly bowed, what shall be said of the effect it may have upon the One Being in whose good opinion and favor he should stand well both in this world and in the world to come.

If the world-wide Christian axiom, "Though all the world be against us and God be with us, we are in the majority," be true, and we are strongly impressed that it is, then by just so much as we yield to the pressure of the fitful and erring dictates of human respectability based upon the wealth and wisdom of this world, by so much we must fail to find approval with Him who will judge men according to standards of social life obtaining in the circles where the righteous, the redeemed, Christ and God are.

It is becoming, then, in all who have taken the vow of righteous endeavor in the regenerating waters of baptism, to stand ready to "give to every man a reason for the hope that is in him;" without fear of the self-constituted arbiter of religious respectability. If a man is a friend to humanity, a lover of truth, a doer of good, a law-abiding citizen, and a member of the commonwealth of Israel, he has nothing to fear. Let us not be afraid.

RELIGION OF CHRIST AND BUSINESS.

Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, is quoted on the social and labor question as follows by the Chicago American:

"After many years of investigation into the social, moral, and industrial condition of the people, I came to the conclusion that in the adoption of the philosophy of the religion of Christ as a practical creed for the conduct of business there was to be found the surest and speediest solution of the difficulties which excite the minds of men, and which lead many to think social, industrial, and political ruin is at hand.

"I still remain of the same opinion, and I look for the continued increase of the influence of religion upon modern thought and of its powers to sway the lives and the actions of men."

The above is quite an admission for a business man to make. It is, however, substantially what some others have said who were at the time engaged in economic enterprises. These confessed that no common stock, all things common, or fraternal society, where equality was sought, could succeed where the religious element in the members and the association was lacking.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Henry Kemp writes from Shenandoah, Iowa, December 19: "Our work is moving along very nicely in the district. Brethren Mintun and Fry are doing missionary work together, holding forth at present in the Dutch Hollow Schoolhouse. They are both pushing the work as best they can, and feel well in the work. I am trying to make arrangements to be home for Christmas, the first time in eleven years. I am feeling well in health and having good success in the work."

Bro. Walter L. Bennett writes from Ashville, Ontario, December 12, 1901: "The work in these parts seemed to go rather slow for a time when we first arrived, but is presenting a better appearance at present. Some of the clergy have taken to fretting to some degree over 'the wolves in sheep's clothing,' one of them becoming so concerned that he drove some ten miles to deliver a lecture against us. This was done, however, under the pretense of administering the sacrament; and after getting his congregation worked up to a feeling of antagonism against us he administered it. We replied; but he did not wait to hear. Others of his profession have dipped in their oars, but usually go off in a sulky mood. The last few days remind us very forcibly of the necessity of furs, although we have had an excellent season for this country."

Bro. A. J. Shores writes from Blair, Indian Territory, December 22, 1901, stating that he would be pleased to have some of the elders come there to preach. And if they will notify him when they are coming he will meet them at Sallisaw, that being the nearest station. He says he is hoping and praying for the speedy redemption of Zion and the consequent blessings. He says: "We are isolated, my wife and I being the only Saints in this region. I feel somewhat lonesome, and have not had a paper for over a week, the river being filled with floating ice so that I can not cross over. I always look forward to the day when I get my church papers. I am doing all I can to spread the angel's message."

Bro. Arthur H. Allen, Jasper, Minnesota, writes December 19, 1901: "We are isolated here, seldom seeing any of the Saints or ministry, and enjoy the church papers very much. Each year seems to widen the breach between truth and error; and though opposed, the message of seventy years ago through God's choice seer shines brighter each day."

Bro. John A. Larson writes from Freesoil, Michigan, December 26, 1901: "The HERALD is a great comfort to us. It is, or ought to be, a household necessity in the families of Saints."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

An extra amount of this number of the HERALD has been printed, to send out as sample copies. Those of our readers who know of persons who might wish to become subscribers will confer on us a favor by sending us the names of such persons.

The Swedish Board of Guardians publish a report of investigations to the effect that fifty-two per cent of the pauperism of Sweden is the result of drunkenness. Of these fifty-two per cent of the whole number, six per cent are cases in which both parents were drunkards, thirty-nine per cent only the father, and seven per cent the mother. What a sermon on intemperance!

Sr. M. J. Kling, of Akron, Ohio, sends us a copy of the Akron Beacon Journal, of December 14, 1901, in which she has an article of four and a quarter columns in which she reviews one written by one Emil Gammeter, a recent convert to Utah Mormonism, and defensive of that church. Sr. Kling makes good use of the scriptural testimonies, and presents the positions of the Reorganized Church in a forcible and intelligent way.

Sr. Mary A. White, of St. Joseph, Missouri, writes that she is doing all she can for the Master, and is rewarded by the presence of the Spirit.

The Brooklyn Eagle sends us a calendar for 1902. It is one of the neatest we have received. It is sent out as an "art supplement" to their issue of December 22.

DUTIES, RESPONSIBILITIES, AND FAITH OF THE SAINTS.

As we shall soon reach the closing time of another year, it will be well to look back over the immediate past and review the work done, comparing the same critically with the written word, so as to determine whether the law of Christ has indeed been fulfilled in our work, or whether we have come short. Forty years ago attention by divine commandment was called to the necessity of "fulfilling" the law relating to temporal matters. Doctrine and Covenants section 114, paragraph 1. And it will require but little reflection on the part of any one in order to know that so long as the law of Christ or any part of it remains unfulfilled, as a people we are lacking, not having performed the duties required of us.

As children and followers of the Holy One, who became such because he was obedient in all things, we can not in any sense afford to fail in keeping the least of the commandments which he has given us. The church was advised as early as 1834 of the necessity of obedience to all the laws of God, and instruction plainly given that "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."—D. C. 102: 2.

It is not our object in this review to judge any brother or sister as to their standing, or worthiness or unworthiness, under the law. Each is to do that for himself. But it will be expected of us to point out, in so far as we are able, in much plainness, the requirements under the law, that all may have a quickened sense of duty and a clearer conception, if possible, of the law relating to the unrighteous mammon, or riches of this world, as illustrated by Jesus in the parable of the unjust steward.

The Master taught plainly the results and consequences of both the performance and the nonperformance of duty in these things, not leaving the task to those who might err. He said: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?"—Luke 16: 10-12.

The things which we now have are not our own, but God's. Christ has wrought out for us a rich inheritance which is to be given as our "own," if we shall prove ourselves faithful. Each then should awake and examine himself faithfully, as the Lord shall judge in faithfulness by and by.

Seventy years are now accomplished since the instruction was given: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming) for after to-day cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon."—D. C. 64: 5.

This harmonizes so wonderfully with the testimony given, by the inspired Psalmist, and of which he states, "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken," that no doubt need arise as to the divine touch of the revelation. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalms 50: 2-5.

The establishment of Zion, the coming of the Lord, the terrible burning, the testimonies of heaven and of earth, and the gathering of the saints who have made a covenant by sacrifice, are all here set forth in majesty and power. Surely no faithful Saint can ever hesitate to perform his duty because it will be a sacrifice to do so after studying this language.

In the ministration of the law of Zion touching temporalities, as with the law relating to spiritual things, there is a proper order, and each step is taken as men and women are in condition to make the same. Faith in God is not had without hearing the word of God. There can be no true baptism without faith and repentance. But after the condition of hearing the word, faith is possible; and under the conditions of both faith and repentance, baptism may be administered; all these having been performed, another new and extended step, the laying on of hands, is provided for under the law. Should a person demand the ministration of the laying on of hands as a first step he would never gain the position of practical advancement in divine things.

This law is equally true in the administration of that which relates to temporal matters. Had the church, when under the form of branch and district government only, demanded the administration of the law that is made applicable in Zion and her stakes, failure and confusion must certainly have ensued. The distinctive line outlining the conditions was clearly drawn in the revealed law, so that no mistake need be made in a proper administration. The instruction is given: "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established."—D. C. 117: 11. If there was no necessity for a stake there was no necessity for the administration of a section of the law that was made applicable under the condition of a stake; and the work of gathering tithes and offerings would be carried on, as in the case of the preaching of the gospel by John, preparing a people for more perfect things, if they should not reject the counsel of God by refusing to obey what they could obey.

We are called upon to occupy ground as we advance, not before. It was necessary for Israel to cross the Jordan before attempting to apply certain laws and usages to Canaan; and we have our Jordan before us and the wilderness about us in a spiritual sense, and are required to work accordingly. These conditions were foreseen and pointed out in the revelations, hence some features found in the law: "Let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption." This is not to be interpreted to mean that we shall wait until the redemption has been completed before any part of the law is applicable and binding, but as a step is made in the work of redemption, so the Saints must occupy accordingly and fulfill the law relating to such new condition.

Following the order of development and growth intimated in the law, on the 15th of April, 1901, the following instruction was received and subsequently accepted and acted upon by the church: "My people are directed to establish two stakes; one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law."—D. C. 125: 10. Authoritatively, then, we pass in part at least from the governmental forms of branches and districts to that of stakes, and by this step take upon ourselves all the responsibilities and duties incident to the new relation, and are entitled to all the privileges and blessings promised for the new order, providing we are faithful in carrying out the laws revealed for the government of the same.

Under these advanced conditions none ought to be surprised that greater sacrifices are expected, and that a fuller consecration of our powers, affections, and interests are required to the service of God by the people than before. When a stake had been appointed and the Saints were gathering to Far West in 1838, special petition was made of the Lord to know what was required of the people; they prayed: "O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy children for a tithing." There could have been little or no question as to what was a proper tithe under the law as applicable to the church in a scattered condition at the time, for numerous instances of precept and example are contained in the Scriptures setting forth the rule and practice. The people at this time, however, seem to have been apprehensive that the special work they had undertaken would require special diligence and sacrifice on their part, and they seem to have done that which was eminently proper under such circumstances,—appealed to the Lord for instruction and received the following:

"Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."—D. C. 106: 1.

The law is not local in the sense that it was for these people alone, however; for the second paragraph, like the promise of Peter on Pentecost Day, extends the application, as follows: "Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen." This instruction more fully revealed the law applicable under the conditions named. Nearly seven years before, the Lord spoke of the work of sacrifice and gathering as follows:

"And now I give unto you further directions concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys accordingly as the law directs."—D. C. 58: 7.

The example here presents also another feature of importance to the Saints—that of inheritances. And the important instruction, "concerning the residue of the elders," as set out in the ninth paragraph, should not be overlooked. Considering the general sentiment known to have been held to by the people at the time, the statement becomes a wonderful prophecy, now literally fulfilled, showing that time would be required to accomplish the work and the necessity of carrying the gospel message to all people. It reads: "And now, verily I say, concerning the residue of the elders of my church, The time has not yet come, for many years, for them to receive their inheritance in this land, except they desire it through the prayer of faith, only as it shall be appointed unto them of the Lord. For, behold, they shall push the people together from the ends of the earth." No place is found, it seems, for either elder or layman in the gathering without proper sacrifice and the exercise of supreme faith in God; nor should anything less be expected. Men and women in order to inherit heavenly things should show by their obedience and fidelity to the principles belonging thereto that they are worthy. It may require great sacrifice on their part to attain it. It may demand the manifestation of great courage and faith, or all of these; but it is certain that attainment is only had under these conditions. Jesus said to his disciples: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. This he spake unto his disciples, saying, Sell that ye have and give alms; provide not for yourselves bags which wax old, but rather provide a treasure in the heavens, that faileth not."—Luke 12: 35, 36, I. T.

To have required less of the Saints in 1838 than was asked in the first century would have been unlike God.

It is stated in section 42: 8: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me; and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose." This applies to all the church, and in effect is much the same as surplus, as stated in section 106. In laying the foundation of Zion, lands have to be purchased, and storehouses established, and all kinds of industries set in operation as fast as possible, that there may be places for the Saints to live, something for them to do, and their necessities supplied; but this will take time. In order to have means to operate with, it will be necessary for all that can to turn over their surplus, or now make a first consecration, according to their circumstances and ability, that there may be means to establish storehouses, buy lands, and make the necessary preparation for the complete consecration of the residue as stated in paragraph 10, section 42: "And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants."

To reach this final condition and to make our work a success, this law must be fulfilled, that all things may be prepared, and nothing done in haste. When the Saints began to gather to the land of Zion in 1831, they were requested by revelation in Ohio to give of their means to buy land in Zion; all the churches being called upon to do the same. "And let all the moneys which can be spared, it mattereth not unto me whether it be little or much, be sent up unto the land of Zion, unto them whom I have appointed to receive."—D. C. 63: 10.

This seems to be the Lord's way to establish Zion, and all should gladly labor with him to accomplish the work intrusted to the church. The apostle says: "For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."—1 Corinthians 3: 9. Then we must work according to his direction and pattern, else we toil in vain. With the law demanding the surplus let us comply, and all everywhere make a first consecration as a beginning at least; and when there is sufficient in the treasury, those in charge will move forward with their part of the work, as fast as deemed wise, or as the Lord shall direct. We do not want the cries of the worthy poor to ascend to God in vain, and we must do the Lord's work in his way. Both propositions must be met.

In the 50th Psalm the Lord says, "The world is mine and the fullness thereof." We, then, are only stewards under God. This is in harmony with what he says in section 101:10: "Behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken; and if the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards."

The full time having arrived under God's order and blessing, the Bishopric calls upon the Saints everywhere to yield full and complete obedience to every mandate of the law, with a free heart, willingly, and as the Lord has blessed every one, whether with much or little, and all to be used for the purpose designated in the revelations.

The presiding Bishop, therefore, will administer this law, take the testimonies and receive surplus properties and special consecrations of the Saints in every place according to the provisions of the law concerning the same. And the bishops in the Stakes of Zion will proceed to administer the law of the Lord touching surplus properties and consecrations in connection with tithes and offerings in their respective stakes according to the rules and regulations furnished by the Bishop of the church, that there may be harmony and equality in the administration of the law among the people, making due report of the same to the presiding Bishop.

Bishops in districts, and Bishop's agents, will also carry out these provisions so far as the same are applicable, under the instruction and advice of the Bishop and his counselors. Thus the church will work unitedly for the building up and establishing of Zion, and her interests, according as the Lord has designated concerning stakes, and of churches outside as provided by section 58: 10, 11; 63: 8, 13.

Carrying into effect these provisions will not in any manner interfere with the contributions in the way of special offerings made for college purposes. The law directs the application of the funds herein called for, and every cent of it is needed for the purposes named. The law is also definite touching the duty of the Saints to the college, and this duty should be discharged by every member, for none should neglect to heed the voice of the Master touching it, and fulfill the obligation. All unpaid subscriptions to the college should be forwarded as soon as possible, so they may be applied and the debt canceled.

It may be said that the Bishopric is making a good many calls for money for church purposes, all of which is frankly conceded. But we ask in reply, Is it not necessary to do this if the work is kept advancing toward the accomplishment of the things spoken of in the law? It is also a truth that must not be overlooked, if we would judge aright in these matters, that notwithstanding the fact that there are many calls for help for first one special necessary church work, and then another, the Saints who have sacrificed and helped in all of these things are better prepared to comply with the last call made than they were the first. It is said that "giving does not impoverish the Lord." True; and it may also be truly said that giving, for the benefit of the Lord's work, does not impoverish his children. This is one of the fruits of righteousness to be shown forth in the lives of God's children. Men and women glorify God by giving of their means as they may also in other work, hence, the law of giving. The apostle says: "Let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Again, "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." Jesus said: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." This is true of the one who "honors God with his substance" as in anything else. And instead of saying to the members who have done a good work in anything, It is enough, you need not do anything further, the promise is that the Lord will help them, that they "may bring forth more fruit." We trust, then, that we shall never be called upon to meet the excuse that a person has already done something, therefore, should not be called upon again. We are called upon to give as we are able, not more than we are able to give, and the motto and prayer of every member, of every elder in the field, of every general and local officer in the church should be, Lord, help me that I may be able to do more, rather than relieve me from helping further.

We are engaged in the most important work known to man. Do we think it will be accomplished without extraordinary faith, courage, and sacrifice? Let us not deceive ourselves, and let every man and woman make choice of what they will do. Remember the exhortation of the Lord to Joshua: "Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." —Joshua 1: 9.

Trusting fully in the promises of the Lord to his Saints, and that his work will be fully accomplished in his own time, we are,

Your collaborators in the truth,

The New "Arena."

The January number of The Arena begins the twenty-seventh volume and the fourteenth year of that well-known review. It opens with a fine essay on "Anarchism," by the Rev. R. Heber Newton, D. D., in which the writer discusses the ethical, sociological, and political aspects of that burning question. "The English Friendly Societies," by Eltweed Pomeroy, A. M., is an interesting description of a recent visit to the scene of the "Rochdale experiment" in coöperation. Theodore F. Seward describes the "Spiritual Birth of the American Nation," and in addition to his regular departments of "Topics of the Times" and "Books of the Day," Editor B. O. Flower contributes a luminous essay on "The Rise of Photography and its Service to Mankind." T. St. Pierre discusses "Responsibility in Municipal Government," and W. A. Curtis considers "Race Reversion in America."

INFLUENCE OF SCIENCE UPON RELIGIOUS BELIEF.

We can not disguise from ourselves the fact that far more people are reading science just now than religion. I do not speak of America or England and Europe, but of the world—of India and Japan and the colonies, where science is being studied on every hand. We are constantly confronted with the difficulty. Young men get a few scientific ideas, and immediately attack the book of Genesis.

One of the most distinguished scientific men in England, not very long ago, when he was asked why he did not throw his immense weight on the side of religion, said: "You hand me your religious book, I open it, and the very first page I read hopelessly contradicts all my other knowledge. What am I to do?"

There is no greater fallacy than the position assumed by that teacher; nor is there any worse example of ignorance on the part of a scientific man. I wish very briefly to try to put before you the situation as it at present stands. It is not only of interest in the connection in which I have spoken, but it is a beautiful example of the progress of thought in one of the higher departments of knowledge.

This question has gone through three very distinct stages. Until a very short time ago there was only one opinion about the beginning of the world. It was held by the Church, it was held by Science, that the world was made in six literal days. Even in our own childhood most of us can remember that was the belief of all our teachers, and of our parents, and became our own first belief. It was a very beautiful belief, that old belief, but it has been disturbed.

That is what university and other lecture courses are for. We attend them to be disturbed, not merely to be confirmed in the ideas we have held all our lives, but—if we are growing, to get new light upon the old truth, and to have a new proportion and emphasis given to what truth can not be altered.

THE CREATION.

The first stage, then, in the history of this subject, is that in which the cosmogony of the world has been determined by the first chapter of Genesis, and which teaches that the world was made in six literal days. So Genesis was supposed to teach.

Theological teaching and sermons were based on this belief. Scientific investigations were made and books of science were written with this as an unquestioned postulate. And literature, we know, from the primer up to the epic poem, has taken it for granted.

Then geologists were hammering at the rocks all over the world, and this question came before them. They came to the conclusion that it was impossible that God had made the world in six literal days, or that the world is only six or eight thousand years old.

Christian geologists did not dispute that God could make the world, or anything, in any time or in any way; but they could not help disputing the process by which God had made the world as opposed to the process of creation by fiat, which was supposed to have been the method of Scripture.

As they examined the rocks more and more, they were more and more confirmed in their belief that there was something wrong about the account of the creation in Genesis, or about the account they were discovering in science.

They referred the chronology of the rocks to Christian theologians and these men attempted to reconcile the first page of Genesis with that chronological scheme.

THE RECONCILERS.

This marks the second period, the period of the reconcilers. Some of the ablest men on both sides of the Atlantic worked very hard at that question. They studied geology with minute and reverent care.

They studied the Hebrew Bible, and tried to find out whether "day" was not susceptible of a larger meaning. They very soon came to the conclusion and adopted the view that "day" in the Mosaic cosmogony might represent a very long time, and that after the "beginning," when God created the heaven and the earth, there might have elapsed a time for which we have no date. They worked at the order recorded in Genesis, and tried to harmonize that with the order of geology.

A NEW SCIENCE.

But as science came to be more and more studied, not so much geology this time as biology, and embryology, and paleontology, it soon became evident that the position of the reconcilers was becoming more and more precarious, as the result of these studies.

Scientific men made out a new table of the forms and order of life, and they said: "Now look at Genesis again, and look at our table." As men who with candid minds looked at these two tables, they were bound to admit that there were discrepancies between them.

That was a period of alarm. A number of men who had been working at the reconciliation of Genesis and science were forced to reconsider their position. But they faced the situation manfully, while they said, "We do not see any way out of this along the line upon which we are working at present, but help will come from some other source." And help did come, and from a quite unexpected source.

Meanwhile, in England and in America and Germany, a new science was springing up, a theological science, the science of Biblical criticism. It is comparatively new even yet. Many of its results are uncertain, but some definite results have been established.

The method is this:

It takes up this book, the Bible, as Professor Dowden takes up Shakespeare, and says, "We will apply the ordinary methods of criticism to this book. We will find out what plays are historical, what plays are tragical, and what are romantic. We will apply all methods of literary criticism to these plays." By applying this method to the Bible they have given us what I might almost call a new Bible.

They ask themselves with reference to the Bible such questions as these:

"Here is the book of Job. What does it mean? Is it a fact, an attempt to communicate a literal history? Is it a drama, a poem? What is it?" These are perfectly fair questions.

They are literary questions, and you can not forbid literary men to ask such questions; questions of subject and treatment; questions of style, of conception, as well as questions of authorship.

When they came to the first chapter of Genesis, they said: "We have always regarded this chapter as being science; but now as literary men, reading it over again with all our literary aids, we are inclined rather to believe that it is another form of literary composition."

Some say it is one form of composition, some say it is another; but they are all unanimous in declaring that it is not science.

THE NEW BIBLE.

As a mere literary question, the first chapter of Genesis is not science. If you ask Bunyan what the first chapter of Genesis is, he will say it is science. If you ask a scientific man contemporary with Bunyan what it is, he will say it is science.

If you ask the modern literary critic what it is, he will say that it is not science. If you ask Mr. Huxley what it is, he will agree with the modern literary critic, that it is not science.

This is the new field that has been opened, and it is the result of that literary criticism that has come to the help of the man who found himself in the dilemma to choose between the record of the rocks and the record of the Mosaic cosmogony.

It is now no longer necessary for him to reconcile the science of Genesis with the science of geology or paleontology, because as a matter of fact, according to the most modern ideas Genesis is not science at all.

That is the third stage into which this question has come. Very many people have not noticed that change. They have not observed the rise of this new science.

This new science stands upon as firm a basis as the science of theology itself, or as the science of geology.

The clearest way out of the difficulty is to fall back upon the position that that is not a science account of the creation.

REVELATION.

It is a principle of interpretation well known to all theologians that the Bible never reveals anything which man could find out for himself. Man could find out the way in which the world was made.

There is no question about the fact that God made it. The only question is as to the process. Was it spoken into space in a moment, and organized in six days; or was it made by a gradual series of operations in the hand of secondary causes? That is the only question.

The Bible never reveals anything that man could find out for himself. Apply this principle to any department, and you will find that it holds true.

The first thing the Bible would have taught us, if it had meant to teach science, would have been medicine. The Bible would have told us how to make surgical instruments. We have had to find out all that for ourselves.

It is much more important that we should know how to save life than that we should know geology. The last thing the Bible would teach us would be geology, if it meant to teach science.

What we have, then, in the beginning of Genesis, is not an account of how the world was made, but a revelation of the more important truth that God made it. No science could ever find that out.

The Bible is a religious book, not a scientific book, and it tries to teach in these opening words that "in God we live and move and have our being." It gives us an inventory of the things God made. It leaves men to find out the way in which he made them, and the order and the time.

THE GULF STREAM OF RELIGION.

While speaking of the new method of looking at the Bible, this new science of literary criticism, I may add one or two words about the New Testament in the same connection:

First. I should like especially to look at this thought, that the Bible is not the cause of religion, but the product of it; that religion does not come—did not come, out of the Bible, but the Bible came out of religion.

Flowing from the beginning of time, through the ocean of human life, there has been a great current—like the Gulf Stream—of religion. It has been put in motion and kept in motion by the Spirit of God.

Secondly. These men when they spoke were not typewriters. They were authors. They were not pens. They were men; and their individuality comes out in every page they wrote.

Sometimes they write a better style than they do at other times. Sometimes their minds are clearer and their arguments more condensed and consecutive and logical.

Look at some of the involved theological statements in the New Testament, and contrast them with the absolutely pellucid utterances of the same author written on a different occasion when he was in a different mood.

Those men were not mere pens, I repeat; they were authors, and it is not the book that is inspired, so much as the men. God inspired men to make an inspired book; but the religion does not come out of the book, the book comes out of the religion. Just as a scientific man in communication with nature reads its secret, drinks in its spirit, and writes it down, so a man who walks with God catches the mind of God and gets revelations from God and writes them down; religion is not the result of this, but the cause of it.

Thirdly: Then, I need not tell you that in most cases these men did not know that they were making a Bible. Paul had probably not the least idea that his letters were going to be kept on to the nineteenth century, and be read in our churches and become the fountain-head of theology. He wrote them simply as letters.

Fourthly: I need not remind you again that the Bible is not a single book; it is a library. It is a system of sixty-six books written for very different purposes, by different minds.

It contains history, which came out of facts; devotional books, which came out of experiences; didactic pieces, poetry, and philosophy; quotations from the heathen poets—"As certain also of your own poets have said," observed Paul to the Athenians on Mars Hill.

Although it is a great convenience to have all these books bound up together into one, we are very apt to be misled in studying this book, if we do not remember that it is not a consecutive book, but a library. These books were stitched together by human hands—under the guidance of God, doubtless, but by human hands.

VII.

Let me tell you of what the New Testament consisted for the first hundred years. It included the four Gospels and a number of letters.

Instead of being collected into the Bible, the book of the Acts was in the pocket of Theophilus; the book of the four Gospels was not at this time in one volume—one was in Rome, another in Southern Italy, another in Palestine, and another in Asia Minor.

Then, of the twenty-one letters, five were in Greece and Macedonia, five were in Asia, one was in Rome, and the rest were in private hands. These were collected undesignedly in the first instance. One man in Rome would perhaps hear that there was one of these letters of Paul in Asia Minor or in Greece, and he would send some one to get a copy of it.

That copy would be sent, and by and by the churches would get copies of most of these writings. By the end of the second century all the books were known, but they were never collected until about the end of the third century.

Then the New Testament consisted of the Acts, thirteen Epistles of Paul, First John, First Peter, the Epistle of Barnabas, the Epistle of Clement, and the Epistle of Hermas; that is to say, there were books in the New Testament which are not in it now, and there are books in it now which were not in it then.

So that the New Testament as we have it now was not then known. It was not till the end of the fourth century that these books were all stitched together and made in one. It was done not by any formal act of any church, but by the general consent of God's people.

This makes a very great difference as to the way in which we should regard his book, and especially as to the way in which we are to choose a text here and there and a chapter here and there, and build speculative doctrines upon them.

Not until the third century this book was divided into chapters, and not until 1551 was it that an old Christian monk put it into verses and employed punctuation marks.

You see this book has come by a perfectly natural process, guided, no doubt, by God's mind. It is now in line with all the other processes of God; not sprung into being by divine fiat, but it is a slow growth or development—an evolution, if you please.—The late Henry Drummond, in Chicago American, November 24, 1901.

The Fall Of A Noble Man.

A TRUE PICTURE, PRESENTED AS A WARNING TO OTHERS.

I knew him in the prime of life,
Stalwart of frame and strong of mind,
Once forward in the holy strife
To serve his God and bless mankind.

His native gifts were rich and rare,
With keenest power to discern—
His powers of reason more than fair,
While love of truth within him burn'd.

A kindly heart beat in his breast,
A generous impulse fired his soul—
He loved to succor the distressed,
And point them to the heavenly goal.

He led the stranger to his home,
And shared with him his frugal meal;
Sought to dispel the outcast's gloom,
And kindly strove his woes to heal.

The poor sought not his aid in vain,
The naked turned not from his door;
He loved to ease the sick one's pain,
Just as the Master had before.

Such was his life: I knew it well;
For I and mine have often shared
The bounties from his hand that fell,
In Christlike love, without reward.

I would that greater strength were his
To stem the tide of sin and strife—
The wiles of Satan to resist,
And thus secure eternal life.

Alas! Dark shadows, deep and fell,
Had crossed his path in later days,
And crushed his soul with their dread spell,
And lured him on to evil ways.

To drown his woes he sought the cup
That sparkles with the fires of hell,
And drained each soul-destroying drop,
As victim to its fires he fell.

But yet there lingered in his breast
A love for truth, for God and man;
But subject now to sin's behest,
He crouched a slave to its dread ban.

O! that frail man this truth would learn,
"That he who stoops to sin must wear
Its cursed chain, its wages earn,
Though sinks his soul in deep despair."

His ears now deaf to love's appeal
From her to whom, long years ago,
He pledged his honor to be leal,
When once "they twain" became as one.

Her loving soul was wrung with grief,
Her prayers and tears were all in vain;
In death she found a sweet relief—
Heartbroken 'neath the dreadful strain.

A slave to the infernal thirst,
Created by the damning cup,
He had no power his chains to burst,
Nor raise his fallen manhood up.

More deeply still the glass he drains—
The hellish fire more fiercely burns,
Destroying mind and heart and brains,
Until the dust to dust returns.

His trembling soul now flies to God.
O Savior! will thy blood atone?
Justice must wield the chastening rod;
But Mercy, too, will claim her own.

O God! Wilt thou not mercy show
To this poor fallen child of thine?
Didst thou not suffer here below,
To save such in thy love divine?

Is it not written in thy word
That he who feeds thy little ones,
And has the cry of suffering heard
And sought to still the sufferer's moans,

Who to the stranger ope'd his door,
And sought to set the captive free,
Shall in thy tender mercies share
"Because he did it unto thee"?

Father, we own thy ways are just,
And Mercy's smiles are in thy face:
O! help us in thy love to trust
And live more worthy of thy grace.

Doings of Canada Mobs.

Editors Herald:—Herewith I submit a partial report of recent peculiar experiences which you are at liberty to publish if thought advisable.

About one month ago Bro. D. Smith and your humble correspondent engaged the town hall of Milverton for five nights. Posters were put up, tracts distributed, and meetings were advertised by village editor in a series of untrue and vicious articles, endeavoring to convince the public that we were associated with Salt Lake Mormonism.

Called on several of the parsons, one of whom, a Mr. Snowden (Methodist), proved most unreasonable; in fact, his oft-repeated expressions such as "You are lying," "Don't lie to me," rather indicated he was minus much of gentlemanly propensity. He and another delivered prejudicial discourses during our short stay in the place.

Services commenced Sunday, November 17, at three p. m., with a tremendous audience, but not the best order. Preached again in the evening, and in all my six and one half years of experience as a missionary I have never known such disorderly proceedings. They stamped like maddened bulls, mewed like cats, and hissed like geese. I managed to stagger through the discourse, endeavoring to show our disconnection with the Utah heresy. We were hooted, and stones were thrown at us while going home that evening.

Back we came next night, bringing a large chart, hoping that the pictures might sufficiently interest the curious, and thus disturbances might be checked. It worked well. Had good order. But the pent-up opposition exercised its fury immediately after service. We received an undelicious dose of rotten eggs, without money and without price. It was certainly unredeemable hen fruit.

Back we came the third night, a distance of nine miles from where we tarried, and in getting out of the buggy received a repeated administration of the unpleasantness of the previous evening. There must have been an extraordinary supply of unsaleable eggs in town.

Strange, or not strange to say, no audience greeted us save the four Saints who journeyed with us from Rostock; namely, D. Smith, H. Schlotzhauer, his father, and T. Armstrong. The village roughs amused themselves in all manner of mischief at hall doors, thereby practically preventing respectable citizens from attending. We were powerless to persuade them to go away or desist. No constable was at hand. Waited till fifteen minutes after time of appointment; opened meeting, read a little and dismissed the Saints, making no further appointments, as two dollars a night thus far had proved to all appearances an unprofitable expenditure.

Meeting over, and expecting a possible egging, I donned my overcoat inside out, and what an amusing spectacle I was! To avoid possible conflict with the mob, for by this time the streets seemed to be full, we retreated down the back way and made a bee-line to the left; but our movements had been watched. We ran into a mob and were driven back by showers of missiles. Retreating, we launched to the right, only to meet the same repulse. Matters were getting serious. There appeared to be no escape, only as we might gain shelter somewhere and wait till the storm was over. Knocking or thumping at the rear door of a shoe store, the proprietor soon came and permitted us to enter. Tarrying there awhile, we at last concluded to run the gauntlet down Main Street to the place where our vehicles were left.

With a "Hurrah boys," and, "Face the music," we ventured on our way. The eggs flew thick and fast, the streets were crowded, and evidently the mobs meant business. Didn't mind the ancient "hen fruit" much; but running out of ammunition, the enemy armed themselves with stones, and accordingly we got a "double shuffle on."

'Twas a quarter of a mile to where buggies were located. Out of breath and hotly pursued, we arrived at length. Bro. Smith was struck heavily on one side of the head, nearly knocking him down. In at the front door Dave jumped, while the minister in the case, streaming with eggs, felt it somewhat unceremonious to locate our uninviting person in the parlor or sitting-room of strangers, especially in our highly-flavored condition. I hid at the rear of the house. Was there long enough to stow away valise in buggy and regain my breath, when the mob spied me. Into the yard and on to the rear they came. 'Twas folly to stand our ground; they were half a hundred strong. To the other side of house I rushed; and the mob, discovering my decampment, shrieked out a fiendish yell, "He's gone around to the other side." Some of them turned and met me. I was in a fix. Completely surrounded. The stones were driven at me. Having a missile of average proportions, I let her drive at one of them, and retreated to rear of house, thinking that perhaps most of the gang had retraced their steps to the front. In this I was disappointed. There they were, in full force. The onslaught began. Words fail me to express the viciousness of the attack now made with rocks and miniature bowlders; but deliverance was nigh. Bro. Schlotzhauer had back door open for my reception, and in I jumped; and, would you believe it? without a wound! Never a stone struck me. I attribute all to Providence.

Once inside, we, for the moment, felt secure, but our security was of short duration. Up on the veranda and at every door they came, howling like hyenas and yelling like demons, while within

"There was silence, still as death,
And the boldest held his breath
For a time."

Sr. Whitney, the landlady, a widow, retreated to the cellar, while the remainder of us armed ourselves with stovewood sticks and took our stations at the doors. We prepared for the worst. However, the doors, being locked or bolted, resisted all attack. Stones were pelted at the doors.

For two hours or so the mob continued to howl in exasperation, and eventually made a raid on the buggies standing near the kitchen door. My valise being in one, I attempted to rush out and rescue it, as I had a Bible in it so marked up and arranged that seventy-five dollars would not buy it. But no, the Saints wouldn't let me out. Guess they acted wisely. Away the mob rushed with the rigs, hooting exultingly, as they hied away in the distance.

About one a. m. I donned another costume, and disguised, we struck out in search of buggies. Found them, as also my valise; but it had been tampered with. The lock was broken off, my chart was missing, as also seven copies of Book of Mormon, and six copies of Voice of Warning. Bible remained uninjured, and I was happy. Got home four a. m. What a superstitious reverence they had for the Bible!

Next day Bro. Smith and I laid information before Crown attorney, as to what had happened. We thought nothing would ever be done with the mob so far as an administration of law was concerned. In this we were surprised. Four days after the riotous proceedings, the village constable summoned us to attend a magistrate's court, before which sixteen of the mob were to appear. It seems the Crown attorney, who lives at county town, Stratford, wrote to officials of Milverton, pushing them to duty, the result of which was now apparent.

A tremendous crowd assembled to hear the case. Fully five hundred. Trial lasted two days, during which time I believe I heard more lies told than in all my previous life put together. Indeed, that vast audience seemed to applaud when a witness would tell a whopper. It was amusing as well as serious. Nineteen witnesses were examined, and notwithstanding there was not a man came forward to testify in our behalf, yet the evidence was overwhelming, and fully convicted the mob, so far as our discernment would privilege us to discover. Case concluding, the mob wanted to settle. The charge laid against them was that of "riotous assault," which, if sustained, could not be punished by magistrates; they must be sent down to General Sessions at Stratford for trial. The mob was willing to compensate me for damages; but for several reasons I did not feel to settle. Magistrate got at me, wanting me to take seventy-five dollars; then he would dismiss the case, or violate his powers and punish them by light fine. I refused, but as they wanted to get out of going down for trial I submitted to them the cold proposition of paying their county poorhouse four hundred dollars, while I would ask nothing. But no, they'd fight it first.

"All right," said I, "let the law take its course."

Magistrate gave me to understand during the trial that some would be sent down, and two minutes before he rendered his verdict he declared to me in private, "Undoubtedly the boys are guilty." But he played the coward, and bowed to public sentiment by dismissing the case. Instantly my attorney, who was a Mr. Robertson, a lawyer sent from Stratford by Crown attorney, with my permission, appealed the case.

In the meantime, and immediately previous to the above trial, I had succeeded in obtaining a hall two and three fourths miles from Milverton, at a country hamlet called Poole; but the mob element there intimidated the proprietor, who, fearful of results, refused to open the door, notwithstanding the hall had been paid for. No other hall being there, we went to Brunner, which was three miles from riotous Milverton, engaged hall, and made appointments.

And now I feel puzzled to properly relate how the goodness of God was manifest for our protection. I am fully persuaded that I was never nearer, if so near death's door before. The contagious disease of mobocracy grievously infected the locality, and a victim must be found to quell it. I was that desired sacrifice. Permit me to close up this part of my narrative by saying that two letters were delivered in a marvelous manner, warning and forewarning, the which when blending with previous presentations, convinced us of the folly of opening up at Brunner. Hall was and would be locked anyway, so the proprietor informed us.

Perhaps now the reader will learn why it was I refused to settle with mob by accepting financial compensation. The whole country was smitten with all the devilishness of mobocracy. They had driven out the Salvation Army some years before. And what is mobocracy? Nothing but anarchy, in its worst form. There is no clearer or darker manifestation of the powers of hell on earth.

For a long time previous to my advent in Milverton, the press had been publishing the most scurrilous trash and defaming assertions. One man signed his name to an article in which he said that he had heard R. C. Evans preach polygamy at Rostock. Could not hope to reply in Milverton press. The whole community was deceived, and apparently the entire town behind the mob. There were hundreds on the street the night of the riot, and when one learns that the population of the village only aggregated seven hundred he can then form some estimate of the universal sentiment against us before. Our work had never been preached there before. No one offered to defend us as a witness, in the trial. Hilarity characterized the court proceedings and inspired the mob to indifference. What was seventy-five dollars to that gang or crowd to pay? Almost nothing. It was a wealthy community. I wanted to see some evidence of penitence before I settled. Taking their money was naught but a splendid way of legalizing their murderous spirit by paltry purchase. The laws of the Empire had been disrespected, and God offended, and measurably the law of the land is the law of God; consequently its judgments are those of God. I feared to stand in the way of his judgment, lest it fall upon me. At any rate, now was an opportunity to teach them a necessary and indispensable lesson. For two weeks they hung over the confines of the prison. Theirs was a very indictable offense. Three years and no less was the penalty. What nights of horror and days of despair they must have spent! Night and day did Mrs. Coutts cry over her wayward boy. The mobbers ranged in age from eighteen to thirty-five years.

At last the Court of General Sessions convened. Down to Stratford the Milvertonians came. An awful crowd. By this time the whole county was discussing the affair. Toronto papers lengthily related in part the riot affair, hence the Province learned of the matter. Nearly forty witnesses were summoned. At this juncture Elder Evans wrote and advised me to settle with mob if they would pay damages for property destroyed, apologize, and thus mutually withdraw the case. But it could not be done. Crown attorney would not drop the case. If I would not push it, he would. The case went before a grand jury. They were out four hours and brought in a "true bill." Nothing remained now but for case to go before petit jury, and if convicted, immediate imprisonment would be the result. Things looked dark. The Milvertonians were at last humbled. I had the cinch on them; and, best of all, the lever was in my hand to mitigate or qualify the charge to that of "common assault," which was punishable by fine and costs instead of prison. All Milverton looked to me. Here is the proposition I submitted to them: "Plead 'guilty' to a 'common assault.' Give me an apology, signed by three of you. Pay all fines and costs, and give me fifty dollars to cover loss, and I'll mitigate charge." Like birds let free, they submitted to my terms, and humble happiness returned.

Matter was now agreed upon. They pleaded guilty to aforesaid charge; fined and put to costs that aggregated about five hundred dollars. They received a sound lecture from the judge, and I have received all my demands. Herewith I submit the apology given me:

"We, being of the number charged with a riotous assault upon Elder MacGregor, in Milverton, on the 19th day of November, 1901, wish on behalf of those implicated in such assault to express regret that the matter was carried to such unwarranted length, and to state that Mr. McGregor was not personally guilty of any improper action, or any conduct that should have exposed him to the wrong inflicted. Signed,

"FRED RUMFORD.

"BURDETTE COUTTS.

"THEODORE PFEFFER."

This I had published in last night's papers. Milverton now reverences me. Said the editor to me: "Mr. MacGregor, the boys respect you more now than ever before." He gives me permission to write articles for his paper. I thank all Saints who stood by me in this, a trying ordeal. Was made happy to have Elder John McKenzie make his appearance at court of General Sessions; his presence was encouraging. Donated part of funds given me by Milverton to a purchase of the oysters, and we had a good time. Verily the Scriptures are being fulfilled, "Ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles."

Yours on the qui vive for another mob,

D. MACGREGOR.

OELWEIN, Iowa, December 17.

Editors Herald:—I am now engaged in a series of meetings just south of this place. The interest is splendid, and I look for good results. Some of the Methodists have tried to have the doors closed against me, but have not as yet prevailed.

Sr. Laura Clarke and her mother-in-law have requested for quite awhile that some of the elders hold some meetings here. They are the only Saints living in these parts. What a good example will do! Sr. Laura Clarke's husband does not belong to the church, but is very favorable; and I am certain that if a good example will have its weight, he will be a Latter Day Saint sometime.

I will go from here to Cedar Rapids, thence to Amber. The brethren in the field are doing real well.

I wish Bro. Joseph's memorial sermon on McKinley was issued in pamphlet form. I am certain it would have a good circulation. Those out of the church who have expressed themselves to me say that it is the finest address they ever read.

May the Lord's blessing be upon Israel everywhere, is the prayer of Your humble servant,
J. R. SUTTON.

BOTTINEAU, North Dakota, December 20.

Dear Readers of the Herald:—I chronicle a few items relative to the progress of the work on this Northern frontier. Truth forbids a glowing description of large audiences and interesting meetings. In lieu of that, a callous indifference to gospel pleadings prevails everywhere.

A kindly Providence has smiled upon these counties bordering on Manitoba, a most bounteous crop of all kinds, especially flax, has rewarded the farmers' efforts, resulting in the largest volume of business and general boom that has ever been here. Added to that, ten thousand homesteads are said to have been filed the last few months at the Minot United States Land Office. Hotels and restaurants are filled to overflowing with a surging mass of humanity, money and pleasure being the constant theme. The halls are in such demand by players, acrobats, colored minstrels, etc., etc., at high prices, fifteen to twenty dollars per night, that the gospel is relegated to a small private house kept by Bro. and Sr. Howery. My heart swells with gratitude to God that his Spirit has operated upon the hearts of a few, and provided an oasis here and there in this great Sahara of sin. At the home of Bro. Sam Howery, who is city marshal, the humble servant of God always finds a hearty welcome. Sr. May Rodney and her generous husband, who, though not in the church, seconds her willing efforts, keep the "Anderson House."

An examination of the branch record reveals sixty-two members in all, but scattered so widely that not more than one half can attend branch meetings.

With due regard to my appointment as missionary, I endeavor to couple with it the well-being of the financial interests of the Bishopric, not forgetting the "college fund": and I appeal to the Saints of North and South Dakota to remember their obligations, and send to my address. Do not wait until I come: that is impossible in so large a territory, and a needless expense.

With becoming thankfulness to a few who have done nobly, frankness compels me to state there are still many who are not on the Bishop's agent's record at all. Dear brethren and sisters, do you believe in the books? Of course you do. Revelation 20: 12 says the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books. Will the Bishop's books be in evidence at that time?

Ever praying for all the "Israel of God," I am, by his grace,
One striving for the victory,

WM. SPARLING.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, December 17.

Editors Herald:—Are not the signs of the times plainly apparent?

Troubles and tribulations, fires, floods, famines, storms, epidemics, and dire distress follow one after another in quick succession: at home and abroad they weigh down our sympathizing hearts at every succeeding period. There is betimes a lull, a breathing spell of peace and prosperity, when suddenly adversity approaches (the climax of evils long-existing), and almost silently, but with sure tread, marches to our very door. It almost buries the hopes of a nation in despair and wrings tears of sorrow not unmingled with reproach from frail humanity.

A loved president, who trusts implicitly in his fellow man, tender-hearted and provident, is taken from us as were other loved honorable ones; and bidding dear ones and his people a peaceful farewell he commits his noble spirit to God and passes away. But such departures we are seldom prepared for; and well-nigh unreconciled, the nation would feign draw nearer to clasp the paternal hand. With President Roosevelt we can say, "To a standard of lofty integrity in public life he united the tender affections and home virtues which are all-important in the makeup of national character." As he discerned what were the rights of his country, so was he human and just in respecting the needs of the enemy's: and to him and his life work we may well offer the tribute,

"Whoever may
Discern true ends here shall grow pure enough
To love them, brave enough to strive for them,
And strong enough to reach them.
Though the roads be rough."

The nation's friends are ours; but others, nearer and just as dear to us, follow on: a brother, a sister in the more blessed family of our Father bids a lasting good-bye to pain and care and sorrow; but it is only a short farewell to us and earth-hopes centered here, for, after a little while, a brief pass-over, and we shall meet them again, free, joyous, and untrammelled.

A sweet child of the kingdom with character unblemished has just gone from us, and to-day the Saints here will look for the last time on Sister Lizzie Nesbitt's mortal, unsullied features, and mourn, though not without hope, for her as they have for those gone before who live in memory fresh and fragrant forever. The funeral cortege has just passed by, with children bearing flowers, and Bro. Hulmes, who will no doubt conduct the service, leading the pall-bearers with their precious white-draped, white-casketed burden.

"From the withered bitter ground
Every sweet has taken leave:
Joy there's none of sight or sound,
Naught to do but sit and grieve!
Look—the blue! bent close above,
Close above:
While it hovers we may love,
We may love."

Yours in the faith,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

LLANELLY, South Wales, England, Dec. 9.

Editors Herald:—Elder William Lewis and myself having been appointed to this mission, we left New York City November 2, arriving in Liverpool November 9. At Cardiff we separated, Bro. Lewis laboring in Eastern and the writer in Western Wales. I first visited Porth, where I was kindly cared for by the family of our deceased missionary to Wales, Alma N. Bishop. Found a noble band of Saints striving to keep the camp-fire blazing.

I fear this letter would become too lengthy were I to enter into all the details of my travels already in this mission, hence will be content in giving the HERALD readers a mere sketch. It was at Porth that I chanced to meet with my cousin, Rev. T. J. Pritchard, not knowing before that he resided there. I had the privilege of acquainting him with our claims. Also left him some tracts. He has a brother in Mountain Ash, likewise a minister, and whom I intend visiting ere long, the Lord willing.

As I felt desirous of learning the location of the district, I moved on next to Aberaman, where I found a few Saints struggling on to maintain the right, and holding regular services at the home of Bro. and Sr. Evan Lewis. Enjoyed myself with them over Sunday, doing all I could to help in the services and strengthening the Saints in the most holy faith. I did not miss the opportunity of visiting an aged sister, Elizabeth Evans, at Hirwaen, whom I found an invalid, being confined to her bed, lo, these long twenty-four years. The Lord was truly present in administering comfort and speaking words of consolation to her. She is a fitting example of the patience of Job, and, if I don't miss my mark, her end shall yet be sweet, and her reward great in the kingdom of our God.

After calling upon Bro. David Lewis, district president, I came on to Llanelly, from whence I am now writing. Occupied at the chapel yesterday with pleasure and profit. But the Saints are few, O, so few, in this great harvest-field.

Since coming to this land, I have been signally blessed of God in my office when calling with the Saints at their homes to converse with them, showing them the light that has been shown me. I have also been made to feel my weakness and entire dependence upon God as never before. True, I have had some trials to meet; but the blessings have far exceeded the disappointments. I do not write this boastfully, but in the fear of God. I believe there is a brighter day to dawn for England and Wales, providing the people of God live faithfully and humbly. A marvelous work is to be wrought here yet, and the elders who are humble shall be endowed with great power, even to healing the sick and the working of miracles.

My heart is in the work, for it is grand! I often fear for myself, and pray God by day and by night for strength to endure, overcome, and be pure in heart.

I am looking forward with much anticipation and longing for our mission conference, which will convene in the near future. I see naught before me but work, hard work, and hope to continue to trust in God for wisdom and for light.

Have preached some already in Welsh, with good liberty. More anon.

Dear Herald:—It has been long since I have written to you; but I have been regularly visited by your helpful issues, and truly the church publications are a source of comfort to the isolated ones. Isolated Saints should surely "meet together often" as do organized bodies of Saints, by communing one with another through the columns of the HERALD and Ensign. How often do I read the letters of the isolated ones, the sheep and lambs not in the fold of branches by environment, but by church records only, while my heart goes out to them, and I feel like writing them individual letters. And occasionally we find those who thought they were completely isolated are practically our neighbors, and only find one another out through the columns of our publications. Saints, I, as one of the isolated, whose birth and infant years in the gospel were in a prosperous branch, appreciate isolation very keenly; and as others in like position, we are apt to think we can accomplish nothing. Yet we are commanded to let our light shine, and the locality is not specified.

No doubt a large number of your readers have heard of the "Dowie" movement, which is coming into great prominence; and the rise of "Zion City" will evidently be closely watched by Saints, as in a measure it is in some respects similar to the rise of Nauvoo. Dr. Dowie made a vigorous attack upon the life-work and character of the Palmyra Seer in one of the July issues of his paper of this year. I have formed quite an intimate acquaintance with Elder Charles Hoy, their missionary and bishop for Nebraska, and I called his attention to the misrepresentation, and read him many passages from Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, which very greatly surprised him. He asked me to note them, and he would send to Dr. Dowie. As my main evidence was to be found in the tract, "Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist?" I handed that to him to send to Dr. Dowie. Later Reverend Hoy informed me he had read the tract and was greatly surprised that we could bring such proof against the combined claims of the world and the Utah church. He stated he had forwarded the tract together with two pages of typewritten matter relative to the article referred to in the Leaves of Healing, and assured me that Dr. Dowie would give his communications due attention. The elder said Dowie did not want to misrepresent, but had spent two months in Salt Lake City, investigating "Mormonism," and had there obtained his ideas with respect to the latter-day Prophet. Henceforth our people, and especially the eldership, may know that Dr. Dowie has been corrected and apprised of the existence of the Reorganization; and further attacks by him can not well be laid at the door of ignorance.

I also noted an article urging our people to have nothing to do with hypnotism and kindred so-called occult sciences. I have investigated these to a great extent myself, and was greatly interested in hypnotism; therefore have read the works of Weltmer, Harrahan, and others, and find hypnotism to be one complete mesh of deception on the part of the operator; and in the Weltmer works, it appears to me God is given none of the glory, but man alone is the "great I am."

I concluded with a hearty invitation to any elder to stop with me. Ask for Lightfoot's Restaurant, and nearly any one can direct you.

Yours in hope,

A. L. LIGHTFOOT.

REA, Missouri, December 23.

Editors Saints Herald:—Since writing to your valuable columns I have held service in a new place, with a fair hearing and good attention. Tried to hold in one other place, but had exceedingly poor turnout, so did not hold any service.

I attended the meeting in Guilford held by I. N. and D. C. White, D. A. Hutchings, and J. S. Snively; and judging from the large attendance the meeting was a success.

The meetings at Lany Branch, near Bedison, were quite well attended. Bro. D. A. Hutchings conducted them himself for several nights, but was relieved by Bro. J. S. Snively, when Bro. Hutchings was called home by the sickness of his wife, who is now improving.

A week ago we passed the day in Stanberry with the few Saints of that place. This place, where we live, is about twenty-four miles from St. Joseph, Missouri, ten miles from Guilford, where we have a neat little church, in which meets the Platte Branch of the Nodaway District. The town, though small, is surrounded by a good country. We are well supplied with business houses, with the exception of a blacksmith and woodworker, who can do anything in that line. There is a shop, supplied with tools, that can be bought cheaply, for cash. A steady man with a small family might do well.

Ever hopeful for the triumph of God's work, I remain,

Your colaborer,

R. F. HILL.

MILTON, Florida, December 16.

Editors Herald:—We have just had a very enjoyable series of meetings, conducted by Bro. I. N. Roberts. He was with us at the Calhoun Branch on November 23 and 24. From there he came to the home of L. F. West and held services at his house several nights during the week. The attendance was fair, considering the thinly settled condition of the country. On Saturday and Sunday, November 30 and December 1, we had a two-day meeting at the Cold Water Branch. Bro. Roberts' fame as a preacher had preceded him; so on Sunday there was quite a large congregation, including some of the best people of the country. And I am sure they were not disappointed in the speaker. Bertie, the invalid daughter of L. F. West, was carried to the church on her couch. It was the first time she had been from home in over two years; and you may be sure she enjoyed it to the fullest extent. The organ was brought from Bro. West's, and we had a good performer for the day, so the music was good. Bro. Roberts seemed to be feeling well, the Spirit was present in a marked degree, and altogether nothing seemed lacking to make the day one of pleasure and profit. It is one that will long be a "green spot" in our memory.

On the following Thursday, December 5, the writer was baptized.

A two-day meeting was held at the McArthur schoolhouse, in the vicinity of the Greenwood Branch, on Saturday and Sunday, December 7 and 8. And on Sunday, notwithstanding the weather was somewhat threatening, the house was overflowing. Bro. Roberts spoke in the forenoon of the apostasy or falling away of the church, and in the afternoon his theme was the restoration of the gospel. He fairly outdid himself on this occasion.

I feel sure that much good has been accomplished, and more could have been done could Bro. Roberts have remained with us longer. Several persons who have heretofore been indifferent or even antagonistic to the church seemed much interested. Some of them I think are "almost persuaded." I sincerely hope that we shall have Bro. Roberts with us next year. He created a very favorable impression on the people generally. I think that he, if anybody, may be able to arouse the Saints from the lethargic condition into which they have fallen. We need a man of just such energy and enthusiasm and love for the work which he possesses.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

LUELLA H. WEST.

MANCHESTER, England, December 16.

Editors Herald:—There are four branches in this city, and one in Salford, adjoining. We belong to the North Manchester Branch, and it is of that I wish to write.

The work with us is onward. We have quite a number of young men, anxious and willing to do the Master's service; therefore the work is bound to grow. Some of these young men will, without doubt, if they continue faithful, leave their mark upon the work for good.

We have for our president, Elder Joseph Dewsnup, Jun., a man full of zeal for the advancing of the work, one who is always ready to receive and adopt any legitimate suggestions having for their object the furtherance of the work of God.

Some in our branch have had a desire to be engaged in missionary work; and as all can not leave their homes and go into the field, work was sought for and obtained nearer home; and as this work has proved of material benefit to them and the branch, we wish to give others the benefit of our experience.

A series of tracts was purchased, backed, and numbered as follows: No. 1, "The Voice of the Good Shepherd;" No. 2, "Faith and Repentance;" No. 3, "One Baptism;" No. 4, "One Body;" No. 5, "Who then can be Saved?" A brother loaned his harmonium, and sufficient funds were voluntarily subscribed to buy material to make a truck to place it upon. Our worthy branch deacon, Bro. John Smith, though quite a novice at any such work, succeeded in constructing a very suitable arrangement.

A few of the brethren, accompanied by a sister or two occasionally, started off, taking the nearest streets first. When delivering the tracts, the people were informed that we intended speaking upon the subject matter of the tract before leaving the street, and they were invited to listen.

Here was found an outlet for the missionary propensities of the ministry, those of the lesser priesthood being specially encouraged. Those, also, who felt they had no ability in this direction were persuaded to take a subject, no brother receiving the same subject twice in succession. This was done that they might become familiar with all the subjects.

We have no good singers amongst us, but we succeeded in making sufficient harmony to attract the people to their doors, and they enjoyed (so they testified) the song service. Our president adapted some of Sankey's tunes, which are well known in this country, to some of our hymns.

The loan of a hymn booklet (used by us for conference services) and an invitation to assist us in the singing, kept the people at their doors; after which one of the brethren discoursed briefly upon the subject matter of the tract, closing with an exhortation to read the same, and compare it with the Scriptures. While this was proceeding the president would go amongst those listening, explaining to them our position and inviting them to the meetings.

The brethren made it a point to be on friendly terms with the people before the series of tracts was finished, and then they requested the people to give them an interview to further explain our position. Of course most of them had had quite enough by the time the tracts had been gone through; but a few had become interested, and these the brethren visited by appointment, and made sure that once they got in the people's houses they did not leave until our position had been fully and plainly set forth.

The weather is now so bad that outdoor services have been abandoned for the winter; but the tracts are going on just the same.

We have only worked one street by the above method; but the results so far have been of a very encouraging character. We have had several of them at our meetings, and we have access to two family circles; others also are interested.

One young man about twenty-five years old has asked for baptism; but we have requested him to give it more consideration. His father, who, by the way, is named Joseph Smith, is also a believer, and almost ready for baptism. And the end is not yet.

Our desire is to plant the seed, and to water it, and look after it; but to God we leave the matter of increase.

Praying for the success of the work, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

412 Collyhurst Road.

JOHN BAILEY.

ARAPAHOE, Oklahoma, November 30.

Editors Herald:—I am thankful to write to this paper, which has given me much pleasure and great strength in the faith of the Latter Day Saints. I am away down here in Oklahoma, where the true gospel has never yet been preached by any of our elders or missionaries.

Although I have been a member of other churches since the age of fifteen, and I am now fifty-six, I am but a babe in the Latter Day Saint faith. And as we moved to this place so soon after I was baptized, I had the pleasure of attending but one prayer and testimony meeting with the Saints. That was at the conference at Lone Rock, October 7, 1900. My soul is longing for a good gospel sermon, and to meet with the Saints at prayer-meeting. I can not write how the Lord has led me from my youth to the present time, and of prayers answered, and of the knowledge I had of my acceptance with him, for the letter would be too long to ask for room. I have been blessed, and have had seasons of rejoicing while a member of the Methodist Church; yet when I investigated earnestly, and prayerfully sought God for truth, he led me out from them, and caused me to forsake all and follow him. I feel to praise his great and holy name that he has given me patience to bear the persecutions of this life for his sake. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY BARTELS.

ARAPAHOE, Oklahoma, December 19.

Editors Herald:—Since my last, Bro. S. S. Smith has been here, but as it was such cold weather we thought it not an opportune time to begin a series of meetings till after Christmas. We left an appointment at Long View schoolhouse; but when Bro. Smith went to tell them of the restoration, the house was locked. The neighbors told him the teacher forgot to leave the door open.

I have been giving out our tracts to those who will read them, and I think some will be interested, so that when Brn. Smith and Baggerly come after Christmas people will come out to hear what is said.

I have eleven copies of Voice of Warning out, and two of them are being read by preachers—a Baptist and a Dunkard.

I understand Bro. H. O. Smith is billed for a debate at Redmoon, with the Campbellites, to begin January 10.

They have organized a branch at Redmoon, with about fifty members; and to say I am glad to hear it is putting it very lightly, as my claim is only about four and one half miles from there.

Hoping to be useful in God's work, and always ready to be of service to his people, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,
W. T. Rook.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Just where thou art lift up thy voice,
And sing the song that stirs thy heart;
Reach forth thy strong and eager hand
To lift, to save, just where thou art.
Just where thou standest light thy lamp,
'Tis dark to others as to thee;
Their ways are hedged by unseen thorns,
Their burdens fret as thine fret thee."

The Carpenter of Nazareth.

That evening, when the Carpenter swept out
The fragrant shavings from the workshop floor,
And placed the tools in order and shut to
And barred, for the last time, the humble door,
And, going on his way to save the world,
Turned from the laborer's lot for evermore,
I wonder—was he glad?

That morning, when the Carpenter walked forth
From Joseph's doorway, in the glimmering light,
And bade his holy mother long farewell,
And, through the rose-shot skies with dawning bright,
Saw glooming the dark shadow of the cross,
Yet, seeing, set his feet toward Calvary's height,
I wonder—was he sad?

Ah! when the Carpenter went on his way,
He thought not for himself of good or ill;
One was his path, through shop or thronging men
Craving his help e'en to the cross-crowned hill,
In toiling, healing, teaching, suffering—all
His joy, his life, to do his Father's will;
And earth and heaven are glad!—Selected.

Meals Spoiled.

An easy way to spoil the evening meal is for each member to tell the sad tale of all that has gone wrong during the day. To mention the disappointments and vexations, to tell of the slights that were endured and the offenses that were given, and to lament over the results of this infelicitous combination of affairs, is enough to counteract the refreshing effect of all the good things with which the most generous and skillful housewife can load the table. Better put this complaining off until some other time. What is the best time for it, it is hard to say. Perhaps an indefinite postponement would be a happy thing for all concerned. Half the things that we groan over to-night will right themselves before to-morrow night, if we let them alone.—Exchange.

Make Sure of Joy in Your Work.

Whatever joys you plan for in youth,—try to secure this, by all the means of information possible, a knowledge not only of what you are most pleased to do, but of what will be your highest joy to have fitted yourself to do.

Do not rest till you have this joy-giving occupation. It is better to change a dozen times than to be discontented with one's final and lasting vocation.

"Daniel Defoe," observes Waters, "was a trader, a soldier, a merchant, a secretary, a factory manager, a commissioner's accountant, an envoy, and what not, before he became an author, in which profession he had the greatest success, because it was that for which he had the greatest talent. And even in this profession, he went on improving and developing his talent; for he wrote a cart-load of books before he wrote 'Robinson Crusoe.' Wilson, the ornithologist, went through a bitter experience in five different professions before he became a student of ornithology, in which he not only found the greatest happiness of his life, but rendered invaluable service to the science of natural history. A. T. Stewart, the millionaire merchant, was educated for the church, which he left for the school-master's desk, and, by the merest accident, found that his talent fitted him for the shopkeeper's counter."

It is, of course, a great saving of time, energy, and happiness, to say nothing of money, if one chooses the right occupation before he begins his life-work, but let him insist upon having it sooner or later.

"Take Hold and Lift."

There was very sound theology on its practical side in the negro laborer's reply. A large steamer was taking on its cargo, and this man was laboring very earnestly at his appointed work. But another man was idling in the shade, and his comrade called out to him, "Sam, do you expect to go to heaven?" "Yes," was the reply of the idler. "Then take a hold and lift." The Christian is to be rich in good works, not in order to be saved, but because he is saved. His salvation is to be the inspiration of his work. There are too many Christians after the pattern of Artemus Ward's patriotism. He was willing to sacrifice all his wife's relations to save the Union. There is among many men and women in our churches a spirit of self-indulgence pitifully in contrast with the whole conduct of their Master and the entire spirit of the religion which they profess. They desire to receive the benefit of the church, but they do not cast in their lot with the trials, labors, and self-sacrifices of the people of God. They come to the church when not otherwise engaged. They delight in the soothing, consoling, uplifting, and impressing things which flow forth so constantly from the church. They remind me of the Pole who was willing to die for his country, but who would not live in it.—Selected.

A Good Creed.

Do not keep the alabaster boxes of love and tenderness sealed up until friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering words while their ears can hear them; and while their hearts can be thrilled and made happier by them; the kind things which you mean to say when they are gone, say before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them. If my friends have such boxes laid away, full of fragrant perfumes of sympathy and affection, which they intend to break over my dead body, I would rather they would bring them out in my wearied and troubled hours, and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them while I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin without a flower, a funeral without a eulogy, than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy. Let us learn to anoint our friends beforehand for their burial. Post-mortem kindness does not cheer the burdened spirit. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over the weary way.—Selected.

Prayer Union.

Sr. A. Mellon requests the Prayer Union to remember her brother in their prayers. He is afflicted with throat trouble. Pray that he may be led to see the truth as it is in Christ, and find rest and peace for his soul. Also for her husband, that he may yet turn from his wicked ways and accept of Christ.

Libraries.

Library, in the sense in which we are speaking of it, means a collection of books; and, as you remember, in an admonition given to the church through prophecy, we are instructed to read all good books. Note particularly that word good. When God says "good books," he does not mean silly love stories, dime novels, etc., but, as I take it, he had reference to good literature, wherever found, and in the sense of producing high and noble ideals, good thoughts, true actions, etc. Of this class of books there are many, and they should always be used as the basis of a library.

Of all good books the Bible stands preëminently above all others. This book should be in the private library of every family.

Sunday-school libraries should consist of books for all ages, little children, boys and girls, youths and the more aged. Story-books, books of history, lives of our great men, books of research in the Old and New Worlds, the works of our great authors and poets, such as Dickens, Shakespeare, Hugo, Irving, Longfellow, Whittier, Tennyson, et al. The reading of such books will produce in the young mind the idea of emulation of the noble deeds, the self-sacrificing acts, etc., set forth by these gifted writers.

Fathers and mothers should read from the Bible every evening to their children and instill into their minds the principles of our Lord Jesus Christ and of the church we represent. Train a child in the way he should go and he will not depart therefrom when he grows old, is the embodiment of a true motto for our Sunday-school workers. A Catholic priest will tell you that if you will give your child to be educated by him until he is eight years old, he will always be a Catholic. What is true in such a case is also true in the case of Latter Day Saint boys and girls. A great deal of such training can be done by in the evenings selections from the story-book, from the history of a great man, or the book of some well-known author.

With such books in a Sunday-school library, every parent or every child able to read could be training the mind to the proper degree of intelligence becoming to a child of God. A library is of no use if it is not used; consequently, for little children unable to read, it becomes the bounden duty of the parent to read to that child, in order that the mind may be trained in the way it should go, and when the boy or girl grows to man or womanhood, trashy books will not be found in the category of his belongings.

It will be the early training that will tell, and I urge upon every one, young and old, the importance of reading and of forming a library for your Sunday-school.

If you are unable to do this, allow me to suggest that ten or a dozen persons contribute ten cents each and with the money thus obtained buy a good book, and after each of the contributors has read it, pass it on to some poor family or some charitable institution of our church.

In conclusion, allow me to again remind you of the injunction, "Read all good books."

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

A brother sends the following as an inquiry: "In our Sunday-school and Bible class has occasionally come up the question in regard to the Holy Spirit, or Holy Ghost, whether the Holy Spirit before the day of Pentecost was the same as that after. Some hold that it was the same, while others do not. One even held that the Holy Ghost was different from the Holy Spirit. This I think ought to be settled so that all would speak the same thing. I find that even our elders are not all of the same opinion on that. I, for my part, have made it a study and am satisfied with the original word. I find that the Holy Spirit and Holy Ghost are the same word in the original Greek text, (pneuma), as in Genesis 1: 2, so in Matthew 4: 1; John 20: 22; and Acts 2: 4; 2 Peter 1: 2. The sick were healed by the spirit of faith. 2 Corinthians 4: 13. Please answer, if not intruding too much upon your time."

According to the Apostle Paul there is but one "Spirit" which according to Christ Jesus as stated in John's Gospel, chapters 14 and 15, 26th verse in each chapter, is the "Holy Ghost," "the Comforter," "the Spirit of Truth."

There ought to be no doubt as to this question, when the language is so plain. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 26. "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—John 15: 26.

We reproduce a reply to a similar question on this subject some years ago, which we believe will be accepted as at least very fairly answering the inquiry of our correspondent:

When Jesus was with his disciples in person there was no need for any other comforter. His personal presence, power, and loving supervision were all that was necessary to provide for all their wants, and furnish them unto every emergency, direction, wisdom, and power to accomplish all which they were commanded to do. At his departure the disciples were deprived of all that his personal presence had given them; countenance, courage, strength; they were and would be from that time forward helpless among men, so far as divine direction, wisdom, and comfort were needful to their ministry. This Jesus knew; and in evident accord with the instruction of his Father, he told them it was needful for him to go away; he could not be present with them always; it was otherwise ordered. He assured them, however, that if he went away the Father would send them "another Comforter;" "which is the Holy Ghost," the "Spirit of Truth;" and that Comforter when it came was to "abide with them forever;" that is, if they would—the language is, "that he may abide with you forever."—John 14: 16, 17, 26; 15: 26.

There need be no question among the Saints as to who this Comforter here spoken of is, it is the "Holy Ghost," "even the Spirit of Truth."

In our own day the condition of things is changed, in this sense; Jesus, the Christ, is not with men in person; hence they are not inspired by his personal example, cheered by his voice, or led and sustained by his personal courage and wisdom. He provided for this change of condition for all time, as stated by him; "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter." This Comforter whom the Father would send, was to abide with them, if they would, forever; was to be to them, and all others after them who should receive the word unto repentance and remission of sins, in the place and stead of the personal presence of Jesus; until the completion of all that had been decreed of God concerning the world—and then the faithful disciple should be permitted to enter into the presence of his Lord; that where he was they might be also. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 2, 3. When this promise is fulfilled, the office-work of the Holy Ghost for the disciple will be completed; he will then be within the personal presence, direction, control, and power of the Savior; hence, will not longer need the comfort and protection of the Holy Ghost, as a ministering, controlling force.

This change of conditions in which men are now placed, under the dispensation of the gospel, reverses the order in this wise. The obedient disciples received on the "Day of Pentecost," the "Holy Ghost," "the Spirit of Truth," the "Comforter;" the same as that promised in John, chapters 14 and 15, and all who receive and obey the gospel when authoritatively preached and administered, since Pentecost, receive of this Holy Ghost, the Comforter as the first Comforter to them. If they continue faithful they shall ultimately receive the "other Comforter," the one who was first to the disciples in Jesus' day, even Jesus Christ, the righteous, into whose presence and power they shall be received when he comes to reign among his saints gloriously.

As the disciples first knew Jesus, ministered and wrought under his personal ministration of light, wisdom, and power; and afterwards wrought by virtue of the Holy Ghost, given of God, at the request of the Christ, the Son of God; so the believers and disciples of Jesus Christ now first receive, minister, and labor by virtue of, and under the direction, ministration, and power of the Holy Ghost until the end of their dispensation, when they shall pass into the personal dominion and under the control, ministration, and power of Jesus Christ in his kingdom, thus receiving the other Comforter, making the last first and the first last.

Joseph Smith in his history states this in substance: though the language in which it is told does not leave it so clear as to be free from possible misunderstanding. If he who reads, would read in connection with the statement itself, the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters of John's Gospel, he would see that Joseph Smith did not intend to contradict Jesus Christ when he says that the Holy Ghost is the Comforter; but intended to convey the idea that because of the changed conditions under which men now live, and in the administration of the dispensation of the gospel within the angel's message of restoration, the Holy Ghost is the first Comforter received, and Jesus Christ the second, or the "other Comforter" to them; not the second in importance; because Christ is always first in importance to man in the plan of redemption, but second in point of the time of reception.—Herald, December 1, 1888.

DESERET NEWS ON CELESTIAL MARRIAGE.

In an editorial of the Deseret News for December 21, 1901, entitled, "The 'Mormon' Creed Explained," the following is found:

CELESTIAL MARRIAGE.

The doctrine of celestial, that is eternal marriage, however, is still a feature of the "Mormon" faith. By the authority vested in the head of the church, that which is sealed on earth is sealed in heaven, and the man and woman united under that authority in an everlasting covenant are joined forever. Such was the marriage of Adam and Eve before death came by sin. The redemption by Christ restored them to their primeval state, and they stand at the head of their posterity, immortal, perfected, and eternal. By obedience and fidelity to laws of God, men and women may attain to a similar estate and enjoy unending bliss, "the man being not without the woman nor the woman without the man in the Lord." The family, the home, the relation of parents and children are thus the basis of present and future happiness, and the increase thereof being perpetual, therein is the glory of the redeemed, who dwell in the presence of God and the Holy Ones, continued forever.

If the marriage of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden was the act of institution by which the constituent provisions to govern men and women in wedlock were established, then there is neither warrant nor room in the law for more than one companion at a time for either man or woman.

The rule at that marriage was, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." Genesis 2: 24. Jesus referring to this beginning said: "For this cause [for the sake of marriage] shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh." Matthew 19: 5; (Mark 10: 7, 8.)

"Fidelity to the laws of God" requires that the rule instituted at the beginning should continue to hold and govern until the end of time, when eternity for man will begin. So Christ must have thought and designed when he commanded the church established by him on this land in 1830, "And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God to man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."

These were the laws of God, as stated by Christ himself. If man keeps these laws, then is marriage blessed to him; not otherwise.

This law was for the peopling of the earth; not a line in revealed writ to warrant the conclusion that the work of peopling eternity was contemplated in the Edenic marriage.

BISHOP LEONARD ON THE HOLY WORD.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Leonard, D. D., of the Episcopal Church, of Cleveland, Ohio, in a sermon delivered in St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio, Friday night, December 13, 1901, presented the following glowing tribute to the word of God, as reported in the Akron, Ohio, Beacon Journal, of December 14:

In this day of so many books issued from thousands of publishing houses and presses, how many Christians go over the Bible in a studious way? Novelists say that after they have read over all the late novels they go back to the classics for rest and enjoyment. The classics may be all right to read for a pleasant hour or so, but for building up our characters and our minds the Bible is the best book ever written. Paul's testimony as to the learning in the Bible is of more than ordinary weight. Paul was not an ignorant man nor a shallow critic. He was a great student, a wise man, a fine scholar who weighed his evidence. For these reasons his evidence is of great importance.

WHY IT WAS WRITTEN.

The Bible was written for the purpose of giving us the history of God and to build up our characters, and we should read it. The common usage of the Bible has lowered it in our estimation. It is so cheap that its intrinsic value is lowered. More Bibles are printed than any other book ever will be. How different now than in the olden times when there was only one Bible in a town.

Transport yourselves for a moment into one of the old English churches where the Bible was chained to a great stone pillar. Picture the eager crowd standing about listening to the preacher spell out the words letter by letter. Do you wonder at their amazement when they heard the great teaching read to them in that way? Bibles are so common to-day that we can hardly comprehend how these people had to hear it read.

IN OLDEN TIMES.

Go farther back still, take the Romans, Corinthians, Egyptians and other of those ancient tribes. Each one had a part of the great book and never heard of the other part. It was not until the fourth century that the church council put the Bible together and decided what should be put in and what should not.

We have so many Bibles that it has lost its true literary value. The Bible was not the work of one century or of one man, and it grows stronger with time and will last for ever. The very name Scriptures implies written by many men, hence in many days. The Bible is the oldest bit of literature we have. It is an ancient book which comes down to us from ancient writers and angelic apostles.

It is the whole world's book but yet yours and mine. No soldier has ever gone through so many campaigns, no city through so many sieges, no rock has been battled by wind and wave so many times as the Bible. It is the most abused book ever written; yet it stands strong, and always will. How much do we prize it? How much do we use it? Is it near us? Do we use it well? Do not use it mechanically, but study it and use it spiritually. Do it slowly and study it thoroughly. The very contact will do us good; and the more careful and often the use the more good we derive from it. When we read it let us pray for help, guidance, and wisdom in its study, and I promise you we will derive great benefit from it.

Do we study the Book as much as we ought?

Bro. A. W. Gorbutt, who is in the employment of the government in the postal service, sends us the following:

"A ruling of recent date forbids the public to give the contents of packages sent by mail, such as "photos only," "contains printed matter," "books," etc. If these are placed on the wrapper the Post-office Department will charge at the rate of first-class matter."

It will be well to bear this in mind in mailing your packages.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Abner Lloyd writes from Eldorado Springs, Missouri, December 30, 1901: "The HERALD gets better as it grows older, and its weekly visits are welcomed as it comes freighted with cheerful news from the faithful workers. May God abundantly bless all who labor in the interest of the restored gospel."

Bro. J. W. Gilbert writes from Raroia, one of the South Sea Islands, November 14, 1901: "We are starving for church news here on this lonely island, and if no one has thought to send us the papers it will be three months at least before this brings them."

A brother signing himself "Novice," writes from San Francisco: "We had a very nice Thanksgiving service. All seemed to appreciate the effort to show that we ought to be exceedingly thankful above others for our opportunities and blessings; which our correspondent forgot to mention. We would like to have it known that we are trying to move forward."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By copies of the Advance and the Press, both of Castlerock, Washington, sent us by Bro. S. Crum, we note that he and Bro. Bebe have been getting the work before the people.

Owing to Bro. E. A. Blakeslee's absence from home, he did not sign at the time with the Bishopric in the article "Duties, Responsibilities, and Faith of the Saints;" but he reports himself to Bro. Kelley as being in entire harmony with the other members of the Bishopric.

Dr. Amezaga, a physician of Boston, claims that "electrocution" is not absolute death. He says it is but temporary paralysis of the organs of life, and that life can be restored inside of a few hours if the electrocuted person is treated as though to resuscitate from drowning.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. II.

BY HEMAN C SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, November 24, 1901.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr Annie Allen.

It will probably be best, as we contemplated doing before, to take up the history of the church in Missouri. We have probably said all that is necessary to be said in regard to their operations in the East, New York and Ohio. It will be remembered by those who have heard or read what we have had to say, that in an early time elders were sent to the Lamanites, that they traveled westward to what is now known as the State of Kansas. When they were prohibited from preaching to the Indians they crossed back over the line and preached for a season in the vicinity of Independence, Missouri. That, I believe, was the introduction of the work in and about Independence and the western part of the State of Missouri. After the church had removed to Kirtland, and after the conference that we were speaking about a few evenings ago, held in June, 1831, the elders received a commission that they should go to the land of Missouri and hold their next conference there. I will read you briefly from the revelation found in section 52, Doctrine and Covenants:

"Behold, thus saith the Lord unto the elders whom he hath called and chosen, in these last days, by the voice of his Spirit, saying, I, the Lord, will make known unto you what I will that ye shall do from this time until the next conference, which shall be held in Missouri, upon the land which I will consecrate unto my people, which are a remnant of Jacob, and those who are heirs according to the covenant."

You will notice that they are commanded to meet in the land of Missouri. The place is not specially designated, but it is to be upon the land the Lord says "I will consecrate unto my people."

In the ninth paragraph of this same revelation we read: "And again, let my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, and Edward Partridge, take with them a recommend from the church. And let there be one obtained for my servant Oliver Cowdery also; and thus, even as I have said, if ye are faithful, ye shall assemble yourselves together to rejoice upon the land of Missouri, which is the land of your inheritance, which is now the land of your enemies. But, behold, I the Lord, will hasten the city in its time, and will crown the faithful with joy and with rejoicing. Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of God, and I will lift them up at the last day. Even so. Amen."

This was the authority upon which they started westward, and, as we told you once before, they traveled two and two, going by different routes from Kirtland up to Missouri, and preaching to the people by the way, so that in almost all sections of country lying between Ohio and Missouri, the people heard something regarding this message. They met there in the land of Missouri. I have not seen anything, so far as a revelation is concerned, locating the place any nearer than Missouri. Perhaps the elders had an understanding before they started that they were to concentrate about Independence, for they did meet there, they came together at this particular point, where those that had been on a mission to the Lamanites had been laboring.

I believe I stated once before that Joseph Smith and his companions started from Kirtland on the 19th of June, traveling by wagon, canal-boats, and stage to Cincinnati, Ohio, thence they went by boat down the Ohio River and then up the Mississippi to St. Louis. From St. Louis they went on foot to Independence. It would be too tedious to follow the journey of all these different parties as they went upon this mission for the purpose of meeting in conference in the land the Lord promised to consecrate for an inheritance. Arriving in Independence about the middle of July, (this party with Joseph Smith, at least, arrived about that time,) there was another revelation given which I desire to invite your attention to. That revelation makes the place a little more definite as to where the city of Zion was to be located. It reads:

"Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center-place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the court-house; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance."

Now, you see the place is located a little more definitely. Independence was to be the center-place, and the spot for the temple was a little westward of the court-house. The court-house, as I understand it, was just about where it is now. Some of you who have been there know the location. I wish to invite your attention, however, to this statement, that it was wisdom to buy the land; every tract of land that lay westward from Independence to the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. The Indians were settled just across the state line then, in what is now the State of Kansas, evidently the line running between the Indians and white settlers was called the line between Jew and Gentile.

From our standpoint now we can see the wisdom of purchasing that land. Kansas City was not known at that time, but much of that section of land could have been bought for about $1.25 an acre, and from a financial standpoint it would have been wisdom to buy it, but who knew it? There were none among them that were so far-seeing as to tell that this property would enhance in value as it did. People did not know that. They could not see far enough to understand it. The Lord told his people, Here is a good investment; it is wisdom to buy this land; every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile, and also every tract bordering by the prairies. You will remember, you who have been over the country, that the prairies lie a few miles to the south and southwest. All that tract it would be wisdom to buy, and I think that if they had bought every tract of land there, when it could have been bought for that money, and had so lived before God as to be protected there, it would have been a wonderfully good investment, and the people would have been wondrously blessed from a financial standpoint; but we will read more of what was promised to them as we go along.

Not many days after they arrived in this land of Zion, as it was henceforth to be called, they began preparations to dedicate the land as the land of Zion, or a land of inheritance, and Joseph Smith says: "On the 2d day of August [about two weeks after they arrived there] I assisted the Colesville Branch of the church to lay the first log, for a house, as a foundation for Zion in Kaw Township, twelve miles west of Independence." Mark you, this was the Colesville Branch, in Kaw Township. I do not know why the house was so far out. It probably was a house intended for a temporary house of worship. This Colesville Branch was a branch which had been organized in New York, and when they got ready to go up to Zion they moved as a branch and retained their name. The Colesville Branch, New York, was transferred to Missouri and was still the Colesville Branch. Joseph says he assisted them in laying the first log for a house as a foundation for Zion. "The log was carried and placed by twelve men, in honor of the twelve tribes of Israel. At the same time, through prayer, the land of Zion was consecrated and dedicated for the gathering of the Saints, by Elder Rigdon; and it was a season of joy to those present, and afforded a glimpse of the future, which time will yet unfold to the satisfaction of the faithful."

This was the dedication of the land, but mark you, it was not the dedication of the particular spot for the building of the temple. This took place, we are told, in Kaw Township, about twelve miles west of Independence, the distance was probably guessed at, lines were not surveyed then, I believe. It was not twelve miles to the State line directly, but probably the way they went at that time it was twelve miles to the spot; —I do not know exactly where it is located.

Let me call your attention to the description of this land. Sidney Rigdon had been commanded to write a description, and after he had been there a short length of time he essayed the task, and this is the description of it. I want to invite your attention, you who are acquainted with the country, that you may see the difference between then and now. Joseph says:

As we had received a commandment for Elder Rigdon to write a description of the land of Zion, we sought for all the information necessary to accomplish so desirable an object. Unlike the timbered States in the East, except upon the rivers and water-courses, which were verdantly dotted with trees from one to three miles wide, as far as the eye can glance, the beautiful rolling prairies lay spread around like a sea of meadows. The timber is a mixture of oak, hickory, black walnut, elm, cherry, honey locust, mulberry, coffee bean, hackberry, box elder, and basswood, together with the addition of cottonwood, buttonwood, pecan, soft and hard maple, upon the bottoms. The shrubbery was beautiful, and consisted in part of plums, grapes, crab apples, and persimmons. The prairies were decorated with a growth of flowers that seemed as gorgeous and grand as the brilliancy of stars in the heavens, and exceed description. The soil is rich and fertile, from three to ten feet deep, and generally composed of rich black mold, intermingled with clay and sand. It produces in abundance, wheat, corn, and many other commodities, together with sweet potatoes and cotton. Horses, cattle, and hogs, though of an inferior breed, are tolerably plenty, and seem nearly to raise themselves by grazing in the vast prairie range in summer, and feeding upon the bottoms in winter. The wild game is less plenty where man has commenced the cultivation of the soil than it is a little distance farther in the wild prairies. Buffalo, elk, deer, bear, wolves, beaver, and many lesser animals roam at pleasure. Turkeys, geese, swans, ducks, yea, a variety of the feathered race are among the rich abundance that graces the delightful regions of this goodly land of the heritage of the children of God. Nothing is more fruitful, or a richer stockholder in the blooming prairies, than the honey bee; honey is but about twenty-five cents per gallon.

The season is mild and delightful nearly three quarters of the year, and as the land of Zion, situated at about equal distances from the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, as well as from the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, in the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude, and between the tenth and seventeenth degrees of west longitude. It bids fair to become one of the most blessed places on the globe, when the curse is taken from the land, if not before. The winters are milder than in the Atlantic States, of the same parallel of latitude; and the weather is more agreeable, so that were the virtues of the inhabitants only equal to the blessings of the Lord, which he permits to crown the industry and efforts of those inhabitants, there would be a measure of the good things of life, for the benefit of the saints, full, pressed down and running over, even an hundredfold. The disadvantages here, like all new countries, are self-evident, lack of mills and schools, together with the natural privations and inconveniences, which the hand of industry and the refinement of society with the polish of science overcome. But all these impediments vanish when it is recollected that the prophets have said concerning Zion in the last days how the glory of Lebanon is to come upon her; the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of his sanctuary, that he may make the place of his feet glorious; where for brass he will bring gold, and for iron he will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron; and where the feast of fat things will be given to the just; yea, when the splendor of the Lord is brought to one consideration, for the good of his people; the calculations of men and the vain glory of the world vanishes; and we exclaim: God will shine—the perfection of beauty out of Zion.

That is a brief description of the country as it then appeared. I presume it was true of the conditions as they existed then, some are the same to-day, some have been changed by the hand of time. Joseph goes on to say that, "On the third day of August the spot for the Temple, a little west of Independence, was dedicated in presence of eight men, among whom were myself, Sidney Rigdon, Edward Partridge, W. W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, and Joseph Coe."

Eight men and he gives seven names. There was another one, we do not know who it was. There is just now going the rounds, a pamphlet purporting to be letters written by one Ezra Booth, and he claims to have been there, possibly he was that eighth man, but possibly he was not; but if he was he has forgotten some things, for from what he tells us we think he has this event confounded with the carrying of the log by twelve men over in Kaw Township when a little stone was taken by the hand of Oliver Cowdery and placed on the spot and twelve men carried this log and laid one end on that stone. The lot was twelve miles from there; so if Mr. Booth was the eighth man, his memory seems to be treacherous upon that point. He might have been over there in Kaw Township and got the events mixed a little. I simply mention this, for these letters may be placed in your hands, and it may be well to notice whether they are right or not.

I will probably call your attention to some other things in Mr. Booth's letters before we quit this.

There was another revelation given, and I desire to invite your attention to it for the reason that it gave specific directions how the people were to live in Zion, and made special promises on the condition that they do so live, and upon examination of this revelation you will see how strict the Lord was that they who went up unto this land should be upright, moral, and honest in all their deeds, and not only that, but humble and virtuous in the service of God. He says:

"Behold, blessed, saith the Lord, are they who have come up unto this land with an eye single to my glory, according to my commandments; for them that live shall inherit the earth, and them that die shall rest from all their labors, and their works shall follow them, and they shall receive a crown in the mansions of my Father, which I have prepared for them; yea, blessed are they whose feet stand upon the land of Zion, who have obeyed my gospel, for they shall receive for their reward the good things of the earth; and it shall bring forth in its strength; and they shall also be crowned with blessings from above; yea, and with commandments not a few, and with revelations in their time; they that are faithful and diligent before me."

Here is a promise, if they were faithful and diligent before God they should be blessed with the good things of the earth, and he had already given them advice, prior to this time, as to how to expend their means so that they would accumulate the good things of the world. Buy all this land, it will be valuable in time, was the idea. Behold, here is wisdom, that if you will be "faithful and diligent," which would include the keeping of the commandment to purchase the land, they would be blessed with the good things of the world, and be crowned with blessings from above, and with revelations and commandments. Read again what he says: "Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it. Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things. Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit."

These commandments are all of a similar nature to those that had been given before to people in modern and ancient times, but they received a new interest and significance when the gathering into the land of Missouri was commanded, when the people were expressly told they should do those things if they were permitted to remain there upon that land, and he says: "And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer."

I have read this for the simple reason that I want you to consider it as the introduction to what is to follow, that you may understand the conditions on which the promises may be realized and what would have been the result in the land of Missouri if they had done as God directed.

And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell; to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess; neither by extortion: and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments. Behold, this is according to the law and the prophets: wherefore trouble me no more concerning this matter, but learn that he who doeth the works of righteousness, shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come. I, the Lord, have spoken it and the Spirit beareth record. Amen.

So you see that upon that land they were to have everything that was needful for their comfort, as well as to have the windows of heaven open to them, and all upon the condition that they kept the commandments of God in their walk before him. It is well to read these revelations in connection with the events that brought them forth, for when we do that they have a new meaning and we can comprehend them better. We can apply them better than we could in reading them without knowing the contemporaneous events. All the revelations should be read in this way, but we have not time to read them all in these efforts. We simply read some of these to-night because of their connection with the introduction of the work in Zion, the land we are all looking to as a land the Lord will wondrously bless sometime, and it is well for us to understand what the Lord says regarding it, and the people that shall remain there.

No people that are evil-doers, that are in any sense wrong-doers before God, can be permitted to enjoy all those blessings of God. They can not anywhere, but it is especially emphasized that he will not permit it there.

I believe I have mentioned before that it was on the 9th of August, shortly after this dedication of the Temple Lot, and the assembling of a part of the elders that had come up to the land of Missouri, that Joseph and ten others started back to Kirtland. They had accomplished the mission they were sent there for, the Lord telling them he would point out the place, and they dedicated the land, and they dedicated the Temple Lot as they were directed by the Lord. They did what was required of them, and then on the 9th of August, Joseph says, he, with ten elders, making eleven, I suppose, started down the Missouri River in canoes. They proceeded in this way for a time and after a few days they met with other elders who had not arrived yet. The history says of this: "The next day (Saturday, the 13th) they met several of the elders who were on their way to the land of Zion, and joyful were their salutations." And Joseph here received another revelation. You can read it and can understand it in connection with these events better than by itself.

He says: "After this little meeting of the elders, myself, and Sidney Rigdon, and Oliver Cowdery continued our journey by land to St. Louis, where we overtook Brothers Phelps and Gilbert. From this place we took stage, and they went by water to Kirtland, where we arrived safe and well, on the 27th. Many things transpired upon this journey to strengthen our faith, and displayed the goodness of God in such a marvelous manner that we could not help beholding the exertions of Satan to blind the eyes of the people, so as to hide the true light that lights every man that comes into the world. In these infant days of the church there was a great anxiety to obtain the word of the Lord upon every subject that in any way concerned our salvation; and as 'the land of Zion' was now the most important temporal object in view, I inquired of the Lord for further information upon the gathering of the saints and the purchase of the land and other matters."

He received this revelation in answer to inquiry. The Lord told him how the gathering was to take place. I will just read one short extract from it, and you will discover that the people did not heed it:

"And now, behold, this is the will of the Lord your God concerning his saints, that they should assemble themselves together unto the land of Zion, not in haste, lest there should be confusion, which bringeth pestilence. Behold, the land of Zion, I, the Lord, holdeth it in mine own hands; nevertheless, I, the Lord, rendereth unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's: wherefore, I, the Lord, willeth, that you should purchase the lands, that you may have advantage of the world, that you may have claim on the world, that they may not be stirred up unto anger; for Satan putteth it into their hearts to anger against you, and to the shedding of blood; wherefore the land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase, or by blood, otherwise there is none inheritance for you. And if by purchase, behold, you are blessed; and if by blood, as you are forbidden to shed blood, lo, your enemies are upon you, and ye shall be scourged from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue, and but few shall stand to receive an inheritance."

They were told to go up there, but not in haste; but no sooner did they hear of this than everybody wanted to go. Everybody that could go, it seems, went, and they gathered, it seems to me, a little hastily, without sufficient means of support, though they had the country before them. It was a new country, the land was easily obtainable, and they could, if they had understood how, have gone out there and made for themselves homes and obtained a living from the cultivation of the soil; but some of these people came from the cities of the East and there was no possibility of getting employment at their trades. They went a little too soon, many of them. They were warned not to go in haste; they were told to purchase this land. There were two possible ways the land could be obtained, one was by purchase, and one by blood. He tells how the shedding of blood was to take place, if it did. They were to be careful not to go there in a hurry, but they were to purchase this land, that they might have claim upon the world, that the people of the world might not be stirred up to anger, for Satan stirreth them up to anger even to the shedding of blood. They were warned not to give occasion for Satan to stir these people to anger, and as you are forbidden to shed blood, lo, your enemies are upon you, therefore he advised them again, as he advised them before, to purchase the land. And I think the simplest view of that would be that God intended that they should prepare to purchase the land and put themselves in a position to have a legal right to all the land they occupied.

Right in this connection I want to say a little more in regard to this man Booth. He might have been permitted to have rested in peace, (if he is at peace,) had not the enemies of the church lately resurrected the old stories he used to tell and sent them in tract form all over the country. This man was at one time a Methodist preacher, located in Ohio, and he united with the church, was commanded with others to go up to the land of Missouri, and his traveling companion was Isaac Morley. These two, Booth and Morley, went up together, and they arrived in the land of Missouri about the time that Joseph Smith did, and Mr. Booth says he was there when the Temple Lot was dedicated. There is a revelation concerning him which I want to invite your attention to. In the third paragraph of this revelation given on the 11th day of September, right away after they returned to Kirtland, it is said: "Verily I say, For this cause ye shall do these things. Behold, I, the Lord, was angry with him who was my servant Ezra Booth; and also my servant Isaac Morley; for they kept not the law, neither the commandments; they sought evil in their hearts, and I the Lord, withheld my Spirit. They condemned for evil, that thing in which there was no evil; nevertheless, I have forgiven my servant Isaac Morley. And also my servant Edward Partridge, behold, he hath sinned, and Satan seeketh to destroy his soul; but when these things are made known unto them, they repent of the evil, and they shall be forgiven."

That is, Morley and Partridge were to be forgiven; he does not say he forgave Mr. Booth. When it came to the subject of forgiveness Ezra Booth was not mentioned. The revelation says he, with others, sinned because they did not keep the commandments as they went up to the land of Zion. Joseph says of this man right in this connection: "From this time until the fore part of October I did little more than to prepare to recommence the translation of the Bible. About this time Ezra Booth came out as an apostate."

He had been condemned by revelation the 11th of September before that, and that revelation forgave others, but said nothing about forgiving him. Shortly after that, Joseph says:

About this time Ezra Booth came out as an apostate. He came into the church upon seeing a person healed of an infirmity of many years standing. He had been a Methodist priest for some time previous to his embracing the fullness of the gospel as developed in the Book of Mormon, and upon his admission into the church he was ordained an elder, as will be seen by the foregoing revelations. He went up to Missouri as a companion of Elder Morley, but when he actually learned that faith, humility, patience, and tribulation, were before blessing; and that God brought low before he exalted; that instead of "the Savior's granting him power to smite men, and make them believe" (as he said he wanted God to do him), he found he must become all things to all men that he might peradventure save some, and that too by all diligence, by perils by sea and land; as was the case in the days of Jesus, which appears in the sixth chapter of St. John's gospel, he said: "Verily, verily I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled." So it was with Booth, and when he was disappointed by his own evil heart, he turned away, and as said before, became an apostate, and wrote a series of letters which by their coloring, falsity, and vain calculations to overthrow the work of the Lord, exposed his weakness, wickedness, and folly, and left him a monument of his own shame for the world to wonder at.

I suppose it is that series of letters those people have gotten hold of now. Joseph speaks of a series of letters written by him shortly after his condemnation for not having kept the commandments of God when on his journey to Missouri. As I have already said, the letters are false in history.

Another thing he mentions in these letters is this, where the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants says,

"Let that which has been bestowed upon Ziba Peterson be taken from him," Mr. Booth says Ziba Peterson was one of the twelve apostles at that time. You who are acquainted with the history know there were no apostles in 1831; Ziba Peterson nor any one else was an apostle. That quorum was organized in 1835; there were no apostles, in the sense of the apostles of the twelve, in 1831, and he says Ziba Peterson was one of the twelve apostles. Nor was Ziba Peterson ever an apostle of the twelve after the twelve was organized. Mr. Booth's memory is not good. It seems curious it was not, for he wrote these letters about the first of October after he got back, and he left there in July. I think that is enough about Mr. Booth, we have things of more interest to talk about. You will find a great many other discrepancies in his letters.

This subject I have been particular about to-night because it is the foundation, the beginning of the work at Independence, Missouri, and if we shall pursue this subject in the future, I may not go into details so much, but speak of things in general. I thank you for your attention and trust you will examine these things more fully and completely than I am able to tell them.

CO-OPERATION.

It is not the purpose of the writer to give a discourse on the merits of coöperation in business matters, but just a few words to the local officers and the laity about coöperating with the missionaries. I have felt the need of this coöperation during the past few months as never before. The member needs the assistance of the minister if the gospel is to be preached to his neighbor, and the minister needs to know where this member is, and then his assistance in securing a place for meetings and in advertising them: also in supplying something to eat and a place to sleep. We should be laborers together in this great work of salvation. A sister wrote some time ago how some of the Saints would drive for miles nightly and aid the missionary by doing the singing. It would also be cheering to him to see that there were those who would do what they could to help on the work of God. A little effort like that would be a great help to the work in some localities, and would cheer the missionary while those thus aiding would be assisting in the Lord's work—doing their duty, in that their light would shine through their works. This is the kind of coöperation I would like to see obtain to a large extent.

When the missionary can give his time to assisting in your branch, see to it that an adjoining neighborhood has the opportunity to hear the gospel by securing a meeting place in that neighborhood, and all the members go that can—see that there are singers there; and if a good sprinkling of Saints are present, others also will probably attend who would not if the preacher were alone. Think it over, Saints, and then you in the Northeastern Illinois District that would like to try this plan of coöperation and want one of the missionaries to work with, let me know as soon as possible, addressing me at my home, which is Dow City, Iowa, and it will soon find me.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF TRACTS.

I was very much gratified to note that Brother Peter Anderson so heartily seconded my motion for tract distribution recently made through the columns of the Ensign. Since my article was published I have received letters from different brethren along this line all agreeing on one point; viz., a pertinent and necessary work. Bro. C. Ed Miller had some artistic cards and leaflets which he used very successfully while in Pittsburg. Bro. Frank M. Sheehy sends me a neat folder, five inches square. It is very presentable. The first page contains: "Gospel of Christ Unchanged. Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Elder F. M. Sheehy, Pastor. Primitive Christianity." This is printed in red and black letters, with a pale blue margin. The second page is blank, and the third page contains a short summary of our position as a church. It is of the proper length to attract the attention of the busy, bustling world. Brevity is the soul of wit; alike is it the life of the tract business.

Bro. Edward Rannie writes from Omaha. He has a somewhat different plan. He had a neat design in red, printed on an envelope, containing these words: "This is our platform." He incloses an epitome in each envelope, and these are distributed promiscuously through the mails and from house to house. He also has a question blank card for use in preaching services. One side is arranged for the question, and the other contains the place and time of local meetings.

Bro. LaRue, now operating in Philadelphia, has published a readable and attractive little pamphlet of fifteen pages, which he is using with success in the City of Brotherly Love.

I have carefully prepared the matter for a small tract entitled, "The Latter Day Saints; whom are they?" which is now in the hands of the Ensign business manager, and will be published shortly.

My efforts thus far have convinced me that the tract distribution, to be successful, must be systematically done. Haphazard work is practically wasted. To bait and set lines and never visit the lines is poor fishing. It is best to have some interesting tract—the epitome is too dry—for general and introductory distribution. It would be an excellent thing to have a quantity of slips, colored slips preferable, gummed sufficiently to be attached to either the top or the side of any and all tracts stating that the tract is left for a stated time, when you will call again, and, if desirable, leave other reading matter.

It is very essential that we meet and become acquainted with the people. Tracts sent through the mail or left on the door-step are practically lost. Persistent and continuous work counts along this line. A good brother writes me that he has handed out thousands of pieces of literature with no evidence of immediate results. What of that? He will be surprised in the judgment day to have every one of those leaflets appear to his credit and likewise the condemnation of the recipient.

The chief and prominent work of the church in this dispensation is to warn the world. Let the warning cry go out by pen as well as mouth. From "house to house," is the divine plan of operation. It can not fail of success. Every minister in the church must concede that sometime we must carry out this schedule. There is no better time to commence. What think you, brethren?

The Lord in the last revelation said: "It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese languages, and others, as the missions may require; these tracts to be written by those in the ministry and those of the brothers who are not of the ministry who have a talent for writing, and to be submitted to the Presidency before being published. They should be short, clearly stated, and a sufficient number should be printed to furnish the traveling ministry with the quantities desirable for them to distribute." Why this specific command, if the time was not ripe for the tract business? No minister has any excuse for not having tracts with him; for under the provision of this clause the church is to publish and provide all needful tracts for the traveling ministry; a long needed provision. R. B. Neal, speaking of all Mormons, said: "Let us cover their tracks with tracts." I would add: "Let us cover his tracks with better tracts."

Yours for carrying out the divine program,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Are England, Scotland, and Ireland destined, ultimately, to become a part of "The United States of America and Great Britain"? is the startling inquiry which William T. Stead makes in the January Cosmopolitan. He has been one of the prophets of Great Britain, and has, at all times, been able to see in advance of his contemporaries—as events have proven. He has been studying the new conditions brought about by the industrial combinations and reaches the conclusion that England and the United States are destined to be more closely united and that as soon as the English people wake up to the absurdity and general uselessness, as had been shown in the Boer War, of a king and aristocracy, the trend will be immediate in the direction of a union with the people of the United States. However much one may differ from Mr. Stead, his speculations will be found vastly interesting. He is the first British subject who has had the courage to suggest such an outcome.

Selected Poetry.

The New Year And The Old.
 As the old year sinks in Time's ocean
 Stand ready to launch with the new,
 And waste no regrets, no emotion,
 As the masts and spars pass from view.
 Weep not if some treasures go under,
 And sink in the battered ship's hold,
 That blithe, bonny barque sailing yonder
 May bring you more wealth than the old.
 For the world is forever improving,
 The past is not worth one to-day,
 And whatever deserves our true loving
 Is stronger than death or decay.
 Old love, was it wasted devotion?
 Old friends, were they weak or untrue?
 Well, let them sink there in mid-ocean,
 And proudly sail on to the new.
 Throw overboard toil misdirected,
 Throw overboard ill-advised hope,
 With aims which your soul has detected
 Have self as their center and scope.
 Throw overboard useless regretting
 For deeds which you can not undo,
 And learn the great art of forgetting
 Old things which embitter the new.
 Sing who will of dead years departed,
 I shroud them and bid them adieu,
 And the song that I sing, happy-hearted,
 Is a song of the glorious new.

Winter.

Ever the year has grown, till now his days
 Backward extend in long and stately line—
 As when, far shadowed by the low sun's rays,
 Lies traced the spire of some majestic pine.
 Countless the hours that deck his storied past;
 Few are the hours awaiting him, before;
 Thus we behold him take his leave at last,
 Wayworn and old and hoar.
 White float his locks; they stream 'mid bush and tree
 While down his path he shambles from our sight.
 And through the wood, and o'er the gusty lea
 He onward moves, till lost within the night.
 And lo, as we from out our window-seat
 Vainly would stay him as apace he goes,
 Here is the young year cradled at our feet,
 Wrapped in its swaddling clothes!
 —Edwin L. Sabin, in Chautauquan, January.

There is no summit you may not attain,
 No purpose which you may not yet achieve,
 If you will wait serenely, and believe
 Each seeming loss is but a step to'rd gain.
 Between the mountain-tops lie vale and plain;
 Let nothing make you question, doubt, or grieve;
 Give only good, and good alone receive;
 And as you welcome joy, so welcome pain.
 That which you most desire awaits your word;
 Throw wide the door and bid it enter in.
 Speak, and the strong vibrations shall be stirred;
 Speak, and above earth's loud, unmeaning din
 Your silent declarations shall be heard.
 All things are possible to God's own kin.

Letter Department.

Why Will Men Misrepresent?

"Hoodlumism. Who were they?" Under this heading, in HERALD for December 11, I see a letter or report from Elders Wm. W. Perkins and B. C. Grainger, taken from the Deseret News, November 28.

Let us examine this report.

"While holding a series of meetings, a Josephite elder asked the privilege of asking a few questions, which was granted him."

Let us see how we were answered. When we asked the privilege of asking a few questions, Elder Perkins said, "No, sir, not till we dismiss our meeting." In his report he fails to report that part of it.

After they dismissed, I asked him which faction of the "Mormon" Church they belonged to. He said, "The Utah faction."

"Then you believe in Brigham Young and polygamy?" This was a question he did not like to answer, but finally said they did, but that the church did not practice it.

I then asked why B. H. Roberts was not allowed to take his seat in Congress, if it is not practiced now. He was at a loss for an answer to this.

Again the News says that the Josephite "arose and began villifying the 'followers of Brigham Young.'"

Before I got up to speak, I asked him why their people would not meet the Josephites in public discussion? I stated that I saw in the paper where an elder of that church had offered five hundred dollars to any one that would persuade the Utah people to furnish an apostle or elder to meet a Josephite apostle or elder in public discussion, at Lamoni, Iowa, the headquarters of their church, and repeat the same in Salt Lake City, Utah. I said, "It seems to me that if you people are in the right, that would be a nice little sum to pick up." He said they were not sent out to debate; that they had met the Josephites and defeated them every time; but the Josephites had not principle enough to quit. They were always wanting to debate. "Every one of them we meet, that is the first thing."

He did not yet know who I was. I stepped to the stand and told the people if they would give me their attention a few minutes I would like to state a few facts, as I believed I had a right to speak, as they had dismissed their meeting. That I was a Josephite, and that we had no affiliation whatever with the Utah church. I showed that the original church did not teach or practice polygamy; neither did the Josephites, or Reorganized Church, which is all the same and the true descendant of the original church. That Brigham Young was a false prophet and taught false doctrine, such as, "Adam-god," "blood atonement," and "polygamy," which I proved by 1 Timothy 4: 1; 2 Peter 2: 1-3, 10-15; also Jeremiah 17: 5. I made no statements that I can not prove. I did not bemean the followers of Brigham Young. I only stated the truth, and that which I can prove.

"The following Sunday night he came back, bringing with him seven or eight hoodlums, with the intention of breaking up our meeting."

This I utterly deny. It is false. We had no such intentions. Elder Perkins must have guessed at it. He says that I brought "seven or eight hoodlums." I don't know who he calls hoodlums. But the facts in the case are that our number consisted of only five: myself, Bro. George Lucas and his wife, and their baby, and my father-in-law, a man between fifty and sixty years old. Would not this be a fine crowd to take to break up a meeting by violence? If there were any hoodlums there, they were not Josephites. Elder Perkins wants to make the readers of the Deseret News believe everybody there were their friends except the Josephites. This is untrue. I went to their meeting to hear what they had to say, and to try and obtain the use of the school-house to show the difference between them and us. And finding that none of the directors were there, Bro. George and I went to see one of them, who lived about nine and a half miles away. I told him my business. He said it was all right, I could have the house; that he would like to hear it, as he always thought there was only one kind of "Mormons." He asked us to come in the house and he would go back with us as soon as he got ready. He was soon ready and we went to the schoolhouse. This man we found to be a fine man, and one of that district's best citizens. He stood by us to the last. When we got back to the schoolhouse, Elder Perkins had commenced to preach, and as his subject was the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith, I went in and stood in the middle of the aisle, as all of the seats were occupied.

They try to make it appear in their report that I came in at the close of the meeting from out of doors. This they surely know is false, as I stood in plain view of them. There were two or three stones or something thrown on the house, and they try to fasten this on us; but I deny having anything to do with it and can prove it. I do not know who threw the stones on the house. If they were hoodlums they did not come with us. Nor did we know them; and do not approve of what they did.

After they dismissed their meeting, I walked to the stand and shook hands with them. They had stated that they would hold no more meetings. I called the house to order, and told the people that I would speak on the next Saturday and Sunday nights, on the difference between us and the Utah people. I asked these elders to meet me in public discussion. One of them said, "We are not sent out to debate, but if you want to come here and tear down what we have preached, all right." They knew they had not preached any of their "damnable heresies," as Peter calls it. 2 Peter 2: 1.

He states that "he came in and called the people to order and began as he had done the previous night, but was promptly seized by a half dozen young men."

This is another falsehood. For they could not be mistaken, as they were both eye-witnesses. The people kept quiet, except one old man, who asked me a few questions; one other man told him to keep still, which he did. I then dismissed the audience. Two ladies where the Utah elders had been stopping, rushed up to them and said, "Stay with him, boys." I said, "That's just what I want them to do." They did not know which way to look. At that time I was seized by one man and told to come out of there. I obeyed him. Some followed, making some threats. He told me to leave and not come back the next Saturday night. I said, "All right, sir; if you don't want to hear me, all right." By this time others began to gather around and told him to let go of me. This he did. Knowing of this man as I do, I consider the source. We left as calm as we ever left anywhere in the world. Some of the best thinking people there gave us their hand, and said, "Come back again." And a number of boys came to us and said, "Come right on. You have just as good a right here as those fellows. We told them, No, we did not want any trouble. One man sent us word to come and he would see that we had protection; but as we were not out for that kind of a fight, we thought it best to stay away.

A few years ago a man who had been an old soldier went to this same schoolhouse to make a political speech. While he was standing at the well drinking a glass of water, some one hit him in the breast with a stone and hurt him badly. I don't know who did it, but it must have been some of those hoodlums. People thought it was a certain man. I will not give any name, as it would not do to state here who they said it was. One of the doctors at Mapleton told me that all the best citizens were on my side and would stand by me if I did get put out of the house. I feel glad to know that the best thinking people do not think any more that we belong to that abominable church in the west, which I believe has done more harm to this latter-day work than all the sectarian churches combined. This is how they were met by one man. He said, "I have but little use for you fellows since you used Mr. Quick as you did. Mr. Quick is a gentleman." This man's daughter is teaching school where the trouble was. I was then and am now ready to answer before any court for anything I did. I treated these men as gentlemen and they know it. Neither myself nor any that went with me used loud or boisterous language, neither was angry nor excited. I was the only one who said anything to them. I never felt more of the calm influence of the Holy Spirit than there, and as we went home, we all rejoiced in the truth of this glorious work. Sister Lucas started up that good old song, "Redeemer of Israel," and we all joined in.

These are surely the people to whom Jesus had reference in Matthew 7: 15, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheeps' clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves."

They come to the people and preach the principles of the gospel; but inwardly they believe Adam-God, blood atonement, and polygamy, and many other false doctrines.

Why do the Utah people keep back part of their doctrine? In examining one of their tracts, the title of which is "A Friendly Discussion," which they leave at every house, I fail to find one word of polygamy. Brigham Young calls that a part of their religion. See Journal of Discourses, volume 2, page 187, February 18, 1855. If it is part of their religion why do they keep it back? Did Jesus keep anything back, because the people would not accept it? Paul said, "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God."—Acts 20: 27.

Why do they not put in their articles of faith, Adam is the eternal God? On page twenty-two of their little pamphlet I notice Articles of Faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Is this which they put out to the world all they believe? I fail to find in those articles the statement, "We believe in a plurality of wives."

Why do they want to deceive the people, if this they put out to the world is what Joseph the Seer taught and believed, as they want to make the people believe, as they have his name signed to it? Why do they still want to hold to other doctrines; doctrines of devils, as Paul calls them? 1 Timothy 4: 1. Polygamy is not a doctrine of God. See Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6: "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."

What could be plainer? See also Mosiah 7: 1; Ether 4: 5; Jacob 1: 4 and 2: 9. See also Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7, "Thou shalt love thy wife [not wives] with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit." See also Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4.

Is it because they feel sorry for the Josephites that they will not meet them in public discussion? How much sympathy these fellows have, sometimes! But they told one man that they would meet any sectarian preacher on polygamy. Why do they have more sympathy for the Josephites than others? The old adage is, "A burnt child dreads the fire."

My prayer is that these people will soon turn from the error of their way and seek for the old paths. "Good will to all and malice towards none." I remain,

Yours for the right,

LEE QUICK.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, December 14.

Editors Herald:—Our trip around the Tuamotus is ended. We visited the following islands: Anaa, Raroia, Taenga, Makemo, Fakarava, Kaukura, and then returned here. We held conferences in Raroia, Kaukura, and in Papeete. We are now alone in the missionary house in Papeete; that is, Bro. John Hawkins, Emma, and I.

Brn. A. H. Smith and L. A. Gould are on their way to Australia, Bro. and Sr. Gilbert remained in Raroia, Bro. and Sr. Peterson went up to the Tuamotus a few days ago, and the same day that they left Bro. John Hawkins arrived from Tubuai. Bro. A. H. Smith did not intend to go on to Australia till the boat which runs to Auckland would make her first trip for 1902, which would be about the first of February; but the climate and food, together with the peculiar conditions here, produced quite a severe sickness which first appeared at Raroia, and for the most of the time there he was not able to eat or to keep on his stomach what little food he forced himself to eat; and he suffered, quite severely at times, with pains in his stomach and bowels. For this reason it was concluded best to shorten his stay on the islands, therefore the times for the conferences were changed from December to November; but he concluded to continue the rounds, hold the conferences at Kaukura, and Papeete, and catch the boat of November 30, for Auckland, instead of waiting for the February boat. This he did, and on December 2 he left Papeete for Australia, to fulfill his duties in accordance with the command of God. Having been to the islands of the sea, the Society Islands, and arranged the missionary labor there, and selected and ordained Metuaore a high priest and bishop, he felt that his work here was finished, and he was free to move on to the performance of his other duties.

And now having a bishop and his counselors here, we are more perfectly organized than formerly, and we hope that the finances of the church in this mission will be more properly cared for, and we expect much good to result from the bishop's court in rectifying some of the errors of the past. The General Conference appointees were sustained, except one who was not present at conference. Probably he had not learned of the change of date of the Papeete conference; but by reason of his being heavily in debt, he was permitted to free himself before entering upon missionary labor.

This mail brought us the sad news for Sister Peterson of the death of her father. She with her husband, Bro. J. W. Peterson, left here on Monday last for Kaukura. To-day I had opportunity to send to them their mail. They talk of going home as soon as the spring weather opens, and the weather gets a little warm, as Sister Lillie's health is not very good.

Emma and I are well, and feel as though we had not been away very long, as everything is about as when we left, in the way of improvements in the city.

May peace be with all the Israel of God.

Your brother in bonds,

J. F. BURTON.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, November 28.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH;

Dear Brother:—It is fitting that I should report to you the progress I have made in the mission assigned me on last April by our Lord and the General Conference. On the 2d of October we arrived in this mission, and on the 8th we sailed on the Southern Cross for the Tuamotu Islands, Kaukura as the objective point, where we expected to meet the Saints in conference. We had a safe voyage, stopping at Anaa on the way, where we went ashore and were welcomed in true native style. We were conducted to their meeting room, where the members of the branch were assembled. A hymn and prayer, another hymn and a speech of welcome, telling us how glad they were to see us. And then a substantial gift was made to each one of our party, and an acknowledgment of their kindness by us in a short speech. Then to each of us was brought a cocoanut, nicely opened, as a drink offering, and we were bidden to rest till dinner.

We strolled about on the island and made ourselves at home till dinner, and after till four o'clock p. m., when the whistle summoned us on board again. The next island was Makemo. We did not go on shore there. A native brother came on board and reported that the Saints had all left the island, gone diving, except three. The steamer lay here also all day.

The next island was Raroia, and here we disembarked, and were conducted to a fine large tabernacle the Saints had erected to hold conference in. They had gathered in force, and a hymn and prayer of thanksgiving for our safe arrival and speeches of welcome from the natives and responses by us, and then a general hand-shaking. Such expressions as this were heard on several occasions: "We have been told of the seed of Joseph the Prophet, and have believed, concerning them; but now my eyes have seen and my ears have heard one of them. I am thankful to Jehovah for permitting me to live and see and hear for myself."

After our hand-shake we were conducted to a comfortable cottage and located for the time we were to dwell with them. We were not permitted to carry anything heavier than our umbrellas. Willing and ready hands soon had all our luggage in from the steamer, and we were at home in our own house, so long as we chose to stay, a family moving out to give us good quarters. Everything was done that could be done to make us comfortable. Our meals were prepared for us, our housework all done with neatness and dispatch. But the food was not such as we had been accustomed to, and our American stomachs could not stand the strain with composure. Unfortunately I was the first of our company to suffer. I had a severe attack, purging and vomiting, and for two weeks I could scarcely eat anything. The natives were very much concerned about me and were willing to do anything to aid me.

However, I kept up, and on the 25th at Raroia we held our conference. I presented the object of my coming, and suggested to them the necessity of their choosing a man from among them to act as bishop, and mentioned Metuaore's name as having been mentioned in connection; but I told them the responsibility rested and must rest upon them. They unanimously made him their choice. The minutes of the conference will show what was done.

On the 26th we sailed in a small sailboat on our journey to Kaukura, the next stopping place. Our departure was a touching scene, although we had been with them only a fortnight. When we took the parting hand and said good-bye they wept as if parting from dear relatives.

Twelve hours in an open boat and we arrived at Taenga. Here we were made welcome as before. It was Saturday night, so we remained over Sunday and held services, and on Tuesday we again set sail in an open boat, but a larger one than the one in which we came from Raroia. Twenty-three natives and whites, three hogs, and three or five chickens. The first night we stayed at Makemo, then two days and two nights were spent on the sea. We arrived at Kaukura safely, however, if we did have some exposure and hardship. We were again made welcome.

One thing I must mention. Our native Saints would never set sail till after a hymn and prayer, and always on safe arrival a song of thanksgiving and prayer on landing; and on the sea, at sunset song and prayer service, and at dawn of day a hymn and prayer ushered in the day. Our native brethren have the most unbounded faith in the efficacy of prayer. Many of our good Saints in Zion could learn many lessons in faith, and in patient trust in God, from this people called heathen. They remind us of Book of Mormon times, and are evidently Lamanites. But I am making this report too lengthy.

On the 11th of November we held our conference at Kaukura, and the action of the Raroia conference was indorsed unanimously.

On the 14th we again set sail in a small sailboat for Tahiti, two hundred and twenty miles. Two days and all night we were exposed, but made exceptionally good time. We averaged seven miles an hour for thirty-one hours, and landed safely, and were in a manner at home again in the mission house, comfortable again.

On the 26th instant we held the final conference of our series. And once again Metuaore was indorsed as bishop. Now, Bro. Joseph, I was in doubt as to ordaining that colored brother to the office of high priest. You remember I asked you if it was understood that a bishop was to be ordained in the island mission. Your answer was: "Yes, I so understood it." I was in doubt because of what I supposed was Metuaore's mixture of African blood. I was troubled in mind over it, until on my way out here on board the steamer, I beheld in dream a native. Understand, I never had seen one in native dress. Well, I saw a native with a clean white shirt, with parau or hip cloth on, bare feet and legs, and bare head. I was so wrought upon I awoke and the vision remained with me. I asked what it meant and was told the natives were of Israel, and were entitled to and worthy of the Melchisedec priesthood, and that Metuaore had been ordained an elder, and was worthy. My scruples vanished, and when this conference also indorsed him, I did ordain him a high priest, also to the office of bishop.

We made inquiry as to organizing another quorum of elders. There was not material enough. I also made inquiry as to the practicability of ordaining seventies in this mission, and came to the conclusion that the time is not here for such ordinations, and until this mission is under the charge of one or two of the apostles, it would not be wise to ordain seventies here.

The minutes of our conferences will come to you by the same mail which brings this letter.

We are all comparatively well now. We have our tickets for Sydney, that is, Leon and I. Will likely sail on Saturday on the steamer Ovalan. Give my regards to all. Remember us in prayer. I feel that my mission to the Island Mission is done, and hope and trust the work will receive a new impetus here. The natives are an affectionate, trusting people, and must have a leader. If any of our folks in the East think these people are not posted in the Bible and on the faith of the church and its organization, they are sadly mistaken. I heard one sister repeat eleven chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel. I heard a brother repeat thirty-two pages of the Church History. With brotherly love I remain as ever, your brother,

ALEX. H. SMITH.

SEILING, Oklahoma, December 25.

Editors Herald:—It is Christmas night, as I am at home with my little ones, wife being in Iowa, called to the sick-bed of our oldest daughter, who is very low, her life being despaired of; but we trust that God will be merciful and hear our prayers and spare her life.

It grieves me to see so much jealousy and envy. How can we give way to these feelings when on every side we are being evilly spoken of and persecuted, and all manner of false reports circulated about us and the work. It seems that we are experiencing about the same as the Savior warned his disciples to beware of as recorded in Matthew 16: 6; for as all the sects then combined against Christ and his work, so are they all combined to try to overthrow the work of God here in Oklahoma, some even talking of driving us out; and all because of the fact that they can not successfully meet and overthrow the work by fair and honorable means. First we have D. B. Ray, then Dr. Tony, then apostate F. F. Vrooman, all of whom have been fairly met and answered, so far as we have been able to bring them to a stand.

Just now D. B. Ray is chafing over his defeat in the discussion with Bro. Erwin at Fairland, and is giving an exposé of Mormonism in the columns of his own paper, the Baptist Flag, published at Oklahoma City. It consists of garbled quotations from the books, false assertions, and extracts from such works as John D. Lee's confession. But it is all gulped down by the majority of his readers as a sweet morsel. Anything to down the Mormons. We stand ready to meet them any time on fair and equal footing, and defend any part of our faith; but they dare not meet us. So we have to be content to make reply when opportunity offers.

We are at present out of any place in which to meet, except private houses. The town hall was sold and the new school-house is closed against everything but school. This was caused by the efforts of a man who wanted to close it against the Saints, and the board concluded to close it against all. They could not keep us out any other way. The man who tried to shut us out has lived among the Saints for thirteen or fourteen years, and confesses that they were the best neighbors he ever had; but to be on the popular side he now takes a stand against them.

We are making an effort to build a small church, and it can be done if we work unitedly. We have a lot, and the blocks out, and one load of lumber hauled. We will have to borrow about one hundred twenty-five dollars. We have applied to a brother who has the money, but have not heard from him yet. It will be quite a sacrifice for the few here, but we know by past experience that God will bless and prosper us if we work with a will and trust him.

Our esteemed president, Bro. Peter Moldrup, has moved away; but others are coming. Bro. A. W. Steele, from Iowa, has just been here and bought a farm, and will move soon. Then, an honest soul is found now and then who is willing to step out and face the opposition. And so the good work goes on. With confidence in the ultimate triumph of the right,

In gospel bonds,

H. F. DURFEY.

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH, January 2.

Editors Herald:—The first number of volume 49 is before me in its new dress and makeup,—a decided improvement.

I can remember the HERALD back in '66, when it contained but two columns, but was only about half its present size. It has grown in many ways since that time, and I trust that the Editor and those associated with him may ever be able by the guidance of the Spirit to keep it growing, thereby feeding the flock which has also grown acceptably at all times. In bonds, PLEASANT CITY, Ohio, December 21.

Editors Herald:—We have moved again to a new place; and being absent from the branch, the pages of HERALD seem dearer to me than ever. We miss meeting with the dear Saints at Columbus; but we have one other advantage, and that is more time to read the church papers and study the word of God. We are trying to introduce our work in a new place, but we are not much acquainted yet, and I think we have had none of our elders in this place. Some few have questioned me about our faith and asked to read our creed, and expressed a desire to know something about us. I told them we had nothing but the word of God. I gave them some literature, and the Epitome of Faith. I explained the difference between us and the Brighamites in the mildest, best way I could, and gave some points on the Book of Mormon. One said she had read of the Latter Day Saints. I questioned to find out whether it was us or the Brighamites. She said she wanted to read the Book of Mormon. They are fine, intelligent people, and are Methodist in faith. We can not tell whether it will do any good or not, but do not know what the good seed sown may bring forth. We have the Book of Mormon loaned out, and will get it for them to read.

We expect to move back to Columbus in a few months, that being our home, and hope the good work may continue there, and many more precious souls be gathered into the fold.

Looking over the letter column, and seeing the names of so many loved ones that we have oft met with, brings to memory the gathering at Zion, and I trust we will continue to be faithful. I have received many evidences of the work, and know it is of God.

Your sister in the faith,

LOUISA C. GREEN.

RIDGETOWN, Ontario, December 27.

Editors Herald:—The contents of recent HERALDS have been so pleasing and instructive to the writer that he now writes in recognition and appreciation of that fact. By this it is not meant that the official organ was previously below par. It has been good all the time, even better at times than the writer knew. This is said because press of other work and additional hindering causes have sometimes prevented me from reading all it contained. It is therefore admitted that many good things have passed without my notice. Recently a reform has been instituted along this line. November 4, which was my birthday, I resolved to read, hereafter, everything the church papers contain. Often I have only glanced over the letters to catch the trend of spiritual events and then laid the paper aside and devoted myself to something else. This should not be done. A careful, prayerful reading of our current literature acts on the mind and soul like systematic, physical exercise does on the body.

Bro. Tary seems to be having quite an interesting time with W. B. F. Treat. This discussion reminds me of a sermon I once heard Elder Treat deliver at Bird's Eye, Indiana, in May, 1892. He was on his way to meet a young Catholic student in debate. A friend and I walked several miles to hear said sermon. He is a man of strong personality, pompous bearing, and vigorous delivery. His subject was "faith," and a part of his remarks were drawn from Hebrews 11: 1. On this text he gave us a treat (?) of what he doesn't know. He said in effect: "The word substance is a bad translation. It doesn't harmonize with the original. The latter consists of 'sub,' which means 'under,' and 'stare,' which signifies 'stand.' The combination, therefore, means stand under or support. I can not and I have never found a man who could harmonize 'substance' with the original meaning." Very likely, for that man has never been found. However, Joseph Smith, the man whom Elder Treat stigmatizes, did find a word that brings about harmony. The Spirit of God gave him the word assurance, which would certainly "stand under" or "support" the hope of God's children. See Inspired Translation. "Substance" sounds like the original, but in this case sense was sacrificed to sound. Joseph's position was confirmed by the developments and riper scholarship of a later day. The men who produced the Revised Version gave us the same rendering. The revealments of time and logic of events taught them more than the scholars of King James knew. If so, why consider the latter infallible and call a man a heretic and blasphemer because he objects to what they said? If the former were right, as they evidently were, was Joseph Smith wrong in saying the same thing nearly fifty years before? Reason answers, No.

In sorrow we read of the death of J. F. Thomas, of Illinois, and well remember what Bro. Slover says about the revelation and prophecy concerning the Civil War. I have heard Bro. Thomas relate that incident several times. With regret we have heard of the death of so many of our best and most useful men; but we remember that even the inspired books record good and bad events and contain sad and glad news. Our papers as the faithful chroniclers of current events must also tell us what happens. We do not blame you, friendly HERALD. We only wonder why it is the case. Why must you tell us these things? Why are some taken hence while others, apparently no better if so good, are permitted to remain and stand in their lot? If it were only those who have evidently finished their course we would not have so much reason to marvel; but some were too young as well as too brave and true to be thus early stricken down. Why should the bark of life strike a rock and the waves roar above a sunken ship, when the sky is clear and the wind is fair and kisses every sail?

The work is onward here. However, a degree of worldliness has crept into the church, which hinders somewhat, although it isn't as bad as in some other places. Apparently some Saints do not know that much they learn in society and business and from books is subversive of the word and will of God. The writer firmly believes we would be nearer to God if we could get closer to the simplicity of what are sometimes called "the good old times." In the meantime we are doing the best we can. When Elder John Shippy was laboring here as a pioneer an old gentleman said he could draw with his ox team all the Latter Day Saints there would ever be in Canada. Thank God that prediction has been proven false. Ontario alone has nearly three thousand.

With implicit confidence in the final triumph of this work,
I am,

Yours in bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

STONINGTON, Maine, December 30.

Editors Herald:—October 1 found Bro. I. M. Smith and the writer in Oxford County, intent on strengthening the Saints and presenting the claims of the restored gospel to those who were in ignorance of the grand evangel of light, liberty, and life. We met with opportunity for the exercise of fortitude and patience. At times we had very small audiences; but the Spirit encouraged us, and we feel that good was done. We were treated very kindly by those without, and the Saints responded with usual cheerfulness to our needs. Two worthy souls at Dixfield Centre, who had been ready for some time, came out and by obedience wrote their names on the list of "Covenant Israel." Leaving my home December 12, we started to attend conference at Stonington, spending the night with Sr. Murry, in Rockland, who in her cheerful home always has a place for the wayfaring missionary. The following day we resumed our journey across the bay on the little steamer "Vinal Haven." As we braced our feet against the railing to keep from going overboard we experienced that sensation peculiar to those "who go down to the sea in ships."

Arriving at Stonington, we found several on the ground before us, among the number being J. J. Billings, James E. Kelley, S. G. Cunningham, and Eugene D. Brann. This conference will go down to history as one of the best ever held in the district. "With one accord in one place" fitly describes the situation. The business passed off quietly, present officers being sustained.

Sunday brought us one of the worst storms that has visited our coast for several years; but, defying its ravages, a fair number gathered at nine a. m. for social service. In many respects this was one of the best prayer-meetings I ever attended. While outside the elements clashed with unremitted fury, within all was peace, power, and joy in the Holy Ghost. There were thirty-nine present. During the one hour and twenty minutes spent in this session, seventeen prayers were offered, thirty-nine testimonies given, and portions of eight hymns sung.

Preaching was of usual merit, Bro. Brann, Kelley, Smith, and the writer occupying in the order named. Encouraged, strengthened, and edified, the Saints returned to their homes and routine work.

Wednesday, December 18, I opened meetings at Mountainville. I had not been to this place for several years, and was pleased to note the increase in numbers and interest, many new faces greeting us as citizens in the kingdom. We expect that a chapel will be erected there in the near future. Energy, zeal, and lumber abound; and, we trust, faith and unity sufficient to accomplish their worthy undertaking are by no means lacking.

I returned to their place to unite a worthy young couple "for better or for worse." Much joy and long life are the wishes of their many friends.

Bad weather has interfered with our attendance lately. I expect to go to Lamoine from here on the next boat going east. Some spirited opposition is being manifest there which promises good. The branch here is doing nicely under the leadership of Bro. A. C. Dunham. Bro. Henry R. Eaton was ordained teacher, and Bro. A. O. Candage deacon, at the conference, the Spirit witnessing their acceptance.

Bro. Otis Eaton, who is so well known by those who are familiar with the work in Maine, is suffering from a mental shock or partial paralysis of the brain. He has the sympathy of all who know him.

Bro. I. M. Smith is announced for Wednesday evening. With the season's compliments and many returns,

Yours in bonds,
W. W. BLANCHARD.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, December 3.

Editors Herald:—I send you a few lines to inform your readers that we are still in the land of the living and a little improved in health from last writing. Bro. Alexander departed yesterday for Australia, accompanied by his secretary, Bro. Gould. We were indeed glad to meet the brethren; and a better acquaintance with them, has, on our part, ripened into a firmer friendship. We also learned more good news from the last conference and the church in general. No news seems to satisfy like church news. No relation seems nearer than brothers and sisters in the church.

Of the work done here at the conferences under the presidency of Bro. A. H. Smith the minutes will inform you, and we hope it will be of lasting good to the islanders, and the dawning of a brighter day to them.

We now expect to leave for America February 25, arriving in San Francisco about March 7, and after a few days, leave for the General Conference in Lamoni. It would be a good thing if all those who expect to attend conference from the West could travel together.

Brother and Sister Gilbert at last accounts were expecting to go to Hao, almost the furthestmost island in the mission. They seem to be industriously about the Master's work. Bro. Gilbert seems not to have forgotten much of the language. Starting in with a knowledge of the language he ought to do great good here, before the climate warns him to return.

Very truly,
J. W. PETERSON.

BYRNEVILLE, Indiana, December 26.

Editors Herald:—In this State we have six months of school, and during that period most of the schoolhouses are closed against our people. For this reason it is very hard for an elder to accomplish much, as we have only one house of our own in this district.

Bro. W. H. Kelley has just closed a series of sermons, eleven in all, and we feel he has done us great good. It was said at close of meeting, by both membership and outside people, that the preaching was the best Bro. Kelley ever did at our place. His soul is in the work.

Bro. Jenkins is now with us, and he, too, is a willing and an able worker, and has done much good. Bro. Bell, too, is a willing worker.

Bro. G. A. Smith and M. R. Scott were here and organized a Sunday-school about two months ago, and it has been the greatest success in the way of a Sunday-school we have ever had. It now numbers about eighty. We feel that the success of our school is in a great part due to Bro. Hougas and his effort in our district. Bro. David Jenkins is our superintendent, and is a live and active church worker, and especially in Sunday-school work.

We are in the faith, here, and are trying to bring this work to the front. And our membership slowly increases. We desire the prayers of the Saints.

Your humble servant,
JAMES P. SAPPENFIELD.

BRISBANE, Queensland, Australia, December 5.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you last month I have been sounding the gospel trumpet in this city, and have baptized thirteen, and am going to baptize another one to-day. Of these all but one have been members of the Utah church. Others are believing, and I hope to have the pleasure of baptizing them ere I leave for home to attend our annual conference. The power of God has attended my work here, and the gifts of the gospel have been manifest in our social meetings, to the joy of the Saints; for they never had such blessings all the years they were in the Brighamite church. God has revealed that many will be gathered in here, if Saints live faithfully, and that a branch shall be organized. If the Lord so directs I will organize before I leave.

A missionary is needed for Queensland continually, and local talent would give good assistance. I hope Bro. A. H. Smith will soon arrive, so as to be at our conference on the 28th. No word from him yet.

We expect to start publishing The Gospel Standard in January, if the conference is agreed. I trust those who subscribe in America will let us keep the papers and distribute them among the people here; for that is the main object in publishing them and getting help from America. We are very much in need of literature in this mission. Love to all Saints.

JOHN KALER.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"The true and proper stimulant for the intellect is truth. There is no sin in being excited by truth. There is no mental injury in such excitement. Hence, 'Buy the truth and sell it not.'"

The Little Ones He Blessed.

I wonder if ever the children
Who were blessed by the Master of old
Forgot he had made them his treasures,
The dear little lambs of his fold;
I wonder if angry and willful,
They wandered afar and astray,
The children whose feet had been guided
So safe and so soon in the way.

One would think that the mothers at evening,
Soft smoothing the silk tangled hair,
And low leaning down to the murmur
Of sweet childish voices in prayer,
Oft bade the small pleaders to listen,
If haply again they might hear
The words of the gentle Redeemer
Borne swift to the reverent ear.

And my heart can not cherish the fancy
That ever those children went wrong,
And were lost from the peace and the shelter,
Shut out from the feast and the song.
To the day of gray hairs they remembered,
I think, how the hands that were riven
Were laid on their heads when Christ uttered,
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

He has said it to you, little darling,
 Who spell it in God's word to-day;
 You too may be sorry for sinning,
 You also believe and obey;
 And 'twill grieve the dear Savior in heaven,
 If one little child shall go wrong—
 Be lost from the fold and the shelter
 Shut out from the feast and the song.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, December 9.

Dear Home Column:—Ere the year closes, we wish to thank your many writers for the words of encouragement you have brought us from time to time. The letters and other articles in the HERALD breathe words of cheer. The Autumn Leaves and Hope are sweet company. The church papers are all good. The Saints should not be without them in their homes.

As many have written about the care of children, we feel like saying a few words. When my children hurt themselves while playing, and came crying to me, I would sympathize with them and kiss them better, which usually satisfied, unless they were badly hurt; but when it did not mend, and the little one continued to cry, I would ask him to show me what had hurt him. If it was a stick that had tripped him I would say, "Poor stick, you did not mean to hurt the little child. You have not eyes to see the little boys and girls run up against you. I guess they hurt you, and you have no mamma to kiss you better." Often the little one would forget its own hurt, and pick up the stick to kiss it better.

Latter Day Saint mothers should not run to bring a doctor every time their children are ailing, as some do. If you study your own and the child's welfare you will not do it. Do not permit your children to eat often between meals, and do not let them overeat at the table. Bathe their bodies at least once a week, keep their bowels in proper order, and do the same to yourselves, and you will not require the aid of a physician very often.

Mothers, make companions of your children. Fathers I think should do the same, not with the work cares and responsibilities alone, but in the gospel interests. Fathers, it is on you that this rests, as well as on the mothers. Read the HERALD to your sons. Let them see that you are interested in this latter-day work. Gather them into the fold if you want them to be honorable men, and if you want to bring blessings upon your gray hair and depart this life in peace, awake to a sense of your duty. God means what he says. Awake! Do your part, and he will open the windows of heaven and pour out blessings upon you, and your heart will be made glad that you are doing his will.

Twice I have asked the prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union in my behalf, and have been aided each time. I wish to thank all who have remembered me, and ask you all to continue to do so. Each time I have been administered to, have been benefited. Thank God for such blessings. May he ever continue to bless us, as he assuredly will if we strive to serve him.

Brn. Condit, Layland, Anderson, and others have endeavored to keep the work moving in this part of the field, and good Bro. Wheeler, who is always at his place of duty, also Bro. Grimmet, have been and are striving to keep the camp-fire burning. We often rejoice to read of the work prospering in different places, and are thankful for the effort made here; hope next year may bring better results. Asking God in the name of Jesus to bless all his Saints, from Joseph Smith, our leader, down to the lowest and least, and all of earth's children who are striving to do good until the blessed reign of peace be ushered in, Satan bound, and wickedness cease to exist, I am,

Your sister,

JANE R. HEATON.

Courage.

If you will look into the oldest book of biographies on the globe, you will find the men who have conquered the strongest temptations have not only had the courage of their convictions, but have had the indwelling power of God. Joseph, spurning a tremendous temptation, not because Potiphar saw him, but because God saw him; Daniel, facing both a laugh in the palace and the lions in the royal park; Paul, defying Nero because "the Lord stood by me and strengthened me"—these are the models for your imitation. Good impulses are abundant and cheap. They will never hold you in a sharp fight unless you have the staying power which Christ imparts. To stand the sneers of scoffers, to resist the sudden rush for wealth, to conquer fleshly appetites, to hold an unruly temper under control, to keep base passions subdued, and to direct all your plans and purposes straight toward the highest mark, requires a power above your own. Christ's mastery of you will give you self-mastery; yes, and mastery over the powers of darkness and of hell. Faith will fire the last shot, and when the battle of life ends, you will stand among the crowd conquerors in glory.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

Prayer Union.

Mrs. Helen Webb, Union, Idaho, desires to thank the sisters of the Prayer Union for their intercession in her behalf, and to assure them that it has not been in vain. Her health began to improve and strength return immediately, and now she is able to do the housework while her daughter goes out to earn their livelihood. To God be all the glory. Praise ye the Lord!

Bro. David Morrison, president of Masonville Branch, Canada, who has been afflicted for some time past, desires the prayers of the Union and the church in general, that if it is the Lord's will he may be restored to health and strength.

Sr. Nellie Duckas (nee Bruce) desires to be remembered by the Union. She fears deafness is coming upon her.

A sister, of Sumner, Oklahoma, requests the prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union in her behalf. She is afflicted and in trouble, and desires to resist temptation, overcome, and be useful to the church.

Oscar Dodge, Fennimore, Wisconsin, asks the Sisters' Prayer Union, also the Saints in general, to remember him in his affliction.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

To District Association Officers.

About October 6 I sent a circular letter to the superintendent of every district in the Association whose address I have. The letter was one requesting the officer to appoint some one to prepare the history of the Sunday-school work in his district, or to prepare it himself; these several histories to be sent to the General Superintendent who is preparing the history of the General Association. We requested that all reply at once, so that we may know how well the work is progressing. It is very necessary that this work be done promptly, as we can go no further with our work in preparing the history of the General Sunday-school Association till we get these several district histories. But up to date, December 30, less than one third of the districts have been heard from in any way whatever. What is the matter? It may be that you have gone to work, intending to prepare the work as soon as possible and send it in, not thinking it necessary to write previously. If this is the case we would like to hear how the work is progressing. If the work has been neglected, will you not attend to it at once?

Again, it may be that the letter did not reach you. But some one got it, for all letters bore my return request and but one of the whole lot was returned. If you are a district superintendent and have not heard from me on this historical matter, please write me at once and I will mail you copy of the letter. We want to hear from every district in the association, and each district must, of necessity, furnish its own history. No one else can do it so well.

Again may we ask you to lose no time in attending to this matter. Months have passed since this work was begun. Some of the manuscripts are now in and more will be very soon. All ought to be. Kindly help us out in this work.

In bonds,

T. A. HOUGAS, Gen. Supt.

Notice Of Proposed Amendments.

Notice is hereby given that at the next General Convention the following amendments to the constitution will be proposed:

1. In the Constitution for District Associations, add as Article X.

SUSPENDING DELEGATE RULES.

All district conventions shall be delegate conventions; provided that any district association whose membership does not exceed four hundred may dispense with the delegate system for not more than two years by a three fourths majority of any regular convention of the district, notice of such proposed suspension having been given not less than two, nor more than four months previous to the convention. Such notice to be published in the HERALD and Ensign.

Respectfully submitted,

T. A. HOUGAS.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

(The above was sent in time for the three-month limit, but by mistake of the editor of the Sunday-school Department was held over.—Ed.)

Delegates to General Convention were chosen. The question box occupied the attention of the convention on Friday afternoon. The question, "Shall we petition the General Association to give us graded text-books instead of quarterlies?" resulted in the adoption of a petition to the General Association asking for graded Sunday-school text-books. The discussion of the home class work resulted in authorizing the superintendent to appoint a district home class superintendent, he to have power to appoint local home class superintendents. The president announced the name of Anna Amos for home class superintendent. Convention closed on Friday evening with a literary entertainment, which consisted of music, original papers, and recitations. The next convention will meet at Runnells, June 13.

Proposed Amendments To Book Of Rules.

Notice is hereby given that at the General Conference of 1902, a motion will be presented to amend section 159, paragraph (c), to read as follows:

(c) The court, in other cases, may recommend to acquit, to exercise mercy, or suggest what in their judgment would be adequate punishment for the crime committed; and upon this suggestion or recommendation, the church may act; but should said court recommend a penalty, the vote to affirm the findings, and the vote to adopt the recommendation, should be taken separately. Wm. Anderson. F. M. Weld. F. M. Smith.

Wanted.

From the ministry and members in any part of the world, information of the truthfulness of God's promise that "These signs shall follow them that believe."

For the purpose of collecting and having them published by the church, the undersigned wishes that all those who can will write and tell of the healing of the sick, speaking in tongues, prophecy, and casting out of evil spirits. The cases of healing would be the most valuable, the others would only be used when they were of remarkable cases of very general interest. Be particular to state the time, place, names of persons, your address, and the names of witnesses, if any. The purpose is to have a handy little book that will contain enough to be a rebuke to scoffers, and a joy and consolation to all God's children. Address, Edward Rannie, Station "A," 3333 Boyd Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Local Historian's Notice.

Will all elders who have held debates in those portions of Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, and Indian Territory, included in what is known as Clinton and Spring River Districts, please send me the name and denomination of opponent, and exact date and place of debate. It is needful to be prompt in this matter. Mrs. A. C. Silvers, local historian, Walker, Missouri.

Bro. Hicks died November 2, 1878. She always bore a strong testimony to the latter-day work. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. Funeral sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by Henry Southwick.

Number Of Theological Students Decreasing.

There is a falling off of twenty per cent in the number of theological students over three and five years ago. This is true of Union, McCormick, Auburn, the General, Berkeley, Drew, New Brunswick, Princeton, Lane, Bangor, Garrett Biblical, and other seminaries. The causes are variously given. One is the material opportunities of the times, another the reports that the ministry is an overcrowded profession, and a third that there is a decline of faith. President Little of Garrett thinks the multiplication of opportunities to preach, as the magazines, the newspapers, the lay platform, play their parts, and President Stewart of Auburn is sure the cause is the demand for quality rather than quantity, and the consequent turning down of a large proportion of those who apply. At present the seminaries are not graduating sufficient numbers to supply the demand from the churches. On the Pacific Coast, for example, forty men a year are wanted by Presbyterians alone. The Seminary at San Anselmo has but twenty available. Almost the same conditions obtain in other fields, and among other religious bodies.—From "Highways and Byways," in the Chautauquan Magazine for January.

At the very beginning of the new era of decent government in New York City the vexing question has come up whether it should be lawful for the liquor saloons to be opened on Sunday. The problem in New York is very much more complicated than it is in smaller cities. Liquor selling, in the meaning of the law, is not only rum selling in low resorts. It is also the serving of drinks in gentlemen's clubs and in hotels; and it is the serving of beer and wine in the social resorts of that part of the population which keeps the habits of the Old World. A law that should forbid the sale of liquor at places of these widely different kinds simply can not be enforced. It would be openly violated. Worse yet, it would open the way to police corruption; and the very starting place of municipal reform is to make the corruption of the police as improbable as it is possible to make it.

As a practicable matter, everybody knows that liquor will be sold on Sunday, be the law what it may. But theoretically the question is difficult. On one side is the plain fact that the old American conception of Sunday has yielded in every large city, and especially in New York, to the European conception—as a day of recreation and even of conviviality. These habits of a very large part of the population can not be changed by statute.

On such a question unanimity of opinion can not be hoped for. But the most demoralizing influences that can exist in any community are an open disregard of the law and the definite alliance of the police with the law-breakers. These are worse evils even than the violation of a cherished religious habit. It is bad to have the corner grogeries open on Sunday afternoons, or at any time if they could be closed; but it is worse to pretend to close them and to put a premium on deception and bribery. And it is commendable to hold fast to the teachings of the fathers; but it is more commendable to see facts as they are and try to solve present problems by the help of experience rather than by tradition.—World's Work.

Geography, as it is understood by the geographical societies, has a narrower signification than geography as introduced into the elementary school. It is used by the former to indicate primarily the production of the elements of difference on the earth's surface—differences of land, water, and climate—the differences that arise from the upheaval of land and from the erosion of land and its transference to the ocean, and also the differences that arise by the interaction of land and water, such as rivers, lakes, bays, straits, seas, and oceans. Besides the production of such elements of difference, geography includes for the scientific geographer the effects or influences that the peculiarities of the earth's surface have upon the life of man; such, for example, as relate to food and clothing, their need and their supply, and such as are calculated in the course of ages to affect his physique and produce a distinct race of men, black, yellow, red, or white. In other words, the scientific geographer, as a specialist, includes anthropology with his study of the earth-surface and of its plants and animals.

But geography in the elementary school finds it necessary to go farther and include a study of the elements of civilization in so far as they are matters that characterize localities. The geographical distribution of civilization is, in fact, of the first importance to the child, the youth, and the man, and hence has come to the front in all teaching of geography, from that of the early Greeks, who taught the second book of Homer's Iliad and made the children learn the localities of the Grecian tribes, down to the latest teaching of geography, which spends most of its time on the habitats of three or four leading nations.

Geography in the elementary school, therefore, deals much with the location and growth of cities—the transformations of nature by man for his purposes. First he transforms nature for dwelling purposes, by the building of cities, villages, and farm-houses; secondly, he transforms it for the purpose of intercommunication by making roads, bridges, tunnels, viaducts, railways, and canals; and, thirdly, he transforms land by adapting it to crops, by fencing, by draining, by cultivation, by irrigation, and by connecting it with the world market by internal and foreign commerce. In other words, school geography deals not only with the geographical features in which natural conditions are seen to affect "the physical character of man," but also with the transformations which man makes upon nature with his cities, railways, canals, and agriculture.

By reason of this difference in definitions, the school geography is likely to be hindered if it adopts the literature of the geographical society without some modification. The region of the North Pole is of as much interest geographically as the region about New York, or London, or Paris, or any great center of civilization. But the child in the school ought to be interested chiefly in the geographical centers of population. The centers that are connected with the history of great events are also, other things being equal, of more importance than the territory that has not yet been made the theater of civilization.—W. T. Harris, in the January Forum.

The January Country Life in America is a California number with superb pictures characteristic of this unique and beautiful magazine, and wholly devoted to the out-door world on the Pacific Coast. The special covers show big trees of the Sierras, and, a magnificent frontispiece, the blooming orchards at the foot of snow-capped mountains. The leading article, by L. H. Bailey, tells of the diversified beauties and peculiarities of the land that flowers in winter and sleeps in summer, where thunderstorms are not, and where the sun shines everlastingly. Pioneer days are recalled by "The Heroes of the Firing Line," a poem by Joaquin Miller; the trend of wonderful development is the theme of "Country Life in California," by A. J. Wells; and "The Story of a Great California Estate," by Charles Howard Shinn, naturally follows. Throughout, the unusual opportunities for illustrating California at its best have been well taken, but of particularly striking beauty are several series of photographs. Of these, "The Cypressess of Monterey" show a picturesque feature of the Southern coast; the Yucca palms and Gila monsters, the weird life in the Mojave Desert; and the poppies and poppyworts furnish the color that gives California its fame as a land of flowers. Then, in a practical way, a portion of the number is devoted to the making of homes and gardens, the culture and commercial handling of fruits, and to many aspects of the soil. Certainly Country Life in America grows better with every number, and proves the grip that life under the open skies has upon us Americans.

Will you stuff your little children's mouths now with cakes, and leave them to be careless or ashamed of you when they are grown, or will you choose to grow mentally and spiritually, keeping well abreast of the day you live in, no matter if your children's fare be plain? So shall they turn to you in pride when they become fully developed men and women.

Give up slavery to show. Give up vanity which feeds upon the envy of neighbors over trifling things. Give up feeding your household with indigestible food prepared by your own heavy toil. Give up fripperies of the needle, all kinds of useless gew-gaws, and teach your hands, your body and your feet the beauty of repose. Learn to work at what is worth while, to think of real things, to avoid wasting your powers upon the nothings of life.—Ada C. Sweet, in the January Woman's Home Companion.

Henry Wallace Phillips, whose "Red-Headed Cupid" raised a laugh all over the country, comes up to the mark again in the January McClure's with "The Demon in the Cañon," a bear story, in rollicking miners' slang. This story of "Hydraulic" Smith, Agammemnon G. Jones, Miguel, the "greaser" herder, and brother bear, will keep you laughing from start to finish.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATIONS IN REGARD TO THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

Below we give a letter of inquiry, which is but a type of several. In reply: We may say at the outset that we know of no reason why we should explain why any revelations received prior to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith should have been left out of the Doctrine and Covenants: and for similar causes we know of no reasons why those supposed to have been "left out" should have been inserted. The publication in the form of the Doctrine and Covenants of those revelations, directions, and commands incident to the institution and progress of the work during the years of the lifetime of Joseph the Seer, before and after the church was organized, was a matter for the consideration and action of the officers of the church and their compeers to whom such work belonged. Our opinion is that such revelations as were proper and profitable for publication were compiled by competent authority and put into the printers' hands. This was certainly the case with those in the book published by order of the Councils of 1834 and 1835, known as the 1835 edition. And it is also true of the Doctrine and Covenants published in 1845 and 1846, by N. K. Whitney and George Miller, trustees for the church.

Those revelations published in that book were "carefully selected from the revelations of God" by the president of the church. For us to attempt to explain why any were not selected is to presume to know what was in the president's mind without information from him in regard to it.

As to subsequent editions of the book, published by the Reorganized Church, those things which have been incorporated in it have so been done by action of instruction of the church.

We believe that the hand of the Lord has been in the affairs of the church from the beginning; and certainly the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is a striking instance in which the word of the Lord in which safety to the church was provided has been preserved; hence we would not offer an apology for the absence from the book of anything supposed to have been in existence of revelation received by the Seer.

Some of the things claimed to be revelation and to have been received by the Seer, have no business to be in the Doctrine and Covenants, or any other of the books of the church.

DIGHTON, Kansas, December 9, 1901.

Editors Herald:—

1. In the last HERALD [issue for December 4.—ED.], on page 977, is quoted the following from "Church History:" "The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened. We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit before us." And in Book of Mormon, chapter 7, verse 2, Book of Nephi, it reads: "And they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice; that I should not manifest myself unto them, save it were by the Holy Ghost."

Will you please explain through the columns of the HERALD how you reconcile the two statements?

2. Also please tell us how you reconcile the two following statements as found in the Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18: "The elders or priests are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the Church of Christ to their understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders, so that all things may be done in order." Section 52: 3, reads: "And thus let them preach by the way in every congregation, baptizing by water, and the laying on of the hands by the water's side."

3. Revelations given to Joseph the Seer being left out of the Doctrine and Covenants is being used as a weapon against the book by our enemies in debate; and according to Bro. White's defense Joseph received over two hundred. Will you please explain why they are left out. It has been a wonderment to me for years why any of the revelations should be left out, and now it is being used against the work.

My faith in this latter-day work can not be shaken by all the powers of earth and hell, but there are many things that I do not understand; and as you say in HERALD of late date that any member of the church has a right to make inquiries through the HERALD, I write for the much needed information as stated above. As ever in the faith of Christ,

Your brother,
A. P. PELTON.

1. In regard to the quotation from Book of Nephi 7: 2: We see no difficulty in the matter. The statement in the HERALD which the questioner quotes from the history as given by Bro. Heman C. Smith is explained by what follows. In the third paragraph of the quotation from the history Joseph Smith stated as follows: "After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us," which shows that they understood it to be a vision, which was evidently the work of the Holy Spirit, which would be in strict accord with the quotation from Book of Mormon. We therefore have no need to undertake to reconcile statements between which there is no conflict.

2. The direction in section 17, paragraph 18, is one of general rule to the church in its collective and organized work; the one in section 52, paragraph 3, was to four men, whose names are given, as they were instructed to go from Ohio to Missouri by the way of Detroit: and if the questioner had quoted the whole paragraph whatever difficulty he would have discovered would have vanished, for the difference in the conditions are easily seen. These men were Lyman Wight, John Corrill, John Murdock, and Hyrum Smith. "And let them journey from thence [Detroit], preaching the word by the way, saying none other things than that which the prophets and apostles have written, and that which is taught them by the Comforter, through the prayer of faith. Let them go two by two." Then follows what the questioner quoted.

We see no possible necessity of making a difficulty here, for the one is a rule applying to the church after organizations have been effected, and the other was a command unto men, officers in the church, journeying from one place of service to another, necessarily requiring more or less haste in going; like the young prophet of 1 Kings 13th chapter, or the mission upon which Jonah was sent. To us it is easy of acceptance without burdening it by an attempt to reconcile what is not at variance.

3. We are aware that those who are opposing our work make as an objection the assertion that "revelations given to Joseph the Seer" have been "left out of the Doctrine and Covenants." How do these persons know what revelations said to be not found in the book were received by the prophet? Who of them knows which of these assumed revelations were given of God and which not? Would it have been wise for the Reorganized Church to have put into the Book of Covenants articles which others claimed to be revelations from God, but which were not put into the book by Joseph, the Seer, himself? What warrant had the Reorganized Church to do that? What warrant has the church now to do it? Who of those making the objection is authorized to determine which of these alleged revelations, which they say has been left out, is genuine and should go in the book?

Our Utah religionists have in their Doctrine and Covenants the so-called revelation of July 12, 1843, the basis claimed for the practice of polygamy. It was not in the Doctrine and Covenants published in 1835, nor the edition of 1845-46, 1852, 1854, 1856, or 1869. Shall the Reorganization yield to the clamor of these objectors that that alleged revelation was "left out" and proceed to insert it in the Doctrine and Covenants? If not, why should others alleged to have been received by the prophet be put in?

Suppose this objection is "used as a weapon against the book by our enemies," what of it? If the alleged revelations were in the book that would be used as a weapon against the book, also, and with far greater force and more disastrous effect than the fact that they were left out can possibly be used now.

The church, and the Reorganized Church after it, had the right to put into the Book of Doctrine and Covenants whatever was in the judgment of their officers and members necessary, proper, or profitable for the good benefit or use of the church; and this, too, without asking the enemies of the church whether they were willing, or would object. Why, these men object to the Bible in our hands because we read it as it is, and call us blasphemers because we do it.

If Bro. I. N. White has discovered two hundred revelations given of God to the church he has found many more than we ever heard of before. But suppose that he has, before they could be published in the Book of Covenants they would have to be acted upon by the church and ordered to be so printed.

If it would be proper to yield to this objection and print in the Doctrine and Covenants all that has been claimed to have been revelations from God to Joseph the Seer, because those objecting use the fact of their being left out as a weapon against the work, then by a parity of reasoning, we would have to take out all after the date of February, 1834, because our brethren of the Church of Christ (Hedrickites), object to their being in the book and use that as a weapon against us. If not, why not?

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as it was left at the Seer's death, so far as revelations through him are concerned, in the hands of the Reorganized Church, has very well stood the arbitrament of time and the assaults of those who "object" to the work. We therefore prefer it as it is much rather than to have it burdened by a mass of doubtful or disputed alleged revelations, of which we know little or nothing.

We can conceive that whatever was put into the Doctrine and Covenants in the days of Joseph the Seer was deemed essential to be there; whatever was left out was not. We know that what has been ordered put in by the Reorganized Church was deemed proper; and this we write without passing judgment on what was left out.

We decidedly object to permit those who oppose our work to formulate our faith, or compile our books for us, or to say what we should or should not put into them.

A QUESTION IN EQUALITY.

John Jones is the owner and manager of an industrial plant of some considerable size and importance. He has in his employ a large number of men, including superintendent, assistant superintendent, secretary, head bookkeeper, and clerks, office boys, mailing and shipping clerks, stenographers, machinists, foreman, and workmen skilled and unskilled.

Question: In the application of the principle of paying church dues, tithing, etc., should the employees, salaried men, and laborers, pay on the gross sum of their salaries and weekly wages, say one tenth as the same is received from John Jones, or take out the cost of their living, including clothing, food, rents, and other living expenses, etc.?

As for John Jones himself, should the rule apply, the one tenth or other sum of his gross income from his industrial plant, or should he take out a fair percentage on capital invested, and count the wear and tear of machinery, running expenses, including salaries of all his employees, and all other expenses incurred in carrying on his work, including his living, and then tithe the net income, or the excess he has over and above all these amounts?

If his employees should pay on the gross amount of their salaries or wages, should he pay on the gross amount of the earnings of his plant? Or if he should pay on his net income after all expenses are counted out, should those in his employ do the same?

We have lately seen the following:

As to the supposed "discrimination" in the tithing of the gross income of individuals and only the net income of firms and corporations. If the bookkeeper earning twenty-five dollars a week, or the laborer receiving but nine dollars a week, desires to pay tithing, he will donate the tenth of his wages whatever they may be. What expense is a bookkeeper or a day laborer put to in gaining his stipend? None at all. His support and family expenses are another matter. They come out of his tithed income. But if a company or individual engages in business, investing a certain amount of capital, the expenses of carrying it on, including the wages of employees, must be deducted before the real income is determined. The company pays the tenth thereof as the company tithing. But each partner or director pays the full tenth of his personal income, just the same as any employee does. The earner of wages, or receiver of a salary, or person conducting a business, pays the tenth of that which he actually receives as income, and each person supports himself and family out of the remainder. Thus there is no discrimination and no injustice in the working of the rule."

To this it is objected that an "assessment of ten per cent on the gross income of a clerk and ten per cent on the net income of an employer is an unfair discrimination against those who can least afford it."

The first position is assumed where tithing is expected of all employees, the second is from those who are trying to arrange for an ideal equality of burden-bearing in community.

But, if corporations take out all expenses incurred in running their business, and pay only a tithe of the net income, and each shareholder pays on his receipts, and each salaried employee on his wages, would it not equalize the tithe-paying burden? It would seem so.

"THE TRUTH DEFENDED."

REPLY TO D. H. BAYS' DOCTRINES AND DOGMAS OF MORMONISM. BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH.

This work is an able defense of the truths of "Mormonism," as the principles of the "Faith once delivered to the Saints" were again confided to men on the earth.

It is also an able presentation of the organization and practice of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, as opposed to or contradistinguished from the Christian Church.

It is also an able exposition of the reasons for reorganization of the church after the death of Joseph Smith, June 27, 1844, and the progressive steps to that end.

It will pay any one who wishes to become acquainted with the views of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, on doctrine and church government, as well as its attitude toward the claims made as the Christian Church and the differences between the two churches to buy and study this work.

The elders in the field, and at home working locally where the elders of the Christian Church are liable to be at work, can not afford to be without this book.

As Elder Bays' book is used extensively by the ministry of the Christian or Disciple Church in their opposition to "Mormonism," as they call it, a study of Elder Smith's work will give a basis for defense against such attacks.

The work is on sale at HERALD Office, Lamoni, Iowa, at thirty-five cents in paper covers, and fifty cents cloth. Address orders to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

QUEER MARRIAGE.

The shade of Theodore Comstock, who was once a successful miller, but died to the earth life some years ago, was married by spiritualistic rites to Mrs. Sarah Williams, at Detroit, Michigan, December 30 last, the ceremony being performed by Mollie Ladell, a noted medium. "Lord what fools these mortals be."—Puck.

ACCORDING to local newspaper reports, Bro. F. C. Keck did some good work at Liberal, Missouri, last fall. The papers of Liberal speak highly of him as a speaker. One states: "Elder Keck, of the denomination of Latter Day Saints, closed a two-week series of meetings at Spiritual Hall Sunday night. Mr. Keck is one of the best posted men on Bible questions we have ever heard speak. He uses from seventy-five to two hundred quotations from the Bible during each discourse, always giving book, chapter, and verse in which it can be found. The meetings were well attended throughout after the first night."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. D. W. Shirk wrote from Minatare, Nebraska, December 12 last, asking the Saints to pray for the Olive Branch, that they may have power to walk blameless before the Lord. He takes it for granted that all things work for good to them who love God; yet he realizes how prone we are to let the flesh predominate. He says: "Saints, let us be very careful of our speech and actions. We may be inflicting deep and lasting wounds. I have lately wept in my sleep over the actions of some in the branch. I fear the ballroom, card-table, and fashion, etc., are loved more than is God. Yes, and the lodges. Saints, do not tell me these things are right; for no sooner do we engage in them than our seats in church become vacant, or we refuse to commune when present. I wonder sometimes how it is possible for us to do so with all the testimony that God has given to his people in these latter days; but it is the old story repeated. O, whom are we causing to weep, dear Saints; whose heart are we breaking? God only knows, but we shall be held amenable."

On January 6, from Waterloo, Iowa, Bro. W. W. Beal writes: "We are among the scattered ones now, seldom hearing a sermon or seeing an elder. We hope the college will soon be free from debt and that the cause may flourish till many shall embrace it."

Under date of January 6, Bro. F. A. Russell writes from Rock Island, Illinois: "I think the style of HERALD is improved fully fifty per cent."

Bro. John G. Hallam, Lander City, Wyoming, writes January 2: "We are away from branch privileges, and are lonely. Those who have the privilege of attending church are highly blessed. I long to be where the Saints are. Pray for me."

Bro. A. A. Reams under date of December 31 writes from Grinnell, Iowa, telling of the conference there on the 28th and 29th. He says: "The church work in the district in all its departments is being carried on in an active manner and is progressing everywhere with but one or two exceptions. The conference was one of the largest, the most united, and the most successful of any yet held in the district. The Saints in Grinnell entertained the conference visitors in a welcome manner, and a vote of thanks was extended to the Grinnell Saints for their hospitality. Elders Wight and McCoy remained in Grinnell part of the week, and others of the ministry went to different parts of the district. The Saints of this district enter upon the new year with bright hope and with a desire to labor earnestly in every department of church work."

Bro. A. M. Chase writes from Condon, Oregon, January 6: "We organized a Religio here yesterday, with Bro. Al Moore president, Mrs. Allie Belding vice-president, Miss Ada Haws treasurer, and Mrs. Otis Probst secretary. We closed a profitable series of meetings here last night, and to-night expect to open a new point, Alville, seventeen miles west of here."

Bro. R. T. Cooper in remitting for HERALD subscription writes from St. Louis, Missouri, January 7: "Please accept my thanks for your notice of my arrearage on the HERALD. I did not mean to let it become that way. Inclosed herewith please find post-office order for $1.50. I appreciate the HERALD very much indeed, and like the new 'dress.' It is more tasty and up to date, and the type is quite an improvement, too."

Bro. D. E. Tucker writes from Hardy, Arkansas, under date of December 29, 1901: "I am at present confined to the house with sore feet caused by too much walking. As my feet are so tender, and as I can not labor here without a great deal of walking, so soon as I secure my permit for clergy rates I shall start for Missouri and will labor in town, where it takes very little walking. I will also be able to visit my sister there who lost her companion last spring, and who is without support and the necessities of life. She is left without even a child to comfort her. I shall continue to battle on as best I can."

Under date of December 16, 1901, Elder G. R. Wells in a letter to the Historical Department says: "Our cause has surprised us by taking a spurt forward in Queensland, thus putting our available workers over larger area. The Queensland outbreak is a surprise, but it started with a simple inquiry by mail. It is a neat piece of work to the credit of Elder Kaler, as far as credit may justly attach to the human part of it."

Letter from Bro. A. H. Smith, dated at Auckland, New Zealand, December 19, 1901, states that he and

Bro. Leon Gould left Papeete on December 2, and arrived at Auckland, December 17, too late to catch the steamer for Sydney, which met and passed the Ovalau, on which the trip was made, either failing to see or refusing to heed the signals made to the outgoing boat that the Ovalau had passengers for Sydney. So the brethren were left to stay at Auckland until the ensuing week, and expected to leave for Sydney, Australia, Monday, December 23. He writes further thus: "It is too bad that this country has not been opened up for mission work. Here is one of the finest fields I know of for mission work. The people as a rule are uninformed of the latter-day work. My landlord, where we board, had heard of 'Old Joe Smith,' and polygamy, but had never heard that he was murdered, and knew nothing of the two bodies of Latter Day Saints, nor of the Josephites. He had heard of some Mormons preaching on the streets in this city, and of some among the natives, the Maoris, but nothing of the church or its principles. I think as soon as convenient missionaries ought to be sent here. It may be that I can open this field from Australia. If I were a young man I would want no better field. If the matter comes up at the next spring conference and it can be reached, I think a pair of good enterprising young men ought to be sent out here or called from Australia. We are booked for Sydney on the next steamer, which sails on Monday next. We are in good health, much better than when I left Papeete. I was in hard lines when at the latter place, but was administered to and have been better since. I always seem to get better when I get aboard and go out to sea."

On January 10 Bro. Levi Gamet wrote from Inman, Nebraska: "On the eighth inst. I was billed to begin a series of meetings about six miles out of Inman. Found the schoolhouse locked; but after considerable hustling around I got the key, and had the house opened and lighted by 8:30. Two people came. We visited awhile, put notice on blackboard for next night. Four came. Preached to them, and am to go back to-night."

Bro. Peter Anderson on January 10 writes from Logan, Utah: "Please mention that the Swedish tract is now ready, and will cost 60 per 100, 30 for 50. It can be obtained by writing to T. Thoreson or John Hall, Box 168, Salt Lake City, Utah."

Bro. John B. Roush writes from Denver, Colorado, January 9, to Bro. E. L. Kelley: "I came here last week by request of the Saints living in the locality to organize a branch Saturday evening of about fifteen members. Bro. Martin F. Ralston was chosen president and Bro. L. J. Bradshaw teacher. Came also to organize branches at Rocky Ford and Pueblo before I return to Denver. My health is poor, but I try to keep at the work; and if I die I want to die at my post. However, I am still hopeful that I shall regain my health. It does my soul good to see the work progress, and I certainly rejoice in the success of my brethren out in this mission. We have made some advancement, and several have been added to the church. However, I find some who never see any cause for encouraging feelings, and think there is very little wisdom and no inspiration in those who have the responsibility of presiding laid upon them. May sweet peace abide with you."

Under date of January 9, Bro. F. C. Keck wrote from Nashville, Missouri, to Bro. E. L. Kelley: "I am having a fine meeting here every night, two Christian preachers and one Baptist attending. I am enjoying the greatest liberty of my life. To God be all the glory. My health was never better, and I never felt better in the gospel than now, nor more hopeful of its triumph over the Devil and all of his works."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The work in the field of Bro. I. N. Roberts is in excellent condition. The men in the field and the local workers "have all done well." So says Bro. Roberts. Fifty-three baptisms for the quarter, averages about nine to the minister.

According to the Philadelphia Record of January 6, a "crusade to drive out Mormons" has been begun at Sharon, Pennsylvania. "The National Reform Association has charge of the crusade," says the Record.

We have received a marked copy of the Pittsburg Post for January 6, in which is mentioned the dedication of our church in that city on January 5. The description occupies about one half column, and the difference between us and the Utah church is clearly set forth. It states the structure dedicated was erected at a cost of $5,500, and that the Pittsburg Branch numbers about one hundred fifty, most of whom were present at the dedication. Bro. F. G. Pitt preached the dedicatory sermon.

Bro. R. R. Atkins writes from Stewartsville, Missouri, December 28, stating that Bro. J. W. Adams has been doing some excellent work at the Roger Schoolhouse. He considers Bro. Adams an able minister.

"LET him that is without sin first cast a stone at her," was a terrible rebuke to the sin among the woman's accusers, because of the fact that the Lord knew who they were. In these modern times it is not unfrequent for the sinner to sit in judgment on sin and himself go unwhipped of justice, because his sin is unknown.

It is a saying, "If a man deceive me once it is his fault; if he deceive me twice, it is mine." It is hard to trust the man who has once deceived us; but the better charity seems to point it out as a duty to forget the wrong in the pardon of the wrong-doer. Who is equal to the task?

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. 12.

BY HEMAN C SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, December 1, 1901.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr Annie Allen

In October, 1831, there was a conference at Kirtland, Ohio, at which W. W. Phelps was instructed to go to Zion, as Missouri, especially Independence, was then called, and to go by way of Cincinnati and purchase a press and type for the purpose of printing a church paper in Independence, to be called The Evening and Morning Star. This was the first press, I believe, ever owned by the church. Previous to that time the printing they had done was done by others. The Book of Mormon was printed by parties outside of the church upon contract, and so with all other printing done by the church until this time. W. W. Phelps did as he was directed to do, purchased the press and the type, and somehow got it to Independence. There is not much said about how he did it, how he shipped it into that wild country where there were no railroads. Probably he went by water up the river from St. Louis.

However that may be, he set up the press in Independence as soon as practicable. The June following—1832—the first number of the Evening and Morning Star was printed, but they did some printing of another character before that. It seems that the object in view, more especially, was to print the revelations, and shortly after Oliver Cowdery was instructed to take the revelations up to the land of Zion to be published. It was agreed that Joseph Smith was to prepare these revelations and send them up by the hand of Oliver Cowdery.

Later, after the resolution was made to send Oliver Cowdery, a revelation was given in which it was said it was not safe for Oliver Cowdery to go alone, and I wish to invite your attention to that to-night, for this has been the cause of a great deal of comment, ever since the revelation was given. Alexander Campbell calls attention to it in the Millennial Harbinger, and criticises it from this standpoint that Joseph Smith was afraid to trust Oliver Cowdery, and throwing out the insinuation that Joseph knew what kind of men these witnesses were, Oliver Cowdery being one of the three witnesses. The revelation reads as follows:

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, for my servant Oliver Cowdery's sake: it is not wisdom in me that he should be intrusted with the commandments and the moneys which he shall carry unto the land of Zion, except one go with him who will be true and faithful; wherefore I, the Lord, willeth that my servant John Whitmer should go with my servant Oliver Cowdery; and also that he shall continue in writing and making a history of all the important things which he shall observe and know concerning my church; and also that he receive counsel and assistance from my servant Oliver Cowdery, and others.

What appeared a little strange in the criticism of Mr. Campbell was that in quoting the revelation he left out the word commandments and quoted it in the Millennial Harbinger, "It is not wisdom in me that he should be intrusted with the moneys which he shall carry," etc. Whether this was inadvertently done by this gentleman or not, I do not know, but it made his point a little stronger because he criticises from the standpoint that Oliver Cowdery was not to be intrusted with the money; but when we consider that the commandments were the main thing, and that the money was not considered of so much value, I do not think Mr. Campbell was fair in his opposition. What the church set the greatest store by were these commandments. Joseph says they "prized the revelations to be worth to the church the riches of the whole earth," for they were the revealments of God to the church. The idea, then, was not that Oliver Cowdery was not to be trusted because of his dishonesty, for the commandments would have done Oliver Cowdery no good. If he had stolen them he could not have concealed them, for in trying to sell them, which would not have been a very safe speculation, he would have been detected, so it could not have been because Oliver Cowdery was not to be trusted. And again, when Mr. Campbell intimated that Joseph Smith knew what kind of men these witnesses were, he forgot John Whitmer was one of the witnesses, too, and if the witnesses were so bad he would not have sent John Whitmer along.

Now the facts of the case are these: that in those days they were beset by mobs on every hand. Right there in Hiram, prior to this time, as we called your attention to before, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were mobbed, and constantly their enemies were seeking their lives, and they would have been glad to have gotten into their possession these revelations. And all the way through that western country from that place to Missouri, he would have been in danger, and hence the revelation said it was not wisdom for "my servant, Oliver Cowdery's sake" "that he should be intrusted with the commandments and the moneys . . . except one go with him who will be true and faithful." Evidently for the purpose of assisting in protecting these things from the lawless element by which they were surrounded. In fact, John Whitmer would not have been much protection if Cowdery had wished to steal, for he could have left John Whitmer almost anywhere. But John Whitmer was to go because he could be trusted in assisting to protect these things. And, again, the revelation does not say the church was in any danger of loss through Oliver Cowdery, but "for my servant Oliver Cowdery's sake." Oliver Cowdery was in danger; if he lost these things he might be censured. If he were to go alone, it would be a vigil he would have to keep night and day. Let my servant John Whitmer, who is true and trustworthy, go along with him. It appears that the criticism is based upon very poor grounds, but it has been reiterated ever since Mr. Campbell made his attack.

Right in this same revelation, however, there is something I wish to call your attention to in regard to history. You will notice that John Whitmer was not only to go as a companion for Oliver Cowdery, but he was the church historian, and the Lord enjoined it upon him as he went that he should "continue in writing and making history of all the important things which he shall observe and know concerning my church; and also that he receive counsel and assistance from my servant Oliver Cowdery and others."

In his work he was to receive the help of Oliver Cowdery as well as to give Oliver Cowdery help in protecting the records he had in his care. And again he says: "My servants who are abroad in the earth should send forth the accounts of their stewardships to the land of Zion, for the land of Zion shall be a seat and a place to receive and do all these things." They were to report to the land of Zion what they were doing that it might be recorded.

"Let my servant John Whitmer travel many times from place to place, and from church to church, that he may the more easily obtain knowledge—preaching and expounding, writing, copying, selecting, and obtaining all things which shall be for the good of the church, and for the rising generations, that shall grow up on the land of Zion, to possess it from generation to generation, for ever and ever. Amen."

Now you see the Lord here is making provision for the writing of history in that early time, and tells this man who had previously been called as historian that he should travel from place to place, and write and copy and select and obtain all things pertaining to the church; and those who are abroad in the earth should send up their accounts to the land of Zion, that they may be recorded. A provision was made that, had it been carried out and complied with, we would have been in a much better condition than we are. We ought to have had these writings of John Whitmer, but we have never been able to find them. It would have been a valuable thing to have been in the hands of the church now. When we began to write the history of the church our thoughts were at once turned to this matter, and we inquired as to whether the writings of John Whitmer were in existence. We are told by a historian from Utah, Mr. Andrew Jensen, that they have not these writings, and he says: "After his excommunication from the church John Whitmer refused to deliver up the church documents in his possession to the proper authorities, which gave occasion for quite a severe letter from Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. The records, however, were never obtained; they are now [1888] in the custody of John C. Whitmer (a nephew of John Whitmer) who resides in Richmond, Clay County, Missouri."

This is what Mr. Andrew Jensen says. That clearly informs us they are not in the hands of the people in Utah. Mr. Ebenezer Robinson, however, differs from this account, and he was the secretary of the Presidency, and wrote the letter to John Whitmer which was referred to. He says: "No attention was paid to the foregoing letter by John Whitmer, as, perhaps, he thought he would not be justified in thus surrendering the work which had been assigned him by revelation. The record was subsequently obtained, however, and brought to our house, where we copied the entire record into another book, assisted a part of the time, by Dr. Levi Richards."

Ebenezer Robinson says he obtained the record and copied it into another book; he does not tell us where it is, but Mr. Jensen says Mr. John C. Whitmer had it. In June, 1896, we made a special trip to Richmond, Missouri, for the purpose of finding some trace of it, but we failed. We were courteously received by the Whitmer family and Mr. Page, but none of them could give us any clue as to where it was. The grandson of Mr. David Whitmer told us he thought his sister in Chicago had it, and he would obtain it if he could, and let us have it for the purpose of this history, but we have never succeeded in obtaining it. I wish we had it.

I called your attention to this simply for the purpose of showing you that the Lord intended that the history of the church should be made all along, and that it should be somebody's place to particularly look after the matter, traveling from place to place, and copy and select and write and obtain that which would be beneficial to the rising generation. I hope the record of John Whitmer will turn up sometime like the Spalding Story. I do not know whether it will or not.

In June, 1832, there was a conference held at Amherst, Ohio, in which an item of business was done that was of particular importance. We can not say it was exactly a general conference; it was as nearly so as it was possible to have a conference in those days, for the church was divided, part of it being in Ohio and part in Missouri. Means of transportation were very limited and it would have been a great deal of expense and trouble to have traveled from place to place, hence there was a conference called in Ohio and some important business done. But little was said in regard to it at the time for reasons which will appear further on.

There was a conference held sometime in the month of January, at Amherst, in Lorain County, Ohio, of which Joseph says: "A few days before the conference was to commence in Amherst, Lorain County, I started in company with the elders that dwelt in my own vicinity, and arrived in due time. At this conference much harmony prevailed and considerable business was done to advance the kingdom and promulgate the gospel to the inhabitants of the surrounding country."

That is the way he mentions this important business. He says: "Much harmony prevailed and considerable business was done to advance the kingdom and promulgate the gospel to the inhabitants of the surrounding country." Immediately after this conference he started westward, going to Independence. This is the second trip he made there and he arrived at Independence on the 24th day of April. Two days later a council convened of which he says:

"On the 26th I called a general council of the church, and was acknowledged as president of the high priesthood, according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the 25th day of January, 1832. The right hand of fellowship was given to me by the bishop, Edward Partridge, on behalf of the church. The scene was solemn, impressive, and delightful."

It occurs to me the reason why he did not state what was done in Ohio, though it was the important matter of setting him apart as president of the high priesthood, was because it had not been presented to the other part of the church in Missouri, that composed the other wing of the church, you might say. Later he went out there, and when they had received him as president of the high priesthood, then he tells what it was. He was not in a hurry to tell it. But I wish to call your attention to this ordination for several reasons. There have been a great many ideas concerning it, and it seems to me some very erroneous ones. It has been thought by a great many that as Joseph Smith was ordained by an angel from heaven, as he was when he and Oliver Cowdery were set apart in an early time, so every other president of the church ought to be ordained under angelic hands. But Joseph Smith was not ordained president of the church under angels' hands. He was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood under the hands of an angel, and if there is anything in the argument that when an angel ordains a man to an office others in that office should be ordained in like manner, then all the Aaronic priesthood should be ordained under angels' hands. That would be the legitimate deduction from that argument. This man was ordained president of the high priesthood, not under the hands of an angel, or John the Baptist, not under the hands of Peter, James, and John; but having received this priesthood, he was elected at Amherst, and ordained, and this election and ordination was ratified at Independence, by virtue of which he was president of the high priesthood according to an ordination received in a conference of high priests, elders, and members. There could not have been any higher authority than high priests officiating in this ordination. Acting upon this erroneous theory were some of those who claimed to be the successors of Joseph Smith. Notably Mr. Strang, who said that at the very moment of Joseph Smith's assassination in Illinois an angel appeared to him, ordaining him as his successor, and he argues that the successor of Joseph ought to be ordained under the hands of an angel. Joseph himself was not so ordained as the president of the church; he was ordained by no higher authority than high priests, and hence if there is anything in the argument that his successor should be ordained in like manner, then his successor ought to be ordained by high priests, and his successor was so ordained in 1860, at Amboy, Illinois. If either has the advantage the present president has the stronger claim, because there were no apostles in 1832, when Joseph Smith, the Seer, was ordained. High priests ordained the present Joseph Smith at Amboy, Illinois, making it equal to the ordination of his father in Amherst, Ohio. Some of the twelve apostles laid their hands upon him, also making that much additional authority, more than at his father's ordination. To me this little piece of history is very important as correcting these errors, and it is important in this regard to show how careful they were then that everything should be done by the voice of the church, and though he was ordained at Amherst, Ohio, by the consent or the voice of the conference there, not until the other part of the church in Independence had the opportunity of voting upon it was anything said in regard to it; but they received him there and the language is as I said before: "The right hand of fellowship was given to me by the Bishop, Edward Partridge, in behalf of the church. The scene was solemn, impressive, and delightful." Then, as in every other time, when a man assumes a higher position than that in which he occupied before, criticism began, and there were some even there in Missouri, who began to have suspicions regarding him; they said he was seeking monarchical power, and was desirous of ruling over them, in what we sometimes call one-man power, but if they had such a thought as that they must have been silenced shortly after. Joseph says the Lord through him called two other men to the first presidency, and shortly after that he called twelve high counselors which would have to ratify the decision of the presidency in case of trial before it would be binding, and shortly after that there was a quorum of twelve apostles ordained, and that quorum was said to be equal in decision to the presidency; and later a quorum of seventy was ordained, and their authority was equal to that of the twelve, so he could not have exercised monarchical power.

The people in Independence were not as humble as they should have been. They became boastful, and boasted of their right to the land to some extent. That was one thing that irritated the people there. I am not going to say anything in defense of the people that persecuted the Saints there. I do not believe they had any just provocation for doing what they did, but I do not wish to cover up the faults of the Saints, there nor anywhere else. As I said before, it is by noticing the mistakes of men that we learn to avoid them. Joseph wrote to W. W. Phelps on January 11, 1833, and in that letter he points out that there were some things in the church at Independence that would bring about their ruin if they did not repent. I have not time to read the whole letter, for it is a lengthy one. But Joseph Smith says to W. W. Phelps:

Our hearts are greatly grieved at the spirit which is breathed, both in your letter, and that of Brother G——'s; the very spirit which is wasting the strength of Zion like a pestilence; and if it is not detected and driven from you, it will ripen Zion for the threatened judgments of God. Remember God sees the secret springs of human action, and knows the hearts of all living.

Brother, suffer us to speak plainly, for God has respect to the feelings of his saints, and he will not suffer them to be tantalized with impunity. Tell Brother G——t that low insinuations, God hates; but he rejoices in an honest heart, and knows better who is guilty than he does. We send him this warning voice, and let him fear greatly for himself, lest a worse thing overtake him; all we can say by way of conclusion, is, if the fountain of our tears is not dried up, we will still weep for Zion. This from your brother who trembles for Zion, and for the wrath of heaven, which awaits her if she repent not.

P. S. I am not in the habit of crying peace, when there is no peace, and knowing the threatened judgments of God; I say, Woe unto them who are at ease in Zion; fearfulness will speedily lay hold of the hypocrite. I did not expect that you had lost the commandments, but thought from your letters you had neglected to read them, otherwise you would not have written as you did.

So you see there was evil there, and the Lord suffered them to be chastised as they were chastised, because of the evils which they did, and that, too, without justifying the enemy in doing what they did. The enemy was, no doubt, influenced by the spirit of the Evil One, but the Saints might have been protected to a great extent had they been more faithful in keeping the commandments of God. We ought to take warning. If the spirit of boasting is dangerous to safety, we are no more exempt from the persecutions of the enemy than were they. We must be humble before God if we would escape the judgments of God being visited upon us. These persecutions soon after followed. I will say, however, that after Joseph Smith wrote this letter, the brethren in Zion seemed to humble themselves. They wrote another letter which Joseph says was entirely satisfactory to the Presidency. They made all the amends that were required, but it appears that for some reason the judgments followed; so the Lord was not as easily satisfied as the Presidency. That they did not escape the judgments suggests that there is somebody else to satisfy beside the Presidency or any other man, or men. Persecution began as early as April, 1833, and threats were made against the Saints by those who surrounded them,—the citizens of the place,—Independence and vicinity, especially Jackson County. I will give you some of the particulars in regard to that persecution. It is not possible for us to tell it all. There was not much done in April, threats were made and some little agitation begun by missionaries, ministers of other denominations, I hate to say it, but it is true. It was the missionaries that began to stir up strife there. Early in July the mob in Missouri again renewed their hostilities, of which Joseph says:

July, which once dawned upon the virtue and independence of the United States, now dawned upon the savage barbarity and mobocracy of Missouri. Most of the clergy, acting as missionaries to the Indians, or to the frontier inhabitants, were among the most prominent characters that rose up and rushed on to destroy the rights of the church, as well as the lives of her members. One Pixley, who had been sent by the Missionary Society, to civilize and christianize the heathen of the West, was a black rod in the hand of Satan, as well as a poisoned shaft in the power of our foes, to spread lies and falsehoods.

He followed writing horrible accounts to the religious papers in the East, to sour the public mind from time to time, besides using his influence among Indians and whites to overthrow the church. On the first of July he wrote a slanderous article entitled, "Beware of false Prophets," which he actually carried from house to house to incense the inhabitants against the church to mob them and drive them away.

So you see how the matter begun by the agitation of these missionaries, who were opposed to the doctrine taught by the Saints.

The mob assembled shortly after and passed some resolutions warning the Saints to depart. The history of that meeting is as follows: On Saturday, the 20th of July, there assembled in the town of Independence between four and five hundred persons who sent Robert Johnson and others to visit some of the Saints, and demanded that they should immediately stop the publication of the Evening and Morning Star, and close their printing business in Jackson County, and that these men should agree at once to leave the county. They asked for three months to consider this proposition, but the mob would not grant it. They asked for ten days; the mob would not grant it. They said fifteen minutes was the longest and refused to hear any further reasons. Fifteen minutes to decide whether they would close down their printing business and agree to leave the country or not. That would be a short time to consider such a proposition as that, and when they did not answer within the fifteen minutes this mob of four or five hundred persons proceeded to demolish the printing office, razed it to the ground, and also the dwelling-house of W. W. Phelps. Mrs. Phelps, with a sick infant child and the rest of her children, together with the furniture in the house, were thrown out doors. As a result of this there was some bad blood. I do not wonder at it. It might have been better for the Saints not to have resisted, but this condition of things would put fight into most any of us. We can not say it was the best thing to fight, but I do not wonder that they did fight.

The mob then proceeded to demolish the storehouse and destroy the goods of Gilbert, Whitney & Co., but Mr. Gilbert assuring them that the goods should be packed by the 23d inst., they then stopped the destruction of property and proceeded to do personal violence. They took Edward Partridge, the Bishop of the Church, from his dwelling-house by force, and a Mr. Allen, and stripping them of their coats, vests, and hats, or caused them to do it themselves, tarred and feathered them in the presence of the mob before the courthouse. They caught other members of the church to serve them in like manner, but they made their escape. With horrid yells and the most blasphemous epithets, they sought for other leading elders, but found them not. It being late, they adjourned until the 23d inst.

On the 23d inst., early in the day, the mob again assembled to the number of about five hundred, many of them armed with rifles, dirks, pistols, clubs, and whips; one or two companies riding into town bearing the red flag, raising again the horrid yell. They proceeded to take some of the leading elders by force, declaring it to be their intention to whip them from fifty to five hundred lashes apiece, to demolish their dwelling-houses, and let their negroes loose to go through our plantations and lay open our fields for the destruction of our crops; whereupon John Corril, John Whitmer, W. W. Phelps, A. S. Gilbert, Edward Partridge, and Isaac Morley, made no resistance, but offered themselves a ransom for the church, willing to be scourged or die, if that would appease their anger toward the church; but being assured by the mob that every man, woman, and child would be whipped or scourged until they were driven out of the county, as the mob declared that they or the Mormons must leave the county, or they or the Mormons must die.

When the mob went down a little further west, down towards where Kansas City is now, for the purpose of carrying out their threats, they met resistance. The Saints had heard of their threats and depredations and had armed themselves. They fired into them and killed two of them. The mob then fled and returned to Independence, and the Saints followed them. Colonel Pitcher, the colonel of the regiment of Home Guards, met the Saints and demanded that they lay down their arms. They submitted when authority demanded, and laid them down, for notwithstanding existing hostilities they would not resist constituted authority, though Colonel Pitcher was, as the evidence proved, hand in glove with the mob, and was just as willing to do them wrong as were the private citizens. This mob drafted a paper, in which they gave their reasons for doing as they did, but the reasons were very meager ones. They said the Saints were lazy and that they were poor. I presume these charges were true in regard to some of them, but they were not all lazy, nor were they all extremely poor, but there might have been some among them that were all that was alleged. But they made another charge that was not true, and that was that the Saints had been mingling with the slaves and striving to sow dissension among them. They said of this the Mormon leaders were informed, and these Mormon leaders said they would deal with any of their members who should again offend in like manner. But the mob claimed that such was not the case, and that they did not deal with their members, who interfered with the slaves. Whether there was any truth in that item or not, they misrepresented the Evening and Morning Star when they said, "There is an article inviting free negroes and mulattoes from other States to become Mormons and remove and settle among us." They made that claim and we can easily detect whether they told the truth or not, for we have the Evening and Morning Star referred to, and there is no such thing there, but the emigration of negroes and mulattoes was discouraged in the article referred to. Allow me to read a short extract from it, and you will see for yourselves. In that article we find this language:

To prevent any misunderstanding among the churches abroad, respecting free people of color, who may think of coming to the western boundaries of Missouri, as members of the church, we quote the following clauses from the laws of Missouri:

"Section 4. Be it further enacted, that hereafter no free negro or mulatto, other than a citizen of some one of the United States, shall come into or settle in this State under any pretext whatever; and upon complaint made to any justice of the peace, that such person is in his county, contrary to the provisions of this section, if it shall appear that such person is a free negro or mulatto, and that he hath come into this State after the passage of this act, and such person shall not produce a certificate, attested by the seal of some court of record in some one of the United States, evidencing that he is a citizen of such State, the justice shall command him forthwith to depart from this State; and in case such negro or mulatto shall not depart from the State within thirty days after being commanded so to do as aforesaid, any justice of the peace, upon complaint thereof to him made, may cause such person to be brought before him and may commit him to the common gaol of the county in which he may be found, until the next term of the Circuit Court to be held in such county. And the said court shall cause such person to be brought before them and examine into the cause of commitment; and if it shall appear that such person came into the State contrary to the provisions of this act, and continued therein after being commanded to depart as aforesaid, such court may sentence such person to receive ten lashes on his or her bare back, and order him to depart the State; and if he or she shall not depart, the same proceedings shall be had and punishment inflicted, as often as may be necessary, until such person shall depart the State.

"Section 5. Be it further enacted, that if any person shall, after the taking effect of this act, bring into this State any free negro or mulatto, not having in his possession a certificate of citizenship as required by this act [he or she] shall forfeit and pay, for every person so brought, the sum of five hundred dollars, to be recovered by action of debt in the name of the State, to the use of the University, in any court having competent jurisdiction; in which action the defendant may be held to bail, of right and without affidavit; and it shall be the duty of Attorney General or Circuit Attorney of the district in which any person so offending may be found, immediately upon information given of such offenses, to commence and prosecute an action as aforesaid."

Slaves are real estate in this and other States, and wisdom would dictate great care among the branches of the Church of Christ, on this subject. So long as we have no special rule in the church, as to people of color, let prudence guide; and while they, as well as we, are in the hands of a merciful God, we say, Shun every appearance of evil.

The Evening and Morning Star quotes thus from the law, and accompanies it with the remarks we have read. Was not this discouragement quoted so those people would not come instead of encouraging them to come? Those mobocrats misrepresented the Evening and Morning Star most certainly.

However, they finally succeeded in getting a contract from the Saints that they would depart from Zion. Certain men were to go by the first of January. Here is an extract from the contract:

It is understood that the undersigned members of the society do give their solemn pledge each for himself, as follows; to-wit:

That Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, William E. McLellin, Edward Partridge, Lyman Wight, Simeon Carter, Peter and John Whitmer, and Harvey Whitlock, shall remove with their families out of this county on or before the first day of January next, and that they, as well as the two hereinafter named, use all their influence to induce all the brethren now here to remove as soon as possible—one half, say, by the first of January next, and all by the first day of April next; to advise and try all means in their power to stop any more of their sect from moving to this country; and as to those now on the road, they will use their influence to prevent their settling permanently in the county, but that they shall only make arrangements for temporary shelter, till a new location is agreed on for the society. John Corril and A. S. Gilbert are allowed to remain as general agents to wind up the business of the society, so long as necessity shall require; and said Gilbert may sell out his merchandise now on hand, but is to make no new importations.

The Star is not again to be published, nor a press set up by any of the society in this county.

If the said Edward Partridge and W. W. Phelps move their families by the first day of January as aforesaid, that they themselves will be allowed to go and come in order to transact and wind up their business.

The committee pledge themselves to use all their influence to prevent any violence being used so long as a compliance with the foregoing terms is observed by the parties concerned.

It was agreed they were to cease hostilities upon these conditions. These severally named men were to be out by the first of January, 1834, and the mob was to let them alone until that time; and the other half were to be out by the first of April, 1834. False to their promises the mob began to persecute them again and drove them out before the end of the year; so that as early as November, 1833, they were compelled to leave, having delivered up their arms to Colonel Pitcher, their property destroyed, their houses burned, and they whipped and driven from the county without mercy. These are the facts of the case, and whether these people were suffered to be persecuted that way because of their unfaithfulness or not, there is no excuse for the way they were treated by the people of Missouri. Parley P. Pratt says:

Thursday, November 7, the shore began to be lined on both sides of the ferry, with men, women, and children, goods, wagons, boxes, chests, provisions, etc., while the ferrymen were very busily employed in crossing them over; and when night again closed upon us the wilderness had much the appearance of a camp meeting. Hundreds of people were seen in every direction. Some in tents and some in the open air, around their fires, while the rain descended in torrents. Husbands were inquiring for wives, and women for their husbands, parents for children, and children for parents. Some had the good fortune to escape with their family, household goods, and some provisions; while others knew not the fate of their friends, and had lost all their goods. The scene was indescribable, and I am sure would have melted the hearts of any people upon earth, except our blind oppressors and a prejudiced and ignorant community. Next day, our company still increased, and we were chiefly engaged in felling small cottonwood trees, and erecting them into temporary cabins, so when night again came on we had the appearance of a village of wigwams, and the night being clear, we began to enjoy some degree of comfort.

That is the description given by Parley P. Pratt and borne out by others who were also participants as victims of this outrage. Lyman Wight, one of the parties who signed that agreement to leave on the first of January, says:

The mob continued to commit depredations and outrages upon us until the 13th of November, 1833, such as tearing down a printing office, destroying books, unroofing houses, and thrusting rails into the windows, and whipping many of our friends in a horrible manner, and shooting others; on which day they finished the work of driving every Mormon, numbering about twelve hundred persons, from the country. Our crops became free booty to their horses, hogs, and cattle. They also burned two hundred and three houses.

I was chased by about sixty of these ruffians five miles. I fled to the south and my wife was driven north to Clay County, and for three weeks I knew not whether my family were dead or alive, neither did they know what was my fate. At one time I was three days without food. When I found my family I found them on the banks of the Missouri River under a rag carpet tent, short of food and raiment. In this deplorable situation, on the 27th of December, my wife bore me a son.

It will be seen that the mob violated their part of the contract. They had agreed to let the Saints alone until the first of January. Whatever may have been the merits of the case upon either side, they were not faithful to their promise in that regard, and could not be justified in the outrages committed.

Do you blame these men for fighting? It might have been better not to have done so. They were driven from their homes and their property destroyed. The night of their going across the river there was a wonderful display in the heavens, whether it just happened so or not is a question upon which men may differ, but the display happened, whatever may have been the cause. Let me read to you the description given by Joseph Smith. He was not there, but he saw the display where he was, as it was quite general.

About four o'clock a. m. I was awakened by Brother Davis knocking at my door, and calling on me to arise and behold the signs in the heavens. I arose, and to my great joy, beheld the stars fall from heaven like a shower of hailstones; a literal fulfillment of the word of God as recorded in the Holy Scriptures as a sure sign that the coming of Christ is close at hand. In the midst of this shower of fire I was led to exclaim, How marvelous are thy works O Lord! I thank thee for thy mercy unto thy servant, save me in thy kingdom for Christ's sake: Amen!

The appearance of these signs varied in different sections of the country: in Zion, all heaven seemed enwrapped in splendid fireworks, as if every star in the broad expanse had been suddenly hurled from its course and sent lawless through the wilds of ether. Some at times appeared like bright shooting meteors with long trains of light following in their course, and in numbers resembled large drops of rain in sunshine. Some of the long trains of light following the meteoric stars were visible for some seconds: those streaks would cut and twist up like serpents writhing. The appearance was beautiful, grand, and sublime beyond description, as though all the artillery and fireworks of eternity were set in motion to enchant and entertain the saints, and terrify and awe the sinners on the earth. Beautiful and terrific as was the scenery, which might be compared to the falling figs or fruit when the tree is shaken by a mighty wind, yet it will not fully compare with the time when the sun shall become black like sackcloth of hair, the moon like blood (Rev. 6: 12), and the stars fall to the earth, as these appeared to vanish when they fell behind the trees, or came near the ground.

This was the closing scene of this exodus from Jackson County. There is much more to it than I have been able to tell to-night, but these are the leading facts, and we trust that all may read carefully. And while we admit as was admitted by Joseph Smith at one time that the people there may not have been as faithful as they should have been, and for that reason did not have as much protection as they might have had, yet there was no excuse for the barbarous treatment they endured. That they bore it as well as they did has always been a surprise to me. If they had not fired at the mob, if they had not taken the lives of some of them, it might have been better. But mortal man can not bear everything, and I wonder they did as well as they did. I wonder they grounded their arms when Colonel Pitcher came to them. I wonder through all the scenes through which they passed there and later that they did not manifest more of a disposition than they did to retaliate, which is so natural to man. I can not account for it except in this way, that they were controlled by a higher power than their own. Though they transgressed to a certain extent, yet God loved this people, and in his long-suffering kept them from making any further errors than they did. I think they did wrong to some extent, I wonder they did not do more. I can not read the bare facts, as far removed as I am, without my blood boils when I read it, and I feel sometimes that I would have done something rash if I had been there, perhaps a great deal worse than they did, if I had not been controlled as they were. I fear I could not have suffered as they did without resistance, and I say few would have done as well as they did. It was not because they were cowards that they did not fight. Think of the statement they made in the face of an angry mob when they said, "We will give our lives a ransom for the people." That is not the act of cowards; that is the act of brave men. They were brave men, men that dared to do right as they saw the right, though in their weakness they may have erred, as we indicated they did, and God permitted them to be scattered as they were. I trust that God will enable us to learn lessons from these things, and eschew the errors they committed and emulate the good they did. If we can do as well as they did we will do well indeed. We have never passed through the fiery furnace as they passed through it, but if we are not faithful we may have to pass through more than we anticipate.

Let us be humble and just in all our dealings before man that we may have the protecting care of the Almighty.

Editor Herald:—The debate between myself and Elder W. B. Thomson, Disciple, was a grand success for our work. The discussion was held in the West Side Academy, and was largely attended. Mr. Thomson was a perfect gentleman, and did not resort to the low methods so often adopted to meet us.

His defeat was so plainly apparent that he became an object of pity to the audience. Three times during the debate he publicly apologized to me and I arose and forgave him freely, which did not tend to make it any better for our Disciple friends. Once, when driven closely, he arose and plead his "ignorance."

At the close of the debate I baptized four adults, all very estimable persons. Others will follow. So the world moves on. The Lord is blessing in a remarkable degree.

Again and again during my affirmation of the identity of the church the power of God overshadowed us and we were gifted with ability not our own. The audience knew there was some power at work and many decided I was a hypnotist, and that I hypnotized my opponent, audience, and all. Others said God was in it.

I am now in Saginaw, a city of seventy-five thousand people, located sixteen miles from Bay City. I am working the two places. I found a dozen scattered Saints in Saginaw, nearly all from Ohio, Sand Run Branch, fruits of Bro. H. E. Moler's labors: Brn. Smallwood, Engle, Mayette, etc. I visited them, planned a meeting, met with them, hired a hall, and am furnishing it for regular services. When we are in proper running order I will start special meetings, using the press as much as possible. Thus we build up the work. I feel well and strong.

Letters received from our worthy missionary in charge, Elder John H. Lake, are very encouraging. The Religio work is prosperous in Michigan, as are also Sunday-schools. Altogether it gives me quite all I can do. About eighteen hours out of every twenty-four are occupied in the work. However, I am grateful for youth and health with which to perform all that may fall my lot to do. Sometimes when alone I stop to think of this constant labor, I feel the Spirit's power upon me, my hopes are heightened, my understanding quickened, and I go to work again. Thus we hope to fill our days.

Christmas and New Year.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease.
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be

A mild half-wintery Christmas is over, with its fuss and flurry of busy workers scurrying about, preparing for the entertainment, which, having been the last, was of course the best.

The tots have sung their wondrously long, sweet carols—some of them were but crooning babes last year—the boys and girls have gracefully acted their parts in song and oratory, and the young ladies and gentlemen have regaled us from their vocal and instrumental repertoire, the Church Mandolin Club being a new and leading feature. But Santa Claus! Such a sorry-looking make-up as he was!—but it is all over now.

Next day were the hearty hand-shakes, the glad greetings around the sumptuous board, the exchange of gifts, cheery wishes, and good-bye kisses, and then we're all aglee for New Years.

The platform is shorn of its pretty decorations, the new grand piano stands apart, and the silent walls of green and garnet and gold and echoless arch and architrave shall resound no more with children's voices till the Sunday worshipers shall come.

A Kansas City preacher, in speaking of the past year with its honors, glories, and memories, and referring to the "great Queen Victoria" and our great statesman McKinley, says "the old year's cradle song was a requiem; its recessional is a dirge."

In glancing over the comments on the events of the year, we read concerning the problem which each of the three great powers, Russia, Great Britain, and the United States, has to solve, that "the best that the wisest can say is that the policy is right or the policy is wrong: the great state takes its chances."

It remains for a divine of our day to say "while the state has demonstrated its right to continue to be, if the issue shall prove that its policy was wrong, that it was against the law of humanity, against the law of justice, in violation of the eternal right, then no territory acquired, no wealth gained, no commercial advantage secured can offset or compensate for the deadly injury that has accrued to the conquering and expanding state: and this is true because the least, the weakest, the humblest, the most defenseless nation upon the earth, like the weakest, humblest, most defenseless individual, like the lowest, humblest, most defenseless form of life, is held within the view, is embraced within the purpose of the universal intelligence, the universal justice, the universal plan."

This all sounds like gospel doctrine, if Dr. Roberts' did voice it, and we feel thankful that the new year will be greeted by "the church" at once stronger in numbers, more perfect in government, and with an educational, moral, and spiritual advancement.

The policy of the church is right, if that of the state be wrong; we Latter Day Saints can testify to that, as thousands have testified before us, for still the old gospel bell rings clearly forth as it has done adown the ages, full of harmony, love, and power: "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 27.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, December 28.

Editors Herald:—With your permission I would like to mention some things which have been on my mind off and on for some time and which may be of interest to some of the HERALD readers. Occasionally missionaries of the Utah church writing to the Deseret News, the organ of that church, mention having been disturbed by Josephites in their attempts at preaching. One young man wrote home from California that he had been "mobb'd by the Josephites;" another wrote from Iowa to the News that one of the Josephite elders had been "marched off" by the police for disturbing him while preaching on the street. Now while I have reasons for believing that such stories do not gain credence to any large extent among the people of Utah, I still think it well and proper to mention that the majority of the returned missionaries so far as my knowledge goes speak very highly of our people and the treatment received from them while on their mission. This is right. Let the good work go on.

A few years ago two of the Utah missionaries came to the branch at Bedison, Missouri, while I was visiting there. Our people took them in, cared for them, conveyed them to and from meetings, did the janitor work for them, and furnished them with fuel and light free of charge. On taking their leave the missionaries expressed their gratitude and stated that they had never been treated better anywhere. I am pleased to say that as far as known to me similar treatment has been accorded them by our people in general.

However, so long as there are two parties who make exactly the same claims, and yet so very different in faith and doctrine, there will be opposition. This we expect and they should. We will contend for the faith once delivered to the Latter Day Saints, as found in the books, and oppose whatever is in opposition to them; and where they fail to draw the line of distinction it becomes our duty to do it. This could be avoided if their missionaries would teach the people the peculiarities of their faith, such as Adam being God and the only God with whom we have to do; God (Adam) a polygamist; the father of Christ; Christ being a polygamist; polygamy a necessity in order to obtain a complete salvation; a changeable God; a plurality of Gods; the sealing of husband, wife, and children to each other for eternity; eternal progression, with particular reference to the principle of procreation; polyandry, under certain conditions; the peculiar temple performances called endowments; that a man may commit all manner of crimes, save one, and yet be installed among the gods in eternity, providing (a) that he is sealed to one or more women, and (b) that he is destroyed in the flesh and turned over to the buffetings of Satan; and numerous other doctrines not provided for in the books believed in by the Latter Day Saints. While these peculiar doctrines are denied by some, others will confess belief in them, when cornered, and argue that people should be fed milk at first, and not meat. True enough, but meat sometimes decays and becomes very offensive. It is this offensive meat which Utah teachers have been mixing with original Latter Day Saintism that we object to. Some missionaries mistake this opposition for persecution.

Some will contend that they represent Utah of to-day, not Utah of the past. Perhaps so; but religiously Utah of to-day is builded upon Utah of the past, and so long as Utah of the past is shielded and defended, not renounced, so long Utah of to-day will be wrong religiously.

Again, that newspaper report. Something over a year ago one of the papers of this city reported President Snow as saying that he, George Q. Cannon, and Joseph F. Smith would go back and assist in building up Zion in Jackson County. This report was confirmed by some of those who were present and claimed to have heard the statement. I was not present, and simply quoted the report in a letter to this paper. The News reported that part of President Snow's speech differently, claiming that he had been incorrectly reported; that he said he did not know whether or not they would go back. That ought to be satisfactory. Still, had President Snow made such a statement there would have been nothing in it contrary to the teachings of the past; for the Utah people have been taught from the very first that they would soon go back to Jackson County; and that other leading men of the church had great faith in the future work of President Snow is evidenced by the statement of Apostle Merrill at the same conference, that for "all he knew, President Snow was the man who was to lead the people out of bondage; for," said he, "it is on his (Snow's) mind all the time." And only last summer Apostle Lyman positively declared that "President Snow was to live to see this people relieved of all their embarrassments, financial and otherwise." About forty-five years ago Heber C. Kimball, also one of the presidency, made this statement: "If this people will do as they are told from this day, I will eat peaches, apples, plums, and the products of these valleys in Great Salt Lake City till we go to Jackson County, and I know it. (Brigham Young: "I believe it.") Brethren, I am telling the truth, and I am telling it as it is in the bosom of our God and of our leaders."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 234.

Now, is it not a fact that the people of Utah have done pretty much as told by their leaders, although sometimes informed that it was none of their business whether it was right or wrong? Still, President Kimball died, I think, over thirty years ago.

But, there is another newspaper story over which the papers and elders of the Utah church have made a great ado in the past, and still keep it up. It is the reported statement of President Joseph Smith of the Reorganization, in a speech at Chicago many years ago. In his second edition of "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," referring to this report, Elder B. H. Roberts remarks:

"Many vile and vicious things have been said of the Saints in Utah, but it was reserved for Joseph Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church to say at once the most untruthful, the lowest, the most contemptible, cowardly, and vicious thing that ever was said of a much-maligned and misrepresented people. And what makes it so utterly inexcusable is the fact that the speaker knew better; for he had been in Utah, and had been among the people sufficiently to know that no such conditions as he described in that speech existed. It was malicious, willful misrepresentation. He bore false witness against his neighbors. At the time of the speech I noted down the misrepresentations, not from the Chicago papers, but from other papers, for the false statement was widely copied, and I think made a dispatch to the press of the country. Recently I sent to the Chicago papers and had the above quotations verified."—Page 136.

Mr. Roberts has thus spoken for himself, whether or not he voices the sentiments of his superiors or church. Now, Mr. Roberts knew that the statement referred to was a newspaper report; he knew that newspapers are as liable to misrepresent Joseph Smith as they are President Snow, B. H. Roberts, or any other man. Doubtless he knew or should have known that President Smith had repeatedly denied the newspaper story, and often stated what he really did say on that occasion; but he also knew that he had a purpose in view, and that the false report, and not what President Smith really did say, alone, would serve that purpose. But it is not surprising that Mr. Roberts should use an opponent that way in order to make a point when we remember that he actually misrepresents his own friends and witnesses for the same purpose.

Now let me say in regard to that purported newspaper story, that it is so utterly at variance with the public utterances of President Smith relative to the people of Utah that it bears the evidence of falsehood and misrepresentation upon its face. While President Smith was in Utah in 1885, and again in 1889, at different times and places I listened to his public discourses upon the issues between the two churches, and found him to be the kindest and most considerate of any man, in his treatment of those subjects, that I have ever listened too.

But even had the newspaper story been true, still Mr. Roberts' statement would have been incorrect. The most "vicious," the "lowest," "contemptible," "cowardly" thing said about the people of Utah was said by some of their own leaders. This Mr. Roberts must have known. Listen to President J. M. Grant: "You can scarcely find a place in this city that is not full of filth and abominations; and if you would search them out, they would easily be weighed in the balances, and you would then find out that they do not serve their God, and purify their bodies."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 51.

Again: "Elders while abroad in the vineyard feel to have the Holy Ghost, but many of them, when they get home, act like the devil."—Ibid., 188.

Brigham Young said: "As for living here, as I have done for a length of time, hid up in the chambers of the Lord, with a people that are full of contention, full of covetousness, full of pride, and full of iniquity, I will not do it. And if the people will not repent, let the sinners and hypocrites look out. I will repent with you and I will try with my might to get the spirit of my calling."—Ibid., p. 43.

Again: "This people have been taught a great deal; they have had principle and doctrine fed to them till they are surfeited; and where is the man, the officer, or the community, that understands what has been taught them? There may be one here and there that understands, but generally the eyes of the people are closed upon eternal things, and they seek for that which pleases the eye, that which is in accordance with the lusts of the flesh, that which is full of iniquity, and they care not for the righteousness of our God."—Ibid., page 44.

Heber C. Kimball: "Ye Elders, Apostles, Seventies, High Priests, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons, never be guilty of that which you have been guilty of once before. If it were not for your ignorance, you would have been cut off from the earth."—Vol. 6, p. 126.

The above are not newspaper stories, but come direct from their own publications, and are the utterances of those who were considered prophets, seers, revelators, etc., and my only reason for quoting them is that the reader may make a comparison.

In the next edition of his book on succession, will Mr. Roberts publish President Smith's version of that Chicago speech, along with the misrepresentation: or will he persist in misrepresenting and yet find fault with others for misrepresenting the people of Utah? We shall see.

Yours for truth and fairness,

PETER ANDERSON.

OMAHA, Nebraska, January 3.

Dear Herald:—My first subscription to you was January 1, 1876, and to the present time have not missed a number and have preserved every one. The good derived from your pages in that time it is not possible to tell; but I can say you have been an educator, a source of cheer and comfort. You have been the means of increasing my faith in the latter-day work. Others may be able to find an excuse for not receiving your weekly visits in their home, but myself and wife can not find any, so will continue to welcome you, we trust for more than twenty-five years more.

Some of the changes in your new dress I like, the two columns and better type; but the name on first page is too commonplace, very much like a bill poster, or penny paper. You should have a more artistic heading. It should be more in harmony with what are the contents, a thing of beauty to preserve in our homes.

You should have a nice cover to keep clean and neat, until you go to the binder. Some advertisements would pay for the extra cost. You might as well have four pages of advertisements as a few. If it is right to have one it is also right to have more. The cover could contain many notices that we do not desire to preserve.

Please accept my new year greeting. You are ever welcome.

E. RANNIE.

THURMAN, Iowa, January 6.

Editors Herald:—From October 16 to 22 I held meetings in the Tabor Branch, resulting in the edifying of Saints, and organization of a Religio local, which at present writing is continuing with encouraging prospects. The young people of this branch appear to be progressive and united, under which conditions work committed to them is sure to succeed.

Attended the district convention and conference held at Thurman, October 24 to 27, at which time the district took advanced steps, and many expressed themselves as well satisfied that it was as profitable assembling as ever held in the district. The Sunday-school association showed progress, and the competence of the district officials was fully demonstrated. Just previous to the convening of convention I was invited to enjoy a piano recital given by Sr. Anna Fry and her pupils, and it gave evidence that Sr. Fry is using the ability she possesses to make the world better and happier, and to follow the instruction of the Lord, improve in the line of music. Her efforts are surely commendable, and worthy of being followed by all other young Saints.

After the conference I held seven services at McPaul, closing on November 4. Some interest was shown, but no accessions to the church. Material help was rendered, which was duly appreciated.

Returned home on the 5th for the purpose of exercising the rights of citizenship, and looking after home interests, enjoying a pleasant visit, which is always appreciated.

On the 8th came to Bartlett, Iowa, where I preached on that and the succeeding nights, assisting to organize the Bartlett

Branch on Sunday the 10th, with Elder Samuel Orton president, John Huston priest, Moroni Eittleman teacher, and William Eyler deacon, all of whom enter upon their duties in humility and yet with a desire to prove faithful to the interests of the work intrusted to them. The three last named were designated by the Spirit for these offices in the church, after which they were selected as officials in the branch. One other was called to the office of priest, Bro. John Garver, who will no doubt prove an efficient laborer, does he study to show himself approved and exercise upon the talents God has endowed him with. The Sunday-school at this place is progressing under his efficient superintendency. The Religio local under the presidency of Bro. S. Orton is doing nicely.

Secured a hall at Essex, Page County, through my wife's uncle, who, though not with us has shown the work great kindness, saying when conversing about the Saints that he remembers associating with them at Galland's Grove, and was never better treated by any people before or since. The good we do is not void, even if not seen. After many days it may be fruitful. Here I occupied two nights and performed a marriage ceremony. I learn that some there are anxious for my return in the near future, can a place be secured for services.

From this place I came to Shenandoah, where I found a kindly disposed people, many of whom are quite talented, yet some so under bondage to society that it seemed a burden for them to endure week night meetings; but I was kindly treated, and given every evidence that they had love for the work of God, and no religious home could be found satisfactory for them elsewhere. Here Bro. Fry came to my assistance, and in our visitations we found many evidences of the love of God in the hearts of the people. The Saints expressed themselves strengthened. One was desirous of entering the fold but circumstances seemed to prevent for the present. A Religio local was organized under the presidency of Sr. Mamie Pace, who has proven herself in many ways a humble, devoted child of God; and though having many worldly inducements has given great evidence of her strength as an overcomer. Under the superintendency of Sr. M. E. Pace an efficient Sunday-school exists, and the teachers and scholars seemed endeared to their superintendent, and her years of service in that position seem to have increased their confidence in her. The Spirit seemed to indicate an ingathering at this place in the near future, and I expect to arrange to occupy ere the conference year closes.

Came home on the national holiday to take a much needed rest, and to look after some business matters that had matured relating to home demands.

Remained at home till after the conventions and conference of the Little Sioux District, which convened at Woodbine, December 5, and continuing over the 8th. This was truly a pleasant assembling, and the work of these assemblies passed off peacefully, and I believe with God's approval. Enjoyed helping those with whom I had been associated in the work of God nearly all my life. I could see that progress is being made.

Came to Tabor December 13, where arrangements had been made for the use of the Baptist church; but these arrangements proved futile, and for reasons that those in charge of the Baptist church are not to be blamed, but they are trying to arrange to let us have the church in the near future. This necessitated other arrangements being made, so the Dutch Hollow Schoolhouse was secured, and with Bro. Fry's assistance meetings were held here for about two weeks with increasing interest. Since the 30th I have been preaching in the Ross Schoolhouse, and the interest is excellent and increasing. Here I will continue this week.

I forgot to mention that while at Shenandoah I visited Bro. H. Hall who was secretary to J. J. Strang at Beaver Island. His mind is clear, but his body is quite impaired. It was interesting to hear him relate some of his past experiences.

Work is advancing slowly in this mission, yet I trust, surely.

The members as a rule have confidence in the local officials, and this is as it should be, and the local officers all express great desires to fulfill all their duties, yet some are hindered because of circumstances. Indifference exists, but, I believe, to some extent is giving way.

Christmas was commemorated by the Sunday-schools, and your correspondent was not forgotten, but valuable gifts were received to give comfort and help.

The marriage of Bro. C. Fry to Sr. Emily Kinney, on January 1, was commemorated on the 3d by a reception given at the home of Bro. Charles Goode, where this worthy couple were given many evidences of the welcome the Saints feel in their new venture from the colonization sphere to statehood. Sr. Emily, though separated from relatives, will not feel that she is among those less friendly to her.

While I notice the change in the Hope and HERALD, I can not say that I think it is altogether an advancement, but hope it is for the best, and the change will meet a present demand coming from other sources.

I have confidence in the final triumph of God's work.

J. F. MINTUN.

WILBER, Nebraska, December 30.

Editors Herald:—My object in writing is to encourage any who may be sick or despondent. If I can help any one to forget pain for a time, I shall be content. The first Sabbath this month we attended meeting in Wilber and heard C. H. Porter preach. It was the first sermon I had heard in three years, I being a cripple. I am what is called a shut in, confined to the house mostly, so that people have to come to me, and I know my friends and prize them.

Having been shut entirely away from the Saints, how good it was to go to meeting once more, and hear the organ and the voices that have cheered and soothed me in days past. Sister Elsie selected some of my favorites, and "Thy will be done," and "Olive's brow" brought tears to my old eyes. When shall I meet with the dear Saints again?

If I can not walk, I can talk; and being quite fond of controversy I have had many tilts with people who come here. One of our near neighbors told my husband that we were Catholics, for we believe in a purgatory, and also there was nothing said in the Bible about Christ preaching to the spirits. Said he, Show me the verse, but don't bring Joe Smith's Bible. I was very careful of his feelings and sent him Adam Clark with the verse marked, and also others in connection. This brought him down to the house; said he had read it, of course, but had never noticed it.

A SISTER IN CHRIST.

FULTON, Iowa, January 6.

Editors Herald:—The HERALD comes in a new dress, and laden with good things. I am pleased with it. Long may it live; and may its pages cheer and gladden the hearts of its readers; I could not get along without it, and do not see how any family of Saints can be in sympathy with the work and not take the church organ, the HERALD.

The old year has gone with its joys and sorrows. When we look back we can see where we could have done better, spoken a kind word, lifted the heavy burden. We often wait until some brother or sister is dead, then we will bring flowers. Let us do all the good we can to our brother or sister or some others who need our aid and sympathies, while they live. Gladden their hearts. If we wait until we can do some great thing, that opportunity hardly ever comes.

Wife and I attended the fortieth anniversary of married life of Brother and Sister Johnson, of Canton, Iowa. The Saints of the branch were all present, and presented Brother and Sister Johnson with a very nice extension table, six nice chairs, one dozen silver knives and forks, silver spoons, and some other things. This was January 1, 1902, a good way to begin the new year.

Here is where the Saints cheered the living. A pleasant time was had.

Our branch does not seem to grow much. Our attendance is small; still there were five added by baptism, and we had a nice Christmas tree. The evening program was good. Recitations, singing, and dialogues; and there was plenty of candy for all Sunday-school scholars, besides many presents. All seemed to enjoy the evening very much. But your humble Bishop's agent did not get as much means this year as last, for some reason; not half as much. I think I am eight hundred dollars short. Where is the trouble? Do not the Saints deem it a duty to pay their tithing? Some have done nobly; others could do better. Some who are abundantly able have not paid a cent. As we sow, so shall we also reap. Has not the Lord blessed us in the last year? The drought has hurt us much; but we could sacrifice some luxury for the Master, could we not?

Dear Saints, let us do the best we can this year: make an effort to serve God; live plainer, so we can help further God's work by our means as well. May the good Father bless all our labors, so his name may be honored!

JOHN HEIDE.

DETROIT, Michigan, January 7.

Editors Herald:—I have been laboring the past year in many places. My last place seems to be of special interest, for it was mostly made up of infidel minds.

I left home about December 6, for Northern Indiana. About the middle of December I left Ashley for Flint, Indiana, on my way to Baldwin, Indiana. This is a new place, with but one family of Saints; you might say with but one Saint, as Sr. Davis' husband has not yet obeyed, though he is doing all he can for the cause. They have a family of three sons and two daughters living, one daughter having died not long ago. She is missed very much by them, as she was a lovely girl.

They have been trying to get an elder in there for some time.

Baldwin is a small place of perhaps two hundred inhabitants, and not a church in the place. The people are many of them inclined to infidelity. There is a young man by the name of William E. Parker who has challenged nearly every minister who came there to debate with him on infidelity, but never could persuade them to accept. As soon as he learned I had come he sent his challenge to me. I met him, and this question was placed before him and accepted: Resolved, That the God of the Bible is divine and is worthy of man's adoration. I affirmed, he denied. An opposite question was affirmed by him and I took the negative. There were to be four nights of two hours each, half hour bouts.

The first night he commenced with a perfect tirade of abuse, and the audience became disgusted. I had already given them several sermons on our faith, but did not touch the question of debate, and many were interested. At the close of his last speech the first night he said he was unable to be there the next night. It was no doubt a fair backdown. But the trustees of the house forbade the continuance of the debate, because of his language, and it was called off.

I had previously sent for Elder G. A. Smith, so I had him there for my moderator. I was truly thankful he was there, for he could then see for himself just how everything was. He did justice to the cause, while he was suffering from a cold and could not speak. The people would have been glad to have heard him.

The partial debate has made us friends as the sequel will show. There were many Catholics there, and the language he used regarding Christ caused them to rise in anger, and many murmurings were heard. So the trustees of the house thought proper to close the house to the debate but not to the meetings. So I preached the next night and Sunday evening, and then bade them good-bye for a little while. I never had a warmer reception even among the Saints than I had at the close of the meeting Sunday night. They flocked around me and some with tears in their eyes. Before I left the house they made up a purse of six dollars and gave me, and that without solicitation. I believe there are some there who will soon obey the truth. In fact I have been told so. I ask to be remembered by all the Saints.

GALIEN, Michigan, January 5.

Dear Herald:—As you are laden with good tidings of great joy to all your readers, we renew our subscription for another year. We could not do without the HERALD, it is so instructive and the reader learns so much of the gospel. I believe it is the duty of every family of the church to take and sustain the church literature, especially the good HERALD that has stood for the church and its advancement so many, many years. We are reminded of the saying that we must watch as well as pray, and to watch is to read and see if the church as a bride is preparing herself with the wedding garment, spotless, pure, and white. The church to my mind at this time presents itself as a swift stream of water passing along with the Spirit and laws of God more rapidly than most of us realize. But we must not let the flood-wood of doubt, jealousy, envy, and strife flood our hearts. As still water becomes dead, so will we spiritually, if we allow those things to enter and flood our minds. We as God's children will love to be sacrificing.

We as a branch were moving along easily, not thinking what we could or must do. But we were aroused from our lethargy by the loss by fire of our place of meeting on the 14th of October last. We could not but think of the midnight cry. Five of the business places of our little town were burned to the ground, but that that touched us most deeply was the loss of the Saints' hall in which they had met for the service of God so many years, and where they enjoyed the evidences of his goodness and love so often, the overshadowing and joyous influence of his Holy Spirit, and where many of the elders had presented the gospel in power from its pulpit. They had used it by the kindness and generosity of Bishop Blakeslee without charge. Every quorum of the church had been represented there. Many tears were shed by the Saints here at our great loss. I could not but feel that it was the hand of chastisement, as we had not lived up to our privileges, or improved our opportunities as we should till it was too late.

We did not feel like giving up, however; and realizing that something must be done we humbled ourselves, and prayed that if it were the Lord's will the way might be opened that a place of worship might be provided. There were so few of us to undertake the task, but we were willing to sacrifice. The Lord has indeed blessed us in our services, and put it in the minds of the community to aid us beyond our most sanguine expectation. We resolved to build a house of worship, and those outside of our faith said, "Come, we want to help you on your church." And others who had subscribed said, "We will double our amounts." We feel that it was the good Spirit that prompted them, and that they will be blessed for their generous contributions.

Our sisters' aid society decided to hold a fair, which we did on December 19, 20, and 21, 1901. The proceeds amounted to one hundred and seventy-five dollars—one hundred more than we expected. We felt thankful, indeed; and as Saints we feel willing to sacrifice all we can till the church is completed. We now expect to build this coming spring and summer.

The article in the late HERALD entitled, "Duties, Responsibilities, and Faith of the Saints" is good, and every member should read it. I can not express the desire I have for God's work. Oh that we may be humble and meet God's approval and not be exalted, for "whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

I ever pray for the welfare of Zion, and the spirit of unity and peace.

Your sister,

MRS. DORA B. GREEN.

PUNISHMENT.

There exist in the world to-day two general classes of laws: 1. Natural laws emanating from God; 2. Social laws, emanating from man, and it is of the punishments for a noncompliance with the latter class that we wish to write. The authority to enforce the social law belongs to the parent and the state, and we as parents should realize the extent of our authority and the most judicious manner of enforcing the same.

Our children should be the subjects of our closest observation that we may be ready to detect the slightest decided moral deformity and be able to check it. Deformities of character in the child should be traced back to their beginning so that they may be explained by their history, for only by comprehending the historic growth of such a deformity are we able to prescribe the best remedies.

Punishment should be essentially corrective, and unless it leads the child to a proper estimation of his fault and a positive change in his behavior, it harms instead of benefiting him. Then, too, if one endeavors too strictly to guard against that which is ill-mannered and forbidden, the intelligence of the child reacts in deceit against such efforts, till society is amazed that such crimes as often come to light can have arisen under such careful control.

The first time an act deserving punishment is done, a simple prohibition on the part of the parent, no reason being assigned unless the child is old enough to fully understand the why, is all that is necessary. What explanation is given should be brief and should not be of so gloomy a nature as to make the child more wretched than he already is in consequence of his wrong act. Only when all other efforts have failed is punishment justifiable. In punishing we inflict pain upon the child for the sole purpose of bringing him to reason, a result which we were not able to obtain by our simple prohibition, our explanation, or our promise of punishment. It is needless for us to say that we should never punish while we ourselves are angry, nor threaten to punish if so and so is done and then fail to do so. Keep your promise always to a child, especially where it relates to his conduct.

But be careful how we promise. We have heard parents say, "I'll whip you if you're as big as the side of the house!" and again have seen fathers whip boys almost equal to themselves in size. No child is benefited by a whipping after he is old enough to have a sense of honor.

Generally speaking, we must take into consideration whether boy or girl, and age: "1. Some kind of corporal punishment is most suitable for children; 2. Isolation for older boys and girls, and, 3. Punishment based on the sense of honor for young men and women."

Corporal punishment,—the producing of physical pain,—generally by whipping, is the kindest way of dealing with small children when willful, provided always that it is not unduly severe or too often given, but great care should be exercised that we do not keep up this mode of punishment after the child's honor is awakened and can be made responsive to our appeals. Neither should we always whip for every kind of offense. Suppose a child has a habit of pinching a little brother or sister; the best punishment for that one would be to pinch him, making it more severe than the pinch he administered. Again, if the child ran away, tie him up with a string until he can appreciate his freedom. Suit the punishment to the offense if it be possible; don't whip for all things.

A little boy swore and his mother scrubbed his mouth with strong soapsuds, saying that his mouth was made dirty by such language. Another little child on insisting to play in the fire was burned slightly, just enough to realize the effect of contact with fire. By isolation we take the child temporarily from his companions and associates, and he is made to realize his dependence upon his fellow beings for his happiness. Never shut him up alone or with another, as greater evils are almost sure to follow.

Two boys were sent up-stairs to bed one afternoon, and had more "fun" until supper-time than they possibly could have had if they had been dressed and down-stairs. But hunger came with supper-time and they begged for something, but no, they were to go supperless to sleep. A question: Who did the greater wrong, the two boys or their mother, who could inflict such cruel punishment?

A boy of about thirteen years of age was asked by his mother to do a little service for a friend of hers, and he refused. She threatened punishment if he did not, but he positively refused, and she whipped him, and continued to whip him, thus trying to make him "take back" what he had said. "I'll not do it if you kill me;" and a little later he added, "And if you don't kill me I'll kill myself. I'll not live and have you treat me this way." She came to the conclusion, after awhile, that he really would let her kill him rather than change, so she let him go. Later he was found on the creek bank crying and trying to muster courage to jump in and drown himself. Where was her mistake? Should he have been punished at all? Was it in the kind of punishment?

Punishment based on a sense of honor requires a degree of maturity on the part of the child, and great care should be exercised lest we wound so deeply as to make a permanent injury on the character.

Many illustrations might be given and much said, but we each have many of our own, and these are the ones we should bring and seek for knowledge of that we most need as mothers, and there is no better place than from other mothers who, like ourselves, are doing the best they can and seeking for all the light they can get.

Lines.

What purple paths lead up to God,
We may not know, we may not see,
The highways that the dead have trod,
Are curtained close with mystery.

But if this goodly earth and fair,
Be token of infinite grace,
Ah, who can dream the glories rare,
In store for man's immortal race.

Promotion of Sunday-School Scholars.

No member of the Sunday-school knows the ability and the mind of the scholar better than the teacher. Who has a better opportunity to know?

THE TEACHER IS THE CHIEF ONE

and main factor in knowing the very needs of his scholars and the best methods for their advancement in the work. During the hour for the lesson he has an excellent opportunity to study his scholars. He knows the ability of each one, the willingness to learn more of the truths that are taught, and the desire to advance in the work. The teacher is a competent judge of the promotion of his scholars, to a higher grade of work.

THE TIME OF PROMOTION

should be left to the option of the superintendent and the teachers. They should set a certain time of the year for promotion of scholars and have it generally understood that there will be no promoting done only at that appointed time. The work of the Sunday-school must be done in a systematic way if we wish to have a live Sunday-school. We can not afford to do the work in a haphazard way.

A certain time for promotion will give the teachers better advantages for classified work. Scholars will take more interest in the work, looking forward to the time when they will be promoted to a higher grade. I think that sometimes we are too slack and slow in regard to the promotion of Sunday-school scholars. There is not the interest shown or taken in their promotion, as there is in the public schools. Yet, I do not wish to convey the idea that promoting of scholars is the sole aim or main object of the Sunday-school. I believe we ought to give more attention to it, but not in the light that it is given in our public schools, where it is the chief object of the school; seldom taking into consideration the overtaxed brains, worn-out nerves, and weakened constitutions, caused by overwork.

CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER ALL CASES.

In the rural Sunday-school we have many difficulties and obstacles to overcome. Many times a number of the scholars are debarred from attending Sunday-school, except at certain times of the year, on account of the distance to walk and inclemency of the weather. In this case, many times scholars are kept in the same grade of work so long that they become discouraged and lose all interest. This is a difficulty that must be overcome. If a scholar has a fair understanding of the work in the class he is enrolled in, and old enough to be in an advanced grade he should be promoted to the higher grade. It would be discouraging to keep him any longer in that class, and would not be wisdom not to promote him.

IRREGULAR SCHOLARS.

Where we have scholars attending only at different times of the year, we have to be our own judge as to what grade they belong. It would be embarrassing to a scholar to enroll him in a primary class because he has not attended regularly, when he has sufficient knowledge of the work in the primary class and is old enough to be in the intermediate class. By so doing we may lose some of our brightest scholars; and not only that, it might discourage others and otherwise keep them from attending.

WHEN SHALL WE PROMOTE

scholars and at what time of the year would be the best time to promote them? Some Sunday-schools may not have any certain time for promoting, but I believe at the beginning of the year is the best time. Then we elect our officers and teachers for the ensuing year. The secretary makes out a new record of officers, teachers, and scholars; also enrolling scholars that have been promoted in their proper classes. This enables the secretary to keep a neat record, do away with all unnecessary work, and also make it more convenient for him and the teachers.

IF SCHOLARS ARE PROMOTED AT A DIFFERENT TIME

of the year, the secretary unnecessarily has to make out two records. Why not save time and labor and exercise judgment in these things? We can do our work just as systematically and orderly in the Sunday-school as it is done in the public school. It only requires thoughtfulness and thoroughness on the part of officers and teachers. We should use the best methods for the advancement of the scholars if we wish to keep all interested and take an active part in the work. There is no reason why teachers and scholars of the Sunday-school can not be just as active and interested in the Sunday-school work as in any other work.

By being faithful and humble the Lord will not forsake us, but will be with us to assist and prepare us for higher work.

Then should we not put forth the best efforts that we may reap the reward that is laid up for us?

In regard to

THE LENGTH OF TIME IN PREPARING SCHOLARS FOR PROMOTION, I do not think we can safely decide on any certain time for preparation. It all depends on the ability and the attendance of the scholar. It is natural for some scholars to learn more readily and grasp ideas more quickly than others. All do not have the same privileges. Then the teacher must use his own judgment, as when they should be promoted and the length of time for preparation.

THE PRIMARY DEPARTMENT

includes children from six to ten years old. Primary scholars that have had the privilege of attending Sunday-school from the time they are six until they are ten years old would certainly be ready for the work in the intermediate grade. The four years preparation would fit them for advanced work. A scholar ten years old ought to be able to study the lessons in the intermediate Quarterly, and find the Bible references. If they have the opportunity to study the work in the intermediate grade from the time they are ten until they are thirteen years old, they will be ready for work in the senior grade. Those included in this grade are scholars from thirteen to eighteen years old. Scholars of this age should be able to take up all the advanced work, such as the study of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, found in the lessons of the Quarterlies. The Quarterlies contain many excellent thoughts and ideas that we may use for the advancement of the work, also aid us in the promotion of scholars.

May each one of us engaged in the Sunday-school work be found in harmony with all of God's laws, and show by our zeal and interest that we are working for the welfare and promulgation of his gospel.

FRAZIER.—August 29, 1901, in San Francisco, California, Sr. Nettie Frazier, wife of Dr. Frazier, of El Dorado, and daughter of the late J. M. Putney. She had been studying medicine in a medical college in San Francisco. She took a two-year course in one year, and passed her examination at the head of her class with honors. But she was afflicted with a trouble not uncommon with women and was persuaded by her medical friends to undergo a surgical operation. Her husband opposed it, but as she desired it and not wishing to appear obstinate, he finally consented. The operation was performed, but from its effects she never rallied, and suffered much pain from Sunday until Thursday, when she was released from her sufferings, and entered into the rest prepared for the children of God. She was a very intelligent woman, and a peculiarly gentle, kind-hearted Saint. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Gilroy, near her father, to await the morn of the first resurrection, on Friday, August 30, 1901.

RIDER.—At Lamoni, Iowa, December 25, 1901, Sr. Harriet Rider, aged 68 years, 5 months. She had one living son, but he was in Wyoming and not present at her death or funeral, nor were any others of her kindred with her. She united with the church April 16, 1893. Funeral service was held at her home by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

CLUM.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 6, 1902, Sr. Cora L., wife of Bro. Lewis Clum, at the age of 48 years, 2 months, 1 day. She was born in Orleans County, New York, November 5, 1853, and was married in Michigan in March, 1874. The aged mother, Mrs. Hathaway, mourns with Bro. Clum and his two sons. A large gathering of friends paid tribute of grief to the memory of a good wife, mother, and neighbor. She was baptized September 20, 1889, by Bro. A. S. Cochran. Funeral sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. Columbus Scott.

PATTEN.—Bro. J. F. Patten was born August 12, 1827; died December 15, 1901. Baptized when a boy of seventeen, he has been a member of the Latter Day Saints ever since. Several relatives and friends mourn.

IN CONTRADICTION?—NO.

We are requested to notice an editorial article in the Evening and Morning Star for June 15, 1901, in which the editor attempted to throw discredit upon the revelation given last spring by which a stake was established at Independence, Missouri. The Star editor claimed that the revelation of last spring flatly contradicts section 98 in Doctrine and Covenants, dated December, 1833.

The part to which we object was the provision contained in the Reorganized president's communication providing for the establishment of "Stakes" at Independence, Missouri, and Lamoni, Iowa. To begin with the idea of establishing a "stake" at Independence which was to be the center place in his father's revelation, would appear ridiculous to any mind familiar with the Restored Gospel doctrines, excepting possibly those minds so befogged with the mists surrounding the worship of "Lineal heirs," "Lawful seed," etc., that the naked truth is not discernible to their eyes.

Stakes were to be appointed for the strengthening of the center place at Independence. These "stakes" however were to be appointed upon a single condition and that condition was that they should be designated only when there was found no more room for the Saints in the places then appointed. . . .

"Stakes" rendered in plain English were towns or communities of Saints formed and gathered together with the object of aiding and supporting the central city Zion, which was to have its seat at Independence, Missouri. These stakes of supporting cities of a necessity were to play an important part in great events growing out of the establishment of the central city. So important were they that their institution and location was not left to the choice and judgment of even the heads of the church but the Almighty reserved this right unto himself in a revelation in section 98 where he declares that there was no other place appointed for the work of the gathering of the Saints than the city of Independence. He however promised that in the future when certain conditions prevailed "stakes" should be appointed for the strengthening. . . .

There is plenty of room in Independence for both saint and sinner and there has been for lo! these many years. It is not anyways near filled up. Plenty of property can be rented or purchased in the town of Independence or in Jackson County either, not to mention the abundance of room in the surrounding counties; and while this condition prevails the Lord declares in section 98 that no other places should be appointed than those then appointed [Independence and Kirtland].

There are no "minds" in the Reorganized Church "so befogged with the mists surrounding the worship of 'Lineal heirs,' 'Lawful seed,' etc., that the naked truth is not discernable to their eyes," for there is no such worship in the church.

Those of the Reorganized Church, being believers in the doctrine of present and continued revelation, are of the opinion that the conditions referred to in the closing portion of paragraph 4 of section 98, Doctrine and Covenants, which the Star quotes as the basis for its objection to the revelation complained of, have obtained, and in view of this fact the Lord has proceeded to point out the "places" which he would "appoint" and which should "be called stakes."

At the time the settlement was made at Independence and on the Kaw River land all over the western part of Missouri and as far north as the boundaries of the State then extended could be bought for $1.25 and $2.50 per acre from the Government, and from individual settlers for an advance on those amounts to cover improvements. The Saints were instructed to buy as extensively as they could even to the boundaries between Jew and Gentile on the west.

Now whether the Lord foresaw that conditions would change or not, which we neither affirm nor deny, believing that he takes cognizance of all things connected with his work, it is a fact that where there was in 1833 a small village of a few hundred inhabitants at Independence there is now a city of several thousands; and at or near the then small settlement on the Kaw River there is a city of over a hundred thousand in population; and surrounding both these cities conditions have obtained which have put the prices on lands other than city lots at from thirty dollars to one thousand dollars more or less, per acre; city lots at from supposed reasonable figures to prices enormously high.

The Saints were directed to retain the titles to their lands, that they might return and inherit them. This they did not do. In 1864 we instituted an inquiry into the condition of the titles of those who had held lands in Jackson and the surrounding counties, with a view to seeking redress for those who had been driven away; but to our astonishment we found that nine tenths of all those who had held titles had parted with them. The records did not show that they had done this under duress, nor was evidence to this effect put within our reach. The Legislature of Missouri had passed laws under which the titles thus alienated could not be disturbed. The same thing occurred at Nauvoo, Illinois, and though we have been at times censured for not trying to reinstate by legal process the Saints deprived of their lands, we have done all that duty or common sense dictated.

There was not room in Independence for Saint and sinner in 1833; for the Saints had to get out of there, and subsequently made a settlement in Caldwell County by agreement; and in spite of this agreement were driven from the State entire by order of the State officials in 1838.

So far as we now know there has been no action of the Legislature of the State rescinding that order, though there was an act providing for an appropriation of the State funds to pay the expense of the "Mormon War."

In paragraph 9 of the 98th section, the statement is distinctly made that lands should be purchased in the "regions round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion," the county of Jackson and the counties round about the "land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my Saints." This beginning was made.

This revelation also provided that all things were to be prepared before the Saints. They were not to gather "in haste, nor by flight."

This was given in December, 1833; and in the following June the Lord remembering the promises made to the Saints and their scattered and scattering condition gave them added instruction as to their course of procedure. It is very decisive and instructive, and in spirit and text in harmony with conditions in which the Saints were and the instruction given six months before which the Star states was contradicted last spring.

"Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people: and behold, I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety, while you are saying unto the people, Execute justice and judgment for us according to law, and redress us of our wrongs."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 7.

The people of the church importuned the courts, the judge, the State authorities, and Congress; but to no avail. They were driven from the State, a few only remained. But many, mindful of the promise that "the pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion;" set about their work in accordance with the direction given in June, 1834.

Still mindful of his promise the Lord said to the church in March, 1873: "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me."—D. C. 117: 11.

Again in 1894 the Spirit spoke to the church and the declaration was made that "Lamoni having been made by the agreement of the church under the law of the land the principal place of business of the church, it is wise and expedient that it should be considered and declared by the conference to be the seat of the presidency of the church, and in due time be made a stake."

This was done by the conference; and in April, 1901, the direction was given to organize a stake at Independence and one at Lamoni.

The establishing of a stake at Independence in no sense contradicts or contravenes the appointment of Zion, nor does it move her out of her place. No other place is appointed for the beginning of the gathering of the people.

The Reorganized Church has been making an effort to comply with the instruction given after the church was expelled from Jackson County, and has counseled a gathering into "the regions round about in the land of Zion," and has been encouraged in doing this by a fulfillment of the promise of favor to be shown by the people.

It is our understanding that the Lord knows the conditions of the situation and whether they are or are not suitable to the establishing of stakes, and where to plant them to strengthen Zion, the church, "the pure in heart;" and not a locality bounded by the narrow limits covered by a city of six thousand inhabitants. And further, it is our conviction that he knows what sort of government is applicable in an ecclesiastical sense to a place or a region known as a stake in Zion, or the center stake or city.

We suppose that the leading men of the Reorganized Church are as well informed concerning the conditions in the States of Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa, touching the latter-day work as are their contemporaries, and will proceed with the work intrusted to them according to the instruction given, and the light vouchsafed to them.

The Star misstates the revelation of section 98 when it states that it declares "that no other places should be appointed than those then appointed [Independence and Kirtland.]" Neither Independence nor Kirtland is named in the revelation. Other places than the one appointed were known to the Lord and when he saw fit he would appoint them and they should be called stakes. We have not contradicted the revelation, but have moved in accordance with it.

THE POPE ON DIVORCE.

It may seem to some a little out of joint to quote the Pope on any subject connected with Protestant Christianity or the machinery of domestic government. But where the Pope is right such right ought to be indorsed, no matter if it is assumed that the Pope is wrong in the church contention.

By special cable to the Chicago American, the Pope is reported as follows:

"Divorce is a desecration of all religion and contrary to the law of God. If there be any authority in old age, any weight in the apostolic voice, we do not warn only, but implore all engaged in the deliberation on a divorce law by whatever is dearest and most sacred to them to desist from what has been begun. Let them not refuse to consider seriously that the Christian marriage bond is holy, indivisible and perpetual by the divine law and that that law can never be abrogated by any human law.

"Christ recalled marriage to what it was constituted in the beginning, increased it by the dignity and virtue of a sacrament and exempted it from evil and even ecclesiastical powers.

"The church, which is the guardian and vindicator of the divine law, has always protested strongly against divorce. Let nobody hope she will be less mindful in the future. She will not connive or acquiesce in any way. The example of other countries is criminal in so far as they recognize divorce, which is the ruin of the family and corruption of society.

"When once divorce is allowed, even on a very limited scale, it spreads like a terrible conflagration. Divorce is the moral ruin of woman.

"I pray God to spare Italy this terrible social plague and induce Christian people to see the error of their ways."

To the above by the Pope, is added the following: "Monseignor Scalabrini, who has just returned from the United States, and is said to be a candidate for apostolic delegate at Washington, says he has had occasion to notice a serious degeneration in America as the result of divorce."

The foregoing is put in strong terms; but as the Scriptures are specific in the statement that there is but one justifiable cause for divorce, it seems that it was not intended that married people should be so careless of the bond of wedlock as to make any other cause a just subject of complaint or separation.

The revelations to the church establish the marriage bond as only soluble by "death or transgression," and the formula given in section 109 (111) on marriage seems to convey the eternal nature of the bond: "May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and for ever."

Another feature of this law is the statement that "all legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church should be held sacred and fulfilled." This establishes the marriages performed out of the church by the enactment of the civil laws as of equal validity to those performed by the church authority, as they were to be held "sacred." This is further attested by the provision that those who chose to be married by other than church officers could do so.

The ease with which marriages in certain circles can be set aside by the parties to them in the courts of the country, in many cases turns the performance of the marriage ceremony into a farce the pathetic side of which is discoverable in the almost utter indifference of parents toward the children born of such misalliances, and the squabbles in court over the custody of them if any property is involved in the marriage settlements.

The ease with which divorced persons assume other marital relations after the bonds which they had first assumed have been dissolved, is astonishing to the average honest-minded man and woman, and has a tendency to cheapen the obligations voluntarily taken by those who marry, and this leads to thoughts and ways that are immoral, the effects are bad. We presume it is with this in mind that the Pope says "divorce is the moral ruin of woman."

We can well remember when a woman known to have been divorced was of doubtful reputation, and it was usually taken for granted that the fault was hers. Of course this was an extreme view, but yet the fact remains that neither in the New Testament nor in the later revelations to the church is there a provision for divorce except for the cause named by the Savior in Matthew 19 and Mark 10.

It will be well for those married to guard well their altar of domestic happiness that it be not profaned or thrown down by indifference, neglect, cruelty, or evil intent. Keep the fires of conjugal affection brightly burning, that love, loyalty, and pure devotion prevail in your homes.

Let those who contemplate marriage look well to the manner of their acceptance of the bonds, remembering the formula "till death do you part," and live in peace, knowing that at the judgment bar there will be an accounting for the way the obligations of the bond have been kept, and happy will they be who have kept them according to their original import,

In connection with the foregoing on the subject of divorce we quote from the Gazette-Herald, of St. Joseph, Missouri, for January 2, 1902, the following:

Washington, Jan. 1.—A new code of the laws for the District of Columbia went into effect to-day. The code is not a complete body of laws for the government of the district, the old Maryland statutes, the common law and the statutes of the United States—applicable to the District and acts of Congress relating to the District remaining in force except where inconsistent with the new body of laws. The code was passed at the last session of Congress. The feature of most popular interest is a section prohibiting the granting of divorces except for infidelity, divorces no longer being procurable for desertion, drunkenness, cruelty and other offenses against the marital relations for which a divorce formerly might be secured. There is also a considerable change made in the practice before justices of the peace, the city being divided into ten districts, with one salaried justice in each district, in place of the former feed officers, whose locations were not to any considerable extent governed by geographical distinctions.

If this report be correct, Congress is making an excellent lead in the right direction.

LET THE YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY THE RELIGIO.

RIDGETOWN, Ontario, January 7.

Editors Herald:—Now and then we hear words of disapproval in reference to the work of the Religio Society. The writer has heard a statement something like this: "From what I can learn through the HERALD it is merely a sparking and fun-making institution." Now as I understand it the HERALD as such has never represented the Religio in this light. Some writers may have said critical things, but it was not representative any more than any other private opinion. The HERALD is a medium through which any one may air his peculiar views. Will you please make some editorial remarks along this line?

ALMA C. BARMORE.

We have never seen any such reference to the Religio, referred to in the above letter, either in the HERALD or in letters or articles offered to us for its columns. If any such has appeared in our columns it escaped the vigilance of editors and proof-readers, for these are quick to discern what is improper, hurtful, or outrageous, and either call attention to it or strike it out, owing to where it is first discovered.

In the Autumn Leaves for August, 1901, page 357, in a "dialogue," by Mina Perkins Kearney, the writer makes Peter Henderson, one of the characters in the talk, to say: "But about this 'ere Religio, some uv our good Saints have been opposed to it, an' some uv 'em have gone so far as to call it a 'sparkin'-school,' an' that's all they want to git together for."

This is the nearest to the language referred to that we know anything about. And Sr. Mina makes her article to tell strongly in favor of the Sunday-school and Religio, as any one may see by reading it.

But suppose some such remark had been made by some over-zealous or too careless a writer, it should not have been taken by any one as a statement of fact by an accredited authority; but should be considered as the expression of the opinion of some one who is opposed to the society, and who knew little or nothing of the society itself.

The fact that the Religio is under the supervision of some of the quietest, most stable, and best behaved of the church members is in itself a guarantee for its being properly conducted to conserve the object of its institution. If some young folks attend for the sake of the society they find there, it can do them no harm while they keep within the rules of good behavior, which officers do and will insist shall be the case. Young people attend the church meetings of all kinds with a similar intent as a part of the object in going there. Should they be forbidden to go to church on that account? Hardly.

POLYGAMY ARRAIGNED AT CANTON, ILLINOIS.

By a marked copy of the Register, issued at Canton, Illinois, January 13, we notice Bro. Stedman has been making plain the distinction between the doctrines of the true Latter Day Saints Church and those of the Utah religionists. Among other things the Register says:

Perhaps the most merciless arraignment Utah Mormonism has ever received from a Canton pulpit was in the sermon preached Sunday evening by Elder Stedman, of Lamoni, Iowa, to the Latter Day Saints congregation worshipping in the Swedenborgian church, on Third Avenue and Chestnut Street.

Elder Stedman thinks that of all Christians none are bound so firmly as true Mormons to oppose polygamy. Not only does the Bible forbid it by implication, when it sets forth the giving to Adam of but one wife, the saving only of monogamists in the ark, and, in the New Testament, enumerates the qualifications of bishops. But the Book of Mormon says expressly that a man shall have but one wife, and in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants this is emphasized in the words of the marriage ceremony.

TRACT WORK IN WALES.

Bro. William Lewis, at work in Wales, is active and aggressive. He has adopted a sort of house to house canvass, and sends us one of his leaflets, as follows:

Polygamy was not an original tenet of the true Latter Day Saints Church organized April 6, 1830.

There can be found no word in favor of plural marriage in church publications issued before the death of Joseph Smith, June 27, 1844.

The teaching of the Book of Mormon is clear: "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. . . . Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Jacob 2: 6.

"For they have not forgotten the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our fathers, that they should have, save it were one wife: and concubines they should have none."—Book of Jacob 2: 9.

In the Doctrine and Covenants: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Old Edition, sec. 13, par. 7.

"Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh."—Old Edition, sec. 65, par. 3.

The Times and Seasons, then edited by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles, stated editorially in its issue for April 1, 1844: "If any man writes to you, or preaches to you, doctrines contrary to the Bible, the Book of Mormon, or the book of Doctrine and Covenants, set him down as an impostor."

The statement of Brigham Young made on August 29, 1852, that the doctrine of polygamy had not been practiced by the elders, is found on page 31 of Supplement to volume 15 of Millennial Star.

Twenty-two years after the organization of the church and eight years after the death of Joseph Smith, the doctrine of polygamy was first publicly taught by Brigham Young and his followers in Salt Lake City, Utah. See Supplement to Millennial Star, vol. 15, page 31.

Reader, please note what the Court in Lake County, State of Ohio, U. S. A., says in its findings, February 23, 1880. Hon. L. S. Sherman, Judge: "That the church in Utah, known as Salt Lake Mormons, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances, and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church. And the Court do further find that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property."

"A PERIOD OF RELIGIOUS INFIDELITY."

A recent issue of the Church Intelligencer contained the following:

There is no disputing the fact that we are passing through a period of serious religious declension. The signs are unmistakable both in this country and in Europe. Some of the signs of general spiritual declension were referred to last Sunday by Archbishop Ireland in a public address in Detroit and by the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan in his sermon in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church of New York. The former said: "Religion is rapidly losing ground. There are men especially who never breathe a sigh of prayer toward heaven, many of them in public places, where their influence and example are bad. Day by day science and philosophy are taking the place of religion. Papers and magazines reflect these ideas." Mr. Morgan, commenting on small church attendance, remarked: "The trouble is that there is a new atheism abroad, strange and subtle. Let it go no further or it will work your destruction."

DESTRUCTIVE EARTHQUAKE IN MEXICO.

A destructive earthquake occurred in Mexico on January 16, according to reports by Associated Press. The following appeared in the daily papers of the 18th:

Mexico City, Jan. 17.—One of the most terrible catastrophes in the history of the State of Guerrero is reported to have occurred late yesterday afternoon, when an extremely violent earthquake shock was felt at Chilpancingo, causing a great loss of life and injuring many persons. Details from the stricken district are very meager, but scattering reports received here indicate that probably three hundred persons were killed and as many more injured. It is known that the State capitol, the parish church, and many business houses and residences are in ruins, and that there is much suffering as a result of the awful seismic disturbance.

One of the edifices that suffered most was the federal telegraph office, which explains the paucity of news that has so far reached this city. Meager details finally began to arrive here. The telegraph lines and apparatus at Chilpancingo were badly damaged, but the employees, all of whom were uninjured, quickly proceeded to erect an improvised telegraph office on the outskirts of the city.

The number of deaths was greater in the parish church than in any single place, as a crowd of worshipers was gathered there for the afternoon service. The solid masonry walls and the roof came toppling down on the worshipers and many of those within were killed.

The war department has ordered troops in the neighborhood to cooperate in the work of rescue. Until this work is completed it will be impossible to accurately learn the number of victims. It is believed, however, that this is one of the most destructive seismic phenomena that has occurred in Mexico. The greater part of the population of Chilpancingo are now camping out under tents around the town which is five days journey from the national capital.

Earthquake shocks were felt in many other cities and towns. In Mexico City the earthquake occurred at 5:17 o'clock yesterday and was of such violence as to shake the most substantial buildings. The Pan-American Congress was in session at the time and many of the delegates were greatly alarmed. The first movement here was one of trepidation and was very sharp. It was followed by an easy oscillatory movement north-northeast to south-southwest. The duration was fifty-five seconds. The damage in this city was slight.

The State of Guerrero has always been the focus of seismic disturbances. Reports received here state that the shock was very severe at Chilapa. No casualties are so far reported from there.

The duration of the Chilpancingo shock was less than that in Mexico City, having lasted fifty seconds against fifty-five seconds at the capital.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. S. Hommes writes from Chico, California, January 1: "We have met with some reversals here in the past few weeks, having had the church buildings closed against us by two of its trustees. It is supposed to be open to all denominations as it belongs to the public, and we have appealed to the district attorney who has promised to do his best in securing the building for us again. We have been publicly assailed in the Chico Record and with commendable fairness they have allowed us to answer through the same columns. We endeavored to show the difference between the Utah people and ourselves."

Bro. Bert L. White writes from St. Joseph, Missouri, January 15: "The HERALD is always a very welcome visitor at our home. I do not see how a true Latter Day Saint can do without the church papers. I always find something in them that gives me strength to press on. I am pleased to notice so many of the young people taking interest in the work. I think the Religio is a blessing to the church. We have a nice branch here in St. Joseph. We came here from Porcupine, Wisconsin. The Saints there, too, are alive to the work."

Bro. O. J. Haun writes from Carsonville, Michigan, January 12: "I have just closed our meetings at McGregor where I had splendid attendance and good interest. Baptized five to-day, and more gave their names in for next Sunday. So the good work is moving on. The Lord is blessing me in the work."

Sr. Bertha Fender wrote on January 13 from Rhine, Kansas: "As I read the HERALD I feel greatly encouraged. We feel lonely at times, because we are isolated. Brethren Vaughn and Gurwell were here from December 6 until the 23d, and preached every night that the weather would permit. How thankful we were to hear the gospel preached once again in its purity! Three were baptized: Mr. Fender's little brother and sister, Earl and Eva Fender, and my brother, Clarence Knapp. They are all young. We hold our prayer-meetings every two weeks, although there are but two families of us to meet."

Frank H. Cowen wrote on January 16 from Webb City, Missouri: "Bro. G. H. Hilliard has been holding a number of interesting meetings in Webb City, but has gone to Blendsville, Missouri, for the remainder of the week. That much good has been done is our hope."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. John Lake wrote us from Ray, Indiana, where he and Bro. G. A. Smith and others have been at work, more or less. Bro. Lake had been at Kirtland, Detroit, and other places, had much to encourage him in the work, especially in some manifestations regarding the calling of some to the ministry, of which manifestation Bro. Lake writes as being new and very pleasing. Bro. Lake wrote on January 13, he would go to Flint, Michigan, for a few meetings, thence south into Indiana. He wrote in good spirits.

Read the encouraging letter of Bro. William Lewis, of St. Joseph, Missouri, now laboring in Wales.

Bro. and Sr. Weiler wrote from St. Peter, Kansas, January 10, stating that they are expecting to move from there to a point not far from Kansas City. They desire to know if there are any Saints living near Lawrence, Kansas, as they will move ten miles south of there, near the little town of Vinland. They would like to have some elder call on them.

Reports from the field of Bro. H. O. Smith, South-western Mission, are quite favorable. Twenty-nine baptized for the quarter; the ministry, both in the field and locally, are as busy as hindering causes will permit. Bro. H. O. was engaged in debate with a Disciple or Christian when he wrote, January 16.

Bro. J. W. Whitley writes from Bridgeport, Washington, that he is still looking for an elder to come there. He thinks from May on a good work could be done.

In HERALD of January 15, page 45, in "Extracts from Letters," we stated Bro. J. B. Roush wrote from Denver. He did not; he wrote from Lamar,

ZION AND JERUSALEM.

There is to-day much food for thought in the future of the Lord's people, both in Zion and in Jerusalem. We have no use for wild speculation and figures as to when the Lord shall come; but we do desire, not alone to discern the "red evening sky" as a sign of a "fine to-morrow," but to be able also to discern the "summer nigh" by the "budding fig tree."

Many Saints are troubled about the gathering and how it is to be accomplished; but the things that should engage our minds are: purity of heart, and purpose, for the "pure in heart shall see God," and "Zion is the pure in heart;" and he that "loveth me keepeth my commandments;" hence to learn the will of God and do it. Then we need not fear for Zion, for God shall not only lay the foundation, but also furnish the capstone, though he may use us as workmen.

Have you ever noted the unfolding of God's plan? It is sure, in its development, though it may not be a "miracle of an hour's work," as some have thought it would be. Zion and Jerusalem are in the future to be the gathering places for God's people, on the Western and Eastern Continents respectively, and one purpose we have in this article is to show them largely simultaneous in their development. Zion and Jerusalem are often used in scripture to designate the eastern Israel's home alone. But we wish to quote, "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."—Isaiah 2:3, as showing the unity of God's purpose from the West and East; and the gospel in latter days being committed to the Gentiles, by reason of the Jews' rejection of Christ. "The law will go forth from Zion," America, and by its effect the "word of the Lord will go forth from Jerusalem," Palestine. The further teaching of distinct or separate places, yet united in effect and purpose, is shown as an admonition to our careful preparation, in Isaiah 4:3: "And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy." And while there is a wide difference in the Jew, the Israel of the East, compared with the "Israel by adoption" who read this, yet it occurs to us as a beautiful unity of purpose and design.

Let us draw a few parallels: 1. They, the Jews, are a peculiar people, separate from the world, and have never lost their identity. So should the Saints be a "peculiar people." "In the world but not of it."

2. The burden of their prayers and labors is to the end of Jerusalem's restoration; ours to be for Zion's upbuilding.

3. Their sacrifices are to an extent beyond ours, yet ours shall require sufficient to "try us so as by fire."

4. They were rejected and their temple destroyed because of their rejection of the Savior; we suffered loss and our temple was destroyed by reason of failure to comply with God's command. The Jew suffered for centuries, we for a few years; the days of weeping being measured, no doubt, in accord with the disobedience of each.

5. They are careful of the things that "defile the body;" we to apply the same care to things that defile both body and spirit.

6. The "angel's message" came in its power as law to Zion's upbuilding in America, and man's redemption in general; and simultaneously God witnessed his purposes on the Eastern Continent by giving the "early and latter rains" to fulfill his word.

7. In 1860 the church of our choice was reorganized. Israel Zangwill tells us that "in 1860 Israel became conscious that a polity was essential to a people and in that year the 'Alliance Israelite Universelle' was created." So 1860 was also the beginning of Israel (East) in their reorganization.

8. The organization of the "Society of Jews;" and "National Parliament" with the approval of Germany's Emperor, the favor of the Czar, and favorable consideration of the Sultan of Turkey; composed, too, of such advanced steps, by noted Jewish leaders, as Professor Gotheil, of Columbia College, for America; Clarence I. De Sola, for Canada; Dr. Alex. Marmorek, of Pasteur Institute, for France; the famous oculist, Mandelstamm, for Russia; Dr. Gaster, and Sir Francis Montefiore in England; with Herzl and Nordau, Zangwill and others, for the whole, is, in its organization, effect, and purpose, much the same, as well as to time of movement, parallel with Independence and Lamoni Stakes.

The East and West, the Israel by birth, and those by adoption, have one aim, purpose, hope,—the preparation for the Advent of the Messiah, the King of glory.

One prophecy we wish to call your attention to as being at least in part fulfilled. "Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."—Isaiah 60: 3. Is not the favor of Germany's Emperor, and Turkey's Sultan, and their trip to Jerusalem some two years ago, a fulfillment, indicative of Jerusalem's "rising" out of the "dust and sackcloth" of ages; the favor of Gentiles by which the Jew is not now a "hiss and a byword?"

It behooves us, then, to make a preparation, a beginning to build up Zion and her waste places, according to the revelations and the commands of God. But the same spirit moves East and West, and while it looks impossible to some, with high-priced lands and large cities within Zion's borders, with the "church poor," is it as dark for us as it was for the "chosen Israel" (Jew) to gather from all nations—poor, despised, forsaken,—to arise, and accomplish God's design, as they are now doing?

All we have to fear is "cold indifference." Let us do our best, individually, and leave the grand, sure, triumphant end to God, who alone can guide us aright.

IS SOCIALISM ANTI-CHRISTIAN?

The Pope's encyclical on Socialism last year, taken in conjunction with the increasing importance of the Social Democratic Party as a political factor in Germany and the prominent part played by the Socialists in the anti-clerical legislation of France, gives constant interest to the whole question involved in the relation of Socialism to Christianity. In spite of the comparative weakness of the Socialist movement in this country, there are signs that this subject is deemed not unimportant even in the United States. Archbishop Corrigan's recent sermons against Socialism, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, have been widely quoted and approved in the Roman Catholic press. The Archbishop took the ground that Socialism is fundamentally anti-Christian and that its progress is fraught with danger to the Roman Catholic Church. "There is not a single leader among the Socialists who is a Christian," he said; "they are either agnostics or anti-Christian. Their maxim is not Christian. It simply tends to the development of material prosperity. Religion is left out of the Socialistic creed altogether." Against these sweeping statements a protest has been entered by Father McGrady, a Socialist priest of Bellevue, Kentucky, who, in the course of a "reply" to the Archbishop's attack, printed in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, declares:

The Archbishop says that Socialism is anti-Christian in its spirit, and that the great leaders of Socialism are anti-Christian. To this it can be replied that the great leaders of science to-day are anti-Christian, but that does not make science anti-Christian. St. John Chrysostom, St. Ambrose, St. Basil, St. Gregory the Great, first Pope of the name; in fact, all the early fathers, together with Baron von Ketteler, Archbishop of Mamerce, denounced the right of private capital, and I presume that His Grace of New York would not call these heroes of the church anti-Christian.

Under Socialism religion will conquer the globe, education will expand, and science will dazzle the world with its glittering sheen.

The Rev. R. Heber Newton writes a lengthy letter to the New York Times (December 22) to sustain the same conclusion, contending that Socialism, in its broad lines, "aspires to a higher ethical order, a more truly spiritual order, a more essentially religious order." He continues:

As for the leaders of Socialism being nearly all rationalists and atheists, let it be confessed sadly that too many of them are such. But it may be much pondered by ecclesiastics whether the attitude of the Christian Church, as exemplified in the sermon of Archbishop Corrigan, is not largely responsible for the infidelity of Socialistic leaders. Surely, however, hosts of Socialists are not infidels or atheists. Does the Archbishop know nothing of Christian Socialism, even within the bosom of the Catholic Church?

If certain whispers which have come to my ears be correct, this sermon of the Archbishop is the sign of a preconcerted movement within the Catholic Church in our country against Socialism. For one, I trust devoutly that this is not the case. A staunch Protestant myself, I should grieve deeply to see the great Church of Rome arraying itself in a hostile attitude toward a movement having such moral ideals. In this case there will most likely be a great increase of "rationalists and atheists."

For one, I am certain of the ultimate victory of the Socialistic ideal, in some nobler form of our industrial order—which may be very far from the Socialists' dream of the future state—just because I believe that the moral law is the heart of the universe, that the power back of evolution is a power making for righteousness, that when God's will is done upon the earth it will do away with needless poverty and its sufferings and temptations. Therefore, for one, I grieve when an eminent prelate seems to array the Christian Church against the efforts of men who are seeking to lead on our society toward something more just, more human, more brotherly—that is, more Christian.

An interesting side-light is thrown on these views by a series of three articles on "Paganism and Christianity," from the pens of representative Socialists, that have recently appeared in the pages of the International Socialist Review (Chicago). "Julian," the first of the three writers, frankly confesses his belief that Socialism will sweep out of existence the "theological cobwebs" of Christianity. "Christianity," he says, "has served its purpose as a social factor. Its precepts were designed for a society of masters and slaves, of rich and poor, and they contemplate the perpetuity of such a system. True Christianity would be impossible in a social system where none of the virtues of patience and submission on one side, and generosity and mercy on the other, could be practiced." Under Socialism, adds Robert Rives La Monte, in a succeeding issue of The Review, equality of opportunity and the dominant sense of human solidarity would make brotherhood and fellowship the keynote of religion; and he thinks it by no means impossible that Christianity itself may come to be interpreted in these terms. "Is it a mere fanciful dream," he asks, "to look forward to the day when the most solemn rite of Christianity, the Holy Communion, shall be transformed into a banquet of brothers, ringing the globe in its embrace, joyously marking their sense of human oneness by this catholic feast of fellowship in honor of the Christ who first taught and lived the life of fellowship?" The Rev. J. Stitt Wilson, dissenting from the views of both of the writers quoted, thinks that Socialism makes a great mistake in "loading itself up with the unnecessary proposition that it is materialistic, atheistic, and anti-Christian." "Socialism," he says, "and all it will mean, is but a part of a greater whole; it is but part, in our time an all-important part, of that complete meaning to human life which I either read out of, or read into, the life and teaching of Jesus."

George D. Herron makes a contribution to the discussion in an article published in the London Social Democrat and Wilshire's Magazine (Toronto). He says:

Jesus was not a Socialist, and he came long before any scientific approach to society was possible; but he has left to the world a communistic spirit of matchless strength and masterly sweetness. The Socialist movement will receive this spirit and welcome this strength and power, while rejecting the traditions and authority of Christianity. Indeed, Socialism will have to be realized before the ideals of Jesus can be clearly discerned and considered.

Socialism will have its religion, or rather it will become a religion. But it will be a religion of the manifest facts and forces of life. Out of the selected experiences of the race and the individual will the coöperative commonwealth appropriate what is best as its philosophy and practice of life. For, after all, religion is simply the interpretation of life; and we shall have a pure and undefiled religion when we have our common human life interpreted so that we may each coöperate with the best that is in it. It is out of the common labor and struggle of the world that the soul's integrity and freedom have really come, and not out of its religious systems. Life has always been its own savior and healer, its own lord and law, its own power and revival; and when we learn to freely look at life and trust it, we shall walk in that vision for which the prophets have sought.—From the Literary Digest, January 11, 1902.

Letter Department.

From Over the Border.

SELKIRK, Ontario, January 4.

To-day is a rather lonesome one to me. I have just returned from a visit home after an absence of seven months, the longest I had ever been away at any one time. I am again trying to buckle on the harness and get down to active work. In that time I baptized eleven souls.

The recent past has witnessed affecting changes. It has witnessed both meetings and partings, pleasant and unpleasant. Smiles have serenely asked, "How are you?" tears again have said "good-bye." Conditions that I could have wished unending are gone by, some of them probably never to return. Some that were next door to all that I could expect or hope for in this life are fleeting on their ceaseless march toward the final climax of all things. Some of them I can scarcely refrain from wishing back; some that are future I could wish were here.

Resignation is strength. I do wish that I could always be resigned to the unavoidable—not to lament over what I can not help, even if it be against me. Strange that we are controlled so much by circumstances, and that so frequently we have to succumb to the undesirable. Strange that we have so many things we do not want and want so many things we can not have. Nature laughs at our finite weakness and moves on with ruthless determination to bring to pass all that is to come.

Experience is the father of reason. Experience is the father, reason is the son. The son is always admirable and grand, but oh, at what a cost he comes!

My aim is to do good and be saved and to do nothing that will not be for my best, or the best thing for me to do. It is nice always to feel nearly the same. Versatility is wealth, but variation is poverty, sometimes in its abjectest forms. There are some who are moved upon but little by surroundings—I mean they do not lose their balance in a storm. Others in the silent ripple of the calm can climb the highest point and willingly do all that's to be done. But when the tempest rages and the angry waves begin to menace their welfare, they seek a refuge where brave sailors shun to go. Give me a sailor who is one in either storm or calm. Give me the man who is oak in storm and who in sunshine has the happy faculty of being vine and flower.

I look forward to something exalting, something heavenly—always do. Perhaps everybody does more or less; but I must say that it seems very much like traveling toward the setting sun expecting to reach it at sometime. Many unfortunates have started out on life's rugged road merrily and courageously, with a definite object in sight. Year by year they continue, imagining themselves to be nearing their goal. They look with wanton joy at the smile of luxury in the dim distance. Because it appears vast and distinct they think it not far away. Thus they continue until they come to the impossible gorge. The night of death overtakes them there, and using their burden for their pillow, they sink into the embrace of unreplying slumber that kisses down the eyelids. Yes, they fall into dreamless sleep. Thus our heroes go; but all have not so fallen. Some have accomplished their desire; some have reached their goal. Some fall in the morning early while the dew lasts, some at noon, some at night.

The night of my pursuit, my attainments, is an ideal I would prefer not to lay before you at this time. But I have an ideal which I shall ever follow, all the same; and if I come to the spot where the two eternities meet, even at noonday, I shall bid farewell and pass to that anxious bourne as cheerfully as I can. May I say, however, that I hope to see the night of my pilgrimage. How I long for the time when I know all to be passed will be passed, when my zenith will be fully realized—the fullness of prosperity. I pray for an incentive so long as there is a step to take. Through brier clusters may roses always glare; when thorns are passed may there be many lillies of the loveliest hue. After clouds, sunshine. An occasional cloud makes the sunshine appreciable.

Of course we ought all to be brave enough to meet what all have met. But he who shirks the avoidable is not despicable because somebody else has not avoided it. Sometimes the bitter is a necessity—not always. I should say avoid it where you can and do not endure it because your grandmother did. You may be wiser than she was.

Our greatest possibility is eternal life—nothing greater. He who has been wrecked on the shoals of financial despair and has seen the shattered fragments of his accumulations floating in every direction on the crest of the foaming billows of cruel ambition has yet made a positive success if he attains to this wonderful condition. Yes; oh! thou blessed assurance, our comfort, our hope, our aim. How many souls thou hast buoyed up; how urgently thou has invited us onward when we were wretched, when all were friends but thee! As the breakers sobbed out their unholly grief on the shore of my life in the dead midnight, I could see thy star as it sparkled upon my horizon and pointed me to peaceful refuge, to safety. Indeed, if it were not for thee we would be of all men most miserable; life would not be worth living. May thy precious spark ever shine into my soul with undiminished luster until at sometime, some day, soon or late, I can lean upon thy bosom and enjoy the richness of thy bounties.

He who ebbs out his whole life on the low plane of humble poverty and yet partakes of thee in the end has done well. He has done far better than the man who spends a life in splendor and plenty and partakes not of thee.

The serf may have eternal life for his pillow and his sleep is sweeter and more restful than the sleep of him who is pillowed by all that this world can provide. The former has love, and love is the paradise of the soul. Although in a humble, isolated cottage with a vine growing over his door and the grapes growing ripe under the kisses of the autumn sun, he is by far the happier man of the two.

Latter Lay Saints are mostly poor people. It is mostly poor people who accept this gospel. There is now and then one upon whom the sun of prosperity has smiled from his exhaustless plenitude, but they are few and far between. It is noticeable, too, that the poorest are the most faithful as a rule. They have less of the goods of this world, but they have more of the goods of the world to come—less money, but more religion. How people can be Latter Day Saints and continue to grasp and even withhold from famishing poverty the hand of plenty I can not understand. I can hardly conceive of a better picture of his Satanic majesty than the man of wealth and surplus who without lending a helping hand will passively look upon the poor man sinking into the depths of his lowest inheritance. Think of a man who will stand inactively aside piles of lumber when his fellow-creatures are drowning within his easy reach. Think of him! And yet we meet such. Some of them have entered the precincts of the kingdom of God and branded themselves Latter Day Saints. It is a shame, a shame!

In my labors as a missionary I have tried to approach the people according to their circumstances and make myself approachable to all. I like to love and I like to be loved. The place of my preference to labor is in the country among the poor, the lowly, those whose maintenance is scanty. In the roughest log cabin I can find ease and infinite consolation if the inmates will hearken to my voice. And I care not of what color they are, either.

A feeling is growing within me to love the natural and to cherish less the unnatural and unreal. I find natural surroundings encourage natural feelings. Railroads, piles of brick, the bustle of the busy street, the rattle of the wheels of industry, have greatly lost their fascination so far as I am concerned. The less I see of them the more serene contentment I enjoy. Give me hills, dales, brooks, and rivers. Give me the mighty oak under whose beautiful foliage I have so frequently prostrated myself in honor of the Supreme Being, the maker of all that is good, noble, and sublime. The eloquence of its moaning leaves surpasses the eloquence of the pictures of art.

Editors Herald:—Elders John Davis and D. E. Powell have been with us for a time uplifting the "gospel standard." Christmas Day one brother was "buried with Christ in baptism and raised to walk in newness of life," for which we praise Him to whom all praise is due.

The brethren were untiring in their efforts to help make our Christmas tree and exercises a success, and all declared them to be so. The church was nicely decorated; the tree looked very pretty; the program passed off nicely, and every one was remembered. All the children, both old and young, seemed happy.

I was greatly interested in the article on "Entertainments" in the HERALD a short time ago.

I agree with the sister in her thoughts about them; for I have noticed many times that children (and all are not small children either) are inclined to be too irreverent, too careless, and too noisy in God's house. A house dedicated to the Father's use should be thought of as very sacred, and unless we are very careful in conducting our entertainments we may thoughtlessly encourage the children to forget this sacredness.

I should like to ask, Why do the Saints, not believing that December 25 is Christ's birthday, observe Christmas? Is it because custom and the churches of the world keep it as his birthday? To me, Christmas has always been a gift-time for remembering loved friends, and nothing more. Why do not we, as a church, keep the day that has been given by revelation?

We have a little church waiting to be dedicated, which we hope may be accomplished before this new year closes.

Hoping that this year will see a greater effort from all to forward his work, I am,

Your sister in the faith,

AIMEE D. COLE HOLMES.

Editors Herald:—My wife joined the church about eighteen months before I did, while I was absent from home. When I returned I felt a little angry because she had joined, as I thought, without investigating the work thoroughly, although I noticed a wonderful change in her. At night she kneeled to offer a silent prayer to God. One year previous to this I had started to try to live a better life, so I knelt with her and asked God that I might know if the church my wife had joined was his church. My prayer was answered about eight months afterward, when I was better prepared to receive it. In these eight months I was investigating the work at every opportunity. I had been reading the Bible, and finally became convinced the everlasting gospel had been restored to earth. But I scarcely knew whether to unite with the church or not, although I felt it to be my duty. Under the circumstances I thought others might think I was not a fit subject for baptism; but my whole heart was for the gospel. Part of this time I was in the lumber woods. I took sick, but at night I managed to get out to the woods to my usual place of prayer. I did not go to the woods to pray because I was ashamed of the gospel, but I did not believe God wanted me to offer up a prayer under the same roof and in the same room where there were other souls cursing his name and telling vulgar stories. So for this reason I always went in secret. I prayed as one of his children, for I felt that I was one, although not yet baptized. I asked that if it were his will I might arise in the morning with good health. He has told afflicted ones to pray. When I arose from my knees I knew I would be well in the morning; and, praise to his name, I was.

Soon after this I went home, and determined to obey the ordinances. Then came severe trials. I had never taken God's name in vain up till this time; but in those two weeks I cursed in my heart at times; and at other times I would feel relief for a few minutes, and then I would pray to God to help me overcome the evil spirits. This struggle lasted about two weeks and then the evil spirit left me. I do not mean to say that I am not now troubled with trials, but I mean by God's grace to overcome.

Dear Saints, the Evil One knows when a man is about to unite with the church of God, and he will do all in his power to hinder a man from doing God's will. I started out in my younger days to serve God, but in another faith, and did not have the Evil One to work so hard against me as when I came into the gospel of our Lord and Savior.

I know this is the gospel of Christ, for I have tasted of the heavenly gift and his good word, and there is nothing for which I would exchange my part in this work.

Editors Herald:—It is now more than nine years since I obeyed the angelic message, and the more I study it and obey it the brighter, grander, and more sublime it seems to me. Mine has not been the privilege of beholding great miracles, receiving angelic ministrations, and daytime visions, etc.; the good Master has not seen fit to minister to me in such ways, but his kindness, mercies, and sympathies have been manifested to me in times of trial. His Spirit has spoken to me in the time of the exercise of faith; dreams and visions have come to me in the peaceful hours of slumber, and all for the purpose of encouragement. Thanks to his name. I have also had chastisements to endure.

Happy should ye be who have received the message, and have passed through the waters of regeneration. Arouse ye who idly stand; ye slothful; ye indolent; ye lovers of the world more than lovers of God; ye who count the commandments of God as secondary matter, by continuing to live in your sins, serving God in outward expression, and then only when it pleases you; betaking yourselves from the house of prayer, making merry when prayer is wont to be made; ye who besot yourselves with the filthy weed that God has said is not for man, thereby stultifying your mental faculties. We should as Saints, the light of the world, the salt of the earth, take into consideration the admonition of Paul in Hebrews 12:1: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." If anger is your sin set it aside and substitute pleasantness, cheerfulness, and peace. If intemperance is your fault set it aside and put on temperance. If pride, arrogance, or pomp is your fault set it aside and be humble, meek. If the love of worldly pleasure enticeth you, sacrifice it; set it aside and become interested in the work of God which is real pleasure and will reach beyond the vale. Rejoice, ye who are chastened of the Lord, for you the Lord loveth.

The Lord has promised his help in times of trial if trust is placed in him, and so will it be with every one of his sons and daughters. We may see our plans and work we wish to accomplish, fail; but the work of God will triumph in his own due time according to our faithfulness in his commands.

The new year comes upon us now. Will we pass into its fast fleeting time without thinking of the great sacrifice the Lord of all the earth has made for us, and not set aside our besetting sins, and make efforts to come up higher before him?

Word from Wales.

Editors Herald:—This is the first day of the new year, and I wish to give the readers of the HERALD a brief history of the work here, as I find it. There are but six branches of the church in Wales: Cardiff, Lydney, Nantyglo, Porth, Llanelly, and Aberaman; at all these places there are a few active workers, and they need help. What should that help be and in what way can it be of some benefit that is lasting, not temporary? I notice that it is the general opinion of brethren on the ground at the above places that they want the kind of help that can come and stay with them, not over Saturday and Sunday, but several; visiting from house to house, distributing tracts and notices of time and place of meetings, and doing all the preaching. While this is not asking too much of the missionaries, what are the local forces going to do but attend services and listen to the brother missionary for six or seven weeks or more; that is all. Very wise and possibly instructive, but is that the class of help and work needed, and is it the best plan to pursue for the good of the work here in Wales? I think not. In the revelations, section 125, paragraph 13, the church was instructed to send the Bishop with Bro. G. T. Griffiths to England (that includes this mission and Scotland) to aid in organizing the affairs of the church, organizing the local ministry, and determining what help in the missionary field may be required from America, and the ordination of a high priest to officiate in the office of bishop. These brethren have come and done their work, and as part of that was to organize the ministry locally, which was to form into quorums, this being done, what are your members of these quorums to do? Surely something; not to lie around the branches Sunday after Sunday and let the missionary or your branch president do all the preaching. If you do this what will be the nature of your report to your district conference or to your quorums? Just simply say you are strong in the faith and attended so many meetings? That is good, but the members can say all of that, and they are not expected to report.

In order that the fruits of this organized ministry may appear something is to be done; possibly I can not explain this any better than to state that the 14th and 15th of December last there was a special conference held at Birmingham, England, called by Bro. G. T. Griffiths. I was invited to attend. At one of the sessions Bro. Griffiths called the attention of the elders and priests that were not branch officers to their duty, and that was to get out on Sundays if they could not during the week, and go from door to door, take tracts, try to get a place to preach, and if they could only get three or four to speak to do so. Let the strong take the weak, the elder the priest. This advice is in harmony with the law and order of the church, and let us in Wales move right out in our respective fields. The branch can get along without us elders and priest that are not chosen as its officers, and in the meantime we will do some good, at least we will be in keeping with our calling.

In some respects this is a good field for missionary work. First, because it is one solid mass of people, the traveling expense not much. To give you some idea: We went from here to Cardiff, by way of Newport, to Merthyr, about thirty miles. Then we came back by way of Pontypridd, about thirty miles. Total sixty miles. In all we will have passed through twenty-six good large towns on this line, over one million people. Why, it is all towns and people; and go out in some other directions and you find it the same. England, Scotland, and Wales are not as large as the State of Missouri, yet there are over forty million people, and I believe that here there are as many of the blood of Ephraim as in any part of the civilized world. It is true that they are at the present time hard to reach, but we can see good reasons for this when we look at the evils of Brighamism and remember that upon these isles the Salt Lake people have put in some of their hardest work, and their teaching was indeed disgusting to the honest.

I will relate a dream I had some six years ago that I believe will explain the matter more fully than I can otherwise, and I might state now that part of it has been fulfilled, and I have strong hopes the balance will be. I thought I was here on a mission, down near Porth, South Wales, and the people were hard to reach. It seemed that they all had their backs toward me, and I could not get a chance to speak to them; they looked upon me as a wolf. I looked at them and said, Well, they seem like good people, well-dressed and intelligent, but it seems the name of Latter Day Saint is so disgusting to them that they can not endure anything in that line. I was sorry that I had come to this land, and I became very much discouraged, and found fault with the church for sending me to a people that would not hear the truth. I said, Well, I do not think God had anything to do in sending me here. I could have stayed at home and had a welcome. At this time a voice called me by name and said, William, you must have patience; these people are justified in a measure for their conduct. I wondered at that statement. For, said he, in the early days when the gospel came to this land, they embraced it willingly, by the hundreds and thousands, and the power of God like a wave went over all the land; but wickedness like a flood came into the church, and caused the honest in heart to turn away. I could see the good reasoning there was in this, also the justice and mercy of God. I then prayed that I might have power to reach that people, for as yet I could see them in large gatherings with their backs still towards me. I got up on some platform to speak, but I was still alone. No spirit to preach; but I raised my hand heavenward and said, What a pity that the gospel of the Son of God came to this land with its gifts and blessings, and that wicked men came into the church and brought such disgrace upon the cause. I thought that just as I began to speak the blessed Spirit came upon me and it seemed that the words penetrated the hearts of the people so that one by one they turned their faces towards me. When I closed they came up and took me by the hand and gave me a hearty reception. The prejudice was gone; they could see that Brighamism was not the true Latter Day Saintism that first greeted the ears of thousands upon the land.

That is the condition and the state of mind the people are in, and it will take something more than man to reach them. I have prepared a leaflet with several statements showing that the evils of the Salt Lake people were not taught in our books nor the true Latter Day Saint Church. I have at the bottom of this paper a notice of time and place of our meeting. I think it will be one means of reaching the people so they will come and hear.

What a pleasure it would be to take the gospel to a people that never had heard of the wickedness of Brighamism.

I wish to relate a vision that mother had that confirms the statement above where it says that the people in a measure were justified. My grandfather, William Roberts, lived in Dowlais, South Wales, at the time the gospel was brought to Wales. The elders were going from house to house delivering tracts and preaching where they could get an opening. The religious sects got together and agreed that they would not let the elders hold meetings in their houses, and concluded that if any of the members did they should be brought before their respective churches. Grandfather was one of the leading men in the Baptist Church, and he did not indorse the move; still he thought it best to be quiet. But he thought of a plan that would work and he could hear the elders preach, and his Baptist brethren could not church him either. He came to my mother, and calling her by name said, Betsie, I want you and David (that was my father) to come and rent our two front rooms. Father and mother were members of this church of Saints, and they were glad to get the rooms, for they could, as grandpa said, hold meetings if they wished. That was his motive, for he was very friendly to the Saints and wanted to hear their doctrine. This was all done, some meetings held there; but shortly after father and mother had to move away. They were advised to go to Glenneath so that father could look after the branch. In time the evils of the dark days came, father withdrew from the church, removed to the States in 1865; he and all his family joining this church. One pleasant spring morning in the month of May, Sunday, we were all at breakfast; mother said, I saw father last night; he came to my bed. I know I was not asleep. He called me by name and asked me how long since Joseph Smith received the gospel. And before she could tell to the day he answered the question himself. Now, he said, you know I opened the door for the elders to come and preach. Mother remembered that circumstance and said, Yes. Well, he said, I had made up my mind to come into the church, but I heard of the wickedness that was taught and practiced in the church, and upon investigation I found the reports true. I could not indorse that, so I concluded that I had better stay where I was. Now, he said, some of you will have to be baptized for me; and he disappeared. I remember saying to mother, Grandfather is dead. We made a note of the date and time as best we could, as mother said she could not say just what time or hour in the night it was, but in the course of two months we got a letter with the news of grandfather's death. There was a difference of about twelve hours in the time of his death and the visit by the bedside of mother, his daughter. He died in Dowlais, South Wales. We were living in Brookfield, Ohio, about four thousand five hundred miles apart; long distance to travel in twelve hours. At the time of this vision I was young in age and in the work, and there were in our neighborhood several factions of Mormons, about six I think; and while I was strong in the faith, this, though it was a vision of the night, confirmed me in it more. Yes, some of you must be baptized for me. We were all members of this church at the time.

Since coming here and looking over the field I am confirmed that thousands of good honest souls have passed away and would have been Latter Day Saints had it not been for the abominable dogmas of Salt Lake Mormons; but like Grandpa Roberts, they could not fall in with it, and I believe that there are many more living here who will yet see the light and take hold.

The Lord says in revelation 125 that the Bishop and Bro. Griffiths are to determine what help in the mission field may be required from America. Will the church be willing next General Conference to comply with the recommendations of these brethren? I do not know just what their report and recommend will be, but I infer from the wording of the revelation that the Lord certainly gives us to understand that we need missionaries. Just think, forty million people and only four missionaries!

I do not wish to be too fast, but we need here in South Wales twenty active missionaries; yes, we could use two hundred and keep them at work. But I know that it is no use to ask for that; but in my judgment for the next two years the church should make a special effort to supply this field. I hope that the report of Brn. Kelley and Griffiths will be in that line. Wales is in need of help so bad that I believe that the angels of God will speak in our behalf. The spring, summer, and fall months are suitable for holding out-door meetings. I am told that there is no trouble to get a good hearing at this time of the year, and for four months yet we can not hold out-door meetings, so we will have to rent rooms.

We intend soon to go up near Merthyr, the old stamping ground of the church in early days, also of this in 1865 to 1870; but nothing is there now. I am informed that there are many old Saints that have left the Brighamites, and that there are hundreds of their children that stand off. I do not know how true this, but will find out. Take it ten miles each way from Merthyr and it is a solid field of people, where there used to be thousands of saints.

It will take money the next four months to rent halls and advertise. I hope the Saints in the States will not forget us. Some are doing well in the matter. We shall not go to any expense of renting halls if we can get along without. We shall hold meetings in the branches when it will be advisable, and shall keep them up as long as the interest will justify.

I have just delivered, from door to door, five hundred notices of the time and place of our meetings and subjects to be considered. We shall hold the meetings as long as the interest is good. Bro. G. T. Griffiths has promised to come and help us.

The Eastern District conference meets here January 11 and 12. Bro. F. J. Pierce when last heard from was at Llanelly, South Wales, in good spirits. We hope to see him soon.

In conclusion I again wish to say that we shall look for a good supply of the missionary force here next spring. Come to stay two years, I believe that I am safe in saying that a large ingathering will be the result. We want twenty humble, active men. Some we can recommend that are all ready on this ground.

Editors Herald:—I am still in the faith, although the last year was one of trial. Yet I feel God has blessed me, and I am willing to stand much for the cause. I appreciate the HERALD much: I would as soon do without anything to eat one day in the week as without the HERALD. There are many who do not take it. I have more money ever since I have taken it than I did before. There are some who can not pay for the paper or pay anything to the college, or tithing. I used to be too poor; but I began to pay something to help the cause along, and I had more money at hand than before. Now if any one will try this I think they will see I am right. When you get anything, remember the Lord your God and his cause, and go to the Bishop's agent and pay all that you think you should, and ask the Lord to bless it; and if you do that in faith he will bless you more than you pay. We find in Isaiah 1: 27: "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." We may have a home in Missouri, but that will not save us if we do not God's will. We are told to lay up treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt. How can we do it? By doing what God has commanded. The past year has been one we may remember, as the drought has been general. Still I see God's work has prospered, according to the report of the missionaries. May we all try this year to do more than last.

There is one thing more that I find has helped me, and I think it will help others. That is for every one who has a family to read a chapter every night and morning and then ask God to guide you through night and day. Some will say they have no time. You certainly can spend thirty minutes night and morning. Rise that much earlier.

I have received a great blessing this year. I have felt for many years that I had no friends, and I could not help it. Now I feel that I have many friends and the best friend is the Father in heaven. I have had evidence that God has heard my prayers. My determination is to try to advance the cause of Christ.

F. T. DOBIE.

MANCHESTER, England, December 29.

Dear Herald:—Since I wrote you last I have been busily engaged in preaching and looking after matters requiring the attention of the missionary in charge.

On November 16 Bro. Kelley and wife sailed for home. A number of the brethren and sisters along with myself saw them safely aboard the Campania's tender at the Liverpool landing stage. The day was cold and the fog was so dense that the vessel was unable to approach the stage.

We are pleased to report that Bro. Kelley made a good record while on Britain's shores. He has left a lasting impression here and we feel assured that the wisdom of the Lord has been plainly manifested in his coming here. It is indeed a pleasure to be associated with men in gospel work who seek to perform the task allotted them without fear or favor. His companion, Sr. Kelley, has also influenced the people for good and will be kindly remembered by them for years to come. She took a deep interest in Sunday-school and Religio work, where her efforts are beginning to show fruit.

On Monday, November 18, I visited Huddersfield, spending one day and night with Elder E. R. Dewsnup, former president of Graceland College. We hope to pay them a longer visit in future, as it is a good place to rest and recuperate.

On the 19th I arrived in Leeds and operated there for a week in both branches, viz., New Wortley and Burley. I found the officers and Saints in that city alive in the work. Quite an interest was manifest among outsiders, too. I felt blessed in my labors. Four or five were baptized during my sojourn. I was treated with great kindness by all. I stayed with Brn. Tom Roberts, Issott, and Girdham.

My next stop was at Sheffield, where I was domiciled with Elder John Austin and family. This branch is not in as flourishing a condition as we would like to see it. However we believe that things will adjust themselves in time, therefore let all exercise patience and be more diligent in the service of the Lord.

The Sheffield District conference met in the new chapel at Clay Cross which reflects credit on the few Saints in Clay Cross on November 30 and December 1. It was stated by those in attendance that it was the best conference they had attended for many years. Harmony prevailed throughout. I continued preaching every night for a whole week, the Saints being greatly interested in the meetings, and believe that much good was accomplished. My physical wants were supplied by Bro. Naylor and family, and the rest of the Saints looked after my temporal wants.

Some people seem to think that after they have kept the tithing law they have done their whole duty and that no more is required of them in a financial way, forgetting that Israel not only robbed God in withholding tithing but also in not honoring the law of free-will offerings. Those people who pay their tithing should remember that they have only paid that which is the Lord's under the law and not their own, as only nine tenths is theirs. It is therefore expected that they pay free-will offerings, contributions, and oblations from their own, i. e., from the nine tenths. The Lord has said through the modern seer that his servants are to be known in the following manner: "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward; and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples."—Doc. and Cov. 83: 16.

A large majority of the Saints in Europe honor this command. However, there are others who I am sorry to say do not seem to know that there is such a statement in the books.

December 7 found me in Leicester where I preached three or four sermons. This branch is under the watchcare of Bro. William Ecclestone. He is aided in his ministerial duties by Brn. Norton and son, and others. Bro. Pearson, who has been actively engaged in the work here, was very poorly in health and at last advices was no better. The Saints here have a nice little hall in which they meet and they appear to be in a fair condition spiritually. I truly enjoyed my association with the Saints here who are trying hard under their peculiar circumstances to keep the standard of King Emmanuel before the people.

From Leicester I went to Stafford where I stayed a couple of days at the home of Bro. John Dyche. We had a very fair turnout considering the cold weather and the lateness of the hour, viz., eight p. m. and half-past eight p. m., at which the brethren in the shoe factories had to work because of the holidays. Brn. George and Joseph Greenwood and old Bro. Ecclestone, with the blind sister, keep the camp-fire blazing in the old town of Stafford.

I reached Birmingham December 11 and was met at the station by our worthy Bro. Frank Swan, at whose home I was made welcome. We held meeting at Icnield Port Road Branch where Bro. Swan presides. On Saturday and Sunday we met in conference at the Priestly Road meeting-room, which was one of the best conferences it was ever my pleasure to attend in Europe. Peace, brotherly love, and good will prevailed from opening to close. There was a good representation of the brethren throughout the district. Bro. W. Lewis, missionary in charge of South Wales, was present. We were pleased to meet him. His efforts have been reported of favorably since his arrival in Wales. We felt that our brother had the spirit of his office with him, and that his appointment to that mission would prove a blessing to himself and the people. Good reports are coming in from Bro. Frank Pierce who is in Western Wales.

We expect to attend the district conferences of Eastern and Western Wales on the 11th and 19th prox. I go to Carnarvon, North Wales, for a few days, where Bro. Robert Lloyd and family reside, but will return here in time to attend the Manchester District conference on January 4 and 5, 1902.

I wish to state to the officers of the European Mission, viz., elders and priests, that it is desired of them that they respect the request made of them by the secretary of the mission, Elder W. R. Armstrong, in regard to giving him historical and other information from time to time; also that of the secretary of the Seventh Quorum of Elders, Elder S. F. Mather.

Christmas has come and gone. I ate Christmas dinner with Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., and family. We shall long remember the hospitality of our brother and family and will be glad to reciprocate when occasion offers.

During my stay in Manchester I have made my home at the house of Bro. and Sr. James Clarke and that of their son-in-law, Bro. and Sr. Green. They have treated me with great kindness, which I heartily appreciate, and tender my thanks for the same.

Editor Saints' Herald:—I was particularly gratified to read a report recently from one of our efficient missionaries laboring in the Fremont District stating that a branch organization had been effected at Bartlett, Iowa. There was a sense of satisfaction in learning who the officials of the branch were.

Years ago I performed considerable missionary labor there, and while visiting at this point last spring my impressions were identical with the developments in the case. I wrote a letter to the HERALD stating that I thought the Saints were ripe for organization and spoke in commendatory terms of Bro. Samuel Orton and others. Though I had impressions concerning who would become the branch officials, I refrained from expressing an opinion either publicly or privately. It has ever been my studied purpose to stand for discipline and order in this church, and particularly among the ministry, and during the eleven years which I have spent in ministerial service I have ever refrained from interference in matters relating to territory outside of my prescribed field, and when the Saints at Bartlett expressed to me their desires for a branch organization I unqualifiedly told them it was their duty to consult with the constituted authorities in their field and not with itinerant and transient missionaries. I am assured that the brethren did right in organizing a branch and I feel confident that the men selected to fill the offices of the branch were men ordained of God, and, if they will prove true to their trust, they will bring honor to God and lasting good to many souls. It rests with them to determine whether this heaven-imposed confidence shall be misplaced or not. Long may the branch live to become a power for good in that part of the country. There are some earnest Saints there; likewise some noble friends still without the fold. May the Saints live their religion and by exemplary lives so preach the gospel in act that the honest-hearted aliens may be led to yield obedience to the gospel mandate.

While in my old mission field, Council Bluffs, I endeavored by word and act to enthuse the Saints with the advent of Bro. Cooper and the necessity for coöperation all along the line in his behalf. No one rejoices more than I do in the reported success of Bro. Cooper in the immediate locality where spiritual treason was perpetrated some fifty-four years ago. The recent ordinations of Brn. Riley and Christiansen will be prolific of good. I had impressions as to Bro. Riley's work years ago.

Our annual branch election is a thing of the past. General unanimity was apparent. There was only one nominee for president; likewise for presiding priest. Two teachers and two deacons were elected.

We start out under more favorable conditions than at any time in several years. We have no frictions, no petty jealousies, no dog-in-the-manger characters. All of the brethren who are spiritually alive in the work express a willingness to do what they can to roll on the cause. Outside of the constituted authorities of the branch we have very little help.

We lack materially in spirituality, but this seems to be prevalent everywhere. I would welcome anything, even a repetition of the old-time persecution, something like Bro. Daniel MacGregor has been undergoing recently in Canada, anything rather than this lethargy if it would result in more enthusiasm among the Saints. Life is becoming too easy for a great many. It is no apparent sacrifice for them to be nominal members of the church and the result is death spiritually. May the choosing time soon come.

My heart rejoiced when I read the recent article from Brn. Kelley and Hilliard in HERALD and Ensign. I propose to read the article before every branch in Southern California, and permit the Saints to make a practical comment in attempting to place themselves in line therewith. The article has the true ring to it. It contains that for which some of us have been longing and praying these many years. This is the entering wedge to the fulfillment of the separation of the sheep from the goats.

Congratulations on the improved style of the HERALD. Some say they did not know the paper in its new dress, and as usual some think it is becoming, others are dubious. We shall not render final judgment until we become accustomed to the present form. It is modern and up to the times, however. The HERALD is worthy to be placed in any home. There was a time when many of the Saints were afraid to give the HERALD to their friends because there was so much controversy in its columns.

This objection has been reduced to a minimum of late years. I trust that your appeal for subscribers will not fall on deaf ears.

Bro. and Sr. Daniel Hougas are settled in Los Angeles for the winter.

The tourist travel to California is unprecedented for this time of the year. Rooming-houses charging reasonable rates are crowded to overflowing; parlors and general utility rooms being converted into bedrooms to accommodate the crowds. The actual tourist travel has scarcely begun. The "Angelus," the largest and best equipped hotel west of Chicago, has recently been completed, but it had not opened its doors to the public a week until the proprietor was compelled to look around for accommodations for the overflow of patrons.

Los Angeles has been having an unprecedented era of expansion. Real estate men have been reaping a harvest. There is a lull now, however, owing to the uncertain arrival of the overdue rains.

So far this has been a very unsatisfactory winter. First, heavy frosts in the lowlands and frost belts. Following immediately on the havoc wrought by the frosts we had unusually heavy north winds which beat the oranges and lemons off the trees and ploughed up the grain already planted in many quarters of the immense grain fields. It is estimated that there were a thousand car-loads of oranges destroyed, and much of the fruit remaining on the trees is so damaged and bruised that it will only sell as "culls." Early in the season we had several good rains but there were no rains in December and none so far this year. The early rains started the vegetation and now everything not irrigated is sear and brown, and unless rain comes soon all crops dependent upon the rain will be ruined.

You see we are not immune from some of the troubles which you have in the East and Middle West. However, California could go without rain for years better than the eastern country could for one season. The irrigating system is so general that, barring grain and beet lands, we can manage to get along. Again, while we have frosts which nip our tender citrus fruits it is only comparable to some of your early nights in September when Jack Frost nips your tomato vines. We have no cyclones, no blizzards, no people dying from sunstroke, no instances of cessation of life from freezing. This is a great country.

Bro. R. R. Dana has gone to ranching; his son has been in poor health for a number of years and he thinks in this way he can be of service in helping his home folks and thus keep the Bible injunction,—provide for his own.

Sr. Jeannette Phillips, second daughter of T. J. Phillips, of Ottumwa, Iowa, and who was well known by many of the church people, died at the "Hospital of the Good Samaritan" in this city December 19. Her death was very unexpected. She went there to undergo a slight operation. She was assured that it was in no sense dangerous, but what was my surprise just four days later to call at the hospital and find her dead. The doctor who performed the operation said she died from a ruptured esophagus due to excessive vomiting, caused by the chloroform administered. I am told that this is an unprecedented thing in medical history. The papers proceeded to make a sensation over the matter and I learn very unreliable things were published in some eastern papers. It is evident that our sister died from blood poisoning. Whether it was caused from the operation or, as the doctor thinks, from the ruptured esophagus, will possibly never be known. Jeannette was a good girl, and during the time she was here in California my wife and I became much attached to her. Her death was a shock to us. Her body was shipped to Cleveland, Iowa, and buried in the old burying ground by the side of her mother.

Last night, by request, I addressed the Cambro-American Society. All present expressed appreciation and there was quite a number who inquired as to the location of our church. They promised to come to our meetings.

The Los Angeles Branch is doing nobly in a financial way.

Since I came to labor in their midst we have built one among the best structures in the church at a cost of nearly three thousand dollars. In two years time we paid off over two thousand dollars. When it is considered that this branch is carrying the heavy end of the burden in supplying the Bishop with funds for the maintenance of the missionaries and the poor, you can have some estimate of what they are doing. Many of the Saints in this branch have for years been paying as tithing one tenth of their net earnings besides giving liberally in free-will offerings. Their testimony is that the Lord has wonderfully blessed them in so doing.

The Saints all over the district responded nobly to the college call. If every other district will do as well Bro. Elvin will be compelled to seek another position or wield his quill along other lines.

We look longingly forward to the coming General Conference and occasionally entertain the hope to be present; but, ah! there is the trouble. If it did not cost so much money it would not puncture our air-castles.

Bro. Albert Carmichael, who has been selected as one of the general church auditing committee, expects to start east in a couple of weeks. Bro. and Sr. Elbert A. Smith contemplate returning to Lamoni this spring. I learn incidentally that Bro. Fred Blair expects to do likewise, and we wonder who are going to remain.

We follow the "Jots" man and sympathize with him in his varied experiences. He never received such a cold reception in California as he is receiving in Wisconsin. We also note with pleasure the reports from the East relative to Bro. D. A. Anderson.

My time has been considerably taken up of late in looking after the interests of a helpless young waif who has wormed his way so completely into our affections that the possibilities are he will become a permanent adjunct of the household. I go to San Bernardino next week to hold a protracted series of meetings.

Yours for the ultimate triumph of truth,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

FULTON, Kentucky, January 12.

Editors Herald:—The work is on the move here. Bro. W. R. Smith spent the holidays with us, as did also Brn. Samuel and Jess Roberts, of Independence, Missouri, formerly of Paris, Tennessee. It was cheering to hear them tell of the good prayer-meetings and Sunday-school at Independence; makes us long to be in Zion's land. Bro. Samuel Roberts did not tarry long with us, but proceeded to the home of Sr. Eulah Cook near Sedalia, Kentucky. They were united in wedlock December 30, and on January 2 started for their new home at Independence.

Bro. W. R. Smith preached evenings from the 25th to the 29th at the home of the writer, enjoying good liberty. After resting for a few nights he began a series of meetings at Fulton, Kentucky, which lasted nearly a week. There seemed to be a good interest aroused. This is the first effort at Fulton, except one sermon by the writer last fall. Bro. Smith is well liked by all the Saints and makes friends wherever he goes.

If it pleases the Lord of the harvest and the General Conference we would be glad to have Brn. Smith, Roberts, and T. C. Kelley returned to the Southeastern Mission for the next conference year. This is a large field and the field is opening up very rapidly, especially in Kentucky and Tennessee. There are many calls for preaching that can not be filled.

District conference will convene with Foundry Hill Branch, February 5, and in the meantime Bro. Roberts is expected to preach for us. We shall endeavor to secure a hall for Bro. Roberts to preach in, as a private house is not large enough to accommodate the crowd, and in that way we could also better advertise the meetings.

I was a little surprised upon receiving the HERALD in its new form. I do not see how the Saints can do without the church papers. It is good to read the cheering letters and the inspiring articles the HERALD contains, and to exercise the opportunity its pages afford for the interchange of thought, thus growing in the knowledge of the truth and coming to a unity of the faith. Sometimes, however, we may be disappointed at not seeing our efforts in print; such has been the fate of ye scribe, but I am always willing to give way for better talent, allowing our worthy editor to be the judge.

Ever praying for the advancement of truth,
J. R. McCLAIN.

HAMILTON, Scotland.

Editors Herald:—I hope that the Scottish, English, Irish, and Welsh brethren will have made themselves acquainted with the appeal of our Bro. G. T. Griffiths, as money is urgently needed for tracts and halls. There is good arable land here that will produce good wheat, but we require money to buy seed. "Tracts containing the word," and also seed sowers who realize that the work is not theirs but the Master's who sent them.

We recognize the wisdom in sending the Bishop to England with Gomer T. Griffiths. Bro. Kelley has made our duty plain in regard to tithing, and I intend to comply with the law whenever I have money to do so. We were benefited greatly by the advice of Brn. Kelley and Griffiths; the latter gave us a lecture on the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods.

Brn. Griffiths and J. W. Rushton ordained Bro. Miller to the Aaronic priesthood. Since then the Lord has added to the church three more souls, Brn. Hepburn, Browning, and Wilson. The two latter are heads of families, so it is probable their wives will obey ere long. A good many here are interested in the work; some either lack the necessary courage or are counting the cost. There are also a few in Carluke who seem to be interested.

In the summer months Bro. Rushton had a busy time of it, preaching at Carluke on Monday nights and sometimes talking to the people and missing the train, necessitating a walk of about twelve miles, arriving home at midnight. Tuesday night preaching at Glasgow on the Cathedral Square; Wednesday nights at Hamilton New Cross; Thursday nights again at Glasgow, and Fridays generally occupied discussing with Plymouth brethren or some other persons; Sunday occupied with morning prayer and sacrament; evening preaching in the house, and afterwards at the New Cross in the open air. So altogether he was pretty busy. Since the cold nights set in he has not been able to attend to all of it for various reasons. Glasgow is left alone, and open air preaching here discontinued, but work continues in the halls in Hamilton and Carluke. We get large, interested crowds outside, sometimes numbering between four and five hundred, but they will not be induced to enter the hall. Gross darkness seems to cover the earth; there has been a good deal of persecution and from those professing Christ—wanting miracles to be performed. We feel the Lord is with us and expect a good ingathering if we are faithful.

It is probable that we will have a branch organized here shortly, and be better prepared for opening up the work in Glasgow.

We were sorry to hear of Bro. Williamson's sad death after being appointed to work here; it does seem strange that so many useful workers are taken away. It is true, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

I notice Aberdeen mentioned as a probable field. We have only one brother there, Bro. Scott, who has not been privileged to be with us often. His parents live up to the light they have received. Then there is our good aged Bro. Black in Edinburgh, who I am sure is longing to see the gospel preached. We miss two of our number, Bro. and Sr. Cairns, who have gone to Kansas City, U. S. A.

I have no desire to be a faultfinder, but a great deal has been said about tea and coffee drinking, that tea and coffee are injurious, I do not doubt it, but to argue that tea and coffee exclusively are meant when the Word of Wisdom expressly says hot drinks seems unwarranted; this means any and all drinks, whether water, milk, or whisky. If tea or coffee be taken cold or lukewarm then they can not be hot drinks. Does it not mean here the temperance and not necessarily the doctrine? In the absence of more evidence I do not think our brother is justified in ridiculing Saints sipping tea or coffee, but if a brother or sister can show me that tea (the leaf or decoction from the leaf) is meant, I will give it up because it is God's will. I quite agree with him about tobacco, as that is mentioned in the Word of Wisdom, and we are satisfied it is a dirty, unhealthy habit.

A Testimony for Graceland.

During the Autumn of 1901 while I was engaged in missionary work as a priest, I fasted and prayed to know if I should solicit the Saints, through correspondence, as well as those I would meet, for money in the interest of Graceland College. In my pleadings with God I asked him to demonstrate to me that such a course would be acceptable by placing means in my hands that I might correspond with the Saints. No person knew I was fasting with such interest, not even Bro. Vaughn my colaborer. In the evening mentioned, after fasting we went to meeting. After church we went five miles to stop over night with a brother. While in our room before retiring Bro. Vaughn and I were standing at the center table. A young man entered our room and said: "Have either of you gentlemen five dollars?"

I answered: "I have five dollars, which is church money."

He said: "Give Mr. Vaughn that five dollars, and you take this," handing me a ten dollar note. The young man is not a member of the church.

I asked God to demonstrate the fact to me so I would be satisfied, and surely I considered it so, for before I retired for the night there was ample means in my hands for correspondence.

Editors Herald:—Part of the winter I have been preaching in this city of eighty-five thousand inhabitants; but it is difficult for Latter Day Saints to get a hearing.

I see an article in the Autumn Leaves about Booker T. Washington and his work; and again I see a description of his work in Ram's Horn. In my opinion the only safe way to commence a college is to collect money to buy land, and add machine shops, agricultural works, and let men and women learn trades along with their education, and thus equip themselves for solid work in the church.

I see the Presbyterians have such a college in Missouri. We ought to be successful in such an undertaking, because we have the assurance that we are engaged in the Lord's work to build up Zion. But it would take a good bit of labor on our part. No time to loiter.

L. M. SOLENERGER.

LAMAR, Colorado, December 29.

Editors Herald:—We are few in number, but are trying to hold up the gospel in this community. We have Sunday-school and preaching every Sunday at our schoolhouse, with fair attendance.

We are not organized at present, but we expect Bro. J. B. Roush to come before long to effect an organization. We have to meet a great deal of prejudice. There is quite a branch of the Christian Catholic or Dowieite people at this place, and they do plenty of mud slinging, but we hope by the grace of God to live down all opposition.

December 25 there was a meeting of all the Saints at Bro. L. J. Bradshaw's, at which all were present, myself speaking the words which united Roy Gilbert Wood and Sr. Lena May Bradshaw for life. Sister Lena is one of those noble young Saints who has always stood firm for the work, and Mr. Wood is a quiet young man of good character. We contemplate for them a bright future, and hope that she may guide her husband into truth and righteousness.

Editors Herald:—I had thought I would try to get along without the HERALD, as it is such hard times to get money, especially by those who live on farms, and have had such poor crops that they have nothing to sell. But after taking the HERALD for twenty-five years it seems almost like giving up one of the family to have it stop coming; so I have decided to take it another year. The past year has been one of trials to me in many ways. On the eighth of last January my husband was taken from us; had been sick but a day or two. Then in April my oldest daughter died, leaving a family of little ones. Those who have passed through similar trials can understand what those trials are to endure. But a loving Father has truly verified his promise unto me, who has said he would never leave those who love and trust him, neither permit their burdens to be greater than they can bear. Yours in gospel bonds, MRS. GUILLETTA F. SIMMONS.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Out yonder in the broad, full glare
Of many lamps thine own might pale;
And thy sweet song amid the roar
Of many voices slowly fail;
While these thy kindred wandered on Uncheered, unlighted, to the end.
Near to thy hand thy mission lies,
Wherever sad hearts need a friend."

Dear Sisters and Mothers Who Read the Home Column:—At the beginning of the New Year we have something about which we wish a special word with you. To us it is pleasant news and we believe it will be the same to you.

It is some years now since under the fostering care of the Board of Publication a fund called the Birth Offering Fund was started in the Hope, the proceeds of the same to be used in publishing juvenile books for the children of the church. For a time this fund was well sustained, and many who are now old enough to read the Hope will find their names, together with the time and place of their birth, also the offering sent in by father, mother, aunt, uncle, grandma, or it may chance some proud little brother or sister, recorded in back numbers of their paper. Three volumes were issued, the last one, "In The Footsteps of Jesus," being written in obedience to the direct instruction of the Holy Spirit. The edition of this last has long since been exhausted, and up to this time has not been followed by others.

Now, however, we have the good news to tell you that the fourth volume of this series is in the hands of the printer and will soon be on sale at the Herald Office. This will be the most valuable of any yet published. It is from the pen of Elder H. O. Smith, and is intended to present the claims of the Book of Mormon to the youngest readers as well as to those more advanced in knowledge and years, that the young, together with all Saints, may be established in this latter-day work and be prepared to give a reason for their belief of and their faith in it, and while Bro. Smith does not claim to have been directly commanded by the Holy Spirit to prepare this work, yet can any one of us doubt that the same Spirit prompting to his other faithful works in the ministry has prompted also to this? We think not. It is upon his part purely a work of love; done solely for the good of the young and the advancement of the cause of truth, and we must not forget that it is only the slothful servant who waits to be commanded in all things.

And now it remains for us to do our part by encouraging and helping on this good work. Send your Birth Offering, if it is not more than twenty-five cents, to Bro. John Smith, Business Manager, together with your birth notice. The notice will appear in the Hope and the amount of your offering be credited to the fund. This matter is not new to any of you, only of late, owing to circumstances we could not control, has not received the attention its importance demands. It is not, we are glad to think, too late to redeem the time, and we trust that our mothers and friends of the little ones will not forget to give to the Lord's work this small tribute of thanks when the little one comes to make its abode with them. Further notice will be given of this work hereafter.

And while writing upon the subject of books we wish to mention a very neat, tastily bound volume of poems recently published by Bro. Willis Kearney, of Lowry City, Missouri. The volume is entitled, Memories and Other Poems. These are from the pen of Sr. Mina Perkins Kearney, with many of whose sweetly, touching poems the readers of the HERALD and Autumn Leaves are familiar. This volume is a pearl of purity, filled to overflowing with the very quintessence of mother love; neither is it wanting in flashes of wit and mirthfulness. It is preëminently a volume for the home of Saints, and can be had of the publisher for the moderate sum of fifty cents.

As Bro. Willis is a young man just starting in business whose home was in the center of the most sorely drouth-smitten section of Missouri, we feel very confident in saying that the patronage of the Saints will be timely as well as fully appreciated. Sr. Eleanor Kearney (his mother) so well known to our readers, also makes her home with him.

Thoughts at the Christmas-Tide.

Again it is winter and Mother Earth is wrapped in her mantle of white and everything looks pure and beautiful, and yet I am sad and lonely. One year ago it seemed that my cup of happiness was full and now,—but I can not think of it, for one so dearly loved is gone, gone to a world where pain and sorrow are unknown and where joy and happiness reign supreme.

To-day while brooding over my sorrow I was given a little booklet, and one of the first quotations that attracted my attention was, "He led them forth by the right way." Then I was comforted by the thought, Will he not lead me by the right way? But immediately came this added thought: Why am I thus chastened? Alas! I can not see yet, but hope to sometime, and until then I will try to say,

"Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom, Lead thou me on."

How beautiful are those words and the thought, and yet how prone am I to forget! The time was when I thought I trusted fully in the guidance of a higher power, but my faith was not as strong as I thought, and ere I realized it I was drifting away "amid the encircling gloom," and was again trusting in the arm of flesh. How easy it is to drift carelessly with the current, and how hard the struggle to regain the port where we set sail.

Truly to me

"The night is dark, and I am far from home, Lead thou me on."

And though the Lord has seen best to chasten, I hope to be able to learn the lesson intended for me, and try to bear my trouble bravely and cheerfully, doing the little things that present themselves as best I can, and though trials and afflictions may be permitted to visit me, I know it has been said, "Through trials we are made perfect;" and in my weakness and unworthiness I hope to be able at all times to say,

"Keep thou my feet,
I do not ask to see the distant scene;
One step enough for me;
Lead thou me on."

GRETCHEN.

Prayer Union.

Bro. Wm. C. Avery, Rushville, Illinois, writes: "In my afflictions I request your prayers. My sufferings are terrible to bear from pain in my breast and arms. I feel that through God help can come."

Sr. Lucinda Goldsmith, Sandwich, Illinois, writes: "I ask the most earnest prayers of the Union and the Saints in general for myself and husband, that if it is God's will we may be restored to health. We have been sick a long time. My husband is not a member of the church, but believes. He has brain trouble. I desire to see him obey the gospel. I have heart and other troubles."

Sr. Celia Williams Van Orden, Minneapolis, Minnesota, asks the sisters to remember in prayer her mother, who has sustained a serious fall from which she suffers much.

A sister in Indiana requests the sisters of the Prayer Union to remember her in earnest faith and prayer that her child may not be taken from her, and the disturber of her peace may be taken away, that she may live in peace and raise her children in the way her conscience tells her is right.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Department of the Teacher.

ATTENDING CONVENTIONS.

We will suppose that teachers attending the convention will be supplied with paper and pencil, and will take note of all items of interest, and will not neglect to put such ideas in practice, in home class work or whenever available, and those attending who are not teachers should not feel to excuse themselves. The growth of the Sunday-school is such that new, inexperienced persons are often called upon to take classes.

TO BECOME INTERESTED

is a prerequisite to success. If you are not interested as you would like or think you should be, I would advise that you study over your situation every day. Ask for divine assistance in making plans to advance interest of class and self. Write a paper and entitle it, "What the teacher can do for the Sunday-school," and read it at officers' and teachers' business meeting. Attend teachers' meetings where you will be helped by others in preparing for class work. Read the Sunday-school departments in our church papers. Attend the district conventions, and if you do not become interested we think you could better devote your time to something else.

ATTITUDE BEFORE THE CLASS.

If you want a happy, contented look on your face, be sure that you have the lesson when you appear before your class. If you are there before time you can greet your class as they come, and in bad weather help them with their wraps. If you talk in an earnest, animated tone of voice you are sure to arouse interest and enthusiasm. As a rule praise or reprove worthy ones privately.

Try the drawing out process. Do not allow two or three to do all the talking or do not do it yourself. Study each individually, their surroundings, mental capacities, and dispositions, and frame your questions within their comprehension. Have a store of charity and patience, and try to advance your class as a whole; not simply a few of the bright, willing ones.

In primary classes I think it best to take up collection first; to avoid dropping of pennies on the floor. Do not read much or you loose their attention. Keep class record in all classes and award credits as an incentive to study, prompt attendance, and good behavior. Avoid formality, long arguments, and drifting from subject, or you will not have much time to review class. Learn definition of hard words and explain them where needed.

TO KEEP UP ATTENDANCE

let each of your class know that you appreciate his presence, and feel the absences. Visit parents and encourage them to attend. The child will think that which is good for its parents will be good for everybody. Your active interest in them will have its telling effect. Be a Christian every day of the week. Practice what you teach. Be a devoted follower of Christ, and enjoy the guiding influence of his Spirit, the virtues of which is known to all successful teachers. In conclusion, we would say the department of the teacher should be one hundred per cent, or as nearly perfect as possible

BERT E. FRY.

For the Little Sioux, Iowa, district convention.

Lack of Promotion.

HOW BEST REMEDIED?

Many of our Sunday-school teachers are quite conscious of the fact that in their classes there are but because these pupils protest against a change of teachers, or for less important reasons, promotion is not attended to as it should be.

PUPILS THAT SHOULD BE PROMOTED;

The progressive teacher realizes that where a pupil protests against being promoted there are to be seriously considered. One is whether the pupil will eventually stop attending the school if promoted, and the other is the extent of the loss sustained by the pupil ready for promotion if not sent to a more advanced class for study and recitation. We should therefore run the risk of the least of the two dangers.

TWO DANGERS

It has been said, and wisely, too, that delays are dangerous, and this certainly applies to promotion as well as other necessary provisions, and in my opinion greater danger and greater loss lie in the wake of a delay in promotion than in prompt action, if wisely taken, in promoting a pupil when ready for it.

There is a danger that exists in promoting a child against its will. There is great danger in promoting a pupil contrary to his will, therefore above all things we should strive to get the consent of the child's mind before promotion. If we can succeed in doing this such danger certainly disappears, while the danger of loss through delay unalterably remains.

I will now give you my idea of how to get the consent of the pupil's mind to be promoted. The teacher to whom her pupils often become very much attached can wield a great influence over her pupils' minds in more ways than one. And it is my firm belief that if such a teacher should take the protesting pupil into her confidence and explain that it is for his or her good to be promoted, and send out all her influence in that direction to her class occasionally, the child would certainly have enough respect for the teacher to believe her and not hesitate to join another class when necessary. In such proceedings the superintendent can be of much assistance to the teacher. The teacher of the class to which the pupil goes can and should exert an unusual effort of kindness toward such a pupil effectually.

For the Little Sioux, Iowa, district convention.

Church Secretary's Notices.

Delegate Credentials to General Conference.—District officers and officers of branches not in districts are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches in the coming General Conference to the Church Secretary as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared as provided for by resolution of General Conference to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the district or branch appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of holding of conference or business meeting, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary.

Attention is called to the following adopted at the General Conference of 1900:

"Resolved, That the Secretary be and is hereby authorized to devise and have printed a blank form of delegate credentials; and that a copy or copies be sent to each district or branch entitled to representation, prior to the convening of each General Conference."

District secretaries and secretaries of branches not in districts who fail to receive credential blanks will be supplied promptly on receipt of postal card with address.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference:

"Provided, That in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation, (the full delegation not being present,) they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes."

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts." However, at the General Conference of 1900 the chair ruled "that a branch of more than twenty-five members is entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five of its membership, the same as a district."

For further information concerning representation choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Book of Rules, chapter 16.

Enrollment in Quorums.—The law provides for enrollment in quorums of all church officers, including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. (D. C. 104: 31; 118: 1; 120: 10.) Such enrollment is regulated by rules adopted by General Conference, which provide that applications for enrollment shall be forwarded to the Church Secretary.

Applications should contain full name, office, dates of birth, baptism, ordination; by whom ordained; also permanent address, labor performed; for the information of the quorums, and their records. None of said items should be omitted. Application blanks will be furnished by the secretary on request.

Quorums make their own selections, from applications in the hands of the Church Secretary. The secretary can not enroll any one in a quorum. Quorums report all enrollments and other changes of membership to the General Conferences, in their general reports, which are published in the General Conference minutes. Presidents and counselors of quorums are authorized to select names and enroll members to fill vacancies between conferences, subject to quorum approval or disapproval.

All requests for enrollment should be in hand before April 1; please be prompt, and forward applications before the conference, that lists may be made up and reported.

A list of worn and defective applications, covering a period of over ten years, remains in hand. These should be renewed, including all made previous to 1901, which have not been received by quorums, and renewed on the special blanks provided therefor. Said lists were published in the Secretary's report to the conference of 1901. Brethren named in said list, not yet enrolled, are requested to renew and perfect their applications.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

Church Recorder's Request.

Having published no call since the one a year ago, we now mention the districts which at this date are delinquent in sending branch reports to the General Recorder, some of them quite far back in this duty. Possibly some reports have been lost in the mail, but this notice will be sufficient cause for investigation in such cases. But if the reports have not been forwarded, please send them immediately, that we may place them upon the General Record before conference. Districts in arrears are as follows:

Kirtland District, branch reports for February and October, 1901, have not yet come to hand. Those having such reports, please forward them or give us information if they know about them.

Des Moines District is delinquent with reports for three conferences; namely, June, August, and December.

Idaho and Kewanee Districts are delinquent with the June and September reports; Philadelphia with the August reports; Florida with the September and December reports; London, Ontario, Independence and Clinton, Missouri, with September reports; Northern Michigan with October reports; North-eastern Texas and Choctaw with November reports, and Little Sioux, Spring River, Western Maine, and Southern Missouri with their December reports. Oregon District has sent no reports since its organization as a district.

Victoria, Australia, District, is on time, but from Sydney District no reports have come since those dated March 31, 1899, almost two years ago. Why have they been retained there?

The Eastern Wales District has been well kept up, but from Western Wales nothing has come since June, 1900. Why so?

In England the Manchester branches have been brought up to December 31, 1899, and Birmingham to December 31, 1900, and Sheffield the same. We will be glad to have additional matter to put on record soon. Such should leave England about March 1 to be sure to arrive in time.

Nothing has come from the Society Islands for several years.

Branches not in districts, or where conferences have not been held, should be brought up to about March 1 and all changes be reported to us, such as Honolulu; the Nova Scotia branches; Ingleside and other branches in Arkansas; Diamond Valley in California, also the Nevada branches; Dingle Dell, Malta, and Oxford, in Idaho; Gallatin, Deer Lodge, Anaconda, Bridger, and Victor in Montana; Pine Cliff, Olive, Elkhorn, and Evergreen in Nebraska; Bottineau and Star of Hope in North Dakota; Salem, Pleasant Valley, and Marshall in South Dakota; Scranton in Pennsylvania; Rockwalnut in Virginia; and the branches in the State of Washington.

Once each year we search the HERALDS and Ensigns for marriages and deaths that have not been otherwise reported, and in this way can take many from the record that would otherwise be counted as living members, but doubtless hundreds of others have died during the years past whose demise has not been made record of anywhere, therefore they are still counted as living. There are over two thousand names upon the "Scattering Record" by States, being those baptized outside of branches and those who have taken letters and not united elsewhere, and many of them we know nothing about.

This brings up another point; that is, the advisability of branch and district officers throughout the church making a special effort to keep trace of their own members either by interview or by correspondence. It would be well for presiding elders, priests, and teachers to keep this object in mind and to make a continual effort that members on their records are not entirely lost sight of. Many of those long missed may be found by diligent inquiry. In the effort to bring more people into the church we may fail to retain some already in, those who need looking after, who need encouragement, comfort, strength, and at times aid and instruction that they may withstand the allurements of the world, and its scorn, and also the temptations to carelessness and to sin. Absent ones need to be hunted up, if possible to find them, and a part of the time and means so earnestly used to convert those without may properly be used in saving those who already belong to us. Some who are drifting might be made to feel that they are cared for, that both God and man think of them as sheep who need the Master's attention, and thus become useful where otherwise they will continue careless and live in vain.

Church rule provides that members should unite with branches, yet hundreds, as we have said, are not so enrolled. Many can be placed on district records at least, and looked to, cared for, and counted as members of Christ's flock indeed. And it seems to the writer of this that district and branch officers, and all ministers and missionaries, should be very much devoted to this work of aiding and strengthening the lonely and the wandering ones, as much or more so than those who reside in near association to many members and to pastoral workers. If known such can be either visited, or, if too far away, they can be written to. It is safe to say that hundreds if not thousands thus need looking after.

Respectfully presented,

H. A. STEBBINS, General Church Recorder.

The Biblical World as published monthly by the University of Chicago Press is a magazine of considerable interest to Bible students. In the January number the editor writes of "Jesus' Use of the Hyperbole." There are also articles on such subjects as "The Social Teaching of Paul," "The Great Day of Pentecost," etc.

Ira D. Sankey, in an interesting article of his trip through Palestine, which appears in the February Delineator, gives an entertaining description of the Holy Land as he saw it. Concerning the Tower of David, he says: "From the top we behold one of the grandest and most interesting sights to be witnessed anywhere in the world. At our feet lay the city, with its narrow streets, its mosques, its domes, and temples; and beyond its massive walls, we could see Gethsemane, Calvary, and Olivet; the valley of Jehosaphat, the vale of Kedron and the barren hills that surround the city. In the far distance to the eastward we could see the River Jordan and the Dead Sea, with many other points of great Biblical interest." The illustrations which accompany the article are of unusual merit.

The gradual reconstruction of Mr. Roosevelt's Cabinet lends a direct and timely interest to an article which the Hon. Charles Emory Smith has just written for the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia.

Cabinets and Cabinet-Making tells how presidents choose their official advisers; how nice political considerations influence their choice and reduce to lowest terms the number of available candidates.

One of the most important conclusions reached by Mr. Smith is that most presidents have followed one of the two methods in forming their official families: that of Mr. Lincoln and his predecessors, who surrounded themselves with party leaders and former presidential candidates, and that of Mr. McKinley, who appointed strong, broad-gauged men, regardless of previous political preeminence.

This article will appear in an early issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

EMBEZZLEMENTS IN 1901.

The record of embezzlement and other forms of financial dishonesty during the year just closed, like that of the three years preceding it, is distinctly encouraging. The record of the last four years is as follows: 1898, $5,851,263; 1899, $2,218,373; 1900, $4,660,134; 1901, $4,085,569. As compared with the reports for a long series of years preceding 1898 these amounts are comparatively small and they testify eloquently to the general prosperity of the times. It is only in periods of panic or general financial depression that the embezzler largely flourishes, or his work becomes apparent. The banks, as usual, were the principal sufferers in 1901, their losses amounting to $1,513,496, but even these figures are small when compared with those of some past years.

HANGINGS AND LYNCHINGS OF 1901.

The dark records of hanging and lynching are made up for the year 1901. The former shows a gleam of encouragement. The latter, in some respects, is distinctly discouraging. There were 118 legal executions during the year, one less than those during 1900. Of those executed seventy-one were negroes and forty-seven whites. It is somewhat significant that, as compared with 1900, the number of negroes is increased thirteen, and the number of whites decreased thirteen, the figures for 1900 being negroes, fifty-eight; whites, sixty. The South had eighty-two of the executions and the North thirty-six, the ratio being about the same as last year, when the figures were eighty in the South and thirty-nine in the North. The crimes which led up to these executions were as follows: Murder, 107; criminal assault, 9; attempted criminal assault, 1; train robbery, 1. In 1900 only five were hanged for criminal assault.

The increase in executions for criminal assault would apparently indicate that this crime, which is falsely assigned as "the customary crime" in the South, is coming more and more to be punished by the law instead of by the mob, but the increase of lynching for the year makes it difficult to determine this with absolute correctness.

The lynchings for the year number 135, as compared with 115 in 1900, an increase of 20. Of these 121 occurred in the South and 14 in the North, as compared with 107 in the South and 8 in the North in 1900, an increase which is not creditable to the five Northern States, California, Idaho, Montana, Kansas, and Indiana. The number of negroes lynched in 1901 was 107, the same number as in 1900. Besides these one Indian and one Chinaman were victims. Curiously enough the principal crimes which led to these lynchings are almost the same in the two years, being 39 for murder in 1901, and 39 for murder in 1900; 19 for criminal assault in 1901, and 18 for criminal assault in 1900. The six Southern States which have the largest number of mob murders are Mississippi, 16; Louisiana, 15; Alabama, 15; Georgia, 14; Tennessee, 12; Texas, 11. Three of these States, however, show improvement, Mississippi having 4, Louisiana 5, and Georgia 2 less than last year, but Alabama has increased 7; Tennessee, 5; and Texas, 7. Discouraging as the figures appear, there are many causes at work in the South which promise improvement. It is not encouraging that the number of lynchings in the North should have increased as much.

SOME 1901 STATISTICS.

The Chicago Tribune every year collects a mass of statistics which are interesting and useful. In the issues for December 31 and January 1 the editors have summarized from the detailed statistics given in issue for the 31st. These summaries we deem of sufficient interest to give our readers.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

The record of deaths by violence in this country in 1901 shows quite a decrease, being 7,852, as compared with 8,275 in 1900. The latter figures were an increase of 2,050 over those of the preceding year. It is not possible, of course, to obtain accurate statistics on this point by mail and telegraph, as many cases are not reported, but they are sufficiently accurate to indicate that crime is not rapidly increasing in this country. The record of suicides, however, tells another and sadder story. In 1901, 7,245 persons "shuffled off this mortal coil," as compared with 6,755 in 1900. The steady increase in the suicide habit . . . is

RECORD-BREAKING DONATION YEAR.

Two years ago the Tribune noted with great satisfaction that the year 1899 was a record-breaker in donations and bequests to educational institutions, libraries, art museums, charities, and religious enterprises of various kinds, the total amounting to "the colossal sum" of $79,749,956. Last year it expressed moderate satisfaction because 1900 was "a close second," the total amounting to $62,461,304. To-day the Tribune has extreme satisfaction in announcing that 1901 goes far beyond 1899, the total of the good work reaching the extraordinary sum of $123,888,732, with the possibility that Mr. Carnegie or some other philanthropic millionaire may make it a round $125,000,000 within the next eighteen hours.

Of this huge sum $68,850,961 has been given to colleges, universities, academies, seminaries, and institutes; $22,217,470 to charities of various kinds; $15,388,700 to libraries; $11,133,112 to museums and art galleries; and $6,298,489 to churches. The latter sum, of course, does not include the ordinary church offerings but only specified sums left by will or presented outright. More than half of this great sum has been given by three persons, as follows: Andrew Carnegie, $42,888,500; Jane L. Stanford, $30,000,000; and John D. Rockefeller, $2,889,750. In the detailed list there are twenty-eight gifts ranging from $500,000 to $30,000,000, for various purposes, and fifty-one gifts to colleges, ranging from $100,000 to $30,000,000.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has been quite fortunate in getting rid of some of those millions which he does not wish found in his possession at the last. He has come much nearer averting "the disgrace" this year than he did last. His favorite work of funding libraries has been largely increased, for whereas in 1899 he set up thirty-four libraries at a cost of $3,503,500, and nineteen in 1900 at a cost of $685,000, this year he has planted 109 at a cost of $12,885,500, making for the three years 162 libraries in various parts of the country. Thus far fourteen States and Territories have escaped him, but undoubtedly he will find them out and supply their needs. This done, he must find other outlets for his money, and this he is evidently beginning to do, as he has already offered $10,000,000 which probably will be increased, to the general government for a national university, and it is intimated on good authority that a million each to Yale and Columbia Colleges may come as New Year's gifts to those institutions. It is noticeable also that he is beginning to contribute to charities. Evidently he is determined not to die disgraced.

As to the ultimate consequences of this wholesale and indiscriminate giving to educational institutions, some important questions may yet be raised and indeed some thoughtful persons are already doubting the wisdom of such gifts. But this does not detract from the philanthropic spirit displayed by many wealthy men. It is pleasant to note their liberality, and to compare this magnificent sum of $123,888,732 given away with the comparatively small sum of $4,085,569 taken by the embezzlers in 1901.

 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Inasmuch as there is quite a diversity of opinion as to whether a teacher has or has not a right to preach, I submit the following questions, and would like to have them answered in HERALD for the good of all.

1. In the absence of elder or priest, has a teacher a right to take a text and preach in his resident branch?
2. If called upon by elder or priest has a teacher a right to take a text and preach in his resident branch?
3. If a teacher is visiting in other branches, and if called upon, has he a right to take a text and preach?
4. If out of the jurisdiction of any branch, has a teacher a right to give out an appointment and take a text and preach?

5. If called upon by elder or priest outside of jurisdiction of any branch, has a teacher a right to take a text and preach?

Our answer to each of the foregoing questions is, Yes.

The law in Doctrine and Covenants, section 17, paragraph 11, makes it the duty, and of course the privilege, of the teacher to "warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ." Of course it is to be understood that this is to be done under suitable and proper conditions. It seems to us that those suggested in the queries would be proper conditions for the teacher to teach, expound, exhort, etc., as stated, and he could do this as he might be led by the Holy Spirit. The taking of a text and preaching from it is one of the most natural forms of teaching and expounding and inviting to come to Christ, known to the ministry.

 GRACELAND REMEMBERED BY HEPBURN.

Through the influence of Congressman W. P. Hepburn, of the Eighth Congressional District of Iowa, Graceland College recently received a very valuable addition to its library. The gift consisted of a set of Records of the Union and Confederate Armies during the War of the Rebellion. The work is said to be one of the largest, if indeed not the largest, ever published. It comprises one hundred twenty-eight volumes, which average over a thousand pages each. Thus there are probably one hundred fifty thousand pages of printed matter in the work. As a work of compilation it is a gigantic affair, and makes a very desirable addition to the reference books of the library. The work came from the War Department, and took five mail sacks to bring it to Graceland. It is difficult to secure a set of it now, and Graceland College is fortunate in having had the influence of such a man as Colonel Hepburn in securing it.

 WHITE AND BRADEN AGAIN DEBATE.

We have received word from the White-Braden discussion going on at Thayer; of it Bro. I. N. White says:

One session is past, and eleven nights more to come. Braden is fighting for life. I am feeling fine and am hopeful for results through the assisting hand of God. We are using the opera house. Great excitement. Braden sent a letter to the "Mormon moderator" just before we went to the place of debate, in which he stated he would not speak to White unless it was while making a speech in the debate. I gave him the opportunity when I ascended the stage. I walked across the platform to where Braden sat and extended my hand, saying: "How do you do, Mr. Braden." Braden said: "No, sir!" and drew his hand back. This was in the presence of the assembly.

As usual Braden has his bills out announcing a lecture to commence at Miami, Indian Territory, February 3, to "Annihilate Mormonism." His people there, as here at Thayer, have raised the usual amount of cash, which will keep Braden "feeding" them till he has a similar call elsewhere. Braden is making a "paying business" of it, and his brethren fail to see it, till too late. Poor souls. We are on his track even if he is mad and "will not speak to White." My opening speech of an hour last night stands yet unmoved, and will resist Braden's attacks. I am proud of the truth—the gospel to save. Shall I be remembered by the faithful ones?

PRACTICAL TEST OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Wireless telegraphy has reached the point in its development where it is being put to very practical purposes. The Scientific American for January 25 calls attention to one or two instances which lately occurred to demonstrate the utility thereof. Captain Hogemann, of the steamship "Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse," told on his arrival at New York recently that his vessel and the "Lucania," of the Cunard line, had been in communication while at sea for nearly three days. The Lucania sailed from New York on December 14, 1901, three hours before the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, and when the latter passed Sandy Hook the Lucania was about sixty miles ahead. They commenced to exchange messages. About daybreak next morning, the two vessels having been in communication throughout the night, the Kaiser came in sight of the Lucania, and in course of the day passed her, though four miles to the northward. "During this time," says the American, "twelve messages were sent by passengers on the Lucania to the Kaiser for transmission to the wireless station at the Lizard and thence by land wire to the persons in England to whom they were addressed. Soon after nightfall on Sunday the lights of the ships were not visible to each other. At noon on Monday their messages showed they were forty miles apart. Early that evening the Kaiser, when off the Banks, ran into a thick fog; later she came into clear weather, and sent the following message: 'Twenty-five miles east of Banks. Clear weather.' The Lucania, then sixty miles astern, replied: 'Thanks. Am still in thick fog.' Gradually after this the clicking aboard the Kaiser grew weaker until the instrument stopped, when the ships were estimated to be eighty-five miles apart."

On one of her recent trips the Kaiser while in mid-ocean exchanged messages with her sister ship, the "Kronprinz Wilhelm," bound east. They did not sight each other, but by exchange of messages learned they passed each other at a distance of forty miles. They were in communication about two hours, and several messages were sent by passengers.

By this means of communication the Lucania on one of her last eastern trips, while yet fifty-five miles out to sea, notified the officials when she would arrive. "Such practical illustrations of the utility of the wireless system of telegraphy leave no doubt," says the Scientific American, "as to its value in making the navigation of the ocean safer, for it is a sure preventive of collisions at sea in a fog or at night, by reason of the certainty of advance notification between different vessels."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Gilbert J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii Territory, wrote January 7, as follows: "I returned to Honolulu on Wednesday last, January 1, having left San Francisco Thursday forenoon, December 26. I found that during my absence Elder Ingham had attended to the church work satisfactorily and I was pleased to see the interest manifested in the work by the number that came to the church services last Sunday.

"Work was commenced that morning amongst the Chinese, the way having been opened by the distribution of tracts in their language. Elder Ingham started a Sunday-school class at an Anglo-Chinese Academy established here recently by some progressive Chinese who are anxious that worthy young Chinamen who are desirous of improvement should have an opportunity of acquainting themselves with modern ideas and customs. As it is non-sectarian, we have an opportunity of presenting our faith to the pupils, some of whom are already studying the lessons contained in our Gospel Quarterlies. This Sunday-school class will be continued, and we shall also have opportunities to preach there, as the principal of the establishment is a Christian and is desirous of learning more of our faith.

"The Sunday before I left Oakland I was ordained by Bro. Blair, who was assisted by Brn. Price and Parkin, to the office of high priest, and I feel that I have been benefited by my visit to the coast, both spiritually and physically, and I can now devote myself both to church work and my business with greater energy and zeal than before; and I am hopeful for the future and shall try to give a good account of myself during this year.

"My wife and children were well when I left California, and will join me here in a few months. Kindly remember us and the work here. Love to all the Saints."

G. D. Washburn writes from Phelps, Michigan, January 16: "I made an opening in Ironton two weeks ago, and now there is a dispute among the officers and they have closed the schoolhouse against me. I can not tell how it will turn out. I have another opening at the Phelps schoolhouse. I start to-night. It is a little lumbering town. The Methodists have been holding a series of revivals, but I shall go ahead."

J. N. Stephenson writes from Roscoe, Missouri, that he had been holding meetings at Red Rock recently, and had fine congregations and good order. He says: "One lady said she was ready to obey and told her husband so, but he wanted to investigate a little further. The people at Roscoe have been convinced that we have the best side of the argument so far. Bro. James Moler did some good work here, preached fifteen times to a crowded house. So the good work goes on. I am feeling splendid in the work. I preached on Book of Mormon, and stirred things up. Immediately after service I got several orders for books."

Sr. William Cornish writes from Chippewa Station, Michigan, January 9: "We have here a branch of about thirty members, and are all trying to serve the Lord the best we can. We have Sunday-school at one o'clock p. m., and prayer meeting at two o'clock. Bro. John Mogg is the leader. Elder Cornish gives us a call once in a while, and we always appreciate his visits. There are other elders that call upon us, which we also enjoy. I have belonged to this church about six years and have never regretted the step. I realize this is a marvelous work and a wonder."

Bro. W. H. Pruitt, whose home is in Missouri, has been doing some missionary work in North Carolina. Writing from Lark P. O., Cleveland County, January 16, he says: "I have since the 7th of last September preached thirty-nine times and had one debate. My meetings were all public; though there is so much prejudice in this country. I have not preached the first time in a church-house, and only twice in school-houses. There are two men who have sent me word to come and preach in their houses, but as soon as I feel that my work is done here, I will gladly go home. The dear Lord has wonderfully blessed me oftentimes in this country. I am sure I am the first elder of the Reorganized Church that ever preached in this country, though many of the Brighamites have been in this country and made it hard for me; but I have not shunned to declare the truth."

Erwin Dickey writes from Viola, Kansas, January 21: "Bro. O. H. Bailey came here about a fortnight ago, and held ten meetings at the Green Summit schoolhouse, three miles north of here. I assisted him some. An interest was awakened. We live three and one half miles northeast of here and shall be glad to welcome any of the elders. May God sustain his faithful toilers."

Bro. J. A. Grant writes from Central Lake, Michigan, January 23: "We are visiting branches in the west side of our district. Bro. Hugill being unable to assist us, Bro. C. G. Lewis volunteered. We appreciate his companionship. Bro. Goodwin is in the eastern part of the district. I trust he may be upheld by officers and members, and that much good may be done. I baptized one about two weeks ago."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Some one sent us a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, published at Honolulu, Hawaii. It was the issue for January 1, and is a boom edition. The printers are up to date in Honolulu, and this special edition shows a deal of commendable zeal.

The Christmas number of the Paradise of the Pacific reached us a few days ago. It is a splendid specimen of graphic art, and contains some very interesting descriptions of Hawaiian Territory and its businesses. The illustrations are par excellence. Judging by the zeal and work of the Honolulu printers we should think our new island Territory is rapidly developing in all lines. May it prosper under the protection of Old Glory!

Bro. E. P. Schmidt writes from Modoc County, California, January 10, asking concerning what surplus property is. In this issue Bishop Kelley writes under the caption "What can We Spare of the Holdings?" and we think Bro Schmidt's questions are answered therein.

By marked copy of the Ogden Standard of January 13 we note that our new church building in Ogden was dedicated on the 12th. Bro. Peter Anderson preached the dedicatory sermon. He was assisted by Elders Toombs, Harris, and Condit.

The force in Bro. Heman C. Smith's field are reported as active. Prospects for holding meetings in Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin not flattering, Peoria and Canton and vicinities excepted. In Northern Wisconsin, however, there is a good interest.

The average temperature at Honolulu, Hawaii, for thirteen years was 74.11 degrees, a most remarkable evenness of climatic conditions. The observations were taken at the height of fifty feet from the sea level.

Brother Henry Sparling writes encouragingly from Thayer, Missouri, under date of January 24, and thinks the debate between Braden and Bro. White is doing good for our church. Bro. Sparling is confident that Bro. White is winning the good will of the people generally while Braden is losing ground in that direction. Bro. Sparling says his soul was filled with joy because of Bro. White's able defense, and feels more confident than ever that this work can not be overthrown.

Prof. H. S. Salisbury, of Graceland College, informs us that the college has received from Bro. A. J. Layland, from Raymond, Idaho, two boxes of geological specimens. Others are also remembering the college in this way, and we are glad of it. We hope that there are yet others who can and will remember to send what they can in this way and help the college along all they can in all ways possible.

In a ticket-selling contest for a prize, Sr. Hattie Riggs, wife of Bro. O. H. Riggs, of Kansas City, sold one hundred and forty dollars' worth of tickets to the oratorio, "St. Paul," which was given at Kansas City on the evening of January 21. It was the highest number sold by any one contestant, and won the ten-dollar prize.

The Church Library is indebted to Senator J. P. Dolliver for the published report of the Eleventh Census,—1890. The report is comprised of six large volumes.

WHAT CAN WE SPARE OF THE HOLDING?

Questions upon the term, "Surplus property," as used in the law, are presented by a number of the Saints who, properly enough, desire to study more fully the financial system of the church, revealed and known as tithes and offerings.

Various opinions also seem to be entertained relative to the effect and results of the administration of that part of the law referring to surplus properties, and naturally enough some seem to be quite fanciful and little in keeping with what the actual results are likely to be, as well as those that wisely conclude that whatever the step, if it be in keeping with the divine law, the results will be found blending in harmony and order with all that God ever has directed or ever will direct his people to perform.

The object of the administration of the law of Zion is not to limit or circumscribe men and women in their efforts and abilities for good but rather to fortify and enlarge their powers; and any interpretation of the law which tends to supersede or set aside the individual responsibility and duty of the membership to God, the family, the church, and the state must be contrary to the revealed word.

In a proper and orderly arrangement of the kingdom of God men and women are charged with duty and made responsible in their lives according to their several abilities, and it ought not to be conjectured that this divine order will not prevail wherever and under whatever conditions this kingdom is found.

In Zion and her stakes a proper stewardship and individual responsibility attaches to each member, as fully as in any other place, and the demand upon each equally pressing, to industriously improve every opportunity and devote the full powers of mind and body to the general good, answering for what he has and is, and not for what he has not.

The statement is hardly deniable in any sense, that in the building up of Zion and conserving her interests every one who stands approved by the Master must devote thereto his greatest energies and abilities, all laboring according to their several abilities.

Proper individual enterprise, then, in business, education, invention, and art will not be interfered with by the church in its work, but rather stimulated and fostered, so that no person need hesitate to move out and do the best he can for fear the church, at some period, may step in and assume to do all the business itself, checking all enterprise and development, and essaying to answer to God for him for what he himself should render an account in his stewardship. Then as now there will exist the eternal decree that God will render to every man according as his works shall be, "for there is no respect of persons with God."

The nearer men and women get to God the more lively becomes their responsibility and duty to him, and in the full light of Zion there can certainly be no lessening of the divine claim upon each citizen for the free and full exercise of his faith and powers.

The administration of the law relating to surplus properties then will neither destroy the business of the people nor supersede the necessity of each one to do the best he can in his place and station; but it will place in the hands of the church sufficient means to enable it to perform its special work as the membership perform theirs, hence the purposes being set forth in the law, "for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion." The adjustment of the social order of Zion is outlined to be in giving to persons who do not have a stewardship such as is proper, rather than in taking away that which a man already has, and each when properly adjusted will be in proportion as he is willing and capable of successfully filling. Surplus property which is called for preparatory to such advanced conditions is that which can be spared by any person, and yet he be able to carry on his business or stewardship.

Men and women may readily determine what this is, and all that is demanded, if they will devotedly and prayerfully undertake it, and each is charged with this duty under the law and no one is so well qualified to pass upon the matter as the party himself and the bishop to whom he makes known all the conditions. The rule gives no place for the back-biter and mischievous whisperer under a proper enforcement to breed discord and division instead of oneness and harmony, for the inhabitants of Zion can not do these things and stand approved in their stewardship of whatever nature.

The duty of the Bishop comes in in making up the account when he is asked to give a certificate to the party showing that the surplus has been handed in; at that time he will have properly a full statement of the assets and liabilities of the member, for the provision is that this shall be handed to the Bishop, and after he is properly informed, he will be able to pass upon the question of whether the offering is truly the surplus or not; and should he decide that it is not, this would end the matter until a decision is had after the matters have been properly presented to a High Council of the stake or the church. It is unfair and unbrotherly to presume that any brother or sister will try to evade the law and keep back a part of that they should render an account of to the Lord. The very highest inducement is held out, that could be thought of, to cause them to do right in giving, for it is to Christ and his work for which they are to bring a present, and in such cause none but the most covetous will ever hesitate to do all that he can to aid.

It has been asked that after the surplus has once been given and the party giving it goes on and accumulates more property will he have to stop and give the surplus again. The law plainly answers this. It reads: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."—D. C. 106:1.

The law is plain as to what shall follow; viz.: the tithe order, which has been the rule the past twenty years in the church and which has ever, so far as history reveals, been the order when the gospel of the kingdom of God has been preached and administered;—the decrees of Jehovah are perpetuated, being eternal and true.

In order to ascertain what the surplus is it will only be necessary for each one to make an inventory of what he has and then see what he can do without and yet get along and perform his work.

It would not be a true rule to ask whether the difference could be used in the business. The extending of the business can be taken up later; but now the question is, What can be spared to aid a work in which each one is as much interested, or should be, as he is in making a success of the business or work in which he is personally engaged? What can we spare of that which we have? How much of the savings in the bank; of the investment in business; of the land owned; of the amount allotted for family uses; of our live stock and implements; of grain and labor; of any unnecessary expenditures so often made; and when we begin to enter the same up, whether it be much or little, remember that the Lord's rule is that, "To whom much is given much will be required, and to whom little is given little is required." Whatever can be spared without permanent injury to the business or livelihood of the individual consecrating and setting the same apart, is surplus. What can we spare of the holding?

"Niagara—The Scene of Perilous Feats" is the title of an article in the February Cosmopolitan which tells the story of the many who have year after year gone to Niagara seeking notoriety or—death. From the earliest days Niagara has been the Mecca of those who valued their lives lightly, and the story of Sam Patch, Blondin, Maria Spelterina, the jealous Balleni's attempt to cut the cable on which his rival was performing over the seething Whirlpool Rapids, Peter Nissen's ill-fated "Fool-Killer," and Captain Webb's last swim, is carried down to Mrs. Taylor, the only survivor of a trip over the great Falls.

WHAT THE BARTENDER SEES.

A PANORAMA OF HUMAN NATURE ADRIFT.

A young man with a cold face, much nervous energy, and a tired-of-the-world expression leans over the polished, silver-mounted drinking bar.

You look at him and order your drink.

You know what you think of him, and you think you know what he thinks of you.

Did you ever stop to think of all the strange human beings besides yourself that pass before him?

He stands there as a sentinel, business man, detective, waiter, general entertainer, and host for the homeless.

In comes a young man, rather early in the day.

He is a little tired—up too late the night before. He takes a cocktail. He tells the bartender that he does not believe in cocktails. He never takes them, in fact. "The bitters in the cocktail will eat a hole through a thin handkerchief—pretty bad effect on your stomach, eh?" and so on.

Out goes the young man with the cocktail inside of him.

And the bartender knows that that young man, with his fine reasonings and his belief in himself, is the confirmed drunkard of year after next. He has seen the beginning of many such cocktail philosophers, and the ending of the same.

The way not to be a drunkard is never to taste spirits. The bartender knows that. But his customers do not know it.

At another hour of the day there comes in the older man. This one is the fresh-faced, young oldish man.

He has small gray side whiskers. He shows several people—whom he does not know—his book of commutation tickets.

He changes his mind suddenly from whisky to lemonade. The bartender prepares the lemon slowly, and the man changes his mind back to whisky.

Then he tries to look more dignified than the two younger men with him. In the midst of the effort he begins to sing "The Heart Bowed Down with Weight of Woe," and he tells the bartender "that is from 'The Bohemian Girl.'"

He sings many other selections, occasionally forgetting his dignity, and occasionally remembering that he is the head of a most respectable home—partly paid for.

The wise man on the outside of the bar suggests that the oldish man will get into trouble. But the bartender says:

"No, he will go home all right. But he won't sing all the way there. About the time he gets home he'll realize what money he has spent, and you would not like to be his wife. It won't be any songs that she'll get."

The bartender knows that the oldish man—about fifty-one or two—has escaped being a drunkard by mere accident, and that he has not quite escaped yet.

A little hard luck, too much trouble, and he'll lose his balance, forget that there is lemonade, and take to whisky permanently.

At the far end of the bar there is the man who comes in slowly and passes his hand over his face nervously. The bartender asks no question, but pushes out a bottle of every-day whisky and a small glass of water.

The whisky goes down. A shiver follows the whisky and a very little of the water follows the shiver. The man goes out with his arms close to his sides, his gait shuffling, and his head hanging.

It has taken him less than three minutes to buy, swallow, and pay for a liberal dose of poison.

Says the bartender:

"That fellow had a good business once. Doesn't look it, does he? Jim over there used to work for him. But he couldn't let it alone."

The "it" mentioned is whisky.

Outside in the cold that man, who couldn't let it alone, is shuffling his way against the bitter wind. And even in his poor sodden brain reform and wisdom are striving to be heard.

His soul and body are sunk far below par. His vitality is gone, never to return.

The whisky, with its shiver that tells of a shock to the heart, lifts him up for a second.

He has a little false strength of mind and brain, and that strength is used to mumble good resolutions.

He thinks he will stop drinking. He thinks he could easily get money backing if he gave up drinking for good. He feels and really believes that he will stop drinking.

Perhaps he goes home, and for the hundredth time makes a poor woman believe him, and makes her weep once more for joy, as she has wept many times from sorrow.

But the bartender knows that that man's day has gone, and that Niagara River could turn back as easily as he could remount the swift stream that is sweeping him to destruction.

Five men come in together. Each asks of all the others:

"What are you going to have?"

The bartender spreads out his hands on the edge of the bar, attentive and prepared to work quickly.

Every man insists on "buying" something to drink in his turn. Each takes what the others insist on giving him.

Each thinks he is hospitable.

But the bartender knows that those men belong to the great American association for the manufacture of drunkards through "treating."

Each of those men might perhaps take his glass of beer, or even something worse, with relative safety.

But as stupidly as stampeded animals pushing each other over a precipice, each insists on buying poison in his turn. And every one spends his money to make every other one, if possible, a hard drinking and a wasted man.

You, Mr. Reader, have seen all these types and many others, have you not?

Why did you see them? What reason had you for seeing them?

The bartender stands studying the procession to destruction because he must make his living in that way. He is a sort of clean-aproned Charon on a whisky Styx, ferrying the multitude to perdition on the other side of the river. But what is your business there?

You might as well be found inside an opium den.

The drink swallowed at the bar braces you, does it? If you think you need a drink, you really need sleep, or better nourishment, or you need to live more sensibly. Drink will not give you what you need. It may for a moment make your nerves cease tormenting you. It may do in your system for an hour what opium does in the Chinese for a whole day. But if it lifts you up high, it drops you down hard.

And remember:

There is no such thing as moderate drinking at a bar.

You think you can take your occasional drink safely and philosophize about the procession that passes the bartender.

But the bartender knows that you are no different from the others. They all began as you are beginning. They all, in the early stages, despised their own forerunners.

They were once as you are, and the bartender knows that the chances are all in favor of your being eventually like one of them.

Even like the poor, thin, nervous drinker of hard whisky, who once wondered why men drink too much.

The bartender's procession is a sad one, and you who still think yourself safe are the saddest atom in the line, for you are there without sufficient excuse.

It is a long procession, and its end is far off.

It is born of the fact that life is dull, competition is keen, and ambition so often ends in sawdust failure.

A better chance for strugglers, a more generous reward for hard work, better organization of social life, solution of the great unsolved problem of real civilization, will end the bartender's procession.

Meanwhile, keep out of it if you can. And be glad if it can be suspended, temporarily at least, on Sundays.—New York Journal, January 12.

The face that wears a smile is everywhere welcome; the smiling, cheery guest is a joy forever; with our common sense, our tact, and our kind courtesy to guide us, and with the corners of our mouths turned upward, we may at any time and all times be a benediction to our friends.—February Woman's Home Companion.

Letter Department.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, January 14.

Saints' Herald.—The new year, with its responsibility, joy, and sorrow for all of earth's children, is now fully on the wing and "what shall the harvest be?" Many of those now living will not be here to answer to the roll-call of 1903. The faithful performance of duty fits us for those emergencies over which we have no control, and under these conditions we are ready to go or remain just as it may please the good Father.

Church conditions here are in fairly good form from our point of view. They could be better and they could be very much worse. On the whole we are optimistic; yet we feel "that eternal vigilance is the price of our liberty."

There are many veteran church workers in this city whose long experience and grasp upon the work make the true interest of the cause perfectly safe in their hands. This condition of affairs gives the missionary an opportunity to learn as well as to teach. There are no local factions here; but good will seems to prevail among both officers and members. Factional contests mean disaster to church work everywhere. If we Saints do not agree we can hold our differences with feelings of amity and good will.

During the time we have been here we have not discovered any evidence of tattling or back-biting among the membership. This lack of activity in this particular direction is not an evidence of death either; the attendance at the church and society services fully indicate otherwise. Branch officials have kindly aided us in our missionary work. In fact all of the brethren have been very kind in assisting.

We began holding evening services near the middle of July upon a vacant lot facing Broadway, and owned by the church. These meetings were continued until August 22. From August 26 to September 2 I was at Underwood by invitation of the branch president, Bro. Joshua Carlile. The Seventh-day Advents were holding tent-meetings there, and true to their methods had reached the objective point of all their efforts—the seventh-day Sabbath, and were doing their best to convince the people that the keeping of the first day of the week for religious observance was a Catholic fable. After having a slight tilt with our Seventh-day brethren, Bro. Carlile announced at the close of our last reply to Elder Diffenbacher that we were now prepared to enter into a joint debate with them. Elder Diffenbacher was present when the announcement was made, but refused to debate.

Through the courtesy of the Omaha Saints who gave us the use of their city tent, we began a series of tent-meetings in South Council Bluffs on September 6, and these meetings were continued until near the first of November. Bro. J. S. Strain has been my constant, indefatigable helper in all of our missionary work here. The local brethren aided us continuously in the tent-meetings by faithfully sharing the responsibility of the services. Bro. R. Wight was with us more or less in the tent-meetings, and his congenial companionship and logical preaching were appreciated by all. Brethren C. A. Beebe, Madison, Hutchens, Christiansen, Roberts, and other aided in the preaching of the word.

Through the influence of Bro. Clarence Riley we procured a small hall, owned by the city, where we began preaching-meetings December 16. The weather being intensely cold and attendance light we closed, after holding four services, until after the holidays. January 2 we started again and they are still being continued. Elder James Caffall, being at home for the holidays, preached a number of interesting sermons for us in the mission. There is some interest being manifested on the part of those outside the church. The attendance is fairly good at times and at others it is small. The hall is located at Twenty-fourth Street and Avenue B.

Some whom Bro. T. W. Williams got interested while located here are attending these meetings, and, like everybody else, speak very highly of his pulpit ability.

The representatives of the Utah faction, while having but little influence here, have been quite active, especially during the warm weather when they could preach on the streets. Claiming to represent the same faith and name—so far as the name "Latter Day Saint" is concerned—that we do, and knowing the false doctrines and corrupt deeds that are associated with this Utah apostasy, I have made it my special duty to call upon them to defend or deny at every public opportunity, their corrupt doctrines as taught in their authorized church publications. Through the courtesy of Bro. J. Charles Jensen of this city I procured these Mormon publications. The Utah elders can not deny their own publications; so when we read from these books in a public meeting these elders will always beat a hasty retreat before we are through. They generally pull out just when we have begun. The reason is obvious. If they remained the people would expect them to reply. A reply would necessitate either a denial of polygamy, Adam-god, blood atonement, etc., or they would be compelled to defend these doctrines. To commit themselves to the defense of such awful principles before the public would be suicidal, so far as their hope to have influence with the people is concerned. So, cowardlike, they run as the best way out of the dilemma. Some time ago they procured a church at Edgewood, a point five or six miles from town, where they expected to hold meeting every two weeks. We attended their meeting, and when it was dismissed through the courtesy of the church trustees present I answered them. The moment I began to talk these elders gathered up their belongings and departed. I held volume 1 of Journal of Discourses in my hand as they passed out, and kindly invited them to remain, stating that I intended to read from their own books and that we would give them the opportunity to correct us if we made any misrepresentations. Elder Joshua P. Terry thanked me for the extended courtesy, but said want of time would not permit them to remain. They had announced meeting again two weeks from that date, so we announced that we would be present. When the day arrived they failed to materialize. We are holding a three-o'clock appointment now every second Sunday at the Edgewood church. So far as I am concerned these Utah people can either forsake their false doctrines, defend them, or run. We shall test them at every opportunity. An oath-bound ministry is not very reliable when church interests are at stake.

Editors Herald.—I am still trying to conquer those influences which are in opposition to the purity of our meek and lowly Redeemer's love. I experienced the hardest trial of my life on November 24, and since, which was the loss of my little boy, near three years old. We were among infidels more and less, and it made the trial the more severe, for we had none to talk with and to receive comfort from. What we heard only made our sorrow more grievous to be borne. We obeyed the law as best we understood, still our dear child was taken. Some were very kind to us, and we hope never to forget them, but ever remember them in my prayers and help them in their trials. May God bless us all!

I wish to request any of the ministry who travel in Texas to visit if possible my cousin, Mr. Henry Williams, who lives about forty miles north of Waco. He is of the free-thinking class, and might accept the kingdom of God.

My great-grandfather when eleven years old ran away from his parents in Wales. I do not know the date or his given name; but as I notice account of Saints in that country, I may learn of my connection over there. Will any of the Saints write me if they know of a people by the name of Johns. We would love to learn of them, as our grandfather never heard any more from that place.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

HAVERHILL, Massachusetts, January 16.

Editors Herald:—We came here Saturday last from Boston and are holding service every night in the little hall at the corner of Water and Bridge Streets that the faithful few have neatly fitted up for worship, and notwithstanding the numerous attractions and star revival conducted by the Socialist reform preacher, Rev. McNutt, as well as one or two other revivals, we are having more or less strangers each evening and a few are deeply interested, and we confidently expect additions as a result of their investigations.

The visit of Brn. Greene and Anderson was a good thing for us and they are well remembered. Bro. Thayer, who was baptized by Bro. Anderson, is doing finely, and there are others very near the door and will, we think, obey the gospel very soon. Some of the D. D.'s. are troubled and are looking sharply after their flock, making visits and warning them against us.

Tuesday afternoon we visited by invitation and appointment a lady well known not only in Haverhill where she resides but throughout New England as a public speaker and evangelistic worker, a woman who became interested in our religious claims years ago when I first came to Haverhill, and has heard all of the missionaries who have visited this city, and who without doubt is at present almost satisfied with our position. While canvassing the latter-day work the door-bell rang and her church pastor, the Rev. Harvey, was ushered in, followed by introduction, explanations as to my work as a minister, etc. To shorten the story, the reverend gentleman was not long in unloosing himself and in proceeding to give us a gratuitous exposition of "Joe Smith" and the "Mormon imposture" from a Presbyterian standpoint of view, with all the assurance of a man who "knew all about it" addressing himself to people who knew very little or nothing about the subject. Our contempt for the man of public instruction on public matters rose as he proceeded, and we tried to catch his eye which was steadfastly turned to the wall; but we held our peace until his tale was concluded, and then "went for him" and his story concerning the family of Joseph Smith, "money digging," "Spalding story," "bank business," "polygamy," etc., that Brigham Young and Utah Mormonism were the legitimate outcome of the teachings of "Joe Smith," the Book of Mormon and Mormon religion generally. He admitted that he had never read the book through, never had seen the Spalding story,—but knew it was true because "eminent authors" had "said so" and "honest, spiritual-minded men—ministers—had said so," whose word he preferred to take against a handful of followers of "Joe Smith."

I then proceeded to give them the facts regarding the "Spalding story," as that was expressly his theme, and my experience with Eber D. Howe in Painesville, Ohio, his "Mormonism Unveiled," and his statement to me personally that the Spalding story manuscript was delivered to him by the hand of Hurlbut who went to Monson, Massachusetts, to obtain it from Spalding's widow with the understanding that when published as an "expose" of the Book of Mormon she should share in the proceeds of the sale; that, when asked why he did not publish this manuscript and settle forever the fact that the Book of Mormon was a plagiarism, if it was such, Mr. Howe replied, "It did not read as we expected and we could not use it as we thought;" that I had offered five dollars for his single copy of "Mormonism Unveiled," but that he would not sell it for less than ten dollars; that he had loaned it me until I had examined it and as all who have seen it know it does not contain a line, sentence, name, or anything that could in any reason connect it with the Book of Mormon; that this was a losing venture in making money by appeal to popular prejudice, nearly the whole of the first and only edition being burned in the hardware store of Mr. Childs, so Howe informed me, and Spalding's widow never enlarged her dowry by this "expose."

I gave the reverend gentleman the succeeding history of Howe's transfer of Painesville paper, press, etc., to Mr. Rice whose health compelled removal to Honolulu, Society Islands. The story of the discovery of this hidden "origin of the Mormon Bible" manuscript in the presence of and as told by Prof. Fairchild, of Oberlin, Ohio, and by Mr. Rice and as first published in the copy of the Bibliotheca Sacra. Its copy by our church committee under Mr. Fairchild's supervision with witness' certificate and its publication. The practicability of the Reverend informing himself as to the facts in the matter, as to what the Book of Mormon did teach; and that it would be well to obtain information before characterizing it as "rubbish" and its believers or adherents as "fools" or "fanatics," and ended by offering to undertake the task of taking care of our fences in a public discussion if he would venture to defend his, or publicly attempt proof of his statements giving us opportunity to reply. The last word we heard as he passed out the door was that "Joe Smith" was a "crank," and he faded from view leaving our hostess in a state of indignation over our treatment by this professed follower and representative of Jesus Christ.

This lady told me at our meeting last evening that the Baptist minister was since after her, and pastoral calls on others of their respective flocks who attend our meetings betray the fact and offer at the same time the consolation that the Devil knows when his enemies are around, and this ancient father of lies and friend of liars sees the necessity of looking after his fences when the truth is having an airing.

I do not favor frequent challenges or hasty bids for conflict with opposers, especially without consultation with superiors. But sometimes while not feeling to "cut the cable" between us and headquarters as did Dewey, or to go ahead and knock out the enemy as did Schley without consulting the department at Washington, yet I did feel as though such contemptible and discourteous treatment should be promptly met and if necessary and for the good of the cause have its public exposition and rebuke. But there is little danger of obtaining fair or honorable treatment at the hands of such misrepresentatives of Jesus Christ, or of obtaining his consent to any arrangement that might serve to enlighten the people in regard to the facts in the case as relates to the respective histories of the churches organized by John Calvin and Joseph Smith. People ignorant of their true history are given to understand by the explanations rendered of our faith by these modern Pharisees that a conversion and adherence to it was fraught with all the dangers that could be attached to a violation of all the moral code or religious virtues or certitudes possibly known to the history of mankind; and the sequel to this logic must inevitably be that people uniting with the church of Latter Day Saints make by this action on their part public advertisement of renunciation to all claims to reason, common sense, morality, virtue, respectability, or religion that is worth considering by civilized or sane people.

Well, we are in the midst of a repetition of the religious experiences of the first century of the Christian Era, so called, sure enough. Persecution for "the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ" are not things of past history exclusively, and the experiences of Bro. D. MacGregor and his companions with a Canada mob whose miseducation in regard to our faith had seemingly not been neglected by the editorial fraternity and doctors of divinity in that benighted locality, reads like ancient history.

Miseducated or prejudiced people may have been led to unfair or unjust criticism of the life and character of Robert G. Ingersoll, but the people are listening to religious professors or teachers whose utterances have less of truth and saving grace, as I believe, than has this statement culled from the Colonel's lecture of Jesus Christ: "And let me here say, once and for all, that for the man Christ I have infinite respect. Let me say once for all that the place where men died for men is holy ground; and let me say once for all, to that great and serene man I gladly pay the homage of my admiration and my tears. He was a reformer in his day. He was an infidel in his time. He was regarded as a blasphemer, and his life was destroyed by hypocrites who have in all ages done what they could to trample freedom out of the human mind. Had I lived at that time I would have been his friend and should he come again he would not find a better friend than I will be." It may be that Mr. Ingersoll said in this last sentence more than his real knowledge of Christ or his mission may warrant. But his public pleadings for justice and fair play in matters of religious difference or controversy are in beautiful contrast with the action, public position, and utterances of hired assassins of truth that have in the past masqueraded as public guardians of all the religious truths or morals that were worth having or safe to be promulgated, and their race and kind are not, unfortunately, yet extinct.

The war between right and wrong, truth and error, is still on, however; and though disagreeable, unpleasant, painful unto the nature and character of cross-bearing at times, yet, in the shadow of the cross whose real significance and even gloom overreaches the waste of time and touches our life with the real significance that attaches to the life of "the Man of sorrows;"—yet must the fight be waged by those who are truly called by the Master, as in days of old, unto service of gospel proclamation and defense, as the heavens have revealed and restored to us in this our day and time.

May the grace and power of God attend everywhere and in all the world the heroes of this glorious and beautiful evangel of truth is our prayer.

MYRON H. BOND.

LAMAR, Colorado, January 13.

Editors Herald:—By request of the Saints living near the above-named place, I came here to organize a branch. Leaving Denver January 2, I stopped over a couple of days in Pueblo and spoke once for the few Saints and friends at the house of Bro. H. L. Ashbaugh. The Saints there form an energetic little band.

Saturday, the 4th, found me sixteen miles northwest of Lamar. That evening the Saints met at the house of Bro. L. J. Bradshaw and we organized a branch of about fifteen members, to be known as the Enterprise Branch, being named for the schoolhouse where their services are held. Priest Martin F. Ralston was chosen branch president; Bro. L. J. Bradshaw teacher; and Bro. Elmer H. Bradshaw clerk.

From what I learned of this country, I judge it offers good opportunities for people of limited means in securing homes. The Saints would be pleased to have other Saints locate here and will gladly furnish any information desired in regard to this country. Their post-office is Lamar.

I have been holding services nightly the past week at the Enterprise schoolhouse. The attendance was quite good and a lively interest was manifest. I preached the word under physical difficulty little less than torture, but with excellent liberty. The efforts were well received by most or those attending, and I look for additions to the church here before long.

Dr. John Alex. Dowie has quite a following in this locality. Their chief theme seems to be healing and upon that they base their claim of divinity of their cause. According to their theory all sickness is of the Devil and the Lord does not afflict or punish any one for good or for evil doing; that he can not do so, and never killed any one. One night I called their attention to a few of the many places in the Bible where the Lord had smitten wicked men with incurable diseases, and how the Lord had destroyed the antediluvians, the Sodomites and the first-born of Egypt; and finally showed by Paul's "thorn in the flesh" and Timothy's "weak stomach" that good men sometimes suffer, evidently for their good. They could not stand this and some of them left and refused to hear more. Curious, isn't it, that people should be offended at having the Bible quoted to them which they profess to believe? If I were afraid of the Bible as some I would paste pieces of paper over some of the most objectionable passages for fear some one would pick up my Bible and read to me what I did not wish to hear. Dr. Dowie is decidedly a central figure in their religion and all their ministers and members try to imitate him, and some of them have succeeded in adopting his boastful, spread-eagle style. His word is law and his members are not permitted to express themselves by vote either to approve or disapprove. In his Leaves of Healing for October 19, 1901, he says, "This church voting is all nonsense. I should just as soon ask a flock of sheep to vote where the shepherd should lead them." I suppose he considers himself as much superior to his members as a shepherd is above the dumb sheep. In the same paper he says no vote has ever been taken in his Zion and never shall be had while he is overseer in Zion. His members must take his words and inspiration without question. How would you Saints like that kind of rule? He is also looking out for his financial interests, for he says a man who does not pay his tithing is a robber, and he will not have any robbers in Zion. Each month his members receive a dun for tithing and Dr. Dowie says one fifth of Zion's estate shall be his. All of these statements are suggestive to those who have their glasses adjusted so as to discern the signs of the times.

To-morrow I leave for Lajunta to organize a branch near Rockyford if found practicable.

JOHN B. ROUSH.

BLOOMINGTON, Idaho, January 18.

Editors Herald:—Since last I wrote I have been laboring in the Bear Lake country. I first visited Montpelier, but the churches were closed against me, and could not pay hall rent. Although I could have had a large store-building rent free, yet I was not financially able to furnish seats, fuel, and lights. So I went to Dingle and the bishop of that ward kindly permitted me to occupy their meeting-house one night. I then obtained permission from the school trustees to occupy the Dingle Schoolhouse, and preached there five times. I next visited Bloomington, and the bishop of that ward promised to let me use their meeting-house when they were not using it. But because of diphtheria the county physician ordered all public meetings to cease, so I went to Paris and applied to the bishop of the second ward for the meeting-house, but he refused, saying that the house would be in use every night and there might be objections to me using it anyway. I then called on the bishop of the first ward and he readily consented to let me use the first ward house when they were not using it, telling me that I could use it next Friday night. On Friday night I addressed a seemingly interested audience of about one hundred fifty people.

In the meantime I had called on the sheriff of the county and obtained his consent to my using the courtroom providing I would see the county commissioners and get their consent. I then saw them and they readily consented to my using the courtroom free of charge, stipulating only that I should pay the janitor his charges for extra work. So, since Monday night I have preached four times in the courthouse to audiences of from twenty to forty people, some of whom seemed to be quite interested. While laboring there I was kindly cared for by Mr. Samuel Athey and his estimable wife for several days, and the remainder of the time I spent at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sister John Baldwin who live in the country. They formerly lived in Lamoni, Iowa.

Yesterday I went to Ovid and obtained permission from the bishop of that ward to preach in their meeting-house when they are not using it. I am to preach there next Monday night, and the bishop thinks I can have the house for three nights next week, though he will have to consult his counselors concerning it. I hope he will let me have the house, for it is not often that I can get a Mormon meeting-house in which to preach three sermons the same week. At present I am domiciled in the home of Sister Grace Long and her husband. She is the adopted daughter of Elder John Grimmett (now deceased) and is a true Saint. Her husband is a noble man although not a member of the Reorganization.

Bloomington is the home of E. S. Hart, one of the four Mormon elders who interviewed President Joseph Smith at Independence, Missouri, March 18, 1896, which interview was published in the Deseret News, the correctness of which was subsequently denied by President Smith and Apostle Joseph Luff. I have not met Mr. Hart, but Mr. Long with whom I am stopping at present is Hart's cousin.

I do not know how long I will continue in Bear Lake country, but there are quite a number of places I want to visit, and if possible do some preaching before I leave for other parts.

A. J. LAYLAND.

ADA, I. T., January 13.

Editors Herald:—Bro. J. W. Grimes and myself are four miles north of Ada, with Bro. J. S. Reed and family. We expect to commence meeting to-night in a tent the people have fitted up in which to hold school. We have opened the work in five new places, and while none have been baptized there are a good many near the kingdom. I believe if these places are followed up next summer some will be baptized. All say July and August are the best months for meetings, before they commence picking cotton.

Bro. Henry Duncan lives four miles north of McGee. Some are nearly ready for baptism there, and five miles west of McGee, at the Berney Jones schoolhouse, we had the best of interest.

Bro. J. N. Crawford lives at Maxwell and through his influence we have opened most of these new places. He has been nearly blind for years, but is getting some better now and has the promise that if he is faithful he will be restored. He peddles a few little articles, as that is about all he can do, and has traveled all over this country. He never tires talking this gospel, and has removed lots of prejudice and made friends for the work.

We have enjoyed a degree of liberty in preaching and have met with some things not very encouraging. We meet so many people that can not read and nearly all use tobacco, chew, smoke, and dip snuff. The women indulge in the latter. Nearly all the Saints have quit the use of tobacco.

Missionary Baptists seem to be in majority, and where they have control of meeting-houses they keep out everybody else. They have a few of Dr. W. B. Toney's "Expose of Mormonism." We borrowed one and to my surprise found it a little pamphlet which takes about an hour to read, full of misrepresentations and garbled quotations. Any one acquainted with our work and knowing Toney, can see that he knew better and that he was just writing to fill a certain demand among classes that are ready to believe anything but the truth concerning the restored gospel.

I hope the Saints will not be slow to respond to the call of the Bishopric.

W. M. AYLOR.

EAST SANGERVILLE, Maine, January 15.

Editors Herald:—Elder S. G. Cunningham held a series of meetings last year in the neighborhood where I was teaching—the first meeting I think ever held in this part of the State. I was very much interested and read what I could during the winter, and when he returned in June I was baptized with one other. There has been much opposition and hard feeling but some are interested.

Since my return home in November, I have been entirely alone, and there is so much misunderstanding and prejudice. I feel discouraged at times. I do not suppose one in fifty here ever heard of the Reorganized Church before, and they think it is practically the same as the Utah church. Some class it in with Sanford's "Holy Ghost and Us" movement which I have seen mentioned in this paper; but I see quite a difference, for they are not organized after the Bible pattern, and while they claim the spiritual gifts it seems to me the manifestations can hardly come from the good Spirit, since it leads them to do many foolish and strange things.

A friend of mine living near where the movement originated and who was one of their converts wrote me a few days ago that she "knows now there is nothing in it," and that "they act more like crazy people than anything else." She says she has gone back to the Free Baptist Church and tries to get all the good she can. I suppose she will be slow to listen to anything new another time; but I think I could show her where to find all that appeals to her in that and with the "crazy part" left out.

I wonder sometimes if those Saints who are not alone and who can attend the meetings regularly fully appreciate their privileges.

I ask the Saints to remember me in their prayers, that I may be able to stand faithful and to show by my daily life that I am striving to obey Christ's teachings in all things.

Your sister in the faith,

MARY E. LELAND.

PITTSBURG, Penn., January 14.

We are pleased with the appearance of the HERALD, in the beginning of the year, in its neat new dress, well fitting, and up to date. We have never seen it look so well. Wish we could say as much for the new appearance of the Hope. To us it looks more like an undress. But perhaps it is simply disrobing in order to put on something better. We Hope.

We are pleased to say that the New Year finds us as a branch in much better condition than we were a year ago. In spite of all obstacles, and we have had many to contend with, we find ourselves in a neat little church building of our own. All seem to be delighted with it. Not one "kicker" has appeared. It seems to be the general opinion that with the means at hand we could hardly have done better, and many are surprised that we did so well. It is the Lord's work, and to him be all the praise.

As advertised the house was dedicated on the 5th. The day was fine, even the elements favoring us. The first service was prayer-meeting at 9:30. But long before that hour a number found their way to the church, among whom were a delegation from Wheeling, followed soon after by members from other portions of the district. The good Spirit was with us from the first and all were made to rejoice. Elders Parsons and Cushman of the Ohio missionary force were with us, and Bro. Ullom also rendered valuable service. We hoped to have Bro. W. H. Kelley, but were disappointed. We were pleased to greet Elder Tary, and Bro. Martin of the local force, also Elder Perrie, from Fayette City.

Beginning at 10:45 the following program was carried out: Organ voluntary; hymn, "Praise the Savior all ye nations" by choir; hymn, "Coronation," congregation; prayer by Bro. Harry Thomas; anthem No. 92, Winnowed Anthems, choir; Scripture reading, 1 Kings 8: 22-53; hymn 96, "Better Land," congregation; sermon from text, "Unto such God hath promised his Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth," followed by anthem by choir. A two hundred dollar collection was asked and we received nearly two hundred fifty dollars. Dedicatory prayer was offered by Elder A. H. Parsons. Closing hymn, "Sovereign and transforming grace," and benediction.

We met again in the afternoon at 2:30, and after partaking the sacrament, administered by the pastor and Elder L. D. Ullom, of Wheeling, short addresses were given by the following brethren: Bro. Martin and Elder Tary of Wheeling, Elder Cushman from Ohio, Elder Perrie from Fayette City, and Bro. Harry Thomas, presiding priest of our own branch. The good Spirit was present and all were edified. In the evening Elder Parsons was the speaker, and he gave us an excellent sermon. We had fairly good audiences all day and every one seemed delighted with the church, especially with its interior arrangements, which are indeed very complete.

The building is of light colored pressed brick, thirty-four by forty-four feet, thirteen feet high at the sides and eighteen feet high in the center to ceiling. The windows are gothic, etruscan glass. The large double window in front is leaded art glass, as are the transoms to all the windows and doors. Besides the main auditorium there is a small lecture room, with sliding partitions so as to throw the two rooms into one if necessary. There is a baptistry in front of the pulpit, and in the basement are two robing rooms, with sliding partitions, and two water-closets, nicely fitted up with hot and cold water, hot water being furnished by instantaneous water-heater. The church is heated by a natural gas furnace also in basement.

Preaching-meetings were continued through the week till Friday night, when the Sunday-school gave an entertainment which was a success. We are encouraged and feel that with a church of our own we shall be able to let our light shine to better advantage than ever before, and that honest souls seeking the light may be blessed accordingly.

On December 1 I had the pleasure of assisting in the opening of the Saints' new church in Philadelphia, and was made to rejoice in their success. They too have a very neat little edifice, a little larger, perhaps, than ours, though very little different, both having the same number of seats. We expect to hear good news from Philadelphia. It is beginning to come, as some have already been baptized, so we are informed.

I have devoted most of my time the last year to the needs of the work in this city, running out occasionally to other parts of the district for a week or two at a time, as occasion seemed to demand. I also attended conference at Kirtland, Ohio, and accompanied Elder Kelley on a short trip to Southern Ohio, and preached in Wellston, Creola, Vales Mills, and Columbus. The latter is a city of one hundred twenty-five thousand people. The few Saints there seem alive, and with sufficient help I believe a good work could be done.

I have been greatly blessed in my labors, and am feeling well.

AVA, Missouri, January 16.

Editors Herald:—I am comforted in reading in the HERALD of the bright hopes and prospects of Zion. I am pleased to note that the work in this district is moving upward. New fields are opening and many are investigating. I have been working quite a bit in new fields, and have wished for an elder as I am only a priest; and it has been my lot to go single handed most of the time. But I console myself with the thought that while I am alone another is not.

I have more calls to preach than I could fill if I were half a dozen. While I meet with some dots and dashes along the way, I can see the silver lining ahead which nerves me for the fray.

In one new place where I have just closed a week of meetings I found a lady who is a third or fourth cousin of Joseph the Seer. In conversation she said she always heard that Joseph was a bad man, etc.; and when I gave her to understand that she had been misinformed she seemed surprised. Her husband said, after hearing me preach, that when one looked me square in the face they were looking at a Latter Day Saint.

Another family by the name of Smith at the same place, is on the right side of the fence. Mr. Smith is one of the trustees of the M. E. church, and tried to secure it for me to preach in. Not meeting with favor he said if they fooled with him he would deed off an acre of ground and build a church for the Latter Day Saints.

As it might be of interest to some I will relate a dream this Mrs. Smith had just before I began to preach here, and which she told after hearing me several times. She had seen her body in coffin in the Christian church where she was a member, and she stood by in spirit and saw her body a corpse, and she seemed to realize that she was lost. She has asked me what this meant, and I have told her there is something for her to do to be saved. She is almost ready for the water.

My soul goes out to God for all Israel to be saved in his kingdom. So let us be wise servants.

APPLEDORE, Ontario, January 8.

Editors Herald:—We greet the HERALD in its new dress for 1902, and trust it may accomplish much good in its mission of spreading the gospel news to mankind.

We often hear the remark, "I wonder what the Saints are doing in our district: we seldom ever see a letter in the HERALD from there." I feel safe in saying God has dealt kindly with us as his children.

Knowing the work in which we are engaged is recognized of the Lord,

"We will sing of his goodness and mercy,
We will praise by day and by night,
Rejoice in his glorious gospel
And bask in its life-giving light."

To say that God had remembered us is only to touch the first chord. We have struggled through the mists and clouds and when the sun does shine we fully enjoy it in all its splendor and beauty.

Last Sabbath Bro. Alvin Knisley of Selkirk and Bro. William Taylor of Wabash met with the Saints of the Lindsley Branch for sacramental, prayer, and testimony service. Though few in number we enjoyed a quiet, spiritual feast; a calm influence was felt during the entire session. Bro. Knisley was spoken to in prophecy and received encouragement. The gift of tongues was also present and the Saints of the branch received evidence of God's divine favor.

We prayerfully hope the work may be revived in this place, for we meet and worship in the first Saints' church ever built in Canada. The gospel had been preached here hundreds of times. Only a few are here at present. Members of this branch are scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, but we hope they are doing good. The Lord has said if we are faithful more will be added to our numbers. The time is hastening on! Christ's second coming is near at hand! May the Lord help us as his people to be true to our covenant, and may we finally reap the reward of the faithful!

WILLIAMS BAY, Wisconsin, January 19.

Editors Saints' Herald:—I love the HERALD more and more as each year comes and goes, and I have been a reader of its pages for over twenty-five years. While being detained at home of late by the death of old Sister Hicks who has lived with us for the last five years, and by other sickness in my family, I have had an opportunity to read quite carefully the "Lectures on Church History" by Bro. Heman C. Smith. They are grand, and will give many of the Saints a better understanding of the church history. I think they have been given in the right time, and by being published in the HERALD many have been benefited by them.

I wish we could say all the Saints are readers of the HERALD; but some are not, and so do not get the good that is in these lectures. I hope that it will be possible for the HERALD Office to have them published in book form. I feel to thank God that the church has men who can gather such historical facts for the benefit of the Saints and for the building up of this great latter-day work, and in preparing a people for the redemption of Zion and the gathering of God's people.

Editors Herald:—I wish to ask, When did Jesus Christ separate from the Father? We find in St. John 17: 5 that he prayed the Father to glorify him with the glory that he had before the world was. Then in Genesis 7: 44-46, I. T., we have the thought that the Lord's chosen was not with him at that time. And I understand that Christ was not with the Father from the time that Adam transgressed until after he was crucified and even after his resurrection. Will some one or more write on the subject?
J. W. WILLIAMS.

JONESPORT, Maine, January 12.

Editors Herald:—I rejoice in this latter-day work, and shall hope and labor for the promised reward of the faithful. It has not been two years since I became a member, but through reading church publications and studying all the books obtainable, I have gained a fair knowledge and understanding of the doctrine. This angel-restored gospel—that has been to me of untold blessings—is now just as precious and beautiful and even more interesting than when I first heard and obeyed it. The aim and object of life at present is to do all possible for the advancement of the gospel and to help others to a knowledge of its truth and blessings. What a glorious thing it is to be in the light and truth of the gospel!

I ask the Saints to pray that I may keep myself unspotted from the world, and set an example worthy of imitation; and with God's help and mercy that I may never tire of well-doing, I will work for the Master, for I do not want to be an idle servant.

MERTIE F. WHITING.

MANCHESTER, Texas, January 13.

Editors Herald:—The record of another year is completed. Will we be glad to meet that record? What a happy thought it is to turn a page of time and say we have done all we could to follow the footsteps of our Savior and advance the gospel of Jesus Christ: that we have made glad all the hearts we could by carrying the angel's message! Those whom the Lord has called to carry the gospel in the last days and cry repentance to this generation should not stop because a few trials and difficulties are met, else their record will not be a desirable one when our Savior comes to reward every man according to his work. Paul said: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter."—Romans 8: 35, 36.

I would not give what I enjoy of God's Holy Spirit in one day for all the treasure man can gather in this life. To know I am a servant of a God who will hear me in the hour of trouble and will bless me and my dear little family cheers me much. In answer to my petitions my wife and children have been healed when it looked as though they would not live another hour. Our Savior said if we would ask we should receive. What a happy thought it is to know that it is just as true to-day as when he spoke.

I have been in this latter-day work about nine years. This work is of God. May the people see the truth and obey it, and be prepared for the great day when Jesus Christ comes to execute judgment upon all who obey not God.

E. A. ERWIN.

ARLINGTON, Iowa, January 13.

Editor Herald:—The HERALD is a very welcome visitor in our home. When we read it we fully realize that the gospel is fast spreading to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. Are we ready to meet our blessed Savior and Master who has done so much for us?

There is nothing that gives me so much pleasure as when I can do something for the gospel's sake. Many times I have been prompted to write and bear my testimony of how the dear Lord has blessed me; but for years I have refrained. It is now over ten years since I obeyed the gospel, and I have never regretted the step taken. I have thanked the Lord many, many times for the day he allowed Uncle John Shippy to bring the glad message in our midst.

This branch at one time numbered forty-three; but many have moved away, some to Missouri and some to Oklahoma. What few are left are trying to do all they can to let their light shine, and to warn their neighbors. Last summer Elders Roth and Sutton came with the tent and held forth for four weeks. Large audiences came. Many of our best citizens spoke highly of the sermons, and prejudice has been allayed. The church doors had been closed against our elders, but not so now: we have been given permission to hold our February conference in the United Brethren church; also two-week meetings prior to the conference. This same church was at one time denied our elders. We are very, very thankful to have the church doors opened to us again. This work is of the Lord and none can overthrow it.

Our Saints' meetings are quite spirited, and we all enjoy them so much. Elder Miller will soon leave us for his Missouri home, and then we have but one officer left. But the Lord has promised that where two or three are met together in his name he will in no wise forsake them. With this assurance we feel contented.

I ever pray for the welfare of Zion.

MARY E. ECKHART.

OAK HARBOR, Ohio, January 5.

Dear Saints' Herald:—I take this opportunity to let you know my whereabouts and also to state that during the many years I have subscribed for the HERALD I have found its reading matter a comfort to my soul, and now in its new form and dress it shows progression and development which I am glad to witness.

I wish to take you back to the early spring of 1889 when I first went to Coleman, Michigan. At that time there were only three Saints besides myself in the small village. They were Brethren J. H. Peters, E. J. Martindale, a priest, and Elder J. J. Bailey. Before this I had heard very little preaching by our elders since a boy and consequently knew little of the teachings of our church except what I had learned from church literature. I well remember when, after losing my father, mother, and brother, that my brother, J. Cole, was taken to raise by an uncle and I went to a neighbor, both families living in Rock Island County, Illinois. Here we were not under the teachings of our church and felt that we dare not say very much about our faith as these families were Methodist. However, I would often think about the church people and especially of the officers of the Buffalo Prairie Branch; whether they would ever hunt us up and what I would do or say if they should. It was a great query in my mind. The people I was with nearly always had family prayer in the morning just after breakfast, and very often at such times I remember praying to God to be liberated and privileged to live and mingle with our church people somewhere, and expected, if my prayers were answered, that I would be set down in the midst of great numbers of the church. It did not dawn upon me that I would be located with so few and that others would be added to our number if we were faithful.

Before going to Coleman I had noticed in the HERALD that Bro. J. J. Cornish was very prominent in church work in Northern Michigan; this was while I was an attendant at the Insane Hospital at Kankakee, Illinois. Thinking that perhaps my brother and I could obtain a position, I wrote to Elder Cornish about my ability and qualifications in the business world. On receiving my letter Bro. Cornish forwarded it to Bro. J. H. Peters, of Coleman. And soon arrangements were made. I reached Coleman on February 2; met Bro. Peters for the first time, and soon my duties were assigned and work commenced in Northern Michigan. Soon after this Bro. Cornish came. It was thought by some that we were polygamists and that it would only be a little while before a car would be chartered and we would flee with what we could get to Utah. But how different it was after a few months! The clouds began to roll away and many were baptized. Others with letters came from other branches and united with us. A branch was organized and when the time came that my wife and I found it necessary to change our abode, it appeared that we were about to leave a large branch, it having one hundred forty members, a fine church edifice, a thriving Sunday-school and Religio society. Our hearts were filled with sorrow at parting, as we knew that we were going among strangers. Bro. J. H. Peters had sold his interests there and we left for another part of the world, where we now abide, so situated and located on Portage River, having two railroads, the Wheeling & Lake Erie and Lake Shore.

Oak Harbor is a wealthy German settlement and a thriving town of about eighteen hundred inhabitants; two English-speaking churches, the Methodist and Christian, beside three foreign, two German Lutheran, and one Catholic. The Methodists are beginning a series of meetings this evening to continue through the month.

Since coming I have become acquainted with a great many of the people and when opportunity has presented itself I have made mention of our church work, and have loaned some of our church literature. A few I have talked with are anxious to hear our elders preach and I have written to Bro. Wm. H. Kelley to come himself or send a good speaker to open up the work. I have not asked for either of the churches as we have a good town hall and need not fear what the speaker may say.

We are trying to live as becomes Saints of God and are praying the time will soon come when we can enjoy the gospel being preached in Oak Harbor. I feel that we as Latter Day Saints are as leaven when scattered here and there on earth. The Lord expects us to so live that others will see our good works and obey the truth.

Since coming here I have been silent as far as correspondence is concerned, but otherwise I have tried to be awake. We expect Elder S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, here in the near future to open up the work. We pray for the good of the work in this place and everywhere.

Saints' Herald:—We are glad to see the HERALD improved so much in appearance, and wish to congratulate its editors and managers; and to those pertinent or timely editorials let me say amen. But one thing causes pain, that is a hint that the HERALD may become a thing of the past. By all means let the dear old HERALD be supported! It would be missed in many a home! I imagine our great loss after its demise! Some of the Saints would not miss it, for some do not care to keep it alive. They prefer a story-paper. However, such might after the death of the HERALD publish resolutions of condolence, if only out of sympathy toward its stricken friends and relatives. "They who are not with us are against us." This is true in all cases, the fact of their being with us is seen only in the help they give us in this good work.

In every branch of the church there are some who do not attend church. They always miss the Saints' and prayer-meetings, and in the meetings mostly for the branch they are not with us, and in their actions and influence are against us. The HERALD is the organ of the church—of each district, branch, and individual of the church. It is our church organ, and we are in duty bound to support it. This is helping it. Not to support it is to injure and oppose it.

I had to quit the field in July last on account of sickness. Sister Shinn was alone and I had to take care of her. Then I took sick with rheumatism and have suffered a great deal, though am now better in some respects. I gave notice to the bishop's agent at the proper time, and of course something stopped. This know ye, all those who watch for faults, the Lord and his servants have been good to us, and we have no cause to complain. I hope soon to be able again to go out into the vineyard and labor.

I did not ask a release because I thought I could soon be out again and there are many now writing for me to come.

But the HERALD is mostly the subject of this writing, and let me say to the Saints in West Virginia: Come, let every family in the district take the HERALD. There is no paper like it—no, not one in all the world! Think of what it is to us! and of its aged, staid, and faithful editor! May the Lord impress you all with the great importance of this work. You can easier do without some other things than you can the church paper. Times are good in West Virginia. Every one has some employment and prosperity calls for "giving thanks unto God in all things." You can enjoy the fellowship of the Saints in all nations through the HERALD. D. L. SHINN.

Editors Herald:—I note with pleasure the progress of the church in different parts of the field. Yet when we but faintly realize something of the magnitude of the work that must be accomplished, and realize the weakness and frailty of humanity, we are led to exclaim, Shall we be equal to the task?

Though we so well know all must die, yet it is only when death enters our own circle that we fully realize it. On December 17, 1901, death claimed my father, D. L. Burford, that day being his eighty-second birthday. More than a week previously mother, by advice of the family physician, called the children home. Glad were we to reach the bedside while our dear father was yet conscious and glad to see us. His death was peaceful. The elders who labored in Macoupin County, Illinois, will remember his hospitality.

Though sad we struggle on in a worthy cause.

SR. HEPPIE MORRIS.

ALGONA, Iowa, January 16.

Editors Herald:—I am in Kossuth County and engaged in the fight. I came to this county last July, being, I think, the first of our elders to come. I was well received at Ledyard by old time friends, but as it was harvest time I told them I would return. I reported the prospects to Elder J. M. Baker, our missionary, who gave me much encouragement to return. I did so in December and found the United Brethren church awaiting me. It has been secured by an old friend, Alexander Montgomery. He and his estimable family took me in and did all they could to help in the meetings, as also did Mr. and Mrs. Hall, old time friends who are members of Dowie's church. I used the church nine evenings by paying running expenses, but the presiding elder told me they did not want me to use the church further and they wanted a dollar an evening, as it had cost from seventy-five cents to a dollar a night for fuel and light. I took up collections amounting to $4.00 which they took and I told them I would replace oil and coal costing about $3.00. I rented the hall for Sunday to close my meetings; got a good hearing and collected expenses. I feel confident some will unite with the church.

The United Brethren preacher, Rev. Bailey, told some of his members in my presence that he had visited a friend, Mr. Kelley, a Methodist, who had been a teacher in Graceland College, and that Mr. Kelley had gone to Lamoni very much prejudiced against us, but after becoming acquainted with the workings of the church and visiting Graceland College, the Home, and HERALD Office, and meeting the leading officials of the church, his mind was much changed, and said the financial part of the church was the best in the world and wished his church would adopt the same system.

I came here in July, found old schoolmates and army comrades who gave me a hearty welcome. I preached in the Methodist Episcopal church and was well received by all; but on my return there was a change on the part of some of the M. E. people, and I could not get the church. One of the trustees, a lady, said she would not associate with a Utah Mormon and all Latter Day Saints were the same. My old time friends and part of the Methodists said they had confidence in me and would stand by me until I had a chance to vindicate myself. They secured the schoolhouse one mile from the church, and I have been here two weeks preaching most of the time to a full house with the best of interest; and in spite of the old howl "Mormon" the mist is clearing away and two M. E. people have told me they will unite with the church if we have an appointment here. Surely this is an open door. I preached a funeral sermon here twenty-two years ago and many remember me. I will remain here until the 25th and then go six miles south to Schenck Schoolhouse where they are waiting for me.

There are no Saints in this county that I can hear of, but many kind friends. I will go to Dolliver next; they are waiting for me there, too. I was there last July.

Pray for me, dear Saints, and for the spread of the gospel and the conversion of many precious souls in this new field of labor.

W. H. KEPHART.

From Independence, Missouri.

Everything looks bright, not only because the sun shines but because the last fine fall of wet snow promises spring pasturage, rich fields of wheat, and plenty of water for the farmers' flocks and herds.

Since New Year's the Saints here have been listening to some excellent sermons from our local elders. Last Sunday morning the church congregation looked much like a General Conference. Added to our own goodly numbers were about fifty M. D's., the guests of Dr. Luff, and it is far from being barbed sarcasm to say that to them, it,—the sermon,—was evidently the most profound medical lecture they ever heard. To the Saints it was inspiring, as have been other sermons listened to of late. We are incapable, should we attempt it, of giving justice to the effective thoughts expressed. The speaker took for his text the words, "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." In the examination of the fancied sightless, speechless, breathless corpse before him with no manifestation of life in it he inquired, "Of what use was it to the spirit?" It was created for a divine purpose. So the church being the body of Christ must have life within itself. Where are its functions? Referring to the twelfth chapter of Corinthians we can, by searching, know whether the spirit is there or not. If there the manifestation of the spirit will be there also. After a lengthy discourse, Bro. Luff closed with the portrayal of the church as the bride in the wilderness, rejected, because there was no life in her; for "the body without the spirit is dead."

Since January 1 four young people have been baptized in the font, our infant brother, John Roosevelt, son of Bro. Conner, was blessed, and two beloved sisters have been taken by death. Sister C. T. Bray who had been a resident here but about a year, in an unexpected hour succumbed to heart failure; and yesterday we laid to rest the remains of Sr. Rachel Barnes who patiently bore a painful and sudden attack of pneumonia. After ten days suffering she quietly passed away like one falling asleep. While hearts are breaking, while trials come to afflict and harrow, now is the time to lend a helping hand, help to comfort, to buoy up hopes and to build up lives. Life is a world-wide lot, where temples are being built, and it takes sometimes but a few years and sometimes three score and ten to do the building. It requires all the gems and jewels of all the ages, the precious gifts of the gospel; and the developing processes are ever going on, through failures and crosses, heart-breaks and losses.

"You must have a work to do—pursue it;
If a failure, try again—renew it;
Failure spurs us to success.
Failures come; but come to bless,
Fitting us for righteousness"

Bro. M. T. Short is improving in health. He has been at home a few weeks recuperating; not from wearisome ministerial efforts, for the soldier of the cross never wearies while there are foes for him to face, but from annoying throat trouble. Prayer, we are told, "is the soul's sincere desire; so we hope that he that has fought a good fight hitherto will soon be able to go to the front again, and go fully assured of victory.

The officials of the Independence Stake, both conference and of auxiliaries' conventions are hustling to prepare for reassembling in early March. Spring conference—the general one—and a pleasant visit with Lamoni Saints are in the mind's eye of quite a few.

We will have to revise our little tract on "the Restoration of Israel" or trot out a new one on the subject of "Palestine purchased," by and by. There's something more afloat than Turkish sympathy with the Jews in the colonization question; for a bill has been introduced in New York State Legislature, by request of influential Hebrews there, for the incorporation of the Federation of American Zionists. Purpose, the purchase of Palestine.

It is predicted that in Jackson County the peach crop will be light; but there are live buds that have withstood the cold snap of December 13 to 20, and we are glad of this, for in nearly every yard and little back orchard of the royal suburb one may see the luscious peach trees growing.

And Independence is destined we believe to be a more progressive city: the new electric plant over which our Bro. Caldwell presides, the finely paved Electric Street upon which the Rock Church stands, and the newly improved waterworks in full operation, are some of our late enterprises. What we need most is some persuasive power here to convert our beautiful city into one which shall make the saloons unpopular and close their doors; but there is too much rum-power everywhere. Tennessee affords a good example for any progressive State; for there we are told no saloon can operate within four miles of a schoolhouse in cities of less than ten thousand; so, schoolhouses are built close enough together to crowd out the saloons!

There is another reform every one ought to be in sympathy with here, and that is the work of the Humane Society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. This should no doubt embrace the needless killing of them; and the prediction in reference to this is worthy an examination. It is this: "When men finally cease needlessly to seal with blood their dominion over brute creation, they will be nearest to the end of war among themselves." Parents and teachers, let us not go into a pallid decline in the teaching of lessons of kindness to birds and animals, even if it be our "ownest own" boy who uses the sling-shot freely when the spring birds come again; for the world is awakening to a higher sentiment in this regard, and is likely to rebuke us if we fail. A Miss Caroline P. Stokes has already started with a three-thousand-dollar contribution fund to secure protection for American birds. The Alaskans also are protecting their fine animals from destruction and efforts are being made in this direction everywhere.

We may be assured the teachings of the Master will lead us along right lines in every direction if we will only learn, love, and obey.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, January 20.

Editors Herald:—I closed a series of meetings last evening that were well attended and where some interest was manifested; yet no one seemed to be ready to obey. If my labors this year shall be measured by the number I have baptized I must be regarded as an unprofitable servant, for not one as yet has received that ordinance under my hands.

Prior to the month of August I was hindered by circumstances, but since then I have been almost continuously engaged. I have found abundant room in the Little Sioux District for work, and in many places a willingness to hear; while in others the gospel seems to have little attraction for the people. At Sandy Point where several have come into the church through labors of W. A. Smith and others, the work was bitterly attacked by a Rev. Hook of the Church of God. He began meetings in the Saints' house of worship, but soon transferred his efforts to the United Brethren Church. I had not the privilege of meeting him, but the brethren report that he spread himself considerably, claiming to possess documents that convict Joseph Smith of polygamy, theft, and other crimes, and boasted that the elders dare not meet him in discussion. However, he would not care to waste time on any one but an apostle or a leading man of the church. I have written him to formulate propositions covering the grounds he wished to canvass, giving him to understand that if he wants a fair discussion we will try to accommodate him; but have heard nothing from him. Bro. J. W. Wight has promised to come to our help in case Rev. Hook concludes to show us what he can do, which is doubtful.

All of the missionary force are at work. Brethren F. E. Cohrt and P. M. Hansen were last heard from at Sioux City, where they were doing what they could for the cause. Bro. W. A. Smith expected to begin a series of meetings in a schoolhouse some distance south of this place, where he is no doubt at work. Bro. C. Derry is assisting the work at Woodbine and other places, doing all he can considering his advanced age and additional duties as district historian. When I contemplate the faithful work of such veterans whose labors were performed under the trying conditions of the past, I wonder how many of us upon whom the burden of the work must now rest will under like circumstances be able to endure unto the end.

Bro. D. A. Hutchings has been added to the mission force and is ready for duty. A goodly number of the local brethren are doing what they can to push onward the work, and the Saints throughout the district manifest interest in and love for the truth.

A Few Items of our Voyage.

BY SISTER BURTON.

On the following Tuesday after our arrival in Papeete, our party—being the same in number and persons as when we left San Francisco—boarded the new Southern Cross for a cruise among the islands. Our destination was Raroia and we would call at two other islands on our way.

Our good weather staid with us and a quick run was made to Anaa. The island was sighted late in the evening of the second day out, and at midnight the vibration of the propeller ceased and the sleepers on board sank into an undisturbed repose until the shrill whistle of the steamer broke the stillness of the early morning; then followed the usual commotion on shore, of natives hurrying to and fro collecting the stored bufa, already in sacks, and piling it upon the shore ready to be sent to the steamer. There are no horses on that island, so all must be carried on the shoulders of the natives, first to the shore, then away out into the shallow water to meet the boat.

Joseph went ashore in the first boat, but the rest of our party remained on board until the boat returned to learn how much cargo there was to boat out and how long the ship would remain. Word came that there was enough to keep her there nearly all day, and the native Saints very much desired that we should all come ashore. So after breakfast, or the first meal in the morning which is in this country called "coffee," we all went ashore. The native Saints were pleased to see us all, and Bro. A. H. Smith in particular. We who had been there before enjoyed the day very much, and I presume the others did also. I know Sr. Gilbert did; at least during the time we played we were girls again and cast aside our shoes and stockings and went wading about in the warm, shallow water of the lake till the heat of the sun became too strong to remain out in it longer. Then we returned to the house and reclined on the floor against soft beds and hard pillows that were piled in one corner of the room, and lazily rested and cooled off. Now it must not be thought that we were wading in the waters where the boat was coming and going and men at work. O no! We were on the lake shore with only a few children in company with us.

At four p. m. the whistle blew, the signal for us to be ready to come off in the boat then leaving the ship. Then ensued a prolonged hand-shaking, followed by our transportation to the boat in the usual way, and in a short time we were again steaming off towards Makemo.

We entered the boiling, surging waters of the pass into the Makemo Lake early in the morning. It is an exciting experience, entering those passes, when the whirling, rushing current meets the incoming tide or the waves driven in by a strong wind. The waves meet each other and rear up in each other's embrace like colliding locomotives. And if we gazed with bated breath when on a steamer, what will it be, thought I, when we come back this way in a small boat? and could only hope that we might enter upon smoother waters. It was a scary-looking place, but our stiff little ship, though she quivered perceptibly when she came in contact with the current, plowed her way steadily through it, rounded the point and anchored opposite the town. There being no Saints on that end of the island, we did not go ashore. The day was dull and wind blowing quite freshly.

In the afternoon, weighed anchor and steamed off for Raroia. During the night the wind freshened, and was accompanied with frequent rain squalls. Sr. Gilbert said it was very rough all night, but I knew nothing about it. I was aware that that was the last night, for some time at least, that I would be rocked to sleep, and therefore gave myself up to the full benefit of the soothing motion.

Between eight and nine o'clock in the morning we entered the Raroia Pass. It was wider and not so rough as the first one, and in a few minutes we were at our destination, and glad, too, for the blue sky was obscured by dark, lowering clouds, and the wind blowing strong. A rough, unpleasant ride in an uncomfortably loaded boat, brought us to the shore, where we were greeted by the Saints and conducted to the newly constructed church where the branch had gathered to receive us. After singing and prayer a reception speech was made by their orator and answered by our men folks, after which we were conducted to our respective domiciles, where beds had been made and other sundry fixings, such as a slazy curtain that one could see through as plain as need be, put up for a bedroom door, and a piece of the same on the table and the bare floor swept, barring the crevices and corners, which no doubt must have appeared to those people who live their lives in these remote islands to be all that heart could wish.

Yet to us, Metuaore's words to the Saints of Papeete when they suggested some addition to the missionaries' house in honor of the Patriarch's visit, would have been appropriate. He said, "Yes, you might add that, and everything else that could be got in Papeete, and still it would not be anything like America."

Notwithstanding the kindness of the Saints and their willingness to do all they could, a gloom settled over me as soon as we landed. My ideas, and anticipations of Raroia were far from being realized, and before the day was over I was so lonesome, I could scarcely maintain anything like a cheerful appearance. Bro. Alexander could not endure to stay in that bare, bleak-looking house, where walls and floor had become darkened with age without ever seeing paint, paper, or whitewash. Once when he walked restlessly through the room, from the front porch to the back, and back again to the front with a countenance that suggested the thought that he would like to have a good cry from sheer homesickness, I remarked, "You are too lonesome to stay in the house," to which he bowed an assent. Perhaps there was a lump in his throat.

But now that we have become adjusted to our environment, it does not seem bad at all for the Tuamotus. Brn. Alexander and Gould have the luxury of a bed to themselves, though both are in one room with a space between for the secretary's table—papai parau, he is called here. Our living-room is quite large. A door opens out on a porch, both front and back; two small, cobwebby windows with red curtains to drop if one wishes, and a long, high table hand-made and breast-high to me when sitting. Our bed is in a small room at the back with only space enough to stand between the bed and walls, with a small wooden window on hinges at the foot. But since we have been blessed with comparatively cool weather ever since we came—with the exception of two days—we have got along very well without suffering with heat. It is quite pleasant sitting out on the front porch and looking out on the lake, especially when boats are coming and going. Until within the past few days, the wind has been too strong for fishing or boating.

Prayer Union.

Sr. E. A. Stoner is badly afflicted and desires the prayers of all Saints, and especially the elders, that if it be God's will, she may be healed and also that those of her family who are out of the ark of safety may be led to obey the truth.

Two prayer-meetings and five preaching meetings were held; preaching by John Harp and David S. Parmer.

RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE; WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Western Association has granted a reduction of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to the General Conference and Conventions, to be held at Lamoni, Iowa, in April, 1902.

The general rules governing said rates will be observed, among which the following are enumerated:

1. The territory included in this reduction is, "from points in the territory of this Association east of and including Denver and Cheyenne," over such lines as are named below.
2. Going tickets may be purchased from April 2-8 inclusive, and return tickets as late as April 23. Full fare must be paid on going trip, and a certificate corresponding to every ticket purchased—showing payment of fare and certificate covering entire route to Lamoni, Iowa—must be obtained. The reduction applies only to fares costing over fifty cents.

"No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single trip ticket."

3. An attendance of one hundred is required to obtain the rate. "Ministers or others who travel on clerical or half-fare permits or commutation tickets of any description, or children traveling on half-fare tickets, are not entitled to this reduction, nor to be included in computing the number in attendance at any meeting."

4. Certificates should in all cases contain the name of holder, and should be handed to the Church Secretary promptly on arrival. When stamped by him and also by the joint agent at Lamoni they entitle the holders to return ticket at one third of regular fare.

"Where parties or clubs traveling in a body purchase a round trip party tickets to the place of meeting from stations from which the local one way rate is more than fifty cents and at not less than the rate announced on the certificate plan for the particular meeting in question (instead of one way tickets at regular rate) . . . they will be counted by the joint agent in reckoning the attendance." Where such parties travel together they should be reported to the Secretary by the one in charge, that the total attendance may be credited to the church for future use in obtaining rates.

5. "Under the method usually observed in certificate plan, the passenger pays full fare on going trip, and on presentation of certificate to that effect . . . [with other conditions complied with], a reduced rate of one and one third fare . . . is granted on return trip (by route traversed on going trip), to original starting point within authorized territory. Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is usually necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket of each road's issue, between points traveled thereon, and procure a certificate thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he travels in going to the meeting, as through tickets are not always sold, and it is not always practicable for the various lines to honor each other's certificates. Passengers should, therefore, ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate obtainable from him and procure certificate filled out to correspond with the ticket purchased.

"Failure to procure or present certificate invalidates any claim for reduction in return fare.

"Tickets for going passage may either be limited or unlimited, according to the rate paid or the regulations in effect on the line over which it reads; but the return tickets sold at the reduced fare will, in all cases, be limited to continuous passage."

List of roads in territory included in reduced rate: Atchison, Topoka & Santa Fe; Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern (from Pana to Beardstown inclusive. Certificates will be of Central Passenger Association form); Burlington & Northwestern; Burlington & Western; Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern; Chicago & Alton; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Chicago & Northwestern; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha; Great Northern (from Aberdeen, Huron, Sioux Falls, Watertown, and Yankton, S. D., Appleton, Duluth, Granite Falls, Hutchinson, Marshall, and Pipestone, Minn., and West Superior, Wis.); Hannibal & St. Joseph; Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs; St. Louis, Keokuk & Northwestern; Illinois Central; Iowa Central; Jacksonville & St. Louis; Kansas City Southern; Keokuk & Western; Minneapolis & St. Louis; Missouri, Kansas & Texas; Missouri Pacific; Omaha, Kansas City & Eastern; Omaha & St. Louis; Kansas City & Northern Connecting R. R.; Rock Island & Peoria; St. Louis & San Francisco; Wabash; Wisconsin Central; Burlington & Missouri River; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha R. R.; Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley R. R.; St. Joseph & Grand Island; Kansas City & Omaha; Union Pacific.

TRANS-CONTINENTAL ASSOCIATION.

The following from Chairman Charlton, of the Trans-Continental Association, will explain itself: "In reply to your favor of the 20th inst., I beg to say that the attendance from the States from which our lines sell; namely, California, Nevada, Washington, and Oregon, will doubtless be so small as not to justify the making of any special reduced rate from these States. Delegates may, however, avail themselves of the regular nine months' rate which is in effect daily and which approximates two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and a third for the round trip."

Trans-continental territory is west of Denver and Cheyenne to the coast. Delegates in said territory should correspond with passenger authorities of lines over which they may travel, either directly or through local agents, and learn full particulars concerning above-mentioned nine months' rate of two cents per mile.

Information concerning other associations and territory will be published when received. R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 24.

More Beautiful American Cities.

There is nothing stereotyped or formal about the eighty-page booklet, "The Twentieth Century City," which contains the proceedings of the annual convention of the American League for Civic Improvement, held at Buffalo in August, 1901. The pamphlet bears none of those usual marks of compilation that make us skip all reports. The topics discussed are such as interest every one who cares anything at all for his home, his city or his country. The papers read were unusually practical and suggestive, and have enough variety to satisfy every one. The reader is surprised at the magnitude and scope of the work included under the term "civic improvement." The topics discussed include such as, "How a Village was Improved," "The Renaissance of Civic Beauty," "The City of the Future," "University Extension as Related to Civic Improvement," "The Cleveland Home Gardening Association," "Practical Efforts for Home Improvement," "Better Highways," "The Influence of Neighborhood Improvement Associations in the Embellishment of Cities," and "Relation of the Exposition to the Public Beauty Movement." There is nothing of politics in any of these, but plain, practical, every-day matters of home, school, and society.

Not the least important of the suggestions is the action of the Convention, urging the provision at the St. Louis Exposition of an object lesson in modern city making by the arrangement of a model city, not on a small scale but "life size." This was the first step taken in what promises to be a remarkable movement, not only for the exposition but for the entire country.

The appendix outlines plans and gives sources of information so that public-spirited students and workers may easily inaugurate such forms of worthy effort as will best serve their respective communities.

This report should be in the hands of every lover of home and civic beauty. It may be obtained by addressing The American League for Civic Improvement, Springfield, Ohio, with an inclosure of fifteen cents in stamps.

Sir Charles W. Dilke contributes to the Cosmopolitan for February an article on "The Naval Strength of Nations," which gives not only a most interesting and comprehensive account of the navies of the great powers but also a clear insight into world politics. Few men possess such knowledge as the author's, gained from years of experience in a diplomatic and political career. The article is so broad in scope and straightforward in treatment that it will be read with interest not alone by statesmen but by every one whose thoughts travel beyond the immediate wants of a single day.

DOWN WITH "MORMONISM."—No. 1.

It is a curious thing that ever since Joseph Smith told his family that he had seen an angel in vision and received a message to deliver to mankind and from thence the story was told to the world at large, there has been a persistent, unyielding, and cruel opposition to and onslaught upon "the faith" thus delivered to the Saints of these last days. And what is more significant still, those making this onslaught have, with but few exceptions, been guilty of coarse and uncalled for attacks upon the personality of the men engaged in presenting the faith to the world, using misrepresentation, and often downright lying to make their opposition effective.

What reason is there for all this effort made against "Mormonism," as these opponents choose to call "the faith"?

In answer to this we quote what a late writer has said of it: "Mormonism as a whole can not be properly called Christian."

Another writing of it some years ago wrote: "Mormonism is without a history and without a faith."

It is fair to assume that these two statements taken together contain the pith of the objections the really pious among the religious people of the different denominations make to the doctrinal theories of the Latter Day Saints, leaving out the question of the character of Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and others of his associates during his lifetime.

The first of these statements is from the pen of one who at one time was associated with the church, but afterwards affiliated with the Christian, or Disciple, order of believers, and was a preacher among them at the time he wrote it. The other was made by a Methodist clergyman.

Doubtless there has been among religious people of differing faiths and organizations a feeling of respectability which finds an answering parallel in the classes and castes, or circles, more or less exclusive, which exist in society pretty much everywhere, the members of any one of which do not accede to the members of the others individually and as a whole the credit of respectability claimed by them for themselves. This, of course, is supposed to keep these respectable members from contact with and contamination from the virus of the heresy and abominations of theory that must, to them, exist in the midst of those not of their own circles.

That this feeling exists none need to deny. It has existed since the days when it was said, "I am holier than thou." That it existed at the time Joseph Smith said, "I have seen an angel, and he has charged me to preach the gospel," is a fact. And it is not improbable that it was and is yet one of the most certain and zealous reasons why otherwise good men, in and out of the pulpit, are engaged in a crusade against "Mormonism."

That this feeling may exist in the hearts of honorable men of the churches and the world, should be admitted. The saying of the Savior, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees," would have no point without this feeling had existence and expression.

It is this feeling that is couched in the first statement, "Mormonism can not be properly called Christian."

The latter statement has for its base the sentiment, expressed in a different form, less smooth and more hurtful; it is briefly: "Stand aside, ye have not age, nor claim to respectable standing as a body of believers having a faith."

The man who made the statement was an honorable man in his denomination, probably is yet, if living. Yet he deliberately put a lie on paper, the direct result in him of a desire to hurt a people whose only crime was that they had no standing in his religious caste, a people who had a faith differing from the one he and his affected.

If he had made the statement having had no opportunity to become acquainted with the people whom he called "Mormons," his ignorance might possibly be accepted as condoning an error; but he had asked for and had been given a fair opportunity to learn much of the history and all of the faith that words oral and written could impart, hence when he made his statement he did so knowing the facts which made it to be false. The motive that prompted it was the bad phase of the sentiment of respectability in religion. It was intended and delivered as a dagger-thrust at the men, not at what might be their faith. And the animus was the same as that which moves quite a number of those attacking the faith in the present days, nothing more, nothing less.

Every little while there is a revival of clerical hate against the faith, and a renewal of the attack upon it, the bitterness, the hate, the lying all are but a survival of the animus of the past, but the methods now and then vary.

Why may not the church and its faith be called Christian?

If there is a single distinguishing doctrinal feature of the Book of Mormon more prominent than another it is that of trust, confidence, faith in Jesus Christ. To prove this it is needful only to quote a portion of the closing chapter in the book:

"Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and if ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind, and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; and if by the grace of God ye are perfect in Christ, ye can in no wise deny the power of God. And again, if ye, by the grace of God, are perfect in Christ, and deny not his power, then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ, which is in the covenant of the Father, unto the remission of your sins, that ye become holy without spot."—Moroni 10: 2, small edition; Two Records, page 485, verses 27, 28.

Whatever else this Book of Mormon may be to the world of religionists, it is to the Latter Day Saint of every class a revelation from God, and so surely as trust in Christ for salvation is taught, and enjoined by the Bible, so sure it is revealed and taught and reënjoined in this Book of Mormon.

Again: The revelations given to the church through the Prophet Joseph Smith, all teach trust and faith in Jesus Christ. In one of the earliest of these revelations the following is found:

"Behold, you have my gospel before you, and my rock, and my salvation. . . . Take upon you the name of Christ, and speak the truth in soberness, and as many as repent, and are baptized in my name, which is Jesus Christ, and endure to the end, the same shall be saved. Behold, Jesus Christ is the name which is given of the Father, and there is none other name given whereby man may be saved."—Doc. and Cov., sec. 16, par. 4.

This is the testimony of the Book of Covenants, and all the revelations given to, or held to by the church, bear witness to the same thing.

Whatever the Bible may teach of Christ, as the Redeemer and Savior of men, is accepted by the church; and every ordinance, every doctrine, every calling, every service of a religious nature, in public or in private, is each performed in direct effort to conform to belief, hope, and faith in Jesus Christ as the basis of all that the church, as a body, or as individual members, anticipate or expect to be, or to receive and enjoy, either in this world or the world to come.

If this is not Christian, what is it that will make any body of people Christian?

The practices of the church are those which were instituted by Christ; the ordinances of the church were observed and enjoined by Christ; the doctrines of the church were enunciated by him and his disciples.

At no time has the church refused credence to the teaching of Christ, or denied the proclamation of salvation by and through him. At no time has the church denied that Christ had come in the flesh, at no time denied that he would come again in the flesh. On the contrary the church has ever asserted its confident faith in the advent of the Messiah, as foretold by the prophets, heralded by the angels, and witnessed in his life, his death, his resurrection, and his ascent into heaven. And in like manner has it ever stated the unfaltering faith in the second coming of him who so ascended to reign on the earth as King of kings and Lord of lords.

On behalf of the church we hereby confess anew, that Jesus Christ has not only come in the flesh but that he will come again in the flesh. This is not anti-Christ, but is Christian.

Whatever the opinion of others may be we do know and testify that the faith of the church is Christian.

NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following from Bro. Alexander H. Smith will be appreciated by our readers:

WALLSEND, New South Wales, Australia, Jan. 2.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother:—It is with feelings of love and gratitude toward God that I write you to report progress in my mission work in this far off field. We reached Sidney after a stormy voyage from Auckland, New Zealand, on Saturday evening, December 28. I found Bro. Richard Ellis, who informed me that the conference was then in session at Wallsend, also that I might reach there for Sunday service by taking the night boat to New Castle and train to Wallsend, or by taking the 9: 15 a. m. train to New Castle. I chose to have a good night's sleep and come on by train.

I arrived in time for the afternoon sacrament service, and there was joy in that meeting when Bro. Gomer Wells arose and asked Bro. A. H. Smith, president and patriarch, to come forward and ordain Bro. Walter Haworth to the office of seventy. I had quietly slipped in and took a back seat in the congregation, but Brn. Kaler and Wells knew me and gave my presence away by calling me to the fore. When I arose and walked forward all eyes were upon me. Of course I greeted the Saints and ordained the brother, as that was one of the objects of my mission, after which we had a spiritual feast indeed. The Spirit of God was poured out in power and I believe I am safe in saying every soul present felt it. After meeting closed there was a general handshake. I was introduced, and joy was expressed on every hand. I met Bro. George Lewis and as I shook hands with him I had the direct testimony that he was the man whom I should ordain to the office of bishop, but I said nothing. When on Monday conference convened, for there remained other business to be transacted, Brn. Kaler and Wells asked me if I was to nominate the bishop by revelation or should they nominate subject to my approval. I told them to go ahead and nominate, and I should be guided by the Spirit in the matter. I said not a word of my impression the day before. I was in the chair; the business which threatened grievous trouble, was transacted in a marvelous manner by the influence of the Spirit moving the hearts of the opposers, so but one vote only was had for the troublesome element. Then a paper was handed to me and I read it; the name of Bro. George Lewis was offered as the one for bishop. I was so moved upon I could scarcely speak to offer the name in nomination. I bore my testimony to the witness of the Spirit, and the selection of Bro. Lewis was unanimously indorsed. He was not present and we had to wait till we could have his consent. He was seen and very modestly gave his consent, but expressed his inability in his own estimation to fill so important an office; but if the Lord wanted his service in that department he would do his level best to please and serve him. So he has been ordained, and Bro. G. Wells was set apart as one of his counselors.

So my work here in that line is accomplished, and I feel that I have the indorsement of God's Spirit in it. I have preached every night this week, and this morning one of Bro. Lewis's neighbors told him he wished to be baptized, and this evening we expect to attend to it. I think the work will receive a new impetus and move forward with renewed vigor.

We had two days and nights of severe storm on the sea. Christmas was a rough day. For two days and nights our decks were washed by the waves, and the ship tossed and rolled fearfully; but we came through in safety. My stay in Australia will be as patriarch. Many desire blessings.

I have not seen Ina nor any of Bro. Wright's folks save Sidney's brother, Clous. Will go to them next week, it may be.

I see by HERALD death is making inroads on the church.

Your brother in bonds,

A. H. SMITH.

WORD OF WISDOM AND CONDITIONS TO-DAY.

Bro. Jerome Page, of Independence, Missouri, sends us a clipped editorial from the columns of the Journal, of Kansas City, for January 19, which with his comment please read.

HOW NICELY THEY FIT.

To you, who are members of the different branches of what you please to call the Church of Christ, who do not believe in the Word of Wisdom, and that it was given to Joseph Smith by God for the benefit of man; and you who do not believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet to God's people, please to explain to your own minds how it happened that he cut the pattern so perfectly that it fits the present existing conditions. Remember that the revelation was given over sixty years ago. No one but God was warning the people then. He was the only one outside of those who were in the business who knew of adulteration. I challenge any one to show in any book or paper published sixty years ago a complaint or statement of any kind in regard to food adulterations.

J. E. PAGE.

PENALTY SHOULD FIT THE CRIME.

More speedy, certain, and severe punishment should be provided for those who are guilty of food adulteration, and more thorough preventive methods must be devised for the general protection of the people from the dangers to which the villainous practice subjects them.

The average individual has scarcely the faintest conception of the extent to which unscrupulous manufacturers are said to have carried the business of substituting deleterious and not infrequently poisonous ingredients in food articles of the most common and necessary use. It has long been widely known, of course, that attempts are often made to palm off on the public many articles of diet which are fraudulent in their composition. That poisonous adulteration, however, has become such a feature of the manufacture of the staple foods of daily use as to be responsible for wholesale loss of life the consumer finds it hard to believe, even though experts of high repute for honesty and skill so declare. But statements of such purport are openly and explicitly made.

The subject has recently been brought somewhat prominently into view through the revelations of a careful and competent investigator, who unequivocally lays the charge of manslaughter at the door of many of those who prepare and traffic in the necessaries of life. Not only are the dangerous chemicals made use of in the manufacture of adulterants, this man says, but they are allowed to remain in the completed food products, as their retention is requisite for a profitable traffic in them.

Bread, sugar, and meat bought from reputable dealers, and presumably of the best quality, have been found, when subjected to careful analysis, if this man's evidence is to be accepted, to contain quantities of acid adulterants, the entrance of which into the human stomach is calculated to entail the most serious consequences. Flour, too, is included in this expert's list. Some of that which ranks among the choicest lacks much of being chemically pure, he asserts, while many grades contain no less a proportion than twenty-five per cent of adulterants.

Such declarations, even though abundant allowance be made for possible error or bias, are necessarily startling and disturbing. That the evil is a present and growing one can scarcely be questioned. Many States have enacted laws whose purpose is the protection of consumers against adulterated food impositions, but they have proved inadequate. The greedy and conscienceless adulterers seem to be pushing their nefarious traffic with unabated vigor. More severely restrictive measures, of wider scope, must be provided. If in a mad scramble for the extra profit believed to be thus obtainable men are making and selling dangerous adulterations to purchasers who pay for and suppose they are getting pure, healthful, and necessary food substances, there should be a law which will encompass not only their detection, but their appropriate punishment. If they are poisoning people, subject them to such a penalty as others who endanger human life are made to suffer.

ELDERS MOBBED IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Bro. G. H. Godby writes from Wayne, West Virginia, January 28, that he and Bro. W. R. Odell were attacked by a mob on the evening of January 24. Bro. Odell's jaw was broken and Bro. Godby was struck five times by stones, one striking his shoulder blade with sufficient force to numb the arm. Bro. Godby escaped by fleeing to a work-train near by where there were about thirty workmen. He says:

"My pursuers stopped when I reached the train. Bro. Odell was picked up and a surgeon dressed his wound, and I administered to him, and he has suffered no pain since, but has to live on liquid food. The grand jury is in session here to-day, and the probabilities are that the mob will be indicted for felony.

"The good people are all in sympathy with us. We have baptized fifteen of the best people of this county, and there are that many more ready for the water. Pray for us."

A BAPTIST PAPER ON "MORMONS."

The Messenger, a Baptist paper published at Owensville, Indiana, in its issue for January 23, had the following editorial:

THE MORMONS.

Two respectable looking young men stepped into the Messenger office the other day and introduced themselves as Mormon elders. They had come to our town to locate for a time, and do missionary work. During the talk they referred to the article published in the Messenger recently against Mormonism, and asked for copies of the paper. They said there were some statements made that were false—especially that part referring to immorality, etc. After putting in the day trying to get a place to hold forth, they gave it up as a bad job and left. They received no encouragement whatever. They are doubtless somewhere in Southern Indiana now, and we say here that they should not be given any encouragement, and not allowed in any of our church houses. These men may be perfect gentlemen—at least they have that appearance; but they are proselyters, and those who know anything about the Mormon doctrine know that it won't do to tie to. These men are advocating the genuine Brigham Young kind, too.

It may not be generally known that there are two wings or branches of the Mormon Church, the Brigham Young followers, with headquarters at Salt Lake, and what is called the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri. "The Reorganized" are more bitter, if possible, against the Brighamites than the rest of the Christian world, and claim that Brigham was an usurper, and the originator of the polygamous doctrine. They have now as their president, Joseph Smith, son of the original Joseph. Elder J. [T.] W. Williams writing to the Zion Herald [Zion's Ensign] last week among other things says:

"The Reorganized Church has ever been opposed to polygamy, while the Brighamite organization has and does now, both teach and practice it. They deny this whenever it serves their purpose so to do. But a short while ago the now deceased president of the church, Lorenzo Snow, pleaded guilty to 'unlawful cohabitation' and was duly fined by the court."

There can be no questioning the fact that the Utah Mormons still secretly practice polygamy. The fact that their senator-elect, B. H. Roberts, admitted that he had a number of wives, and for this reason was not permitted to take his seat in the United States senate should be convincing enough.

The "Reorganized" Mormons are following a false light we think, also; but evidently they are some improvement over the "Brighamites." Again we say to our readers, when these Mormon elders come around, kindly, but firmly, pass them on.

A PITHY SUMMING UP OF THE SITUATION.

The following is from "Highways and Byways," in the Chautauquan Magazine for February:

UNSATISFACTORY SPIRITUAL CONDITIONS.

Spiritual conditions throughout the country at the beginning of the year 1902 are satisfactory to the leaders of hardly one religious body. In most large cities ministers are saying that never before was it so hard to get people aroused and interested in spiritual matters. This condition obtains west and east alike. Something is expected from the financial giving, for spiritual blessings usually follow self-denial, but apart from this expectation the situation contains hardly one hopeful aspect. The winter is well advanced, and no city is aroused by revivals. Ground is being held in most cases, but little new ground is being taken. Presbyterians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Disciples of Christ are in the best condition, taking money, harmony, membership growth, and mission board causes as the basis. Roman Catholics and Baptists are about their own, both with internal distractions; and Congregationalists and Episcopalians seem to have disturbing causes within them the outcome of which no man can tell. Within them dissatisfaction with existing conditions prevails, there is some lack of harmony, and missionary causes are poorly supported. Charities that are not connected with churches are flourishing as never before. Money by millions is going to education, to literature, to amusements, and the minds of givers large and small seem bent away from church channels. Things will change, doubtless, but it is agreed that this is a fair picture of conditions obtaining at the opening of this calendar year.

IS THE POLAR REGION INHABITED?

The Chicago American for January 27 contained the following:

Indianapolis, Indiana, January 27.—Sergeant Julius R. Frederick, hero of the ill-fated Greeley expedition, says he believes the region immediately about the north pole is not only inhabitable but already inhabited. This is practically the first assertion of any kind Sergeant Frederick has ever made regarding his experience while in the far North with the Greeley exploring party, that nearly twenty years ago returned with only six survivors, snatched from death by a relief expedition.

Frederick declares he saw enough while in the country about the eighty-third parallel to convince him that a race formerly inhabited the region. Remains of villages were found, the architecture of which was far superior to architecture employed to-day by the Eskimos. He said further that when he accompanied Lieutenant Lockwood and Sergeant Brainard on the dash for the pole, separating from the main Greeley party, he found further evidences of inhabitants.

The further north the three men went, he says, the warmer it became, until at the eighty-first parallel, where they were obliged to halt because the food supply was exhausted, they were on the verge of land not seventy-five miles away that was covered with verdure. This they saw through a telescope.

Frederick also collected evidence that animals inhabiting the far North migrate northward in the fall and return in the spring, reversing conditions existing in lands of a more temperate climate. While at the point farthest north reached by Lockwood's expedition the three men found evidences on all hands of existence of wild animals in plenty, foxes, arctic rabbits, etc.

Frederick asserts that every leader of exploring expeditions now in the North knows that the country about the pole is inhabited and is proceeding there with that fact firmly established in his mind.

ENSIGN EDITOR COMMENDS HERALD.

The Ensign for January 30 contains the following by the editor:

"It is never too late to do the right thing, and we here tender our congratulations to the SAINTS' HERALD for the improved appearance in form and dress with which it greeted its readers in the commencement of its 49th volume, January 1. We have been a constant reader of that excellent periodical since 1866, and looking back over the years that have intervened and considering the developments made, we feel that the church can justly take pride in the progress thus shown. It is indicative of the higher ground which is steadily being occupied by the Saints in which the HERALD has been a factor of no inconsiderable proportions; and our good brethren from the editor-in-chief down have a right to feel gratified at the success attending their efforts to make the HERALD so forceful for good. May continued prosperity and increased usefulness be vouchsafed these brethren in their work.

"The Autumn Leaves, likewise, shows artistic improvement in the beginning of its fifteenth volume, and its cover is quite up to the times as well as its subject matter. We rejoice with you, brethren."

ADDRESS YOUR LETTERS PROPERLY.

A few days ago the business department received a letter from Bro. Joseph Luff in which he inclosed a letter he had received containing some money for publications issued by this office. In sending the letter and the money to the HERALD Publishing House, Bro. Luff writes as follows to the business manager:

"Please put a notice in HERALD informing the Saints that I do not live in Lamoni and have nothing to do with business matters, and tell them not to send letters of this kind to me. It is a loss of time. It gives me needless bother, and costs money to forward to Lamoni."

Many times have we called attention to the fact that money should not be sent thus to individuals. In dealing with the HERALD Office in either business or literary matters it is not necessary to send matter to any individual. Send all matters pertaining to business to "Herald Publishing House," and those pertaining to literary matters, such as articles, notices, letters for publication, etc., etc., to "Editors HERALD." Do not address anything to individuals working for the HERALD, nor to the personal address of the editors or business manager, unless it pertains to their personal business.

Unfortunately in the past it has been the rule to address business letters, remittances, etc., to the business manager, using his personal address. Now, however, the rule is to send such to the HERALD Publishing House, and all matters pertaining to literary affairs to the Editors HERALD. Again we wish to call the attention of our readers to this. It makes no difference whether you are personally acquainted with members of the HERALD Office force or not. As Bro. Luff says, it often makes unnecessary delay in thus addressing. If you wish to save yourself and us trouble, you will see to it that in sending matters here you use no personal addresses, unless those matters are meant for that person and not the office. Please remember!

DR. DOWIE (ELIJAH II) IN COURT.

Not long since Mr. Samuel Stevenson, a lace manufacturer of England, was induced by Dr. John Alexander Dowie to come to America and engage in a lace producing industry at Zion City. He also became Dr. Dowie's brother-in-law by marriage to his sister.

In the course of time Mr. Stevenson became dissatisfied with the proceedings of Dr. Dowie and with his business methods in the lace industry, and made an appeal to the courts asking that a receiver for the lace business be appointed, and that Dr. Dowie be held to fulfill certain contracts made with him, the said Stevenson, the failure to keep which had greatly embarrassed and damaged him.

This cause went to trial before Judge Tuley of Chicago and was stubbornly contested by Dr. Dowie.

After the trial was concluded Judge Tuley took some days to consider the case and on January 31 handed down a decision of which the following is a copy taken from the columns of the Chicago Tribune, the reporters of which had kept track of the cause and gave the public information concerning its progress and the issue finally reached:

First—All contracts between Dowie and Stevenson, except the first, signed on April 12, 1900, are declared to be null and void, because of the undue influence used to obtain them.

Second—The Zion lace industries are declared to have only three legal assets—"the credulity of human nature, the cupidity or avarice of the investors, and the blind confidence in Dowie," and on this account Elmer Washburn is appointed receiver to take charge on Monday.

Third—Dowie will have to carry out the agreement of April 12, 1900, which makes the Zion lace industries an incorporation, and give to Samuel Stevenson his $100,000 of first preferred stock, and the $50,000 of first preferred stock that belonged to Mary Ann Stevenson. He will further have to pay into the treasury of that corporation the $501,000, which he should have paid when he assumed that amount of stock in the corporation.

Fourth—Dowie's methods are against public policy, his sale of stock borders on the use of "false pretenses."

Fifth—The court grants leave to Samuel Stevenson to become complainant as executor of his wife's estate and bring into the suit the other stock-holders of the industries.

Sixth—The court grants Samuel Stevenson, through his attorney, Edwy L. Reeves, the privilege of filing an amended bill.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Henry Roman writes from Clear Lake, Washington, January 21: "I have just been baptized and confirmed into your blessed church, and I am happy I can say into my church, too. I thank our dear Master for this blessing and joy of knowing I belong to his people."

R. R. Atkins on January 25 wrote from Stewartsville, Missouri: "J. W. Adams closed his meetings at the Roger Schoolhouse after preaching forty sermons. He had good-sized audiences. He has commenced meetings at the Fischer Schoolhouse three and one half miles southwest of the Roger Schoolhouse, and is having good audiences there."

Brother G. H. Graves, Chicago, Illinois, writes: "I have been somewhat inspired by the Lord to take fresh courage and try to get my work more extensively before the people and in a desirable manner. I had a tract printed and since the first of the year I have placed this tract in some of the best colored families in the city, and I find they are greatly helping me. Sunday, 19th, I opened up a new place on the west side ten miles from Pleasant Mission. It was at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter McMurray, located at 146 North Spaulding Avenue, where I found these to be good people. Their daughter, Miss Othilia, is a school-teacher and missionary and in good standing in our city. George F. Crawley, whom I baptized last July at Seatonville, has been ordained a priest by Bro. Philemon Pement, district president. I am invited to occupy at Providence Baptist church for two or three evenings, where I expect to teach the people to lay aside creed and get into the one Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and I am determined that the colored people here shall know the difference between us and Utah Mormons."

Sr. A. M. Chase, of Lamoni, hands us the following letter from her husband in the field, dated Hood River, Oregon, January 23, with privilege to make extract for HERALD: "Last night closed our first proposition, 'Resolved that the church of which I, A. M. Chase, am a member, known among my brethren as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is identical with the church of the New Testament as left completed by the apostles.' We occupied three nights upon it, and if ever I had divine help it was during this conflict. The Saints are feeling well over it and the public are coming our way. My opponent tried to lead me away from my argument, but I did not follow but continued to lead.

Then he tried ridicule, but it did not work. To-night he commences the task of affirmation for his church. I tried to get him to let me have one or two nights more on my affirmation, but he would not. I wanted to put more of the gospel before the people. What I had time to present and what I presented went so well that I felt as though I would like to keep on for about a week or two. Our crowd has been fine; I think upon an average three hundred at least. It is a grand opportunity to present the gospel to the people and the Master has stood by me wonderfully. Surely this is a 'marvelous work and a wonder.' We have three more propositions to affirm and I expect to be until one week from Saturday here at this work. Our chairman is a politician from the town and so far has shown himself a fair man. This discussion seems to be a revelation to many who looked for the disputants to get angry and have a regular row. I hope Rev. Jenkins will keep cool when I push him on his affirmative. If so, we will go through all right. The way some shake my hand after each discussion gives me to know how they feel about the matter so far."

Bro. H. E. Moler under date of February 1 writes from Creola, Ohio: "The debate between Elder J. F. McDowell and Elder John T. Bridwell of the Disciple Church is still going on at this place; large attendance and many are interested. Mr. Bridwell seems disposed to debate fairly, and on the whole has acted very gentlemanly both at this place and at McArthur. Bro. McDowell has made an able defense of the truth. Bro. S. W. L. Scott, Bro. McDowell's moderator, went home on Monday, and since then I have been occupying in his place."

Bro. E. C. Briggs writes from Creola, Ohio, January 31: "The McDowell-Bridwell debate is progressing nicely. It is to the credit of Elder Bridwell that he does not resort to vituperation and slander for his argument, as many of our opponents do. He is applying himself to the merits and demerits of the subject under consideration. There is no ill feeling expressed by either disputant, and I think the general expression of the large audience, which is intensely interested, is that it is an intellectual feast, and education will be obtained upon biblical and archæological lines. In fact, the debaters are holding themselves on a high plane. The Saints are happy and grow strong in the faith. They have a comfortable church of their own in this place. The Disciples also have one at McArthur, where the debate was held."

Bro. J. F. Mintun wrote from Thurman, Iowa, January 27, saying he had small audiences at the Ross Schoolhouse from January 6 to 11. He staid at Bro. Charles Roberts', whose sick child was restored to health by administration. He says: "Came to this place the 12th, and have occupied each night since, Bro. Charles Fry and the Saints ably assisting me. Prejudice here is being removed. I go from here to McPaul."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Last year the United States Patent Office issued 27,373 new patents. This number is the largest ever issued in one year.

On January 28 M. Santos-Dumont, winner of the Deutsch prize for a dirigible balloon, scored another success at Nice. He made an ascension, sailed his airship some distance out over the Mediterranean Sea, and returned successfully.

Dr. John Alexander Dowie-Elijah boasting of a new recruit said to be a world-renowned Scientist from Mohammedanism, and who puts away eleven wives to join the Christian Catholic Church, remarked, "We now have converts from every religion but the Mormon." Is that to the discredit of Dowie and his methods, or a credit to the Mormon faith?

The work in Bro. W. H. Kelley's field is progressing in pretty fair shape. At date of writing, Bro. Joseph F. McDowell was maintaining the cause well in a debate with the Disciples at McArthur Junction and Creola, Ohio. Brn. E. C. Briggs and S. W. L. Scott were present at the discussion to give aid if needed. Bro. McDowell was to meet another elder of same faith in West Virginia in February. Thirty-eight baptisms, reports not all in. Bro. Kelley's health was considerably improved.

Bro. T. J. Sheldon arrived at Lamoni on January 26, en route to England, where he goes by request of Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths and appointment of Presidency to do missionary work for an indefinite time. Bro. Sheldon has made a good record as an able and ready defender of the faith in Western New York. So say brethren of that district. He met Elder Copeland last summer in debate, and the work was well sustained by him.

The reports from Bro. J. W. Wight's field show good results. One branch, one Sunday-school, and two Religio societies organized, and thirty-eight baptisms. Pretty good work. There have been six new openings made during the quarter.

William Cooper writes from Anna Mariah, West Virginia, January 22, expressing wonder why Bro. Shinn has not returned to follow up the advantages obtained by his recent debate with A. A. Bunner, as friends are inquiring. He obtains pleasure, he writes, from reading the HERALD, which he hands to others as soon as he has read it. He thinks it is thus doing good by interesting some. Though poor he would gladly welcome an elder. He prays for truth to prevail to reach the honest.

Manoris H. Bonney writes from Hulan, Oklahoma, January 26, that he, his father, and two sisters are located on homestead near Hulan, about fifteen miles from Lawton. He would like to learn the names of Saints who drew claims at the opening of that country, and that he would be glad to entertain any of the brethren and ministry traveling through there.

Sr. Minda Carsner writes on January 10 from Spray, Oregon, that she has not seen a Latter Day Saint for two years. Her husband is not a religious believer, and she asks prayers that she may be able to convince him of the truth of our cause.

J. T. Curtis writes from Kibbie, Illinois, January 27, that he greatly appreciates the HERALD. He has taken it for about five years. He says he digests each HERALD in about two days and then goes hungry till the next one comes.

Brn. Albert B. Carmichael, of Garden Grove, California, and Adam J. Keck, of Plano, Illinois, two of the committee to audit the Reports of the Bishop, Graceland College, and the Board of Publication accounts, appointed by the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishop last spring, arrived at Lamoni, February 1, and began the work assigned them.

Bro. A. Haws writes on January 30, from Stockton, California, that owing to poor health he will be compelled to leave his post in the Stockton Mission, and hence wishes to notify the Saints not to send papers, tracts, etc., to Stockton. His address will be 413 Fourth Street, San Francisco.

By the kindness of T. C. Griggs, of Salt Lake City, of the Sunday-school work of the Utah church people, the HERALD Office has received a copy of a Chronological Chart of Nephite and Lamanite history, by Elder George Reynolds. This chart is practically a brief of Nephite and Lamanite history from 600 B. C. to 400 A. D. with a like comment of the events occurring on the eastern continent for the same period of time. It is some sixteen inches wide by seven feet in length, put up on wooden rollers, one at either end, so that it can be studied from the hands, or be placed on the wall for explanation before an audience. We thank Mr. T. C. Griggs for his thoughtful kindness. Those of our Sunday-school students who have seen the chart, like it.

We have received from Chickering and Sons, piano makers, of Boston, a poster announcing a historical musical exhibition held at Horticultural Hall, Boston, January 11 to 26. The poster is a unique design by Will Bradley, of fame in this line.

We have received from the Brooklyn Eagle No. 51 of the "Brooklyn Eagle Library." This number is devoted to "Christian Science Claims," and is by W. H. Muldoon. The writer attempts to show the "unscientific and unchristian" character of Christian Science, and the fallacies of "Eddyism." Mr. Muldoon's observations will prove of interest to anyone investigating the claims of Christian Science.

Our church library has recently secured a complete file of the Historical Record, now in its eighteenth volume. The Record is a quarterly publication by the Iowa State Historical Society. It forms a valuable addition to the historical part of the library.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. 13.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, December 8, 1901.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

Last Sunday night we were speaking in regard to the troubles in Jackson County, Missouri. When the Saints were driven from the county by violence, the majority crossed the river to the north into Clay County; some of them went in other directions, but the great body went over into Clay County, where they resided for a time.

Soon after arriving in Clay County they petitioned the Governor of Missouri for help. They asked that if consistent with the duties of his office that he furnish an armed guard to accompany them back to their homes and possessions, and to protect them while they were there. A long correspondence arose between the Governor and the leading men of the church. We have not time to read all the correspondence, but the Governor told them he would furnish a force to see them back upon their possessions, but that he considered that it would be beyond the bounds of his authority to keep a standing guard to protect them while there, and the Saints thought it would be useless to go back, though protected in the going back, if they were left defenseless when there. They therefore refused to go under these conditions.

They entered into negotiations with the mob, offering to buy the property belonging to those who were not willing to live with them in Jackson County. There was considerable passed between them. The mob also offered to sell or buy, but they placed the Saints under the obligation, if they bought, to buy all the land owned by others and to pay for it in a very short space of time, thus making it impossible, as they had already been robbed of their property. The mob demanded such an amount for the property in their hands that it would be impossible for them to pay for it within the time. The only alternative was to sell, and I can readily see, under the circumstances, they could not consent to do that, for they had gone there, as they earnestly believed, by direction of a revelation from God. They believed that to be their future inheritance, hence they could not consistently sell, therefore negotiations were never perfected between the parties, neither party purchasing the rights of the other, and so the property belonging to the Saints remained in the hands of those who persecuted them, and a great deal of it remains unpaid for until this day, probably always will remain in that condition. It is not likely any of it could be recovered now.

The Saints also presented an appeal to President Jackson, and asked him to interfere in their behalf and see that their rights were restored to them. In answer to the petition sent to President Jackson they received a communication from Lewis Cass, then, I believe, Secretary of War. I will read it, as it is but short.

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 2, 1834.

Gentlemen:—The President has referred to this department the memorial and letter addressed to him by yourselves and other citizens of Missouri, requesting his interposition in order to protect your persons and property.

In answer, I am instructed to inform you that the offenses of which you complain are violations of the laws of the State of Missouri, and not of the laws of the United States. The powers of the President under the Constitution and laws, to direct the employment of a military force in cases where the ordinary civil authorities are found insufficient, extend only to proceedings under the laws of the United States.

Where an insurrection in any State exists against the government thereof, the president is required on the application of such State, or of the Executive, (when the Legislature can not be convened,) to call forth such a number of the militia as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection.

But this State of things does not exist in Missouri, or if it does, the fact is not shown in the mode pointed out by law. The President can not call out a military force to aid in the execution of the State laws, until the proper requisition is made upon him by the constituted authorities.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed) LEWIS CASS. [Secretary of War.]

To Messrs. A. S. Gilbert, W. W. Phelps, E. Partridge and others, Liberty, Clay County, Missouri.

That, at least, was the opinion of Lewis Cass, and probably of the President, that the United States had no power to interfere; or, at least, that the necessary reasons for interference were not set forth in the petition sent to the President. Hence they had no relief from that source, and they were compelled to remain in the conditions they were in at this time. The negotiations between them and the people of Jackson County were not entirely settled, but the action of the Saints was vindicated and the authorities of the State of Missouri exonerated them and condemned the other party. The arms that were taken from them, that we referred to in our last, were ordered restored to them. The Governor wrote to them as follows:

CITY OF JEFFERSON, May 2, 1834.

To Messrs. W. W. Phelps and others; Gentlemen:—Yours of the 24th ult., is before me, in reply to which I can inform you that becoming impatient at the delay of the court of inquiry in making their report in the case of Lieutenant Colonel Pitcher; on the 11th ult. I wrote to General Thompson for the reasons of his delay; last night I received his reply, and with it the report of the court of inquiry, from the tenor of which I find no difficulty in deciding that the arms your people were required to surrender on the 5th of last November should be returned; and have issued his order to Colonel Lucas to deliver them to you or your order, which order is here inclosed.

Respectfully your obedient servant,

(Signed)

DANIEL DUNKLIN.

Thus you see the Governor says he found no difficulty in deciding that their arms were taken from them unnecessarily and he ordered them restored. Allow me to say right here that their arms were never restored to them. Not only did these people trample upon the rights of the Saints but they disregarded the orders of the Governor. Colonel Lucas resigned his office to escape complying with the command. It will be seen from the statement that I am about to read, that Colonel Pitcher was condemned by a court of inquiry for the part he took in interfering on November 5, when he demanded the arms of the Saints. Here is the letter written by the Governor to Samuel D. Lucas, the colonel of the Thirty-third Regiment, of which Colonel Pitcher's command was a part.

"CITY OF JEFFERSON, May 2, 1834.

To Samuel D. Lucas, Colonel Thirty-third Regiment; Sir:—The court ordered to inquire into the conduct of Lieutenant Colonel Pitcher, in the movement he made on the 5th November last, report it as their unanimous opinion that there was no insurrection on that day, and that Colonel Pitcher was not authorized to call out his troops on the 5th November, 1833. It was then unnecessary to require the Mormons to give up their arms. Therefore, you will deliver to W. W. Phelps, E. Partridge, John Corrill, John Whitmer, and A. S. Gilbert, or their order, the fifty-two guns, and one pistol reported by Lieutenant Colonel Pitcher to you on the 3d December last, as having been received by him from the Mormons on the 5th of the preceding November.

Respectfully,

"DANIEL DUNKLIN, Commander-in-Chief."

Thus you see that Colonel Pitcher was unanimously condemned by the court of inquiry for the part he took in disarming these people, and their arms were ordered restored to them. But all this was disregarded. The order was not executed, the authorities failing to perform the part they were directed to perform. But on the contrary, instead of complying with the order of the Governor, they continued to influence the public mind against the Saints who had crossed over into Clay County. They were not satisfied that they had driven them out of Jackson County, but tried to stir up the people of Clay County to anger. The people of Clay County, however, never were as hostile as were those in Jackson County.

These Jackson County people also continued their depredations against the few helpless men and women who remained in Jackson County, some of whom were not able to remove because of poverty and old age. I will just give you two instances that are recorded of the persecution of such parties. I have a copy of a sworn statement here from one Mrs. Abigail Leonard:

I, Abigail Leonard, depose and say that on the night of the 20th of February, 1834, in the county of Jackson, and State of Missouri, a company of men, armed with whips and guns, about fifty or sixty in number, came to the house of my husband; among them was John Youngs, Mr. Yocum, Mr. Cantrell, Mr. Patterson, and Mr. Noland. Five of the number entered the house, among them was John Youngs. They ordered my husband to leave the house, threatening to shoot him if he did not. He not complying with their desires, one of the five took a chair and struck him upon the head, knocking him down, and then dragging him out of the house, I in the meantime begging of them to spare his life, when one of the number called to the others telling them to take me into the house, for I would "overpower every devil of them." Three of the company then approached me, and presenting their guns, declared with an oath, if I did not go in they would blow me through. While this was transpiring, Mr. Patterson jumped upon my husband with his heels; my husband then got up, they stripped his clothes all from him excepting his pantaloons, then five or six attacked him with whips and gunsticks, and whipped him till he could not stand but fell to the ground. I then went to them, and took their whips from them. I then called for Mrs. Bruce, who lived in the same house with us, to come out and help me to carry my husband into the house. When carried in he was very much lacerated and bruised, and unable to lie upon a bed, and was also unable to work for a number of months. Also, at the same time and place, Mr. Josiah Sumner was taken from the house, and came in very bloody and bruised from whipping.

ABIGAIL LEONARD.

This is the kind of treatment they accorded two individuals who were left behind when the church removed. And again:

On the night of the 24th day of December, four aged families living near the village of Independence, whose penury and infirmities incident to old age forbade a speedy removal, were driven from their houses by a party of the mob, who tore down their chimneys, broke in their doors and windows, and hurled large rocks into their houses, by which the life of old Mr. Miller, in particular, was greatly endangered. Mr. Miller is aged sixty-five years, being the youngest man in the four families. Some of these men have toiled and bled in the defense of their country; and old Mr. Jones, one of the sufferers, served as life-guard to General George Washington, in the Revolution. Well may the soldier of 'Seventy-Six contemplate with horror the scenes which surround him at this day in Jackson County, where liberty, law, and equal rights are trodden under foot. It is now apparent that no man embracing the faith of this people, whatever be his age or former standing in society, may hope to escape the wrath of the Jackson County mob, whenever it is in their power to inflict abuse.

I simply give these two instances, out of many, that you may understand what kind of a spirit actuated these people, who were in actual rebellion against the officers of the State, refusing to return the arms of the Saints when the order came directly from the Governor, who was commander-in-chief of the militia.

Under these circumstances the Saints in Clay County decided to send ambassadors back to Ohio, where Joseph Smith and other officials were at that time. "On January 1, 1834, a conference was held at the house of Parley P. Pratt in Clay County, Bishop Edward Partridge presiding. In addition to other business, Lyman Wight and P. P. Pratt were sent as special messengers to Kirtland, Ohio, to represent the situation to the Presidency and ask advice."

Then follows the account given by Parley P. Pratt, and also that of Lyman Wight, in regard to their preparation to go, and how they left their families in destitute circumstances and rode from Western Missouri to Kirtland on horseback. They set out on this long journey, leaving their families in a destitute condition, and they themselves devoid of sufficient clothing to keep them warm; they left their brethren and families in a hostile country to face whatever might be put upon them by the enemy. They arrived in Kirtland on February 22, and the next day they addressed the citizens of that place in the Methodist church, setting forth the condition of things in Missouri, and how the Saints had been persecuted. I do not wonder it roused these people to some feelings of resentment.

I have been told that the men who subsequently went up to Missouri went up with warlike intentions, with the expectation of entering forcibly upon their possessions. I think I shall be able to show from the statements made by the leading men that they never intended to go to war with the Missourians. If there was a disposition on the part of individuals to resent, I can not wonder at it. It is not reasonable to suppose any community could listen to such things without feeling that they would like to take a hand in the fight. It may not be right, and I have not a word of justification to say for it, other than that it was humane and nothing more than could be expected.

Shortly after the messengers arrived in Kirtland a revelation was given, and in that revelation they were told to go to the churches in the East, and call for volunteers to go to the relief of their brethren, and in process of time a considerable number of them did gather together and go up to Missouri. This has been called "Zion's Camp." I want to talk a little about "Zion's Camp," because I believe it has been misrepresented. I have found individuals who thought these men went up there with the express determination to declare war against the people in Jackson County and take possession by the shedding of blood; therefore I want to give you some statements from the leading men in that camp, as to what their intentions were. I will first call your attention to a statement made by Joseph Smith, and then some by others. He says: "May 5. Having gathered and prepared clothing and other necessaries to carry to our brethren and sisters who had been robbed and plundered of nearly all their effects," (mark you, that is the leading thought in this statement. They were going up there to supply the wants of these people and help them in this time of distress, when they had been robbed and plundered,) "and having provided for ourselves horses and wagons, and firearms, and all sorts of munitions of war of the most portable kind for self-defense, as our enemies were thick on every hand, I started with the remainder of the company, from Kirtland for Missouri." They went up there to take provisions, and provided themselves with firearms as a means of self-defense, for their "enemies were thick on every hand." If the enemy were to attack them they intended to defend themselves. That is all there was to it, it seems to me, so far as the arms were concerned. The purpose of going was to supply the wants of their brethren who had been robbed and plundered. I do not know who would not have done as much, who had the milk of human kindness in his breast, for the purpose indicated; and who would not have taken means along for defense.

Now, as to the purpose of the camp. I will invite your attention to some other statements which will bring it out a little more clearly.

Joseph Smith speaks here of addressing a meeting in New York, if I remember right, and in his address to that meeting, where he had come for the purpose of raising men to go to Missouri, he defined the purpose for which he was calling for volunteers:

There was also the same day, March 17, a conference of elders, at Avon, Livingston County, New York, at the house of Alvah Beman, which I attended. There were present also Sidney Rigdon, Parley Pratt, Lyman Wight, John Murdock, Orson Pratt, and Orson Hyde, high priests, and six elders. I stated that the object of the conference was to obtain young men and middle aged to go and assist in the redemption of Zion, according to the commandment; and for the church to gather up their riches, and send them to purchase lands according to the commandment of the Lord; also to devise means, or obtain money for the relief of the brethren in Kirtland, say two thousand dollars, which sum would deliver the church in Kirtland from debt; and also determine the course which the several companies shall pursue, or the manner they shall journey when they shall leave this place.

The idea was to get young and middle-aged men to go up to Missouri and purchase land. Remember, before the messengers left Missouri a proposition had been made by the people of Jackson County to sell out, to sell more property than the Saints there in Missouri could buy; and these people in the East were to gather together their riches and purchase land and relieve the necessities of the people, and also to meet an obligation in Kirtland, which would make the church free in that place. That is the statement made by Joseph Smith in this conference, where they were considering the object of raising men to go into the State of Missouri.

Lyman Wight says:

Preached to a large congregation (in Kirtland) upon the subject of having been driven from Jackson County, of our extreme sufferings, and of the great necessity of being obedient to the commandments; and also the necessity of those of like faith sympathizing with their brothers and sisters. This discourse appeared to have a good effect; about seventy volunteered to fly to their relief even if death should be the consequence thereof. Many donated largely of their substance to supply the wants of the needy. I spent the night with Bro. Joseph, and had much conversation with him concerning our peculiar circumstances.

He went up to Kirtland (and he was one of the participants in the Missouri trouble) and addressed the people, relating the sufferings in Jackson County, and the people volunteered to fly to their relief. So it appears plain to me that the main object in view was to relieve the sufferings of those people.

Parley P. Pratt, the other messenger to Kirtland, who was also a sufferer in Missouri, tells of the purpose of going, as follows:

It was now the first of May, 1834, and our mission had resulted in the assembling of about two hundred men at Kirtland, with teams, baggage, provisions, arms, etc., for a march of one thousand miles, for the purpose of carrying some supplies to the afflicted and persecuted Saints in Missouri, and to reinforce and strengthen them; and, if possible, to influence the Governor of the State to call out sufficient additional force to cooperate in restoring them to their rights. This little army was led by President Joseph Smith in person. It commenced its march about the first of May. Passing through Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, it entered Missouri sometime in June.

They went with provisions gathered for the purpose of relieving the sufferings in Missouri. That is the leading statement in all three accounts.

Parley Pratt says they intended to try to influence the Governor of the State to call out sufficient force to aid in restoring them to their rights, and the sequel will show that that was just what they did try to do. They also carried provisions for the purpose of relieving the sufferings of their distressed brethren.

There are some things in connection with this that sound a little warlike, but taken in connection with other things I think they can be easily accounted for. If there were some little of a warlike spirit among them, I am not surprised. If the Missourians had put themselves in the way, there might have been a little danger, but it was not their purpose to declare war. Joseph Smith says again, speaking of the time after they crossed the Mississippi River:

The same day, June 6, we resumed our journey, and at evening of the 7th encamped in a piece of woods, near a spring of water, at Salt River, where was a branch of the church. Sunday, the 8th, we had preaching, and in the course of the day were joined by my brother, Hyrum Smith, and Lyman Wight, with a company of volunteers which they had gathered in Michigan, etc. The whole company now consisted of two hundred and five men, and twenty-five baggage wagons with two or three horses each. We remained at Salt River until the 12th, refreshing and reorganizing, which was done by electing Lyman Wight general of the camp. I chose twenty men for my life guards, of whom my brother Hyrum was chosen captain, and George A. Smith was my armor-bearer. The remainder of the company was organized according to the pattern at New Portage. While at Salt River General Wight marched the camp on the prairie, inspected our firelocks, ordered a discharge of the same at target by platoons, drilled us about half a day, and returned to the bank of the river.

That sounds like they were getting ready, which is very true. They were getting ready for an emergency. That is probably the reason they brought their arms along. Lyman Wight was chosen commander of the force, doubtless because of his experience in military tactics in the War of 1812, and he drilled them that they might be ready for defense if necessary. But in connection with this and immediately after this organization they showed by their acts that they were carrying out their purpose as before expressed by petitioning the Governor and showing a disposition to act in harmony with him, for immediately after this they sent Parley P. Pratt and Orson Hyde to Governor Dunklin for the purpose of presenting to him their purpose in coming there. They did not propose to enter the State with an armed force without notifying the authorities of their purpose in coming, and hence immediately after entering the State they sent these two messengers to the Governor to state their purpose and ask of him that he would enlist his authority in behalf of the Saints. Parley P. Pratt says in regard to this:

Arriving in the Allred settlement, near Salt River, Missouri, where there was a large branch of the church, the camp rested a little, and dispatched Elder Orson Hyde and myself to Jefferson City, to request of His Excellency, Governor Daniel Dunklin, a sufficient military force, with orders to reinstate the exiles, and protect them in the possession of their homes in Jackson County.

We had an interview with the Governor, who readily acknowledged the justice of the demand, but frankly told us he dare not attempt the execution of the laws in that respect, for fear of deluging the whole country in civil war and bloodshed. He advised us to relinquish our rights, for the sake of peace, and to sell our lands from which we had been driven. To this we replied with firmness, that we would hold no terms with land pirates and murderers. If we could not be permitted to live on lands which we had purchased of the United States, and be protected in our persons and rights, our lands would, at least, make a good burying ground, on which to lay our bones; and, like Abraham's possession in Canaan, we should hold on to our possessions in the county of Jackson, for this purpose, at least. He replied that he did not blame us in the least, but trembled for the country, and dare not carry out the plain, acknowledged, and imperative duties of his office. We retired, saying to ourselves: "That poor coward ought, in duty, to resign; he owes this, morally at least, in justice to his oath of office."

According to Parley P. Pratt they were firm in talking to the Governor, and they might have said more than they ought to have said. In harmony with the expressed purpose of the camp they went that when they entered the State the Governor should be notified and asked to assist in reinstating citizens to their rights in Jackson County.

Parley P. Pratt, however, and Lyman Wight differ in their accounts as to the attitude of the Governor, and it looks peculiar that they should so differ. Parley P. Pratt says Governor Dunklin told him and Orson Hyde that he dared not execute the law, and advised them to relinquish their rights for the sake of peace, and sell their lands from which they had been driven. Of this Pratt says he thought he "ought, in duty, to resign; he owes this, morally at least, in justice to his oath of office."

Lyman Wight says when Pratt and Hyde returned he and others went out to get the message and he records it this way: "Traveled five miles and met Parley P. Pratt and Orson Hyde, who had been sent to the Governor to seek redress for the Saints who had been driven from Jackson County. They brought the intelligence that the Governor would execute the law, whatever it might be." A plain contradiction. Parley Pratt says he dared not, and Lyman Wight says the Governor said he would execute the law. I can not reconcile the difference,—do not know which was right. I only have this to say, the statement made by Lyman Wight is more in harmony with the character of Governor Dunklin than the other, for he certainly did take a stand in behalf of the rights of the Saints prior to this time. Be that as it may, whether Governor Dunklin had or had not said that he would execute the law, it did not change the purpose of the company in going there. They went there as honest and generous men would do, for the purpose of helping their brethren in distress, and they took the proper means of working in harmony with legal authorities and asked them to assist in the work, or to order wronged citizens restored to their rights. They proceeded on their way, however, and drawing near to Clay County, the report went ahead of them that the Mormons were coming with an armed force. Of course that aroused considerable excitement. People got the impression they were coming there for hostile purposes, that they intended to revenge themselves on the Jackson County people for the outrages that had been performed, and they gathered together companies to meet them. I will just give you an instance of what happened when these two forces came in close proximity with each other and there was prospect of a clash of arms. Joseph Smith says:

We passed through the town [Richmond] as soon as it was light, and before the inhabitants were arisen from their slumbers, meeting with no opposition, but we had not proceeded many miles before one wagon broke down, and by the time that was repaired wheels run off from others, and such like incidents continued through the day to impede our progress. When we started in the morning we intended to arrive in Clay County that day, but in vain. At a seasonable hour we encamped on an elevated piece of ground between two branches of Fishing River, having traveled about fifteen miles. Fishing River, at this point, was composed of seven small streams, and those betwixt which we encamped were two of them.

As we halted and were making preparations for the night, five men armed with guns rode into our camp and told us we should see hell before morning, and their accompanying oaths partook of all the malice of demons. They told us that sixty men were coming from Richmond, Ray County, and seventy more from Clay County, sworn to our utter destruction. The weather was pleasant at this time.

During this day the Jackson County mob, to the number of about two hundred, made arrangements to cross the Missouri River, about the mouth of Fishing River, at William's Ferry, into Clay County, and be ready to meet the Richmond mob near Fishing River Ford, for our utter destruction. But after the first scow load of about forty had been set over the river, the scow in returning was met by a squall, and had great difficulty in reaching the Jackson side by dark.

Soon after the five men left the camp swearing vengeance, we discovered a small black cloud rising in the west, and in twenty minutes, or thereabouts, it began to rain and hail, and this was the squall that troubled the Jackson boat.

The storm was tremendous; wind and rain, hail and thunder met them in great wrath, and soon softened their direful courage, and frustrated all their designs to "kill Joe Smith and his army." Instead of continuing a cannonading, which they commenced the sun about one hour high, they crawled under wagons, into hollow trees, filled one old shanty, etc., till the storm was over, when their ammunition was soaked, and the forty in Clay County were extremely anxious in the morning to return to Jackson, having experienced the pitiless peltings of the storm all night, and as soon as arrangements could be made, this "forlorn hope" took the "back track" for Independence, to join the main body of the mob. . . .

Very little hail fell in our camp, but from half to a mile around, the stones or lumps of ice cut down the crops of corn and vegetation generally, even cutting limbs from trees, themselves were twisted into withes by the wind. The lightning flashed incessantly, which caused it to be so light in our camp through the night that we could discern the most minute object, and the roaring of the thunder was tremendous. The earth trembled and quaked; the rain fell in torrents, and, united, it seemed as if the mandate of vengeance had gone forth from the God of battles to protect his servants from the destruction of their enemies; for the hail fell on them, and not on us, and we suffered no harm except the blowing down of some of our tents and getting some wet, while our enemies had holes made in their hats and otherwise received damage, even the breaking of their rifle stocks, and the fleeing of their horses through fear and pain.

Thus it was that man's action was frustrated. Whether that storm would have occurred anyhow or not, you can make up your minds. Not only have we the words of Joseph Smith, but others testify of the same thing. With the determination of the mob to destroy, what would have been the result if the forces had met we are unable to say. But they did not meet. I want to give you one curious instance of the fatality of an individual. It might have happened anyhow but it was very singular under the circumstances. One of this mob who was in Clay County at the time when they heard the Saints were coming in an armed body, returned to Jackson County, or started to return, and he made some threats as he was starting, which were never carried into effect for good reasons, as we will show you. Joseph Smith writes: "The Jackson mob to the number of about fifteen, with Samuel C. Owens and James Campbell at their head, started for Independence, Jackson County, to raise an army sufficient to meet me, before I could get into Clay County. Campbell swore, as he adjusted his pistols in his holsters, 'The eagles and turkey buzzards shall eat my flesh if I do not fix Joe Smith and his army so that their skins will not hold shucks, before two days are passed.'"

That was the threat he made, and you will see what the result was: "They went to the ferry and undertook to cross the Missouri River, after dusk, and the angel of God saw fit to sink the boat, about the middle of the river, and seven out of twelve that attempted to cross were drowned. Thus suddenly, and justly, went they to their own place by water. Campbell was among the missing. He floated down the river some four or five miles, and lodged upon a pile of driftwood, where the eagles, buzzards, ravens, crows, and wild animals ate his flesh from his bones, to fulfill his own words, and left him a horrible looking skeleton of God's vengeance; which was discovered about three weeks after, by one Mr. Purtle."

You may not agree with Joseph Smith that it was the angel of God's vengeance, but it was true that the eagles and buzzards picked the flesh from his bones, as he had said they would do, if he did not fix Joe Smith and his army so that their skins would not hold shucks. You may make up your minds in regard to whether that was the result of God's vengeance or not, but these are the facts of history, and every one can draw his own conclusion regarding them. I wish to call your attention to another statement and you may draw your conclusion in regard to that, also.

The sheriff of Clay County visited Zion's Camp to determine as to what its purpose was, Cornelius Gillium was his name, and they gave him a statement of their purposes in coming there. That statement reads as follows:

Being called upon by the above-named gentlemen, at our camp, in Clay County, to ascertain from the leaders of our men, our intentions, views, and designs, in approaching this county in the manner that we have; we therefore, the more cheerfully comply with their request, because we are called upon by gentlemen of good feelings, and who are disposed for peace and an amicable adjustment of the difficulties existing between us and the people of Jackson County. The reports of our intentions are various, and have gone abroad in a light calculated to arouse the feelings of almost every man. For instance; one report is that we intend to demolish the printing office in Liberty; another report is, that we intend crossing the Missouri River on Sunday next, and falling upon women and children, and slaying them; another is that our men were employed to perform this expedition, being taken from manufacturing establishments in the East that had closed business; also that we carried a flag, bearing "peace" on one side and "war and blood" on the other; and various others too numerous to mention;—all of which, a plain declaration of our intentions, from under our own hands, will show are not correct. In the first place, it is not our intention to commit hostilities against any man or set of men. It is not our intention to injure any man's person or property, except in defending ourselves. Our flag has been exhibited to the above gentlemen, who will be able to describe it. Our men were not taken from any manufacturing establishment. It is our intention to go back upon our lands in Jackson County, by order of the Executive of the State, if possible. We have brought our arms with us for the purpose of self-defense, as it is well known to almost every man of the State that we have every reason to put ourselves in an attitude of defense, considering the abuse we have suffered in Jackson County. We are anxious for a settlement of the difficulties existing between us, upon honorable and constitutional principles. We are willing for twelve disinterested men, six to be chosen by each party, and these men shall say what the possessions of those men are worth who can not live with us in the county; and they shall have their money in one year; and none of the Mormons shall enter that county to reside until the money is paid. The damages that we have sustained in consequence of being driven away shall also be left to the above twelve men. Or they may all live in the county, if they choose, and we will never molest them if they will let us alone and permit us to enjoy our rights. We want to live in peace with all men, and equal rights is all we ask. We wish to become permanent citizens of this State, and wish to bear our proportion in support of the Government, and to be protected by its laws. If the above proposals are complied with, we are willing to give security on our part; and we shall want the same of the people of Jackson County for the performance of this agreement. We do not wish to settle down in a body, except where we can purchase the lands with money; for to take possession by conquest or the shedding of blood, is entirely foreign to our feelings. The shedding of blood we shall not be guilty of, until all just and honorable means among men prove insufficient to restore peace.

JOSEPH SMITH, JUN.
F. G. WILLIAMS.
LYMAN WIGHT.
ROGER ORTON.
ORSON HYDE.
J. S. CARTER.

Is not that a fair proposition? Mark you, the proposition was that they would leave it to arbitration, and the lands of the men in Jackson County that could not live with them were to be valued and they should have their money in one year, and none of the Mormons should enter the county to reside until that money was paid. I do not know of any fairer proposition than that, and they expressly denied that they had any intentions upon the lives of anybody except in self-defense. There might have been men among them who were ready to fight, nor would this be surprising. I have made these remarks in regard to "Zion's Camp," as it was called, because people have misrepresented it. I do not see why we can not take the statements of these men as setting forth their true feelings in regard to their property and the proposition they were willing to make to the citizens of Jackson County. But the proposition was not accepted. The people in Jackson County would not submit to that kind of an arrangement—were not willing to sell upon those conditions, and leave differences to arbitration. So the Saints were deprived of their rights, they are still deprived of their rights, and there are parties all through the church who have never realized a cent for what is justly theirs, and yet there is no disposition to wrong anybody, there is no disposition on the part of the children of these sufferers to-day to go and take that property if they could from innocent purchasers. They are willing to get along without it and live in peace with all men, as they have ever been.

Shortly after they arrived in Clay County afflictions came upon them and "Zion's Camp" was sorely afflicted with cholera, and some of them died. They lived in Clay County until 1836, their enemies agitating their neighbors against them, hence there was an agreement made between the people of Clay County and the Saints that the Saints should remove, and there should be an entire separation. It was agreed among them that a new county should be organized and that county should be settled by the Saints, exclusively; and that the Saints should not settle in other counties without the consent of the inhabitants. Caldwell County was organized and the Saints began to move there. We read:

In August, 1836, the Saints commenced settling upon their new location, in great numbers, and made preparations for the coming winter, by constructing comfortable dwellings for themselves and gathering as much food for their cattle, horses, etc., as their straitened circumstances would permit. Here they settled with the fond anticipation of being permitted to dwell in quietness and peace upon their possessions without molestation; consequently large entries of the public lands were made by individuals of the society, and extensive farms were soon opened. Those who had not means to purchase lands were under the necessity of loaning [borrowing] it of the citizens at very high rates of percentage, frequently being compelled to pay fifty per cent. Others who could not obtain money by loan would procure two or three months provision for their families, and then go to Fort Leavenworth or elsewhere, and work until they had earned enough to enter a forty or an eighty-acre tract. Thus by dint of hard labor and untiring perseverance almost every man in a few months found himself in the possession of sufficient land to make a good farm.

These people in Jackson County said the Saints were lazy, that was one reason why they drove them out. They got wonderfully over it by this time. Some were compelled to pay fifty per cent for money, and some went out to work by the day, and yet every one obtained sufficient land to make him a good farm. Of course land was not as dear then as it is now or they could not have done this.

"In a few months nearly or quite all the best land of the territory, now known as Caldwell County, was purchased by the Saints, several hundred buildings erected, and great preparations made for a crop the coming season. A principal part of the old inhabitants sold out and moved away, which, however, were but few, there being only about fifteen or twenty families in the county.

"Commencing a settlement at this season of the year they were obliged to procure all their provision for themselves, and grain for their stock in the adjoining counties, and transport it some thirty or forty miles, which was a great detriment to the extensive improvements they were making. At the session of the Legislature, in the winter of 1836-7, an act was passed calling the territory upon which the saints had settled Caldwell County."

This account agrees with the following extract from the "History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties, Missouri," published in 1886, by the "St. Louis National Historical Company":

"It was during the summer of 1836 that the Mormons began their settlement of the county in earnest. It was then a portion of Ray, but the people of the northern portion of that county, as well as the Mormons, were informed that a new county was to be organized expressly for the occupation and general benefit of the latter. Indeed, an arrangement of that character had been made by the leaders of the Mormon Church and certain prominent Gentiles. An entire county was to be set apart as a sort of reservation for the Saints. To be sure Gentiles were not to be forbidden to enter it, but it was believed that under the circumstances few, if any, would desire to do so. The Mormons were to have undisturbed possession of the new county; they were to hold the county offices, send a representative to the legislature, and in return for these privileges they were not to settle in any other county save by express consent and permission, previously obtained, of two thirds of the non-Mormon residents of the township in said county wherein they desired to make location.

"Everybody thought this a complete and satisfactory solution of the Mormon problem, which then, as often since, demanded attention and settlement. The Missourians were satisfied, because they had a poor opinion of the prairie soil of the proposed new county, which they declared was fit only for Mormons and Indians, and doubted whether it could ever be made really valuable. Moreover, they wished to rid themselves of the presence of the despised sect, whose members were clannish and exclusive, as well as unpleasantly peculiar. The Mormons were satisfied, because they wished for peace and security and desired above all to enjoy their religion undisturbed and undismayed."

Thus a settlement was made and the city of Far West was founded as the county-seat, and there was a gathering of the Saints there. Joseph Smith and the headquarters of the church were established there. They were to live in peace and all these difficult problems had been settled.

There we think it is wisdom to leave them to-night, for you will see exactly what conditions they were in when they removed to Caldwell County. In the future we may possibly tell you something of how those agreements were violated and the people made to suffer again.

IS NATURE GOD?

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."—Gen. 1: 1.

A gentleman once said to me, "Nature is all the God there is, and everything that exists in the material universe is the result of the operations of her laws, through the principle of evolution." It is affirmed in the beginning that God created heaven and earth; but when the beginning was, is indefinite—not comprehended by finite minds, as is evident from the following: "And the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, . . . Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. . . . Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner stone thereof; when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"—Job 38: 4-7.

Wisdom says, "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. . . . When he prepared the heavens, I was there."—Prov. 8: 22. No scientist, geologist, or evolutionist can penetrate the mystic past, and tell us for a certainty when and from whence all things originated, if there is no God. I am of the opinion that God brought to bear his physical power in the creation of the material universe, nor can I see the necessity of a series of operations in the hands of secondary causes to develop God's works of creation. "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so."—Gen. 1: 11. So we see what is affirmed of vegetable matter is affirmed of all the animal "creation," man included. As an indelible impress of the works of an infinite "God," man and all animal and vegetable matter reproduce themselves "after their kind" in harmony with the laws of their creation. Is all this the work of the blind force of nature? I made the following proposition in public: Let me extract the germ from a grain of corn or wheat and then give it to my Atheist friend, saying, You may have access to all the laws of nature and you can not cause it to reproduce itself. If not, how can you prove that nature is God. A power that can give life to an "atom" can create a "universe." So I conclude this by the following quotation: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse."—Rom. 1: 20. So we are happy to say that we can comprehend the "invisible" "by the things that are made." M. R. SCOTT, SEN.

GALENA, Indiana, January 13.

Each man, a world—to other worlds half known—
Turns on a tiny axis of his own;
His full life orbit is a pathway dim

THE DECLINE OF ATHEISM.

It is worth noting that the first year of the twentieth century has not produced any "new religion," and this fact leads F. Marion Crawford, the well-known novelist, to hope that for a time at least "humanity may be willing to believe, without inventing new creeds in which its belief may run riot for a while, degenerate into credulity, and explode in the disaster of disillusionment." Mr. Crawford sees another hopeful sign in what he believes to be the waning influence of the school of "Scientific Atheism," which "seemed to threaten the foundations of faith in all men, because it proposed to show something new and demonstrably credible in the place of the belief in a supreme but invisible and undemonstrable cause of things, on which all the religions of the world originally depend for their existence." He continues (in the New York Journal, December 29) as follows:

"There was something very heroic about the men of science of the nineteenth century. As the Titans fought against Olympus, they arrayed themselves in battle against all religious belief, armed with such weapons of argument as the human intellect had not seen since Socrates and Plato reasoned on the other side to prove the immortality of the soul. Their aim was high, for they sought truth, their scientific conviction was sincere, their warfare against the Great Undemonstrated was open and fearless. They had much intellectual vanity, and small blame to them, but they were splendidly unselfish men; they had their limitations, but they admitted these frankly; their very prejudice was imposing by its simplicity and breadth.

"They failed to change, or destroy, the religions of the world, but they accomplished much. They were not mere pioneers and forerunners of discovery, they were discoverers themselves; yet, to the men of science of the opening twentieth century, they were what the medieval alchemists were to Priestly and Lavoisier, what Cornelius Agrippa was to Galvani and Ampere, who in their turn were little more than empirics compared with Helmholtz or Huxley. As Ptolemy the astrologer was to Tycho Brahe, the astrologer on whom truth was dawning, as Brahe was to Galileo the astronomer, as Galileo to Herschel, each depending directly on him who went before him, so, our modern seekers after learning are themselves in debt to the 'Scientific Atheists' of the nineteenth century—those patient students who piled facts upon facts with untiring labor, till they boasted that they could prove heaven a fable and make religion bankrupt for all time to come."

"Scientific Atheism," declares the writer, was impotent because its attitude was simply a negative one, denying the old, but establishing nothing new. "It failed to convince us that we should not believe in something altogether beyond it," he says, "for it did not keep its chief promise, and when it told us all it knew, it was still as far as ever from the discovery of a demonstrable prime cause." Mr. Crawford concludes:

"As we grow older, we find out what it means to fight for a principle, without hope of present advantage, and we learn to respect the dead Titans who gave their lives for an impossibility, and whose failures to destroy the indestructible were marked by the steps they add to the Giant's Causeway of learning. For though they could not tear down what was beyond their reach, they planned and built the broad military roads of modern science, monuments of their patience and skill, along which the men of to-day are marching steadily to the only end which science can have—the welfare and security of man.

"If there is one condition of thought which is characteristic of the new century, and of the last years of the old, it is the truce between religion and science, the mutual understanding that neither will disturb the other.

"Darwin, the greatest thinker, the greatest logician, the greatest discoverer of the last generation, was already beyond the limitations of 'Scientific Atheism' when he wrote his 'Earthworms.'

"So was Helmholtz in his later days. A man who is now a leader in scientific discovery, and who was once his assistant, told me many years ago of something he said that showed the bent of his thoughts.

"He was much given to explaining a vast number of phenomena by the theory of the 'vortex.'

"'But,' the assistant asked one day, 'what made the vortex?'

"The man of genius looked at his young companion for a moment.

"'God made the vortex,' he answered gravely."—Literary Digest for January 18, 1902.

Mount Vernon has become a great mecca for the American tourist; at Yorktown and Valley Forge stand stately reminders of the First Gentleman of America, while in every part of the land the smallest mementoes of his life and actions are religiously preserved, but in magnificent decay on the lower Potomac lies Wakefield Farm, which was associated with his early life. A simple granite shaft marks the spot where George Washington was born, and a few bricks and stones are all that remain of his early home.

The old country mansion was burned early in the last century, but the brick chimney, within whose arch four people could sit, and the corner-stones, with a portion of the foundation, were saved. Shortly before the Civil War the historic farm passed into the hands of a family which at first showed some appreciation for its associations. A succeeding generation, however, tore down the chimney and the remnant of the walls in order to secure the bricks. A marble slab bearing an inscription giving the date of Washington's birth and other information, which had been set into the great arch, was removed to the old family graveyard; but in placing it beneath two ancient fig-trees planted by the mother of Washington it was broken, and its fragments lie there to-day, moss-grown and vine-covered.

It was in 1895 that the national government erected at Wakefield a miniature copy of the Washington Monument, with the inscription, "Washington's Birthplace," and in small letters at the base the words "Erected by the United States, A. D. 1895."—Waldon Fawcett in the February Woman's Home Companion.

Dawn.

When the first radiant streaks of dawn
 Begin to gild the eastern sky,
 As by an angel's finger drawn—
 Great golden gleams that dim the eye—

When shades of rose and glints of green
 And pearly slants of silver light
 Athwart the bluest sky e'er seen
 Fling a fair mantle shining bright—

When gold and rose commingle there
 In one most beauteous canopy,
 A nameless presence thrills the air
 With strains of solemn symphony.

And Mother Nature rises up,
 Flings from her eyes the night's soft sleep;
 And in each fairy flow'ret's cup
 The dancing dewdrops dimple deep.

In rustling trees the wak'ning bird
 Calls to its mate that it is day,
 And leaf and grass are softly stirred
 By zephyrs passing on their way.

And from beneath, and from above
 Comes to our hearts a gracious peace,
 And all things whisper, "Life is Love,
 And Love and Life can never cease."

HONOLULU, H. I.

Blest Home of the Soul.

Fair Zion, blest home of the soul,
 Thou'rt sacred, but not for thy worth
 True admirers thy beauties unfold
 As the treasured, loved gem of the earth.

Thy praises have long been proclaimed
 By saints always valiant and bold,
 Who sing of thy glories far-famed Wherever God's truth has been told.

Thou hold'st in thy sacred embrace
 The affections of kind-hearts and true
 Who've left friends and home, that dear place,
 Thy heavenly path to pursue.

Thou'rt loved by the noblest of earth
 Who've searched for the unblemished truth,—
 Fond parents at home by their hearth
 As well as the maidens and youth.

Wherever the story is told
 In remote southern sunny homes bright
 Or in northern lands, dreary and cold,
 Thou'rt talked of and praised with delight.

The heart-strings close round thee entwine
 Of unfaltering and true loving Saints
 Who exchange worldly pleasures for thine
 To dwell in thy beautiful gates.

O beam on us, Gem of the Light,
 Thy lovers are many and true;
 Fond hearts ever full of delight
 Are anxiously longing for you.

And may charity always expand
 In every true faithful Saint's heart,
 While graces and gifts may abound
 Thy blessings to ever impart.

Selected Poetry.

The Child to the Father.

Father, it's your love that safely guides me,
 Always it's around me, night and day,
 It shelters me, and soothes, but never chides me,
 Yet, father, there's a shadow in my way.

All the day, my father, I am playing Under trees where sunbeams dance and dart—
 But often just at night when I am praying
 I feel this awful hunger in my heart.

Father, there is something—it has missed me—
 I've felt it through my little days and years;
 And even when you petted me and kissed me
 I've cried myself to sleep with burning tears.

To-day I saw a child and mother walking,
 I caught a gentle shining in her eye,
 And music in her voice when she was talking—
 Oh, father, is it that that makes me cry!

Oh, never can I put my arms around her,
 Or never cuddle closer in the night;
 Mother, oh, my mother!—I've not found her—
 I look for her and cry from dark to light!

Letter Department.

MELBOURNE, Australia.

Editors Herald:—It has been some time since I contributed any news from this quarter of the globe; not because I have lost faith in the latter-day work, but because I had nothing sufficiently important to report.

In our scattered condition we are trying to keep as nearly in line with the work at home as possible; but it is easily seen that we are far behind in many respects, on account of not being able to have the fellowship and communion of Saints enjoyed among the branches. We are not complaining of our lot,—but simply longing for closer relations with God and his people, that the days of power may be ushered in which have been spoken of by the prophets, when the hearts of the children will be turned to the promises made to their fathers, and shall gather to Zion with songs of everlasting joy.

We are pleased at the thought of Bro. Alexander coming to see us, and although we might not have carriage to meet him, or song to greet him, yet I trust that he will be able to easily detect a godly walk, and commendable zeal that will comfort and gladden his heart, and cause him to feel at home among us.

There seems to be such a lack of interest in religious matters that I find it difficult to attract the ears of the people. The world wants to be entertained, and he who seeks to entertain will draw the crowd, leaving the few poor people behind who doubtless will hear the glad message, accept the gospel, and be crowned with eternal life. While the rest will go on to destruction, as they did in ages gone by. It is a sad thought, yet nevertheless 'tis true, that "every soul who will not hear that Prophet shall be destroyed from among the people."

The ites and isms too numerous to mention are springing up all over this country, like mushrooms, and are binding themselves together in bundles which indicates the nearness of our coming King. All these must be contended with in maintaining the faith once delivered to the Saints, and affirming the angel's message in the restitution of all things. Love, not hatred, should characterize our efforts in making straight the paths and convincing the masses of the error of their ways. About half of these will not meet the issue between us, the other half conclude they can not. The Disciples sometime try, only to fail; the Brighamites slink away from the truth contained in the accepted records, when met by the ministry, and this works to our advantage. We have quite a number of these muchly baptized, dancing polygamists, who can "testify" anywhere that Brigham was a prophet; but when asked what kind of a prophet they have nothing to furnish. One of them said to me that ignorance was bliss; but I replied that it would turn out to be blister, if he did not open his eyes to what his apostles had and were still doing contrary to the laws of the church. To sit with open mouth and shut eyes, like a young swallow, and take whatever is dropped in is very unwise from a scriptural standpoint.

We spent an evening this week with five elders from Utah. One affirmed that polygamy was never a vital tenet of their faith; but when the first few paragraphs of that polygamous revelation was read to him his face turned red, and he showed wisdom by keeping quiet. They thought their presidents had been ordained to succeed Joseph, but were shown their mistake. Although they constantly misrepresent us, they will not meet us on any point of difference. I am very much pleased to tell that Bro. Kaler has managed to pull about fourteen of them out of the mud during the last few weeks, and put them through the waters of regeneration, for the answering of a good conscience toward God.

How sane men can maintain a principle to be heaven-born, and virtuous, which the Lord says is "treachery," an "abomination," a "wicked" practice, and which "thing I hate," is just a little more than I can conceive. However, our sword is drawn, not against men, but spiritual wickedness in high or low places, and a clear sweep will be made among those who have turned light into darkness, and made folly their pride.

We occasionally enjoy a sweet season of peace and power in our social and sacrament meetings, and those who are called to impart the word from time to time, enjoy a measure of the good Spirit which enables them to give meat in due season. Our love for Zion and her children is unchanged, our faith still increasing, and our watchwords are onward and upward.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, January 28.

Saints' Herald:—As I observe the questions that are sent to the editor of the HERALD, I am led to ask if those who make these queries ever consider the burden and responsibility that rest upon the shoulders of our beloved President already bowed under the weight of years spent in watching over the church and its varied interests. He who has on his mind watchcare over fifty thousand people, and who discharges his duty as Bro. Joseph has done, carries no light burden; and many of the questions, it appears, are senseless, irrelevant, and by a little careful and prayerful reflection might be solved without an appeal to one already over-burdened with matters of vital interest to the church.

Especially is the foregoing true in regard to the efforts of one to discover if the Seer and Revelator to the church had not committed a very grave mistake by not inserting in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants all the revelations received during his lifetime. Who can say what the prophet had in his mind when selecting suitable matter for the future government of the church? If he acted under the direction of the Holy Spirit, who is authorized to call in question his actions?

But it appears there are those who possess the acumen to discover where the Lord or some of his inspired servants have made mistakes; and they feel called upon to call the attention of those in authority to the matter.

There are some things in the books, the Bible included, I do not fully understand, but none appear of vital importance in the salvation of men; hence I do not trouble myself or others about them. It seems to me that if those wasting so much gray matter in hunting mistakes would expend this energy in introspection, they would not ask so many unimportant questions.

Mission work in Council Bluffs is onward, and we are in good heart. Bro. C. A. Riley, who was lately ordained a priest, is full of zeal and ready to do all in his power to aid the work. Bro. J. Christianson is also an excellent worker. Bad weather has hindered, but we begin another siege Tuesday. Some honest souls are interested, and we hope before long to see them obey. If none obey the gospel I am sure it will not be the fault of the missionaries; for I have not heard a man who could present the gospel in a more forcible or spiritual manner than Bro. Cooper. He deals in no abstract nor ear-tickling theories; but presents the gospel in its purity. Our south-side Sunday-school is still flourishing, also the Tuesday evening preaching and Thursday evening prayer service at Bro. Liles'. No sickness in the branch.

J. S. STRAIN.

ROSCOE, Missouri, January 9.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Moler came over to my town and home a few days ago, and has been preaching to a crowded house of our citizens. We will continue over Sunday next. I think some will obey the gospel. We go next week to Red Rock, five miles north of Roscoe.

I send you in this letter a statement from one William Terrel of this place, an old and respected gentleman, concerning Joseph Smith the Martyr, and his family.

Bro. Moler and I visited the old gentleman one day last week, found him hale and hearty, very strong in body and mind. He is eighty-three years old, but does not look to be over sixty-five. His father, Josiah Terrel, died at the age of 103 years, 11 months, 17 days. He showed me a very fine family record, recording birth and death of his father. Mr. Terrel and his wife gave us a great many facts in regard to this latter-day work, Joseph the Seer, and Emma, his wife. Mr. Terrel does not belong to any church. I doubt whether there is one living to-day better acquainted with the family of Joseph Smith the Martyr outside of his family than Mr. Terrel. He is well informed on most all topics and talks freely, mind clear, and physically able to do a good half day's work at most anything.

We were visiting them some four or five hours, eating apples, and taking the statement that I send you in this letter. The next day he came into town and made oath to it being true, as you see, the notary being one of the largest merchants in our town. Hope after giving statement careful attention you will publish same in HERALD as it will be of great use to the church. I send a copy to Ensign and keep one myself.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH STEPHENSON.

January 3.

Statement of William Terrel, of Roscoe, St. Clair County, Missouri.

Questions by James Moler, written down by J. N. Stephenson.

Question.—Mr. Terrel, what is your age?

Answer.—I am eighty-three past. I was born December 17, 1818.

Question.—Were you acquainted with Joseph Smith, the founder of the Latter Day Saint Church?

Answer.—I knew Mr. Smith and his family very well. I first heard Joseph preach in the year 1837, near Bloomington, Illinois. We lived in that country at that time. I was personally acquainted with Joseph Smith from 1837 until his death in the year 1844. I was present when Joseph was killed, at Carthage jail in Illinois. I was in the jail yard; had just been relieved off guard and was leaving for my quarters, when I heard the report of a gun; and, as I looked around, I saw Joseph jump from the jail. I saw him crawl up against the well-curb, and heard him say in a low but distinct voice, "God's will be done."

Question.—What do you know about the character of Joseph Smith?

Answer.—It was good. He was honest, a gentleman in every respect. No one who personally knew him could say any evil of him. My father, Josiah Terrel, was a minister of the U. B. Church. He was acquainted with Joseph Smith, and I heard him say that Joseph Smith was a Christian gentleman.

Question.—What do you know about polygamy or spiritual wifery being taught by Joseph Smith?

Answer.—There never was any such doctrine as that taught by Joseph Smith that I ever heard of; and I certainly would have heard something about it if there had been such a doctrine taught in the church during the life of Mr. Smith, as I was associated with them and had ample opportunity of knowing if such a doctrine had ever been introduced by Mr. Smith.

Question.—Were you ever connected with the Latter Day Saint Church?

Answer.—I never was. I rather held to the faith of the U. B. Church as taught by my father.

Question.—What do you know about Joseph Smith's wife and family?

Answer.—I knew Emma, the wife of Joseph Smith, to be one of the best women that I ever saw. The family were honest, charitable, well respected, moral, upright, and good citizens, notwithstanding the false reports of the enemies of the church circulated through the Higbee press which was set up for the purpose of destroying the work established by Joseph Smith. I wish to say right here in regard to the Mormons stealing and taking property claiming it to be the Lord's is as false as can be. One day while my father was away preaching, (we were then feeding some eighteen head of fine cattle,) three men rode up to our house and told my mother that they had come for some cattle. They said that the Lord had sent them. They drove off four of the best ones. My father came home that day, and at once started in pursuit of the cattle thieves. He overtook them at the ferry-boat at Burlington, Iowa. They were not Mormons, but were stealing on the Mormons' credit. Those cattle thieves were prosecuted and sent to state's prison. The facts are the Mormons, as they were called, were too nice a people to do such things as that.

Signed,

WILLIAM TERREL.

State of Missouri, County of Saint Clair, in the Town of Roscoe. Now on this the 4th of January, 1902, personally appeared Wm. Terrel and made oath that the foregoing declaration by him subscribed is true; before me this day.

Dear Herald:—What a starvation spiritually we would experience if it were not for your valuable pages! We are isolated from the Saints, the nearest branch being fifteen miles distant. I often wish I could associate more with the Saints, the world seems so cold and indifferent. Then I think of the elders who leave their homes and loved ones and are met on every side by the adversary. We sisters should not expect to be carried to the skies,

On flowery beds of ease.

Whilst others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas.

Words can not express the aid and comfort the Mothers' Home Column has been to me in rearing my bright little girls. Surely it is a blessing to humanity and should be read by all mothers.

Our doctrine is very little known here except as it has been told by the enemies of the church; but we have not hidden our light under a bushel. Consequently some are becoming interested and anxious to hear our elders. We are expecting Bro. E. S. Fannon to preach for us as soon as the weather settles again, and hope there will be some of the honest-hearted here who will obey the truth.

MRS. S. E. P. GUNSOLLEY.

TOPEKA, Kansas, January 20.

Editors Herald:—We are laboring in the Northeastern Kansas District. Some are investigating; others think they know more than the "Mormons," and so stay away, hindering others who would otherwise come and hear. A Methodist minister of Seranton came out to hear me once and said he never heard such preaching before in his life. Of course he never did.

I preached at the house of Sr. Freeman, the colored sister. Her husband is nearly one hundred years old, and he listened very attentively and was much pleased. He is a Baptist. Sr. L. Freeman was baptized at Nicholsville, Michigan, by Elder Bootman, November 12, 1875. She worked for a number of years for the Rev. Mr. Beecher. They are now quite wealthy and comfortably situated.

We are making very good headway, with Brn. J. W. Roberts and G. W. Beebe, my two boy preachers. My other boy preacher, F. J. Pierce, has been sent to Wales. I hope the little fellow is doing well in his father-land.

The Saints are looking for Bro. Twombly to set February 15 as the time for conference, so they can have Bro. I. N. White with them.

Bro. Beebe is doing well in and around Topeka, and Bro. Roberts is operating in the northern part of the district. Both are making friends to the cause.

We opened up a new place yesterday. Bro. Beebe is doing well.

J. C. FOSS.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, January 19.

Dear Herald:—On the morning of January 9, father, Brethren Jett and Davenport, and myself started to district conference at Pipe Creek Schoolhouse, a distance of about thirty-eight miles. We arrived the following day at noon, and were the first on the grounds. Bro. Harp preached that night to a few. The next morning, Saturday, we held prayer-meeting, there being only six present. But notwithstanding that the Lord blessed us, and we rejoiced. The prayer-meeting will be long remembered, and I feel that the effort we made to get there was not in vain, and that when we make a sacrifice the Lord is sure to bless us.

Several came later in the day and on Sunday the house was full, most of the congregation being outsiders. Bro. Harp did all the preaching except one sermon by Bro. Parmer. The Lord's Spirit was with the brethren and they had good liberty.

It was resolved to petition General Conference to return Bro. Harp to this mission. He is a good worker and we would like to keep him in this district. Peace prevailed during the conference and we feel that good was done, one requesting baptism at the close. I ever pray that the work may prosper throughout the land.

RUTH GIFFORD.

EUCLID, Arkansas, January 24.

Editors Herald:—We have recently had two discussions between Bro. J. W. Jackson and one Rev. G. W. Spurlock of the Christian or Campbellite faith. Many persons were reached with the gospel who never heard it preached before. People came twenty-five miles to the debate. It was encouraging and strengthening to the Saints here. We were made to rejoice and thank the Lord for the restoration of the gospel.

Brn. W. S. McRae and Joseph Ward have been with us lately and preached some grand and noble sermons which aided greatly in the spiritual growth and development of the Saints.

We have a promising branch of more than forty members. It was organized less than two years ago, with sixteen members. We also have a Sunday-school with about forty scholars. We have preaching every Sunday.

I greatly appreciate the HERALD in its new dress and it is a welcome visitor to our home. We could not do without the HERALD and Ensign, for we enjoy reading them and they tell us the progress of the work.

Editors Herald:—I have just closed my second debate with Rev. George Spurlock, Campbellite. Propositions were the same as in Braden-Kelley debate. I have been able to get the doctrine before people I could not reach in the ordinary way of preaching. The Lord blessed me. Our first debate was at Nathan, in Pike County, a stronghold of Campbellites. Bro. W. S. Macrae stood by me and gave acceptable assistance. Bro. Joseph Ward acted as my moderator in my last debate, which was held at the Jacksonville Branch, near Euclid. He gave me good assistance, having had considerable experience in debate. Thanks to the brethren.

The work is gaining some prestige. We need more laborers in this State. Can we get them?

The Jacksonville Branch is building up in numbers; but we must needs be humble and prayerful. I feel proud of our branch. It has taken much work to establish it.

We have a new country, considerable government land subject to homestead entry. The best land is all gone. Land is cheap, from two to ten dollars per acre. The country is hilly and stony. Lots of timber; good mineral prospects. Twenty miles from railroad, seven from survey of the new railroad.

I believe the work will, if properly prosecuted, come to the front in Southwestern Arkansas. I trust the next General Conference will remember us.

Editors Herald:—The HERALD comes every week laden with words of cheer and comfort that strengthen and encourage. May God bless and prosper it. Surely every member should take it. Only last week I was glad that I could send in one new subscription and renew mine to both HERALD and Autumn Leaves. How I enjoy these blessed papers! I have not kept my papers for I give them to others who can not take them and to those outside of the church. I greatly enjoy the lectures on history and also the letters.

May God bless the workers and also the faithful companions and children that are making such sacrifices for the work. How grand and noble this work is when it will stir the rude hearts of the natives of the islands of the sea and make of them such noble defenders of the cause of Christ and mold their characters to such kind, self-sacrificing ones. We should learn a lesson of the Christ-life made manifest through these our brethren of the islands of the sea. I am pleased the work there is in good condition. Truly those people are of Israel, as was shown to Bro. Alexander Smith in the vision aboard the ship.

God is surely at the head of this work, and we Saints should and would enjoy greater blessings if we would keep the commands of God.

Editors Herald:—I was in the city of Brisbane, state of Queensland, seven weeks, and baptized twenty-eight people. On Sunday, December 22, I organized them into a branch, and ordained two elders, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon, being so directed by the Spirit.

This is the first branch of our church in Queensland, and is called the South Brisbane Branch. I also organized a Sunday-school. Elder J. W. Barkus is the president of the branch, Edwin A. Peisker the priest, C. E. Berglin the teacher, and Joseph J. Wilson deacon. Elder John Lebherz is superintendent of the Sunday-school. I look for good results from the labors of these men, whom God has called, and their willing little band of workers.

President A. H. Smith and Bro. Gould arrived from Tahiti December 28. Our conference was excellent. Bro. George Lewis was ordained Bishop of New South Wales by President

Smith and W. J. Haworth a Seventy. A board of publication was appointed to see that an eight-page monthly paper was published for this mission, to be called The Gospel Standard. Bro. J. D. Imrie was ordained an elder, and much important work was done. I believe this to be the most important conference ever held in Australia.

Editor Herald:—My husband and I feel that we could not do without the church papers. There must be very few in the church poorer than we; but with God's help we will take the HERALD and Ensign as long as we have bread and butter. Not only do we take the papers but we read and enjoy them. If we could give comfort to others as we receive from their writings, we would be much happier.

Bro. Smith's historical lectures will do good. I have the history by Mother Smith, printed in London in 1853, and prize it. I feel that some will come under condemnation for not reading and trying to learn, though we must not find fault, but strive to do right.

E. C. GRAUMLICH.

MINATARE, Nebraska, January 23.

Dear Herald:—I received a letter from somebody at Deloit, Iowa, which was not signed.

I am pleased to receive letters from brethren indorsing my sentiments in letter extract in HERALD. My faith from the first has not been in the wisdom of man, but rather in the wisdom and power of God. I sought God for wisdom, light, and guidance, and it has been made manifest to me that we are engaged in his work; and the foundation of this latter-day work rests not on frail humanity, but on the Eternal Father and his Son Jesus. So the faults of the Saints do not shake me. If such were the case I should never have embraced the work, for I saw weakness. I also saw sufficient to convince me that God was, of a truth, with the Saints. Oh, what a mighty power if all the Saints were only faithful! But this terrible carnality steps in in so many ways, crowding out or driving away the good Spirit.

When shall we learn wisdom? O that my pen might record my feelings and that the truth might sink deep into the hearts of those who are taking the sails from the ship Zion and throwing overboard the fuel that should feed the engine while crossing life's perilous ocean!

Saints, do you realize that we are either gathering or scattering this very minute? May God's ever watching eye be upon us.

D. W. SHIRK.

OAKLAND, California, January 27.

Editors Herald:—After returning from quite an extended trip through Lassen and Modoc Counties the writer was seriously hindered in his work by a severe attack of sickness, much of the time being confined to a hot room.

Elder G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, whose family is wintering here, was with us about six weeks, during which time he filled the pulpit very acceptably and encouraged us by his testimony of God's blessings to him. By direction of Pres. Joseph Smith he was ordained a high priest in accordance with a General Conference resolution. Our acquaintance with him was very pleasant and we were loath to give the parting hand.

On Christmas Day a few of the Saints gathered at the bay where we inducted Dr. Will M. Bush into the visible kingdom of God on earth. Dr. Bush is located at Walnut Creek where he has heard the gospel through Sr. Betty Smith principally and some of the elders occasionally. About two months before his baptism he married a gentle soldier for Christ, Sr. Carrie Butterfield, so it is no wonder that he finally surrendered. If faithful, I am sure he will do much good for the cause.

The Christmas entertainment passed off pleasantly, all those taking part acquitting themselves creditably. Several of our little girls recited especially well. We improved the closing days of the year by going to Stockton where we occupied twice, with liberty, feeling an assurance that brighter days are ahead for this branch. From there we visited the Alma branch near Livermore, administering the sacrament and speaking for about an hour with freedom. This branch is composed, principally, of the family of the late Bro. John Young and their relatives. Sr. Young is doing all within her power to keep the branch alive, being ably assisted by her boys and Bro. Richard Sweet.

On January 3 we went to Windsor where we occupied two nights, and then to Santa Rosa to occupy Sunday morning and evening. At Windsor, Bro. Bell, though seventy-eight years of age and living alone, makes a home for the missionary and also recognizes the fact that it costs money to travel. The next week we had preaching services each evening at our chapel in Oakland, but the attendance was not large, for several reasons. We were surprised one evening to see Elder Peter Anderson of "The Twelve" seated on the front seat trying to thaw out. Our worthy deacon, Bro. Charles Day, to whom he was a stranger, was doing all he could to make "the stranger" feel at home. Bro. Anderson is here visiting relatives that he has not seen for twenty years, and has occupied here and in San Francisco to the satisfaction of all.

On January 19 I had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Bro. John Lawn and Sr. Vira Putney, both of whom are well known here on the coast and among the ministry who have labored here. Of course the bride looked "very sweet" and the groom "manly." They left for a short trip to visit relatives in the interior before taking up their residence in San Francisco where Bro. John is manager of an aluminum store. Some of their interested friends decorated their luggage with white ribbons and the rice was not lacking, but they discovered it too soon. May God's choicest blessings be theirs to enjoy.

On January 20 we again journeyed to Santa Rosa, this time to assist Bro. Arthur Phillips in a series of meetings at that place. Though the weather was very bad we waded through the mud to about one thousand houses to announce our meetings, praying all the time for good weather. By the end of the week we had aroused quite an interest in spite of the weather and were very hopeful indeed. On Sunday, however, the Board of Health forbade all public gatherings owing to an epidemic of small-pox that had struck the town. It was a great disappointment to us all, but we try to think that it was for the best. However, it demonstrated that a good hearing can be had at Santa Rosa by making the proper effort. Before leaving we had the pleasure of baptizing Sr. Millie Scott, the wife of Bro. Otto Scott, a noble woman, I am sure. To-morrow we leave for a week's effort at Walnut Creek, then to San Jose to assist Bro. Etzenhouser in his debate with the Christians.

I am glad to see the awakening on the tract question. It is my opinion, and has been for some time, that a good work can be done here by systematic tract work, but it must be done by those who can give it proper attention.

Bro. Keeler has been at home spending the holidays with his wife who lives here. Our branch gained eighteen by baptism in 1901. We go to Sacramento March 7 for district conference, then to Lamoni for General Conference, then ———.

Country Life in America for February is an enlarged number of this beautiful magazine of the world out-of-doors, representing the new expansion of American life to the country. "In Garb of White," the frontispiece, is a remarkable picture of a New England woods road in winter. Among the leading features are "Skibo Castle," the summer home of Andrew Carnegie in the Scottish Highlands; "A Sniff at Old Gardens," by J. P. Mowbray, who treats of the vestiges of a past home life on the old Hudson River manors; and "Cuckoo," an illustrated poem of the woods, by John Burroughs. Other articles and superb pictures touch upon every side of country life. "Prize Dogs" represent St. Bernard's of world-wide fame; "Two 'Possums and Several Mistakes," by A. Radclyffe Dugmore, is illustrated by inimitable photographs of the live animals under unique circumstances; while "The Trees," is a large plate of rare beauty covering the two central pages of the large magazine. Of gardens and practical garden-making there is "An experience with the Soil," in which a suburbanite tells of years of enthusiastic work in growing a wild garden of some eighty kinds of flowers, shrubs, and aquatic plants; and there are also articles on the construction and care of the hot-bed, with suggestions for starting early vegetables and flowers. A series of photographs is devoted to "The Abandoned Farm Country," where, amid old friends—the marigold, hollyhock, and climbing rose—may be found pleasant summer homes, modest, but quite as much the aim of this successful magazine as the ideal country seats, with their dairies, blooded stock, and fox-hunts.

A Few Items of Our Voyage.

BY SR. BURTON.

Bro. and Sr. Gilbert have a small two-roomed house just slash-ways across the way from here. Within it is quite cosy-looking. The bedroom is partitioned off with a dark-colored calico tacked up smooth and solid, which suggests wall-paper, and in the living-room a small dresser is built up in one corner. Possibly it was owing to our parting company that made me so lonesome at first.

The typewriters attract the crowd. I never look towards Sr. Gilbert's cottage that I do not see the doorway and open windows entirely filled with wondering natives. There are usually one or more looking in at Bro. Gould also. But since Bro. Smith is in the room much of the time, they are not so free here, for they feel rather shy of the Patriarch.

The sisters kindly come into both houses every morning and make up the beds and sweep, after their manner of sweeping.

The brethren do our cooking and are not sparing anything to have things in real good style, and at first it was fine, but provisions are getting scarcer now, and the cook's face looks troubled, seeing the most of our party partake rather sparingly; only when we have fried fish.

Bro. Alexander has been very sick, a most severe attack of cholera morbus. Was taken on Thursday evening; and continued in great pain, accompanied with purging and vomiting till midnight, notwithstanding every available effort had been made for his relief. After midnight he became easier. Next day he was exceedingly weak, and perforce kept his bed all day. That was four days ago, and he is not able to sit up very long yet, nor to eat much of anything; a little chicken broth is about all he can take. We were a little anxious in regard to the nature of Bro. Alexander's sickness lest it might prove to be an epidemic, for two natives were suddenly smitten down in like manner and on the same day, and one on the day before. They seemed to be almost unconscious with pain at first, but were relieved through administration, and were about again the next day.

For some reason, probably the high winds, the Saints have not gathered in from the surrounding islands as we expected. We are still looking for some boats to arrive before conference, which will convene in a few days. And then we must set out on our long voyage back to Papeete in a sailing boat, and not so large, either, as some at other islands. If we can make the various islands in a day's run, we may not have to be out any at nights from here to Kaukura. But it will take us six days to get to Kaukura, where we will abide for a time.

Bro. and Sr. Gilbert intend to remain here and in this upper district until near conference in April. How I shall miss her when we part company for so long! for though they have a house by themselves, we call upon each other often, and eat at the same table. She is going through the uncomfortable, aching sensation of getting acclimated. Hope she will be freed from it soon.

We have just come in from a pretty good dinner: fried fish, rice, hard bread, and cold water (warm).

Joseph is well, but has been suffering for the past few days with a very lame back. He went in bathing after a long warm walk without waiting to cool off, and has been nearly broken-backed ever since. But that is not sickness, is it?

Taenga.—Taking up the thread of events just where it was broken off at Raroia, I am glad to say one boat of Saints arrived there early in the morning of conference day. Among the number were Bro. Janssen, Elia and wife of Amanu, and two from Hao. The others we had never met before from Amanu. Conference was held on Friday. The day was the fairest of that week, and the conference was peaceful and enjoyed by all, so also was the feast, which was held for one day, and breakfast the following morning.

We were to leave Raroia that Saturday morning for Taenga. Two boats were going. Consequently, as soon as breakfast was over there was a hurrying and scurrying, packing and strapping to get off as soon as possible. The wind had blown hard all night and in the early morning, the lurid glare, indicating the coming sun, the swiftly flying scud, and black, heavy clouds huddled together frowning on the grinning yellow streaks and spots that peered through the clouds, looked wild and seemed to foreshadow an unpleasant day. But when the king of day presented himself on the scene, full and clear, he overruled the elements, banished the small clouds, and may have rebuked the large ones, for they no longer looked bold and strong, but with drooping, dripping faces, as if from very shame, they wept out their great tear-drops and vanished from sight, leaving only a strong fair wind. When all had collected, the usual service of singing and prayer was had, then the tearful leave-taking, and that peculiar process of embarking by way of those small canoes that would hold only two of us at a time, and neither of the four could "paddle his own canoe," so we had to be drawn and pushed. I think the tallest brother kept his footing, and steadied the canoe, but when the shorter one had reached his depth he swam behind and pushed. At length all were on board, with piles of coconuts still attached to the vine like gigantic clusters of grapes. The small anchor was unhooked from a coral rock beneath, and handed into the boat and we filled away on a beat towards the pass, our boat listing down unpleasantly on one tack. The tide was with the current, so the pass was smooth, yes, oily smooth in spots where the current was eddying beneath the surface, but no less swift, and we were borne rapidly through that broad avenue of the islanders' highways. When fairly outside, our boat having started first, hove to, waiting for the other one, partly because the natives did not want to get out of sight of her during the day, and partly because she carried a boat awning and a bundle of hard bread that belonged to our boat. Presently the two boats closed in together as near as they could and keep clear of each other's far-reaching main booms; then a play at toss and catch until the coveted treasures were obtained, after which both squared away to a good fair wind, our boat taking the lead, being one half knot faster than the other.

The Driver vs. The Leader.

A COMPARISON.

Possibly there is no one who, if asked the question, Which would be conducive to the better results in teaching, to "drive" or to "lead," but would answer, "To lead, by all means," when at the same time some who would answer thus are hindering their own work (though all unconsciously to themselves, perhaps) by giving way at times to the spirit of driving. Every parent knows how hard it is to drive a child to obedience, and when driven how unwillingly it performs the smallest duty. And on the other hand, with what zeal and pleasure it enters into the hardest tasks when the parent takes the lead.

Every person who has ever taught, either in the Sunday-school or public school, knows how the teacher is tempted and feels almost justified at times to use force. It takes a very careful, and prayerful life, on the part of the teacher, to not yield to the spirit of driving, sometimes.

The heart must be filled with tenderness and love, that love which emanates from God and recognizes in every human being an object for whom Christ died. It is natural for the human heart to rebel at dictation. We have known children, and grown-up people, too, who were gentle and yielding, so long as gentle and loving means were used with them. But the moment you undertook to drive them they became stubborn and unyielding.

I once knew a teacher

TO DRIVE A SCHOLAR FROM HER CLASS

by simply using a tone of authority to her under very strong provocation. On another occasion the same teacher was much tried by a certain scholar who came to Sunday-school apparently bent on mischief. When asked a question she would answer in an impudent and saucy manner, so much so that the attention of the whole class was attracted to her. The teacher was strongly tempted to reprimand her before the class, but her better judgment came to the rescue, and a feeling of sympathy for the little cross child came in her heart and she looked at her pityingly and said kindly: "Do you not feel well to-day, dear?" On being informed that there was nothing the matter, the teacher said: "Something has gone wrong, then, I'm sure; you're not yourself to-day. But never mind," she continued soothingly, "we all have such days." And immediately the rebellious spirit was conquered, and the confidence of the child gained. The teacher could see that it was with difficulty that she kept back the tears. But what might have been the result had the teacher given way to the impulse to try to force this child into proper behavior.

WHEN KING SAUL WAS TROUBLED

by an evil spirit David was brought to quiet him by the influence of soothing music. Trumbull in writing of this incident says: "As David stood before Saul with his harp, did it matter nothing what music David brought from that harp, or how? Suppose he had sounded out harsh discords there, or had struck his harp to the notes of wild martial airs? Would he have soothed the spirit of Saul, or jarred upon him, and increased his unrest of soul? It was the gentle tender notes of the sacred music, of the sweet psalmist of Israel, that hushed to repose the agitations of the demon-possessed king; and it was the hand of him who was cunning in playing which directed the influence of the soothing airs, as he swept the harp strings, so Saul was refreshed, and was well and the evil spirit departed from him. And so it is to-day; he who would influence a troubled or opposing spirit needs to be cunning in playing on the harp strings of truth.

And he may well crave the skill of David, as well as the faith in which David used his skill on the harp or with the sling.

Every teacher must understand that in whatever department of church work he attempts to teach quite as much depends on his

as on his teaching. He may be well informed on the subject to be taught, and fully qualified to teach, and understand the importance of "leading instead of driving;" but notwithstanding all this, if his own life does not reflect the beautiful truths he is seeking to teach, if there is in his own personal influence that which repels instead of wins, he is lacking in one of the essential qualifications of a successful teacher.

Again we quote from Trumbull. He says: "There are few teachers who would not shrink from the thought of doing an obvious wrong, which might be the means of destroying their influence for good with their scholars; but there are many teachers who feel free to do that which their scholars may, indeed, look upon as wrong, but which they themselves consider both innocent and allowable. They fail to realize the truth that the question of their personal influence for Christ, brings a new element into the question, whether that which they know to be lawful, is in their case expedient."

Then in order to obtain the best results as leaders, the teacher must have that love and personal interest in his scholars which will enable him to sacrifice all questionable worldly pleasure. For after all in the Sunday-school. It is the only power which reaches every scholar alike. Every heart is human, and every human heart is open to genuine sympathy and affection. Unless a Sunday-school teacher has love and shows love in his work for his scholars, he lacks one thing without which all else must go for naught.

LOVE IS THE CHIEF ATTRACTION

ANOTHER CASE.

I was talking a short time ago with a Sunday-school teacher who teaches in one of our largest Sunday-schools, where there is everything to attract and please; a large, beautiful church, fine music, blackboards, maps, class banners, etc.; and yet that teacher was severely tried by her class who came to Sunday-school for no other purpose apparently than to visit with one another. At last the teacher told them if they could not behave properly and pay attention to the lesson she would report them to the superintendent and have them expelled from the school. This would have been a great punishment to them, as their parents attended the Sunday-school and it was a very nice place to go to see everybody. But what affect had this threat upon them? Did they stop whispering? Yes, but only to sit quietly and moodily through the entire lesson, while the discouraged teacher tried to teach them the things concerning the kingdom of God. Was this teacher wholly to blame for the conduct of those children? We say no. Had the parents discharged their duty at home, had they coöperated with the teacher in leading their children in the right way, the teacher's work would not have been so difficult. And possibly, had the teacher visited these children in their homes and sought to make of each one of them a personal friend the results might have been different.

FOR THE TRUE MEASURE

of a Sunday-school teacher's personal power over his scholars is found in his love for them, and in their love for him. In the language of Paul, Though he speak with the tongues of men and of angels, though he have the gift of prophecy, and understands all knowledge and mysteries, and though he give of his goods to feed the poor, and have all faith so that he could remove mountains, and yet have not love—that love which suffereth long and is kind, which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, he is nothing as a true and efficient Sunday-school teacher.

Then, teachers, let us lead by the silken cords of love and not try to drive.

The same general rules concerning purchase of tickets and obtaining a certificate with each ticket purchased, announced in notice concerning the Western Association, will apply—"except that going tickets may be purchased from April 2-7" only.

"If through tickets can not be procured at the starting point, tickets should be purchased to the nearest point where such through ticket can be obtained, and there purchase through to place of meeting, and a certificate from the ticket agent at the point where each purchase is made should be requested."

"Going tickets may be limited or unlimited, but the return ticket will be for continuous passage; and the going ticket determines the route of return journey."

TRANS-CONTINENTAL ASSOCIATION.

Territory: west of Denver and Cheyenne. Further particulars from Chairman Charlton include the following: "The nine months' rate of two cents per mile each way is in effect from the majority of Pacific coast points to Missouri River gateways, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, etc. It is not in effect to intermediate points like Lamoni, Iowa."

"In order for your delegates to avail themselves of that rate, it would be best to buy to a Missouri River point, Omaha, Council Bluffs, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, or Kansas City, and re-buy from there.

"Should it happen that your delegates apply at a Pacific coast point at which nine-months' tickets are not on sale, the agent at such point will ascertain and advise them the nearest point to his station at which such tickets are on sale."

The Western Passenger Association having granted reduced rates, "your delegates could time their trips so as to reach one of these gateways [named above] on a day on which the reduced rate is authorized from such gateways to Lamoni and return."

From the above it will be clear to delegates and visitors coming from territory west of Denver and Cheyenne that they may purchase tickets at the rate of two cents per mile to the gateways named, going and coming, and from such gateways to Lamoni pay first-class fare and secure certificates to correspond therewith, which will return them to said gateways at one third regular fare. It will be noticed that the reduced rate in Western Association territory is limited from April 2 to 8 on going trip, and to April 23 on return trip, while the Trans-Continental nine-months' rate is not so limited.

Pastoral.

To the Missionary and Local Ministry of Wisconsin:—Though circumstances have in a measure hindered me from putting in as much time in the missionary field during the past summer as I have desired, yet so far as able I have tried to keep in touch with the work and the force in the field, and I am satisfied that each has manifested an interest in the work and has done all that circumstances would permit. Brethren, the time is nearing when it will be necessary for us to report the labor performed for this conference year, and I trust that each will be prompt in this matter, that I may have your reports not later than March 5 that I may have time to arrange, summarize, and put them in the hands of our missionary in charge by March 15. The traveling ministry are furnished with blanks for this purpose, but there has been considerable work done by the local force; and while it is not especially called for, yet I am of opinion that it should be recognized; consequently, so far as practicable, I wish each one of the local ministry to send me a report of his labors. Give the number of sermons preached, number of times assisted, number baptized and confirmed, and any items of special interest you may know. Send reports to my home address, Charles H. Burr, Box 254, Plano, Illinois.

Notices.

First Kansas City Branch.—In our labors we have learned that Saints often move to Kansas City or immediate vicinity and for various reasons fail to find the places of worship or to become known to the missionary in charge, or any of the branch officers. It is the desire of the branch officers to visit and encourage all Saints within our boundaries. Our church is located at 2324 Wabash Avenue, and all visitors are welcome, especially those of the household of faith; and if any are readers of the HERALD who have not yet met with us, we hope they will do so, or write us so we can visit them. We also desire readers of the HERALD who know of members living in our part of the city and who are not attending any of our churches to give us their names and addresses and we shall be glad to call on them and endeavor to have them renew their interest. All communications will be given prompt consideration. E. Etzenhouser, Presiding Priest. Office address, 507 Massachusetts Building.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Central Illinois District:—The law relating to tithes and offerings should be kept that we may obtain the celestial kingdom. Please remember our missionaries must have a maintenance that the gospel may spread unto every nation, that the time may hasten when the righteous shall reign with the King of glory. Hoping all will take note and respond early, I remain, your colaborer, Luther Simpson, Bishop's agent, Box 238, Taylorville, Illinois.

Special Notice.

In SAINTS' HERALD of January 8, page 38, under notice of "Wanted," a request is made for information. I have since learned that the Ensign had under consideration a similar work, and by mutual agreement there will be but one book published, so far as myself and they are concerned. I hope this will be sufficient to explain that there was no rivalry. By the advice of the Church Historian, after copies of all letters have been made the originals will be filed with him. It is the wish of those engaged in this work that the Saints will respond promptly, and especially the ministry. Write as briefly as possible, but omit no essential fact connected with the matter written about. Let us hear from those in foreign lands, and we will know that God does not limit his blessings to time or place. Edward Rannie, Station "A," 3333 Boyd Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

The lessons of the history of the sinking fund and the payment of the public debt are important and should be frequently recalled. Although nations should always be prepared, so far as possible, for the unexpected, sudden emergencies will arise which call for abnormal expenditures and justify extraordinary measures, including sometimes, in dire extremities, forced loans and the issue of irredeemable currency.

In these days of extended international credit a national hoard is of little or no benefit to the Government, while the concentration of money, by withdrawing it from the channels of productive industry, is a direct injury to the people. A nation that promptly pays its debts can contract new debts on the most favorable terms. Nations, like individuals, can provide for the payment of their indebtedness only by economy and saving. An automatically working sinking fund is a myth. No sinking fund can be devised that will even operate constantly, with certainty and precision. For this there are two reasons: (1) the discharge of the public debt, and even the payment of interest, must yield at times to the superior demands of the State for its own preservation; and (2) even a sovereign Legislature can not bind the hands of its successors.

The rise and fall of public revenues are so sudden and so incapable of being foretold, that reduction of revenue, when justifiable, should always be made gradually and with caution. Temporary or emergency taxes should be repealed before changes, designed solely for revenue reduction, are made in the permanent sources of the national income.

The history of the debts of modern nations—for national debts are a matter of the last two hundred years—has demonstrated the vast difference that exists between the principles of private and public financing. The chief aim of the man engaged in private business is the accumulation of a surplus and its profitable investment. Wise and successful public financing consists, however, in the nicest possible adjustment of receipts to expenditures, avoiding both constantly recurring deficits, and a constantly accumulating surplus.

In conclusion, the story of the payment of our national debt enforces this precept, that periods of peace and prosperity should be devoted to the discharge of national obligations and to laying the sure foundations for public credit; for it is a nation's credit, and not its army or navy, that makes it impregnable.—By Congressman H. S. Boutell in the February Forum.

DOWN WITH "MORMONISM."—NO. 2.

Whether what follows was the result of a preconceived and prearranged plan as a continuation of the avalanche of attacks on the church and its faith, or is the screed of a half-quizzical and less than half-informed press correspondent, it may not be competent for us to write; but it is of a piece with the general trend of what the master of evil has been inciting since the work began in 1830; and we give it as a specimen of what is at date (January, 1902) going the rounds of the news journals of the time.

AWAIT SECOND COMING.

MORMONS IN IOWA CONFIDENT OF THE RETURN OF THE SAVIOR.
 LAMPS TRIMMED AND BURNING.

[1] JOSEPH SMITH II HAS RECENTLY ANNOUNCED THAT THE ADVENT WILL TAKE PLACE AT LAMONI, AND THE FAITHFUL ARE ALREADY PREPARED FOR THE HEAVENS TO OPEN AT ANY TIME.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 22.—[2]The second coming of Christ is to take place in the little town of Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa—three miles from the Missouri line—according to the belief of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, which has for its prophet and president Joseph Smith, Jr., son of the original Joseph Smith, who gave up his life for the cause of Mormonism at Carthage, Illinois, fifty-eight years ago. Preparation for the second coming of Christ to earth is a part of the teaching of the faith [3] and the prophet has recently announced that the advent will be at Lamoni.

Lamoni is a town of 1,500 inhabitants. It is the center of the faith, but beyond that it is nothing. It is not a business point of any consequence. There are no stores other than those absolutely necessary to supply the needs of the people resident in the town and surrounding community. [4] All the business is done by and with members of the faith and an outsider is treated almost as an interloper.

Lamoni is the seat of the church in more ways than one. It has the president of the church association, the one inspired prophet of God, according to the bequest of Joseph Smith, Sen. It has the official organ of the church, the SAINTS' HERALD, and the printing office where all the pamphlets and tracts of the faith are published and mailed to all corners of the globe. It has also a college under the auspices of the church and a home for the aged, the inmates of which are Mormon.

JOSEPH SMITH II, PROPHET.

Smith, Prophet and Seer, is sixty-nine years of age. He is an intelligent, sincere man, but his appearance belies his profession of [5] father confessor and suggests rather a retired farmer in good circumstances or a prosperous country merchant. Smith spends most of his time at his desk answering a voluminous correspondence from all parts of the world—for missionaries go out from Lamoni to the Pacific Islands, to the Orient, Africa, the far north, and every other place where there is a chance to gain converts to the faith, to say nothing of the numerous bands working in the United States.

His other moments are filled with callers and with editorials for his paper. [6] Smith does not hesitate to say that Christ is coming to Lamoni in person. [7] He says Lamoni is a much better place than Jerusalem was or is to-day, and that as Christ came to the seat of learning and of power to his first chosen people so will he come again when he visits earth.

Mormonism comes from the name of the man who is supposed to have written the account of the faith upon [8] two bronze stones, Urim and Thummim. In 1823 Joseph Smith, father of the Smith who is now at Lamoni, and who was then but eighteen years of age, had a [9] vision that he would discover two bronze plates which would reveal to him the true religion. Four years afterward at Palmyra, New York, he came across the plates exactly as he had been told in the vision. With them were two brilliant stones set in bows, and with these as spectacles he translated the plates, making the original Book of Mormon. The translation was accomplished by Smith, with the aid of an assistant, Smith keeping a blanket between himself and assistant in order that the plates might not be subjected to vulgar gaze.

ESTABLISHES THE MORMON CHURCH.

In 1830 Smith established the first Mormon Church. Shortly afterward the faith was removed to Kirtland, Ohio, where some property of value was acquired. [10] Later on the Mormons came to Far West, Missouri, and from there removed to Nauvoo, Illinois. Here Brigham Young and the others high in the church introduced the practice of polygamy, and this breach of morals and the teachings of the faith enraged the inhabitants of the city and community so that Smith and his brother Hyrum felt called upon to surrender themselves to the authorities for safety. [11] They were removed to the jail at Carthage, from which they were removed by enraged citizens and stoned to death. [12] From Nauvoo the Mormons fled for their lives. Some went down into Missouri, others removed to other parts of Illinois, some came to Iowa, and by far the larger part followed Brigham Young as their new leader and set off across the prairie for a new land of Canaan far beyond the haunts of civilization.

IS OPPOSED TO POLYGAMY.

Joseph Smith Jr., claims that the practice of polygamy is contrary to the teachings of the Book of Mormon, and that the alleged command to practice polygamy was an invention of Young to satisfy his own lustful desires. Young, on the other hand, claims that Smith before his death received a divine command that the faithful should take unto themselves more wives, but that Emma Smith, the present Joseph Smith's mother, who was jealous of the practice, [13] destroyed the stone by burning.

The present prophet of the church quotes the Book of Mormon to prove that polygamy is not authorized and is not a legal command of the church. The book contains the following passage: "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore thus saith the Lord I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem by the power of my arm that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore yet, the Lord God will suffer that his people will do like unto them of old. For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none. For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of woman."

UTAH SAINTS NOT RECOGNIZED.

The present church, of which Smith is the head, has [14] 250,000 communicants in all parts of the world. Smith has a son, Frederick M. Smith, who is to succeed his father as prophet and seer of the church, and who will be delegated the right to perpetuate the teachings of Mormonism.

The church does not recognize the Latter Day Saints in Utah and other Western States as a part of the true Mormonism, but regards them as interlopers, who followed the wicked teachings of Brigham Young rather than the righteous Book of Mormon.

[15] Smith has another son, Alexander H. Smith. Also residing in Lamoni is Bishop E. L. Kelley, one of the high priests of Mormonism and an adviser to the prophet. The headquarters of the church were established in Lamoni, twenty years ago by David Dancer and Elijah Banta, [16] forty-seven families removing from Plano, Illinois, at the time.

Smith's church believes in the Old and the New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, in miracles and revelations, in the interpretation of hidden tongues, anointing the head with oil, the laying on of hands to heal the sick, baptism by immersion and that all of the chosen will reign with Christ upon earth after his second coming. [17]

There are quite a number of improper and some false statements in this short article, which we take from a copy of the Butte, Montana, Miner, for January 23, 1902. We have also seen it in other journals, and think it started on its rounds from Des Moines, the capital city of Iowa.

In order that we may properly note these divergencies from truth we number them.

To begin with the heading. 1. Joseph Smith has not made any announcement whatever as to the time, when the Savior will make his second advent, or the place to which he will come.

As to the remainder of the statement in the heading we sincerely hope it is true, and that the faithful Saints are ready and prepared for such coming, as the Master himself has charged "Occupy till I come," "Be ye also ready."

2. No such statement has been made, and no such belief is held by the Saints at Lamoni.

It is true that the church at Lamoni believes in the second coming of Christ, and teaches that a preparation is necessary and insists that such preparation must be a full abandonment of the evil things of this world, the requirement of a righteous life and a character fitted to dwell with the good of all living.

3. But "the Prophet" has not "recently," or at any other time made any announcement that the "advent will be at Lamoni."

What this writer has to say of the town of Lamoni and the business nature of it in regard to its stores being "no more than absolutely necessary to supply the needs of the people resident in the town and surrounding community," is entirely to the credit of the citizens doing business in the place.

4. But the statement that "all the business is done by members of the faith" is not true, nor is an outsider treated as an interloper. Three of the principal stores in the place are run by outsiders, and have been since their institution. One of them has been run since the town started. One of the three banks, the grain elevator, one of the hardware stores, two of the blacksmith shops and the implement stores are all owned and carried on by men outside of the church.

Just how the writer could have been so misinformed in regard to the business men of the place, we do not understand.

5. Joseph Smith has made no profession of being a "father confessor," as the church has no auricular confession in its creed. As for the rest of the description, we care not.

6. Joseph Smith has never said that "Christ is coming to Lamoni in person."

7. Nor has he ever said that "Lamoni is a much better place than Jerusalem was or is to-day." He has no personal knowledge of what Jerusalem is, and has only read of what it was, in the current histories of the time, and the Bible account of it. Neither has he ever commented upon a comparison of the two places. However, Joseph Smith has no hesitancy in stating that this writer has stated in this particular what is false.

8. The writer shows in this item of information a profusion of ignorance. It has always been stated that the Book of Mormon was found written on a number of metal plates having the appearance of gold; but this writer says two bronze stones.

9. He subsequently states that the Seer translated the book from "two bronze plates."

10. The writer errs again in his history. The first settlement in Missouri was made at Independence, and not at Far West.

11. Joseph and Hyrum Smith were shot to death by bullets fired from guns, and were not "stoned to death." Nor were they taken from the jail, but Hyrum was killed in the sitting-room of the jailor's house, and Joseph shot while attempting to get out of a window into the jail-yard, where he died.

12. The Mormons did not flee from Nauvoo for their lives at the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, for it was not till two years after that they left the State. It is true, however, that a panic ensued among the citizens of Carthage, who fled from the town for fear the Mormons would return from Nauvoo and wipe out the town as a matter of revenge; a thing that was not even talked of among the Mormons at Nauvoo.

13. Again the writer shows ignorance when he states that Emma Smith burned "the stone," the supposed revelation; but the Prophet's wife repeatedly affirmed that she did not burn, nor ever saw the document in question; to say nothing of burning a "stone."

14. There are only about fifty thousand of the church which this writer chooses to misrepresent in the article quoted, so that he is four fifths out of the truth in what he states about numbers.

15. Joseph Smith has a brother, Alexander H. Smith, but no son of that name.

16. There were only forty-seven persons removing from Plano, at the time the colony was founded to which the writer refers, and these came in the fall of 1881.

17. His statement of beliefs is fairly good, only it is the "interpretation of unknown tongues," and not "hidden tongues," though there is not a great difference in significance between the two.

We are sorry to chronicle such a jumble of mis-statements; but we will send this to a number of the newspapers in which this other statement has appeared as a notification that some one has been imposing upon their credulity and their journalistic space.

The Colonial form of house building becomes increasingly more popular as its merits are more widely known. The tendency toward showy style and cheap embellishment is waning, and a noticeable return is being made to the simpler and sounder qualities of the eighteenth and nineteenth century houses along the Atlantic coast. The qualities that characterize houses of this type are applied with good results in the model Colonial house which is illustrated in The Delineator for March, with floor plans.

DR. PEARSON'S ATTITUDE.

We have been requested to notice the positions assumed by Dr. Pearson, of the Northwestern University, a Methodist educational institution, touching the integrity of the biblical account of miracles, all of which miracles Dr. Pearson regards as myths. But as the matter is under discussion among the Methodist ministry themselves, and the reverend gentleman is being urged to stand a trial for heresy to be urged against him, we deem it best to wait the issue further. Mr. Pearson has not fully declared himself, and until he does it seems to us that any extended criticism would be premature.

There is no occasion for serious alarm, as Dr. Pearson is not the first man to deny the biblical account of miracles, and still the Bible stands first as the "Book of books."

As we understand it so far Dr. Pearson classes the miracle statements of both the Old and New Testaments as myths; those of the New being but a repetition of those of the Old, and those of both simulated by those of present time—if there are any such.

METHODIST AUTHORITIES VS. DR. PEARSON.

The general authorities of the Methodist Church in charge of the Northwestern University propose to deal with Dr. Pearson pretty sharply, and if the following is a fair indication of the sentiment of the body of the ministry of the church it is quite likely Dr. Pearson will be requested to resign his position in the University, or will be deposed, or possibly both.

The following resolution was affirmed:

"It is our firm conviction that the teachings as set forth by Professor Pearson do not represent in any sense the best thought or scholarship of the church. And it is our further conviction that any man, or men, holding such views should not be continued as teachers of our youth."

At their meeting yesterday morning the Methodist ministers applauded loudly the points in an address on "Miracles" delivered by Bishop S. M. Merrill, in which he confuted to their satisfaction the recent arguments against the integrity of the scriptures. No direct reference was made to Professor Pearson, but in part he said:

"For myself, I will say at the outset that my belief in the Bible as the word of God is unshaken by any of the things put forth in late years as new discoveries in science, criticism, history, archæology, or anything else. How little there is in the rationalism and skepticism of to-day that is not found in the infidelity of centuries gone by.

"Whether or not it was because of the rudeness of the age in which Christ appeared, the fact is beyond dispute that miraculous gifts were necessary to arrest the attention of the people and to confound opposers and convince the learned that he who came in the name of God was truly sent from God.

"We do well to emphasize the preposterous attitude of those who profess to receive Christ's words and yet deny his works, to believe he revealed God and taught divine truth and wrought no miracles. His words and deeds stand or fall together."—Chicago Tribune, February 4.

UNNECESSARY ALARM.

Bro. Albert T. Davis, of Rosedale, Kansas, sends us a book entitled, Elements of Moral Evolution, by C. M. Stevans, in which the following statement is found on pages 84 and 85:

"Mormons believe in the Bible and the Book of Mormon. They hold the doctrine of the Trinity, the atonement, baptism by immersion, the Second Advent, and the restoration of Israel; they deny original sin. They recognize Joseph Smith and his successors as prophets and revelators; they claim for some of their members miraculous gifts. Polygamy was considered lawful and largely practiced until prohibited by act of Congress, after which, on October 6, 1890, the practice was formally renounced by a vote of the Mormon people in conference."

To this Bro. Davis objects because he thinks that the clause referring to polygamy leaves it open to inference that polygamy was practiced from the beginning of the church. He writes:

"Mr. Stevans makes a wrong statement on page 85, concerning polygamy. According to what he says people not acquainted with the teachings of the church in early days before Joseph Smith was killed would be led to believe the church had always taught and practiced polygamy 'until prohibited by act of Congress.' Mr. Stevan's book also states that on October 6, 1890, the practice of polygamy was 'formally renounced by a vote of the Mormon people in conference.' I did not know that the Utah people had 'formally renounced' polygamy. And I have always understood that the Reorganized Church taught against it from the time the reorganization took place; hence did not need to 'formally renounce' it in 1890."

If Bro. Davis will accept the idea that the people and church to which Mr. Stevans refers are the people and church in Utah, commonly known as the Mormon church, he will see that while some might infer as he suggests, it does not follow that the general reader will so understand as it is being well understood everywhere, almost, that polygamy was not taught, or practiced, or sanctioned, as a doctrine or part of the faith of the church until after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, no public presentation of the dogma being had until August 29, 1852, eight years and two months after the tragedy at Carthage Jail on June 27, 1844.

However, Wilford Woodruff, then president of the Utah church, issued a manifesto, dated, as we now think, September 27, 1890, in which the people were advised to cease the practice of plural marriage; which manifesto was made the act of the people by a vote taken at the conference which was held in Salt Lake City, beginning October 6, 1890. It was understood that this action was a renunciation of the practice of polygamy, and this is what Mr. Stevans means by his statement.

THE "MORMONS" AT COUNCIL BLUFFS.

The following matter taken from The Iowa Historical Record for January, 1902, will no doubt be of interest to HERALD readers:

"The fort which we have seen was established at the present site of Council Bluffs did not long remain in commission and was later abandoned. The old site was reoccupied in rather a peculiar way. The Mormons, after having been driven out of Illinois, started to emigrate west, but found it necessary to go into winter quarters in 1846, after reaching the Missouri. Many of the adherents of the faith did not move on in the spring but formed a colony in Pottawattamie County. They founded the town of Kaneshville, which became a mecca for all of their faith who traveled westward to the land of promise at Salt Lake City. It exerted a prominent influence in the affairs of that part of the State and the Mormons were in entire control. About 1849 the tide of gold seekers, which flowed so incessantly through the city, attracted gamblers, thugs, and all the worst class of people. This new element was a menace to the peaceful Mormons and it was not long before they again began their journey westward to join the colony which had preceded them. In 1853 the name of Kaneshville was changed to Council Bluffs and the influence of the Mormons practically ceased in Western Iowa."

USE OF SCHOOLHOUSES FOR RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., sends us the following copy of a letter written by William L. Taylor, the Attorney-general of Indiana, to one of our elders in reply to a question concerning use of schoolhouses for religious services. It is worthy of note by elders working in that State:

Section 5999 (R. S. 1901) provides that schoolhouses may be used for religious purposes when a majority of the legal voters of the district desires the use of such schoolhouse for such purpose. Under the law a schoolhouse is not used for school purposes in the evening if school is not in session during the evening, and the schoolhouse is not used for school purposes on Sunday even though it is during the school year, unless the school itself has some exercises on Sunday. That is the purpose and intent of the law. I take it your trustee has probably misunderstood this provision of the law. Our Supreme court has construed this law in the case of Hurd vs. Walters, 48 Ind 148. It is quite common throughout the State to use schoolhouses for religious and literary purposes; and it certainly is not bad use to which schoolhouses should be put, for frequently they are the only means of holding church services in the country. Schoolhouses belong to the people, and if they want to use them for church services the statute expressly provides they may do so.

SOME QUININE DATA.

The New York Press recently contained the following on quinine, which will be of interest to many of our readers:

The druggist on the next corner charges ten cents for a dozen two-grain capsules of quinine. The one in the middle of the block charges seven cents. Both are "cut rate" houses. Now, let's see. An ounce of quinine costs the dealer thirty-one cents. Each ounce contains 480 grains, sufficient for 240 two-grain capsules, or twenty dozen, sold over the counter for $1.40 to $2. Capsules cost twenty cents a pound, and there are enough in a pound to contain many ounces of quinine. The quinine the druggist sells for $2 costs him (capsules included) 32 cents. He is making therefore, a profit of over 500 per cent on what is actually a household necessity.

It is no exaggeration to say that quinine is a staple. In numerous localities it is eaten as regularly as food. Men and women pour it into the palm of the hand and toss it down their throats. Ohio and Florida—my, my! The government might regulate the price, as the English government does in India, where quinine is more necessary than meat. Quinine is sold at every rural post-office in India at the rate of five grains for a farthing. That is, ten grains for a cent, or 48 cents an ounce, retail. In Bengal alone 1,440,000 five-grain packets are sold annually. The government used to import $250,000 worth of quinine every year, but Lieutenant-colonel King, superintendent of the Royal Botanic Gardens in Calcutta, had introduced its cultivation in India, and there are now 4,000,000 trees in Bengal.

The following rather interesting clipping was sent us on January 29 by George W. Thorburn, who wrote from Pelican Rapids, Minnesota. The excerpt is from the Globe, published at Wahpeton, North Dakota:

A RELIGIOUS WAR.

News of the outbreak of a religious war in Lemars Township has been received. It seems that Rev. Crofts of Wisconsin, and Rev. McEldowney of White Rock, Methodists, have been holding revival services at Taylor Schoolhouse in Lemars Township, and have aroused quite an interest, both gentlemen being strong workers. Recently two ministers representing the Latter Day Saints entered the neighborhood, and commenced a series of meetings at the same schoolhouse used by the Methodists. These Saints are very interesting, and put up ingenious arguments. Mr. McEldowney is said to have feared that the good Methodist seed he had sown would sprout and grow into Latter Day form, and he determined to clean it out, root, branch, and all, forgetting that religion, like love, needs only to be resisted to take deep and hardy growth. Mr. McEldowney gathered a number of friends and attended the Saints' meeting Saturday night. There was a big row. Ministerial fists were shaken under ministerial noses, and language of the devil was employed to give the dire threats emphasis. No blood was shed, and the Latter Day fellows held the fort and are expounding their doctrines nightly to crowded houses.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. A. A. Horton wrote from Independence, Missouri, February 3: "Very cold in Independence yesterday. Church congregation had to repair to the basement on account of it, where, morning and evening, it enjoyed two rousing discourses,—by Brn. Joseph Luff and J. D. White. There was a large concourse of Saints at the fellowship meeting, about three hundred fifty being present. We missed the presence of Brn. W. H. Garrett and George H. Hulmes."

Bro. W. H. Kelley, of the Twelve, wrote from 965 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, February 3: "Yesterday I assisted in the morning services at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and here last evening. The usual good feeling and interest seem to actuate the Saints. I have in mind to attend the Massachusetts District conference next Saturday, and later on to attend the Kirtland and Pittsburg District conferences. Bro. Greene has just come in. Is feeling well.

But Sr. Greene is sick and in the hospital. Is getting on nicely. Very cold to-day."

Erwin Dickey writes from Viola, Illinois, February 2: "In last week's HERALD you make my letter read 'Viola, Kansas,' whereas it should read 'Viola, Illinois.'"

A. B. Klar writes from Canal Dover, Ohio, February 5, that he and his wife are the only Saints there. He says: "I hope and pray that we can have a branch here, as we have six thousand inhabitants, and so many are disgusted in the way churches tax them and the form of worship. Pray for us."

By letter from Bro. W. S. Pender, who writes from Nephi, Utah, January 31, to Bro. R. S. Salyards, we learn: "I just returned from Fairview, Utah. This is the home of Elder O. K. Hanson, who had some discussion while on a mission in the East, with Bro. H. C. Smith at Lamoni and Bro. R. J. Parker at Independence. I was at Fairview four days and was received most cordially. Through Elder Hanson's efforts I got the use of the church to preach two discourses in. Elder Hanson followed me each evening, offering criticisms. We had between three and four hundred out each night there. I hope at a future time to return. They made me as much at home as our own people could do. Elder Hanson evidently has pleasant recollections of his acquaintance with our people in the East. I have never enjoyed, it seems to me, quite so satisfactory spirituality in my work, as since the beginning of the year. The organization of 'Stakes' and the call of the Bishopric for the 'surplus' is proving advantageous to us in this mission, in representing the work here. These advanced steps are attracting the attention of the people here."

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, writing from San Jose, California, February 2, says: "I enter a sixteen-session debate to-morrow evening. The popular church questions come up. I. H. Hazel of the Christian Church on the other side."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Our readers probably noticed the increased size of the HERALD last week, there being twenty-four pages instead of twenty. It will be a twenty-four page paper from now on.

J. L. Rust writes from Gladstone, Illinois, February 2, that he is pleased with the new dress of the HERALD; however, he approves more heartily of the contents than the "cut of its dress."

C. W. Little writes from Rosetta, Idaho, January 27, that he likes the new style of HERALD, and feels he would be lost without the paper.

Bro. W. T. Bussell writes from Rosalie, Texas, that he has recently been baptized in this church, and asks the prayers of the Saints that he may receive the knowledge of the divinity of the work. He feels he is entitled to know, and is earnestly praying.

Bro. B. M. Anderson, who has been foreman of the HERALD Office for several years, left Lamoni on Friday, the 31st ult., for Omaha, Nebraska, to accept a position with the Carpenter Paper Company. He has been a HERALD Office employee for over fourteen years and takes with him the very best wishes of the HERALD force. In his long service with the HERALD he has proven himself most worthy, and it is with regret that the management loses so efficient and trustworthy a workman. May success attend him in his new field of work. For many years he has led the Lamoni choir, and there too he will be missed. The members presented him with an excellent copy of the Inspired Translation to take with him as a memento of their appreciation.

Sr. Lizzie Nelson writes from Esmond, North Dakota, February 1, expressing thankfulness that God has blessed her and family with good health. She misses the good friends lately moved away from, but rejoices that there are a few families of Saints near. She asks prayers that her father, mother, brothers, and sisters may soon come into the fold and enjoy the blessings of God.

H. T. McAntire writes from Walker, Missouri, February 2, that he appreciates the HERALD so much he does not know how he could do without it. The Saints there are enjoying a goodly degree of the Spirit, he says, and he feels more determined than ever to battle onward.

By a clipping sent us taken from the Gate City, Keokuk, Iowa, we note that a negro from Southern Alabama has been procuring options on a number of the finest farms in Mills County. His object is to colonize a large number of negro families in that county for the purpose of gardening and farming to supply the Omaha markets. The negroes seem to be looking northward.

Bro. R. B. Howlett has written us from Waterford, Ontario, telling of his missionary labors in that field. He tells of the dedication of a church building at Waterford, which was dedicated on the 8th of December last. After the dedication a series of meetings was held by him and Bro. R. C. Evans. He also writes that Elder Hiram Dickhout, who is a conductor on one of the railroads of that country, has been instrumental in converting a number of people by using his spare time in telling the gospel story, and as a result he has baptized some eight or ten people. Bro. Howlett held a series of meetings which seconded the work of Bro. Dickhout in such a way as to bring still others into the church. He states that it is his experience that while there is much to encourage there is still need of much fasting and prayer to enable us to pass through the shadows that we must encounter. He desires to remain faithful to his charge.

W. A. Gurwell, assistant postmaster at Fanning, Kansas, writes that they are still receiving mail at that office addressed to F. J. Pierce, and requests us to give Bro. Pierce's address. The last word we had from him was written from Llanelly, South Wales, at 30 Lakefield Road. Bro. William Lewis' address is 137 Severn Road, Canton Cardiff, South Wales. A letter sent in care of Bro. Lewis will reach Bro. Pierce.

We note by a marked copy of the Journal, of Montrose, Iowa, issue of February 7, that Bro. Elvin has been holding a series of meetings in Montrose, closing on the 9th.

The Galien Advocate, published at Galien, Michigan, February 7, states that W. E. Peak has been holding revival meetings at the town hall there, and wishes him success in his efforts to lead people into the "straight and narrow way." Bro. Peak writes of the series that there is some interest manifested and the Saints are feeling good. He writes that the mission is in fair condition and on the advance. He has had exceptional light and liberty this year. His family is well and they feel encouraged. He asks God's blessing upon the work and his people.

E. L. Lomax, general passenger and ticket agent of the Union Pacific Railroad, has sent Graceland College a beautiful map of the world, framed in a massive frame of antique oak, gilded band. The map is covered with glass. The frame is about four feet wide by five long. This donation results from some correspondence with the U. P. officials by the college librarian, Sr. Mina Hart. Mr. Lomax and his road has the thanks of Graceland and its friends.

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith writes encouragingly from Nebraska. Good conferences and conventions. Bro. James Caffall had been with them and preached some excellent sermons.

A. C. Barmore wrote February 7, from Ridgetown, Ontario, that he and T. A. Phillips were engaged in a series of meetings. Six had been baptized. He looks forward to General Conference with pleasure.

THIS brother evidently is desirous to point out a lesson for backbiters to consider. Art thou the man?

To Any One of the Church or the World:—I would like to have you to establish one instance of criticism or complaint that you have ever made to me against any part of my life work; without having first advanced said criticism or complaint to some one else.

I'd not be ashamed to have you publish all complaints and criticisms that you have ever faced me with, after you have taken them to others. And it might do some good to publish all you have made against me to others without ever having faced or even intimated anything of the kind to me.

Establish one instance that you are willing to appeal before the church and the world, when and wherein you have done any labor with me according to the church books and rules in connection with any fault, failure, or inability alleged against me.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. 14.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, January 5, 1902.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr Annie Allen

It has been so long since we spoke on this subject, We have almost forgotten where we left off. If I remember correctly we had just followed the church to Caldwell County, Missouri, where they founded the city of Far West, as it was then called, and were prospering exceedingly. The country was new, and the county, as we have before stated, had been set apart as the gathering place for the Saints, and for that special purpose. It was understood by them and the citizens of Missouri that they were to occupy the County of Caldwell unmolested.

They entered all the available land in the county, or nearly so, and were gaining rapidly in property. They also extended their settlement, by consent of the citizens always, into the adjoining counties, especially in Daviess and Carroll Counties.

They founded a settlement in Daviess County which they called Adam-ondi-ahman. There they organized a stake, also organizing one at Far West. At DeWitt in Carroll County they founded a settlement, intending it to be a landing-place where immigrants could be taken to Caldwell County and also where freight could be received by them.

Prior to the time Joseph Smith and his counselors arrived in the State of Missouri, the church appointed a temporary presidency consisting of David Whitmer, John Whitmer, and W. W. Phelps. They were called the presidency of the church in Missouri, occupying that position in the absence of the Presidency of the church. But by and by dissatisfaction arose and many prominent in the church alleged these men were not faithful to their trust. Maladministration was charged against them and a great many specifications made which it would not be profitable to follow to-night. The result was that in March, 1838, these men were arraigned for judgment and were finally expelled from the church. Oliver Cowdery, Luke Johnson, William E. McClellin, and several of the leading men of the church departed from its affiliations at that time for causes creating dissensions among them, the virtues or merits of which we do not care to discuss. It is quite possible both sides were in error, as is usually the case. However that may be, these men left the fellowship of the church.

Shortly after the expulsion of David Whitmer and his counselors, Joseph Smith arrived with his family. That was in March, or early in April, 1838. He made his home there from that time until the Saints were driven from the State.

Governor Dunklin's term had expired and Governor Boggs succeeded him. Governor Boggs had been committed against the Saints at the time of the persecution in Jackson County when he was Lieutenant-governor. He was a resident of Jackson County and had taken an active part against the Saints, and this opposition had much to do with his election; for many of the people who wanted to drive the Saints from the State, voted for him because he was an enemy of the Latter Day Saints. He maintained his reputation in that regard and it is not to be expected that the Saints could be favored as under Governor Dunklin.

Troubles were soon engendered again between the Saints and the other citizens of the State. We do not intend to enter into all the details of these troubles. There were mob characters in different parts of the country and especially in Daviess County. At an election at Gallatin they refused to let the Mormons vote, and undertook by violence to prevent them. Many of the Saints submitted to this rather than have trouble, and did not vote, and thus were deprived of their citizenship. A few would not submit to their injuries and there was a riot, John L. Butler being the leading man in the melee among the Saints. Several of the mob were injured, and from this the opposition began to grow worse and worse. Bad blood was engendered on both sides.

It has gone out into the world and found its way into history that there was what is called the "Mormon militia" and that militia was in opposition to the militia of the State, and war was the result. It is sometimes called the "Mormon War." There never was any Mormon militia. There was a regiment of militia formed in the county of Caldwell and composed mostly of members of the church. It was required in those days that men should have a military training and they had to meet on stated occasions and train so as to be prepared for emergencies; and when this regiment was formed the members of the organization were mostly Mormons (so-called). This regiment took some active part in the war or the difficulties that were had there at that time between the Saints and the mob; but they were not in opposition to the militia of the State, as I will show you. They acted under orders from their superiors in all that they did. The commander of the regiment was commanded by General Parks to do what was done. The speech of General Parks is on record and we will soon present it so you will see that this regiment took part in this trouble under peculiar orders. Lyman Wight was Colonel of this regiment, and George M. Hinkle Lieutenant-colonel, and they received their commission under the hands of L. W. Boggs, Governor of the State. When General Parks was sent there by the Governor to look into the matter he reported that the Mormons were not disposed to do what they were reported to be doing. His report reads as follows:

"Whatever may have been the disposition of the people called Mormons, before our arrival here, since we have made our appearance they have shown no disposition to resist the laws, or of hostile intentions. There has been so much prejudice and exaggeration concerned in this matter, that I found things entirely different from what I was prepared to expect. When we arrived here we found a large body of men from the counties adjoining, armed and in the field for the purpose, as I learned, of assisting the people of this county against the Mormons, without being called out by the proper authorities. P. S.—Since writing the above, I received information that if the committee do not agree, the determination of the Daviess County men is to drive the Mormons with powder and lead."

Now, you will notice General Parks, having been sent there, says that the Mormons had shown no disposition to resist the law, nor had hostile intentions, while the other parties were gathered from the adjoining counties, without being called out by proper authority, for the purpose of driving out the Mormons. According to this official report, the Mormons had no disposition to resist the law. This was on September 25, 1838. A little later on, you will notice, this same General Parks authorized Colonel Lyman Wight to disperse this mob. What this "Mormon militia" did, they did under orders. I will just read the order in this connection, as it is not very long, and you will see who was in harmony with authority and who was not. It was on October 18, 1838, that General Parks issued this order to Lyman Wight, or rather an address to his command:

He says:

Gentlemen, I deplore your situation. I regret that transactions of this nature should have transpired in our once happy State. Your condition is certainly not an enviable one, surrounded by mobs on one side, and popular opinion and prejudice against you on the other. Gladly would I fly to your relief with my troops, but I fear it would be worse for you: most of them have relations living in this county, and will not fight against them. One of my principal captains; namely, Samuel Bogart, and his men, have already mutinized and have refused to obey my command. I can only say to you, gentlemen, follow the command of Colonel Wight, whom I have commanded to disperse all mobs found in Daviess County, or to make them prisoners and bring them before the civil authorities forthwith. I wish to be distinctly understood that Colonel Wight is vested with power and authority from me to disperse from your midst all who may be found on the side of mobocracy in the county of Daviess. I deeply regret, gentlemen, (knowing as I do the vigilance and perseverance of Colonel Wight in the cause of freedom and rights of man,) that I could not even be a soldier under his command in quelling the hellish outrages I have witnessed. In conclusion, gentlemen, be vigilant and persevere and allay every excitement of mobocracy. I have visited your place frequently; find you to be an industrious and thriving people, willing to abide the laws of the land. And I deeply regret that you could not live in peace and enjoy the privileges of freedom. I shall now, gentlemen, return and dismiss my troops and put Captain Bogart under an arrest, leave the sole charge with Colonel Wight, whom I deem sufficiently qualified to perform according to law in all military operations necessary.

I read this to show that this "Mormon militia," as it is sometimes called in history and which was supposed to be in rebellion to the State of Missouri, was acting under orders from General Parks, sent by Governor Boggs to that place to settle these difficulties. If Colonel Wight had not taken part in those proceedings he would have been guilty of insubordination and would have been disobeying the orders of his superiors and subject by court-martial to censure and punishment. What he did in those troubles was done under orders of his superiors in authority and it was in fact the State acting through him against an organization or mob that had been gathered out from the counties without authority, though some historians have reversed these things, stating that the Mormons were fighting against the State. These official documents show that it was the Mormons that were acting under orders of the general in command under the Governor. You will see that whatever may have been the merits of the controversy, they were acting in harmony with their duty. As militia they were obliged to do what they did.

There was, however, at that time an organization established among the Saints that was a very unwise and illegal one. It was entirely different from the organization that undertook to quell disturbances in a legal way. It was composed mostly of Latter Day Saints, but it was a secret organization, and they were sworn to do things not only wrong but contrary to law. Those who were engaged in that were responsible for it. The authorities of the church condemned it severely. This organization was called the Danites and was founded by one Sampson Avard. He had gathered these men and sworn them to secrecy. I do not know whether they ever did anything or not, but they were preparing for it. It was condemned by Joseph Smith as being unlawful and unauthorized by the church. Joseph said:

And here I would state, that while the evil spirits were raging up and down in the State to raise mobs against the "Mormons," Satan himself was no less busy in striving to stir up mischief in the camp of the Saints; and among the most conspicuous of his willing devotees was one Doctor Sampson Avard, who had been in the church but a short time, and who, although he had generally behaved with a tolerable degree of external decorum, was secretly aspiring to be the greatest of the great, and become the leader of the people. This was his pride and his folly, but as he had no hopes of accomplishing it by gaining the hearts of the people in open strife, he watched his opportunity with the brethren at a time when mobs oppressed, robbed, whipped, burned, plundered, and slew, till forbearance seemed no longer a virtue and nothing but the grace of God without measure could support men under such trials, to form a secret combination by which he might rise a mighty conqueror, at the expense of the overthrow of the church; and this he tried to accomplish by his smooth, flattering, and winning speeches, which he frequently made to his associates, while his room was well guarded by some of his pupils, ready to give him the wink on the approach of any one who would not approve of his measures.

In this situation he stated that he had the sanction of the heads of the church, for what he was about to do; and by his smiles and flattery persuaded them to believe it, and proceeded to administer to the few under his control an oath, binding them to everlasting secrecy to everything which should be communi-ated to them by himself. Thus Avard initiated members into his band, firmly binding them by all that was sacred in the protecting of each other in all things that were lawful; and was careful to picture out a great glory that was then hovering over the church, and would soon burst upon the Saints as a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, and would soon unveil the slumbering mysteries of heaven, which would gladden the hearts and arouse the stupid spirits of the Saints of the latter day, and fill their hearts with that love which is unspeakable and full of glory, and arm them with power that the gates of hell could not prevail against them; and would often affirm to his company that the principal men of the church had put him forward as a spokesman and a leader of this band, which he named Danites.

This man undertook to found this organization just at a time when the Saints were likely to be deceived, when the mob was burning and destroying their property. They were tried when they were filled to some extent with resentment, and only the grace of God could support them. This man flattered them, and pictured to them the glorious things to be attained through their efforts, and in this way bound them together in a secret society. I have no doubt this was fruitful in bringing about the misunderstanding that obtained in regard to the church, and that conditions were made worse through this action of Sampson Avard. Members of the church were in it, to be sure, and they were bringing disgrace upon the church instead of doing it good. That organization had nothing to do with the action between the Missourians and the so-called "Mormon militia." That was a different organization entirely, an organization acting under authority of its superior officers.

There were some other unwise things done by the Saints which we do not propose to cover up. It is to our interest to know where they made mistakes, that we may be warned by the consequences that followed. On July 4, 1838, they had a celebration at Far West. Sidney Rigdon was orator of the day; and taking his oration as it has been reported to us, it was as a whole a good effort, a grand and patriotic effort indeed; but towards the close of the oration he gave expression to some things that were unwise and wrong and calculated in their nature to stir up bad feelings already existing. I will read you the worst part of it to-night. You would enjoy reading all of it. I think there was great provocation, yet not sufficient excuse for what he said in the closing words of this oration. He says:

We have not only when smitten on one cheek turned the other, but we have done it again and again, until we are wearied of being smitten and tired of being trampled upon. We have proved the world with kindness; we have suffered their abuse without cause, with patience, and have endured without resentment until this day, and still their persecutions and violence do not cease.

But, from this day and this hour we will suffer it no more. We take God and all the holy angels to witness this day that we warn all men, in the name of Jesus Christ, to come on us no more for ever; for, from this hour, we will bear it no more; our rights shall no more be trampled on with impunity; the man, or the set of men, who attempts it, does it at the expense of their lives. And that mob that comes on us to disturb us, it shall be between us and them a war of extermination; for we will follow them till the last drop of their blood is spilled, or else they will have to exterminate us; for we will carry the seat of war to their own houses and to their own families, and one party or the other shall be utterly destroyed. Remember it, then, all men! We will never be the aggressors; we will infringe on the rights of no people, but shall stand for our own until death.

We claim our own rights, and are willing that all others shall enjoy theirs. No man shall be at liberty to come into our streets to threaten us with mobs, for if he does, he shall atone for it before he leaves the place; neither shall he be at liberty to vilify and slander any of us, for suffer it we will not in this place. We therefore take all men to record this day, that we proclaim our liberty this day, as did our fathers; and we pledge this day to one another, our fortunes, our lives, and our sacred honors, to be delivered from the persecutions which we have had to endure for the last nine years, or nearly that time. Neither will we indulge any man or set of men in instituting vexatious lawsuits against us, to cheat us out of our rights; if they attempt it, we say woe be unto them! We this day, then proclaim ourselves free, with a purpose and a determination that never can be broken,—“no, never! no, never!! no, never!!!”

I think that was wrong. I do not think that Sidney Rigdon or any other man ought to have made such threats as that. Instead of allaying the excitement already in the country he was feeding it, that is, if he is reported correctly. There is the possibility that this report is not correct, but it is likely he said something of the kind. I can not wonder at it very much; but notwithstanding the provocation he went too far. It was a long speech and you will find it very readable indeed. I do not know how generally the sentiments of Sidney Rigdon were indorsed by the church. I have never seen a word of condemnation or justification at that time. It passed like all other orations do, and only the man was responsible for it, so far as I know. The church was no more responsible than if Bro. Kelley or myself were called upon to deliver a Fourth of July oration and we gave utterance to sentiments that were unwise; the church would not be responsible for it only by indorsing it. I call attention to it for the reason that while calling attention to the mistakes of other parties, I do not propose to tell only one side of it. There was the secret organization of Sampson Avard condemned by the church, and this oration of Sidney Rigdon, whether it was condemned or justified, that we do not indorse. That these had a tendency to stir up the trouble there I have no doubt.

At times there were armed mobs parading the country from place to place and distressing the people, and they took some of the Saints and carried them with them, causing trouble that resulted in loss to the church. I will give you some of the items briefly. Captain Bogart had been parading the country with his company, and, we are told in history, with about thirty or forty men he called upon one Mr. Parsons who was living at the head of the east branch of Log Creek, and warned him to be gone before the next day at ten in the morning, declaring also that he would give Far West thunder and lightning before next day at noon if he had good luck in meeting Neil Gillium. They were to form a company and attack Far West, and they took some of the Saints, Nathan Pinkham, William Seely, and Addison Green with them as prisoners. And when the news got to Far West, the judge of the county commanded Lieutenant-colonel Hinkle to take out a posse to liberate these men, and volunteers were forthcoming who were sent out under David W. Patten.

The result was that when he came up with this band of outlaws (we can not call them by a better name), they had a skirmish in which Patten was wounded and one O'Banion was killed; but they dispersed the mob. There was a loss to the church in the fall of David Patten, who subsequently died from his wounds. There could not be much fault found with him, for he was acting under orders of an officer of the State militia commanded by the Governor and he had to do his duty, provided he was a military man enlisted in the ranks. The posse dispersed the mob and released the prisoners at the cost of the life of David Patten and Mr. O'Banion.

The Saints were indignant at the treatment they had received;—they would not have been human if they had not on this occasion shown their feelings. So from time to time there was one conflict after another, but we have not time to relate them to-night. Then there was the awful tragedy that happened at Haun's Mill. There some of the Saints were shot down in cold blood by a band of men who came upon them unexpectedly, and that, too, after they had agreed that there would be no hostilities. The briefest account of this is the one given by the historian, Mr. Bancroft. I will read you his words which are borne out by the testimony of others. He says:

Meanwhile was being matured the bloody tragedy which occurred on the 30th of October, near Haun's mill, on Shoal Creek, about twenty miles below Far West. Besides the Mormons living there were a number of emigrants awaiting the cessation of hostilities before proceeding on their journey. It had been agreed between the Mormons and Missourians of that locality that they would not molest each other, but live together in peace. But the men of Caldwell and Daviess Counties would not have it so. Suddenly and without warning, on the day above-mentioned, mounted and to the number of two hundred and forty, they fell upon the fated settlement. While the men were at their work out of doors, the women in the house, and the children playing about the yards, the crack of a hundred rifles was heard, and before the firing ceased eighteen of these unoffending people were stretched dead upon the ground, while many more were wounded. I will not enter upon the sickening details, which are copious and fully proven; suffice it to say that never in savage or other warfare was there perpetrated an act more dastardly and brutal. Indeed, it was openly avowed by the men of Missouri that it was no worse to shoot a Mormon than to shoot an Indian, and killing Indians was no worse than killing wild beasts.

There was treachery that has no parallel in history. There had been an agreement that they would live together in peace and not molest each other. While there were difficulties in other parts, they were not to be disturbed; but breaking their agreement they came upon the settlers in surprise and shot them down in cold blood, women and children as well as men. No words of mine could be strong enough in condemnation of such an act. But we will not dwell upon it.

Those scenes that were enacted were reported to the Governor, and not only reported as they were, but exaggerated; and the Governor, being a sworn enemy of the Saints, took the occasion to send troops to demand the surrender of—what? Of a portion of his own command, the regiment of Caldwell County, a part of the State militia, authorized and commissioned by him. He sends other forces to demand the surrender of it as though it were an armed foe. And he gave an order not only to move against the armed militia, but to destroy the lives of men, women, and children, or remove them from the State. This militia moved to Far West, and I will read you some of the incidents that happened there; we can not go into details.

On the 30th of October, 1838, a large company of soldiers was seen approaching Far West. They came up near to the town and then they moved back and encamped for the night. The Saints were informed they were the militia of the State, sent out by the Governor for the purpose of stopping the proceedings. It had been represented to him that the Mormons were the aggressors, and had committed outrages in Daviess County. The next day this militia sent out a flag of truce. It was promptly met by Lieutenant-colonel Hinkle, who, entering into some kind of an agreement, went back into the city of Far West and told some of the authorities of the church, including Joseph Smith, that they were wanted for a consultation. Joseph Smith at first desisted from going, saying he was not a military man and had nothing to do with it; but after explanations by Colonel Hinkle he finally went.

Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Parley P. Pratt, Colonel Wight, and George W. Robinson went into the camp of the militia for the purpose of a consultation; but judge of their surprise when immediately they were made prisoners of war, not permitted to have any consultation whatever, but taken into custody as prisoners and put under a strong guard and kept there for a time. By and by in some way Hyrum Smith and Amasa Lyman were induced to come out and they too were put under arrest. Then they held a court-martial, those officers of the militia, and condemned these men to death.

Now, out of the number that were there but one man was subject to court-martial and that was Lyman Wight. He was the only military man among them, and if he had disobeyed orders he could properly have been court-martialed. But the others were private citizens and should have been tried before the civil courts of the land. But a court-martial was held and the men were sentenced to be shot in the public square at Far West, and General Lucas issued an order to Gen. A. W. Doniphan to take the prisoners upon the square at Far West and shoot them to death. I wish to invite your attention to the action of this brave man, General Doniphan. His name ought to go down in history as a brave and heroic man. Let me read you the order and the response:

“Brigadier-General Doniphan; Sir: You will take Joseph Smith and the other prisoners into the public square of Far West, and shoot them at nine to-morrow morning.

“SAMUEL D. LUCAS,

“Major-General Commanding.”

But Doniphan dared to disobey, and he returned this answer:

“It is cold-blooded murder. I will not obey your order. My brigade shall march for Liberty to-morrow morning, at eight o'clock; and if you execute those men, I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God!

“A. W. DONIPHAN, Brigadier-General.”

That was a brave act upon the part of General Doniphan, and the everlasting gratitude of the church is due to him and his memory for the loyal stand he took against the unlawful orders of his superior; and especially are the thanks of the posterity of the parties saved due to General Doniphan, and he has them. This was disregarding the orders of Generals Lucas and Clark who desired to carry out that order but feared to do it. They were cowards. They could have court-martialed General Doniphan, yet they dared not. General Doniphan told them he would hold them responsible before an earthly tribunal, and saved the lives of the men at that time.

The order was never executed, but the prisoners were permitted to go into Far West and bid adieu to their families and their homes and were allowed a few minutes with their families under strong guard. The experience of Joseph Smith was the experience of others. He was not allowed a private interview with his family except in the presence of his guard, and then they forced him away. When his children clung to him they were thrust back by the sword, and he and his fellow prisoners were carried from place to place until they were finally liberated.

General Clark in the meantime comes into the city and makes a speech to the citizens, which I read. I think it was one of the worst that ever my eyes beheld. Possibly the exterminating order of Governor Boggs was as bad. General Clark said as follows:

Gentlemen:—You whose names are not attached to this list of names will now have the privilege of going to your fields and providing corn, wood, etc., for your families. Those who are now taken will go from this to prison, be tried, and receive the due demerit of their crimes. But you (except such as charges may hereafter be preferred against) are now at liberty, as soon as the troops are removed that now guard the place, which I shall cause to be done immediately. It now devolves upon you to fulfill the treaty that you have entered into, the leading items of which I shall now lay before you:

The first requires that your leading men be given up to be tried according to law; this you have already complied with.

The second is, that you deliver up your arms; this has been attended to.

The third stipulation is, that you sign over your properties to defray the expenses of the war; this you have also done.

Another article yet remains for you to comply with, and that is, that you leave the State forthwith; and whatever may be your feelings concerning this, or whatever your innocence, it is nothing to me; General Lucas, who is equal in authority with me, has made this treaty with you—I approve of it—I should have done the same, had I been here—I am therefore determined to see it fulfilled. The character of this State has suffered almost beyond redemption from the character, conduct, and influence that you have exerted; and we deem it an act of justice to restore her character to its former standing among the States, by every proper means.

The orders of the Governor to me were, that you should be exterminated, and not allowed to remain in the State; and had your leaders not been given up, and the terms of the treaty complied with before this, you and your families would have been destroyed and your houses in ashes.

There is a discretionary power vested in my hands which I shall exercise in your favor for a season; for this lenity you are indebted to my clemency. I do not say that you shall go now, but you must not think of staying here another season, or of putting in crops, for the moment you do this the citizens will be upon you. If I am called here again, in case of a noncompliance of a treaty made, do not think that I shall act any more as I have done—you need not expect any mercy, but extermination, for I am determined the Governor's order shall be executed. As for your leaders, do not once think—do not imagine for a moment—do not let it enter your mind, that they will be delivered, or that you will see their faces again, for their fate is fixed—THEIR DIE IS CAST—THEIR DOOM IS SEALED!

I am sorry, gentlemen, to see so great a number of apparently intelligent men found in the situation that you are; and oh! that I could invoke that Great Spirit, THE UNKNOWN GOD, to rest upon you, and make you sufficiently intelligent to break that chain of superstition, and liberate you from those fetters of fanaticism, with which you are bound—that you no longer worship a man.

I would advise you to scatter abroad, and never again organize yourselves with Bishops, presidents, etc., lest you excite the jealousies of the people and subject yourselves to the same calamities that have now come upon you.

You have always been the aggressors—you have brought upon yourselves these difficulties by being disaffected and not being subject to rule—and my advice is, that you become as other citizens, lest by a recurrence of these events you bring upon yourselves irretrievable ruin.

That does not need any comment; you see the disposition of the man. He accused the men who had in every instance yielded to the authorities of the State, of being the aggressors. When they took up arms it was by order of the State. They laid down their arms when authoritatively ordered, and did it in the face of this mob that they knew were seeking their lives. Just as they did at Independence they did at Far West. When authority demanded their arms, they grounded them; and yet this man after all that had the audacity to say they had always been the aggressors. I will read in this connection the exterminating order of Governor Boggs; for it certainly ought to be on record, and he ought to have all the credit it entitles him to:

Headquarters Militia, City of JEFFERSON, Oct. 27, 1838.

Sir:—Since the order of the morning to you, directing you to cause four hundred mounted men to be raised within your division, I have received by Amos Rees, Esq., and Wiley E. Williams, Esq., one of my aids, information of the most appalling character, which changes the whole face of things, and places the Mormons in the attitude of open and avowed defiance of the laws, and of having made open war upon the people of this State. Your orders are therefore, to hasten your operations and endeavor to reach Richmond, in Ray County, with all possible speed. The Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State, if necessary, for the public good. Their outrages are beyond all description. If you can increase your force you are authorized to do so, to any extent you may think necessary. I have just issued orders to Major-General Wallock, of Marion County, to raise five hundred men, and to march them to the northern part of Daviess, and there to unite with General Doniphan, of Clay, who has been ordered with five hundred men to proceed to the same point, for the purpose of intercepting the retreat of the Mormons to the north. They have been directed to communicate with you by express; you can also communicate with them if you find it necessary. Instead, therefore, of proceeding, as at first directed, to reinstate the citizens of Daviess in their homes, you will proceed immediately to Richmond, and there operate against the Mormons. Brigadier-general Parks, of Ray, has been ordered to have four hundred men of his brigade in readiness to join you at Richmond. The whole force will be placed under your command.

L. W. Boggs,
Governor and Commander in Chief.

To General Clark.

Suffice it to say that these orders were carried out, but we will not have time to follow those events to-night. The Saints were, as has been said, either killed or driven out before the close of that winter. There was also a difficulty down at De Witt where they were surrounded by the mob, and though they withstood for a while the attack, they were finally compelled to surrender, their property was confiscated, burned, and destroyed. They finally had to leave the place though not until after the trouble in Daviess County. When the mob was dispersed in Daviess County, instead of going to their homes they went down to De Witt in this same unlawful business. Thus the Saints were driven from place to place making it intolerable for them to dwell in Missouri.

As I have said, the Saints were not without their faults, but I wonder they did as well as they did. I do not wonder at the hostile sentiments of Sidney Rigdon in his Fourth of July speech. He was provoked to it, though he had to pay very dearly for it. But no exaggeration of their mistakes can possibly justify Governor Boggs or his men in doing what they did. It is a black chapter in the history of Missouri and will ever remain so, no matter how much they exaggerate the faults of the Latter Day Saints. They made mistakes, as we all do; but they did well under the circumstances; and I believe as Joseph Smith said in the statement I have read, it was a time when only the grace of God could sustain them, and I can not see any other way in which they could have borne these things as well as they did. History has been perverted to make it appear that these men were in rebellion against the State, when as I have shown the militia were acting under orders of the State officers and it was the State acting through them instead of them against the State. What they did was done by order and they would have been insubordinate had they done otherwise. They could not be blamed for it, for the law required them to do it, and they were in harmony with the law.

We pray God that the same grace that attended them may attend the people of God under all circumstances and conditions and that they may always act in harmony with the law as nearly as they know.

TRIALS.

T. DeWitt Talmage has said, "Troubles are hard to take, though they strengthen the soul. Tonics are always bitter."

Is there any one who does not have troubles and trials, and do they not come in a thousand different ways, and are there not numerous avenues open to their approach?

Trials are a test of character. We should not even hope to be freed from either disciplinary trials, or from the fiery darts of the Enemy, else we lose the opportunity of bearing the cross and winning the crown. But troubles never last for ever; the darkest day will pass away.

How many times trifling perplexities, small miseries, and slight annoyances taken in a mass, seem to us really great. Yet each vexation, taken singly, we find a mere trifle after all. Our lives, our souls, must have this disciplinary drill.

To some of us come troubles that seem at the time almost unbearable, and the petty annoyances should be overlooked. Trials of a minor character seem severe at the time, and we become downcast and discouraged. Little trials come to us as a sudden shower, darkening the sky and taking from our sight the beautiful blue sky so calm and clear. After the shower how pure and clear the air; how blue and calm the sky; how cheerily do the little birds begin to chirp; the very elements of the air are peaceful! As the rain and storm purify the atmosphere so do the trifling annoyances that come continually into our lives aid in purifying our very natures. Tonics are bitter we must remember. Perhaps we think we endure a big dose at times. Yet after we have overcome these really small trials they appear to us so inconsequent that we wonder why we allowed ourselves to become so "ruffled" about a mere trifle, and we think it not worthy to be remembered.

While things look dark to us we should recall that "The night is mother of the day; the winter of the spring." "Behind the cloud the starlight lurks; through showers the sunbeams fall."

Let us be mindful of the virtue of patience; the value of the art of forgetting and overlooking, remembering that trials are but a test of character, and are stepping-stones to aid us in our flight above the lowly sphere of earth.

Afflictions and trials are the soul's need. If the trials be great, great will be the reward, if bitter the cup here below, sweet will be the taste of eternal life. "The greater the difficulty the more the glory in surmounting it. Skillful pilots gain their reputation from storms and tempests."

Let us endeavor to surmount the difficulties of life, overcome the trials, conquer the enemy and baffle him in his evil designs. Let us live so that we may with the help of our heavenly Father bear the crosses, and at last leave the burdens behind and enter into that land where trials we shall not suffer, and where we shall receive the crown.

EDITH PERRY.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., January, 1902.

Letter Department.

SEILING, Oklahoma, January 29.

Editors Herald:—My opponent in the debate at Redmoon was C. R. Nichol of Brandon, Texas, an evangelist of the so-called Church of Christ, and the propositions were church propositions. I am not going to weary your readers with a long account of the arguments on both sides as the matters brought up are quite familiar to the HERALD readers. Neither am I going to make the claim that it was a brilliant victory for us, because it is probable that the other side will claim that and so far as that is concerned they are welcome to make that claim, for I do not care to have such a victory as theirs was. If I have to resort to abuse, slander, misrepresentation, and falsehood to carry the day then I shall abandon the realm of religious polemics and relegate myself to the criminal courts where the success of my clients, some of them at least, depend entirely upon my ability to cover up the truth and befog the jury. This discussion, the second one I ever engaged in, goes far to prove to me the wisdom of my instruction given last spring in my pastoral letter, that we must in all discussions see to it that we have plenty of time to present our faith as well as to refute the slanderous statements of our opponents. In all discussions we are the defendants, and whether on the affirmative or negative are subject to attack, and hence need ample time to make our defense.

In this discussion we only had five sessions on each proposition. Everything was signed up when I got on the grounds, and while I three times challenged Mr. Nichol to meet me on the Book of Mormon alone, he refused and yet insisted in bringing that into the discussion. In preaching a series of discourses in a neighborhood I always count on from twenty to thirty sermons at least to set our faith fully before the people, and then to think that that all had to be done in five hours with a wily opponent to bring every falsehood that could be gleaned from the pages of "Beadle," "Howe," "Montgomery," and a fouler book than either, called "Metropolitan Life," one can easily see that I did not have an easy task on my hands. Then I had to meet the old threadbare objections urged against the Doctrine and Covenants of redemption of the land of Zion by "purchase or by blood;" "The Lord takes as he pleases and pays as seemeth him good, and as ye are the Lord's servants," etc., with a few new ones thrown in that are all explained in the contexts, but which in the hands of a cunning manipulator of words are conjured into wonderfully evil things, and which all takes time to read and explain to an audience, and especially an audience who will take the word of an opposer of our faith quicker than they will take proof from a defender of it. I tried hard to believe my opponent was honest in his attack upon us, but it was very difficult to believe after several wily efforts to pervert the evident meaning of several passages in the books, notably among others the 20th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, which he tried to make the audience believe disposed of the Bible entirely. Using section 83: 8, to prove the Book of Mormon to be a "new covenant," he read just enough of section 20 to show that "all old covenants were done away in this new covenant." I showed that the covenant spoken of in section 20, was the covenant of baptism alone, and read the whole section with its heading; but in his closing speech he brought it right in again, just as though I had not shown his interpretation to be false. He would read from the Abstract of Evidence in the Temple Lot Suit just enough of the testimony to show that Joseph Smith practiced polygamy, and of course I had to read the rebuttal testimony, all of which took time.

Some of his assertions were without any foundation in truth. Some of them I could not possibly answer for want of time. One of the statements was that Nephi, in the Book of Mormon, quoted fifteen chapters from Isaiah "Verbatim et literatim et punctuatim," and called it a plagiarism. I had never noticed the quotation enough to know that there was much difference. I knew there was some, but how much I was not aware until after the discussion, when I carefully went over the quotation and found the extract was from the beginning of Isaiah second chapter to the close of the 14th chapter, making 13 chapters complete, with something over three hundred changes in the rendering and punctuation, there being over thirty different readings in the first chapter quoted. And in every instance Isaiah was given credit for the words, hence it was not a plagiarism. Bro. J. M. Baggerly assisted me in the comparison and we found that in nearly every instance the changes made in the Book of Mormon were where the King James' translators were in doubt as to the proper word to use, as indicated by the words in italics, and the rendering in the Book of Mormon was much better than that supplied by the King's translators. I have, as I said before, held but two discussions and attended two held by others; but I never attended or held one where such an effort was made to appeal to the prejudice of the people.

The books he used were such as would arouse their prejudice, and he loaned them between sessions for the people to read that portion that he could not find time to read before the audience. He never attempted to answer my arguments, neither on his proposition or mine. In fact he ignored the issue between us almost entirely, and we might as well had no propositions. I tried to force him to take a position on his church coming forth in the nineteenth century. I read some positions taken by some sympathizers of the "Campbell-Scott" movement, but the only thing he would say was he did not believe altogether as these men did, and would then try to show that the church was originally organized on Pentecost. I could see by his arguments that he did not believe that certain things were for us to-day. He argued that 1 Corinthians 13 showed that the spiritual gifts were to be superseded by charity. I then asked him if he considered the first verse of the fourteenth chapter was for us in this age of the world, viz.: "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts; but rather that you may prophesy." He thundered, "No!" I then asked him if the first part of the verse was for us, viz., "Follow after charity." But no answer came. I also asked if "Despise not prophesying," and James 1: 5, "If any of you lack wisdom," and so forth; but he would not answer. If these things are not for us, will my opponent tell what is for us, and why? But still no answer.

I am willing to let the arbitrament of time tell who was victor. One thing I know, that while he stated that he had been approached by a number and told that he was too severe in his denunciation of us as a people, no one approached me with a like statement; but on the contrary they all said that I had not been severe enough, but had treated him too kindly. But I would rather it would be that way than the other.

He characterized our doctrine as "nothing but dirt," "as corrupt as hell," and similar expressions, but never once told wherein or what particular doctrine was of that character, but fell back upon statements made in the books above-named. I read the epitome of the faith and challenged him to show one doctrine or principle in it that was corrupt, and handed him the sheet; but he brushed it aside and only noticed one thought in it and that was where we state we "believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God so far as it is translated correctly," and argued that we believed in changing the word of God and hence we were as "corrupt as hell." But I showed that he and his colleagues believed that the word of God was contained in the original Greek and not in King James' translation, and introduced the Campbell, McKnight, and Doddridge translation as changed and published by A. Campbell.

The general comment, so far as I could learn before I left there, from thinking people, was that I had all the argument and scripture while he used all the abuse. The immediate result of the discussion was to intensify the prejudice and to bring out those who were inclined towards us more markedly on our side, and I believe that there will be an ingathering on our part after a while. The words of the Jewish Rabbi in his answer to Mr. Ingersoll are very true and applicable in this case: "Scorn is a terrible weapon to obtain momentary success, but is worse than worthless after a second sober thought or a healthy action of the feelings." So I believe in the case of a discussion of this kind that while through sarcasm and contumely a momentary victory over the truth may be claimed, yet when the smoke of battle has cleared away and the dust thrown in the air shall have settled we will have gained the victory among those who are honest in heart.

Our people have availed themselves of the chance to obtain homesteads in that country, and a branch of about thirty or forty members was organized by the undersigned. It is composed of excellent members most of which moved in and some baptized since the Saints began preaching there.

Mr. Nicol in his last speech incited the people to mob violence, warning them not to let our people get a foothold in the country. This roused the indignation of some and injured his cause. He might not have intended it for mob violence, but he knew we could not be kept out lawfully, hence if kept out as he advised it must be done unlawfully.

I am now about seventy-five miles northeast of Redmoon, having driven across the country with Brn. Malony and Case. Preached last night at Bro. Malony's house to a small audience.

We are having real winter here now. The ground is covered with snow, and meetings are not well attended in the south in cold weather. But we propose to do what we can. Much opposition is beginning to manifest itself in recent years, and it seems that from this on it must be a continuous fight. The adversary is getting more and more daring; but if we can sustain the injury done by inside opposition we need not fear for the outside. How significant the words of the last communication from the Father, "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction."

I believe that the work done this year by the missionaries exceeds that done last year. In the quarter just ended I noticed that, by comparison with that done in the corresponding quarter last year, the sermons exceeded by about two hundred, and there was quite an increase of baptisms. There have been four discussions in Arkansas in the last year and three at least in Oklahoma, besides some that have not been directly reported to me; all of which will eventually result in good.

I am preparing an active campaign for next summer should I be returned in charge of this field, and should some one be appointed in my stead I will have an extensive program laid out for him, should he see fit to follow it. Beginning with May I hope to hold reunions in all of the five districts in my field with dates so arranged that I can attend them all, and reaching into and almost through August.

I am well in body and in mind, and am hopeful for Zion.

HYRUM O. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, February 3.

Editors Herald:—Our cause here is moving along slowly indeed, but yet we trust in a manner which will stand. Our meetings as a rule are well attended, even in bad weather, and the interest of those on the outside is gradually growing, and the spiritual condition of the Saints is quite good. We are not without our trials, and our difficulties and obstacles are plenty; but with others we are trying to overcome, endure, and stand for the right. We were lately favored with a visit from Bro. W. H. Kelley whose counsel, timely advice, and presence were very acceptable. His son, James E. Kelley, also made us a flying visit, and attended one of our weekly meetings. It indeed is soul-cheering to see young men take up the work and emulate the example set by their fathers. It, too, made me feel quite at home to meet a missionary of near my own age and experience.

On January 12 by invitation I delivered a lecture before a society in this city called the "Radical Liberal League." Subject was, "What constitutes the teachings of the true Latter Day Saints Church?" In this society all kinds of subjects are aired by all kinds of men such as principally, infidels, Utah Mormons, Anarchists, Christian Alliance, superannuated preachers, skeptics, etc. The meeting was well attended; order and attention unsurpassed. We gave every one of them a tract making brief mention of our work. The infidels were decidedly in my favor, while a pious Methodist, a lawyer, and a superannuated clergyman took issue with me. Their arguments were easy, such as, "Spalding Romance," "Joseph Smith and his son were killed at Carthage Jail," (a new one); "Encyclopedia said so;" and that "man shall not add to the word of God," etc.

The lawyer asked me what became of the plates the Book of Mormon was written on. I replied that the angel took them. During a few ten-minute speeches that followed my lecture an infidel said: "This pious Christian wants to know what became of the plates the Book of Mormon was written on. Will he please tell us what became of the tablets of stone the law of Moses was written on?" This brought forth quite an applause.

A preacher now thought it his turn to pick the flint and try it, so he began making a false assertion. I promptly told him of it, and he persisted that I had said what I did not say, and I asked the audience if I said it, and they roared, No! Another infidel took the floor, and proceeded to give those who had been trying to destroy the weight of my argument by misrepresenting me, etc., quite a dressing down. Said he knew nothing about me or my religion, but wanted to see justice done, and he did what he could in its interests upon that occasion in a very spirited manner. He is a very eloquent and forceful speaker and can make points and hit hard. It is possible there is even more real Christianity in a man who does not deny being an infidel than some who profess to be Christians!

A lawyer took it upon himself to say: "The idea of a fifteen-year-old boy telling all his old forefathers and mothers their creeds were all wrong!" I told him in reply he needed no greater evidence to prove that the lad spoke the truth than the fact that these creeds had all been changed and are still being changed. This brought fourth quite an applause.

We have had a few additions to our branch here since occupying the new church, among whom were two young men who previously had been indentified with the church of which Rev. Mr. Dowie is leader, known as the Christian Catholic Church. These brethren after hearing our claims set forth by different ones here concluded that if they would follow out their true convictions of right they must accept. But before doing so Brother Freeland sent the following letter to the Rev. Mr. Dowie of Chicago:

"PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, January 4.

"REV. JOHN ALEX. DOWIE;

"General Overseer Christian Catholic Church:—I tender this as my resignation to the Christian Catholic Church. I will also give you a few of my reasons for so doing. In your issue of Leaves of Healing for June 8, 1901, concerning your mission as messenger of the covenant you say you are Elijah the Restorer, and that prophet of whom Moses spoke. First, you are not the messenger of the covenant, as you never have received any divine authority, but you say you are simply a business man in the ministry. Second, you are not Elijah the Restorer, as Elijah has already come and restored the apostolic church. You will find it under the name of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Third, you are not that prophet of whom Moses spoke, in Deuteronomy 18: 15 to 22. That prophet is the Lord Jesus Christ, who himself said he spoke by the command of his Father and not by his own divine authority. John 12: 48 to 50; Isaiah 8: 20. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

DAVID FREELAND.

"2603 North Fourth Street."

Not being able to explain the above well-made points, a message from Zion came though after considerable lapse of time, and here it is:

"Zion, 1201 Michigan Ave., CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 24.

"MR. DAVID FREELAND, 2603 N. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa.;

"My Dear Sir:—Your letter of January 4 was received in due course of mail. I drop you this line to notify you that we have this day removed you, for cause, from the Christian Catholic Church.

Faithfully yours,

"WILLIAM HAMMER PIPER, Overseer at "Large of the Christian Catholic Church in Zion."

No one ever labored with Bro. Freeland to show him the error of his way. Indeed, it seemed that Bro. Freeland was quite successful in showing up their inconsistencies so they thought best to leave him alone.

Another of their congregation here, a young man by the name of Orin Fry, had also become interested in our work, and often met with us investigating; and when it became known in Zion, he was promptly notified that he must repent or he would be reprovod for cause. The cause being that "he had been very critical of Dr. Dowie," "and had been attending the meetings of the Latter Day Saints," etc.

What would some of you Latter Day Saints think if your church would cut you off through some of your head officers, influenced by some one else, without showing you the wrong you had done and without a proper hearing, with no chance for appeal? Consistency may be and very likely is a jewel; but it is not found in Dowieism.

The withdrawal of these two leading members from their congregations has had its effect, and orders from headquarters by the "general overseer" is that all his flock here must stay away from meetings of the Latter Day Saints, though as we believe they are freely permitted to attend meetings held by other churches.

Bro. Fry now rejoices with us and is quite satisfied with the angel's message and the gospel restored by divine authority in these last days.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, January 18.

Editors Herald:—Our new chapel at Fifteenth Street and Washington Avenue, Ogden, was dedicated last Sunday. It is a neat, substantial frame building, 26 by 36 feet, with Gothic windows and doors, and is truly a monument of the zeal and sacrifice of the Ogden Saints. The building was purchased of the Methodist people in February, 1900; torn down and moved to the lot furnished by Bro. Wells Chase.

Sister Jane Cooper seems to have conceived the idea of procuring the building and the Ogden Saints readily partook of the inspiration, Brother Chapman advancing the $210 necessary to make the purchase. Brother David Wight began the work early in the summer of tearing down the old building, and before the snow came again a foundation and start was made on the new building. It was sufficiently completed to use for services early in the present year; but the sad death of two of the brothers who had been painting the building caused some delay. Brother Reggie Cooper was called away early in the summer and Brother Wight was endeavoring to finish the work, using the brush by day and preaching at night, when he was summoned home and left the work to others.

As we are now permitted to gaze upon this last monument of his architecture we are led to think of the greater building he was engaged in and the many "lively stones" he was assisting to fashion to occupy some place in God's Temple. Many learned to love him, and like the Saints here greatly miss him; but if they so occupy as to remain in the building when complete, even as the timbers he placed in this are answering their ends in the finished building, how great will be their joy and his in the final triumph!

Elder R. R. Dana, Brother Wells Chase and family, and others contributed largely in labor, and Saints and friends in Ogden with some outside aid furnished the needed money, the total cash outlay being $471.77. Two of the heaviest cash subscribers are Brother James Toombs, $100, and Brother Terry, $90.

On the 12th inst., after Sunday-school conducted by Sister Cooper, the congregation was again called to order by Brother Toombs. A hymn was sung and prayer offered by Brother D. L. Harris, followed by singing, "Behold thy temple, God of grace." Brother Anderson then occupied the hour in an appropriate discourse, commending the members and friends for the labor performed, and suggesting the propriety of building churches rather than saloons and dance halls. While there were many churches in the city he thought there was room for us and that it was fitting that we should be represented here where those who dispute with us the claim to church succession have many churches and are representing the changed condition in the gospel, having substituted Adam-god, secret endowments, polygamy, etc. Dedicatory prayer by S. D. Condit, and hymn and benediction closed the exercises.

At two p. m. preaching by S. D. Condit, and at 7:30 p. m. Elder Harris preached an able discourse upon angelic administrations to an attentive audience. From fifty to one hundred people attended each service, and a good spirit prevailed throughout. Mrs. Christrason presided at the organ for each service.

Editors Herald:—This is the evening of February 2, and it has been a very eventful day to me. This forenoon I baptized three very promising souls in the waters of the Sydenham. I have baptized fourteen since entering the field about the first of June last. Have sold between forty and fifty dollars worth of church publications. Bro. Tyrrell preached a good sermon for us to-night. About next week I expect to go on to Kimball where they have been expecting me for some time.

Editors Herald:—It has been four years since I heard one of our elders preach. It was at Auburn, Iowa, where I was at meeting with our people last. I have never met one of our people in the South. If there are any in this city or near, please write to me. If there is to be any quarterly conference within a reasonable distance, I would like to learn of it.

This is the greatest oil country in the world. People are coming from the North and either investing in oil business, or working at the various works here, and all seem to be prospering. I find it has been a good place for me. The tithing I inclose is the best I ever was able to pay.

To any of the brethren who wish to raise rice I will say that I will furnish you any information that I am able. I want Bro. M. T. Short to write to me, I have lost track of him.

Editors Herald:—Just closed an interesting meeting here last night. Attendance large, some interest manifested. I feel satisfied with the result of the effort. One lady asked for address to send for Book of Mormon. Some are near the kingdom. One very intelligent young colored man is very deeply interested, and I doubt not will in due time obey.

Am preaching with greater liberty than I have before experienced, and it is having its effect upon those who hear.

Mr. Coddington with whom we (Bro. Teeter and self) have been staying during our meetings here, came to me this morning, put his hand on my shoulder and said, "Brother Joseph, you have a warm place in my heart, and I want you to come back when you can and preach for us. I have received more light since you came than I ever have before from any one. Write to me." I am thankful for this blessing from the Lord.

Weather has been very stormy and cold, but we have held meeting each night.

I pray for the success of the Master's work.

Editors Herald:—On account of the writer being at home an invitation was extended by some of the branch officers to Elder Charles Derry to occupy their pulpit on the 19th ultimo. The invitation was accepted and filled to the satisfaction of the Saints. The district conference convened here on the 31st ultimo and closed on the 2d instant. The business sessions were peaceful and profitable, and the sacrament, social, and preaching services were excellent. One young man was added to the church by baptism and confirmation, to the joy of all. The Sunday-school convention was held Saturday afternoon and their entertainment in the evening. Both were good and reflected credit on officers, teachers, parents, and children.

Elders James Caffall and Oscar Case were with us and did the preaching during conference, and their efforts were enjoyed and appreciated. The attendance at conference was fair, so that all things being considered we had a very good conference.

The best of us make mistakes at times, but it is encouraging to know that they are always revealed to us if we carefully look "into the perfect law of liberty," and the way to correct each and every error is made plain by the light and influence of the Holy Spirit in connection with the truths found in the sacred word. Perhaps we do not always correct our errors as soon nor develop spiritually as rapidly as we might, but so long as we can see our own imperfections and know our own weakness there is hope that we will draw nearer to God and Christ where is found our only true source of spiritual help. Even though we are not so perfect as we should be it is encouraging to know that we have made some progress and that therefore our "salvation is nearer than when we believed."

When mistakes and misunderstandings have ceased to be and we "shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known;" when each and all have become pure in heart, then shall we be permitted to enter into the divine presence and behold the face of our God in peace. Then shall perfect and full salvation be enjoyed and we shall rejoice in the love, goodness, wisdom, and knowledge of God and his dear Son. Salvation is free to all, but it can not be secured without a consistent and persistent effort. The sooner we take up this, the most important work of all, and the more watchful, humble, faithful, and prayerful we shall be, the more satisfactory will be the results. "I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me."

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, January 19.

Dear Herald:—I have been a member of the church just six years. The first I knew about the Latter Day Saints was twelve or thirteen years ago. There was a debate between Elder D. S. Crawley and one Lee of the Disciple faith. I was just a child then, and thought the stories told about the Saints were true. This preacher in one of his speeches asked for signs, stating that there was a man in the house whose eyes were afflicted; and he wanted Bro. Crawley to heal them, and if he would do so all would believe. Bro. Crawley asked the man to come forward, which he did. He then asked him if he had faith that the Lord could heal him, and the man said, "No." Of course that settled it. Bro. Crawley followed with a speech, and the Spirit rested on him and I was made to feel the power of God. Tears came to my eyes, and I turned away for fear some one would see them.

About seven or eight years after this I saw an account of the White-Erwin debate at Miami, Indian Territory. Shortly after this, my wife, mother, stepfather, and I were baptized by Bro. T. J. Sheppard, and confirmed by Bro. S. W. Simmons. These men have done a great work in Indian Territory. I was told by Bro. Simmons that I would be a great light to the conversion of many people if I lived humbly.

I have heard three debates, and lectures by A. C. Carlin and one Bandy; but still I am in the faith. I have been told that Clark Braden will deliver nine lectures against us at Miami, commencing the last of this month. Praying for the progress of the work and the redemption of Zion, I remain,

Your Lamanite brother in Christ,

EDWARD BARNETT.

THAYER, Missouri, February 1.

Herald Readers:—Now that the debate is over, and the victory won (and it is a victory), the whole town seems to be in our favor. Even the Christians are willing to admit that Bro. White is a gentleman, but I never heard any such commendation for Braden. But were I to write what I did hear, I am afraid it would not look good in print. In the first place we must give credit to our honorable chairman, Mayor Tabor. Braden was held down in a way that he never was before, and it crippled him. He had all the latitude he wished during the first proposition, and made use of a great many expressions in the pulpit that did not sound well, and would not look well, and I am pleased to say did not take well, even with some of his brethren.

The first two nights our chairman was sick, and it was during the second night Braden gave us free side-show exhibition. He had abused us much. Bro. White said in his last speech "Elder Braden has laid every crime at my feet and at the feet of my church except putting a plaster on my wife's property, cursing and swearing, getting mad and kicking her out of bed." At this Braden jumped to his feet, rushed across the stage with his fist clinched, and no doubt would have struck Bro. White had not the special police stepped between them and led Mr.

Braden back to his seat, Braden all the while grumbling out the words, "You say another word now and I'll fix you, sir." This was the climax. It left an impression on the minds of all which was not favorable to Braden's reputation, and it just killed all the splurge he made about the Saints. The next day the Christian Church declared the debate off; but when they learned that Bro. White would continue to discuss Discipleism they concluded it best to continue.

Bro. White has been wonderfully blessed by the Spirit in defending the truth. We have sold one Inspired Translation, twelve of the Voice of Warning, also Gospel Banners containing Bro. Evans' sermon on Book of Mormon, and four copies of Book of Mormon.

The members of the Christian Church have been conspicuous by their absence the latter part of the debate, and one who signed the indorsement said he was sorry that Braden ever came; and by the downcast look of the balance I judge they are thinking the same. It has pleased the other churches to see Braden downed, for the Christian people have been over-bearing and have challenged every one for debate. But now it is all over: all there is to do is to sing the doxology.

HOXIE, Arkansas, January 27.

Editors Herald:—I am on my way to Mountain Home, my home, from a trip to Euclid, Arkansas, where I have been to help Bro. J. W. Jackson in a debate with an elder of the Christian Church. It lasted six days. Bro. J. W. handled his opponent nicely and made a fair defense of our work. Some of the Saints had never heard a religious debate and it was quite a trial to their faith as Mr. Spurlock is much inclined to throw mud. Sidney Rigdon, the Spalding Romance, polygamy, and slandering Joseph Smith were his stock in trade. He made very little attack on the doctrines of the church, and when he did he misrepresented us nearly every time.

The debate did good in the community, as it strengthened the Saints and many heard the gospel who would not come out to hear it otherwise, and a few became interested.

The Saints have a little church of their own, and are in good working order. They also have a good Sunday-school, and the interest in the school is growing. Several families of Saints moved to the branch last month from Louisiana, and some of them have homesteaded land, and are preparing to make homes there for their families.

On my way to Euclid I stopped with Bro. S. J. Sanders at or near Nathan, where Bro. J. W. Jackson held a debate with this same Rev. Spurlock last November. Our Bro. J. W. left a favorable impression on the minds of many who heard that debate. I preached several times for them and left some very near the door of the kingdom. I preached several times for the brethren at Euclid after the debate and had good audiences.

I went to Bald Knob last Friday, intending to preach Saturday night and over Sunday, but the rain hindered the meeting. I am glad to note the increased interest the Bald Knob Branch is taking in the gospel work. They have their weekly prayer-meeting and a flourishing Sunday-school and intend to build a church in the town next summer. They already have the lot paid for and some money in the treasury for building purpose.

The Martin Creek Branch is in such scattered condition that they are not keeping up their regular meetings, and have let their Sunday-school go down. I do not say they are weak in faith or to be blamed for it, but am sorry indeed that they are not in condition to keep up their regular meetings.

We have several openings for preaching in Randolph, Sharp, Fulton, and Baxter Counties, and several scattered members and quite a few more interested, and as I am pressed by force of circumstance to leave the field for the next few months, I fear some of these openings will suffer, notwithstanding Bro. D. R. Baldwin will do all he can for the cause we love so much.

I will also look after the interest of the church in and around Mountain Home even though I am not in the active field work. I will continue to do all I can for the good work.

Arkansas has been a hard field for the missionary in the years past, but now the way is opening up and things look a little brighter. We need at least six more missionaries in this field next year who can walk twenty-five miles a day and preach at night without grumbling. Bro. Macrae will no doubt sanction the above statement.

We have some as fine people in this State as live under the sun. Their lath strings hang outside the door to our elders, and they will divide the last crust of bread with us. Then why not let them have an opportunity to hear the sound of the angel message. Brethren, who of you will come over and help us next year in Arkansas?

JOSEPH WARD.

LOST CREEK, Wisconsin, January 28.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Wm. Barnard and wife and myself and wife are the only Latter Day Saints at this place. About six miles from here there are a few more scattered Saints. I am thankful for this gospel and that we were led to accept it. In it is the light that can not be found in any other church. But Satan strives to prevent people investigating God's word and work. My wife and I are the only Swedes in this vicinity who belong to this church. We try to show the people we have learned of God and not of man, and are telling them what God requires of man to inherit eternal life. There are lots of Swedes in Wisconsin, and also near to us in Minnesota; but they are very hard to labor amongst because of misunderstanding, prejudice, and selfishness. Nevertheless I shall do all I can to convince them I was called to do some missionary work among this people and I hope that I may be faithful.

I hope we can soon see the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon printed in the Swedish language. That would prevent misunderstanding of our doctrine, as nineteen out of twenty of the Swedes can not understand the English language, so they do not know what our books are. The tracts which Bro. Peter Anderson has advertised are good, and well worth distributing among the Scandinavians. I secured a hundred of them and am giving them away at every opportunity. I would be pleased to hear from my brother Swedes in any part of this country through the church papers or by letter, Swedish language preferred. I love God, and his work and his Saints, and ask his choicest blessings on this work.

O. A. MONSON.

PELICAN RAPIDS, Minnesota, January 29.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Hayer gave a brief account of our work and travels up till the time we came to Newark, South Dakota. In Newark and Kidder we held in all nineteen meetings with a good interest. In Newark we were granted the use of the Methodist church and had a full house nearly every night. One lady who had been depot agent at Kidder for years gave her name for baptism. She is a woman who stands high in the estimation of all who know her.

Leaving Kidder December 27, after a tiresome ride of seventy miles on a freight train and fourteen miles of a walk we arrived at Mr. Prall's, who is a brother to Oscar Prall, of Lamoni. He is not a member of the church but there is always a welcome for an elder there. Getting the schoolhouse we started meetings Sunday night to a full house. Continued every night with good interest and without any opposition till Saturday night, when Rev. McEldowney, a Methodist minister, brought some of his friends to destroy "Mormonism," root and branch. I spoke on church organization. After meeting he said I misrepresented the Bible. I asked him to show me where I misrepresented it. The first thing he asked me was how I looked upon Joseph Smith. I told him as a prophet of God. He asked why I did not preach Joseph Smith's Bible (inspired). Then I told him that it taught just the same doctrine as King James' did. He said it did not, and quoted from John 1: 1 (Inspired Translation): "In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son." I told him that there was nothing truer, and proved it to him from his own Bible, and he so confessed before the whole audience.

I then asked him to show me from the Bible where he got the right to have pastors, elders, and deacons in his church and exclude apostles and prophets. He became angry and shook his fist under my nose. I told him not to get angry. He said he was not, and took his hat and let the room. I never felt calmer. Have been in the neighborhood for about three weeks, holding meeting every night, with good interest. Bro. Hayer was called home on account of sickness. I miss him very much. But Bro. Martin came to my aid and I appreciated his association very much.

The Lord has aided me greatly in presenting the words of eternal life. I pray and work for the triumph of Zion.

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ohio, January 24.

Dear Editor:—I was baptized one year ago last July and have been made to rejoice in this latter-day work and have enjoyed many good meetings in Wellston, Jackson County, where we lived until last December when we moved to Fayette, four miles from Jeffersonville. Any of the Saints passing this way would be made welcome with us. They could come to Blessings Crossing on the O. S. railway, which is in sight of our house. There are no Saints here except my husband and me; but my prayers are, and I would that all Saints would unite with me, that the Lord will open up the minds of the people at this place that they may see and receive the true gospel. Oh! how my heart aches for people whose minds and understanding have been darkened by the doctrines they have heard, although it has been preached from the Holy Bible! They only have it in part and preach what is pleasing to the ear. They have partly the form of godliness, "but deny the power thereof," "and many follow their pernicious ways." I pray that we may soon have a place of worship in this place, and would love to hear from some of the good brethren and sisters who visited us often at Wellston. Our address is Jeffersonville, Fayette County.

Any having copies of HERALD or Ensign who can spare them please send them to me. We can not take the papers, but hope to be able to subscribe for them soon. Though poor in this world's goods we are trying to make heaven our home, where all shall be rich.

MRS. OLIVE C. GOODRICH.

ARAPAHOE, Oklahoma, January 28.

Editors Herald:—The HERALD is a regular and welcome visitor, and is a great help, as it tells of the work of God's church. God honored us with his gospel which he has said was to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations. Are we honoring God by respecting the gospel? and are we living as becometh Saints? Would he be pleased with us and our work were his coming now? Let us do all we can, for the work we are in is God's work, and the fact that it is his work should be all that is necessary to urge us to our best efforts.

Our Savior said the Jews should fall by the edge of the sword, and be led away captive into all nations and Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The gathering of the Jews proves the fullness of the times of the Gentiles, for according to the words of the Savior the two could not be in existence at the same time. I do not mean that the times of the Gentiles are now full but when one begins to take place the other does, and when one begins to cease the other must also. When the Jews go back to Jerusalem it is sure to be in God's own time; and if it is God's own time in the one case it will be in the other. Hence if the elect go back with his approval it will be with God's approval that the Gentiles cease to tread under foot the Holy City.

I am not telling Latter Day Saints anything new in regard to the gathering; but the HERALD is read by people not of our faith and to this class I write. If they are serving God in some one of the different churches I ask, Are his commandments obeyed in the church you belong to? Did our Savior mean it when he said this gospel must be preached for a witness? Witness to what? He was telling his disciples the signs of his second coming and the end of the world, and among the things that are to take place just prior to this great event, this gospel to be preached for a sign or witness to the fact that the time spoken of is near; and the fact that the gospel is preached is proof of the last days. And if we live in the last days the gospel must be preached, for the one proves the other, thus making the word of God cut as a two-edged sword.

Again, if the gospel is to be a witness, it proves that the gospel was to cease to be preached sometime before his coming. If it had been preached from the days of Christ until now, it could not be used as a witness, as it would be nothing above the ordinary. Paul tells us the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. The Savior said it must be preached for a witness. In due time Joseph Smith told the world the angel appeared to him telling him that God is about to restore the gospel to the earth.

In the year 96 A. D. John the Revelator "saw an angel fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth." That it is this gospel of the kingdom is certain, for there is a curse pronounced on angel or man that would preach any other gospel.

If God had not spoken since John on the Isle of Patmos, and angelic ministrations ceased on Patmos, when was the angel to fly with the gospel? Could it be possible John was "in the Spirit on the Lord's day" on Patmos and would blunder, as it appears he has if revelations from God have ceased with his days? But they tell us we must not add to or take from the word of God. We believe this and say ourselves that man must not add or diminish therefrom. But are they, and do they follow his word so closely all the time? If so, why can they not see the fourth chapter and first verse where he tells us the Spirit said, "Come up hither and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter."

Will God excuse you for not believing Joseph Smith a prophet of God when all the Scriptures prove it so positively? Christ tells us to obey his commandments; will we be excused if we obey something else, and think we are obeying him? If I think I am right will God accept me as though I were right? If God require a certain thing of us will he put up with something else that is better suited to our fancies? Can a county superintendent give a certificate when we think we have answered the questions right, when in fact we have not? Can we enlist in the army of the United States if we do not fill the requirements? Can we enter the kingdom of God except we be born of water and the Spirit?

At a glance any one can see that in all things pertaining to this world's affairs the requirements governing those affairs must be complied with. Why not take God at his word and obey him? for he will surely require it of us. He has said it, and he says, "I am the Lord, I change not."

W. T. ROOK.

JONESBORO, Arkansas, February 3.

Editors Herald:—I came here by request on January 22, and spent some time negotiating with the proper authorities of the various church edifices for a house to preach in, being confronted in turn by the refusal of Christian, Holiness, Baptist, Presbyterian; and the court-house, also, was refused me. After that I commenced preaching each night at a private house. At this juncture a heavy sleet covered the face of nature, rendering it dangerous to be out in daylight; but every night but one I have held meetings, and always have a few interested people present. One is ready for the water, but there is no water here in body sufficient, so we have to postpone baptism until weather moderates.

A calamity of no mean proportion struck the town on the morning of the 29th. A heavy snow, followed by rain and sleet, blockaded the streets with broken poles, and a terrible tangle of wires. Fruit and ornamental trees were badly broken. Many stores and dwelling-houses were flooded with water. Heavy damages are claimed by many. Merchants paid two dollars and fifty cents per hour for men to shovel the slush from their roofs. Cold weather still holds the ice on. To-day the sun shines with magnificent splendor. Every tree and shrub shimmers with a wealth of glittering diamonds, and the beauty largely reimburses a lover of nature for the gloom of the past few days.

D. R. BALDWIN.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, February 6.

Editors Herald:—Retrospectively the writer is reminded that in an attempt to fulfill the obligations imposed by the last General Conference the mission assigned has been quite well visited. The missionary force has done remarkably well, and, generally speaking, unity prevails. Two hundred sixty-six baptisms are known to have transpired aside from local ones likely to have occurred and not reported, with the present quarter yet to hear from. The Nauvoo and Eastern Iowa Districts were visited respectively and some matters arranged that have since proved beneficial. Minnesota was now visited, two sermons being preached in Minneapolis, the Spirit being present to a marked degree.

Thence to Clitherall for the reunion which was a marked success. Duty imposed a return to Iowa all too soon; but duty before pleasure is the watchword, though reluctance will assert at times under the pressure of the burden incident. Where Bro. D. M. Rudd had made an opening the year before a week was occupied in preaching, the liberty being unusual.

On to other places and the reunions of Des Moines and Fremont Districts both of which were successful gatherings. At the latter some ordinations imposed by conferences, general and local, were attended to and one as imposed by the last revelation. We are glad to know that heavenly inspiration was the "seal of adoption" to the new departure in the writer's experience and that since the action the stamp of divine approval has been clearly manifest.

Now home for a season with demands of physical effort incident to "fixing up" the outbuildings complied with and away for the general reunion. The day following its close we head for Eagle Grove to enter a theological bout with Elder Ellmore of one wing of the Christian Church. So far as the discussion was concerned it was one of the most pleasing events of the kind yet experienced, Elder Ellmore proving himself a true gentleman. It is a pleasure to meet with such.

But while in the midst of preparation for the occasion, one day a telegram was handed me saying, "David is dead." Dead! A letter that morning brought the first news I had of his sickness. Dead! and he so well qualified as a defender of God's truth. I had never known one more humble and meek or better qualified to represent the gospel. He was a spiritual and intellectual giant. With two years close association I had learned to love his simplicity, admire his meekness and marvel at the ability he manifested. Dead! Why? Who can answer? It is yet one of the unsolved problems.

There were yet three nights of unfinished debate. Could I go on? Had not God's aid been granted I could not have done it. Elder Ellmore readily granted the request to cut off the last night that I might reach home for the funeral.

After all was over and I had remained at home long enough to paint the house and prepare for winter another debate was entered, and for sixteen nights we were forced to listen to vituperation in its worst form. Why will men do this rather than act the part of a man? I can not recommend Elder Crowe as showing ability as a debater or gentlemanly conduct. The Saints of Coalville and friends stood by me nobly, presenting me with a purse of twenty-seven dollars.

Next Deloit, Dow City, Woodbine, and Logan, then home for Christmas and away the next day to Grinnell for conference and the supervision of matters. Left the Saints feeling better, and on to Runnells where the writer preached twenty-eight sermons, Bro. McCoy observing, "In honor preferring one another" fully. I would have preferred a division of time but he was larger than I and so had his way. He is a humble man. Four were baptized.

Here we are having increasing audiences with the best of attention.

Bro. Editor, my heart rejoices as I read the news from Australia; and I was pleased to see Bro. Alexander's statement about New Zealand. I have urged the sending of missionaries there every conference since my return. I trust we can do so next year.

J. W. WIGHT.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 8.

Editors Herald:—Experience has taught me that the Saints in the different districts are anxious to know the whereabouts of the missionaries, and wondering when they will come "our way;" hence in justice to the Saints of the Des Moines District I wish to say that since the district conference at Grinnell where I received the information of my wife's sickness I have been at home attending to duties there, and the prospect for entering the field very soon is not very encouraging. She has been confined to her bed now over five weeks, with little or no improvement. I desire thus to make the Saints acquainted with the cause that keeps me out of my mission field.

I am anxious to see the cause of Christ move forward and feel like contributing my mite to its advancement, but circumstances at home and in mission fields are not always as we would like to see them; hence under trials, difficulties, and oppositions of various kinds we must labor on until we shall have come up out of great tribulations, and have washed our robes white in the blood of the Lamb, for only such can wear the crown.

May the good Lord comfort, sustain, and bless his Saints in their warfare!

Editors Herald:—In a recent issue of your paper you stated that you had been informed that under a recent ruling of the Post Office Department, placing such descriptions as "Photos," "Books," "Printed Matter," etc., made it subject to letter postage. I did not think this was correct, as I had never seen such an order or ruling of the department. Hence I wrote to the party giving the information, and asked him to cite me to the section, which he promptly did; but the section cited I could not construe to mean as it had been construed by the postmaster under whom he worked. I wrote to the department for a ruling on the matter, and received the following answer:

COPY OF THE ORDER.

"To All Postmasters:

"Numerous complaints have been made to the Department of annoyance and hardship to the public resulting from the construction of the act of Congress of January 20, 1888, (Sec. 318 P. L. & R. edition of 1893,) which does not permit the placing upon the envelop or wrapper of third class matter of a written designation of the contents. Acting under an opinion of the law officer of this Department which construes the law favorable for such a ruling, it will hereafter be held that a written designation of contents—such as 'Book,' 'Photo,' 'Printed matter'—shall be construed as a permissible 'inscription' upon mail matter of the third class, under the clause of the act referred to which provides for the placing 'upon the blank leaves or cover of any book, or printed matter of the third class of a simple manuscript dedication or inscription not in the nature of a personal correspondence.' Postmasters will be guided accordingly.

It is my opinion that the new ruling referred to in the HERALD was not a ruling of the Post-office Department at Washington, but a construction of the postmaster referred to.

ASHVILLE, Manitoba, January 30.

Editors Herald:—The last news in HERALD from this field found Elder Walter Bennett and the writer just opening at the small town of Ethelbert. We secured the schoolhouse and did our best to get the gospel before the people. The second night the schoolhouse was occupied by the union prayer-meeting of Methodists and Presbyterians. We attended and before opening I requested the student in charge to announce our services for the coming week. He asked a few questions and received liberal answers, but did not commit himself for or against my request. Our presence, however, seemed to disturb them. The time was occupied by the gentleman in charge in reading about seven chapters from the Bible. Particular emphasis was noticeable when reading the second chapter of Peter's second epistle, and 1 Timothy 4. However, no comment was made; although it did not need great powers of discernment to perceive that mental conclusions were reached. We were all asked to kneel in prayer, a couple of pleading petitions were made, invoking steadfastness of mind and to be kept from being led into error. Without giving strangers a chance the benediction was pronounced before the audience regained their feet. Our meeting was still unannounced; so I called them to order and told them how I had asked the brother to announce, but for some unexplained reason he had not done so. I then announced for the succeeding evenings.

Verily that preacher loves darkness; for silently and swiftly he proceeded to extinguish the lights. They were nearly all out before I was through speaking. The Methodist parson was in the audience; but when I began to speak he fled. Poor fellow! he had to be called back, as he had the key.

We preached five sermons, but prejudice kept the people away, only a few attending. The brethren turned out in force one night, but after two hours cross-fire we were still very much alive.

The Presbyterian parson came out one night, under pressure. He asked a few questions. He attempted to prove that there would be individuals in heaven (highest glory) who did not know they were followers of Christ. At the close of the meeting he made some slurring remarks as to our making converts to colonize another part of America; in fact Utah. Upon his charging polygamy upon us I took off my “gloves,” refuted his statement, and declared that people in glass houses should not throw stones, reminding him Presbyterians had sanctioned polygamy in India and China. I said if polygamy is a sin in America surely it is in foreign lands, and that I was proud to state that the church I represented never did and never would condone such sin for the sake of increased money and membership. This quieted him, and in a few moments he walked away, not even answering my pleasant good night.

Our work done here we decided to go north along the railway, calling upon the numerous logging camps that dotted the road. We reached Garland, eleven miles away, in the evening. We warmed our benumbed fingers in the engine-room of the mill and had supper with the men. There being no facilities for preaching, next morning we turned our footsteps toward another camp ten miles distant. Here we stopped for nearly a week preaching every night and twice on Sunday. We made a few friends; but they were too careless and indifferent to think upon the realities of the gospel of Christ. Again we “jogged,” this time over twenty miles, eating our frozen lunch, which I had begged from the cook, in the ruins of an old stable or house. Although the air was frosty, yet not so as to freeze us—just an incentive to keep “a movin’.”

We reached our destination but we could find accommodation only for one night. So Bro. Bennett turned me loose on them for about one and one half hours. I preached upon the Coming of Christ. After it was over one man came up and said, “That is the first gospel sermon I ever heard.” Another, “I wish you had been here yesterday [Sunday] to keep us from getting lonesome.” I felt repaid for our cold frudge. For two hours they kept us both answering questions.

Query: Have any of the brethren heard of his Satanic Majesty's decease? They bought up all Bro. Walters' supply of “Why God don't kill the Devil.” The men warmly invited us back, but the foreman was “sour,” and we have not had the chance since. May the little they heard help them to give a favorable hearing to this message, when opportunity permits, after returning to their various homes.

Our next stop was Cowan, some sixteen miles away. Here our Presbyterian friend from Ethelbert had warned the people not to allow us to see the feminine part of the population. His slanderous tales only aroused curiosity, and now some of the people are investigating. We did not hold preaching services, yet I trust that Mr. Robert McCulloch and his family, at whose place we spent Christmas, may have reason to look back on that day as a pleasant one. We, at least, enjoyed talking gospel, and partaking of the many good things, especially our first taste of moose meat.

But again we bade good-bye, and on to Minnionas; but after endeavoring for two days we could not get a place to preach in, except one night that we held at a boarding-house. So we continued our journey to Swan River, secured a hall, billed the town, and got into conversations. But after two nights and no audience, we quit.

We made a thirteen-mile trip out into the country, where we expected to find Saints. Our friend Mr. Keist was not a Saint, though very favorable. He is well acquainted with Brn. Shields, Mortimore, and others who have labored near Grand Valley, Ontario. He took us by wagon back nearly to town; and taking the train at six o'clock we landed within twenty-three miles of Saints, to whose place we walked that day. In all we have walked over three hundred seventy-five miles. A few are interested, but God alone gives the increase.

At present we are laboring near Ashville. A few outsiders who kindly remember Bro. Fred Gregory are again taking interest. A Rev. Mr. Taylor, whom Bro. Bennett told about in his letter of December 26, attacked us by delivering a lecture upon Mormonism. We attended, took notes, and on February 9 intend to reply. We ask the Saints to remember us.

We are still in the fight; doing what we can, praying and working for the salvation of men and the honor and glory of God.

ALEX. McMULLEN.

No more pleasant or profitable means of spending the long evenings can be found than the absorbing pursuit of the Chautauqua Home Reading Courses. Chautauqua plans are proving themselves of more definite value year by year. They appeal to people who wish to do earnest, persistent work. Chautauqua has a mission in these days of desultory reading, when the ambitious individual is fairly crushed by the dead weight of printed matter. There has never been a time when selection, direction, and concentration were so greatly needed. The Chautauqua Course is not dry and dull and uninteresting. It makes for personal culture and for a richer social life. The whole course costs $5 and can be obtained by paying $1.00 down and the remainder of the $5.00 in easy payments throughout the year. Orders can be sent direct to the Chautauqua general offices, Cleveland, Ohio,

A Few Items of Our Voyage.

BY SR. BURTON.

While rounding a point of land, our eyes were greeted with a cheerful sight from the shore, which caused our captain to stand in and run along as near to the reef as was safe. It was simply the same group of Saints in Sunday attire that we had so recently left on the lake shore. They had crossed the island to see us when fairly out at sea, and to know whether it was real rough or not. One little fellow, or it may have been a man in the distance, made a flag-pole of himself by climbing to the top of a large rock at the water's edge and continually waving a white towel. Bro. and Sr. Gilbert stood together in the shadow of the rock, occasionally raising their handkerchiefs to flutter in the breeze, as did also the others farther from the water, and was as often answered by those on the boats.

The sea was not so rough as we expected, and the wind being fair aft, the awning was soon put up, which proved to be a treasure indeed, for the sun was very hot. The awning was not high enough, however, to clear our heads when sitting, so we got pillows and coiled down in some kind of a recumbent position on the small deck, each occupying as little space as possible, for there was none to spare. Then when I had once laid down I had to stay in that position all day, for to attempt to rise up made me seasick. How long that day was, and how hard those deck slabs were! I dozed some of the hours away. At one time, by way of changing position, I drew myself up so as to occupy the least space possible and went to sleep, but woke before long with my limbs aching and paining like the toothache, only to find myself completely hedged in by natives who were lying about like sardines in a box, and fast asleep. From that on the pain in limbs and joints was something dreadful to bear.

Towards evening we were partly in the lee of the land, and being smoother, I held my head up occasionally, and at length sat up. The full moon had lifted her round, cheery face above the horizon a half hour before we reached the narrow pass through the ledge into Taenga. For my own part I could not discover any space where the breakers were not curling and breaking lustily. But the Saints said there was one there, and when opposite the stationed signal from the shore, the decks being previously cleared, awnings taken down, and Brn. Alexander and Gould invited to go below, or stand in the companionway where they could duck down at the jibbing of the mainsail, or a threatened shower-bath, the boom was swung over and we faced around to find the opening in the breakers and went in on one of the big waves. How exciting it was! There we were, apparently five or six feet above the ledge or level of the sea, and the bows of our boat two or three feet in advance of the wave. It was only a snap-shot sight. I thought sure we were going to land smash on the point of the reef and be drenched with the next wave just behind us. But we didn't. It was needful for us to go unpleasantly near it, seeing the wind would be ahead as soon as we rounded the point, and a man must swim ashore with a tow-line. This we did not know till we saw a man jump overboard as soon as we rounded the point and cleared that breaker. But we knew the wind had, as upon previous occasions, dropped away and left us to the mercy of the rapid current setting outward and the big rollers rushing inward. How that poor brave native struggled and battled with the current, encumbered as he was with a heavy rope! The eyes of all the white faces were anxiously fixed upon him. He was being cheered or driven onward by the imperative yells from those on board, for it was a critical moment. Our boat would not mind her helm and was drawing nearer the rocky ledge and also settling back into the much troubled waters.

All this occupied but a few moments, and here came the next green, curling wave. Would it dash him against the sharp, rocky ledge? My apprehensions were divided between his apparent danger, and as to how much of that wave we would have to accommodate on our boat. But amid the other shouting, our man in the water was notified at the very instant to dive under and escape the force of the tumbling waters, and was up again in time to take advantage of the boost, and was soon climbing onto the ledge, while we only got a few splashes. But how it did bubble and boil all about us! And we were almost against the ledge; we ground it a little at one place. The captain and one of the women also sprang out on it and fended off by pushing with their might. Just then a light air was helping to make a little headway, and coming in contact with an eddy in the tide that swept her bows outward, there was a lively scrambling and pulling to get our "fenders" on board again. By that time the brethren from the shore had come to our assistance with the tow-line, so we passed quietly up the stream the rest of the way in true canal-boat fashion to the long stone wharf at Taenga. The air was very still, and the moonlight clear and silvery. The island itself differing from any I have seen, all about the landing so clean and tidy-looking, and the gratitude I felt for the privilege of stepping on terra firma again, altogether left a mental impression never to be forgotten. Nevertheless it was a cramped, weary, hungry, sunburned party that stepped from the boat to the wharf, and after returning thanks to the Father of all mercies, staggered up to the cottage in waiting. The house could only boast of one room, and three beds were soon put up therein; two at one end, and one (ours) in the other, with a curtained hallway from front to back entrance.

The excitement of getting off from Raroia took away my appetite for the morning meal, and when I went on board I felt rather empty, and much more so when I came ashore at night; I could scarcely speak from sheer weakness. But when we inquired about getting some food, we were informed that there was no food on the island, which was rather a gloomy prospect. But unknown to me, the Saints of Raroia had made up a box of food, which was brought in with some hot water to soak the hard bread, and we sat down to hard bread and canned salmon and ate with a relish, then laid our weary bodies down to rest. Thus ended the first day of our five-hundred-mile journey.

The "Study Hour."

A LITTLE HELP FROM THE COMMITTEE FOR THOSE WHO USE IT.

In the first place let us bear in mind that we who are engaged in teaching the very little ones in the Sunday-school are intrusted with one of the most important duties within the range of human experience,—that of laying the foundation, in the children's minds, upon which must rest the whole structure of their religious faith. Where is there a greater work than this? What requires more earnest consecration of heart and soul? Truly, then, should every one intrusted with this solemn privilege approach with great sincerity and humility the divine throne and there seek to obtain that grace, that wisdom, and that faithfulness necessary to the perfect performance of such sacred duty. And, dear teachers, with all our prayers we must need study also. We have no hold upon the Lord to supply that which we lack because of neglect or indifference upon our part. It is only when we have done the best we could in the way of study and careful preparation, that we may come to Him for that in which we may still be deficient; and then we may be sure he will not send us away empty-handed. A word of counsel, then, in regard to your study, we have thought might not be amiss.

Concerning the "Helpful reading." Of course these readings have no direct connection with the lessons which they precede. They have been selected from the literature at our command, being such as will, in our estimation, assist in our education and development along the lines of child-study. Leading workers in this direction have outlined a course of study for primary teachers, from portions of which some of these valuable little readings are taken. These may be studied at odd moments; or, better still, those covering the same subject might be studied all together. For instance, the readings on the "point of contact" from Patterson Du Bois in lessons 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 studied as a whole give us a very good idea of the subject. The readings on Child-nature by Professor Pease in lessons 9, 10, 11, and 12, should also be studied together. The name of the lesson may be taught to most of the children; it will serve to impress it upon their minds.

The Bible verse they should learn also, and it is supposed to be the only part of the lesson for the child to have studied before coming to the class. We have suggested that the teacher prepare slips bearing the Bible verse for the following Sabbath to hand to her pupils for them to learn at home.

By the "Point to Develop" is meant the central fact or truth which is to be impressed upon the child's mind; it is that part which we wish him particularly to retain and with which he should be so thoroughly imbued that he will remember it and try to live it.

"The "Outline" is intended as a guide to the lesson. It is best for us to memorize both the outline and the point to develop, which ought to be sufficient for the lesson hour. If, however, any of us feel the need of more, let our notes be written upon a small piece of paper for reference,—for never, under any circumstances, should we bring the Study Hour to the class.

The "Point of Contact" in the outline needs no explanation. Our study of the clear definitions by Patterson Du Bois of this most important part of teaching will give us a correct understanding in regard to it.

By "Lesson Development" is meant the process or steps by which the truth may be brought to the child's mind.

The "Application" should be a little story drawn from the child's every-day life, and presented with such clearness and simplicity that he may see the point of the lesson and be able to apply it himself to his own experience. Sometimes we may need to make different "applications" for the different members of our classes; differing home-surroundings and differing opportunities (with which, of course, we have made ourselves familiar) may make this course necessary. We should also consider this in finding our points of contact. (For example, the child of a farmer may be reached through his observance of sowing, planting, or any phase of farm life; while the carpenter's son may know of hammer and nails, the blacksmith's child of anvil and bellows, etc., etc.)

It is interesting in following the Scripture Study to find how it touches upon the different parts of the lesson. It gives us always a reserve supply from which to draw while teaching. We must always have more in our minds than just what we wish to give to the children. There must be considerably more than one bucketful of water in a well in order that a bucket when lowered into it may come up full to overflowing.

The "Suggestive Lesson Development" is intended for those who need help in that direction.

The small illustrations or cuts are to be drawn by the teacher upon paper in her class just when she is explaining that which she wishes to illustrate. If any feel that they can not do this the drawing may be prepared previously and presented at the proper time. Where there is a blackboard, the one in charge may draw them as she conducts the review. Of course illustrations need not be confined to those given in the Study Hour, which are always merely suggestive; as other good ones present themselves to us, let us use them also.

The Perry Pictures should be detached from the pamphlet, that we may use them in our classes.

We urge the use of object illustrations. They should be carefully chosen, and we should spare no pains to obtain just those which will best illustrate the lesson to the children we are teaching.

The "Suggestions" are not intended for any particular time, but are valuable for use at all times.

Having given the Study Hour a fair trial, by study and by practice, we most sincerely desire the teachers to let the committee know their opinions in regard to it. What does it lack? What necessity is not met? What should be omitted—what added? Wherein is it good, bad, or indifferent? And having given us what assistance you can by way of hearty criticism, sustain us by your faith and prayers, that we may be enabled to do this work in an acceptable manner. And if our efforts prove worthy,—if the Study Hour has a mission in our Sunday-school field, come to your district conventions and to the General Convention prepared to sustain and indorse this movement by your vote as well as your prayers.

The Rev. R. Heber Newton's views of the ethical and sociological significance of "Anarchism," published in the January number of the Arena, are supplemented in the current issue by an essay from the same pen on its political, economic, and religious causes. It is worth reading, and will especially interest the clergy. Eltweed Pomeroy, A. M., contributes a sprightly article, entitled "French vs. English," in which the genius of the Gallic and Anglo-Saxon peoples is studied—as portrayed in their respective legislative bodies. Henry W. Stratton has a most interesting paper on "Music and Crime," the author discussing the therapeutic efficacy of music in the treatment of moral disease. Leigh H. Irvine writes of "San Francisco's Union Labor Mayor," and Austin Lewis of "The University and the Public"—both contributors being residents of the western metropolis. In a significant article on "A Coöperative Commonwealth," Joel Shomaker describes the economic aspects of Mormonism. John Dolman, a Philadelphia lawyer, has a paper on "Municipal Reform," which contains some excellent suggestions, and an interview with Prof. Frank Parsons on governmental ownership of the telegraph and telephone is one of the most valuable features of the number.

The World's Work for February publishes entire, for the first time in America, Rudyard Kipling's "The Islanders," which has raised a veritable furore of discussion in England. Frank Norris, the author of "The Octopus," in an article entitled "The Frontier Gone at Last," shows how the Anglo-Saxons have at last encircled the globe with conquest. Captain Mahan adds to an interesting series of papers which have appeared in various publications, one in the World's Work on "The Growth of Our National Feeling." George Iles, author of "Flame, Electricity and the Camera," writes of Marconi's triumph. An intimate view of Dr. Lyman Abbott is given by Hamilton Wright Mabie, Dr. Abbott's associate on The Outlook, and the striking career and personality of Tom Johnson is described with particular reference to his work as Mayor of Cleveland. Among the other illustrated articles are a description of the wonderful La Prensa the Buenos Ayres philanthropic newspaper; a story by Arthur Goodrich of how the Connecticut farmers are growing tobacco under tents; a "Gaucho's Day's Work," by William Bulfin, who wrote "Tales of the Pampas;" Helen Lukens Jones' description of the greatest olive ranch in the world in California; the exciting experiences of the party who carried the United States mail farthest North in Alaska, by Dr. Francis H. Gambell and a story of how the ice, last year, blocked traffic on the Great Lakes until May. Hugh H. Lusk tells of an interesting experiment in New Zealand for the prevention of strikes. "The March of Events and Among the World Workers," run over their usual wide gamut of topics of contemporary interest.

DOWN WITH "MORMONISM."—NO. 3.

It is positively out of the power of the defenders of the faith to meet and refute every misstatement made about the beliefs, doctrines, and conduct of the believers. These tales are usually told as the personal story or experience of some reverend gentleman who is of pious habit and renown, and who would not, of course, be guilty of falsehood; but who when speaking or writing of the people of the church or their faith does not hesitate to tell for truth most absurd and ridiculous things. Among these is one as follows: "These people believe that Christ will come to Independence, Missouri, and that a temple will be built as if by magic in a night, to which he will come, and in which he will address the faithful Saints."

Some pious soul of a preacher, or some unprincipled sensational news-gatherer sent this story flying during one of the sessions of conference at Independence, Missouri. This story has for a foundation the open confession of the ministry of the church that we believe that the land of America is the land of Zion, and that the prophecy made in Isaiah 2: 3, "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," remains to be fulfilled, and when fulfilled it will be when Zion is established on the Western Continent, and the messenger of the Lord will have come to his temple and the way of the Lord will be fully prepared before him.

But the idea that there is to be a temple, and a people prepared for the building of it and what must precede such an effort to build, strikes the average sectarian as such a vain and idle fancy that he at once turns his imagination loose to ridicule and deride the idea and the people. Such men do not stop to think, possibly do not care whether the thing essayed to be told is true or false, or whether they could give satisfactory proofs if their statements should be called in question; it seems to be sufficient if it will "down Mormonism."

Another instance of this occurred in the discussion between Bro. James W. Gillen on the part of the church, and Reverend Clark Braden on the part of the Christian or Disciple Church, at Stewartsville, Missouri. In order to make an argument against the faith upon the old Spalding romance theory, Reverend Braden assumed that Spalding had written three or four manuscripts and that the one used by Dr. Hurlbut and E. D. Howe in 1834 was but one of them. No evidence of the truthfulness of his saying was given, but others quoting from him assume that it was so proven. In some of Mr. Braden's arguments he has used similar statements made at other times by different parties writing or speaking against the faith, and introduced them by the formula, "It is proved," or "It has been shown," when not a particle of tenable proof was ever presented on the points asserted as proved.

Especially is this true in regard to the alleged collusion between Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon prior to the publication of the Book of Mormon. There is in fact no evidence amounting to the worth or dignity of truth, that Sidney Rigdon ever saw Joseph Smith until after the Book of Mormon was in print. It was the presentation of the book and the impassioned pleading of Parley P. Pratt that turned the attention of Sidney Rigdon to the new religion; his allegiance to it followed after. The Spalding Romance theory was invented to "down the Mormons." Like a story concocted between Reverend Braden and an old gentleman living near Kirtland, Ohio, Moss, by name, we think, in the house of Nelson Makepeace, in Kirtland, at the time the debate between Braden and Bishop Kelley was in progress, which story was overheard by Makepeace and reported and condemned by him, and of which Braden remarked, "It may not be true, but it will tell against the Mormons." Anything which had a show of hurt to the Mormons in it has been made to do duty whether it would or would not stand critical legal examination.

Of this sort was the story that the Saints believe that a temple would rise in a night at Independence, Missouri. It was calculated to throw discredit upon the idea of a temple being built under any conditions. The Saints have never shown themselves to be over-much superstitious, and while believing in miracles both of the olden time and the present, have never asked nor expected that God would do for any people what he had commanded that people to do for themselves. There was as much reason to believe that God would build the temple at Kirtland, Ohio, as there is to believe that he will build the one at Independence, Missouri, by miraculous intervention in a night. Several years were required to build the first named, and it is likely that it will take a longer time to build the last.

It took the Utah people forty years to build the granite building now standing in Salt Lake City as a testimonial to their zeal, faith, and intelligent industry. The one at Nauvoo was only a few years in building, but it was the work of months of weary toil in the quarries, the forests, the work-shop, and on the scaffold; but no one of all the host that wrought in its erection ever thought of asking God to build it up "in a night."

The men and women of the Reorganized Church may be in a sense the devotees of a faith obnoxious to the spiritual sentiment of their denominational neighbors, but they are not fools; they may be in a sense visionary, but they believe that God works by intelligent means to accomplish his designs; they may be enthusiasts, but are not fanatics. So that whatever God may require them to do will be done in the proper normal condition of sane people, and by the exercise of the wisdom and the forces at their disposal in a rational every-day way. While doing this if God may see fit to supplement their work by tangible evidences of his favor, such as are in evidence in the "pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night," the heaping together of the waters beside the path through the Red Sea; the saving of the children Moses and Jesus from the wrath of the kings by whose edicts their lives were sought; the sending of "manna" and "quails" to feed the hosts; the putting back of disease through the "brazen serpent;" the ministering to the wants of the people from the "barley loaves and the small fishes," they will not show their distrust of the mercy of God by being surprised because they do not understand the law by virtue of which it should be wrought.

If intelligence is the attribute of Deity, then an intelligent man must, or may stand near to Deity if he rightly exercises his intelligence; he may not always understand God, or his ways, but he will never insult God by doubting his goodness or power, if he professes faith in him.

Many years ago a preacher, a member of an active, so-called religious Christian denomination, after a sojourn of three whole weeks among "the Mormons," wrote of them: "The reason why they believe that the signs follow the believer, and in the miracles of the New Testament is because they are ignorant. The signs were always had among the ignorant. These people are so ignorant that when they kneel to pray and ask God for anything, they actually believe that God will hear and answer them."

This was intended as a learned effort to throw discredit upon the belief of the people in the efficacy of prayer and that God did and would minister to his people as he had done in times long ago. And with a class it was an effectual blow, showing that the credulity of the people was great. But what of the word upon which such credulity was based, "and all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Jesus.

With the learned gentleman who in three weeks could compass the whole life of the faith of the people, it was anything "to down the Mormons."

The Mormons, as the world has persisted in calling the believers in the Book of Mormon and the message of the angel to Joseph Smith, have from the start shown themselves to have been industrious, frugal, and abstemious in habits. They have had the courage of their religious convictions. They entered the Western wilderness without hesitation; they sacrificed lands, houses, friends, and when forced from their homes refused to recant their faith to escape wrath. They have tried to live upright lives as a whole wherever they have been permitted to dwell, having had an eye to the recompense of reward—eternal life.

They, the Latter Day Saints, have been accused of being clannish, of sticking together, of attempting to secure political control, etc. This has been a standing charge against them, and it has been made to tell in many parts of the country. Some even of late writers who have aired their knowledge of three weeks growth, or a casual interview of some one at Lamoni, have industriously spread the idea that the leaders of the church dominate the municipal affairs of the town, and dictate the political faith of the membership. This was and is intended where told or written to create or foster prejudice against the people and their faith. It is a mischievous and false statement having no foundation in fact.

The leading men of the Reorganized Church have not at any time or in any place attempted to control the political sentiment and action of their fellow members in the church. Each is left to cherish his own views and to follow the bent of his own inclinations in this regard.

The only part of the municipal, or political, or economical affairs of the town in which any of these leading men have taken any active part, or in any wise interfered has been upon the question of whether intoxicating liquors should be sold, or saloons kept in the place.

These things have been persistently, and inevitably opposed by the leading officers of the church, privately and publicly, and it is likely such will be their continued action.

We make no apology to anybody for this attitude of these men. They act independently of church control as individual citizens of the State and town upon their convictions of what is the better policy for the benefit of the people of the place; and if they stand together it is because of mutual conviction. Are they more blamable for this than their cotemporary religionists who do the same thing? We opine not.

But, suppose the Latter Day Saints as citizens are clannish, or are agreed in policy and views upon the public and economical affairs of citizenship, what of it? In doing this, what laws of right, what rules of correct citizenship do they ignore or violate? None, whatever.

Again, Jesus, whom these people, as well as other so-called Christians, accept as the lawgiver who supplanted Moses and the tables of stone in moral ethics, has more than once in his teaching told those who were, or would be his disciples, "Except ye are one ye are not mine."

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one."—John 17: 20-22.

The Quakers, the Shakers, the Zoarites, the Harmonites, the Amanaites, all of them unities in all the essential features of faith and communistic oneness of purpose and helpfulness have never been subjected to such persistent writing up and arraignment before the public because they were clannish and of a oneness, though the Quakers did have to bear terrible affliction and persecution for their quaint religion and garb, from Presbyterian hate for Christ's sake.

There is still left in the general make-up of the average Protestant (emphasis on last syllable) religionist sectarian enough of this ancient animus to fit him for using any sort of an argument, or tell any story, however improbable, if it will only answer to the cry, "Down with Mormonism."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CHESTERFIELD, Tennessee, January 28.

Is there a contradiction between Doctrine and Covenants, section 76, verse 6, speaking of those that die without law? Are they honorable men of the earth, who were blinded by the craftiness of men whom Christ went and preached to and they received the gospel through his preaching and became bodies terrestrial? 1 Peter 3: 19, 20 says he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which were disobedient in the days of Noah. It seems that the ones referred in Peter were people who had the law revealed unto them through Noah, and they were disobedient to the law; while the Book of Covenants says Christ went and preached to the honorable men of the earth, who died without law, and had been blinded by the craftiness of men. How could they be blinded by the craftiness of men, or be called disobedient, if they had no law?

C. L. SNOW.

We see no contradiction between the passages referred to, 1 Peter 3: 19, 20, and Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6. The first refers to and is intended to identify the Spirit and power by which Jesus wrought in the spirit world. And though Peter makes mention of a class to whom preaching was done, it does not follow that this was the only class to be affected by the resurrection.

Section 76: 6, referred to, enumerates several classes of men who are to be reached by the power of the resurrection.

"These are they who are of the terrestrial" glory:

1. Those who have died without law.
2. Those spirits of men kept in prison whom the Son visited. (See 1 Peter 3: 19, 20.)
3. Honorable men of the earth, blinded by the craft of men.
4. Those who receive of his glory but not of his fullness.
5. Those who receive of the presence of the Son, but not of the Father.

This paragraph is a descriptive one of the classes of men to whom the clemency of God is extended in the terrestrial order, and the conditions into which they will be received. And, as the inquirer will see, that class referred to by Peter as the ones to whom Christ preached is one of them.

The section referred to does not say that it was the honorable men of the earth whom Christ preached to, but divides the classes as specified above.

IN EXPLANATION.

SECTION 29, PAGE 28, BOOK OF RULES.

We are asked to define in "plainer language" the meaning of section 29, page 28, Book of Rules.

The section in consideration is a part of chapter three of Book of Rules, which treats of the rights and duties of members of the assembly, any assembly, of which church members may be parts and entitled to membership, voice, and vote; and relates to the conduct of members of the assembly, when present and taking part in the deliberations and business of the sessions.

Section 29 treats upon the subject of a member of the assembly present at any session; and makes provision for the temporary absence of such member from the place where the assembly is sitting to do business; that is, the section states when it would be proper and right for a member to absent himself from the sitting of the assembly.

The section reads as follows:

"No member ought to be present in the Assembly when any matter or business concerning himself is being debated; nor, if present, by the indulgence of the Assembly, ought he to vote on any personal question affecting himself. Whether the question concern his private interest, or relate to his conduct as a member, as for a breach of order, or for matter arising in debate, as soon as it is fairly before the Assembly, the member may be heard in exculpation, but should then withdraw, until the matter is settled. If, notwithstanding this rule, a member should remain in the Assembly and vote, his vote may be, and ought to be disallowed; it being contrary, not to the laws of decency only, but to the fundamental principle of the social compact, that a man should sit and act as a judge in his own case."

We confess that we hardly know how to give the meaning of the section in language plainer than that used in the section itself. However, it may be possible that some may not understand.

If any man is a member of an assembly and is present at a meeting of that body and there comes up a question regarding himself as such member of the assembly, and such question is taken into consideration, he should ask permission to withdraw from the assembly while the matter is being discussed. He should remain out of the assembly until notified that the discussion is ended, or he is asked to return and answer to the questions touching the matter, or is required to make a statement in regard to it. As for instance, a member may be privately interested in a matter to be had before the assembly, if he is he should not stay in while that matter is discussed. Or, a number may make statements before the assembly that are indecorous or contrary to the manners of the assembly; and these statements may be called in question either by the speaker or some other member; if they are, when the matter is fairly stated from the presiding officer the member may make a statement explanatory of his words or in exculpation of his conduct, and he should at the conclusion of his statement retire from the assembly and stay out till the matter is disposed of. Or he may ask the assembly to let him remain in while the matter is being discussed, and if the assembly grant the permission he may stay in; but if he does so stay in he should not vote, either for or against himself, or for or against the proposed action of the assembly. If he should stay in and vote, then neither the tellers, the secretary, nor the presiding officer should count his vote.

This it seems to us is or ought to be sufficiently plain for any one to understand; the principle being that in our dealing with our fellow men in an association or assembly where all are equal in rights and privileges no man should sit in judgment upon his own case, and assume to blame or exonerate himself from blame for his conduct before his fellows as a comember of the assembly; no honorable man would either try or want to.

 A BUSY FRIEND.

A few nights ago while putting our little girl to sleep we chanced to note that our watch was ticking five times every second, and of course made the mental computation that it would thus tick three hundred times every minute, or eighteen thousand times per hour. Then we took pencil and paper and began to carry out these figures, for we began to see that a man's watch was a wonderfully faithful servant and really remarkable piece of mechanism. After some minutes of "ciphering" we had on our paper the following: The watch would tick 432,000 times every day, or 3,024,000 per week. The solar year consists of 365 days, 5 hours, 4 minutes, 46.4 seconds. In this time our watch, if kept wound all the time, would make 157,771,432 ticks. These figures alone were cause for wonderment; but our mind ran along the subject still farther. A watch that loses 10 seconds a week is not a bad time-keeper, though not of the best. Yet for a watch to lose these ten seconds it would have to lose 50 ticks out of 3,024,000, or one in every 60,480. There are watches which will not vary more than ten seconds in a month of thirty days. This would be losing 50 ticks out of 12,960,000, or one in every 259,200.

Twenty years is not a long time for a good watch to run. In that time it would tick 3,155,428,640 times. If at each tick the watch should move forward one foot, or five feet per second, which is about the speed of an average pedestrian, it would travel more than once around the world in a year, or nearly twelve times around the earth in ten years. At the same rate it would go to the moon in a little less than ten years.

UTAH MORMONS IN DENMARK.

The following which appeared in the Gazette-Herald, of St. Joseph, Missouri, for February 16, will be of interest to our readers:

DENMARK IS A FIELD FOR MORMONS.

Copenhagen, Monday, Feb. 3.—The Mormons are making strong efforts to gain a permanent foothold in Denmark. It is notorious that this little country has furnished a large quota of emigrants for Utah, where there are thousands of Danish Mormons. Some of the most prominent leaders of this sect are Danes. Danish missionaries who have been sent to work in their native land have not been well received in Denmark. Most of them have been banished from the country as soon as it was discovered that they were here to gain converts to their religion and to encourage people to emigrate to Utah.

For this reason their work has often been carried on secretly. The authorities of the Mormon church seem to have decided recently that Denmark is an exceptionally good field for their operations and there are now over a hundred Mormon missionaries in this country, under the direction of a superintendent at Copenhagen. The missionaries publish an organ in this city and distribute thousands of tracts, and a piece of property in the best part of Copenhagen has been purchased on which they intend to build a Mormon temple. Money for this purpose is being collected among the Mormons in the United States. About five hundred Danes are induced to emigrate to Utah every year.

The Danish press is aroused and it is thought that steps will be taken to prevent a Mormon temple being built in the capital of Denmark and to rid the country of Mormonism and its propagandists.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

F. A. Russell wrote from Rock Island, Illinois, February 7: "Our district conference at Kewanee passed off peaceably. All were glad to have Bro. Heman with us. His sermon Sunday morning on the subject, "Laboring together with God," was one of the greatest efforts to which I have ever listened. The Holy Spirit was present to a marked degree. Am still trying to do a little, and guess that is all I shall accomplish. I hope the future has some good things in store for the church."

C. J. Spurlock writes from Woodside, Missouri, February 13, that he had held meetings at the Coin Hill Schoolhouse, in Oregon County, where he had fair attendance and interest. At time of writing he was holding meetings at Woodside. He writes: "We are instructed in the late revelation to pay the college debt. What is the matter? Are the Saints doing what they can in this regard? Let each examine himself and do what he can, as the Lord will hold us responsible."

Henry Green writes from Netawaka, Kansas, February 12: "This is the forty-third year of my acquaintance with the HERALD, and we are still on friendly terms. I have been pleased with its appearance from the beginning and appreciate every improvement made in its make-up from the first to the last."

A sister in writing to the office recently wrote: "I love the work; and while I am often treated with utmost contempt when advocating it, called 'crazy,' 'ignorant,' a 'little off,' and am told I am 'going to the Devil,' yet I care nothing about it, for I am sure I am on the right track."

R. M. Elvin writes from Farmington, Iowa, February 11, of his late work as follows: "Had a fine and interesting series of meetings for ten days at Montrose. The house was crowded every night. The people here need waking up."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Hamilton Advertiser, of Hamilton, Scotland, in its issue for January 25, contained the following item. We are indebted to Bro. J. W. Rushton for a copy of the paper. "A branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized last Sunday afternoon. Elder Joseph Arber was elected president, and James Skene, 50 Brandon Street, Hamilton, was elected secretary. This church is not in any way associated with the Utah Mormons." Bro. Rushton also sends us a copy of the Hamilton Herald for January 24, which contains about the same item as did the Advertiser.

George W. Martin in renewing his subscription from Madison, Wisconsin, addresses the HERALD as "the best little paper on earth."

W. F. Clark writes from Des Moines, Iowa, February 10, expressing appreciation of HERALD. He thinks the testimony of William Terrel, as published in HERALD of the 5th instant is valuable, and that such statements should be published in pamphlet form. He offers to contribute towards such publication.

By copy of the Journal, Montrose, Iowa, for February 7, 1902, we learn that Bro. Daniel Tripp has sold his hardware store to R. L. Reed and will move to Adrian, Illinois. The Rock Creek Branch will get a good worker in Bro. Tripp.

Volume 1, No. 1, of The Inter-Mountain Farmer and Ranchman has reached us. It is issued from the office of the Salt Lake Tribune, and as its title indicates, is devoted to the interests of agriculture in the "inter-mountain" district. It is newsy, also.

Bro. A. J. Layland is laboring at the present in Southeastern Idaho and Northeastern Utah.

Sr. Jennette Strauss, of Lamoni, Iowa, says, "Retain my copy of the paper, Gospel Standard, in Australia, as requested."

By the Chicago American of February 13 we learn that Heman C. Smith talked to the Chicago Saints on the 12th at the hall at Thirty-fifth Street and Evans Avenue.

The Lowry City Independent, which is published by Bro. W. W. Kearney, in the issue for February 14 contains a story by Sr. E. Kearney, and a Valentine poem by Sr. Mina Kearney.

The General Conference reception committee has been appointed, as follows: D. A. Anderson, C. B. Bergersen, C. I. Carpenter, C. E. Harp, W. A.

France, Isaac Carlile, Wilbur B. Paul. Their notice will probably appear next week.

Bro. E. Etzenhouser has been nominated on the Kansas City Prohibition ticket as candidate for member of Upper House. So states the Kansas City Times for February 14.

By the Omaha Bee for February 16, we note that the Beebe and Runyan Company, of Omaha, Nebraska, recently received what is said to be the largest single shipment of furniture ever made. It reached Omaha over the Northwestern Railroad in two special trains,—sixty large furniture cars. Bro. Calvin Beebe is a member of the firm of Beebe and Runyan.

The Lamoni Branch has of late been considering the merits of various lighting systems suitable for church buildings, with the idea of equipping the Lamoni church with some other means than kerosene. It will probably be either acetylene or gasoline. A committee is investigating the systems.

The Lamoni Saints are beginning preparations for the care of conference visitors. There are many things to do "before conference."

"Consecration" is giving a new tone to things throughout the church. It is being agitated widely and earnestly. Are we ready for the moves we have so long expected? The call by the Bishopric for the Saints to come forward with their "consecrations" means there are other important steps just ahead. Are we ready to take them? Those prepared now to consecrate will be the first ones ready to take the next step. Be alive, Saints, the times are portentous.

According to telegraphic reports on the 17th an earthquake has visited Schemaka, Russia, and four thousand houses were destroyed and two thousand persons, mostly women and children, lost their lives. Thirty-four villages around Schemaka were destroyed.

Bro. A. L. Newton, of Independence, Missouri, has invented a "self-closing" ink well which is one of the best of its kind we have ever seen. It is always closed except as you dip your pen. It is being put on the market by the Newton-Robinson Novelty Co., of Kansas City, Missouri, the "Robinson" part of the firm being well-known throughout the church. Those in need of something good in the ink well line should see one of the "self-closers."

Two of the leading religious journals of Chicago are agitating the question of all religious denominations uniting in a great tent campaign in Chicago this coming summer. Chicago, they think, needs a vigorous religious awakening. Verily it does.

A SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

Mountains are a perpetual source of discontent. One never sees a high peak but he wishes he might stand upon its top. They are so far, so high, so alluring, they attract and compel.

So do the heights of truth and right being, when the clouds are rifted and we catch a glimpse of their ethereal domain, invite us, and at once our present state seems sordid and lowly. Others have planted their feet upon those serene heights, why not we? David and Solomon, Saul, Joseph, Saul of Tarsus, Simon Peter, Jesus Christ—their footprints are there.

Some of them, 'tis true, could not endure the altitude, their hearts were weak and they hastened down again. Lucifer, the son of the morning, dwelt there of old, but he fell as lightning from heaven and dragged with him a third of the shining host.

But the highway remains. It mounts up, it soars above the cloud. It is triumphant, it is eternal. The Nazarene walked over it. Let us go on and make room for the innumerable host that follows. For "if I," he said, "be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me."

The foot-hills encircled in the purple haze of evening are a work of art, an enchanted region. As we approach them they bar our path. They rise up and cut off all view of the range beyond; and as we draw nearer we find that they are barren and brown, but they must be put under our feet. The real beauty is beyond many weary miles. At the most we but get increasing glimpses of it until the summit is reached: then is the culmination of faith—the unseen has become visible.

Perfection is enticing, it is the goal of every true heart; but there are obstacles. They appear hazy and dim. We approach them, they rise up and shut from view our goal, and they are barren, forbidding, detestable. But they must be put under our feet; then they become our servants, they lift us higher, and from them we essay anew our journey. They are the foundations upon which rest the heights toward which we go.

These obstacles are but the sentinels; they guard the eternal city. They withhold the insincere, the undermined. No coward can pass. Are you in earnest? No? You will do well to turn back; below in the valley are rest and shelter, music and the dance. Are you out for pleasure? then they frown upon you. Go back, you have left pleasure. Those who go up seek Happiness, and Happiness proves her suitors. Like Rachel of old she is to be labored for. Leah is yours for the asking. She is Pleasure, and her father would palm her upon you for your true love. But Happiness is given of God; she is true; she knows her worth and sits upon the heights where the unworthy never approach her.

Have you the watchword? "Let us go on to perfection." "For we look for a city not builded with hands."

As you journey up the mountain side do you hear the rushing of water? There it is, a foaming stream by the roadside. It is clear and sweet. It comes from above. Follow it and you will reach the summit.

There was a man standing by a well in a far eastern land. He talked with a woman. "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." This water also flows from above. It is pure and sweet. Follow it, and you will reach the summit.

Will you go up? Would you encamp upon the heights when the evening is falling and the winds sigh in the pine tops, when the valley is full of haze and the damp of night in the air, when the stars take up their silent watch so that "the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament sheweth his handiwork?" Would you see the morning dawn upon the mountains? The sun in splendor greeting you first of all earth's children? Aye, would you find yourself secure upon the heights eternal when the night of death draws round you and all is dim uncertainty? When the dew is on your forehead and the world recedes into shadow? Would you behold the dawn of peace and have the Son of Righteousness to greet you among the first of the resurrected?

Then heed not the throng who would detain you, who will not enter in neither permit others to enter. In vain do they tell us we have taken the wrong road. The footprints of the Nazarene are here. In vain do they strip us of home, and wealth, and position. They are but perishable goods; we are the lighter to climb. Ah, here comes one in haste: "I have dwelt upon those heights; go not up. There is naught there worth the effort. There is much here; behold, pomp and empire; worship me and they are yours." Aye, Lucifer, our Captain met thee also at the outset; in his name get thee behind us.

How large, how important seemed the affairs of the world as we mingled in them. Now look back, already they have dwindled to atoms. Their claim lay in their nearness. They stand in a better relation now. We can judge them better now as compared to the things of God. Contrasted with these cathedrals of chiseled granite how small are our palaces! Time corrodes them and they fall, a tremor of the earth and they are shattered. But these stand till the end of time. They spring out of the plain, and with a mighty sweep slope upward, league on league, till the clouds and the stars bid them cease.

Heed not the mist that seems to bar our path. As we approach it is gone. Let us in good cheer continue our journey until the voice of him who dwelt in the bush shall cease to bid us "Come up higher."

The hills of truth the world across
Are wrapped in mist, their peaks arise
And in the summit cloud are lost
Close to the everlasting skies.

The force of God lies at their base
That heaved them to the upper air.
The ages wrinkle o'er their face,
But still they soften and are fair:

To one who from the desert far,
Has wandered down by withered streams,
And sees at last his guiding star
That o'er their topmost summit gleams,

Who fain would climb their rugged height
O'er splintered rock, and jut, and crag,
Who sees o'erhead his leading light
And would not in the shadow lag,

Who strives to reach the cloud-above,
That he may view the cloud below,
And note the beauty of God's love
Upon its upper surface glow.

POINTS ON THE WAY OF TRAVEL.—NO. 5.

BY E. L. KELLEY.

FRANCE AND ITALY.

Paris is a wonderful city, filled with objects of the greatest interest, and the visitor of a few days can only make a selection of what he will see. Among the celebrated places is the Pantheon, the place of the tombs of so many of the great men of France. The building was erected for a church by Louis XV, in the year 1765, and is of the style and pattern of St. Peters at Rome. Connected with the location of the Pantheon, however, there are a number of reminiscences of a much earlier age. It was here that Clovis built a church to the Apostles Peter and Paul and connected therewith a celebrated Abbey where Ste. Genevieve, the patron Saint of Paris, was buried, A. D. 512.

At the front of the edifice is a portico the entire width of the building to which there is access by a flight of eleven steps. The portico is sustained by six fluted corinthian columns, six feet in diameter and sixty feet high. The pediment, a large figure in relief by David d' Angers, representing France in the midst of her great men to whom she is dispensing honors. On her right hand are Fenelon, Malesherbes, Mirabeau, Voltaire, Rousseau, Lafayette, Carnot, Monge, Manuel, and David the painter. On her left are soldiers of the Republic and Empire, Napoleon being foremost. On the frieze is the inscription: "Aux Grands Hommes la Patrie Reconnaissante." A grateful country to the great men. In the year 1885 Victor Hugo was buried here against the wish of the Roman Catholics, who for a long time had occupied the building as a church, and for this they moved out, and by decree of the President of France on May 24, 1885, it was restored for the purposes to which it was devoted under the first Republic.

The Jardine de Luxembourg is next visited and found to be a magnificent place of flower beds, elevated terraces, and chestnut groves. In front is the Salle du Senat, in which the Senate of France holds its sittings, but since the erection of the building in 1612 by Jacques Desbrosses for Maria de Medicis, it has been known in history as the Palais de Medicis, Palais du Consulat according as the uses were changed by kings, directors, and consuls of the nation. The exterior and interior of the building are very interesting, with ornamental and allegorical figures, and statues of Greek and Roman celebrities. The museum arranged for the kings of France is made doubly pleasant by a square upon one side containing one fourth acre of roses. A Frenchman never gets too much of the beautiful.

The church of St. Sulpice is a very fine and interesting building. The first stone was laid in the year 1665 by Anne of Austria and it was completed in 1745. Besides its extensive columns and towers and great bells it has the prestige of having been visited by one of the Popes, Pius VII conducting services there December 23, 1804. Another feature is the small Chapelle of St. Denis, who it is claimed was the first Bishop of Paris A. D. 250, when he was beheaded. Paris, as most all other great cities of Europe, has her martyrs, and as is usual, those destroyed by one generation are honored by a subsequent. Bishop Denis now takes first place—he is dead.

Leaving the Place St. Sulpice, the places of note visited are the Ecole Nationale et Speciale des Beaux-Arts, the Palais Royal, and Minister of Finances (Treasury Department), all interesting enough, but possibly an extended description would not be so to the reader.

The Hotel des Invalides, a magnificent institution under the Minister of War, is the privileged institution of disabled soldiers by wounds, and those who have served in the army for thirty years. Here the invalids are boarded, lodged, and clothed. As the visitor approaches, he reads "L' Hotel des Invalides, Le Tombeau de L' Empereur," and he readily gathers the English version: The Soldiers' Home and the Tomb of Napoleon. For while France has had her kings and emperors in great numbers, it requires but a short stay in Paris to learn that there is but one personage known in France as the Emperor, and that is Napoleon. The tomb of Napoleon is doubtless one of the finest the world has known. It is in the chapel of St. Louis and consists of an immense monolith of porphyry, weighing one hundred thirty-five thousand pounds, brought from Lake Onegal, Finland, at a cost of one hundred forty thousand francs. It is two meters broad, four and one half high, and four in length; chiseled upon it are the victories of the Pyramids, Marengo, Austerlitz, Jena, Friedland, Wagram, Moscova. Over the door of the crypt on a black marble slab are the following words, from the Emperor's will: "Je désire que mes cendres reposent sur les bords de la Seine, au milieu de ce peuple Français, que j'ai tant aimé." I wish my ashes to rest on the banks of the Seine in the midst of the French people which I love so much.

Back of the altar is noticed the tomb of Duroc, the famous general who died in 1814, and Bertrand, who was with Napoleon at St. Helena.

Leaving the chapel of St. Louis we cross the Seine over the celebrated Pont (bridge) Alexander III, the first stone of which was laid by the Czar, October 7, 1896. It is on the street leading direct from the Hotel Invalides to the Champs Elysees and is one of the finest structures of the kind in the world.

We also walked past the residence of President Loubet; but the President was absent from the city and we did not stop to interview the soldiers on guard at the gate.

The La Madeline Temple was commenced in 1764 but not finished until the time of Napoleon I. It is of Grecian form and proportions and contains a fine audience room richly ornamented and filled with interesting figures of art. It is three hundred and twenty-eight feet long by one hundred and thirty-eight wide and upon an elevated base which is ascended by twenty-eight steps, the building being surrounded by fifty-two corinthian columns, each forty-nine feet high and five and one half feet in diameter. The cost of the entire structure is said to have been thirteen million and seventy-nine thousand francs.

Prominent among the distinguished places of Paris is the Trocadero. Sufficient of interest in the various departments is to be found here to keep the traveler for weeks, so I am not able to see satisfactorily, let alone describe. The Museum of Ethnography is said to be one of the finest in the world. All nations ancient and modern in type are gathered here. Another place of learning and research is the Guimet Museum of Eastern Art and Ancient Religions. Just such a place as the theological inquirer and critic might make use of to good advantage, but the want of time postponed any examination by the writer.

Paris has been a place of interest in Europe for more than two thousand years. In fact the original settlement was by a people of which little is known. The claim is made that a wandering tribe at a remote period first settled here upon the banks of the Seine and made a permanent establishment by building huts upon an island in the river at this point, now called Ile de la Cité. This island served as a natural fortress at the time and gave protection against marauders from other bands and nations. These early people called themselves Parisii and the place Lutetia, the latter name signifying, Dwelling in the waters. This was the name when Cæsar led his armies against it, and when the people were finally conquered by the iron kingdom, Rome. The city subsequently took the name of its ancient founders, and is called Paris. The present, however, shows no marks of the ancient Parisii. The landmarks of the Romans are clearly seen in Paris and the impress of Louis XIV and Napoleon are everywhere manifest. The latter in his ideas of development and progress in civil government it appears was as far in advance of his time as he was in military science; and much of the magnificence of the city to-day is clearly traceable to the orders issued by the great general. These evidences are shown in the extension of the thoroughfares, the capacious public buildings, the immense monumental structures and the prominence given to the department of justice in governmental matters. Contrary to what may have been generally understood, the similarity of style and design in the architecture between Paris and some of the cities of the United States, and notably of Washington, is so close, as to force the thought upon the mind that our forefathers not only received the honored help of a LaFayette during their years of trouble and war, but that they also borrowed much of the chief city of the Gauls, and appropriated wisely of her treasures of art and statesmanship.

The afternoon of October 2 ended the first visit to Paris and the journey southward was continued over the Paris, Lyons, and Mediterranean Railway to Modane, a border city between France and Italy. The train proved to be pleasant enough, the afternoon fair, and a good view had of the country. The first stop was made two and one half hours after the train moved out of the depot in Paris and it seemed that few towns of special importance had been passed during the time. At one o'clock a. m. we reached Modane and all the pleasures that one can readily imagine from being awakened out of a drowsy nap in the midst of a totally strange people, who can neither understand him, nor he them, rushed in upon us at once. Another pleasing thing about it was that this new people was very curious to find out what kind of person each traveler was and just what he had in his grip bag. All were directed to quit the cars and arrange trunks, valises, etc., according to class of passenger, first, second, or third, upon a platform arranged for the purpose, and throw the same open for inspection. The Italian officer proved to be a closer examiner of baggage than the Englishman or Frenchman; he found that our grip had a double bottom, and proceeded to interview both compartments; however, very politely and fairly, seemingly never to see a single thing except that for which he was looking, and that being absent, he soon placed his mark upon the pieces and moved toward a more important victim. In France and Italy as in England the custom officers invariably call for liquors, tobacco, and cigars and in addition thereto ask if any matches. Examination over, the doors of the building were again thrown open and we proceeded to the train which stood now upon Italian territory headed for Turin. In doing all this the traveler is not without assistance if necessary, for there are always at hand plenty of persons who are anxious to bear his burdens and place him in a good seat in the train for the usual "tip," a habit as fixed in France and Italy as that of wine for the diner. If the traveler is at all dependent upon these helpers, it is to his interest to observe this national custom with a liberal hand. A lira will entitle him to a pleasant seat in the coach with convenient surroundings, while a few centissimi would only guarantee his valise being tumbled into any overcrowded dirty car.

At half past two o'clock in the morning the train moved out of the station at Modane and we soon resumed the sleepy, drowsy state from which we had been so suddenly awakened upon arrival at the frontier of the Italian Kingdom. The compartment in our car was only sufficient to accommodate six passengers as they sat upright, tete a tete, and this with the chilly atmosphere in the regions of Mount Cenis prevented much rest, and daylight was watched for with great eagerness.

When the morning rays had lit up the country one of the finest views met the vision; magnificent mountain peaks rising in every direction far above us with their sides covered with cultivated grasses, or trees loaded with nuts and fruits, and all seemingly trimmed and pruned with the greatest care, so that they would bring to the owner a bountiful harvest. The chestnut trees certainly looked prettier and prouder under their loads of burrs and fruit, bending and swaying their branches as they glistened with the dew just touched up by the sunbeams, than any the writer had ever seen in the famed States of Ohio and New York, and it was evident that the care and industry of Italian hands must have done much to bring about wealth and beauty of these mountains and hills.

The Italians, contrary to opinion previously formed, proved to be pleasant and sociable traveling companions and seemed never to think of entering or leaving the car without extending the salutations of friends upon such occasions. This was, strangely enough, a fine step in advance of some of the noted places of travel in our peerless America, and which the stranger fully appreciates. As our train reached the lower lands nearing Turin we noticed several fields of Indian corn, the first since arriving in Europe. The train was late arriving in Turin and we missed the through train to Rome and so had five hours to wait, which we improved by looking through the city of Turin. It is finely located; well built up; contains many interesting public buildings and monuments; its stores and shops fairly compare with those in other parts of Europe, and the general arrangement indicated considerable activity and industry on the part of the people. Our stopping place was the "Hotel Suisse Terminus; vis a vis La Gare Centrale." Dinner and room cost seven lira, accommodations excellent. It was fitted with electric lights and ascension; the latter in Britain is called a lift, in the United States we say elevator; in France and Italy it is the ascension. Uncle Sam is a little ahead on the name, and a full hundred per cent ahead on the construction of a house or hotel elevator.

The journey from Turin was mostly over a rough and rugged country, the road passing through numerous tunnels, some of which were many miles in length. Around and above us were steep, rocky mountains, and at a distance to the right, the Mediterranean Sea of which we often had a very fine view. The cities of Alessandra, Genoa, and Pisa were prominent on the journey, the two last named of note in the world; one for its maritime importance and the cradle place of the great discoverer, Columbus; the other for the noted leaning tower of Pisa, one of the world's seven wonders.

On the morning of October 4 our train drew near the line of dilapidated buildings and small vineyards and gardens and soon began traversing a huge circular wall of cut stone and brick, strengthened by heavy abutments which marked regular divisions, and from appearance indicated the object of the builders to have been that of defense against some formidable enemy; after crossing a river about two hundred yards in width, which we soon guessed to be the Tiber, and following the wall a short distance farther the train passed through an opening in the great wall and pulled into a large plainly constructed station building, and the announcement was made, "Roma." True enough, we had landed in what has long been termed the "Eternal City," and a view of this will be the reader's next point "on the way of travel."

FOR EDUCATION.

At times I become very despondent because of the slowness of the "people of his choice," who are expecting so much at the hand of a loving Father, and frequently the people seem to overlook that all promises are made conditionally, and that for us there can be no reward unless we faithfully comply with the conditions.

As a rule the Saints are not wealthy, and our greatest need is unity of action, and most wonderful would be the result if all would put their shoulders to the wheel, and aid in cents and dollars. A balky horse hinders the whole team. One ox that will turn in the yoke or lie down and refuse to go stops the entire procession. Thus may it prove with those who are able and still neglect or refuse to support the college.

I have been astonished to find good, intelligent, educated Saints who are opposed to Graceland College, or any other college, for that matter. I fear that if the writer of the history of "Caldwell County, Missouri," could hear some of our people express themselves upon our institution of learning and those who have so faithfully worked in the interest of the same, he would not be able to give us so good a recommendation for education as he did our brethren of 1837. Read and consider: "By far the majority of the Mormon settlers in this quarter were poor. Many of them were able to enter and improve but forty acres of land, and nearly all their houses were cabins. Like other pioneers they had come to the country to better their condition; to worship as they pleased, and to be with their brethren, were of course considerations. Every head of family was guaranteed a home, and if he was unable to buy one it was given him from the lands held by the trustees of the church. Among so many, however, there could but be skilled mechanics and artisans. There were also many persons of education and accomplishment. School-teachers were plenty and schools were numerous."—Church History, vol. 2, page 112.

I have always tried to believe that those of our church were the friends of education, and so have I constantly presented to the world. Lately I was asked by an elder who does not believe in the wisdom of sustaining or supporting Graceland: "Where did Joseph Smith get his education?" Perhaps others prompted by like expressions are withholding their financial help, in this the time of our great need. So will part the curtain and let the sunshine of truth illuminate.

HIGH SCHOOL.

In the Kirtland Temple a high school was conducted. "The 'Kirtland High School' is taught in the attic story, by H. E. Hawes, Esq., professor of the Greek and Latin languages. The school numbers from one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and forty students, divided into three departments; the classics, where the languages only are taught; the English department, where mathematics, common arithmetic, geography, English grammar, writing, and reading are taught; and the juvenile department, the last two having each an assistant instructor. The school commenced in November, and on the first Wednesday in January the several classes passed a public examination in presence of the trustees of the school, parents, and guardians, and their progress in study was found of the highest order."—Church History vol. 2, pp. 98 and 99.

This was not a public school as we now have, but a church institution, and a part of the history of our people.

Again:

HEBREW SCHOOL.

Monday morning, 4th. Met and organized our Hebrew school according to the arrangements that were made on Saturday last, as we had engaged Doctor Piexotto to teach us in the Hebrew language, when we had our room prepared. We informed him that we were ready, and our room was prepared. And he agreed to wait on us this day, and deliver his introductory lecture.

Yesterday he sent us word that he could not come until Wednesday next. A vote was then called to know whether we would submit to such treatment or not, and carried in the negative; and Elder Sylvester Smith appointed clerk to write him on the subject and inform him that his services were not wanted; and Elders William E. McLellan and Orson Hyde dispatched to Hudson Seminary to hire a teacher. They were appointed by the voice of the school to act in their behalf. . . .

Tuesday, 5th. Attended the Hebrew school, divided them into classes.

Wednesday, 6th. Attended school. . . .

Elder McLellan returned from Hudson, and reported to the school that he had hired a teacher to teach us the term of seven weeks, for three hundred and twenty dollars; that is, forty scholars for that amount; to commence in about fifteen days. He is highly celebrated as a Hebrew scholar, and proposes to give us sufficient knowledge during the above term, to read and translate the language.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 4.

This clearly indicates that it was a church institution, and that the teacher received per week what Graceland pays some of her teachers for a month.

"Friday, 8th. Spent the day in the Hebrew school, and made rapid progress in our studies."—Ibid., p. 5.

"Tuesday, 19th. Spent the day at school. The Lord blessed us in our studies. This day we commenced reading in our Hebrew Bibles with much success. It seems as if the Lord opens our minds in a marvelous manner to understand his word in the original language; and my prayer is that God will speedily endue us with a knowledge of all languages and tongues, that his servants may go forth for the last time to bind up the law, and seal up the testimony."—Ibid., p. 14.

This it seems should make friends for our Graceland, and bring us an increase of needed aid. Will it do so?

One week later we have: "Mr. Seixas arrived from Hudson to teach the Hebrew language, and I attended upon the organizing of the class, for the purpose of receiving lectures upon Hebrew grammar. His hours of instruction are from ten to eleven a. m., and from two to three p. m. His introduction pleased me much. I think he will be a help to the class in learning Hebrew."—Ibid., p. 19.

"At evening visited Mr. Seixas, in company with Presidents Rigdon and Cowdery. He conversed freely; is an interesting man."—Ibid., p. 24.

"My soul delights in reading the word of the Lord in the original, and I am determined to pursue the study of the languages until I shall become master of them, if I am permitted to live long enough. At any rate, so long as I do live I am determined to make this my object; and with the blessing of God I shall succeed to my satisfaction."—Ibid. p. 26.

The foregoing extracts from the Church History, mostly from the pen of the Seer, show how earnest the first elders of the church were in educational affairs, sparing neither time nor money that they might promote and obtain learning even by study.

Hope none will seek to put a wet blanket upon our efforts in behalf of Graceland because some suppose that the first Prophet was without a college education; for had he lived and the church prospered Graceland would have had no struggle or opposition.

Saints, between now and the April conference give us all the aid you can, that we shall be able to make a good report.

CHARACTERS WE MEET.

It takes all classes of people to make up this world, and we sometimes wonder if all sorts are not in the church as well. Sometimes people hear the first principles of the gospel, are impressed with the truthfulness thereof, join the church, and go on living their old lives as usual, not seeming to grasp the meaning in the step taken, seeming not to comprehend that the "old nature with its sins is put off, and henceforth they are to walk in newness of life."

To illustrate: We once came in contact with a person who claimed to be a Latter Day Saint, usually attended the meetings, frequently spoke in testimony meeting, invariably expressing his "desire to live right, to help the cause along, and to be more faithful in the future than in the past." Yet, should any poor brother be engaged to work for that person, the wages would be screwed down to the very last penny. Should any one buy milk, the measure would always be nearly one third short. In every transaction of a financial character this penurious disposition would be manifest.

Perhaps it would not be just to say such a one intended to be dishonest. We have all seen people in whom that tendency was part of their very natures. From childhood it had been developed, until at maturity nothing save the grace of God could uproot the evil. Whatever of sin in such transactions, had from constant repetition long since become lost to sight, and nothing but the searchlight of God's Holy Spirit could reveal to such the sinfulness of their very natures.

Here is another character we sometimes meet. It is one who has embraced the gospel, outwardly at least. He attends the meetings, pays his tithing, helps the poor, and is clean and frugal in his home. But alas, his very nature has been soured and embittered by the trials and disappointments of life, sent perchance to chasten, subdue, and purify, but instead had hardened and embittered until life is one prolonged wail of fault-finding and discontent. Nothing is right, nothing is just; the Saints do wrong, the church is not run right, the country is poor, the climate unbearable, etc., until people go out of their way to please, rather than bring down upon their heads the unmerciful tongue of such a party, who all the while is confidently expecting to be worthy to reign with Christ a thousand years upon the earth. Truly, it is like beholding our natural faces in the mirror; we go away and straightway forget what manner of people we are.

What will the Lord do with some who call themselves Saints? Can he do more than he has already done? He has given us the celestial law, and said that if we can not abide a celestial law, we can not abide a celestial glory. How many of us but expect, in one way or another, to be saved? Perhaps we think that death in some way will work a reformation; but what saith the Scriptures: "Do not suppose, because it has spoken concerning restoration that ye shall be restored from sin to happiness. Behold I say unto you, wickedness never was happiness. And now, my son, all men that are in a state of nature, or I would say, in a carnal state, are in the gall of bitterness, and the bonds of iniquity. . . . And now behold, is the meaning of the word restoration to take a thing of a natural state, and place it in an unnatural state, or to place it in a state opposite to its nature? O, my son, this is not the case; but the meaning of the word restoration, is to bring back again evil for evil, or carnal for carnal, or devilish for devilish; good for that which is good; righteous for that which is righteous; just for that which is just; merciful for that which is merciful; therefore, my son, see that ye are merciful unto your brethren; deal justly, judge righteously, and do good continually; and if ye do all these things, then shall ye receive your reward; yea, ye shall have mercy restored unto you again; ye shall have justice restored unto you again; ye shall have a righteous judgment restored to you again; and ye shall have good rewarded unto you again; for that which ye do send out, shall return unto you again, and be restored; therefore the word restoration, more fully condemneth the sinner, and justifieth him not at all." —Alma 19: 8, 9.

Then let us awake while this probationary state is granted unto us, and put off "the old man with its sins," and see that our thoughts, words, and deeds are in harmony with those of Christ in whose presence we expect soon to dwell.

VENTILATION.

The melancholy days have come,
The saddest of the year, and the great majority of the denizens of this beloved country are forced to remain largely within doors.

Now is the time to breathe plenty of good fresh air. Do not, for the sake of your health and good temper, live in a poorly ventilated house. Be particular about your sleeping apartments, and so arrange your windows to allow a plentiful supply of fresh air to come into the room, and likewise provide an exit for the foul and poisonous gases to escape.

In this connection I must speak of the ventilation of our churches. In this beautiful and unexcelled land of sunshine there are people who will actually sneeze if they see the deacon lowering a window; whereas it is easily possible to hold services all through the year with windows well opened. Many churches in this country have no stoves at all, and depend on the animal warmth which comes from the large number of human beings cooped up in the air-tight building to make it warm. This is fearful, being both dangerous to health and subversive of a religious, wide-awake spirit. A man can not be himself in a closed, ill-ventilated room.

As Reverend Doctor W. H. Layson stated before a convention of clergymen in San Francisco recently:

There is no use talking to people deadened by foul air. Put ventilators all through the roof and around the eaves. I want a window open on both sides of the pulpit. To go into an air-tight building with people who have a dozen kinds of diseases, and warm up the air with furnaces for the more expeditious propagation of disease germs, is little short of murder. I have seen people lie on the beach, on wet sand, half a day, who would sneeze the moment they saw a sexton lower the top window on Sunday morning.

People do not catch cold in well ventilated churches; almost invariably the cold is contracted by sitting and inhaling foul and poisonous air for an hour in a closed building and then going out into the open.

Pure air and the healthy condition of the body make a man practically immune from colds. Impure air and deranged digestion are the most prolific causes of colds, influenza, and pneumonia.

Who wants to preach to a dull, listless sleepy congregation, when, by proper ventilation, all may be bright and active? Let us have good, pure air. It is free, it costs us nothing, and is one of God's best gifts to man.

An advance copy of the Classification Book for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis in 1903 has been received. Fifty-three pages are required for a mere enumeration of the groups and classes of exhibits. The exhibits of the entire exposition are divided into fifteen departments as follows: education, eight groups; art, six groups; liberal arts, thirteen groups; manufactures, thirty-four groups; transportation, six groups; agriculture, twenty-seven groups; horticulture, seven groups; forestry, three groups; mining and metallurgy, five groups; fish and game, five groups; anthropology, four groups; social economy, thirteen groups; physical culture, three groups. The total shows 144 groups and 807 classes, and under each class is a possibility for a multitude of exhibits. Nothing reflects more clearly in so small a space the variety of human occupations or more comprehensively the broad scope of the great exposition which the people of St. Louis are preparing for next year. A place is provided for every conceivable product worthy of exhibition and all nations of the world have been invited to take part. Acceptances have been received from many. The work of construction is progressing earnestly. The buildings will have an aggregate floor space of 200 acres and the grounds a total area of 1,000 acres. The money now available aggregates $15,000,000, besides $1,000,000 appropriated by the State of Missouri and various liberal sums from other States. The Classification and the Rules and Regulations of the Exposition will be mailed free on application to the Director of Exhibits, World's Fair, St. Louis.

Original Poetry.

Sometime I'll Understand.

I do not know nor understand,
Ofttimes I can not see my way;
I can not fully comprehend
Why God should take my child away.

Sometimes I doubt that God is love,—
Sometimes I can not feel to pray.
Sometimes I think 'twas cruel fate
That tore my darling child away.

I raise my hands toward heaven's dome,
I call her name in every sigh;
No answer comes, I only hear
The echo of my wailing cry.

Oft when I think of her that's gone,
And of the grief of passing years,
Or seem to hear her song again,
I can not see for blinding tears.

And when I kneel beside the grave
Where rests the cold and silent clay,
"Thy will, O God, not mine, be done!"
'Tis oh! so hard for me to say!

But after all it may be best,
I can not know the Master's will;
If though I grieve she better is,
I am content, my murmuring still.

Sometimes the light of coming morn
I see shine o'er my lonely way;
In dreams I hear an angel's voice,
Which comforts me while yet I stay.

I do not know nor understand
Why on me such afflictions fall;
But when the Master comes again,
Sometime I'll understand it all.

Letter Department.

MALHEUR, Oregon, February 5.

Editors Herald:—On January 13 Bro. A. M. Chase and I left my home (Condon, Oregon) for Hood River, where Bro. Chase had signed articles to meet a Reverend J. W. Jenkins, Christian, in joint discussion, upon the propositions, first, that each church was identical in faith, organization, doctrine, and practice with the church left perfected by the apostles; second, that the writings of Joseph Smith, with history, prove him to have been a false prophet; third, was the Book of Mormon of divine origin. Six nights were devoted to the first two propositions in which one could only say Bro. Chase had a good opportunity to preach to Rev. Jenkins' congregation. In fact, he was accused of so doing, and he did it effectually and in a gentlemanly manner. Rev. Jenkins never once alluded to the setting up of the "Christian Church" under Alexander Campbell, but contented himself with showing the New Testament church, then denying its working power to-day. Rev. J. B. Lister, of Eugene, Oregon, acted as moderator for Rev. Jenkins the first week, and the closing night of their church propositions desired permission to ask each disputant a few questions. Permission being granted, his point was to show that the Christian Church must be the true church because it had over a million members. He arose and asked: Mr. Jenkins, do you know whether or not Alexander Campbell claimed supernatural powers? No, sir, he did not. Mr. Chase, do you know whether or not Joseph Smith claimed any supernatural powers? Yes, sir, he did. Mr. Jenkins, how many members has the Christian Church? About one million three hundred thousand. Mr. Chase, how many members has your church? Just enough to fill the pattern laid down by Jesus Christ wherein he said, "Narrow is the way and straight the gate that leads to life, and few there be that find it;" we have about forty-five thousand. But, sir, he also said, "Broad is the way that leads to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat."

On the Book of Mormon, "Moroni's rent coat," "it came to pass," "more part," were his chief stock in trade. He said Joseph Smith went to bed and revealed, and that he could have a spell of revealing whenever he desired to.

When Bro. Chase would speak, the congregation would groan and laugh; and stamp and cheer when their man said anything low or vulgar about our people. One feature was found out too late to use in the debate; that was the Rev. Jenkins writing three letters to President Joseph Smith, as Investigator, and having received answers that did not suit him dared read only one, and that was the one on baptism for the dead, thinking to poison the minds of the people against us. But he failed even in that.

While there were no baptisms as a direct result of the debate, our labors at Hood River will yet result in good to the cause. Bro. Chase is putting in the time between Hood River and Portland until after the district conference at Hood River, when he will start homeward.

Bro. Will Chapman and I are just starting in at this place, where Brn. Holt, Harris, and Chase have sown the seed in days gone by. We were kindly met by the Saints here, and later on will report results. Until then, pray for us.

McDowell-Bridwell Debate.

Discussion by the above-named gentlemen was held in the Disciple church at McArthur, Ohio, commencing Monday evening, January 6, and continuing twelve sessions of two hours each. Elder McDowell affirmed the divine origin of the Book of Mormon and the respectability of its teachings, for eight sessions. Elder Bridwell denied. Elder Bridwell affirmed the scripturalness of the Disciple or Christian Church for four sessions, while Elder McDowell denied. The same propositions were canvassed the same number of sessions, and, in same order, at Creola, five miles distant, in the Saints' chapel, beginning January 20. At the McArthur debate, a Mr. Darby, lawyer, acted as moderator for Mr. Bridwell, Elder S. W. L. Scott for Bro. McDowell, while the prosecuting attorney, Mr. Edwards, presided as chairman. The debate began, continued, and ended, on a high plane. Character was not en evidence. The work of Joseph Smith was on trial. Mr. Bridwell is a recognized scholar of shrewdness and ability. And it seems that the lesson is being slowly learned, that principles should be investigated, from their advocates. The theory of the opposition on the first proposition is, Joseph Smith possessed Boudinot's work, also Ethan Smith's work, both of which treat the subject of Israel in America, and Caleb Atwater's condensed idea of archæology, and from these the theory of the Book of Mormon was spun. It was argued by Mr. Bridwell that Ethan Smith and Boudinot quoted the same prophecies which are used by Latter Day Saints and their works antedate Joseph Smith. He had the very air laden with "buried cities, extinct civilizations, Indians descendants of the ten lost tribes," etc., at the time Joseph was concocting the Book of Mormon. He read recommendations of Ethan Smith's work from points all around Palmyra, New York, circling Joseph Smith, but Mr. Bridwell did not, nor could he, prove that Joseph Smith had the book in his possession. Solid matter presented by Elder McDowell pulverized this theory. He informed his opponent that the theory advanced was subversive of all previous theories, in that it makes Joseph Smith at the age of fourteen years, interested in and developing advanced literary and scientific facts, beyond the ability of the scholarly men of his day, instead of being the lazy, stupid, hat-peeping, money-digging, sheep-thief, ignoramus and fraud as he is so generally characterized. The theory of the opposition makes Joseph Smith a literary man with a library consisting of books of archæological, theological, ethnological, geological, and scientific comprehensiveness, worth thousands of dollars, bought with the money (?) taken in by his mother, washing for other people! If, then, so highly educated and polished, what becomes of such charges as "ignorant," "stupidity," "superstitious," etc.?

But to show points of dissimilarity between Boudinot, Ethan Smith, Atwater, et al., the following was exhibited on a chart and hung on the wall.

POINTS OF DISSIMILARITY.

Boudinot.	Book of Mormon.
Ten Tribes.	Remnant of one tribe, Joseph.
At Persia and Media, A. D. 72.	Left Jerusalem 600 B. C.
Came by Behring Strait.	Indian and Pacific Oceans.
Came to N. W. part N. A.	Came to West Coast S. A.
Migration Southward.	Migration Northward.
500 years enrote.	8 years and a few months.
A land where never man had dwelt.	Remains of numerous hosts found.
People had no arts, sciences.	Many arts and sciences.
People had no letters.	Reformed Egyptian and Hebrew.
Ethan Smith.	Book of Mormon.
A savage race.	Civilizations.
Lost God's word.	Brought God's word with them.
From Mediterranean Sea.	From Jerusalem via Indian Ocean.
In N. E. direction.	In S. E. direction.
No communion with God.	Choice things of heaven.
Atwater.	Book of Mormon.
No bones of horses have been found.	Horses on this land.
No iron used (?).	Iron in abundance.
Savages for 2,500 years.	Civilizations.
No learning.	"Learning of the Jews."
No morals.	Full code of morals.
No virtues.	Bible system of worship.
No wealth.	Riches—Silver and Gold.
No military progress.	Skilled in military tactics.

This, to say the least, was a poser, and I doubt if the opposition will deny the confusion which its explanation entailed. Our opinion is that this theory of opposition to the Book of Mormon is the coming one, and we give the ministry the benefit of this chart, and per consequence, all will see just how Joseph Smith copied (?) the theory into (?) the Book of Mormon. Elder McDowell presented a par excellent argument on archæology, and while the opposite side admitted the finding of buried cities, of course the semi-barbarous nations, conquered by the Spaniards, were the architects. While admitting the finding of mastodon bones (species cureloms and cumoms) they were here in the glacial periods 8,000 B. C. Elder McDowell gave heavy blows along here, and the theory of evolution wilted. Mr. Bridwell made a very plausible theory. The most recent archæologist's reports were introduced by him, but McDowell showed the inconsistencies and contradictions of the witnesses introduced. At first, Mr. Bridwell's authorities neutralized the Priest-Stephens-Catherwood and Baldwin evidence, but by the time Bro. McDowell concluded his analysis the star witnesses did not vary from the fundamental facts as set forth by the prior archæologists.

Mr. Bridwell presented the usual objections found inside the Book of Mormon such as "grammar," "synthesis," etc. Stated that the Book of Mormon came in contact nowhere with Bible history, which is a chief element in the historicity and the establishment of the genuineness of the book. But here he runs with a full head of steam in Charybdis, to avoid Scilla, for the second colony left Jerusalem 600 years B. C. according to King James Chronology, and in obedience to prophetic command (see Jeremiah 48th and 49th chapters). Stated that the Mormon God couldn't speak plain English after fixing the translating machine for Joseph. That God deprived Joseph of the first point in competent evidence to establish the divinity of the origin of the Book of Mormon, viz., the production of the plates. But McDowell asked if withholding the plates made him infidel to the Book of Mormon will my opponent turn infidel to the Bible because God deprived Moses of the first point in competent evidence, viz., the tables of stone? Numerous objections of similar kind were offered by Mr. Bridwell but they all faded away like dew before the sun.

The term "synagogue" was used too early in the Book of Mormon times. Was more recent; but one citation from Psalms of David, and one from the Columbian Encyclopedia, gives us the institution as far back as the times of Ezra.

The usual prophecies establishing and strengthening the claims of the book were offered by Elder McDowell with splendid effect. Bridwell seemed oblivious to the true interpretation of Scripture. "The midst of the earth," however, was "Palestine" (?), and Isaiah 29 received its accomplishment at the destruction of Jerusalem." "The marvelous work and a wonder" was "commenced there and then." The book spoken of is a representative idea, simply "the vision of all is become as the words of a book," etc.

I should have noted that on archæology, Mr. Bridwell quoted from Haynes, Fisk, and Windson, relative to the civilizations on the American Continent as being "semi-barbarous," but these quotations contained nothing new, as the Book of Mormon civilizations antedate the civilizations of the Columbian Epoch to which they refer. The Smithsonian Institute was en evidence. Major Powell was a star witness of Mr. Bridwell's until McDowell proved by him that "iron" was used in ancient America, and gives a "cut" of a large piece found in a mound. (See Powell's Report of 1883-4 as Director of Bureau.) After that Mr. Powell was not so prominent with the opposition. 'Twas an interesting discussion and very largely attended. Brother McDowell built solidly and the bulwark was unassailable.

On the second proposition, during which Elder Bridwell affirmed the legitimacy of the Disciple Church, or, rather his interpretation of the Campbellian Reformation, to the heirship of the true church of nineteen hundred years ago, the interest was intense. Mr. Bridwell tried to identify, but it was apparent that the cloth did not contain sufficient material to stretch up to the old original pattern. Hence McDowell, with theological pencil, inscribed upon its surface, "Tekel," weighed it in the balances and found it "wanting." And when Mr. Bridwell courted the favor of all denominations, after he had denied that the Church of Jesus Christ was (is) an ecclesiasticism, McDowell went after him with Campbell's denunciation of "all sects," and such epithets used by Campbell, as, "mother of harlots," "adulterous brood," etc. Mr. Bridwell drifted away from the question under discussion and began to talk about the organic development of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Brother McDowell seemed to be at home, and constructed the church of God so strongly, and compared Campbell's pretended restoration by piece with the original design, and marked the wide discrepancies so graphically that the most unlettered should have seen it.

Elder Bidwell often referred to the writer's article in Glad Tidings, "Alexander Campbell's Restoration," quoting therefrom, and he stated he would love to canvass the questions in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana with me. Now if his eyes chance to fall upon this writing, he will understand that we believe in and have adopted the "open door policy," and the archway spanning the Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio lines, is emblazoned with "Welcome," "esto perpetua."

The debate will do good. Fine expressions were heard for our side. There are a grand class of Saints in that country, and the "quarry from whence they were hewn" will doubtless furnish more splendid building material.

Ever willing to give reasons for hope entertained,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, February 8.

Dear Herald:—How my heart rejoices as I read of the good work the brethren are doing in the field! May God bless them, and the good work go on!

On October 6 last Brn. S. D. Condit and Joseph Wheeler organized a Sunday-school in Blackfoot, nine miles southwest of our home. The writer was chosen superintendent. Have tried hard to keep the little spark ablaze, praying God for wisdom, strength, and knowledge. We have prayer-meeting the first and second Sundays of each month, in charge of Bro. Joseph Wheeler.

Sickness in the family, stormy weather, and long distance have prevented me from attending the Sabbath-school lately; but I am hoping and praying for better health and good weather in the near future, that I may be able to do my part of the work.

I pary for the good work to go on.

FRANCES HEATON.

RED OAK, Iowa, February 12.

Editors Herald:—I returned from a place called Morton's Mills to this place Monday, the 10th. Near this place lives Bro. and Sr. H. O. Redfield and family. Sr. Redfield is a sister to the Lambert brothers. We held a series of meetings there, and notwithstanding the weather was very unfavorable, being cold and the snow deep and badly drifted, we had fair attendance. Not so many old folks, but the house was nearly full nightly, consisting mostly of the young, who gave good attention, but were a little noisy after the close of services. We had excellent liberty and a goodly degree of the Spirit and feel satisfied that some good was done. Bro. Redfield and wife expressed themselves as being benefited greatly, even if no one else was. May God bless them for their hospitality! We hope to return, or that others may, and baptize all the boys and girls that are old enough, with others. Bro. I. M. Smith did good work here last winter among them, and is highly spoken of by all. Bro. Carlson also preached some out there.

I am holding cottage meetings for a few nights here, mostly for the benefit of the few Saints and a few of their friends who attend, who listen attentively and approve of some of our doctrine and are very sociable and friendly. We hold our meetings in the house of Sister Jennie Stepheson, who is ever on hand to do what she can for the work, and make it pleasant for the elder and share with him the comforts of her home. Bro. and Sister Ed Ware and family live here also, and are ready to do what they can.

Found Sister Merritt sick in bed, but hope she may soon recover.

We labored in Hamburg and Bartlett after the holidays, having fair liberty.

There are many good, noble souls in all these places who will be eternally saved.

Expect to go to Shenandoah from here. I am now well and feeling well in the work, enjoying a portion of the good Spirit, and praying earnestly for the advancement of this glorious cause and shall labor to this end in both word and deed, as God shall spare my life and bless me with powers of body and mind. May God speed the work!

ATIMONAN, Tayafas Province, P. I., Dec. 28.

Editors Herald:—It has been over three years since I have had the privilege of listening to a gospel sermon, having been in the service of the Government since January, 1899. I find the army to be a very hard place for one "to keep his religion" with many things to tempt, to allure one away from that which is pure, holy, and upright; but I have tried to be faithful and prayerful; and inasmuch as I have been diligent in keeping the commandments of God just to that extent I have been blessed. I believe that this experience is in harmony with the experience of every honest heart that has ever accepted the restored gospel. When we are faithful we are blessed; when careless or negligent we suffer for it and fall short of some of the blessings that would have been ours to enjoy had we been more faithful.

It has been nearly nine years since I embraced the gospel. I have never at any time felt like laying it aside, and it is just as precious to me now as then. My heart is in the work and it is my desire to be more useful in the future than in the past.

I have been in the Philippine Islands over fifteen months, but will return to the United States in a few weeks. I hope to arrange matters so that I can come home by way of Lamoni and stop over for General Conference. I ever pray for Zion's welfare.

WILLIAM A. DAMON,

KAITANGATA, New Zealand, December 23.

Editors Saints' Herald:—We in New Zealand are still striving to let the people hear the gospel. But we have been hindered by heart disease, but are over it now, and hope to sound the gospel trumpet in the near future and let the people see the difference between the church we represent and the Salt Lake people. Two of them called to see me. We had a long talk with them, and wanted them to meet us on church succession, polygamy, or any other points we differ on, but they would not. I invited them to preach on the street or in a hall, but they would not. I never thought they were so little posted in church history. They seem to rely on all they hear from their leaders, and not on history. When I told them of Adam-god and blood-atonement they would not believe me. I let them read it for themselves, and said I had heard it taught in their church when I was a member. I told them I knew as much of their teachings as they did, for I had been a member in their church; and as for polygamy, it was a creature of their own making and nowhere taught in the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants in the time of the two Martyrs, and it was in 1853 that it was first taught by them. I would have had them stop all night with me, but Sr. Dixon had to undergo an operation the next day and we could not have them.

Sr. Dixon has been a great sufferer this long time and is still suffering, as the operation has done her no good. But we hope the Lord will look in mercy on her and restore her to health and strength.

We thought there would have been some one sent here before this, but we will try to keep the camp-fire burning till help comes. We have a good chance now if any one of the ministry comes, for we have Saints from south to north and on the west coast now, so the missionary can have a home in the various places. We have a home for one here, and we think the best way is to work from house to house. We can do more that way than any other. We will have to district the field and get at them that way. I have done considerable house to house work, and I find it is the best way.

We hope to see some one sent here soon, so who will be the first to volunteer to come? It is a grand country to live in. It is not too hot or cold, and it has a noble lot of people to bring to the Lord. It will take a hard fight at first, but I had the worst to pass here, and now the people can see the difference between us. The Mormons, though, have only two hundred white people in all New Zealand, and only fifty in the south, so we can work and let the Master give the increase. We hope to see the day when Bro. Kaler will come here. He is the man for this mission, and I know he will make the work move along. Come! Can we let this field be lost for the want of some one coming here? I have to work for the bread that perishes. I think we have many young men in the church who would be benefited by coming here.

May God spread his work, is my prayer.

THOMAS DIXON.

BEDISON, Missouri, February 8.

Saints' Herald:—Bro. Joseph S. Snively and I have put in a busy month just passed trying to find openings to preach the word. We had a fine interest near McFall. Bro. J. D. Stead had put in some good work there in December; baptized one. The smallpox ran us out, and since then we have found it at almost every point we have tried to hold services. This has made against our success. We just closed our meeting at Guilford, and commenced at the church in Bedison last evening; but it is so cold and there is so much snow that we can not hope for a big crowd.

NORMAN, Oklahoma, February 10.

Dear Saints:—I am here at the bedside of my mother, who is very sick and weak. She is in critical condition and we ask an interest in your prayers that she may be blessed and that I may be permitted to return to my field.

There are more calls in the Little Sioux District than I can fill. May we live so as to be worthy to be called the children of God.

W. A. SMITH.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, February 6.

Editors Herald:—The Saints in Cleveland are still maintaining their ground. At present Bro. Cushman is at the wheel.

The Saints of the Kirtland District have nobly sustained me as Bishop's agent, and have my sincere thanks. The success attained by prompt and many sacrifices alone has enabled me to fulfill my duty. Any other servant could have done the same with such support. I am truly grateful for all the Lord has done for me. Continue, dear Saints, in well-doing. In the next three months it will be harder to raise funds in this district; so let us all make an extra effort if possible to meet the demand so the elders can remain at their posts with assurance that their families at home are supported.

Reports from Brn. Ebeling and Baldwin state that a branch has been organized at Byesville, Ohio, with twenty-four members. Good prospects. Kirtland, the old landmark, is not dead, but is awake night and day.

May God have mercy on those who need and deserve it. It is required of us to forgive all men. Let us do our part and let the Lord do his. I have hopes of ultimate success.

EBEN MILLER.

PITTSBURG, Kansas, February 3.

Editors Herald:—The Pleasant View, Kansas, Branch has been partaking of a spiritual feast for several weeks through the ministrations of God's servants. District President J. T. Davis preached for us from January 4 to 7, insisting upon unity and intelligence in the efforts of both officers and laity, that we might exemplify our claims as true, and bring glory to God, and success to his work.

Bro. F. C. Keek came January 13 and preached two weeks. His preaching was of the missionary type, and quite an interest was aroused. He gave a series of excellent lectures on prehistoric America, which was appreciated by Religio workers.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard came January 28 and preached until the 2d inst. He presented, in his matter-of-fact and forcible manner, the necessity of a consecration to God of our entire being. Our efforts temporarily, mentally, and spiritually should be offered as a sacrifice at the feet of our Master in order that we may obtain eternal life. The law was presented in such an admirably unassuming and comprehensive way that all who heard him who have reasonable intelligence are left without excuse, and if we do not comply with the demands it will be a condemning witness against us in the judgment.

The preaching of these brethren was inspirational and made a marked impression in the minds of their hearers. Shall I say these brethren who have preached so many years are better preachers now than when we last heard them? Why, certainly we will develop our talents by constant effort under the wonderfully powerful rays of the light of truth until we have grown unto perfection.

We realize more each day the simplicity and grandeur, the beauty and humility, the depth and comprehensiveness of the gospel. The more we come in contact with the saving power of the law of life the more we see its indispensableness to success in this and the life to come.

May heaven help us to live humbly, that our minds may be susceptible to impressions of truth from every source, that we may utilize every facility ordained by our Lord to make us fit subjects for his kingdom.

I rejoice in the gospel of Christ and value the privilege that we have of being laborers with God for the good of his people. God has given each one of his people talents to be employed in a way to benefit all, and may we be meritorious in the use of the talents we possess that we may gain other talents, and thus become greater factors in the hands of our God for the building up of his kingdom!

MOLLIE DAVIS.

LEOTI, Kansas, January 19.

Editors Herald:—Your valuable paper comes to me laden with precious fruits—all the preacher I have, in this desert, for so it seems to me to be; still, I rejoice that so many are blessed with this pure gospel. One, very dear by the ties of relation and true love of worthy association, lives in Montrose, South Dakota; his name is Martin A. Butterfield, also is State Attorney. I really would like to have an elder go and see him. He is well educated. I truly should like to have him in the fold, if not there, as well as many more of my relatives, most of whom live in New York State, Chautauqua County; they are the Burnham family. My name was Mary E. Butterfield, so if any of mine in the faith read this they may know me.

The nearer we live to God the brighter the hope. Pray for me that I may be faithful. We hope some day an elder will find us. We live sixteen miles southwest from Leoti now; but would meet any who would come, if notified in time to get the notice.

MARY E. TURNER.

NASHUA, Iowa, February 13.

Editors Herald:—It is with gladness we read of the progress of this latter-day work in other parts. Elders J. S. Roth and J. R. Sutton have been holding meetings in a small place called Bradford, about two miles from Nashua, with good interest from the start. Bro. Sutton being called home, Bro. Roth continued the meetings and the interest seemed to increase. Some desired Elder Roth to continue another month; but he had to leave, and promised to come back if he could. There never has been much preaching done in this part of the district, and we think it would be a good field to work in. When Bro. Roth closed the meetings regrets were heard on all sides. We are the only Saints living near here, but we think when an elder comes again there will be a number ready for baptism. We have been very lonesome since moving here without the privilege of meeting with Saints.

May God bless all of his Saints!

SR. IDA HORNE.

[The following letter was handed us by Bro. E. L. Kelley.]

SAN JOSE, California, February 10.

Dear Brother Kelley:—Though busy in debate I am desirous of expressing to you my great satisfaction over your two articles on the application of the temporal law, in this new year. Truly the light of God is being furnished as the church moves on.

Seven sessions of our debate in the Christian church are past; nine to follow. Boasting is vain, foolish, and ruinous; but to state facts from the realization of our gospel privileges and in honor to God our source of strength I believe permissible. Attendance is large, interest good. Some outsiders deeply interested. Saints happy, calm, fervent. Papers almost silent. Why? Heretofore they have given an occasional synopsis of Reverend Hazel's sermons. Is it possible they can not hold him up now and do not want to the other fellow? The managing editor of the leading paper, the Mercury, after a nice friendly chat at his desk before the debate, asked me for a historical article. I wrote and handed him one of about five hundred words or five squares, but it did not appear. Bare notices of the debate appear. "So wags the world." Reverend Hazel is strong in some points, weak in others. Is a good mud-slinger. Rehashes Braden and his ilk. He has made the mistake made so often before that we are "mostly ignoramuses," "gypsies," from the Seer down.

Some surprises he meets make him look and act queer. Braden-like, last night he reeled off twenty-seven questions, handed me copy, demanded immediate answer. I made a general review, then read and answered all in less time, I actually believe, than it took him to present them. My review was; first, they were entirely out of place, as it was an oral debate. Any disputant might write enough to consume an opponent's entire time. Second, a large part were issues presented in my affirmative he refused to give attention in their time. Third, another large part treated on issue yet to be in his church question. Fourth, the rest were entirely out of place. Having answered them I dashed them aside with: "You should have presented these to some school boy who had not been very much at school."

He is going down fast and hard. My object has been and is to make saving truth clear and plain so none may mistake. Bro. Blair is my moderator.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 13.

Editors Herald:—In the latter part of November we held a series of meetings at Wellsford, Kansas. We had good crowds and interest, and had the pleasure of leading five into the waters of regeneration. One man and wife, quite well-to-do farmers, from the Missionary Baptist Church, one lady from the Christian Church, and another man and his wife who belonged to no church.

It seems our success in getting such a good hearing, and baptizing those above-mentioned caused our friends of the Christian Church to be a little envious; so their minister, E. M. Crow, sent me a challenge to meet him in public debate. We arranged three propositions, one on the Book of Mormon, and one on each church, worded in the usual manner. We agreed to commence debate January 6, devoting four sessions, of two hours each to each proposition, the affirmative to have the closing speech. We met in a large two-room schoolhouse, which has a sliding partition throwing both rooms into one, making the most commodious building in town. It was the first religious debate ever held in that part of the country, and every one seemed anxious to hear it. Some came from five to fifteen miles every night. The crowd commenced to gather about sundown to be sure of a seat.

Several Christian ministers attended, but we were alone as far as human help was concerned. We had to select an outsider for moderator. Yet we are pleased to say the Lord was present by his Spirit and did not permit his work to suffer.

The debate closed on Saturday night, January 18; and just before we dismissed my opponent announced his services for the next day in the Christian church, and we announced services in the schoolhouse where we held the debate. The result was that we had the entire crowd with the exception of a few members of the Christian Church who attended their own services. It was certainly a little embarrassing to the Christian Church to think they had challenged for debate and when it was over we had the crowd on our side. We held services several evenings after the debate; and although the weather was stormy we had a good crowd each evening, and quite a number expressed their intention to unite with the church in the near future.

We have sold eighteen copies of the Book of Mormon at that place; several in November during our meetings, but most of them during the debate.

Elder Crow has practiced law long enough to be quite a twister to make a point. He resorted some to ridicule, but as a whole he was much more of a gentleman than we usually meet in debate. We were good friends all through, and he invited me to eat dinner with him after the debate was over.

Elder I. N. White requested us to go to Miami, Indian Territory, as Clark Braden was advertised to deliver a series of lectures against "Mormonism," as he calls it. I arrived at Miami a week before the lectures commenced, so held meeting in the Saints' church each evening, to about all the people the little church would hold. There is no organization of the Saints at Miami, but their little chapel is a credit to them. It was dedicated last July.

Elder Braden arrived Monday, February 3, and at once called a council of his brethren, where he had everything cut and dried to suit his purpose, and in the evening before commencing his lecture he had the congregation sanction by vote what he and his brethren had done during the day. He was anticipating something, as Bro. White had challenged him, the Saturday night previous, at the close of the Thayer, Missouri, debate to repeat said debate at Miami. So he had everything fixed up ahead of time to keep him out of the fight and yet not show the white feather. The following circular will explain conditions as they were:

HAS BRADEN BACKED OUT?

The Christian Church at Miami, Indian Territory, secured Clark Braden, their so-called champion, to lecture against what he terms "Mormonism." Braden comes, and in his first lecture boasts of being the best qualified adversary of the Mormon faith; of how he would skin them and tan their hides; of how Mormons would debate with other men, but not with I, Clark Braden.

Monday night after Braden had made these boastful assertions, we challenged him to repeat the debate just closed the Saturday previous at Thayer, Missouri, between Braden and White. The propositions debated were:

1. Resolved that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in organization, faith, and practice is in harmony with the New Testament. Latter Day Saints affirm, Clark Braden denies.

2. Resolved that the Christian Church in organization, faith, and practice is in harmony with the New Testament. Clark Braden affirms, Latter Day Saints deny.

All persons of sense regard these propositions fair and honorable giving each opponent an equal show to prove, if he can, his respective church of being in harmony with the New Testament in all of its doctrines and claims. But, no, Braden positively refused to repeat the Thayer debate at Miami, and make another attempt to "skin and tan our hides." But, no, Braden had not forgotten that it was the other fellow that got skinned and tanned at the Thayer debate.

But, now, Braden speaks through his committee, who dare not vary a word from Braden's concocted scheme he puts up to dodge repeating the Thayer debate, in order to cover up his crushing defeat he met with in that debate. Braden now comes through his committee and says: We will not debate church propositions; we want to get at the fountain head of Mormonism; at Joseph Smith.

Now, to leave this boaster without an excuse to dodge a debate, we then challenge Braden, through his committee, to meet us in debate upon the following propositions in their order.

1st. Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God? Latter Day Saints affirm, Clark Braden denies.

2d. Is the Christian Church (commonly called Campbellites) in fact the church of God, harmonizing in faith, doctrine, organization and practice, with the church of Christ set up by divine authority eighteen hundred years ago? Clark Braden affirms, Latter Day Saints deny.

Braden and White have debated these propositions five times at different places, and White has challenged Braden to meet him upon these propositions in every town, hamlet, and city where Braden attempts to lecture against the Reorganization. This challenge holds good, the Lord willing, during White's natural life.

In affirming Joseph Smith it has always given Braden a full sweep at the Book of Mormon; at the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; at Smith's Inspired Translation of the Bible, and all of Smith's revelations. In debating the Christian Church, and its claims to being the church of God in fact, is fully examined. Braden in his attempt to dodge these clear cut issues, doctored up, cut out, added to, and transposed the propositions, the very thing his opponents had told him they would not allow. Then after all this was done, Braden on Thursday night after the lecture announced: "We have accepted the challenge of the Latter Day Saints, but they have backed out of their own propositions." We knew this was false; hence we asked Braden's committee to verify the truthfulness of Braden's assertion by their signature, which they (like sensible men) refused to do. Therefore, we now repeat our challenges to Braden as is found in the body of this circular. We challenge Braden through their committee, to meet either set of these propositions just as they have been debated before, both in the order they appear, and in their exact wording, with the same rules governing when debated at other times and places.

February 7, 1902.

We listened patiently each evening during the week to Braden's tirade of abuse against the Saints. The Christian Church had voted to leave all arrangements for a debate to a committee appointed for that purpose; yet every night Braden would spend some time telling the audience what they were willing to do, stating his propositions, etc.; and several times we asked permission to make a statement, but was told to "sit down," and go to the committee if we had anything to say. But we told him he was making his challenges publicly and we would like the audience to hear our side; but "sit down" was the only answer. The lectures were delivered in the Christian church, and they had good crowds; but they did not seem satisfied. So on Saturday, February 8, they had the town billed that Braden would lecture in the opera house the next day at three p. m. Subject, "Did Joseph Smith give a revelation in favor of polygamy, and did he teach and practice polygamy?" Bro. R. M. Peck, who is willing to do anything in his power to advance truth, saw this circular and at once suggested that we secure the opera house and reply to Braden Sunday evening. His suggestion was approved and he secured the house for Sunday evening and as much longer as we might need it.

Saturday evening before the lecture we asked the chairman, who is their regular preacher, if he would not permit us to announce our meetings for Sunday. He refused. Then we asked him if he would read an announcement if we would write it. "No, sir!" was the reply. So we had to go out on the street and announce to the people as they came out.

Sunday, three p. m., Braden was greeted with a good crowd. He quoted from Nauvoo Expositor, Laws and Fosters, Rigdon, Wm. Smith, Saints' Herald and other witnesses. Just as the "Amen" of the benediction was said, we mounted a seat, gained the attention of the audience, and announced, "Elder White will reply to this lecture this evening at 7: 30 in this building. Come hear the other side, and judge for yourselves." This announcement came like a clap of thunder from a clear sky to our Christian friends, but the result was all we could ask. We got the crowd (although Braden was to speak in the Christian church the same evening) and Brother White spoke with good liberty for one hour and a half, reviewing Braden's witnesses, and bringing evidence from the other side, closing with Judge Philip's decision on that point. At the conclusion of the service I do not think there were many in that large audience that believed Joseph Smith was a polygamist.

The following evening Brother White answered some objections Braden had made against the Book of Mormon, also brought much evidence from an archæological and Biblical standpoint in its favor. He spoke with good liberty for an hour and a half, and every one seem interested and pleased. Braden spoke same evening in Christian church, but we had the crowd. His subject was "The character of the Smith family." I think our Christian friends felt somewhat chagrined that they had sent so far for a man to lecture against us, and then we had captured their crowd. This concluded Braden's lectures, making eight in all.

The next evening we had the opera house about full. Brother White spoke for an hour and a quarter on the "Inspired Translation," showing Braden's objections were not well taken, and many texts that made good sense in the Inspired were inconsistent in King James' translation. When he got through the writer spoke for an hour on the subject, "A Flash-light View of the Christian Church," showing the authority that brought it forth and comparing it with the perfect church of the New Testament by a number of illustrations that brought loud applause from the audience. Although we had kept them there for two hours and a quarter they did not seem weary in the least.

We feel confident that Elder Braden's visit to Miami did the Christian Church more harm than good, and that the Saints have more friends than ever before. We left the few Saints there rejoicing in the gospel, and felt in our hearts to thank God for the message of truth revealed in these latter days. May its light continue to shine is my desire.

Dear Herald:—I am also one of the isolated ones; and were it not for the HERALD, which I take for myself and husband, the Autumn Leaves for my daughter Essie, and the Hope for nine-year-old daughter Lennie, it would indeed be lonesome. We all belong to the church except the youngest girl and my husband. I am reading the lectures on Church History, to him, and he seems to be interested. There is quite a good deal he don't understand. I read what I can and explain in my weak way to get him to understand. Pray that light, knowledge, and wisdom may be given him that he may accept the truth ere it is too late.

My faith in this work never falters. I would not give up my belief in the true gospel for anything else or any other religion in this world. I realize the need of being near where some good branch is established more than I ever did before, for myself and family. The elders get our way about once a year; consequently we miss the gospel teachings so much needed by the Saints. I would there were a branch of the church established here, and pray that there may be in the near future. I ever pray for the welfare of the Saints of Zion, and wish the prayers of the Saints in behalf of myself and family.

Dear Old Saints' Herald:—We of the Pleasant View Branch have just had four weeks of profitable meetings. Elder J. T. Davis held meetings for a week, and he was followed by Bro. F. C. Keck, who staid two weeks, then came Brother Hilliard, who held forth one week, making very plain our duty to God and his visible church on earth, both in spiritual and temporal ways. The instructions were well received by Saints and those not of our faith, as several of the latter class so expressed themselves.

My opinion is that if we as a branch put in practice what we have lately heard in the way of instructions, we will greatly benefit ourselves and the work.

We have a good branch with plenty of chances to engage in gospel work. Our new church is complete and is a credit to the work. I hope the preaching of the past month will enliven our worship in general.

I am thankful my lot is cast among the children of light. I desire to walk therein.

"Do not feel troubled because you are in the minority. Noah was in the minority, but he came out of the flood all right. Lot was in a very small minority in Sodom, but he escaped the fire. Our Lord and his disciples were in a small minority in Palestine, but he started a flame of ever-increasing power that is destined to envelop the earth. Be sure you are right, and calmly stand alone if need be."

Prayer Answered.

"Perfect through suffering."—Heb. 2: 10.
I asked the Lord that I might grow
In faith, and love, and every grace;
Might more of his salvation know,
And seek more earnestly his face.
I hoped that in some favored hour,
At once he'd answer my request;
And by his love's constraining power,
Subdue my sins, and give me rest.
Instead of this he made me feel
The hidden evils of my heart,
And let the angry powers of hell
Assault my soul in every part.
Yea more, with his own hand he seemed Intent to aggravate my woe;
Crossed all the fair designs I schemed,
Blasted my gourds, and laid me low.
"Lord, why is this?" I trembling cried;
"Wilt thou pursue thy worm to death?"
"Tis in this way," the Lord replied,
"I answer prayer for grace and faith.
These inward trials I employ,
From self and pride to set thee free;
And break thy schemes of earthly joy,
That thou may'st seek thy all in me."

—John Newton, 1779.

If He Had Understood.

Some one relates a touching incident which occurred on a railway train.

One night in a crowded sleeping-car a baby cried most piteously. At length a harsh voice called out from a neighboring berth:

"Won't that child's mother stop its noise, so that the people in this car can get some sleep?"

The baby ceased for a moment, and then a man's voice answered:

"The baby's mother is in her coffin in the baggage-car, and I have been awake with the little one for three nights; I will do my best to keep her quiet."

There was a sudden rush from the other berth and a rough voice, broken and tender, said:

"I didn't understand, sir. I am so sorry; I wouldn't have said it for the world had I understood. Let me take the baby and you get some rest."

And up and down the car paced the strong man, softly hushing the tired baby until it fell asleep, when he laid it down in his own berth and watched over it till morning. As he carried the little one back to its father he again apologized in the same words: "I hope you will excuse what I said; I didn't understand how it was."

If Christians would but try to understand the circumstances of the case before they criticised the actions of others there would be far less faultfinding and gossip and fewer church quarrels.

District Conventions. Object and Benefits.

Believing it to be a fact that many of us do not realize or understand the object of and benefits to be derived from holding district conventions, I have felt inclined to write upon this subject.

First, let us consider briefly the

OBJECT OR OBJECTS OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

It was instituted as a "help" to the church. It becomes a help by taking the little ones in the primary grades and teaching them the pure and simple stories of the Bible, instilling in their respective minds a love for the pure and noble things of life, preparing them for intelligent obedience to the first principles of the gospel when they arrive at the years of accountability, laying the foundations upon which to build the future characters of noble, God-loving men and women.

What sort of foundations should they be? What sort of workmen should be chosen to lay them? Should they be selected haphazard from the rank and file, one this Sunday and another the next? No. Those who have resting upon their shoulders the responsibility of helping to start aright the footsteps of those precious little souls should be the very best that diligent search, study, and prayer could make them.

Again, it becomes a help to the parent church by affording of the church who have laid the foundations upon which to build, a place wherein they may receive nourishment, strength, and guidance; nourishment upon which to grow in grace and a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, strength with which to resist the evils and temptations by which the Evil One would seek to allure them away, guidance in that straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal. They have reached that age when they can no longer be under the vigilant watchcare of fond parents. They have pushed out from the shore into the turbid current of the stream of life, there to meet and battle with sin and evil in every form, there to either advance higher in the sphere of life, to win for themselves an untarnished name and a spotless life, to make of themselves sons and daughters that father and mother may look upon with joy and pride, love and adoration, every cherished hope and fond ambition realized in them; or, on the other hand, to retrograde, sink lower in the circles of life, give way to all that tempts them to do evil, lose the fair name they possessed as they launched forth into the surging stream, and, perhaps, bring that loving father and mother in sorrow to the grave. It will surely be one of the two. There can be no standing still—no sleeping soldiers in the army of the Lord. After they have taken up the cross shall we continue to protect and instruct them, or shall we leave them to the roaring lion who is ever prowling around seeking whom he may devour? Are the influences thrown around them by the Sunday-school and the instructions there given of any consequence? Do the teachers of these young people need to make any preparation for their work?

Last, but not least, the Sunday-school affords may be pursued by the older ones, who in turn need teachers prepared for the work in that grade.

A PLACE WHEREIN A SYSTEMATIC COURSE OF STUDY

Thus we see we should have teachers prepared for the training of the little folks, teachers prepared for the instructing and leading of the young people, and teachers prepared to direct the study of the older ones. Teachers of different grades need different preparation, must use different methods in presenting the lessons to their classes. The same methods cannot be used in all three of the grades, therefore the same preparation will not answer. A teacher should not teach a primary class one Sunday, an intermediate the next, and a senior the next. They will not remain teachers long if they do. Do we find such careless work as this in our public schools? Compare the two if you will. Which is of greater importance, education in earthly things, or the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the salvation of the soul? Which teachers need to be the better prepared? Where are our Sunday-school teachers to receive instruction in these different methods and make preparation for their special work? Where do our public school teachers receive theirs? Do they not receive it in the teachers' institutes and summer schools? Why not make of our district conventions, teachers' institutes, and have during our reunions a teachers' summer school? Did you ever stop to compare them in this way? If not, do so now.

In this comparison you have the "object of and benefits to be derived" all in a nutshell. To my mind the should be the mutual improvement of the officers and teachers of the local schools that go to make up the district, special preparation for special work. To accomplish this, courses of study should be made out and sent to the officers and teachers of the different schools prior to each convention so that they might have time and opportunity to come prepared for intelligent study and institute work. Some say this plan has been tried in the district and proven to be a total failure, but the writer has never seen it tried in the three years he has been in the district, neither can he find any of its footprints in the sands of time. It has never been tried here, but it has elsewhere and with success.

The benefits to be derived are obvious. Better teachers, teachers especially prepared for the different grades of work; better graded schools; a better and more systematic course of study mapped out for the Sunday-school pupils, a course that would take them up step by step, from grade to grade, to a more complete knowledge of the word of God, which would be in perfect harmony with having the graded text books instead of our present Quarterlies, (which question is now being agitated by many of our leading workers.) All would be more closely united in holy bonds of love in thus studying and preparing together; the Sunday-school would become a greater help to the church; the work of the church built up; and Zion more speedily redeemed.

This will also apply with equal force to the Religio Association and its work. Let our motto be, "Onward and Upward."

Griffiths as to the best way to carry on the work in the district under the quorums as organized at the late mission conference. Called to order by Elder C. H. Caton, president, at 6:50 p. m.; G. T. Griffiths associate president, Charles Walton secretary. William Lewis, missionary in charge Wales District, was given voice and vote in the conference. G. T. Griffiths was asked to present to the conference what he deemed necessary for the future work of the district. He first presented the name of Elder J. R. Greenwood for the acceptance of the district, as evangelical minister. By request, Brother Griffiths spoke to the call of Brother Greenwood to that office. Bro. Greenwood also spoke by request as to his willingness to accept the position, after which he was unanimously appointed by vote. The question of ministerial reports was next considered and referred to the revising committee on rules as appointed at the annual district conference, and requested to report to the next annual conference, Easter, 1902. Delegates to General Conference in America were appointed: G. T. Griffiths, J. W. Rushton, and E. L. Kelley. Sunday morning Brother Griffiths spoke at length re the labor that should be done by the brethren and how. On Brother Griffiths resuming his seat several brethren commented on what had been said. It was suggested that a second or associate vice-president be appointed. Proposed that Elder Frank Swan be associate vice-president, also that the appointment of Elder J. E. Meredith to vice-president by the district president on the resignation of Elder J. R. Greenwood on Brother Greenwood's acceptance of the position of evangelical minister, be confirmed. Carried. This brought the business to a close.

To the Saints of the Spring River, Kansas, and Indian Territory and Choctaw Districts of the Reorganized Church. Upon recommendation of Bishop's Agent J. M. Richards, of Pittsburg, Kansas, G. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric, and other brethren of the Spring River, Kansas, District, this district has been placed under the supervision of Bishop Ellis Short in connection with his agency of the Indian Territory and Choctaw Districts. Bro. J. M. The Bishopric are pleased to place the matter under supervision of Bishop Ellis Short, who will no doubt find time and opportunity to attend fully to the business of the same. We commend him to all; and also in making the change would not forget to show due appreciation for the excellent help given by Bro. J. M. Richards in his work as agent in the past, and we trust that he will continue to labor and work with Bishop Short and for the district as in the past. #### Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to take to her heavenly home our beloved sister, Iantha Gardner,

Be it resolved, That we, as members of the St. Joseph Prayer Union, extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in this time of deep grief and heavy loss, and commend them to the loving ministrations of our heavenly Father, whom it was her delight to serve and who was ever her friend and comforter, for he is able to uphold and comfort them in this their hour of great sorrow. They mourn the loss of a dear one in the family, and we also mourn the loss of our beloved president and coworker; and while we deeply deplore the departure of one so eminently fitted for the position which she occupied, and who so exemplified in her daily life the beautiful Christian virtues of faith, hope, and charity, we yet desire to recognize the hand of a loving God in this time of bereavement; and may we all be sustained by the assurance that "she is not dead, but sleepeth." "She rests from her labors and her works do follow her."

And be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family of our departed sister, and also to the HERALD and Ensign for publication. By order of Prayer Union. Edith M. Fifer, Carrie L. Best, Ella C. Ennis, committee.

Challenge to Clark Braden.

Whereas, Just before the Thayer debate began, Clark Braden caused posters to be scattered in and around Miami, Indian Territory, headed, "Christianity Versus Mormonism," in which he has agreed (the amount of cash not named) to deliver a series of lectures in the Christian church at Miami, wherein he proposes to annihilate what he terms "Mormonism," and thus strengthen and establish what is known as Campbellism. And whereas, Braden has used my name and others of my church in his printed circulars, denominating them the champions of what he terms Mormonism; but of those who dare not face Clark Braden, an indorsed defender of Christian Campbellism versus what he calls blasphemous Mormonism, in a public debate,

Therefore, I take this method to challenge Clark Braden to repeat the Thayer debate with a representative of the Reorganized Church at Miami, Indian Territory. This challenge holds good to repeat it in every hamlet, town, and city where Clark Braden shall be selected and indorsed to preach or lecture against the faith taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, during Clark Braden's natural life. Any attempt made by Braden to avoid repeating the Thayer debate, will be regarded by all persons of sense as a cowardly, dishonest dodge to cover up his crushing defeat that he met in the debate at Thayer.

PROPOSITIONS AND THEIR ORDER.

1. Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is in organization, faith, and practice in harmony with the New Testament. Latter Day Saints affirm; Clark Braden denies.

2. Resolved, That the Christian Church, is in organization, faith, and practice in harmony with the New Testament. Clark Braden affirms; Latter Day Saints deny.

(a) The discussion shall be governed by "Rules of Controversy" in "Hedge's Logic," pp. 159, 160, 161, and 162.

(b) Each disputant is required to furnish to his opponent before beginning the debate, an indorsement from his church where the debate is to be held. 1. That he is an accredited representative of his church. 2. That he is a Christian gentleman to an opponent when in debate. A refusal or failure on the part of either party to furnish such an indorsement as herein named, shall be sufficient evidence to either party that his opponent is not considered worthy to represent his respective church in an honorable public debate.

Senator Bacon, of Georgia, who has just returned from a tour of study in the Philippines, has written for The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, a valuable paper on the business aspect of our insular affairs. He comes to the conclusion that our account with the Philippines must, for an indefinite time, be on the wrong side of the ledger. This article will appear in the issue for February 22.

At the close of fifteen months' effort the American League for Civic Improvement takes pleasure in submitting the following memoranda of the more notable returns from the investment of the limited funds expended—results made possible only by the liberal donation of time and energy by a few much interested people. The location of hundreds of organizations and scores of individuals and firms—a tedious and costly work, but one absolutely necessary. The formation of efficient working organizations in many towns and cities. Renewed activity or a broader interest in many existing bodies. Correspondence with societies and individuals which is leading to coöperation and organization. At the present time well-planned organizations are being effected in Pawtucket, Rhode Island; Meridian, Mississippi; St. Louis, Missouri; Portland, Oregon; far away Manila, and other points. This correspondence is also developing invaluable assistance from committees of the State Federations of Women's Clubs, Forestry, Horticultural, and other State and national organizations, and local bodies of diverse nature, which are glad to make use of the plans, the literature, and the lecturers of the League. Letters, booklets, and leaflets mailed at intervals to several hundred periodicals has brought generous response in publicity, and doubtless has been influential in awakening the interest of editors and publishers. Correspondence regarding methods of organization, problems in the local work, and general information has made heavy demands upon the workers at headquarters. The collection of material for "The Work of Civic Improvement," "The How of Improvement Work," and "The Twentieth Century City," and their publication in first editions of ten thousand each, produced the first popular improvement literature ever issued. The result of the use of these booklets has been so marked as to be in itself ample warrant for the first year's existence of the League. The Buffalo Convention, bringing together men and women representing many sections and different organizations for the discussion of common interests, was of inestimable value to the future of the movement. The change of name from the National League of Improvement Associations to the American League for Civic Improvement makes the organization international in scope and broader in its aims. The St. Louis Exposition "model city" exhibit, proposed and outlined by the League, promises to result in a remarkable educational development. Gratifying editorial indorsement has been followed by concerted action in support of the suggestion. "The Twentieth Century City," the published proceedings of the Buffalo Convention, is receiving most enthusiastic personal commendation and press mention, and will be used as a "campaign document" in many localities. The inauguration of the League lecture bureau, which is now in working order, has already resulted in arrangements for many public presentations of improvement questions. It is possible to reap the harvest already sown, to realize fully upon the rich investment of time and thought and money made by the earnest collaborators in the pioneer work of the first year, only through the generous coöperation in a financial way and otherwise of "friends old and new." Therefore, The American League for Civic Improvement invites of the reader a liberal share of his or her best thought, personal influence, and financial aid during this second year of the twentieth century.

TOLSTOI thus defines art:

"To evoke in oneself a feeling one has once experienced and having evoked in oneself, then by means of movements, lines, colors, sounds, or forms expressed in words, so to transmit that feeling that others may experience the same feeling,—this is the activity of art.

"Art is a human activity, consisting in this, that one may consciously, by means of certain external signs, hand on to others feelings he has lived through, and that other people are infected by these feelings, and also experience them.

"Art is the infection by one man of another with feelings experienced by the [in]fectior."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE AND GERMANY.

The Kaiser of Germany has concluded to try to shut Christian Science and healing by prayer out of his realm. He calls it Eddyism.

In the dispatches from Berlin for February 8, it is stated that Emperor William is so much incensed at the apparent increase of Spiritualism in his domains that he has issued a decree that any one connected in any way with spiritualists, faith healers, Christian Scientists, or other "isms" of the like, will be excluded from the imperial court.

The Cathedral Chaplain and Superintendent of Morals for Berlin, and the Emperor "are agreed upon the necessity for preventing the spread of Christian Science." It is called Eddyism, and is believed to be a religious "fad" imported from America, and to be more or less injurious to the interests of true religion.

There are about two hundred in the American Christian Science community in the German capital.

It seems that the Emperor has given some attention to the subject, and is of the opinion that "all forms of healing for money" should be suppressed. And "that the heavy fees charged for healing amount to swindling."

Writing of Spiritualism, the following is in point. Reverend H. V. Sweringen, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, reviews a sermon of Reverend Henry Irving Rasmus, of the South Park M. E. Church, of the same city, in which sermon the Reverend Doctor stated:

"I do not believe you can produce a single instance in the Bible where a once embodied spirit came back and spoke to men. You may cite the woman of Endor episode as a case, but there is grave doubt in my mind that this event is anything but a record of what seemed to have occurred, rather than an actual occurrence."

In his review Doctor Sweringen in behalf of Spiritualism, refers Reverend Rasmus to Mark 9: 4, "And there appeared to them Elias, with Moses; and they were talking with Jesus." Also, Acts 9, referring to the conversion of Paul, "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man," and asks, Did not Jesus appear to Paul, who saw, while those with him only heard the voice?

Doctor Sweringen cites as an evidence of communication in writing after the death of the person writing 2 Kings 21:12, which should be, however, 2 Chronicles 21:12, the message of Elijah to Jehoram the King. But, while the death of Elijah occurred 896 B. C., and the event of the sending of the prophet's warning to Jehoram who as a king had walked in unwise and corrupt ways, is recorded as in 889 B. C., seven years after, the marginal writing has it, "which he had written before his death," evidently meaning that though the writing of the prophet had been written while he was yet living, it was not delivered until after his death, having been discovered among the belongings of the dead prophet.

In the case of the witch of Endor, Doctor Sweringen writes: "In regard to 'the woman of Endor episode,' about the truth of which Reverend Mr. Rasmus has 'grave doubts,' the Bible plainly says: 'The woman saw Samuel,' 1 Samuel 28:12. 'And Saul perceived that it was Samuel,' verse 14. 'And Samuel said, 'Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up?''"

The Bible does say that "when the woman saw Samuel" she discovered that it was Saul who had asked for divination. She said she saw the "form of an old man" coming up "covered with a mantle." From her description in that vague form, Saul "perceived that it was Samuel." Now, if the conversation between Saul and the form which the woman saw was carried on in the same way as such reputed conversations are conducted in modern spiritual sciences, it was the woman, the medium, that heard and repeated the inquiries of Saul and gave the replies of the shade of Samuel. But the quotation served the purpose of the Doctor anyway, so it passed without question.

Doctor Sweringen gets at the chief reason for his review in the following: "I never could understand why the Christian Church should deny the fact of spirit return. That demonstrable proof of a future existence should antagonize a church that teaches it by faith and hope, is beyond my comprehension. When we consider the great number of materialists, agnostics, and infidels whose names are on the rolls of the different churches as members, we wonder that Christianity has any vitality at all."

It is not the doubting of the divinity of the Bible on the part of the professing Christian to which Doctor Sweringen objects, for that he does himself; but it is the fact that those who profess to believe it and teach others to believe it and that it is the infallible word of God, deny belief in it when such things as are named by him indicative of the visitation of once living men to the earth are presented as taken from the Bible.

Without entering into any lengthy discussion of the question as to whether departed spirits may or may not revisit the earth and minister to those living, we have reason to believe that the angel Moroni, and possibly Nephi, have been permitted to come to the earth for purposes directed of God. But whether in vision or in personal identity the object was attained, the messages delivered, and the work directed was accomplished.

The appearance of Moses and Elias with Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration, can not be argued away in any mystical manner as a delusive apparition; but must remain to be considered as a determinate visit of three great and leading men of the dispensations which they represented, one of them the central figure of all time upon whom all the dispensations must rally and unite for the final redemption of the world.

To us of the latter-day work it must not be thought a thing incredible that in the carrying out of his designs God should send messengers from the spirit world to the earth with messages of great importance, nor should we presume to dictate to him by whom he should send, or from what class of angels or spirits he should choose his messengers.

In this we differ from Reverend Rasmus of the M. E. Church. He and his church believe and teach that the days of the sending of angels, the giving of revelations from God to men are past, while we believe and teach that as God did in past times deal with men by angelic messengers and did give revelations of his will to his people on the earth, so can he now, and so does he now; and that by the self-same methods that he anciently employed he now shows himself to be the "God of the living and not the dead."

Spiritualists may have their issues with those who, like this M. E. divine, deny the ministration of departed spirits, and while we may not join issue with either side of the controversy we may note with some laudable curiosity the form the contest assumes, as indicative of the advancement being made along the lines of inquiry in regard to things religious that may have bearing on the world beyond.

If there has been anything demonstrated by the philosophy and assumed facts of spiritualism it is that there is spirit existence independent of the body, and that there are classes of independent spirit identities in the unseen land, subject to laws and usages of the spirit world. We may admit so much upon the unsubstantial "if," without admitting the premises held and claims made for the theories extant among spiritists, or without attempting to explain, to affirm, or to deny the material facts and phenomena which have accompanied the study of spiritism since its development from spirit-rapping and table-tipping, and the teachings of Andrew Jackson Davis and his Nature's Divine Revelation and the Great Harmonia.

We are well warned against the powers of deception which will be employed by antichrist before the coming of the Savior, and are always on our guard against being overcome by them, or should be; so, while being careful not to be overcome by untruths we ought not to be afraid of what may be discovered, or proved to be true. In assuming to "prove all things" that we may "hold fast that which is good," we may now and again meet with some things we will have to discard as unprofitable for further investigation, else the injunction means nothing. Then let us be contented with the truths already received, holding them fast, being fully assured that every other existent truth that we may discover, or that may be forced upon our attention will find its proper place in the completed chain, and will not, can not displace nor disprove those we already have.

By what we have written we neither commend, nor condemn; neither indorse, nor deny the theories of spiritism as a whole, leaving the philosophy to be determined in detail upon consideration, each in its own time and place upon its own merit.

AUSTRALIAN MISSION PAPER.

The long-looked-for paper has made its appearance in Australia. On January 18 the Gospel Standard issued its first number at Wallsend, New South Wales. It is an eight-page paper, two columns, each column set to same measure as is the HERALD, though the pages are a little shorter than are those of the HERALD. Walter J. Haworth is the editor, and its affairs are controlled by a board of publication which is appointed by the mission. It will appear monthly.

The HERALD extends greetings to this new publication, and wishes it great success.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT DES MOINES.

The following appeared in the Capital, of Des Moines, Iowa, February 21:

JOSEPH SMITH HERE.

Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, head of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, an order which has 250,000 communicants in all parts of the world, was a guest of the Iowa House of Representatives this morning, occupying a seat on the floor of the house with Representative Eiker, of Decatur County.

Smith is a son of the original Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon faith, who was killed by a mob at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844. The Lamoni church does not believe in polygamy.

The Capital reporter seems to have exaggerated our numbers considerably, as we have scarcely 50,000 members.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

David Rice writes from Roseburg, Oregon, February 13, renewing for HERALD, and says: "It is a paper I hope I will never have to do without,—it is so full of good reading. I have read it for about three years, and like it better all the time. Success to the HERALD!"

Sr. A. A. Horton writes from Independence, Missouri, February 17: "We are having delightful weather: plenty of snow, and this morning lots of sunshine. The Sunday-school work is progressing under the supervision of Brn. Robinson and White and the efficient clerkship of Sr. McNichols. Yesterday our church-goers were refreshed in Spirit at morning and evening services through the ministry of Brn. Adam J. Keck and Albert B. Carmichael: and in the afternoon about two hundred fifty attended a very comforting meeting in the basement. The workers and lovers of good work being done in church and Sunday-school are looking forward to our coming district gatherings with bright anticipations."

J. W. Moxon writes from Oak Harbor, Ohio: "We expect with us this week Bro. S. W. L. Scott to open up the gospel work in Oak Harbor, Ohio, for the first time. We hope good may be the outcome.

Arthur Allen wrote from Vosholl, Missouri, February 20: "I baptized two men here on the 17th."

Sr. Mary Flagg writes from Castalia, Grand Manan, Ontario, February 9: "It has been a long time since a Latter Day Saint was here. I would like for an elder to come, as I believe there is a work to be done here."

Sr. R. M. Bradley writes from Webb City, Missouri, February 15: "We have taken the HERALD for twenty-four years, and at times it seemed hard to raise the money for Ensign and HERALD, but I could never say stop either, for I find the Lord has often opened the way for us when in need and I fear it would displease him should we not try to assist in the publication of the church papers. Besides it is a great source of spiritual strength to read of the progress being made. May the HERALD ever prove a success, and may every family feel the need of such help as the church papers can give."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received from the Ladies' Aid Society, of St. Joseph, Missouri, resolutions concerning the death of Sr. Iantha Gardner.

Bro. A. B. Phillips, laboring in the Northern California District, sends us parts of the Sacramento, California, Record Union, and Saturday Bee, in which he airs and corrects some of the misstatements of the Reverend Iliff, of the M. E. Church, in the Sixth Street chapel, in Sacramento. If this Reverend Iliff is the T. C. Iliff whom we met in Salt Lake City, Utah, in the summer of 1889, we are quite surprised, for the latter impressed us as a very fair-minded gentleman, who would not condescend to misrepresent the Mormon faith or people. Bro. Phillips showed himself to be well-informed on the subject, and though a young man is one of the coming defenders of the faith.

Elder T. W. Chatburn, who for some time has been defending the faith in Wisconsin, writes for extra copies of Judge Philips' Decision in the Temple Lot Case. He says: "That court decision is worth to us a thousand Temple Lots." The wheel of time is rapidly revealing the fact that the Reorganization has not moved in the dark.

Bro. Levi Phelps, of Michigan, sends us the following clipping taken from the Saginaw Semi-weekly News for January 31: "Pontiac—The water in Miller's Lake on the C. O. Renshaw farm in Avon Township has turned blood red and residents of that vicinity are spending hours searching for the solution."

Bishop William Leeka, of the Fremont, Iowa, District, in a letter to Bro. Kelley, gives a hearty indorsement to the late articles of the Bishopric on the "Duties and Responsibilities of the Saints." His work as bishop, and large business interests in the district, successfully conducted, give weight to his views upon questions of finance.

Lamoni Stake conference was held at Lamoni, Saturday, the 22d. By recommendation of Stake council the name of Fred B. Blair was placed before the conference for indorsement as counselor to President John Smith, to succeed D. W. Wight, deceased. The indorsement was unanimous. This will leave a vacancy in the Stake Council to be filled later.

Oliver Hanson writes from Tulare, California, February 17, that he and his family lately moved there from Oregon, making the trip by wagon. He says scarcity of rain is threatening crops. The Saints of Tulare seem to be alive, holding regular meetings. He says his faith was never stronger, and prays for strength to continue. He likes the new form of HERALD and does not see how scattered Saints can get along without the HERALD. He makes a plea for the Saints to support the HERALD.

H. A. Cunningham writes from 198 Ninth Street, Bloomburg, Pennsylvania, February 18, that he and his family have recently moved there from Maine. For a while after leaving Maine they were at Philadelphia, where they had pleasant association with the Saints. At Bloomburg they have not been able to locate any Saints nearer than at Scranton, and would be glad to hear from any who might be nearer.

Bro. Burton writes from Papeete, Tahiti, November 28: "All fairly well here."

Sr. Olive C. Goodrich writes from Jeffersonville, Ohio, February 20, that she has received in response to her request made in HERALD an abundance of HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves, etc., and will not at present need any more. She says she has sufficient to furnish her reading for the rest of the winter. Of some issues she has received more than one copy, but expects to make use of them. She expresses hearty thanks to the thoughtful Saints.

We very frequently receive letters and communications intended by the writers for publication which are signed by some such term as "A Friend," "A Brother," etc., but which are not accompanied by the real name of the author. Such communications will go the shortest road to the waste-basket, and hence the Saints need not go to the trouble of sending them. The editors are responsible for what appears in the HERALD, and hence they must know the authorship of articles, letters, etc., which may appear. Very often matter will be printed by us over such signatures, but when it is the authorship is known to us. Kindly remember this, Saints.

The Saints of Rich Hill and Eldorado Springs, Missouri, are building houses of worship, which are about ready for dedication and occupation; and it is proposed that the dedication take place in the coming March. The Saints of these branches have been very faithfully at work to accomplish their desires, a place of their own in which to hold meetings and preach the gospel. Eldorado Springs is one of the places where Clark Braden was met in debate by one of the brethren a few years ago.

The Superintendent of the schools of Kokomo, Indiana, reports to the Board of Education of that city, that out of thirteen hundred boys in the city schools four hundred were addicted to the habit of smoking cigarettes. He reports that the cigarette users are two years behind the nonusers in their studies. The cigarette smokers are often marked by the teachers as untrustworthy, inattentive, lazy, dull, and as having poor memory, no concentration, a vacant stare, etc. As a result of Superintendent Ogg's investigations, movements will be made to have the anti-cigarette law of Indiana rigorously enforced.

Sunday, the 23d, as per order of the Lamoni Stake conference, a number of ordinations were performed at Lamoni. David Keown was ordained an elder, and I. A. Monroe, Charles Harp, and Joseph G. Smith were ordained priests. The latter is a son of A. H. Smith, and is the second of his sons to hold the priesthood. The ordination of B. M. Anderson as priest was also ordered by the conference, but as he is in Omaha, it must be otherwise arranged for.

Brn. A. J. Keck and A. Carmichael, of the auditing committee, are at work on the HERALD Office books. Bro. D. A. Anderson is assisting them.

The Religio and Sunday-school conventions of Lamoni Stake were in session February 20 and 21. During their sessions officers were elected for the ensuing term. Of Religio: Will J. Mather, president; J. P. Anderson, vice-president; Alice Thorburn, secretary; J. A. Simpson, treasurer. Of the Sunday-school: Alice Thorburn, superintendent; David Daniels, assistant superintendent; J. P. Anderson, secretary; John Lovell, treasurer; Callie B. Stebbins, librarian.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—NO. 18.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS, OF THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

After so long a time I now send the eighteenth installment of my autobiography. Circumstances have been such with me as to render it impossible for me to send it sooner. I have lost none of my faith in the great latter-day work; and in the language of one of the great orators and illustrious senators of the Roman Republic more than a century before the Christian era, who said: "There should be no selfish devotion to private interest; we are born not for ourselves only, but for our kindred and fatherland. We owe duties, not only to those who have benefited, but those who have wronged us. We should render to all their dues; and justice is due even the lowest of mankind." If these grand sentiments could be expressed by one who had never heard of the anointed One, so long ago outside of Christ, believe me as a Christian, I can do no less than reëcho those God-given principles that illuminated a scholar of Rome. And as a friend of humanity, I continue my narrative.

Wednesday, August 31, 1859, ten o'clock a. m. We held preaching services again at Bro. Benjamin Leland's, and after meeting I baptized Mrs. Sarah Gallop, of Leland's Grove. After confirmation services in the afternoon we returned to Union Grove, retracing our steps with the intention of returning to Illinois and hoping to attend the fall conference to be held at Bro. I. L. Rogers' on Fox River, near what is now called Sandwich. Our hearts are made glad by the Holy Spirit which has given us much assurance that we have laid the foundation of a great work in Western Iowa, that will be of vast interest to the church in general; to give comfort to the Lord's people in the latter days, as foreseen by the ancient apostles and prophets. But I have some impression this evening that I may not attend the conference, but may stay in Western Iowa to continue the good work; but this thought I keep from Brother Blair, as it seems a great cross to me to be left alone again in the mission-field, and I have hope that I may not be detained in this new and sparsely settled country.

Thursday, September 1. Bro. Blair and I returned to Council Bluffs, thirty-five miles south of Union Grove, and again visited with my brother, Edwin R. Briggs, who is in good spirits and health; and it seems like home to us this evening. We are indeed tired, for we have been deprived of much needed rest, holding meetings nearly every day and evening for weeks, and it seems, talking almost all the time of our hope, to many of the old Saints who have settled in this part of the country. They tell us of their sad disappointment and chagrin over the apostasy of Brigham Young and his followers, who, before they left here established their wicked dancing parties in the churches to drown the trouble of the Saints and lead them to forget their heartaches and trials, while they taught and privily practiced polygamy, and then denied it openly to the world.

Friday and Saturday, we remained at my brother's and appreciated our needed rest, and read my Bible and wrote letters to my mother, and to Bro. Louis Delmon, of Batavia, Illinois, and to some others.

Sabbath, September 4. We held meeting at my brother's; several of his neighbors attended the services.

Monday, September 5. I went to Crescent City, six miles north of Council Bluffs, and visited with a Brother Eggleston and family, who came from Nauvoo, Illinois, and were members of the church there; but now they are waiting and hoping for the salvation of the latter-day Israel. They were once lively members of the church in the days of Joseph and loved the gospel of Christ with a satisfaction and peace the world could not give, neither could take away. But they are not now fully satisfied with Brigham Young's administration, though not decided in mind; he tries to believe in the "gross crime" of polygamy as a divine institution, though he admits he "never heard the Prophet Joseph teach it." I had no liberty of the Holy Spirit trying to talk with him of our hope and the Reorganization; and I have the impression by the Holy Spirit that any man who really desires in his heart to believe in the practice of polygamy, the Holy Spirit will not be given to confirm or accompany our words to them. And when any of the elders of the Reorganization meet with those who love that "gross crime" in their hearts, it is a waste of time to attempt to convert them to the true principles of the gospel of Christ; for they have indeed lost the Spirit of the gospel, if they ever had it. I returned to my brother's to stay over night, really sad as I meditate over the condition of the church, scattered all over the land from Maine to California; having been rent into fragments, it would seem, by the many aspirants to leadership since the martyrdom of the "Choice Seer" and Prophet of God. But I trust that we shall revive new hopes in many of the disappointed Saints, so they will once more establish their altars and call on the Lord for deliverance. For truly it does seem that a great mass of the scattered Saints do not know the source from whence deliverance comes.

Council Bluffs, September 6. To-day I called on Mr. Folsom who is a firm believer in Brigham Young. He says: "I know Brigham Young is a prophet of God, and successor of Joseph Smith." I replied, "Brigham Young in an epistle of the Twelve, who signed himself President of the Twelve at Nauvoo, August 15, 1844, in Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 618, said: "You are now without a prophet present with you in the flesh to guide you. . . . Let no man presume for a moment that his place will be filled by another; for, remember he stands in his own place, and always will; and the Twelve Apostles of this dispensation stand in their own place and always will, both in time and in eternity to minister, preside, and regulate the affairs of the whole church." And I have often heard many of the old Saints who live in Nauvoo say they had heard Brigham Young declare he was "not a prophet, nor a son of a prophet." And again in the Millennial Star, volume 16, page 442, in a discourse delivered April 7, 1852, in Utah, Mr. Young, says: "A person was mentioned to-day who did not believe that Brigham Young was a prophet, seer, and revelator. I wish to ask every member of this whole community, if they ever heard him profess to be a prophet, seer, and revelator, as Joseph Smith was?" And in the same discourse he did not even pretend to be ordained president of the priesthood. He simply said: "Who ordained me to be the first president of church on earth? I answer, it is the choice of this people, and that is sufficient." Like James J. Strang, James Collin Brewster, and Gladdin Bishop, he did not think it necessary to be ordained. But the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in section 17, and paragraph 17, which is the law of God to the church, says: "Every president of the high priesthood . . . is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference." Nay, more than that, section 104, paragraph 42, says: "And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church." And again section 99, paragraph 6, says: "The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church."

The fact is, Young never made the claim that he was appointed by revelation, or that he ever was ordained to the presidency; for on October 6, 1844, at a General Conference, in the presence of thousands of Saints in Nauvoo, he made the emphatic statement, "There never has a man stood between Joseph and the Twelve, and unless we apostatize, there never will." And in the same sermon before thousands of people Brigham Young said: "Did Joseph ordain any man to take his place? He did. Who was it? It was Hyrum. But Hyrum fell a martyr before Joseph did." Brother Folsom, I would not pluck a single laurel from Mr. Young's crown, but all the history in the case shows that he was never appointed as Joseph's successor in the presidency of the church, and never was ordained according to the law of God; and he here admits it himself. And if Young's statement be true that Joseph ordained his brother Hyrum, it was not done in conference or a high council that we have any record of, hence it would not be a legal ordination; and besides that, it would be in violation of the law of God, which says: "For this anointing have I put upon his [Joseph's] head; that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his [Joseph's] posterity after him [Joseph, not Brigham Young]. And as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, in thee and thy seed shall all the kindred of the earth be blessed." (See section 107.) And again in section 84, paragraphs 3, 4, which says in a revelation to Joseph: "Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ with God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began. Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood, a savor unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it. Amen."

These passages show that Joseph's blessings were to be a light unto the Gentiles, and through his priesthood a savor unto the house of Israel.

Doctrine and Covenants, section 80, speaking of Joseph Smith, Jr., says: "Unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom which belongeth always unto the president of the high priesthood." And if Mr. Young, according to his own statement, is "neither a prophet, or a son of a prophet," he certainly can not be a successor to Joseph in the prophetic office. Neither can he perform the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood like unto Moses which the law of God makes it incumbent for him to do; and the very fact that Mr. Young never claimed to have been ordained to the presidency of the priesthood, he could not hold the keys of the kingdom which "belonged to the president of the church."

This seemed to be an avalanche of testimony against his claim for Mr. Young's position, and so astonished him that he soon became silent in his defense of Brigham Young's claims. And I showed him that even Brigham admitted that if a man stood between Joseph and the Twelve, it would be because they had apostatized. And when Mr. Young assumed to be the president, and without revelation filled up the Quorum of Twelve, it proved according to his own admission that he and the Quorum of Twelve had apostatized; for, in making his claim and choosing his counselors which took two more out of the Twelve, they all stood between Joseph and the Quorum of Twelve. In fact, there was not a majority of the quorum left; not enough to do business legally. He finally said, "I do not wish to have any farther talk on the matter." He was so positive in his utterance and defense for Brigham's prophetic claim that I felt justified in presenting the absurdity of his position, by both the law of God governing the matter, and his human-made prophet's own denial of even being a prophet. I used him with all courtesy, but realized indeed he was blind, and could not reason upon his untenable position.

Council Bluffs, September 7. I visited and lodged with Bro. Isaac Bebee last night. He was much pleased with our hope, and seemed at once to readily grasp the doctrine of lineage, and that one of Joseph's posterity must indeed be the successor in his prophetic office, and is very decidedly opposed to the apostasy of what he calls "Mormonism in Utah." He used to be well acquainted with Joseph in Nauvoo. I also called on Sr. Hannah Woodhave, and she is now on her way to Utah; though she expects to stay here this coming winter. But after I had some conversation with her and presented the true light of the gospel in contrast to the horrible innovations and absurdities of the Mormons, I think she will now return to Fort Des Moines, Iowa, to her husband, that she has left through the advice and persuasion of the Mormon elders. She with her husband left England two years ago with the intention of going to Utah, believing it to be their duty to emigrate to Zion. But her husband became so disgusted with what he had experienced and seen among the Mormon elders that he apostatized and would not go any farther than Fort Des Moines, and she had been persuaded to leave him, in order to get her endowment, exaltation, and full salvation, which she could not, except she would leave her apostate husband, as she expressed it to me. I opened up the subject of the gospel in its true light and showed indeed that its provisions were the power of God unto salvation to all who believe in every land, without going to the salt land as foreseen by the Prophet Jeremiah, seventeenth chapter, fifth and sixth verses, when he said, "Thus saith the Lord: Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited." Her countenance lit up, and she exclaimed, "Thank God, I will go back to my husband! And I believe that he will see this beautiful light of the gospel again, and will receive me back into his affections, and we will be happy as we once were together!"

I feel to thank God with all my heart that I have rescued this dear English lady from the meshes of Utah Mormonism. She has all the appearance of refinement, purity, and honesty. She, with her husband, had received the pure gospel of Christ in her native land; and in good faith had emigrated with high hopes to reach a home with the Saints in America; had heard nothing of the great apostasy of Brigham Young and the church with him in America; knew nothing of the great mass of the Saints all over this country who never followed Brigham Young or his teachings; knew nothing of the law of lineage, or the reorganization of the church in America. Her distress of mind has been terrible; but to-day she again brightens in her hopes, and expressed her joy in the prospects of soon being with her husband, and believes that he will unite with the church again in the Reorganization. She had, through the teaching of the missionaries from Salt Lake, been impressed with the idea that there was some wonderful light, power, and blessing associated with the endowment given in the Utah church. And except she now left her apostate husband she would lose her salvation in the celestial kingdom. Her husband had become disheartened and thoroughly disgusted with some of the doctrines and actions of the elders, and he had remained at Fort Des Moines.

I also met Brother Ellison of Sixmile Grove, Harrison County, Iowa. He is much interested in the gospel and is waiting, watching, and hoping for the revival of the church again. He has not lost his first love in the faith of the gospel of Christ. I rode with him about a mile, and lost my Book of Doctrine and Covenants in his wagon.

September 8. We staid again with my brother last night. Brother Blair has not been with me for a few days. He has been visiting Bro. Samuel Waldo and Jonathan Haywood. He is in good spirits, and this morning we continue on our journey homeward, or to the Illinois conference. Bro. Archibald Patton is to take us in his covered carriage as far as Montrose, Iowa. We arrived at Bro. Calvin Beebe's, Sen., on Farm Creek, in Mills County, at nine o'clock in the evening.

Thursday, September 9. We have concluded to stop and hold meetings here to-day. The Saints are very anxious to hear more of the present hope of the Saints, and what is our duty as members of the church in its scattered condition.

Friday we held meeting at two o'clock in the afternoon, and spoke on the order of the priesthood of Joseph's calling, his blessing, and law of lineage; the Holy Spirit did indeed accompany the word of the Lord to them, giving comfort and bearing testimony of the coming of Joseph to take his father's place in the prophetic office in the due time of the Lord. Many of the Saints are much encouraged and revived in their faith and hope. They were well acquainted with the choice Seer, and all of them declare they knew he was free from the blight and cursed doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, or polygamy taught by Brigham Young, as they expressed it,

Saturday, September 10. It rains this morning, so we have concluded to tarry here over Sunday, as the Saints are very anxious to continue meetings a little longer. I visited and remained over night with Brother Badam, Brother James' father. Brother Blair remained with Brother Beebe.

Sunday, September 11. It is a beautiful day, and we had a large audience at Brother Beebe's cottage—quite a roomy house. Elder W. W. Blair preached an excellent sermon on the subject of the resurrection of the dead; read a part of the fifteenth chapter of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians. He dwelt on the subject of the three glories, showing the great and everlasting infinite benefit of obtaining the celestial glory, which is in our power to secure by well-doing in this life, in contrast with the lesser glories which are gained by well-doing after punishment in the prison where Jesus went and preached the gospel to them who were dead, that they might be "judged according to men in the flesh, but live in the spirit according to the will of God." The dear Saints all seemed to be lit up by the soul-cheering thoughts of the subject.

At two o'clock service we both spoke on the gospel, confirming the Saints in the latter-day work, and showing that the kingdom of God as foreseen by the Prophet Daniel was indeed set up; and which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, and that it was very small in embryo when the first two were baptized in this generation, like the stone which was "cut out of the mountain without hands," as is clearly declared would be the case in the revelation of God, July, 1828, nearly one year before Joseph and Oliver were baptized. For, "Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church."—D. C. 3: 16. And in harmony with this thought, when these two brethren were baptized on May 15, 1829, they were the true church of God on earth "speaking unto the church individually;" and soon after the church was established with only two members in it, others were added to it, such as were believers in the gospel of Christ, and were baptized into Christ. And they could truly say as the ancient Apostle Paul said: "Giving thanks unto the Father, which has made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son: in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins."—Colossians 1: 12-14. On the sixth day of the month which is called April, one thousand eight hundred and thirty, these two first elders, who had been ordained by the angel to be apostles, organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The church and kingdom of God then had but two officers. Truly it was only a small kingdom on that ever-memorable day. And it may also be truly said, "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Other officers were ordained by the command of God in this beautiful church. And on January 25, 1831, Elder Joseph Smith, Jr., was chosen, at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, and ordained president of the high priesthood, in harmony with the law of God, which says: "Every president of the high priesthood (or presiding elder) . . . is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference."—D. C. 17: 17.

And again "the president of the church who is also president of the high council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged in his administration, by the voice of the church."—D. C. 99: 6.

"And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church."—D. C. 104: 42.

Now this church, so beautifully arranged with all its varied officers, it may be truly said, "Speaking to the church collectively; and not individually" by the voice of God, said: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation rests upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay."

This church with whom the Lord had once pronounced that he was well pleased, so soon as September 22, 1832, collectively are under condemnation. Later on in December, 1833, the Lord says again to the church: "Verily, I say unto you, Notwithstanding their sins, my bowels are filled with compassion toward them; I will not utterly cast them off; and in the day of wrath I will remember mercy. . . . And in that day, all who are found upon the watchtower, or in other words, all mine Israel shall be saved."—D. C. 98: 4.

And in order to bring about this salvation, the Lord again says in a revelation in December, 1834: "Behold I say unto you, The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at the first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be."—D. C. 100: 3.

Now my dear brethren and sisters, all these several paragraphs show that darkness, disaster, and trouble like a pall hung over the Saints in that early day of the church, very soon after its organization, and it culminated in the revelation and promise to the church as an organization in the word of God as found in Doctrine and Covenants, section 107, paragraphs 10, 11, 13, and 14. I will quote only a part of these paragraphs for brevity, so you can see the true light of the situation of the church at this time in 1841: "But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God. . . . If ye labor with all your might, I will consecrate that spot, that it shall be made holy; and if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. . . . And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hand, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgments, upon your own heads, . . . by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord."

These several quotations demonstrate the fact, if the word of the Lord is sufficient authority, that the church, as an organization, was rejected before the people were driven from Nauvoo at the roar of the fire-arms, and the terrible harrassing they received from the mob, and constant threats from their foes. The church was united at the time the promise was made to them that if they would build the temple in a sufficient time they should not be moved out of their place. They were promised many rich and varied blessings if they would faithfully perform the work intrusted to them. But the given time passed, and they were now bringing upon their heads cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgment. Instead of obtaining the endowment and great blessings to follow the faithful discharge of the task put upon them, as clearly promised in the declaration, "ye shall not be moved out of your place," and as was really expected by the Saints at Nauvoo. Their failure brought calamities. The choice Seer and Prophet was taken from them, June 27, 1844, so they had no mouthpiece like Moses to lead them. And on August 15 of the same year as soon as the Twelve could convene in Nauvoo, they issued an epistle. It says: "You are now without a prophet present with you in the flesh to guide you. . . . Let no man presume for a moment that his place will be filled by another; for, remember he stands in his own place, and always will; and the Twelve Apostles of this dispensation stand in their own place and always will, both in time and in eternity, to minister, preside and regulate the affairs of the whole church."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 618.

Their assumption that Joseph's place in the presidency would not be filled by another, shows plainly that they were in darkness, and in the spirit of apostasy, the same as the varied sects of the day, who did not believe in prophets in these days. Young as I was, the moment I read that statement I discerned that they had apostatized, or there was something wrong, and that they were in darkness at least, or else I was deceived in the manifestation I had received when the voice from heaven said to me: "Joseph the son of Joseph is the prophet of the church." Anyhow, blindness hovered over the whole church, and it split into many fragments and factions, who followed their respective false prophets, Brigham Young, Strang, Brewster, Gladden Bishop, Charles B. Thompson, and others, and general confusion ensued in the church; while the great body of the church was scattered all over the land, or remained where they had united with the church, and never gave their consent to follow any of the false shepherds that has arisen since the martyrdom of the beloved Prophet Joseph. And now by the command of God to us, we are instructed to say: "To the scattered Latter Day Saints, in the own due time of the Lord, Joseph will be called upon by the God of heaven to take his father's place as prophet and president of the church; for the church has not been destroyed, or the kingdom given to another people, though they have been scattered and left without shepherds during a dark and cloudy day. Yet, saith the Lord of hosts, they that remain and are faithful shall be gathered and reorganized for the Lord has not changed concerning Zion. For the pure in heart shall be restored to their promised inheritance, and shall see the glory of God in their deliverance from all their enemies and those that hate them, saith the Lord your God."

With these precious promises, which have surely been given us in our scattered condition by the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and by the ministration of angels, we are encouraged; and we are truly commanded of God to tell the Saints that we know that Joseph, the son of the Martyr, will soon take his father's place, to guide the people of the Lord, as his father once did on the earth.

During this discourse the Saints were very much comforted in the faith of the latter-day work, and numbers of them said: "This is the gospel, and in the same spirit we first heard it in the days of the choice Seer." "Ah," says Elder Calvin Beebe, "This is what I have been looking for during the cloudy days since the wicked apostasy of Brigham Young. I can see clearly now that the great body of the church is scattered among the Gentiles as we are in Western Iowa, and did not follow those whose hearts departed from the Lord to the salt land, as seen by the Prophet Jeremiah in his seventeenth chapter." And his wife, Submit R. Beebe, expressed her desire to renew her covenant again by baptism. And his son Calvin A., and his son's wife, Angeline C. Beebe, gave in their names to unite with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. And at one o'clock in the afternoon I immersed them in the living waters; not in Jordan's stream, but the beautiful sparkling waters of Farm Creek, in Iowa. And they were the first to unite with the church in this place. In the evening at 7:30 we held confirmation and prayer-meeting; the gift of the Holy Ghost, tongues, and interpretations, were given, to the great joy of the Saints, confirming the word of the Lord to them. And many of the Saints said they never attended as good a meeting before. And we can truly say in our hearts, we know some of the true Saints are in this place, and are loyal to the gospel of Christ as they say, "We have heard Joseph the choice Seer expound it in Nauvoo before his death."

CONFESSION.

G. V. Lechler in discussing ecumenical councils in Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge, article council, describes the fourth Lateran synod, thus called from the place of meeting, the Church of St. John Lateran, in Rome.

It was convened by Innocent III (year 1215), and frequented by four hundred and twelve bishops, and eight hundred abbots and priors, besides by ambassadors from the Byzantine court, and a great number of princes and noblemen,—one of the most brilliant ecclesiastical assemblies which ever met. Its debates encompassed the whole field of ecclesiastical legislation,—doctrine, liturgy, discipline, etc.; and both the results and the form of these debates give evidence of the towering height to which the Papacy had reached. The dogma of transubstantiation was promulgated, the decree of auricular confession was issued, the Inquisition and other courts of heresy were established, etc. But these and other measures did not originate in the assembly itself; they were, so to speak, dictated to it by the curia, Romana, which denotes the whole body of officials which together forms the papal government.

There is some difference between this council and the one held at Jerusalem on Pentecost immediately following the Savior's ascension. What would have been the result if some one under the influence of the Holy Ghost had spoken in tongues, or prophecy, to Pope Innocent III and told him that their creed was an abomination in the sight of the Lord? The one so speaking would probably have been a subject for the Inquisition.

The Roman Catholic Church requires confession not only as a duty, but has advanced it to the dignity of a sacrament. These confessions are made to the priest, and are private and auricular; and the priest is not to reveal them under pain of the highest punishment.

If the Savior had designed this system to have been a duty, he would most probably have delivered an express command or revelation to this effect. Notwithstanding, however, private auricular confession is not of divine authority, yet as one observes, there are many cases wherein men under the guilt and trouble of their sins can neither appease their own minds nor sufficiently direct themselves to pray, without recourse to some pious and prudent friend or brother. In these cases men certainly do very well, and many times prevent a great deal of trouble and perplexity to themselves by a timely discovery of their condition to some one qualified to help them nearer to God. And for this purpose a general confession is for the most part sufficient; and where there is occasion for particulars, there is no need of raking all the details by the adviser in order to give ease and comfort to the penitent.

Do not the priest's duties, specified in section 17, Doctrine and Covenants, include that he shall exhort all to pray vocally and in secret? Am I not justified by James 5:16 in confessing to a sister or brother? "Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

And when we confess one to another, what is to hinder us from praying to God for one another that we may have health and that our sins may be remitted, wiped out, absolved, so that they will stand no more against us if we are truly penitent and resolved to reform our lives?

Can we have the confidence necessary for this mutual communing with God and our brother? It is all easy when one gives himself up entirely to the mercy of God and depends on the promises of Jesus to help and to save every despairing, heart-broken, crying, trusting prodigal. This calls for entire consecration of purpose, ability, talents, might, mind, and strength to the will of the Master. "An open confession is good for the soul."

When a member of the household of Israel is in a repentant condition—pure in heart before the Lord—then he is worthy to partake of the emblems of the body and blood of Jesus Christ, the Lord's supper, whereby he receives a remission of his sins. This sacrament is administered by one or more of the Lord's servants to whom is delegated the power to forgive sins. See Matthew 16: 19; and John 20: 21-23.

He partakes of the emblems first, thus signifying that he repents and also forgives the worthy penitents who will partake with him.

The one administering is a vicar for Christ, therefore the language of Luke 22: 14-20 applies to us, now, with the same intent,—in commemoration of Christ's death. We remember that he died that repentant sinners might live, might have their sins remitted through him or his authorized agents. We accept the promises he gave, comply with God's will to the best of our ability, and thus he grants us absolution of our sins.

"HOT DRINKS."

At this particular time when many seem to be interested in what constitute "hot drinks" condemned in the "Words of Wisdom," I wish to relate the following. Years ago I questioned Elder Ebenezer Robinson relative to his connection and recollection of circumstances as they existed at the time and subsequent to the coming forth of this notable revelation. I shall not try to give dates and names, neither his exact words, for I have failed to preserve a record of the same; but here is what he said in substance.

Soon after the revelation was given he was working in the printing department of the church, boarding at the home and eating at the table of the Prophet. Times were hard; that is, there was a scarcity of the necessaries of life. As a consequence bread and milk was the bill of fare at certain meals. Sister Emma occasionally heated the milk to render it more palatable in cold weather. At one of these meals of bread and hot milk one of the leading elders raised the question of "hot drinks," and argued that hot milk was as much a violation of the revelation as hot tea and hot coffee, which had been expunged from the Prophet's table. Joseph promptly demurred and insisted that the revelation having been given to him and through him to the church he had a right to know differently. He quoted the first clause, "In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you and forewarned you," and proceeded to explain that various and dangerous adulterations would be used, especially in liquors, tea, and coffee, that the enmity of nations would become such that certain importations would contain various slow poisons inimical to health and life.

Existing facts as discovered by committees on pure food and liquors, and by government inspectors of importations as well as home manufactories prove beyond a doubt that the Prophet was not mistaken.

The fact that the uncanny rat-eating Chinaman refuses to make a beverage of the tea that he places on foreign markets proves most conclusively that the Prophet was not mistaken. The questionable ingredients entering into manufactured coffees; the enormous number of superannuated eggs turned over by the great egg dealers to coffee-houses in metropolitan centers is indubitable evidence that the Prophet was not mistaken.

How much wider the scope may be that is covered by the words "hot drinks" is not for the writer to decide at this time; but long years of close observation, experience, experiment, and study have proven to my satisfaction that the effects of coffee are intrinsically bad, and that the effects of tea are still worse; that they were the only "hot drinks" that were used by the masses as a regular daily beverage; and that in the economy of God they were not intended for the body or belly of man.

I can see no evidence that tea and coffee are not what the words "hot drinks" refer to, simply because they are not classed with the ordinary articles of food, but with strong drinks and tobacco. In making a list of injurious, objectionable articles it is reasonable that they should be listed together as we find them.

Again. It is not necessary to exclude all other drinks at an equally high temperature in order that tea and coffee be classed as the "hot drinks" here mentioned. Nor has the Word of Wisdom failed in its object if it be proven that cold tea and coffee are equally or more injurious than when hot, for the habit of using ice tea and ice coffee evidently came into common use in this country long since the date of this revelation.

Whatever else may have been classed as "hot drinks" I am more than convinced that the Prophet and early elders of the church understood it to refer to tea and coffee. I am also fully convinced that whosoever will abstain from them will enjoy better health, clearer heads, steadier nerves, and a more enduring love for God and his truth.

D. R. BALDWIN.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Arkansas, November 4, 1901.

There is a pretty story in connection with the series of articles which Helen Keller, the wonderful blind girl, has written for the Ladies' Home Journal, telling about her own life from infancy to the present day. She always has shrank from the publicity which follows successful literary work, and it was with great difficulty that she was persuaded to take up the task of preparing her autobiography. She had, however, set her heart on owning an island in Halifax Harbor for a summer home, and in the spirit of fun the editor of the Journal offered to buy it for her, or to provide the means to buy it. When the work of writing appeared especially irksome Miss Keller was reminded of her desire to become a land-holder, and it spurred her on. Just before Christmas she completed the first chapter of her marvelous story; and on Christmas morning she received from her publishers a check for a good round sum. Her delight may be imagined, for this was the first money of any account which she had ever earned. "It is a fairy tale come true," she said. Whether she will really carry out her plan to buy the island remains to be seen.

Letter Department.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, January 28.

Editors Herald: Everything at present is moving along as usual with us here. Brother and Sister Peterson are making their final trip at the Tuamotus, and expect to leave here by March 1 or thereabouts. If they had not feared the sudden change from this heat to the cold of winter in America upon Sister Lillie's health, they might have met her father before his departing; at least would have had the satisfaction of alleviating the sorrow of the lonely widowed mother while time had not yet assuaged her grief. Now it can not but be sad to return home and not meet the father's welcome. Yet her grief will be mitigated by the pleasure she will feel in meeting, we hope, with her mother, relatives, and friends at home.

Bro. and Sr. Gilbert were at Raroia at last accounts, meeting one of the discouraging features of this field: they have been at that island since October waiting for an opportunity to go to Amanu or Hao, but no vessel could be obtained, so they must needs remain until they can get one. I expect they have one by this time. We have sent their mail for two months to Hao, so of course they have not heard from home since they left America. When they get to Hao they will get a feast of news. By letter from them we learn that they are doing a good work, and while waiting are not idle by any means, but have been teaching the Saints to comprehend what they hear, and when learning by rote, to seek for the true meaning of what they have repeated; for these people will repeat page after page of printed matter without comprehending—fully at least—what they have repeated.

The enemy of all righteousness has tried again by his slanderous methods to injure the work of God and cause trouble to the missionaries here, as is his wont. Some person reported to the Governor—after Bro. A. H. Smith had left for Australia—that while he was at the Tuamotus he advised the islanders to sign a petition and send to the American government requesting them to come and hoist the American flag here. And that he had collected fifteen thousand francs French money; that he charged the natives two dollars each for the privilege of kissing his hand; and that he had carried away several thousand dollars worth of precious pearls. The French Governor notified the American Consul of these charges, and supposed it then quite true, and of course a serious matter. The Consul, by request of the Governor, visited him, and endeavored to show him the absurdity of the matter; and in reply to the Governor's statement that his information was official, said: "While I do not believe those charges are true, yet if true, the people of the Tuamotus being French citizens, had the right to give him of their money or pearls if they so desired, and he had the right to receive their offerings, and if the people wished to give him two dollars to kiss his hand, what then? This is a common statement concerning the Catholic priests and no notice is taken of it. As for the charge of inciting to rebellion is concerned, that is too absurd to be thought of; Mr. Smith is an officer high in authority in that church, and is himself amenable to its laws, which I know forbids such a thing."

I visited the Consul, and denied every single allegation, as I had acted as translator between him and the natives, and consequently knew of the matter, and was a competent witness, and I asked for other testimony than rumor or the statement of that official, and gave them to understand that it was a serious matter to charge a man holding the position which President Smith does with such actions. Lately I have not heard anything of the matter, so I suppose, as Emma remarked, another woe is past.

While visiting the Governor, he requested a statement of our faith and the difference between us and the Protestants, Catholics, and the Utah church. This we did to the best of our ability, writing him a statement of the tenor of our work, and sending him an epitome of our faith, the Kirtland Temple Suit, and marked and noted pages in the Abstract of Evidence, in Temple Lot Suit, with Judge Philips' decision, and a few tracts. The books were returned yesterday, with the thanks of the Governor. Thus does the God whom we serve, cause the wrath of man to praise him. In this case, as in the trouble in getting the flag for the Evanelia, a door was opened to present our faith in a restored gospel in its fullness to the highest authorities of the land. I have since heard that the statement of our faith and church polity sent to the Governor here in February, 1895, was forwarded to France. The officials there referred the matter to a leading ecclesiastical official, who in returning the document said: "You can not disturb those people, for they are in harmony with the Bible."

We to-day received a large glass jar of fresh butter from the cold-storage room of the steamer, sent us by Bro. Z. O. Butterfield, of Calistoga, California. We immediately tried some on a piece of cracker, and now I wonder how we could think that was good which we called butter, which is put up in tin cans and sold here as butter; and we really thought it was good, too. Well, when we eat this butter we will think of Joseph's land and of the kind heart of our good Brother and Sister Butterfield of pleasant Napa Valley, who in the joyous New Year tide could think four thousand miles away, and send a token of their kindly remembrance to the unforgotten missionaries.

Bro. John Hawkins is still with us, and we are busy correcting the translation of the Doctrine and Covenants preparatory to printing it in Tahitian. We sometimes do as much as six pages a day, sometimes three; and sometimes the Holy Spirit which indited the revelation rests upon us, and we delight ourselves, as we, following its light, see and talk of the beauties and light and glory in the revelations; and while we rejoice we feel an earnest desire to inform others of these good things, and being humbled when we consider our imperfections and unworthiness, we breathe a prayer for mercy and help, and go on again with our work. O, the blessedness of being entirely devoted to the work of God; the holy, sanctifying influences which may abide with him who can make an entire consecration to God of soul, body, spirit, and property, to be indeed one with God, one with Jesus, and one in unison with the Holy Spirit! Great God, help thine unworthy servant to attain to this; then we may bid defiance to the elements of this world, and dwell under the peaceful shadow of the wings of the Almighty, and fear no evil for evermore.

May peace be with all the Israel of God!

J. F. BURTON.

WEST FORK, Indiana, February 18.

Editors Herald: I left Clear Lake, Indiana, February 7, en route for Wirt, Jefferson County. According to previous arrangements I met Bro. J. H. Lake at Waterloo, Indiana, and we went to the Union Branch, near Wirt, where we were met by Brn. Boswell and Scott, and conveyed to their home, and learned that appointments were out for the evening and over Sunday. Meetings were continued over the next week.

On the 12th in company with Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., we started for Derby, by way of Louisville, Kentucky, but found the river full of ice and the boats all in waiting for the ice to clear away. We had to change our plans and come this way by rail to Marengo and walk from there to Pilot Knob, Bro. William H. Kelley, of New Albany, accompanying us. Next morning Bro. Vernon brought us on our way about ten miles. Walking the remainder of the way we arrived at our present home, Bro. William Maymon's. We are holding meetings every evening at the schoolhouse in West Fork, in the past called Marietta, the very place where Brn. Blair, Lambert, Kelley, Hilliard and others have labored along with the Scotts.

We intend to reach Derby, then on to Leavenworth, then to Byrneville, where we expect to meet Bro. J. H. Lake and Bro. Marshall or Boswell, whom we left to visit Plainville and Washington Branches.

There are good people and good Saints here, and the work is in better condition than we expected to find it. The missionaries have done some excellent work.

We expect to move homeward March 5. We have not heard from Bro. Lake since leaving him at Wirt, but hope he is well and accomplishing much good. Bro. Lake has made many friends in this district, as also in the Northern Indiana District. Bro. Kelley will remain at this point and hold over Sunday, as we go to Derby, and meet us at Byrneville. Remember us in your devotions.

GEORGE A. SMITH.

DERBY, Indiana, February 2.

Dear Saints: The HERALD is always a welcome visitor in our home, and it is quite a pleasure to learn through its columns how the gospel work progresses in almost all parts of the world. We see that in spite of all persecution and opposition the march of our Christian soldiers is steadily onward. Thanks be to God!

Not long ago I was opposed to this work, but am not now. I was a Missionary Baptist for about six years before I ever knew there was such a church as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I had heard of "Mormons" but knew of nothing but the Salt Lake people. Having been a Baptist since I was fourteen years of age I thought I was all right until shortly after our marriage (nearly two years ago) my husband, Joseph E. Cummings, began to read Latter Day Saint literature to me and explain the difference between this and the Salt Lake church and soon I was almost a believer.

But Satan always knows where to work and soon made me think I had already been baptized and that there was no need of being baptized over again. I thought this church ought to take me on my old baptism. Strange idea, that the old church was wrong and the old baptism was right! I see now that such a thing couldn't be; for if the church is wrong, so is the baptism of that church. Brn. M. R. Scott, Jr., and William C. Marshall reasoned with me along this line, together with husband and others, and through prayer and earnestly seeking to know the truth, evidence that this work is true came to me in a dream. I had other beautiful dreams which I would like to describe had I space, and became thoroughly convinced.

I was baptized and confirmed July 7, last, by Bro. Scott.

For some time before my baptism I had suffered from a serious illness and was, as I think, very near death's door. The more medicine I took the more I suffered. I was then a believer, having given my name for baptism a short time before, so I sent for Brn. Scott and Kelley and was administered to. I was healed by the power of God through faith and obedience to his will. Four days after being administered to I went to the river and was baptized and felt so well the following week that I did my housework and pickled and canned five gallons of blackberries, and my health became better than it had been for several years.

If persons other than Saints should chance to read this letter, I wish to say to you, Don't stumble on your old baptism; for if your old church is wrong, your old baptism must be also. A lawful act can not come from an unlawful source. Go to the Lord in prayer and seek earnestly for true knowledge and it will be given you. I speak from experience. As the Lord has done so much for me, I desire to help others to enjoy the same blessings I enjoy.

The branch here seems revived. There have been fourteen additions this last year. Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., and others have labored faithfully to advance the cause and are doing good work.

The trustee of our township closed all schoolhouses against preaching. Our branch leader, Bro. Gruver, wrote to our State Attorney, and found out that we could open schoolhouse by a vote of the majority of the voters of the district. As we already had petitioned the trustee to open the house by the vote of almost all voters of district, we had preaching from that time on.

The house is open for all religious and political purposes except during school hours. I do not know what the law is in other States, but it would be well for others having the same trouble to investigate. Help the good work on in every way possible.

I think we will soon move to where there are no Saints, and expect to meet much opposition, but hope by God's help to get a branch started there. I have been trying to open up the way a little through correspondence with my parents and family who are Baptists, part in name and part in belief.

Saints, pray for us that our work may be a success and that we may glorify God and his church through the labor of our hands.

"A Question on Equality."

I wish to ask if the short article which appeared in the HERALD of January 15 on the above subject is to be considered as an authoritative expression of opinion on this matter? As surely on a question of such vital importance as that here presented there is little room and no necessity for indefinite and vague statements in connection therewith.

We understand that the Church of Christ as a corporate body is to be governed, sanctified, and made perfect by the application of revealed law. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16; also 85: 8, 9. Hence speculative opinions and ideas of men should have no place within the church of God, which, as St. Paul testifies, is the "pillar and ground of the truth." 1 Timothy 3: 15. And like this apostle in his fearless and faithful devotion to the truth we likewise in our day have occasion to deplore the subvertive tendency of modern times, both within and without the church. To correctly represent Christ and thus build on a firm foundation for eternity demands now as in the past a close adherence to the "word of God," realizing that the mistakes and failures so inherent in our humanity even when at its best, fully demand and need the assistance, favor, and ultimate blessings promised by the Master.

Editors Herald: I am sorry to say that in my missionary travels I see but few copies of our church organ. This should not be; each family should make it a point to take the church paper. The HERALD is the official paper of the church, and as such should be sustained. When I go to a place, I generally ask, "Have you the last HERALD?" It grieves me to hear in reply, "We do not take the HERALD." Now Saints, this is not right; and if it is not right it is wrong. Some complain that the price is too high. Well, let all take it and it may be that the management could see its way to a reduction of the price. Let all try to increase the subscription list. Let all missionaries assist in working this up. The HERALD and the Ensign could and should be in every house. I do not know how many copies of either one come to Canada; but I have no doubt the number could easily be trebled. Let us all try it.

Since the opening of the year, Elder George H. Henley and I have been associated in missionary work.

We left London for St. Mary's where we held forth nightly to small congregations. We sometimes secured a good turn-out, but the lack of unity on the part of the Saints there placed insurmountable obstacles in the way of our success. When will they learn the necessity of union in righteousness, so that they may be Christ's?

In the grand prayer of Jesus, he says, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." Sanctify is from the Latin sanctus, and means holy.

Webster defines the word sanctify, which is the anglicism of the Latin sanctus, "To make holy; set apart to sacred use." This was to be by the word; "Thy word is truth," says Jesus.

In John 15: 3 he says: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." The word that sanctifies us, if we abide in the vine, for he says, "Without me ye can do nothing." The margin says, "severed from me."

It stands to reason that a branch that is severed from the limb must die from lack of nourishment; so God's children, in like manner, must, to retain life, abide in the vine, Jesus Christ. In this way they are sanctified through the word, which is truth.

Jesus also says (John 17: 19): "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." By this we see that our Redeemer saw the necessity of sanctification, and he used the means provided for the accomplishment of that great purpose. Then he prays earnestly for his loved people. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (Verse 21.) In verse 23 he prays, "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; that the world may know that thou hast sent me." Now, dear Saints, the only way to make the missionary work a success is for the children to throw away their differences and be united in righteousness in the bonds of love and saintly fellowship. The fruitful cause of the missionary failure is the lack of unity among the Saints in the various branches. They have been warned time after time. God has spoken to them, and in various ways they have been admonished, but all to no purpose.

There are Saints in Canada, and I presume there are a large number in the United States, who will not forgive their brother or sister his or her trespasses. There are Saints who love to hate, and who hate to love.

I spoke these words to a body of Saints one Sunday morning, last summer, and paid but comparatively slight attention at the time, but subsequent consideration impressed the sentiment upon my mind so that it assumed a force of expressed truth aptly and fitly conveyed or uttered.

If the Saints continue their strife and contention, how can they expect God to bless the labors of the missionaries? Especially is this applicable in the branches. A large ingathering in a branch where there is strife (and how few there are without) is but to increase the confusion. As the people come in they would soon take sides in the conflict. The world will go on in utter ignorance of this great latter-day evangel so long as the Saints are in their present condition. Only by becoming one in righteousness can the world be made to see and know of the great gift of God, Jesus Christ, "The means of grace, and the hope of glory."

I find Elder Henley a good Saint and an able defender of the work. Kindly in his disposition and genial in his association, he is well received and appreciated among the Saints.

Elder Henley and I have been in the city of Stratford for nearly three weeks. While there is no actual strife among them, there is a deplorable lack of spiritual force with all. There is a spirit of lethargy, or that sleepy condition that betokens something wrong with the body.

We advertised our meetings, but could get no one out; but like Mohammed and the mountain, we went to the people. I do not know how the weather is in Iowa, but in this part of Ontario out-door preaching in the winter should be postponed till summer. Nevertheless, on Saturday the 8th inst., we went to the market square. It was eight p. m., and a rough, blustering night, with the air fairly blistering, and well down below zero. Five of the brethren went with us, and the dear sisters bringing up the rear, like supports in an attack. The writer obtaining permission from one of the guardians of the law, we stood out well from the sidewalk and sang, "Jesus, I my cross have taken." Bro. Henley has a voice somewhat in keeping with his weight,—246 pounds. As our voices rang out on the crisp air, the sisters walked over from the walk, and, standing by our side, joined with us in this sweet song of Zion. Elder Henley offered prayer, and we sang, "Come, thou Fount," etc. Then he spoke to the crowd for some ten minutes, when the writer spoke for another season. We invited them to our meetings; but, sorry to relate, none came.

Now Saints in Canada, yea, and elsewhere, be admonished, "Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. . . . Redeeming the time, because the days are evil."

We expect to go to Rostock, where we may remain a couple of weeks, and then to Armstrong's Mills, some seven miles out of the city of Guelph.

We intended going out to Cherry Grove, about eight miles from St. Marys, but found the diphtheria there first. Thus hindered, as some of the few Saints were quarantined by law, we passed on, but hope to call in the near future.

Weather beautiful; sleighing excellent, but indications of a snow-storm.

Our prayers are for the ultimate redemption of Zion. We request prayers for our success.

Editors Herald: I am still trying to push the work; but the bad weather has hindered. There has been a sheet of ice on the ground for three weeks and it has been dangerous getting about. The work here looks favorable for the coming year, as I have made some openings out in the country besides what has been done here in the city. We will have Bro. I. N. Boberts with us next week, which will be a treat to the Saints here. I am sure he will do us all good.

Editors Herald: By advice of Bro. W. H. Kelley I came into New York State, January 14, visiting Bro. Brothers' at Buffalo extending what encouragement I could to them. Isolated from fellowship with Saints they enjoy even a call from the passing minister.

The 20th I joined Bro. D. L. Allen at Greenwood, where he was having very interesting meetings. With the good sister at the organ and his melodious voice, the Parsons was a back number; yet the Quaker was happy. The old saying that it never rains but it pours seemed to be verified by the appearance of Bro. W. H. Kelley who gave us three sermons—freest from throat trouble I have heard him deliver for some time. He left for the East, leaving Bro. Allen and me to continue the meetings. Bro. Sheldon came in during the following week from Lamoni enthused with mission work in England, his birth-place.

Here is a good field for an elder who will work. This people is deserving of a good, careful worker. The work there demands it and the Saints needs the assistance.

The snow-flakes came so thick and fast we were compelled to conclude our meetings without notice. Four days we listened for the whistle of the iron horse, but he had got stuck in the snow-drifts, so we waited for his release, then moved on, calling on Mr. and Sr. C. Kelley and Sr. Nettie Morgan at Hornellsville, thence north.

I have heard people speak of "jumping out of the frying pan into the fire." We did not do this, but we got into Fulton just as another storm set in and were kept there four days. Yet fortunately we were under the hospitable roof of Sr. Ellen Harding. Here we formed the acquaintance of Bro. Davis, one of the Palermo Saints who has located in town. When it was possible Bro. Davis brought us out to our present quarters, Bro. and Sr. Trimble's, over and through drifts four to fifteen feet deep. Prospects were poor for meetings, but after five efforts we were stormed out, and ever since snowing is the order. Yet why should we murmur or complain when associated with those of like precious faith whose home is our home, and none could be more homelike. Yet as the snow-flakes play their little games on the window-panes, there is a longing for a view of Zion's land where the earthly if not heavenly heritage of the Saints is to be found.

Here is a noble band of workers that really have been unavoidably neglected. Several here would no doubt have joined the church but no one came till streams were frozen up, snow so deep that practically nothing can be done more than to encourage the few that we can see during our sojourn, which of a necessity must be short.

This section should have two workers with a tent here next season. I have not been where I felt that there could more good be done than in York State. Here not far away on Seneca Lake, at Fayette, the church began its work seventy-two years ago. I believe a special campaign ought to be made in Western New York by some of the best men we have. I am waiting for the snow-storm to conclude its work.

Editors Herald: Often when reading the beautiful letters in the HERALD the thought comes, If only I could pen such beautiful thoughts. Then the question comes, Why do you not exercise what talent the Lord has been pleased to give you?

No matter how small our talents, persistent effort will improve them. The Lord intended that we each day should improve our talents. And while I may not be on an equal basis with some of my brethren and sisters, yet I can exercise what talent I have, and pray God each day that my understanding may grow clearer. No time in life is better to start the exercising of our talent than when young, for then the mind is not burdened with the cares and anxieties of this busy world. As the days go by, age creeps on, and age comes not alone, trials, perplexities, joy, and peace accompany it.

How it gladdens the heart with a joy that's untold,
To think of that land where we'll never grow old.

MANESE, Oklahoma, February 17.

Editors Herald: Just closed a series of meetings near the above-named place, with some interest manifest. I proved the restoration and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon by the Prophet Joseph to this people clearly, I think. Some months ago I did not think it possible I could preach over five or six times in a place, but my series of twenty sermons did not exhaust all evidence at hand to prove the great latter-day work. I have gone into the stand time after time, not having clearly settled on the subject to be delivered, and my knees weak and my heart jumping, fearful of the outcome; but, Saints, God was there, and the Holy Spirit supplied every deficiency, enabling me to speak in power. I would open my mouth and words would come, clothed in expressions of thought that I knew were not my own. Of my four lectures on the Book of Mormon, delivered in two schoolhouses, but in the same neighborhood, I heard some favorable comments. I sold three copies of Book of Mormon and several other pamphlets. Religiously, the people are very much divided at the above-named place: Methodist, Baptist, Christian, United Brethren, Presbyterian, True Follower, and one preacher was out to hear me twice who belonged to the Invisible Church. Will some one explain?

I attended the debate at Redmoon, between H. O. Smith and C. R. Nichol. Our faith was vindicated clearly to all truth-loving people. The character of Joseph Smith was viciously attacked, but the composure of Bro. Smith through it all was a surprise even to some of the Saints, in reply impeaching the testimony of "Beadle," "Montgomery," "Howe," and a book "Metropolitan Life," by showing conflicting statements and their unreliability as true historians, proving to all fair-minded people who was the true exponent of truth. Nichol repeatedly cried, "Your doctrine is as corrupt as hell;" but when he was asked to prove, after the reading of the Epitome, where it was corrupt, he utterly failed. And when interrogated as to whether our teaching regarding the marriage covenant was "corrupt as hell," he dared not say it was, for the opposite would be disastrous to his cause. The same argument was made on faith, repentance, baptism, etc., but he dared not say such were as "corrupt as hell" for it would prove his own teaching equally as corrupt. After this argument he placed on his statement a modifier, claiming those doctrines "peculiar to Mormons or Mormonism" only, were corrupt; but this did not work, for it was shown that all our teachings and doctrines were peculiarly our own, and when they were repudiated the doctrine of Christ was also repudiated; and when pressed to show where we were wrong, he fell back on the vile filth of "Beadle," "Howe," and others to prove it.

The arguments on the unchangeable attitude of God to his people were not answered. When it was proven that at various intervals of time, and especially the commencement of various dispensations, the ministrations of angels were given to earth, and God always spoke through his "servants the prophets" in all periods, and the ushering in of a still later epoch in the last day, God did still act like himself by doing things in like manner by sending angelic ambassadors to man, it was something that was let strictly alone by Mr. Nichol. It was so clearly and positively proven that there was no mistaking the time in the world when these things were to be, but blindness, total blindness, were the minds of Mr. Nichol and his brother evangelists on such declarations made by ancient prophets regarding latter-day events. (See Isaiah 29: 14-17; 32: 14; Joel 2: 21-32; Malachi 3: 1, 2; Matthew 24: 14; Revelation 14: 6, 7.)

Of course the main arguments from the texts were not touched. He made a stand on Joel's prophecy, claimed fulfillment on Pentecost, but when asked if God spoke either through prophecy, vision, or dream, of course the contention was dropped. He labored hard to capture all other people of other denominations by using Joseph Smith's statement that the "creeds were all wrong," and very eloquently pictured Methodists, Baptists, and all the rest in hell roasting together with himself and his brethren. This was shown to be contrary to our teachings, and when an extract was read from Thomas W. Grafton, in his life of Alexander Campbell, and the Christian Baptist by another author of that faith, that all offspring of Roman Catholicism were no more than "harlots" and "bastards" in nature, because illegitimately born and the "mother" was considered vile, it did not set well, for Joseph Smith made no statement as plain and which condemned other sects as strongly as this.

Sport was made over the principle "Laying on of hands for the blessing of children," and was claimed Christ alone and no other could do this work. This was answered by admitting the blessing came from that source and claimed no power was of man, but from God. In like manner is baptism performed, not that individual man had power to induct men into the church, or remit sin, but God recognizes the actions of those "commissioned," thus they come into the body. That "John the beloved" of Christ was still on earth, as well as the three Nephites, each met its share of ridicule. In rebuttal, John 21: 21-24 also Revelation 10: 11, showing John was to tarry. He would not accept of the fact that there were to be seventy elders in the quorums of Christ's church for their commission was prior to the organization on Pentecost. This was shown to be false and that the kingdom was declared before, and if we reject the office of "seventy" because they were placed in the church to do labor before Pentecost, so can the original Twelve be rejected for the same reason. His definition of the word Mormon was, "The book of disgrace, of insult, of blemish, blot," etc. He wanted a miracle, of course, and working himself to the pitch, desired to be struck blind.

Saints, the manner of opposition against this great latter-day work confirms me more and more that the work originated from the proper source—from God.

Mr. Nichol in all his so-called array of logic and reason did not put forth one argument that destroyed the claims we make, but instead of debating the proposition of the church, he made an issue on the character of the Prophet Joseph, fulfilling the promises of the Master, "Ye shall be hated of all men," "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake . . . for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." No hesitancy was made to sacrifice truth when it collided with his opinions.

History is supposed to be a true record of events as they have actually occurred, and the makers themselves are the ones best qualified to chronicle these events; and unless the events are compiled in harmony with the facts, it is folly to say it is history, hence we reject the so-called histories of Beadle, Smucker, Howe, Lee and others because they are not true historically, and men who have hatred rankling their bosoms against men are not qualified to give an impartial account. These men tell the public they are thoroughly competent to write a history of the Latter Day Saints, voicing their belief as to what they thought to be the teachings, laws, and actions of this people, without consulting the body of believers themselves as to whether or not they are portraying to the public that which is true and correct. Many books of this nature have been written. Why insist on their truthfulness when the religious body themselves emphatically deny their truthfulness and defy them to prove their assertions? Seems to me we should at least have a voice in compiling our own history. If our claims as a people can not be met with sound reasoning instead of by unreliable histories and downright pettifogery, it will flourish, and until they resort to more honorable means of showing where we are wrong, thinking people will insist on investigating both sides; and seeing the gross injustice done us, they are constrained to cast their support where it rightfully belongs.

A purported piece of history was heralded far and wide, that "Spalding's Romance" was no other than the original, from which the Book of Mormon was taken. This found lodgment in histories and encyclopædias of the world. Was it true? If so, why are scholarly men abandoning it? This lie was started by Howe and others; thus time proves it such, and if wrong in this why not in other matters. To say Joseph Smith was idle and wicked is impudent and casts reflection on the one who made it. When we consider the work he did in the short space of time allotted him on earth, how can this claim be truthfully made? The faith given and the church established by his efforts under the direction of God is not one that produces corrupt and evil fruit. How are we to prove him wicked? Shall we resort to his enemies to prove this allegation? Do we rely on the villifying statements of Anarchists to prove the character of our late president? Shall we take the words of those wicked Jews to find out the kind of a man Jesus Christ was? To prove the reformers all to be good morally do we turn to the cursings and excommunications pronounced by the Popes of Catholicism? Certainly not. We take that which they taught, and their public acts as seen by their friends, to determine whether they were good or bad. So likewise we should judge Joseph Smith, and not by men who were avowed enemies to the man. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

I believe the work is onward in Oklahoma. Much opposition has been met the last year. Conference meets at Oak Grove Branch, February 22. Seeing the beauty and harmony there is with the ancient pattern in origin, in faith, in organization, in practice, the same confirming evidence by an allwise Father, and the same antagonistic power once manifest, being arrayed and with the same power of hell that was once brought to bear on God's chosen people being manifest to-day, confirms me more and more of the latter-day restoration.

It is indeed a conflict and it is only by and through God's mighty power can we conquer, so let us try and keep our weapons in excellent condition and stand firm on the eternal truth of heaven.

WALLSEND, N. S. W., Australia, January 18.

Editors Herald: We forward you this day the first number of our Australian Mission paper, and trust that you will receive it safely. This paper fills a long-felt need, and we are pleased to say that we feel confident that it is established upon a sound and permanent basis. As the Australian Saints read this little paper, you can imagine how their hearts will swell with gratitude to God, and to the noble Saints in America who have helped them financially in the launching of this paper. We intend to make it a mission paper in every sense of the term. Its bright pages, silently breathing forth the angel's glorious message, will be read by many who have never heard an elder preach. May the good Lord abundantly bless all those who have so nobly assisted us. Besides those who have sent money, a good many have promised to do so when we were ready to print the paper. Some of these may have changed their minds; we hope they have not! We will send them three copies of the paper, and if we do not hear from them by that time we shall conclude that they do not want the paper. We trust, however, that no one will disappoint us. Will you ask, through the HERALD, all those who have promised to subscribe to send along their money to Bro. J. R. Epperson, 1723 Walker Street, Des Moines, Iowa, who will forward all subscriptions in a lump-sum to us. Any one else who would like to help us may send along seventy-five cents to Bro. Epperson, and I feel that through doing so new Saints will be raised up in Australia to bless them.

You will see by our "General Church News" that the work is onward here, and I feel that the present move in establishing this paper will tend to make the progress more marked during the present year.

May the Lord prosper the cause of Zion in all the world.

Dear Herald: Since writing you from Harp, Alabama, I have labored in the Lone Star, Flat Rock, Bay Minette, and Pleasant Hill Branches, Alabama. My work in the above-named branches was very successful. Some matters of unpleasant character were adjusted satisfactorily. My meetings were well attended, the good Spirit blessing the work to the good of the Saints and others. I have visited six branches in Florida, some of which have run down for want of local workers; however, most of the members are holding on to the faith, doing what they can to keep alive and faint not. I was wonderfully blessed while in Florida, and I am sure my work was not in vain. I met many noble Saints while there. Florida is a good field; also in Alabama a number of places can be had for preaching, but no one to fill them.

I returned to Alabama on December 11. While waiting at Brewton for my train, I walked out to the big sawmill, looked around there for awhile, then walked on farther up the creek. I met three men, two of them seeming very friendly, and seeing I was a stranger, inquired as to my business. We then entered into a conversation with two of them, the third taking no part in the matter, but eyed me very closely. While I was talking to the other two, the third man grabbed me by the collar, saying he would choke Mormonism out of me. But I did not choke. I kindly asked him three times to let me loose, but he refused. I was told by the other two to knock him down, but I did not feel like doing that, so caught him by the muscles of the arms, tripped him down, and sat on him. It was some time before he would agree to behave. By and by his breath began to give way on him and he promised. I let him up. He then apologized, and the matter stopped there. I did not sit very easy, but put all the avoirdupois upon him I had. He said he thought I was a Utah elder, and he "had no time for them," as they had led some of his people away to Utah from Mississippi. I am thankful I did not get angry.

The hard rains and cold weather stopped the dedication of the church at Harp, as had been arranged.

I spent Christmas with the Pleasant Hill Saints; they had a nice tree and entertainment, the latter being conducted by one of Graceland's students, Sister Bertha Harper; everything went off in fine shape. We had no Santa Claus, Bro. Kelley.

On the 26th of December our hearts were saddened by the untimely death of our esteemed brother, M. K. Harp. May the good Lord soon raise up another to take his place. Father, bless the lonely wife, is our prayer.

On Friday, January 3, I bade the Saints at Garland good-bye; then off for Mississippi, stopping over Sunday at Bay Minette, Alabama. Met Bro. W. L. Booker there. We held some good meetings, strengthening the work there. On the 9th we were off for the Theodore Branch. We spent a very profitable time there; Saints rejoicing in the work of God.

Monday, the 13th, we were off for Three Rivers Branch. Our meetings were a success, and all were benefited by our stay with them.

On the 22d we crossed Three Rivers to Vancleave; here is the home of Bro. Booker. We held some good meetings, leaving a good interest with all. From there the writer went to Milton, Florida, by the request of our esteemed Bro. L. F. West. I had a splendid visit with him and family, also Bro. S. D. Allen and family.

My missionary force are good men and do perhaps all they can to promote the interest of the work.

While near Escatawpa, Mississippi, some wanted to be baptized, but could not because there was too much water there. So we left them for Bro. Booker to look after.

On the 5th inst. I had the pleasure of uniting in holy wedlock Bro. Daniel B. Sellers and Sr. Minnie J. Vickrey. A large crowd was present to witness the rite. All seemed well satisfied with our procedure in that direction. Hence a couple is made happy.

On Monday, the 10th, I bade all farewell and off for Fulton, Kentucky. I had to lie over all day in Montgomery, so I walked about the city until tired enough to rest. I returned to the depot. There was a large crowd in the waiting-room. Among them were four preachers. One of them acted very frisky, and wanted to know how many Christians there were waiting. When he came to me I told him who and what I was. Then the fun began. I never got such a raking before. I sat still until they were through, or rather until they had exhausted all they had in stock. Then I arose and asked the people if they wanted to hear the other side. They said they did. But the preachers told me they did not want to hear me. I told them to shut their mouths, so they did and I turned the old gospel battery on them. Then I asked the people if they believed the Bible. They said they did. Then I showed up the apostasy from Christ's church; then the restoration. I spent two hours at that, and was going to stop, when they cried out, "Go on, go on!" So on I went, giving them the mission of the Prophet Joseph and the Book of Mormon. God be praised for his help in every time of need! Different ones came and shook my hand and congratulated me on my Christian manner in defending the Bible and my faith. One lady took my hand and kissed it, saying, "Sir, you have saved me from infidelity." Thank the Lord. I then walked out doors for a while, and on my return a man stepped up to me and said, "Elder, here is a small token of our appreciation of your service to us." He then handed me thirteen silver dollars; this made me feel doubly humble. I thanked them very kindly for the gift. This will result in the opening of the work in some good places.

The work in the South is coming up slowly, but surely. My heart and soul rejoice in the work.

I arrived at Fulton, Tuesday the 11th, at 12: 30. Bro. Myers met me at the train. I found a good resting place at his house. On Wednesday, the 12th, we walked out to Bro. McClains', found all well and happy. At night we had a good prayer-meeting; all felt well.

Thursday, the 13th, at one o'clock the writer, with Brn. J. R. and W. L. McClain, left Fulton to attend conference at the Foundry Hill Branch, Tennessee. It was very cold. We arrived at Swan at the home of Bro. James Adair and put up for the night. We were gladly received and cared for; but on getting out this morning we found it snowing hard and it has kept it up all day. There is now about eight inches of snow and the end is not yet. I go from Fulton to Louisville, Kentucky. When done there will work my way home for conference.

I thank the Saints throughout the mission for their kindness to me. You have endeared yourselves to me, and should we not meet again, I invoke the blessings of God upon you. I am still in the fight.

I. N. ROBERTS.

Saints' Herald: We are a little band of Saints out here in the flint hills of Douglas County, weak in worldly goods but strong in the faith once delivered to the Saints. Two years and a half ago there was not a Saint within several miles of this neighborhood, and plenty of prejudice when Bro. J. C. Chrestensen came and opened the books in defense of the true gospel of Jesus Christ. He baptized two, when the church was closed against him. But some people came to our aid, and James Warner gave a deed for one acre of land for a church lot. About this time a family of Saints moved into the neighborhood, and one more was added by baptism. Then the four met and formed themselves into a building committee and commenced to prepare for the erection of a church-house, without a dollar in the treasury. But some who had seen how the Saints had been treated came forward and gave aid in labor, money, lumber, and other necessary means, and the work went on, although there were threats made that we should never finish the house and occupy it as a church-house.

Thanks be to our God we have succeeded in building a log house twenty by twenty-eight feet and thirteen feet to ceiling, and have finished the same and dedicated it to God's service on the 9th instant at twelve o'clock m. Elders O. B. Thomas and J. C. Chrestensen and Priest J. T. Davis were present with the branch officers, Bro. Chrestensen in charge of services. Bro. Thomas delivered the dedicatory sermon. We had a very enjoyable time, giving God the praise, honor, and glory. And may we meet in his house for many years and render our services to him; and may many more be added to the present number, according to God's will, is the prayer of his humble servant in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Bro. Thomas gave for a name to the location and the house, Bethel.

TALLYHO, West Virginia, February 20.

Editors Herald: I do not trouble you often, possibly not so frequently as I should. Have tried to be busy during the present conference year. Have labored in several localities. The results so far as seen are encouraging. Baptized Rachel Perry near Vales Mills; Ethel, Edward, and William F. Rice, at Glen Roy; James W. Holland, near Raysville; Mary L. Davidson, near Sinking Springs; and Sarah M. Mosier, Mary Jones, Lewis and Luther Wells, Clayton Jones, Lily Straight, Maud M., Lizzie A., and James R. Larkins, Marietta; William and Evalena Keyes, Anna Tenant, and Ethel Taylor; all the above in Ohio. I have given these names knowing that many would like to know who the parties were, as a number of your readers know numbers of them.

Have not labored much in West Virginia. Bro. and Sr. Defigh live at Boomer, Fayette County, and desired to give the people there a chance to hear our claims. I spent several days there but could not awaken any interest. Bro. and Sr. Defigh are the only members there.

I came here on the sixth inst., and preached twelve times. The interest is good, and this afternoon baptized two young ladies, Anna Krieger and Clara Call. The former was born in Vienna, Austria. This making in all twenty-two since I left home May 16. As a rule have enjoyed good liberty. To-morrow expect to start to the Ohio District conference to be held on Saturday and Sunday at Glen Roy, and soon after start westward toward Holden, Missouri, to meet loved ones once more, "if the Lord will." The work is onward in Ohio and West Virginia. Many more yet to be gathered in ere long. If humility of heart shall characterize each one we will be enabled to perform our allotted part, wisely and well.

THE TRAINING OF CHILDREN IN REVERENCE.

"How can I teach your children gentleness
And mercy to the weak, and reverence for life,
When, by your laws, your actions and your speech
You contradict the very things I teach?"

To-day thoughtful people everywhere are noticing, even in cultured Christian communities, a universal negative characteristic in children—i. e., irreverence. What conditions produce this spirit, and how the right influences are to be provided to produce positive results, form the basis for our speculation. Is it because the little folks feel the great influence of public opinion—a departure from the old and accepted standards of our Puritan forefathers and towards the self-created, varying, and so-called progressive rules of conduct of to-day?

Because of this same liberty of thought and action, when the "osophies" and "ologies" are discussed in our homes by thoughtless parents or visitors, and forced upon the immature mind of little listeners, there is small wonder in the face of these scientific explanations of Cause and Effect, that we often find hypocrites and cynics among children of very tender years.

In a country where neither heredity, wealth, nor rank makes "a gentleman;" where you can find no two people who have the same conception of the unknown quantity; where is employed the same familiar form of address—"you" to both superior and inferior, to old and young; where one code of etiquette obtains in mansion and hut; the problem of whom we should venerate, what we should venerate, becomes indeed a most complex one.

Is it a spirit of democracy in our youth that would impel a young man to keep on his hat, for instance, when viewing a statue of Columbus? especially when above it is the reminder, "Gentlemen will please remove hats." With satisfaction be it told, that a young man had this experience before the statue, and received a fall as low as Cæsar's before Pompey—without Cæsar's friendly mantle to hide his face. He saw the sign and complained aloud, that he did not see any reason why he should take off his hat. A dear old lady spoke to her companion beside her, but loud enough to be heard by those around them, "Does it not read 'Gentlemen will please remove hats?'"

Is there not a dangerous outcome to be feared from this intensified self-conceit of the age? May it not finally take such a form as the following? From a wealthy, cultured, and refined home a sixteen-year-old boy, in his Sunday-school class in a large city church, was told by his teacher to look up a reference in his Bible. The book had fallen to the floor a few minutes before unobserved by him, and when shown where it lay he clasped it between both feet and firmly raised it to within reach. Shocking! you say; yet in his home the night before he may have listened to and, perhaps, have laughed at a joke about Abraham or some other Patriarch. If, as has been said, "Man is a tree whose roots are in the sky;" if he "must be nourished by ideals," any degradation of the same means the destruction of that simple, inherent faith so beautiful in children.

This naturally leads us to another cause of irreverence, and one commonly intensified by both parents and teachers—that of making a hero out of a child playmate or acquaintance because of some isolated act. The child often can discern motives by an instinct his elders never attain, and may, from a single instance of unmerited recognition on the part of parent or teacher, have false principles planted in his heart, the application of which would arrest his development or blight his life.

There is no gainsaying the spell of mystery and the fear of the unknown which comes over the human mind because of remoteness; and in setting a standard for a child, it should stand alone, limitless and unconquerable as time or space, to be respected, loved, and righteously feared.

Perhaps another potent cause for the moral condition of many children may, also, lie in the apparent indifference of many parents and teachers in regard to the formation of right conceptions of worship. The quiet time before retiring may be the mother's most valuable opportunity to sympathetically commune with her children, and the "artist mother" will nightly listen to her children's experiences of the day, or will relate to them some appropriate bed-time story, and then will bow her head or kneel, all others in the room joining in the devotion, while her children's faltering voices will lisp out their hearts' desire to the "Great Unknown."

Who has not, however, seen the contrast of this condition, and heard a tired, nervous mother directing the petition of one child, and perhaps, between the dictated lines of his petition, giving directions, or rebukes, or saying "good-night" to another? For very shame we will not speak of an irate father who, perchance during the same time, was "circumnavigating the globe" for his slippers, and giving vent to exclamations to the effect that he could not see for the life of him why his slippers could not be kept in one place.

In schoolrooms, conditions before and during devotional exercises are often no better than in these homes. Are we not fostering the beginning of Pharisaic and hypocritical habits, when prayers are allowed without the spirit, or with no attempt to create a quiet, reverential atmosphere?

If it is true theoretically, as modern pedagogy asserts, that music is an important factor in the child's education, may not the soft singing of a hymn, or quiet music from the piano, before prayer, become our best agency toward arousing in the children a sympathetic and responsive frame of mind?

All character-building has to do with universal problems, and few are more serious than that of our attitude toward the brute creation. Have we a right, save for self-defense, or for the extension of civilization, to exterminate beasts, other than those dangerous to humanity? Yet we often see mothers—sober-minded women—blinded by the law of expediency, unflinchingly give orders to their sons (or in their sons' presence) to drown a litter of kittens, or to kill an irritable dog. These are part of God's creation, and as no atom of matter is destroyed, may it not be also, that no attained degree of individuality (soul life) is ever lost? Leaving speculative philosophy in the background, the boy who, in the home, is allowed to kick his dog, will carry his irreverence over into his attitude toward his fellow man, and will conceive the idea that violence is the secret of man's mastery over the physical world. Verily, the presence of a pet—though even a lowly cur—in a household, if regarded by all with the respect that is due him as a domestic animal and, therefore, as a member of the family will prove a more eloquent example of reverence for life and man's province as nurturer of the same, than all the animal stories extant.

By an intelligent observation of the Sabbath day, another opportunity is afforded parents to enkindle in children the right attitude toward Christian observance—reverence toward a God of love. Just as Christmas season is used as a reminder of God's unfailing mercy throughout the year, each new Lord's day may likewise be made to mirror his constancy; and as a special effort is made by little surprise gifts and indulgences to make Christmas of all days the brightest of the year, so, also, should Sunday stand out among the days of the week. Many children are permitted a special hat and dress to mark the day, but how many have a store of "best pictures," "best enjoyments," "best toys," "best books," to handle and look at, or read, on that day? Any observance of the commandments of God which is slavish and reluctant, can not meet God's approval. Children should think of Sundays as: "This is the day which the Lord has made, we will rejoice and be glad in it." Not as a day when at a special hour they are to go to Sunday-school—perhaps to church—and the remainder of the day are either free to follow their own inclinations, or, worse still, are made to sit quietly in the house, listening to the conversation of their elders, or compelled to commit to memory verses of the Bible.

In considering this problem of training in reverence, the importance of physical culture, or developing a sound body, must not be overlooked. No person of insight denies that outward gesture or action is the expression of inner condition; yet it is conversely true that exterior attitude reacts upon the inner life. The boy of shambling gait and stooped shoulders can not reasonably hope to attain the high morals of his brother who holds up his chest, looks the whole world in the face, and walks with a purpose. A well-poised body and responsive members will undoubtedly increase a child's self-respect, and his actions will be ruled by a noblesse oblige which, without proper physical development, he perhaps would not have known. . . .

Finally, reverence presupposes the experience that some superior authority or power has been discovered which one is unable to master or attain. If this veneration is to be accorded parental or pedagogical authority, and the authority is not worthy of respect, parents or teachers, it appears, have no claim upon the child's recognition of what is, only, in them, a potentiality. Regenerated maturity, therefore, is the one indispensable condition of obtaining regenerated childhood—"Tis stress or strain in moth or man, that frees the folded wing."

On the struggle of parents and teachers to incorporate in their own lives the ideals they expect in their children, and on the effort they make to create active desire in them to consciously will the approximation of the ideal—to translate insight into deed—depend the reverential man and woman of the future.—Clara Edelina Woldert, in the American Mother.

Rural Sunday-Schools.

ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES.

Since the church has awakened to the need of Sunday-schools, and made Sunday-school work such an important factor in church work that it occupies several sessions previous to each district conference, much advancement has been made. And in almost every branch of the church whether in the city or in the rural district, the young and old may be found meeting from Sabbath to Sabbath at the appointed place of worship to engage in the study of God's word.

Did not Christ lay the foundation for the Sunday-school when he took the little ones in his arms and blessed them, and said, "Suffer them and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven"? And also when he told one of his disciples to feed his lambs; which shows that the children are precious in his sight; and that it is his will that they should be taught concerning his gospel. And in latter-day revelation to the church he remembers the children and says that they should be so instructed that they may be baptized when eight years of age. To be thus prepared the education of the child should commence early. And as the Master makes no exceptions, the children who are living in rural districts must be taught, as well as those who live in places more favorably situated. And as we should always be seeking for that which will place us upon a higher plane, and make our work more effectual, we can best do this by considering what disadvantages those in rural schools have to overcome, and wherein they have better advantages, than those where the work is more concentrated.

First as to

DISADVANTAGES.

In order to carry on a successful Sunday-school one of the requisites is promptness on the part of those who attend. Different causes may prevent those in rural districts from being at the place of worship at the appointed hour of meeting. The homes of many who attend are situated at some distance from the house of worship. At some seasons of the year the roads are almost impassable, the weather is unpleasant, and in winter the short morning hours are insufficient for the work of the farm both indoors and outside to be completed in time for the family to attend services. In summer the parents of children who live in the country being wearied with the labors of the week are inclined to stay at home rather than make the effort necessary to be present at the Sunday-school. Thus, not only depriving themselves of the benefits to be derived therefrom, but also their children who can not attend alone. These same parents often neglect to get their children in readiness to attend when it is possible for them to go alone, not heeding the command of the Lord to educate the children in his gospel. This duty can not be too strongly urged upon parents. They should remember that it is the Lord's work; that it is not a matter of little consequence, but a solemn obligation laid upon them by the express command of the Lord. As such it should be regarded and no sacrifice should be thought too great to be made in order to fulfill the duties of the hour. And if it is neglected and children go astray who shall say that parents are blameless or irresponsible.

While the rural school has numerous hindrances to struggle against, it also has some

ADVANTAGES.

In rural districts there are not so many social attractions, and those who live in such places are glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to mingle with their associates by attending the Sunday-school. Their minds thus not being occupied with many other things of a social nature are left free to receive impressions that may be made upon them through the medium of the Sunday-school. The different religious sects are not so numerous in the country, hence the numbers who attend Sunday-school are not divided among the several churches. And many who can not attend the Sunday-school of the church with which they have united may be persuaded by those of our church to attend Sunday-school where they will come in contact with truths which may enlighten their minds and eventually lead them into the church of the living God. Then let the rural Sunday-school workers continue to labor, not feeling that their work is insignificant or of little importance, and they may rest assured that their work will not be unavailing but the seed sown will spring up and bear fruit and the Holy Spirit will bear them witness that their work is acceptable to God.

Conference Minutes.

South Sea Islands Mission.—A special conference convened at Raroia in the Saints' new tabernacle, called Betela Mo'a (Holy Bethel), at 8:30 a. m., October 25, 1901. After singing and prayer President A. H. Smith was chosen president of the conference, J. F. Burton his assistant; D. M. Pohemiti Tahitian secretary, and J. W. Gilbert foreign secretary. President Smith then addressed the conference as follows: "I have come to you at the command of the Lord Jesus for the purpose of assisting you in organizing the church here more perfectly to carry on the work of the Lord agreeably to his commandments. I have come authorized by the General Conference also, to appoint and ordain a bishop for the work in the Islands Mission, if so directed. I have also the authority of the General Conference to thus ordain the necessary officers in the Islands Mission to carry on the work more successfully. My duty I esteem first to be to keep the commandments of God through the Lord Jesus Christ, in his revelations; my second, to obey the directions of the General Conference. I feel the responsibility which is resting upon me. Perhaps no man has ever been sent by the church with so great authority to perform the duties devolving upon him to any mission in the world. I would like the indorsement of this conference and the people upon the islands to the appointments made by the General Conference. Having the indorsement of this people in connection with the names mentioned in missionary work I shall feel free to move forward in the performance of my duty. The responsibility rests upon the congregation, the conference, and the Saints here upon the islands in the appointment of men to the positions high in office, for if they know any good reason why the appointee should not be indorsed, it becomes them to speak. The name of Metuaore was given in the General Conference, as bishop, and on my journey I received the evidence that he was worthy, and if his name be indorsed by the conference I shall feel free in ordaining him. To make him a bishop, I must ordain him to the office of a high priest. The position is a very responsible one, and he must be very faithful to God in the keeping of the duties imposed upon him in that position. He will not be made bishop to one branch nor one division, but he will be the bishop of the mission, the Island Mission, for the church. I would not impose this position upon him if he feels that he can not fulfill it; but if so be that he feels that he can fulfill its duties, I shall feel free to move forward in ordaining, if he be indorsed. He may speak in reference to it, and express himself."

Metuaore spoke as follows: "I feel the responsibility of this office, and know somewhat of its troubles and difficulties, and that there is much trouble to the heart in performing its duties. I understand that this is no little work, but the work is very great in the office of bishop in these islands. If the conference and the Holy Spirit are agreed that I should be ordained a bishop, I am willing to accept this office." President A. H. Smith then continued, "This was the principal business for which I was sent to the islands, except to assist in the organization of quorums if need be and also direct the missionary work. This statement is made at this conference, that this conference may understand the mission of my appointment." It was then moved and seconded and carried unanimously that this division conference indorse Metuaore as worthy of the office of bishop. The following officers were also sustained by vote: A. H. Smith as one of the Presidency, and the Patriarch, and L. A. Gould his secretary; J. F. Burton president of the mission; Pohemiti secretary of the mission, and Turatahi his assistant; J. W. Gilbert president of the Fakarava Division, and Taneterau his assistant, and Herman Janssen, Tapuni, and Tepava missionaries in Fakarava Division; Tepoaitu president of the Makemo District; Elia president of Hao District. Elia was also indorsed as a suitable person and worthy of the office of counselor to the bishop from this division. It was also ordered by this conference that the officers of the church of this division meet in conference in Papeete on April 6, 1902, at eight a. m., to devise means by which the church may be freed from debt, and to attend to such other business as may be necessary. The following names of officers were presented as eligible for organization in quorums. Elders Tehau, Teahio, Tekahitu, Rongotoma, Elia, Paho, Omaro, Ngaroroa, Taria, Pinga, Moeava, Paieahi; Priests Manumea, Otare, Eotu; Teachers Turepu, Tanui; Deacons Tepava, Temeri. The president of the conference then requested the conference to consider the indorsement of the following names as persons worthy and qualified for the position of members of the Quorum of Seventy; namely, Tapuni, Taneterau, and Kehauri. After some remarks each one was thus indorsed by unanimous vote. The conference by vote agreed to assist in collecting money to pay the fare of L. A. Gould to Australia, the money collected to be put in the hands of the bishop's agent for that purpose. Conference then adjourned to meet according to appointment.

South Sea Islands Mission.—A special conference convened at Panau, Kaukura, at eight o'clock, November 11, 1901. Alexander H. Smith was chosen to preside, with Joseph Burton to assist him; Pohemiti secretary, Turatahi assistant; L. A. Gould, foreign secretary. The minutes of the Raroia Conference were read and corrected. President A. H. Smith then made the following remarks: "To the brethren of the conference I wish to say that in answer to the will of the Lord as made known in the revelation given to the church at the last spring conference, I am here in your midst to help you and do what I can to establish the work here on the islands. God expressed his will by revelation through his prophet, that I be sent to these islands and to Australia to assist in the work and to appoint and ordain a bishop. In conversation with the President of the church, the Prophet, I asked him if it was intended or understood that there should be a bishop appointed and ordained in the Island Mission, and he answered me, 'Yes, if found necessary.' The name of Metuaore was mentioned in connection with this appointment, at the General Conference. The Bishop thought it advisable that he be ordained. Other counsel prevailed. It was thought best for me to come to the islands and see the condition, and if thought necessary the ordination be done here. I was in doubt in regard to ordaining one to the high priesthood for the purpose of ordaining to the bishopric, but on my voyage here while on the ocean, the Lord made it plain to me, revealed to me that this brother was worthy, and was entitled to the priesthood and calling spoken of. I would not appoint and ordain one to this office and high calling, notwithstanding I was sent with the authority of the General Conference, except such ordination be indorsed, and pleasing to the people here in the Island Mission. And I so stated to the conference held at Raroia, and requested the Saints to use their judgment, and, if it was their wish, to indorse what had been recommended. The recommendation was unanimously approved and indorsed at the Raroia Conference, but no action was had because I desired the indorsement, so far as possible, of the entire mission. And even now I shall not feel free to ordain and set apart until I have the indorsement, if it be granted, of the conference to be held soon at Papeete; for it is one of the principles of the law that all things done in the church in this wise should be done by common consent, except it be a direct command from God, then the indorsement of the people should be had also. It was also a part of the work that was expected of me, that I should assist in organizing a quorum of elders if the material should be found in the ministry in the Island Mission. This was mentioned also at the late conference at Raroia, and a number of names were enrolled and indorsed there, suitable, but not sufficient to begin the organization of the quorum. If there be a sufficient number in the mission and it is found that it can be done, the organization of the quorum of elders can be accomplished. It was not expected that I would do any great amount of missionary work, and in fact since my coming into the mission I have been incapacitated for much labor by sickness. I regret it but I can not help it. I am willing to bless you, and do what I can for you, but when sickness lays hold the body is weakened and not able to perform the work. I regret very much that could not talk to you in your own language, for I realize that we can feel the spirit of each other better when we can converse with each other, than when we are compelled to talk through an interpreter. I rejoice, however, to find the same Spirit animating you in the gospel work that I find in America in Zion, and recognizing this Spirit I can recognize you as brethren in the Lord and feel at home in your midst. When the Spirit is present I feel it. And I rejoice to find that there are so many here so well posted in the gospel, so able to defend it, as I recognize there are among you. My visit to you has opened my eyes and given me a better understanding of this mission than I could have had otherwise, and its importance, and I assure you that in the future my effort shall be to send those among you that will prove ministers of Christ for your good. The work of the missionaries in the past has been a noble one. I recognize its importance and its magnitude. I recognize, too, that except God had been with them they could not have done what they have done, and I am thankful that God has wrought with them. And I trust the good work may go on until every island in the ocean here where dwell men of your race, shall have heard the preaching of the gospel and the testimony of the Lord Jesus, until the people shall be prepared by keeping God's commandments, for the coming of Christ, when he shall rule and reign on the earth. Amen."

President A. H. Smith was recognized and indorsed in his position as one of the Presidency, and the Patriarch; L. A. Gould as his secretary; Joseph F. Burton as president of the mission; Pohemiti as secretary of the mission, Turatahi his assistant. Metuaore was indorsed as the proper person for ordination to the high priesthood, and as bishop of this mission; to be ordained at the conference to be held in Papeete. John Hawkins and John W. Peterson were selected as associate presidents, and missionaries, to the Tubuai District. Pohemiti was appointed president of the Tahiti Division; Putoa as president of the Kaukura District; Pou as president of the Manihi District; Wiriamu president of the Anaa District. Metuaaro was appointed as missionary to the Manihi District; Luis Bellais missionary to the Kaukura District; Pori, missionary in the Kaukura District; Tuteirihia A Tehopea, missionary in Kaukura District. The last three named were given permission also to visit the islands near the Kaukura District. Vaiarea, was appointed missionary to the Rarioa District. The following names were presented for ordination, to the offices named, and were accepted by the conference: Tetaku, priest, to be ordained an elder, and to be a missionary in the Manihi District. Turatahi, to be ordained elder, and to act as missionary in this mission, and also to rectify the books and records of the membership of the mission. Tetai to be ordained an elder. Hiti, a teacher; Faarii, a deacon; Neri, an elder. Luis Bellais was selected as a counselor to the bishop of the mission, to be ordained at the conference in Papeete, or by the president of the mission. Teehu was presented and accepted for ordination to the office of elder; Tapora, elder; Marama, priest; Tetai, teacher (Marama and Tetai were referred to the president of their district for ordination). Maui's name was presented for ordination to the office of priest, also Tetautua; accepted. The date of the next general conference of the mission was changed from December 25, 1902, to April 6, 1902, to be held at Taronā, Papeete, Tahiti. Taneterau, Kehauri, and Tapuni were sustained as elders worthy the office of seventy. Tefau was selected to be ordained to the office of priest, and his ordination referred to the president of the district. Tane, priest, also. Tufaunui was appointed missionary in the Tahiti District. The secretary of the mission asked for record books from America, and his request was granted by the conference. Conference then adjourned to meet at two p. m. The afternoon session met at the appointed time. Minutes of the former session were read, corrected, and accepted. The question was raised as to whether Joseph F. Burton, being missionary in charge, was also president of the mission. Elder Burton asked President A. H. Smith to make a statement regarding it, which he did as follows: "I will state that Bro. Joseph Burton's position is president of the whole mission. He is in charge, hence he is president of the whole mission. He is president in any division; wherever he may be, he must be recognized as president." Titi, deacon, was selected to be ordained priest, and to be a missionary to Raiatea, and the islands contiguous. The ordinations were then attended to, in the following order: To the office of elder, Tetaku, Neri, Tapora, Teehu, Tetai, Turatahi. To the office of priest, Titi, Maui, Tane, Tetautua. To the office of teacher, Hiti. To the office of deacon, Faarii. The appointments of Bro. John W.

Peterson as an associate president, and missionary of the Tubuai District, and Bro. Pohemiti as president of the Tahiti District, were reconsidered, and Bro. John W. Peterson was selected as president of the Tahiti Division with Pohemiti to assist him. Tapu was appointed as missionary in the Kaukura District. The minutes were read and accepted. Conference adjourned to meet according to appointment.

South Sea Islands Mission.—Special conference of a part of the Tahiti Division of the Society Islands Mission convened in the Saints' church, Taronā, Papeete, November 26, 1901, at eight a. m. A. H. Smith of the First Presidency, was chosen to preside, Joseph F. Burton to assist; D. M. Pohemiti secretary, J. W. Peterson foreign secretary. Minutes of the Kaukura conference were read, after which Bro. Alexander H. Smith was sustained as one of the First Presidency and Patriarch of the whole church; Joseph F. Burton as missionary in charge, and D. M. Pohemiti as secretary of the mission, with Turatahi as traveling assistant secretary. Alexander H. Smith then made a statement with respect to his duty in coming into the mission. It is as follows:

"At the last General Conference of the church, April last, the missions were under consideration, and this mission of the islands was being considered. The church feeling the necessity of receiving additional light, fasted and prayed that the Lord might reveal his will that the work of the conference might be accomplished understandingly, in the establishment of the missions as well as their work. The Lord kindly heard and answered the prayers of his people, and revealed himself, giving revelation to the church, in which instruction was given; the Lord naming and setting apart the Counselor to the President, the Patriarch, to come to this mission, and to Australia, to assist the missionaries in the work and to strengthen and build up the work in these missions, and if necessary ordain a bishop, that the work might be more thoroughly organized, and carried on more successfully. And in answer to this revelation of revelation I have come into the mission with earnest desire to do all I can to build up the work, more thoroughly organize it. The work of ordaining a bishop was discussed in America; but it was thought better to wait until the missionaries had come together and considered the subject here in the mission. The name of Metuaore was mentioned in connection with this mission and the bishopric, and it was thought at one time advisable that he be ordained there in America; but after consultation it was concluded better to wait till the missionaries had come here as before stated, and made an examination into the matter, and laid the matter before the people of this mission, that it may have their indorsement, if found favorable; but if unadvised, it might not be accomplished. In coming into the mission, the first opportunity presenting to place the matter before the people assembled in conference, was at Rarioa; and there I made statement of the mission work upon me, and related to the people that the responsibility would rest upon them, as to the indorsing of the proposition. The minutes of that conference were read, also, at the conference held at Kaukura. The minutes of the Kaukura conference have been read in your hearing. And as your presiding officer, being sent by the authority of the General Conference, I desire to fulfill upon my part that which was imposed upon me, and I desire the indorsement of this people of what I may do, that it may be done under their recommendation. And if there are any good and sufficient reasons why this proposition should not be carried out, as indorsed by the people at Rarioa and at Kaukura, they should be made known,—as to the ordaining of Metuaore as a bishop. I have no desire to unnecessarily influence the minds of this people on the question, yet I wish to say that my mind has been made clear in regard to it, and I shall act with perfect freedom, if the question finds the indorsement of this conference. Also, a part of my mission work was, if it be found proper, necessary, to organize a quorum of elders in this mission, in addition to the one already organized. A list of enrollment was begun at the conference at Rarioa and that list was presented at the conference at Kaukura; but it was found there were not names enough to organize another quorum. However, the enlistment was begun, and names were taken of those that were present and indorsed by the conference. This enrollment can continue. If the work increases and justifies the organization of such a quorum, the missionary in charge can proceed as soon as proper to organize such quorum. The organization of the lesser quorums was also considered in our consultation; but it was found that there were not names sufficient to proceed. Hence, this part of the duties imposed upon me remains yet to be done hereafter by those in charge. When I shall have accomplished the work that may be presented at this conference, I shall feel free and justified in proceeding onward in my journey to Australia, and there finish my mission work in this appointment. And I trust that I shall have the prayers and faith of the Saints of this mission."

J. W. Peterson was sustained as president of the Tahiti Division, D. M. Pohemiti as assistant, after which Metuaore was indorsed as worthy of the office of bishop. John Hawkins was sustained as president of the Tubuai District, and Tetuaitevai was elected to assist him. Kehauri was elected president of the Raiatea District. Varoa was sustained as president of the Tahiti District, Teuira as president of the Raroia District, Putoa as president of the Kaukura District, Pou as president of the Takaroa District. William as president of the Anaa District. Metuaaro was chosen missionary to Takaroa District, Tara as missionary for the Tahiti District, Maevatua for Moorea, Mahuru for Moorea, and Tepiki for Moorea. Louis Bellais, Pori Bellais, Tuterehia, and Tapu were chosen to labor in the Kaukura District and adjacent islands. Vaearea was chosen missionary to the Raroia District. Tufaunui, Tahiti Division. Turatahi, missionary at large in the Society Islands Mission. Titi, Raiatea District. Tepava, Fakarava Division. Rere, Raiatea District. Matanui, Raiatea District, after he shall have freed himself from debt. Tera, Raiatea District. Tefa was recommended for ordination to the office of teacher and Paraoa to the office of deacon. It was by motion ordered to collect means to purchase two district records for this mission. Adjourned until two p. m. Afternoon session: After the usual exercises it was ordered that Tahua, who was referred to the president of the Raroia District for ordination, be ordained at this conference inasmuch as he is present. Bro. Meuaore was then ordained to the office of high priest and bishop by President A. H. Smith and Joseph F. Burton, Bro. Smith being spokesman, after which Paraoa was ordained a deacon by D. M. Pohemiti; Tefa, teacher, by Kehauri, and Tahua, teacher, by Pohemiti. By request President Smith explained the duties of a bishop and also the duties of a missionary in charge, with respect to tithing, as follows:

"Will you explain the duties of a bishop so Bro. Metuaore and the Saints may know his rights and prerogatives?"

"What is the duty of the missionary in charge with respect to tithing? Has he the right to receive tithing and receipt for it? Has he a right to disburse tithing, and if so for what purpose?"

"By request I will answer but the duties are pertaining to the office of a bishop in the church. He is a common judge to try appealed cases which may come into his hands. In this duty he is to be assisted by his two counselors. He may also try original cases in the same way, assisted by his counselors. He is to travel among the branches and districts and teach the law of tithing and to receive the moneys thus given into his hands, and it is right that he should give a receipt to each one for all money received. He is to keep the money of the church and oversee all the property of the church. In all these duties he is to be assisted by his counselors. It is his duty also to look after the poor and care for them and supply their wants from the money of the church when there is money in his hands to enable him to do so. The Saints are to pay their money into his hands or the hands of his agents, but this does not prohibit the Saints from assisting the missionaries when they feel like doing so. But the missionaries are not required to give a receipt for these gifts. The bishop is to assist the missionaries and supply their wants. He is to have the oversight of all the temporal affairs of the church in his mission. Missionaries in charge may collect tithing if the bishop is not present, giving a receipt for it and report the name and amount to the bishop that a proper record may be kept of it. He is to turn over moneys thus collected to the bishop. He may pay out tithing if it is absolutely necessary when the bishop is not present. This also he must report to the bishop. I want to exhort you to bring your tithing to the Lord. You can see, if there is no money in the bishop's hands he can not do his duty. Assist the poor, care for the aged and infirm. As you do to God's servants, so he will do to you. If each one does a little it will altogether amount to much. If the Saints will do their duty God will bless them. He will bless them when they go fishing or when diving for the riches in the sea or otherwise working with their hands while on land. He will make them happy and they will be his children. It would be well for the work if the bishop would appoint agents in every island to collect tithing and perform other work he may require of them."

Adjourned to meet in Papeete, April 6, 1902, at eight a. m.

High Priests' Quorum.

On February 22 there were mailed to each high priest in America a blank report form, a notice from the quorum presidency, and a program of exercises for our sessions during the April conference. Should any member of the quorum fail to receive such inclosures he will know that they have been lost in transit, and on giving me notice others will be sent. It will be a favor if each member will fill out the blank form and return it here on or before March 15, so that time may be had to make a summary of all reports, as also that they may be in hand for use at the first meeting of the quorum. Blanks were sent to members in foreign lands before these programs and notices were arranged, therefore they have none. The others were delayed, pending the printing of those papers. Respectfully yours, H. A. Stebbins, Secretary High Priests' Quorum. Lamoni, Iowa, February 24, 1902.

A FAST DAY.

Upon consultation the Presidency are impressed with the propriety of and benefit to be derived from the observance of a day of Fasting and Prayer, to the intent that the requisite unity of spirit and purpose may prevail among all Saints.

We therefore proclaim Sunday, the sixth day of April, 1902, the first day of the assembling of the coming session of Conference, as such Fast Day.

We request the Saints to gather at their places of meeting on that day for the usual devotional services, and recommend that the period of observing the Fast be from the evening meal on Saturday the 5th to the evening meal on Sunday the 6th.

The delegates and members attending the Annual Conference which will convene at Lamoni on the sixth of April will be expected to come with the understanding that this fast will be observed in the assembly, which will convene at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day.

Children, nursing mothers, and members in feeble health are not expected to abstain from food the period recommended, if to do so is likely to create distress.

JOSEPH SMITH,
 E. L. KELLEY,
 Of the Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 3, A. D. 1902.

TRACT WORK.

Bro. William R. Armstrong, of 10 Rye Street, C upon M, Manchester, England, wrote the Editor in a personal letter the following excellent points on tracts and tract work, which we assume liberty to give the readers of the HERALD:

Inasmuch as tract work was mentioned in the late revelation to the church and the same subject has recently been discussed, I wish to present some thoughts to you on the matter. They are based upon experience extending over years.

I have been in the latter-day work nearly thirty years, nineteen of which I have spent in the ministry. Other brethren and myself have spent much time in disseminating our doctrine by means of the written word. Years ago we found the people slow to come and hear us so we resolved to visit them.

Our course has been to go out two by two, furnished with epitomes and the four following tracts: 1. Faith and Repentance; 2. Baptism (not the "One Baptism"); 3. Laying on of Hands; 4. Kingdom of God. And lastly we lend the cheaper Say what you will of the coldness and selfishness of men, at the last we long for companionship and the fellowship of our kind. We are lost children, and when alone and the darkness begins to gather, we long for the close relationship of the brothers and sisters we knew in our childhood, and cry for the gentle arms that once rocked us to sleep. Men are home-sick amid this sad, mad rush for wealth, and place, and power. The calm of the country invites and we would fain to do with less things, and go back to simplicity, and rest our tired heads in the lap of mother nature.—Elbert Hubbard.

copies of "The Voice of Warning" to persons sufficiently interested. These include the first principles, and we find them sufficient generally.

One brother carries a note-book with the numbers of the houses running down the sides of the pages. Opposite these he makes notes such as: "Left 2," "To be Let," "Interested," "Will send children," "Will attend service." The other brother introduces "the angel's message" with an epitome first in such terms as wisdom and experience direct. These are seldom given to a minor. He asks to see a responsible person, and then obtains permission to leave the before-named tracts on the four following Sundays. A refusal is seldom given, which is somewhat surprising, for our message is plainly stated.

We invariably question the people after reading asking if they have not understood the contents, or if they have objections to raise. Certainly this is slow work but it is surely done.

Results: Much local prejudice removed. The ministry and others who do the work are strengthened and the people visited instructed. Children are added to our Sabbath-schools, as well as adults. Salford, in the Manchester District, owes its existence to this class of work, as Apostle James Caffall can testify.

Hindrances to prosecution of work: They are expensive. In this land tracts are printed cheaply and scattered broadcast. A large supply can not readily be obtained. We have to write for them, then wait until we get them. Sometimes it may be two, three, or four months. After we receive them we have to purchase tough parcel paper to cover them. Some one has then to cut, stitch, and number them.

How we can help the work: Is it possible to establish a book depot on this side of the Atlantic similar to the old "42 Islington" (Utah Church)? Make them cheaper if possible. Turn them out ready for distribution (backed). Do not advertise church works on them. Put nothing on them apart from the subject matter; except the name of the church, which I would print fully and in bold type. Some persons whom I could style half-hearted Saints are afraid that the name would be a hindrance. That is not our fault. It is our privilege to bear the name and to make it respected. If you leave out the name or print part of it, you may next leave out a few little points of doctrine which are also objectionable; also the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Who converted these people? Not the Holy Spirit surely! If the "Kingdom of God" be not received as by a little child, we can not enter therein.

This work is too important to be done carelessly, neither do I think every person capable of doing it. It appears in my opinion to be work for the ministry to perform, and requires not merely zeal but wisdom of the highest kind.

I hope in thus writing you that I am not intruding upon your time which must be very fully occupied. If I have done so please accept my apology. We hope one day to hear you personally talk to us on this and other things. We have all appreciated the teaching and association of Bishop Kelley during his brief stay in our Island, as well as that of our beloved Bro. Griffiths.

FARMERS BEING SWINDLED.

In the State Register of Pierre, South Dakota, for February 14, there appeared an article which we reproduce in hopes some of our readers may be warned opportunely. It is as follows:

The Register is informed by a government land inspector that a confidence game is being worked on unwary farmers and laboring men throughout South Dakota, Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and elsewhere, but in the sections named particularly, by parties assuming to furnish homestead locations on the Indian Reservation in Gregory County. The land in question is not yet opened for filing. There is a bill pending in Congress for the opening of between 2,300 and 2,400 homesteads. When opened homesteaders will be required to pay $2.50 an acre if they commute. It will probably be opened by a lottery system and no doubt 25,000 people will register as was the plan in Oklahoma. North of this land and west of Pierre in the Pierre land district 10,000 homesteads are now open to filing for homesteaders who are to pay 50 cents an acres when commuting. Already over 900 claims have been filed and a great rush is on for these lands. This distinguishes the location of these homestead districts and the form of payments, which we give to show how foolish people are to pay so-called locators for the $2.50 lands $10 cash now, and a note for $90 payable if the party secures a filing. These are the terms that misguided farmers are being buncoed with, and who must of necessity wait for some time to discover that they have been fooled. The lands west of Pierre have been dominated to a great extent by large cattle men, but the recent leasing of the Standing Rock and Cheyenne Indian reservations and the rush of homesteaders to Stanley County has crowded out the large cattle kings. Therefore the farmers and wage-earners who think they are securing some rights by patronizing these $100 grafters should be apprised by the press to beware, as the free lands now open are west of Pierre and can be had by appearing at the government land office in person at any time and paying the government filing fee. The $2.50 an acre land can not be had until Congress passes a law and the president issues a proclamation declaring when it is to be opened. This will not be for several months at least. In the meantime many a poor fellow will be induced to give up $10 and execute a note for $90 more and remain at his home in blissful ignorance for months unless these sharpers be called down. The press can do nothing better for the people than to explain this situation as it is.

MOB EGGS QUAKER.

From the following it seems that others than Latter Day Saint preachers sometimes come to grief at the hands of lawless mobs:

Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 25.—Rev. Charles Babcock, a Quaker evangelist from Cleveland, was attacked at Le Grand yesterday by about a dozen young men, who took offense at remarks he had made from the pulpit. Eggs were thrown at the minister and he was otherwise mistreated. Mr. Babcock has been holding revival meetings at Le Grand for two weeks. The county officers are investigating the affair and arrests may be made.

LOOK OUT FOR HIM.

It would seem from the following letter that the "Club-foot man" has started on his rounds again. We know of no such man as the one described by Bro. Waltenbaugh. If he were needy and worthy, the authorities at his home would care for him. Look out for him!

HIGBEE, Missouri, March 2.

Bro. Stebbins: This morning a man came to my house claiming to be a Latter Day Saint. Said his pocket book was taken from him getting on the train at Boonville, with his ticket in it. He said he lived at Palmyra, Missouri, and gave his name as Harris. He did not give his first name. He has black hair, black moustache, and wore an old, light slouch hat, an old, light overcoat. His right foot was a cloven foot, or a club foot. Is this the one that has been playing off on the church as a Saint? I would not give him anything to help him home as he said was what he wanted. He said he wanted to get to Macon City, Missouri. He disputed with me about the price to Macon; said it was $1.30, when it is only one dollar, and talked quite saucily to me; but it would not take with me. I think some of the Saints have helped him already. You will oblige by answering through HERALD as soon as possible.

JACOB WALTENBAUGH.

THE following bit of history which appeared in the State Register, of Pierre, South Dakota, February 14, may be of interest to some of the HERALD readers:

Close beside the Guernsey line of the Burlington, between Fort Laramie and Guernsey, where the railroad follows the course of the old Mormon trail for miles through Wyoming, there is an old grave with a bit of history. Last spring there was found a few feet from the grave an old cart wheel on which had been carved with a knife this legend, "Rebecca Winters—1846." This date is that of the Mormon exodus to Utah, and the idea naturally suggests itself that a member of the party of five hundred persons who accompanied Brigham Young on his memorable trip had been buried there. It seemed probable that some of the friends or relatives of the deceased might be located even after the lapse of so many years, and with that end in view, the information was given to one of the Salt Lake papers.

Within three days following the publication of the story, the Burlington's general agent at Salt Lake received thirty letters from members of the family, and a call from a gentleman more than sixty years of age who said that his mother, Rebecca Winters had been a member of the Brigham Young party and had died on the trip overland.

A neat fence has been placed around the grave by the Burlington, and members of the Winters family in Utah are now collecting a fund for the purpose of erecting a monument over the remains of the unfortunate woman.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

D. E. Tucker writes from Bevier, Missouri, February 25, telling of his labors. He relates experiences he had with the rough element in Sharp County; and though he was threatened with rough treatment he refused to "run," and continued holding his meetings, having good order in spite of the threats. His feet are still lame, but he seems to be at work, and has been in the Northeast Missouri District since the 12th.

J. W. Bear writes from Auburn, Iowa, that a glorious time was had at the recent conference of the Galland's Grove District. It is the second one he has attended. He was ordained teacher, to work in Auburn Branch, and asks prayers of Saints.

Special receipts for surplus property, and also for consecrations under the law, are in preparation for the use of the Bishop and Bishops of Stakes. These are upon colored paper and easily distinguishable. All who have not received their receipts, please call upon the Bishop of your respective places and ask for it.

Missionaries G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Rushton arrived in Boston from Liverpool, England, on the steamship Ivernia, February 28, well and without seasickness on journey. Bro. Harry Holmes, of Clay Cross, England, is also in the party, and well but had to endure the usual sea troubles during the passage.

All expect to be in attendance at the General Conference.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. C. Severin writes from Columbus, Kansas, February 14, and freely expresses his views on the matter of sending laborers to the Scandinavian field. He thinks that to convert the people of a nation the best way is to send missionaries of that tongue, and there will then be a bond of sympathy between the people and the preacher which would not exist if a foreigner is sent. It has been his experience that he would rather go to hear one of his own tongue than one not of it. He was thus brought into the church, —going to hear one of our preachers because he was a Scandinavian. He wonders why there have not been more laborers sent into the Scandinavian mission, and asks whether it is because of a lack of interest on the part of the Scandinavians or whether it is because they lack the ability to take missions. He is pleased that the Lord saw fit to call Bro. Peter Anderson to the Twelve. He writes: "I am thankful to God that he has blessed us with a knowledge of his Son and our Lord Jesus Christ, and my heart goes out to those who are of my mother tongue. I have wondered how it is so many Scandinavians are in Utah. I am told two thirds of the Mormons are Scandinavians. There are so few in comparison in the Reorganization. I am glad to be a member of this church, and think ere long the Lord will open up the way so that the church will no longer be burdened in a financial way, but will be able to comply with the increased demands made upon it to send more missionaries into the vineyard. Our branch is not what it should be, but the Saints enjoy the Spirit of God, and are striving to live as they should. Our president, W. S. Taylor, is a worthy and earnest man."

By letter from Bro. J. W. Rushton, of No. 5 Brandon Street, Hamilton, Scotland, February 12, we learn that Bro. G. T. Griffiths and himself would leave on the 18th for General Conference. He writes further: "In a letter from our Bro. Muceus in Norway this evening, he writes in a joyous strain because some were to be baptized. Two members of his father's household and four or five others."

On February 18 William Chapman wrote to Bro. R. S. Salyards from Higbee, Missouri: "We had a splendid conference, the Spirit of the Master being in our midst from the start to the end. It was one of the best conferences I have ever attended. Brn. J. A. Tanner and W. W. Smith are holding a series of meetings in our church this week."

H. C. Powell writes on February 26, from Cayucos, California, renewing for HERALD: "I am living in an out of the way place and take great pleasure in the silent preacher."

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—NO. 19.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS, OF THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

Monday, September 12: Bro. Beebe gave me two dollars fifty cents this morning, just as we were ready to start on our journey to Manti, Fremont County, thirty miles south of Farm Creek. We arrived at our destination at four o'clock p. m., and called on Bro. Alpheus Cutler. He seems to be the chief man of the place. He greeted us in rough and uncouth language, as apostates, and is so conceited and arrogant that it seems really strange to us that he has any influence with the people. Meekness and lowliness of heart do not appear to be any of his characteristics; but in a rough tone of voice he said: "I consider you apostates, but you are welcome to refreshments at my house." We thanked him and took seats. After our supper we visited Bro. Wheeler Baldwin, who welcomed us very cordially; but he remarked: "I consider you brethren like the sectarians: having no authority from God."

Tuesday morning, ten o'clock, September 13. We have conversed with Brn. Cutler and Baldwin, though to no purpose as yet. In fact, their ideas are so crude and disconnected, it seems to us, that they are under some constraint and hardly dare tell us their true position and faith that binds them together as a distinct body of believers, outside of the general first principles of the gospel, except to assert, "We claim the right of presidency," without referring us to any law or precedent to substantiate their authority and claim.

Later. This evening Bro. Wheeler Baldwin gave us their hopes and claims in plainness as follows: 1. Elder Alpheus Cutler claims to be the president of the church, though he is not a prophet, but is especially ordained to teach the oracles or revelations given through the Choice Seer, and has his two counselors chosen, though hesitates to tell us who they are. The members generally seem scared and hardly dare to speak of their position or authority in the church to us; but are free to speak of us having no authority, and they claim that when the church was rejected as a church the priesthood was lost, or in other words, their argument is "that all who held office in the church lost their priesthood, except a quorum of fifty which was organized and called the kingdom; and if it were not for said quorum of fifty the priesthood would not be on the earth." And therefore the quorum of fifty high priests which they allude to, is going to be the salvation of the church, or Israel as they look at it.

Wednesday, September 14. We have by request of Elder Cutler announced an appointment for preaching service at four o'clock p. m. Elder Edmund Fisher, who seems to be one of the chief advisers of the Cutlerites, has just returned last evening to this place, with many of the brethren who have been attending Circuit Court at Sydney, county-seat of Fremont, where they have been interested in lawsuits for the last week. They are all in good spirits, having gained all their cases that were in litigation. But the power of darkness prevails over them in a great degree in spiritual things. We have just learned that the Saints here believe that Joseph, before his martyrdom, organized a quorum of fifty and denominated it "The Kingdom," separate and apart from the church. Therefore when the church was rejected the priesthood in it was also rejected, and all authority in the church was disannulled; but the kingdom was not affected by the rejection of the church, for the "Kingdom" was all composed of high priests and in it the priesthood remained intact and in full force.

This afternoon the meeting was well attended by the members of their church, which was held at Bro. Cutler's house. We both spoke upon the subject of the gospel of Christ, its restoration by the administration of the angel as foreseen by the revelation of St. John, fourteenth chapter; also that the church is indeed the kingdom of God on earth, and so existed as such in organization April 6, 1830, composed of six members. And its first two officers were elders and apostles, and the gospel of the kingdom was preached by them following the example of Jesus the Christ, eighteen centuries ago, who went about all Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, "Repent ye and believe the gospel," that many precious souls, men and women, soon united with the church and kingdom of God. And the organization of quorums subsequently followed as helps and governments in the kingdom of God "which was the only true and living church with which the Lord was well pleased," and which the Lord did indeed own by his own voice and gifts of the Holy Ghost as in ancient days in apostolic times. And speaking unto the church collectively, and not individually, for the Lord can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. Therefore the rejection of the church affected the church as an organization, but not as individuals, any more than it was possible for God to destroy Sodom with the righteous Lot in the wicked city. We might truly say as Abraham said of the Lord: "Shall not the Judge of the whole earth do right?" "That be far from thee to do after this manner to slay the righteous with the wicked." And we may truly say now, as then, that any individual in the church who has not lost his integrity and membership by transgression, could not lose his authority as a minister for Christ. The prophet and president was taken from the church; and the quorums as helps and governments, which God set in the church, were rejected of God, and the quorums were scattered and apostatized; and the leading ones who were left were driven out of the land of Zion, or its regions round about, and went to the salt land as foreseen by the Prophet Jeremiah. And he pronounced a curse upon them, when he said, "For he [they] shall be like the heath in the desert and shall not see when good cometh, but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness," which is now known as the Great American Desert. But, my dear brethren, only a few of the church ever followed Brigham Young to Utah. The great body of the church remained in the States. It is true they have in many instances grown cold, and have neglected their family altars, and forgotten their prayers; and like ancient Israel in the wilderness, they do not know the source from whence deliverance cometh. But let us assure you that the God of heaven has surely visited some of these scattered Latter Day Saints in the States of Wisconsin and Illinois, and by his own voice, and by the ministration of the heavenly angels, and through the gifts of prophecy commanded us to say to all latter-day Israel that God will call one of Joseph's sons to take the presidency of the church as prophet in the near future; and it is his right by lineage and blessing. We showed very clearly, we think, that the Cutlerite views were untenable according to the law of God, and bore a strong testimony of what we know the Lord is doing in attestation with the Reorganization. And we are comforted in hope, for we can truly say our testimony was not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.

The brethren seemed to be rather abashed and confounded at our bold and plain setting forth of our faith and views upon the law governing church organization. And when we showed that all endowments that consisted in ceremonies, secret covenants, and oaths, were the inventions of men or devils, in contrast and in opposition to the endowments of the gifts and powers of the Holy Ghost, as was enjoyed on the day of Pentecost, fifty days after the resurrection of Christ, and as was expected by the Saints in the event the temple was built in Nauvoo, it seemed to produce a hush all over the audience, and a feeling of surprise pervaded. We felt comforted in our spirits and rejoiced in our hearts, for we know we have the truth as it is in Christ our heavenly Master.

Later, just evening. The weather is delightful, as these beautiful prairies are enchanting in the fields of the woods as seen by the Psalmist David; but so sparsely settled, it seems lonesome as we look over the wonderful landscapes like a great ocean of water with its rolling billows in a raging storm. The blooming flowers give fragrance to the balmy air, and which is indeed bracing to our souls. But I am sorry, indeed, this evening to think Bro. Blair is going to leave me in the morning. But I am contented to say, "The will of the Lord be done."

Thursday, September 15. This morning, Bro. W.

W. Blair has started for his home in Amboy, Illinois. We have been together since April. It is with sorrow we separate; but we feel it is according to the mind of the Lord that we do so for the sake of the work we have been engaged in, and that we love with all our hearts. Souls are more precious to us than the pleasure it can afford us to continue together. While he feels it is his duty to look after his family and business interests, and also to attend the conference on the sixth of October, I expect to remain in the vineyard of the Lord; how long, the Lord only knows. However, I do not feel as though I had no friend left to counsel with; for indeed I feel that the Lord God of Israel is my friend, and will still give me aid. But I feel that I am parting with a dear and beloved brother. It makes me sad to think there are so few in the ministry on missions. Bro. Blair and myself are the only ones who, it may be said, are constant missionaries at this time, and he is hindered with secular business sometimes. Bro. Z. H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, and James Blakeslee are doing some mission work a part of the time, and a few local elders doing the best they can, but all are hindered more or less by their secular business and cares of their families. It almost seems that I am alone a constant missionary to tell of the love of God to the distracted, scattered Latter Day Saints, who as a body are in darkness and do not know the source from whence comes deliverance. The false shepherds who have arisen since the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph have so disheartened them that they do not see, indeed, the efficacy of prayer and true devotion to the Lord, which is the only way to obtain favor from the God of heaven, who has said, "The time speedily cometh that great things shall be shown forth unto the children of men; but without faith shall not anything be shown forth except desolation upon Babylon."—D. C. 34: 3. And again: "Without faith it is impossible to please God," for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." And I am truly assured by the voice of the Holy Spirit to me, that it is my duty to waken the Saints to diligence and prayer and to exercise faith that God may once more favor Zion.

The Manti brethren are holding a private council meeting to-day at one o'clock p. m. They wished me not to take any offense because they did not invite me to the council. The most prominent of the brethren here appear to be Elders Alpheus Cutler, Wheeler Baldwin, William Redfield, Amos Cox, Edmund Fisher, Chauncy Whiting, and Squire Eggleston. There seems to be some fluttering and hushed whispering among the Cutlerites to-day. I really think our visit to their little town has disquieted them in some things. This evening Bro. Redfield requested me to pray for and administer to his daughter who is sick with the typhoid fever.

Friday, September 16. I tarried over night with Bro. Redfield. He expressed faith with us this morning, and in fact is a staunch believer in the promises of Joseph and that his seed must in the due time of the Lord be the successor of their father, and is much interested in our mission work. And this evening Sr. Elizabeth Stillman, who is afflicted with a cancer, requested me to pray and administer to her.

Saturday, September 17. I returned to Bro. Calvin Beebe's on Farm Creek. Bro. Amos Cox was kind in bringing me in his carriage. Elders James Badham and Eggleston accompanied us with the intention of preaching in Farm Creek Branch as messengers from the Manti headquarters of the Cutlerite Church, I am informed.

Farm Creek, Sunday, September 18. Meeting was held to-day at Franklin Richards'. Elder Eggleston preached about thirty minutes, and then to my surprise called on me to speak. I did so for about forty minutes, defining my position very plainly: the order of the priesthood in the church, in organization and doctrine as it is found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and how we must indeed be governed by the law of God as established in the three books. It seemed that Elder Eggleston in his talk was embarrassed or felt confused over something, and I felt led to express as fully as possible my faith in the doctrine of Christ established in the standard books of the church, and that authority must be recognized in the ministry formed in a properly called and ordained manner according to the law of God and usages of the church, or else the Latter Day Saints were like the self-constituted sects of the day, who were floating with the drift of apostasy, having no definite doctrine nor answer to prayer from God. But like all former-day saints, we must believe that God has reserved the right solely to himself to appoint his own ministers. And the true followers of Christ in no age of the world have a right to ordain men into the ministry, except they are called of God by revelation through the gift of the Holy Ghost. After I sat down Brn. Amos Cox and Eggleston both arose, and in a short address, indorsed fully my position. Prayer-meeting was announced for evening service at Bro. Beebe's. We were a little surprised to find that the brethren who had so fully indorsed my position in the forenoon meeting had returned to Manti after saying to some of the brethren they "could take me on my position and tear me all to pieces." And I learned also they were messengers sent by the secret council of last Thursday, but what they have done by coming, I do not know. They have been holding private council in conversation with all they thought proper against our position and principle of lineage, and have made arrangements to return again in two weeks, and I suppose that they will bring all of their strong reasons to substantiate Bro. Cutler's claim as the president of the church.

Our prayer-meeting was very interesting; a number of the Saints took part, and Bro. Beebe is now all alive with us in the faith, and again confirms the idea that we have brought with us the same Spirit in our preaching as accompanied the word of the Lord when he first heard it in the days of Joseph. And during the week we visited quite a number of the families of the Saints in the neighborhood; three families of the Richards', Bro. Badham, Alexander Lile, and others.

Saturday, September 24. In company with Bro. Beebe we visited Bro. Richard Y. Kelley, on Mud Creek, seven miles from Bro. Beebe's, who is alive in the faith of the gospel; and in very deed I felt at home at his house. Himself and wife seemed to me, as they expressed it, that they were real Latter Day Saints, and have been waiting during the dark days of the apostasy since the death of Joseph for the coming forth of little Joseph to take his father's place. He has quite a large family, all quiet and orderly at home improving the time making a comfortable living. By his suggestion we called on Bro. McKowin, one of his neighbors, who received us kindly, yet is trying to be skeptical on the Christian religion. This evening held meeting at Bro. Kelley's; house full of interested listeners. Text, James 1:5. I had great liberty of the Spirit in presenting the thought that God has always answered the prayer of faith when his people served him in righteousness. I believe great good was done, as surely the Holy Spirit bore testimony to many, while the tears glistened in their eyes testifying, indeed, that the love of God was the thoughts of their hearts.

Sunday, September 25. It rains to-day, so we do not have meeting, and this evening we return to Bro. Beebe's by carriage, and to our surprise and grief we find Sr. Harriet Richards, Bro. Beebe's daughter, sick in bed, suffering severely with her hand, which she caught in the rollers of a cane-mill, which crushed off three of her fingers and tore most of the flesh off her hand. We all sympathize with her very much, for she is indeed a worthy good member of the church and loved by all who have her acquaintance. Her affectionate husband is dreadfully distressed in his mind. I sat up all night with him while he tenderly cared for his wife and administered to her wants.

I spent this week going from house to house, preaching our views to all whom I met, and gave myself to reading the word, the Scriptures of divine truth. And Friday evening, September 30, I preached to a good-sized audience at Mr. Otes', five miles north of Bro. Beebe's. His mother is a member of the church.

Sunday, October 2. Preaching at Bro. Frank Richards' to a large and intensely interested audience. Many of the Saints in this place are truly awake to the fact that the Reorganized Church has come to stay, and is in truth the government of God on earth and by its representatives inviting all who are worthy to be called Saints to enlist under its banner. Brn. Levi Graybill, John Smith, and others from Wheeler's Grove were in attendance; also Bro. Kelley and Noah Cotton, of Mud Creek. In the evening we held prayer-meeting at Bro. Beebe's again. The blessed Spirit was with us in great power, confirming us in the hope of the gospel of Christ, and many of the Saints took active part in prayer and testimony. Sr. Harriet Richards is getting along nicely over her severe affliction, and is cheerful; and I rejoice in God with my whole soul in the blessing of God who is my helper in all my meetings.

Monday, October 3. At eleven o'clock a. m., a special conference of the Cutlerites convened at Sr. Lucy Beebe's cottage, a large and roomy house. It was called by the direction of a counsel of elders at Manti. Elder Edmund Fisher chosen president; Amos Cox, clerk. The chair in his opening remarks stated the object of the meeting, and said: "We mean to talk in great plainness to-day, as we desire to know who is really in the faith." Elder Cox then read the first eight verses of the Hebrew letter, sixth chapter, and dwelt largely on the danger of falling from grace. President Fisher then followed with a short exhortation to the Saints and plainly said: "I wish to know the reason of so much talk by some of the Saints in the branch." Then followed much desultory talk by many of the brethren, and telling of their faith in the gospel. Bro. Beebe bore testimony of his faith in the latter-day work as taught in the days of Joseph. Also Sr. Lucy Beebe spoke of hope and faith in the gospel, but she continued: "I see there are some differences of opinion in relation to who is the presiding and leading officers of the church." Then some one said, Bro. Beebe does not sustain Bro. Cutler. President Fisher said, "We claim Bro. Cutler is the president of the church and of the priesthood of Melchisedec, and we sustain him as the only president there is over the only living and true church that is acknowledged of God on earth; holding all the rights of the presidency as the first president of the church and priesthood."

Then some one introduced a resolution to sustain Bro. Cutler, and after some more desultory talk in which I discovered that they were not agreed upon how the resolution should read, I arose and addressed the chair, and asked if I might ask a question. The chair replied, "Yes." I then asked the two following questions: When was Elder Alpheus Cutler ordained to the office of president of the priesthood? Bro. Wheeler Baldwin answered: "About two years ago." I then said, When was he called by revelation? The chair replied: "We have not time to answer any more questions," and then adjourned for thirty minutes. At two o'clock conference called to order again, and after some general talk about how the resolution should read to sustain the president, I by permission made the following remarks: Brethren, the law of God in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants says, "The president of the church is called of God by revelation, and is ordained according to the gifts and callings unto him, which is to be a prophet, seer, revelator, translator, and behold, here is wisdom, to be a man like Moses, having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church." And he also holds the keys of the kingdom to lead Israel, and should be upheld by the prayers and confidence of the church so he may be prepared to magnify his office. And if in that light you wish to sustain Bro. Cutler, why not simply sustain him as president of the church? Bro. Baldwin then said, "That is just it, in the light we hold it." And a resolution was then passed to sustain Elder Cutler as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Some did not vote, and conference adjourned sine die. Brn. Beebe, W. H. Kelley, and some others did not vote. I do not remember whether there was any negative vote; but the eyes of many of the Saints were now opened wide to the Cutlerite position. And from the 3d day of October, 1859, may be dated the downfall of the Cutlerite faction. Brn. Edmund Fisher, Wheeler Baldwin, Amos Cox, and Eggleston went home, I think, a little crestfallen. The Saints talked more than ever as they discovered how untenable Cutler's claims are. But my views are these: Most of the brethren who have been united in the Cutler move are honest, if not all of them; but are blind so far as Bro. Cutler's peculiar claims are concerned, and have not particularly considered his claims; and in the integrity of their hearts, they have been living the best they knew how, thinking of the love of the gospel as they first heard it in the days of Joseph, and bringing up their children in the doctrine of Christ. Hence the Lord has blessed them according to their faith and good works.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. 15.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, January 12, 1902.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

The time of which we speak to-night is crowded with so many important items of history that we must abridge, and pass by many without notice. But we will follow the general course of events sufficiently to keep the thread. Last Sunday night we were speaking of the difficulties at Far West, Missouri, how some of the leaders were taken into custody by officers of the militia, how that by the heroic action of General Doniphan their lives were spared, and those who would have taken their lives were intimidated, so that they dared not proceed according to their previous calculations and designs. On November 1, 1838, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Lyman Wight, Parley P. Pratt, Amasa Lyman, and George W. Robinson were hurried from Far West under a strong guard of militia, their destination being Independence, Missouri; and either on the second or third day of November they crossed the Missouri River and the next day arrived at Independence. I say "either on the second or third," because the history of these events, subsequently written by Joseph Smith and the private journal of Lyman Wight disagree, or there is a discrepancy of one day in dates, beginning at this time; and though they give the order of events just the same and agree in detail in regard to what happened, that discrepancy of one day continues from the time they crossed the Missouri River to their subsequent removal to Richmond, Missouri, and through the trials that took place there.

They remained in Independence but a few days. While there they were quite well treated, they tell us, by the citizens of Independence and by their guard. But there was a rivalry between the officers of the militia. General Wilson who had ordered them taken to Independence and was with them, desired the honor of retaining those prisoners in his charge, while General Clark desired to take them from him and order them back to Richmond. Finally it was so arranged, General Clark's orders were obeyed, and they were taken to Richmond.

Shortly after crossing the Missouri River again en route to Richmond, they were met by Colonel Sterling Price, afterwards General Price, who figured in the War of the Rebellion as a general in the Confederate Army. Under his charge, or a guard commanded by him, they were taken to Richmond. I wish you to notice that with one exception, these men were not military men, and yet they were taken as prisoners of war in charge of military guards, and carried from place to place in this way. It will readily be seen by all that such proceedings were irregular. If there were charges against them these men ought to have been tried in the civil courts, and had their examination in the county in which it was alleged their crimes were committed, and there some disposition made of them. But by deception they were taken from Far West, delivered to officers of the State militia, and conducted first to Independence and then to Richmond as prisoners of war. At Richmond they were again court-martialed and again sentenced to death. And again were their lives saved by a peculiar incident.

As we have shown you, when they were previously court-martialed and sentenced to death, General Doniphan, by refusing to obey the commands of his superior officer, was instrumental in protecting them. Now, when General Clark had court-martialed them and they had been sentenced to death, he was a little fearful of being liable to some punishment if he executed that sentence, and hence he wrote to the commanding officer at Fort Leavenworth. The officer answered as follows: "It would be nothing more nor nothing less than cold-blooded murder." This officer's name was not recorded in the history of the church until this history was published. We thought his name ought to be preserved, therefore we wrote to the War Department at Washington, and Secretary Lamont said the officer in command was Lieutenant-Colonel Richard B. Mason. So we suppose it is to the credit of Mr. Mason that their lives were spared at this time.

General Clark, learning this, was again afraid to execute his designs upon these men and he turned them over to the civil authorities, though they were not taken back to the county in which it was alleged they had committed crime, but were taken before the civil authorities in Ray County, instead of in Daviess and Caldwell Counties. They were finally arraigned in Richmond, Ray County, before Judge King, who had been an active participant in the church troubles, and was for that reason disqualified to sit in judgment upon these cases. But he assumed to do so. We will give you a few of the particulars of the trial, but not go into details. Joseph Smith in his account of the affair says:

While in Richmond we were under the charge of Colonel Price from Chariton County, who suffered all manner of abuse to be heaped upon us.

During this time my afflictions were great, and our situation was truly painful.

General Clark informed us that he would turn us over to the civil authorities for trial. Joseph Smith, Jr., Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Parley P. Pratt, Lyman Wight, Amasa Lyman, George W. Robinson, Caleb Baldwin, Alanson Ripley, Washington Voorhees, Sidney Turner, John Buchanan, Jacob Gates, Chandler Holbrook, George W. Harris, Jesse D. Hunter, Andrew Whitlock, Martin C. Allred, William Allred, George D. Grant, Darwin Chase, Elijah Newman, Alvin G. Tippetts, Zedekiah Owens, Isaac Morley, Thomas Beck, Moses Clawson, John T. Tanner, Daniel Shearer, Daniel S. Thomas, Alexander McRae, Elisha Edwards, John S. Higbee, Ebenezer Page, Benjamin Covey, Ebenezer Robinson, Luman Gibbs, James M. Henderson, David Pettegrew, Edward Partridge, Francis Higbee, David Frampton, George Kimball, Joseph W. Younger, Henry Zabriski, Allen J. Stout, Sheffield Daniels, Silas Maynard, Anthony Head, Benjamin Jones, Daniel Carn, John T. Earl, and Normon Shearer, were brought before Austin A. King at Richmond, for trial, charged with the several crimes of high treason against the State, murder, burglary, arson, robbery, and larceny.

Monday, 12th. The first act of the court was to send out a body of armed men, without a civil process, to obtain witnesses.

Tuesday, 13th. We were placed at the bar, Austin A. King presiding, and Thomas C. Burch State's Attorney. Witnesses were called and sworn at the point of the bayonet.

I wish here to read a letter written by Joseph Smith to his wife on the 12th day of November, 1838, as it will throw light on the situation, and upon the feelings and condition of the minds of the men. He says:

RICHMOND, Missouri, November 12, 1838.

My Dear Emma: We are prisoners in chains and under strong guards for Christ's sake and for no other causes; although there have been things that were unbeknown to us and altogether beyond our control that might seem to the mob to be a pretext for them to persecute us; but on examination I think that the authorities will discover our innocence and set us free; but if this blessing can not be obtained I have this consolation, that I am an innocent man, let what will befall me.

I received your letter, which I read over and over again; it was a sweet morsel to me. O God, grant that I may have the privilege of seeing once more my lovely family in the enjoyment of the sweets of liberty and sociable life; to press them to my bosom and kiss their lovely cheeks would fill my heart with unspeakable gratitude. Tell the children that I am alive, and trust I shall come and see them before long. Comfort their hearts all you can, and try to be comforted yourself all you can. There is no possible danger but what we shall be set at liberty if justice can be done, and that you know as well as myself. The trial will begin to-day for some of us. Lawyer Reese, and we expect Doniphan, will plead our cause. We could get no others in time for the trial. They are able men and will do well, no doubt.

Bro. Robinson is chained next to me, he has a true heart and a firm mind; Bro. Wight is next, Bro. Rigdon next, Hyrum next, Parley next, Amasa next; and thus we are bound together in chains, as well as the cords of everlasting love. We are in good spirits and rejoice that we are counted worthy to be persecuted for Christ's sake. Tell little Joseph he must be a good boy. Father loves him with a perfect love; he is the eldest—must not hurt those that are smaller than he, but care for them. Tell little Frederick father loves him with all his heart; he is a lovely boy. Julia is a lovely little girl; I love her also. She is a promising child; tell her father wants her to remember him and be a good girl. Tell all the rest that I think of them and pray for them all.

Bro. Babbitt is waiting to carry our letters for us. Colonel Price is inspecting them; therefore my time is short. Little Alexander is on my mind continually. O, my affectionate Emma, I want you to remember that I am a true and faithful friend to you and the children for ever. My heart is entwined around yours for ever and ever. O, may God bless you all. Amen. I am your husband, and am in bonds and tribulation, etc.

JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

This needs no comment. This trial was conducted as indicated, witnesses being brought in by the military at the point of the bayonet, and compelled to swear; and when a few witnesses only were brought in behalf of the defense, they were immediately thrown out of court and some of them put under arrest and put in confinement with the other prisoners; and as often as they gave names of witnesses that they wanted, there was a posse sent out to arrest them and make them prisoners, until finally General Doniphan, one of the attorneys for the defense, told them that they should bring no more witnesses, for he said if they gave any more names there would not be one of them left for final trial, for no sooner would Bogart and his men know who they were than they would put them out of the country; and, says General Doniphan:

“As to making any impression on King, if a cohort of angels were to come down and declare we were clear, Doniphan said it would be all the same; for he (King) had determined from the beginning to cast us into prison.”

That was the situation, and finally a part of the men who had been arraigned were discharged, and Judge King said:

“The remaining prisoners were all released, or admitted to bail, except Lyman Wight, Caleb Baldwin, Hyrum Smith, Alexander McRae, Sidney Rigdon, and myself, who were sent to Liberty, Clay County, to jail, to stand our trial for treason and murder—the treason, for having whipped the mob out of Daviess County.”

You will remember that on a former occasion we showed you the action taken in Daviess County, under command of Colonel Wight who was under orders from his superiors. The murder was charged because of the killing of the men at the time that David Patten was killed, that we told you about before, when the company went out from Far West under orders of Lieutenant Colonel George M. Hinkle and intercepted the command of Bogart. Then follows the names of some prisoners who had been taken in addition to those sent to Liberty, Parley P. Pratt, Morris Phelps, Luman Gibbs, Darwin Chase, and Norman Shearer, who were retained in the jail at Richmond for a time; but in the following April they obtained a change of venue and were taken to Columbia, in Boone County. Luman Gibbs apostatized afterwards, and denied the faith for the purpose of receiving his liberty.

To their number was afterward added King Follet, so that in Columbia jail there were four, Parley P. Pratt, Morris Phelps, (Chase and Shearer were released), King Follet, and Luman Gibbs, and they were in custody until the Fourth of July following, when Pratt and Phelps made their escape, and King Follet undertook to escape, but was recaptured and retained for a few months when he was allowed to depart.

We will now follow those who were sent to Liberty, and I invite your attention to the warrant or rather the mittimus under which they were sent to Liberty and confined in jail as follows:

To the Keeper of the Jail of Clay County; Greeting: Whereas, Joseph Smith, Jr., Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, and Caleb Baldwin, as also Sidney Rigdon, have been brought before me, Austin A. King, judge of the fifth judicial circuit in the State of Missouri, and charged with the offense of treason against the State of Missouri, and the said defendants, on their examination before me, being held to answer further to said charge, the said Joseph Smith, Jr.,

Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, and Caleb Baldwin to answer in the county of Daviess, and the said Sidney Rigdon to answer further in the county of Caldwell, for said charge of treason, and there being no jail in said counties: These are therefore to command that you receive the said Joseph Smith, Jr., Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, Caleb Baldwin, and Sidney Rigdon into your custody in the jail of the said county of Clay, there to remain until they be delivered therefrom by due course of law.

Given under my hand and seal the 29th day of November, 1838.

AUSTIN A. KING.

Under this they were taken to Clay County and retained there all winter, all of them except Sidney Rigdon. Sidney Rigdon was admitted to bail on January 30 following; but the rest of them were retained until April 6, 1839. During that time all efforts possible were made by their friends to release them, and petitions were sent to the Legislature and the Supreme Court of Missouri, but none of them availed anything, though a great deal of sympathy was aroused in their behalf. They had an examination before Judge Turnham at Liberty at the time that Sidney Rigdon was admitted to bail, the rest were held to answer in Daviess County, and on April 6 they were taken to Daviess County for trial. The grand jury brought in a bill against them. They were indicted for murder, treason, burglary, arson, larceny, theft, and stealing. This indictment was against Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, Caleb Baldwin, Hyrum Smith, and Joseph Smith. You will notice these charges, especially the last three, larceny, theft, and stealing. Will some one acquainted with legal terms tell me the difference? That is the kind of a document produced by that grand jury.

After a preliminary examination they obtained a change of venue, and were started under guard of Wm. Morgan, John Brassfield, Wm. Bowen, Wilson McKnisey, and John Pough for Boone County, the reason, as was then stated, being to take them down where Parley P. Pratt and others were confined at Columbia; but these individuals when they had started out with them traveled for a day or two and finally, we are told, when they stopped for the night the sheriff showed them the mittimus by which they were to be confined in Columbia jail. It had no date nor signature, a document without any name to it, bearing no date whatever, and the sheriff told these men that Judge Birch told him never to carry them to Boone County. Whether he intended they should do as they did, turn them loose, or dispose of them some other way, we do not know; but the sheriff, taking this instrument, got them out of the place where they had their preliminary examination and turned them loose. The sheriff said: "I shall take a good drink of grog and go to bed; you may do as you have a mind to." Three others of the guard drank pretty freely of whisky, sweetened with honey; they also went to bed, and were soon asleep, and the other guard went along with us and helped to saddle the horses. Two of us mounted the horses, and the other three started on foot, and we took our change of venue for the State of Illinois, and, in the course of nine or ten days we arrived in Quincy, Adams County [Illinois], where we found our families in a state of poverty, although in good health, they having been driven out of the State previously, by the murderous militia, under the exterminating order of the Executive of Missouri." This is the language of Hyrum Smith. So you see the officers of the law seemed to be glad to get this job off their hands. Their course had been irregular from the beginning, the proceedings having no warrant in law, and they finally adopted this means of getting rid of them. Yet we have read in different histories that these men broke jail and were escaped convicts. There is no truth in it. These men did what any others would do. When the sheriff said, "I will take a drink of grog and go to bed; but you may do as you have a mind to," they went home to their families.

The church, while these men were languishing in jail, was suffering under all kinds of deprivations and trials. Under the exterminating order of Governor Boggs they were given to understand they must leave the State either that winter or the coming spring. Many of them left in the winter; some remained until spring.

I will not trust myself to-night to talk much in regard to the sufferings of this people in the land of Missouri or of their exodus from the State, but I will read some comments of the press in regard to the matter, that you may see how those not members of the church and not engaged on the side of the mob, looked upon the outrages inflicted upon these people in the State of Missouri.

But first allow me to quote a few words written by President Joseph Smith in regard to his mother and her children.

"After making such arrangements for the safety of herself and her children as she could, Mrs. Smith turned her face from the home whence she and hers were being driven, towards Illinois and freedom. The winter shut in early, and when the fleeing pilgrims reached the Mississippi River, it was freshly frozen over, and Mrs. Smith, carrying her two youngest, with the oldest boy and the little girl clinging to her dress, crossed the mighty river, to Quincy, Illinois, on foot, weary, heartbroken, and sad.

"She found a hospitable welcome at the home of a man by the name of Cleaveland, where she remained during the long winter, sad but trusting, and in faithful expectancy, waiting for her husband's relief, and delivery from bonds."

Permit me to finish to-night by reading the comments of some of those who were not engaged in these affairs. It is better for some reasons than anything I could say, as they are the expressions of disinterested parties. I will not permit myself to comment upon it.

The history of Caldwell and Livingston Counties contains the following statement written by one not a member of the church:

In the midst of an inclement winter, in December, 1838, and in January, 1839, many of the Mormon men, women, and children, the sick and the aged as well as the young and strong, were turned out of their homes in this county and Daviess, into the prairies and forests, without food or sufficient protection from the weather. In some instances in Daviess their houses were burnt before their eyes, and they turned out into the deep snow. Only a few cabins in the southwestern part of Caldwell were burned at this time.

Numerous families set out at once for Illinois, making the entire distance in midwinter on foot. A large majority, however, remained until spring, as under the terms of the treaty they were allowed to remain in the county until that time. All through the winter and early spring those who remained prepared to leave. They offered their lands for sale at very small figures. In fact, many bartered their farms for teams and wagons to get away on. Some traded for any sort of property. Charles Ross, of Black Oak, bought forty acres of good land, north of Breckenridge, for a blind mare and a clock. Some tracts of good land north of Shoal Creek, in Kidder Township, brought only fifty cents an acre. Many of the Mormons had not yet secured the patents to their lands, and though they had regularly entered them, they could not sell them; the Gentiles would not buy unless they could receive the government's deeds, as well as the grantor's. These kinds of lands were abandoned altogether, in most instances, and afterwards settled upon by the Gentiles, who secured titles by keeping the taxes paid.

Shortly after they arrived in Illinois, the Quincy Argus made this statement:

We give in to-day's paper the details of the recent bloody tragedy acted in Missouri—the details of a scene of terror and blood unparalleled in the annals of modern and, under the circumstances of the case, in ancient history—a tragedy of so deep and fearful and absorbing interest that the very lifeblood of the heart is chilled at the simple contemplation. We are prompted to ask ourselves if it be really true that we are living in an enlightened, a humane and civilized age—in an age and quarter of the world boasting of its progress in everything good, and great, and honorable, and virtuous, and high-minded—in a country of which, as American citizens, we could be proud—whether we are living under a constitution and laws, or have not rather returned to the ruthless times of the stern Attila—to the times of the fiery Hun, when the sword and flame ravaged the fair fields of Italy and Europe, and the darkest passions held full revel in all the revolting scenes of unchecked brutality and unbridled desire?

We have no language sufficiently strong for the expression of our indignation and shame at the recent transaction in a sister State—and that State Missouri—a State of which we had long been proud, alike for her men and history, but now so fallen that we could wish her star stricken out from the bright constellation of the Union. We say we know of no language sufficiently strong for the expression of our shame and abhorrence of her recent conduct.

The Democratic Association of Quincy, Illinois, on February 28, 1839, after having invited other citizens to meet with them, passed these resolutions:

Resolved, that we regard the rights of conscience as natural and inalienable, and the most sacred guaranteed by the Constitution of our free government.

Resolved, that we regard the acts of all mobs as flagrant violations of law, and those who compose them individually responsible, both to the laws of God or man, for every depredation committed upon the property, rights, or life of any citizen.

Resolved, that the inhabitants upon the western frontier of the State of Missouri in their late persecutions of the class of people denominated Mormons, have violated the sacred rights of conscience, and every law of justice and humanity.

Resolved, that the Governor of Missouri in refusing protection to this class of people when pressed upon by a heartless mob, and turning upon them a band of unprincipled militia, with orders encouraging their extermination, has brought a lasting disgrace upon the State over which he presides.

The New York Commercial Advertiser also contains a set of resolutions passed by a mass meeting held at National Hall in New York:

Resolved, that as Americans we have heard with shame and indignation the narrative given by Mr. Green, of the persecutions, sufferings, and lawless violence of which a body of American citizens have been the objects and the victims, for no other apparent cause than that, without hindrance to others or violation of any law of the land, they acted on the right guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States of a free exercise of religion.

Resolved, that without meaning to express any opinion whatever as to the religious tenets or practices of the Mormons as a sect, we condemn and desire to bear our testimony against mob law, lynch law, and all other forms of violence and outrage, where an excited populace becomes at once jury, judge, and executioner.

Resolved, that the Mormons, as wronged, persecuted, exiled, and defrauded Americans, are entitled to the sympathy and support of their countrymen, and that especially in behalf of the women and children driven from their homes at the point of the bayonet, we appeal to the known benevolence of our fellow citizens at large for pecuniary aid.

Resolved, that the chairman and secretary be a committee with power to add to their numbers—to obtain subscriptions in aid of the women and children of the Mormons—such subscriptions to be applied after due investigation by the committee themselves.

Resolved, that these resolutions be signed by the chairman and secretary, and be published in the newspapers.

CHARLES KING, Chairman.

MARCUS SPRING, Secretary.

Again we read from the Western Messenger, a periodical published in Cincinnati, Ohio, in its issue of December, 1840:

Reader! Let not the word Mormon repel you! Think not that you have no interest in the cruelties perpetrated on this poor people! Read, we pray you, the history of this persecuted community; examine the detailed facts of these atrocities; reflect upon the hallowed principles and usages trampled under foot by ruffians; bring before your mind the violations of all law, human and divine, of all right, natural and civil, of all ties of society and humanity, of all duties of justice, honor, honesty, and mercy, committed by so-called freemen and Christians—and then speak out, speak out for prostrate law, for liberty disgraced, for outraged man, for heaven insulted;

"Loud as a summer thunderbolt shall waken
A people's voice."

We speak strongly, for we feel strongly; and we wish to attract attention to a tragedy of almost unequalled horror, which has been unblushingly enacted in a State of this Union. Its history should be trumpeted abroad until the indignant rebuke of the whole land compels the authors, abettors, and tolerators of these wrongs to make the small return now in their power for their aggravated injustice. Life can not be restored to the murdered nor health to the broken down in body and soul, nor peace to the bereaved; but the spoils on which robbers are now fattening can be repaid; the loss of the destitute can be made up; the captive can be freed, and, until by legislative acts she makes redress—Missouri is disgraced!

It seems like some horrid dream, that these enormities, which Nicholas would have shrunk from inflicting on the Poles, have been deliberately committed in an age of peace, in a land of laws and freedom, upon our own brethren. Is it actually true that citizens—peaceable, industrious, temperate, orderly citizens—have been driven from their property, their houses burned, the furniture broken and scattered, their crops laid waste, their stores plundered, their cattle killed, their horses stolen, their clothes stripped from them, and themselves expelled under threats of instant death? Is it true that men have been tarred and feathered, whipped till they were raw from head to foot, till their bowels gushed out, that their skulls have been knocked in, and brains scattered with musket butts, that they have been shot down while crying for quarter, shot down unarmed and defenseless like hogs in a pen? Is it true that sick women have been driven from burning houses at midnight on the snowy prairies, where they have given birth to children on the frozen ground, that they have forded rivers with helpless infants in their arms, fleeing from heartless pursuers, that they have been insulted when their natural protectors were hid from the murderers, that they have been violated by the guards appointed for their defense? And were the guilty instigators and executioners of the massacres, arsons, and rapes, really men of standing, ministers of the gospel, judges, senators, military officers, and the Governor of the State? Were not the evidence on which the narrative of each one of these cruelties rests incontrovertible, no one could conceive that such fiendlike acts had actually been wrought by beings in human shape. Would that for the honor of our nature they could be discredited. Our statement is strictly, unexaggeratedly true. It is only TOO MEAGER, TOO FEEBLE. . . .

These, it may be said, were the acts of unauthorized mobs, against whom the militia of the State had been called out. True! But when after months, we may say years, of suffering from similar outrages, harassed by anxieties, goaded by wrongs, and under the advice of authorities, civil and military, these poor fellows deserted by the militia guard, unprotected by the State, did at last defend their houses from pillage, their children and wives from abuse, themselves from murder—then was the cry of "Mormon war" raised; and Governor Boggs, to his lasting infamy, sent out his order for exterminating these citizens of Missouri, whom it was his duty under oath to save. In his order of October 27, he says:

"The Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State, if necessary, for the public good."

The Mormons had only defended themselves against infuriated and lawless rioters; so soon as General Lucas arrived and presented the Governor's orders, they submitted to the authorities of the State. They gave up their arms and were made prisoners. . . .

And thus, during the greatest cold of the last winter, were men, women and children, aged, sick and helpless, driven out from shelter, and, half-clothed, unied, robbed of teams and horses even, forced to make their way as they could to other States. One more picture we must present in order to give a glimpse of the horrors thus permitted by a State Executive—thus authorized and commanded by the highest power of Missouri. We take the account given under oath by Lyman Wight, of "a few facts concerning his family (while he was in jail)."

"His wife was confined on the 3d of November, whilst Cornelius C. Gillium, with one hundred painted men, surrounded the house, screeching and hallooing in the attitude of Delaware Indians; and it was with the utmost difficulty that the militia officers could keep them out of the house. In this situation the family remained, threatened day by day that they must leave the country or be exterminated. Accordingly, when her babe was eight days old she was informed she could stay no longer, that she must not only leave the county, but the State; that she need not flatter herself that she would ever see her husband again, for if they could not find law to kill him, they would kill him without law. She was stripped of her bed and bedding, and of her household furniture, then placed in an open wagon with six helpless children, to make the best shift she could to get out of the State. The last news received from her she was on the banks of the Mississippi River in a tent, depending on the charity of the people for her support. This is the fifth time that I and my family have been unlawfully driven from house and home."

Now let everyone on reading this tale of horror speak out fully, fearlessly. Had the Mormons been pirates, blood-stained, had they been Indians, girdled with scalps, they would have deserved better treatment. Let the unsupported accusations brought against them be true, and yet the conduct of their plunderers and murderers was utterly without a palliation or excuse. Before the face of heaven and in the sight of men such acts are devilish.

These statements are the strong language used by individuals who were not in any way concerned in the matter. I am glad we have lived to see the time when, though we admit our forefathers may have erred in Missouri, in regard to many things, yet we are not ashamed to hold up the banner for which they suffered, while to-day there is not a voice heard anywhere in all this broad land in defense of the action of those persecutors, no man who dares to say the people in Missouri did right by the Latter Day Saints. The time has come when they have no advocate to say a word in their defense; the verdict of the world is against them. And though the Latter Day Saints may be persecuted still to some extent we may all know those proceedings against them were wrong. The sad part of it is that some at that time, in the land of Missouri, rather than stand those persecutions, proved false to their trust, and to make peace with their enemies denied their faith. Prominent among these were two of the Quorum of Twelve, Thomas B. Marsh and Orson Hyde. These men together with men of lesser note went over to the enemy, or rather denied the faith, and these two made affidavit to certain things for the purpose of trying to convict their friends. Orson Hyde bitterly repented of this afterwards, came over into Illinois when the church was gathered, and asked forgiveness and was reinstated. Thomas B. Marsh remained outside the church until after the death of Joseph Smith. He finally went to Utah and joined the Utah church; but we have had some evidence which leads us to believe that in his latter days he was not fully in accord with them, for a few days prior to his death he declared himself as being desirous of coming east and of having an interview with President Joseph Smith, having an idea or a desire to unite with him in this work. How far these men sinned at that time or to what extent they may have suffered for that sin, we know not. They with the rest who went through those perilous times must meet their record at the bar of God, when all those things will be understood in their true light, and justice shall be meted out. But we can not but honor those men the more who stood true to their convictions and suffered persecution and in some cases death for the testimony they bore, and we expect to honor them while life remains. We trust we shall prove worthy to represent the cause for which they suffered.

CHRISTIANSAND, Norway, February 8.

Editors Herald: Since last writing I have endeavored to establish permanent places of meetings within my first chosen radius of operation and have at last apparently succeeded. Sr. Enge has hired two rooms and kitchen; one has been an old store and we have fitted it up for a meeting-house. We hold forth there Sunday and Tuesday evenings; Thursdays in Homborgsund or at Enge, and Friday evenings at Christiansand, in the dining-room at the Workmen's Union Building. I have held four services there, and the result so far is six interested, who come regularly. Yesterday I was invited to come to a private house and hold a preliminary meeting before going to the hall. I feel truly encouraged. There are liberal people here when once our mission is understood; among those who have been very accommodating and who are deeply interested is Captain Tonnesen of steamship "Active," plying between Arendal and Christiansand; he speaks English fluently, is well posted on the faith of sects, and is not in harmony with them. He has read our books, and I do hope to see him and his noble wife some day in our ranks; they begin to see that the old ship is sinking.

I am truly thankful to the Lord for raising up a friend to the cause in my brother, Oliver, who not only brought Sr. Enge and children across the ocean, but, though not a member, has defended our claims. While he has not yet declared his intention, I know that both he and my noble sister are on the threshold of the kingdom. He told me yesterday he wanted to subscribe for the HERALD and have it sent to him to Alaska, his home, whither he will return in May. The Lord grant that the long-cherished hope may be realized.

On the 31st of January the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints met for the first time in sacrament and prayer-meeting in Norway, at Bro. and Sr. Olson's house, at Roesand, two miles north of Grimstad, and I assure you it was a grand meeting, the gentle Spirit of the Master being present; so much so that in tears of joy and of true repentance, even our young Saints, Bro. Axel and Sr. Lily Enge, under the influence of the Spirit, arose and expressed their appreciation of being Latter Day Saints, and an earnest desire that some would receive the truth, and walk in the right way, and we all renewed our covenant with the Lord and with each other. We have prayer-meeting at our house in Grimstad every Wednesday. Since the arrival of Sr. Enge and the children, the people who used to pass me on the street with heads averted, now stop and shake hands. The outlook is fair.

I could get several subscribers for the Sandhedens Banner if it were issued. I hope that the long talked of publication may soon be a realization. We need that paper very much. We also need financial help. While the Bishop is doing all he can to keep us above water by the portion of tithing at his disposal, a freewill offering now and then to our highly esteemed and duly appointed Bishop's agent, Bro. Peter Muceus, Vest Porsgrund, Norway, from our Scandinavian Saints in America would be appreciated by returning thanks, and as a reward, blessings from the Lord through prayer in their behalf. I do not wish to censure anybody, but I can not but second the astonishment expressed by our minister in charge at the seemingly lack of interest of the Scandinavian-American Saints in regard to this mission financially. Several have requested me to visit their relatives and friends in Norway and Denmark, but none gave me a dollar but Bro. Hanson at Roslyn and Bro. Anderson at Lamoni. Dear Scandinavian Brn. and Srs. in America, awake to a sense of your ability and send in you mite, and the Lord will open the sluices of heaven, and your cisterns will be too small. Bro. Muceus and your humble servant are trying hard against stout opposition to establish the work in this country and to be noted as true servants of the Lord and the church. I hope the Saints in general will remember this mission when they assemble for prayer and also the Lord's store-house, so that the Lord may influence the church to send missionaries to Denmark and Sweden, as it is too expensive to travel back and forwards between these countries, and then not be able to accomplish much.

I am glad to hear of the progress of the work in the British Isles, in our beloved land of Zion, and in the world at large. May the people of the Lord soon be gathered, the Lord appear, and we be able to abide his coming.

N. C. ENGE.

PITTSFIELD, Illinois, February 23.

Editors Herald: I am not a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but I have heard their elders preach and I believe it is the only church that is approved of God and Christ, and I intend, at the first opportunity, to be baptized. I am seventy-three years old next May. I am a widow and left all alone. My husband has been dead eleven years. About eight years ago I had a fall on the ice and hurt my right limb and it has been swollen ever since, and my weight on it, which is about three hundred pounds, disables me so I can hardly get around the house to do my work. Now what I wish is for you to publish this request: Saints, pray that the use of my limb might be restored, and also pray for my general welfare. My address is Eliza St. John, Pittsfield, Illinois, care of A. Spilker.

DOW CITY, Iowa, January 31.

Editors Herald: A few reasons for leaving my mission may be in order. I left Vernon, Texas, the third of this month with the intention of visiting Burnet County. I stopped at Fort Worth over Sunday and visited the families of Brn. McFarland and Nicoll, and hope I did them good. They are doing well financially and seem to be quite firm in the work. I think a tent in that city would be all right to reach that prejudiced people.

From there I went to Cleburne and there I found Bro. Riley and family and did some visiting from house to house, and I am satisfied good was done. Sr. Riley is doing good work by distributing our literature. Bro. L. L. Wight baptized a woman last October. She lived four miles from the city. I visited her, and found her strong in the faith. Her son and wife will ere long be one with her in faith and doctrine, but they live in a prejudiced neighborhood of Baptists. They control the school-house, but I felt well in presenting the truth as revealed, and some prejudice has been removed by my stay with them.

I intended remaining in that part all winter, but my old chronic disease was very bad, and this is the cause of my return home. But no place would I love to labor better than in Texas. The Southern people are so clever. I did not at first think I would like preaching from house to house, but I can now say I like it well.

The work is divine and I am glad the Lord has helped me so much as he has.

You have been eulogized for your new dress on the HERALD by a good many, but I don't like it as well as the old one.

JOHN HAWLEY.

SAINT CLAIR, Michigan, February 22.

Dear Herald: Thirty years ago to-day I was baptized by Bro. Arthur Leverton, and was confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints under the hands of A. Leverton, N. W. Blakley, and H. Haskins, at which time the Lord spoke to me through Bro. Leverton, saying that if I was faithful I should be "healed of my affliction, and my body would be made strong." I was consumptive at that time. I was also told I should be "clothed with authority to preach the gospel to the nations of the earth," and by faithfulness I should become a "polished shaft in Israel," and be an instrument in the hands of God in "bringing many into the kingdom of God."

Through all those years I have never felt a desire to turn back, but rather to press onward. I began to get stronger in body, but it came gradually; year after year I felt I was getting stronger in body and spirit. Three years after my baptism I was called and ordained, and my first labor in the field was with Bro. Robert Davis; we had much traveling to do on foot. I remember the poor old brother would grab my satchel and with his own walk on and say, "Come on, Johnny, come on, we'll soon be there!" I tried to keep up with him, and did the best I could. As time went on and I got strong in body, and Bro. Davis grew older and feebler, though once a strong and powerful man, I would take his satchel with mine, and say, "Come on, Bro. Davis, come on, we'll soon be there!" Bro. Davis has since died, and we are left to toil on.

For over a month I have been laboring in the Eastern Michigan District, and going over some parts of the old ground where I labored when I first came from London, Ontario, to Michigan, twenty-three years ago. Although the weather was stormy and cold, yet I have averaged one sermon each day for over six weeks. I have just had a grand and glorious time! I have met so many of the old faces which I have not seen for years, and in all of the places I have preached I have had good congregations. At Richmondville where I first located I delivered five discourses to the old men and women, together with their children who had grown up, who were my neighbors twenty years ago, who did not care then to hear much about the work, but who now welcome me back among them and come out to hear, and pay the best of attention, and some seem to believe. One man remarked, "Why, elder, is that the same belief you used to have when you lived here?" Another, "Why, I did not know you believed in the Bible that way!" Another, who heard a few sermons then, but the word spoken seemed to have no effect upon him, now says, "Why, Johnny, you preach a lot better than you used to!" etc. The greatest change is in them, not me. It is the same now as then; they are more willing to receive it now, and it looks as though a good work can be done all through that country. Of course, having lived among them,—was with them during the terrible fire of 1881, when we were all burned out and were all placed on a common level, so far as our manner of living was concerned,—may have made some difference. Our houses were burned, wooden pails were burned, tin pails were unsoldered, and nearly everything destroyed, we would here and there find a cast-iron pot or kettle that was still whole. We would take the pot and fill with potatoes which we would dig out of the ground with our hands, wash the potatoes in the same pot, and empty them out on almost anything we could find,—an old piece of a board, if any could be found not burned, or lay down an old coat, or take off an apron and lay on the ground, put the potatoes on it, so to clean the pot, and get fresh water to boil the potatoes in. Then when boiled, turn them out on something as before and clean the pot in which to milk the cow, using the same cast-iron pot to hold the milk. Then eat breakfast, dinner, etc. My wife, and I, and family, and many others slept on the bare ground one night, and finally we were taken to where we got shelter, etc. Old times seemed to return as we talked. I believe the time is near when some of those people will obey the gospel.

On my arrival at Deckerville I called to see the leading merchant, a man with whom I had done considerable business in the past, Mr. John Blower, who on seeing me come in his store, jumped up from his chair, and in the presence of several persons said, "Hello! here's that Cornish, that Latter Day Saint preacher," etc. We visited, talked about old times, etc. Finally told me he owned that large brick building, with two stores and a large auditorium above them. Said he, "Cornish, if you wish to use that room for one meeting some Sunday, just let me know and I will fire up and let you have the use of it free." I accepted it, and on Sunday, February 16, at 2:30 p. m., I delivered, by the aid of the Spirit of the Master, a sermon on the pure principles of the gospel of Christ to about two hundred sixty people, who listened with profound attention for a little over one hour. I was blessed, and many enjoyed the discourse, and Mr. Blower for (I think) the first time listened to me. And when I thanked him for his kindness to us, he said, "When you want that hall again, let me know."

I received a warm welcome everywhere I went. In conversation with Bro. Hugh Campbell, of McGregor, a brother who obeyed the gospel when I first began to labor in Michigan, said, "Bro. Cornish, I believe if you would come here next summer, and go over the same grounds you did twenty years ago, you would do another such a work as you did then; so many ask for you," etc.

I have met all of the ministers but one in the district, and all seem doing all they can. Bro. A. Barr is and has been on the sick list for some time, but was feeling some better when I saw him. Bro. Barr was once a strong, robust man, but is getting older and can not stand so much as he used to. Bro. Wm. Davis is presiding over the district, and finds plenty to do. Bro. E. A. Goodenough, in his mild way, is working, doing what good he can. Bro. H. J. DeVries is at Buel and has large gatherings to hear him. Bro. Sweet, the president of that branch, said it was the greatest interest ever known there.

Bro. J. J. Bailey, a dear good fatherly brother, has a good new opening in Oakland County; has baptized some, and many others are believing.

A young and spiritual elder, named O. J. Hawn, has awakened a good interest and baptized some near McGregor. He has done some church work for years, to the satisfaction of all with whom he has labored, and is now ready to spend his entire time in the work if appointed and sustained, which we hope may be done this coming conference, for he is worthy.

The missionaries of this field believe interest is being awakened in many parts of the field, such as never before, and all are hopeful.

The brethren in the Northern District are moving on nicely, and all, with but one exception, are moving along in harmony with the rules and usages of the church. Bro. E. A. Goodwin is operating chiefly in Bay Cities and Saginaw, others in other places; and while there is certainly a change in the people in many places, wherein there is a willingness upon their part to hear the truth more than in years past, yet there are those in other places who do not care to listen to the angel's message at all. Hence we try to do the best we can in the best place, and where the most interest is found, believing that other places will also take a change for the better some other time.

So many have asked, "Bro. Cornish, why don't you write to the church papers?" I answer, I am busy all the time, there is so much to do and look after, and other younger ones are coming in, and new writers and workers, and the papers are full, and if I write often I will crowd others out. And now I have started to write, I scarcely know where to stop. There are so many good things to talk about, but I must not rob others of their right to occupy space in the paper, so I will conclude by saying, I feel strong in the latter-day work. I am not baptizing so many as in former years, but I have been engaged in district work so long, that my time has not been spent in new places in the past; and yet on looking over the past twenty-seven years of ministerial work, part of which time I have been appointed by the church and my family sustained, and part of that time I have sustained myself a few weeks or months now and then, and at other times others have assisted in sustaining my family, etc., in all of which time, I have been an instrument in the hands of God, of baptizing over twelve hundred persons.

Oh, when (in my visits) talking with my dear brethren of the Eastern District, who obeyed the gospel under my administration over twenty years ago, my heart has been made glad, especially in recounting the many, many blessings which God in his loving kindness and mercy has bestowed upon us, and not only then, but all along the line, it is grand!

I would like to attend the coming General Conference, but I will not have the necessary means to do so.

J. J. CORNISH.

BAXTER, Iowa.

Editors Herald: On February 10 nearly every family of Saints residing in this vicinity received a postal card on which was printed, "What is truth? You are cordially invited to hear D. H. Bays, of Nebraska, for twenty-eight years a leading preacher and debater of the Latter Day Saints, lecture on why he left that church. Clyde, February 11-14; West Point, February 15, 7:30 p. m. Members of the Saints' Church especially invited."

Bro. J. C. Crabb had held meetings at Clyde for nearly three weeks. This seems to have raised the ire of the Christian Church people, hence Elder Bays was sent for to show to the people, as well as the Saints, the iniquity of what he was pleased to call "Mormonism." There is no elder connected with this branch, so some of the Saints thinking that the work might suffer under the misrepresentation which they were sure would follow his coming, telegraphed to Lamoni for Elder J. W. Wight. One drove to Rhodes and brought Bro. Nirk. Elder W. C. Earhart was informed of the situation.

The evening of the eleventh nearly all the Saints were on hand. Elder Bays opened fire, giving any one the privilege to ask questions any time. Of this privilege the Saints availed themselves and asked him a good many questions, but soon learned that advantage was taken of them, and that he was badly misrepresenting the church.

They again made an effort to secure some one competent to meet Elder Bays, and a message was sent to C. Scott, Lamoni. Just at night this message was received:

"J. W. Wight on the road. Telegram will be at Baxter for him. See that he gets it. C. SCOTT."

This was cheering news. They went home and told Elder Bays that Bro. Wight would be there the next night.

But Bro. Wight failed to come as expected, and by telegram we learned he was in Council Bluffs.

By this time the lectures at Clyde were over, so we all repaired to West Point, where I for the first time saw and heard Mr. Bays, who spoke on the laying on of hands. After services he announced he would deliver a course of lectures on the same subject at Collins. So on Sunday we sent a dispatch for Bro. Wight. The writer attended Monday night and took notes, and Tuesday at one o'clock had the pleasure of shaking hands with

Bro. Wight, who canceled other engagements to come. Tuesday evening Bays opened by reading parts of the 5th and 6th chapters of Hebrews, and at once attacked the principles as recorded in Hebrews 6: 1, 2. He said they were lingering relics of the Mosaic law and that the whole Hebrew letter is an exhortation on the Mosaic law. Referred to Hebrews 5: 12 and demanded to know what were the oracles of God. Said the Old Testament was the oracle of God and quoted Romans 3: 1, 2 to prove this point; also Acts 7: 37, 38. Said the principles are not principles of the gospel, and read 1 Corinthians 15: 1-4, claiming this to be the gospel. Claimed that John 3: 5 did not in any sense mean baptism. Gave Webster's definition of born and baptized and contrasted their meaning; claimed the dead works were the dead works of the old law. Said laying on of hands was never commanded or practiced by Christ and not commanded by the apostles, but only practiced on two occasions for the gift of the Holy Ghost and that no one but an apostle ever had this power.

Twice Mr. Bays, wishing to refer to the principles of arithmetic, commenced with faith as the first. This the second time raised a laugh. After he spoke one hour and twenty minutes he yielded the floor and introduced Elder J. W. Wight to the audience, saying he was a representative man of the church and an able defender of the faith. This the audience soon found was true. Elder Wight at once took up the principle of laying on of hands, showing it was used for four different purposes, and that Christ taught it in Mark 16: 18 and practiced it in many instances. Also made argument that when the Spirit of truth or Holy Ghost should come he would bring all things to their remembrance, and as the apostles did practice it Jesus must have taught it also. Showed that Ananias, although not an apostle, laid hands on Paul that he might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; thus proving one of Elder Bays' assertions wrong. He then examined 1 Corinthians 15: 1-4, showed it taught two of the principles as taught in Hebrew 6: 1, 2, namely, faith or belief and the resurrection of the dead. He also showed that although Mr. Bays taught the principles were Mosaic, yet he taught faith, repentance, and baptism; believed in the resurrection and judgments, and only threw out the baptism of the Spirit and the laying on of hands. He then in a ten-minute speech made such a masterly defense of the church and its doctrine as to carry conviction to nearly all present that if one of the principles is binding all are binding.

On Wednesday night Mr. Bays undertook to show that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were polygamists and brought up the usual Brighamite testimony to prove his points; also introduced J. C. Bennet's testimony. Gave affidavits by David Fulmer, Lovina Walker, and Emily Partridge. Elder Wight then examined all the testimony and evidence and introduced so much in rebuttal that at least a large share of the audience went home satisfied that there was no good evidence that Joseph and Hyrum ever taught or practiced polygamy, but on the other hand they taught and wrote against it until the time of their death.

On the spiritual gifts Elder Bays was at home; these he knew were not enjoyed by the church; knew this by personal experience, as he had never been healed or helped by the laying on of hands; had never seen any one healed in his life; gave this as his principal reason for leaving the church; related an experience at a reunion, when many took sick, none were healed; paid a high tribute to the elders and membership in the Reorganized Church; said they were honest, truthful, and earnest, but deceived. Brought up the case of blind Fanny; said he himself thought she was healed for years, but said her husband told him that she could see before. Said they were very poor people; had spent all their money in doctoring her eyes.

Bro. Wight showed that the Scripture and Bays did not agree, and made some telling points against him. One was reading extracts from his letter of resignation to the church, in which he stated he did not believe in the inspiration of the Bible; also read from letters written to HERALD while Elder Bays was in the field, where he bore different testimony from what he does now. Said these testimonies were given when Elder Bays was in the full vigor of manhood; when his mental powers were far greater than now, and wanted to know which we would believe. Everything was turned and overturned. I could not do justice to this debate unless I would report to great length.

Bro. J. W. Wight spoke last night at Clyde, where Elder Bays had spoken four nights. Here he reviewed him on Book of Mormon and other things to the satisfaction of the Saints. Elder Bays said he had never met a more thorough gentleman in debate than Elder Wight, and said he believed him to be a Christian.

Well, the conflict is over, the smoke cleared away. We have lined up, called the roll; none killed, wounded, or missing among us, but many warm friends have been made to the work. Some understand our position who never did before. So let the conflicts come and let the Saints live their religion and God will take care of his work.
H. A. MCCOY.

PLAINVIEW, Texas, February 18.

Dear Herald: I have never written to the HERALD before, but have had it in my home ever since I can remember anything about it. I used to write to the Hope when I was a child; but since my last contribution I have married. We are living on Llano Estacado, Staked Plains, of Texas. It is quite a lovely place. Not a tree to be seen, except those which are transplanted. We have been here but a short time. There are no Saints here but us. My father, E. Bates, will preach next Sunday at a schoolhouse near here. I would be very glad if we could have a branch organized here. I feel the need of it so much.

I appreciate the good literature published by the church. My greatest joy is through reading; it seems that the good Lord blesses me in this way, as I can not have the pleasure of attending church. I have so many temptations; but when I turn to my blessed Father he draws me to his loving bosom and says:

"Draw closer, closer, loving child;

Although the night is dark and wild."

What a glorious thing it is to have a strong hand to shield you from all harm!

I have been healed through administration many times, and others have witnessed the healing. How can so many deny this? Sometimes I let my heart grieve over the blindness of others, but God says for us to grieve not for the sins of the world. In this verse I get comfort. I believe he meant for us not to mar our joys on the account of others' sins. Of course, in one sense, it is grievous to us.

I want the Saints to ever pray for me that I may hold out faithful. I would be glad if some of the elders would visit this part of Texas.
MRS. ADA BATES SMITH.

TOPEKA, Kansas, February 25.

Dear Herald Readers: We are glad to inform you that the work of the Lord is still onward at this place. Bro. Foss has been here at different times this winter and preached for us. Most of the preaching was done in Bro. John Robinson's dwelling-house, as we can only get schoolhouses on Sundays near to town. Bro. Foss recently led four precious souls into the waters of regeneration; all grown people and were unacquainted with our claims until this winter. They make quite an addition to the few willing workers that have been keeping the lamp of life burning at this place. Three of those baptized are to move to Oklahoma. Any of our elders laboring in that country will find a welcome there. Address Mrs. Jasper Ragsdale, Walters, Oklahoma, via. Lawton.

The few Saints here have in contemplation the building of a house of worship. It is surely needed, for there are many that will not attend services at private houses, that would go were it at a public place.

Our conference convened at Scranton the 15th and 16th insts. The business was disposed of pleasantly, the sermons were inspiring, and there seemed to be a disposition on the part of all to live closer to the Master. Bro. J. W. Roberts and myself remained over with the Scranton Saints, and by giving a little encouragement the young people reorganized their Religio. We hope and pray its banner may never again be furled. Sister Amelia Chapman, a school-teacher of some experience, is their president. We sincerely hope they will get the proper encouragement from the older members of the branch.

Am feeling hopeful of the progress of the work in this district.

Dear Herald: I can not do without the dear old, but now new-dressed HERALD. I do not care what suit it wears, its reading is meat and drink to my soul. I have taken it over thirty-one years, and don't owe a cent on it. Am not saying this to boast, but because the good Father has always made it possible for me to pay for it by my own work; no one ever paid a cent for me either. How Latter Day Saints can do without the church papers I can't see. I want to be up to date all the time as I am isolated most of the time. May God bless us all is the prayer of your sister,
M. A. CHRISTY.

BALM, Missouri, February 10.

Editors Herald: A discussion between Bro. J. D. Erwin, of Joplin, Missouri, and Elder W. W. Blalock, Lamar, Missouri, of the Christian Church, was held at Balm, in Christian church, with the usual formula of church doctrine and practice, Bro. Erwin making the first speech. A good house at opening session Monday evening, continuing morning and night till the close on Friday evening. It was cold and stormy the entire time, sleighs and sleds being used more than for several years past. Most of the Saints lived from two to six miles away, some coming by rail a much greater distance.

The organ, for some cause, was removed from the church, so our singers had to do without it; but it was brought back and used in last half of debate when the Christian Church led the music.

Bro. Erwin put up a chart the first day, showing the organization, doctrine, practice, and spiritual gifts which were clearly outlined with Scripture references. Bro. Erwin opened the discussion by giving in a short, concise manner the organization of the church as shown on the map. Showed what truth is. If we have not the same church to-day as Christ set up, then we are not the Church of Christ.

Elder Blalock read from Book of Mormon, also Doctrine and Covenants, to prove Bro. Erwin's statements not in harmony with the Bible. Baptism is a symbol of Christ's resurrection from the dead. That is all it means. 1 Corinthians 15: 29. These people say a man may sin all his life, but after he dies one of his friends can be baptized for him, and he will be saved. "You put Joseph Smith in the place of Christ. You know you do!" God set apostles in the church and never had them supplanted. Miracles are to produce faith.

Elder Blalock said there were things our preachers were ordered to keep back; not allowed to show them all to the members. Christ did not think it necessary for the world to be told all things. He hid these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes. If you can find one place in Doctrine and Covenants where we put Joseph Smith in Christ's place, I will renounce the whole thing. He said the signs did not follow us. The signs have followed us since 1830 from Maine to California.

Oliver Cowdery was not dishonest. Doctrine and Covenants simply shows that it was not best he should travel alone in those perilous times, and it was wisdom that one be sent with him who would also be true; and not, as Mr. Blalock says, "because they were afraid to trust him with the money."

"A. Campbell was the Elijah of the eighteenth century." If he brought forth the gospel, and my opponent can prove it, then this debate falls through. But I have proved to this audience that Joseph Smith is the man who brought back the original gospel.

Elder Blalock opened next with the story of the darkey who showed that the bottom rail was on top. Tried to make the audience believe he had produced the best argument, so was the top rail.

"Truth is truth wherever found,
On heathen or on Christian ground."

That is what I want. Read from Doctrine and Covenants. The Devil appeared to a man as an angel of light. I think he appeared that way to Joseph Smith and deceived him.

We believe in the Spirit as a guest, but none baptized with it now. I do not believe in laying on of hands, for he sends me down with murderers and drunkards. The two witnesses are the Old and New Testaments.

There is not an honest man among the Mormon elders, but their members are deceived. Made much sport of the Word of Wisdom. The idea that God would stoop to tell people what to eat and feed their stock. He said if you do not do just as it says, you are committing sin. Also said God's curse is upon everyone who pretends to receive latter-day revelations. Made great play on the words he and they, he being singular and they (the apostles) plural in Mark 16:16. Bro. Erwin showed if that were true, there was but one believer to be saved and one unbeliever to be damned.

Debate closed with apparently good feeling all around, and I look for good results in that community, as much ignorance and prejudice had before existed, caused by false teaching of their leaders.

MRS. M. J. PHIPPS.

ELMWOOD, Wisconsin, February 10.

Dear Herald: Bro. Wm. Hutchison, of Ono, Wisconsin, and the writer strayed into the northern wilds of Wisconsin, a mountainous country, in which the lumberman pays no regard to, "Woodman spare that tree, touch not a single bough," under whose ruthless ax the beautiful forests are fast being felled and the land denuded of the only attraction in this frigid country. It takes a realizing sense of duty as a missionary to leave the warm fires of comfort and company of faithful Saints, with the mercury marking thirty-two degrees below zero, and against biting wind and drifting snow, ride overland thirty to forty miles to inject into the darkened corners, the angel's message which we bear. Our time being set, we did not falter. Bro. Hutchison's vim and energy, with his fleet-footed blacks gliding us over the drifting snows, up the hills and down the "cooleys" (canyons), the merry jingle of the bells keeping time to the music of soul, "It's Father's will," were the warning fires, until we arrive at Elmwood, a small village nestled away in the wooded hills in which are a store, mill with all its attendants, a boarding-house, blacksmith shop, with a dozen or more neat residences. We are told it is an "Infidel town," and preachers are at a discount. But we could have the "Woodman hall" to try our hand in. Thanking the Father of all good for his guiding hand, enjoying the warming rays of hospitable fire and bread, we are finally domiciled with Mr. Orin Groot, the store-keeper, and his very pleasant family. Our first night was rather "scanty;" the second was better, the third was good, and the rest grand. For three weeks we told the story, with the hall well filled, being crowded to the doors. Never have I enjoyed such liberty nor seen men and women so hungry for gospel truth. Prejudice removed, skepticism beaten back, and now the "Infidel villagers" are reading our books.

Mr. Groot, with his amiable wife who does nothing by halves, not even in gospel investigation, also Mr. Kelley the saw-mill man, the prince of skeptics, with his good wife who is a real mother indeed, who are also the genial host and hostess, and others, have purchased the "Sealed Book," and are truly convinced we have something that will command intelligent investigation.

We left them with regrets, yet believing that sooner or later a fine branch will be raised at Elmwood. The hall is free for us, lighted and warmed, being owned and controlled by these good men named, and a hearty welcome to occupy at any time.

Openings to preach the gospel were never better than now in Northern Wisconsin. There are calls from many places to come and preach. We are now on our way to "Buckwheat Ridge," where we may meet with a slap-jack.

T. W. CHATBURN.

ROSETTA, Idaho, February 14.

Dear Herald: There are only seven Saints here. We are trying to live right, but sometimes things look rather discouraging; but with God's help we will not give up. We hold prayer-meetings every two weeks.

Bro. Albertson was here one year ago this winter and we expected him again this winter, but he did not come. We enjoyed his preaching very much. Hope that some of the good brethren will remember us and come this way this year. There is a large scope of country here in which no preaching has been done by a Latter Day Saint. This reservation is just getting settled so that people can attend meetings. Some of the United Brethren and the Seventh-day Adventists have been holding some protracted meetings here this winter. Of course some of the people are very prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints while others are not. I think that a good elder might do a great deal of good around here.

I enjoy the letters in the HERALD very much. Some of the writers I am personally acquainted with, and it seems like getting letters from them. I hope to see some of the brethren in the near future. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may be strengthened.

Your sister,

MRS. L. A. LITTLE.

OAK HARBOR, Ohio, February 27.

Editors Herald: We have occupied the town hall at this place for a few evenings and interest is growing. There are about five hundred people attending, and that is the seating capacity of hall. I came by invitation of Bro. J. W. Moxon, treasurer of the "Michigan Head Lining Co.," who with his excellent wife lives at this point. And with such an excellent record as they possess among the people, the gospel seems to put on added graces and power. We have convictions that great good will be accomplished. Last Saturday we rode out to the district called Nina, eight miles distant. Found Saints resident there, the result of labors performed by Elder F. C. Smith. I preached four sermons to crowded halls. Indeed, this great section of country seems an "open door" to gospel work. Oak Harbor is twenty-four miles east and south of Toledo on L. S. & M. S., and W. & L. E. railroads.

A good choir is furnishing music for the services.

We are hopeful of good results. The Spirit of inquiry is among the people here, and an interest in the work is fastening itself. The hall is lighted by electricity, and is seated with opera chairs. There are attending, Methodists, Disciples, Lutherans, Catholics, skeptics, and worldly people. We are endeavoring to sow the seed with liberal hand, and upon all kinds of soil. The Methodist pastor has attended; judges, lawyers, doctors, and all classes attend.

Ever hopeful,

S. W. L. SCOTT,

Ness City, Kansas, February 22.

Editors Herald: To-day finds me as zealous for Zion's cause as I have ever been. January 28 I went to Gove County. Later Bro. E. H. Ebert joined me and we partook of the hospitality of Brn. J. B. and F. M. Coop. Their schoolhouse was closed against us. We occupied in district west. Held an interesting meeting. One man wanted to talk to those Latter Day Saint elders. On Sunday at the close of the eleven o'clock meeting we began explaining our position to him, and did not leave him until near four p. m. At close of night meeting I gave opportunity for persons to ask questions, but none were asked. We left there with a good feeling toward the work, and an interest sufficient that a Sunday-school will be organized.

We went then to Lane County, and held meetings near Brn. J. W. and J. L. Sawyers. An Adventist, Mr. Gray, is to review Bro. D. S. Crawley's article on the Sabbath question, as published in HERALD of August, 1901. He claims Bro. Crawley misrepresents, and does not do justice to history. Brn. T. E. Thompson and Sawyers will defend our cause.

On our way here we stopped with a Mr. Hayes east of Beeler. This is a Holiness community.

We are now eight miles from Ness City, stopping with Mr. Cravens. But there is very little religious sentiment here. Do not feel like remaining long. They are a kind-hearted people, care for the missionary, but can not decide to obey the gospel. At Beeler there will be some baptizing to do by and by.

L. G. GURWELL.

MEDINA CITY, Texas, February 20.

Dear Herald: Bro. Harp has again held some good meetings to small but interested audiences at the Laxton Creek Schoolhouse. None were baptized; several were interested. Bro. Harp won many friends.

This is a hard mission. Most of the Saints are greatly scattered, but if they will all put their shoulders to the wheel, financially as well as prayerfully, we think an elder will be better cared for another year. Some have done all they could, while others, we are afraid, have not. The Saints should so live that it will be easy for the elder to make the people understand the truth.

The Saints here are wishing for Bro. Harp to be sent back. They say, "We want a harp with a thousand strings, and a just man made perfect."

Bro. Currie, one of our aged and faithful soldiers, has crossed "to the other side of the river." He has been sick for a long time, but died strong in the faith once delivered to the Saints. When the Saints would visit him he would exhort them to stand firm and hold to the staff. He was a good preacher and well thought of by the people. If he had an enemy we do not know it.

The drought is unbroken yet. Have not had a good rain since August 1. Farmers who never knew what it was to buy corn are paying $1 to $1.15 per bushel for it, and other things are about as high. If the drought continues much longer so as to interfere with the coming crop there will be considerable suffering in this country. We trust that the Lord will not suffer it to be so; but we know that in the last days "perilous times shall come."

I ask the Saints to pray for the Saints in this district.

HATTIE MINEAR.

GLOVER, Michigan, February 25.

Editors Herald: I have been laboring among the branches this winter, endeavoring to encourage the local ministry, and assisting them where needed. We have held priesthood meetings with branch officers, and find them very instructive and profitable. We have truly been blessed in our efforts. I never labored with a greater degree of satisfaction than of late. May the good work move on!

The Origin of Wings.

When first the birds were made they had no wings,
But with the reptiles groveled on the ground.

But out of effort—so the poet sings—

By lifting burdens, wings at last were found.

Not sweetest voices could their hearts content,

Nor plumage, where its hues the rainbow flings;

They wrought on earth, and so to heaven they went—

They lifted burdens, and God gave them wings.

So, groveling soul, if thou would'st soar, then, see,

The willing warblers point the way for thee.

THE following letter was not intended for publication, but we feel that it contains an appeal to which each mother-heart will respond and that the faith of the sisters of the Prayer Union can not help being strengthened by its earnest appeal. Hence we publish it.

Sister Walker: I write you to request the prayers of the sisters of the Prayer Union in behalf of our little daughter, Orpha. For the last two years she has had spasms (caused from worms, I think), and we have tried every remedy we could think of and have had her administered to numbers of times; but they come more often than they used to, and I do not know what it is to retire at night without the fear of awaking and finding her in one. I had to go away to the Sunday-school convention last week and leave her at home, as I could not take her, and every once in a while the thought would come to me, What if she should choke to death in the night while I am gone? But I put it away, trusting God to keep her from it; and he did, until since I came home last evening, but I woke up this morning just as she was going into one, in time to prevent it.

Dear Sr. Walker, it is such a burden, and if the mothers would petition our Father to release her from this I would be so grateful. Do you think it would be asking too much to request them to join with me in fasting and prayer for her, a week from next Sunday (March 9)? Our hardest day's work in the week is on Thursday, and I can not very well fast then, as I am not strong enough. If that is too much you need not mention it, but please request their prayers.

I have been reelected for another term as district superintendent, and I do not feel that I can stand so much without proper rest at night. I am also superintendent of our little Sunday-school here and teacher of the primary class. This with my work in the office where I have to do part, sometimes nearly all of the typesetting and getting up copy (when there is much job work in), keeps me busy. I like to do it all, but feel I need my rest at night to be able to do it. I feel so tired when night comes. The Lord has blessed me very much, however, as I am able to stand so much more than when I first took up the district work. The main trouble is I do not feel capable of doing it. I am going to try to do the best I can. Isn't there ever and ever so much to do? How can any one be content to remain idle in this glorious work, when workers are needed so much, on every hand; and yet there are those to whom God has given talents, which, if used in his service would do inestimable good, and they are content to bury them or use them only in temporal things, though they have obeyed the true gospel and covenanted to serve the Lord. What will the consequence be?

Yours in bonds,

MINA P. KEARNEY.

MRS. LIBBIE SUTTON, of Fairbank, Iowa, in sending a birth-offering to the Hope for her little boy, Elmer John, writes:

"This is the first birth-offering I have ever sent in for our children. My dear mother always sent them, but this is left along with lots of other things for other hands. I can scarcely realize that it is nearly two years since I received that awful telegram from Lamoni, during conference: 'Mother died this morning. Start for home this p. m.' Poor father! he mourned along a year, and last spring came the message, 'Father died this morning.' Now we are bereft of both. The wounds are still so fresh that the tears fall while I write. But 'It is God's way. His will be done.'"

This is the second response to our call for a renewal of this fund, and we feel sure that the mothers in Zion are not going to pass it by unheeded. The work that was once done by the aged grandmothers will now, as in the case of Sr. Sutton, be taken up by the mothers, and the mothers who have forgotten to send as formerly will again remember the thank-offering to God for the gift of their babes, and will dedicate a portion to the good work of providing good books for the children of the church. The book by Bro. H. O. Smith will soon be on sale at the HERALD Office, and, dear mothers, we trust to receive such encouragement from you as will enable us to publish others very soon.

This morning comes another offering from Sr. Minnie M. Alley for her little brother. So let the good work spread, and good reading be prepared for the children.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Electa Dowdall, of Elvaston, Illinois, is desirous of your prayers that she may be healed of heart trouble and other diseases if it is God's will; if not, that she may be resigned to his will.

Sr. C. J. Newcom, of Jackson, Missouri, requests the faith and prayers of the Union for her restoration to health. She has been long afflicted and is away from all Saints and church privileges. She has been bedfast twelve weeks with no hope of recovery only through the power of God.

Sr. Alice R. Peacock, of Gregville, Alabama, requests the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of her husband, mamma, papa, and herself, that their health may be restored to them if it be God's will.

Sr. Tena Vickers requests your prayers that she may be healed. She is a great sufferer at this writing. Please remember her, one and all.

Sowing Upon Good Ground.

A TRUE STORY.

On a beautiful Sabbath morning in the month of June when mother earth had dressed herself in her beautiful robe of green, and all nature seemed to be rejoicing in the handiwork of God, a primary teacher might have been seen slowly wending her way to the little brick church on the hill, there to fill the responsible position of placing spiritual food within the reach of the dear "lambs of the flock." As she walked along meditating upon the importance of her work, and wondering how she could best teach the beautiful truths of the gospel to the little ones she was joined by one of her pupils, a little tot of four summers. "Good morning Minnie," said the teacher pleasantly, "have you a memory verse this morning?" "No ma'am," answered the child disappointedly, "my mamma didn't teach me any."

"Would you like to learn one now?" asked the teacher?

"O, yes" said Minnie, "if you will tell me."

"Very well," said the teacher; and she repeated the following verse, little Minnie repeating it after her. Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

This they did several times; so that when they reached the church Minnie had her verse well learned. And when called upon to give it in the class she did so promptly, her little face beaming with pleasure. Some of the older scholars who had made no effort to memorize a verse looked on with surprise.

But about three months after the above event, duty called the teacher far away, and reluctantly she bade farewell to those little ones, who had become so dear to her, committing them into the hands of another teacher, and to Him who careth for the little ones, and went her way.

After seven long years the teacher returned to this place on a visit, to find many, many changes. Many of the dear faces who once greeted her there, were gone. The little brick church had been replaced by a beautiful stone structure; and her little class—where were they? Grown beyond her recognition; some of them, much larger than their little teacher. As she looked around upon the large congregation with so few familiar faces she wondered if any of them were there.

After the services were over, a tall girl of eleven years came forward, and approaching the teacher, held out her hand timidly saying: "Do you not know me?" A single glance into the sweet brown eyes assured the teacher that it was none other than little Minnie; and she was clasped in a warm embrace.

During the conversation which followed Minnie said: "Do you remember the verse you taught me while on the way to Sunday-school one morning?" No, the teacher did not remember; but when Minnie repeated the verse, it all came vividly to her mind. While the teacher had forgotten, the little four-year-old had remembered.

Ah, primary teachers, think not that time spent with the little ones is thrown away. Remember you have the very best of ground upon which to sow the precious seed.

Give your heart's best effort to the work, and see to it that you sow the right kind of seed, and the harvest will be sure.

A Word in Behalf of the Study Hour.

The Sunday-school Association sent the first issue to about two hundred fifty addresses as sample copies so that as wide a knowledge as possible might be gained of the character of the work upon the part of the Sunday-school workers, and more especially upon the part of those teachers having in their charge the infant classes, for whose benefit the work is especially prepared. The following issues will be sent only to those ordering it, and samples to those asking it, for themselves or for their friends, and the number of samples must of necessity be limited.

We trust that most of those to whom samples have been sent have found it useful, and that they will favor us with an early subscription. And further, it would seem only just to the association (of which we are all parts) that in case the one sent as sample has been found of service, the General Association should have the benefit of the subscription price, and hence a remittance for said samples would be appreciated, though not required. The expense of getting out the work has not anywhere near been met by the subscriptions received, and hence we should all be mutually interested in reducing the loss to a minimum amount.

Let us hear from you as to how the demands are being satisfied by the publication of the Study Hour.

About 60 baptisms during the year. The financial report showed a credit balance of £116 0s. 3½d. The mission fund was discontinued and the balance handed over to the bishop. Treasurer of press fund reported £23 in hand. The following was passed: Resolved, That a board of publication be appointed, consisting of Elders G. Lewis, W. J. Haworth, and J. Fremont.—Met at Hamburg, Iowa, February 22. H. Kemp was chosen to preside with A. Badham and J. F. Mintun associates; C. Fry and Joseph Roberts secretaries. Branch reports were read from Tabor, Henderson, Thurman, Glenwood, Hamburg, Keystone, Shenandoah, Riverton, and Bartlett, the last named having been organized since last conference. There being in several of the reports some minor errors and known omissions it was moved that the district secretary be authorized to confer with branch clerks and correct so far as it is possible errors which occur in reports and make such corrections with branch clerks prior to reporting to General Conference. Nearly all the priesthood reported in writing. Bishop Leeka reported: January 1, balance due church, $287.88; receipts to February 22, $28; total, $315.88; paid out, to February 22, $184; balance due church, $131.88. M. W. Gaylord, chairman of committee on insurance, reported that his effort to secure insurance on the district tents had been unsuccessful. The report was received and committee discharged. By resolution the mission tent was placed at the disposal of the district president and missionary in charge for mission work as soon as practicable. The following were elected delegates to General Conference: J. F. Mintun, Henry Kemp, Charles Fry, W. Leeka, A. Badham, M. W. Gaylord, Sr. E. V. Oliver, G. Kemp, J. B. Lentz and wife, Rachel Leeka, T. A. Hougas and wife, Emily Fry, D. Hougas and wife, Sr. F. Becksted, Sr. M. W. Gaylord, C. Cline, F. Redfield and wife, Sr. G. Kemp, Blanche Andrews, James Constock, Ethel Skank, Mamie Pace, Lorena Leeka, Ora Becksted, Mark Leeka, F. Becksted. By separate resolution the General Conference was requested to return J. F. Mintun, Henry Kemp, and Charles Fry, and to send at least one more missionary to this district. District officers elected: President, A. Badham, with power to choose his assistant; secretary, Charles Fry. All other general authorities in the district and in the church were sustained in righteousness. Bishop Leeka gave some instruction along the lines of the temporal law. A committee on missions recommended "that J. C. Moore be retained in charge of McPaul mission and that W. W. Gaylord assist him. That other mission appointments be left to the district presidency and missionary in charge." The report was adopted. Preaching by H. Kemp and C. Fry. Sunday-school at 9:30 Sunday and prayer-meeting at 2:30 p. m. As Bro. Mintun by invitation was to preach in the city hall at 7:30 p. m., the conference adjourned at the close of the afternoon service to meet at Henderson, May 24.

Bishops' Notices.

To the Saints in Spring River District, Greeting: Having been appointed by the General Bishopric to act as presiding local bishop over your district, I desire to cooperate with you in every way possible for the general good of the work. It would seem right now that the time is opportune for pushing the work in your district, believing as we do that this is one of the most important districts in the church, from the fact that it embraces a large portion of the Cherokee, Creek, and Osage Nations, and that the work done in that part of our district has been accompanied by great good. A number of faithful laborers have performed valuable services in this part of the field, and the efforts that have been made have been crowned with an encouraging degree of success, as a number of Lamanites have embraced the faith, and some are now doing ministerial work; and the work seems to be looked upon, as far as understood and comprehended by them, with favor, and we believe that this is the key to the opening up of a work of great magnitude. Elder E. D. Bailey, who is now living in the Osage Nation, is a faithful worker, and in company with others, in the near future, he will move out and begin to make openings in that country, it being a part of the Spring River District. We feel that the representatives were none too many in that field the past year, and we hope that even more will be assigned to labor in the Spring River District the current year. Now, as the hastening time is upon us, and the field is white, and the work of such great magnitude, and the result so important, we hope the Saints will every one be mindful of the temporal arm of the service. Do not wait, expecting to accomplish something wonderful, but remember the law that the Lord has given us both in ancient and modern records pertaining to the tithing of his people, and though it may be but little, remember that it seems, even now, that it is the widow's mite that is keeping the work of the Lord moving. The Lord has given the Saints this law as a standing law. We can not, we must not, ignore this part of the service of God, and we hope and believe that those who are in the faith, and believe it to be God's work, and have been favored with a knowledge of the work, and have received of the Spirit of the Master, will not be unmindful of their duty. We can not afford to ignore or treat lightly this obligation. The Lord has declared that "he that loveth me will keep my commandments, and my Father and I will take up our abode with him." So with renewed courage and diligence let us press forward in the unity of the Spirit; for God is now moving upon his children, and especially of the household of faith, by the power of his Spirit wonderfully. I expect to meet the Saints at your district conference, which convenes at Webb City, March 21. The Saints of the Pleasant View Branch will pay their tithes and offerings, as heretofore, to Bro. Richards. Bro. O. P. Sutherland will receive tithes, consecrations, and offerings for the Webb City Branch. The other branches, until further notice, may make their remittances to me at Independence, Missouri. Ellis Short, District Bishop; E. D. Bailey, A. L. Newton, Counselors. February 21, 1903.

Reduced Prices on Quarterlies.

We are pleased to announce that, beginning with the second quarter, April-June, 1902, the prices on Gospel Quarterlies will be reduced about 20 per cent, as follows: Senior grade, 6 cents per quarter or 20 cents per year; Intermediate grade, 4 cents per quarter, 12 cents per year; Primary grade, 4 cents per quarter, 12 cents per year. Please remember that to get the benefit of the yearly rate, a full year's subscription must be paid for in advance. All others will be charged for at the single quarter rate. These provisions will be carefully adhered to. We regret that some have failed to see the necessity for such provisions and have taken occasion to criticise rather harshly those having the matter in charge. We thought it very necessary to make the above provisions, and that we were correct in our conclusions has since been plainly demonstrated. Thus placing business on correct business principles has enabled us to make the cut in prices referred to above. The Study Hour will remain as first announced, 10 cents per quarter. To those who have paid for Quarterlies in advance, and whose subscription has not yet expired, we will send due bills for the difference between the old and the new rate. These due bills will be received in payment on Quarterlies only, and must be in before March 31, 1903. No due bill will be issued for any amount less than ten cents. We have said several times to the Sunday-school workers that as soon as it seemed advisable to do so, we would reduce the price of the Gospel Quarterlies. The time seems now to have come and we make the reduction. This places our Quarterlies as low in price as any denominational quarterly that I know of, and lower than many of them. This will enable schools to secure a better supply of helps at no increase of costs. The best season of the year for Sunday-school work is now very near and we trust that all will feel it their privilege as well as duty to do a great deal of good earnest work in this line. Ever hopeful for the success of the work, we are, your colaborer, T. A. Hougas, general superintendent.

Herald Publishing House Notice.

Out of Catalogues. Will issue a new one as soon as possible.

During all of March the sun is coming farther north. About the twentieth it shines directly on the Equator, and the day is just as long as the night. The time of the old Jewish Passover, and hence of our Easter, depends on this date. This latter always comes on the Sunday following the first full moon after the sun crosses the line. This accounts for its being so "movable" a feast.—March Ladies' Home Journal.

The Open Court is a magazine published at Chicago, of which Dr. Paul Carns is editor. It is a monthly magazine, and is devoted to the "science of religion, the religion of science, and the extension of the religious parliament idea." It is an interesting magazine, and its "personality" is strongly impressed upon one. It shows its editor to be a man of strong convictions and a vigorous worker.

A feature of the Arena that helps to make this magazine unique among modern reviews is its frequent publication of symposia on public questions. The March number has two of these joint expressions or opinion that are extremely interesting. The first relates to the Cuban problem, in which F. B. Thurber, president of the U. S. Export Association, discusses "Reciprocity" and L. V. de Abad makes an eloquent "Plea for Justice" to the American people. The second presents both sides of the immigration problem, John Chetwood arguing for total suspension and the Rev. R. C. Bryant deploring the probable reenactment of the Chinese Exclusion bill. Another clergyman, the Rev. F. D. Bentley, discusses "The Survival of the Fittest in the Coming Age." The leading article of this issue is a timely international study—"Experiments in Colonial Government"—by Dr. Felix L. Oswald.

No attempt has ever been made to get together any congress representing the highest intelligence of the various nations of the world. The nearest approach to this was the Peace Conference at The Hague. The failure of that body was caused by the fact that it was selected to represent political and personal interests. It will be interesting to note the results which must come from the first World's Congress in which all nations shall be represented by men of the highest integrity and intellectual caliber. The difficulties in effecting such a gathering are almost insurmountable, but the Cosmopolitan magazine is making the effort with a full recognition of the endless obstacles to be overcome. In the March number, the Cosmopolitan's plan is briefly outlined. Its agents in Europe and elsewhere are carefully maturing lists of the ablest men of each country considered with reference—First. To their sincerity. Second. Their earnestness. Third. Clear thinking, that is, ability to see the truth. Fourth. Broad experience in affairs.

These names are five times as great in number as the candidates to be eventually selected. Upon these the opinions of leading men in other countries will be secured, so that the final selection will represent a consensus of opinion by the leading men of the world of thought. The Cosmopolitan is also endeavoring to secure by contribution a fund of a quarter of a million dollars to provide for the expenses of the first World's Congress.

You can't begin too early to train girls in taste and sense upon the subject of dress. The woman who dresses her little daughter expensively, who even goes without proper clothing herself to deck her girl in dainty, fresh, fashionable garb, does great wrong to herself and to her child. The fitness of things is reversed when the mother denies herself what is due her child what she does not need. Under such circumstances fine dress is positively harmful to a girl.

If any one in the family is to be dressed in fashion and elegance it should be the mother. Simplicity is absolutely necessary for good taste in all that relates to children. There is room for pretty color effects and for the refinements of suitability, and all that, but departure from plainness of material and style in children's dress is a departure from good form. What shall be said for the woman who has such small sense of the fitness of things as to deny herself the dress suitable for her in order to put upon her child what is unsuitable and out of taste?—March Woman's Home Companion.

A most entertaining and careful analysis of Germany's attitude toward the Polish people is to be found in the leading article in the March issue of the Chautauquan magazine. The paper is by an American Journalist and is entitled "Germany and Her Polish Subjects."

The current installment of "Formative Incidents in American Diplomacy," by Professor Edwin Erle Sparks, of the University of Chicago, deals with "Diplomatic Incidents of the Mexican War" and Coöperative in Internal Reforms." The chapters are thoroughly illustrated.

The March installment of "A Reading Journey in Central Europe" is by Lincoln Hulley, Professor of History at Bucknell University. The paper, which is fully illustrated, treats of "The Land of Luther." The Critical Study in German Literature is a discussion of Schiller's "Wilhelm Tell," by Robert Waller Deering, Professor of German Literature, Western Reserve University.

Kenyon L. Butterfield contributes a paper on "Farmer's Institutes." The story of "The United States of Brazil" is told by Professor Edwin A. Start, of Tufts College. Miss Ada Sterling, in an illustrated article, describes "Antique and Modern French Lace."

"The Chautauqua Reading Course for Housewives" is continued by Martha Van Rensselaer, editor of the Woman's Reading Course at Cornell University, and "The Chautauqua Junior Naturalist Clubs" is conducted, as usual, by John W. Spencer, of Cornell University.

The Kaiser and the Newspapers.

"The Emperor has a strong dislike of the press. It is mainly owing to his own influence that that very modest measure of comparative liberty which the German press enjoyed under his grandfather and his father has been curtailed, until even the semblance of it has almost disappeared. This, it may be well to say, is really contrary to the constitution both of the Empire and of Prussia, but unfortunately the current of political thought in Germany during the past decade has favored and facilitated this systematic suppression of the press. The courts all over Germany have assumed more and more an attitude of downright hostility, and the practice of the higher judiciary, the Imperial Court in Leipzig, has for years been unfair, even almost revolutionary. Judges and lawyers themselves have strenuously and persistently protested against the rising tide of reactionism. The principal reason for the Emperor's antipathy to the press is his personal experience, especially during the first five years of his reign, when public opinion was considerably prejudiced against him, and when a great deal of bitter and unfair criticism was hurled at his head. It so happens that the Kaiser is inordinately vain, and extremely susceptible to criticism, and impatient of it. He fears and hates particularly the English and the American press because it exerts an enormous influence upon the opinion of the world, his own country included, and is outspoken and energetic. The French papers he cares little about, because their political opinions on any non-French topics or persons are held of little account outside of France. Then, too, the French have for a long time had a sort of sneaking regard for him. Besides, no German Emperor has the right to expect anything but abuse from his hereditary foe. The German press is securely and effectually muzzled, and the few editors or correspondents who now and then kick over the traces are silenced. The rest of the European press does not count for much, but the English and American press, powerful, wealthy, enterprising, and fearless, has always been a great thorn in his side. He minds the English leading papers more, of course, than the American, for obvious reasons. But of late, since the United States has developed an unexpected military, naval, and political strength and commercial supremacy, he devotes much greater attention to its press than he formerly did.—Wolf Von Schierbrand in the World's Work.

The Latest Triumph in Electric Power-Transmission.

It would, indeed, be a public misfortune if such courage of capital, such splendid engineering, such admirable apparatus, and such generous reception by an appreciative community were not signalized by triumphant success; and it is but fitting here to name Prince Poniatowski, Messrs. John Martin, W. R. Eckart, R. H. Sterling, C. O. Poole, J. F. Kelly, and others whose nerve and skill have made that success possible. Moreover, the implication which this work bears in regard to the cleaner future of cities; the burning of the coal at the mines rather than in the homes; the utilization of waste water powers; the coming operation of large railroad networks from central sources of current supply, and the general adaptation of varied social methods and industrial mechanisms to electrical functioning,—all this takes us outside the limits of California into the domain of universal interests and benefaction. The mere difference in coal-consumption is quite significant. Out in California, some eighty thousand horse-power of wasted water energy is now being reclaimed in this fashion. Mr. L. B. Stillwell, the electrical engineer of the Niagara plant, stated recently that its output for the first six months of 1901 was 104,378,000 kilowatt hours, equal to more than eight hundred tons of coal per day. On the same basis, the saving of coal in California now might easily approximate 1,000 tons per day, while the saving of fuel when all the water powers of the continent are fully harnessed would be enormous.—Thomas C. Martin in March Review of Reviews.

A Few Don'ts.

Don't buy food that has been in cold storage if you can secure fresh food; sometimes turkeys and fish are kept frozen for years. All fresh meat that has been frozen loses its firmness and flavor when allowed to thaw, which is necessary before cooking. Firm fish and fresh meat are essential to good and wholesome living. You will see offered for sale smelts and green smelts, and many housekeepers do not know the difference, which is just this: Green smelts are freshly caught; smelts not bearing this label are frozen. The frozen ones become tasteless and flabby when cooked. Don't buy foreign fresh fruits or vegetables when the natives are plentiful. Don't put celery in the refrigerator just as it comes from the market; wrap it in a wet cloth, then in a paper, and lay it on the ice until needed. Don't depend upon extra heat when you want water to boil quickly, but add a little salt to the water and watch the gratifying results. Don't throw anything away because it is too salty; add brown sugar until it is just right.—March Woman's Home Companion.

Our days are comparatively few, and we live through each day only once. Therefore, it behooves us to make each day worth while.—March Ladies' Home Journal.

It is never right to say what one does not mean, but why not mean the nice things? Insincerity does not necessarily follow in the wake of politeness.—March Ladies' Home Journal.

UNDUE AMBITION.

By the trend of some questions sometimes asked of us we are apprised that there is here and there a branch in which there is division and trouble arising from a desire on the part of some who hold office in the church to hold office and preside in the branch.

In some instances mischief is wrought because the parties who thus desire to preside and control branch affairs will not cordially sustain and work with others who may be chosen at the branch business meetings to have charge of the branch affairs.

This, wherever it exists, is out of harmony with an expressed or implied willingness so often heard, "I am willing to do all I can to forward on the work."

In the first place, no one should have an undue desire or longing for office. If the Lord calls a man to be a worker in his cause that call is to the general work incident to the office to which he is called, such as elder, priest, deacon, etc.

Being chosen to act as an officer in a branch, is a recognition of the call and the office a man may hold; but does not give the man the right to serve in his calling to the exclusion of all others. No matter how talented a man may think himself to be; no matter how much better he may think himself qualified to rule and preside in the branch than others, he makes a bad mistake who urges his own claim, or electioneers for his own selection to the office he aspires to. He may feel within himself that he is worthy to be chosen, and that if chosen or appointed he will do the best that lies in his power to do his duty and honor the office; and at the same time a modest diffidence in his own ability should so far prevail in his mind as to cause him to prefer that another better able should be chosen. The Saints of the branch should not be permitted to see or feel that the man is an office-seeker. When the Saints become impressed with the idea that a man is seeking an office, they are apt to lose confidence in the man's fitness for the place, and distrust and unwillingness to vote for him follow.

Ambition for place and power has been the fruitful cause of trouble both for him who has been moved by it to acts looking to his own upbuilding, and to those over whom he has succeeded in establishing himself as a ruler.

David was a man after God's own heart, yet as a king he was guilty of wrong doing and folly. He was a man of blood, so far as his reign was concerned. How hardly did God deal with him! God was willing to rule Israel without the pomp of a kingly court, but the ambition of the nation was to vie with the nations round them, and they required a king; so in his wrath he gave them a king. After that the throne was a source of contention, a subject for the exercise of ambition, until the Shiloh came when the sceptre departed from Judah.

In the secular world there have been innumerable instances in which ambition to rule has lured men on, until for the love of power blood has flowed like water, and the ties of human affection have been broken like burnt reeds in its unholy fire.

One of the poets has written :

How like a devil in the human heart,
Rules this unreined ambition.

The love or lust of place and power is an extreme of human selfishness; one of its most unfortunate and mischievous developments; and in no more likely place to work irreparable injury, and stir up implacable contention than in the congregations of the Saints, a people professedly lovers of peace, to whom selfishness is forbidden.

Ambition to be put in charge, to control, to direct, to dictate, to be the central moving figure in the affairs in which such things are needful, may be tolerable in those who are called men of the world, for they are of the flesh, carnal, and subject to the rule of the flesh; but such ambition is out of character, and unspiritual in the professed man of God, or in the real man of God it has no foundation; for in him "In honor preferring one another," has both meaning and force. In him the charity that "seeketh not its own but another's good," has wrought kindness and courtesy to his fellows, as well as taught him that the good of the whole is preferable to the exaltation of the individual.

It would almost seem that there was a need for many Phillips to join themselves to those who are riding in the chariots of self-praise, laudation, and lust of place, to ask them, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" It would be fortunate for these to be instructed, and to take the instruction to heart and abide by it.

Why should any man be so wrapped up in love of self as to stand in the way of progress, or the due prosecution of the work of branch or district, because he is not made a central figure in the work? How unseemly and foolish it is for a man to think, or say, or act in a way as to make the impression upon his fellow workers, "If I can not lead I will not follow. If I am not put at the front of the work, I will not aid or assist those in authority, who are preferred before me."

What beauty is there in such a character as this would show a man to have? Can such an individual be consistently trusted with great interests, when he holds smaller ones in such light regard?

If it be asked, "Is a man called of God not to be allowed to work? And why should his fellows prevent him working?" The answer would be, "All are not apostles, all are not prophets," all are not called, or chosen to do the same office, and all must work according to the gifts of grace bestowed and the opportunity to labor. Those who are called and chosen "to be overseers of the flock of God," are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Spirit. Not one of them will, or can when led by the Spirit, put any one forward to teach the Saints, or preach to the outside world, whom he knows to be in love with his own opinions, has too great an estimate of his own powers, or is inclined to ride hobbies. It would be improper for him to do it, and yet a man who is too desirous of obtaining office is, also, usually very urgent upon being called before the people. We know of one elder who has now been in the active ministry for more than a score of years, who, in conversation upon the subject of the bashfulness of another and younger man, said, "I have now been before the people as a minister for nearly a quarter of a century, and yet I am severely tried by my backwardness every time I am called upon to preach; especially if it is before a new, or strange congregation." Now this man is one of the best and safest men in the field, and while ready to stand for the cause upon invitation, or necessity, is always solicitous that others may be invited to occupy rather than himself. There is absolutely no selfishness in his makeup, and as a consequence no jealousy. He is loved, trusted, and honored. If it is needed he is a deacon, an usher, a teacher, a visiting officer, and is always well received in his ministrations. Contrast the spirit and the work of such a man with the unduly ambitious man of whom we have been writing, and who can not see that the one is moved by a just and faithful sense of duty, and values place and power only as he can honor the responsibility they put upon him; while the other is moved and acts upon the idea that place and power are conferred as honors due him, by reason of his superior abilities. The one is trusted, loved, and listened to with respect and pleasure, the other is heard and tolerated only.

Beware of the wiles of ambition in our spiritual warfare.

NOT WANTED IN EMPLOYMENT.

There is a movement on foot among the railway companies of the United States looking to the exclusion from railroad employment of all employees in every department of work who are addicted to drinking intoxicating liquors. This movement will be followed by other classes of employers until the drinker will be entirely debarred from public employment. And this is right.

Every man owes it as a duty to society that himself and his family shall not become in any way a charge upon the community or the public charities of the State. If he by any means uses his earnings, of labor or of business, in the foolish crippling of his abilities by strong drink, he should be taught obedience to his duty by suffering.

Physical drunkenness unfits a man for his daily duty. No matter how strong a man may be at the start, if he persists in the use of spirituous stimulants the time will come, sooner or later, when his strength is turned to weakness, and he is a prey to the common accidents by which carelessness and disability result in disaster, and possibly death to himself and others.

PREHISTORIC IRRIGATION.

The following is taken from the Bee, of Hollister, California, February 25: "In the Superstition Mountains, Arizona, engineers have found an artificial gorge four miles long and one hundred feet deep, cut down through the solid mountain rock by prehistoric irrigators, and leading into one hundred twenty miles of ditches, which irrigated nearly a million acres of land now only a desert waste, covered with the ruins of the cities of this ancient people. Recent surveys show that at one time not less than three million acres of land in Arizona were capable of irrigation, ten times the present irrigated area of the Territory."

THE PRESS AND OUR WORK.

We have of late received a number of marked papers from various parts of the country in which appear notices of what some of the brethren are doing. According to the Exponent, of Oak Harbor, Michigan, date of March 1, Bro. S. W. L. Scott is telling the people there in unmistakable language who the Latter Day Saints are. He was holding meetings in the town hall.

The Hamburg Reporter, of Hamburg, Iowa, February 28, contained account of some meetings and a conference which the Saints had been holding there. The Reporter says that a "spirit of earnest inquiry is moving the people who are attending the services, and excellent order is preserved by all who come." The work of some of the brethren is spoken of, as is also the coming conference at Lamoni, and that our speakers always keep before the people the fact that we have no connection whatever with the Utah church.

In the Evening Gazette, of Burlington, Iowa, of date of February 25, a short sketch is given which purports to tell what kind of a man Joseph Smith is, and what the church which has headquarters at Lamoni is. The sketch contains many of the common errors, and in the issue of the Gazette for the 27th Bro. R. M. Elvin sets things right, occupying about one column to reply to a half column.

The Fremont Democrat, of Hamburg, Iowa, also contains an account of the meetings of the Saints there, and gives a clear and concise account of the "faith of the Saints."

In the Omaha Bee for March 3 is a reporter's account of a sermon delivered by Reverend Mann, of Omaha, in which he attempts to account for the origin of the Book of Mormon, using the Spalding story to do so. In the Bee for March 6, Bro. C. E. Butterworth is permitted to correct the errors of Mr. Mann. The Bee has shown a commendable spirit of late in permitting the Latter Day Saints to defend themselves against the attacks which are made upon them through the medium of the press.

The attacks upon "Mormonism" which were made by Reverend Iliff, at Oakland, California, have resulted in some of our men getting space in some of the papers there to properly present our faith.

May the good work go on!

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. S. Roth wrote from Fulton, Iowa, March 3: "I closed a splendid meeting two miles north of Dewitt last Thursday night. Bro. Hills was with me till the 24th, then he went to Stone City, and I continued. Bro. O. H. Bailey gave us several splendid sermons while he was home to get acquainted with his folks. There are several who will obey there in time. But the old adversary is hard at work there. We had the promise of the Christian church in town; but they repented (?) and refused us. I would like to have continued the meetings a week or two longer, but the roads became very bad, and so we stopped. I hope that place will not be forgotten by the coming missionaries. Bro. and Sr. Fred Baily live there, and they make one feel at home. Bro. Hills opened up there about the first of February. He also feels sure some will obey there.

"I came here on Saturday. This country is not so flat, hence not so muddy. I will continue for some time. The Lord truly blesses me with his Spirit while in discharge of my duty."

In a letter to President Smith, dated at Scranton, Pennsylvania, February 28, T. J. Sheldon wrote: "I sail to-morrow on the Rhineland, from Philadelphia. Kindly put my address in HERALD as 6 Bright Street, Morley, York County, England, until further notified."

Joseph Arber, of Hamilton, Scotland, in a letter to President Smith, February 21, writes: "The work is moving along favorably in this land. There are a number investigating and I believe about three or four are ready for baptism. I pray God you may have a spiritual conference and that much good will be the result."

Arthur-H. Simmons writes from Freesoil, Michigan, March 4: "I came here from Gloverville, New York, last June and am stopping with Bro. and Sr. W. A. Crane. Never heard of the Saints until I came here, except the Utah 'Mormons.' But my sister, Mrs. Crane, talked much with me concerning the beliefs of the Latter Day Saints, as has also her husband, and I believed. On September 29 last I was baptized, and am satisfied. I am now telling others of the blessed gospel of Christ."

By letter from Bro. Peter Muceus, laboring in Norway, dated Grimstad, February 15, 1902, to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, we quote: "I can not report anything very great from the field here, but I am very thankful that God has so assisted me in presenting the truth, and so moved upon the hearts of some, that they have felt the need of manifesting their faith by their works in yielding obedience to the ordinance of the gospel. It gives me courage to see that one's efforts are not entirely useless, and I feel now like working more earnestly for the spreading of truth in this land; for I know there are honest people here who will obey if the prejudice can be so far removed that they can see the rays of light which God has in our time turned upon this earth. I have continued my efforts in and around Porsgrund up till the present time with partial success, that is, some few have attended regularly, perhaps from ten to twenty or more, and those attending have nearly all become convinced of the truthfulness of this message. I shall not take the credit of this work to my own personal efforts for I realize the truthfulness of the Master's saying in my behalf, "No one can come unto me except the Father draweth him." I believe I can truthfully say the Father has by the Spirit drawn them to him. During the last few weeks I have held four or five meetings a week, so my evenings have been pretty well occupied; and for this I am thankful, for I love to explain the principles of truth whenever I find listening ears. I have labored very hard this winter, reading, studying, translating, and other work, and I feel that God has blessed me in so doing. I hope that I may so live that I may ever be a blessing to his cause and use his blessing in a proper and wise manner. Last Saturday I had the privilege of baptizing six good honest people; among them my oldest sister, for which I am very thankful. They are all young people, as you will see, from twenty to forty years, and three of them are able to take charge of a branch when one may be organized. Four more are about ready to take the step, so we will soon have a dozen members here. I am very thankful for this small beginning and hope the Lord will increase our number and thus lay a foundation to a permanent work in this land. At present writing I am in Grimstad with Bro. Enge to assist him in some meetings."

H. J. Hudson writes from Columbus, Nebraska, recently: "May God's infinite and loving Spirit be found among his servants and children at Lamoni, on the 6th of April next, as a rich heritage for the Saints' faithful observance of the proclamation for a general fast on that assemblage."

Sr. Abbie Horton recently wrote from Independence, Missouri: "We regret to hear that Bro. M. T. Short is failing in health; but many fervent prayers go up for his recovery, if it be the Lord's will, at the meetings of the Saints. Bro. J. A. Robinson is much improved in health within the last few days, and we are indeed glad he is getting so much help. There is considerable sickness among the young, measles and pneumonia being quite prevalent, of which disease Bro. and Sr. H. B. Sterrett's sweet little daughter of a little over two years died a few days ago. Several of our beloved brethren and sisters who have been long afflicted still suffer more or less. Pray for all the afflicted ones of Independence."

T. M. Irvine, in letter dated at Leadbury, Ontario, March 7, referring to a recent letter in HERALD from Stratford, Ontario, wherein the lethargy of that branch is spoken of, says: "All this may be so; but there are but six souls belonging to that branch who have reached the years of accountability. And they were recently told by the Spirit to continue though the head had been taken from them. We can not expect too much from so small and headless a body, and we think a word of encouragement would have been better than reproof. Nevertheless, I love reproof, and all we ask is to be lenient."

Charles Dalberg writes from Akron, Ohio, March 4: "The Saints of Akron are awake and realize they have a duty to perform in this great latter-day work. The writer and Bro. Connaughy attended the district conference at Sharon and enjoyed a spiritual feast. From there Bro. Parsons came to Akron, and for several evenings we were blessed by listening to his sermons. He has encouraged the Saints anew, and has won a place in the hearts of the Akron Saints and a remembrance in their prayers. On Sunday, March 2, Bro. James E. Kelley was with us, and in the afternoon and evening delivered two excellent discourses, the good Spirit being present in a marked degree. We are glad to see the young men take hold of the work. We rejoice in this gospel of latter days. Though we have been in the work less than four years, we have found great satisfaction in the gospel."

Sr. Nellie Dibble writes from Wilber, Nebraska, March 6, that often the only preacher they have is the HERALD, which they have taken for a long time. She says: "We belong to the Blue River Branch: but it is twenty miles away, and my health is so poor that we have not been for two years. I love to hear gospel preached and always go when I can. We have one good Saint neighbor, Bro. George Morey, who tries to live the gospel. I pray we may so live as to be with Jesus when he comes."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Alvin Knisley was to leave Kimball, Ontario, about March 10, for Forest, via Petrolia. Those interested please remember.

Bro. William Lewis, of St. Joseph, Missouri, now laboring in South Wales, wrote from Cardiff, No. 137 Severn Road, Canton, late date, and is much encouraged in his work. He thinks a large force of laborers should be sent to Wales this year.

We have received through the courtesy of Charles S. Fee, General Passenger and Ticket Agent of the Northern Pacific, a copy of "Wonderland 1902," a beautiful book "descriptive of that part of the Northwest tributary to the Northern Pacific Railway." It is handsomely illustrated, and from cover to cover is full of interest. It can be obtained for postage, six cents, by addressing Mr. Fee.

The Inland Printer was asked by one of the HERALD employees to criticise the new make-up of the HERALD, which it did as follows: "The new form of the HERALD is a decided improvement, and its make-up is all that could be desired. The papers throughout needs a little more ink; otherwise there is no occasion for criticism."

C. W. Ethridge writes from Stewartville, Missouri, March 5, renewing for HERALD. He says with him times are hard and money scarce, but he does not feel that he can get along without the church papers, the "gospel messengers of peace." He does not see how Saints can do without the church papers, as he each week is made glad as he reads in them about the work of God's servants. He prays that God's Spirit may be with those servants, and rejoices that he has been led into the light.

At the last business meeting of the Lamoni Branch the committee appointed to investigate question of church lighting submitted majority and minority reports. The majority report favored a gasoline system, and the minority reported on the advantages of acetylene. After quite a prolonged debate the gasoline supporters quite "snowed under" the acetylene advocates, and the deacons were authorized to have a gasoline system put in. We understand a contract has been signed to have it installed before General Conference. We shall be glad to see our church building lighted by something better than kerosene lamps, and shall watch the results with considerable interest.

The reception committee appointed by the Lamoni Branch to care for the General Conference visitors informs us that as yet only a few of the expected visitors have reported to the committee secretary; and the committee urgently requests that those contemplating attendance inform the committee as soon as possible, as it will greatly assist them in the work of locating visitors. If the attendance is as large as is anticipated, it will be quite a task for the committee to satisfactorily locate all who come, and hence the necessity of doing as much of the work as possible before the rush of visitors begins. Saints expecting to come who have not already made arrangements for accommodations should notify the committee at once. Assist the committee, brethren. The secretary is Bro. C. I. Carpenter, Lamoni, Iowa.

By the Evening Gazette, of Burlington, March 8, we note that Bro. Elvin was to preach at the Burlington chapel, on the 9th, at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m., on the "Differences between Utahism and true Latter Day Saintism," and on "Laying on of Hands."

President Joseph Smith and Bishop Kelley have been in attendance at the Independence Stake conference which was held in Kansas City, March 8 and 9. Before returning President Smith will assist in dedicating a church in Central Missouri.

Hon. L. P. Caillouet, District Judge in Louisiana, writing in the March Catholic World, takes the ground that perjury in the law courts is on the increase. He attributes this to the ignoring of religion and the things of God in the educational systems of the country, and the gross "materialism of the day which is sapping the Christian basis of society."

Sr. Sarah A. Tate, of Easton, Pennsylvania, has written us recently of how with a copy of the "Voice of Warning" she has succeeded in interesting several. She has ordered another and is in hopes she can interest others. A little "mission work" done in a quiet way often yields great results.

G. H. Graves writes from Chicago, March 8, that the colored Saints of that place have recently been cheered by the visits of a number of the ministry, and he urgently invites them to call again. He also asks the elders who might have to pass through there on their way to General Conference to call on him, at 2458 State Street. The brethren who have recently visited there are: H. C. Smith, missionary in charge; F. M. Pitt and F. M. Sheehy, of Chicago; D. M. Rudd, of Dow City, Iowa; J. Midgorden, of Mission, Illinois; C. H. Burr, of Plano, Illinois; J. M. Terry, of St. Joseph, Missouri; and J. T. Hackett.

Members of the Quorum of Twelve are beginning to arrive in Lamoni, getting ready to take up quorum duties preparatory to conference. The first of the nonresidents to arrive is our genial Bro. Lake, who reached here yesterday. The resident members are all here except Brn. E. C. Briggs and W. H. Kelley.

The ministry reports will be published next week in the usual tabulated form, or rather in the form which has been usual for a year or so past. It will present a pretty concise summary of what has been done by our ministry in the last conference year.

FOREIGN MISSIONS THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

This subject has occupied the attention of the writer considerably of late, hence I wish to present a few thoughts relative to this important feature of the work.

In the last revelation, section 125, paragraph 12, the Lord says: "The missions abroad other than those in the land of Joseph which were opened officially during the lifetime of the martyrs, shall be considered as having been opened unto us, whether they were at once undertaken and prosecuted during the lifetime of the martyrs, or whether subsequent to their death, they were prosecuted in righteousness—wherever they were sent. Those missions not thus opened, it will be requisite that the twelve shall either go, or in the exercise of their missionary authority send, as provided in the law, of the seventy."

During my labors in the British Isles and my observations while in France, also from information gathered from travelers in such lands as India and South Africa, whom I have met and conversed with, I recognize the wisdom of the Lord in calling our attention to the necessity of prosecuting missionary labor in these foreign lands.

It is manifest from the revelation of 1894 that the Lord wanted the church to move out in this direction, pointing out the fact that the field—the world—was even then already white—prepared—for the harvest, and hence a great need for laborers, so great indeed that the twelve and the seventy together with such high priests, elders, and priests as can travel shall be free to travel and preach as missionaries and wait upon this ministry in gospel work; leaving branches and districts, where such organizations are effected, to the care of the standing ministry, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, under the care of the presidency of the church, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities (the twelve and the seventies) and leaving them at liberty to push (take up the aggressive) the preaching of the word into new fields (foreign lands) now widening before them in which work, if they will "now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past." Surely a great promise!

"It is the will of the Lord that they do this" now, was the divine injunction in 1894. The clause "so far as possible," in this revelation, has been used as an excuse by many to evade this command of God; but the revelation of 1901, to my mind removes even this vague excuse, deliberately stating without any reservation, that all foreign missions previously opened and those not as yet opened, shall now be opened by the missionary quorums of the church.

Query: Why should the Lord in paragraph 11 of this revelation authorize the church to provide tracts in the different languages he names unless he was satisfied that now was that opportune time to reach these people? These tracts require to be distributed, the Lord stipulates that the traveling ministry are the ones to do this work. It is argued by some that these nations being represented in the States there is, consequently, no need to travel to these lands; forgetting, evidently, that the mission of the missionary quorums is "all" the world and to "all" nations. If the same method by which the ministry of the church in its early history was commanded to spread the gospel was to be adopted by us, we should then be able to place the gospel message through the medium of tracts right into the hands of the people. The Lord commanded in a revelation given in 1832, that so many of the ministry should go two and two, to the eastern, western, and southern countries, saying:

Behold, I say unto you, that it is my will that you should go forth and not tarry, neither be idle, but labor with your mights, lifting up your voices as with the sound of a trumpet, proclaiming the truth according to the revelations and commandments which I have given you, and thus if ye are faithful ye shall be laden with many sheaves, and crowned with honor, and glory, and immortality, and eternal life. . . . Let all those take their journey as I have commanded them, going from house to house, and from village to village, and from city to city; and in whatsoever house ye enter, and they receive you, leave your blessings upon that house; and in whatsoever house ye enter, and they receive you not, ye shall depart speedily from that house, and shake off the dust of your feet as a testimony against them; and you shall be filled with joy and gladness and know this, that in the day of judgment you shall be judges of that house, and condemn them; and it shall be more tolerable for the heathen in the day of judgment, than for that house; therefore gird up your loins and be faithful and ye shall overcome all things and be lifted up at the last day. Even so. Amen.—D. C. 75: 1, 3.

This is in harmony with the Savior's command, given in person to the traveling ministry in the primitive church. They were to go from house to house and from city to city, finding out "the worthy," which could only be done by house to house visitation. They were commanded also to go into the streets, the highways and byways, lifting up the warning voice, inviting and compelling all to come to Christ.

House to house visitation, street preaching, and tract distribution are the only effective means by which the gospel can be preached in these foreign lands, as public halls are not to be had except at exorbitant prices, and schoolhouses not at all. It is simply wasting money, time, and energy for missionaries to go to these foreign lands unless they are willing to work in harmony with the above method. At present Brn. Rush-ton and Arber in Scotland, Enge and Muceus in Scandinavia, Lewis and Pierce in Wales are beginning to reap the fruit of labor performed in the way which we have delineated.

We learned while in Paris that street preaching is forbidden by the city authorities, but all are at liberty to go from house to house distributing tracts and engage in conversation with the people, also to procure halls in which to hold services. I was favorably impressed with the French people and believe that a good work could be done in that country in time, but it will require men to labor there who are familiar with the language, as English is but very little used. The people are cleanly, polite, sociable, and extraordinarily intelligent. During my sojourn in the city I saw no one under the influence of intoxicants. However, they indulge in many evil practices which conduce to degeneration; but on the whole they seem to be a nation of fine people, among whom we are sure are many of God's sheep who doubtless would obey the gospel had they the opportunity of hearing it through his authorized servants.

France, we may mention, is one of the missions that was opened in the days of the martyrs, hence "is opened unto us."

I am of the opinion that missionaries should be sent there as soon as possible. It would be a good policy for our young men to study these foreign languages, as without this knowledge of them we are handicapped so far as prosecuting the work in foreign missions is concerned. I now realize the wisdom of God's command to the early ministry to study all languages, notwithstanding some believe that this work is to be accomplished by "the gift of tongues."

On board the steamship "Ivernia" we met a Reverend Mr. Row who has labored incessantly in the evangelistic work of India for twenty-three years. He informed us that India is one of the finest fields in the world for missionary work. No restrictions there whatever so far as religions are concerned. The reverend gentleman has great confidence in the Methodist Church, is an author, and has been in charge of some portions of the work there, and has also traveled extensively in that land. Brn. James Moir and George Baty, who have lived there many years, corroborate the statement of the reverend gentleman.

I am informed by travelers from South Africa that there is a grand opportunity of presenting the gospel there, and why not? Nearly all the southern portion of this vast continent is under British rule, as also is India, and wherever the Union Jack or the Stars and Stripes float there is guaranteed free speech and the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. Let us take this opportunity and raise aloft the gospel standard of King Immanuel, under which is assured light, liberty, and life everlasting to all who will believe and obey its divine precepts.

We should also have missionaries in Ireland. But what can we do in Ireland? There are honest people there. We have numbers in the church now, men and women tried and true, whose record is before the church for good. How can the gospel leaven permeate the little lumps of Ireland if no leaven is placed there? Let the light shine into this land and dispel the dark shadows of Catholic superstition, giving hope to those who sit in darkness. Here, we believe, is an opening for such men as Frank Sheehy, J. A. Robinson, and others representing the Emerald Isle to unfurl the banner of truth among this people.

We ought to have at least thirty ministers divided in England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, and Scandinavia this coming year. We should also by all means have some energetic men to represent the truth in France, Germany, Switzerland, India, and South Africa. The question will be asked, How are we going to support these missions? The law provides that they be supported by tithes and offerings; therefore the Saints ought to be willing to sacrifice of their means so that the gospel may be spread abroad as well as in the States.

The missionaries who are sent to prosecute this work should go with full and implicit faith in the promises of God made to them contained in the following: "And again I say unto you, that whosoever ye shall send in my name, by the voice of your brethren, the twelve, duly recommended and authorized by you, shall have power to open the door of my kingdom unto any nation whithersoever ye shall send them, inasmuch as they shall humble themselves before me, and abide in my word, and hearken to the voice of my Spirit."—D. C. 105: 8.

Section 83: 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 20:

And again I say unto you my friends (for from henceforth I shall call you friends), It is expedient that I give unto you this commandment, that ye become even as my friends in days when I was with them traveling to preach this gospel in my power; for I suffered them not to have purse or scrip, neither two coats; behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the laborer is worthy of his hire. And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb, or joint; and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither athirst.

Therefore, take no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal shall ye be clothed; for consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not; neither do they spin; and the kingdoms of the world, in all their glory, are not arrayed like one of these; for your Father who art in heaven, knoweth that you have need of all these things. Therefore, let the morrow take thought for the things of itself. Neither take ye thought beforehand what ye shall say, but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man.

Therefore, let no man among you (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church, unto the ministry), from this hour, take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom. Behold, I send you out to reprove the world of all their unrighteous deeds, and to teach them of a judgment which is to come. And whosoever receiveth you, there will I be also; for I will go before your face: I will be on your right hand and on your left, and my Spirit shall be in your hearts, and my angels round about you, to bear you up. Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples. He that receiveth you not, go away from him alone by yourselves, and cleanse your feet, even with water, pure water, whether in heat or in cold, and bear testimony of it unto your Father which is in heaven, and return not again unto that man. And into whatsoever village or city ye enter, do likewise. Nevertheless, search diligently and spare not; and woe unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony concerning me. Woe, I say again, unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or your testimony of me; for I the Almighty, have laid my hands upon the nations to scourge them for their wickedness; and plagues shall go forth, and they shall not be taken from the earth until I have completed my work, which shall be cut short in righteousness; until all shall know me, who remain, even from the least unto the greatest, and shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord. . . .

And if any man shall give unto any of you a coat, or a suit, take the old and cast it unto the poor, and go your way rejoicing. And if any man among you be strong in the spirit, let him take with him one that is weak, that he may be edified in all meekness, that he may become strong also.

Therefore, take with you those who are ordained unto the lesser priesthood, and send them before you to make appointments, and to prepare the way, and to fill appointments that you yourselves are not able to fill. Behold, this is the way that mine apostles, in ancient days, built up my church unto me.—D. C. 83: 13-16, 19, 20.

Those of the ministry who have not the faith to take God at his word and leave home, loved ones, and sacrifice all for his sake, remaining in these fields for two or even three years, if necessary, had better stay at home; for if they do not center their whole heart and mind upon the work, their mission will be in vain.

We have met some of the Saints in Europe in fair circumstances, who are in a position to help the work both by their means and labor, who are desirous of moving to Zion under the impression that they could live their religion better in the stakes, than they can in their present environments. We would suggest that such remain where they are, as they can materially assist in getting the gospel before the people in their native land by helping to care for the missionaries and warning their friends and neighbors, this being one of the duties God has made imperative upon all ere they go up to Zion. See D. C. 85: 22. Those who are influenced by the thought that they can better discharge their duties and responsibilities to the Lord by locating in Zion or her stakes, and escape the power of Satan, are laboring under a great and serious mistake, for they will find to their sorrow that Satan has got there before them. There will be no escaping his baneful influence by running from one locality to another, not until he is bound in the pit by the power of God and we are under the personal reign of the King of Peace.

I am as strong a believer in Zion as any, but I am opposed to fleeing to Zion until either circumstances make it necessary or the Lord gives the command through his servant the prophet. The Saints should not lose sight of the fact that Jesus says one of the most conspicuous signs of his second advent will be "that this gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness, then shall the end come."

Therefore if we are anxious for his coming, ministry and laity should do everything in their power to spread the gospel from pole to pole and shore to shore. The more we neglect this duty the longer will be delayed the coming of our King.

I feel encouraged in the thought that now is a most favorable opportunity for the presentation of the truth as it is in Christ; for on every hand we are confronted with unmistakable evidences that the masses are wearied and disappointed with the creeds and traditions of men and are requiring something different to the husks upon which they have been fed so long. The lack of the truth has caused to increase at an alarming rate the ranks of infidelity, secularism, and spiritualism. Millions who have lost faith in God and religion because of the uncertainty and unreality of the creeds of the churches are becoming victims of King Alcohol and other vices so insidious in their effect; to-day we hear not a single voice but a swelling multitude join in that terrible refrain, "Let us eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die."

Surely the wail of the prophet has been verified in the history of the last few years: "Darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people."

Then let us hesitate no longer, but in the strength and power of God send into all the world the gospel of peace and salvation; and not only sing, but in reality—

Send the sound the earth around,
From the rising to the setting of the sun,
Till each gath'ring crowd,
Shall proclaim aloud,
The glorious work is done!

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

The Sun is Seldom on Time.

The sun does not keep good time. He is almost always too fast or too slow. Once about the middle of April he is just on time, then not again before the middle of June. At the beginning of September he joins the clock a third time, and lastly once more late in December. Now it would seem as if he were startled at the way he had neglected us. In February he fell back until he was fifteen minutes late. By the beginning of March he had made up five minutes of his loss, and before the month is over he will have caught up to within five minutes of the schedule. Meanwhile the days have been growing longer very rapidly. We begin March with our nights longer than our days. We end it with our days longer than our nights. In the one month we have added to the length of our day an hour and twenty minutes, a bigger gain than any other month can show.—Professor S. C. Schmucker, in the March Ladies' Home Journal.

SENTIMENTS ON TRUTH.

Latter Day Saints in the beginning adopted as their "creed" what is meant by these two words, all truth. The position taken was that it contained all that was necessary for church discipline and government. And to insure men of perfect salvation was all sufficient. As a consequence we have never found it necessary to change our creed, as we understand that all truth is eternal, immovable, fixed, and unchangeable. And further, we believe we are under obligations to accept, receive, and believe in all that may come to our knowledge as truth in time to come. Truth can not in reason conflict with itself, therefore the only means we have by which we can test that which claims to be true is a rigid comparison with known truth. The office work of God's Holy Spirit is to take "Of the things of the Father and show them unto all who are worthy to receive them." This is to be done as the Father above shall see fit and as time and emergency may require. This is verily the source of true light and that which is the privilege of all to receive, and when received will never need to be changed, worlds without end. We offer some most beautifully expressed sentiments by a variety of authors in which they make reference to the beauty and wholesomeness of this great eternal principle.

"For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John the Baptist.

This would indicate that the law which came through Moses was not an eternal, unchangeable law, because it was not truth in its strictest sense, and so was abolished and fulfilled in Christ. But the gospel has been, and evermore will be, the unchangeable message of God to man.

"If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—Jesus.

Reader, in accepting the teaching of Latter Day Saints, you will not have to lay aside any true thing you now believe; only lay aside the errors, step out into the sunlight of God, continue to observe all that is right and true, and then you shall know and be made free by the wholesome influence of truth divine. And doubt and darkness will be dispersed and the illuminating light of God will shine in to redeem, comfort, and save your soul.

"For we can do nothing against the truth but for the truth."—Paul.

This is evident; we can not affect an eternal principle, nor change it in any way whatsoever. The principle of mathematics never had an origin and never will have an end; so with all truth. The trouble with poor humanity is that they will not let God, who knows all truth, teach, instruct, and enlighten the mind and enlarge the soul and thus bring these eternal treasures to comprehension. Some have even gone so far as to forbid any more light or revelation, as they have enough and know it all. Time and change however have made it necessary for revision and change in the creeds of those who would seal the heavens over with brass, and walk on the earth to them covered as it were with iron. To live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, whether of the past, present, or future, is that which will lead to eternal righteousness.

"There is no fit search after truth which does not first of all begin to live the truth which it knows."—Bushnell.

"The greatest homage we can pay to truth is to use it."—Emerson.

"The grand character of truth is its capability of enduring the test of universal experience; and coming unchanged out of every possible form of fair discussion."—I. Herschel.

Apply the above to this latter-day work, which has been assailed by tongue and press for seventy years, and yet it stands as firm as the Rock of Gibraltar and as mighty against man-made doctrines as the battering rams of Troy; and with one united voice its every adherent is heard to say, I know this work is of God.

"Keep one thing for ever in view—the truth—and if you do this, though it may seem to lead you away from the opinions of men, it will assuredly conduct you to the throne of God."—H. Mann.

Very good indeed; that is just the reason why this latter-day work is so dear to us because we accept it from the standpoint of true conviction of right and not for personal aggrandizement or profit; and as a remuneration for the same we hope to attain unto eternal life.

"If a thousand old beliefs were ruined in our march to truth we must still march on."—S. H. Brooke.

That is right; if your creed is wrong, change it. It is easier to find a score of men wise enough to discover the truth than to find one intrepid enough, in the face of opposition, to stand up for it.

"If it is the truth, what does it matter who says it?"—Anon.

No matter at all as we think; even if it might be a Latter Day Saint elder.

"Without seeking, truth can not be known at all. It can neither be declared from pulpits nor set down in articles, nor in anywise prepared and sold in packages ready for use. Truth must be ground out for every man by himself, out of its husk, with such help as he can get indeed, but not without stern labor of his own."—Ruskin.

Every one must answer to God for himself as to his conduct and manner of life. Therefore each should think, act, and decide for himself. This liberty is most freely conceded to all in the economy of God through Christ. "The glorious liberty of the children of God," says Paul.

"He that finds truth without loving her is like a bat, which though it has eyes to discern that there is a sun, yet hath so evil eyes that it can not delight in the light of it."—Sidney.

The people who have eyes to see, and will not see, and ears to hear, and will not hear, are not all dead yet.

"Truth will be uppermost one time or the other. Like cork, though kept down in the water."—Temple.

"You may carry truth as far as you like, and it will always be truth. Truth is like those crystals which, when split up into the smallest fragments, still retain their natural form. You may break truth in pieces, and you may do what you like with it and it is truth throughout. But error is diverse with itself. You can see falsehood even in its own light."—Spurgeon.

"Truth only asks a fair chance. If it can not conquer then it is not truth."—Wayland.

Just so, indeed; and that is all any representative of truth ever asks for. Those who are more in love with their own opinions than with facts, fell out with truth a long time ago. They saw how disastrous it was to their man of straw. So in Christ's time they became angry, told a multitude of lies on him and at last killed him, thinking to stop his effective work; but truth, though crushed to earth, will rise again. The present age is no exception to past experience. And strange, yet true, "God's truth" meets opposition, chiefly from those who profess to know God, but in works deny him. A great travesty on orthodox Christianity!

"Do the truth you know, and you shall learn the truth you need to know."—MacDonald.

Here, ye preachers, is a good one for you:

"If a crooked stick is before us you need not explain how crooked it is. Lay a straight one down by the side of it, and the work is well done. Preach the truth, and error will stand abashed in its presence."—Spurgeon.

Brethren, it is well that we exercise great care in our attitude toward other religious societies, lest in our efforts in showing up their wrongs we fail to make clear and plain to them that which is right. Preach the word, ye servants of the Most High.

"While you live, tell the truth and shame the Devil."—Shakespeare.

"You need not tell all the truth, unless to those who have a right to know it all. But let all you tell be truth."—H. Mann.

"The way of truth is like a great road, it is not difficult to know it. The evil is only that men will not seek it."—Meneius.

Verily true indeed; indifference to God's truth is the last and latest resort of the Devil, to thwart the purposes of God, and hinder the progress of his work. People now profess faith in Christ for various reasons. Men are not found very plentifully at this present time, who preach Christ for Christ's sake, and for love of the truth; but a great multitude of those who know nothing scarcely, and care less about the truth, may be found on every hand, and this state of things is increasing in this gay and wicked world. And if the Evil One can capture and carry to his camp of indifference some of the people of God at this present time, he will do so. Beware, ye Saints of the Lord, that ye be not found among those who are asleep, when your Lord doth come.

"Men must love the truth before they thoroughly believe it."—South.

Christ unflinchingly bore witness to the truth; so did Peter, and Paul, and a host of others in that day and time, and evinced their sincerity and love of it by giving their lives for it. Love of principle is indeed an exalted quality of manhood. Thousands have borne witness of the divinity and truth of this work. Some have been driven from their homes; others martyred outright. And yet we have the banner unfurled to the breeze of public opinion, and still marching on.

"Truth is mighty, truth is grand;
Truth is noble, truth will stand."

May the God of our progenitors help us to stand with and for truth.

A PRACTICAL LESSON.

The following clipping was taken from the "The Home Department" of The Commoner; but it originally appeared in the American. Does it not contain many hints and suggestions which may be utilized with profit by our sisters?

SIXTY DOLLARS A YEAR.

My allowance for dress is sixty dollars a year, and by studying economy closely I imagine that I have been able to make that amount do a great deal. Neatness is very important; every particle of dust should be brushed from a dress when it is taken off, missing buttons replaced, small rents darned and other matters attended to as soon as they need it. It is surprising to see how much better a garment will look and how much longer it will wear when treated in this way. Gloves should be smoothed out and laid in a drawer or glove case, veils neatly folded, shoes cleaned, and if they have been wet, oiled before they are put away.

Dresses are the largest item of expense, but with a little care and forethought this may be greatly lessened. One rule that it is well to observe is, always buy good material. It looks better to begin with and lasts longer. I always do my own sewing, sometimes having a dressmaker fit the bodices of my best dresses. I can wear a cloth, flannel or other all-wool dress three or four seasons. The first winter for best dress; then it takes the place of second best; the third season it is taken apart, dyed a different color and made for street or house wear. Dyeing is a great aid to economical dressing, often enabling one to use material that would be worthless without it. Calico or gingham dresses are worn with large aprons in the morning, and three dollars will buy all I can wear out in a year.

I find three pairs of shoes are plenty for a year, and they often last much longer—one pair for Sunday, one heavy pair for winter and a pair of low shoes for summer. One pair of rubbers and one pair of overshoes will be needed also.

The next item is gloves, and of these a pair of kid gloves, one of silk, and a pair of mittens for cold weather will be all that are needed.

A summer and a winter hat are bought each year, and the old ones trimmed over for every-day wear.

As a suit of under garments will usually last two years, it is a good plan to buy winter garments one year and summer under-wear the next. All dry-goods houses sell at greatly reduced prices at certain seasons of the year, and many dollars are saved by taking advantage of these sales.

Six pairs of hose should be enough for a year if they are darned and mended when they need it. Those with double heels and toes are cheapest, because they last so much longer.

Then there is a cloak to be bought every two years, but with all these things to buy, sixty dollars may be made to cover all expenses if one makes the best of everything.

Sixty dollars a year will be regarded as too large a sum for a woman's dress by some of our sisters, while others will regard it as too small. The latter class especially, might derive benefit from a careful perusal of the article. It is my opinion that one half of this amount should be sufficient, or more than sufficient, to cover the annual expenses of an average Latter Day Saint sister, for dress only. Some, possibly, might properly require more; very many can properly do with less. The profession or business in which one is engaged, and especially when working for firms outside the church, has something to do with the amount required.

When we consider the great need of money being placed in the coffers of the church for the spread of the gospel and the support of the worthy poor, it should admonish us that any useless expenditure in dress, or any other direction, is wrong.

"But," you say, "we differ so widely as to what is useless." True, and it is evidently wrong for any one individual to insist that every other individual must come to his exact standard. But because of this difference of opinion, shall we conclude that there is no general line, or course, which is consistent and right? I think not.

There are some things about which there should be no difference of opinion. We should not differ as to the importance and essentiality of a strict obedience to the word of God. Have those who have an inordinate fondness for dress ever made a careful study of what is said on this subject in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants? True, there is a difference in our ability to get along with little; but there is a much greater difference in our willingness to try.

Am I wrong in presuming that it should not require any more to furnish a sister in dress than it does to furnish a traveling missionary? I am fairly well acquainted with one of our leading ministers, who has been a missionary for many years, and who made an estimate of his annual expense for clothing. His calculation covers a period of ten years from January 1, 1891, to January 1, 1901. Total amount expended, two hundred forty-four dollars seventy-five cents. Average per year, twenty-four dollars forty-seven cents. These figures were submitted to my notice, and I am satisfied they are correct; and the elder referred to says that this account includes every article of wear from head to foot.

When it can be truly said that we love our neighbors as ourselves, we will evidently be somewhat in advance of where we are to-day,—speaking of us collectively and not individually. It is still our duty to "come up higher."
J. R. LAMBERT.

Gettin' Religion.

I ain't much on religion, nor prayer-meeting beside.
I've never jined the church as yet, nor ain't been sanctified;
But a tender sort of feeling draws me nearer to the skies,
Since I got a peep of heaven through a pair of trusting eyes.

Time was when nothing moved my thoughts above this sinful world;
No preacher's words could stir me up, in wrath an' fury hurled.
But lately I've been drifting nigher to the better land,
And the force that leads me upward is a little dimpled hand.

Seems like the bad thoughts sneak away, with that wee chap hard by;
And cuss-words that were handy once won't come when he is nigh;
Fact is, sort 'o shames me to see those clear, blue eyes
Look at me (when I'm gettin' riled) in pity an' surprise.

I don't know much of heaven or angels an' such things;
But, somehow, when I picture 'em, it ain't with harps and wings;
But with yellor curls, all tangled, and tender eyes that shine,
An' lips that's soft and loving, like that little chap of mine.

Then, when he folds his dimpled hands, in his little bed at night,
An' whispers, "Now I lay me," why thar's something ails my sight,
An' my throat gits sort of husky when he blesses me, an' then
I'm dead sure I've got religion by the time he says, "Amen!"

Letter Department.

HAVERHILL, Massachusetts, March 3.

Editors Herald: I came to this city a week ago to look up some matters which needed attention and put in what missionary work I could. There is a growing interest here and what appears a fine opportunity for an active, energetic, spiritual man to put in a year's work to put the work upon a thorough working basis. There are those among the gentlemen of cloth, who would if possible clear out "Mormonism" as they term it, from the city; but it is here for keeps, and if a good man can be secured from General Conference appointees to labor in this city and neighborhood good returns will follow. The faithful few here are doing well and should have substantial help. An elder will find a good home among the Saints.

Yesterday we baptized three more, who will honor the cause of the Master. Brn. M. H. Bond, U. W. Greene, and D. A. Anderson, who have recently labored here, will rejoice to know that "Mother" Thayer, Miss Emma Thayer, and Alonzo Shaw have united with us in the Master's cause, making that little family circle complete in the gospel covenant. To our merciful and kind Father who has blessed the labors of these his servants (with the labors of our local brethren, viz., F. P. Busiel, H. D. Simpson, M. C. Fisher, and others not now in mind) be all praise, honor, and glory for this increase. May the good work go on! We feel very thankful for the privilege afforded us by the Rev. D. T. Call, Pastor of the Walnut Street Advent Church, for permission to use his church and tank for baptizing. I will call upon him to-morrow, all being well, as he expressed a desire to speak with me.

I am indebted to the few Saints in Haverhill for a fine new overcoat which they saw was needed, as my old one had a notion of remaining open from the top button down because of its shrunken condition or my imbibing of Uncle Sam's principle of expansion. May the Father bless them for their kindness!

"Our Mrs. Brown," "Missionary," etc., is doing us good wherever she can, and braved the worst rain-storm we have had this winter to attend our meeting of Friday night, giving up an appointment at one of the largest and most popular churches in the city where a supper, social, and speeches were the order of the hour. She said, while conversing with her at her home the following day: "No meeting but yours would have enticed me out upon such a stormy night." I firmly believe her. She will yet unite with us, I most firmly believe.

While laboring in Center Groton, Connecticut, two weeks ago, I had the pleasure of leading Miss Sarah Watrous into the icy water of her father's mill-pond. I mention this for the benefit of Bro. A. B. Phillips and others who know the conditions existing there, and how much courage it needs for a young woman to step out against the tide of opposition existing there. Sr. Sarah is a niece of Bro. Phillips. Her own mother would not invite her to change her clothing in her own home, so had to change in the cold mill, while ye elder appropriated the shelter of the old rocks and bushes near by. But the sun was shining just lovely. Bro. F. G. Whipple and his estimable wife and sister in the gospel accompanied us, driving through the country about four miles to this spot where Bro. G. W. Robley baptized Bro. Tom, and if I am rightly informed, Bro. A. B. Phillips nine years ago. There are others in Center Groton who are deeply interested in the work.

I had the misfortune to lose my satchel from the buggy while driving from Groton to New London on my return. I immediately drove back when I discovered my loss, but could find no trace of it. We had met an Israelite with his team of mares and two or three local men (who "Tom" said would surely return it if picked up by them). I have not heard anything of it, so despair of hearing anything of it. It contained bank and check book, also receipt book with mail which give the finder every item for identifying the property. I would willingly give up personal property it contains to get back my books, as it will cause some inconvenience, but not very much, as my pocket diary and account book tells the story.

Work in my field will prevent my attending General Conference, as no one will be left but local ministers who can not always respond to calls made at considerable distances from home. I am satisfied to remain where duty calls me. I trust and pray my brethren who go will be blessed of the Master, and that the Conference may be one of great blessing to the church in general. May the sweet spirit of unity and brotherly love prevail from the opening prayer to the benediction.

The article from Bishopric is just what was needed, and will prove a great blessing, especially to those who respond to it. May the spirit of sacrifice and consecration rest upon the Saints everywhere, that Zion may be redeemed, and righteousness prevail, is the desire of

Yours for success,

RICHARD BULLARD.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, March 1.

Editors Herald: The work here is in a very good condition, except that a few are careless about attending meetings. There is a very good attendance of the outsiders and the work has been placed before a great many this conference year. Many meetings have been held on the streets by our elders, who have done well, and many have been led to investigate, and some have accepted.

Twenty-eight have been baptized this conference year in this part of the field and others have given their names and will be baptized to-morrow.

On February 25 Bishop Hilliard surprised us by coming here. I already had appointments out for Tuesday evening, and Bro. Hilliard occupied. He preached three interesting discourses on tithing, consecration, etc. The last evening he spoke from the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. He surely was wonderfully blessed. He did us all good.

We are expecting Bro. I. N. Roberts with us to-day.

May the blessings of God rest upon all his Saints.

JAMES M. SCOTT.

625 Myrtle Street.

LOS ANGELES, California, February 20.

Editors Saints' Herald: The meetings at San Bernardino were a success in attendance, in a spiritual awakening among the membership, and a keen interest manifested among inquiring minds. I baptized five; and there are others near the kingdom. One thing marred our otherwise happy sojourn, viz., the extreme sickness and suffering of the worthy president of the branch, Alonzo E. Jones, and Sr. George Wixom. Bro. Jones has been having a severe attack of sciatica. Sr. Wixom, complicated developments after confinement. I administered to both of these with gratifying effect. Sr. Wixom was up and around before we left and Bro. Jones convalescent. I also administered to Bro. Hendrickson a long time sufferer. The Spirit indicated that our prayer was heard and in due time God would give relief.

I adopted a new policy in my work in San Bernardino. As soon as I arrived I secured the address of every resident minister and immediately sent them a note announcing my meetings and among other things told them: "I come to your city as a representative of a church which asserts that God hath delivered to them a new dispensation of the gospel. We believe that there was a complete apostasy of the early Christian church and that the Holy Ghost forecasted a restoration of the gospel in our day. We believe that the gospel of Jesus Christ to-day should possess the identical features of eighteen hundred years ago. We are commanded of God in a revelation to us that we should contend against no church save it be the church of the Devil. We are also informed that there are many churches of men extant. We believe that the institution you represent is one of the churches of men containing many good, noble, honest, but misguided souls. We are commanded to offer the light to you. We are farther commanded to call upon those who may differ from us to meet us in public and private. I have herewith candidly presented our position to you in the Spirit of Christ, believing that a free interchange of thought will be beneficial to all. If you should desire to address our people, and you will only signify your wishes, I will be pleased to make arrangements therefor."

I inclosed an epitome of faith in each letter. Nothing materialized while I was there, but it was a good advertising medium, the local papers allowing me space for insertion. Developments commenced as soon as I left. The Episcopal minister came to the church and thanked Bro. Wixom for the invitation, stating that he would be pleased to meet Mr. Williams and to address the Saints. I have been having some conversation with the reverend gentleman. He says, "My attendance will not be followed by an invitation to you to address the congregation of St. John's Church. Such action is forbidden in the canon law of the American Church. . . . The fundamental error of your position as stated in your letter is contained in these words, 'We believe that there was a complete apostasy of the early Christian church.' A complete answer to your statement is contained in our Lord's own words, Matthew 16: 18. This promise of our Lord guarantees the continued existence of service and truth of his church till his coming again. As he further declares, Matthew 28: 20, 'Lo I am with you alway, even to the end of the world.' While the history of the past nineteen centuries shows the living vitality and fidelity to the truth of his church and which to-day is doing his work as in the first or the seventh or the thirteenth century."

The brother will find it difficult to sustain the above position in a careful examination of facts. Christ's continuation with his apostles, "even to the end of the world," was made dependent on their teaching the people "all things whatsoever I have commanded you." It was only whilst resting on the rock that the church was impregnable; the text does not say that there would not be an apostasy, but that the gates of hell "should not prevail;" that is, it should not finally triumph.

I will give him an opportunity to defend his statements before our people, even though I am denied the opportunity of reaching his people.

A letter from Sr. Cave informs me that an M. E. minister, Dr. Hiff, took occasion after my departure to give a lecture on "Mormonism." Bro. Elbert Smith essayed to reply to the gentleman's strictures, but was not permitted to do so publicly. I shall write to him and also talk to him through the medium of the press. If we can only stir up the enemy and develop opposition there is hope for the work in California. Instead of attacking other churches we will get them to attack us; better results.

I have been markedly blessed in administering to the sick. The other evening I was called to the bedside of Bro. Dungan. The doctor had previously told the brother that he only had one chance in ten thousand for recovery. I administered to him and he rested better the first night than for months, and in the morning the pain in his lungs and side were much abated. He is continually improving and his chances improve each day. The brother had been alienated from the church, but this has brought him back. As his father said, Whatever the outcome I am happy in that my son is at peace with God.

A week ago I administered to Brother Ward, of Seattle. The spirit of prophecy rested upon me and God signally answered his prayers, relieving him of physical ills and promising relief along other lines. To God be all the glory.

My mind has been burdened for a long time in noting the scarcity of spiritual gifts and manifestations of God's power in administering to the sick, and I am constrained to believe that such things can only be enjoyed by the pure in heart; the humble, truthful, righteous men and women who live close to the throne of God.

A recent letter from Bro. Purfurst at San Diego indicates that he is at work in the Master's cause and doing what he can to interest the people in the ways of truth. Some of the Utah following are investigating. Wish the church was in a position to place a dozen missionaries in Southern California; enough so we could carry on a well organized movement against the enemy, storm the heights, and take the righteous out of Babylon. The people of Southern California are far from being warned. There are whole counties and towns which, as yet, have never heard the gospel message. We will not have completed our work until all have heard the message and either accept or reject.

I inclose Bro. Ward's letter to me.

My Dear Brother: I wish to express my gratitude to God for the signal blessing of health recently bestowed upon me through compliance with his law of anointing with oil by one whom he has called, and the prayer of faith. Last Wednesday evening when I attended the Saints' prayer-meeting over which you were presiding, I was so ill I could scarcely walk straight. A high fever accompanied by a blinding headache, and throat so sore I could scarcely speak or swallow, you will readily understand my reluctance to assist in the meeting. You will also probably remember the presence of the Spirit during the administration prayer. There was prophecy as well as discernment in that prayer. I knew when I arose from the chair that I would be healed; that God in his great mercy had not only recognized the law which he framed in the long ago for humanity's benefit, but my own personal need; and, dear brother, I am glad to be able to testify that I was not mistaken. I rested well that night, and steadily recovered from my sickness, until twenty-four hours after administration I was well,—absolutely well; no pain, no fever, no sore throat; in fact, not an ache or pain in my body. My mind not only clear and bright but free from worry. You must bear in mind that my sickness had been developing for nearly ten days, and it was not merely a nervous headache, but a well-developed case of typhoid fever.

Dear brother, I do not write this letter to weary you, but because I wish to thank God, audibly, and also perchance, to strengthen and cheer some brother or sister who may be fighting for faith or new strength. To such I say, Be of good cheer; "Our God will never, never us forsake." There is power in this gospel, and the great point of beauty pertaining to it is the lever by which that power is utilized is within the reach of the weakest and humblest of God's children, prayer, backed by consecrated lives, and all of heaven's treasures are within our reach.

If you wish to convey these few poor words of my gratitude to the Saints of your branch, or elsewhere, you may do so. I only wish I could convey my gratitude to God in the force of my feelings; but that is impossible. In my great hour of need—how great, only he and I know—he did not fail, but blessed me, and so signally that I feel it my duty as well as pleasure to attempt to show my gratitude and attempt to be of benefit to others.

May God's Holy Spirit bless you all, and may his grace be so abundantly showered upon you all that soon others, who as yet know not Christ, may be brought to a knowledge of his great power and love. Pray for me that I may be of service to the cause.

Your brother,

G. EDGAR WARD.

Saints' Herald: Several of the representative brethren of our faith have recently been with us. First came Bro. J. H. Lake, accompanied by Elder W. C. Marshall. Two days later Bro. George A. Smith and M. R. Scott, Jr., came, and two days afterwards came Bro. G. H. Hilliard, who gave us all an understanding of our duty. His preaching has infused new life in the Saints, and many have resolved to go to work in earnest. But the crowning sermon of the meeting was preached by Bro. Hilliard Sunday afternoon on gospel lines. We modify this, and say this sermon was preached by the Spirit of the Lord, Bro. Hilliard being mouth-piece, as the Spirit was manifest in such power all Saints enjoyed it and many outside as well.

Bro. Lake is to us a father in Israel. When he comes he brings a quiet, peaceful spirit that has a tendency to set all Saints aright, no difference what might have been before his coming.

So we feel these brethren have done us good and the work has been built up here and we ask them to come again.

JAS. P. SAPPENFIELD.

On Board the Steamship "Ivernia," February 27.

Editors Saints' Herald: Brn. J. W. Rushton, Harry Holmes and his wife, and the writer sailed from Liverpool on the 18th inst., the former as a delegate to the General Conference, Bro. and Sr. Holmes to make America their home for a time. The Saints all over the mission desired us to write them on our arrival, therefore we take this means of informing them of safely arriving at our destination. The "Ivernia" is a magnificent steamer six hundred feet long, sixty-six feet wide, and nearly fifty feet deep, with a tonnage of fourteen thousand. She excels the "Campania" and "Lucania" in her internal arrangements and appointments, but is seven knots slower an hour in speed, which makes a vast difference in the journey, especially in the winter season. She does not rock nor roll as other steamers do, but what she lacks in this she makes up in heaving and pitching. As a result of six or seven days heaving, very many of the passengers were sick, some very bad indeed; however, Bro. Rushton and myself escaped. But poor Bro. Holmes was confined to his bunk for seven days. Sr. Carrie, also, was very generous in her contributions to Father Neptune's larder. But Bro. John got into very serious trouble one night. In opposition to his guardian's advice, he ventured out on the deck in a storm and when rounding a corner was met by a tremendous wave, which came bounding over the prow of the vessel and saturated him from head to foot, necessitating a hurried retreat to his bunk to change his clothing.

Our heavenly Father has very kindly tempered the wintry gales, which have been so prolific this season, and taking the journey all through, we have had an exceptionally pleasant passage. We have, however, experienced heavy seas, long rolling swells, which caused the good ship to plunge bow first into the watery valley, her propellers revolving harshly in the air, and so hindered considerably our progress. Also just after leaving the landing stage at Liverpool, we had to anchor in the estuary until about 3:30 a. m., fog horns and bells supplying a very undesirable lullaby as we were rocked to sleep in "the cradle of the deep." We have had very pleasant company on board: Games, a mock trial, and concert, relieving the monotony of ocean life.

All on board are acquainted with our religious standing as Latter Day Saint preachers, yet have extended towards us every cordiality and respect equal to that shown to a reverend representative of the Methodist faith. We have engaged in several conversations with passengers on religious matters, and a few are interested, whose addresses we have and shall send them literature.

In the mock trial the writer and the Reverend Row officiated as judges, and Bro. John as counsel for plaintiff, being elected by the company to those positions. In the concert the writer was asked to act as chairman, which he did to the best of his ability.

This makes our tenth day on the water, and we shall not land until to-morrow. The journey is very tedious and trying. We would advise our friends to travel by a faster line, especially in the winter time; but if they cross the sea for health or pleasure we say, take the "Saxonia" or "Ivernia" every time.

I left the mission in a fair condition, all things being considered. I have been heartily supported by the great majority of officers, and kindly treated by all. Of course, upon some points, we can not all see eye to eye, but in this common failing there is much need for the exercise of patience, kindness, and forbearance. We believe from present indications that there is a grand future before the work in this mission, providing the church will keep a sufficient missionary force in operation, and the local officers do their duty. The best of feeling exists between the local officers and the missionary in charge.

Bro. Muceus advises that he has baptized five heads of families in Porsgründ, and others on the verge of coming in. There are now sufficient to organize a branch in that place; but with Bro.

Muceus, we agree that it would be advisable to wait awhile.

If we should not be privileged to return to Europe, we shall always have a warm and affectionate interest in all the Saints there. Wishing all God-speed and prosperity temporally and spiritually to the work in that land, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

STERLING, Colorado, February 27.

Editors Herald: I came to Wray, Yuma County, September 15 last, and was the first of the missionaries to occupy the rostrum of the Saints' new chapel there, which is a neat frame building, and on the whole speaks well for the Saints of Wray and vicinity. Elder Ed Bullard does the regular preaching, assisted by his son, Fenner, and Bro. A. E. Tabor. Bro. Joseph Luff, on the 29th inst. preached the dedicatory sermon, also offered the dedicatory prayer. The Spirit of God was present and the Saints greatly blessed. I continued my labors in and around Wray until November 17, and while there baptized three. One was a school-teacher, of Wray, wife of Bro. Coral Willis. Another was a young lady who is a resident of Sebastopol, California, but at the time was visiting near relatives. She was a devout member of the Methodist Church. The other was a young man who I believe will be of great benefit to the cause if faithful. I was ably assisted by Elder E. Curtis the latter part of my stay at Wray. Was conveyed over the wilds of the Colorado prairies, where the buffalo once roamed, but where the cattle of civilization now graze by the thousand, a distance of about forty-five miles, by buggy and team driven by Bro. Curtis, the owner. There I found Bro. and Sr. Corf, Bro. and Sr. Belkham, Bro. and Sr. Charles Curtis, all strong in the faith and anxious for meetings. I next went home until after holidays, where I rested and prepared a chart, when on January 13 I reached Rocky Ford, in the great Arkansas Valley. Mounting my wheel (which I find most valuable to the missionary in these valleys) I soon arrived at the station of Swink, five and one half miles southeast of Rocky Ford, where I found about seven families of Saints waiting the arrival of Bro. J. B. Roush to organize them into a branch. Bro. Roush came in due time from Lamar, where within about fifteen miles from the town he had just organized the Enterprise Branch; but the conditions were not such as would permit of an organization. So after giving the people a few good soul-reviving sermons, he journeyed on, leaving me to organize when practicable. But after staying a month I was unable to do so, because some failed to get their letters, slow branch clerks or slow mails being the cause. From there I went to Denver to attend the conference of February 15 and 16, which was a spiritual feast indeed.

But now let me tell the Saints something about the country of the great Arkansas Valley as it is in Otero County, a county lying midway between the Rocky Mountains and the State line, which is thirty by sixty miles in size, with an area of seventeen hundred square miles, and comprises one of the most productive sections in the valley, which extends many miles from Pueblo southeast. The sugar-beet business in the United States is no longer an infant industry nor an experiment. The American people annually consume more than four billion pounds of sugar with its present population. We are told that no parts of the world are better adapted to the sugar-beet industry than are Southern California and the Arkansas Valley, as tests in the latter locality equal those taken anywhere. The capacity of the Rocky Ford factory is said to be twelve hundred tons, and one of the best equipped plants in existence. About two million dollars have been invested in the plant and the purchase of lands by the company. About four hundred fifty men are employed in the factory, and fourteen hundred seventy-eight farmers are now engaged in raising beets for this plant. Next year it is expected that fully eighteen hundred will be growing beets. Over four hundred fifty thousand dollars will be paid out to farmers for the year of 1901. The test over last year is about one half per cent higher. The average number of acres farmed by one man, at present time, ranges from ten to fifteen, but if scientifically done should be six and one half. Land-owners are dividing their lands up into small tracts, five, ten, fifteen, and twenty acres, which they rent, retaining as their share one fifth to one sixth of beets, one half on alfalfa, and one third on other crops. As to prices of land it is well to state that can be had at fifty to seventy-five dollars, while lands in the vicinity of loading-stations and the factory sell at from two hundred fifty to three hundred dollars. Considering the annual income from such priced lands, it surpasses all farming returns of the East, or where large farms are cultivated without irrigation.

The total number of car-loads of beets will probably exceed thirty-two hundred cars received for the season at this plant. From Newdale Station, two and one half miles out, there were three hundred car-loads shipped to the factory. A live-stock company has demonstrated scientifically the feeding qualities of beet-pulp. Beet-growers are entitled to twenty per cent of beet-pulp. Thirty-seven thousand four hundred fifty-seven dollars forty-four cents passed through the hands of the Rocky Ford Melon Growers' Association, for the sale of melons from July 29 to September 29.

A Mr. Gavitt netted on two and one half acres five hundred twenty-five dollars. Mr. R. C. Daily shipped nine hundred seventy-nine crates from three acres. Bro. John Brennan cleared on beets and cantaloupes about eighty dollars per acre, and it was his first year at farming. He paid sixty-five dollars per acre for land lying one half mile from Swink Station.

Alfalfa is among the most extensive and lucrative crops grown in this valley, its heavy yield of hay per acre, of from three to four cuttings, averaging four tons per acre, selling at from three to five dollars per ton in the stack, makes it a valuable crop. It is a sure crop and easy to grow by irrigation. It is also a splendid fertilizer. As a seed crop it yields about five bushels to the acre and is sold at three dollars fifty cents to six dollars fifty cents per bushel. The extensive acreage and croppage of alfalfa has given the bee industry a decided prestige over Eastern States. The highest test of purity and whiteness prevail, for the bees find a never failing supply in the raw material of the blossoms of alfalfa. About eight car loads of honey were shipped out each season for the past three years and going as far east as Buffalo, New York.

The average altitude of Otero County is four thousand feet and undoubtedly has the life-giving ozone surpassing the lower altitudes of Eastern States of rain and mud, especially to those who are troubled with throat and lung affections.

Here in the best part of this county, and under a good water system, and within from one half to one mile of Fairmont or Swink Station, which is the same place, I found some of the best land laid off in five and ten acre tracts, or larger if desired, and can be bought at sixty-five dollars per acre, on easy terms, one third down and balance in three equal payments annually. This place is where Bro. Bozarth lives and the rest of the brethren, and where there will soon be a good branch of the church. They have good artesian water, good schools, and in fact all the necessary resources to develop one of the best counties I know of. They get good prices for all farm produce, and can raise all kinds in abundance.

Swink is about five and one half miles southeast of Rocky Ford and about four and one half northwest of Lajunta, the county seat of Otero County. Good artesian wells are in the vicinity, and I understand that coal has been discovered in about two miles of the town. There is now a mine in operation about twenty-five miles out and of good quality of coal which will greatly reduce the price of fuel, which at the present, is a little high.

Rocky Ford, a town of about three thousand population, is the parent town of the valley, and its fame has been widely heralded. It has a large flouring mill, canning factory, creamery, ice plant, steam laundry, electric light plant, sugar factory, machine shop, cold storage house, brick yards, and other industries.

A man who goes through a great sugar factory feels like shaking hands with himself. He has a higher estimate of his fellow man and a great faith thereafter in the possibilities of human advancement. The first impression one gets upon entering a beet sugar factory is not unlike that experienced on going below the deck of a big battle ship. There is a wilderness of complex machinery. After climbing up and down countless flights of iron stairs, past seething tanks, whirling fly wheels, and intricate buzzing machinery of every imaginable form, you emerge and all you are certain of is, that the whitish-yellow, rutabaga-looking beets go into the maze at one end of the factory, while there comes out at the other end one hundred pound sacks of granulated sugar.

The beets are unloaded from the wagons into the sheds. The dirt on them must be washed off. To do this easily, by wholesale they are shoveled into a cemented ditch passing through the shed. They are then water-forced into a washer just inside the factory. Here they are turned over in a long cylinder, full of water and beets, until they are clean. Then they pass through a slicing machine. Next they pass into the first row of fourteen big iron tanks, called the diffusion battery. Water heated to a high degree boils all the juice out of the sliced beets. The water with the beet juice in it is then boiled on through the remaining thirteen tanks. The juice is then piped into large tanks called carbonators that the impurities may be eliminated. Here car loads of water-slacked lime are dumped in with the juice. This lime gobbles up the impurities.

The muddy combination must now be filtered through complex mechanical contrivances to get the lime out again. The juice thus filtered has a thin, yellowish look, and sickly, sweetish taste. Next it goes into another series of big iron tanks, called evaporators, and receives another red hot boiling to take out the surplus water. It is now syrup, and passes through a bath of sulphur fumes to take out the earthy color. Next a second filtering. Then it passes into a third series of tanks, called vacuum pans, where it receives the third and final boiling, up to one hundred sixty degrees, which causes the sugar to crystallize. The crystallized dark sugar next enters the centrifugal, similar to the separators of a creamery, which whirls it around, almost countless revolutions per second, and separates the crystallized brown sugar from the molasses. In a trip through the next centrifugal, bluing, such as is used in washing clothes, is added, and the brown is thereby turned into wet, white sugar. It now passes into pipes to the top of the factory and is dried by machine, where it drops into sacks. The entire trip from the raw beet to finished granulated sugar occupies eighteen hours.

Editors Herald: I inclose a clipping from the Omaha Daily Bee that you may see that we are still alive here in this city and that the Bee is treating us quite fairly. I remember that twenty-five or thirty years ago it was difficult to get such a privilege, which indicates that the Lord in fulfillment of his promise is giving us favor in the eyes of the people.

The work here is moving along nicely, all things considered. There is some sickness, as usual, but we hope and pray that all may recover if it is the Lord's will. Bro. Albert Crandall, of Dow City, was very ill when I left home on the 5th. Bro. and Sr. Francis of this city have a very sick boy.

Editors Herald: In conversation with Elder George McConley, correspondent of the Denver Times, I received the following items regarding a colonization movement. The Dunkards are to settle the arid lands of Colorado, Logan County. Elder Miller, from Mount Morris, Illinois, chairman of the general mission and tract committee of the Dunkard Church, and Galen B. Boyer, secretary of mission work, of Elgin, Illinois, and other prominent men of that church are a committee sent here to investigate the facilities of irrigation. Rev. L. E. Keltner, of Denver, says that the committee report will be favorable to the settlement, and that soon there will be at least fifty families located near Sterling, on the South Platte Valley.

This is one method of doing mission work, through the colonization plan. They locate families in rural districts, and being an agricultural people they improve the country, build churches, and gain prestige with the people by numerical power.

Elder Miller is now giving free stereopticon lectures here and will repeat the same at Denver. His lectures are on Bible lands, in which he will endeavor to show that the irrigation system is the best method to adopt for their people to carry on their work. My observations are more and more convincing than ever that here in the clear, high altitude of Colorado, arid lands under the irrigation system, the most delightful and prosperous homes can be enjoyed by industrious people.

There are thousands of acres of government lands yet in this country, but will soon be taken. The highly agitated problem of the reservoir system, to store the abundant flow of water now in the Platte and other Colorado Rivers for the irrigation work of summer, is clearly indicative of the fact that soon this rich land will be under good water accommodations.

Editors Herald: The Northeastern Kansas District is still alive. We had a splendid spiritual conference. Bro. I. N. White gave us some fine instruction, and all were well satisfied. At the close of the session, Brn. Roberts and Beebe reorganized the Religio at Scranton. Bro. Beebe is there now looking after that arm of the work. Bro. Roberts has been here for several days, but will go to Centralia this week and build up the cause there.

I was called to Scranton last Sunday to attend the funeral of Bro. Jarvis. The respect shown by the people of that place is worthy of note. Truly he found grace and favor in the eyes of the people. The church was filled and as many more out of doors. He leaves a noble wife.

On Tuesday I preached another funeral discourse of a young man who was killed by a train. His mother belongs to our church.

I will stay here till the 24th, then home and get ready for General Conference. We baptized four here lately, and expect to trouble the water again next Sunday.

GALESBURG, Missouri, March 5.

Editors Herald: I left Texas about February 19 last, enroute for Weir City, Kansas, by the way of Wilburton, Indian Territory, and Webb City, Missouri. Stopped at Wilburton one day with Bro. George Montague, finding the old veteran on duty and in the faith.

At Webb City, I found Bro. and Sr. O. P. Sutherland, with many other Saints, rejoicing in the faith. Remained over Sunday, and at eleven a. m. spoke with good liberty to a good congregation of Saints and friends. Bro. F. C. Keck preached an excellent discourse at night. As missionary in charge he cheerfully gave me permission to labor in his mission field.

On Monday following I went to Weir City, and rejoiced to meet once more in life with the aged Bird brothers. Found Bro.

George Bird and his companion getting ready to take up their journey for the old folks' home. They left us, I think, on February 26, rejoicing in the hope of eternal life. We wish them many happy days in their declining years.

On March 1 my brother-in-law, Bro. James Storm, came for me; and, bidding our excellent Bro. and Sr. R. Bird a good-bye, we made our way to Galesburg, where I am now nicely lodged with Bro. and Sr. Storms and family, preaching to an interested congregation every night. I hope to visit Webb City again before leaving this country, which I expect to do on the 24th instant, to go to Argentine, Kansas, thence to Lamoni, Iowa, on April 4. My faithful wife having written me recently to go, and attend General Conference, and to go praying that God would be pleased to remove my afflictions. So I will endeavor to do. Unite with me in prayer, dear Saints, to this end.

Dear Herald: I love to read the HERALD, and my hope in writing is that it will bring to some the same quiet rejoicing that has been brought to me by perusing the letters of others.

Bro. Harp visited us on his way home from mission work in Texas, and preached for us each night the past week, with the result that seven precious souls were brought into the fold, Elder Harp baptizing five and the writer two. The people are investigating and searching the Scriptures as they never did before. A gentleman said our people are much better understood here now than they were. We were glad to have Bro. Harp with us, as he is a fearless and aggressive minister, and thoroughly understands this people. We pray that the Master may be pleased to send him to this field next year. The cause is surely advancing here. I ever pray for the advancement of the cause.

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, March 6.

Editors Herald: On February 9 I had the privilege of preaching the first sermon in the first church built by our people in Oklahoma, at Seiling, Dewey County. The little village was the scene of a vicious attack made upon us by D. B. Ray, of the Baptist Church, and the prejudice very much intensified. Bro. H. F. Durfey and the few Saints there began the erection of a small but neat little chapel twenty feet by thirty-six feet, the first church of any kind that was built in the town, and is yet the only house of worship in it. I began meetings the 9th and closed the 16th, with a fine interest. The house was crowded the last night.

Since coming here I have had sent me a copy of the comments made upon the meeting by the editor of the Seiling Guide which are as follows:

"The Latter Day Saints' meetings or course of lectures were well attended, last week, and were very much enjoyed by all. Elder Smith is thoroughly acquainted with his work, and each lecture was carefully prepared and very instructive. They gave fair-minded people a chance to understand more of the Latter Day Saints' doctrine, and why they believe as they do. A great many people in this vicinity, the writer included, were very ignorant of the Book of Mormon. Mr. Smith thoroughly explained this, and gave every one that wished a chance to read it or any other of their books, thus doing away with the idea prevalent in so many minds that they have secret works they will not allow others to read. He explained the difference between Latter Day Saints and the Mormons in Utah, to the satisfaction of all. We have a great many of these people in our midst, and if they live up to the law of the church we see no reason why the finger of scorn should be pointed at them. We believe in giving every one a chance to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience."

I preached twelve sermons in the new church and took up the teachings of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants along moral lines, showing that they were the books which constituted what might be called the discipline of the church and the laws by which every member should be tried. I showed what constituted a right to fellowship in our church and the crimes and sins that would expel or exclude members from the church, and then showed a complete harmony with Bible teaching. All of the objectionable passages in the books were taken up and read with their contexts and fully explained so that everybody could see that they did not teach what our opponents claim they do. This consumed the three sermons on Sunday, also Monday and Tuesday nights. On Wednesday night I took up the subject of the divinity of the Book of Mormon from a Biblical and archaeological point of view and spoke seven times on that, and at the close I received many a warm hand clasp with regrets that the meetings could not continue, and invitations to come again.

Bro. Durfey and his coworkers deserve a great deal of credit for their zeal and perseverance in the face of opposition, and when they get their church finished they will have as neat and comfortable a little place of worship as any one need to have. It will now depend upon correct living upon the part of the Saints to bring about a grand triumph for the truth in that vicinity. I took a four-day drive across the country from Seiling to Sumner, Oklahoma, and attended the Oklahoma District conference. Had a good conference, then held a few meetings, and from there to this place, where I am holding forth to apparently interested audiences. Will continue here until the fifteenth at least and possibly longer, then home for a brief stay before I go to conference. The liberty enjoyed has been exceptionally fine in all my recent efforts.

H. O. SMITH.

PALOUSE, Washington, January, 1902.

Editors Herald: In HERALD of April 5, 1899, were a few lines in regard to the great physical benefits I had received from living on "Edenic diet." I received a great many letters from various parts of the world in regard to it, and have been thinking I ought to let the Saints know how I have succeeded on such diet. Well, I have enjoyed the best health the last four years that I ever enjoyed for the same length of time, and I have lived on "Adam food," except a little fresh milk, and occasionally a raw egg in the morning, and I have been able to do hard labor all the time after the first four months. Last summer I worked all through a heavy harvest and some with a thrasher fourteen hours a day, and my daily food was eight ounces cracked wheat or ground rice with milk, sweetened. I have not eaten a meal of cooked food in four years. I prepare my own food, cold; so I know the cookstove is useless and kitchen drudgery is slavish. I can prepare my food in half a minute, eat and clean my dish in ten minutes, and am ready for business; feel healthy and strong, although I am nearly seventy-four years old and have been afflicted the greater part of my life.

I do not like to read of so many of the Saints being sick and afflicted and dying in the prime of life, knowing as I do that there are only two causes for sickness and affliction—ignorance and willfulness. There can not be an effect without a cause. The Scriptures tell us if we lack wisdom we can ask God and get wisdom. (James 1: 5.) But do not ask God for wisdom until you use all you have. When I look back over my past life, I can now see that I did not use the wisdom I had; therefore I was not a fit subject to receive of the Lord. Every act of our lives ought to be prompted by an understanding of the effect it will have on our systems; then we will be living in the human soul. Neither money nor the gratification of the lusts of the flesh could induce me to be in the condition I was four years ago, and to God be all glory, honor, and thanks for the aid of his Spirit.

I have seen people who called themselves Saints sit down to a dish of roast pork after divine service, and ask the Lord to bless and sanctify it to their good, and then fill their stomachs with it; but in a few days they were sending for the elders and doctors. Then I thought of what the Lord said in Isaiah 65:4, I. T.: "Which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable beasts, and pollute their vessels." Again, I have seen them fill their stomachs with beef and other flesh diet, and ask the Lord to bless and sanctify it to their good; but in a few days they were sending for the elders and doctors, and the news came that they were dead. Then I thought what the Lord said in Genesis 9: 11, I. T.: "And surely, blood shall not be shed, only for meat, to save your lives; and the blood of every beast will I require at your hands." Again, I have seen people fill their stomachs with canned fruit, when fresh or sundried could have been obtained in abundance; but pretty soon I heard them say, O, my stomach! O, my stomach! Then I thought what the Lord said in Doctrine and Covenants 86: 2, "All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof."

God did not make a mistake when he said, "Wheat for man." I can live a year on three bushels of wheat and three bushels of apples, nothing else, and work every day. When I read in the elders' letters of the good things the sisters prepare for the inner man, the next thing I expect to hear is that they are sick or dead. Yes, if I had eaten all the good things the sisters were willing to prepare for me, I would have been dead long ago. I have not eaten swine's flesh since I joined the church, seventeen years ago, nor meat of any kind the last four years. Now I have health. Man is what he makes himself, and what we eat makes us what we are physically, and the spiritual food we take makes us what we are spiritually. It will cost forty dollars more to feed my wife a year, than it will to feed me, and I can work every day.

If the Saints would all live for one year as I have lived the last four years, they could save enough to build the temple, and avoid a great amount of sickness, misery, and deaths. It is time we were coming up higher! What we meant by "Edenic food" is, all grain, fruit, nuts, and vegetables in their natural state; but as I have not my teeth, I can not eat much vegetables and nuts, but I do not need them. If any of the Saints desire to ask me questions on the subject of "Edenic diet," I will answer all correspondence. Yours for the truth in all things,

B. R. TURNBOW.

Saintism or Mormonism.

To the Editor Herald: Many of the so-called Christian churches and denominations are making a piteous howl of late, owing to the rapid spread of what they are pleased to style "Mormonism." Any one who cares to waste his time in reading these lamentations will clearly see that the wounded "Christian" unmistakably refers to the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, but who are so bigoted, narrow, and hidebound, that they can not or will not discriminate between the Brighamites of Utah and the great mass of Josephites, who comprise a large portion of our most peaceful, noble, loyal-hearted American citizens. While I am not a Saint, in any sense of the word, yet I do love to see fair play and to see "honor given where honor is due." I have often been told (by those who should know better) that practically there was no difference between the Utah Mormons and the followers of Joseph Smith; that the Brighamites openly advocated and practiced polygamy, and while the Josephites did not publicly advocate bigamy, yet in secret they were no better than the "Mormons." To me this "slush" shows what some of our professed Christians are composed of—prejudice, malice, and uncharitableness toward the truth as others see it. Now, while as I have said, I am not a member of either branch of these beliefs, nor am I a student of the literature of "Saintism," yet I have read and learned enough to know that there is a mighty difference between the lives and teachings of the Josephites and Brighamites, I am well acquainted with a few Josephites, and I can say they rank equal and if anything just a trifle above the average mass of mankind. I know that this charge of polygamy in their midst and in their lives is false, grossly false; and any man of good sense knows that it is a flagrant misrepresentation.

In a recent letter Bishop McCabe, in speaking of the giving of tithes, says, "We must come to the tenth. False faiths are practicing it. The Mormons have it in their system. They are becoming dangerous competitors with Protestant Christianity," etc. The poor Bishop realizes that "Mormonism" is a dangerous competitor, and why? Simply because it appeals to the heart, judgment, and soul of man. Bishop McCabe, who is sort of an idol in the Nebraska M. E. Church, knows that while his church denomination and others are losing ground, that the Saints are rapidly increasing numerically and financially. It seems to hurt the dear brother that "there are others," to use a slang phrase. If Brother McCabe and all others of his ilk will but cease to rant at the unmistakable growth of the Saints and learn a few cold facts, then he will realize that the Saints have just as much right to believe in their doctrine as he has his. He will also come to the conclusion that the doctrine of "Saintism" is quite as edifying and elevating as his own, or perchance a trifle more so. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

PROF. E. D. JONES.

EXETER, Nebraska, March 1.

BLOOMER, Wisconsin, February 27.

Editors Herald: On page 92 of HERALD for January 29 at bottom of right hand column, J. W. Williams asks when Jesus separated from the Father? We read in John 3: 16 that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. It appears to me that the time Christ separated from the Father was when Christ took upon himself flesh and blood to redeem the world from sin. The prophets tell of the Messiah coming to redeem Israel. I do not think it can be shown that the Son left the Father before he was born in Bethlehem.

JAMES M. BLOOD.

P. S. People here are not so much prejudiced but that they will come out to hear an elder if one comes to preach. At least they tell me so. My daughter-in-law wishes very much to have one come and administer to her and preach, as she is not able to be out.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"For looking backward through the year,
Along the way my feet have pressed,
I see sweet places everywhere,
Sweet places where my soul had rest."

"Lo, I Am With You Always."

I'm footsore oft, and weary,
For the way has been so long,
And the storms that beat around me
Have been so fierce and strong;
I've climbed up dreary mountains,
Whose paths were rough and steep;
I've waded through dark waters
That were so cold and deep.
I've traveled through the "thorn wood,"
Where briars hurt my feet;
I've passed through fiery trials,
That scorched me with their heat.
Oft as I journeyed onward,
My eyes were blind with tears.

My heart's been torn with anguish
And filled with doubts and fears.

But all the way so weary
One joy has been my own;
I've always known one comfort,
I have not walked alone!
For One has e'er been near me,
Whose face I can not see,
But I can not tell to any
All he has been to me!

When darkest clouds were o'er me,
His presence seemed more near;
When trials sore have pressed me,
I've felt his love most dear.

When, weak and worn, I stumbled,
His strength has held me up;
When, fainting by the wayside,
He filled my empty cup.

When faith is weak and faltering,
He whispers words of cheer:
"Those whom I love may suffer,
But I will help them better;
I know the path before thee;
I'll guide thee all the way;
Its end is joy untelling,
'Mid heaven's eternal day."

So, I still travel onward,
Though dark the path and dim;
I would not miss one trial
That brings me nearer him!
And when at last in heaven
I stand, by his dear grace,
Mine eye shall see with rapture
His unveiled, beauteous face!

Christmas in Tahiti.—No. 1.

Sister Walker: Since our Christmas here in Papeete this year differed in many respects from that of any former occasion, I must tell you about it. There had never before been a Christmas at Taronā when the gobbling of turkeys was heard under the missionary house, or anywhere else in Taronā. This house stands four feet from the ground, which gives quite a basement now that it is all latticed in. So when Bro. Hawkins came from Tupuai with three turkeys and some chickens to help swell the market at the Christmas-tide, our basement made a nice roomy coop, and into it they all went. One of them would have gone into our oven on Christmas Day had the oven been large enough, but since it was not, it went to market instead.

Besides this, the Saints of this branch had, prior to our arrival and through the instrumentality of Sr. Peterson, agreed upon having a Christmas-tree. They had expected the Patriarch of the church to have remained until after the holidays, and had done their best in preparing their exercises of songs, recitations, and matutus for the day, but had not talked of a Christmas-tree very much. Never having seen one, they did not know what was needful to be said or done. It was a disappointment to them that Brn. Smith and Gould found it needful to leave sooner than was at first expected. And when it was learned that Sr. Peterson would also be absent, and I in my partially tongue-tied condition must shoulder the responsibility and be the leading spirit of it all, I felt as if our Christmas-tree would not be a very flattering affair, and shrank from the undertaking. And more so because the majority seemed afraid to take hold. It being something altogether new to them, was like taking a leap in the dark. I never saw a people so cautious about accepting new customs as the people of these islands, and those of Papeete in particular, nor so afraid of ridicule from their relatives or other natives who do not belong to the church.

However, with what explanation was given by Sr. Peterson before she went to the Paumotus and with Joseph's help several times afterwards in talking with them of what a Christmas tree was, the outline of how it all would be conducted, and the motive for such an occasion being the expression of "good will to men," together with late hours and busy moments on my part it was all accomplished, and the tree looked nice. It was more than full. Each one received a present, and some had several, the writer being one of that number. In arranging a program I got up a nice lesson for the children from the "Royal Scroll" in connection with the first three representations; viz., "Annunciation," "Nativity," "and "Glad Tidings." The "Royal Scroll" was left near the tree with those pictures in view during the evening. Immediately after the children's lesson the Christmas offerings were brought and laid upon the table, while a scribe took down the names and the amounts given. All, both old and young, brought an offering. We made known to them, Sr. Walker, the few lines you wrote in your letter to me concerning the offerings, and it was an additional incentive to give. The offerings that evening amounted to upwards of twenty dollars, more than twice what it had ever been in this branch before. So you see what a few words from a leading one in America does. And again, there were more people here than at any previous Christmas.

On Christmas Day was preaching at eight a. m. Preparations had been made for a real good dinner. That was a part of the program, and the first time, too, that they have observed Christmas in that way. The brethren clubbed together and bought a turtle. A vessel had just arrived from the Paumotus with quite a number. Turtle sounds something like turkey, and there is a good deal more eating on it—one provided meat enough for all. All ate dinner in the feast-house. Our food, cooked by myself, was spread on a table at the upper end of the room, and the natives spread theirs on banana leaves on the floor, a row down both sides and across the end of the apartment. We exchanged foods, and all enjoyed the hour.

Bro. John Hawkins, of Tupuai, was with us. We also invited the ex-governor of Hao to eat at our table. At two p. m. the exercises for the oaoa, as they called it, commenced and occupied the afternoon.

(To be concluded.)

Prayer Union.

The prayers of the Union are desired in behalf of Bro. Aaron N. Watez who is ill with what the doctor's call creeping paralysis. He is not now able to dress himself or walk about the room alone, but has the promise of the Lord to heal him, and desires the cooperation in prayer of the sisters. If any have a message of the Lord given for him, please address A. N. Watez, Elm Avenue, Malden, Massachusetts, care Mr. Daniels.

Notice.

It is desired that the presidents of all locals of Daughters of Zion will see that notes are taken of all special points of interest gleaned through the discussions of select readings and supplementary work, and forward same to president of general society for future use.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

The old-fashioned gardens of half a century ago, with no thought of effect, gave decorative plants their proper position by relegating them to some corner or border location. Often times they were planted near the old-fashioned well-sweep with a clump of trees beyond, simply because they grew so thriftily there under the frequent dashes from the old well-bucket. Naturally they form a picture still fresh in the memory of many a wanderer from the old homestead, who is now shut in by towering walls of brick and stone. Some of the pleasing effects that one can arrange in planning the home garden are indicated in the April Delineator, where the directions are given by a well-known authority on gardening.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

WE copy the following from the closing paragraphs of the history of the London, Canada, District Sunday-school Association work, prepared and sent us by Sr. Maggie MacGregor, Hopeville, Ontario. I would that this could be said of all districts:

"There are thirty-six schools enrolled in the association, and the Sunday-school work in the London District has become a very important factor in church work. It is fostered by missionaries and branch presidents as well as by association officers. And the conventions are now about as largely attended and as much appreciated as are the district conferences.

"The officers of the district Sunday-school association have always worked together. Jealousy and strife have never entered to mar the peace, and we have always been blessed with zealous men and women as officers.

"The district has one flourishing school in British Columbia, and one in Assiniboia. Also a school in almost every branch. Wherever the missionaries go they seek to create an interest in Sunday-school work, and often organize a school before branch organization is possible. This condition, and the interest taken by old and young in attending Sunday-school is almost entirely the result of the labors of the workers, and has proved to be a very great blessing to this district."

To the Saints of the London District Sunday-school Association; Dear Brethren and Sisters in Gospel Bonds: It has been my choice to accept this appointment this year as superintendent, but shall make no apology, but go to work. We wish to inform you through these columns of our arrangements for the coming year. We have appointed the following local laborers to help us, as it is not practicable for us to visit but a few of the schools: Sr. Lizzie Evans, Nathan Overholt, John Allan, Henry Ribbel, and Maggie MacGregor, and trust their counsel will be respected in their efforts to do good, when and where they visit. The district is large now and plenty of room to spread our wings, and if we feel anxious to be up and doing, the harvest is on and will soon be over. Discouragement, to my mind, is one of Satan's greatest devices, and I am forced to the conclusion, from observation, that one's success in this work does not necessarily depend on the ability one possesses, as much as it does on one's thorough devotion. Ability is good when humility and the other necessary traits accompany, but God does not depend on one's smartness to build up his work. It has been said, that "no one can help in this work unless he is humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity." Observation will prove that. So in selecting officers and teachers it is not always the smart ones that prove the best helps to our schools. When once a man begins to think that the church can't get along without him, he then becomes of very little use, just so in Sunday-school work.

Allow me to offer a few thoughts right here touching parents' duties towards the school and their children. To my mind it is absolutely necessary to a child's religious training, that parents not only assist them to study their lessons at home, but that they teach them to pray vocally and in secret, and teach them to walk uprightly. We can not be too careful to guard them against the evils that exist, even among children in many of our cities, towns, and villages. Parents are too often deceived, from the fact that they never dream of their children doing wrong, until they are fully captured by sin. An ounce of preventive is better than a pound of cure. It is well to be on our guard. A Sunday-school teacher can not well approach children on this subject in school. Now where should this be done? Is it not a father's duty to talk to the boys, and a mother's duty to talk to the girls? I fancy it is better to warn them of the danger, and to save them from a fall, rather than let them fall, and then try to break them of bad practices. A habit is easily formed, but quite another thing to conquer it. Parents should be especially interested in their own child's welfare, and not expect that a teacher of a class can fit him for life's battle in one short hour in a week. For fear I wander too far from our text, we will close. May God bless and help us all is our prayer.

GEORGE BUSCHLEN,
Superintendent of District.

Another Post-Review of the Lesson.

Never has the Sunday-school been as efficient in successful Bible instruction as to-day. What with direct study of the text, with its interpretation; expository and collateral articles; articles fresh from the brain and pen, and those "worth repeating," ransacking history and literature for illustrations by picture and parable; previews and reviews,—minds theoretical and practical are brought under tribute to make the message plain to Bible class and primary class, and all between these extremes. Every ear is open, and every eye awake, to hear or see some new thing which may add to the interest of Bible study, or more clearly reveal the truth to the mind, and fasten it in the memory.—William H. Shults, in Sunday-School Times.

Kelley, Presiding Bishop. Lamoni, Iowa, March 6, 1902.

Resolution of Respect.

Whereas, God our heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom and love was pleased to call from our midst our well-loved brother and co-worker, Elder C. R. Duncan; notwithstanding we deeply deplore the loss of such an esteemed and respected brother who fell at the post of duty, yet we feel to rejoice in his faithfulness and in the fact that a lively hope of a glorious resurrection gladdened his soul at the hour of departure. His manly virtue and noble character being comprised of that which is good and true, we deem it well worthy of emulation. May he who doeth all things well give us patience to bear with meekness the affliction we feel at his departure. He has gone to his rest to realize the hope he enjoyed and ultimately receive the reward of this labor; blessed be his memory, and may we who mourn expect to meet him face to face with our blessed Master when the labors of life are ended, therefore, be it resolved, That we offer condolence to his devoted widow and relatives and earnestly pray that heaven's choicest blessings may rest upon them, especially his bereaved wife and little daughter, while life shall last; and be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution of respect be spread upon the minutes and also sent to the church papers for publication and to the relatives of our deceased brother. John B. Roush, President Eastern Colorado District; A. E. Tabor, Secretary.

Notices of Silence.

To all Whom it May Concern: This is to notify the Saints of Maine, and all others interested, that Elder S. G. Cunningham has been silenced, for cause, and that he is no longer authorized to represent the church. Elder Isaac M. Smith, sub-missionary in charge in the State of Maine. March 5, 1902.

TWO VERSIONS OF THE DEATH OF WORRELL.

In the Chicago Tribune for December 15, 1901, there appeared the following:

SLAIN IN FIGHT WITH MORMONS.

The vicinity of Carthage, in Hancock County, Illinois, has been the scene of more bloody and thrilling encounters than almost any other section of the State. It was there in the years after 1843 that the Mormons struggled against the Gentiles to drive the latter away from the region the followers of Smith had determined to possess.

Nothing in all this history more tragic than the killing of Franklin A. Worrell is recalled by the students of the time. Worrell came from Pennsylvania, where he had been married but a short time before, and though an ironmaster by trade, took to storekeeping in his new home. Worrell was an active man, of strong convictions, and naturally being a leader in this land of strong feeling, made many friends and not a few enemies. And one of the latter was the Sheriff, Joe Backenstock, a Mormon, whom he twice whipped in personal encounters. It was Backenstock who laid for Worrell and finally killed him.

Alarmed by outrages committed or charged to the Mormons the Gentiles organized a militia company and arrested Joseph and Hiram Smith, the leading Mormons. Worrell and others were set to guard them. The Smiths expected a rescue, and were not surprised when the jail was attacked. The guard made a show of resistance, but knowing the attacking party were Gentiles allowed them to take and shoot the Smiths.

This naturally enraged the Mormons and created a crisis in Carthage. Governor Ford was appealed to for aid, when suddenly from the neighboring country came a call for help to save Gentile property from fires the Mormons were setting. Volunteers were called for by Worrell to serve under his lead. With twelve men he started for the scene. At a cross-roads he descried at a distance a lone horseman and approached him to get news from the scene of the fires. The horseman was the Sheriff, and when Worrell was within range he gave a signal and instantly Worrell was killed by a bullet from a thicket.

The sheriff and the murderer were both tried for this, defended by Stephen A. Douglas and prosecuted by O. H. Browning, later a member of Lincoln's cabinet, but a Mormon jury acquitted them. The Gentiles were thoroughly aroused, however, and rose in masses and drove the Mormons from the State. Both the Sheriff and the man who killed Worrell were later killed in Utah.

Knowing that Bro. E. L. Page, of Lamoni, was pretty well acquainted with the facts concerning this matter, and believing that the Tribune writer was considerably "mixed" in presenting what he thought to be facts, we sent the article to Bro. Page with a request that he give us the facts as known to him. In response to our request, we received the following:

VIGILANCE is the price of safety, and the watchmen on the tower should not announce that all is well when warnings are necessary; but we have observed that when people are looking for trouble they usually find it, and when they are looking for peace they usually stand a better chance of finding it than though they continually look for a black cloud. Saints should come to General Conference determined to do their part in making it a peaceful session. Belligerents usually afford plenty of work for the peace-makers. Come with a sense of our personal weaknesses and our united strength and a knowledge of our dependence upon the strength of God's favor and all will be well.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 6.

Editors Herald: I herewith give some statements of past scenes, in contradistinction to what is embodied in the clipping furnished me, taken from the Chicago Tribune, of December 15, 1901.

Frank Worrell (as he was usually called), the person referred to in the clipping before me, was a member of the Carthage Grays, and was arrested with others for complicity in the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith on June 27, 1844. The trial, if such a farce could be so called, resulted in a nolle pros., and they were turned loose to further wreak their vengeance against the "Mormons."

It is a matter of history that Governor Ford pledged the faith of the State and his own as Governor for their protection while in custody in Carthage, assuring them of a fair trial. Yet notwithstanding their remonstrances he gave them in charge of their sworn enemies, the Carthage Grays, while he disbanded and dismissed to their homes the McDonough County troops who would have protected them from violence; taking his departure for Nauvoo. He thus practically delivered them over to death at the hands of those who had declared that as the law had no power over them they would try powder and ball on them; Joseph Smith having been held to trial before the courts some fifty times and acquitted on every charge.

The mob spirit continued to increase, their numbers being augmented by recruits from Missouri of many old enemies of the Saints. They distributed themselves in parties through the county, plundering and burning and driving citizens from their homes to take refuge in Nauvoo.

Father Durfee, living near Lima, was killed at his home. The mob set fire to a straw-stack at midnight, and when he came out, they shot him down. He was over seventy years of age. I saw his body which was brought into Nauvoo, with four bullet holes in it.

Jacob B. Backenstos, the sheriff, endeavored to execute the duties his office required of him, and issued proclamations commanding the mob to disperse and go to their homes. Not heeding him, he started out with a posse to enforce the law.

He came upon a gang that had just burned the two-story building of a Mr. Gates, also the barn in which had been stored a large quantity of wheat. All of the mob did not get away. This was an unexpected rebuff; but they had to deal with an officer who knew no fear and was determined to do his duty.

The next thing with the mob was to get rid of the Sheriff; and as he was on his way from Warsaw, going north, some forty persons under the lead of Frank Worrell started on his trail. At an abandoned railroad-grading they came in shooting distance and halted. Worrell having unslung his carbine, was in the act of taking aim, when the Sheriff commanded Porter Rockwell, near by, to shoot, which he did, killing Worrell. The party then fled.

Collecting a posse of some fifty men the Sheriff went to Carthage to make his report. Having hitched their horses they followed the two principals to the court-house. Backenstos made his statement and called for a change of venue, which was granted, and the case remanded to Peoria, Illinois, where the two were acquitted on the ground of justifiable homicide.

Jacob B. Backenstos was not a "Mormon;" and coming as he did from an Eastern State, Pennsylvania, not having been involved in the conditions prevailing in Hancock County, being also qualified by education and personal bravery, he was deemed the man for the office, and had been elected sheriff.

The statement that Worrell whipped him in two personal encounters lacks the one element necessary to give it coherence; truth.

Much more might be written; but let the following suffice as to evidence the depraved and thoroughly brutalized instincts of mobocrats of Hancock County, Illinois. While assembled with others one forenoon at the junction of Mulholland and Bain

Streets <sup>to</sup> learn the news from the country, a horseman approached, his horse in a foam. When able to speak he said that a number of the mob had been at his home, tied and whipped him, and then outraged his wife before his eyes.

If the bare recital of these scenes causes humanity to shudder after all these years, what must have been the reality!

Jacob B. Backenstos joined the United States Army, with the commission of lieutenant, and was stationed in Oregon, where he died.

Orrin Porter Rockwell died in Utah, and was buried. There let him rest until the great day of final accounts shall determine the result.

The writer in the clipping referred to might exercise his talents to better purpose in newspaper lore by giving to the public information of a more truthful character, as the participants in the scenes referred to are not all dead yet. E. L. PAGE.

"CLUB-FOOT STILL AT WORK."

Bro. J. C. Chrestensen writes us from Beaver, Missouri, under date of March 15, sending notice to HERALD concerning a man he designates as "cloven-footed." It probably is the same man we spoke of a few issues since. Read the notice in another column. In sending the notice Bro. Chrestensen says: "It seems to me it is time for every well-informed Latter Day Saint who reads the HERALD and Ensign to be aware of the schemes of this notorious cloven-footed hypocrite that has been imposing on them and others for these many years, as he has been reported time and again. The trouble lies in the fact that many of the Saints do not take or read the church publications, hence are uninformed. They are generally too poor to subscribe for them, or think they are, when at the same time they will let that old club-foot work upon their kind, noble hearts and sympathy, to the price of several years' subscriptions. At Mansfield, Missouri, in the fore part of February, he inquired for Latter Day Saints, and found Bro. Roach. He passed as a Latter Day Saint minister, the owner of a two hundred acre farm north of Mt. Grove, and went by the name of J. W. Hall. Had lost pocket book and railroad ticket; worked his man for a number of dollars. Thence to Seymour, passed as a Reverend Allen, an Advent minister, and worked a Reverend Cheeney, of same faith. And so on all along the line till he reached Springfield, and worked some of the Saints there, so I have been informed. I think it would be wise for the Saints and others to double the reward a number of times, and capture that fraud, that a stop may be put to that kind of work as soon as possible. As some believe him to be a Latter Day Saint minister, you will greatly oblige by inserting this letter and notice in the HERALD as soon as possible."

If the man confines himself to certain districts or territories, as he seems to have done, it would be well for some of our people acquainted with the facts to print handbills and forewarn the branch authorities in the country where this particular "cloven-footed" scoundrel is at work. A few handbills put into the hands of each branch president, one to be read at branch business meeting, would do much to warn all the Saints in the country concerned.

Strange as it may appear, this particular fraud has not visited Lamoni, though there is no telling how soon he may decide to try his luck here. But goodness knows the good people of Lamoni have sufficient of such frauds perpetrated upon them.

We certainly trust the Saints of Missouri will keep a close lookout for this impostor, and if possible turn him over to the civil authorities.

In the "Nebraska No. 1 K. of P. Lodge Bulletin," published at Omaha, Nebraska, March 8, there appeared the following item:

Bro. Matthews: You asked me in a former letter for news about the people this place is noted for; the religious part of the people here. The Latter Day Saints are a God-fearing, law-abiding, and a generous people. Have qualities that make upright nations. Although I am not a follower of Joseph Smith, I will say that it is the most intelligent interpretation of the Bible it has ever been my fortune to hear expressed. It is the Pythianism rightly interpreted. They take care of their sick, have a home for the aged, and educate the orphan. I always supposed before I came here that anything that even smelt of Mormonism meant polygamy, but the Latter Day Saints believe in one God, one wife, one family, a just, righteous, and merciful God. No hell-fire and brimstone in theirs. I write this in justice to a people who have been persecuted and maligned throughout the land. They pay no big salaries, keep no palaces, but live in a plain, decent manner, and the criminal who comes here to ply his trade soon leaves, because there is no place for him. Fraternally, L. O. Bradley, Lamoni, Iowa.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. T. C. Kelley wrote from Audubon, Minnesota, March 10, ordering some books, and says: "The books herein ordered are for an Indian girl, of pure Lamanite blood. She is educated in English, however, and is very intelligent. She is the granddaughter of chief "Maychuckkeyeshig," of the Mississippi band of the Chippeway tribe of Indians. She said she would be pleased to read the Book of Mormon, and Bro. Harpster furnished the money to have one sent to her. She heard me lecture one evening, and, with others, seemed well pleased. In some respects the promises of the Book of Mormon seem to be near the point of realization for the Lamanites."

In a letter to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, under date of March 1, Thomas Brien writes from Manchester, England: "Bro. James Baty, late district secretary, is now our 'evangelical minister.' We are all well here, and the work is onward. Bro. Dewsnup, Sen., resigned district presidency, and the position is now filled by Henry Greenwood, who was formerly vice president of district."

Bro. F. C. Keck writes from Prosperity, Missouri, March 14: "I am well pleased with the new form of HERALD. I do not understand how any true Latter Day Saint can neglect to take the HERALD. I came here to hold services in a union church, but was shut out, as one of the trustees did not want 'Mormonism' preached there. We rented a store-building, the only building we could get, right beside a saloon. We seated it and commenced meetings, and now we have a houseful of interested listeners. Last Sunday while preaching I could see men going into the back door of the saloon. This place certainly needs preaching. A minister who had left the churches says since hearing me the Bible is a new book to him. While at Macon, Missouri, I had a fine meeting-house crowded. I baptized one. The brethren are all at work. The Spirit is with me to a marked degree, and my faith never was stronger. What a responsibility on our shoulders to teach the angel's message!"

Under date of February 13, in a letter to President Joseph Smith written from Sydney, New South Wales, Bro. A. H. Smith writes, after having paid a visit to his daughter, Ina, and her husband: "I am again in the field, at Sydney, having arrived yesterday on the steamship Commonwealth from Tuncurry, some hundred miles or so up the eastern coast of Australia. I shall not be able to come home to attend conference, and may decide to go by way of London, Liverpool, and New York. Bro. Kaler has done a good work at Brisbane; has, in fact, captured nearly the whole settlement of Brighamites. I shall visit the branches in Australia before I leave for home. We are both well and in good spirits."

Under date of February 27, Bro. Muceus wrote to R. S. Salyards from Porsgrund, Norway: "The work here is moving onward slowly, but some are becoming interested in the work and begin to investigate earnestly. Two weeks ago six were baptized, and others are near the kingdom. There are now enough members to organize a branch, and I hope next summer the organization may be perfected. Prejudice against "Mormonism" is very strong here, and people at large know nothing about the Reorganization, and as a consequence are afraid to come out and hear what we teach. It will take some time to remove this prejudice, but I hope by persistent and faithful efforts to remove this to a certain degree, so the honest in heart may be gathered in. The Lord has blessed me very much in my labor. I have just returned from a visit to the field of Bro. Enge and found quite an interest there. Sr. Muceus is well and we both strive to do all we can for the upbuilding of God's truth."

In a letter to R. S. Salyards dated at Grimstad, Norway, February 26, Bro. Enge wrote: "We as a family are in a fair condition. We are holding meetings in our rented rooms Tuesday and Sunday evenings. Bro. Muceus has been with us lately, and many came to hear him. He left for Porsgrund yesterday to baptize some. I speak at Homborgsand Thursday and at Christiansand Friday every week. I am hopeful of an ingathering soon, as many are interested."

Under date of March 4 Bro. C. L. Snow writes from Kirksey, Kentucky, telling somewhat of the conduct of Reverend Hicks after the Snow-Hicks debate at Lexington. It seems from Bro. Snow's letter that Hicks succeeded in making himself unpopular by boasting and similar conduct. Hicks got the courthouse and was going to lecture against "Mormonism;" but he was so abusive it was closed against him. He then went onto the streets and continued his abuse, and a man stopped him at one time, and at others they would not stay to listen to him. He announced a lecture at the Baptist church, but only about fifteen went to hear him, though he went out on the streets and invited people to come. He circulated a paper for signers to the effect that he had done a great work for the Baptists of that place by his lectures against "Mormonism" but got only one signer. Bro. Snow thinks Hicks has done us good rather than harm, as the debate and Hicks' conduct have aroused interest so that people are asking for Bro. Snow to return and preach. Lexington is Bro. Snow's birth place and where he lived until twenty years old.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By a clipping from the Hustler, of Ravenden, Arkansas, we note that D. R. Baldwin has been telling the people of that place the difference between us and the Utah Mormons. We also note by a clipping from the Spring River News, of Imboden, Arkansas, that Bro. Baldwin has issued challenge to Reverend Cloyce.

The second number of the Gospel Standard has reached us. It is an earnest and interesting little paper.

A number of the Lamoni general missionaries are home from their fields, visiting home folks and getting things ready for conference and summer.

With about half the members of the Quorum of Twelve in Lamoni ready for quorum work, we are strongly reminded that another General Conference is very near.

"The Big Horn Basin, Wyoming," is the title of an interesting folder being sent out by the Burlington Railway. We have received one from P. S. Eustis, G. P. A., of Chicago. It describes some fine new country opened up by a portion of the "Burlington" recently built.

Bro. J. P. Anderson, in charge of Graceland College Herbarium, informs us he has received valuable aid from Bro. M. E. Moore, of Springview, Nebraska, who has recently sent a fine collection of plants, and is expecting to render some more aid to Graceland in this manner. There are undoubtedly others who can aid Graceland in the same manner if they make the effort. We are glad Bro. Moore is at work in the collecting line.

In the American Baptist Flag for March 13, R. B. Neal makes an appeal for financial help to publish a tract against "Mormonism," which he calls No. 6, and which, he says, will be a revelation to all Mormon elders. Mr. Neal poses as a veritable Mormon annihilator, and this new tract is one of a series which he has been writing against "Mormonism." His appeal is made under the headline, "The Mormon Christian War," a significant heading, indeed.

Because of the tabulated reports of the missionaries published this week, the size of the HERALD was increased four pages. The demands made for space in the HERALD increase steadily, and hence we are obliged to cull more closely, so as to present our readers with the best we have on hand. Saints who write us must not feel hurt if sometimes their letters and productions do not appear.

Monday's papers contained accounts of a blizzard which raged in North Dakota and the Canadian Northwest. It is said to be the worst snow-storm in years, and practically paralyzed railroad traffic. Lamoni got the benefit of some of the cold weather Sunday and Monday, but no snow.

Bro. C. L. Snow held a debate at Lexington, Kentucky, with W. M. Hicks, a Missionary Baptist, beginning February 24.

To-morrow, says the Chicago American, is one of the curses of the world. How many people, is asked, can honestly say it has not interfered with their lives. And then the writer points out how procrastination and "to-morrow" are really synonymous. Though to-morrow is the day which never comes, yet many wait for it to begin their reforms and good works. "To-morrow is the soft lounge on which the weak human will lie down to rest. It takes an effort of the brain to say of a disagreeable thing, 'I will do it to-day.' The will, the expression of the soul's intellectual purpose, is the most recently developed feature of the human being, and it is often the weakest. It is hard to reform, so we say, 'I shall reform to-morrow.' A million men say every day, 'I mean to save money and live more sensibly. I will begin to-morrow.'" The American proposes this motto: "I shall not think of to-morrow, for to-morrow can never come. My only possession is to-day, and I will do all that I can in it. I will not lull myself to sleep promising myself about a time that will never come. I shall be a man of to-day." Holy Writ quotes the Master as saying, "Take no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. 16.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, January 19, 1902.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr Annie Allen.

When the Saints arrived in Illinois after having been expelled from Missouri, as I have described heretofore, they were hospitably received. The people of Illinois seemed to heartily sympathize with them in their sufferings. The historian Bancroft speaks of it as follows:

“Finally they reach Quincy, and are kindly received. Not only the Saints but others are there who have human hearts and human sympathies. Indeed, upon the expulsion of the Mormons from Missouri the people of Illinois took a stand in their favor. The citizens of Quincy, in particular, offered their warmest sympathy and aid, on the ground of humanity. A select committee appointed to ascertain the facts in the case, reported, on the 27th of February, 1839, ‘that the strangers recently arrived here from the State of Missouri, known by the name of Latter Day Saints, are entitled to our sympathy and kindest regard.’ The workingmen of the town should be informed ‘that these people have no design to lower the wages of the laboring class, but to procure something to save them from starving.’ Finally it was resolved: ‘That we recommend to all the citizens of Quincy, in all their intercourse with the strangers, that they use and observe a becoming decorum and delicacy, and be particularly careful not to indulge in any conversation or expressions calculated to wound their feelings, or in any way to reflect upon those who, by every law of humanity, are entitled to our sympathy and commiseration.’”

It is pleasant to speak of such things as these after what we have been obliged to chronicle; but the question what they were to do in regard to location, yet remained for them to decide. It was one of the doctrines of the Saints, and has been all along, that they expected to gather, and that thought governed them largely in their consideration of the locality in which to settle. It is true that some of them thought best to abandon that idea for the time and to scatter in different parts of the country and make locations severally. Soon after they arrived in Illinois an offer was made of twenty thousand acres of land in Iowa Territory, lying between the Des Moines and Mississippi Rivers at two dollars per acre to be paid in twenty annual installments without interest; a very favorable offer, to be sure. This was opposed by some of the leading men of the church. As we said before, some of them thought it best not to settle together in localities, but to scatter through the country, and each choose a location for himself. William Marks, Bishop Partridge, and Judge Elias Higbee were the leading ones who opposed this gathering at this time, and because of their opposition, and that of others with them, this tract of land was not purchased at that time; whether it was purchased afterwards or not I do not know, though there was a purchase made afterwards in Iowa. I do not know where this twenty thousand-acre tract was, but at that time, at least, it was passed by because of opposition.

About fifty miles, I think, above Quincy, at a little town called Commerce, one Isaac Galland resided, who took quite a lively interest in the Latter Day Saints, and in their behalf corresponded with Governor Lucas, of Iowa, and asked him in regard to the propriety of the Saints settling in Iowa, in a body, and what his attitude towards them would be. In reply the Governor told him that as citizens of the Republic they had the same right as any other people to settle in the Territory, if they wished, and at the conclusion of his epistle he says this (and perhaps some of you know that this Governor Lucas, of Iowa, was at the time the Saints were at Kirtland, or a part of the time, Governor of Ohio):

"With regard to the peculiar people mentioned in your letter, I know but little. They had a community in the northern part of Ohio for several years; and I have no recollection of ever having heard in that State of any complaints against them from violating the laws of the country. Their religious opinions I consider has nothing to do with our political transactions. They are citizens of the United States, and are entitled to the same political rights and legal protection that other citizens are entitled to."

I quote this particular part of his letter to remind you of the attitude of Governor Lucas, and also to invite your attention to his statement, that these people were not accused of wrong doing where they were in Northern Ohio.

March 9, 1839, another committee was appointed consisting of Sidney Rigdon, J. P. Green, Elias Higbee, E. T. Benson, and Israel Barlow, to visit Iowa Territory again and examine lands, with a view to purchasing. Whether it was the same twenty thousand acres before offered that they were sent to examine the record does not disclose. Shortly after the appointing of this committee, at a conference held at Quincy, Illinois, some of the dissenters, some of whom had proven false to their trust in Missouri, were expelled from the church. Among these, and I believe the leading ones, were George M. Hinkle, whom you remember was the one that made the treaty with the mob, Sampson Averd, the organizer of the Danite band, condemned by Joseph Smith and others, John Corrill, Reed Peck, William W. Phelps, Frederick G. Williams, Thomas B. Marsh, and Burr Riggs. These, all prominent men in the church, were expelled with others for the part they took while in Missouri. Some of them were afterwards reinstated by confession, some never were.

On April 22, 1839, Joseph Smith and his fellow prisoners, who had left the state of Missouri under the circumstances before described, arrived at Quincy. They were not idle long, it seems, notwithstanding their long confinement in jail. Arriving on the 22d, there was a council held on the 24th, when Joseph Smith, Bishop Knight, and Alanson Ripley were sent into Iowa Territory to purchase land. What became of the former committee I do not know. Instead of purchasing in Iowa Territory, as per the resolution, they purchased land in Illinois. By what authority, does not appear on record, but no doubt it was acknowledged by the church as subsequent events seem to show. Joseph Smith says, under date of May 1, 1839:

"I this day purchased, in connection with others of the committee, a farm of Hugh White, consisting of one hundred and thirty-five acres, for the sum of five thousand dollars; also a farm of Dr. Isaac Galland, lying west of the White purchase, for the sum of nine thousand dollars; both of which were to be deeded to Alanson Ripley, according to the counsel of the committee; but Sidney Rigdon declared that 'no committee should control any property which he had anything to do with;' consequently the Galland purchase was deeded to George W. Robinson, Rigdon's son-in-law, with the express understanding that he should deed it to the church when the church had paid for it according to their obligation in the contract."

This land was at Commerce, and this was the beginning of the place afterwards known as Nauvoo.

The question arose among the Saints at that time in regard to whether their troubles in Missouri had any political significance or not, and whether or not any political party was responsible as such for the persecution of the Saints. Lyman Wight wrote a series of articles to the Quincy Whig in which it was said (we have not seen these articles) that he held the Democratic Party responsible for the Missouri troubles, and R. B. Thompson complained of this reflection on the Democratic Party, and wrote to the First Presidency regarding it, and the Presidency answered in the following language:

"In answer to yours of the 13th instant, to us, concerning the writings of Colonel Lyman Wight, on the subject of our late sufferings in the state of Missouri; we wish to say, that as to a statement of our persecutions being brought before the world as a political question, we entirely disapprove of it. Having, however, great confidence in Colonel Wight's good intentions, and considering it to be the indefeasible right of every free man to hold his own opinion in politics as well as religion, we will only say that we consider it to be unwise, as it is unfair, to charge any one party in politics, or any one sect of religionists, with having been our oppressors, since we so well know that our persecutors in the state of Missouri were of every sect, and of all parties, both religious and political; and as Brother Wight disclaims having spoken evil of any administration, save that of Missouri, we presume that it need not be feared that men of sense will now suppose him wishful to implicate any other."

It will be seen by this that the leaders of the church at that time did not consider that any political party was responsible for those troubles. Governor Boggs, who gave the order to exterminate or drive them from the State, and General Doniphan, who refused to execute them, under orders from his superiors, and thus saved their lives, belonged to the same political party.

June 24, the church, through their committees, I suppose, though it does not say, bought the town of Nashville, in Iowa, together with twenty thousand acres of land adjoining it. It is possible, that this twenty thousand acres of land joining the town of Nashville was the first tract offered. It was the same amount of acres, at least, and between the Mississippi and Des Moines Rivers, as the other was described to be. At the General Conference held in October, 1839, a stake was organized in Commerce. I will read a brief account of it:

"It was then unanimously agreed upon that it should be appointed a stake and a place of gathering for the Saints. The following officers were then appointed, viz.:

"William Marks to be president. Bishop Whitney to be bishop of Middle Ward. Bishop Partridge to be bishop of Upper Ward. Bishop Knight to be bishop of Lower Ward. George W. Harris, Thomas Grover, Samuel Bent, Newel Knight, Henry G. Sherwood, Charles C. Rich, David Fulmer, David Dort, Alpheus Cutler, Seymour Brunson, William Huntington, Lewis D. Wilson, to be high council; who being respectfully called upon, accepted of their appointment."

About this time, or possibly a little before this, the question was agitated as to making an appeal to Congress for redress of wrongs suffered in Missouri. It will be remembered that an appeal was made to the Legislature in Missouri and to the Supreme Court of Missouri, which received no consideration, or at least the Saints did not receive any restitution for the property that had been destroyed or for any damages they had suffered, but were driven out, notwithstanding their appeal for protection. Now the question arose whether it would be right to petition further and carry their case to the United States Legislature, and Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Elias Higbee were appointed to present the case before Congress. I do not know that I can give you the exact date of their appointment. Shortly after they arrived in the state of Illinois, I believe November, 1839, the first number of the Times and Seasons was published at Commerce, by Don C. Smith, a brother of Joseph Smith, and Ebenezer Robinson. Some of the copies of this paper have been preserved, and the publications regarding the events at that time are part of our church history, and valuable for that reason.

The committee appointed to go to Washington started, I believe, sometime in November. They took with them another man, O. P. Rockwell, and Doctor R. D. Foster was taken along because Sidney Rigdon, before they had gone very far from Commerce, was taken sick, and Doctor Foster went along with him as his physician. But Rigdon's sickness continued, and he took little or no part in the proceedings at Washington. What was done there was done principally by Joseph Smith and Elias Higbee. They presented a petition to Congress, in which was a presentation of the case in Missouri from the time the Saints began to settle in Jackson County in 1833, their persecution there, their suffering in Clay County, their removal from there by mutual agreement to settlements in Caldwell County, and the events that transpired there. These were all set forth as briefly and plainly as possible. It is a document well worth reading. You will find it in the Church History, volume 2, page 378. This petition was referred to a committee of the United States Senate, who had it under consideration for quite a time. Joseph Smith and Elias Higbee appeared before that committee and were permitted to address it. Missouri had representatives there, and Doctor Linn and Mr. Jamieson were the principal ones who represented Missouri. The Congressional Delegation from Illinois upheld the cause of the Saints, did all they could to bring the matter before Congress, and to see that the Saints had their rights and were properly represented. The committee also visited President Van Buren, who treated them in a way that was not entirely satisfactory to them. I will read you a brief account of it. Joseph says:

On Friday morning, 29th, we proceeded to the house of the President. We found a very large and splendid palace, surrounded with a splendid inclosure, decorated with all the fineries and elegancies of this world. We went to the door and requested to see the President, when we were immediately introduced into an upper apartment, where we met the President, and were introduced into his parlor, where we presented him with our letters of introduction. As soon as he had read one of them he looked upon us with a kind of half frown, and said, "What can I do? I can do nothing for you! If I do anything I shall come in contact with the whole State of Missouri."

But we were not to be intimidated; and demanded a hearing, and constitutional rights. Before we left him he promised to reconsider what he had said, and observed that he felt to sympathize with us on account of our sufferings.

Now we shall endeavor to express our feelings and views concerning the President, as we have been eyewitnesses of his majesty. He is a small man, sandy complexion, and ordinary features; with frowning brow, and considerable body, but not well proportioned as to his arms and legs; and to use his own words, is "quite fat." On the whole we think he is without body or parts, as no one part seems to be proportioned to another; therefore instead of saying body and parts, we say body and part, or partyism if you please to call it. And in fine, to come directly to the point, he is so much a fop or a fool (for he judged our cause before he knew it) we could find no place to put the truth into him.

The disposition shown by Martin Van Buren at that time is to be condemned wherever found, whatever political party a man may belong to. A man who is afraid to do his duty towards citizens of the country because he would come in contact with some State, or a majority of States, for that matter, is not fit to be supported. Any man that will neglect his duty or fails to perform it, for fear he might possibly lose an election, is not worthy to succeed and ought not to be supported by anyone. If he had been moved by a sense of justice instead of policy, it would have been far better for the church, no doubt, and he would have found something he could do. But as it was he could do nothing.

They had a second interview with the President, as indicated here. He said he would reconsider, but the reconsideration was of no benefit to the cause of the ones who visited him. Of the second interview we have this account:

"During my stay I had an interview with Martin Van Buren, the President, who treated me very insolently, and it was with great reluctance he listened to our message, which when he had heard, he said, 'Gentlemen, YOUR CAUSE IS JUST, BUT I CAN DO NOTHING FOR YOU;' and 'If I take up for you, I shall lose the vote of Missouri.' His whole course went to show that he was an office-seeker, that self-aggrandizement was his ruling passion, and that justice and righteousness were no part of his composition. I found him such a man as I could not conscientiously support at the head of our noble republic. I also had an interview with Mr. John C. Calhoun, whose conduct towards me very ill became his station. I became satisfied there was little use for me to tarry to press the just claims of the Saints on the protection of the President or Congress, and staid but a few days, taking passage in company with Rockwell and Foster on the railroad and stages back to Dayton, Ohio."

Thus Elias Higbee was left alone in Washington to attend to this matter, as Joseph had said he thought it would be of little avail for him to remain. Elias Higbee saw the matter through; probably by arrangement with the others. He stayed until the committee to whom this petition was referred, the committee on judiciary, had reported. After they had reported and Congress had adopted its report, he then left, having accomplished little, so far as direct results were concerned. How much they may have accomplished by having the privilege of talking to men of influence upon the matter, we do not know. It may be that there was much good done by telling the sufferings of these people to these representative men, who would go elsewhere and report in favor of the Saints, and thus make it more tolerable for them. Somehow, I seem to feel that the mission of those men to Washington brought them more fruit than they realized at the time; the effect had on men at that time has had its effect throughout the country, and we may to-day be reaping the fruits of their mission. It will be perhaps best for us in this connection, as it is the important document in the case, to read to you the report of the committee on judiciary to the United States Senate:

The committee on the judiciary to whom was referred the memorial of a delegation of the Latter Day Saints, report:

The petition of the memorialists set forth in substance that a portion of their sect commenced a settlement in the county of Jackson, in the state of Missouri, in the summer of 1831; that they bought lands, built houses, erected churches, and established their homes, and engaged in all the various occupations of life; that they were expelled from that county in 1833 by a mob, under circumstances of great outrage, cruelty, and oppression, and against all law, and without any offense committed on their part, and to the destruction of property to the amount of $120,000; that the society thus expelled amounted to about 12,000 souls; that no compensation was ever made for the destruction of their property in Jackson; that after their expulsion from Jackson County they settled in Clay County, on the opposite side of the Missouri River, where they purchased lands, and entered others at the land office; where they resided peaceably for three years, engaged in cultivation and other useful and active employments, when the mob again threatened their peace, lives, and property; and they became alarmed, and finally made a treaty with the citizens of Clay County, that they should purchase their lands, and the Saints should remove; which was complied with on their part, and the Saints removed to the county of Caldwell, where they took up their abode and reestablished their settlement, not without heavy pecuniary losses and other inconveniences; that the citizens of Clay County never paid them for their lands, except for a small part; they remained in Caldwell from 1836 until the fall of 1838, and during that time had acquired, by purchase from the government, the settlers, and pre-emptioners almost all the lands in the county of Caldwell and a portion of the lands in Daviess and Carroll Counties—the former county being almost entirely settled by the Saints, and they were rapidly filling up the two latter counties.

Those counties, when the Saints first commenced their settlement, were for the most part wild and uncultivated, and they had converted them into large and well-improved farms, well stocked. Land had risen in value to ten or even twenty-five dollars per acre, and these counties were rapidly advancing in cultivation and wealth.

That in August, 1838, a riot commenced, growing out of an attempt of a Saint to vote, which resulted in creating great excitement and the perpetration of many scenes of lawless outrage, which are set forth in the petition. That they were finally compelled to fly from those counties, and on the 11th October, 1838, they sought safety by that means, with their families, leaving many of their effects behind. That they had previously applied to the constituted authorities of Missouri for protection, but in vain. They allege that they were pursued by the mob; that conflicts ensued; deaths occurred on each side; and finally a force was organized under the authority of the Governor of the state of Missouri, with orders to drive the Saints from the State, or exterminate them. The Saints thereupon determined to make no further resistance, but to submit themselves to the authorities of the State.

Several of the Saints were arrested and imprisoned on a charge of treason against the State, and the rest, amounting to about 15,000 souls, fled into other States, principally in Illinois, where they now reside.

The petition is drawn up at great length, and sets forth with feeling and eloquence the wrongs of which they complain; justifies their own conduct, and aggravates that of those whom they call their persecutors, and concludes by saying they see no redress, unless it be obtained of the Congress of the United States, to whom they make their solemn, last appeal, as American citizens, as Christians, and as men; to which decision they say they will submit.

The committee have examined the case presented by the petition, and heard the views urged by their agent, with care and attention; and after full examination and consideration, unanimously concur in the opinion—

That the case presented for their investigation is not such a one as will justify or authorize any interposition by this government.

The wrongs complained of are not alleged to be committed by any of the officers of the United States, or under the authority of its government in any manner whatever. The allegations in the petition relate to the acts of its citizens, and inhabitants and authorities of the state of Missouri, of which State the petitioners were at the time citizens or inhabitants.

The grievances complained of in the petition are alleged to have been done within the territory of the state of Missouri. The committee under these circumstances have not considered themselves justified in inquiring into the truth or falsehood of the facts charged in the petition. If they are true, the petitioners must seek relief in the courts of judicature of the state of Missouri, or of the United States, which has the appropriate jurisdiction to administer full and adequate redress for the wrongs complained of, and doubtless will do so fairly and impartially; or the petitioners may, if they see proper, apply to the justice and magnanimity of the state of Missouri—an appeal which the committee feel justified in believing will never be made in vain by the injured or oppressed.

It can never be presumed that a State either wants the power or lacks the disposition to redress the wrongs of its own citizens, committed within her own territory, whether they proceed from the lawless acts of her officers or any other persons. The committee therefore report that they recommend the passage of the following resolution:

“Resolved, That the committee on the judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial in this case; and that the memorialists have leave to withdraw the papers which accompany their memorial.”

That report was adopted. Thus redress was put beyond the possibility of attainment from the Congress, and it was unnecessary for Judge Higbee to remain, as he could do no more than he had done. That old doctrine of “State’s rights” had something to do with this decision, and that question had much to do with a subsequent period, and the deluging of our fair country in blood. Had it been settled properly at that time, we do not know how many consequences that afterwards attached to this country, might have been averted, but we place this report of the committee before you without further comment, and in connection with it we present before you the action of the church at the General Conference in April, 1840, upon this report. Their action was the adoption of the report of a committee, who reported the following:

Whereas, we learn with deep sorrow, regret, and disappointment that the committee on judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (commonly called Mormons) complaining of the grievances suffered by them in the State of Missouri, have reported unfavorably to our cause, to justice and humanity.

Therefore,

Resolved, 1st. That we consider the report of the committee on judiciary unconstitutional and subversive of the rights of a free people; and justly calls for the disapprobation of all the supporters and lovers of good government and republican principles.

Resolved, 2d. That the committee state in their report that our memorial aggravated the case of our oppressors, and at the same time say that they have not examined into the truth or falsehoods of the facts mentioned in said memorial.

Resolved, 3d. That the memorial does not aggravate the conduct of our oppressors, as every statement set forth in said memorial was substantiated by indubitable testimony, therefore, we consider the statement of the committee in regard to that part as false and ungenerous.

Resolved, 4th. That that part of the report referring us to the justice and magnanimity of the State of Missouri for redress, we deem it a great insult to our good sense, better judgment, and intelligence, when from numerous affidavits which were laid before the committee proved that we could only go into the State of Missouri contrary to the exterminating order of the Governor, and consequently at the risk of our lives.

Resolved, 5th. That after repeated appeals to the constituted authorities of the State of Missouri for redress, which were in vain, we fondly hoped that in the Congress of the United States ample justice would have been rendered us; and upon that consideration alone, we pledged ourselves to abide their decision.

Resolved, 6th. That the exterminating order of Governor Boggs is a direct infraction of the Constitution of the United States, and of the State of Missouri; and the committee in refusing to investigate the proceedings of [the] Executive and others of the State of Missouri, and turning a deaf ear to the cries of widows, orphans, and innocent blood, we deem no less than seconding the proceedings of that murderous mob, whose deeds are recorded in heaven, and justly calls down upon their heads the righteous judgments of an offended God.

Resolved, 7th. That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to the citizens of the State of Illinois for their kind, liberal, and generous conduct towards us; and that we call upon them, as well as every patriot in this vast republic, to aid us in all lawful endeavors to obtain redress for the injuries we have sustained.

Resolved, 8th. That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to the delegation of Illinois, for their bold, manly, noble, and independent course they have taken in presenting our case before the authorities of the nation, amid misrepresentation, contumely, and abuse which characterized us in our suffering condition.

Resolved, 9th. That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to Governor Carlin, of Illinois, Governor Lucas, of Iowa, for their sympathy, aid, and protection; and to all other honorable gentlemen who have assisted us in our endeavors to obtain redress.

Resolved, 10th. That Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, and Elias Higbee, the delegates appointed by this church to visit the city of Washington to present our sufferings before the authorities of the nation, accept of the thanks of this meeting for the prompt and efficient manner in which they have discharged their duty; and that they be requested in the behalf of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints throughout the world to continue to use their endeavors to obtain redress for a suffering people; and if all hopes of obtaining satisfaction (for the injuries done us) be entirely blasted, that they then appeal our case to the court of heaven, believing that the great Jehovah, who rules over the destiny of nations and who notices the falling sparrow, will undoubtedly redress our wrongs and ere long avenge us of our adversaries.

It was then resolved that the report of the committee on judiciary, as well as the foregoing preamble and resolutions, be published in the Quincy papers.

The committee drafting these resolutions were Robert D. Foster, Orson Hyde, John E. Page, Joseph Wood, and Robert B. Thompson. You will observe that they resolved if they failed in getting redress anywhere on earth to appeal their case to the court of heaven. It is presumable the committee did its duty and the case is left there. It is not our business to enter into this case here, and will let it rest in the hands of Him to whom it is appealed. Whatever is right will finally be done. This world can not pass exact judgement upon those acts, in fact they have no jurisdiction now in the case; it has been appealed to a higher court, unto the great Jehovah. There we are satisfied to let it rest, only mentioning it as a historical fact.

The points of political doctrine that are involved in this question we do not feel free to discuss. The committee in Congress thought that redress, if any, should come from the state of Missouri. The United States had no power to enter in and investigate such matters. That was the question upon which this report was based. That question can be solved in the upper court as well as all others, so far as it applies to this case. So far as the doctrine involved is concerned, it has been largely conceded that under certain circumstances the United States' authorities may interfere when the state authorities are unable or unwilling to command the peace; but, so far as that particular case is concerned, it has gone up to a higher court and we are not disposed to argue it here. I have simply presented these matters to you to give you an understanding as to the position the church occupied when they entered the state of Illinois and settled there, when they founded what was afterwards known as Nauvoo. When they began their cases they began with the sympathy of the people of Illinois, who defended their rights through their representatives in Congress. But on the other hand there was no earthly tribunal to whom they could appeal; they had tried every way they knew; they had gone to the Legislature of Missouri, they had appealed to the courts of Missouri, to the United States' authorities and to the President, and to Congress and found no redress. Under these conditions, with the good feeling and good will of their neighbors around them, they began a new settlement in the state of Illinois. Their rapid rise and the founding and prosperity of the city of Nauvoo we may possibly discuss in the future.

POLITICAL LIBERTY IN AMERICA BEFORE COLUMBUS.

We find it stated in the Book of Mormon that America was to be a land of liberty, and later we find Moroni holding aloft that which he called the standard of liberty and calling upon the people to fight for freedom.

This with other items of like import have been made the occasion by some of criticism, on the grounds that it is unreasonable to suppose that so many centuries ago such advanced ideas of political liberty should have been entertained in America, while the Old World was yet under the heel of despotism.

Such individuals should read the writing of Charles F. Lummis concerning the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. The following extracts are from his book entitled, "The Land of Poco Tiempo:"

"New Mexico is the anomaly of the Republic. It is a century older in European civilization than the rest, and several centuries older still in a happy semi-civilization of its own. It had its little walled cities of stone before Columbus had grandparents-to-be: and it has them yet."—Page 3.

"There are Indians who are neither poor nor naked, Indians who feed themselves and ask no favors of Washington. Indians who have been at peace for two centuries and fixed residents for perhaps a millennium; Indians who were farmers and irrigators and six-story-house builders before a New World had been beaten through the thick skull of the old; . . . they had nearly a hundred republics in America centuries before the American Republic was conceived; and they have maintained their ancient democracy through the ages unshamed by the corruption of a voter."—Page 7.

"Popular institutions were before us, even in our own land. Before history was this peculiar people had solved the problem in their own peculiar way, and there were hundreds of American "republics" ahead of Columbus. Every Pueblo town was an autonomic commonwealth and is so still. . . . The Pueblo social organization is essentially democratic. . . . All dignitaries are reached by election, or in their inner cult by selection. There is constant watchfulness against any dynastic tendency. More than anywhere in civilization, the official is server of the people, and he is never recreant to his trust."—Pages 40, 41.

These were evidently true principles learned from the Nephites. There are evidences of things not so admirable learned from recreant Nephites. The following from the same book strikingly reminds one of the days and ways of the secret societies of Gadianton in their mountain fastnesses:

There is one Acoma. [A Pueblo town in Western New Mexico.—E. A. S.] It is a class by itself. The peer of it is not in the world. I might call it the Quéres Gibraltar; but Gibraltar is a pregnable place beside it. It is the Quebec of the Southwest; but Quebec could be stormed in the time an army climbed Acoma unopposed. . . .

Upon the bare table-top of this strange stone island of the desert, seven thousand feet above the level of the sea, stands a town of matchless interest—the home of a half a thousand quaint lives, and of a half a thousand years romance. How old is that skie city no man may know. . . .

Such to the casual eye are the folk of Acoma, and such their surroundings; but as one looks, there grows consciousness of the mystery within. Here and there are windowless rooms, reached only by a trap door in the roof and by a tall rude ladder topped by mystic symbols. No stranger may enter there; but white headed principales climb in and out, and strange muffled songs float off over the housetops far into the night, with now and then the dull beat of the tombé; and now and then is the watcher aware of an invisible spiral of smoke curling above the dark hatchway—from the sacred fire that never died nor never shall. . . . In the houses are mysterious symbols which the stranger dare not touch. . . . Everywhere are these hints of solemn mysteries, into which the visitor shall do well not to pry. In a dizzy eyrie of the southern mesa, safe enough from the inquisitive, is perched a perfect cliff house—startling link back to antiquity. Few strangers have ever seen it; few ever will, for the climb is a neck's worth; but there it is, gray impassive relic of the forgotten. . . . When old men meet and part you may see that each takes the other's hand to his mouth and breathes from it, and that when they smoke they blow the first six puffs to different directions. Every man wears a pouch which money will not unlock. Each knows words which he may not utter aloud in finite presence. Each has goings out and comings in which none must spy upon. And so at every turn are hints and flashes of the unknown and the unknowable, the pettiest of which you shall try in vain to fathom.—Page 57, 74, 75, 76.

One is reminded also of another people of later date who have taken to the mountains and have their secret chambers into which none may enter, their secret signs and grips, and words that may not be uttered to any human being this side of the resurrection.

Mr. Lummis has spent many years in the region of which he writes. He is a careful observer, and another unwitting witness to the truth of the Book of Mormon.

Liberty was not born with the Declaration of Independence, it is the child of America, given of God and coeval with the ages.

It has been the spirit and genius of the choice land ever since the brother of Jared in the misty dawn of time stepped from his barges and preempted the virgin soil in the name of God.

TRACTS.

We are told the prospect is good in Missouri for plenty of water and we are having a foretaste now, for there has been during several hours quite a steady sprinkling of welcome rain. The farmers in some sections are buying seed and already arranging to plant a large acreage.

Bro. J. W. Layton who has recently returned home from Colorado has brought with him over a hundred pounds of seed of the luscious and far-famed Rock-ford melon.

While mentioning this we can not but think of the sporadic seed of truth that will soon be distributed far and wide through the Kansas Cities and this the center place. The brethren and sisters most interested in this kind of work will be energetically employed for a few weeks at least: for we should not only take thought of what is going on in the world around us but also of the spiritual welfare of our neighbors, and be willing to lend a helping hand in all good work. Why, people sometimes think a tract is of no more work than a match or taper, or any old thing to light the lamp or fire with. They do not know what is in a tract any more than some others do in a Stake Sunday-school association. There will be or ought to be two hundred delegates the more at our next convention Religio and Sunday-school to be held in Kansas City in a few days.

Both the tract and conventions aim high and are factors of Expansive Education. They both are at work in the rich harvest-field of human development, and ought, in their several functions, to move out into the cities and extend abroad in the open country.

Stacks of tracts are lying upon the church publishing house shelves; and what a power for good they might be and are out in the world among the honest investigators of the truth. Many would soon become more interested in them than in King Edward's coronation, or the admirals' or emperors' yachts though they be "all ship-shape and Bristol fashion."

"Were it not wisdom then to close our eyes
On duties crowding only to appall?
No! Duty is our ladder to the skies,
And, climbing not, we fall."

"Duty is infinite Receding as the skies."

Can we find a higher sentiment than this which we quote from one of the little Gospel Banners: "It is he that endures evils, that meets foes and opposition, who shines in the splendor of integrity and true principles, that stands in the defense of truth, who is loyal in the midst of enemies, that is true to God under trial and temptation: it is the man that can endure these things—endure to the end—that shall be saved." Dear reader, this is from "The Law of Life."

Then from "The Modern Knowledge of the Antiquities of America" we notice this: "Inspiration may tell mankind as to the truth or falsity of theories or speculations held by men, and also give information and understanding as to how certain events were brought to pass."

"The Restoration of Israel" is a most interesting tract to the Saints who are watching for the fulfillment of prophecy and the movements of the Zionist Congress, and of the National Colonization.

We look at another of the satin-covered little booklets, three inches by five, and we read, "Why I left the Baptist Church:" and another weighty with potencies like the rest answers, "Is water baptism essential to salvation?" And a calm, earnest face looks at us from the fly leaf, a face, which, like all the rest in the pygmean array, speaks of trials overcome, through travails of weary yet hopeful years.

Another pilgrim of the cross tells with pathos the story of "the Reorganization," of the long fastings and prayers and watchings for the fulfillment of the word of prophecy to him and his fellow laborers, ever exhorting them to be patient and hopeful in the Lord.

How the heart throbs and the spirit yearns for help and comfort and blessing to reward the loving labors of his faithful ministry as we read of the oft-repeated admonition to the brethren struggling with doubt, "Let patience have its perfect work!"

Encouraged by the Spirit, receiving revelation from time to time concerning the coming forth of the true successor, he wrought diligently for the looked-for promise made to him and his brethren.

"The Marriage Relation," "The Two Ways" have no doubt opened many eyes to the sacred truths of the latter-day work: and to those who never read the Book of Mormon but simply glanced it over let the humble writer prescribe: Take this little roseate-colored banner of Bro. R. C. Evans, whose portrait greets you as you open it: as you look at it remember his youth: think of his strugglings from the entanglements of the world: note the fastings, the prayers for help, for strength and light that he might be worthy to receive and impart saving truths to the benighted minds of his fellow men. As the dim light glimmers and the weary head would feign rest upon the pillow, think of the answered petition and the glorious truths revealed to him concerning this latter-day work and America's most early history, and the sure, true, and only solution to the archæological problem of to-day. Examine this little gem earnestly, prayerfully, and you can realize how grand, how infinitely more brilliant with the Spirit must be the book itself of which he treats.

All these and scores of tracts and little leaflets like "Questions and Answers," "Do You Want More Light," and No. 7, "Who Can Be Saved," written, some of them, in the early days of the Reorganization, are full of living truths, and represent the glorious revelations of God's will to his Saints and the world. In them are thoughts for a sermon, spiritual suggestions that may well take the place of the philosophies and theories of men. No. 7 is an old-fashioned tract, and the name under the title of it is of all names in the English language the commonest and the owner of it most beloved by about fifty thousand of the best types of humanity. Innumerable questions are answered, questions that gather spontaneously as thick and fast as those of a Wu-ting-fang.

Passages we have read over and over again without thought take on a clearer aspect. In this two-leaved tract is food for thought, and with a sweet pleading spirit it commends itself to the brethren, asking that it be handed to your neighbor and ascertain whether the Scriptures testify of these things. Indited by the Spirit it incites to thought and meditation.

So then let us gather in; and then whether in springtime or harvest our reward shall appear for the faithful scattering of the precious seeds of truth.

DOES IT MATTER WHAT A MAN BELIEVES?

There is in the general unsettlement and laxity of thought to-day a widespread feeling that creed does not matter and life is everything. It is of no importance whether you hold the ordinary religious opinion or not, whether you are Catholic, Protestant, Mohammedan, or Buddhist. This feeling has enough foundation in truth to make it plausible and it carries with it enough error to make it dangerous.

Used as a reason for depreciating slight and insignificant differences of opinion it is wholly good. Used as a reason for turning attention from abstract religious speculations to the practice, the conduct, in which religion finds its expression, it is wholesome. Used as a criterion for testing dogmas and ideas which are antiquated, unreal, out of touch with life as we have to live it, the popular formula, "not creed, but life," may liberate the mind from many shackles and burdens.

But the peril arises when we push to an extreme the notion which has a limited value; when, because certain beliefs are false or indifferent, and it does not matter whether we believe them or not, we conclude that it does not matter what we believe at all; when, because these beliefs have influenced conduct prejudicially or failed to influence it altogether, we maintain that conduct is, or can be, entirely separated from belief.

Now if we come to grapple with the question we shall find that so far from its not mattering what we believe, what we believe makes us what we are, good, bad, or indifferent. What we believe we are or become. Thought is the sail that carries the ship. Your mind—that is, you—is made up of the images, the beliefs, the convictions which gradually accumulate in the course of experience. What you believe determines your general course and determines particular details. But more, it determines you. You are really the sum of your beliefs, as a tree is the sum of the earth juices and the atmospheric influences which gave it form and life. "Not creed, but life," is your formula. But its universal application melts away as you come to recognize that your creed makes your life. Thought is determinative. Truth, as it shapes itself to you, as it is assimilated by you, becomes you. Religious, irreligious, Christian or unchristian, good or evil, you are in the last resort the product of your creed. To change your ultimate creed is to change yourself. The creed is life.

Every human mind must have some belief. It must be atheist, pantheist, deist, or Christian. To be atheist means that the mind believes there is no power intrinsically greater or nobler than itself; man becomes his own God; his worship is offered to himself. But pantheism, whether in the great religious systems of India or in the noble philosophical conception of Spinoza, produces an effect not different from atheism. God is conceived as the sum of all things, the one substance in which mind and matter alike are accidents. In this conception the distinction between man and God and even that between right and wrong disappears.

Taking a broad view of religious truth as a gradual growth we may say that the atheist or pantheism of Buddhism is at a lower stage than the deism of Mohammedanism, and that the Christian belief of God as the Father and Christ as the Son and the Holy Spirit as the eminence of God represents a truer because a fuller revelation of God. Now, according to our contention, to this difference in belief will correspond a difference of character and conduct. He would be a bold man, who with China, Turkey, and England before him as the products of three different religions, should venture to assert that it does not matter what men believe.

China, gross, stolid, cruel, intellectual but not progressive, civilized and yet decaying, is the result of believing in no God. Turkey, brave, simple, sober, but hard, fanatical, corrupt in administration and unspiritual in religion, is the result of the deism of Mohammed. England is free, just, progressive, merciful, and contains a core of spiritual and Christ-like people.

Belief makes nations as it makes men; it makes nations because it makes men. In view of a broad fact like this, who shall say that it does not matter what we believe? It were truer to say what we believe is the only thing that does matter. Let us take the deist view in contrast with the Christian view of God. There are no people more insistent on the view that conduct, not creed, is the important element in religion than those who take the deistic view. God is conceived of as a transcendent, holy, powerful being, who, having produced this universe, rules it, as it were from a distance. Man and God are essentially apart. The idea of God becoming man is scouted as irreverent. Man may become in a sense the child of God, but must remain for ever apart from the being who made him. This belief powerfully influences the character of those who hold it. They have a sense of duty, endeavor to live good lives; they are not without a reverent love to that unknown and inscrutable being whom they worship. On the other hand, the effort to be good produces a certain conscientiousness of merit and subtle feeling of superiority to less thoughtful and less strenuous people. At the same time the isolation from God implies an isolation from men. And people with this form of belief become hard and cold. But now in contrast with this take the Christian belief. You believe that God is so related to men that his only begotten Son could become man. You believe that in the human person you see the light of the glory of the knowledge of God. God is not vague and inscrutable; he is not far in his heaven; God has come nigh to us, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Above all things, God in Jesus Christ is the most powerful appeal that can be directed to the heart of man, the most effectual method of softening its hardness and bringing out of the rock the waters of love. For here is God not only condescending to human life but stooping to human death, and that the death of the cross, not only bearing in sympathy the sickness and weakness of men, but enduring in his death the brunt of their sins. Here is God seeking sinful men as a shepherd searches for his lost sheep. It can not be disputed that such a belief influences character and conduct. Such a belief alone can produce that type of life, that quality and tone of spirit, which is recognized as specifically Christian.—Reverend Robert F. Horton, in Chicago Sunday Tribune, February 9, 1902.

A very curious bi-literal cipher which has been discovered by Mrs. Gallup running through the first editions of Bacon's works, has excited wide interest in the literary world. This cipher consists of the use of two wrong-font letters at intervals, combinations of these two letters in groups of five constituting an alphabet. These repetitions of a wrong-font letter can not have been matters of chance. Whether placed there by Lord Bacon or by the printer, remains in doubt. If by the printer, they relate a wonderful romance—the story of Queen Elizabeth's marriage to the Earl of Leicester when both were confined in the Tower prior to the Queen's accession; the birth of two sons, of whom Lord Bacon was the elder, the Earl of Essex the other. Lord Bacon considered himself the heir to the throne of England. The bi-literal cipher further tells that Queen Elizabeth condemned her own son, the Earl of Essex, to death. The Cosmopolitan for March contains an article by Professor Garrett P. Serviss fully reviewing this remarkable romance—if it is concluded to have been inserted by the printer—or tragedy if inserted by Lord Bacon.

GUTHRIE, Oklahoma, March 5.

Editors Herald: By the above date I am reminded that just nine years ago I was ordained an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ. At that time I had my mind firmly fixed to spend my life in the service of God by living and preaching the restored gospel. The experiences of that nine years have been to strengthen my resolve and have made me firmer in the faith. They have been the happiest years of my life. And while I have made mistakes, by ignorance or otherwise, I am thankful that the loving Father has been kind to me, for I have shared his tender mercies. I count it a glorious privilege to be engaged in this latter-day work, a work that is divine and can be advanced and maintained by true and honorable methods. The work of those who oppose us is to me additional evidence that our cause is true. Men who labor in the interest of God's work need not use ridicule, slander, and abuse to defeat opponents.

But the eyes of some are blinded, both without and within the church, and they permit themselves to be servants in a bad cause. The pride of this world and the praise of men is an influence that some can not resist, and they have therefore drifted out from the path of right. The natural disposition of men to love high places, high rank, "upper seats in the synagogue," etc., is an influence hard for some to resist. I had known some to fail in faith and leave the church for no other reason than that the church would not grant them the position which they craved. They saw others of the church walking on high stilts, as it were, and they cried for a pair; and because they were not provided they became peevish and fretful and said, "If I can not have my way I'll sit down in the mud." And down they sat. But as the Spirit has told us, "This is the sifting time;" and as the Scripture says of some, "They went out from us, but they were not of us:" so in this day of battle we can not expect to win in the conflict without some lose, without some falling by the way. But those cheering words in song should revive us: "Sure I must fight if I would reign, increase my courage, Lord."

Our district conference at Oak Grove Branch, near Sumner, was fairly good. The stormy weather prevented some from attending. The preaching by Brn. James M. Baggerly and H. O. Smith was good. The former gave us a rare treat in a lecture on archæology, "The Ancient races of America." The latter gave two excellent sermons on Christian life, life as Saints. Our work is advancing in Oklahoma. In fact, it will advance wherever and whenever the proper labor is performed both by Saints and ministers. This mission has been better supplied the last three or four years than it was before, and the result is very apparent. I hope the force will not be diminished, but increased. There are hundreds of places in Oklahoma where "our gospel" has not yet been heard.

I am now at a new place, eight miles south of Guthrie, at the home of Bro. Thomas Kent. Bro. Kent has lived here four years, and this is the first visit by any of our elders. Commenced meeting last night at Charter Oak Schoolhouse, with good audience. Will continue this week and next unless prevented. From here I expect to go to Servado, visit Bro. Ralston's family whom I visited nearly two years ago; but since then they have had none of our brethren to visit them. Will then work west via Dewey County and thence to Redmoon, where I have been requested to come and hold meetings.

I am informed we are going to lose our apostate brother, Frank F. Vrooman, from Dewey County, as I learn he is going to Nebraska. He has received baptism at the hands of the Baptists, and will no doubt be their "big" preacher.

As I understand, the success of this latter-day work does not depend on getting many into the church, but rather the spiritual complexion of those who are in. Charity is one of the beautiful attributes of God's nature, one of the leading characteristics of Christ as exemplified in his life; and yet he said: "Cast not your pearls before swine." So I hope to have wisdom sufficient to guide me at such times when I should bestow charity and when to withhold.

I regret not being able to attend the coming General Conference, as they have been a great help to me. How distinctly do I remember the priesthood-meeting at last General Conference when the prophet of God stood and gave those words by the Spirit. That supreme peace and quietness, that stillness, that power which caused our hearts to rejoice and our minds to know that God's influence was near us. That was a glorious experience for me. All my nature was fully awakened to the fact that God's power was there and his Spirit prompted the words spoken.

It was in December, 1899, when I wrote my last letter to your columns: but I have not been silent because of lack of interest in the HERALD or the restored gospel. The HERALD can live on and prosper without my aid, the church would also advance and Zion would flourish and grow if I, like others, would step out or "fall asleep." But I need the aid of the HERALD and the church of God and his people. So I shall in turn do what I can for Zion and her children. For among all the religions in the world, Christian and others, there is to me but one system that can attract my admiration or enlist my support, and that is found in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Lord has blessed me in my labors; both in preaching, and defending his work when attacked by the enemy.

I have hope and confidence in the triumph of Israel.

WOODBINE, Iowa, March 12.

Dear Herald Readers: From January 12 to 26 I held services in the Christian church at Thurman, Iowa, and when weather was pleasant had a large attendance of apparently attentive listeners; but when weather was cold and stormy not so many in attendance, yet had attentive audiences throughout, leaving the people much better acquainted with why we believe in a restoration, and what we believe is restored.

From January 28 to February 2 held seven services at McPaul, with increasing interest, although the weather was quite cold part of the time. Here, as at Thurman, I was kindly cared for, and material wants looked after quite liberally at the latter place.

February 3 I began meetings at Hamburg, which from the first showed there was much interest among the people, which interest continued to manifest itself till the close which occurred on the 6th inst. The interest was such that the little church, though seated to its utmost capacity, could not accommodate the people who wished to hear, so through the kindness of the city council we were offered the use of the city hall, which though it would seat over three hundred was a few times well occupied, and most of the time about two hundred or over came as interested listeners, several expressing regret that we should close so soon although we had continued over four weeks continuously. Four entered into covenant with God through the waters of regeneration, all adults, and many renewed their covenants, and entered anew into the service of God, among whom was Father Beckstead, who had become discouraged and yielded to temptation, and although he has a great battle to fight, and needs the prayers of all of God's people, yet he is determined by the help of God to overcome. His confession was made just as public as were his transgressions, a fitting example for many another. A few bore the financial burden, with a willingness, for whom there is a reward, a fitting example for all.

Bro. Charles Fry aided me very much after the district conference on February 22 and 23, preceded by the convention on the evening of February 20. At the convention a district organization of Zion's Religio-Literary Society was effected consisting of four locals, Henderson, Tabor, Bartlett, and Shenandoah, with a request for an organization at Hamburg, which will b-organized, nothing preventing, before General Conference. District Religio officers are J. F. Mintun, president; Emily Fry, assistant president; Ora Beckstead, secretary; and Agnes Dunsdon, treasurer. The conventions and conference transacted business speedily and peacefully. A. Badham was elected district president and Charles Fry district secretary, the latter being reelected district superintendent of Sunday-school association.

I returned home the 7th inst. to take a much needed rest, and see loved ones again, and look after some business that had matured during my absence from home. Expect after a short rest to return to the mission to remain till conference time.

On the evening of the 6th inst., just previous to the services, I was called upon to perform the ceremony that made Sr. Jessie J. Lambert, and Mr. Oneous Cupp "one flesh," just a few of the friends being present. Mr. Cupp appears to be one who will make Sr. Jessie a companionable husband, and we trust ere long will be one with her in the gospel covenant.

My joy in gospel services continues to increase, and the future for the ultimate triumph of the work of God grows brighter. Some say in their heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and are spending precious time seeking after the vain and transitory things of the world, and are losing spiritually; yet many are drawing nearer to God, especially the young of the church.

VICTOR, Idaho, March 5.

Editors Herald: I left Malad City, February 23 to go to the aid of Bro. John Condit at Driggs, Idaho, where the authorities of the Teton Stake had accepted a challenge to debate the issues with him. They had arranged for four sessions of two and one half hours each, Elder Samuel Dalley to represent the Utah faction and to affirm two nights that their church was in legal succession. The first two sessions were devoted to our affirming a like proposition for the Reorganized Church.

Before leaving Malad we baptized a Sr. Lynch, of Snowville, and canceled an appointment for Sunday night. Mr. Noel Waylet kindly brought me to the railroad at Downey, a distance of twenty-two miles, over very bad roads most of the way. We trust he may be brought to rejoice in the light of the gospel soon as partial reward for his kindness and interest in the missionary work. We were not so fortunate in reaching Driggs from St. Anthony, the terminus of that branch of the Oregon Short Line railroad. The distance to Driggs was about fifty miles and the mail wagon being loaded another unfortunate and myself engaged a team to take us to Haden for $3.75 each, reaching there in time to get part of a night's rest and go on with the mail next morning.

An incident that detracted nothing from the sensational feature of the ride was being capsized in the sleigh, the cover of which was nailed down all around, and four passengers and driver snugly packed in with mail sacks, baggage, etc., and a hot stove in front barring our egress and threatening a conflagration. Ye editor could have made an amusing write-up if he could have witnessed the spectacle; but self-preservation was the one idea just then, and the writer especially felt a relief when he got untangled and from underneath a heavier man and emerged from the smoke and ashes into a clearer atmosphere. Luckily we escaped a fire and the only loss so far as we were concerned was a little blood from an abused nose. But we completed our journey in good time, too late however to assist in the first session of debate.

We were told that about one hundred teams were present the first night, and during the remaining sessions the attendance was no less, as the house was packed each night. The second and third nights the seats were moved out and they made merry in the dance, of course opening them with prayer, however. But the members and friends of our side of the controversy did not participate, preferring to sleep a part of the appointed time for slumber and be mentally prepared to weigh the arguments presented.

The people conceded the Josephites had the best speaker, but of course the Mormons boast of a victory. However, our members feel well, and Bro. John led two into baptism last Sunday, and others are nearer the door than before they heard the debate.

Roberts' revised edition of "Succession" was used throughout by Elder Dalley, the "Sufficient answer to the Josephites" being the strongest argument used. Bro. Joseph's Chicago speech, his interview with Spencer, and William Smith's testimony in Temple Lot Suit as reported by Roberts were introduced, and all denied, the corrected reports presented instead, and William Smith's testimony in the Abstract of Evidence shown to be directly in conflict with Roberts' purported extract. Polygamy, "blood atonement," "Adam-god," "living oracles," "secret endowments," "Utah Zion," "Christ not begotten of the Holy Ghost," etc., were hurled at them as evidences of a departure from the faith, and an attempt was made by Elder Dalley to defend the doctrines, except the last one, but he did not deny Brigham having taught that.

The seven women argument was used in support of polygamy; but when the third chapter of Isaiah was turned on he accused Bro. John of slurring the fair daughters of Utah, forgetting that he and not our man had made the application. In support of "blood atonement" he went to the law of Moses, also quoted 1 Corinthians 5: 5.

Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3; 77: 3; Daniel 7: 9-22, and Exodus 4: 16 were used in defense of "Adam-God." These were brought in in his closing speech and no chance for reply. In defense of secret endowments he quoted Matthew 17: 9.

The decision of the courts in the Kirtland Temple and Temple Lot suits and prosecutions for unlawful cohabitations were brought to bear, but Elder Dalley declared he cared nothing for the laws of the land or the decisions of these courts, but depended upon God.

Bro. Richard Drake, Sr., acted as moderator for Bro. John, the presiding moderator being a man of their faith.

Intense interest was manifest throughout, covered sleighs coming in through the storm from miles out, and ourselves with most of our members driving nine miles and back each night.

The interest here remains excellent, the Lord confirming the word with signs following. Several important blessings occurring through administrations, for which we praise the Lord.

Dear Herald: I have thought for a long time I would write to you. My home is at McNiel, and is just in front of the State farm.

I am just a boy of thirteen years, and my father is a carpenter, and we run a farm also. My father takes the SAINTS' HERALD, and I would like to write to it often. My grandma belongs to the Latter Day Saints. She was baptized by Heman C. Smith. She is a better old lady than I ever saw. We have prayer every night she is with us. Grandma prays to hear Heman C. Smith again.

Editors Herald: In my last letter to HERALD I mentioned my loss of satchel, books, clothing, etc. Bro. T. G. Whipple traced same and forwarded to me. I received it last night, for which I feel thankful. Will you please note this in your next issue, as many of the Saints will be glad to hear it has been recovered. Some prospects now of my attending conference, as I have some help proffered. R. BULLARD.

MAY, Oklahoma, March 7.

Editors Herald: I have long put off writing to the HERALD; but I know some one else can not do my duty, so will do the best I can, with God's help; and if it should help even one, I will feel repaid.

Since we left Iowa, November 26, we have not heard a gospel sermon. It seems longer than it really has been, but it has been the longest time we ever went without hearing a sermon since we came in the church. There are no Saints in here yet to our knowledge; but Brn. S. J. Richardson and Willie Barrett have claims close to us. There are no meetings close; but the Baptists have meetings at May, our post-office, about eight miles northeast of here.

There are no schoolhouses yet, but our house is always open, and if any of the elders should chance to pass this way we will make them as comfortable as possible. Although poor in this world's goods yet we want to do something to help the great work along.

We would like to have Sunday-school in our house this summer. We miss the Sunday-school so much. Sister Bessie and I have not been out even one evening since we came here. We spend a portion of each evening reading a chapter of the Book of Mormon aloud. We have had two invitations to box suppers, but we thought it would be best not to begin that kind of work.

If there should be any Saints around here who read this, please address us at May so we can find you.

Our nearest railroad station is Gage, and the hack comes out from there every other day to May. We live about fourteen miles straight west of Camp Supply, and about ten miles from the Texas line. I tell this so if any one can make us a visit he will have no trouble in finding us.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may do our duty and set an example before all that is worthy to imitate.

We take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Hope, and would hardly know how to get along without them.

I would like to be with the Saints at General Conference this year but can not on account of making the big move we did last year.

I often think of the dear Saints and wish I could gather with them; then again I think of the elders who have to go so far from home and among strangers, and think that possibly God has a hand in our locating here, that we may be the means of the gospel reaching some here: so I try to be contented, for I know God does all things for our good, and we should try to please him.

I ever pray for the advancement of truth. Your sister,
JOSIE M. BLAKESLEY.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, March 6.

Saints' Herald:—I am still in the conflict. We have great opposition to contend against in Texas. Possibly more than in any other part of the United States, for we have people here from every State in the Union, and from most all nations, too, and the most hardened sinners you ever saw; yet they have souls to save or to be lost. It is hard to get them to hear the gospel anywhere, yet we hope, work, and pray, and expect to until the end of the conflict.

On February 21 started to district conference in Falls County about fifty miles from home, but oh, what a snow-storm I encountered! But I arrived in due time, and we had a splendid conference from beginning to end. We appointed a committee to arrange to hold a reunion somewhere in the district next summer. I think it will be held in July. We expect to have a good time then, and desire all interested to make the best efforts they can to make the meeting a success. Commence now and continue until the meeting, and God will bless us.

We hope the General Conference will do the best it can for us in the way of missionaries. We want missionaries who will push out and open up new places. We think the local ministry can take care of the local organization in Texas. We look forward to the next year and hope for an ingathering of good material in Texas. So may it be. I never felt better spiritually in my life. God has blessed me wonderfully of late, for which I am very thankful. I pray that we may come up higher this incoming year. We need more individual righteousness: let everybody be what they ought to be and then Zion will be indeed Zion. God help us.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, March 11.

Editors Herald: Bro. I. N. Roberts left Louisville this morning after holding nine very interesting meetings. The interest increased till the last. Last Sunday night our large hall had the largest crowd in it that has ever been there to hear a Latter Day Saint preacher. Bro. Hilliard and Bro. I. N. have done much good by their visits among us. I hope Bro. I. N. will be sent back to this field next year and give us a call here. I tell you when he gets a grip on his opposers and sits down on them they will submit every time or soon run out of breath.

Quite a few are investigating the work. We look for a good gathering here during the next year.

J. W. METCALF.

FULTON, Kentucky, February 28.

Editors Herald: There are but few of us here, but we are trying to do all we can to build up the work. Bro. I. N. Roberts has been with us several days, but is going away to-morrow. We are so glad to have him visit us. He has no doubt been a benefit to us. Bro. W. R. Smith has also been with us and preached several times since Christmas, and did a great deal of good. We have prayer-meeting every Wednesday night. Bro. I. N. Roberts conducted our last meeting; we had quite a spiritual meeting, all enjoyed the Spirit. Two outsiders asked the prayers of the Saints that they might be in the light some day soon. I am thankful to know that the Lord has recognized our efforts we have put forth at this place, and trust that we may be able to do more. Bro. Roberts preached for us Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night, but only a very few came as the weather was very bad. I think there are some here who are seeking the truth. Bro. Roberts and my husband attended conference at Foundry Hill the 15th. They report a very good meeting, considering the weather.

I have near relatives living at Call, Newton County, Texas, and would be glad if some of the elders would visit them, as none have had a chance to hear the gospel, except my father, T. C. Scurlock, who visited us two years ago and accepted the gospel and was baptized by Bro. T. C. Kelley, he being the only Saint at that place. The only consolation he has is reading the church papers. We think that is a great consolation. We could hardly do without the HERALD. I have learned so much by reading the Home Column. Have gained a great many ideas on training children. The Lord has blessed us with three little ones, but he seeing best has taken one of them from us. She died January 17, aged one year and twenty days. Oh it was a sad parting, but we know she is now an angel. We should be willing to say, God's will be done, not ours. I trust that we may live worthy of meeting her on the other shore.

Another little lamb has gone
To dwell with him who gave;
Another little darling babe
Is sheltered in the grave.
God needed one more angel child
Around his shining throne,
And so he bent with loving smile,
And took our darling home.

Your sister,
MRS. J. R. McCLAIN.

"Mormon Church Not a Denomination."

Editors Herald: I inclose a clipping from the Hinton Leader, of Hinton, West Virginia, issue of March 7.

The article does not say which church, Utah or Reorganized, the "Mormons" referred to represent. In either case, there are only a few in this part of the State who know the difference. In fact they believe there is only one "Mormon" church, namely, the "Utah Mormons."

But the main point the writer of the article wished to impress upon the minds of the people is that the "so-called Mormon Church is not a religious denomination." A misunderstanding is what is in the way with the masses of the people, i. e., classing them all with the Utah church; but time is the lever which will fling the avenues of understanding wide open and grind to powder all the hills of obstruction. Below is the clipping. O. E. SURBAUGH.

"THE MORMON CHURCH.

"Down in Lincoln and other adjoining counties, the Mormons have been holding protracted services during the past fall and winter, and they have created considerable trouble in that section. In some places they have been using the public schoolhouses, while in others they have been locked out. Some of the citizens of that section have recently written to State Superintendent of Schools, T. C. Miller, asking advice on the subject. Here is the reply:

"After a conference with the Attorney General, I am of the opinion that the so-called Mormon church is not a religious denomination in the sense in which the School Law contemplates; I think, therefore, that Trustees and Boards of Education are justified in refusing them the use of schoolhouses, and that you may use your official influence to the same end.

Very respectfully yours,

"THOS. C. MILLER,

"State Superintendent of Schools."

Dear Saints: Like many others, to me the HERALD is a very welcome visitor. I have been one of its readers for fifteen years, and it would be next to impossible for me to get along without it. It does my soul good to read of the progress the servants of God are making all over this land of ours, and in foreign countries, too. Surely this is the work of our heavenly Father!

Some seem to think the price of the HERALD too much. I think I get three, yes six times, the worth of my money out of it. I could not afford to do without it if it was $3 instead of $1.50. When I first began to read it it was $2.50, if I am not mistaken, and I then did not think it too high. I think the Saints are behind time if they do not take the church papers. I read them and do not see how I could get along without them. This is a day of sacrificing and we must be up and doing. I can say from the depths of my heart that this is the work of the Lord. I am trusting in the dear Lord for his healing power and for faith in him to be healed of an affliction that I have. I have been administered for, which blessing I as yet have not received. I am still living in hopes. Dear Saints, remember me in your prayers that if it be God's will I may be healed.

Bro. Burton, do not say that you are the forgotten missionaries; for surely there are very many Saints who remember you in their prayers to God every day. It would be a source of great joy to me to send you and Sr. Burton something nice very often, if it were not so far away. But there is one thing that we can be thankful for, Bro. Burton, and that is if you are deprived of the good things of this world, yet you are blessed with the presence of God's Holy Spirit, and that is far ahead of anything else on earth. May the good Lord continue to bless and guide his people until time will be no more. My prayer is for all of the faithful of Israel,

Your sister,

M. C. HANNAH.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. Kemp and I labored near Fruita, Colorado, during the latter half of December when he returned to Delta, as per previous arrangements. I labored near Fruita as best I could through January, assisted by Bro. D. B. Tomlinson, whom, by the direction of the Spirit and action of the Fairview Branch, Bro. Kemp and I ordained a priest. He is an earnest worker who preaches more by example than precept, and I trust he will be able to keep the work alive in that vicinity.

We met with considerable interest at some points, and had we not been hindered by smallpox I think we might have seen more immediate results. Just about the time an interest was manifest, smallpox scare would stop people coming, or the house would be closed by quarantine. The season we expected to do the most work, we were so hindered we did little. However, several families began investigation, and a few, I think, are not very far from the kingdom. I baptized one very promising young man who will be a great support to the work there. He was born and raised in Utah, but could see no real good in that faith. A man and wife who had become dissatisfied with Adventism, we left earnestly investigating our faith; but from their previous training in the soul-sleeping doctrine, found it hard to believe in the angelic mission of Moroni. We furnished them what reading matter we had at hand, and as they were preparing to move to Denver we recommended that they make themselves acquainted with the Saints there, who would help them as they needed. This they promised to do.

At Grand Junction and some other points where the quarantine did not rest, revivals claimed the attention of the people to such an extent that we thought it useless to hire halls with prospects of poor attendance. I was completely "frozen out" in three different towns, when nothing apparently stood in the way, so I was not very sanguine over town work, anyway.

After doing what I could near Fruita and in Grand Valley I returned to Delta and found no chance to do anything, so after the monthly meeting there February 1 and 2 I went to Denver, and from there with Bro. Kemp to his home at Conifer, and held four meetings. The attendance was good for so sparsely a settled place, and the attention about all that could be asked. There was a general expression of satisfaction with the way our faith was presented.

We returned to Denver, February 12, to attend district conference, which passed off pleasantly. The Spirit was manifest, and cheering words given to the Saints and ministry.

After conference I started homeward, stopping a few days at Shelton, Nebraska, where a number of years ago I preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon in Buffalo County. A flourishing branch has since sprung up; and had it not been for discord it might now be a beacon light; but as it is the work there is nearly dead, the meetings are few and but poorly attended. I preached there four times, and blessed the infant son of Bro. Frank Lacy and visited some of the disaffected ones who have backslid, and I believe did them good. Some expressed themselves as ready to retract but did not like to humble themselves to rebaptism.

I next visited the Saints in Columbus and found them barely able to "keep the camp-fire blazing." Most of them are getting old and feeble, yet I had a pleasant visit with them.

I stopped at North Bend to visit relatives, and then on to Lamoni, and found my family well and rejoicing in God's watchful care over them. They have enjoyed better health than for years past. I, too, have enjoyed much of God's favors. I have been greatly strengthened in my labors, and blessed in administering to the sick, several receiving instant relief; and, besides, the Lord has testified that he is well pleased with my efforts, though they appear meager. The need of putting things in shape for conference explains my hurry home.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

Editors Herald: In the Cosmopolitan for September, 1895, John A. Cockrell writes an article on "Brigham Young and Modern Utah." Mr. Cockrell has an unimpeachable reputation for being fair-minded, in the many productions from his pen, in which he has recorded his observations during many years of extensive travel. The entire article is full of interest and fascination in following the devious, and at times the autocratic character of Brigham Young. Justice may be tardy in vindication of truth, but it will prevail, as the following extract bearing upon Brigham Young will plainly reveal:

"He practiced and advocated plural marriages, because he wanted his colony to increase. His native wisdom must have told him that the institution could not survive, because, in addition to the outside hostility it invoked, the children of polygamous marriages did not take kindly to the system. It could not be made self-sustaining.

"It was not until after the Mormons had turned their backs upon Nauvoo, then the second city in Illinois, and their temple which stood second only to the National Capitol, as a structure, that polygamy was openly proclaimed.

"It was not, indeed, until 1852 that it was avowed as a doctrine of the church. To Brigham Young, who so ably defended it upon Biblical and patriarchal grounds, it meant fructification, and rapid colonization. With this foresight and clear mind, it must have been apparent that eventually polygamy would have to be abandoned. And that condition exists in the year of our Lord 1895."

Editors Herald: On February 22 I left Philadelphia to attend the New York District Conference, which met at Brooklyn on above date. Met Brn. Bond and Greene of the general missionaries, and a number of other brethren whose work is of a local character. I enjoyed the conference and my first visit to New York, and also the hospitality of kind-hearted Saints and friends there. In company with Sr. M. H. Bond we went by boat to Providence, Rhode Island. Arrived safely though delayed by reason of a fog. The constant blowing of the fog horn was quite suggestive to me; the first time I ever heard it. May we as servants of God ever keep the gospel fog horn blowing, and thus save the good old ship of Zion from being stranded and wrecked on the shore of indifference, wickedness, and unbelief.

We spent a very pleasant time with Saints of Providence, being more than kindly cared for at the home of Sr. Bond. We spoke for benefit of those who came to hear at morning and evening services on Sunday. Attended a nicely conducted Religio meeting on Tuesday evening, and departed amidst a snow-storm to Fall River, Massachusetts, where I spent a few pleasant days at the home of Dr. Gilbert. Arrived at Boston on Friday. Sunday met with the Saints and friends at regular place of worship, and preached morning and evening. Though it rained hard all day, yet we had good-sized audiences at both services. The Saints in Massachusetts district do not allow rainy weather to keep them from church services. The zeal, earnestness, and devotion manifest among the Saints in this district is indeed commendable. Bro. R. Bullard, the bishop here and also the pastor, endeavored to make my visit pleasant and profitable. It did me good to see the orderly way in which church affairs are conducted in these parts. One special thing I noticed is that Bro. Bullard seems to have the utmost confidence of his brethren and sisters and collaborators here, and that is no little matter contributing to the progress of God's work. A well-conducted Religio Society is also one of the leading factors here, supported by a host of young people who will not be satisfied with anything less than unconditional success. And may the good Father above bless and prosper all who so earnestly engage in his good service. I earnestly desire to see the time speedily come when our work will be better established in the large cities here in the East, and we feel some progress has been made along that line during the last year. And we still have the banner unfurled and are "Marching along, we are marching along,

Rising as a people we are marching along.
The conflict is raging 'twixt the right and the wrong;
We'll trust in the Lord while we are marching along."

Editors Herald: I feel greatly humiliated to think I have not done more for the cause in a financial way. I am a pensioner, and not very able to work at my trade; but if the good Lord favors me with good health I will see to it that there is nothing lacking on my part to help sustain the truth in a financial way according to my ability, let it be for the support of Graceland College or the ministry, it is all the same to me.

I am isolated somewhat from the Saints, and do not have many church privileges.

It seems to me if I was blessed with plenty of this world's goods I could no more withhold my substance from the support of the everlasting gospel than I could withhold lumber from drowning friends when I knew a single board to each one would save them. What would the world think of me owning an extensive lumberyard and would not be willing to contribute in proportion to my ability; or what would they think of my faith in the gospel? And if we will hear God's voice, and harden not our hearts or withhold our substance, he will gather Israel in this the dispensation of the fullness of times, and Juda shall be established, and his prophets shall come in remembrance before the Lord in the north country, and the ten tribes shall be revealed. What a glorious assembly! What will the little laughing rivers of each country think when they empty themselves out into the great flood or ocean of spirit, light, or knowledge?

RAYMOND, Idaho, March 6.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote I have visited and preached in the following places: Ovid, Liberty, and Saint Charles, in Idaho; and Garden City, Utah. Ovid is a small Danish town or village which Bro. Peter Anderson visited many years ago. I was treated very kindly at this place, and was asked to return and was told I could use their meeting-house when they were not using it. Preached twice and then went to Liberty, and preached twice to fair-sized congregations; interest good. From there I went to Bloomington, intending to preach there, but the diphtheria having broken out afresh I was shut out until the disease could be controlled. From there I went to Saint Charles, where I was kindly cared for by a Mr. Er Knapp, an old soldier in the War of the Rebellion. I preached eight times and created quite an interest. The last two nights the house was crowded, quite a number having to stand.

At the close of the last meeting Elder Edgar M. Allred announced that on the following night he would review what I had said in their meeting-house (I had been using the Methodist chapel for seven nights), and invited me and all who were interested in what I had preached to be present at his meeting. I accepted the invitation and was present and took notes, and being given a few minutes to talk I told the audience that I would like to reply the next evening to what Bro. Allred had said. And through Elder Allred I was given permission to talk part of the time the next night. So after Elder Allred had spoken I was given forty minutes in which to reply, after which he proposed that I should speak first the next night. But I told him I thought his proposition was hardly fair, inasmuch as he was reviewing me and that I ought to have the closing speech. We finally compromised the matter, he agreeing to let me use half the time and each to speak one hour, so long as he continued to review the efforts I had made the previous week. And I agreed to let him have the closing speech every other night. But when he had consulted with the bishop who was present with his counselors, the bishop announced that I could have thirty minutes the next night at the opening of the meeting, and after that they would carry on their own meetings with no more discussion.

The next day I visited Fish Haven, but could not get a house to preach in that week, so the next day I went to Garden City, Utah, and got the Mormon meeting-house to preach in for three nights. Had good audiences and good order, and the last night the house was full. The last night the first counselor to the bishop announced that they would reply to me on the following evening. I then asked him if they would give me a chance to talk a little at their meeting. His reply was no; and he further stated that I had had plenty of time to say all that was necessary, or something to that effect. While there I met with kind treatment by all, and was entertained at the home of the bishop's second counselor. Others also offered to care for me if I would call at their homes.

I should like to have heard their review, but having a borrowed horse and saddle I had to return, so I went back to St. Charles; and learning that some of the people were anxious that I should do some more preaching at that place I, through the influence of Mr. Knapp, succeeded in getting the Methodist chapel to preach in. But on account of the roads becoming so muddy I thought it best to discontinue my meetings after preaching two sermons.

From there I came to Bloomington, but, on account of bad roads, did no preaching, but moved on to Bro. and Sr. Baldwin's home, near Paris, where I was detained for about three days on account of a blizzard and bad roads. I finally secured a ride with the mail-carrier and came to Montpelier; and being so near home I concluded to visit home and loved ones for a few days.

The work is onward in this mission, and I feel hopeful of good results.

Editors Herald: As the readers of the HERALD seldom see much from this part of the field, and knowing that there are some few who will be glad to know what we are doing here in Boston, I venture to write a few lines for the first time to your columns.

The past few days of sunshine and balmy air make us feel sure that spring is coming, and the waking to renewed life of all things reminds us that we, too, should be exerting greater energies along lines of spiritual life.

We have just enjoyed a very pleasant and profitable visit from Bro. Will E. LaRue, of Philadelphia, who came both to see the sights of interest long since famous, and to help in the great gospel work by preaching four of the best sermons we have had delivered among us for some time, few if indeed any that have been more forceful and stimulating to individual duty on the part of those who call themselves Saints. Certainly if we are able to live as he recommended, the work will be on the improvement. He departed to-day for Fall River, and from there to Providence.

Next Sunday, March 16, we expect to have with us I. M. Smith, who is always welcomed and appreciated by those who regard the truth. He has been laboring for the past week in Haverhill, Massachusetts, where a good interest has been awakened by Brn. Bond, Bullard, Anderson, Greene, and others.

We have also another treat in store in the promise of a sermon and short stay from Bro. Will Blanchard, the Sunday following. So, although we can not attend the General Conference, we derive the pleasure of the traveling ministry, who call both coming and going.

The work is not suffering in Boston; for although Bro. Bullard is called from our midst the greater part of the time in his duties as bishop, he still has the oversight; and, stimulated by his encouragement and efforts, our younger men who have lately been ordained are coming forward in the ranks and are not inefficient, by any means.

The Religio and Sunday-school are on the increase both in numbers and interest and the outlook is encouraging for ripened and perfect fruit.

Bro. Kelley made us a flying visit in the early part of last month on his way to attend the district conference. Sorry, indeed, will be the Saints of Massachusetts District when his visits and labor of love cease among us.

We will now await with interest the appointments of General Conference to see who shall be assigned to labor among us; and though we might be interested in new faces and persons, still we would be slow to part with any of the old workers who have nobly done their duty in our midst.

But this much we wish to do; no matter who is sent to us, we desire as Saints, by our interest and support in financial, physical, and spiritual labors to work together for good for the upbuilding of individual character and for the great gospel work of God intrusted to men.

Your sister in the work,

A. B. SEE?

WOODBINE, Iowa, March 13.

Dear Herald: Each number of the HERALD seems to increase the good things that are spread on its bounteous board for the feeding of the flock of God with imperishable and ever-nourishing food. It does me good to read of the success attending the ministry in their defense of the truth when attacked by the hireling clergy, who feel that their "Craft is in danger." It does me good to see so many brave young warriors wielding, in meekness and love, the sword of truth. I recognize the fact that God is with them. I am equally pleased to see the old veterans still standing at their posts and doing valiantly for the same good cause, and I am safe in saying that no warrior for the truth, whether old or young, has ever had cause to blush in their defense, when they have relied implicitly upon the strong arm of our great Captain, Christ. We may blush for our own weakness and unworthiness, but never for the cause we have espoused, which is none other than the cause of God. I speak from a life's experience and close observation, and know whereof I affirm.

We have all felt our weakness when we have been confronted with men of giant minds and of vast learning, backed by the popular sentiment of the world, which is invariably opposed to the truth; but realizing that our gospel is from above, and that we have not run without being sent, and that God is true to his promise, we have realized that our sense of weakness has given to our Father the opportunity of manifesting his mighty power in making us strong for the defense of his cause and in confounding the enemies of truth, at the same time it has shown the necessity of cultivating a humble spirit, with a desire to bless even them that raise their puny hands to tear down the standard of righteousness. How true is the promise to his church, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper!" We see it fulfilled every day, wherever and whenever the cause of truth has been assailed.

Had the thought ever obtained in the mind of this writer that this church and its principles and ordinances were founded or now stand in the wisdom and power of humanity, he would have abandoned it long ago as a forlorn hope; but having tested it and seeing it tested by the mightiest talent the world can boast, I am content, yea, more, I am desirous and determined by the help of the Divine Master to stand in its defense, and use all my feeble efforts to promulgate it while life and strength with me endure.

To the young let me say, Go on! Be strong in the Lord! Be humble and meek. Trust not in your own strength nor wisdom, but trust in the Lord and his arm will not fail you, remembering, "The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong," but to him that trusteth in the Lord,

C. DERRY.

A baby's feet, like sea-shells pink,
 Might tempt, should heaven see meet,
 An angel's lips to kiss, we think,
 A baby's feet.

Like rose-hued sea-flowers toward the heat
 They stretch and spread and wink
 Their ten soft buds that part and meet.

No flower bells that expand and shrink
 Gleam half so heavenly sweet
 As shine on life's untrodden brink,
 A baby's feet.

A baby's hands, like rosebuds furled,
 Whence yet no leaf expands,
 Ope if you touch, though close up curled,
 A baby's hands.

Then, even as warriors grip their brands
 When battle's bolt is hurled,
 They close, clenched hard like tightening bands.

No rosebuds yet by dawn imperaled
 Match, even in loveliest lands.
 The sweetest flowers in all the world—

Christmas in Tahiti.—No. 2.

The week before Christmas had been rainy more or less each day, but on Sunday it set in in earnest. Not so bad, though, in the fore part of the day but what we could dodge between the showers and get to church for all the services. But in the afternoon there was a downpour accompanied with vivid lightning and heavy thunder with a peculiar, explosive sound which caused the house to tremble with the reverberation, and yet the noise was partially drowned by the roaring of the rain on the iron roof. I never saw so much rain fall in the same length of time. Suddenly our yards were turned into lakes of water. In less than an hour, down came the rushing torrents from the mountains, overflowing the little river banks, spreading the red, turbid waters all over the flat, and bearing with it canoes, banana trees, dried cocoanuts, and all sorts of rubbish. The canoes and trees kept in the stream and passing under the bridge went outside. With the exception of the bridge, all was soon one sheet of turbid waters with a swift stream in the midst. There was at the same time a fearful wind-storm doing its work of devastation on the south side of the island. Coming, as it did, from that direction, we felt very little of it, but saw its effects on the waves. The breakers had been unusually heavy on the reef all the week, but now, driven as they were by the fury of the wind and the incoming tide, they rolled in great billows on and in over the coral reef such as was never seen here before. The crashing and breaking on the reef was terrible, yet sublime, and fascinating to gaze upon; nor was there ever so much water known to be in the town of Papeete before. Merchants' cellars were partly filled and goods damaged proportionately. For the waves did not stay out on the reef but came rolling and breaking clear into the front yards of those who lived on the water-front, and into the houses of some. The firm new picket fence around this place broke the force of those coming towards us, still they rolled through the yard—in a much less degree—and washed up on the third step at the front porch. Where the fences were not new and firm the force of the waves broke them and carried some gates away. The rush of the fresh water going outward, and the tide and sea coming in, formed no small tide rip right here in the little creek.

We have since learned of some of the havoc made by the wind on the south side of the island. It is reported that seventeen houses and the Protestant chapel were blown down.

When the water disappeared we had real California Christmas mud. The sediment of red soil that washed down from the mountain refused to mix with this hard coral stuff, but clung desperately to the shoes and feet of all, and came willingly into the houses. Nor was that all we had. Our yards did not look bad like a dumping-ground of old tin cans, cocoa nut shells, bones, and rags that washed from other yards and from under the houses. I had gotten our missionary yard nicely arranged, with lily bushes set in the ground and flowers in boxes. The water covered the boxes, washed some out of place, killed most of the flowers, and dissolved more than half of the precious soil. The white lattice work is all begrimed, and fences muddy and stained, and quite a number of little trees killed.

A letter came to us yesterday from Lewis Bellais with accounts of a similar storm in November, at the Paumotus, the heft of which was felt at the island of Apataki. There, too, he reported seventeen houses blown down, and a boat that was at anchor driven out and all broken up.

While hearing of those things I wondered if it were possible that cyclone seeds lurked in the garments of our Iowa brethren and got scattered to the winds as they traveled from place to place, and had germinated into young hurricanes. The Indians of America say the white man brought the snow, so perhaps the white men brought the hurricanes.

A SEQUEL.

On Christmas Day a friend related to Mr. Burton a conversation he heard in Papeete between two native Catholics.

First speaker: "It is Christmas! do you know it?"

Second speaker: "How do you know it is Christmas? What sign have you?"

First: "I know it is Christmas, and you would have known, too, if you had been down to Tarona where I was last night. They would have given you a sign, for they knew it was Christmas Eve. O but it was fine down there! I never saw anything like it! They had a great big tree stood up in their feast-house, with all kinds of pretty presents on it and little wax candles burning all about it. Then on the table near by was a picture of the Holy Child Jesus, lying in a manger, and the Virgin Mary with Joseph near by, and there were the wise men offering their gifts to Jesus.

"Some of the men spoke telling all about it, and how they were doing all that in honor of the birth of the Messiah. And as the wise men brought their gifts, so they should make an offering, too, and the money should go towards spreading the glad tidings that the angel brought of 'peace on earth, good will to men.' There was a picture of that, too. The angel was coming down to the shepherds and there was the bright star.

"And after those men were done talking they all came up to a big table and laid their offerings down; every one, old and young. Then the presents were taken off the tree and given to each other. Parents gave to children and children to parents, husbands to wives and wives to husbands.

"O I tell you, that is the true church. They know all about these things, and if I was so I could join them I would."

Sunday-School Home Class Work.

In our endeavor to work up the home class work of the Religio, in person and by correspondence, we find many of the isolated Saints who are anxious to take up the Sunday-school home class work also. Several say they are studying the lessons now and have been for some time. Owing to the fact that some have already taken up the work and others are inquiring about it, we believe the time is ripe that the General Association should amend the constitution and provide for a home class department.

We considered the demand for this work in the Des Moines district sufficient for some action upon our part, and at our last district convention, held at Grinnell, Iowa, December 27, 1901, the subject was discussed and resulted in a home class superintendent being appointed, Sister Anna Amos, Newton, Iowa, and we are pleased to state that we already have about twenty members actively engaged in the home class work. If the General Association approve such a move, we believe that at the next General Convention, provision should be made for this work and a General Home Class Superintendent appointed. Then as soon as possible each district should appoint a home class superintendent, they to appoint such local superintendents as they may need to successfully carry on the work. All that would be necessary for each member to have would be a Bible and a Quarterly. Of course the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon are very helpful in the study of the Sunday-school lessons and should be found in the library of every Latter Day Saint, whether a home class member or not.

It may be said by some, that any one who desires can take up the study of the lessons and carry it on just as well without instituting a home class department. It is true those who desire can take up this work and carry it on with profit to themselves, and many are doing so, but we do not believe with nearly so much profit as they could under the supervision of a home class department. We do not believe it would be as beneficial to those who would take up the work, and we know it would not be of as much benefit to others, and all will certainly agree that if left to themselves not nearly so many would take up the work as would if it were systematically taken up and forwarded by good superintendents. No work will prove a success unless carried on in a systematic way. Without such a department the officers have no way of knowing who are doing home class work and who are not, therefore can be of no assistance to them. If we had a record of all such workers we could give them some extra study and work to perform and give them a place in our district convention programs where we could perhaps help them to find out how best to conduct their work to make it a success, and also receive much help and encouragement from them. We then have at least four strong points in favor of providing for a Sunday-school home class department and systematic work. 1. A greater number could be induced to take up the work. 2. The work could be made more interesting and profitable to those taking it up. 3. Their work could be made of greater value to others in our district conventions. 4. The gospel would be brought into more homes and a good injunction obeyed, that of "Search the Scriptures daily." What could be nicer, more pleasing in the sight of God, than to see a home in which father and mother gather the little ones around them and in a systematic way teach them the divine truths contained in the sacred word? What could be more in harmony with God's will than a systematic study of his law upon the part of a young man or woman in their home, or in their room should they be away from home and in a place where they had no church privileges? Shall we not as delegates and coworkers for the advance of truth and the spread of the gospel stand together in an appeal to the General Convention in behalf of such a grand work as this? All you who expect to attend the General Convention in April make this a subject of study and prayer and go prepared to act upon it as you may then deem best and as led by the Spirit of the Father, which, if you allow it, will "guide you into all truth."

Elder A. B. Purfurst, of San Diego, California, in speaking of himself and others there joining the Religio home class says, "We shall feel honored by being enrolled also as members of the Sunday-school home class." Sister Mattie Hughes, superintendent of the Religio home class work in the Des Moines District, says she thinks the demand should be supplied and the isolated parents encouraged and helped in their efforts to improve the fast-fleeing opportunities of presenting the gospel to their little ones and bringing them up in the way they should go. Many others from different parts of the country write they are heartily in favor of taking up this work. We would like to give other extracts from letters, but space will not permit.

In answer to a letter written to our General Superintendent, Bro. T. A. Hougas, in regard to the matter, we received the following encouraging reply:

"The Home Class work is being slowly developed. We have purposely delayed making any definite arrangement about it till it began to show in what shape we had better have it, and till there began to be a demand for it. Nothing will succeed till there is at least a fair demand for it, but the time is about ripe now, as I believe. I agree that much more will be done when it is worked systematically. That is true of any kind of work. I think we shall try to get an amendment to the constitution the next convention to provide for it."

We believe this to be a movement for good to many and one worthy of our careful consideration.

Yours for the advancement of God's work,
J. R. EPPERSON,
Superintendent of Des Moines District.

Reduced Prices on Quarterlies.

We are pleased to announce that, beginning with the second quarter, April-June, 1902, the prices on Gospel Quarterlies will be reduced about 20 per cent, as follows: Senior grade, 6 cents per quarter or 20 cents per year; Intermediate grade, 4 cents per quarter, 12 cents per year; Primary grade, 4 cents per quarter, 12 cents per year. Please remember that to get the benefit of the yearly rate, a full year's subscription must be paid for in advance. All others will be charged for at the single quarter rate. These provisions will be carefully adhered to. We regret that some have failed to see the necessity for such provisions and have taken occasion to criticise rather harshly those having the matter in charge. We thought it very necessary to make the above provisions, and that we were correct in our conclusions has since been plainly demonstrated. Thus placing business on correct business principles has enabled us to make the cut in prices referred to above. The Study Hour will remain as first announced, 10 cents per quarter. To those who have paid for Quarterlies in advance, and whose subscription has not yet expired, we will send due bills for the difference between the old and the new rate. These due bills will be received in payment on Quarterlies only, and must be in before March 31, 1903. No due bill will be issued for any amount less than ten cents. We have said several times to the Sunday-school workers that as soon as it seemed advisable to do so, we would reduce the price of the Gospel Quarterlies. The time seems now to have come and we make the reduction. This places our Quarterlies as low in price as any denominational quarterly that I know of, and lower than many of them. This will enable schools to secure a better supply of helps at no increase of costs. The best season of the year for Sunday-school work is now very near and we trust that all will feel it their privilege as well as duty to do a great deal of good earnest work in this line. Ever hopeful for the success of the work, we are, your colaborer, T. A. Hougas, general superintendent.

NEW ENGLAND PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

After repeated requests notice has been received that the New England and Southwestern Passenger Associations have granted reduced rates, on certificate plan, to the General Conference and Auxiliary Conventions to be held at Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1902. Delay in notice occasioned by failure of Western Association (to which the New England and Southwestern reported instead of to us as heretofore) to report. Take special notice that, while the official notices of the associations read, "April 5-20," their rules provide that "going tickets" may be purchased three days before the date first named, and two and sometimes three days thereafter; while "return tickets" may be bought as late as three days after the closing date. In plain terms, going tickets may be purchased from April 2 to 7, from roads in all associations granting rates; while from Western and Southwestern Association lines going tickets may be purchased from April 2 to 8. Return tickets may be obtained up to and including April 23—after one hundred certificates have been certified to at Lamoni. Passengers pay full fare on going trip, and must obtain a separate certificate corresponding to each ticket purchased. Such certificates properly filled out at Lamoni, and showing payment of full fare to that point, will entitle holders thereof to return ticket, unlimited, over same route to starting point, at one third regular fare. List of New England lines; Bangor & Aroostock; Boston & Albany; Boston & Bangor S. S. Co.; Boston & Maine; Canadian Pacific; Central Vermont; Grand Trunk; International S. S. #### District Records Burned.

This is to notify the Saints of the Southern Missouri District that on February 7, 1902, Bro. A. W. Duemler, of Springfield, was burned out. The outlay must be made and the work done, and each branch should take up a collection as soon as possible and forward same to my address, or to Bro. A. W. Duemler, 308 W. Com. Street, Springfield, Missouri. Aid will be thankfully received from any one. J. C. Christensen, president. A. W. Duemler, clerk.

Club-Foot Wanted.

This is to notify the Saints, and all whom this may concern, that Bro. W. T. Roach, of Mansfield, Missouri (box 57), has procured a State warrant (and now in the hands of Robert Rippy, constable of said town) for the man answering the following description: Medium height, dark complexion, weight about 150 or 160 pounds, black hair, mustache, and eyes. His right foot is a clubfoot, turning in towards the left foot. When last seen he wore a light slouch hat, an old light overcoat, passed as a farmer, a preacher, etc., under a number of assumed names. Bro. Roach and others offer a reward of $20 for his arrest and conviction, for obtaining money under false pretense. Look out for him.

Opposing views on the question of Chinese exclusion are presented side by side in the March Forum. Hon. Truxtun Beale maintains that the admission of the Chinese would be disastrous to the welfare of the American laborer and would cause a setback to our political and national development in general. On the other hand, Hon. Robert Hutcheson pronounces the Yellow Peril to be a spectre of the imagination, and contends that the arguments used in support of the exclusion of the Chinese would apply to the case of other foreign immigrants also.

TOLSTOI is one of a small company of men who perceive the necessity of a new order of art. The spirit of the new day is universality. A culture that does not carry with it the whole people is doomed to failure. And this universality is to be gained, not through the extension of aristocratic culture among the people, not through the education of the masses in the philosophy of the classes, but through a new philosophy and a new criticism that shall meet the demands of a democratic society and result in an art that shall be in its own nature universal in character. —The Open Court, for February.

A MEETING of the descendants of Sr. Gould N. Davison was held at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. Hibbert D. Simpson, 22 Waverly Street, Malden, Massachusetts, March 15, where five generations of her family were represented. Herself, 84 years old; her daughter, Mrs. Robert Newcomb, 64; her granddaughter, Mrs. Hibbert D. Simpson, 43; and great-granddaughter, Mrs. William Atkinson, 25; and great-great-granddaughter, Gertrude Ellen Atkinson, 2 years; the first two named only not being present.

DEDICATION AT RICHHILL, MISSOURI.

Another testimonial to the policy of the Reorganization in settling in the "regions round about" is set up at Richhill, Bates County, Missouri, in the purchase, dedication, and occupancy of a, to the Saints, new church at a new point in the city.

A few years ago the branch at Richhill, under the guidance of Bro. J. C. Chrestensen, secured a plat of ground, built a meeting-house, and planted a grove. In doing it the branch became somewhat involved. Time passed; the conditions became changed, and an opportunity to better their situation was presented; the local brethren, by the aid and encouragement of the missionary, succeeded in raising the necessary amount to pay off their incumbrance, and take advantage of the opportunity afforded them by the disbanding of a Presbyterian congregation and the offer of their building to sale. Brn. Frank Sharrock, president of branch, bought out the old meeting-house for residence purposes, and Brn. Wm. Chapman, T. C. Welch, treasurer, and T. O'Neal, deacon of the branch, negotiated for the new church and succeeded in securing it for the sum of $250, making an excellent change both for building and eligibility of site.

The building is thirty by fifty feet, frame, belfry, spire, nicely finished inside, seats, stand, pulpit chairs, organ, gas light fixtures; and is located some two squares east and one north of the city center; one square north of the main street running through the city east and west, on the southeast corner of the intersecting streets. On the opposite corner, the southwest, is located the Catholic church; opposite this, north, on the northwest corner, is the Christian (or Campbellite) church; so that there is the old Papal Roman, the latest of the Protestant churches, and the church of the restored gospel all in juxtaposition in this mining town in the western center of Missouri; a rather peculiar manifestation of the irony of fate, or the wiser fortune of the directing power of the latter day dispensation.

On Sunday, March 16, 1902, there were present at Richhill, by arrangement and invitation, the President of the church, Joseph Smith, the missionary in charge, I. N. White; the president of the district, James Moler; a laboring elder, F. C. Warnky, who had done good service in the branch; together with the local authorities of the branch, Frank Sharrard, August Dellar, William Chapman, T. O'Neal, T. C. Welch, and R. E. Hubricht, and a large congregation of the Saints from near by points, and a goodly number of the outside neighbors, citizens, and friends, when at eleven o'clock in the forenoon the services of dedication were conducted, Pres. I. N. White in charge.

The song service was good, Sr. Dempsey, of Nevada, at the organ. The opening prayer was by Pres. James Moler; the Scripture reading, Hebrews 8th chapter; the sermon by Pres. Joseph Smith; the prayer of dedication by Pres. I. N. White.

Taken as a whole it was a very enjoyable occasion, and very suggestive. The almost veritable presence of the Roman Catholic and one of the latest Protestants against her universal rule in church dominance, and the testing forces of the restoration by divine direction in revelation presented threefold points of interest not often found so near each other in the field of occupation.

On Thursday evening, March 13, Elder F. C. Warnky, who has done a good deal of preaching in that region of country, occupied the stand under the direction of the branch officers. On Friday evening President Joseph Smith spoke, and on Saturday evening, President I. N. White. On Sunday evening, President Smith again occupied.

The audiences were good, quite large for Sunday afternoon and evening; and an excellent Spirit prevailed, the preachers being permitted a "good degree of liberty" of speech.

How well or how ill the time and the occasion were improved remains for those other than the chief actors to note and report.

The Saints of Rich Hill are hospitable, and open doors and cordial welcomes met the visiting Saints from all places. Among the visitors we noted Bro. Calvin A. Beebe and wife, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, Brn. C. W. Keck and wife, and Albert Dempsey and wife, of Nevada, Missouri. There were others whose names we failed to get, but who will please consider themselves as reported.

The committee to secure transfer of properties were William Chapman, T. O'Neal, and T. C. Welch. Long may the Rich Hill Branch remain and thrive!

CORRECTION AND EXPLANATION.

Bro. J. D. Erwin writes us relative to his report as given in tabulated ministerial reports:

WEBB CITY, Missouri, March 22.

Editor Herald: This leaves me well and busy in the work. I have put in a busy year of hard work in this field. A mistake occurred about my annual report published in the HERALD some how. It reads, "Whole number of services attended 50;" it should read 250; "sermons preached 96;" should read 196. I have not been around home doing nothing.

J. D. ERWIN, Galena, Kansas.

In publishing the tabulated reports of the ministry it is necessary to clip and paste in columns, in order to avoid setting a lengthy heading in each report. The figures 2 and 1 in Bro. Erwin's report were evidently written over the space line, hence were unintentionally clipped off in pasting the statistics of his report. Several assisted in the work and there was no intention of changing his or any other report.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In card to E. L. Kelley dated at Morley, York, England, March 14, Bro. T. J. Sheldon wrote: "We landed yesterday, from S. S. Rhyndland. We have had a good voyage. No storms, good fare, good officers. We are rather tired, but all well. Received letter from Bro. Griffiths containing instructions. Smallpox in London, so will labor in Manchester District awhile. Send to No. 6 Bright Street, New Brighton, Morley, England."

On March 12 S. D. Condit wrote from Victor, Idaho: "We baptized four last Sunday, and organized a branch of nineteen members, ordaining A. L. Rice a priest to preside; Fred Drake teacher, and R. A. Drake deacon. So the debate did not kill us off."

Bro. Elias E. Richards wrote from Elkhorn, Idaho, March 16: "The work here is not in a flourishing condition, still there is some interest manifest. We have Sunday-school each week at Malad, about twelve miles from our home. We attend as often as possible, but in winter months are hindered much. Bro. S. D. Condit has spent about two weeks with us this winter, and expected to stay longer, but was called away to attend a discussion held by his brother John with a Brighamite elder."

The following words of commendation are very much appreciated by the "boys" of the HERALD office as well as the management. They are written by Bro. Alfred N. Evans, who is secretary of the Columbia Typographical Union, of Columbia, Missouri. He wrote under date of March 17, as follows: "As a printer I have wanted to express my admiration of the HERALD'S new dress and make-up; but since the Inland Printer, that greatest of authorities on typographic art, has said that it is above criticism, I feel that I could say no word of worth in commendation of our church paper. There is one thing, however, the Inland Printer evidently failed to note, and that is the quality of the matter contained in the HERALD. The HERALD is the neatest in typographical appearance of any church paper I have ever seen, and yet it appeals more to the heart and mind than to the eye. May its mission broaden and extend until it shall help to carry the angel's message to all nations!"

T. C. Kelley under date of March 21 wrote from Frazee, Minnesota: "Am feeling well in body and spirit. May God bless his people in the coming conference."

Bro. S. D. Condit, resident at Logan, Utah, in the field, wrote from Victor, Idaho, March 14: "My brother John and I organized a branch here last Sunday after baptizing four more. Sixteen charter members, and three of Bro. John Allen's sons absent, who will unite by vote of branch. We ordained Bro. Adelbert Rice a priest, and he was chosen to preside. Fred Drake, teacher; and Asa Drake, deacon. Bro. John Allen is a member of the branch and was ordained an elder in the Wind River Branch, Wyoming, but never received a license. This branch is called Cedrine Heights and is a light to this part of the world at present; about all grown people and all alive in the work; fourteen of them baptized since in November last."

William A. Guthrie wrote from Nebo, Illinois, March 22: "To-day Bro. Arthur Allen baptized five: one man and his wife, a result of years of investigation; two daughters of Bro. T. P. Johnson; and a daughter of Bro. Marion Johnson. This is where Bro. Allen assisted in building a new church last summer, also where protracted disturbances necessitated the arresting and fining of ten in all. The writer has continued to hold forth every Sunday night, through storm and opposition. Bro. Allen and Harry Thomas came in Monday last from St. Louis conference. and will remain over next week."

Bro. T. W. Williams writes from San Bernardino, California, March 20, to President Joseph Smith: "I am in the midst of a discussion with Reverend P. H. Hickman, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, of this city. This is the sequel to my letter of invitation extended to the various ministers of San Bernardino when I held my series of meetings here a few weeks ago. Reverend Hickman is a scholar and a gentleman. He is the best informed of any disputant I have met in ten or eleven discussions; likewise the most polished and refined. The only reason for his being in California was a predisposition to consumption in the East. He was Rector at Waukeegan, Illinois, and later professor of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew and instructor in history in one of their institutions of learning. He is a master in history. We begin the third night's canvass to-night. There is no time limit placed on the investigation; will continue until one or the other says enough. We are having crowded houses. He told one of our members that he never was more courteously treated in his life. It is pleasant to meet a man whose whole stock in trade is argument and who appeals to reason. I have never heard of any of the elders of the Reorganization meeting representatives of this faith in discussion. If they are all like this man has been thus far we should court their attention. Some of our brethren would be surprised at the many points of agreement in our faiths. I was to have started for General Conference to-day, stopping en route at Bisbee, Arizona, to do some work, and, if favorable, perfect a branch organization. Shall be compelled to defer this matter now and may not get to conference at all. Trust that the loving Father may abundantly bless you in your arduous duties during the conference and that peace and harmony may prevail. I rejoice in the evident intention of the church to move out and occupy in foreign lands. It augurs well for the hastening time. May the gospel soon be wafted to the breeze and carried to earth's remotest bound. Bro. Griffiths' late article was an inspiration. Your call for a general fast has been favorably received in Southern California. May it accomplish the object intended. Bro. Elbert, his mother, and wife start home next Tuesday."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Sunday last, at the afternoon prayer-meeting, Fred B. Blair was ordained counselor to President John Smith, of the Lamoni Stake, under the hands of R. C. Evans and Gomer T. Griffiths.

F. A. Smith reports a good conference in St. Louis March 16 and 17. Bro. A. H. Parsons, M. H. Bond, and T. J. Bell, of the Eastern Mission, were there, being on their way to General Conference.

James H. Fairchild, of Oberlin College, Ohio, died March 18. He was connected with Oberlin College for sixty-eight years, and president for thirty-six years.

The following appeared in the Chicago Israelite for March 22: "In laying the water pipes to supply Jerusalem from Solomon's pool the old aqueduct passes through a tunnel under a mountain, and in this tunnel was discovered a perfectly constructed arch built before the time of the Romans."

All the members of the Twelve were in Lamoni in time for their first meeting on the 20th instant. The quorum is hard at work on routine business, meeting from nine a. m. to twelve m. and from two to five p. m. each day except Sunday.

Bro. Griffiths informs us he has received word from Bro. Muceus that he has baptized two more since the six noted lately. Bro. Joseph Arber reports that they have organized a Sunday-school in Hamilton, Scotland, and that prospects are good for an ingathering soon, four being ready now for baptism.

Heman C. Smith occupied the Lamoni pulpit Sunday evening last, preaching on the "Sufficiency of the gospel." He took the ground that Latter Day Saints had no need to join secret societies and lodges.

The officers of the Lamoni Branch have pressed a number of our visiting brethren into service. Peter Anderson preached Sunday morning at the church, and James Caffall Sunday evening at the Saints' Home. We expect to hear from some more of the Twelve next Sunday.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—NO. 20.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS, OF THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

Tuesday, October 4. I held meeting at Mr. Newton Richard's, most of the Saints being in attendance. Much interest is manifest in our hope. I dwelt on the latter-day work as understood by us, in contrast to the views of any of the factions which have broken off from the church and constituted unauthorized and presumptuous leaders. The main body of the Saints remained scattered over all the world wherever they happened to be and are hoping to once more see the church rally in one united effort as it was in the days of Joseph. While it may be true many have been growing cold, yet their faith is in the gospel, if it is not entirely crushed out through the false leaders who have disgraced the name of Saint by their wild schemes to aggrandize themselves in human ambition or Satanic cunning. And the Reorganization pretends to no especial leadership, but we are so directed that we look for one of the legal heirs of Joseph to fill his father's place when the Lord sees fit in his own time to call one forth.

Thursday evening, October 6. Attended prayer and social meeting at Bro. Frank Richards'; all of the Saints took part and many were blessed with the Holy Spirit, which gave peace and comfort to their souls, while they exclaimed in very deed, as Sr. Lucy says, "This seems like old times in the days of Joseph when we first heard this restored gospel!"

Friday, October 7. We held services at Bro. R. Y. Kelley's. Subject, First Principles of the Gospel. House crowded with interested listeners.

I will mention a little incident that occurred on my way there. I met several little boys on the side of the road and asked one of them whose boy he was. In a very genteel manner he replied, "Mr. Kelley's." Will you tell me your name? He answered, "Edmund Kelley." Do you know the definition of the word Edmund? "No, sir." It is an olive branch or leaf. Little did I know then, that in that little boy was the future Bishop, and member of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I had seen the definition in some book when I was a little lad, and that it had its origin in the French language. Bro. Kelley and wife have never affiliated with any of the factions which have broken off from the church.

Saturday evening. Preaching again at Mr. Ottoe's. He is friendly to the church; but his mother is an excellent, faithful member.

Wheeler's Grove, Sunday, October 9. Preaching at eleven o'clock at Bro. Graybill's, and in the evening at Bro. Beebe's on Farm Creek. Read the Scriptures and visited with a number of the neighbors, expounding the law governing our church from the three books.

Wednesday, October 12. Preaching services at Bro. Beebe's.

Thursday, October 13. Prayer-meeting at Bro. Frank Richards'. Bro. James Badham spoke in the gift of tongues, and interpreted to the encouragement of the Saints, impressing upon our mind that the Lord was willing to give his children a knowledge of his gospel for themselves, if they were faithful.

Sunday, October 16. At eleven o'clock a. m., meeting at Bro. Beebe's. Spoke on the reorganization of the kingdom of God. Text: Ephesians 4: 11. Also of the introduction of priestcraft. The first was the establishing of a government with all of its officers appointed by the command of God, and their interest was the well-being of the membership of the church with an eye single to the glory of God in the spirit of meekness, love, and long-suffering; patient in all things, while in contrast, priestcraft is where men set themselves up as ministers and deny present-day revelation, or recognize no standard given of God. So you can detect their schemes of self-laudation, and among apostates from the church they generally depend upon secret conniving to office and place in the church. Bro. Beebe made some remarks, encouraging to the Saints to faithfulness in serving the Lord. At two p. m., meeting assembled again according to previous appointment. After singing and prayer I read revelation of January, 1844, section 107, from paragraphs 10 to 14. I spoke of the rejection of the church, and in the spirit of prophecy declared, "That the endowment received in the non-completed temple at Nauvoo was not of God; and that the blessings promised in those paragraphs were not received by the church. And the fullness of the priesthood contemplated therein was not given to man on the earth, as was promised, because the conditions were not lived up to by the people as specified in the revelation." I then dwelt upon the law the Saints should be governed by as found in the Scriptures of divine truth, and fully explained branch government as best I could. Then I inquired how many wished to unite in a branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Seventeen arose to their feet and expressed their desire to have their names enrolled as members of a branch. I then spoke of the duties of the officers a few moments, and of what would be expected of the members of the branch. When I closed my remarks Bro. Richard Y. Kelley and John Smith moved and seconded that Elder Calvin Beebe be elected president of the branch. Carried by a unanimous vote. Moved by Bro. Kelley, seconded by Calvin Beebe, Sr., that John Smith act as priest. Carried unanimously. Moved by Bro. Beebe, seconded by J. Smith, that John Richards be the teacher. Carried unanimously. Moved by ——— and seconded by Levi Graybill that Bro. R. Y. Kelley be deacon. Carried unanimously. Moved by Bro. R. Y. Kelley, and seconded by Levi Graybill, that Bro. Beebe be clerk. Carried unanimously. The following are the names of all the charter members of the branch: Calvin Beebe, president and clerk; John Smith, priest; John Richards, teacher; Richard Y. Kelley, deacon; Submit Beebe, Sarah Smith, Harriet Richards, Levi Graybill, Patience Graybill, Alexander Liles, Frances M. Liles, Calvin A. Beebe, Angeline Beebe, Joseph Smith, Rachael Smith, Stephen Smith, William H. Kelley, Alice O. ——— (I do not know the last name), Henry Winegar, Frances L. Richards, Elizabeth Winegar, Ann Strong, and Sarah A. Fletcher. Twenty-three names in all.

Moved and seconded that this branch be known as the Farm Creek Branch. Carried unanimously. The Saints are all in good spirits and rejoice in the gospel of the Son of God.

One incident worthy of note during the meeting to-day was the remarks of Bro. William H. Kelley. He said: "When I embraced the gospel I had no thought of embracing the brethren at Manti; and when I saw at the late special conference the dodging, squirming, twisting, and going clear around 'Robin Hood's barn' and coming in at the back door by those brethren, I want them to understand I do not want anything more to do with them, and I withdraw my name from among them, and I wish to be identified with the Reorganization of the true church." He was but a young man of about eighteen summers, but expressed thoughts of a mature age, worthy of the son of a father who had kept the faith from the first, and was the first to move a branch organization at this place, under what he believed and knew to be the renewal of that which he first embraced in the days of Joseph.

There was some talk about rebaptism also to-day; but I presented the view taken by the church from the first conference of the Reorganization, of June 12 and 13, 1852, which is this: "All members who have not lost their standing in the church by apostasy, or have not been legally cut off, or expelled, are eligible to membership in good standing with us in the Reorganization." For this is not a new church, but a reorganization of the old members, once more to continue the work as at first. Or in other words, it is the kingdom foreseen by the Prophet Daniel under the figure of the little stone ultimately to fill the whole earth, when Jesus comes to take full charge of his government on the earth. And while some of the old members prefer to renew their covenant by rebaptism when they unite with us, yet it is not required of them; but it is left to their own discretion; but there is no law requiring it.

Farm Creek, Mills County, Iowa, Sunday, October 23. I attended the prayer-meeting at Bro. Beebe's at 10:30 a. m. And at seven p. m., preaching service. Subject, "Restoration of all things." Text, Romans 14:9: "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." I took the ground that the only ones that are finally lost, who are called the sons of perdition, must have been baptized into Christ before it were possible for them to become the sons of perdition. Or, in other words, such as have sinned willfully after they have received a knowledge of the truth, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." "But a certain fearful looking for of the judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Hebrews 10:27. And at that time when Satan is destroyed, all other adversaries, which mean opposers to the truth, will suffer the same doom. And whatever is the destruction of the Devil will be the same fate of the sons of perdition. And if at that time there is to be no Devil left, for through death Christ is to destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil; it is evident that Christ saves all the workmanship of his hands, except those who have been partakers of the Holy Ghost, which gave them a knowledge of Christ, and then willfully turned away. In that view I also presented the thought that the sons of perdition are the only ones who could be subjects upon whom such an extreme judgment could be passed. They must have been saved in Christ by baptism of water and the Holy Ghost; and then, indeed, as Paul says, truly can it be said, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order." That is, whatever man secures by well-doing or evil in this life, just as he merits or demerits, he is rewarded. And whatever may be said in relation to the punishment of the wicked, it is certain all of the human family will be saved in glory or redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the suffering of his wrath for their wickedness, except they who are sons of perdition, as recorded in the language of the revelation which says, "For all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and glory of the Lamb." —D. C. 76: 4. Therefore we can afford to be patient and long-suffering towards all men who may differ from us in the sectarian world; for, like little children, they do not know enough to commit the unpardonable sin, and for the very best of reasons they have not had the Holy Ghost, by which they know that Jesus is the Christ, and are not or can not be witnesses of Christ. But to us who know that Jesus is the Christ by the gifts of the Holy Ghost, it will be an infinite and eternal loss if we fail to receive the celestial glory. And we will realize, indeed, the full force of the language of the Master when he said, he that knoweth his Master's will, and doeth it not, will be beaten with many stripes; while they who know it not, will be beaten with few stripes. And in order that the children of Adam may all hear the gospel, our text says, "Christ died;" and the Apostle Peter says he was "quickened by the Spirit by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison," or "to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." Therefore we see clearly how in the mercy of God, who loved his children so he sent his own Son into the world, that the world through him might be saved. And the world here certainly means the whole human family, and agreeing with this thought evidently the Prophet Zechariah in his ninth chapter and eleventh verse, referring to the mission of Christ, says, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth the prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.

Turn you to the strong-hold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto you." Evidently another chance to hear the gospel after they were dead, and in the prison, or where Jesus said he would go when he told the sign-seekers, "So shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," where the rich man in hell lifted up his eyes, being in torment, and cried for mercy, and to have Lazarus dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool his tongue. (See Luke 16: 24.)

But when I presented the fact that the Lord chastized for "our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness," (Heb. 12: 10,) it inspired us to love God with our whole hearts, and we can say with John the Divine, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Rev. 4: 11. Agreeing with the ancient prophet, Isaiah 59: 1, "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it can not save; neither his ear heavy, that it can not hear," for truly the gospel is good news to all people; for even death and hell is conquered, for Jesus has the keys of both death and hell, and it may truly be said with many more words the Saints were made happy in the love of God this day in their renewed relationship in the work as an organization, and as they first commenced in it when they embraced the gospel in the days of Joseph.

During the week I have visited from house to house, expounding the Scriptures and telling of our hope in Christ, and Wednesday evening held our first prayer-meeting in the branch.

Keg Creek, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, Monday, October 24. This day I came to Bro. Campbell's, twenty-one miles from Bro. Beebe's. I am very tired, as I walked all the way. Bro. Campbell and wife are old Saints and much interested in our hope.

Tuesday, October 25. I returned to my Brother Edwin's; it is indeed a real pleasure to meet with him and feel that I am at home with one of my own kindred. No one can know the feeling that sometimes presses itself upon a messenger for Christ, who is sent away from home and all kindred, with a message that is unpopular, to a wicked world, and among those who profess a belief in Christ, and yet more bitter towards you than infidels. Yes, in the midst of what is called (self-called) orthodox Christians, known as Protestants. And just think, in the year of our Lord 1515 there was not one of the Protestant churches which are now on the earth, in all this world! I say no one can know the sadness that sometimes is experienced by such a messenger, without he has had a trial of it himself. The expression of Jesus may give the nearest idea it is possible to have, when he said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." With but few local elders in the church doing the best they can, I sometimes feel I am alone doing mission work in all this wide world. Truly like John the Baptist, all alone, crying to scattered latter-day Israel, Repent and believe the gospel! And did I not know by the gifts of the Holy Ghost to me, (and surely I have demonstrated beyond a doubt by comparison with the facts of the Bible, that in very deed I am being taught by the Holy Ghost, the same power described in the word of God, as was enjoyed by the Saints in days of old, and the heavenly angels who did indeed visit and minister to me, and the pure teaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ,) I would to-day throw down the banner of the Christian religion and engage in other work and calling in this world, rather than continue in the ministry of the gospel of Christ. But there is no other way marked out for me, and live a conscientious life, and hope to receive the plaudit, "well done," from my heavenly Father.

Wednesday, October 26. I wrote letters to Brn. Blair, Samuel Gurley, W. H. Pomeroy, my cousin, Albert White, and Curtis F. Stiles, my brother-in-law.

Friday, October 28. Was in Council Bluffs to-day and purchased a cap and cloth for a pair of pants. My mother and sister-in-law will make the cloth up for me. Cutting and cloth cost me six dollars and twenty-five cents.

POINTS ON THE WAY OF TRAVEL.—NO. 6.

BY E. L. KELLEY.

ROME.

In Central Italy, on the River Tiber, twelve miles from the Mediterranean Sea, spread over seven hills and shielded upon the west by the eighth, Monte Gianicolo, the highest of all, a city of monuments and ruins, posing as an ancient queen, is Rome.

The hills are a distinguishing feature of the renowned city. They range from one hundred fifty to two hundred fifty feet in height above the level of the sea, and are readily pointed out from the top of Monte Gianicolo, which is two hundred ninety-seven feet above sea level; or they may be seen from the top of any of the important towers of the city. Instead of hill the word Monte is used by the Italians, and the seven are known and pointed out to the traveler as follows:

1. Monte Aventino, the Aventine Hill. Upon this once stood the temples of Diana, Juno, and Minerva, the palace of Trajan, and the baths of Decius. Now, it bears a coronet of convents; also the church of S. Sabina built about A. D. 425, and restored at different times since. The church of S. Prisca, claimed to have been consecrated by St. Euthycus, A. D. 280, and restored later. It was upon this hill that Remus watched for the flight of birds while Romulus watched from the Palatine, and it is likely the dispute over the significance of the omen caused trouble between the brothers, for both saw a flock of birds and each interpreted to his own success. The tomb of Remus afterwards was erected upon this hill.

2. Monte Capitolina, the Capitoline Hill. Here are the AraCoeli (church of the Roman Senate in the Middle Ages), the museums, municipal and other buildings, the church of S. Maria, the colossal statues of Castor and Pollux standing by their horses, and the statue of Rienzi the last of the Tribunes, whose name and oratory are familiar to the school-boys of the United States of America. There is also ever to be seen here the sacred symbol of Roma Eterna, a living wolf, which is kept chained in the little garden. Upon this hill once stood the Arx, the temples of Juno, Moneta, and Jupiter Capitolinus, all of which have disappeared, some traces alone of the Arx being found.

3. Monte Esquilino, the Esquiline Hill. Prominent here is the Piazza di S. Maria Maggiore, in which is a Corinthian column with a statue in bronze of the Virgin. Also the Basilica di S. Maria Maggiore, one hundred seventy-seven feet high above sea level, founded in the year 352 A. D. and enlarged in 432 and restored at later periods. In more ancient times Cicero resided here, and later, Virgil. There were temples dedicated to the gods Juno, Mephitis, Venus Libitina, Mala Fortuna, and others, some of which stood near the place where are now found the costly church edifices and monasteries.

4. Monte Palatino, the Palatine Hill. Upon this Romulus and Remus constructed the first wall of the city B. C. 753. The temple of Pales, the goddess of pastures, stood upon this in ancient times and the hill is supposed to take its name from that goddess. Here were built the palaces of the Cæsars, the ruins of which are prominent everywhere. Also the altar of the Acies Locutius, so called from the mysterious voice which tradition says proceeded from it warning the Romans of the coming of the Gauls, 390 B. C. It is called "the altar to the unknown God," from the fact that the Romans forbade the mention of the name of the deity to whom it was dedicated, and who, it is said, gave the mysterious warning that saved Rome, lest it should be made known to their enemies. Evidently a god that could speak was a new thing among the nations at that time and especially prized, but they did not wish him to tell anybody else anything. It is inscribed: Sei, Deo, Sei, Deivae Sacrum: Sacred to a god or goddess. A temple to Jupiter was also erected here and traces of the sacred fire of Vesta, found at a late date. Also the Temple of Cybele built 192 B. C. and the golden house of Nero. Later was erected the building used as a guard-house by the Palatine Guards in the time of the popes; and we noticed a nunnery still existing amidst the great ruins. At the foot of the hill is a church erected to the honor and glory of Romulus and Remus, on the very spot, so claimed, where the she-wolf found and nursed the babes.

5. Monte Quirinale, the Quirinal. So called from the Temple Quirinus, which in the early history of Rome formed its principal ornament. The chief edifice at present is the Palazzo del Quirinale, built by Gregory XIII and others. The church of St. Andrews of the Quirinale is also near by. The site of the pagan temple of Quirinus is said to have been nearly the same as is now occupied by the church of St. Andrea a Monte Cavallo; while a convent occupies the site of the pagan temple of Semo Sancus.

6. Monte Coelio, the Coelian. Anciently the temple of the Nymphs and other pagan temples stood upon this hill, but it is almost uninhabited now except by the monks of the Camaldolese, Passimist, and Redemptorist orders, and the Augustinian Nuns. The residence of the King, Tullus Hostilius, was on the Coelian Hill.

7. Monte Viminale, the Viminal Hill. Upon this formerly stood the temple of Giove Viminale, the Baths of Olympia, etc. Now the hill is crowned by the church and convent of S. Lorenzo Pane e. perna. In this is claimed the gridiron of St. Lawrence who was martyred for his faith A. D. 284. Near also is the Irish college and the church of S. Lorenzo in Fonte.

Thus from hill to hill and across the dales, with the sluggish Tiber winding through its western border and encircled by the great wall upon the east which touches the River Tiber at the northern and southern points of the city, great in history and rich in ruins and legends, we view Rome.

The streets of the city extend in all directions, forming all kinds of angles, except possibly a right angle, and are very narrow with very narrow sidewalks save in that part of the city built within the last thirty years where the streets and walks fairly average with those of other cities of Europe.

The buildings are of brick and stone, solidly built, with tile or slate roofs; and those in the older portions of the city present the appearance of having endured the wash and wear of centuries. The new part of the city built up since the year 1870 after the overthrow of the temporal power of the pope, is a happy improvement over the older portion, and the water and sewerage systems are said to be far in advance of anything in the city since the time of the Cæsars.

Rome to-day contains a population of one half million people. This is less than one third what the population was when Paul preached the gospel in the city in his own hired house to such of the people as were willing to come and hear him. At the time of Paul's ministry there were many public places of worship, magnificent temples; but to-day all of these together, with the exception of the Pantheon, furnish no more conveniences for presenting the gospel than did Paul's hired house in the time of their magnificence. This should be lesson enough to the world not to place too much faith and trust in grand, towering, and costly edifices. Few if any to-day believe that the millions who rejected Paul's message and attended upon and worshiped in these vanished temples, either advocated or received a system of saving faith. And having refused to hear and weigh properly the gospel message when brought to them then, and now with their worldly temples overthrown, their only remaining hope must be in waiting for the voice of promise under the mercies of a risen Redeemer, whom they had spurned, and of another call and voice, which is not unlike that of the apostle who once preached to them in chains.

Rome is rich in ruins; in overturned palaces and temples; in broken down walls and shattered arches; in legends and myths to deceive the unwary and frighten the foolish; and in cunningly devised traditions that are more condemnable than that of which Jesus spoke when he said, "Why do ye also transgress the law of God by your tradition?"

On our first visit to the city we stopped at the Hotel Marini, Via del Tritone, and for the first four days our chaperone was Massimiliano Ciccioli, English, French, German, and Italian guide. Address, Via Commacelli 144 p. 4, Rome.

The first special visit is made to the Pantheon, a wonderful building in proportions, design, and architectural splendor. It is claimed to be the finest monument of antiquity in Rome. It was erected by Marcus Agrippa, twenty-seven years before the beginning of the Christian era, as a temple in which to worship the gods of the nations, and dedicated to Mars and Venus. The Emperor of Constantinople, Honorius, presented it to Boniface IV, A. D. 608, and this pope consecrated it to the Virgin and martyrs, and it took the name of S. Maria ad Martyres. The fine portico is supported by sixteen columns, thirty-six feet high, of oriental granite of a single block, with beautiful capitals. The building is circular in form and is one hundred thirty-two feet in diameter and the same in height. It is lighted only from the aperture, in the middle of the cupola. The cornice is of white marble, the frieze of porphyry, and extends around the whole temple. Approaching the entrance we note the following inscription which records its construction: M-Agrippa-L-F-Cos-Tertium Fecit. Over the entrance door is inscribed: Indulgentia, Plenaria, Quotidiana, Perpetua, Pro. vivis, et Defunctis. Translated into English: "Full, Perpetual, Indulgencies, Daily, for the living and the dead." On each side of the door and below the inscription is the following indorsement: Urbanus VIII Pont. Max. 1632 A. D.

Pio 14 Pont. Max. 1853, A. D. In English:

The great Pope Urbanus VIII A. D. 1632.

The great Pope Pius 14 A. D. 1853.

Formerly the bronze statue of Augustus stood in the niche on the right of the peristyle and that of Agrippa on the left; but the building was plundered of its rich and costly statues and gilt bronze ceilings by the various Popes who have been in charge, and the material used to embellish other churches. History records that Bernini plundered the gilt bronze ceiling of the portico, 450,250 pounds in weight, to make eighty cannon for the castle of S. Angelo. Among the many things of note within the building is the tomb of King Victor Emmanuel, inscribed as follows: "Vittorio - Emmanuel" "Padre - Della - Patria." In English, Victor Immanuel, Father of the Country. The tombs of King Humbert 1, and of Raffaele, are here also.

Proceeding from the Pantheon we drive across the Tiber, making the second stop at the new Palace of Justice, which is nearing completion. It is quite large and palatial in appearance, three stories in height, built of beautiful travertine marble, and would be an honor to any city.

From the Palace of Justice we drive to the tomb of Hadrian, builded 125 A. D. It has the appearance of a great fortress and is often called the Castle of S. Angelo, which proved a refuge for so long to many evil and tyrannical rulers of Rome. It consists of a massive circular tower built upon a square base of great strength. There is arranged a passage way from this to the Vatican, the distance from appearance being a little more than one fourth of a mile. In the year 1527, when Rome was sacked, Pope Clement VII took refuge in this castle; and it is claimed that the Emperor Honorius made use of it for the defense of the city in the fifth century of the Christian era. It took the name of Castle S. Angelo, from the bronze statue of St. Michael the Archangel on the summit.

It is but a short drive from the Castle of S. Angelo to St. Peter's, and we enter the large elliptical space in front called the Piazza. As you approach there is a gradual rise of the ground; and if seated, in connection with the steps leading up to St. Peter's the appearance would be that of a grand amphitheater. It is claimed that four hundred thousand people can stand in the Piazza at a time; but we were doubtful of this: it seemed that half the number would fill the space. Two splendid fountains stand in the Piazza, and on the right as we approach, are the buildings of the Vatican; and to the left, attendant structures to the Basilica of St. Peter's. In the center of the Piazza stands an Egyptian obelisk after the style of the one in Central Park, New York, but not nearly so large and without hieroglyphics. It is claimed that this was transported to Rome by Caligula, and placed in the circus of Nero which originally occupied this area. On the two sides are two hundred eighty-four columns in four rows; and above these in proper spaces on the entablature are ninety-six colossal statues of different canonized saints. There are also forty-four other statues over the entablature of the Atrium, making a total of one hundred forty statues in full view from the walk and driveway to the great building. The church of St. Peter's, it is claimed, stands within the ground of the circus of Nero. The building was planned in the year A. D. 1450; but it was one hundred seventy-six years before it was completed, at a cost, so stated, of ten million pounds. The building covers an area of two hundred and forty thousand square feet, and it is said requires thirty thousand dollars annually to keep it in repairs. Any reader who may have thought it would be a fine thing to own St. Peter's should look carefully to this last item.

The facade of St. Peter's is three hundred fifty-seven feet long and one hundred forty-four feet high. The height from the pavement to the extremity of the cross on the cupola is four hundred twenty-six feet, and something of the dimensions of the building may be imagined when it is known that there is sufficient room in the small ball above the dome to furnish standing-room for sixteen persons at one time. As we approach we notice over the central entrance the huge inscription: "In Honorem Principis Apost. Paulus V. Burghesius Romanus Pont. Max. A. MDCXII Pont. VII." Translated: "In honor of the principal Apostles, Pope Paul the 5th, of the family of Burghesi, the great Pope of Rome, A. D. 1612, 7th Pontificate."

Inside the vestibule over each of the fine doors, one of which is opened but once in twenty-five years, is inscribed: "Paulus V. Pont. Max." "Paul 5th, the great Pope."

Upon entering the building we notice the statues of Pope Pius VII and St. Peter, the latter with the great iron toe worn and polished by being kissed by visitors, a number of whom we saw going through the performance.

The statues of St. Paul and Urbanus VII stood to the left, also four other statues representing doctors of the church. In the center of the great dome in circular form is the inscription: "S. Petri Glorie Sixtus, PP. V. A. MDXCX, Pontif VII." After carefully scanning this we had no further doubt that the building was erected to the glory of St. Peter and the great Pope Paul V. Lower down and in the circle of the dome in gold and blue letters is the inscription: "Tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram edificabo ecclesiam meam, et tibi dabo claves regni coelorum." In English: "Thou art Peter and upon this rock will I build my church, and I give unto you the keys of the kingdom of heaven."

The building was erected and adorned not from new material but from material obtained almost wholly by tearing down and stripping of their ornaments the earlier temples and shrines of Rome. One quotation from history will be sufficient to verify this: "The rebuilding of St. Peter's alone, from the pontificate of Martin V to that of Pius VII, caused more destruction, did more injury to ancient classic remains, than ten centuries of so-called barbarism. Of the huge and almost incredible mass of marbles, of every nature, color, value, and description, used in building St. Peter's until the beginning of the nineteenth century, not an inch, not an atom (except in the case of a few columns of cottanello) comes from modern quarries; they were all removed from classic buildings, many of which were leveled to the ground for the sake of one or two pieces only."—Lanciani, Ancient Rome.

In St. Peter's are exhibited a number of relics, which so far as any evidences of identity is possible that we were able to gather, or learn of any one who ever did know, are purely fictitious and assumptious. Doubtless this legendary claim business surrounding St. Peter's, and every other institution under control of the Catholic Church in Rome, grew up through the contentions between the Latin and Greek Churches over the questions of succession and authority in the church.

1. The superstitions instilled into the minds of the people through erroneous views of the teaching and authority of the apostles, made it an easy matter to satisfy them of the claims through tradition and story.

2. The erroneous position assumed by the church and claimed to be the words of S. Ambrose, that "where Peter is, there is the church; and where the church is, there is no death, but life eternal," made the church itself a ready participator and leader in the work of gathering relics to fortify its claims with the people.

Under these conditions it is easy to understand why St. Peter's chair is exhibited, which no one is hardy enough to say is known to be a correct claim, but they say, "which is believed to have been the episcopal throne of St. Peter and his immediate successors."

If a person takes time to think and review the situation and work of St. Peter in his time, however, he will soon realize that the great apostle had no episcopal throne, nor never claimed one. Late Roman Catholic authorities (Mgr. Gerbet, etc.) hold that it may perhaps have been originally the chair of the Senator Pudens, with whom the Apostle lodged.

If this claim could be proven true, it would furnish no ground for calling it "the episcopal chair," or "throne of St. Peter," but simply a chair in which the Apostle may have sat to rest himself, or to eat his dinner at sometime when he traveled and preached. If the authority of the church is so doubtful that such legendary tales which can not accurately be traced to within several hundred years of the lifetime of the apostles are valuable in identifying it, the case is a hopeless one indeed.

The claim made for parts of the bones of Peter and of Paul in the church, and the handkerchief with which Jesus wiped his face of sweat as he journeyed to the cross, and which it is claimed has a charm that the person who is fortunate enough to get a sight of the image left on the cloth, has indulgence from penance for seven thousand years, the story of the daughter of St. Peter and the emperor, and hundreds of others, all seem to be of one piece, and little or no foundation of fact traceable for any of them.

We enter the Vatican at the north side of the Grand Piazza, and after passing the inspection of the Swiss guards, who have the honor of being selected for the duty by the Pope himself, and ascending the long broad stairway, we are directed to the ticket stand for permit to continue, which always reads "gratis," but costs the visitor a lira, and received the following: "S S. P P. A A."

"Permesso personale per visitare le Camere, Logge di Raffaello e la Pinacoteca nel Palazzo Apostolico Vaticano. GRATIS."

"SACRI PALAZZI APOSTOLICI." We paid a couple of lira to the uniformed collector dealing out these wholly free permits and proceeded to the rich, palatial halls of the Vatican. Passing through the corridor from which there is a good view of the door leading to the private residence of the Pope, we expressed a wish to meet the distinguished personage. But the guide said it was impossible short of a three weeks' residence in Rome. Then turning to us he said, "Maybe you could not at all; are you Catholic or Protestant?"

We answered, Protestant.

"Then you could not see him at all."

"Why?" we inquired.

"He does not see any but those of his own faith."

We replied that we "thought he claimed to be the successor of St. Peter."

"Yes, he does," was the response.

"But," we continued, "St. Peter's work in great part was to those who did not believe as he did. He met with and converted those who did not before believe as he did. A successor must succeed. How can the pope be a successor, if his work and calling are not the same as Peter's?"

The guide looked puzzled for a reply, and finally said: "It would only be a formal meeting. It is only an empty honor, so one can say he met the Pope. The Pope is an old man in his dotage and you would hardly hear him speak."

At this time a carriage drove before the entrance to the Pope's residence and a lady dressed in black got out and entered.

"There," said the guide, "that lady has come to have an interview with the pope. Now likely all she will get from the interview is just one word, then she must withdraw." The explanation had a tendency to leave a ray of hope for those who did not get an interview with his Holiness, and we continued the inspection of the Vatican.

It is claimed this is the largest palace in the world. The total length is eleven hundred fifty-seven feet, and breadth seven hundred sixty-seven feet, and it has eight grand staircases, twenty courts, and over one thousand rooms of various sizes.

The hall called the "Sixtine Chapel," which we enter at the left, after ascending the Royal Stairway, is said to contain the finest fresco paintings in existence. It is rectangular, one hundred fifty feet long and fifty feet wide and many of the paintings are by Michael Angelo. It was a comforting thought indeed to be privileged to enter and examine the work which has been pronounced by the world the highest and best in the line, and we viewed as closely as possible the celebrated pictures known as the Creation, the Fall, the Deluge, the Brazen Serpent, Punishment of Haman, David and Goliath, and Judith and Holofernes. Also Old Testament prophets, incidents in the life of Moses and scenes in the life of Christ by other great artists. On the wall behind the altar was Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment." All are certainly fine in conception and execution and the study of the room alone worth the traveler's extra expense in visiting Rome.

This is only one of many of the halls of art in the Vatican. It would be quite too tedious to undertake to mention the names or contents of all in a short sketch, so the reader must be content with a sample illustration. We noticed particularly the "Hall of the Immaculate Conception," containing "the vision of the Virgin to Pius IX," "The proclamation of the Dogma," and "The Discussion of the Dogma." Passing on we notice "the Hall of the Signature," so called because in it were signed the Papal bulls. It contains a picture by Raffaelle showing the "dispute upon the holy sacrament." "Hall of Heliodoros" where it is also claimed are the finest frescoes in the world, contains a painting by Raffaelle representing "Heliodoros driven from the Temple." "The Hall of the Greek cross" contains the two red porphyry sarcophagi of Constantia, daughter of Constantine the Great, and St. Helen his mother. The two colossal Egyptian statues in this hall were brought from Hadrian's Villa near Rome. In the "Gallery of Statues," the statue of the "Amazon" is pointed out as the finest in the Vatican. We noticed also that of Penelope (500 B. C.) to be a very fine and beautiful work of art, as also many others. In the "Borgian Apartment" attention was called to Room 1, which was the private audience hall of the pontiffs. In this, it was whispered, that Julius II entertained the six English envoys at dinner, sent him by Henry VII of England. Thus far we are but through one part of the Vatican, but it is the closing hour, late in the afternoon, and we wend our way to what is termed the "Scala Regia," and depart by the same great bronze doors at which we entered, at the corner of the hemicycle next to St. Peter's.

IN ANCIENT PERU.

According to late scientific researches in Peru, by Dr. Max Uhle, under the auspices of the University of California, a new theory regarding the ancient inhabitants and civilization of this country must be formulated. According to this theory, the Incas, whom the Spaniards found there, are regarded as a comparatively modern race. Peru was the battleground of divers nations and tribes, and the Incas had conquered before the advent of the Spaniards. But before the Incas and the nations subdued by them, there had been another nation, from which the later stages of civilization had been to some extent inherited. Their name is lost, says Dr. Uhle; their language is a mystery; but they have left traces of their civilization, and from these the conclusion is drawn that "at a time not later than two thousand years ago and in all probability much earlier, they controlled all the region which is now Peru, and that they had their main fortresses and citadels among the upper valleys of the Peruvian Andes."

The Doctor, as quoted in the San Francisco Chronicle of February 16, has learned many interesting things about this race of people, although he has found no evidence that they ever had a written language, or recorded their history. He has found that they built pyramids, made implements of highly finished workmanship, erected strong fortresses and their cities were so planned as to form one great house, one room adjoining another. Their religious ritual was an elaborate one. They were farmers and stock-raisers. They were skilled potters and masters of the decorative art. They understood irrigation, and they were warriors. Dr. Uhle says they brought water down through regular channels from terrace to terrace of their habitations. Some of their ceremonies seem to have been connected with the opening of water channels; certain highly decorated wooden implements carrying heraldic and conventional ornaments are believed to have been used in this rite—a sort of prehistoric "last spike" ceremonial, as it were.

As an illustration of the workmanship, we are told that one of the treasures from the explorer's expeditions which he has kept for himself, is a small pot with an elaborate red and black design of conventional ornamentation, interspersed with crude animal forms. It is as bright and clear as though it had come from the potter's last year. An ornamented clock of the 1860 period which stood beside it on Dr. Uhle's mantelpiece in his furnished room looked twice as old and battered. Yet this pot, according to Dr. Uhle's best knowledge on the subject, is at least two thousand years old, and has probably been buried in a tomb several centuries before the Christian era opened.

Another curious fact told by Dr. Uhle is, that this ancient people were skilled surgeons. They understood how to trepan the skull. Among his collections are a number of skulls, and among those known to belong to this period are some bored in places, and still others have triangular pieces taken out of the bone. Examination shows that these incisions were made during life, and the only possible conclusion is, we are told, that it was a surgical operation. If they understood this, it is only reasonable to infer that their medicine men had more than a little knowledge of surgery. As Dr. Uhle remarked, in showing these skulls, "The ancient races were not quite such fools as we moderns are accustomed to suppose."

Concerning the scientific work of the explorer, the following interesting data are given:

"Dr. Uhle first conceived his theory of the earlier race in Peru and the adjacent republics, while making excavations in an old cemetery twenty miles from Lima, the present metropolis of the republic. Here the natives of the country have laid their dead away for countless centuries. It was already ancient to the time when the Incas came. As he dug down further and further he noticed changes in the manner of burial, the character of the implements left with the dead and even in the conformation of bones and skulls. At the very bottom and among the oldest remains that had escaped the disintegration of time he found thousands of graves showing implements, modes of burial and types of skull unfamiliar and differing from those of any known tribal division. This discovery became the keynote of his later explorations. For over two years he traveled through the country from the seacoast to the highest habitable portion of the mountains, wherever there were known to be ruins. He explored graveyards; he dug below the foundations of old, crumbling towns. And the result is his announcement that in the dim ages before the commencement of our era, perhaps before the opening of our most ancient history, Peru was inhabited by a semi-civilized race that held it for many centuries and then vanished entirely, and that between the downfall of this race and the rise of the Incas at least four other nations conquered and held sway."

To the students of the Book of Mormon, researches of this kind have a special interest. According to this record the Western Hemisphere was settled shortly after the flood by a race that lived and flourished for a long time and finally disappeared, whereupon other settlements were made, and other civilizations sprung up, which in turn flourished and then went to decay. Science, as it progresses, appears to confirm this, and thus becomes a witness to the truth of a testimony that has been everywhere opposed.—Deseret Evening News, February 21, 1902.

From Over the Border.

Welcome spring has come at last. Chimes of sweet melody are heard from the tree-tops once more, notifying us of the return of the timid warbler. Most affectedly he announces to us his program for the season, and how happily he intends to spend the time. He comes a dependent creature. He has brought nothing to wear, nothing to eat, and to all appearances he has prepared nothing for his journey which must indeed be long and tiresome. He expects his board for his music. He expects to be fed and clothed and to help himself to what he finds. But he promises to only take what he wants for himself and family and when dreary cold and autumn chills shall discomfort him again, he will bid good-bye and take no more than what he brought.

How thankful he is for what he has. Day after day he peals forth his notes of solemn praises, like some minstrel's melting tone, to that serene One who has said, "Foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." To his voice we are welcome for his feeding until the very hour when he shall recede like the tide of the mighty deep to his more congenial dwelling of flowers and sunshine.

He was made the way he is. He is an orator by birth; his eloquence is unrivaled; instinctively he speaks and thinks and acts. A little parcel of innocence he is who knows only to do good.

Yes, he has come once more. Like shipwrecked Paul who wished for morning, he now wishes for the beautiful foliage to extend its sheltering hand under which he may place his curious nest and recline now and then in peaceful meditation.

But the trees so long unclothed are stricken to the very heart with winter's revengeful and penetrating blasts. Repeatedly do they sigh to be free from the enemy's awful siege that has been laid so long against them. They are anxious to put on their regular apparel. The presence of so many genteel visitors does truly excite their shame, making them cry to mother earth beneath to bring their garments; for, say they, the time has come.

March is too changing, too irregular to be pleasant as a month, but it has its flowers as well as its thorns. This morning is one of the former. The sun shines virtuously and soothingly upon creation as if trying to encourage to come up higher and nearer to him, all animation, all growth. And as he flirts through the window-pane I cherish sweet reveries of the present and revert to reminiscences of the past. I feel like responding in grateful remembrance to the Sun of Righteousness for having brought me up thus far on my rugged way, and for having illumined my pathway when the adversary had placed obstacles which seemed impassable to unaided observation. With the light thus afforded I pass them. But there are others still to pass. I am taught this, though their size, their dimensions is kept from me for a wise purpose I suppose. In vain do we search the future to see what time will bring to pass, what awaits us.

Will I always continue faithful? I say yes, of course; but I do not know. Will I not sometime in the extreme of adversity allow the baneful influence of the enemy to enter in and turn my heart from God? Of course I say no; but yet for all that it might be. Many other devoted creatures would have most readily answered these questions in the same way; and yet in an hour of weakness, in the night of temptation, gave way and were gradually wafted into the cold shades of forgetfulness. Though once saved and firm and expectant, they fell to rise no more in this age, and possibly not in the first resurrection. One consolation is that it is possible for us all to remain faithful. We can not be tempted above that which we are able to bear.

For each there is something on the way, something coming, something to be passed. He who stands still is not subject to the same liabilities as he who is constantly in motion. Satan knows such a one will not accomplish much, hence he does not put much in the way. He who stands at one place in the ever-flowing stream of life will not encounter many boulders; he may go to them, but few of them will come to him.

We would look down the stream of unborn ages; we would soar from sea to sky, from planet to planet; but we must take things as they come. So the good Master said, "Watch and pray;" and Paul, "Pray without ceasing."

Satan is a very industrious fellow. He works seven days in the week and twenty-fours in the day. Of all the charges that have been made against him, I am not aware that he has ever been accused of idleness. He is always on the alert, watching for opportunities, and knows how to plant a heavy blow in a weak place, for he knows where the weak places are. A big mistake is made in underestimating his power. Let the strength of an enemy be underestimated by the other side and what is the result? All can answer.

I have thought that revelations are sometimes withheld from us in order to prevent Satan from more effectually standing in the way of their accomplishment. It has occurred to me that they may in some cases be withheld for the same reason, to some extent, that a military general withholds his plans and schemes from the enemy. It is plausible. I merely propose it, however. I am not sure that such is the case.

Satan can counterfeit many things that God can do, but he can not determine the mind of God till after it is revealed.

There are many things concerning him and his hosts that are unknown to most of us, if not to all. We wonder just how and what means he has of coming in contact with us, and if he has some agency abstract from his emissaries or satellites which might bear to him a corresponding relation to what the Holy Spirit does to God? The Holy Spirit is capable of acting upon some one in Australia and upon another here in Canada at the same time. The same particle does not act upon each, however, for that would suggest the absurdity of their being in two places at once. There is only one Holy Spirit; and since it is without limitation it may act in various places simultaneously.

The Holy Spirit is not limited; spirits are. Spirits have a definite form, although they may be able to alter it somewhat occasionally for deceptive purposes. Whether the Holy Spirit has or has not a definite form, it is capable of assuming one because it is illimitable. In order, then, for two persons to be acted upon by spirits is it not necessary that there be two spirits, especially where the persons are of the distance apart referred to. Or, if close together, is there a subtle entity extending at a certain radius beyond each spirit form that is capable of enveloping others within its circumference. The latter must either be true or else Satan has another agency which serves his purposes to a marked extent as the Holy Spirit does God's. Why? Because the presence of spirits in a congregation as they have been seen by some, have exerted a depressive sensation over others into whose close proximity they were stationed when they were really not in bodily contact with them.

I was conducting a prayer-meeting one time when I felt very depressed and bound. I called the attention of the Saints to it. The meeting was not a very enjoyable one. After it was over a sister called me to one side and informed me that she saw a spirit standing at my side looking at me with glaring eyes and an awful countenance of rage. This explained the whole affair. At least it gave me to understand the general cause of the indisposition of which we all partook more or less. Yet the party who saw the spirit did not see that it was in visible contact with me. It was a certain distance from me, but effected me nevertheless.

Was it because it displaced the Holy Spirit that this unwelcome sensation came over us, because the Holy Spirit was absent? Or was it rather due to the presence of some more refined matter either acting in unison with or flowing from the mystic personage itself? There must evidently have been something intervening us and it.

Making use of both revelation and experience, I believe I could make clear some of these apparent difficulties if I were to expatiate at length, but perhaps enough space has been occupied for once.

OAKHARBOR, Ohio, March 11.

Editors Herald: It has been quite awhile since I wrote you, and time flies while incidents and experiences come thick and fast. The Massachusetts District conference, held on February 8, at Fall River, was well attended, and an excellent spirit prevailed. On Sunday we had an intellectual, spiritual feast. There seems to be a spirit of inquiry among the people of other churches and the world in Fall River, that we trust will result in many additions to the church.

We had a pleasant ride from Fall River to Providence on the "Snake Line," Brn. W. H. Kelley and M. H. Bond, with a number of sisters and two other brethren in the party. Bro. Kelley will not forget his ride for some time, as the cunning of the "Snake" made him "seasick."

I left Providence for Philadelphia on the next Friday night, and arrived in the beautiful "marble city" in time to attend the conference. All is well that ends well, so the conference was all right. The work in Philadelphia should be carefully guarded.

After the conference I spent a few days visiting friends in Bridgeton, New Jersey; then, having received word from Bro. W. H. Kelley to report at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in time for the district conference, to be held there on March 1, I left Philadelphia for Pittsburg, via Washington, on Friday, intending to be in Pittsburg on Saturday morning. But alas! It was many a weary hour before I reached my destination. The high water blocked all traffic on the road between Washington and Pittsburg, so ye missionary did not get to conference. On Saturday morning I met Bro. U. W. Greene at the station,—one ray of sunshine to lighten the clouds. We were both surprised and glad to meet each other. "It is an ill wind or storm that blows nobody good." So we tried to make the best of our situation and see and learn all we could. We visited both the House and Senate, and heard speeches by the law-makers of our nation. One of the finest buildings in Washington of its kind, in fact it is said by many to be the finest in the world, is the Congressional Library building. It is a dream, a poem, artistic from every standpoint. The coloring of the beautifully arranged paintings is soft and restful. The wonderful arrangement of colored mosaics defies description. The marble arches and broad stairways make one think of ancient Rome in her splendor. The reading room is lofty, stately, grand. It is a place for great thoughts and noble aspirations. We saw the President and his wife.

We visited other points of interest which we will not take time to describe. On Sunday noon we left Washington on the first train out, bound for Pittsburg. Monday morning found us looking for Bro. Pitt; but could not find him. However, after looking around Pittsburg for some time and meeting with a number of intelligent (?) car conductors we found Bro. J. Reese, and through him got in communication with Bro. W. H. Kelley. We met at the Union Station later in the day, and the writer was glad to meet and shake hands with Brn. F. G. Pitt, W. H. Kelley, M. H. Bond, and R. Baldwin. I just missed seeing Bro. J. F. McDowell. In company with Brn. Kelley and Greene the writer boarded the train for Cleveland, where we were kindly cared for by Sr. Warnock and family. Next day went to Kirtland, where we remained over Sunday, the writer preaching in the morning and Bro. Greene in the evening.

Monday, March 10, Bro. Greene and the writer went to Cleveland, and were made welcome at the home of Bro. William George. Tuesday, we left for Oakharbor, where Bro. S. W. L.

Scott had opened the work and preached a number of sermons to interested audiences. We expected to find Bro. Scott when we arrived, but I presume Leonard was afraid that the good people of this town would think we had come to capture the whole community, so had a call some miles north of us. The weather has been against us here, but there are a number that are apparently interested in the message we bear, and we are hopeful. To-morrow we go some few miles in the country, where Bro. Scott held meetings a week or two ago. We expect to remain over Sunday, and then return to this place for a short time.

Dear Herald: Baptized four the 13th and will baptize another to-day. This will make eleven at this place since January 1. A number of others are near. Elder T. A. Phillips has been my associate for two months. We can easily discern the hand of God in our work. I shall start toward Lamoni the 20th inst.

GUY, Oklahoma, March 10.

Editors Saints' Herald: When I last wrote you in October, I was just entering a debate at Deighton, twenty miles northwest of here, with a Millennial Dawn preacher on church propositions. At the close of eight sessions he challenged me to discuss the nature of man, thinking, perhaps, he might regain what he had lost in first discussion. I affirmed man immortal, and will give outline of proof, which I have found very successful, as Bro. W. S. Taylor, of Sherwin, Kansas, will remember, as moderator in debate with J. W. Ward in Kansas, brought from another State to prove the soul-sleeping theory, that after six days he said, "I'm beat. This hell-redemption doctrine beats me. It's either Joe Smith or Ingersoll with me now." Also Bro. Alex. Cato, who at the close of our debate assisted me by baptizing seven of their best members. Bro. M. T. Short will also remember visiting Bro. Ward with me after the debate; but could not persuade him to accept of the truth.

Man was created "male and female" on the sixth day (Gen. 1: 27), "all the hosts of heaven and earth finished" (Gen. 2: 1), God rested the seventh day (Gen. 2: 2), yet "there was not a man to till the ground" (Gen. 2: 5); then the Lord formed the first man or body of flesh (see Gen. 2: 7), yet before this on the sixth day man was created; "male and female created he them." Afterwards "formed" the physical man, having before this formed "the spirit of man within him." (Zech. 12: 1.) This could not refer to the "breath of life" (Gen. 2: 7) common to man and beast, but something more. "The spirit of man" implies belonging to man and not to the beasts. In Job 34: 14, 15 we read, "If he [God] set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his [man's] spirit, and his [man's] breath," "man [the body] shall turn again unto dust." O why will not men understand and believe this? Elihu, the man of God, in Job 32: 8 says, "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them [body and spirit] understanding." Who had denied there being a breath in man that Elihu should thus rebuke them? No one. But they had, no doubt, as some in this day, claimed the spirit and breath to be the same thing. Here the wise man defines the spirit, "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord, searching all the inward parts" (Proverbs 20: 27) by the spirit acting upon, or through the brain. Or as David says, "For thou wilt light my candle [inspire my spirit], enlighten my darkness" (Psalms 18: 28) by acting by the spirit or inner man upon the body or outer man through the brain. Paul speaks of "a man, in or out of the body." (2 Cor. 12: 2.) Four men were seen in the furnace, "and the form of the fourth is [was] like unto the Son of God." (Daniel 3: 25.)

Christ's spirit had form, then, near five hundred years before taking a body of flesh. He said of this, "A body hast thou prepared me." (Hebrews 10: 5.) And "when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son [from heaven], made of a woman, made under the law" (Gal. 4: 4), subject to the law. Jesus came from heaven to take a body; so with all others, as at death, "then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it;" or, "as it was;" or, "where it came from." (Ecc. 12: 6.) Could we return to a place from whence we never came? No, indeed. All God's creation, including spirits, was finished as pertains to this earth in six days. (See Gen. 1: 1.) God's question to Job proves this. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Declare if thou hast understanding. Who laid the cornerstone thereof, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy? The very question implies Job's existence at that time, or he could have answered, "Lord, I did not exist when those events transpired." But he had lost the remembrance of them. Job had been boasting somewhat, and God thus questioned him to show how little he knew or remembered. Jesus calls himself "the bright and morning star" (Rev. 22: 16); "The beginning of the creation of God" (Rev. 3: 14). Paul says that Jesus is "the firstborn of every creature." (Col. 1: 15.) Jesus is therefore the "firstborn among many brethren." (Rom. 8: 29.) "Both he that sanctifieth and they that are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." (Heb. 2: 11.) All of one Father, for, "We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?" Jesus "the bright and morning star," because born in the morning of creation; his younger brethren, morning stars, born also in the morning of creation.

All the sons of God by creation. Only think of who we are, brethren of the Lord Jesus Christ, by creation. What manner of persons ought we to be? O the grandeur of that assemblage of morning stars, and all the sons of God; when we were all together there our bosoms were so filled with joy that we burst forth in rapturous strains of music, until all the heavens were filled with the praises of God. Not only with heavenly songs did we praise him, but when by the spirit of prophecy we beheld this beautiful earth, whose cornerstone was then being laid, emerging in all its glorious beauty of heavenly workmanship, as first prepared by the hand of our loving Father, for our eternal home, where "bodies would be prepared for us" to inhabit; when we saw the fall of man, redemption, and eternal glory to be obtained through him who was as a "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13: 8), then songs became inadequate to express our joy and love for our Father; but one loud, long-continued shout of joy burst forth simultaneously from that vast assemblage of "all the sons of God." We spirits of men, brethren of our blessed Savior. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him who had the power of death, that is, the devil." (Heb. 2: 14.)

But what about this devil? Who made him? God made him an angel of light, next in creation, I believe, to the Christ. He made himself a devil by disobedience, as we all may do, because of our agency. That agency existed in heaven and will eternally in all God's creations. Hence Satan rebelled against God. (See Rev. 12.) One third of the stars of heaven, spirits on probation, followed Satan. A doctrine well understood by ancient saints, hence Jude 6 simply mentions it without explanation. And the angels that kept not their first estate (or law of probation), but left their own habitation (in heaven), he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day (see 2 Peter 2: 4), is the same as, "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." When Adam was created, placed on the earth, here was Satan and all his angels, ready to continue the war begun in heaven. They have not yet been judged, but are reserved to "the judgment of the great day," when all the morning stars and sons of God will be judged; not only the one third that followed Satan, but also the two thirds that "kept their first estate," fought under Michael, and were and will be sent from heaven to take bodies of flesh, as did Michael, who took the body of Adam, and finished the great warfare begun in heaven. Satan and his angels are not permitted to take bodies of flesh and pass through a second estate, or probation, and this is their torment. They are ever striving to get possession of our bodies, and control them. Seven devils were cast out of Mary Magdalene, and one man had a legion of devils in him. We are all of the two thirds of angels, stars of heaven, or spirits, and shall earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints (see Jude 1: 3), for by so doing we will be enabled to overcome, and Satan and his hosts will be expelled from the earth as they were from heaven.

We have the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures by Joseph Smith, the great Seer of the nineteenth century, that makes all these matters plain. "O," says one, "I will not read that, for it has much more than King James' Translation, and that is adding to the word of God, forbidden in Revelation 22: 19." But does it not say, also, "If any man shall take away from the words of the book," etc.? Yes! And who can not see that much is left out of or taken away from King James' Version? Where is the prophecy of Enoch which Jude quotes from? (Jude 14.) Where are the scriptures Christ quoted from about himself in Luke 24: 46? That mentioned by Paul that he taught from Moses and the prophets about the sufferings of Christ; his being the first to rise from the dead, etc., in Acts 26: 22, 23? "That Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures (see 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4), and many other scriptures referred to not in King James', but found in the Inspired Translation? Many bad errors of King James are corrected, as in 1 Kings 14: 8 of David, "who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes." Who but polygamists can believe that a correct translation? All his wives and concubines "only right" in the eyes of God, with hundreds of other errors corrected.

I then proved the universal atonement of Christ; that although "the wicked shall be turned into hell with the nations that forget God" (David), yet "the strong among the mighty [Christ] shall speak to him [them, Pharaoh and his army], out of the midst of hell." (Ezekiel 32: 21.) Hell, "the nether [lower] parts of the earth" (v. 18); their "graves in the sides of the pit" (v. 23); the earth's surface, "the sides of the pit." Hell, prison, and pit are used interchangeably. After the "earth is burned and few men left" (see Isaiah 24: 6), "it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones, . . . and the kings of the earth." (Isaiah 24: 21.) After they are burned their bodies "shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited." (Isaiah 24: 22.) Who was to visit them. Christ's mission was not only to the living, but as the angel said in Luke 2:10, "shall be to all people." Isaiah 42: 7 says, "to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house," "to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." (Isaiah 61: 1.) In fulfillment of all these, Peter says Christ was "quickened by the Spirit, by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient" in the days of Noah. (1 Peter 3: 18-20.) 1 Peter 4: 6 says the "gospel was preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh [not dead], but live according to God in the spirit." This was said in connection with Christ preaching to the spirits in prison. In Ephesians 4: 9 Paul says that before he ascended on high, he "descended first into the lower parts of the earth." Compare this with Ezekiel 32: 18, "into the nether [lower] parts of the earth," and "the strong among the mighty shall speak to them [the heathen nations] out of the midst of hell." (Verse 21.) "Preach to the spirits in prison." (Peter.) Christ was to be "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," "nether parts," center. His body was in the tomb on the earth's surface, from Friday to Sunday. The rich man was in hell. No water there. An impassable gulf prevented his escape. (See Luke 16.) This was before Christ's death, but God had said of him, "As for thee also by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." (Zech. 9: 11.) This is where the rich man was. And in Revelation 20, John, in showing things to come, says, that in the second resurrection, "death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them" and all were judged according to their works. All were redeemed from the prison, had a place on the redeemed earth; although a very poor place for some (see Rev. 22: 15), but it utterly destroys the soul-sleeping theory.

He read from Millennial Dawn his last half hour against Mr. Darwin's theory on evolution, still clinging to his error.

Bro. J. M. Baggerly has preached some since in that place with good interest. I have been southeast ninety miles since that in Elreno and other towns. Good interest, especially at Nicely, fourteen miles west of Elreno, where many were talking of baptism, but only one was baptized. Think a branch can be raised there with proper labor. Expect to return there in May.

Dear Herald: The Saints of this place are struggling on and coming up through much tribulation; or so it seems as in our weakness we meet the trials. But as a smooth sea ne'er trained the skillful sailor, we press on so cheerfully as we have learned the lesson of life. In numbers we have grown from twenty-eight to sixty in the past year, with prospects for a steady, healthful growth. As a branch we have secured the material for a house of worship, and God willing we will soon have a home of our own, instead of renting.

There are many noble Saints here who, despite their isolation and serious drawbacks, are building wisely and well. But few of the general ministry ever find us, and the last ones, Brn. Stubbart and Kemp, were hindered greatly by small-pox quarantine, "sublime distances," and scattered settlements.

Our membership is scattered greatly, yet we have a good Sunday-school, and keep up our regular appointments of worship and priesthood meetings, and in other ways are trying to "come up higher."

We are beginning to get used to the new dress you are wearing this year, but fear we shall never be able to approve of the style in which our dear little Hope is dressed.

Editor Herald: We here have been blessed with the privilege of hearing the elders speak; and we take comfort in the thought that wherever the elders are we have nothing of which to be ashamed. Bro. Caffall has just been here telling us in very strong terms of the duties of Latter Day Saints. We were glad to have him here again and will always look for his coming with pleasure. We need at times to be aroused. I for one welcome criticism when it comes from those who have been so tried and true. We are all liable to err, and some of us have but lately begun the work and need the patience and faith and prayers of those stronger than we, and to exercise as much as possible for ourselves.

I feel that the Lord has granted me a great blessing in healing me when every remedy that human wisdom could conceive had failed and hope had been given up by all. The blessing came through the prayers of the faithful; and I ask of those who know the value of prayer to pray that I may exercise more patience and faith in the Giver of every good and perfect gift. I also ask that the Saints here be remembered, as I feel they are worthy, that they may always be found contending for the faith delivered to the Saints.

MINERVA JOHNSON.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 11.

Dear Herald: While reading of the work of Bro. and Sr. Burton in those far away islands of the sea, it reminded me of our work here among the Mexicans.

My husband has labored considerably about twelve miles from here, on the Medina, in company with my brother-in-law, H. P. Curtis, in his life time, and Bro. W. H. Davenport.

Some months ago an old Mexican tripped on a stone which had been carelessly left on the sidewalk by some men who were repairing the streets, and broke his hip. After the wound had been dressed he seemed to be in great pain and they sent for me, as they lived just a few steps opposite to us. After seeing for a few minutes what agony he was in, I thought that if those poor, benighted people could only understand the gospel, and the great power of God to heal, perhaps he might get relief. And I felt impressed to tell them what we do when we have sick among our people. I tried to explain to the best of my ability how they practiced the laying on of hands in the days of the apostles. The old man said to me, "Is not your husband a minister in your church?" I answered yes, and he said, "Go and bring him; I want him to lay his hands on me, and anoint me with oil, as I have known him since childhood, and I have faith in his religion." So he was administered to and was relieved immediately. Three times he was administered to, each time claiming relief. He said: "I have been raised a Catholic; but your faith is my faith, your church is God's church."

After a few days he suddenly grew worse, and wanted to be administered to again. But his people sent for a Catholic to come with his prayer book and pray over him, and they placed a large crucifix on his breast. He seemed to take no interest in what they did; but as long as he was conscious would raise his hands and say, "If Mr. Jett will only come and lay his hands on my head: I feel better every time."

So he died; and some time afterward we procured their house to preach in, and my husband in company with Bro. W. H. Davenport has been preaching to them; sometimes having a full house, other times not so many, but always good attention and splendid liberty in presenting the gospel. Bro. Gifford and Sr. Ruth, and a few others have rendered valuable assistance by their presence and in singing. We need a few more brave Latter Day Saints who are not afraid to assist though it be to a nation dark in color and religion.

We have been doing most of the singing from our own hymnal, as we have none of our songs in their language. I wish we did. Lately we obtained a Spanish Methodist hymn book, which contains a good many songs similar to ours. We are trying to learn some of them, so we can sing in their language. I think ere long Sr. Ruth will master the singing part if she keeps on. She is very busy now arranging an entertainment to be given for the benefit of our church building at San Antonio, which we need much, having no place to worship except at private houses. We hope ere long to be able to see God's hand working among those dark-skinned people, as we believe they are descendants of the Lamanites.

An old lady came up to my husband after preaching last night and said, "I know you have the true church, and we are only waiting for my husband to come home for our daughter to be baptized. And I think the rest of us will soon follow." So may the good work go on until this gospel has been preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, for a witness before the end.

I see by the HERALD the Gospel Standard, Australia's long-looked-for paper, has made its appearance at last, and I wish it great success. Long may it live to bring many souls from darkness into light!

I ask the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of our labor here among this people.

Editors Herald: J. D. Stead and I closed a series of meetings last night at the Mosquito Bend Schoolhouse. We preached seventeen sermons. House full most every night. Baptized one woman, who has the respect and love of her neighbors. We were kindly cared for by the friends, also Bro. and Sr. Doty. We left a number almost ready for the gospel. The Lord truly blesses us in presenting the word. We often feel the inspiration of his Holy Spirit.

[In the last HERALD, on page 264, Bro. O. E. Surbaugh called attention to a document from the pen of the West Virginia State Superintendent of Schools, in which the Latter Day Saints were branded as not being a "denomination." Concerning this matter Bro. O. J. Tary wrote Superintendent T. C. Miller as follows.]

WHEELING, West Virginia, March 15.

HONORABLE THOS. C. MILLER, State Superintendent of Schools, Charleston, West Virginia.

Dear Sir:—The inclosed clipping from the Wheeling News of March 7 is the only apology I offer for addressing this letter to you. I do not claim any right to dictate, neither have I any official position or influence to use in support of my position. But as an American citizen, fondly cherishing a love for our country, and the legacy of liberty and religious toleration bequeathed us by our ancestors; as a native of West Virginia, an ex-teacher in the public schools of the State, and one who looks with pride upon the advanced grounds being occupied by our educators, the guardians of our future honor and prosperity, I can not refrain from lifting my voice in protest against that which strikes a vital blow at that liberty which our forefathers obtained for us only with the price of precious blood. Religious intolerance drove the Puritan Fathers from their native land to seek a home in the wilds of New England. Even there, before it was subdued it banished Roger Williams, and put to death many innocent people because of their supposed witchcraft.

The framers of the Constitution of our nation demonstrated their wisdom and nobility, by guaranteeing freedom to all religious denominations, and a right to every citizen of the country to worship with any or refrain from worshiping if he choose. If there is one thing above another that can be classed as American and characteristic of the American people it is their love of liberty and equal rights.

Touching the peculiar doctrines of Mormonism (or rather that which is commonly, though erroneously considered synonymous with Mormonism), polygamy, Adam-god worship, blood atonement, etc., I am as much opposed to as any one can be. I have always been, and expect to remain an uncompromising enemy of these. But that does not justify me, neither any one holding office by vote of the people, in curtailing the rights and prerogatives which the Constitution and the law guarantees to all. The moment religious proscription is legalized and the official position of officers sworn to uphold the Constitution used to further such intolerance, that moment the foundation of our national greatness is put in jeopardy. All persons irrespective of faith or creed, when using our public schoolhouses should be held amenable to law for a proper care and use of them. Then if they teach that which the people of their locality do not like or believe, let it be met with reason and intelligence and refuted, if it can be done, with facts. If it can not be done in this way, there is not much hope that it can be done in any other method, especially by denying them the rights of free speech. I have more confidence in the intelligence of our people than to think that legal measures must be taken to keep them from hearing that which may be deemed heresy, lest they be ensnared with it.

However objectionable some of the doctrines may be, it is decidedly un-American to say that the so-called Mormon church is not a religious denomination. That was the same position that the dominant church took against dissenters in the days of the inquisition. Why may not Catholicism say to-day that Protestantism is not composed of religious denominations? Or, if more powerful, why not Protestantism say that the Catholic Church is not a religious denomination?

Such methods are relics of the dark ages, and should not be fostered in a land that boasts of being "the home of the free and the land of the brave."

If it is now necessary to take such steps as this to "Down with the Mormons," we can no longer boast of living in an age of advancement and enlightenment beyond any previous period of the world's history. What are our public schools doing, if the citizens turned out from them are not able to take care of themselves when met by that which may be termed heresy? Have they not reasoning powers and intellectual faculties sufficiently developed that they can be trusted alone to choose for themselves? There is no law compelling any to accept as true any form of doctrine if they do not choose to do so. What danger, then, can come from allowing all to present their claims to those who care to hear? If wrong, they do not need to accept.

A very common error in the world is that which supposes that polygamy is the foundation of original Mormonism. Nothing can be farther from the truth. The polygamy of the dominant church of Utah is a child of Brigham Young's begetting, and not of the church organized by Joseph Smith in 1830. Lately succeeding Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith was made president of the Mormon church whose headquarters is at Salt Lake City. But Joseph Smith, son of Joseph who was killed by a mob at Carthage, Illinois, is now and has been for more than forty years president of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The headquarters of this church is at Lamoni, Iowa. This church has been declared by different courts, to be the legal successors of the church organized in 1830, from which Brigham Young with a large following apostatized, went to Utah, and there introduced many doctrines foreign to the original church. This church has representatives in many parts of the State. They bitterly fight the doctrine of polygamy and challenge the emissaries of Young from Utah to meet them in public debate on the question. This they will not do. These people, though often called Mormons, are classed with the Utah church by many who do or ought to know better. But they have no connection with them whatever.

Whether your ruling includes this church also, I do not know. But if it included only the church that was most bitterly arrayed against me and my belief, I would still oppose it because of the principle involved, which takes away the rights lawfully belonging to all. Error will not assume a dangerous position if truth is free to combat it with reason and intelligence. Far more dangerous to our country's welfare is that spirit of intolerance which feeds on ignorance and misrepresentation, and caters to a low degree of intelligence that often finds expressions in outbreaks of mobocracy in opposition to law and order.

Having voted for you when you were elected, I still maintain a friendly feeling for you personally, and a very high regard for the important position you occupy. But everything that threatens our country's welfare, and the liberty of any law-abiding citizen, I will use my utmost lawful efforts to oppose.

Very respectfully,

O. J. TARY.

CHAUNCEY, Ohio, March 13.

Dear Herald: Elder J. F. McDowell labored through some parts of this country. At this place and at Millfield he had quite an interest, and some are very near the kingdom. They still ask for him when I meet them, and ask if he will come back in the spring. Bro. L. R. Devore held a few meetings, but they would not turn out, so he went elsewhere. I just closed a ten-night meeting at New Floodwood four miles from here, with good interest. A Baptist lady whom they send as their delegate, said to her husband, who never belonged to any church, "You go in that church and I will go with you; they have the truth." He took me by the hand and said, You surely have the right thing. I believe it, but I want to read some of your works. I gave him a Voice of Warning and both volumes 1 and 2 Church History, which he is now reading. We have a cordial invitation to return there, and a place to stop at his home; but I have a missionary horse which I bought for that purpose and can drive all over this country within ten miles of home any evening. I promised to take some of our more able missionaries back when school is out. I have two openings up on Brush Fork, ten miles from here, and they are after me every week. I am glad to see the interest taken in our work. I also expect to go to Nelsonville, where I have been before and rented a hall for three months, and could not get any out to hear what we had to say. Brn. J. Moler, James Beatty, and F. C. Smith all preached there with no effect. I went down on the square and got on a box and had a good crowd. I gave out four hundred fifty "Epitomes of Faith," and some tracts. I think a week of meeting on the street would bring about a debate there, which would put our work properly before the people. Many of my friends wish me to come. It is a town of eight thousand people and not one Saint in it, but a good pike road from my place to it, and we can drive it every night when it gets warm. As an elder I work locally, but will try to open up the work for those who are able.

GEORGE W. HULL.

P. S.—I was in a conversation with a Jew yesterday. He said that the Jews were thoroughly organized now, and they paid one dollar a year into the treasury for the purpose of buying Palestine.

OAKHARBOR, Ohio, March 16.

Editors Herald: On January 5 I wrote you that we were expecting Bro. S. W. L. Scott, in the near future to open up the gospel work for the first time in Oakharbor. On February 21 he arrived, just too late to have notice put in the weekly papers. Having learned not long since that there are a few Saints northeast of here about six or eight miles, Bro. Scott went there Saturday evening, and over Sunday preached four sermons to attentive audiences in Perry Williams' hall. Monday he returned here, and in the evening, February 24, the work was first begun in Oakharbor. For three or four meetings the hall was pretty well filled. The weather growing worse and the other churches having socials and parties reduced the audience to those who were very interested. Meetings continued all week and closed Sunday evening, Bro. Scott being called to Temple, Ohio, on church business. The following Saturday he returned and was to have preached again in the country Saturday evening and over Sunday; but, missing the morning train in Cleveland and the roads being so muddy, he could not get out there at all. No meetings arranged for here. Sunday he telephoned Bro. W. H. Kelley, of Temple, and arrangements were made for Brn. U. W. Greene and Geo. W. Robley, to come and hold meetings till time to go to General Conference. They commenced the evening of March 11. Bro. Robley was the first of the two to speak in the town hall again. The weather and the roads were very bad, consequently very small congregations to begin with; but the weather getting better the interest increased, many saying they never heard such preaching in their lives before Bro. Scott came here, also, Brn. Greene and Robley. The minds of the people are being awakened to the fact that there is something new for them to think about. Brn. Greene and Robley went out in the country to hold meetings in Perry Williams' hall, Saturday evening, over Sunday and Monday evening. Are expected back here to continue the work beginning again Tuesday evening and the rest of the week. The weather is much cooler and we hope for a good interest this week. May the Lord bless the efforts being put forth here.

JOHN W. MOXON.

SPY HILL, Assa., N. W. T., Canada.

Editors Herald: The bright sun rays coming through the window cause me to long for the spirit's rich graces to lighten my mind. But I have no room to complain, as the Father has been very kind and good to me. He has blessed me with excellent health physically and as a rule, spiritually.

The peaks of the hills wearing their way through their mantles of snow remind me that Jack Frost will soon take his flight until another winter. We shall welcome summer, and ask God that while the pleasant days are passing we may be able to plant some seeds of kindness that will bear flowers of rare beauty and purity that will cheer some weary pilgrim on to greater efforts, as well as to remain steadfast ourselves.

I arrived in the Northwest the last of October, and was joined by Elder Alex. McMullen about the middle of November. Since that time we have labored together in what is known as the Dauphin district until about three weeks ago, the "more part" of the particulars of which you will probably have seen from the pen of Bro. Mac. About the time we were leaving there, however, a Reverend Taylor thought it would be a source of great satisfaction to annihilate "Mormonism," or at least to give it a shock that would impede its growth and progress for a time. He made his assault on January 19, which consisted of the usual unsavory medley of "Joe Smith" stories. As Mr. Taylor is a Presbyterian he seemed to want to honor one of his own clergy, Mr. S. Spalding, with writing the Book of Mormon. However, he seemed to forget that Spalding was a Presbyterian for he gave the "author of the Book of Mormon" some very hard names before he finished. But about all that we "cowboys" have to do, is to give them lots of "slack" and they will soon tighten the "noose" themselves. As an instance: In speaking of some of our doctrines he said: "The laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost! What blasphemy!" with considerable emphasis on the last two words. But he takes up some more slack: "I deny the right of any church or person to have authority in religion." Of course that shuts him out of the field of ministerial usefulness. But then, the "Mormons" were up for trial, and of course Mr. Taylor's statements were supposed to be applied only to them.

He would first say that "If Smith lived now he would be a most accomplished swindler:" then "he was a natural born fool." Can you conceive of a "natural born fool" being an "accomplished swindler"?

We tried to get a reply in his church, but were refused; so we secured the village schoolhouse and announced a reply on February 9, and had a fairly good turnout. Elder McMullen took the stand and examined Mr. Taylor first from a biblical standpoint, showing that he contradicted himself as well as the Bible. He then showed that the encyclopedia which Mr. Taylor had used (Schaff-Herzog) contradicted itself, and as a consequence should not be trusted in such a case, as it in many ways condemned itself.

After examining Mr. Taylor's lecture Elder McMullen began to bring proofs in support of the Book of Mormon, and talked in all two hours and forty minutes.

Mr. Taylor was present to get the benefit of Bro. McMullen's defense, expecting to get a reply to us; but that privilege was not given him, as this was our reply. But he could not contain himself in peace, and would break forth with an ejaculation of contempt every few minutes. He did not like to take his "own medicine" out of "our bottle," or at least administered by "ye physicians." Although we had taken his soothing syrup, when it came to giving it to him, it seemed like aloes, and I took down, verbatim, thirty-five interruptions which he made in an hour and a half, and not being a stenographer I missed some of the best. Things got so warm for him that he got up and left us, saying he would reply the next Sunday in the church.

In opening our meeting we read rules and propositions for a debate; and notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Taylor "sort o' enjied" it, he wanted a week to make up his mind. The week came and we were present again to take notes and hear his decision with regard to taking up the debate. He talked about five minutes, in which he made a hasty retreat and had concluded that "the job was too dirty and mean to have anything more to do with it," and he "honestly thought" he "would be soiling his hands to take a public platform with" us.

So of course the debate did not materialize. Mr. Taylor had told us to "take our gloves off" and "go at it in earnest," but I think he finally came to the conclusion that that advice was uncalled for.

One has promised to be baptized when the river thaws out, if we go back; and as his wife is only waiting for him, we are almost sure of two, with others very near the kingdom in that part.

We came to these parts three weeks ago, which occasioned a drive of some sixty miles, part of which was over the mountains, Bro. George Burton acting the part of the "good Samaritan" in bringing us over.

We found the Saints in good spirits and feeling the good of their religion generally. Have been holding forth here and a few times at Qu Appelle Valley, with fairly good interest. Some more will come into the light here in the near future, we think. We go from here to make an opening near Whitewood, Assiniboia, on the 19th inst., where Bro. Selby Carter (the branch president here) has been letting his light shine, an invitation to send an elder there being the result of his efforts.

I ever pray for Zion's redemption and glory.

WALTER L. BENNETT.

CHARITON, Iowa, March 18.

Editors Herald: I closed one of the most successful meetings on February 2, five miles north of Algona, so far as making friends for the church is concerned, it has ever been my lot to hold. I was very erroneously advertised in the Algona papers as a Utah Mormon; but in all honor to the editor, when I went to him, showed him my papers, and gave him some knowledge of our church, he made all proper corrections.

I was royally entertained twenty-nine days by Adam Palmer and wife, who were both my schoolmates in early life. After being shut out of the M. E. church by but a few of its members I secured the use of the schoolhouse less than one mile from the church, where I got a splendid hearing and I am under special obligations to the young people who not only gave good attention, but built fires and went to another school and borrowed an organ and conducted the singing in a manner that is a credit to any community.

Owing to the articles published in the papers I was virtually closed out of the Schank Schoolhouse, a place of much promise, three miles north of Algona.

I went from there to Dolliver, a new town in the northern part of Emmet County, where I found an M. E. meeting in progress in charge of an evangelist by the name of Benedict, from Sioux City. My presence seemed to arouse his ire. He had met Brn. I. N. White and W. C. Nirk at Rhodes, Iowa, which of itself is an explanation. I attended his meetings two evenings, waiting for his meetings to close. The second evening, while he had all who would go up around the altar, he came to me and told me he did not want any "seat warmers" in his congregation, and unless

I and others would do as the M. E.'s did he did not want them to come to his meetings. I then went to the pastor and asked him if it was not all right for the members of other churches to take a seat and sit quietly and reverently during services. He said no: no such rights were permissible in a Methodist church, and related an instance where twenty-five Presbyterians had attended his services and that he roasted them all out. So the city physician and members of other churches all withdrew from the church, although they had been active supporters of the church. I think there will be good accomplished in Dolliver, as there are many good people there. It is almost impossible to hold meetings in that part of the State now, on account of small-pox.

W. H. KEPHART.

KINGFISHER, Oklahoma, March 18.

Editors Herald: My meeting at Charter Oak Schoolhouse, eight miles south of Guthrie, closed Sunday night with house crowded, and the interest was equal to the attendance. One was baptized, the wife of Bro. Thomas Kent.

The Methodist folks tried to oppose our effort, but they were largely in the minority, so it was like their preacher remarked in his sermon regarding Paul's language, "Fighting the air."

The prospect for the work there is indeed encouraging. I believe that with proper labor a branch could be organized there next year. It is a new place, but the people are friendly and interested in our preaching, or in what we preach.

My prayer is that God will abundantly bless his people, and especially in the coming General Conference, that much good may be accomplished and his children more firmly united and strengthened in the faith. I feel encouraged in the work, and with the Lord's help shall ever labor for Zion's cause.

R. M. MALONEY.

FRAZEE, Minnesota, March 21.

Editors Herald: As the conference year draws to its close we naturally look back over the past and ask, What of the passing year? Its record is made; the labors thereof are recorded in the "book of remembrance." Will "the day that cometh" burn up the works of the passing year, or will they abide? Have we builded of "wood, hay, or stubble," or of gold, silver, or precious stones? What, as regards the year now ebbing to its close, will be the disclosures when the "books are opened" and awards are meted out according to merit?

The writer enjoys a degree of comfort in the thought that since May 21, 1901, he has been constantly at the post of duty, or at least what seemed to him to be such, having remained in his appointed field continuously since that time. He does not for a moment presume that his work has been perfect, for he is conscious of the fact that defects may have characterized it both as to matter and method. He has sought to labor for the good of God's work in the earth, and feels content to leave the matter all in his hands, realizing that he will do perfectly right by all.

The work in Minnesota is gaining slowly in places; in other places it seems to be about all it can do to hold its own; in still other places it is probably not doing that. The most hopeful sign is the increase of spirituality, as manifested in some of the Saints, and the increased interest in Sunday-school work, rather than in numerous baptisms. There is abundance of room for more improvement along both these lines.

Sunday, March 16, I assisted in the dedicatory services of the Union church at Clitherall. Members of other churches did not come in to assist as we hoped they would. However, Mrs. Lewis Harriman and her daughter Mabel aided in the song service, the latter playing the organ. They are efficient helpers in the Saints' Sunday-school. Mrs. Harriman, in a very able and satisfactory manner, teaches the advanced intermediate class, and though a member of another church she is free from the unreasonable prejudice that some people seem to think they must have in order to be a good member of the church of their choice. She even brings out the points in the Quarterlies from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, amplifying the Bible proofs or references. The school is quite fortunate in having the help of such broad-minded people, especially so when they have ability to teach, which Mrs. Harriman possesses in a marked degree. Miss Mabel renders much-needed help in the way of furnishing music; and now since they have a new, or almost new, and sweet-toned organ, we may reasonably expect an improvement in the music both for the Sunday-school and church.

On Friday night, March 14, the sisters served a "New England" supper at the hotel kept by Mr. and Sr. "Ans" Sherman. Mr. Sherman, though not a member of the church, is quite liberal in supporting the work in a financial way. The elders are made welcome at the hotel, besides Mr. Sherman helps out in other ways so that he is entitled to credit. Twice that I know of he has opened his house free of charge for suppers for the benefit of the church. If, as the Savior teaches, one is to lose not his reward for giving only a cup of cold water, will not his reward be increased if he gives abundantly of other things besides cold water, to help the Lord's work?

There are many of the dear brethren and sisters throughout the State whose works of sacrifice and devotion I would like to mention if space would permit. If I shall be fortunate enough to get into the New Jerusalem, and if disappointment can come to an inhabitant of such a happy place, then I shall be disappointed if I do not meet with Saints from Bemidji, Osage, Audubon, Cormorant, Detroit, Frazee, Fergus Falls, Amore, Clitherall, Maine, Frieberg, Minneapolis, and Burnesville, in all of which places there live those whose kindness is as balm to a wounded soul, and will not soon be forgotten by,

Yours in bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

CONNELLYVILLE, Pennsylvania, March 18.

Editors Herald: As another conference year draws to a close it's but natural to take a retrospect.

In nearly every respect the past year has been the most successful and satisfactory since the beginning of my active ministry. Have traveled most of the time in company with Bro. Baldwin. We have baptized twenty-three, and others are waiting our return who will obey.

However, the roses we have plucked in the year have not been free from thorns.

Our conference at Sharon, Pennsylvania, was all that could be anticipated. While at times some waxed bold in debate, we separated as brethren in Christ, still maintaining that confidence in each other which makes one feel he is not alone in this world of conflict. Our young Brn. James Kelley and D. L. Allen preached Saturday evening and Sunday morning respectively, both acquitting themselves splendidly, to the edification of all. Our Parsons (A. H.) outdid himself on Sunday evening, to a well-filled house of attentive listeners.

A gentleman from West Virginia in writing for one of my books asks that one of our elders come his way and preach for them. He writes as follows: "If you have any traveling ministers, please tell them to call and see me and I will use them the best I can, and will be glad to hear them talk scripture. I am anxious to know the difference between the two churches. I ask the prayers of the church that I might get light and God will quicken my understanding."

He has been investigating the Utah doctrine, but could not indorse polygamy. He became acquainted with our doctrine through the efforts of Mr. Riggle's people to convert him to their side, but now he is asking for an elder. Will our brethren there look him up. Address, J. P. Mason, Anthem, Wetzel County, West Virginia.

Will leave to-morrow for Toledo, then on to General Conference.

F. J. EBELING.

DOW CITY, March 21.

Editors Herald: How I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD, and in fact all the items therein! How I rejoice to see the great latter-day work move on!

This year is my first conference appointment. It seems to me I have not done very much; but I have done what I could.

I was called home to preach the funeral sermon of Bro. Albert Crandall. The respect shown to him by the people of Dow City is worthy of note. He united with the church in 1863, and was a faithful member of the church. About five weeks previous to this I preached the funeral sermon of his son, Harvey Crandall. May the blessings of God ever be with the lonely wife and relatives.

The work in my field of labor is rather dull on the account of so much sickness; smallpox, measles, and la grippe. So it is not a very good time to hold meetings. However, I have been doing what I could. I visited the Cherokee Branch, and spoke once on Sunday, the 9th, in the Swedish church, which our people have rented for a year. There was a good audience out, and I felt well in my effort to present the truth. I am well acquainted at Cherokee as I lived within six miles of there for about twenty-five years. But last spring I moved my family to Dow City, and went into the missionary field. As long as it is God's will that I should go I will do as best I can. I love to see the good work go on, and we should take hold of it firmly, and continue on and on.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"It isn't the thing you do, dear,
But the things you leave undone,
That gives you a bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun.
The word you might have spoken,
The help you might have given,
Will rise like a ghost in the twilight
And shut out your thought of heaven."

Select Reading for April Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

THE PROFESSION OF MOTHERHOOD.

An article in a late number of a magazine for mothers reads: "The majority of mothers need no training. They know by instinct and are sufficiently versed in the curriculum of child-life and need few lessons." Is this true? Do mothers know by instinct how to feed, clothe, and govern their children? Is there a royal road to the acquirement of necessary maternal knowledge, vouchsafed to no other occupation? I find a partial answer to this question in an item taken from this same magazine. "A mother was observed feeding red herring to her infant and when remonstrated with, exclaimed indignantly, 'Don't you suppose I know how to bring up children? I have buried ten!'"

This is a very pertinent commentary on the instinct of mothers, a little overdrawn, perhaps, and yet I have seen intelligent mothers giving babies, coffee, tea, hot biscuit, pork and pickles, and claiming that, because the infants took these articles without rebellion, therefore they were proper food for babies. I shall never forget seeing a German woman give a six-months-old infant beer; and because the child smacked his lips, she exclaimed, exultantly, "You see that beer is the natural drink for babies!"

I remember once hearing a young mother say that she would never give her baby poisonous drugs, but that if it were ailing she would give it whisky, because then she would know what she was giving.

These may be extreme cases, but look about you and determine for yourselves how many mothers know by instinct what is best for their children. Look back upon your own life and read over again the mistakes you made in bringing up your little ones and confess that you could have done better had you had some training for the profession of motherhood. Ask any audience of mothers how many have buried their first-born and note the hands that will be raised. Then ask them how many think these precious lives might have been saved had the mothers known how to care for them. It may seem complimentary to say that we women know all things by instinct, but after all it is not true. Maternal love may give us a certain deftness in the personal care of the child, a peculiar insight into the needs of the child and an intense longing to meet those needs; but love untaught and undirected does not preclude our making serious blunders which are detrimental to the welfare of our children and bring us many a heartache.

True, some women make good mothers without much training, but every one of them will declare that she could have done much better with training.

Some women are good cooks who have learned by experience, but they could tell you of much good food spoiled in the process of learning. Many women who have never learned the millinery trade can trim hats and bonnets beautifully, but they work at a disadvantage, and know it although they will not blazon the fact abroad. There are women who are natural nurses and who can take better care of the sick than some doctors, but a medical education would have given the doctor's authority as well as the nurse's skill.

Motherhood is a profession, and although women can worry along in it and meet with tolerable success they can do better work if trained for it. The material they are working on is too costly to be spoiled while they are learning. We shudder as we read the remark of the oculist who was complimented on his surgical skill. "Yes," he said, "but I spoiled a peck of eyes learning to operate."

Yet eyes are not as valuable as whole children. How many have been spoiled body and soul while the mothers were experimenting on them, trying to gain the skill that would enable them to bring their children up properly?

Motherhood is a profession demanding a wider range of knowledge than any other. It is a well-known fact that in no other period of human life are there so many fatal diseases as in childhood, and this is due in part to the natural susceptibility of children, and largely to the ignorance of mothers. If a woman were to be a doctor of other people's children she would study at least four years; but she will enter upon the physical care of her own without one particle of knowledge of symptoms or treatment of diseases, even without a knowledge of the ordinary laws of hygiene.

If she were fitting herself as a lawyer to help settle the disputes of men and women she would spend years in preparation; yet one renowned diplomat says that to arbitrate between nations does not require the diplomacy, the knowledge, the patience, the profound insight into human nature that is required in the settlement of conflicting claims of the children of a household. . . .

While we recognize woman's especial fitness for the office of mother in its widest, deepest sense it in no way belittles her to magnify the office and admit that the more thoroughly she is prepared for it by wise training the more satisfactorily will she fill it.

What profession has a wider scope than that of motherhood?

Acting is defined as a profession, demanding special training; yet acting is but depicting life as it is, its faults, its follies, or its sins, painting them in vivid colors, true to nature. Motherhood deals with life in its potentialities, aiming to correct its faults, to overcome its follies, to prevent its sins and to choose the colors which shall glow upon life's canvas. Acting imitates. Motherhood creates. Which needs more special preparation?

Which wider knowledge? Which deeper insight into the possibilities of the human heart? . . .

Motherhood begins with influencing the child, at life's outset, directing the first movements of its intellect, marking out to some extent the line of its habits, indicating the direction in which its intellectual tendencies shall be turned. The mother has had her moulding touch upon both head and heart long before the author can begin to put in his work. . . .

But, you say, is it not a waste of time for a girl to prepare for a profession she may never follow? Why not wait until she is sure of maternity? She will then have time to study its needs, instead of wasting years in preparation for that which may never happen.

It is a mistake to suppose that such years of preparation are wasted, even if the actual demands of motherhood are never met. The woman will be better fitted for any life calling, be it teaching, preaching, doctoring, or writing. She will be a better friend, neighbor, citizen, philanthropist, because she will better understand humanity, will have a clearer comprehension of the human heart.

But, again, the time in which she may practice the profession of motherhood is limited. In a very few years, at the utmost, the children will have grown up and have gone out into life and her occupation will be gone. Not so; she will merely have exchanged the narrower for the larger sphere. Instead of a limited motherhood, she will have entered the broader field of universal motherhood. All the wisdom, foresight, tact, judgment and ruling ability that has been developed in the home life with her children, can now be used in care for the community or the nation. The State needs mothering, and the woman who, in her quiet maternal life, has developed the love of all humanity, is now fitted to step out into the great domain of all human needs. As Ruskin says:

"Generally we are under an impression that a man's duties are public, and a woman's private. But this is not altogether so. A man has a personal work or duty, relating to his own home, and a public work or duty, relating to the state. So a woman has a personal work and duty, relating to her own home, and a public work and duty, which is also the expansion of that.

"Now the man's work for his own home is, as has been said, to secure its maintenance, progress, and defense; the woman to secure its order, comfort, and loveliness.

"Expand both these functions. The man's duty, as a member of a commonwealth, is to assist in the maintenance, in the advance, in the defense of the State. The woman's duty, as a member of the commonwealth, is to assist in the ordering, in the comforting, and in the beautiful adornment of the State.

"What the man is at his own gate, defending it, if need be, against insult and spoil, that also, not in a less, but in a more devoted measure, he is to be at the gate of his country, leaving his home, if need be, even to the spoiler, to do his more incumbent work there.

"And, in like manner, what the woman is to be within her gates, as the center of order, the balm of distress, and the mirror of beauty; that she is also to be without her gates, where order is more difficult, distress more imminent, loveliness more rare."

"The Sunday-School from a Scholar's Standpoint."

Throughout the whole history of man and his achievements, from the creation down through the successive stages of development, no act, no great movement has ever been aimlessly performed; no advancement made without some object in view; some end to be attained.

Thus the question naturally arises,

WHAT IS THE AIM OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL?

What is its mission?

Pages could be confined to this question alone, but in a few words, its ultimate aim is spiritual and intellectual development. Spiritual, because it teaches the child to do good rather than evil; because it awakens within it high and noble motives; spiritual and moral thoughts: which are the necessary conditions for the formation of a positive moral character.

Intellectual development (which is probably more a natural result than a definite aim of the school), because "Religion is the vital force of all civilization and culture;" because the study of the "Bible" does not dwarf the mental faculties, but rather develops brain power and encourages reasoning. The educational value of the Sunday-school is shown particularly when it was first established in England. It was one of the prime factors in the advancement of learning. What it has accomplished in the present day, needs no mention; it speaks for itself; but what more it will accomplish in the future, as yet, lies veiled before us.

IT IS AN IMPORTANT WORK

and its responsibilities are immense as the worth of the soul and lasting as the soul's immortality. Important, indeed, for as Froebel, one of the world's greatest educators has said, "In the children is the seed-time of the future." Whatever is implanted in the child's mind will usually take root sometime in the future; and it is the office of the Sunday-school to plant such seed as will reap the fruits of eternal life.

Children soon grow to be men and women, and if Christianity is to progress, the duty of carrying on the work will soon be theirs. And it is not those who come from the college or university that will keep the wheel moving, but those who have been regular attendants of the Sabbath-school.

Next to the parent

rests with the Sunday-school teacher. Men glory in raising grand and magnificent structures and find pleasure in work of their own planting, but the Sunday-school has a grander work; that of building a man; of seeing a youth of its own planting, grow up and take root in the world and in its turn scatter seeds of kindness.

The mind of the young is plastic and easily molded by impressions received from without; therefore if right forces are brought to bear upon the child's mind, right results will likely be produced. Thus it is of vital importance that none but they who are qualified for the position should ever fill places of importance in the Sunday-school. There are certain pre-requisite qualifications for a teacher in our public school of to-day; and it should be just so in the Sunday-school; one must be a diligent scholar before he can become a competent teacher; and then love for the pupils and love for the principles taught must be inherent in the teacher, if he would be successful in implant-

ing them in the minds of others. The smallest child can penetrate your thoughts and decide whether or not you love your work. If we desire to accomplish anything in this work, we must be progressive; ascending step by step, to our ideal school. To be progressive, interest must be kept alive, and we all know from experience that a child soon grows weary of the same thing over and over again. It must have variety in its work, in its play even, if interest is preserved. Thus variety is an essential element in the Sunday-school, not only with the teachers, but with the officers, as well. A superintendent, active and energetic, can easily vary the general exercises enough each Sunday to hold the attention of the school, while for the teachers there are and of leading the child to express his thoughts and to converse freely with them. This is the difficulty that so many teachers of advanced pupils meet with: timidity in expression of thought, and this necessarily hinders the lesson from reaching the highest degree of interest; for what can be more interesting and edifying than free individual discussion upon the part of both teacher and pupil. It is thus important that expression of thought should begin in the primary classes, and no trouble will be found as they advance.

An Appeal for the Drouth-Stricken Saints of Southern Missouri.

With the consent of Bishop Kelley I wish to speak a word in behalf of the drouth-stricken Saints of this part. Many of the Saints who have in time past helped the church treasury are now in want of seed and feed in order to raise another crop. It is impossible to describe the condition of some of the poor people in these southern counties. Many are in a destitute condition. I don't think the Saints have suffered as badly as many others, yet they must have aid. Please consider that this country had a total failure last year, except those more fortunate who had fruit to fall back upon. There was no corn, potatoes, nor anything in the eating line raised, and even the fodder was poor, and little of it. Very little hay was cut, hence the price of feed and eatables is very high. Straw is selling twenty-five to thirty cents for fifty-pound bales; hay, fifty-five to sixty cents per fifty-pound bale; corn, ninety cents per bushel; potatoes, $1.35 per bushel. And if prices were only one fifth, how could people who have no money buy? Money or cast-off clothing sent to the address below will be thankfully received and distributed where needed. Henry Sparling, Bishop's agent. R. F. D. No. 2, Springfield, Missouri.

A Word from Wales.

Penygraig is an old landmark in the history of the church in South Wales, and there is a small branch that still keeps the camp-fire burning. But for the want of a suitable room to hold service in progress of the work is hindered. Within a radius of five miles there are twelve lively towns with a population of about one hundred fifty thousand supported by the coal industry. This is one of the best missionary fields in South Wales. The branch here has concluded to try and build a house of worship, but can not do so unless they can get help. Could we rent a hall that would be suitable we would do so. We kindly ask all to help us. Please do not pass this by with the thought that you can not, but call the attention of others to the matter and add your generous gift to theirs and send it by draft on Bank of London, or better still, post-office order with names. Proper credit will be published of all. We hope to have in attendance at the coming General Conference some one to take donations for this worthy enterprise. Please come prepared. By order of the committee, L. Bishop, chairman; D. Edwards, treasurer; W. Little, secretary. William Lewis, sub-missionary of Wales. Address all communications to William Lewis, 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff, South Wales.

Important.

To Saints coming to conference via Council Bluffs: If you wish to come via Chariton, Iowa, leave Council Bluffs Transfer 8:05 p. m., reach Chariton 12:30 a. m.; leave Chariton 4:35 a. m., reach Lamoni 6:25 a. m. This means a night ride both going and returning, but saves about twenty-five cents fare each way. Those leaving Soldier, Moorhead, Pisgah, can reach Lamoni next morning after leaving home and get home next day after leaving Lamoni. You can purchase ticket to Lamoni via Chariton from Council Bluffs, but not via St. Joe to Lamoni. Via St. Joe gives you daylight ride, however, both ways. J. W. Wight.

Fourth Quorum of Priests.

Brethren, this is the time itemized reports should be made of work done during the year. Please send at once, also dues. Remember, members not reporting for two consecutive years are dropped from quorum. April 1 will end the conference year. Let us be diligent. Frank Parker, recording secretary, Argentine, Kansas.

Card of Thanks.

THE WORD OF WISDOM, SECRET SOCIETIES, AND PERSONAL CONDUCT.

The Word of Wisdom, according to the purported object of its giving, can not be justly made a test of fellowship. It has been tried at various times and has resulted in unnecessary disturbance and failure.

It is stated that it was once decided by Joseph Smith, as president of the High Council, that an official of the church who did not keep the Word of Wisdom, after being informed of its requirements, was not worthy to hold an office. It may be asked, Is this decision binding as law on the church to-day? To this we should reply that the Reorganized Church is based upon the standard books of the church, one of which is the Doctrine and Covenants. The 86th section of this book contains the Word of Wisdom. The heading to the section is, singularly enough, made a part of the section.

This specifically declares that the word is "to be sent greeting, not by commandment or restraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom."

The decision referred to is an opinion rendered as the judgment of the president and the council; which if it be enforced as a penalty makes the observance of the Word of Wisdom a matter of "commandment and constraint," which defeats the provision prefacing the section. Hence this decision can not be construed as being in force now; nor can it be until such time as the matter involved is passed upon by the competent authorities of the church.

The Twelve have adopted a rule that they will not appoint as a missionary any person known to them to be addicted to the use of tobacco, or to drinking liquors. This they had the right to do; as they have to pass on the qualifications of men whose fitness for labor is to be determined by them before appointments occur. This rule the church indorsed. This is as far as we think the church can go under the circumstances.

We think it unwise for ministers in the field to indulge in sweeping denunciations of those among whom they labor who may not have yet come up to the standard of abstinence which these elders seem to demand of them. It results in harsh and spirited contention, and elders are put to it to define what some of the terms require; especially in regard to hot drinks, malt and mild drinks, etc. Better to teach the gospel, a holiness of life, and let the Spirit do its office work of suggestion and reproof, without so much compulsion.

It is a weak defense against accusation to decry the honesty, virtue, or good intention of the accuser. It never makes a man's own cause just to retort, You are yourself guilty, why do you accuse me? Men of good intentions may see the opposite sides of the shield, and contend as to its appearance, whether dark or bright, and each be correct and both be wrong. Let them change, each to the other's point of observation and they will reach a harmony of conclusion.

Every command, "Thou shalt," or "Thou shalt not," implies a penalty, and while it adds to the responsibility of the subject, it at the same time leaves the subject without liberty for the exercise of discretion and agency; and in our judgment detracts from the efficacy of the influence and teaching of the Spirit which is to "guide into all truth." Of what value or force is the Spirit if every act of human conduct is to be directed, pointed out, by command, "Thou shalt," or "Thou shalt not"?

Man's conduct toward his fellow man is provided for under the general rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them." "And if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."
