Our conduct as citizens of municipality, state, and nation is regulated by laws providing punishment for neglect to perform acts required of us, or for doing those which injure others, or break enactments adopted for public welfare and safety.

Why seek to burden the record by church enactments prescribing rules of conduct with penalties to be enforced by church courts where the "law of the Lord" prescribes none?

This is written with regard to the Word of Wisdom; but it must needs be of general application, because of the principle involved.

As to the propriety of this or that course of conduct from the Word of Wisdom viewpoint, the right or the wrong in doing this or that, there may be innumerable and constantly recurring questions. Should an elder sell wine, beer, gin, brandy, snuff, tobacco for chewing or smoking; corn for the chicken, horse, or hog; oats for the ox, the cow; rye for the horse; coffee, tea, postum cereal, rye, wheat, barley for the use of man as table drinks, etc., etc. All these and many more are thought of and asked, or may be, with the view to making a man an offender who may possibly do these things.

We know of at least one elder who in conducting the grocery and provision business does not think it consistent for him to sell tobacco in any form. He evidently does not refuse to sell because of any church rule forbidding it, but as a matter of propriety and consistency. The church has made no rule on the subject that we are aware of; and it is not likely that it will. It is a matter left to the discretion of the individual, the same as many other acts of human conduct.

Of a similar character to the above considered things are the actions of members in regard to their uniting with the various beneficiary orders and secret societies of the day, such as Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, Elks, Buffaloes, Foresters,

Maccabees, Woodmen, and a number of others. The church has not made any rule defining which of these members may unite with, or which are forbidden. Nor has the church attempted to determine which of these orders, if any, are the secret societies mentioned in the Book of Mormon, Helaman 2:29, 30. Nor is any elder or minister authorized by act, resolution, or instruction to classify these orders, or specify which are the secret orders "to get power and gain," or fill the type of the "Gadianton robbers" of the hills and plains of the early times on this land. It is altogether a gratuitous work on the part of any minister who essays to do it; and in doing it he is not doing what the church has chosen him and sent him to do, which is "to preach the gospel." He who preaches the gospel assiduously will find open doors and warm welcome among the Saints; while he who essays to identify this or that order as being of this or that origin, and indulges in denunciations more or less critical of this or that course of conduct, will find it hard work to magnify his calling. The church has not assumed to pass on this or that church as the church of the devil, or these or those as the churches of men; or this or that as "the church of the Lamb;" it has and does claim and strives to maintain that there is a "Church of Christ" upon the earth, known and acknowledged of God and the Holy Ghost, the ministry of which is authorized to preach the gospel of the kingdom and induct men into its fold of spiritual safety. Nor does the church assume to dictate the personal and private opinions of its members, or to coerce their actions, except in dealing with them in cases of offenses against the principles of right-doing, the law of God, and the dictates of good morals.

The Editor of the HERALD may have an opinion upon a few or the many questions of right and of wrong-doing which are propounded to him from time to time; but he is not authorized to set his opinions as the standard to which members must subscribe, or be classed as wrong-doers. This is not our province. Every act done must be judged of from the act itself and the conditions which obtain and the circumstances under which the act is done. The church can not properly make enactments covering the wide range of human conduct and the attendant conditions without endless contention and strife, and a sad restricting of the office work of the Holy Spirit.

The church has said that the habits of using tobacco and strong drink are hurtful and should be discouraged. This is as far as it has gone. But drunkenness—the habit of becoming drunken—is condemned in the Scriptures. As a consequence, he who maketh drunkards is not walking worthily as a member of the body of Christ.

The uses of tobacco and strong drink are becoming a menace to nations. It is beyond question that our young men, hundreds of them, are paying a bitter penalty for an indulgence in the use of tobacco and the kindred elements of adulteration made use of to make a profit out of the traffic in it.

It is not within the province of the HERALD to pass judgment upon the acts of members and elders personally or as to whether such and such a statement or course of procedure mentioned in a question is right and proper, or wrong and improper; or whether the Spirit inspired and directed such and such a statement or course of conduct, for the reason that the Editor is not present at the time to know the attendant circumstances and hear the statement. We know that the Spirit may and does inspire the elders and the missionaries to preach the gospel. But if the Spirit has inspired or led an elder or missionary to identify secret societies by name and denounce them as of the devil, we have not been present or known of it in person; and it may be a matter of serious question when any such claim is made to being especially led in that direction. It is of the same class of speculative theories as those which undertake to identify "the man of sin," the "Apollyon," the "666" of prophecy, and other questions of like kind. An elder may have a theory of his own in regard to them, but the church has not authorized him to teach it, or to speculate of it in the name of the church, or as representing the church in doing it. It sometimes seems to us like those prophecies that an elder sometimes makes regarding the healing of those sick to whom he is called to administer and feels to predict that they will be healed. Some of these prophecies fail; and it is a hard thing for Saints where they are uttered to retain confidence in the spirit of the elder who has made them. It is better not to make claim to the direction of the Spirit in such cases, and leave time to determine the efficacy of the administration. No harm would come to the sick because of a failure to prophecy a recovery, and great danger and reproach to the church would be avoided where prophecy is made and death ensues.

Personally, the Editor does not belong to any beneficiary or secret order; and does not expect to, for the following reasons: 1. He has not time to spend in attending them. 2. He has no money to sustain even the small demands attendant upon a successful membership in the majority of them. 3. He can not conscientiously go where his wife may not go on equal terms. 4. There is no good act enjoined by the oath of membership that a man may do for his fellow man by virtue of such oath that he is not under obligation to do by virtue of his baptismal vow and adherence to the word of God.

At the same time the Editor does not feel at liberty to make an onslaught on secret societies of which he knows nothing as to their constitutions, by-laws, and inward workings. Nor does he as a representative of the church feel that he is called upon to denounce beneficiary societies simply because of their being nominally secret as to the methods of their social work. He has not received admonition of the Spirit, or revelation to enter the lists against them, nor for them. The majority of them are the works of men, the children of this world, in the same way that many of the churches of the day (if not all) are the results of human origin, human association, and supposed human needs. It will be time enough to engage in a crusade against secret societies when the Lord directs, if that time should ever come. In the meantime the church and its ministry should follow the lead of its spiritual leaders and preach the gospel and build up the kingdom of God, and not waste their energies in running a tilt against things in which they have no concern.

PREPARATION FOR CONFERENCE.

A sister writing us suggests that a suitable preparation for conference does not consist in worrying and fretting about the appearance of the home, and unnecessary toil and expenditure to have things as fine as others may who are better off than are those making this effort. The sister thinks such care, anxiety, and toil could be avoided to the advantage in spirituality of the Saint.

Besides this sort of embellishing adornment, this sister suggests that there is a great deal too much preparation for conference and mentions a long list of good things to eat that the average attendant at conference would be better off without. It may be true that there is too much of an effort on the part of Saints resident where conferences are to be held to make preparation to entertain the visitors attendant upon the sessions with the good things of earth in the region where they are held. Plain, good, and health-giving foods are undoubtedly all sufficient and would be received with satisfaction. But who can determine so well what the region affords, and what so available to them as the Saints who receive the conference people. Again this sister thinks that the general idea of going to conference is to receive spiritual instruction and strength; and ought not to be "just to have a good time." If those who go would go in the proper spirit of prayerful and spiritual devotion and not to visit and eat, better results would obtain.

It is likely the sister is correct. But the preparation of a meek and quiet spirit is attainable through right desire without a special reference in thought as to what is to be had to eat. And we are persuaded that the average minister in the field, and elder and delegate attending conference, takes but little thought about what he is going to get to eat while there. He will eat a crust at the table of the poor man with just as thankful a heart as he will sit at the table of him that has a competency and has more thought of the business of conference and his ministry than he has of the good things of the table at which he may sit.

The elders as a class are not to be blamed for partaking of the good things set before them. If any one is in fault, it is those who think, "O, there is nothing too good for the preacher," and do their best to have their homes tidy and clean and food that is attractive to both the eye and the palate. However, no elder, preacher, or layman, or delegate, is justified in eating of food to repletion and dullness, no matter whether at home or abroad; at the table of the poor, or the well-to-do. It is one of the follies of the age and becomes a sin in those who should and do know better.

This same sister expresses the thought that the day of fasting and prayer is well enough, but fears that the effect of the fast itself may be marred by a failure to observe the fast in a spirit of true humility, and the subsequent indulgence in heavy and rich food at the close of the fasting. There is of course danger of these things. But we believe that the spirit in which the Saints came together last spring in the fast then observed was a most excellent one. And we have reason to believe that such will be the case April 6. As to the after effects from over-indulgence, let us be warned in time and be not guilty of such folly.

PROPHECYING.

It would seem that after the admonition the eldership received in revelation last spring in regard to the misuse of prophecy in attending upon the ordinance of anointing with oil and laying on of hands for the healing of the sick, there would have been no further need for reproof or correction. But we hear that of late elders have been again remiss in this regard. It is rumored that in the case of a brother dangerously sick, elders were called to administer, one of whom predicted, prophesied, or promised a recovery; which prediction, prophecy, or promise failed—for the brother died.

This circumstance can not fail to put an additional burden upon the Saints where it is said to have occurred. Already bearing the reproach of many for holding to the faith as they are, and have been for years, there has now been offered to those who upbraided them the failure of the ordinance to heal and the failure of a promise of recovery made by a minister ostensibly through the influence of the Spirit.

How much better it would have been had the elders contented themselves with performing their duty as the law provides, anointing with oil, laying on of the hands, offering the humble, faithful prayer in trustfulness of spirit and hopefulness of heart, and leaving the result with God to do as it seemed to be good in his sight.

Whatever may be said of this or other incidents of the kind, one thing is certain, that the impulse or spirit by which the elder spoke when making the promise of recovery was not the spirit of true prophecy. If it had been "our brother had not died."

We are not authorized to say that it was of an evil and wicked spirit, for it is to be presumed that the elder was as honest and upright a man of good intention, sympathetic, and wholly desirous of good, as any other elder was or could have been. But "the thing spoken came not to pass."

There is a possible solution, and it is this: an undue, or over-anxious desire for the recovery of the brother may have had its influence in suggesting the thought of a promise for recovery; this suggestion took the form of a promise in the mind of the elder while struggling in prayer and was mistaken as the voice of the Spirit; whereas, it was personal enthusiasm born of the desire for recovery.

It does not necessarily follow that predictions of this sort are from either the Spirit of God or the spirit of the Devil; it is quite possible that they are neither, but are of the spirit of man.

It is well that we learn that the "spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets," and govern ourselves accordingly.

WHO IS A SLANDERER?

It is sometimes hard to determine just who the slanderer is, the man who at the outset tells a deliberate lie to the injury of his neighbor, or the man who tells the injurious half of a hurtful tale leaving out the mitigating circumstances, or the conditions by which the hurtful occurrence would be understood.

Again, it is sometimes hard to locate just where the slanderer is to be found, when a story at first partly true partly false is retold with a coloring which makes the false appear to be true also.

Again, the story of an occurrence is told by one who hears it with no knowledge of its truth, and without knowing who may be the person responsible for it. And this, too, without any effort upon the part of the one who hears and retells it to ascertain from the one hurt by it, or any other, whether it is true or false.

Is it shamefully true in the church that men "love a lie" and prefer to believe evil of each other rather than good? We hope not.

The man who retails an evil story of another without knowledge of its truth is a scandalmonger. Such a man comes under the category of those who take up a reproach against his neighbor. He circulates an evil or idle tale to the injury of another, instead of doing what duty to the better nature of man would dictate, that is, to give the accused an opportunity to explain or clear himself of the charge of evil before repeating the story of wrong-doing.

The man who is constantly hearing and retelling stories to the discredit of his brethren must have a mind that revels in contemplating the unfortunate side of human life, and will in time come to see little or no good in his fellow man. His mind filled with idle, vicious, and mischievous tales of other men until the thought that there are not only "none good" but none trying to be good becomes crystallized, and faith in man is lost, after which it is easy to lose faith in God.

Men can only avoid such a condition of mind by refusing to hear the unauthenticated tales concerning their fellows, no matter by whom told. If the story be of wrong-doing sufficiently evil to make an offense for which the wrong-doer should be apprehended and punished, either in the church courts or the civil courts of the land, the one telling the story should be reminded to place a complaint in the hands of the proper officers, with specifications, offense, time, place, the evidence, and witnesses by whom it may be established. If the would-be informant is unwilling to do this there is no merit in the story, and the one telling it is not entitled to the credit of being listened to. It is safer and better not to hear it, lest one becomes a scandal-monger, or a busybody in other men's affairs.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

W. S. Pender wrote from Richfield, Utah, March 22: "I have spoken three nights in the ward house here, and last night Bishop Archibald G. Young notified me that I could have the house only one more night, as he did not consider that I had proven any positions taken, and he had heard our president and our apostles, and he had never heard them prove a point in favor of the Reorganization. I assured him, publicly, I could do no more and likely not so much as the brethren he had mentioned. So I advised him to suspend all his meetings next week, let us use the house every night, get every member of the ward out, and by the close of the week they would all be as wise as he. They would all know that we could not establish a point and would care no more for the 'Josephite' contention. Discovering we were unwelcome occupants longer, we thanked the Bishop for courtesies shown. In the meantime we have not decided to leave Richfield yet."

J. F. Mintun writes from Woodbine, Iowa, March 21: "I start on missionary work in the morning, to stop first at Bartlett, and from thence to Hamburg and Shenandoah, to be busy till General Conventions."

On March 26 J. B. Roush wrote from Denver, Colorado: "I think my health is better than usual of late. Weather is fine here; just like spring. The grass and many vegetables are starting. I am sorry that I shall not be able to attend conference this year."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the Harrison County Herald, published at Clarksburg, West Virginia, in issue for March 21, Bro. D. L. Shinn appears in an article on the matter of the State Superintendent of schools pronouncing the "Mormon Church" undenominational. He makes a plea for just treatment at the hands of State officers, and cites the action of the Canada courts when one of our ministers was charged with unlawfully solemnizing a marriage.

Bert L. White writes from St. Joseph, Missouri, that he has been instrumental in getting the Church History placed in the library of that city. He says he desires to do all he can for this work, though he is able to do but little. He again asks the prayers of the Saints that he may be relieved from his afflictions. He hopes for a successful conference.

By clippings from recent issues of the Evening Gazette, of Burlington, Iowa, we note that Bro. Elvin has been at work in West Burlington.

Everybody is anxious for the welfare of the children of the covenant, the upbuilding of Zion, and a peaceable, pleasant, but effective session of conference. If everybody will go to conference with the love for peace and intention to "insure" it, there will be no trouble.

On last Friday, the 28th ult., Bro. James Caffall at Lamoni received a telegram from his daughter, Sr. Thomas Daley, that her husband died en route to conference. The body was expected to arrive at Omaha on Sunday, the 30th, and Bro. Caffall left Lamoni in time to be there.

Bro. and Sr. J. W. Peterson arrived in Lamoni on the 28th ult., having just returned from a three-year mission to the South Sea Islands. They reached Lamoni twenty-two days after leaving their far-away starting point, and spent four days in San Francisco. Sr. Peterson appears to be in fairly good health, while Bro. Peterson shows the effects of the wear and tear of that difficult mission.

Under the leadership of Mrs. Davies, instructor in music in Graceland College, the Lamoni choir is doing some really fine work, and Lamoni now has one of the best as well as the largest choirs it has ever had. The work of the choir on Easter Sunday was excellent. We are glad to see this, and trust that the young people as well as those not so young will continue to take hold of this important part of branch work, and make the choir larger and better even than it is now. Good chorus work can not but improve our services.

The Lamoni pulpit was occupied Sunday morning last by Reverend John Allender, brother of our citizen, I. W. Allender. Reverend Allender is pastor of a Congregational flock at Middlefield, Connecticut, and was in Lamoni making a visit at the home of his brother. His sermon was well enjoyed by the Lamoni Saints.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.—NO. 17.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, January 26, 1902.

Reported for the HERALD by Sr Annie Allen

There is always something encouraging about addressing an audience on a cold, stormy, or disagreeable night, because it is always certain that those who are there, though they may be very few, want to hear.

On a former occasion, or occasions, we had traced the church in America from its organization, through all its changes, until the people arrived at Commerce, subsequently called Nauvoo. But in doing so we passed an important thing, and that is that the work is not confined to America alone, that though this church had its origin in America, and so far as human instrumentality is concerned it is of American origin, yet it is a broader organization than could be confined to one nation. It is cosmopolitan, and especially calculated for all people wherever the bounds of their habitation may be.

To-night we invite your attention to the first foreign mission that was taken, the success that attended it, and trace it briefly from the time it was appointed in 1837 until the time the church arrived at Nauvoo. We have before said there was a time at Kirtland, Ohio, when there was a spirit of speculation in real estate among the people, because of the gathering there and the demand for homes. At this time Joseph says:

"In this state of things, and but a few weeks before the Twelve were expecting to meet in full quorum

(some of them having been absent for some time), God revealed to me that something new must be done for the salvation of his church. And on or about the first of June, 1837, Heber C. Kimball, one of the Twelve, was set apart by the spirit of prophecy and revelation, prayer and the laying on of hands of the First Presidency, to preside over a mission to England, to be the first foreign mission of the Church of Christ in the last days. While we were about ordaining him, Orson Hyde, another of the Twelve, came in, and upon listening to what was passing his heart melted within him (for he had begun to drink of the cup filled with the overflowings of speculation). He acknowledged all his faults, asked forgiveness, and offered to accompany President Kimball on his mission to England. His offer was accepted, and he was set apart for that purpose."

Thus were arrangements made for the first foreign mission.

On June 12, Joseph says: "I was taken sick, and kept my room, unable to attend to business.

"Elder W. Richards, having reported his mission, requested the privilege of fulfilling a covenant which he made with President Kimball in January, which was that he should, agreeable to his desire, accompany the Twelve on their first foreign mission. President Hyrum Smith and Sidney Rigdon granted his petition, laid their hands upon his head, and set him apart for the English mission."

Here were three men set apart for that mission. Joseph says it was revealed to him that this had to be done to save the church. The church needed something to revive it, nor had the church been fulfilling its mission fully, for the mission of the church was not to the American continent alone, but to all the world, and the time had come in which it was to occupy in a grander, broader sense than it had occupied before. These men, as we will show you further on, very soon took their departure, and amidst privations and sufferings made their way to England, and the first sermon preached upon foreign soil was on Sunday, July 23, 1837, at Preston, England, by Orson Hyde. It is a significant fact that on that date a revelation to the Twelve was received. Whether there was any connection between the two or not you may judge; but without the participants knowing anything about it, (certainly could have known nothing about it,) these events were simultaneous. I will read some extracts from the revelation to-night.

“Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant, Thomas, I have heard thy prayers, and thine alms have come up as a memorial before me, in behalf of those thy brethren who were chosen to bear testimony of my name, and to send it abroad among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people; and ordained through the instrumentality of my servants.”

Though this language had an application in a general sense to the Quorum of Twelve as a whole, when we consider the peculiar circumstances and the time, we think it had an especial application to those who had gone to England. For them Elder Marsh had been praying and this was the answer. In the sixth paragraph of that revelation we find this record: “Now, I say unto you,—and what I say unto you I say unto all the twelve,—Arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep.”

The first lesson impressed upon the Twelve according to this revelation was that their mission was to the church. “Feed my sheep” is the first duty spoken of in this revelation of God unto Thomas B. Marsh and the quorum over which he presided. “Exalt not yourselves; rebel not against my servant Joseph, for verily I say unto you, I am with him, and my hand shall be over him, and the keys which I have given unto him, and also to youward, shall not be taken from him till I come. Verily I say unto you, my servant Thomas, Thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom (as pertaining to the twelve) abroad among all nations, that thou mayest be my servant to unlock the door of the kingdom in all places where my servant Joseph, and my servant Sidney, and my servant Hyrum, can not come; for on them have I laid the burden of all the churches for a little season; wherefore, whithersoever they shall send you, go ye, and I will be with you.”

Now here a broader mission is given to them. The first thought impressed upon them was, “Feed my sheep.” Then they were told that they also held the keys to unlock the doors of the kingdom unto all nations, wheresoever Joseph, Hyrum, and Sidney Rigdon could not go; and it is said of them: “And again I say unto you, that whosoever ye shall send in my name, by the voice of your brethren, the twelve, duly recommended and authorized by you, shall have power to open the door of my kingdom unto any nation whithersoever ye shall send them, inasmuch as they shall humble themselves before me, and abide in my word, and hearken to the voice of my Spirit.” So that those sent, whether of the Twelve or not, would have the power to open the doors of the kingdom and carry the message unto all nations and people. Thus was the work of the church made broad; not only practically in sending these men to England, but in the revelation given upon the same date that they began their work in England, giving directions as to how it should be conducted in the future. But there is a difficulty there. I do not know that I can explain it, but I will present it for your consideration. It is said the Twelve should go where Joseph, and Sidney, and Hyrum could not come, and “whithersoever they shall send you, go ye.” Now it may have occurred to you that the reason of this was because these three men constituted the First Presidency, under which the Twelve were to labor, but Hyrum Smith was not one of the Presidency. Why his name was used in that connection is the peculiar thought. The Presidency at that time, on July 23, 1837, were Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams. On the third day of September following the church at Kirtland refused to sustain Frederick G. Williams, and possibly at the time this revelation was given he was not acceptable to the church though it had not officially rejected him. Again on the seventh day of November following, the church in Missouri refused to sustain Elder Williams, and at that time, November, 1837, Hyrum Smith was chosen to succeed him, so that a few months after this revelation was given, the Presidency was composed of the three men spoken of in the revelation. To my mind, it is peculiar that Hyrum Smith should be mentioned in this connection before he occupied that position. Whether the Lord had rejected Frederick G. Williams, and Hyrum Smith was chosen to fill his place in the mind of the Lord, and it was only waiting the confirmation of the church, you can judge. It is a peculiar incident. Allow me to read briefly, and I trust it will not be tedious to you to follow these missionaries as they departed from Kirtland on their mission to England. I will read a few extracts from the journal of Heber C. Kimball, the one in charge of that mission. He says:

“After spending a few days in arranging my affairs and settling my business, on the thirteenth day of June, A. D. 1837, I bade adieu to my family and friends, and the town of Kirtland, where the house of the Lord stood, in which I had received my anointing, and had seen such wonderful displays of the power and glory of God. In company with Elder Hyde and the other brethren I arrived at Fairport, on Lake Erie, that afternoon, a distance of twelve miles, and about an hour after our arrival, took passage in a steamboat for Buffalo, New York."

Thus a very short time after he was set apart for that mission he started. Scarcely two weeks of preparation and he was on his way.

After a pleasant voyage, we reached Buffalo the next day, at which place we expected to get some funds which were promised us, to assist us on our journey; but we were unfortunately disappointed.

At that time we had but very little means, but still we determined to prosecute our journey, believing that the Lord would open our way.

We accordingly continued our journey, and took our passage in a line boat on the Erie Canal to Utica, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles, and thence to Albany on the railroad.

From this latter place I went with Brother Richards into the country about thirty miles, where we were successful in obtaining some means to enable us to prosecute our journey. We then returned and took passage on a steamboat for New York, at which place we arrived on the 22d day of June.

On our arrival we met with Brothers Goodson and Snider, according to appointment (they having gone round by the way of Canada), all in good health.

When we arrived at New York we found a vessel ready to sail; but not having sufficient means, we were obliged to wait until such time as we could obtain funds to pay our passage and buy provisions for the voyage. We rented a small room in a storehouse, hoping that some way would be provided for us to go forward and fulfill the mission whereunto we were sent.

We spent considerable time while we were there in praying to our heavenly Father for his guidance and protection, that he would make our way plain before us, bless us with a prosperous voyage across the billows of the mighty ocean, and make us a blessing to each other and to the captain and crew with whom we should sail.

During our stay in that city, we were subject to many inconveniences. We had to lay upon the floor, and had to buy and cook our own victuals; yet none of these things moved us, neither did we feel discouraged, believing that the Lord would open our way and guide us to our destination.

We conversed with many persons on the subject of the gospel, and distributed a large number of copies of the "Prophetic Warning" among all classes of the community, not forgetting the ministers of religion who abound in that city. We sent a copy to every one whose name we could ascertain through the medium of the post office.

They remained there for some length of time. There was but one person living in New York who belonged to the church at that time, a Mr. Elijah Fordham. He did all he could to assist and encourage these men, but was not able to pay their way across the ocean. Assistance came and the money was sent to them from different sources until they were ready to start, and Elder Kimball says: "Having obtained as much money as would pay our passage across the Atlantic, we laid in a stock of provisions, and on the first day of July went on board the ship Garrick, bound for Liverpool, and weighed anchor about ten o'clock a. m., and about four o'clock p. m. of the same day lost sight of my native land. I had feelings which I can not describe when I could no longer behold its shores, and when I bade adieu to the land of my birth, which was fast receding."

Nobody can describe those feelings only those who have been in like circumstances and have watched from the vessel the receding land of their birth. None but these can realize fully what he says he was unable to describe. They had a prosperous voyage. He says: "The last Sunday we were on the water I went to the captain and asked the privilege for one of us to preach on board. He very obligingly agreed, and appointed the time when it would be most suitable for himself and the crew to attend, which was at one o'clock p. m. We then appointed Bro. Hyde to speak, and notified the crew and passengers of the circumstance.

"At the time appointed there was a congregation of from two to three hundred persons assembled on the deck, who listened with great attention and deep interest to the discourse, which was delivered with great power. I think I never heard Bro. Hyde speak with such power and eloquence as that time; he spoke on the subject of the resurrection."

Elder Kimball goes on to describe how it affected the congregation and how they were treated the rest of the way across the water. He says: "On the 15th of July we came in sight of land, which caused joy and gratitude to my heavenly Father to arise in my bosom for the favorable passage we had had so far and the prospect of soon reaching our destination. We then sailed up the Irish Channel, having Ireland on our left and Wales on our right. The scenery was very beautiful and imposing.

"Three days after first seeing land, being the 18th of July, we arrived in Liverpool, one of the largest ports in Great Britain, being just seventeen days and two hours from our departure from New York."

Of their condition when they landed, Elder Kimball relates:

Having no means, poor and penniless we wandered in the streets of that great city, where wealth and luxury, penury and want abound. I there met the rich attired in the most costly dresses, and the next moment was saluted with the cries of the poor, who were without covering sufficient to screen them from the weather. Such a distinction I never saw before. We then looked out for a place to lodge in, and found a room belonging to a widow, which we engaged for a few days.

The time we were in Liverpool was spent in council and in calling on the Lord for direction, so that we might be led to places where we should be most useful in proclaiming the gospel and in establishing and spreading his kingdom. While thus engaged the Spirit of the Lord, the mighty power of God, was with us, and we felt greatly strengthened; and a determination to go forward, come life or death, honor or reproach, was manifested by us all. Our trust was in God, who we believed could make us as useful in bringing down the kingdom of Satan as he did the rams' horns in bringing down the walls of Jericho, and in gathering out a number of precious souls who were buried amidst the rubbish of tradition and who had none to show them the way of truth.

He relates how, after having been in Liverpool a few days, they were directed by the Spirit to go to Preston, a place some distance from Liverpool, to reach which they had to pass through several other places of distinction, or of good size. But they were directed for some reason to go to Preston, and by coach they went directly there. It is related by Willard Richards that when they alighted from the coach at Preston, there was some kind of temperance movement agitating the public. A banner was unfurled immediately over the elders' heads as they alighted from the coach upon which was inscribed the words, "Truth will prevail." They took courage from that and said, "Yes, thank God, truth will prevail." Joseph Fielding, one of the missionaries, had a brother, James Fielding, who was a minister in Preston, and he immediately sought his brother, who received him at first and allowed him to preach a few times in his church, and then rejected him.

Their success in and about Preston was wonderful; they baptized many, some of whom were of Mr. James Fielding's congregation. Mr. Fielding, when he saw his congregation being converted to the doctrine of baptism, many of them being desirous of being baptized, volunteered to baptize them himself, but his services were rejected. He then called in another man, a Baptist, and proposed that this Baptist should baptize them, but they refused that. He then appeared before the elders and forbade them doing it; but the people told him they were of age and had the right to do as they pleased in regard to that, and they were baptized. The work began to spread over that part of the country very rapidly, and in Bedford, in Eccleston, Wrightington, Askin, Exton, Daubers Lane, Chorly, Whittle, and Laland Moss. Branches were organized in a very short period of time. They still continued to expand, and in Ribchester, Thomly, Soney Gate Lane, Clitheroe, and Chatburn there were other organizations effected, and on Christmas Day, 1837, the first conference was held in England in what is known as the Cockpit. Having failed of getting any other place to preach, a place where sportsmen had assembled from time to time for the purpose of witnessing cock-fights was obtained. These elders had the privilege of preaching in that, and being a large place they were enabled to gather a large audience. At the first conference there were about three hundred members of the church present, all having been baptized after the elders arrived in July. The work from that time took still a new impetus and went forward with greater rapidity. All the surrounding country was interested in the message. But, like it was in America, the opposition began to grow as well, and Elder Kimball in relating this says:

"During this state of things, our enemies were not idle, but heaped abuse upon us with an unsparing hand, and issued torrents of lies after us, which, however, I am thankful to say, did not sweep us away. Among those most active in publishing falsehoods against us and the truth were many of the reverend clergy, who were afraid to meet us face to face in honorable debate, although particularly requested so to do, but sought every opportunity to destroy our characters and propagate their lies concerning us, thus giving testimony that 'they loved darkness rather than light.'"

They pursued there, as you will see, the same course pursued in this country. Those who were opposed were afraid to come out publicly and examine it before the people, but in few instances, so it was there, those who were the most opposed preferred to oppose secretly and not openly. The work grew and the missionaries remained there almost a year, when early in the spring time, some of them resolved, or at least the time had come when they intended, to return to America, and of this Elder Kimball says:

"The time when we expected to return to our native land having now nearly arrived, it was thought necessary to spend the short time we had to remain in the country in visiting and organizing the churches; placing such officers over them, and giving such instructions as would be beneficial to them during our absence. Accordingly Brothers Hyde, Fielding, and I entered upon this duty, and we visited a church nearly every day, and imparted such instructions as the Spirit directed."

Thus they traveled from church to church and from branch to branch and perfected the organizations and put them in a condition where they could govern themselves largely.

On the 8th day of April, 1838, another conference was held and he says the Saints began to assemble at an early hour in the morning, and by nine o'clock there were from six to seven hundred of the Saints assembled. From this you can see how rapidly the church increased there. How many more there were we do not know exactly, all except the elders having been baptized within the nine months preceding. Some were ordained at that time and the work soon extended still further, reaching as far as Manchester and other places where the work was opened up and finally became important points. Elder Kimball described their departure as follows:

"At the time appointed we repaired to the meeting, which was crowded to excess. Bro. Hyde and myself then spoke to them respecting our labors in that land, the success of our ministry, and the kindness we had experienced at their hands; told them that we hoped before long to see them again, after we had visited the church and our families in America; but when we spoke of our departure their hearts were broken within them. They gave vent to their feelings and wept like children, and broke out in cries like the following: 'How can we part with our beloved brethren!' 'We may never see them again!' 'O, why can you leave us!' etc. I could not refrain; my feelings only found vent in a flood of tears.'

These men arrived at Kirtland on May 22, 1838, after an absence of nearly one year. This was one of the most successful missions ever undertaken by the church, so far as increase of membership was concerned. Willard Richards who was left there, while the others went back to America, also gives an extended history of the work as it prospered after the departure of Elders Kimball and Hyde. We will briefly mention some things which he says in regard to it, though we have not time to follow it as perhaps you would be interested in doing. Willard Richards remained at his post faithfully. Whatever he may have been afterwards, we do not know. Whatever fault may have been found with him in the years that followed, he stood to his post in England, while the dark days of American persecution were passing, and until the church could send him some help. He performed his work faithfully, though he was opposed by persons within as well as without the church. Joseph Smith says: "From such little things arose a spirit of jealousy, tattling, evil speaking, surmising, covetousness, and rebellion, until the church but too generally harbored more or less of those unpleasant feelings; and this evening Elder Halsal came out openly in council against Elder Richards and preferred some heavy charges, none of which he was able to substantiate. Most of the elders in Preston were against Elder Richards for a season, except James Whitehead, who proved himself true in the hour of trial."

You knew Elder Whitehead, knew him in his old age, for he resided here among you, and passed from this life here. He it was who stood by Willard Richards in the time of trial at Preston, England, when it seemed like all others were against him. We might give you, if we had time, the cause of all this trial, but it is not necessary to do so. He tells us about the success of the work, how it spread and grew in the surrounding country. Before the time help began to come from America, these dissensions had passed away and they were extending the work, so far as it was possible for them to do.

After the persecution in Missouri, it was resolved that the Twelve should be sent to England again. Elder Richards kept the work in progress through all this time of trial, and they were directed to go back to his help again. It was resolved that the whole quorum of the Twelve should go—but they did not all go there as you will see. Some of the Twelve (that I have called your attention to before) left the church in Missouri. Among them was Orson Hyde, but he was reinstated, and on this second mission went back with the Twelve. John Taylor, John E. Page, and George A. Smith were ordained to the Quorum of Twelve, and Willard Richards, who was called at the same time, was ordained when the Twelve went back. At the time they were commanded to go they were told to start from the Temple Lot in Far West, and the time was stated when they were to start. The time came and the church had been driven away, but they went back to Far West, though the enemy was around them on every side, and on April 26, 1839, they laid the corner stone of the temple at Far West and did the work they were to do. Coming back again to Nauvoo, they prepared for their journey.

There were eleven in the quorum at that time including Willard Richards, not yet ordained, David Patten had been killed, as we have shown you, and his place had not yet been filled. The rest of the Twelve, with the exception of William Smith and John E. Page, started for England. It was intended that they should go, but for some reason they did not, and the place of David Patten was not filled until 1841. When they arrived again in England they set to work to more fully organize the church, and to place their quorum also in an organized condition.

"On December 8, 1839, Elders Hiram Clark, Alexander Wright, and Samuel Mulliner arrived in Preston from America, and on the 25th Elders Wright and Mulliner started for Scotland and soon began preaching in Paisley and vicinity."

"January 13, 1840, Elders Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, and Theodore Turley arrived in Preston, from America; and on the 18th Brn. Woodruff and Turley started for the Potteries in Staffordshire, passing through Manchester; and on the 22d, Elder Taylor left for Liverpool. April 6, 1840, just ten years from the organization of the church, Elders Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, George A. Smith, and Reuben Hedlock, landed in Liverpool from New York; and on the 9th Elder Kimball arrived in Preston, just two years from the day he left for America."

We have to pass over these events very hurriedly. But the Quorum of Twelve, nine of them at least, were present, and on April 14, 1840, there was a council of the Twelve held at Preston, England, when Brigham Young was unanimously chosen as president of the quorum. Thomas B. Marsh had previously been expelled on account of his apostasy in Missouri. A general conference convened on the 15th of the same month, when quite a number of the branches that had been organized within the last two years reported. The work prospered greatly, so far as converts were concerned. Two of the Twelve had been set apart to go farther than England, thus extending the work into the Orient. Orson Hyde and John E. Page were selected to go to Palestine, there to open up the way for the preaching of the word, and were charged with the duty of dedicating by prayer the land of Palestine for the return of the Jews. John E. Page failed to go. Orson Hyde did go; at least, we so believe. He claimed to go. There has been some doubt in regard to it, and because of his unfaithfulness in Missouri, everybody did not have confidence in this mission as he was alone and could possibly report some things he did not do. So far as your speaker is concerned, he is not in sympathy with this thought. He believes Orson Hyde did go. He wrote from Germany, Alexandria, Egypt, and Jaffa, Palestine. When so near as that, he evidently did go to the city of Jerusalem. While in Jerusalem he went out upon the Mount of Olives early in the morning and offered up a prayer. I wish I had time to-night to read you that prayer, for it seems to me that it is something that is grand to contemplate. I will, however, read you an extract from it, for I believe there is a point connected with it that will be necessary to state as a connecting link in the work in which we are engaged.

"On Sunday morning, October 24, a good while before day, I arose from sleep and went out of the city as soon as the gates were opened, crossed the Brook Cedron, and went upon the Mount of Olives, and there in solemn silence, with pen, ink, and paper, just as I saw in the vision, offered up the following prayer to him who lives for ever and ever:

"O Thou, who art from everlasting to everlasting, eternally and unchangeably the same, even the God who rules in the heavens above, and controls the destinies of men on the earth, wilt thou not condescend through thine infinite goodness and royal favor to listen to the prayer of thy servant which he this day offers up unto thee in the name of thy holy child Jesus, upon this land where the Sun of Righteousness sat in blood, and thine Anointed One expired!"

Further on is the point I wish to call your attention to especially:

O thou who didst covenant with Abraham thy friend, and who didst renew that covenant with Isaac, and confirm the same with Jacob with an oath, that thou wouldst not only give them this land for an everlasting inheritance, but that thou wouldst also remember their seed for ever! Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, have long since closed their eyes in death, and made the grave their mansion. Their children are scattered and dispersed abroad among the nations of the Gentiles like sheep that have no shepherd, and are still looking forward for the fulfillment of those promises which thou didst make concerning them; and even this land, which once poured forth nature's richest bounty, and flowed, as it were, with milk and honey, has, to a certain extent, been smitten with barrenness and sterility since it drank from murderous hands the blood of him who never sinned.

Grant therefore, O Lord, in the name of thy well-beloved Son, Jesus Christ, to remove the barrenness and sterility of this land, and let springs of living water break forth to water its thirsty soil. Let the vine and the olive produce in their strength, and the fig-tree bloom and flourish. Let the land become abundantly fruitful when possessed by its rightful heirs; let it again flow with plenty to feed the returning prodigals who come home with a spirit of grace and supplication; upon it let the clouds distill virtue and richness, and let the fields smile with plenty. Let the flocks and the herds greatly increase and multiply upon the mountains and the hills; and let thy great kindness conquer and subdue the unbelief of the people. Do thou take from them their stony heart, and give them a heart of flesh; and may the Sun of thy favor dispel the cold mists of darkness which have beclouded their atmosphere. Incline them to gather in upon this land according to thy word. Let them come like clouds and like doves to their windows. Let the large ships of the nations bring them from the distant isles: and let kings become their nursing fathers, and queens with motherly fondness wipe the tear of sorrow from their eye.

We invite your attention to this portion of the prayer for the reason that he prayed that the sterility of the soil might pass away, and springs of water break forth to water the soil. You who are acquainted with the history of the country, remember that a few years after, the land became more fruitful than it had been, and the former and latter rains began to return about 1852. The Jews have had their faces turned toward that land more since that prayer was offered upon the Mount of Olives than they had been for years before; this movement, taking on such great dimensions, has been growing from that time until now. Whatever may have been the record of Orson Hyde before or since, I believe that man performed his mission faithfully, and his prayer to the Lord for that country was heard, and the events that have happened go to show that the Lord heard and considered that prayer of his servant as alone he prayed in that far off land, for the restoration of the land and the continuation of God's blessing upon it. Afterwards John E. Page made his report which was an excuse for not going with Orson Hyde. We have not time to read it to-night, but he was reinstated to fellowship and censure for having failed to go was removed from him.

This mission to England was something that was undertaken to save the church. Thousands and thousands of people have come from that far off land to replenish the church in America, some strong men, some men that have stood for the work through all the privations and suffering the church has passed through, and retained their integrity and faith. Like Americans they have not all been true, but there has been much come from there to build up the church in America. There were no converts made by the mission of Orson Hyde to the Holy land; there was no attempt, that I know of, to make them. He returned to England and thence to America, his mission having been performed. I have invited your attention to this mission simply that we might not lose that link in the history, for the church was not intended as a national church, the gospel was not intended to be given to this country alone, but it was broad, and its mission was to the world, for the conversion of the world, and wherever the people may dwell, in every land and clime, that work so begun, it has enlarged, going to other lands and will continue to go until the work is completed and every honest soul that desires to embrace the gospel shall have had an opportunity to hear it and obey its precepts. I thank you for your attention to-night and trust we shall have the privilege of presenting to you the history of the church from the time they went to Nauvoo, and at least until the Reorganization was established, and the ground upon which the Reorganization stands is stated.

DIE AND LEAVE ALL!

The Son of Man taught so plainly and spoke as none before, even with power and authority. The lessons or instruction then given are now equally applicable, and will be as fruitful of results to humanity. Blessed be those who govern their lives and conduct by the Christ rule.

Selfish man, though he gain much of this world's wealth, will not be permitted to take any of it with him.

And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge, or a divider over you? And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully; and he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do; I will pull down my barns and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits, and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool! This night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So shall it be with him who layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.—Luke 12: 15-23, I. T.

All mankind should read with admonition the above, and catch the inspiration thereof, then would our pleading for Graceland be more fruitful.

One thing I am fearful of; those whom we are desirous to greet, never read our humble appeals. For, Saints, we are not blind that we can not see that many of our people are engaged heart and soul in the struggle to gain worldly wealth, and some even to the neglecting of law-imposed church duties, and of those who comply with the request to aid, nine times out of ten they are the poor and struggling ones of God's people. I certainly believe that all those who cheerfully contribute of their scanty possessions shall in nowise lose a worthy reward, while those who could, but fail, to contribute will be held responsible for what they might have done.

On the question of equality and education the Honorable Murat Halstead cites a part of a speech delivered by the late President McKinley, October 10, 1899, in an address to the brick-layers and stone-masons, of Chicago, Illinois:

I have no sympathy with that sentiment which would divide my countrymen into classes. I have no sympathy with that sentiment which would put the rich man on the one side and the poor man on the other,—labor on the one side and capital on the other,—because all of them are equal before the law, all of them have equal power in the conduct of the government. Every man's vote in the United States is the equal of every other's on that supreme day when we choose rulers and Congress, and governors, and legislatures.

Our citizens may accumulate great wealth, and many of them do; but they can not take it with them, nor can they entail it from generation to generation. He who inherits must keep it by his own prudence or sagacity. If he does not, it is divided up among his fellows.

Every boy and girl can have a good education—one that will equal them for every duty and occupation of life. Not only are they thus educated by the State and the nation, but when once educated they have open to them, and to every one of them, the highest opportunities for advancement. They are not prevented from aspiring to the highest places in the gift of the government because they are poor. We have no classes. No matter what their creed, their party, no matter what may be their condition, no matter about their race or their nationality, they all have an equal opportunity to secure private and public positions of honor and profit.

The government of the United States rests in the hearts and consciences of the people. It is defended, whenever it is assailed, by its citizen soldiery; and it furnishes education free to all the young, that they may take upon themselves the great trust of carrying forward, without abatement of vigor, this fabric of government.

Side by side with education must be character. Do not forget that. There is nothing in this world that lasts so long or wears so well as good character; and it is something everybody can have. It is just as easy to get into the habit of doing good as it is to get into the habit of doing evil. With education and integrity every avenue of honor, every door of usefulness, every pathway of fame and favor are open to all of you.—Life of McKinley, pages 188, 189.

No people or church should be more zealously engaged in education and seeking to establish an unimpeachable character than this church of Christ.

We miss much help because there is a hesitancy to give because the parties dislike to do so little. Please do not do this, but send what you can, even if it be but a dime. Saints, help us with Graceland.

OAH SPE, OR A NEW BIBLE.

Having my attention recently called to the above entitled book, I at once made an effort to obtain a copy for examination and to find some one who could give a history of the origin of the book, from the standpoint of those who were friendly to it. Calling upon Mr. L. W. Van Dyke of this city I found what I was seeking for, as he is one of the leading Faithists, who base their religion on the teachings of Oahspe. I obtained a copy of the book from the city library, and after examining the work candidly I have the following to present upon it.

The copy I have before me was copyrighted in 1882, and is the second edition published. According to the history given of its origin, a New York dentist, who was given to the study of occult phenomena, was directed by an angelic messenger to procure a typewriter, which he did, and two years later while sitting at his machine, his hands were moved by an unseen power, and he began to write, not knowing what was being written till the page was completed, when he found it to be a message from the spirit world informing him they wished to use him as the instrument to write a book, and he must not read the writing till the work was completed. Oahspe was the result.

In the preface to the second edition I find the following statement: "It is not the work of inspiration or of intellectual culture or research, but it may be said to be the mechanical production of a man's hands—a man who wrote it without thinking about it at all, and who can think about something else all the time the writing is going on. The same hands can work independently of his volition to paint pictures. It was in this manner that the pictures in Oahspe were made."

The title is said to mean "earth, sky, and spirit." It is a book of about nine hundred pages, divided into sixty-two books, and has over one hundred portraits, and contains about as much reading matter as the Old and New Testaments. According to the title-page it claims to be a revelation of the higher and lower heavens of our earth for the past seventy-eight thousand years, and particularly a history of man for the past twenty-four thousand years, "being from the submersion of the Continent of Pan in the Pacific Ocean, commonly called the flood or deluge, to the Kosmon era." It also contains the cosmogony of the universe; the creation of man, and a complete revelation of the order and systems that prevail in the unseen worlds. It represents the earth as moving in a large circuit, which is divided into one thousand six hundred arcs, the distance of which is about three thousand years for each, or one cycle. During a cycle the earth falls in the region of hundreds of ethereal worlds, "where dwell Jehovih's high-raised angels, who have to do with the management of worlds." During the time of a cycle the earth is therefore under the control and management of one of the chiefs of the ethereal world in the region of which the earth has come. The earth seems to have been used by these ethereal worlds as a sort of incubator to furnish Jehovih with a harvest of angels. One book containing a synopsis of sixteen cycles before the flood gives the names of the different eras, the ruling chiefs and the harvest of angels furnished for Jehovih. During the time of the creation of man the earth was traveling in the arc of Wan and the first ruling chief of the earth was Sethantes, who was raised to the rank of God and was, according to Oahspe, the first God of the earth. At the present we are in the region of Kosmon, and the ruling chief is Tae, who has started out to found the Father's kingdom on earth. The Kosmon Era began in 1848, and is spoken of as one of great light. At the dawn of Kosmon, Oahspe represents the gates of heaven as being opened, that angels might speak with mortals and says, "And the spirits of the dead shall commune with mortals, good and evil, wise and foolish." See pages 749 and 753. Slate-writing and communications in the dark are also spoken of, and a child is said to be only half taught who is not early taught to understand and receive spirit communion.

The entire book is based on spirit communion, and the Faithists say in the pamphlet, "Brotherhood of Light:" "If one does not believe in angel communion it would avail them little to try to understand our philosophy or systems."

If I am not mistaken modern spiritualism dates back to about 1848, the time of the beginning of the Kosmon era in Oahspe.

The proper names found in the book are about the most difficult mixture I ever came in contact with. One encounters biblical and ancient mythological names in profusion, but frequently so mixed and changed and contracted by an apostrophe that even familiar names are sometimes hard to recognize. Some of the proper names are no doubt original and sufficiently abstruse to entitle them to claim with propriety an unearthly origin.

The portraits of Moses, Abraham, and some other Bible characters are given, each one being surrounded by an escort of shades or spirits. All of the pictures in the book are of this character, reminding one of modern spirit pictures. The Bible account of these men is frequently disputed, and the whole Bible story is greatly discounted, as will be seen as we proceed.

The first page of the book begins the disposition of a Christ or Savior, in these words: "Neither shalt thou have any God, nor Lord, nor Savior, but only thy Creator, Jehovih." Again, on page 370, in speaking of the Faithists, it says: "Who can shake their faith or feed them with thy story of a Savior born of a woman?" On page 789 the Sacrifice by Christ and the partaking of the bread and wine in remembrance thereof is spoken against, and "judgment is rendered against it with abhorrence." Christ (which in Oahspe is spelled Kriste) is all the way through spoken of as the false god Looeamong, and whosoever shall call upon Christ, evil spirits shall answer him and deceive him.

The Beast is declared to be self. It has divided itself into four great heads, viz.: Brahmin, Buddhist, Christian, and Mohomedan, "whose trade was the killing of man."

Mormonism receives a little attention on page 748. "A drujan God, Piad, established a sect and named it Mormon, and he located his kingdom on earth with his mortal followers. . . . Piad taught that all good Mormons would ultimately attain to rule over some planet and her heavens. He also taught mortals that the more numerous progeny a man begat, the greater would be his heavenly kingdom in time to come."

A drujan, or vampire, is a bad spirit. Whether the above statement received its inspiration from a drujan, or vampire, or what not, it evidently was not very well posted on Mormonism, for those principles were no part of Mormonism at the time of its origin or several years later.

Infant baptism is put aside as a law; but children fourteen years old may receive baptism by sprinkling, providing it is done in the name of Jehovih only.

Man may do as he chooses about keeping any day sacred. Circumcision is permitted for adults. The eating of any kind of flesh is positively forbidden. War is strongly spoken against: "Man must not kill anything that breathes the breath of life."

The Jehovih of Oahspe is rather an indefinite quantity according to pages 634, 635, and 719. His form is incomprehensible and his location everywhere, and "One not in shape of man." The Jehovih of Oahspe is not the Jehovah of the Bible, as any one will be convinced by a comparison of the two.

The ten commandments with several variations are given. For instance, "Thou shalt not kill any living thing." In another place the same command reads, "Thou shalt not kill man, nor beast, nor bird, nor creeping thing, for they are the Lord's."

Satan is represented as man's evil disposition.

That heat and light come from the sun to the earth is declared to be but a superstition of the ancients.

The flood is located twenty-four thousand years ago, and the creation of man on the earth is located about seventy-eight thousand years ago, while the first creation of man in fact antedates this by years almost incomprehensible.

Some prophecies are found in the book which the preface says will be shortly fulfilled. First. The continent of Pan, which was sunk in the Pacific Ocean, its submersion being the flood spoken of in the Bible, is to be discovered and prove Oahspe true in regard to its account of the flood. Second. The present powerful religious sects, viz.: Brahmanism, Buddhism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism, shall go out of existence at a very early date. With the going out of existence of the said old systems a new one shall come in, which in fact is already founded and calling themselves Faithists. Basing their religion upon Oahspe they are to be anti-warriors, non-flesh-eaters, and shall practice religion instead of preaching it. Through them is to be founded a new government. The present competitive system is to be superseded by better social conditions, eliminating the private ownership of property entirely. There are to be no poor, as all will be provided for. Armies and soldiers are to be dispensed with. Tariffs and national legislation shall be abolished, and people be privileged to go and come as they please.

The society is now organized in what is called a "Communal Brotherhood," consisting of an Outer and Inner Council. There are three degrees in the order, each degree being conferred with certain rites and ceremonies. "The third degree, which is the All Light degree, calls for the elimination of self for selfsake and the consecration of one's life and talents to the establishing of Jehovih's kingdom among mortals." The president of the Inner Council is their prophet, seer, and revelator. He is called by the title of C' Chief. Mr. L. W. Van Dyke of Denver modestly bears that title at the present. Individuals may receive more or less of spiritual direction for their own benefit, but everything for the whole body must come through the C' Chief. They make no public propaganda of their religion, believing as Oahspe states that the time of preaching is at an end; but they labor in secret, receiving and instructing those who are drawn to them by the spirit influences.

They do not profess to heal the sick, tell fortunes, or divine for any earthly consideration, as do clairvoyant mediums.

They are turning their attention here at present to the establishment of a home for orphans and outcast children. They have a large house rented in Denver where they are taking care of the few children they have collected. They have an eighty-acre farm a little way out, which they expect to use as a place to rear these children and where some of the adults may also labor on the coöperative plan. These children are all being fed on vegetable or herbivorous diet, eliminating from their food the flesh of all animals or anything that breathes the breath of life. They seem to be thriving very nicely on it. They are being raised and educated according to the teachings of Oahspe. They are only few in number as a society, but seem to be very zealous and earnest in their work, and only ask to be let alone till they can demonstrate that their religion is all they claim for it. Then, they say, thousands who are dissatisfied with the present conditions will flock to them.

The moral tone of the book, so far as I have been able to discern, can not reasonably be objected to, and the duty of men toward his fellows is certainly emphasized. To a careless reader the book might not appear very dangerous religiously; but to a critical observer it really disposes of nearly everything the Christian holds sacred, Christ, Holy Ghost, and even God himself. The book is interesting in showing the cunning tactics employed to turn mankind away from the belief and worship of God and Christ. If the good in connection with any system of religion is of that nature that it decoys the unwary to an acceptance of principles which in the end must despoil the soul of salvation which can only come through Christ, shall we say that that which seems good now is really good?

TEMPTATION—A STUDY.

I have been asked what to say to a man to help him to overcome besetting sin, and whether nature has any principle by which a man can feel that he is working upon a satisfactory basis in such a struggle. I think there is such a principle in nature. There are different kinds of sin—sins of the body and sins of the disposition. The Prodigal Son was guilty of sins of the body; the elder brother was guilty of sins of the disposition.

How are these sins to be overcome in each case? You can not tell the Prodigal to say good-bye to the whole thing, because the man's body is full of appetites and passions, and you can not crush these by any merely negative effort. That method of dealing with sin—the method of crushing it, of holding it back—is futile. You may crush a sin by effort for about a week, but on the eighth day it will break out with more force than ever. It will accumulate strength during that period of enforced rest, and the last state will be worse than the first.

What, then, can you do? You can only give the man a stronger appetite and a stronger passion; give him a more abundant life rather than a dwarfed and truncated and crushed life. And that is what religion offers a man. It does not say, I am come to crush your life and dam down your energies and all your desires and passions; but rather, I am come to give you a larger and richer life, I am not come to destroy any thing, but to fulfill.

How is that principle illustrated in nature? A man comes to a hotel. He has been traveling, say, for days, and in such circumstances that it has been impossible for him to get any food. He comes up to the hotel starving, the passion of hunger gnawing at his system, and his first command is for food. While that passion is seething his mind I bring him a telegram which has been lying for him in the office. He opens it and learns of the sudden death of his wife! The hunger is gone, entirely gone; he starts for home immediately. The hunger is gone; he may go on for days and not feel it; another passion, another sensation has filled his mind, and it has put out the lower appetite. That is a natural principle. You can crush any appetite, however strong, and there is nothing stronger than the hunger of a hungry man or the thirst of a thirsty man, by putting in another emotion, and he will live in that new emotion and forget the old one.

When you are telling a man simply to put off the old man, you are telling him to do a thing which is impossible. Tell him to put on the new man, and he can not help putting off the old man.

That is founded upon a very important scientific law. As the old physicists said, nature abhors a vacuum. You can not create a vacuum. When you attempt to drag sin out of a man, you are attempting to create a vacuum. You must put something in its place. That is what Paul meant when he said, "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit." A man is a drunkard—what is the appetite for drink at bottom?

It is the demand for a larger life. It is often the best men, the most capable men who are drunkards. In any workshop you will find it is the most skillful workman. The reason is that he has a larger vacuum to fill; his nature is large, its cravings demand satisfying. What are you to say to that man? "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit."

There is a remarkable resemblance between the effects of being filled with the Spirit and the effects of being filled with wine. No one would have dared to bring that out except Paul. He contrasts deliberately the inspiration of wine and the inspiration of God's Spirit: "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit"—wine versus the Spirit.

And Paul even goes on to describe the symptoms: "Singing to yourself," just what an intoxicated person does, "and making melody"—not in wild debauchery, "making melody in your heart to the Lord." He gives the appetite a new object. That is the only way to do with these desires, to enlarge them by giving them a new object.

I do not think that Christ ever said simply, "Let a man deny himself." He said, "Let a man deny himself and follow me," and in following him, self-denial becomes inevitable and easy. Christ never meant a man to crush his nature. God meant us to keep a part of everything that he put into us when he made us, not to crush it and dwarf it, but to elevate it all and to us our energies with higher purposes and higher motives.

These desires are energies in human nature, and you can not annihilate them. Here is a great reservoir, and there are two sluices; and if you lift the one, the water goes away down into nothing, trickles down into the sea and is lost; if you lift the other, the water goes out and passes over a mill-wheel and does useful work.

Now, the energies of a man's nature can be guided in either of these directions—in that of usefulness or of uselessness, but they can not be crushed. There are a great many passages in the Scriptures which bear out this view: "Put off the old man . . . and put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." "Cease to do evil, learn to do well."

The positive always accompanies the negative, and it is futile to attempt to deal with sin in any other way. "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh"—you can not do it, you have passed into another atmosphere.

And that same principle may be applied to sins of the disposition. You can not eradicate a bad disposition, a bad temper, by negative repressive treatment, but you can overcome it by positive treatment, you can sweeten it by putting sweetness into it. The way to make a sour beverage sweet is not to take out the sourness, but to put in some sugar.

And that is the way to sweeten human nature—to put in the love of God, the gentleness of Jesus Christ, and that will operate when everything else is of no use.

In the direction on practical life and in the direction of thought religion comes not to destroy, but to fulfill. That is the clew to the much vexed question of amusements. There is no use going up to a young fellow and telling him to give up this and that. He sees you are a narrow man.

His conception of Christianity becomes this—that it is a series of negations. What you are to offer him is something that will expand his nature. If you can not spoil his taste for these lower things by elevating him, you can never convince him that these lower things are wrong. And a great many of them are not wrong, but many of them are unworthy of a man of serious purposes.

What you have to do is to elevate his mind to higher ideals, and then, by fulfilling all the thoughts in it, these things will pass away of themselves and be forgotten.—The late Henry Drummond, in Chicago American, January 12, 1902.

Evening in the Mountains.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

The thunder clouds lie massed in splendid grace
And whiteness on the mountain tops.
The evening drops
Its purple veil about the base

Of many ranges, numberless and vast,
Whose cañons, granite walled, break way
To deserts grey
Where burning death has dwelt for ages past.

The sun has set in blaze of wondrous light
O'er Cucamonga's distant peak.
The pine trees speak
In solemn voices of the coming night.

Their language is the language of the seas,
Soft, deep, melodious, and grave;
The far-off wave
Has taught it them upon the evening breeze.

The Cajon Pass with mighty shadows fills,
O'erhead the countless stars are seen,
Joyful, serene,
While far below across the lesser hills

The darkness blooms with lights of many towns,
The reflex of the stars it seems.
The valley dreams

To imitate the jewels in God's crown.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"O silent land to which we move,
Enough if there alone be love,
And mortal need can ne'er outgrow,
What it is waiting to bestow!"

DEAR SISTERS: With a feeling of gratitude to our Father for the many good thoughts contained in this department I take up my pen. It is beyond my ability to tell you one half the good I have received in reading your letters. To me the work of the Daughters of Zion is just what is needed by every thoughtful mother in the church. So many times the ideas and suggestions given have helped me to be more thoughtful, considerate, and patient; to stop and think what would be wisest and best for the little ones intrusted to my care.

Every parent, especially the mother, should understand her children, and this can be done only by close, very close association with them. She must be companion, friend, counselor, and guide, and without divine assistance it is impossible to accomplish this end.

Can we not remember when we were children, how we saw things, and the many heartaches we had, perhaps because we did not feel free to tell mother, and she would laugh at those little troubles? Or on the other hand, can we remember how our troubles have been removed and an explanation given of troublesome problems and we went away light-hearted and free because of a friend and helper and mother in whom we could confide? We should be the companions of our children; and the more we feel this responsibility the more thoughtful, humble, and prayerful it will make us; that is, if we are trying to discharge every known duty with an eye single to God's approval.

It is sad indeed to see how few feel any responsibility whatever in this regard. They seem to think that when they are clothed and fed, that is sufficient. They haven't time to sit down and talk with their children, or inquire how they got along at school; or, "Were you a good boy (or girl) to-day? Tell us about it." Or make them feel that their confidence is always welcome; or take time to teach them a few gospel truths. They say, "Why, my example ought to be sufficient. We have family worship, and they ought to learn from the influence of home. How can they learn every gospel principle when they are never mentioned unless an elder should visit them, and then they are only talked between the grown people. Perhaps the children are sent out to play so they will not annoy. Poor little lambs! They are made to feel that they are always in the way rather than a part of the home. If there are any "good times" to be had, father and mother have them; the children are left at home, or left to run the streets until dark, then go home and spend the evening alone.

The parents will say, "Oh, when they are grown up they can have good times if they wish, but I am going to have a good time now. They are old enough to stay at home. I could not be bothered to take them along." Who is responsible for their being here to bother. Are they? Oh, consistency, where art thou? Parents, do you know where your children are while you are having a "good time," and what kind of associates they have and what evil they are learning? Think of these things, you who are so interested in the souls of your fellow men. You have time to sit down and tell your neighbor the gospel story; yes, even spend hours talking to him trying to get him to see the gospel light, but your children, where are they?

"Oh, they are around somewhere. They are all right."

How do you know they are?

"Why, they can not be learning any evil anyway, because they never tell me anything, so I don't see any cause for alarm."

No, they never repeat the evil they hear and see simply because you haven't their confidence. You have no time for them and their troubles, hence they find other ears that are willing to listen, and they will learn more evil in a few weeks than you will be able to remove in years. Oh, the sadness of it all! I would that I could impress upon the mind of every parent the duty they owe to their children. What will be our answer in the day of judgment when we are asked, "Where are the lambs I intrusted to your care, to bring up in the fear and admonition of God, that they might be fitted to enter my kingdom?"

May we all learn that our first obligations begin at home.

In bonds of truth,

MRS. ADDIE GRANT.

GLOVER, Michigan.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas.

Dear Sisters: Again I come to join your band, trusting I may say something of encouragement.

The blessed Master is still leading me, and my daily prayers are that he may lead me higher and nearer to God. How those outside of the kingdom can live through these pressing times is more than I can comprehend, while it seems to me the only refuge is in living in touch with God. My greatest desire is, when the cry goes forth, "Come out from among them, O ye my people, that ye be not partakers of her evil deeds," to be numbered with the few worthy ones; also that I may be able to help others to be saved by my daily walk and conversation.

I am made sad when I look around me and see the eager rush for money, fame, and popularity, and see some who should know better wasting time and money with these secret societies under the guise of charitable institutions, just as though God had not provided in his church a law governing every good and needful thing for his children both spiritual and temporal.

In the church restored we find all the gifts and blessings; a perfect law, a perfect system, just the same as Christ and his apostles left. And now it only remains for us as the church to keep this perfect law to receive the blessings.

I believe in the helps and governments in the church and have been a member of the Prayer Union since the first, and know that it has accomplished much good. My family and I have received many blessings through prayer. Oh, how thankful we Latter Day Saints should be, and how we should prove it by our lives and examples!

We are sadly in need here of a church in which to worship. We have secured a lot and have a small amount in the bank, but it seems that Satan is determined that we shall not have it. None know better how a building is needed for the advancement of the work, than Brn. H. O. Smith, John Harp, and other missionaries who have been here. Prayers are ascending that the good Lord will open the way and soften the hearts of those who have and to spare, to come to our aid. We believe there are some at least who might be saved by it. In fact, we have heard them say they would attend our meetings had we a church.

May God help us to be patient and never grow weary in his service, is the prayer of,

Your hopeful sister,

Bro. J. E. Bozarth, Akin, Illinois, writes: "Please request through your columns special prayer for Sr. Missouri Miller the first Sunday in April, as she is quite low. She has been administered to several times and was relieved, but not restored to health."

S. A. Rogers and family, Guiderock, Nebraska, ask remembrance in your prayers, on fast-day in particular, that they may receive a blessing and the evil power be removed.

Sr. Martha Thorp, Alpena, Michigan, has been in poor health all her life. She requests an interest in the prayers of the brothers and sisters that she may be healed if it is the Lord's will.

Sister Rebecca Jamison, of Ford, Iowa, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf on fast day during conference, that she may be strengthened and regain health. Also remember Sr. Paulina Park, of Runnells, Iowa, who is also seriously afflicted.

"The Sunday-School from a Scholar's Standpoint."

In the higher classes it is not a difficult matter to make the lesson interesting as all, of course, prepare their lessons during the week and can talk intelligently upon the subjects. There is more depending upon the primary teacher than upon any of the others; for there is a saying (and it is true in most every case), "That which follows is always conditioned upon that which goes before." If the child is taught right in the primary grades, if he has been thoroughly grounded in the principles of the gospel in their simplest form; we need have no alarm for that which follows, for "men are only children grown up."

Gather in the young, and then by satisfying their natural eagerness for information, by keeping them interested, lead them on until they are prepared for a greater work.

The lesson story, instead of always being read from the Quarterly, should be so well prepared that the Quarterly can be laid aside, and in a clear, mild tone of voice, and in such a manner as to present a vivid picture in the child's mind. More will be taken into the mind and retained there from hearing the story told than were it read and reread. Then have the children tell the story, and if no questions at all are asked and this is accomplished, the time will have been well spent. However, it is a good plan to induce them to ask questions. Children are often called "Question Marks" and "Interrogation Points." Ah! if it were only always so. But it is too often the case that conditions are reversed when in the Sunday-school class; the teacher may then be called the "Question Box" and the children the "Answers."

THIS SHOULD NOT BE

the case. The teacher should not only ask, but answer questions; the pupil not only answer, but ask them. To the wide-awake teacher it is an easy matter to find ways of making the lesson interesting. And to me, it isn't the teacher that pays the pupil to learn his lesson, to be prompt in attendance and to do right, by promising him rewards at Christmas-time, New Year's, etc., that is the best teacher or that does the most good; but it is the teacher who so instructs the child that he learns his lesson because he loves the teachings of the gospel; is prompt in attendance because he loves the Sunday-school and the friends who gather there; and does right because it is right, not because there is a pocket-knife, a doll, picture-book, or some candy awaiting him.

Teachers do not realize the confidence that pupils have in them, or how they are watched and imitated by the little ones, or how every word they utter is accepted as true. It is something like the boy who said to his sister, "It's so, because ma said so, and if ma said so it's so, if it isn't so."

The Sunday-school as an auxiliary to the church needs the

and especially every parent, if our ideal school is ever reached.

We have said that the Sunday-school prepares the children for a greater work that is to follow, and aids and assists the church in its progress and development. Or as we have often heard quoted, "The Sunday-school of to-day is only the church of to-morrow." It is only a "stepping-stone" to Christianity; only a round in the ladder that leads to eternal life. From the Sunday-school to the church and once in the church, on and on to perfection.

"For with unceasing motion,
We scarce can comprehend;
We drift toward the ocean,
And there the stream shall end.
From thence we leave the river,
To gain a fairer clime,
Passing with joy for ever
Beyond the waves of time."

Letter Department.

Knox, Indiana, March 26.

Editors Herald: I came to this point the 20th inst., and have been unfurling the ensign nightly to very fine audiences. Sunday evening we attended at the M. E. church and listened to an old-fashioned "ditty," a chorus without refrain: theme, "Mormonism." Elder Berry had prepared his manuscript with reference to Dorchester, Appleton's, Herzog's, O. Pratt, et al. At the close we asked permission to make an announcement. He rather refused, by asking "when," "what." I remarked that by his permission I would state it. But I slipped the announcement in, so the audience gathered it, and the following evening the Saints' chapel was crowded to the doors. Two ministers were present, but I am informed that Elder Berry was conspicuously absent. At the close of his service on Sunday evening he hastened to me with hand extended saying: "My brother, don't come into my meeting to proselyte." I informed him that it was an announcement only, but we had all joined in the closing song.

"My country 'tis of thee,

and told him not to let his moral cowardice rule, but get his church in accord with this beautiful sentiment of our national hymn. But he was suddenly interested with some brother over the aisle.

I began to reply on Monday evening at five minutes to eight; and when I looked at my watch the hands pointed five minutes to ten o'clock. Gracious! I begged pardon, but was astonished at the flight of time. No one made move to go, however, and Bro. Prettyman was greatly pleased.

Interest is quite good here, but there have arisen ardent desires to be recognized by missionaries in charge.

The city teems with people from all parts of the county now. Court is in session, and interest is taken in a murder trial. A young man is indicted on the charge of killing, in cold blood, on the morning of January 7, a young lady, sixteen years of age, while he is but nineteen years old. She had declined his candidacy of life-long love, and plighted her troth to another. O! the demon of infatuated jealousy! I attended the afternoon session yesterday, and the Judge saw me standing (for the court-room was packed). He sent the sheriff down the aisle, and escorted me to a chair within the bar. I waved my salute to the Judge before taking my seat, and silently asked God to sanctify the recognition of an unpopular Mormon minister, to the progress and honor of the cause that I represent. I shall never forget the Judge. But a vast difference exists between officials of different States. The Judge was present at one of our meetings. All this gives prestige to our work.

Sr. Prettyman is ailing some, with "heart trouble." Sr. Pierson is also feeble; but other Saints are usually well, and feeling quite good-spirited.

Our services continue over Sunday D. V.; but we are invited to "talk" at a gathering, this evening, of that society founded at Pleasant Lake, Iowa, in 1868, by seven college girls. They have asked for "American Archaeology," and I am persuaded to accept.

We are trustful of the progress of the work, and labor for the best interest of mankind.

Heaven prosper the efforts of all Zion's standard-bearers.

S. W. L. SCOTT.

CARDIFF, South Wales, March 10.

Editors Herald: I have been in this field just four months and am pleased to say that myself, wife, and little girl are enjoying good health so far. This is a very damp climate. We have seen but few days of sunshine and very little snow. The coldest we have had was about ten degrees above zero, and that for only a few days; still we have to dress just as warm as in good old Missouri or Iowa.

The last three weeks I have been laboring near Penygraig, one of the old landmarks of the church. The name in English is "Top of the Rock." It is properly named. From this point you can count seven towns, all within three miles, and in a radius of five miles there are twelve towns with a population of not less than one hundred fifty thousand. This valley, known as the Rhondda, is one of the best for missionary work, the towns being so close together. It seems to me that for twenty-five miles up all the valleys in the several mining districts it is one town. Once we had a force of missionaries at work in any one of the valleys, the traveling expenses would not be much, and the good done, in my judgment, would be very satisfactory. I believe that twenty humble, active men would do more good in South Wales than fifty in the States. My reasons for making this statement are: 1. In the early days, when the gospel was brought here, there were more converts than in any other land according to the population. It is said by the best of authority that just prior to the dogmas of Mormonism coming to this land it was a very rare thing to find a family that did not have some of their relatives in the church. 2. The people here are more religiously inclined than the Americans, and once we get this people to see that Brighamism is not Saintism the work will move as it did in early days: the voice of the Spirit in tongues, interpretations, visions, and dreams, and the liberty to present the truths confirm us in this statement.

The work has had many backsets, even in the Reorganization. 1. From lack of support from the States by way of missionaries. 2. So many of the local forces going to America. Some men that are very highly spoken of as able representatives of the church have left, leaving the work to sink or swim. It seems to me that as local men in charge of the good work we should not move away until we have first consulted the interest of the work as well as that of ourselves. For the work's sake we should do all we can; we will not lose by it. 3. The worst drawback has been the unfaithfulness of some that should be shepherds and comfort to the flock; some have gone in the ways of the ungodly, bringing disgrace upon themselves and the work that has suffered so much in this land because of wicked and evil-doers. 4. The drawback in some places is one that we hope by the help of the Saints to overcome, that is to build a house of worship. In the mining district of Wales times have been good for four years. The miners have done well. There is an agreement between the miners and the companies that has been in force for nearly four years, will be next August, and on that date it is to be hoped that satisfactory arrangements will again be entered into. That will avoid strikes that have been such a curse to all concerned; not only to the employer and employee, but to the general public. Because of the good, prosperous times in the mining district, men have come from all parts, and to-day there are more families than houses. I learn that near Merthyr there are five hundred families waiting for houses, and all rooms are turned into living-rooms.

I have been holding meetings near Penygraig and some of the best people in the neighborhood are very much interested. If we can get a house of worship it will be of great value to the cause.

Editors Herald: Myself and wife, two children and one brother are the only Saints here. We have had considerable preaching here since last June, by Brn. J. F. Grimes and W. M. Aylor. Bro. Grimes baptized three the first day of March and organized a Sunday-school, and we are trying to live the gospel.

We are poor in this world's goods, but are doing all we can to help the work along; and if any of the ministry should come to Ada, notify me in time and we will meet them. The people here do not seem to care for the gospel; but we must give them the chance to hear the angel's message. I believe if meetings are held here next summer there will be some more baptized. I hope that if it be the Lord's will Brn. Grimes and Aylor will be sent back here.

Saints, pray for me.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to see through the columns of the HERALD that the work of God being carried forward by the Reorganization is wending its way successfully in every part undertaken, that the honest ones are being gathered in, and that the missionaries are having marked success in their different fields of labor. The elders seem to be having a greater degree of light and inspiration in their ministration of the word than ever before. These are encouraging signs that none should fail to see.

I am glad some of the leading minds are beginning to see the way open for the gospel to be preached in foreign countries. I appreciated and indorsed Bro. G. T. Griffiths' letter in recent HERALD, also Bro. E. L. Kelley's thoughts about nations and languages, and Bro. A. H. Smith on New Zealand and other parts. These following the instruction given to the church at the last April conference seem to indicate that the time is at hand, even at the door, for the church to widen out and enlarge her borders.

There are plenty of capable elders in the church for these fields indicated. Let them know they are wanted and they will respond, and should, it seems to me, be undertaken in whole or in part at once, even if it be found necessary to reduce some of the home missions in numbers, a thing that we do not want to see done. Foreign missions of necessity are more expensive than home. I believe the Saints will respond liberally to sustain foreign missions.

I remember when Brn. Charles W. Wandell and Glaud Rodger were sent to Australia many years ago. The work has been ably sustained there ever since, but is just now getting a firm foothold. The same may be said of England, and also of the South Sea Islands. It seems that it takes time to get the work well established in new countries.

I see that Brn. Muceus and Enge are breaking through the Gibraltar of their country, and Rushton and others in Scotland. This is all encouraging to the watchmen who have their eyes set Zionward looking toward the great consummation.

We are trying to hold the fort in the Sunny South by word and by example as best we can. There is much to be done here, yet the field is widening; the laborers are few and there are greater opportunities than ever before, it seems to me.

It looks to me as though the church has to be planted in a country many years for the people to look at, talk about, become conversant with, and accustomed to in a sense before the masses are prepared to hear unprejudicially the message.

I pray the Spirit of God may be with the church in General Conference in wisdom and power, to the glory of his name and the good of his people.

Editors Herald: As we near the close of another conference year, in looking over the work of the past year, the query comes, What have I accomplished? It appears that my successes have been few, though I have sown with a liberal hand, and have been blessed of the Lord in my ministerial work, and have been specially led to tell the people that this is a time of restitution, and that God has restored the gospel. Some are willing to hear and some accept. I find the enemy alert to hinder all he can. I was "frozen out" in Gothenburg.

I crossed the "trail" of Bro. Stubbart at Shelton, and am glad he had been there. I have been associated with Bro. S. D. Payne the past year. He is an earnest worker and has treated me very cordially. May God bless and prosper him and all the Saints who have been so kind to me.

I am assured the work is of God, and am anxious to be at the post of duty giving the cause my best efforts while I am permitted to live. May God bless his people in the coming conference.

LOCKHARTVILLE, Nova Scotia, March 22.

Dear Herald: After nearly five months of missionary work I find myself at home again and tied up to-day on account of very bad roads and rainy weather. I have found a few during the winter who are investigating the eleventh hour message; quite a number who are willing to hear, but none willing to be obedient to the commands of the Lord as yet. Still I know of a number who are very favorably disposed and would have great hopes of them becoming members did I not know so well the course so often pursued by those who are convinced that the work is true and "put off," "put off." It seems too bad that such good material otherwise for Saints should allow themselves to drift into that condition and lose their opportunities for a crown of reward and a home in the kingdom.

I have tried to be faithful in warning as well as in explaining the message. Some of my work this winter has been very objectionable. It is too bad that the Devil should be so successful in making inroads into the ranks of the church. I feel to pity those who have tried to contend against the adversary and have failed. I realize myself that this life is a constant battle against the combined energies of the "world, the flesh, and the Devil."

At Birch Harbor we have a few good Saints and quite a large band of good people who have stood by me nobly for several months. Elder Rich organized a Sunday-school the last day of the old year, and I have met with them quite often, aiding them in every way in my power. It is encouraging to see so many young people take such an interest. The number of Scripture verses recited exceeds any school that I know of. It is sad, though, to see so many more young people who might take hold of the school and be somebody, spend the day doing nothing. Bro. A. W. Wakefield is the superintendent, ably sustained by Sr. Mary Crane, assistant, and Sr. Flora Joy, secretary, and other good women for teachers. Miss Geneva Stephens, not a member, is kindly lending her musical talents to make the school a success. May the kind Father bless them all! I wish here to tender my thanks to them all for the good will shown to me, as well as the financial aid, especially since none are able to do much in that direction without feeling it. Perhaps I may be pardoned if I mention the names of Sr. Crane and husband, who so generously provided me with a permanent home.

At South Gouldsboro we have some good people; only a few of them are Saints, however. I hope in the near future to hear of more taking hold of the work there. There are a number who believe it.

Before closing I wish to thank the HERALD Office for large roll of back number Hopes that was sent to the Sunday-school. I think there will soon be a number of copies taken by the children of that neighborhood. They love the Hope. When spring opens I think the HERALD and Ensign will have some new names on the list.

May this conference year be one marked because of grand successes every way. May the approaching conference be the best on record!

H. J. DAVISON.

HAMILTON, Australia.

Editors Herald: I am always ready for the HERALD as it comes freighted with news which is food to me. How the Saints can live without the HERALD I do not know. I am pleased to read the letters from various parts of the world. To read the letters from those who do not live where they can enjoy the spiritual meetings, makes me realize what a privilege it is for us to be where we can meet together on each Wednesday night. We meet in nine different homes, from week to week, taking turns. And at our meetings we enjoy a goodly degree of the Holy Spirit, as we also do every Thursday night in the church. Prayer-meetings are a great help to all spiritually-minded Saints.

Our conference passed off well. Several important ordinations took place and a number of children were blessed. The Saints were joyfully surprised when Bro. G. R. Wells announced the arrival of Bro. A. H. Smith. I know every Saint felt glad; and I know that if every Saint seeks a preparation of heart, the patriarchal blessing will be productive of much good. The conference was held in the new church building at Wall-send. May God's blessings rest upon it and the few Saints who struggled to erect it.

By the time this letter reaches you Bro. A. H. Smith will be with us in this branch. My home is open to all God's servants when they call.

I look forward to times of great rejoicing yet in store for the Saints in this branch if they will heed the counsel to live humbly and be zealous in good works. My daily prayer and desire is for the spiritual advance of each Saint, that we all may come up higher in the divine life and receive the promised blessings.

JOSEPH THOMPSON.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Arkansas, March 17.

Editors Herald: On the 9th I prayed to be directed to some honest souls who would appreciate the truth. I received impressions and started next day for Birdell; secured use of house, and commenced preaching to a few close listeners. Numbers gradually increased until the close. I was informed by those who knew, that not less than two million hearers were present Friday night; but singular enough they all occupied one short bench. I was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Munday, who asked many questions. I discovered they were deeply interested. He said to me: "You remind me of the man I saw coming toward me the other night. His feet were about even with the top of the timber or trees where I seemed to be working, and he was walking on light." I informed him that we have the light, whether I be the man or not. They are anxious to read the Book of Mormon.

I found a few converts of the Utah elders who were so busy in this state a few years ago, and I have others located. They know practically nothing of the history of the Brighamite movement. I intend to track them up somewhat, and supply them with a little literature to open their eyes. There is a demand for it with those I have found. Should we not utilize the work these elders have done? There is practically nothing to be undone; they taught scarcely anything but the virgin truth.

Of course we were referred to as an "obscure offshoot" having no authority. I can not get it out of my head but that the Kirtland Temple decision, and Bro. Smith's "Necessity for a Reorganization" should be placed in the hands of those interested by the young Utah elders. "All things shall work to the good of them that love the Lord."

Since my appointment as local historian I am more than ever convinced that closer care should be taken of branch and district records. A little caution, discretion, and instruction from the authorities organizing new branches; and if district presidents would take the pains to examine branch records or even appoint through their conference a proficient committee to straighten those known to be tangled, it would prevent much perplexity, save much time, and enable such branches to have a book they will not be ashamed of when the Master comes. May God be with the coming conference: his love temper the hearts of his servants. Amen.

D. R. BALDWIN.

BRIDGEPORT, Washington, March 20.

Editors Herald: I have written to several elders to come here, but have failed to get answers. I should be glad to attend the General Conference and bear testimony to the great latter-day work.

I feel that the elders have forgotten this part of the Lord's vineyard.

For the past three years my health has not been good, but at present I am better. I will soon be eighty-two years, and I praise God for his goodness to me. Brethren, remember me in your prayers. I have done the best I could to lay the foundation for the elders to build on.

J. W. WHITLEY.

WATERLOO, Iowa, March 29.

Editors Herald: There recently appeared in the Waterloo Daily Reporter, copied from a Marshalltown paper, an article entitled, "Look for Christ." It made the Saints out such a foolish set of people that I wrote a reply, as I did not want the people to think we believed in such nonsense. The editor said he was glad to publish a reply, as he would much rather print both sides of a question. Was glad to see such fairness.

Waterloo is a beautiful city of about fifteen thousand inhabitants, and only seven Saints here that I know of, and there never has been any preaching except a sermon or two in private houses. Halls are expensive; but if we could only have a reunion here in the park, we could have a large attendance, I think. This can be had for twelve dollars per day, and includes the use of a fine large auditorium, lighted, etc. The "rapid transit" road runs through the grounds (which are beautiful) to Cedar Falls, so people could come from both places. They are seven miles apart. There are cottages, hotel, etc.; also a tent and awning company here, so tents could be rented by those not getting cottages. There are two fine wells of water. The park is a little over a mile from Waterloo. There is a steamboat on the river running from the city to the park. There is a fine drive there, and street-cars.

There is also a beautiful park near Cedar Falls, which has no improvements except a good well, which I think could be had for little or nothing, but do not think we could get as good attendance.

Please think this over, Saints, and let us try to have a reunion here and get the work started here. It is hard to get people to attend a tent-meeting in so large a place, but I think people would go to the park as others have big camp-meetings there. I think the people would perhaps help with expenses. If the Des Moines District would unite with Eastern Iowa I think it might be made a grand success.

I love the work, and try to do what I can. I sent a bundle of Ensigns to the pest house for the smallpox patients to read, and give papers, sermons, etc., to any one who wishes to read them.

The gospel has brought me such comfort and delight, I wish others to enjoy the same. I ever pray for the welfare of Zion.

Your sister,

MRS. J. A. GOODRICH.

HAMILTON, Missouri, March 23.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is greatly loved by myself and family. I have been a reader of it twenty-seven or twenty-eight years. It would be impossible to get along without it. It is laden with much food for a hungry soul. We used to pay three dollars for it; now we get it for one dollar fifty cents.

I can say from the depth of my heart, This is the work of the Lord. It has been over thirty years since I enlisted in it. By the Spirit of God I have been made to rejoice many times. I have received blessings through the administration of the elders when it was thought I would die. My children have been healed many times.

It fills my soul with joy to read letters in the HERALD and Ensign from the first missionaries I got acquainted with. When reading Bro. Charles Derry's letter, it brought to my mind that to him I gave my first missionary money, some twenty-seven years ago, when living in a double log-house near a little strip of native timber. To Bro. Derry I send a "God bless you," and trust he has health and strength.

I feel the need of living more godly every day, and desire not to become a cast away.

MRS. J. H. SNIDER.

Church Secretary's Notices.

RAILWAY RATES—SOUTHWESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

Under date of March 27 notice is issued that a number of additional lines in Southwestern Territory have concurred in rate of fare and one third, round trip, certificate plan, General Conference Reorganized Church of L. D. S. and Conventions of Auxiliary Societies, Lamoni, Iowa. Former notice gave particulars of purchase of tickets, securing of certificates, etc. Lines concurring in rates: Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe; Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf; C. R. I. & P.; Chicago, Rock Island & Texas; Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe; Ft. Worth & Denver City; Houston & Texas Central; Kansas City, Clinton & Springfield; K. C. Southern; Missouri Pacific; St. L. I. M. & S.; St. L. & S. F.; San Antonio & Aransas Pass. R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, Lamoni, Iowa, March 28, 1902.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of Northern Minnesota District will meet at Frazee, Minnesota, June 20, 1902. It is hoped that all Saints who can will arrange to attend this reunion. Let us meet with a determination, and also with a preparation in spirit to fully warn the people of Frazee and vicinity, and be strengthened ourselves. Sunday-school work will be made a special feature for one day of the reunion. Particulars will be furnished all schools in the State later. But let each school now begin to arrange for as good a representation as possible, both of teachers and scholars. Bro. John Brier, George Jepson, Lewis Albertson, William Spaulding, with Sr. Katie M. Jepson and Ella Albertson, have been appointed as a local committee of arrangements. If any of the Saints wish to rent rooms, or arrange for private board, they may write to Sr. Katie M. Jepson, stating their wants and inclosing stamps for reply, and the committee will do all it can to accommodate them. The general committee will do all it can to secure good speakers. Names can not now be announced but we hope to have the First Presidency, the Bishopric, and the Twelve represented. For this purpose money for traveling expenses, etc., will be needed. We therefore request Bro. A. J. Smith, of Minneapolis, Sr. Fidella Hawley, of Audubon, Sr. Cordie Murdock, of Clitherall, Sr. Ella Anderson, of Bemidji, Sr. Gustaf Nelson, of Amore, and Sr. W. W. McLeod, of Cormorant, to solicit and receive donations for this purpose. Those not living in the branches may forward offerings for this purpose to Elder T. J. Martin, Detroit, Minnesota. If for any reason any of the parties named can not act, will the branches see that some one else is appointed who will. Upon this work depends, in large measure, our success in securing speakers. Please do not overlook it. F. D. Omans, President. Thomas J. Martin, Secretary of Reunion Committee.

Book of Mormon Geography and Archæology.

During the last General Conference a meeting was held by a number interested in matter pertaining to geographical and archæological phases of the Book of Mormon. The question under discussion was the location of Cumorah and Ablom. Sometime during the coming General Conference at Lamoni, it is the intention to continue the meetings as opportunity affords. Let all come prepared to make it of interest. F. M. Sheehy, Chairman. Marie Clark, Secretary.

Received.

From the companion of a "kicker" against our faith for Graceland College, the sum of ten dollars ($10).

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

March 29, 1902.

Literature for Distribution.

To the Church in General, and the Lamoni Stake in Particular: The good literature committee of the Lamoni Local of Z. R.-L. S. has at its command a large amount of church literature which it would be glad to furnish to those who could use it, either for themselves or for distributing among their neighbors. It has Quarterlies for the quarter just past, enough to supply two or three ordinary schools. Any one desiring such literature may obtain it by addressing Stella M. Pruden, Lamoni, Iowa.

Married.

LEWIS—VOORHIES.—At the home of the bride's parents, in St. Joseph, Missouri, Mr. Robert Lewis and Miss Kate Voorhies, both of St. Joseph, were united in matrimony by Elder D. E. Powell, of Stewartville. The wedding was of a quiet character, yet the happiness of the parties was just as great. The bridegroom is the youngest son of Elder William Lewis, now in Wales. The wedding occurred March 19, 1902, at 3:30 p. m.

SHUMATE—WINEGAR.—At the home of the bride's father, in Sloan, Iowa, Bro. Frederick B. Shumate, of Dunlap, Iowa, was united in marriage to Sr. Efnie L. Winegar, by Elder J. F. Mintun, in the presence of a few relatives and friends. After the ceremony a bountiful supper was enjoyed. Many useful presents were received, which gifts showed in a practical way the well-wishes of friends. Both are devoted Sunday-school and church workers. They enter upon family duties with bright prospects of success.

May the path of duty blossom
Into ways of living light,
To bless the world.

Died.

LANGE.—Carl W. Lange was born January 4, 1824, in Bartenstein, East Prussia. Came to the United States in 1841 and was drum-major of the New Jersey battalion of volunteers in the Mexican War. He was an elder in the Reorganized Church. Died strong in the faith of the latter-day work, March 18, 1902, leaving his wife and four children.

JOHNSON.—Sr. Amy Marie Johnson passed peacefully to the abode of the departed righteous at her home in Chicago, Illinois, March 15, 1902, aged 19 years, 8 months, 5 days. She was baptized November 10, 1901, by Elder S. C. Good, receiving of the Holy Spirit to the joy and satisfaction of her soul. The father is left alone, having lost a son, Evar, January 25, 1899; his wife, August 25, 1901; a son, Elmer, December 13, 1901. They all went in the gospel covenant. Comforting thought! Funeral in charge of Elder F. M. Sheehy, sermon by Elder J. M. Terry.

SHIMEL.—Cathrine Bumbarger was born in Morris Township, Clearfield County, Pennsylvania. Married to Philip Shimel in 1832. To them were born twelve children, two having passed away, ten yet living. Her husband died thirty-four years ago. She gave her heart to the Savior in her early years and has been a consistent Christian ever since. She died at her home in Madison Township, March 17, 1902, aged 88 years, 11 months, 8 days. Funeral services in the Methodist church, Haven, Iowa, by Elder William C. Nirk.

HEADLEE.—Amanda Jane Headlee, March 17, 1902, at the age of 69 years, 5 months, 27 days, in Bigler's Grove, Iowa, at the home of her brother, Ammon Fry. She became a member of the church in 1840, remaining true to her profession. Among her last words were, "If my time has come I am ready." Funeral sermon by Elder J. F. Mintun at the residence of Ammon Fry, March 18, 1902.

BOYNES.—Sr. Susan Boynes was born in Devenport, Devon, England, January 22, 1843; died February 18, 1902. She was a great sufferer for several years, which she bore with fortitude. She died in peace with a sure hope of the first resurrection.

PARK.—At Runnells, Iowa, Jessie, daughter of William and Mary Park. Born March 22, 1896; died March 13, 1902. She was kind and affectionate for one of but six summers. Funeral from the Saints' church at Runnells, Iowa, March 18, Elder C. Scott officiating. She was at Sunday-school, March 12, where also she will now be missed.

FULLER.—Laura Emma Napier was born in Randolph County, Missouri, April 21, 1835. At the age of three and a half years was bereft of her father, William Napier, by the hands of the cruel mob at Haun's Mill, October 30, 1838. With her mother she went to Far West, thence to Nauvoo. She married James Fuller in 1854. Four children survive her. She passed peacefully away at her home in Stewartville, Missouri, March 27, 1902. Services in Stewartville church March 28, in charge of Elder A. W. Head, sermon by Elder J. M. Terry. Interment in Dekalb church cemetery.

What if Your Lot is Hard?

"That submission to one's lot means that one should sit helplessly before sorrow and disappointment while weeks and months pass by, is a terrible misapprehension. Life should be growth. These trials come to us that we may conquer them, wrest power from them. To yield faint-heartedly is surely ignoble, for there is no life so barren, or hard, or sorrowful, that it does not hold some door to wider living, if we will but seek it.

"Is it loneliness that closes about us and shuts joy from our days? Have we tried honestly and patiently to touch other lonely lives? Is it because we have no time for study that life seems so hard and barren? A friend of working girls advised them to learn a poem as they went to and from their work instead of simply reading street car advertisements. A verse, a line of poetry, a single noble thought every day—who of us could not make time for this, if we would? And how rich a harvest one short year would give us! Is it poverty that is eating the gladness from our days? It is hard; but there are things within our reach that no gold could purchase for us—friendship, the power of an upright life, the joy of earth and sky. Dare we, with all we have within reach, bemoan our poverty?"—Frank H. Sweet, in Home and Flowers, Springfield, Ohio, for April.

Still Room on the Earth.

Yes, said the western man, there are several patches of country still left out our way that will support a few million people each. There is a little section up in Wyoming, for instance, known as the Big Horn Basin, which has just been opened up by a new line of the Burlington railroad. It covers about 50,000 square miles. It's larger than New York state. Three times as large as Denmark. Twice as large as Bavaria. It is covered with beautiful streams, a never-failing water supply and the soil is as rich as any in the world. The possibilities for irrigation there are enormous and three big irrigation ditches are built already. Oh! yes, there are a few scraps of real good country left. We won't be crowded off the earth yet awhile.

In preparing manuscripts use plain white paper and good black ink. Don't use paper that is flimsy or transparent or so spongy that the ink is likely to blur, nor sheets that are of different sizes or that have been torn out of a note-book and left with the rough edges untrimmed. The two sizes of sheets that are most generally used are commercial note and letter paper. If you have to send out handwritten copy never write it in pale ink or in lead pencil, or in backhand, which as a rule is extremely difficult to make out. Cultivate a round, clear, good-sized, almost vertical hand, and form the habit of leaving a wide space between the lines. Write, of course, on only one side of the paper, and if you find, near the end, that you are going to run a few lines over what you thought would be the last sheet, don't squeeze the final lines together at the bottom of the page or write them on the back of it in order to save another sheet. In both handwritten and typewritten copy leave a margin of at least an inch at both sides of the sheet as well as at the top and bottom.—Franklin B. Wiley, in the April Ladies' Home Journal.

An April Morning.

This morning when I woke I heard
The low, sweet chatter of a bird
Beside my window, where so long
I've missed the music of the song
That filled last summer with delight,
And saw a sudden arrowy flight—
A flash of blue that soars and sings,—
A bit of heaven itself on wings.

"The blue-bird has come back!" I cried,
And flung the window open wide.
I leaned across the mossy sill,
And heard the laughing little rill
That comes but once a year, and stays
Through the brief round of April days,
Then, when its banks with bloom are bright,
It seems to vanish in a night.

The old spring gladness filled the air.
I breathed it, felt it everywhere.
How blue the sky was! and a tint
Of color that was but a hint
Of "green things growing" greeted me
Along the willows by the lea,
And I could feel, and almost hear,
The quickened pulses of the year.

A warm south wind that seemed a draught
Of wine the sweetest ever quaffed
Blew round me, bringing balmy smells
That made me dream of pimpernels,
And arbutus blooms in pinewood nooks,
And gay wake-robins by the brooks,
And I was happy as the bird
Whose heart with spring's swift joy was stirred.
—Eben E. Reaford, in Home and Flowers, for April.

The April Forum opens with an article in which Sydney Brooks pertinently applies to our own problems in the Philippines the lesson to be drawn from "The Example of the Malay States" under British rule. Among other papers on questions affecting foreign affairs are "The Anglo-Japanese Alliance," by A. Maurice Low, and "Prince Henry's Visit," by Prof. Paul S Reinsch. There figure also, in this month's contents, discussions of various subjects of domestic politics now attracting the attention of Congress; such as "The Amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act, and Railroad Pooling," by W. A. Robertson; "Promotion in the Army," by Major John H. Parker; "Shall the United States Lease its Grazing Lands?" by John P. Irish; and "Proposed Amendments to the Constitution," by Henry Litchfield West. In educational matters, Yale is represented by Prof. Ladd's paper on "The Disintegration and Reconstruction of the Curriculum," and Harvard by Prof. Hanus's criticism of "Our Chaotic Education," while Mrs. M. K. Genthe a Heidelberg Ph. D., gives an account of the present position of "Women at German Universities." Early Vernon Wilcox makes several practical recommendations for the "Preservation of Large Game." A timely sketch of the characteristic tactics of "The Boer in Battle" is contributed by Edward B. Rose, a former resident in the Transvaal. In an article entitled "Is England being Americanized?" Herbert W. Horwill replies to a paper on that subject in a former issue of the same magazine.

The Remarkable Story of Miss Stone.

The first authoritative article on the remarkable experiences of Miss Ellen Stone, the American Missionary, will be contained in the May number of the Woman's Home Companion, with heretofore unpublished pictures. The author is the Reverend Doctor James L. Barton, corresponding secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, which organization took foremost part in securing her release from the Bulgarian brigands. He tells in a graphic and thrilling manner of the events which led up to Miss Stone's captivity, the awful fate which threatened her, how the ransom for her release was raised, as well as the statement of the curious part the affair played in the diplomatic history of the world. It is an article of more than ordinary interest.

The Review of Reviews for April is, as usual, full of interesting material on various subjects. Beside "The Progress of the World," treating of the important topics of the month, there is an article on the Anglo-Japanese Alliance from the Japanese point of view, a rapid review of our great "Captains of Industry," a description of the new Lying-in Hospital in New York, and a character sketch of the late Col. Francis Wayland Parker. Other articles are "Educating the Deaf-Blind," "A New Factor in Lake Shipping," "Can Rural Social Forces be Federated?—A First Step," and a sketch of the late Charles Lewis Tiffany, the New York jeweler. The "Leading Articles of the Month" Department gives a glimpse of much that is good in other magazines.

"What Women Like in Men," "What Men Like in Women," and "Husbands and Wives," are the titles of a series of very interesting papers by Rafford Pike, the third of which appears in the Cosmopolitan for April. The same number of the Cosmopolitan treats of Prince Henry's visit, with a series of beautifully printed photographs, under the title of "A Clever Emperor and a Confederation of Nations." F. Hopkinson Smith, Israel Zangwill, Bret Harte, and Maarten Maartens are among the other contributors to this number, which is unusually good in fiction.

The leading feature of the April Arena is an interview with Senor Antonio Regidor Jurado, LL. D., ex-commissioner of education at Manila, on the timely topic, "Education in the Philippines." It was secured by the Arena's London representative and is most instructive. Theodore F. Seward, founder of many "Don't Worry" clubs throughout the country, writes in a most hopeful vein on "The Unity of Christianity and Judaism." His article will interest both Jew and Gentile. In a symposium entitled "The Eternal Feminine," the Honorable Boyd Winchester considers "The New Woman" and Winnifred Harper Cooley points out "The Future of the Woman's Club." In "Maurice Maeterlinck and the Bees," Axel Emil Gibson discusses a recent scientific work by a famous author. Julia Cruikshank presents "An Economic View of Fashion." Editor Flower describes the successful method adopted by Cleveland, Ohio, to stamp out smallpox, and presents an interview with Edwin Markham on "Lights and Shadows of the Present Social Outlook," which is accompanied by a most elaborate and interesting sketch of this "prophet-poet of the fraternal State." Evelyn Harvey Roberts has a story entitled "Out of His Element."

The April number of the Woman's Home Companion is especially devoted to Easter. It opens with an article on "The Easter Flower-Market." "The Pisgah Church," "An Easter Bonnet," and "The Flower Fairies' Easter Story" for children, are appropriate bits of fiction. Will Payne concludes his dramatic tale, "The New Men," Annie Steger Winston contributes "An Idyl of Oyster Point," and Ernest Harold Baynes, "Little Journeys to the Woods and Fields." Other features are "Curious Marriage Customs in China and Japan," and "The Lincoln National Museum."

Mr. Charles S. Newhall, who is an expert on the subject, contributes to the March Forum a paper on "Fire and the Forest Reserves." It is a remarkably graphic presentation of the methods found to be most serviceable in fighting big fires in the West.

Home and Flowers is a most interesting little magazine to those who desire and work to improve their home grounds. It is a magazine which stands for "a more beautiful American life," and is published at Springfield, Ohio.

"KNOW thyself" is an excellent injunction; but how shall a man become acquainted with himself who is not willing to see himself as others see him. "He that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbor cometh and trieth him."—Proverbs.

It is an easy thing for a man to mistake his fellows and be in turn mistaken. It is poor policy, and productive of much trouble for men to be over-strenuous as to his own opinions and honesty, and the error and dishonesty of those who may differ from him. A man may be tolerably sure of himself and err miserably in regard to his neighbor or fellow-laborer.

THE NOISE OF THE FEAR.

New York, March 28.—The alarm sounded to-day concerning the progress of Mormonism was based on the remarkable statement printed below. It was prepared by secretaries of co-missionary societies of Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal North and South, Reformed, Cumberland Presbyterian, Disciple of Christ, and United Brethren Churches, who write in an appeal to the Christian public of America to resist Mormon encroachments. Here is the full statement:

"As representatives of missionary societies of Christian denominations in the United States, we beg most earnestly to call the attention of the Christian public to the position, work, and menace of Mormonism in our country.

"REASONS FOR APPEAL.

"We are moved to this statement by the vitality which the Mormon system has shown, not only in western States and territories, but generally throughout the country. We are persuaded that Christian people have no adequate conception of that vitality, nor of the methods, seductive and often successful, by which the hateful system is being pressed upon the public attention.

"Whatever modifications public sentiment or government action may have forced upon the Mormon attitude and Mormon practices, it has not essentially changed its character since the days of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. Its priestly oligarchy threatens free government, its grasping priestcraft invades property rights; its varied vices are destructive of good morals, while its pagan doctrines are antagonistic to

"THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

"The ambition of Mormons, which they don't even conceal, is to secure control of State after State, until, by means of the balance of power, they may make national legislation against Mormonism impossible.

"Toward this end they are moving by an organization as compact and skillfully devised for its purpose as any that ever engaged the activities of man. Their approaches to people are made the more seductive as their appeal affects to be based upon commonly accepted Bible truths. Only after entrance has been gained and the door closed against retreat is the awful system gradually unveiled to its converts.

"It is rapidly growing. The Mormon hierarchy has an unyielding grip on the machinery of the State of Utah and upon all its political and educational interests. Though often denied, there is no doubt that its practice of polygamy continues in defiance of all the promises made to the United States when

"STATEHOOD WAS GRANTED.

"Its power in contiguous States and territories is increasing at an alarming rate. By means of colonization it has so affected the States of Idaho, Wyoming, Montana, and Nevada and the territories of New Mexico and Arizona that it will soon secure, if it has not already secured, practical political control in all that region.

"Its missionary activity throughout the Union is almost incredible. It claims to have now 2,000 missionaries in the field

—1,400 of them in the Southern States—and to have made last year 20,000 converts. Mormons are also establishing missions in foreign countries on a large scale. At a conference recently held in Berlin and presided over by Hugh Cannon, son of George Q. Cannon, one hundred twenty-five Mormon missionaries were present, who were working in “THE GERMAN EMPIRE.

They reported 2,000 converts. In Norway and Sweden, Mormons have for many years been gaining a continuously increasing number of converts.

“For these and many other reasons we make our appeal to the public.” We urge upon pastors and teachers to unveil to their people and pupils the system, so seductive and dangerous to all the best interests of every community of our country.

“We urge upon the public press the duty of educating the public conscience by unsparingly giving the facts of the nature and the work of Mormonism, and we appeal to Christian and patriotic people everywhere to resist, wherever it appears, a system hostile at once to our free institutions and our Christian faith.”

The foregoing is taken from the St. Paul, Minnesota, Pioneer Press, for March 29, 1902. The same article has appeared in the Chicago Tribune for March 30, and in other prominent papers of the United States, and will be largely copied by the general press all over the country. This is our excuse for giving it attention.

The following taken from the Inter-Ocean, for April 1, 1902, will help to point the moral of our writing on the topic of what precedes it:

ORIGINAL MORMONS MEET.

The world's conference of the reorganized Mormon church to be held this week at Lamoni, Iowa, may have an important bearing on the movement in favor of an anti-polygamy constitutional amendment.

This branch of the Church of Latter Day Saints represents the anti-polygamous Mormons, or the followers of Joseph Smith, founder of the original Mormon church. After his death there was a division in the ranks, Brigham Young leading the majority to Utah, and the minority faction rallying about Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet, and remaining in Illinois, Iowa, and other western States.

The Smith sect repudiated the teachings of Brigham Young as to polygamy and as to the binding force of revelations of the priesthood, and recognized as its sacred text books the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. They defined the Book of Mormon as auxiliary to the Bible, and did not regard it as superseding the Bible.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants related principally to church organization and government, and the Reorganized Church insisted that there could be no departure from the Bible, the Book of Mormon, or the Covenants at the will of the president or the vote of the elders of the church.

The Reorganized Church claimed to be the real Mormon church, and at least one court in passing upon the question of property ownership decided in its favor. From the first, Joseph Smith and his followers have stood with the evangelical churches in opposition to polygamy. They reported last year a membership of 50,000, with 200 ministers in the field. They have in different parts of the world 600 churches, and their membership has increased more rapidly than that of the Utah church because of their attitude on polygamy and their greater respect for the Bible and Bible doctrines.

In 1900, when Brigham H. Roberts, a polygamist, was elected member of Congress from Utah, Joseph Smith took position in his SAINTS' HERALD against his admission. His arguments were substantially the same as those advanced by the religious press generally and by the daily newspapers. Just now, when the question of a constitutional amendment against polygamy is under discussion, the reorganized Mormon church may aid the movement by definite action at this world's conference.

That the effort made is intended to apply to that portion of believers in what the world knows as Mormonism and the adherents to which are located in Utah as their central place of business, does not exactly excuse us from noticing it.

The fact that a number of religious organizations, not one of which claims for itself an organization based on revelation or divine direction for its origin, choose to get frightened at the attitude and supposed progress of what they choose to call “Mormonism” which they proceed to invest with characteristics of direful import to the existence and continuation of their own so-called Christianity, under the general statement that the “system” is “hostile at once to our free institutions and our Christian faith,” by no means proves their assumption to be true.

If this attack was upon the developments in doctrine and practice in the so-called “Mormon church” since the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, we should leave the defense against it where it belongs—with the church in Utah. But the charge that the system under the Martyrs Joseph and Hyrum was and is hostile to the free institutions of the United States affects us, and hence we have the right to take up the weapons of defense.

The system of belief and practice built up during the fourteen years of the active ministry of Joseph Smith is the same that the Reorganization teaches and practices so far as it has been possible under the scattered condition of those who remained true to the faith, and the rapid development along the lines of political, economical, and material national advancement and prosperity; the fundamental principles remaining always the same.

Devotion to God, reverence for his word, uprightness, and personal and collective honesty of purpose and purity of life, loyalty to the country, and obedience to the municipal, statute, and national laws were taught by the church in the lifetime and presidency of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; and these requisites to the existence and perpetuity of the church as divinely instituted have been the persistent teaching of the Reorganized Church so far, and we suppose will be to the end.

That “public sentiment or government action” “has not essentially changed” the “character” of the doctrines and practical features of the faith as taught by Joseph Smith and his compeers up to the time of his death, may be conceded without controversy. We concede that, but, we also contend that “whatever modifications” the “public sentiment” of contending Protestant church organizations, including those named as the originating and fostering forces of this crusade attack upon Mormonism, may have made in church faiths and practices differing from the organic faiths and practices of the Catholic Church, those "modifications" and that "public sentiment" have not "changed the character" of the faith and doctrines taught and practiced by Jesus Christ and the apostles chosen by him, as that faith and those doctrines have come to the world in the word of God, acknowledged by these so-called Christian conservators of the religious welfare of the American public.

The expansion of the Mormon people in the States of the West is the natural result of their growth and increase, a necessity. If they did not colonize and disperse their people into regions open to immigration, Utah would soon become a congested region and more inhabitants be received than could be cared for. But, if those settling in the States adjacent to Utah took nothing into the places where they settle in the way of doctrine and practice, other than the faith taught by Joseph Smith during his fourteen years of ministry and left on the records of the standard books and the official journals of the church of which he was a member and over which he presided at his death; and the practices under the laws of the States in which the church had its origin and continuance until his death, neither the States where they should settle, nor the national government would have any just reason to complain of them.

There was nothing in the doctrines of the church from 1830 to 1844 that was either "pagan," or "antagonistic to the gospel of Christ," and this Presbyterian - Baptist - Methodist - United Brethren combine can not possibly maintain the contention that there was; or that the teachings of the Reorganized Church are now so "pagan" and "antagonistic." These combined alarmists are misinformed and laboring under the gravest of mistakes, the result of misinformation; have blinded themselves to the real facts in the case.

We protest earnestly and decidedly on behalf of the true followers of the faith delivered through angelic ministrations, and as taught and left on record by the ministry, suffering, life, and death of Joseph Smith against being classed with those intended to be included in the indiscriminating attack which this ecclesiastical combine is making in the name of religion.

Let them first show themselves to be the accepted followers of the Nazarene and authorized exponents of the Christian doctrines and philosophy and they may then expect to be permitted to dictate terms of religion to the rest of believers in the Christ idea.

We quote from the Council Bluffs, Iowa, Nonpareil for April 1. First, an editorial that should teach our sectarian brethren what the thinking public outside of intolerant religious circles thinks of this attack on "Mormonism":

MORMONS AND MORMONS.

The so-called evangelical churches have united in an appeal to the American people to rally in a supreme effort to down the Mormon church. The document sent forth is a strong arraignment of Mormonism and it shows clearly that form of faith is rapidly increasing its hold in this country, and it views this growth with alarm as threatening the welfare of the nation. The real cause of alarm, however, is the spread of polygamy, rather than of Mormonism. There is much confusion in the public mind concerning this peculiar religious sect. There are Mormons and there are Mormons, but to many all Mormons look alike. There is, however, as great an antagonism between what is known as the Utah church and that which is known as the Reorganized Church as between the so-called evangelical churches and the Mormons. In fact the controversy is often more bitter. This reorganized branch is strongly opposed to polygamy and always has been. It has neither advocated it nor practiced it. The Utah church has done both, and while it now professes to have received a new revelation doing away with polygamy the fact that it did not receive this revelation until the law stepped in making polygamy a crime, taken together with the fact that some of them still have their plural wives, causes suspicion to be aroused that the Utah church is not sincere in its professed abandonment of polygamy and that it will revive the practice if it can gain political power sufficient to control legislation and courts.

Whatever theological errors there may be in the Mormon faith there is nothing in its teachings which need cause any alarm lest the foundations of society and government should thereby be undermined, except the teaching of polygamy. Aside from this there is no more reason, for making a war on Mormonism than on Dowieism, nor so much in fact. The chief danger being a revival of the open teachings and practice of polygamy, the only sure protection against this lies not so much in an attempt to prevent converts being made to the Mormon faith as in some national form of legislation which shall cause severe penalties to be inflicted on polygamists and shall place the determination of such cases in the federal courts instead of leaving it subject to the local influences of sentiment so favoring polygamy as to permit the crime to go unpunished.

While one branch of Mormonism has been so closely identified with polygamous teachings and practices as to justify the suspicion that the avowed divorce is simply a make-believe, yet there is Mormonism which is most bitterly opposed to such teachings and practices and always has been. It is therefore unfair to make war on Mormonism regardless of this distinction. By making the war distinctively on polygamy the desired purpose can be much more readily accomplished.

There would be little difficulty in reaching this result by State laws, were it not for the fact that polygamous Mormons in some localities have gained such strength as to influence the local laws and the courts in their favor. There seems to be needed some stronger force and naturally the federal power is looked to for exerting that force. It should be directed not against any religious faith, however faulty it may seem to other theologians, but against such fruitage of a faith as jeopardizes or harms society for the protection of which government is formed. The fight should be against polygamy rather than against Mormonism.—Nonpareil, April 1.

Now, apply the principle of the text from which we quote as the caption of this article. When the time comes for the general accounting by men for what they shall have done, what answer can these make who go so far out of the way of toleration and the truth, and attack a people and their principles of which they know so little? (Read Isaiah 24: 18.)

WARN THY NEIGHBOR.

It is said in our law that it is a day of warning, and that those who are called and sent out are sent out "to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor;" that all may be warned and be "left without excuse" that their sins may be "upon their own heads."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22.

From this it might readily be inferred that those who had been warned would not be in condition to be excused if they failed to warn others. The Word reads: "Let him that heareth say, Come." Therefore, let every man be ready to respond when the elders who are to "conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost," invite, or request him to exercise the talent that is in him to sing, to pray, to exhort, or to teach as the occasion may require. The right to speak and to be heard when required to seems to be inherent in every man.

MEDDLING WITH STRIFE.

We are at times reminded of the application and force of the proverb, "He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife not belonging to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears." And we may add, he is quite liable to be bitten.

There are undoubtedly a great many things in the world, and in the society in which men move that it is well enough for the Saint to let alone and not be mixed up with. Some of these it is easy to name; others may not be so easy. A very comprehensive term may be used, however, by which the average Saint may determine for himself by a little careful thought whether or not he should permit himself to be compromised by them. This term is: Whatever has a tendency to draw the mind from the recognition of one's duty to God, or cause a man to neglect his attendance upon his personal home and church duties and privileges, is not of benefit to the Saint and should be avoided; no matter what it may be.

Any one who becomes so absorbed in driving fast horses, dancing, playing ball, boxing, or other athletic sports, as to neglect his meeting with his people in their regular times of worship and for business, to such a degree that he loses interest in the faith and work of the church, makes those pursuits to be wrong, injurious to him and the church.

The same rule will apply to card-playing, chess, draughts (or checkers), going to concerts, the circus, shows, theaters, or other diversions of a similar sort. It is also true of novel reading, pleasure seeking, visiting lodges, and what are called social recreations; if the pursuit of them becomes so absorbing as to shut out thoughts of religion and the performance of religious devotion and exercises, these things are harmful for the effect wrought by them.

School children and college students can not successfully study and thrive in their studies if their minds are wrought upon and their attention engrossed by the outside attractions around them. It is the same with church membership, and for similar reasons.

We would not put aside the healthful exercises by which the scholar is helped to be kept in good physical condition. These are essential, and without them ill health and final failure will be apt to follow the student; but, to suggest what is moderate and proper in regard to them. The loss of adequate and healthful sleep in the hours appointed of God in creation when it should be taken, is certain to be followed by lack-luster eyes, lagging steps, and flagging attention to duty and study. So the mind occupied with and absorbed by many of the things of the world, will become lethargic and dull in the things of God. A word to the wise ought to be sufficient.

HENRY D. SEDGWICK, JR., a writer in the April World's Work, after speaking of Tolstoy and his life says:

"We expect a great mind viewing the world's misery, to propound a new doctrine of ethics, some simple plan of universal virtue, and when we find that it merely repeats the words of Jesus of Nazareth we say to ourselves that the steppes of Central Russia, like the fields of Judæa, are far, far away, and that Russian peasants, like the Hebrew fishermen, are not Yankee electricians or Western railroad men. But argue as we will, something keeps suggesting to our minds that behind this repetition and reaffirmation of the old Gospel stands not mere simplicity of life and the lack of what we call civilization, but the presence of truth. In spite of the brilliant excellence of his novels, Tolstoy's chief interest for us is the testimony which, in the midst of our industrial civilization, he bears to the truth of Christ's teaching."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. C. L. Snow writes that where we spoke of the Snow-Hicks debate as being held at Lexington, Kentucky, we should have said Lexington, Tennessee.

The American Baptist Publication Society is issuing a revision of Lamb's "Golden Bible" under the title, "The Mormons and their Bible." The new edition is shorter and contains four chapters, "The Mormon Problem," "Authenticity of the Book of Mormon," "Miracles in the Book of Mormon," "The Bible Undermined," and "American Antiquities versus the Book of Mormon."

Isaac True writes from Chicago, Illinois, April 3, as follows: "I inclose you $1.50 for the HERALD another year, as it has often cheered my drooping spirit during the past year, especially when being in a strange land, but not a stranger to God, who blesses me from day to day. Notwithstanding I am passing through many dark and gloomy hours, I am looking forward to a brighter future."

Religio Convention.

The Seventh General Convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society was ushered in on April 3, by holding prayer service at eight o'clock a. m., followed at ten o'clock by the first business session, at which J. A. Gunsolley was in the chair, assisted by Ammon White. Etta M. Hitchcock, secretary, chose W. W. Smith to assist. F. G. Pitt was selected chorister, Charles Fry assistant; May White, organist, to choose her assistants. George Bandy, janitor Lamoni Branch, was chosen to act for convention, and Will J. Mather was chosen usher-in-chief, to select assistants.

Pending report of credentials committee, reports of the general officers of the Religio were read; which will appear in full or synopsis in next Autumn Leaves.

Because the report of the Religio work in the South Sea Islands was written in the Tahitian language, and as Bro. J. W. Peterson was not able to be present, Sr. Peterson made oral report of the condition of the Religio work in the Islands.

Some petitions were presented, to be called up later.

Adjourned till two p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At appointed hour convention was called to order by Ammon White, and after usual preliminaries business was at once taken up.

Credentials committee made report, and after several corrections had been made, report was adopted substantially as submitted.

By motion all those present were permitted voice at this convention.

The petition from Des Moines District asking that the Religio publish a Book of Mormon quarterly, together with others bearing on that question were referred to a committee of three, F. M. Sheehy, J. A. Gunsolley, and Will J. Mather, and the committee was asked to report to this convention if possible.

Committee on credentials made additional report, which was adopted.

A petition from the Little Sioux District was read asking that the convention arrange for the publication of a department in the Autumn Leaves, to be known as the "Phrenological Arena." This was by motion laid on the table.

As the Religio workers of the South Sea Islands had requested that a correspondent be appointed to write periodically to the Islands, by a unanimous vote the executive committee was empowered to thus appoint.

The matter of a Book of Mormon vocabulary was taken up, and from various sources it was learned that La June Howard's manuscript was in the hands of the Board of Publication, also one other as well. By motion and appointment of chair, a committee of three,

A. A. Reams, M. H. Bond, and F. A. Russell, was appointed to investigate and report at evening session.

Financial reports, not read, were referred to committee for auditing. Myron Fisher, H. E. Moler, and J. M. Baker were appointed.

As per printed program, at 3:30 o'clock the convention proceeded to elect officers for another year. However, just previous to the election, A. A. Reams made statement explanatory of the leaflets as published by the Des Moines District. Then a letter from S. A. Burgess was read in which he refused to permit his name to be presented for reelection.

By ballot the following officers were elected: J. A. Gunsolley, president; Ammon White, vice-president; Etta M. Hitchcock, secretary; Will J. Mather, treasurer.

A committee of five was provided for to revise constitution and by-laws, and if possible report contemplated changes at this convention. Those appointed were: A. A. Reams, Sr. S. R. Burgess, W. W. Smith, J. F. Mintun, and Alma C. Barmore.

By motion the committee on improvements was given a vote of thanks for past services.

Adjourned till 7:30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Ammon White called the convention to order at 7:30. After usual preliminaries and prayer by F. B. Blair, the committee on Book of Mormon quarterly reported recommending publication of such quarterly, and made recommendations concerning same. The recommendations were considered separately. The clause recommending such publication was carried unanimously. The second recommendation covered the matter of character of such quarterly, incorporating matter to provide for lesson matter, archæological and literary subjects. The third recommendation was to the effect that action concerning the disposition of prayer-meeting be deferred till next convention. The report as a whole was adopted.

The committee on revision of constitution and by-laws reported and recommended the appointment of a committee to make a complete revision and include article to provide for home class work and gospel literature department. The report was accepted, and the committee was continued as the revision committee recommended.

The committee on Book of Mormon vocabulary investigation reported that the Board of Publication would probably have same published not later than July 1, 1902.

M. C. Fisher read report of auditing committee. It reported work correct so far as they could tell; but complete vouchers were not furnished. The committee recommended that hereafter vouchers be furnished to auditing committee. The report of auditing committee was approved as one of progress and the committee continued till they finished the work, they to report to executive committee, the latter to act upon the report. A motion was made to the effect that the treasurer hereafter submit vouchers with report.

A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring treasurer.

The convention then adjourned till 8:30 a. m. Friday, being dismissed by prayer by D. A. Anderson.

FRIDAY MORNING.

On Friday morning at 8:30 o'clock R. Etzenhouser lectured to the Religio people, telling somewhat of what he had learned relative to the archæology of the Book of Mormon, and other matters pertaining thereto.

Sunday-School Convention.

Convention assembled in the lower room of the Brick Church at Lamoni, at ten a. m., Friday, April 4, T. A. Hougas in chair. A goodly number of Sunday-school workers was present, and the transaction of business was at once entered upon. Prayer by Bro. Hougas.

The committee on credentials previously appointed by the executive not being ready to report, the organization was completed by permitting the secretary to choose his assistants, the appointing of A. M. Chase and F. G. Pitt as choristers of the convention, May White as organist with permission to select assistants, Will J. Mather, usher, to select assistants, and George Bandy janitor.

Secretary Krahl chose as assistants, W. N. Robinson and Annie E. Allen.

Credentials committee, F. A. Russell, F. O. Coombs, and A. Carmichael, reported. By vote of the convention Bro. and Sr. Peterson, M. H. Forscutt, Bro. and Sr. H. Case, and Bro. and Sr. Devore were authorized to represent the South Sea Islands. Committee's report was adopted.

By motion, courtesy of voice was extended to all not delegates or ex-officio.

Committee on credentials made additional report, which was adopted.

Superintendent Hougas read his report to the convention, in which he reviewed the work of the year, pointing out causes of failure as well as success. On the whole he thought the work was progressing, and pointed out wherein the Sunday-school was peculiar in its work,—a very necessary adjunct to church work. He also pointed out ways wherein he thought the efficiency of Sunday-school work could be improved. He stated work had been begun to gather data for a chapter of history of Sunday-school work for insertion in fourth volume of Church History. Reunion work had largely failed because of drouth. He recommended that provisions be made for practical home class work. He spoke favorably of the work of the Religio in Book of Mormon study. He closed with expressions of thankfulness for God's favor in the past and wishes that that guidance might continue.

George H. Gates' report was read by secretary. He felt encouraged in the work. He thought a Sunday-school missionary could be sustained. Reported condition of Sunday-school work in East in encouraging condition.

Librarian S. A. Burgess' report was read. He thought library work was in its infancy, but with a fair start the outlook was not wholly bad. Work in this field had been slow, but he thought ground was being steadily gained. He declined to serve further.

Adjourned till two p. m. Benediction by J. A. Gunsolley.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At two p. m., reconvened. Prayer by J. M. Baker. After reading of minutes, treasurer's report was read, which showed a balance on hand of $2,762, a gain in one year of $1,149. The report was referred to an auditing committee.

Secretary read his report, showing statistical condition of association. It appears there are about three hundred fifty schools in the association, with an approximate total membership of nearly eighteen thousand. A gain in schools of 28, membership, 1,889.

First assistant superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley, reported. Stated Study Hour had not been a financial success, it not having received the support it should. He felt encouraged in the work.

Credentials committee made additional report, which was adopted.

Chair stated a few rules for consideration of this convention. Rule one required a two-third vote to order previous vote. Rule two required nominations for office or place on committees to be seconded, and nominees could decline before nomination is stated but not after unless by consent of house.

The secretary was instructed to bring up such proposed amendments as had been properly published.

Quarterly editor, Anna Salyards, reported her work done for year, and lessons prepared to October next. She reported she had been signally and greatly blessed in her work, which afforded her great joy and comfort; she had been strengthened in time of need.

The editors of Study Hour, L. L. Resseguie, Audentia Anderson, and Dora Young, reported their work completed. Also made financial report. The financial part was referred to auditing committee.

John Smith, treasurer, presented bill for expenses, which was allowed.

Superintendent Hougas made financial report, which was referred to auditing committee.

A petition from the Des Moines District was read asking for lesson text-book.

One from the Clinton District was read asking the Association to petition Board of Publication to restore old heading to Hope.

Decatur District Association asked that the name be changed to Lamoni Stake Association. This was granted.

By motion the request of the Des Moines District was made the special order for ten o'clock Saturday.

The proposed amendments to Constitution were taken up. The proposed amendment to article 8, paragraphs 7 and 1, were taken up, which provided for making elders and conference appointees ex officio. A motion to adopt these proposed amendments called forth considerable debate, when the matter was laid on the table.

An article was proposed as article 10, published in HERALD for January 8. This was discussed at some length, when a substitute was offered which was in effect that a district convention in district of less than four hundred could, by a two-third vote of the delegates present, change from a delegate to a mass convention. The substitute prevailed.

W. N. Robinson asked if rules could be suspended governing election of delegates to General Convention and elect by rising vote. Chair ruled that the Book of Rules did not affect this section, and hence it would be improper to suspend any part of the constitution.

Adjourned till 7:30.

EVENING SESSION.

Met at 7:30, prayer by J. F. Mintun. After reading of minutes, Sr. J. W. Peterson made an address in which she reported concerning the Sunday-school work in the South Sea Islands. She outlined the work which had been done there by our missionaries, beginning with the work of Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith, followed by that of Bro. and Sr. Devore. The work of Sr. Devore was spoken of enthusiastically. The work of Brn. Gilbert and Forscutt was mentioned next, the work of Bro. Forscutt being largely devoted to organizing. Following these were Bro. and Sr. Hubert Case. Sr. Case's work was, according to Sr. Peterson, very great and arduous, almost as much as Sr. Devore's. Bro. and Sr. Burton came next, and Sr. Burton's work was devoted largely to the young, and largely in the school at Tahiti. Of the work of Bro. Peterson and herself she spoke modestly, but dwelt to considerable extent on what the natives there are doing, thus illustrating the progress to date. Her descriptions of the ways and methods of the natives of the Islands were very interesting. She spoke of their wonderful powers of retention, some being able to quote as high as twelve chapters of Matthew. Often the children are called upon to lead in prayer, and each child called on is always ready to respond. Sr. Peterson said the Sunday-school work there was growing rapidly and well, as the work has taken a firm hold upon them. She stated teachers were scarce there, the natives firmly holding to the idea that men only are called to teach. The blackboard method has proven effective because of their love of illustrations or pictures.

The Sunday-school there is the place of education, there being no other schools there. Since Religion started, it assists. All go to Sunday-school to learn. Difficulty is experienced in keeping records, the natives not being able to grasp the necessity of it. The natives look to the missionaries in all times and cases of trouble, carrying to that source every petty trouble. But while they expect much from the missionary, they also give much in return, showing them every respect and consideration, having implicit confidence in the white missionaries sent to them. But the white man has taken much evil to them, as the traders have taught them to lie and steal. The worst evil the missionary has to contend with is the Americans who go there evilly disposed, who ruin the young men and women. But through the efforts of the Sunday-school this evil is gradually being overcome.

She stated that Bro. A. H. Smith in his patriarchal blessings there usually told them they were of Laman through Lehi, though some were of Ephraim.

She related somewhat of their hard experiences in traveling from island to island. But she thanked God for a reliance on divine help, and their joy and peace experienced in working with the people more than repaid them. The Lord remembers that people. She stated that that people does not know what failure is. Their faith is great, and they ever pray. Before diving or before doing almost anything, they pray. "They are the richest poor people in the world!" exclaimed Sr. Peterson. "God blesses them greatly." They are always busy.

Sr. Peterson then explained to some extent the lessons written and published by Bro. Peterson, reading some from the book, translating literally.

In closing, Sr. Peterson bore an earnest testimony to the work of the Sunday-school, and earnestly entreated the workers not to let it go backward, but go forward. She said that those far-off Islanders all in praying remember the work in this land, praying for all the officers and members.

Benediction by T. A. Hougas.

SATURDAY FORENOON.

Convention again assembled for business at ten a. m., April 5. After prayer by W. N. Robinson, and reading of minutes, business was taken up.

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions of sympathy and greeting to the Sunday-school workers in the South Sea Islands, T. A. Hougas, M. H. Forscutt.

Bro. and Sr. J. W. Peterson were privileged by motion to draft a report of the Sunday-school work in the South Sea Islands, this report to be incorporated in general report.

A petition appealing from an action of the Massachusetts District convention was read and referred to committee of three: W. N. Robinson, A. A. Reams, and Oscar Case.

A request from the editor of the Quarterly for a typewriter was read, and the convention authorized the purchase of a typewriter and desk.

The petition from the Clinton District asking for measures to be taken to restore old Hope heading, was taken up. A motion was made to adopt, which led to some debate. But at 10:30 the special order was taken up, thus interrupting further action on the petition.

As a matter of privilege an additional report of credentials committee was read.

The petition asking for text-book for Sunday-schools was reread, and motion was made authorizing the publication of a series of graded text-books as soon as possible, to take the place of the Quarterly when so published. This led to considerable debate, when a motion was made to defer action till next annual convention, to be made the special order for 7:30 p. m., first day of convention. This prevailed.

By motion Brn. Gunsolley, Wight, Chase, Robinson, Mintun, and Hougas were requested to write articles setting forth their ideas on this matter, to be published.

A motion prevailed that the General Superintendent keep this before the district superintendents, so that it might be duly agitated.

The auditing committee reported finding accounts of treasurer, superintendent, and editors of Study Hour, correct. The report was adopted.

Adjourned till two p. m. Benediction by F. G. Pitt.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At two p. m. business was resumed after prayer by J. B. Lentz.

The Hope heading matter was taken up, and a motion was made as a substitute that a committee of three be appointed either to revise the old heading or provide a new one to incorporate the same pictorial ideas.

Special order was taken up and election of officers was entered upon, resulting in the following choice: T. A. Hougas, superintendent; J. A. Gunsolley, first assistant superintendent; A. Carmichael, second assistant; D. J. Krahl, secretary; John Smith, treasurer; Sr. E. Etzenhouser, librarian.

Report of editors of Study Hour was reread. It was moved to approve the work of the committee.

Sisters Lucy L. Resseguie and Audentia Anderson, of the editing committee, made brief explanations of the design of the Study Hour. An amendment was offered to the effect that the editors be continued. The amendment and motion prevailed. The editors were authorized to add two to their number, and the matter of publication of the Study Hour was left with the executive committee.

It was moved that this association appropriate to the general surplus fund of the church five hundred dollars, which prevailed.

The following were appointed as the revising committee. A number of names were placed in nomination, but action on them was deferred till evening session, the superintendent to see the parties as to whether they would and could serve.

Adjourned after benediction by T. A. Hougas.

EVENING SESSION.

After usual preliminaries, prayer being offered by J. A. Gunsolley, interrupted business of the afternoon was resumed, and the voting resulted in the choice of the following as the revising committee: R. S. Salyards, Duncan Campbell, and John Smith.

Report of committee on appeal of John Gilbert, of Massachusetts, was read, the committee recommending that the appeal be referred back to Bro. Gilbert. This was adopted.

A motion was made to appoint the general superintendent as general missionary, and that financial provision be made therefor, and General Conference be requested to approve of the appointment. Substitute was offered to the effect that the executive committee be authorized to select a competent missionary and fix compensation for services. This was followed by a motion to refer to the missionary appointing powers of the church for action. The motion to refer was lost, the substitute was lost, and the original motion prevailed.

By motion the convention decided to adopt the home class department temporarily.

A committee of five was appointed to revise the constitution and by-laws and report in due time, the superintendent being made chairman. The committee was instructed to incorporate an article on home class work.

By motion the Sunday-school missionary was put on the same basis as church missionaries, and the executive committee was authorized to provide for such expenses.

A motion was made to donate five hundred dollars towards payment of college debt, which prevailed.

The general officers were authorized to make such demands on the treasury as were necessary to defray incidental expenses.

Minutes were read, and convention adjourned till next annual meeting. Benediction by T. A. Hougas.

General Conference.

The Forty-ninth General Conference of the church began its sessions on Sunday morning, April 6, at ten o'clock. The day was very fine, and the large upper auditorium of the church building at Lamoni was not large enough to hold all who sought admittance, so an overflow meeting was held in the lower room. The meeting in the upper room was in charge of President Smith. M. H. Forscutt offered the opening prayer, and R. C. Evans, of Canada, was the speaker. In the lower room C. E. Butterworth was the speaker, being assisted by W. H. Garrett.

In the afternoon, the Saints assembled, fasting, to partake of the sacrament. Again the auditorium was too small, and though the meeting hour was set for 2:15, by ten minutes till two the room was filled, and the lower room began to fill. Up-stairs the meeting was in charge of the Lamoni Stake presidency, and in the basement the Lamoni Stake bishopric was in charge, assisted by G. H. Hulmes, president of the Independence Stake. The meetings were both encouraging, and seemed to indicate a spirit of charity one towards another, which promises to be a prominent factor in the coming sessions. It is to be hoped it will, at any rate.

In the evening President Joseph Smith was the speaker, being assisted by A. J. Keck. In the basement A. H. Parsons was the speaker, assisted by Ammon White.

In the morning on Sunday, at 9:30, the Lamoni Sunday-school held its regular session, there being about seven hundred present.

MONDAY, APRIL 7.

On Monday, April 7, conference assembled at ten o'clock, and was called to order by President Smith. By motion Joseph Smith and his counselor were chosen as presidents of the conference, and R. S. Salyards was chosen secretary with privilege to select assistants. The song service was placed in charge of D. J. Krahl, president of Lamoni choir. The matter of ushers was placed in charge of Will J. Mather, presiding deacon of Lamoni Branch. Janitor work was left in care George Bandy, local janitor.

M. C. Fisher, W. C. Marshall, and L. E. Hills were appointed as credentials committee, and D. F. Lambert selected press agent.

While credentials committee was out, addresses were made by President Joseph Smith, James Caffall, John H. Lake, and E. C. Briggs, the latter three being the oldest members of the Quorum of Twelve.

The local Religio was granted use of house for the evening, for a lecture, and the privilege of the building was granted the Lamoni choir for sacred concert to be given April 15. Daughters of Zion were permitted the use of both upper and lower rooms for the evening of April 10 and the basement on April 11.

By motion, matter of adjournment and appointments was left with the president.

Benediction by E. L. Kelley.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

At two p. m., conference was called to order. Prayer by John Hawley. Report of credentials was read. Some corrections were made, and by motion delegations from districts which had appointed too many delegates were permitted to indicate which names should be dropped.

The Church Recorder, H. A. Stebbins, reported. His report showed that since 1890 the church had grown from 23,003 to nearly 47,000 at present. In the past year 2,325 had been baptized. Losses were such that the net gain for the year of 1,573 makes the present actual membership 46,954. Iowa led the list in number of baptisms, 339; Missouri next, 310. New branches organized, twenty-four.

R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, read a lengthy report, showing some of the work which had been done in that office.

A petition was read asking that F. G. Pitt be returned to the Pittsburg District and referred to the First Presidency and Twelve.

Another asking the appointment of W. S. Macrae to Joplin, Missouri, was referred to Twelve.

Another asking return of John Harp to Southwestern Texas was referred to the Twelve.

Petitions were read from Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas Districts showing agreement on new boundary line and asking ratification of General Conference. The request was granted.

A petition from Central Nebraska District asking that Gregory County, South Dakota, be added to the Central District was read. This was granted.

Petition concerning boundary line between Rocky Mountain and Colorado Missions was read and referred to the First Presidency.

A report from the officers of the Seventh Quorum of Elders, of England, was read.

Report of committee on auditor was read, in which was the report of D. A. Poorman, expert accountant employed by committee to examine the Bishop's books.

A report by E. L. Kelley was read in connection with the committee's report.

Adjournment was then had. Benediction by President Joseph Smith.

The evening was, as per arrangement, given over to the Religio, the lecture being by J. G. Camp, of Georgia. All conference appointees and their wives were given free admission to this lecture.

DISCIPLINARY CHASTISEMENT.

Unfortunate is the person whose lips have never pressed the cup of affliction, and the heart that is a stranger to want and sorrow. The ordeal of suffering tends to unify the hosts of mankind. We all have to run the gauntlet of experience to gain the silvery heights. At times our feet are weary as they traverse the dusty highways. The hills look fresh and green, and the animal kingdom is duly represented, as also the vegetable. Still onward and upward the lofty mountain heights are shrouded in eternal snow. Beneath this ancient covering the secrets of untold wealth may lie in state till the veil will be lifted by a providence where human footfall has never been.

The miner and skilled artisan bring to light and fashion the metals for both utility and beauty. Our country folk fell the forest, subdue nature, plow the globe, and are shepherd kings of the fee. The mechanic with busy hand, the inventor of versatile brain, the artist at his easel, the sculptor before cold, insensible stone, the merchant at the desk, the physician at the chamber of pain, and, in fine, every avocation is made successful by rigid drill and painstaking application. Things that fall to our lot as a matter of course are not likely to be valued as those that come through anxiety and effort. In fact, wealth and splendor inherited or obtained at a game of chance, paralyze energy, and surfeit the heart, and deaden the fibers of the calloused soul.

The philosophy of honest toil, with its sure rewards, builds up a good strong physical organization, and develops and rounds out true individuality. The temperate labor of man is conducive to longevity of life and domestic tranquility. Idleness and indolence produce mental and spiritual stagnation and decay. The antidote and remedy is to take hold of the distaff, while the good Lord will give the flax.

The truest flower that bedecks the plain, the grain that mantles the land, as well as the mightiest monarchs of the forest, have not all sunshine, but furious blasts and biting frosts contribute to their perfection.

Our heavenly Parent doth not afflict willingly, neither can he take pleasure in the misery of his creatures. These seeming evils are messengers of love and mercy, in that they rectify, refine, and purify, for the noble and the true. The one who lingers at the bleeding side of the Child of Mary and clings to the cross and holds on to the rod of iron will surely walk on the evergreen mountain of life.

The Creator is the perpetuator; therefore he is too wise to err, and too noble to be unkind. His chief delight is to bring to pass the glory, honor, eternal life, and immortality of man, and all these agencies are auxiliaries to this end.

In the germ of the seed, is contained a prophecy of golden harvests, fruitful orchards, useful forests, and the myriad variety of lovely flowers that bedeck the world and fill the air with sweet aroma.

The three kingdoms held a conference and smoked the calumet of peace by agreeing to mutually contribute to each other's welfare. The rock said to the pear, I have contributed of my chemicals, then it blushed into beauty, and fell into the lap of a sweet maiden.

Mother earth, with her varied products, feeds her great and ever increasing family, and murmurs not. In the workshops of nature, is endless variety and perpetual change. These tokens of a providential care are the alphabet and stepping-stone into the moral and spiritual realm. As we move up into the higher domain of intelligence, and touch the brink of the spiritual, the soul gathers strength, and becomes fortified largely against the ills and evils of this inconstant life, and prepared for the life that now is, and that which is to come.

A person thus highly and heavenly favored oft-times loses sight of his own individuality in letting his light shine along the crooked pathway of his less fortunate brother. Happiness, courage, and trust are found along the pathway of duty, which is the highway of holiness.

The beneficence of the king of day, throughout the solar system, teaches us it is more blessed to give than to receive, hence covetousness and pride are gins and snares for unwary feet.

Resignation and trust, patience and hope, under adverse circumstances, are a badge of honor, a souvenir of peace, a shining light, and a passport to glory.

When we really love God, all things contribute to our present and eternal welfare, therefore we are the arbiters of our own fate, but grace hath provided the ways and means for purification, sanctification, life, and salvation.

My present ordeal of suffering has caused me to survey the land more closely, by the which I feel established, rooted, and grounded. To murmur and complain have been distasteful to my every thought. Unbounded charity and supernatural patience have taken hold of and surcharged my very being. My will and desire have been interlaced, interwoven, and interlocked with that of the All-wise, so that my spirit is refreshed like a watered garden. How pleasant and reviving it is to linger at the well and drink from the chalice of my great Savior!

The holy brethren, through their kindly offices and fervent prayers, have endeared them to my heart, like an anchor that reaches within the veil.

Should I soon pass away, I feel very sure that my missionary slate of service is full and accepted; but should it please God to prolong my life, I wish the remainder to be of tranquility and usefulness, to the extent that opportunity and ability fall to my lot. Earthly tendrils and ties are great indeed, but those beckoning me onward and upward are gaining the ascendancy. The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality.

More anon, either on this side, or "when we all meet again." And now may divine love encircle you about, and bear you forth and lead you to ultimate victory!

MORRIS T. SHORT.

DUTY TO GOD AND MAN.

"Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matthew 22: 37-39.

We can find no better expression of love anywhere than that found in the gospel. It was love that moved the Father to send his Son into the world that the world might be saved. It was love that moved the Son to make the willing sacrifice of his life as an atonement for the race. We believe Jesus fully understood, before he came into the world, the arduousness of the work and the extent of the sacrifice that would be required of him in working out for mankind a perfect plan of salvation, and that he cheerfully accepted of the conditions and entered upon his work as one fully imbued with a sense of the important mission upon which he was entering. He of course knew that his words and works would be looked upon as the expression of his Father's will. We believe Jesus was the representative of the Father in the fullest and most complete sense. He was not only the express image of his person, but the express image of his character and nature, so the world was furnished indeed with God manifest in the flesh. We can more easily understand the nature of an individual when we come in direct contact with him, so the world is better able to understand the nature of God as they come in contact with it in the life of his Son; and when Jesus said, "he that hath seen me hath seen the Father," he evidently meant more than was contained in the thought of the mere outlining of the physique.

As Jesus represented the Father so he bade his disciples to represent him, that the world might behold in his followers, not only the representation of his doctrine, but the image of his nature and character. As love was the key-note in the life of Jesus—love supreme for God and love for the world—we are not surprised to find Jesus telling the world that these were the first two great commandments, on which "hang all the law and the prophets."

Love for God would lead the individual to obey his commandments, as Jesus said, "If a man love me he will keep my words," and love for his fellow man would prompt him to treat his neighbor as the gospel requires without the hard letter of the law which says, "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not." Love for God and our fellow man finds expression in what we do; it is vain for us to say we love God and do not the things he commands us. It is also true that in order to render an acceptable service to God our works must be prompted by love. An obedience to the ordinances of the gospel is of little consequence to the spiritual good of any one who obeys from any other motive than love for God and a desire to please him. It fails to measure up to the requirement of the first great commandment, so a man may bestow all his goods to feed the poor and do many other things, which are commonly called charity, but if he does it simply to be seen and praised of men, he has his reward in being seen and praised, and the second great commandment remains unfulfilled. Love and works, as well as faith and works, are closely related. In rendering to God an acceptable and reasonable service, one of these principles really can not exist without the other.

There is another phase of the subject which is equally worthy of notice, and that is the two great commandments as given in the language of Jesus are also closely related to each other: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." An effort to fulfill the second great commandment is being exemplified by the world in many noble and commendable deeds, in lifting up the fallen and helping the unfortunate. And I believe that when the rewards are given there will be found a good many who will be entitled to the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world in consequence of having "done it unto Christ" in ministering good unto his brethren. But having rendered the best service possible for a man to render to his fellow man, being actuated by good motives, does this service constitute all of man's Christian duty?

This may be good religion; but does it fulfill the first great commandment? The interpretation placed on "preaching Jesus and him crucified" by the majority of the pulpits and the comments found in the Sunday editorials of the leading daily papers would lead one to think the duty of man to man was the summum bonum of Christianity. The burden of their efforts is to have churches lay aside everything which savors of doctrine, which they say is a fruitful source of contention, and unite upon a common plan for the uplifting of the race, teaching only the gospel of "good will to men" and helping the less fortunate. The entire service would be man unto man. God would not receive the service of the heart in obedience to any of the rites of the gospel. God is really not in the matter at all, only they build churches to his name for their own gratification, and fasten his name upon them as we paste a label on a bottle, but all of their service is to be one to the other.

I have no objection whatever to the gospel of man's helping his unfortunate brother all he can, but when this is made to mean the fullness of the gospel, I dissent. The Devil is taking advantage of this opportunity to get in his work by introducing into the world various forms born of spiritualism, teaching the duty of man to his fellows in quite as plain terms as do the teachers from a hundred pulpits. The teaching of Oahspe is morally good and the duty of man to man is really emphasized in a manner that can not be reasonably objected to. True! it practically disposes of both God and Christ, but many of the churches have spoken against the personality of God and the Devil and seriously doubted the doctrine of the immaculate conception; so why should not these churches receive these spiritualists with open arms, who are teaching the gospel of "good will to men" about according to their own interpretation of it, and about as zealously? No wonder spiritualism in its various forms is taking the world, when so-called Christianity has practically thrown itself into its lap.

Man's first duty is to God, and I would to God that all the world would hear it. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment." If we love him we will keep his commandments, and the first thing he has commanded us to do is to "repent and believe the gospel." The disciples were commissioned to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved [for baptism was the counsel of Jehovah], and he that believeth not shall be damned." Here again we can discern beneath this, the first great commandment, and the disciples were to teach the duty of man to God first. Peter said, "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." But modern Christianity would reverse this order and have a man clothe himself first with these graces and then add faith, repentance, etc., as their creed might decide would best show the outward sign of the inward grace.

I am always glad to meet men and women of benevolent dispositions and magnanimous hearts. It does me good to clasp the hand that has often been extended to lift the fallen and borne tokens of charity to the widow and orphans, and my objection is founded not on the doing of these things by saint or sinner, but to the preaching of the duty of man to man to the exclusion of the preaching of the duty of man to his God.

ENCYCLOPEDIAS AND SOME WHO USE THEM.

My text is found in the Chicago Times of February 20, 1889, in an editorial.

"Do people in general want to know the truth about Joseph Smith and the sect which styles itself Latter Day Saints, and the origin of the book which they claim supplements the Old and New Testaments? Apparently they do not."

If all truth were scripture that should be canonized.

We meet many who know all about the church: yes, sir, saw it in the encyclopedias. We have liberal doses of encyclopedia offered us by individuals who have taken that sort of medicine until their stomachs are sour and their livers out of order. To their jaundiced eye a Latter Day Saint looks like the goddess of calamity. "The abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel."

To such 'tis well to administer as a tonic the decision of Judge Philips, of the United States circuit court, in which he clears Joseph Smith and the early church of the charge of either teaching or practicing polygamy, and places the blame on the Utah people where it belongs.

It may be "sweet in their mouth," though their features do not betray it, but "in their belly it is exceeding bitter." As an antidote for enlarged spleen it is unsurpassed.

When the encyclopedias desire a history of any popular church they call in some able member of that particular body, who furnishes the data, and all the doubtful record of that church is as though it were not. We do not learn from such that the Presbyterian Church in general assembly in Pittsburg, in 1899, decided to countenance polygamy among its converts in India. Nothing is said of the peculiar reasons Henry VIII had for establishing the church of England. The stillness of the grave would be a shout compared to the silence of the encyclopedias on such subjects.

When an account of the Latter Day Saint religion is desired, some exposé of Mormonism, of elastic conscience and athletic imagination is commissioned. He combs the gutters for the spewings of his brethren, and dipping his pen in gall and wormwood and all uncharitableness he writes his article. 'Tis like himself. He makes mountains out of mole hills and furnishes the mole hills. His child of hate is born, and being blessed under the hands of Tucker, and Smucker, and Beadle, and Howe, and "I, Clark Braden," mentioned in the descending scale, it is sent forth to preach its gospel of slander in all the world.

This shines forth on the pages of the Britannica and others, while the Columbian (for 1891) cheerfully says that against Joseph Smith "We have the most satisfactory evidence—that of his enemies."

Why, yes; satisfactory and effectual. Such evidence crucified Christ, burned Servetus, mobbed Wesley, banished Rodger Williams, hanged the Quakers, assassinated Joseph Smith. It is satisfactory evidence; more satisfactory to some than is the truth.

However, truth, like the rain, will find its way in if a crevice is left open; and so even into the encyclopedias a few drops have filtered. At least two of them, Chambers and the Columbian, clear Joseph Smith of the blame of polygamy. So as a class when the encyclopedias are appealed to on that point they kill their own evidence because they contradict each other.

The Columbian for 1891 has this to say of the Saints in Missouri: "Everywhere was visible a spirit of industry, sobriety, order, and cleanliness. It is only fair to the Mormons to state these things. Account for it as we may, they were in many respects, morally, socially, and industrially, far in advance of their neighbors."

Bancroft in his "New History of Utah," page 164, says: "But when the testimony on both sides is carefully weighed it must be admitted that the Mormons in Missouri and Illinois, were, as a class, a more moral, honest, temperate, hard-working, self-denying, and thrifty people, than the gentiles by whom they were surrounded."

Alas, of the two classes the testimony of the morally inferior is welcomed in encyclopedia, history, pulpit, and press.

Read this also from the last-named encyclopedia: "1833, March 22, a mob of Methodists, Baptists, Disciples, and miscellaneous zealots broke into the prophet's house, tore him from his wife's arms . . . and tarred and feathered him."

Bancroft includes the Presbyterians in the list. Queer work for these orthodox and ineffably respectable churches, breaking into houses to tar and feather people who were "morally and socially far above them."

The old spirit is not dead yet. The churches are still tarring Joseph Smith. I attended a tarring bee, in the First M. E. church of San Bernardino, only a few nights since. In this case, as usual, even as in the one mentioned by the Columbian, the man who got the tar was a better man than the one who did the daubing.

Joseph Smith and his followers ever have stood ready to meet in honorable argument the ministers of any denomination, but when at the close of this man's lecture I asked the privilege of saying a few words the courtesy was denied; contrast the two.

The injury done us by the writers of scurrilous tales is only equalled by the purveyors of misinformation who lecture on Mormonism, whose ambition seems to be to make two misstatements grow where only one grew before.

This man who styled himself Reverend Doctor is perhaps a fair sample of the kind of opponent our elders meet everywhere. Let us examine his methods.

He served up the usual exposé: Spalding Romance, Joseph Smith the author of polygamy—you know the main entrees and side dishes; yet offered no word of proof, and no effort we could make would induce him to meet our men in debate or permit us a word of defense before his audience. As well ask justice of an Apache or look for honor in a coyote.

It is a principle of American justice that men and institutions be permitted to defend themselves before the tribunal in whose presence they are accused and tried. This was denied us by the very man who had in his sermon boasted of his Americanism. That may be Americanism, but is not the kind that made America great, and it is the kind to which our ministers are treated almost everywhere.

In private he admitted that he is aware that the Spalding Romance is in Oberlin College, Ohio. That being true he knew that his story was untrue, hence did not try to prove it; but true or false he was willing to tell it because he knew his audience would believe it, and that no man would be permitted to deny it.

He admitted that he had no evidence that Joseph Smith gave the plural marriage revelation, except Brigham Young's word, and confessed that it was very unreliable. Yet he tells it broadcast to damn the reputation of a fellow man, without knowing or caring if it is true or false.

By some process he and others have reversed the golden rule to read, Do unto others as ye would not that they do unto you.

He told his audience that Joseph Smith came to his death through alienating the affections of the wives of prominent men in Nauvoo, and afterward destroying the press established to expose him.

Smucker in his "History of the Mormons," page 174, says of this: "It is utterly incredible that Joseph Smith, who, great imposter as he was, never missed an opportunity to denounce seducers and adulterers as unfit to enter into his church, should have been concerned directly or indirectly in proceedings like these, though it is scarcely surprising that when such stories had been circulated by men whom the 'prophet' had thwarted, or reprimanded, there should have been found some persons willing to credit them."

This is the decision of an opponent, eager to prove all he could against the church, yet not crediting this story because it was incredible. He was none too scrupulous, yet there are many ministers who eagerly accept what he rejected, because it is to their taste.

Why is it that some pass over all the good recorded in history and elsewhere concerning the Saints and regale their hearers on every obscene and vulgar story told by apostate and scandalmonger. There is a bird that will pass by the choicest food to dip its beak in carrion. It is the buzzard. Sometimes it wears feathers, sometimes clothing. Though he did not warn his audience, in our hearing, against the elders of the Reorganization, his warning to them against the Utah elders showed the spirit of many in the world to-day: "Treat the Mormon elders politely, but do not listen to them and do not read their tracts."

Such advice can come from only two classes of men, those who in the abundance of self-esteem feel competent to judge for all humanity and be responsible for them, or those who fear a comparison of their teaching with that against which they warn. Truth compels us to say the one class is egotistical, the other worse, and both are enemies of religious liberty.

Our people are free to listen to the Mormons or to the church which this man represents; and if any are so peculiarly constituted as to think it to their advantage to exchange, no harm is done. The good Lord will not severely punish the mentally incompetent.

We gave this man the benefit of Judge Philips' decision, and hope he will remember it. A man who deplores the disloyalty of all Saints from Joseph Smith down, who opens his lecture by singing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," who "shouldered a musket at sixteen," and ran away from a debate at sixty, ought not to go back of a decision by a United States circuit court.

So much for those who oppose us, and their devious winding ways. They boast of their ability to paint our "church as black as hell," but it is an evidence or the truth of claims that to do so they must needs use the Devil's paint. There were those in the days of the Master who whited their own corruption, yet essayed to blacken the church of Christ.

We are grateful that it does not stick; a very gentle shower of truth will wash it all away.

THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND HER DAUGHTERS.

A PICTURE AS PAINTED BY THE ARTISTIC BRUSH OF THE HISTORIANS NOW REPOSING IN MY LIBRARY.

BY R. C. EVANS.

I have neither time nor ability to write much for the press, but having been requested to write this article for publication, and believing that some good may be accomplished by a perusal of the same, I essay the task.

We are informed by the Master and some of the apostles, that one of the plain marks of apostasy would be that, "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." (Matt. 24:12.) "The mystery of iniquity doth already work." (1 Thess. 2:7.) Paul, seeing this sad condition, said: "For some are already turned aside after Satan." (1 Tim. 5:15.) He further shows that a main feature of this iniquity was that which would eventually sink the church into a vile cesspool of apostasy; namely, "uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness." (2 Cor. 12:21.) Seducers were to wax worse and worse, creeping "into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts." (2 Tim. 3:6.) And before his death Paul wrote that some of the church membership were commonly reported to be guilty of fornication, "and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles." (1 Cor. 5:1.)

John, the latest writer of New Testament times, wrote sadly of the awful condition of the church. The great mass had already given way to the spirit of seduction, and the struggling few were lamenting over those who had departed from the faith. John informs us that some woman, Jezebel by name, called herself a prophetess, and seduced God's servants to commit fornication and other evils. (See Rev. 2:20.)

These evils finally resulted in an open departure from the pure doctrine of chastity and virtue to the debasing, soul-destroying practice of polygamy. Nicholas, one of the seven chosen men set apart by the apostles, the record of whose ordination is found in Acts 6:3-6, is said to have departed from the faith in the dark and cloudy day, and introducing polygamy, caused the true church to be reproached by the world to this day. Our heavenly Father, referring to this man and his deeds, commends the few still true for hating this doctrine, and of which he declared, "Which I also hate." (Rev. 2:6.) For an account of Nicholas and his hateful deeds I refer you to the great historian, Eusebius, as also Dr. Buck's Theological Dictionary. They agree that "the doctrine of the Nicolaitans was a community of wives, or polygamy."

Thus was the true church disgraced. The tares choked the wheat, the appalling cloud of infamy and shame settled down upon the church. The time came that false apostles (Rev. 2:2), false teachers (2 Peter 2:1-3), "privily," and finally publicly, brought in "damnable heresies," and as a result "swift destruction" of the church followed.

Ah! dear reader, my heart sickens, my soul is filled with sadness, when from the above review of the past, I step across the ages and reach the time of "restoration," when, by angel hands, the heaven-sent message of gospel light came, baptizing the world 'neath the halo of its glory. God's chosen Seer, "Joseph the Prophet," came like a John the Baptist out of the wilderness of obscurity, flashing like a sunburst of beauty the pure gospel with all its splendid gifts, blessings, and powers of doctrine, church organization, and hope upon a deluded, naked, creed-bound world.

Those who had sought to serve God 'mid the glimmering light of human creeds, now murmuring no more, came forward and received with meekness the engrafted word—the restored gospel which made them wise unto salvation. But, alas! How soon was the fine gold dimmed. As Jesus, Peter, Paul, John, and others of the church foretold the apostasy of the church, in former days,—as they warned the saints to shun the “seducing spirit,” to flee from “fornication” and all lewdness, so stood the fearless prophet, Joseph, warning the Saints of the “mystery” of “iniquity had in secret chambers to bring to pass even your destruction.” How he pleaded with them to “practice virtue and holiness.” (Doc. and Cov. sec. 38, pars. 4 and 5.)

As God through his servants in former days denounced polygamy and all lewdness, so God through Joseph Smith in latter days denounced polygamy and all lewdness. (See Doc. and Cov., sec. 42, par. 7; also Book of Mormon, Jacob, chap. 2, pars. 6, 7, 9, pages 116, 117.) I venture a statement, fearless of successful contradiction. It is, That no man living can produce a clearer, terser, fuller, and plainer denunciation of polygamy and all lewdness, from any book in the world, than is found in the above from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. These books were given to the world through Joseph Smith.

At the risk of being accused of making this article too lengthy, I quote parts of the statements referred to, in order that those accepting my challenge may see that with which they desire to compare:

“Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. . . . Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.”—Book of Mormon, Jacob, chap. 2, par. 6.

“And again, I say, Thou shalt not kill. . . . Thou shalt not steal. . . . Thou shalt not lie. . . . Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit. . . . Thou shalt not commit adultery. . . . Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out.”—Doc. and Cov., sec. 42, par. 7.

The above agree with what Smucker writes in “History of the Mormons:” Joseph Smith “was at all times most anxious to preserve the church free from taint and exclude adulterers, seducers, and persons of immoral lives.” (Read pages 171–174.) Notwithstanding all his warning, evil men and seducers waxed worse and worse, and soon after his death, men whom he had warned and reprimanded, threw off all restraint, “giving heed to seducing spirits,” “creeping into houses and leading captive silly women.” The way of truth was again, as in the former days, evil spoken of, and again men of the church “departed from the faith,” and introduced polygamy, to stain and scar the fair name of the church of Christ, Nicolas of the former-day saints, Brigham Young of the latter-day saints. As the former-day saints suffered reproach and persecution by reason of the crimes of Nicolas, so the latter-day saints suffer by reason of the crimes of Brigham Young. Let no one reflect on the true church of Christ, either in former or latter days because of the sins of those men and the poor, misguided people that followed them.

Having briefly described part of the cause that produced the former and latter-day apostasies and the parallels in both, I now ask the reader to return with me, while we follow the apostate church through the dark ages, and viewing the mother and her daughters as pictured by her own artists, we shall see that the awful crime against womanhood has been and is now being perpetrated. It is, doubtless, because of this that divinity has named it, “The great whore,” “The Mother of Harlots.” (Rev. 17: 1–5.) A hard name, but the characters of the mother and her daughters deserve the name. As a means to assist the mother and pander to the baser passions, we are informed that indulgences were invented. The form of these indulgences was as follows, according to a book called the “Tax of the Sacred Roman Chancery” in which are contained the exact sums to be levied for the pardon of each particular sin, we find some of the facts to be thus: “For procuring abortion, 7s. 6d. For defiling a virgin, 9s. For lying with a mother, sister, etc., 7s. 6d. For keeping a concubine, 10s. 6d.”—Buck’s Theological Dictionary, p. 191.

To show that the commission of crime was encouraged, we submit the following: “John Tetzl in 1507 gained in two days at Freyburg, two thousand florins in addressing audiences. In order to move them to purchase his pardons he delivered the following: “Indulgences are the most precious and sublime of God’s gifts. This cross [pointing to the red cross] has as much efficacy as the cross of Jesus Christ. Draw near and I will give you letters, duly sealed, by which, even the sins which you hereafter desire to commit, shall be forgiven you. . . . There is no sin so great, that the indulgence can not remit it, and even if any one should (which is doubtless impossible) ravish the Holy Virgin, mother of God, let him pay—let him only pay largely and it shall be forgiven him. . . . The very moment that the money chinks against the bottom of the chest, the soul escapes from purgatory and flies away to heaven.”—History of the Reformation, by D'Aubigne, p. 68.

Speaking of the above, Father Hogan, at one time a leading Romish priest, says: “There is not a Roman Catholic church, chapel, or house of worship in any Catholic country where indulgences are not sold.”—Hogan's Works, p. 172.

In support of the above, I submit the following: “Rev. Francis S. Borden, a missionary in Pueblo, Mexico, says in the Christian Endeavor World, that he recently saw the following notice in a Roman Catholic church in Mexico:

“‘RAFFLE FOR SOULS.

“‘At the last raffle for souls, the following numbers obtained the prize, and the lucky holders may be assured that their loved ones are for ever released from the flames of purgatory. Ticket 841, the soul of the lawyer, James Vasquey, is released from purgatory and ushered into heavenly joys. Ticket 41, the soul of Mme. Calderon, is made happy for ever. . . . Another raffle for souls will be held at this same blessed church of the Redeemer, on January 31, at which four bleeding and tortured souls will be released from purgatory to heaven, according to the four highest tickets in this most holy lottery. Tickets, one dollar, to be had of the Father in charge. Will you, for the sum of one dollar, leave your loved ones to burn in purgatory for ages?’”—Truth Seeker.

Some may say, “Is this true?” I reply, I do not know. The gifted son of a daughter speaks thus of his grandmother: “It's a family fuss and I do not wish to take sides by giving an opinion.”

“Father Hogan,” in his work on popery, gives a quotation from L. Lorintis, “History of the Inquisition,” which names “a mother abbess, among the nuns of Carmelites, of the city of Lerima, who gave birth to children for the space of twenty years. When a child was born, the nuns would hold the nose of the infant between the thumb and finger, while the Father confessor and father of the child would sprinkle the child to send it to heaven. The burying ground there was examined and the remains of many infants found.”—Father Hogan, p. 284.

“In the 3d century celibacy was not enjoined upon the clergy by any decree. However, it is said, that many of the sacred order in Africa, adopted the practice of keeping certain women as concubines, who had made vows of perpetual chastity, but were permitted to participate in the bed of the Priests under the most solemn declaration that nothing should pass in this commerce contrary to the rules of chastity and virtue.”—Mosheim, vol. 1, p. 85.

“On the ascension of King Edward IV in 1462, he obtained the support of the clergy by granting them a character of immunity, whereby all civil magistrates were forbidden to take any notice of treasons, murders, rapes, robberies, thefts, or other crimes committed by Arch-bishops, Bishops, Priests, Deacons, or any person in Holy Orders.”—Wilkins Conceld.

“All magistrates who interpose against priests in any criminal case, whether it be for murder or high treason, let him be accursed.”—Council of Lateran, under Pope Innocent III.

Some may think that the above picture of the mother is a dark one. I admit it. All I have to say in defense is, the half has not been told; and every touch of the brush as shown on the picture of the old lady, was made by her own children, yea, some of her most prominent sons.

This ancient woman is tottering to her fall, age and dissipation have left their marks, yet she paints and powders, with falsehood and flattery, and hides her deformity in the robes of deception and assumed infallibility. She still keeps up a flirtation with the nations, and many are still flattered by her beguiling smile.

Having had a fair look at the mother, let us now gaze upon some of her most prominent daughters. If we value the law of heredity we may not hope that the daughters will be any better than the mother, but we will see.

The Lutheran Church is regarded by most of the historians as being the first daughter of Romanism that lived to womanhood.

“Martin Luther was an Augustine monk. He resented the transfer of the sale of indulgences from the Augustine Friars to the order of the Dominicans. The Pope's ministers having transferred this employment, supposing that they had found out illicit methods of secreting the money. Pope Leo X wished the money to build St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome. Luther began to show his indignation by preaching against their efficacy.”—Goldsmith's History of England.

Now Cobbett, in “Protestant Reformation,” page 44, supports Goldsmith's statement. If they reflect the facts, Luther's great soul was not vexed because of the sale of indulgences. Ah! no; but because his order of monks was discovered in robbing the Pope, and the chance to steal more was taken from them. Is this a case of “rogues falling out”?

The histories, both Catholic and Protestant, admit that Luther was at times vile in word and deed.

“Luther won over to his cause Philip the Landgrave of Hesse, by a shameful inducement. Philip desired to contract another marriage, although his first wife was still living, and he wished to obtain the acquiescence of the new reformer. He accordingly applied to Luther, who, having assembled the doctors of the new religion at Wittenberg, gave the Landgrave . . . permission to have two wives at the same time."—Father Nothen, "Church History," p. 415; Reverend J. B. Bossuet, "Variations of the Protestant Churches," pp. 205-214; Cobbett, Prot. Ref., p. 45.

Luther, if reported correctly above, sanctioned polygamy.

"Luther was an apostate monk, living in concubinage with an unfrocked nun, and he has been judged by Protestant writers with merited severity."—Plain Talk, page 80.

Listen to Luther. Though angry with his mother, surely he speaks with the mother tongue:

"It is true then, that in a sermon which he delivered at Wittenberg, for the reformation of marriage, he blushed not to pronounce these infamous and scandalous words: 'If they are stubborn [he speaks of wives], it is fitting their husbands should tell them, if you will not another will; if the mistress refuse to come, let the maid be called. . . . However, it is necessary for the husband to bring his wife first before the church, and to admonish her two or three times; after that put her away and take Esther instead of Vashti.' This was the new cause for divorce superadded to that of adultery. Thus did Luther handle the subject of the reformation of marriage."—Serm. de Matrim, T. V. 123; also Variations of the Protestant Churches, p. 184.

We can not leave Luther till we show that he will have much to meet, if it be true that man must answer for every word spoken. During his row with Henry VIII, he called him a pig, an ass, a dunghill, the spawn of an adder, a basilisk, a lying buffoon dressed in king's robes, a mad fool with a frothy mouth and a whorish face. (See Cobbett's Prot. Ref., p. 46.) Surely the eldest daughter was in word and deed like unto her mother, only weaker and younger.

An illustrated article of unusual interest describing "The Japanese University for Women" appears in the Chautauquan magazine for April. The information and illustrations were secured at first hand by Ernest W. Clement. Another article suggesting the quality of timeliness treats of Heligoland, "The Smallest Gem in the Kaiser's Crown," by Vincent Van Marter Beede. A view of this picturesque land forms the frontispiece. In a series of German topics, "A Tramp Through the Southern Black Forest" is presented, text and illustrations being furnished by William H. Hulme, professor of English literature at Western Reserve University, who has recently returned from the trip which he describes. Professor Robert Waller Deering contributes the first of two Critical Studies of Goethe's "Faust." The Critical Times of the Civil War and Arbitration in American Diplomacy are subjects of two chapters in the leading feature of current interest which the Chautauquan publishes under the title "Formative Incidents in American Diplomacy," by Professor Edwin Erle Sparks.

INFORMATION IN REGARD TO THE JEW.

LIFE IN PALESTINE.

In the Home Magazine for November Edgar Mels has an article on "The Resurrection of Israel," full of interest to the reader and the historian. He traces the origin of the Zionist movement, gives the pathetic history of the Jews in the Dark Ages and in Russia, and a description of a number of the colonies now located in Palestine. In England under Henry II and III, the Jews were mercilessly robbed. Sir Walter Scott pictures their troubles in Ivanhoe in the persons of Isaac of York and the beautiful Rebecca. In Europe they were forced to live in ghettos like sheep in a stall. They were reviled, cursed, and killed. In Russia their persecution has been so intolerable that in 1881 more than 1,000,000 left that country for ever. Yet with all these disadvantages the modern Jew has produced a Heine, a Lasalle, a Meyerbeer, an Auerbach, a Massena, Napoleon's stern old marshal, a Mozart, a Cremieux, a Disraeli, the Earl of Beaconsfield, a Montefiore, and the blood of the race coursed and courses through the veins of Gambetta, and Castellar, Spain's great orator.

In Turkey and Venice the Jew was granted freedom, Holland was the first Christian nation to remove their fetters, in 1603. In 1723 England began the movement, but did not complete it until 1839. The Declaration of Independence made them free men in America, and Napoleon smashed every ghetto in continental Europe. It is not surprising the Jews revere Washington and Napoleon, or that they rallied under the standard of Washington and sealed the cause of American liberty with their blood and wounds.

In 1896 Dr. Theodore Herzl of Vienna wrote "The Jewish State," which gave impetus to the Zionist movement. It was regarded as the dream of a visionary, but the movement has spread over civilization. It originated and was intended for the benefit of the Israelites in Russia and Roumania, to place them in homes of their own in the land of their fathers. These unfortunate people number upwards of 8,000,000 in Russia, Roumania, Galicia, and the Balkan states. These, with the Jews living in the balance of Europe and in America, Asia, and Africa, would make a nation of at least 13,000,000 people—about the size of Mexico.

The Ashkenazi (Russian Israelites) are not desired by any country in Europe, and their lot in Russia is too miserable to endure—rapine, pillage, and torture by their enemies are of common occurrence. Some opening must be made where they can go and dwell in peace. This is the colonization of Palestine. The first colony started there was in 1170. In 1481 sixty Jewish families were living in the country. In 1854

Sir Moses Montefiore obtained permission from the sultan to locate an agricultural colony near Safed. Thirty-five families composed it and prospered. In 1897 the Zionist movement appeared. A congress at Basle in Switzerland determined upon wholesale colonization. The Jewish Colonial Trust, with a capital of $10,000,000, was formed to furnish funds to colonize, and transport the colonists to the Holy Land. Permission was granted by the sultan and the emperor of Germany backed it with his influence. There are now more Jews in Palestine than there were after the return from the Babylonian captivity.

The first successful colony was started in 1870 by the Alliance Israelite Universelle of France. The Turkish government gave the colonists 617 acres of land on the road between Jaffa and Jerusalem. In 1878 another colony with 767 acres was located on the road to Nabulus, six miles from Jaffa. In 1882 the Russian Jews founded another colony about twenty-five miles from Jaffa on the southeast. From that time forward other colonies were founded, a number bordering on the Mediterranean, one of which has a population of 2,000 souls.

These colonists are firmly settled and prosperous. They raise wheat, cereals, silk worms, bees, vegetables, vineyards, poultry, orchards, mulberry and almond trees, flowers, market gardens, cows, and horses. Many live in stone dwellings, pictures of which compare favorably to our own. They have steam plows, nurseries, aqueducts, steam mills, wine cellars, libraries, free schools, synagogues, public baths, hospitals, town halls, manufactories, with paved streets in their towns.

In all the colonists number about 5,000 and hold 62,500 acres of land. These are variously distributed in Judea, Samaria, Upper Galilee, and Thans-Jordania. They are governed by a board elected annually, from whose decision there is no appeal. These colonists are exclusive of the cities, and they are making the waste and desolate places bloom once more like the rose.

The restoration of Palestine means the regeneration of the East.

As Mr. Mels says: "The Jews will resettle Palestine. Then, when Palestine shall again be the home of the Jew, as it was in his glorious past, then the Jewish state will be the model of all nations—a state governed in the fear of God and for the love of fellow man."—Weekly World Herald, Omaha, Nebraska, November 19, 1901.

A Matter for all Americans to Consider.

One article in the April McClure's ought to be read by every American citizen. This is the account, by Lincoln Steffens, of "The Overworked President." The conditions under which the President is forced to transact his share of the management of the nation are such as no business man at the head of a great private enterprise would for a moment think of tolerating. Many hours every working day are wasted by interruptions of the most vexatiously trivial nature, by questions and visitors that should properly and could much more effectually be attended to by subordinates. It is literally true that the President has often to break off consideration or discussion of matters of the most vital importance to the nation for a decision on some matter that in a big business concern would get no farther than the first clerk.

Mr. Steffens' article is the narrative of a day passed in the White House in observing the crowds that throng there and noting the purpose of their calls. "I wished," says the writer, "that not fewer but more Americans could have been there to see what the busiest man of us all was busied with." In Washington legislation is now being considered; Secretary Cortelyou, indeed, has already quietly effected much, but no really thorough reform can be accomplished until public opinion has been persuaded that for the President to refuse to remain at the beck and call of anybody and everybody is no violation of our democratic traditions. The time, Mr. Steffens thinks, is ripe for a bold move. "The man to solve the problem," he concludes, "is the President; not any President, but President Roosevelt. The reform must be established by the will of a strong man, who is truly democratic, and is not afraid of a fight. A President who is physically weak might be excused for closing his doors, but he could not thus set a binding precedent. The rule must be laid down by a man who may pack it up by saying, 'I can, but I won't stand it.'"

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Ill temper is a symptom revealing an unloving nature at the bottom; it is the intermittent fever which bespeaks intermittent disease within. Temper can not be changed but by a change of heart. Souls are sweetened, not by taking the acid fluids out, but by putting love in. It is better not to live than not to love.
—Henry Drummond.

Respect and Disrespect.

The above subject presented itself to our mind several weeks ago, and now we take time to write such thoughts as shall be given. As we can do nothing without help, we say, O Father, give to unworthy us such thoughts as shall tend to strengthen and purify our own weak, erring mind, and may they be sent out into the world, and in like manner benefit others. It is neither for praise, nor for money, that we write, but that we may be an instrument in thy hands that shall do good. Seemingly, all other ways have been cut off.

Respect means to regard with reverence or esteem. Alas! how little of that important factor in human character do we find in this age of the world! That is one of the many evidences of the last days. We would ask right here, Why has such an important part of morality, to say nothing about religion, become so dwindled out? Who will answer our question?

The reader may chance to say to the writer, "What is your idea?" Well, we will briefly answer, and not be obliged to stop and clear the cobwebs out of the throat, either; answer from observation and from experience; not through a magnifying-glass or a critic's eye, but just a common, straightforward view. We will commence at the fountain-head, and say husbands should respect their wives and fathers should respect their children, and so govern themselves as to command respect from every member of their households. If so he will be living in harmony with God's laws, as far as that subject goes. Yes, but that is not all your duty. You should teach the children to respect their mother. They will be more liable to respect her if you do, sure, but if they should not, see to it. It is your reasonable duty. You are the head of the family. Wives and mothers, respect yourselves by respecting your husbands and children, and teach them the same. A home where due respect is lacking, is a direful place, sometimes quite a bedlam.

We have many times observed that if parents did not respect their children, and allowed them to disrespect other people, that at times when some little thing did not meet the child's uncultivated fancy, volumes of irreverent language would be aimed back to the injudicious parent. "Chickens come home to roost." Example is a greater and more effectual teacher than harsh restriction. Dear reader, how is it in your home?

"Well, wife and I are trying to do the best we can, according to our judgment," says one. Very good, if that judgment is built on wisdom, sought from above. No mortal has sufficient of his own.

"Sr. Almira," says another, "I am about tired of your preaching. I think it is none of your business how we manage our affairs, so just keep still." It is somebody's business, sure, as such things do exist, and are often found under the roof of Saints.

Dear brother or sister, we know as does every Saint, that it is easier to preach than it is to practice, but if the elders should give up their work because of that fact, the church would surely go into the wilderness again. So we wish to join hands and thoughts with the handful of sisters who are trying at the fountain head—the home—to give counsel that shall tend for the upbuilding of the cause of Christ, that the homes may not be driven into the wilderness too."

"Well," says another, "what do you know about such things? You never had a child live."

Very true, but we have had quite a broad experience with children, and in observing causes and effects have found them just as we speak, omitting details too disgusting, too painful to repeat! Now as we were not permitted to fill woman's highest mission to rightly help people the earth we think that we ought to have some show in the great work, so thrust a few of our thoughts before the public. If we do not our part, sin will be laid at our door, as it was said to Ezekiel. Teachers, step-mothers, and dependent individuals have a broad field of experience in regard to the subject, so are somewhat qualified to speak on it, if so situated that they have liberty to do so. If respect and order reign in our home we will not be offended with the writer's opinion, and if it does not it would be good to have the wrong pointed out and uprooted and the right cultivated. "Order is Heaven's first law," and reverence must be the second, for the angels bow and the archangels veil their faces. Now if not practiced in this preparatory state, if one should squeeze in or elbow his way through the beautiful gate, we fear he would feel some as a man would who when young was a truant, if he attempted to sit on a lawyer's bench as judge.

Dear reader, don't for a moment think that we do not love children, for we do. And as dear old Bro. Peter, Eaton said, "Heaven would be lonesome without children," we say. It is not the child so much, but the evil habits that we are hurling our missiles at. Respectful, obedient children with aspirations to be good and do good, are one of the most pleasing sights on earth—pleasing on earth and pleasing in heaven. The angels rejoice over one sinner that repenteth. Let us repent that the courts of heaven may resound with joy because of our submission to its laws. Dear children, bear in mind that if you do not respect others you are not respecting yourselves, and if not you can not be respected, can not be respectable, can not come up higher in manners, in morality, in society, or in truth and right. Where then is your ability to make the world better by being in it? We fear it will be said of such, It would have been better if that man had not been born.

Sisters, don't think because we have used the masculine gender freely in this little essay, that you are excused in this great work. O no! If you are yoked with a companion, try and pull equally with him for the right—and we hope he will neither shove nor kick.

During our many years we have occasionally been treated with disrespect, but invariably it came from the ignorant and ill-bred. Nevertheless it is annoying and sometimes tormenting—Satan's bait. And we are sorry to say—but the truth must be told on all sides to give a good balance—that we have, after bearing and forbearing even till forbearance had ceased to be a virtue, forgot our dignity and lost our patience—and temper also, sometimes, or found it. Not the best way, but the carnal way. We are only a mortal.

If a young man does not respect his parents, he is not qualifying himself to be a good husband or a good father. Young woman, don't let his pleasant words, fine appearance, and words of devotion sink deeply into your heart until you know how he treats his mother. "As a man treats his mother so will he treat his wife," is an old saying—true all the same. Young man, the old lady says to you, Make a similar investigation before having that strong knot tied. "Many have married in haste and repented at leisure."

We are glad our church periodicals are speaking so plainly and so purely in regard to the training of the rising generation, and we hope that this great and glorious work will progress from generation to generation, let there be few or many, till the trumpet shall sound and Jesus shall come to claim his own—the ones who have respected him and his word.

The Duty of a Sunday-School Teacher.

I will begin from the time one is appointed teacher of a Sunday-school class: The first and greatest duty is to keep in touch with the great "teacher," God. To do this means more than simply bowing and offering prayer. It means to live a life of sacrifice and love; indeed all that is good. I would not have you understand me to say that prayer isn't necessary, for thereby we gain help and strength we could get in no other way, and without prayer we could not make good Sunday-school teachers.

We should always go before our classes with

WELL-LEARNED LESSONS.

Do not wait until Saturday night and then hastily glance over your lessons, but begin early in the week and study to know what you are going to teach and how.

I once heard a primary teacher say, (not an L. D. S., however,) "I do not have to study my Sunday-school lessons because I teach the "little tots." Are not the "little tots" of to-day the men and women of to-morrow? Do we not, then, need to study the very best methods of teaching those little minds the great truths contained in the Bible?

I have never been made to realize my weakness, and the great responsibility of a Sunday-school teacher more than when standing before the little ones, for the impressions on their little minds are lasting. Here I just wish to give a little of

MY OWN EXPERIENCE.

I have a class of from five to ten children, from the ages of seven to nine years, most of whom do not belong to families of Saints and who have attended other Sunday-schools. I find ideas lodged in their minds such as, angels having wings, an everlasting hell, baptism not a necessity, etc., and it is almost impossible to get the children to believe anything else. While these children have not gained such ideas in the Sunday-school alone, in the Sunday-school is our only privilege of dislodging them, and we, having a love for the children and for the welfare of their souls, hope by continually doing duty they may gain the "crown of eternal life."

We should be very careful in

OUR EVERY-DAY LIFE.

For, let a child see you doing the things you have been teaching him not to do, your influence with that child is gone. Only by living a Christ-like life can we have the influence necessary for a Sunday-school teacher. We sometimes hear remarks from children that make us realize what duty means in the truest sense of the word.

WE SHOULD VISIT THE CHILDREN IN THEIR HOMES, that we may know their home life, also show our interest to the parents. We will know better then how to reach the child. I would say to the teacher who never tried it, visit your pupils and you will be surprised as well as pleased to see the increased interest and attendance. Hear some of the little ones say, "Teacher was to our house the other day," and you will only need to watch the child's face to be paid for the time it took you to do so.

GREET THE CHILDREN KINDLY

wherever and as often as you meet them; this is not only a good rule with the children, for we hear something from the older ones now and then to tell us they enjoy it too.

In conclusion will say, let us strive to do all our hands find to do and ever ask the heavenly Father to help us to know our duty, that when we depart this life we may say, "I have finished the work thou didst give me to do."

COOK'S POINT, Texas, March 30.

Editors Herald: I went to San Antonio on the 12th inst. Was met by Sr. Cora Curtis and conveyed to Sr. Merritt's, where Sr. Merritt, one of her sons and family, and Sr. Cora live. They received and cared for me kindly. I preached at their house twice.

From there I went to see Bro. Thomas Jett; also preached twice and held two prayer-meetings at Bro. Gifford's. Preached once at Bro. Ed McRae's and once at Bro. Tom Jett's. I also attended two preaching services where Bro. Jett preached in Spanish to the Mexicans. They gave him good attention.

I visited nearly all the members in this city at their homes and talked with and taught them their duties to God, themselves, their brethren, sisters, and fellow creatures. I left them in better condition than I found them. They all treated me kindly and wished me to stay longer with them. I hope to make them another visit when I can spend more time. They are making an effort to build a chapel. Up to this time they have had no house of worship except some private house or a storehouse. The young members and some old ones held a concert while I was there to raise money for lumber. They raised nearly twenty dollars by this means. The chief mover in this work is Sr. Ruth Gifford. She was assisted much by Miss Willie Pellam, a noble girl. She ought to be a member of the church. I would we had a church in the main part of this, the largest city in Texas. Our people here are, as a rule, poor, but liberal-hearted. God bless them in all their undertakings for good.

On the 27th inst. I left for home, where I arrived the same day. I live about two hundred miles by rail from San Antonio. I found my wife in her usual health. She is a good helpmeet.

Yours in the conflict,

E. W. NUNLEY.

MONTOUR, Illinois.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith, although away from the Saints and do not have the privilege of meeting with them. But I still love the latter-day work, and ask your prayers that I may be faithful.

MARY KENDALL.

HAMLET, Kentucky, March 28.

Editors Herald: I am well pleased with our dear gospel, and know it is of God, for since embracing this gospel I have received more light and evidence than ever before. My prayer is that my husband may come into the fold, and I desire the prayers of the Saints that he may. May God bless all the honest in heart. I also ask prayers for myself, as I am in bad health, and I believe that God will help his people in times of need, as he has promised in his word.

Your sister,

MRS. MINNIE LAMB.

CHEROKEE, Iowa, March 31.

Editors Herald: The work in Cherokee is not very lively; but we are trying to keep the camp-fire blazing. There has not been very much preaching done here of late. We have a neat little church rented to hold meetings in, and hold Sunday-school every Sunday afternoon at 1:30 and preaching at 2:30. The people do not turn out very well at present, but those who do come seem to be interested in the work. There are but eight Saints living in town and eight in the country, as our branch has been moved here from the country and some of the Saints have moved so far away they can not attend meetings very often. There is lots of prejudice here to battle against, but we feel the Lord is on our side, and we will try and battle for the right and let our light shine before the world that others may be guided into the true light of God.

This is my first conference appointment, but I have not done much, as I could not take the field until about the first of December last, but have done all I could to advance the cause of Christ since that time. I have been hindered by sickness in the family, I am at home at present. How I would like to attend the General Conference, but I can not this time. I hope and pray the Lord will guide his servants in all the affairs of his church. It is my desire to do all I can for his cause and try to secure a home with Christ the Lord.

A. R. CRIPPEN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 31.

Editor Herald: The snowflakes fell at Independence thick and fast last Saturday, the 29th, but Easter Sunday was a beautiful day, being only somewhat cold and windy. The attendance at Sunday-school was a little less than usual, there having been only two hundred eighty-nine out, with twelve visitors. Bro. Bond preached an excellent sermon at the morning service and Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser in the evening: the former showing that the benignant influence of the gospel both at the time of and after baptism should be manifested by a life consecrated to God's service. Anything short of this makes baptism but a superficial form of ordinance: the latter with chart and books and clippings making clear and indisputable the Saints' position as possessors of a consistent faith and a divinely authentic Bible. The scholars and commentators disagree with their constituents and what hindereth us from exercising a similar right as to all of them. There was a fair congregation and excellent interest shown.

At the afternoon service Elders James and Henry Kemp, also Elias and Rudolph Etzenhouser, F. C. Warnky, Dr. O. H. Riggs, and other brethren whom we occasionally see as "travelers homeward" were visitors, and Brn. W. H. Garrett and B. J. Scott presided. Reminiscences of the past were offered as loving tributes to work of more than a quarter of a century done in this stake, and the Sunday-school historian here is trying to remind us that the representatives of three generations, who assisted in the latter-day work during the early days were present and bore witness to the divineness of it. Bro. William Clow, one of the fathers in Israel, although even now in the prime of life, who came to this place very early in the history of the stake enthused with love for the Sunday-school work and still laboring in it. Brn. Rudolph Etzenhouser and Lester Brackenbury the sons of sires who loved the gospel, Henry Etzenhouser having been elected the first priest of the first branch here, and John A. Brackenbury, now in his seventy-fourth year, who had been the first superintendent of the first Sunday-school; these, and our young brother, Wilbur, the grandson of Bro. J. M. Farrow who although also in his seventy-fourth year well recollects the instructive discourses of Sr. Emma S. Pilgrim, his old-time teacher of the Book of Mormon class in the courthouse or the old Bank Hall; these were the witnesses among many others who helped to make the occasion an enjoyable one to all present. Two lively little ones were blessed; Margaret Eliza Crick and John Vance Eastwood, grandson of William Clow, whose lifelong toils have no doubt been well repaid by such a present and at such a time as Christmas morning.

Also another has been added to our number by baptism, our much respected brother, Dr. Homer B. Curtis, who was baptized in the font by Elder B. J. Scott.

So, although some of our dear brethren and sisters were still under the hand of affliction, Easter was a day the Saints can surely remember with thanksgiving.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 1.

Editors Herald: As Sr. Emma S. Pilgrim will not change her mind for any "clique, claue, set of men, corporation, or individual" in regard to her being a teacher of the Book of Mormon class in the Court-house in the year 1878 or thereabout as I stated in my letter a day or two ago, I shall have to change mine and correct the mistake by stating it in this way: Bro. Farrow heard her discourses "on the New Testament Scriptures." The Book of Mormon she tells me, was not used at that date, and it was in the Court-house, not Bank Hall. I give you my earnest word that I will try and be more careful in future and not make the editors so much trouble in looking up copy.

It was April Fool's Day yesterday, so I am the greatest sufferer. I heard at the teachers' meeting last evening that Bro. John A. Robinson went to the polls yesterday and cast his vote, so we are glad to hear he will be able to attend conference; no doubt on the way. Bro. M. T. is very low; can not live long. Bro. Chatburn has gone to Iowa to attend the funeral of his father who died last Monday. Hope the General Conference will be a success in every respect. With kindest regards,

SR. ABBIE A. HORTON.

GUERNSEY, California, March 25.

Editors Herald: I am recovering from an attack of rheumatism, having taken down with it the 6th of January. Part of the time I was quite poorly, it having affected my heart, and at times I felt somewhat doubtful as to my recovery, but feel thankful to my heavenly Father I am again on the way to recovery. I have suffered from this disease off and on for the past eighteen years, and God alone knows how I would rejoice should he see fit in his wisdom to remove the affliction from me. I have felt impressed more of late that the time will yet come when the Lord will manifest his power in my behalf and restore me to health. Dear Saints, I desire an interest in your prayers that the Lord may heal me, and if it be not his will to heal me that I may have patience to endure my affliction. While sickness and suffering has been my lot in the past, my heavenly Father has not forsaken me, but has heard and answered my prayers, and it causes my heart to rejoice when I recall instances where the hand of a loving Father has been over me. How oft my heart has been made to rejoice while thinking of the words spoken to me by one of God's servants, in which he said the unseen power of God should be round about me to protect me when in times of danger, and that I should stand with the redeemed.

We had a pleasant visit from Bro. R. Etzenhouser before his return to the East. We are always glad to have the elders call and see us. They will always find a welcome in our home. We have had no preaching since last fall. Bro. Etzenhouser did a good work with the tent last summer and fall. May the seed sown bring forth an abundant harvest.

I trust the Spirit of the Master will meet with those assembled in General Conference. May the Lord hasten the day when the conflicts of this life shall be o'er and we shall be gathered home, there to enjoy peace and happiness throughout eternity.

Your sister,

MOLLIE A. FLORY.

PUEBLO, Colorado, April 1.

Editor Saints' Herald: If any of the Saints are desirous of changing location, we think Pueblo offers a good chance for a good honest livelihood "by the sweat of the face." Will mention a few of the industries that are about to be commenced, while some are already under way of construction: A zinc smelter, a brick-yard, two new lumber-yards, a roundhouse, wagon factory, and stock-yards. There are hundreds of new houses and buildings of every description going up all over the city; carpenters, bricklayers, and stone-masons, are in great demand. Teaming is also good. These, with the other great works of the city, which consist of three large smelters, steel works, and the Standard Fire-brick Yard give employment to hundreds of men daily. The climate is especially good for people who have lung trouble or lacking in physical vitality.

As to the Saints, we are all well and rejoice in the gospel. Our members have increased since October 1, 1901, from six to twenty-four, although there have been no baptisms. We have succeeded in hunting out the faithful in the city. Our Sunday-school has increased the first quarter until it was necessary to double our supplies. Among the late arrivals are Bro. Charles Bishop, wife, and son Albert, from Delta, Colorado, Bro. Brown, wife, and daughter, and a Bro. Wilson from the Cripple Creek mining district.

Our Sunday services are as follows: Sunday-school, 10:30 a. m., social service, 12:15 p. m., preaching service, 7:30 p. m., each Sabbath. We were made to rejoice in all our services Sunday, March 30. At our social service the gift of prophecy was manifested twice to the cheer and comfort of all present.

Your sister,

MRS. MINNIE WOOLSEY.

HAMLET, Kentucky, March 29.

Editors Herald: I am well pleased with the gospel in these latter days. I never knew what it was to enjoy religion till I accepted this work. I have received the good message that has come in these latter days, and have received such evidence that I know it is of God. I hope our opposers will see where they stand before it is too late.

There are only a few Saints here, but there are others who are seeking the truth and will accept this gospel this spring. We expect to organize a branch here in the spring, and we ask the prayers of all the Saints for our success. May the Lord help us to live humbly before the Lord!

MRS. LULA CAP.

FONTANELLE, Iowa, April 1.

Editors Herald: We have a small band of worshipers here in this place, and our attendance is oftentimes quite small; but I thank the Lord for his promise that where two or three are met together in his name there he will be to own and bless. The Lord has poured out his blessing upon us many times, and have no reason to doubt his promises are sure and steadfast. Bro. Butler is elder of our branch and Bro. David Ogelvie is priest. Bro. Butler is quite aged, but is zealous in the cause. Bro. Ogelvie is young in the work, but the Lord is with the aged and the young, and all that are willing to give their lives to his service.

Bro. D. R. Chambers was with us, preached two noble sermons. I ask the prayer of all the Saints in behalf of his poor health. There are some honest-hearted people in this place. We had the promise that there would be a number added to our branch if we are faithful. Pray for us, Saints, that we may be humble. How my heart rejoices to know that our heavenly Father will own us as his children.

Saints, let us all try to shun all appearance of evil, so we may be ready when he comes to gather us home to his kingdom.

It has been over six years since I embraced this blessed gospel. I rejoice to know that the foundation is firm. If we are not afraid to tell our neighbors and friends of the truth we may set them to thinking and studying; and if they ever find it it will drive away all doubts. My prayer to God is that the gospel may reach all the honest in heart.

Your sister,

MRS. MATSON.

KIMBALL, Ontario, April 4.

Editors Herald: I have just baptized five. The water was cold, but everything went off pleasantly. A number of Saints and relatives witnessed the sacred rite. Bro. Shaw, priest and branch president, rendered efficient service at the shore and cheerfully responded whenever called upon to do anything within the duties of his office.

Directly after I attended to the confirmations. A good influence was present.

The Saints are looking forward with intense interest to next Sunday when they meet in fasting and prayer and to partake of the sacrament. They are a united band. Several of their number enjoy prophecy, and sometimes for several meetings in succession.

I expect Elder Green to join me in a few days.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

BLAINE, Kansas, March 9.

Dear Herald: We take the HERALD and Ensign and are always glad to read the letters in them, as they give us strength. We are isolated, and any elder coming this way will always find a welcome. I think we can get the schoolhouse for preaching most any time. We are the only Saints living near here. I would love to see my relatives, those near and dear to us by the ties of nature, accept the true gospel. It is my prayer that the prejudice may be removed from their hearts and they obey the true gospel. I ask the prayers of the Saints that we may prove faithful and do good wherever we may be.

Your sister,

MRS. MAY JOHNSTON.

Miscellaneous Department.

Convention Minutes.

Pottawattamie.—Convened at Council Bluffs, February 21. Number of schools reporting, 6; number of schools in district, 10; total membership, 490. Motion prevailed recommending that each school elect its officers the last week in the year, the term of office being for one year. District officers for the ensuing year: John A. Hansen, superintendent; C. B. Bardsley, assistant superintendent; Julia E. Hansen, secretary; Frank Hough, treasurer; Rachel Kuykendall, librarian. Adjourned to meet the Friday preceding, and at the same place as, the next district conference.

A Decision.

To Those Concerned: As per arrangement, I met Brn. G. W. Johnson, A. W. Easterday, G. Keller, and S. D. Payne at Bro. A. W. Easterday's private residence, Eustis, Nebraska, Sunday, March 2, 1902, 10:30 a. m. The three first named brethren were officials of the Eustis Branch, the latter a General Conference appointee.

As per request I took charge of the meeting, opening the same in due form. Documents that were placed in my hands by branch officials and S. D. Payne were read and duly considered, evidencing some friction between Bro. Payne and branch officials, attributable to preparatory steps, with a view to the convening an elders' court, to meet and adjust existing difficulties. And, for the benefit of all concerned, I hereby officially state, that after mature consideration, the brethren, evincing no other desire than that justice by honoring God-given law should obtain, the steps taken for the above-named purpose are declared informal, therefore null and void. And further, for the benefit of those concerned, it is to be understood that whatever may have been the condition before or during the efforts being made for a trial, that condition remains; that is to say, the offended parties may seek and find redress guaranteed to every member of the body by God's law.

JAMES CAFFALL,

Missionary in Charge.

Done at Eustis, Nebraska, this second day of March, 1902.

Sufficient time was given for the brethren to express themselves in favor of or against the decision. Nothing being said or done to prevent free thought and speech, and finally a unanimous indorsement obtained.

P. S.—For the benefit of those concerned, that in view of their limited acquaintance with the church law they may have but a limited conception as to the nature and imperativeness of God's revealed method of adjudication, which the writer understands to have been given for the purpose of vindicating the innocent, punishing the guilty, and fostering the fair fame of the church, a few citations from the books are submitted:

First. "It is not requisite to administer an oath to witnesses testifying before a court of elders; as it is not to be supposed that a member of the church will testify falsely, either in court or out of it."

Second. "Any person, a member of the church, who shall have been offended by another, whether such offense shall have been publicly or privately given, or any officer whose duty it is to examine into and settle differences between brethren, shall be entitled to proceed against the person so offending before any court of the church having jurisdiction, providing that such proceeding shall be commenced within one year from the time it becomes known that such offense has been committed; except in cases of felonies, as provided by the laws of the land, and where the statute of limitation does not run."

Third. "No member shall be entitled to proceed against another for an offense before any church court whatever unless he shall first have made efforts to reconcile, or become reconciled to the member offending, as directed in the Scriptures.

"The steps required are:

"(a) The member offended shall seek opportunity to state his matter of grievance to the one offending, as said by the Savior, 'between him and thee alone.' If explanation, apology, restitution or reconciliation be not effected after candid and fair effort shall have been made by the one offended, then he shall take with him some teacher of the church, or, if such teacher be not obtainable, or be an interested party, a deacon, if obtainable, otherwise, a member, and shall try a second time to secure an adjustment of the difficulty existing, but shall not state the matter of grievance to such officer or member except in the presence of the party offending.

"(b) If no reconciliation shall be effected by this second visit and effort, the offended, if he shall so choose, may lay the matter before the presiding officer of the branch, or, if such presiding officer be not an elder or other officer in the Melchisedec line of authority, before the presiding elder of the district, or mission if it be not in an organized branch or district, who shall appoint from the eldership of the church such persons as may properly sit, to examine and try the case;" etc.

Fourth. In connection with the above (see Book of Rules, pages 132, 133, 134), let the reader study (if he has not done so) Doctrine and Covenants 42: 23 and look well at Christ's teachings, Matthew 18: 15-18, and do not overlook Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16, which runneth thus:

"Thou shall take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures, for a law to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned if he continues."

If, as some have said, the first principles of the gospel are our A B C's, I think a closer study of our A B C's would hurt no one.

Fifth. But there may be two motives prompting study: 1. A desire to acquire a proficiency to evade scriptural injunctions, or substitute some dogma in lieu of what the Scripture makes imperative, by far-fetched argument, etc. 2. A desire to learn how to acquire a proficiency to practically demonstrate a loyalty to God, thus assimilating to, or in, the likeness of Christ.

In our study let us not overlook the purpose or design of elders' courts in the church, and never forget that it is, or should be, the last resort for adjustment of trouble; and certainly not forget the fact that a reconciliation should be sought by godly

To Whom It May Concern: I hereby notify you that Bro. D. M. Strachan, of Youngstown, Ohio, has been silenced as an elder, for cause, till his case is adjusted: Elder Richard Baldwin, President of Kirtland District.

Died.

ELIASON.—At her home in Soda Springs, Idaho, March 26, 1902, Mrs. Karrin Eliason, aged 42 years, 19 days. She was born in Sweden in 1830; came to this country in 1860. The immediate cause of her death was pneumonia. Her illness was short and death unexpected. The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church at two o'clock, March 29, conducted by the residing minister, Mr. Richelsen. She has been a faithful member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since 1870. Four sons and two daughters mourn.

SILVERS.—Near Wheatland, Missouri, February 26, 1902, Bro. John A. Silvers. He was born January 26, 1846, in Davis County, Iowa; was baptized March 25, 1883, at Lone Rock, Missouri, by Elder C. H. Jones. Was ordained a priest May 9, 1897. His Christian conduct made him many friends, both among Saints and those of the world. He leaves a wife, three sons, one daughter, and two grandchildren. Funeral service under charge of Elder Wm. H. Mannering. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

ADAMS.—Frank Adams was born near Moorhead, Iowa, July 4, 1877; died in Council Bluffs, February 11, 1902, as the result of an injury received in a railway collision, December 16, 1901. He was baptized August 21, 1898. "Frank was a faithful Sunday-school teacher for a year of a class of seventeen boys and girls, his associates, and his life was an example to them." The funeral was in charge of Elder M. Jensen, J. W. Wight preaching the sermon. The chapel at Moorhead could not accommodate the vast throng—a glowing tribute to this young man's life.

WITT.—Sr. Minnie Witt was born in Germany in May, 1828; came to America in 1872. Was a member of the Lutheran Church until 1885, when she joined the Reorganized Church. Died March 23, 1902, at the home of her sister, Sr. W. G. Mefferd, Woodbine. Funeral sermon at the Latter Day Saints church, Woodbine, by S. B. Kibler, Tuesday, March 25, at ten a. m. Buried in the Mefferd Cemetery.

MOSS.—Mabel Lee Judy was born May 25, 1877, at Narrows Creek, Missouri. Was married to Bro. Samuel Moss, February 7, 1897, who with two children and two brothers survive her. Said sister was baptized May 20, 1900. Died March 15, 1902. Funeral service the 16th at Friendship church to a large gathering of friends, conducted by Elder F. T. Mussel, of Bevier. Her last words were, "It's growing brighter."

PERRY.—At Danforth, Missouri, March 10, Charles Thomas, infant son of Bro. and Sr. Thomas Perry, aged 1 year, 1 month, 22 days. The remains were taken to Bevier, where the funeral services were conducted from the Saints' church, the 12th inst., by F. T. Mussel. This bereavement seems to be a double one as it has been but eight days since another bud had been plucked from the home. May he who doeth all things well give comfort and solace in this trying hour.

CRANDALL.—Albert Crandall was born in Jackson County, Missouri, June 4, 1833; died at his home in Dow City, March 17, 1902. From his birthplace Mr. Crandall in 1852 settled in Shelby County. Here he was married to Miss Nellie Holcomb, and this proved a long and happy union. In 1863 he united with the Latter Day Saints Church, and was a good, honorable member until death. Wife, four sons, and two daughters mourn. Funeral services in Latter Day Saints church the 19th; sermon by Elder N. V. Sheldon, assisted by Elder J. M. Baker.

Iowa to the Front.

What now of Iowa? The Buckeye spirit has moved westward; and apparently it is in Iowa that we shall look for a repetition of the same thing. The brain and will of a prairie people have risen to a superb preëminence in the councils of the national capital. Problem: to explain that preëminence.

First among many causes ranks Western—I may say Ohioan—inheritance; for Iowa is lineally descended from Ohio and States like Ohio. It has, to be sure, an impressive infusion of migrant New Englanders, but its main factors have from the beginning been chiefly made up of the Western-born. When the children of Ohio arrived at man's estate there came upon them a great thirsting for pioneer opportunities. So in many another Western commonwealth. To live and to toil in a ready-made world seemed not enough; they must find them a new frontier; they must forge their own destinies, build their own fortunes. So the prairie was opened to settlement.

Now the lesson of the prairie is not the lesson of the forest, and the early Iowans did not read the book of experience as the early Ohioans had read it. The prairie is flat and monotonous, and there was a corresponding flatness and monotony in the life of the first Hawkeyes. It lacked romance. It appealed scarcely at all to the gaudy-hued virtues of daring and endurance. It was easy, this peopling of treeless plains, this tilling of virgin soils; and besides it was swift.

But if the prairie was level it was also very much of a piece in its geological composition. The material resources of Ohio are many and varied; the material resources of Iowa are best summed up in the terms of agriculture. In any corner of that "American Mesopotamia" you will hear three lusty nouns—corn, cow, hog—and having heard these you have heard all. Hence the natural result: the Iowans, being one vast guild of fellow-husbandmen, have lacked the intellectual stimulus that comes from contact between men of different callings. You can travel over their State, from Sioux City to Davenport, or from Dubuque to Council Bluffs, and not meet one brilliant mind or a single amazing character. Yet you will find everywhere a most commendable dead level of honesty, decency, practicality, good sense, and well-fed prosiness. And the world is so constituted that these simple, brown-colored virtues, properly compounded, spell political sanity. Add strength and there stands a statesman. No hot-head is he; instead you may trust him with the weightiest affairs of a nation. Neither will any man call him eccentric; he is as incapable of eccentricity as he is of brilliancy. You shall find him the very soberest of counselors.—Rollin Lynde Hartt, in The World's Work.

PROFESSOR CHARLES WILSON has announced to the Royal Society a new determination of the temperature of the sun. His figures are 6,200 deg. C. (11,192 deg. F.). It is stated that the absorption of the sun's atmosphere probably makes this temperature equivalent to 6,600 deg. C. at the surface.—Scientific American.

VINCENT KNIGHT, a bishop of the church, while at Nauvoo, Illinois, was fond of using as an axiom, "The Lord helps him best who helps himself." We have heard him use it while in our boyhood, and he once explained it like this: The man who relies on the Lord to do for him what he can do for himself encourages a spirit of idleness in himself, and will soon become lazy and indolent; and will finally doubt the goodness of God and become apostate. Whether the conclusion reached was justified, is a matter for inquiry for each; but the premise is good. If a man is not willing to help himself, and will not try when it is in his power, he certainly should not find fault with his fellow men and with God if he has nothing.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

PUBLICATION DATA.

We are requested to give the following items of information.

The Millennial Star, volume 1, number 1, was issued May, 1840; edited by P. P. Pratt, and printed at Manchester, England, by W. R. Thomas, Spring Gardens; a twenty-four page monthly.

O. Pratt's Works, volume published in 1851, Liverpool. Paper 1 dated 15 Wilton Street, Liverpool, September 30, 1848; Title, "Divine Authority."

Journal of Discourses, volume 1, 1854. Sermons of President B. Young, Counselors, and Twelve.

"Catechism," John Jacques, 1854.

The Pearl of Great Price; published by F. D. Richards, 15 Wilton Street, Liverpool, 1851.

The Book of Abraham, Times and Seasons, volume 3, p. 704; Pearl of Great Price, 1851.

The Seer, Orson Pratt editor, volume 1, number 1. Published Washington, District Columbia, January, 1852. Prospectus dated December 21, 1852.

The "Key to the Science of Theology," P. P. Pratt, published at 15 Wilton Street, Liverpool, England, by F. D. Richards, 1855.

Is the following quotation given in a pamphlet by Bradlaugh correct? "In the beginning the head of the gods called a council of the gods, and they came together, concocted a plan to create the world and people it."

The nearest to this of anything we know of, is found in what is called the "King Follett Sermon," a discourse said to have been delivered at the conference of April, 1844, by President Joseph Smith, upon the occasion of the funeral of a brother, King Follett, killed by an accident in a well; said discourse published in Times and Seasons for August 15, 1844, pages 612-17. On page 614, right hand column, this occurs: "The head god called together the gods, and sat in grand council. The grand counselors sat in yonder heavens, and contemplated the creation of the worlds that were created at that time."

We presume it is from this the quotation referred to was found.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. D. Porter writes from Rushville, Indiana, April 8: "I received an April surprise in Washington County; baptized a Christian minister April 1, near Hardenburg. His name is James A. Marshall, and he is well informed in the doctrine; has been investigating five years, but never had an opportunity to embrace till I went there last week to hold some meetings."

On March 8, Walter J. Haworth wrote from Wallsend, New South Wales: "The work is moving steadily forward, and we look for bright days ahead for the church in Australia. May the Lord either send or raise up more laborers for the harvest of souls in this land."

R. C. Russell writes from Dundalk, Ontario, April 8: "I am now laboring in the vicinity of Dundalk, my former home, where I have delivered a series of sermons. The town paper commented favorably upon the meetings, and gave space for a lengthy article setting forth the leading facts concerning our church history and the articles of faith. Many friends were made for the cause and much prejudice removed. This has been one of Canada's most prejudiced towns."

 EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the Gray's Harbor Gazette, of Hoquiam, Washington, March 20, Alma A. Upton, in an article entitled "A Protest," appears in defense of the work.

We have received a copy of a tract from the Australasian Mission, entitled "Valid Christian Baptism," by W. J. Haworth. It is marked "The Gospel Standard Library, No. 1."

It may be true that charity begins at home; but how? Is it to be understood that our own needs, wants, and requirements are to be first met and satisfied out of the store of the things of this world and then we may see the necessities of others, and not till then? Or is it that in examining ourselves in regard to the moral and spiritual things of our world, our charity must first be exercised toward our own follies and vices setting aside our condemnation of them because we are guilty and need self-charity? If so, when are we justified in condemning our neighbor for the same follies and vices? Is there one rule for the exercise of charity to oneself and another in regard to the exercise of the same virtue towards others?

John Baldwin writes from Gregville, Alabama, that the branch at Flat Rock seems to be progressing fairly well considering the work which has been done by the missionaries, though the members feel that they have been neglected to some extent. He says

Bro. Roberts did a good work there, and the Saints all desire him to come back. The officers of the branch are doing what they can to forward the work, and they have been assisted some by the officers of some of the neighboring branches.

Bro. John Riley writes from Salt Lake City that he is now living with his sister and family, who are members of the Utah church. He writes that they are very good to him, and he appreciates it, as he had about made up his mind to go to the soldiers' home. He and his wife are very contented now, and seem to be firm in their belief in the Reorganization. He feels keenly the differences between the two churches.

F. C. Smith writes from Owendale, Michigan, that he has been baptizing some of late, and that there is quite an interest awakened there, and expects there will be still others to obey. He baptized two on March 30 at Bay Port, and on April 6 two more at Grant. One was Daniel Abba, who has been opposed to the work for some time.

On Monday there was a very noticeable falling off in attendance at the business session, as also at the preaching services. Many of the conference visitors left Saturday night, and many more Monday morning. Very much important business remained before the conference after Monday, and those delegates who went home then will of course have nothing to say about what is done. Delegates sent to represent districts and branches at the General Conference should remain at their posts till the work is done for which they were sent.

So far the work of the conference has been moving along slowly. However, the matter concerning the Bishop's books, which has consumed so much time in the conferences for a few years past, has been settled, we hope for ever, and hence there is prospect that the business of the conference will be disposed of with dispatch. At the session on Monday, in determining the place of next meeting two hours were consumed in deciding to meet in Independence. So close was the contest between Independence and Kirtland that some seemed to think it necessary to have a delegate vote, and hence called for the yeas and nays. That is what took so much time.

A resolution prevailed at the Monday's session that hereafter none of the time allotted to the sessions of General Conference would be given up to receptions, recitals, entertainments, etc. This resolution was probably brought out by the unusually large number of requests for evenings at this conference to give programs, etc. We trust, however, that we shall not go to the other extreme, and keep out everything other than business, prayer, and preaching services, etc.

General Conference.

SPEECHES AT OPENING SESSION OF CONFERENCE.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

In taking charge of this session of conference, the 49th, I believe, of the Reorganized Church, I am reminded that we have achieved quite a victory in one sense of the word, over the surrounding elements of unfortunate discord and discontent that had followed the defection from the faith before the Reorganization was a fact.

But the overcoming of one class of difficulties has apparently given rise for another, so that I apprehend that our pathway is not altogether free yet from that that will cause trial and engage every effort that we may possibly bring to bear in behalf of the work that is dear to us all.

In taking charge of this service with my associate, I do so with this express understanding, acknowledging it to myself and believing it to be true of every other member of this assembly, and that is, while claiming to love the work, to be desirous of working for its establishment, I grant unto every other member of the assembly, whether he be an official of the church and therefore an ex-officio member of the assembly, or whether he be an accredited delegate from the smallest branch in the church, the same love. And therefore, in the effort to preserve order, and to conserve the business interests of the church represented here, as well as its spiritual concerns, I shall strive to treat every man, every officer, and every delegate in the spirit of this understanding, and I apprehend that we can reach no just conclusions, reach no perfected unity upon any other principle. For me to claim that I love the work supremely, that my brother upon the right or upon the left does not have the same regard for the work that I have, it seems to me would be a grave mistake upon my part. Nor do I think it needful that I shall from time to time remind the assembly that I do love the work, that I do desire its advancement and progress. I shall take it for granted that you all accept that thought in reference to me. If at any time that should occur that should bring to light the thought that I did not love the work, was not desirous of its improvement or advancement, then I should expect a possible reprimand from the body.

I apprehend that in the services that shall be held here from time to time, in what we may call the spiritual side of our meeting, the spirit of faithful regard for the proprieties will be with every one. It has been hitherto, it must be hereafter; and in the business concerns, or in that side of the assembly that is more directly connected with our official recognition of the necessity for the transaction of business, we must, I think, observe that true spirit of courtesy that will accredit to every man the highest and best exercise of his liberty, his personal liberty commensurate with the dignity of the body. No man has a right to assume that he is the larger part of the assembly, the most important part of the assembly; for we are here together as integral portions of the great body, and I apprehend in the sight of God we are all requisite to the existence of the body; and no matter what may be the possibility of the man, he that unhesitatingly conserves the interest of the church will be counted worthy.

I hope, then, that in the transaction of business we will feel not that there are barriers between us and our brethren, not that there is any mist of difference that piles itself up between us that we can not see eye to eye; but that we may thoroughly, faithfully comprehend each other in the spirit of kindness, meekness, and true merit in the work. I think this can be done without abridging the right of personality, without lessening the degree of personal dignity and reliability. I think it can be done. We ought to try to serve this great work in that spirit.

JAMES CAFFALL.

Mr. Chairman, Brethren and Sisters in Conference Assembled: As I read, one of the reasons assigned for qualifying Joseph Smith to usher in the dispensation of the fullness of times, was or is, that man should not counsel his fellow man, but that every one should have the right to speak in the name of the Lord. Then in addition to the foregoing I read a passage which gives me to understand that man should not trust in that or make flesh his arm, but that his confidence should be centered in the Lord. One and the chief reason for my willingness to accept the gospel, known in the revelations of God as the everlasting gospel, which gives me a basis for the belief that that everlasting gospel is the standard of righteousness, was a conviction as to the reality of that everlasting gospel. For the fact occurred to my mind that inasmuch as this gospel was called the everlasting gospel, it was therefore a product of the infinite mind. And with the conviction as to the reality of this everlasting gospel there came to me an assurance of its imperativeness. And this part of the everlasting gospel or this fact suggested to my mind, the necessity of entering into this gospel or accepting the gospel, suggested the necessity of a continuance therein. And coupled with this reflection there came to my mind another thought, for I find that Christ was given as a teacher, as a witness, as a commander, was authorized through the presentation of this gospel to make an everlasting covenant with the people. It therefore occurred to my mind in my reflection on this very momentous question, in which I considered my salvation was involved, that where this everlasting gospel was received, the everlasting covenant abounded, for this teacher and commander was authorized to make an everlasting covenant with the people; hence my willingness to accept the everlasting gospel brought me within the bonds of that everlasting covenant. And I knew no other way of a practical demonstration of my loyalty to God but by keeping inviolate the conditions of that everlasting covenant, and this opened to my mind a wide field of thought. And in opening and reading the Bible, the prophetic parts thereof, I found the Prophet Isaiah looking down the dark vista of unborn time, saw a period in the history of the world when this everlasting covenant that God had made with the people, previous to the introduction of the latter-day work, was broken, and hence he said, "The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant. And so far as my very limited capacity would qualify in the light radiating from these prophetic declarations, I looked upon the world and seemingly saw the effects of a violation of that everlasting covenant. And yet, in the further contemplation of this momentous question, the theme confronted me in my research, in my studies, though limited they were, and it was this: How was it possible that man could break something that was everlasting? The language is plain and positive, adapted to the capacity of an ordinary mind, even the mind of your speaker, that a people had transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant. And upon a further study on this line it occurred to my mind that those who had accepted this everlasting gospel, their obedience to the requirements of that gospel was tantamount to entering into a covenant with God. Whatever covenant of God in which the salvation of the world is involved is everlasting. By virtue, therefore, of their obedience they were brought within the bond of that everlasting covenant, and a failure on their part subsequent to their entering into this everlasting covenant to practically demonstrate their loyalty to God would be an evidence of their having broken this covenant on their part. That is to say, would demonstrate or prove a failure in their continuance within the bond of this everlasting covenant; and their spiritual welfare and final redemption being evolved in demonstrating a reality as being due to this everlasting covenant, or a condition of the gospel by which they were brought within the bond of this everlasting covenant would bring a great provision to them of the spiritual life, and the redemption they would enjoy if they kept this everlasting covenant individually. And by the way, I can not imagine there was any other gospel outside of the everlasting gospel, for the term everlasting when applied to God; as one of my predecessors in the divine life, in speaking of God said, "He is from everlasting to everlasting." We may conclude that God is without beginning of days or end of years. And the gospel being a product of the infinite mind it becomes an infinite method; and it were no more inconsistent to look for two infinite beings in antagonism than to look for two infinite methods of religion in antagonism, as to which of the two were the more popular, requiring much disputation. And in view of these solemn truths I think I assumed a grave responsibility in entering into the bond of this everlasting covenant. I will not attempt to say how far my course of procedure has demonstrated the fact to the minds of others, as to my conception of the grave responsibility I have assumed; but I have appreciated the liberty, I think, which is guaranteed to those accepting this everlasting gospel as their polar star through life. I appreciate the liberty that is guaranteed to the citizens of the kingdom of God, made so through their obedience to this everlasting gospel, the only method of salvation.

One of our predecessors in the divine life who seemingly delighted to contemplate and to introduce and talk of the liberty of the gospel, informed the Saints at Galatia that they had been called unto liberty. But Paul does not stop there. After telling them that they had been called unto liberty he said: "Only use not that liberty as an occasion to the flesh." And in view of these revealed facts I understood in my willingness to accept the gospel that there was a necessity on my part for a subjugation. Furthermore, the necessity of this subjugation was not only revealed at the inception into the kingdom, but when settled and grounded and established in the truth as in Christ, the fact began to dawn to my astonished vision as to the necessity of my continuous subjugation of the flesh to the will of God, from the inception to the termination of my earthly career as a member of the church and the kingdom of God.

And in that chapter, Galatians 5, this predecessor in the divine life, Paul, makes a clear distinction between the works of the flesh and the fruits of the Spirit; and hence my work of subjugation consists in a continuance to subjugate the flesh, for in telling us of the results of the flesh, he also refers to the consequences that ensue to those who fail to subjugate the flesh and to be governed by the Spirit, and it is fearful to contemplate. And then we are advised not to deceive ourselves; and the reason for this I think to be a very cogent one, "For God is not mocked; for what a man soweth that shall he also reap. If he sow to the flesh, of the flesh he shall reap corruption: if to the spirit, to the spirit he shall reap life everlasting." So in entering into this divine life I was confronted with probabilities and possibilities.

And as time passed along and the light that began to burn upon the altar of my heart became more radiant, the probability of a failure to carry on the work of subjugation loomed up before my mind, and frequently gave me very serious thoughts, and I have when thinking upon this very vital question and the probabilities and possibilities presented to me in my struggles, that should I be so unfortunate as to sow to the flesh and thereby get inveigled in the meshes of demoralization and sin and end my career in that condition, I would prefer being with the damned, cast out, in preference to attempting to aspire to the righteous who had sowed to the spirit and were reaping the blessed effects of everlasting life. I fully believe in the reward and punishment that are set forth in the economy of God, and I fully believe, too, that I am very largely, if not altogether what I desire to be, and I have never learned that God has proposed to coerce me, and therefore that is evidence or reason why I should not coerce other individuals, but with the poet say,

"Know, then, that every soul is free,
To choose his life and what he'll be;
For this eternal truth is given,
That God will force no man to heaven.
He'll call, persuade, direct him right,
Bless him with wisdom, love and light;
In nameless ways be good and kind;
But never force the human mind."

But not wishing to distress you by a protracted discourse, I want to say to you, the church, as a representative of the work, I have ever had an ardent desire in the prosecution of that work so far as I was authorized to prosecute. I have ever cherished the desire to keep abreast with my collaborators. But I have to concede to your honorable body to-day, that for the past two years, not willingly, I have found myself in the rear, which has not been pleasant to me; for however my course of my procedure may have failed to demonstrate the fact, I have believed in spiritual activity. I have believed that the success of this work depends largely upon the spiritual activity of the several integral parts of the church. And I believe that every member of the body has a sphere in which to move, and that there are duties and responsibilities attaching to these several spheres, and that it is my duty to understand all these prerogatives and duties attaching to an accepted position making me a representative of the church and kingdom of God. And I believe that the individual who renders himself by dint of perseverance and study and fighting against the forces of the flesh—he that becomes by this course the most proficient in duties touching to his accepted position, is the one who is the most competent to care for the rights and privileges of other individuals.

I can make no promise to this body of doing more than I have done in the two past years. Possibly in the coming year I may get still farther in the rear; and if these considerations shall make me unworthy to continue as a representative of the church, I shall submit to the decree, whatever it may be.

I thank you for your attention.

JOHN H. LAKE.

Brethren, Sisters, Friends, and Fellow Travelers to the Great Eternity: I appear before you at this time. In what sense am I requested to appear before you, who am I to represent? Self? You individually or collectively? Or to represent Jesus Christ? Paul on one occasion said to the church, "We as ambassadors in Christ's stead, pray you be reconciled to God."

I am pleased to say to you that since June, 1863, I have been a representative of Jesus Christ and his perfect laws, originating with the Father, transmitted to him by his love and sacrifice, sealed it as the mission and power of God unto the redemption of the race. From that day until this I have been occupying positions in this church which is said to be the body of Christ and members in particular. And in that body are the authorized grades of officers to wait upon the body and to seek to promulgate the righteousness of God. How well I have succeeded it is not for me now to try to enumerate or speak of myself. I am passing down the line and will eventually have to stand before Him who will judge from the code of righteousness and the record borne.

From the first of my experience with this church until to-day I have felt under restraint of God's word and law. I have never felt any liberty to present Lake, or myself, if you will pardon the reference. I feel the restraint in the commission which Jesus placed upon his ancient servants, to be binding yet, when the covenant was renewed, the gospel restored in this age, that I had to adopt all things whatsoever He had commanded, and advise the people, or instruct the people to observe or comply with the conditions thereof. I have tried to take them and bring them up to the standard that has been considered right and established by the body. I do not speak of it egotistically, I do not speak of it boastfully, I speak of it with a heart throbbing with thankfulness, that I have succeeded in doing as well as I have in this respect, that I have never been a burden to the church in the sense that they have had to follow my tracks, in the sense of reproof or correction in doctrine or practice. I was never called into question virtually but once by this body: I was willing to submit then. The matter was examined and I was exonerated, and I speak of it not to boast over anybody, nor in any egotistical way to say that I am better than others; but I felt in my first relationship with God that I would seek to have his guiding hand, his Spirit to direct me and protect me, and I know that he has kept me so far and I feel to trust him yet in the hereafter, the balance of my time.

The words this morning by our worthy president speaking about loving this work, I felt to receive in a sense of a degree of instruction. Going back to the Master, the teacher come from God, he comprehended this thought: "If you love me you will keep my commandments," and let that tell whether you love me or not, you see, is implied. I felt when the word was introduced to examine myself. Yes, I have told the brethren a number of times that I loved this latter-day work, and if I said I loved this latter-day work and in my daily movements and actions was contradicting that, what would the testimony be worth? Another expression used frequently, perhaps I have used it myself, but you know experience is a wonderful teacher, and lessons learned by it are sometimes lasting, or should be; I have said, "I am in the faith." How am I to prove that to you? Why, James comes as my instructor and says, "Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." If my works prove to the Saints and to God that I am in the faith I need not tell them that I am in the faith, my works show it.

I can not speak as many of the brethren who were connected with the old church and learned lessons from their experiences there that were lasting and profitable to them. I had no experience in that church. What I have learned I have learned in the Reorganized Church, although I have profited and learned from those fathers in the old church, some of their experiences appealing to me as profitable. But in the forty-one years of my experience in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints I have seen this church grow from quite a small child, as it were, until we are getting now to be quite a man. I think I have lived to see what the prophets said should be acknowledged by God's people. I think I have lived to see the time when the church has come to a certain degree of fulfillment of that acknowledgment, "They shall have praise and a name wherein they have been put to shame." I think I have lived to see that not entirely fulfilled, but we are merging into it and acknowledging it.

Now there is so much to be said of this great latter-day work, and my heart burns with cheerfulness and gladness this morning that I am in relationship with it and the great work of the latter days. I will not detain you, but I want to say one thing in conclusion, and if I am never called upon again to stand before you and speak of Christ as his ambassador, please remember this. Before I say it, I wish to preface it with this, though I have said it once and say it again, that experience is a wonderful teacher, one of my earliest experiences was hearing old people talk, and as a child I liked to listen to them, and I have been impressed with this thought, that it is very difficult for the human family to endure prosperity and keep level-headed. When they were in reduced circumstances they were generally very social and pleasant, but as soon as they began to prosper they got heady and began to classify, and it was a dangerous condition for them to occupy. Jesus taught against that in his time, and we could enumerate numbers of other instances of instruction against pride.

I think in my forty-one years' experience in this church, seeing it pass through its varied experience, and seeing the growth, prosperity, and development, I can see this danger. We begin to think we are almost a man, and can stand alone now, and begin to classify, and think that there are certain classes a little wiser and smarter than the others, and we might discriminate and mark out a good many lines where there is danger, if we would, but I advise you as your brother and an ambassador for Christ, to be very careful in this respect. Your success lieth in humility. Let your minds be exercised in the three books that God has given to men here, and see if you can find where he ever reproveth his people for being too humble. If there was ever one instance I never heard of it, but I can find many instances where God has reproveth his people for highheadedness, pride, etc.

The Book of Mormon relating the experiences of the Nephites should be a lesson to us. As soon as God prospered them they began to get lifted up and haughty, and pride took possession of them, and God had to allow the Lamanites or some other hostile power in to bring them down to a proper spirit. God is never offended with his people because they are rich; riches are good things in their place, and when his people are wise he is not offended because they are, for his servant has said, "In all your gettings get wisdom." He is not offended because we have riches and wisdom, but it is in the use that we make of them that the offense comes in. "How hardly shall a rich man enter the kingdom, and he that exalteth himself shall be abased, but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

I thank you for this liberty and your kindness through the President in inviting me to stand before you. For me to say that I love you as God's people, I will keep that back,—just demonstrate it in trying to be what I ought to be and let that prove to you whether I love you or not. I hope you will remember me the balance of my days.

When my brother said Bro. John is the second oldest man in the Twelve, I felt a little surprised.

President Smith interrupting said, "Well, you are, are you not?"

Yes, I presume I am; but I wonder where the years have gone.

"My life as a dream, my time as a stream,
Glides swiftly away,
And the fugitive moment refuses to stay."

I am going down the stream, and when the messenger says, "Come over the river," I hope to be ready to go, and I do not think I shall forget you when I get on the other shore.

I hope to carry a good message, and tell them that the work is doing well and God is with you.

E. C. BRIGGS.

I am glad to meet with you this morning and make this statement, that I am no less interested in the work which we are engaged in than I have been, since 1842. I have not lost sight of, neither have I been out of it in my interest since then.

When I speak of the Reorganization I simply speak of it as the renewal of the work that had its introduction in organization in 1830. The Reorganization was simply an effort on the part of those who loved God, who obeyed his commandments, and who were grieved in what is termed the cloudy, dark day that came upon the latter-day work. I had the privilege of attending its first conference, June 12 and 13, 1852. There is one other brother here that was there then, a little child sitting in a chair, Bro. H. A. Stebbins, the only two here that were members of that assembly. And I wish to correct one idea that people sometimes get from my remarks: I was not a member of the church in 1842, but had become greatly interested in it. A little before, I saw the church in its zenith of glory, saw it gather to its fold its thousands every month, I might say every week, but they hastily came into the fold without experience, and without extended, thorough investigation, perhaps: and when the scene changed and the clouds came thick and fast from every quarter, these inexperienced children were darkened in their minds. But through the providence of Almighty God, I saw the change come over the body of the church, and was apprised of the fact, that early day in '44, that it would be again restored. I have never been of the opinion nor sympathized with the idea that God has not poured or will not pour out his Holy Spirit and give answer to prayer to whom he will, anywhere and everywhere upon the face of God's foot-stool, and that during that time after the disorganization, which affected the body as a body, that it did not affect the individual who in his integrity, purity, virtue, and love was owned of God.

In 1852 I united with this church; that is, I was baptized. Prior to that time I was as interested in the triumph of this work as I have ever been since, and I believe that I had the right by virtue of the command of God to me to be led by the Holy Spirit during all that time; and when any one now says to you that I am an apostate or ever have been, he is wrong, for I never united with any church until I united with the Reorganization of the church.

I did not unite with you because I thought it was a brand new thing so far as the government of God is concerned, but because I considered it a renewal of the work that was established by the command of God in 1830. From the time I joined to the present I have been a representative of the work, ordained within two minutes, I will say five minutes at the outside, after having been confirmed in the church. And I have never held the idea that there need be so long preparation to call a man into the church in any of its relationships so far as being a servant of Jesus Christ is concerned. Neither have I believed that it is the duty, that it is the right, or that it is in the power of a single man to ordain his fellow man. And to illustrate that idea, I will introduce a little incident. A brother, well intended no doubt, said to me on one occasion, "When are you going to ordain me?" I told him I did not know. He said, "Why can you not do it now? You are an elder, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"An elder can ordain another, can he not?"

I answered him, "Yes, sir; no, sir," and then I made this statement. "It is represented that they who are ordained should be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto them, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, that is in the one who ordains them. No, sir, I do not know your calling. I have not enough of the Holy Spirit to designate by virtue of the manifestation to me that you are so called; and if I have not enough of the Spirit to do that I have not enough to ordain you."

"But," he said, "I had rather preach than eat."

"Yes, sir, that may be, too; but I have no manifestation to indicate to me what your calling is."

Then he said, "What shall I do?"

"I do not know. I can only give you this suggestion, call upon the Lord who directs, and if he does not give you light, call upon the president of the church and let him answer by direct revelation from God."

I believe the Lord should superintend this work in its official establishment from the lowest to the highest officer in the church, that by virtue of such direction there may be no mistake.

The question has been argued from the first conference of the Reorganization in regard to rebaptism. That question was answered at that conference and has been repeatedly answered again and again, that baptisms administered in this church are legal when a convert has shown by his work, by his conversion, that he has received the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of his sins and should be baptized; and in case he continued in his integrity in this great work he was still a member of the church all along, though having united with some of these factions that have broken off from the body of Christ, it does not necessarily take away his membership if under the conditions that he had united with any of these different organizations that have broken off from the church, he entered into it with the integrity of heart supposing it was the carrying on of what he had embraced, it did not forfeit his membership. A few of the members of the church having received light and revelation and angelic ministrations, simply called together these scattered members and effected the reorganization of the church, those who were members and had been members and received baptism in the old organization, not in any of these factions, they were not the old organization. Therefore when they entered into the Reorganization they were called upon again to revive their faith and diligence in the work that they first embraced.

With that view I united with this work, and I have been alive to its interests from first to last; and when a man has called me an apostate because I united with this church, just say he was mistaken, for I never united with anything but the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. If a man or woman is not satisfied with their condition and wished to be baptized, I have always advocated that it was their privilege to have this request granted and be rebaptized on two grounds, which I will present, and illustrate by a little incident:

I was once in a meeting, and the Spirit of the Lord seemed to rest upon a member, and yet under the influence of the Spirit the party could not speak. One of the brethren rose up, laid his hand on that party and confirmed that member into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and immediately after such confirmation and saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," the Spirit rested upon that individual and immediately spoke in the spirit of prophecy. In the language of the Master who says, "I do nothing of myself: as I receive the commandments of the Father so I do." Suppose the individual that confirmed that member had not been in possession of the Holy Spirit when he did so. Could he confer or give that to a member that he did not have himself? In like manner suppose an ordination is not under the power of the Holy Spirit. Could the one who ordained confer upon the person being ordained that which he did not have? For this reason, here and there we find members who are not satisfied with their former baptism or confirmation, hence I have always been willing to leave it with them, when the Spirit seemed to lead them not to be satisfied with their former baptism, on that ground and that only they should be rebaptized.

With that view we stand committed with the work of the angel who came with the gospel of the Son of God, and no one can administer it unless endowed by the power by which it was first committed. In harmony with the divine light, Jesus Christ did nothing of himself. He always said, "It is not of myself but him that sent me." So it is with every individual that works for the foundation of this gospel which can only be continued under the power and influence of the Spirit of God, in the language of the revelation which says, "If it is of another spirit then is it not of God, neither are we taught of God, neither can we teach it unless it is by the Spirit of God," in harmony with the divine law.

I am alive to the interests of this work in which we are engaged as much so as I ever was in all my life, and without a feeling of hardness toward my fellow men. I never have had for more than forty years a feeling of hardness for any of my brethren. I will relate a little incident: An individual came to me in the year of 1865 and made a statement that was intended to injure me, and I said in my heart, I will have revenge. Now I do not know whether it was an audible voice or not, no one else heard it anyway, but it spoke to me, and to my sense it was the same as an audible voice; it said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord," and from that glad hour until the present I have never held a moment of hardness towards any of my fellow men. I leave feelings of that kind in the hands of God who says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." With that understanding I am alive to the great latter-day work established by the command of God; and with a full knowledge of the fact that God holds the lines in his own hand, and though there have been clouds over the church, not only in our day but in those days that have preceded ours, the Lord has promised to the Reorganization that it shall not be overthrown, shall not be rejected again of God, but that it shall be onward and onward in its progress until the pure in heart shall be prepared for the coming of the Lord and our Master. Do not forget this, dear brethren, the Lord has promised in the incipency of the Reorganization that he would hold the reins in his own hands, he would protect it from falling again, for it is the renewal of that work that was promised to be the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, and shall roll and roll on until it shall fill the earth and Abraham's children are gathered into the covenant of God in faith and in spirit. I hope you will all feel that, and realize that he would stand by his work that is now established under the presidency of the church.

May God bless you, brethren and sisters. I have got this work grounded in my heart, my whole soul and being; it is my meat and my drink; and like those in ancient times who have had adversity to pass through, I have been made to drink of the bitter cup.

I do not forget these wonderful evidences, when the Saints of God met in days of yore and God was there to bless them. Bless the Lord, O my soul! But the adversary was there also. I am glad that when the great I Am and Satan entered into conversation they did not hold each other off, so that communion was not had between them on that august occasion. When the Lord said unto Satan, "Whence comest thou?" Satan answered, "From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it."

And the Lord said unto Satan, "Hast thou considered my servant Job? There is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?"

Now I do not think the Lord asked that question because he did not know where Satan had been, or what his business was, but it is left as Scripture, in the language of another who said, "All Scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable, for . . . instructions in righteousness." And another Scripture tells us what the business of Satan is when he is roaming about in the earth, as a "roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour."

Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, "Doth Job fear God for naught? Hast not thou made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all he hath on every side? Thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face. And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand."

And upon the second assembling of the Saints in those ancient days God and Satan both met with them, and the Lord again introduced the conversation with his Satanic Majesty by referring to Job and saying, "And still he holdeth fast his integrity, although thou movest me against him, to destroy him without cause."

I used to be sorry for that, that the Lord would give such a good man into the hands of Satan. The result was that he was robbed and plundered, his servants were slain, and his children; oh, such a loving family! No one ever saw the like. They had a birthday party. It is presumed each in his turn, beginning with the eldest brother, and the three sisters, were always invited to meet on such social occasions. And they were all slain, and this good man, this just man, still loved God, bless his heart! Satan talked with God the second time, and said, "Skin for skin . . . all that a man hath will he give for his life, a man will give up everything for his life." And the Lord said, "He is in thy hands, do as you will, but spare his life." And now he was left to suffer in Satan's hands, and all his friends turned against him, and we find that this man was afterwards referred to by the Apostle James, Jesus the Christ, and others as a man who is supposed to be one of the grandest men that lived on the earth.

It is a nice thing to read these things and bring them home. Do not forget these lessons, they mean something. I thank God for his great work, which I love, also for his graciousness and mercies, and you for your kindness to me. Amen.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8.

The usual prayer-meeting was held at 9:30.

Preaching at 10:45 by E. H. Durand, assisted by A. Badham.

The afternoon session was opened by prayer by J. R. Lambert. After reading of minutes, Heman C. Smith rose to a question of privilege and made some remarks concerning the report of Bishop Kelley. E. L. Kelley then made some remarks concerning his report and the statements made by Bro. Smith. President Smith also spoke some concerning the matter, as also did William Anderson of the committee.

A motion was made that we accept the report of the auditor and adopt the recommendation made by the committee, which was in effect that an inventory of church property be made, and a balance be taken showing amount on hand, and that future accounts be based on this inventory and balance.

This was followed by a motion to defer action on this matter till after hearing from the present auditing committee. This motion prevailed.

The committee on credentials made additional report. The Presidency made report on the matter referred to them concerning the boundary line between the Rocky Mountain and Colorado Missions. The Presidency recommended that the division asked for be made. The report was adopted.

The First Presidency also presented a paper touching the matter of incorporating the church in Canada, which was referred to a committee composed of E. L. Kelley, William Anderson, and R. C. Evans.

Preamble and resolutions were presented asking that there be established in Graceland College a correspondence course for the benefit of the ministry. Some discussion ensued when it was decided to defer action till after the report of the Graceland College board of trustees.

A letter from Rev. John Allender to E. L. Kelley was read.

By motion a committee of three was appointed to draft resolutions of respect and condolence at the death of Morris T. Short, who died April 8, at 8:30 a. m., at his home in Independence. J. W. Wight, Columbus Scott, and R. May were so appointed.

Report from First Quorum of Elders was read in which they asked for the ordinations of the officers they had chosen.

The roll of ex officio officers was then read, and responded to by those present.

The recommendation made by the Church Secretary that a committee be appointed to take up the matter of railroad clergy permits with the eastern roads was taken up, and by motion the standing committee on railroad credentials was empowered to appoint sub-committee as it sees fit.

A number of ordinations were asked for, and by motion they were referred to the Quorum of Twelve. The following ordinations then took place: T. A. Hougas, president of the First Quorum of Elders; H. N. Snively, first counselor; A. Badham, second counselor; L. G. Gurwell, elder; B. M. Anderson, priest.

In the evening James Caffall was the speaker, being assisted by F. A. Smith.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9.

Wednesday morning the prayer-meeting was in charge of John T. Davis and George Hawley.

At 10: 45, preaching by J. W. Rushton, of Scotland, assisted by F. J. Ebeling.

At the opening of the two o'clock session prayer was offered by J. W. Wight.

After reading of minutes, the report of the Church Historian was read, which was lengthy and comprehensive.

The committee appointed at last conference to audit the books of the Bishop reported that the books of the office were found to be in good shape. It also reported that the office quarters of the Bishop were not adequate to the work which was being done there, and recommended that larger and better quarters be furnished. Attached to the report of the committee was the report of Bishop Kelley to the conference.

The special order for the day was taken up, and the rest of the afternoon was spent in passing upon the proposed amendments to the Book of Rules which were before the last conference. With some changes the amendments proposed were passed.

In the evening the preaching was by Peter Anderson, assisted by C. E. Butterworth.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10.

The morning prayer service was in charge of J. M. Terry and A. Carmichael.

At 10: 45 F. C. Keck was the speaker, assisted by E. B. Morgan.

At two p. m. the opening prayer was by Peter Anderson. After reading of minutes the committee on credentials made additional report, which was adopted.

A motion was made and carried that the amendments to the Book of Rules which were acted upon by paragraphs yesterday be adopted as a whole. This prevailed.

The resolution found on page 419 of last published conference minutes was by motion taken up. This was a proposition to amend the Book of Rules as to the previous question being moved. After some discussion the resolution was adopted by a small majority. The adoption of this makes a two-thirds vote necessary to order the previous question.

The report of the board of trustees of Graceland College was read. In it they requested that an evening be granted them in which to present the college matter to those in attendance at the conference. This request was granted.

A resolution of the trustees was read in which they expressed the opinion that all money received for the college or the college debt should pass through the hands of the treasurer of the board. Action on this matter was deferred until after hearing the report of the Bishop on the matter of paying the college debt.

As at a previous session action on the question of adopting the report of the committee on auditor had been deferred until after the report of the auditing committee had been received, and as that report had been read, this matter was taken up. A substitute was offered for the motion to adopt the recommendation of the committee on auditor which substitute was in effect that we adopt the report of the present auditing committee as final, and that Bishop Kelley be thereby vindicated. The discussion on this and the rereading of the reports concerned consumed the remainder of the afternoon session, and about five o'clock by motion further action was deferred until next day.

Just before closing, Joseph Smith said he felt impressed to make the following remarks:

"One of the peculiar frailties of the Latter Day Saint elders is the disposition to resent. We have not yet learned one of the principal foundation principles upon which the Savior acted, and that is, 'Resist not evil.' But if a man strikes at me by word or by hand I immediately not only defend myself but I resent it. I think for the peace of the conference and for the reaching of proper conclusions, we must forego that disposition in ourselves to resent or retort, and not get so excited in our zeal in the discussion of any question that we give voice to anything that may be counted an indignity or covert fling. We too frequently do it. I confess my own failure in this respect, and I am trying to mend; but I began kind of late in life, but I hope to live to my second childhood and maybe I shall learn something then. I want you to bear this in mind, that in the discussion of things that are vexing we may grow vehement and say things that in our cooler moments we would not do. I do not know how it is with you, but I know I have been kept awake half the night over a speech in which I have said things that I should not have said, especially that part which might possibly refer to a reflection."

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

In the evening the services in the auditorium consisted of a lecture by Heman C. Smith in the interests of Daughters of Zion work, and this was followed by a reception in the lower room of the church given by the Daughters of Zion.

FRIDAY.

The morning prayer services were in charge of H. A. Stebbins and C. P. Faul.

At the morning preaching services Joseph Smith was the speaker.

At the afternoon session the opening prayer was by G. T. Griffiths. A report from the joint assembly of the First and Second Quorums of Seventy was read in which they asked for the ordination of R. H. Wight as one of the seven presidents of seventy, and the ordination of Columbus Scott as the senior president, to succeed Duncan Campbell, who had been ordained a high priest.

A report from the First Quorum of Seventy was read asking for ordination of James McKiernan as president of the quorum.

A report from the Fifth Quorum of Elders was presented. In it the quorum asked for the ordination of F. M. Smith as president, and James Allen second counselor, the first counselor, T. J. Bell, having been chosen.

The subject matter which was pending at Thursday's session when adjournment was had was taken up, and the remainder of the session was consumed in the discussion which followed. An attempt to have a time limit placed on speeches was defeated.

Graceland College was permitted use of auditorium for Saturday evening.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

The evening services were given over to the college trustees for presenting the work of the college. Prayer was offered by Adam J. Keck; and R. M. Elvin, H. S. Salisbury, and F. M. Smith addressed the assembly in short speeches.

SATURDAY.

The morning prayer service was in charge of M. M. Turpen and Alex. McCallum.

At the morning preaching service the speaker was U. W. Greene, assisted by C. P. Faul.

At the afternoon session the opening prayer was offered by I. N. White.

Before business was taken up, Joseph Luff read a telegram from Independence telling that J. A. Robinson passed away about noon. A committee of three was appointed to draft suitable resolutions of respect and condolence. Joseph Luff, F. G. Pitt, and James McKiernan were so appointed.

Reports were read from the Second Quorum of Seventy, the First Quorum of Seventy, and the Second Quorum of Teachers.

Report of the Board of Publication was presented, as was also the report of the auditing committee on HERALD Office books.

Reports were also read from Second Quorum of Priests, and the Fourth Quorum of Deacons.

The matter deferred from day previous was then taken up, and by request of President Smith he was released from the chair while this matter was pending.

F. G. Pitt was called to take the chair. Joseph R. Lambert made request that he be permitted to drop the preambles from the resolution which he presented. No action was taken on his request.

An amendment was offered to the substitute, to strike out all after the word resolved, and insert resolution to the effect that a committee of three be appointed, of which D. J. Krahl be one, to make such corrections on the books as may be necessary, and the balances presented prior to the present auditing committee be corrected, and the present balances be corrected accordingly, and that this action be considered final.

A motion to commit to a body of five chosen by the conference to formulate resolutions and report to the conference, was lost.

The previous question was ordered, and the matter was put to vote, resulting in the defeat of the amendment to the substitute, and the adoption of the substitute.

A motion to provide for the ordinations requested by various quorums was deferred till Monday.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

The evening exercises were in charge of the college authorities, a program being rendered.

SUNDAY.

The Lamoni Sunday-school held its regular session.

At eleven o'clock H. C. Smith was the speaker in the auditorium, assisted by M. H. Bond. At the same hour Gomer T. Griffiths lectured in the basement on the subject of the priesthood, using his chart. He was assisted by H. O. Smith.

In the afternoon preaching services were held in both rooms. In the auditorium the speaker was Adam J. Keck, being assisted by T. W. Chatburn. In the basement A. B. Phillips was the speaker, assisted by J. T. Riley.

In the evening both rooms were occupied again, Joseph Smith being the speaker in the auditorium, assisted by John H. Lake.

In the basement G. T. Griffiths continued his lecture, being assisted by F. G. Pitt.

MONDAY.

The morning prayer service was in charge of J. M. Baker and J. W. Waldsmith.

At 10:45 W. W. Smith was the speaker, and J. B. Wildermuth assisted.

Business resumed at two o'clock. Prayer by C. A. Beebe. Resolutions presented were adopted on the deaths of M. T. Short and J. A. Robinson.

Historian's choice of assistant for past year was ratified.

Bishopric reported $17,669.58 subscribed on college debt; $9,425.29 paid on debt. Total to raise $7,834.69.

By request from Seventies, archæology committee's report was ordered published in size of former report.

An effort to decide place of next conference led to the yea and nay vote being called, which resulted in selection of Independence.

REMISSION OF SINS.

The promise of the remission of sins is scriptural, and based upon conditions equally scriptural. The conditions upon which the Infinite One has provided this promise are man's necessity, and God's opportunity to manifest his love and mercy.

No remission can be received except in accord with the provisions God has made. One of the revealed provisions is, "Without shedding of blood is no remission" (Hebrews 9: 22); and the other is "his righteousness" (Romans 3: 25), and no remission can be acceptably preached except these conditions are had in mind, and authority to so declare is given by him whose right it is to remit sins, which is conclusively evidenced by the interrogative argument of the Apostle Paul, "How shall they preach, except they be sent?"—Romans 10: 15.

Previous to the ascension of the resurrected Christ he gave instruction unto those who were to carry the news of this promise after his departure that "it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke 24: 46, 47. To Jerusalem we then go in our examination to learn how, under the enduement of the Holy Spirit, that was preached which was to be preached "among all nations," and to note the manner in which the preaching was done under this unerring guide, which guide must be the helper to all who are sent to preach this gracious promise, for it is "of the ability which God giveth" that man is to minister, "that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." 1 Peter 4: 11. Here we note that after Peter had defended the Spirit's manifestations against the objections then urged, he presented the crucifixion of Jesus, showing how he was not holden of death, but in fulfillment of prophecy had been resurrected by the power of God, of which they were witnesses, and that he, "having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost" had "shed forth" that which they saw and heard. See Acts 2: 14-33.

Under the power of this Spirit the testimony is given that "God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ."—Acts 2: 36.

Following the inquiry of those in whose hearts faith had been begotten by this preaching as associated by the Spirit's witness, "repentance and remission of sins" was preached in the following direct and not to be mistaken manner: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38.

Thus is clearly evidenced what was understood by the Christ to be preaching repentance and remission of sins: Men sent of God, qualified by the teachings of the Master and the Spirit's anointing, who would give instruction as to how remission of sins could be obtained, and for what purpose. This was to be the manner in which the remission of sins was to be preached "among all nations," but on account of the wickedness of the people those who possessed the qualifications thus to preach were destroyed, and the authority to present that gracious promise to the people was cut off; and for centuries the people sought for and received under God's mercy forgiveness, but found not that perfect satisfaction that comes to those with whom the authority is resident to remit sins.

Christ's blood made efficient God's righteousness, and redeemed man from bondage brought upon the whole race through Adam's transgression, that he by walking in the light of God's righteousness might be cleansed from all sin. This is in agreement with the Apostle John's statement, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light . . . the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 7. Through his blood we are made free from all that attached to us by reason of the law of transmission, and the righteousness declared by God's servants if accepted by the people would cleanse them by the remission of their past sins, (Romans 3: 25,) by "the washing of water by the word." Ephesians 5: 26 and Acts 22: 16.

To Christ's ministry who was to preach repentance and remission of sins he said, "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them," but all their acts were to be governed by the law they were authorized to preach; they were not permitted to add to, or diminish aught from it, but were to teach the people to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matthew 28: 20. To attempt to remit sins or to preach the remission of sins without following this instruction would be void, and as though it had not been; hence, when the fullness of times had come God sent an angel to recommit authority to men to preach the remission of sins, and to remit the sins of those who would obey the law of remission. Of this authority the Lord said, in 1832: "And the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels, and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4), making reference to the manner in which it was restored in 1830 in the following language: "Which John I have sent unto you my servants, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received."—Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2.

Since the ordination to this authority, men have again been sent forth qualified to preach remission of sins, and the souls of men have been filled with joy in obeying this law of remission, coming into a state of acceptance with God as his children, and receiving the seal of that acceptance, by which they are made fully acquainted with the efficacy of the blood of Jesus Christ, and the authority committed to men to again preach this gracious promise.

SPIRITUAL FOOD NECESSARY.

“But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.”—Matt. 4:4.

The foregoing language was uttered by our great Lord and Master upon the occasion when Satan presented to him the following statement: “If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.” Did Christ do as suggested by the Devil? We are not informed that he did, but gave the above-mentioned reply. It appears to the writer that if it had been necessary for the Son of God to establish his Sonship by a miracle, in order to prove to Satan his divinity, that time would have been very propitious. But why did he not do it? Christ evidently recognized the fact that had he done so he would simply have surrendered, in a measure, his better judgment, to the will and desire of the Devil, through which he intended to gain power and influence over Christ, and thus gradually thwart the purpose for which he (Christ) was sent. Christ also knew that his adversary possessed the power of working miracles, hence from that standpoint it would be no evidence that he was the Christ.

But would this refusal of Christ to comply with the request of the Devil be taken as an evidence against his divinity? If not, why is it that the world is constantly demanding signs and miracles from us in order for us to prove our church to be divinely appointed? And yet this is the cry from all, Show us a sign and we will believe. We see from this narrative that the Devil was a sign-seeker and was reproved by Christ for this, and later he says to the people: “A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign.” If the Lord disapproved of it then, would he not disapprove of it now? Has he changed, or have the people changed so that it is no longer a wicked and adulterous generation that asks for signs?

Christ on this occasion gave utterance to the grandest principle ever given to mankind, the one which underlies the great scheme of salvation, and to my mind is much greater evidence of his divinity than had he performed the miracle his adversary wanted him to perform: “Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.” This language portrays to our minds that Christ understood man to be a dual being, and that a portion of that man could not be nourished, sustained, and developed by that which the physical body assimilates, and which goes to build up the outer man.

I believe it is a law in nature that all things are supported and sustained by elements of their own kind. It may in its formation undergo a change in appearance to the eyes of men, but yet is composed of the elements to which it shall afterward contribute nourishment and vitality of a similar kind. Hence nature provides, in the different grains and life-sustaining products, every essential to build up and sustain the different functions of the human body; and while these life-sustaining elements differ in appearance from that element which they are to contribute nourishment to, yet they are elements akin to each other, gathered from mother earth and the atmosphere surrounding it. For instance, if we fail to partake of such things as will strengthen and develop the bones, there is a lack of development; or if we fail to partake of the things which nature has wisely compounded for the development of the nerves and tissues of the body, these will not thrive. Hence we see a development of the outer man in its several parts, by reason of proper food supply and assimilation; but yet, with all this, without proper activity, strength and endurance could not be made possible. And this is the object for which the outer man is developed. It is evident that Christ understood this when he said that man shall not live by bread alone. Hence he spoke of that part of man which could not live by these perishable things, but must partake of its own kind.

There is no demand but what there is also a supply; and what is true in reference to the development and growth of our outward tabernacle is true of the spirit which dwells therein; and, as it is not earthy it can not be nourished by earthly things and attain to that degree of intelligence that its creator has destined it should attain to. Therefore God has provided that this never-dying element, the spirit of man, should grow and develop by partaking of an element of its own kind; that which is eternal, never-dying, the word of God, God's truth, and Christ says, “My words, they are spirit and they are life;” hence by a proper assimilation of this life-giving element, we obtain life more abundantly. That is to say, our spiritual life becomes more developed, our understanding becomes enlarged, by reason of which we can better understand the things of God, and those commandments which he has given to mankind, are more far-reaching than we with our natural ability are able to comprehend.

In Doctrine and Covenants 28:9 we have this statement: “For my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.” His commandments, his words, then, are the channel or medium that conveys the element of life, the Spirit, to our spirit, and by which development takes place.

In order that this condition can be brought about it is necessary that a coöperation take place, or that we be in a receptive condition. If our physical being is not in a condition to receive and assimilate the food that sustains the body it remains in a dormant condition. It must be in a condition to make proper use of it in order that our bodies may grow. Just so with our spirits. They must be in a receptive condition, by which they unreservedly submit to the plan of God as reflected in his words, his commandments, in order that the greatest good may be obtained and the greatest development of spiritual power manifested within us, to the entire subjugation of the flesh to the will of the Spirit of God, which we received when we received his word. Hence Christ says: "Now ye are clean through the words which I have spoken unto you."

Paul says: "There is therefore no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." This shows to us that Paul must have understood the principle advocated by Christ, that man shall live by every word of God, and his words, they are spirit and life; and those who walk by this law of the Spirit of life are under no condemnation. It must of necessity follow, that those who do not walk by it are under condemnation. To write about, talk about, and understand the word of God is one thing, and to make a practical application thereof is another, yet both are essential in order to live, in the fullest sense, by that word, through which we can become cleansed from sin, receive more abundant life, and stand justified before God.

If it be true that our physical stature can not obtain grace, strength, and endurance without proper activity, how is it with the inner man? Can it become sufficiently strong, and continue to cope with the flesh, the world, and the Devil, without proper activity and godly zeal to bring about the cause of Christ, to make their friends and neighbors acquainted with the ever-blessed gospel of Christ, the plan of our redemption, and to manifest not only by precept, but also by actions, which speak louder than words, that they have partaken of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins? Hence in order to obtain and retain the Spirit of the Master, by which the inner man is renewed day by day, it is necessary that a proper amount of energy and activity be aroused within us, regardless of the feelings of the flesh in the matter, for they are always at variance with the Spirit, thus subjugating the flesh to the will of the spirit; then we will realize what it means to live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.

This is to be the standard by which our lives must be shaped, our stronghold against false teaching, against deceitful workers, the test between the true and the false, the rod of iron that will conduct us safely to the tree of life, while miracles are no safeguard against such things, but may even be of such a character that they may mislead and confuse, not giving to the soul that enlightenment and understanding of God's work, which is as an anchor to the soul through the dark and cloudy days when we are called upon to walk by faith and not by sight.

Miracles are an outgrowth or product of faith; not faith a product of miracles. Hence such as seek for miracles must continually have miracles to keep them in the faith. This is reversing God's plan.

Thus we see the wisdom in Christ's answer to his adversary when he was tempted by him.

THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND HER DAUGHTERS.

A PICTURE AS PAINTED BY THE ARTISTIC BRUSH OF THE HISTORIANS NOW REPOSING IN MY LIBRARY.

BY R. C. EVANS.

The Church of England, known in history as the Second Daughter of Rome, was born about the year 1535. We hurriedly submit a few facts regarding this child of Rome, as related by the historians. Henry VIII, born 1491 A. D., began to reign 1509 A. D. This king was a strict papist. He wrote a book in Latin, defending the seven sacraments of the Romish church, and sent a copy of it to the Pope. Leo, glad to receive aid so illustrious, conferred on him the title, "Defender of the Faith."—Collier's History of England, p. 160.

"After nearly twenty years of married life the king pretended to have doubts about the legality of his marriage with Queen Catherine. . . . The truth seems to be that Henry was tired of her, and had taken a violent fancy for one of her maids of honor, Anne Boleyn. . . . A divorce then became the great object of Henry's life. . . . He defied the Pope (Clement VII) for refusing to sanction the divorce and second marriage. . . . He resolved to deny the supremacy of the Pope and to make himself head of the English Church. And now the chain which had so long bound England to Rome, was breaking link by link. The Parliament of 1531 owned Henry as head of the church. The Parliament of 1532 forbade the payment of first fruits by which the Pope had received the first year's income of vacant bishoprics. The Parliament of 1533 forbade appeals to Rome. In the same year Anne Boleyn was declared Queen, Catherine formally divorced. . . . When these things were heard at Rome, the Pope laid Henry under a terrible curse, unless Queen Catherine was restored; but no curses could bend the stubborn King of England."

The dispute when the divorce was thus settled, centered in the question, "Who was to be head of the church in England, the King or the Pope? The point was decided by the Parliament of 1534, conferring the title with its privileges on Henry. . . . Henceforth the Church of England had a separate existence. Paul III, now pope, hurled the thunders of ex-communication at Henry, but the English King cared not."—Collier's History of England, pp. 160, 161.

"Having declared open opposition to the church of Rome, Henry proceeded to make the most cruel enactments against papists; to demolish monasteries and convents scattered by hundreds throughout his dominions. . . . Dreadful persecutions ensued—men were hanged, burned, and beheaded, for not believing as he desired. . . . Henry's next step was to behead Anne Boleyn, and marry Lady Jane Seymour, A. D. 1536. . . . He then entered into an alliance with the princess, Ann of Cleves, to whom, however, he took an intense aversion; and having put her aside, married Catherine Howard. . . . This lady he beheaded in 1542, and then gave his hand for the last time to Lady Catherine Parr. . . . This wife . . . not being either divorced or beheaded, had the happiness to survive him."—Edward's History of England.

"And here, let me state, that, in Dr. Bayley's life of Bishop Fisher, it is positively asserted that Anne Boleyn was the king's daughter, and that Lady Boleyn, her mother, said to the king, when he was about to marry Anne, 'Sir, for the reverence of God, take heed what you do in marrying my daughter, for, if you record your own conscience well, she is your own daughter as well as mine.' To which the king replied, 'Whose daughter soever she is, she shall be my wife.'"—Cobbett's Protestant Reformation, p. 29.

On pages 30 and 31 of the above work, it is affirmed that poor Anne was in serious difficulty before her marriage to her father, the king, and head of the Church of England.

Now for a glance behind the throne. History informs us that Archbishop Cranmer was the king's right hand man, but as there is so much said regarding this reformer and church builder, polygamist and traitor, I content myself by presenting to the reader a short pen picture of this famous archbishop, as drawn by one or two historians:

"The progress of this man in the path of infamy, needed incontestible proof to reconcile the human mind to a belief in it. Before he became a priest he had married; after he became a priest, and had taken the oath of celibacy, he being then in Germany, and having become a Protestant, married another wife, while the first was still alive. Being the primate of Henry's church, which still forbade the clergy to have wives and which held them to their oath of celibacy, he had his wife brought to England in a chest with holes bored in it to give her air. . . . He, as archbishop, enforced the law of celibacy, while he, himself, secretly kept his German wife in the palace of Canterbury. . . . He, as ecclesiastical judge, divorced Henry VIII from three wives. . . . He sent many men and women to the stake. . . . 'He first prepared a book of Homilies, and a catechism, . . . then came the book of common prayer.' This 'prince of hypocrites' was finally burned to death by order of the church of Rome."—Cobbett's History of Reformation, pp. 43, 100, 133, 136.

Before leaving this part of the subject permit me to say, Mr. Cobbett, from whose works I have quoted regarding Archbishop Cranmer, was a Protestant, and nearly all that I have quoted from his works is supported by the writings of the celebrated Bossuet in his able work, "Variations of the Protestant Churches," as also many other historians, all agreeing that this daughter of Rome was conceived in sin, born in lust, lived in polygamy and idolatry, and that she is now dying in formality and pride. Yet strange to say some good people say that Henry's church "of England" was and is the church of Christ, the pure "bride," "the Lamb's wife."

Having presented to view the mother and her two eldest daughters, I pass over the fearful crimes committed and sanctioned by John Calvin and John Knox, under whose united efforts the Presbyterian Church, (another daughter of Rome,) came into existence. Let it be known, however, that history reveals that Calvin planned the horrible death by burning at the stake of Dr. Servetus. This unfortunate man, the former friend of Calvin, "came to Geneva. . . . He was on his way to Naples, where he intended to practice as a physician. He was about to leave for Zurich, when, at the instigation of Calvin, he was arrested and lodged in prison on a charge of blasphemy. The trial followed, Calvin appeared as his accuser. . . . Servetus was condemned to be burned to death, a sentence which was carried into effect at Champel, near Geneva, on the 27th of October, 1553. On the morning before his execution, . . . he had a conversation with Calvin, he begged Calvin's forgiveness, but refused to withdraw any of his expressions. . . . He was fastened to the stake, surrounded by oak wood and leaves, with his condemned book and the manuscript he had sent to Calvin attached to his girdle, his agony was long protracted, with his last breath he uttered a cry to the Savior for mercy. . . . Calvin prosecuted the suit against him with untiring severity and approved the sentence which condemned Servetus to death. When, however, it is remembered that the unanimous decision of the Swiss churches was that Servetus deserved to die, that the general voice of Christendom was in favor of this, that even such a man as Melancthon affirmed the justice of the sentence, . . . and that only a few voices here and there were at that time raised against it, candid and impartial men will be ready to accept the judgment of Coleridge, that the death of Servetus was not 'Calvin's guilt especially, but the common opprobrium of all European Christendom.'"—Life of John Calvin, by Ward and Lock, London, England.

All we have to say regarding the above apology for Calvin and the murderers that helped him to kill a man because of his honest opinion, is at the risk of being considered disingenuous. I affirm that Calvin's conduct toward Servetus proves to me that he and all who supported him were still in the gall of bitterness and in the bondage of Babylon. John Knox, the friend of Calvin, doubtless was one of those referred to as having indorsed Calvin's conduct. Be this as it may, it is said that "the voice of Knox struck through the land like an electric shock, throughout all Fife, and soon throughout all Scotland. Images were broken, altars were shivered, mass books were torn, and priests' vestments were rent into shreds."—Collier's History of England, p. 189.

Dr. Johnson calls Knox "The Ruffian of the Reformation."—Cobbett, Prot. Ref., p. 164.

Having had a glance at the founders of Presbyterianism, let us see how their successors are conducting themselves in latter times. We will let them tell their own story regarding their faith in polygamy:

"PRESBYTERIANS RECOGNIZE POLYGAMY.

"Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, May 27.—The last day's session of the Presbyterian General Assembly opened this morning with a crowded docket. An overture from the synod of India, asking for a reply to the memorial upon the subject of baptizing polygamous converts was considered. The Mohammedan was admitted to the church and he was allowed to retain both wives and house. A memorial was presented asking the general assembly that final power be given the synod of India in such cases. Dr. Thompson, of the committee on church policy, to whom it was referred, said there was no concrete case before the assembly, and that the committee was indisposed to interfere until the judicial case involving polygamy was before it. Dr. Morrison, representing the synod trial cases and special legislation, held that the recognition of polygamous marriages, by the church in India, was an absolute necessity. 'Any other rule' said he, 'would rule David out of the church.'"—Kansas City Mail.

If the Presbyterian Church is the church of Christ in America, it is in India. If they recognize polygamy in the church in India, how long will it be before they openly practice it in America? Does the God of the Presbyterian Church regard as virtue in India that which he denounces a vice in America? Is it the custom of the country only that prevents the open practice of polygamy in America by these Presbyterian defenders of polygamy? Dying Babylon surely is in a fearful condition. Mother and daughters may yet die in each other's arms.

Let us now look at Wesley's church, known now as the Methodist Church. Press of work demanding my time, reminds me that I must not go back over the early history of Mr. Wesley and his people. The history shows that John and Charles Wesley were both charged with being guilty of very bad conduct. (See Perfect Love, p. 249, and Hale's His. of United States, p. 106; also Blanchard's Book of Martyrs, p. 476.) But we pass over all the early history of the granddaughter of Rome, and see how she has conducted herself of late years. In order that she may speak for herself we invite you to her General Conference, May 11, 1892. Listen to her stalwarts begging permission to practice polygamy:

"N. J. Plumb, of Foo Chow, presented a resolution, asking that in countries which permitted a plurality of wives the marriage tie need not be dissolved in order to enter the church; also, that a bishop be required to reside in China. Both referred."—London Advertiser, May 12, 1892.

Yes, even "gentle Methodism" desires polygamy in countries that permit it. To the credit of the conference, it said no; but yet the fact remains. Many are yearning for it. Time will tell who will win.

If the following be true, Methodists should see no reason for not practicing polygamy: "God sees no sin in believers, whatever sins they commit. My sins might displease God, my person is always acceptable to him; though I should outsin Manasses, I should not be less a pleasant child, because God always views me in Christ, hence in the midst of adulteries, murders, and incests, he can address me with, 'Thou art all fair, my love, my undefiled, there is not spot in thee.' It is a most pernicious error of the schoolmen to distinguish sins according to the fact, and not according to the person. Though I blame those who say, 'Let us sin that grace may abound, yet adultery, incest, and murder shall, upon the whole, make me holier on earth and merrier in heaven.' This is a statement of the famous Richard Hill, Esq., a friend of Fletcher."—Fletcher, vol. 4, p. 97.

"Believers ought not to mourn for sin, because it was pardoned before it was committed."—Eaton's Honeycomb of Justification.

The above is so shocking, so vile, that one has to break through the barrier of modesty to record them. But I take comfort in the thought that I am not the first to blush when relating the facts regarding the mother of harlots and her daughters. Four of the daughters indorse polygamy in open conference: "The Calcutta missionary conference, (representing Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Congregationalists, consisting of the missionaries of the various societies which have missionaries in that vicinity,) after frequent consultation and much consideration on the subject of polygamy, as it exists in India, were unanimous in the following conclusions:

If a convert before becoming a Christian, has married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and primitive Christian churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all, but such a person is not eligible to any office in the church."—India, Ancient and Modern, p. 601.

Surely, the "man of sorrow" can truthfully say, "I was wounded in the house of my friends."

I have hurriedly looked over the pages of history, and from the published works and minutes of councils and conferences, I have shown that while professing great love and true friendship, both the mother of harlots and her daughter have, by the indorsing and practicing of polygamy and other evils, cruelly, deeply wounded the Christ whom they profess to reverence and adore. By their conference enactments, the millions of India, China, yea all countries are told that the primitive Christian churches practiced polygamy. That, to-day, Christians may bask beneath the sunny smiles of God's approval while living in polygamy.

Is it a fact that all the boasting talk of missionary success in dark, sin-cursed heathen countries is a cruel misrepresentation of truth? While it may be true that the heathens are joining these churches, handing over into the coffers of the church their gold, silver, precious stones, and name, yet the appalling question confronts us, Wherein are they benefited by a profession of Christianity, if they still are bound hand and foot by the slimy fetters of polygamy and kindred evils?

The awful fact is apparent: "The mother of harlots" and her daughters have not sent to the heathen nations the beautiful gospel, that ameliorates the condition of men and women, that lifts them up out of the cesspit of human depravity, but in their greed for financial and numerical success, they have pandered to the baser passions of the masses; they have bound more firmly upon woman the cruel fetters of polygamy. They have said, It is a Christian practice, and under divine approval ye may have many wives, and finally enter into the eternal city.

Dear reader, can you now understand why the Lord called the apostate church "the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth"? Surely she has corrupted the nations by her criminal conduct and doctrines. Having reread the evidence above cited we are more than ever convinced that it was absolutely essential to the salvation of the nations that God should restore the everlasting gospel, in all its ancient power and purity by angel hands. That "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people could be warned to flee from the wrath to come." That a priesthood divinely commissioned should sound abroad the glad message of salvation from sin, revealing the true character of the mother of harlots and her daughters, breaking their cruel fetters and bidding the maze-bound nations to hope.

In verification of my assertion that the dear Lord has restored the ancient gospel in all its power, liberty, and hope, I refer the reader to the works of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Therein he will find the Truth and the clearest, most concise denunciation of the crime of polygamy and other evils taught, practiced, and sanctioned by the mother of harlots and her daughters to be found on the earth.

Working, praying, and watching for the downfall of Babylon, I am, Yours in hope,

[By the Editor: Bishop E. L. Kelley, in his late mission to the European Mission, visited Rome, Italy. He states that he saw the following inscription in Latin on five different churches, including the Pantheon: Indulgentia, Plenaria, Quotidiana Perpetua, Pro Vivis et Defunctis. Full Perpetual Indulgences Daily for the Living and the Dead. English translation. The guide whom he employed to show him the sights in the Catholic city, upon inquiry, assured him that any one could procure indulgences at any time upon application, upon the payment of proper fees being understood.]

THE MELCHISEDEC PRIESTHOOD.

In Church History, vol. 1, pp. 65, 66, in speaking of the Melchisedec priesthood it says, "It is fair to presume that they were not," meaning that Joseph and Oliver were not ordained literally by the hands of Peter, James, and John. Your definition of the word ordain is correct; but the revelation says, "And also with Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles," etc. No one can have the priesthood conferred upon him, nor be confirmed to any office in said priesthood without the literal laying on of hands. Thus it was so with the restoration of the Aaronic priesthood.

In explaining your position more fully in HERALD of last year you make the restoration of the Melchisedec priesthood a secondary consideration if it ever was restored literally by Peter, James, and John. You place the first ordination at April 6, 1830, when Joseph and Oliver were commanded to ordain each other to this priesthood.

I believe this position does not harmonize with Holy Writ, and it destroys the angel's message. The angel was to bring the gospel to preach to them that dwelt upon the earth, and the first public sermon was preached April 11, 1830, by Oliver Cowdery.—See Church History, vol. 1, p. 84.

I can not see how you can harmonize the rights to preach the gospel by a mere command when it is written that the angel would have this message for them that dwelt upon the earth; the angel must have conferred this authority upon men upon the earth, or where in the name of reason will we stop? True, a command of God is sufficient authority to do a work, be it in harmony or out of harmony of the law. It is written, "Thou shalt not kill," and "he that killeth shall die." Still the Lord commanded Nephi to take the life of Laban, and he did, although it is written "thou shalt not kill;" and Zoram, the servant of Laban, would have suffered the same fate had he not gone with Nephi and his brethren.

Your position on restoration of the holy priesthood does not harmonize with testimony found in Church History, volume 1, page 64. Here Oliver Cowdery says the priesthood was conferred first by the angel and afterwards they (Joseph and Oliver) conferred it upon each other, by the will and command of God. This then is in harmony with the restoration of the Aaronic priesthood which was conferred first by John the Baptist, Joseph and Oliver baptizing and ordaining each other to the same. See Church History, volume 1, page 34. Again, "You have been ordained to the holy priesthood [and the holy priesthood is the Melchisedec priesthood], you have received it from those who have their power and authority from an angel."—Church History, volume 1, page 543.

"It" is a pronoun and its antecedent is "holy priesthood."

This authority was the holy priesthood and they received it from an angel; so when it was conferred upon them by the angel it was not the same time that God commanded them to ordain each other to the office of an elder, April 6, 1830; but it must be in harmony with Oliver Cowdery's testimony found in Church History, volume 1, page 64: "I was also present with Joseph when the higher or Melchisedec priesthood was conferred by the holy angel from on high. This priesthood was then conferred on each other, by the will and commandment of God."

Thus your position in HERALD is wrong as also your position in Church History. It should read, "It is fair to presume that they were"—leaving off that "that." The holy priesthood was first restored by an angel and the angel John said Peter, James, and John held the keys; and God says he had sent Peter, James, and John to them "by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name." Thus the accepted testimony by all latter-day Israel must be that the holy priesthood was conferred through angelic administration and this restoration was by the hands of Peter, James, and John.

Yours for the love of truth, regardless of man or creed,

THE PRESENT CONFLICT BETWEEN SCIENCE AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

The Bible is open and exposed to scientific tests and criticisms on every side; but the means and methods of assailing it have changed with time and progress along certain lines of facts. Some of the grounds and weapons formerly used against it have again and again been abandoned and new ones taken up. Of late years it is man himself or his handiwork that is brought up to impeach the Bible account of his own creation and age. Formerly we would look into the Bible to take a peep at primitive man, but now we are invited to look into the rocks and ruins—geology and archæology—these with physiology and anatomy are the new witnesses which are arrayed against the Mosaic account of creation and primitive history of the human race.

Anatomy and physiology have been employed to destroy the belief in the unity of the race and to establish for its different branches so many distinct origins. Geology and archæology have been pressed into service at every opportunity to carry man back an immeasurable distance to oppose and undermine the plain statements of the Bible and impeach that narrative in the account of his creation.

As a result of all this we hear it affirmed in private conversation and public lectures, and see it in daily papers and monthly magazines, that the discoveries of science are in conflict with the Bible, and that the Bible has outlived its usefulness.

It is said that those trusting in the sacred narrative simply trust in belief and that this belief rests on nothing, while the new school of unbelief rest their unbelief on solid facts. This influence of unbelief has been felt, and in consequence many have been moved from their early faith in the Scriptures and now follow its teachings with faltering steps; others have been brought down to hopeless skepticism, and this leaven of unbelief is still at work.

The writer does not propose to enter the arena and take part in this conflict, but simply to get near enough the ring to see what is going on within.

Professor Hutson of the university of Mississippi, says? "There are in the main three schools of opinion as to the origin of man and the beginning of society; of course there are modifications of these three views, but I think they are all reducible to these: There are those who favor the view that man has been gradually developed, through a long series of changes, from the lower orders of living organism, and that after the development of the true human type, there were successive ages of continuous progress in adaptation to the life around them, on the part of the races now becoming distinct. These successive ages are called by the students of buried remains from the character of the implements used, the rough or early stone age, the polished stone age, and age of bronze, and age of iron. . . . There are those again, who hold that the creation of Adam and Eve, as specific individual persons, by the direct act of God, was the beginning of the whole human race, and that prior to this act, there existed no form of humanity on the earth. . . . The third school consists of those who hold that man in his physical nature was the last outcome of a long series of development from lower organisms, and that many races of soulless men have lived on the earth."—Beginnings of Civilization, pp. 10-12.

Many of the discoveries of geology and archæology have been unlooked for and indeed surprising, and former theories have been modified and others abandoned along certain lines of thought. But it is still a question with the writer whether the relics dredged from the lake dwellings of Switzerland, or those exhumed from the alluvium of the Mississippi or the Nile, or those dug out of the peat-beds or shell-mounds of Denmark and America, or from the caves of Belgium or Britain, or the gravel-pits of Arniens or the sepulchers of Aurignae, are sufficient, as some seem to think, to impeach the Bible narrative.

It is true that some remarkable disconnected and imperfectly understood facts have been hastily construed and arrogantly, the writer believes, held up by skeptics as evidences against the Bible history; and with haste these have rushed exultant to the conclusion that the fate of Christianity is decided in their favor and against the Christian religion.

These skeptics measure everything with their half bushel;—theirs is the standard measure, and a man from the common people is perhaps out of place to question their calculations. In fact they seem confident that their explanation of the facts will carry the reader with them.

The Bible says that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitations."—Acts 17: 26.

This is one of the far-reaching statements science has been putting on trial for the last fifty or sixty years. The Bible theory is that God created one pair, Adam and Eve, and "as in Adam all die even so in Christ all shall be made alive."

But students of natural history come forward with evidence against this one pair theory and affirm that the inhabitants of the earth are of various and distinct species; "that instead of there being but one race of human beings there are many races, each of which has had its own Adam and Eve. . . . Others, as Nott and Gliddon, assert that the races of man are essentially different creatures; that the negro and the Indian and some other low races are by nature incapable of ever rising to the blessings of either religion or civilization."—Present Conflict of Science with Religion, pp. 328, 329.

Professor Hutson says, "This is my view: The races of lower types, black, yellow, and red, all preceded the white race in occupancy of the earth. By them was created an approximation toward civilization in various parts of the world, the form and degree of culture differing in each case, in the measure in which environment was favorable."—Beginnings of Civilization, p. 221.

COLOR.

The difference in color is by many regarded as convincing evidence that they have proceeded from different origins, or different Adams and Eves.

"All travelers who have visited the high lands of Arabia describe the inhabitants as having light complexions, their eyes being often blue and their hair red. The Arabs near Muscat are of a sickly yellow hue; those of the neighborhood of Macca are of a yellowish brown; while those of the low countries bordering on the Nile are almost jet black."—Present Conflict, p. 349.

Here we see that Arabs from the same stock in the "high lands" have "light complexions" and in the "low countries" are "almost jet black."

"We find a similar variation of shades among the Kabyles, a people that inhabit the northern borders of Africa. Here are tribes connected by the closest affinity of language, and who agree also in every other important physical character, yet differing widely in their complexion. Although the Kabyles in general have a swarthy hue and dark hair, yet the tribe of Mozabi is described as being remarkably white; and the lofty table-land called Mount Aurasius is inhabited by a tribe so fair and ruddy, and with hair of so deep a yellow, that they have been compared to the Germans. On the other hand, the Tuaryk tribes, bordering on the Great Desert, have a complexion as black as that of the darkest negro."—Ibid., p. 349.

We learn from the above that color will fade, even with the same people.

"The same is true of the Jews. While the descendants of Abraham are everywhere recognizable by certain peculiarities of physiognomy, yet they exhibit a great variety of complexion among them. In England, blue eyes and flaxen hair are not unfrequent; but a light brunette hue with black hair is most common. In Germany and Poland, the ordinary complexion is more florid, with blue eyes and red hair. On the other hand, the Jews of Portugal are very dark; while those who have been settled from very remote times in Cochin and the interior of Malabar, are so black as not to be distinguishable by their complexion from the native inhabitants. It is both a curious and an interesting fact, that at Mattacheri, a town of Cochin, there is another colony of Jews, who arrived in that country nearly seven centuries later; these are several shades lighter in their complexion than the former, and are called Jerusalem Jews; and the fact that they have not yet been blackened as deeply as their brethren, shows that time is a necessary condition in the coloring process. . . . Among the Hindoo nation are to be found the most marked diversities of complexion; some are as black as negroes, some are of a copper color, others a little darker than the inhabitants of Southern Europe, and others have actually fair complexions with blue eyes, and auburn or even red hair."—Ibid., pp. 350, 351.

"The aborigines of the American Continent, though called 'Red Men,' are by no means all of this color. While some of the North American Indians are copper-colored, others are as fair as many Europeans; others still are of a brown or yellow complexion; and others yet nearly, if not quite, as black as the negroes of Africa."—Ibid., pp. 351, 352; Prehistoric America, p. 3; Bricks from Babel, p. 162.

From the foregoing facts we see that the "Red Man" is not always red; that the Africans are not always black; that the Arab is not always yellow; and that even the Jew tends with time to assimilate with any nation in which their lot may be cast.

Menair Wright quotes Prichard: "We shall find, for instance, in the Japhetic family shades varying from alabaster fairness to almost blackness. In the Shemetic line color will vary from white, supposed to be hue of Japhet, to a darker shade than that of some of the Hamites; while among the race of Ham we shall find red, brown, yellow, and jet black."—Bricks from Babel, p. 33.

DIFFERENCE IN PHYSICAL STRUCTURE.

"There are certain districts of Ireland, chiefly inhabited by the descendants of the native Irish driven by the British from Armagh and the south of Down, about two centuries ago. These people, whose ancestors were well-grown, able-bodied and comely, are now reduced to an average stature of five feet two inches, are pot-bellied, bow-legged, and abortively featured; and are especially remarkable for open projecting mouths, with prominent teeth and exposed gums, their advancing cheek bones and depressed noses bearing barbarism on their very front. In other words, within so short a period, they seem to have acquired a prognathous type of skull, not unlike the savages of Australia."—Present Conflict, p. 347.

"The children of European settlers in New South Wales are tall, thin, and weaker than their progenitors. In the West Indies, some distinct new peculiarities of structure have been observed in the descendants of English settlers: their cheek-bones are higher, and their eyes deeper set in the head, than those of the English nation generally; in these respects, they approximate to the form of the aboriginal races of the American Continent and islands; and it has been pointed out that such a form is useful in protecting the eyesight from the glare of the tropical sun."—Ibid., p. 348.

In view of the above facts structure and color offer no proof whatever to the theory of diversity or origin, for both color and structure adjust themselves to new conditions and climate. Thus the negro transplanted to the bank of the Nile assumes the hue of the Egyptian; the Jews in Northern Europe exchanged their dark complexion for one that is fair and florid; the Arab that moved to the land of the negro became almost jet black; and the Jews that settled Cochin became in time as dark as the natives.

Yet these differences in color and structure are regarded as evidences of separate origin from different Adams and Eves. Virey argues for two Adams and two Eves. Jacquinet argues for three Adams; Kant for four; Blumenbach for five Adams and five Eves; Buffon for six Adams; Hunter for seven; Agassiz for eight; Pickering for eleven; Bory De St. Vincent for fifteen; Desmoulins sixteen; Morton twenty-two; Crawford sixty, and Burke for sixty-three!

Here we have twelve apostles of natural history—standard authorities—whose words are quoted by skeptics to impeach the Bible. But may we ask, Where is the encouragement and force from witnesses who disagree among themselves? It appears to the writer that they come nearer impeaching one another than the Bible.

These men argue something like this: One Adam in America, a red man; one in Africa, a black man; one in Europe, a white man; one in Asia, a yellow Adam, and we may run up the number to Morton's twenty-two or to Burke's sixty-three.

Professor Huxley is of the opinion that man is one species. (See Origin of Species, p. 113.) So is Sir Charles Leyell, Prichard, Smith, Balbi, Adelung, Rongemont, Bechman, and Charles Darwin. (See Descent of Man, vol. 1, p. 220; Present Conflict, p. 382.)

Charles Darwin agrees with the Bible in the number of pairs from which the race have sprung; but he argues that man has gradually developed through a long series of changes from lower organisms. He traces him back, with one link missing, to the Ascidian tadpole; and, according to his theory, man has struggled all the way up, higher and higher in creation's scale, from a tadpole to civilized man, from a frog-pond to a palace, or from zero to a throne.

With Darwin's theory,

"Tisn't easy to settle when man became man,
When the monkey-type stopped and the human began,
As some very queer things were evolved in the plan."

Mr. Darwin says himself, "The great chasm between man and his nearest allies can not be bridged over by any extinct or living species."—Descent of Man, vol. 1, p. 200. And here his theory breaks down.

Man's age on earth is perplexing to scientists also. Leyell argues for 100,000 years, Wilson for 50,000, Dana for 25,000, and Agassiz for 10,000. So that we see that scientists are at a loss again, they can not read from man's complexion and structure the number of Adams we have sprung from, neither can they read in the rocks man's age, themselves being our witnesses, and so far as science is concerned it is an open question.

Some materialists think that this world is a self-acting machine. "For all things in the universe are so fitted into one another, that by mutual action and reaction the whole machinery of the world is kept in unceasing motion, self-guided, self-adjusted, self-energized."—Warinton's Week of Creation, p. 91; Present Conflict, p. 65.

So that so far as we are concerned the Creator might be dismissed, or cease to be. He having contrived a universe that winds itself up as fast as it runs down. No interference in man's affairs as with the Hebrews at the Red Sea.

We see that all the hard sayings are not in the Bible after all. Sometimes we easily swallow a big chunk of hypothesis rather than take a small piece of fish.

A CHALLENGE TO THE HIGHER CRITICS.

The Rev. T. T. Eaton, LL. D., editor of The Western Recorder (Louisville, Bapt.), is a theologian of the "old school," and he never lets pass an opportunity to refute the arguments of the higher critics. He has lately issued to them a challenge to give to the world an "up-to-date Bible" which shall bear comparison with the original Scriptures, and he deems this a not unreasonable request, if it be true that "God has by no means confined his inspiration to those who wrote the Bible" and that he has "inspired men in all ages as truly as he inspired the prophets and apostles." His arguments are elaborated as follows in The Watchman (Boston, Bapt.):

The modern school of theologians hold that the Bible was written between 800 B. C. and 100 or 150 A. D. So that in the Bible we have the words of great leaders on the problems of religion for 900 years. This school regard the Bible as of great spiritual value, but as having the defects of the thinking and the beliefs of the men of the times in which it was produced. . . .

If these things be true, it necessarily follows that we ought not to be dependent for our Bible on men that lived between 800 B. C. and 100 A. D. Surely in all these 1,800 years, with the wonderful progress man has made along all lines, with the correction of so many crude and erroneous ideas held in the long ago, surely a better Bible can be gathered from the words of great leaders about the problems of religion, during the past 1,800 years, than was gathered for the 900 years previous. To admit that the thoughts of the leaders in regard to religion between B. C. 800 and A. D. 100 are superior to the thoughts of the leaders in these last days is to surrender the whole case of this modern school of theologians. And just as editors and redactors gathered (according to this modern theory) the good things about religion in the literature of their times, so as to give the world our Bible, so let this modern school furnish some editors and redactors who will gather the good things about religion in modern literature, and give us a Bible that shall be up to date. This new Bible ought to be as much better than the one we now use, as our times are more enlightened than the times of the prophets and apostles.

While myself holding to the old view of the exclusive inspiration and the authority of the Bible, I yet would be very glad to see the up-to-date Bible, and I believe it is incumbent on the theologians of this new school to furnish such a Bible to the world, so that it may be compared with the Bible of our fathers, and that the theory of modern inspiration may be put to a scientific test. . . . And can any one imagine a good reason why it should not be furnished? Ought not the world to have the best Bible possible? May we not hope that this new school of theologians will give us an up-to-date Bible?—Literary Digest, March 22, 1902.

IS FEAR THE FOUNDATION OF RELIGION?

In his recent book, "The Field of Ethics," George Herbert Palmer, professor of philosophy in Harvard, courageously accepts and turns to theistic conclusions a proposition which has long been advanced by skeptic and materialistic philosophers. It is that religion is founded on fear. Says Professor Palmer:

Lucretius defined religion in words which have deeply influenced twenty centuries: "Primus in orbe timor fecit deos." What brought gods before us first was fear. Because we are born to trouble, the idea of God has visited us. At first the statement may shock, and make us disposed to deny it. But my impression is that the more we reflect, the more we shall find ourselves compelled to accept it, and to own that at the heart of religion lies fear. It is difficult to judge a matter so personal without bias. But if we try to do so, we shall find, I believe, that as a fact our thoughts of religion have hitherto been closely associated with a sense of our own weakness.

To test the case, Professor Palmer asks under what circumstance do feelings of devoutness come most easily. Is it when we are strong in body, masterful, possessed of abundant wealth, with all the events of life turning out for us fortunately? On the contrary, when sickness threatens and we feel our helplessness, then it is that we incline to pray. In the call for help we reach the clear consciousness of God. An old English poet has said that we turn to God "when griefs make us tame."

Professor Palmer quotes also from Arthur Hugh Clough:

And almost every one when age,
Disease, or sorrows strike him,
Inclines to think there is a God,
Or something very like him.

These persons, Professor Palmer says, have a keen sense of God, because they have a keen sense of their own limitations. In their apprehension of restriction comes the thought of God's greatness. The writer infers that "this sense of our weakness in connection with God's power—just the conjunction which is the essential element of fear—is fundamental to religion everywhere;” yet he confesses that he would be sorry if this conclusion were accepted without modification:

Even if my presentation has been convincing, and fear is now confessed to be deeply imbedded in religion, I hope it will be felt that the account is incomplete, and that religion contains elements much more important and ennobling than fear. The Psalmist says that “Fear is the beginning of wisdom,” evidently meaning by wisdom divine wisdom, reverence for God. His thought might seem the same as that of Lucretius. But in the Psalmist's mind fear is only the beginning of wisdom. To argue that it is the end—a substantial portion of completed religion, as I appear to have done—is to produce a sense of bewilderment.

This bewilderment, the writer claims, is the result of ambiguity in the meaning of the word fear. He says that there are two kinds of fear: one essential to religion, one abhorrent to the thought when connected with religion. One results from a sense of weakness which clings and aspires, the other from a sense of weakness which would abolish and abase itself. We quote again:

Such are the two contrasted kinds of fear; I believe they both appear in religion. In fact, I suspect that we might divide the religions of the world on this basis. Some of them we call pagan, others universal or ethical; and the distinction marks the different sorts of fear which they contain. The pagan's God is alien to himself. He never knows what that God of his is going to do. God is a powerful being, but irrational and arbitrary. His worshiper can only humble himself and conciliate, studying how to avoid offense. Between God and himself there is no friendly trust. What he would like best would be to get away from God, to hide himself, and be allowed to go his own way. This being impossible, his religion is largely an affair of self-abasement. He will sacrifice what he prizes most in order to show how little consequence he is. Then perhaps God will not harm him. That is his conception of religion, a religion of cowardly fear.

The noble religions, on the other hand,—and there are many of them,—recognize the inherent likeness of God and man. Their worshipers look upon God as their Father, a being essentially akin to themselves. In his image they are made, though they are far from filling out that image. He is high and lifted up, the object of awful admiration. Yet in their degrees they identify themselves with him, and in him alone can behold themselves complete. The goal of their ambition is union with him, and they can not be at rest except in his presence. Between God and man there is no other separation than that of degree, and to become more completely a man is for ever to approximate godhood. Such an attitude of mind does not exclude fear, which we have seen is always the sense of smallness in the presence of greatness. But the fear is of the noble sort which adoringly contemplates the revealer of its smallness, finding in him a refuge and the means of its own enlargement. Fear is thus transmuted into love—which in all its higher forms retains fear of the reverential sort. Fear we called the beginning of wisdom. Love is its conclusion. Love is the fulfillment of law.—Literary Digest, December 21, 1901.

The Biblical World for April contains: An editorial on the “Distinctive Beliefs of the First Christians,” and the following articles: “The Man and his Work,” “Character and Composition of Acts,” “Social Teaching of Paul,” “Local Divinities of the Modern Semites,” “A Meditation,” “The Legal Literature—the Priestly Code.”

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

“I hastily opened my lips,
And uttered a word of disdain
That wounded a friend, and for ever estranged
A heart I would die to retain.
But the bird once at liberty, who can enthrall?
And the word that's once spoken, oh, who can recall?”

Clouds and Sunshine.

The sun is brightly shining, my heart is light and gay;
I thank the Lord in heaven for this sweet, sunny day.
It fills my heart with gladness and tunes the birds to sing,
It warms the earth and brings the flowers, this sunny day of spring.

And if the sun refuse to shine and rain begins to fall,
O may I ever thank him, because we need them all.
Some plants that wither in the sun, the rain will soon restore.
We need the sunshine and the rain while on time's mortal shore.

Oft when we're tired and weary with toiling in the sun,
We see the dark clouds gather and welcome every one.
O may we ever praise him and say, “Thy will be done,”
Be thankful for the clouds and rain, and thankful for the sun.

[By a mistake this letter did not come to the hands of the editor as early as it should have done and so is late in appearing.]

TROY, Kansas.

Dear Sisters: I have felt impressed to write to your column, although I would rather read the letters of others. I can say truly that I get much comfort from HERALD and Autumn Leaves, and we look for them each time with delight.

Another year is almost gone with its many cares and joys and we are still in the conflict. Dear sisters, I know that we all have our burdens to carry, and are each often prone to think her own is the hardest to bear, but it is in patience that we must possess our souls. I have had my trials. I have lost a kind husband and babe which is very hard to bear.

A Mother's Offering in the January Autumn Leaves expresses my feelings and only those who have experienced this could speak and write so truly of a mother's love. I could not help shedding tears when I read that beautiful piece; and then those beautiful lines in memory of Bro. D. W. Wight! To be taken away in his usefulness seems so far from being our way that we are inclined to be rebellious, which also we know is wrong. We must be resigned to God's will, for God gives and takes, and if always we have his Spirit we could say truthfully, His will, not ours, be done. I often think of the lonely elders' families. But they can look with joy to the home-coming, which cheers them up. Dear sisters, I pray that each of us may make the needed sacrifices and raise our children to bring honor instead of reproach on ourselves and the church. This gospel grows more dear to me every year, and it is my prayer that I with you all may enter into the beautiful city.

Your sister,

S. A. MCGALLIARD.

RHODES, Iowa, April 2.

Beloved Sisters: It has been a long time since I have written to the Home Column, but not from a lack of interest in it, I assure you. I read your cheering, encouraging words from week to week, and feel strengthened and helped in so doing. We little know how far-reaching is our influence or upon what ground the precious seed may fall, or the abundance of fruit it may bring forth. Then let us sow beside "all waters," as it is written: "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

Some months ago I received a letter from a dear young sister which contained so many good thoughts that I would like for the sisters of the Home Column to have the benefit of them. She said: "I have from time to time been reading different articles written by you, and I can truly say that many of them have done me a great deal of good; and created in me a stronger desire to be more faithful and do more for this work than ever before. I have been reading back numbers of the Leaves, and in them I find a number of articles from your pen. And I sorrowfully think that it will be ten years the 13th of next December since I joined the church, and what have I done in the way of writing to let the Saints outside of our own branch know that I have the interest of the work at heart. Since I have been married and compare my work with that of my husband's, I realize my neglect more than ever before. One thing that stands in my way, and that by God's help I must learn to overcome, is my sensitive nature. I have held back and not written anything because I thought there were others who could do much better than I.

"I know not why I tell you all these things unless it is that I know in you I have a friend and sister who will sympathize and do all she can to encourage those who appeal to her as she has done many times before. Since my darling babe came the longing to do more has increased tenfold; for I desire to bring her up in such a way that, if God sees fit to spare her to me, she may be a comfort and a blessing to myself and husband as she grows older.

"I know that children follow in a great measure the example of their parents. I know that mother always went with her children to Sunday-school, and the love of Sunday-school was so instilled within me that when it has been impossible for me to attend, no one knows how I have missed it and longed to be able to attend both church and Sunday-school. And how thankful I am that I have one in my home who encourages me as my husband does! I desire to be a help to him in his work. It seems as though I ought never to become discouraged, yet oh, how oftentimes I do! Not that I doubt the work, but because of my weakness and the little that it seems I am doing."

It is needless for me to comment upon the above. Any one can see that this dear sister has the true spirit of the work, and that she is wielding an influence for the Master even though she may not be heard from through the church publications.

But how natural it is for us to think the work of others is of so much more importance than our own; that if we could only do the work that Bro. A or Sr. B is doing we would feel that we were accomplishing something. Did you never read that beautiful little poem of "The Changed Crosses"? A weary toiler became discouraged and dissatisfied with his cross; thought it was too heavy for him to bear, and was granted the privilege of selecting his own cross. After looking over a number of crosses, he selected a beautiful little jeweled one which he thought would be a pleasure to bear. But alas! it did not fit at all; behind the beautiful jewels there were thorns, and after trying many and finding them all less satisfactory than his own, he gladly took up his own old cross and felt that no other was so well suited to him. This is the way it is with us, dear sisters. We each have our own sphere in life to fill, and let us take up the duties lying nearest to us, small and insignificant though they may appear to us. And by and by when we have made ourselves ready we will hear the welcome voice, "Come up higher."

Your sister in the faith,
MATIE HUGHES.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

The eleventh annual convention of the General Sunday-school Association closed its sessions Saturday evening, April 5, after two days of constant, but pleasant and profitable work.

The convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society passed off so very smoothly and in such a desirable spirit that all that had attended it were in a proper frame of mind to enter upon further work in earnest and with a feeling of love and harmony that pervaded the whole assembly.

There was a fairly complete representation of the districts from both far and near, and all seemed so well adjusted to the conditions that business was transacted rapidly and well from the first. The credentials committee had been previously appointed and had their report as nearly completed as it could be up to that time, so that no time was lost while waiting for the report. The organization was soon completed and the real business of the convention was on. The reports of the general officers were first read as a basis upon which to make a start. We here quote a few paragraphs from the report of the General Superintendent:

"To size up the work of the association as a whole, we believe that considerable ground has been gained. Steady advancement has been made in most districts and schools. There are, however, some districts that have not done as well as they might have done, considering the fertility of their fields. They have not occupied the ground that has been proffered them. But, of course, it is possible we may expect too much and the conditions may not be what we suppose. We believe that we may well expect more from the workers as the work grows older, that the same effort will accomplish more as the work is better understood. This is true of any work.

"Another element that militated against the advancement of the work during the past season was the extended drouth throughout the great central States where so many of the Saints dwell. It rendered many of them financially unable to assist to carry the work on and many reunions were declared off and several other meetings dispensed with. And these meetings being our best places to build up the interests of the work, it only follows that the Sunday-school interests with all others must suffer some loss without them. There was not the usual impetus given to the work that is necessary and which follows a good reunion where the Sunday-school feature is well represented.

"It seems that a branch or locality where there are Saints and that has no Sunday-school is missing an opportunity that it can ill afford to miss. Especially is this true where there are children or even one child to be taught. It is very true that all Latter Day Saints are commanded to teach their children the plain principles of the gospel. But that all can not or do not do this is equally true. Then there are families in which one of the parents is not interested in spiritual things. Still others in which neither is interested. In fact, the number of families of Saints where the parents can and do teach their children as they should is disappointingly small. To this condition of things the Sunday-school has been a great help. In fact, to relieve this one particular condition, we believe the Sunday-school has done more than all other agencies combined. It has instructed the parents and trained them as teachers. It has caused them to have a deeper interest in spiritual things because better understood. With others, it has kept alive the spiritual spark that otherwise would have smoldered and died out. It has been the means of saving branches through a critical period when otherwise they would have become defunct. It has been the means of establishing branches where branches have never existed before. It has brought hundreds of children into the church, many of which might otherwise never have been baptized except for the influence of the Sabbath-school. There are elders now in the field that trace their interest in and love for the work to the teachings and influences of the Sabbath-school. There are fathers and mothers that are grateful for what it has done, for what it is doing, and for what it will do for their children. Not long ago we visited a school in which we saw four generations of one family in attendance and at work, little boy, father, grandfather, and great-grandmother. The companion of the great-grandmother who has long since gone to his rest was one of the earnest promoters of the Sabbath-school work, both in the old church and in the Reorganization. He was always an earnest, zealous worker in the school as well as in the branch. He taught in both act and word. And his influence has extended to the fourth generation. It is yet to be seen what the boy will be, but from the fact that the father, grandfather and great-grandfather were in turn earnest defenders of the faith, it would be surprising if the boy did not follow in their wake. God bless the workers and the work.

"It is not to be supposed that the Sunday-school can supplant the work of the parents or relieve them of their duty, though it will greatly assist them. Nor should it in any way stand instead of the church, though it should assist it. But by moving in its proper sphere it can do a noble work that will greatly assist in bringing about the redemption of the pure in heart. Let it teach the plain principles of the gospel in earnestness; teach the principles of morality; a love for the cause of Christ and those engaged therein; obedience to the laws of God and of the land; charity to the needy, whether it be in money or goods, or in actions and thoughts; such lessons from the acts of Christ and the disciples as may be drawn from the circumstances recorded, learned and applied. Or any other lesson that may be taught by the average teacher, and that may be suitable for the individual to study. Let it teach such things as will turn us from wrong and cause us to do right; such things as will fit us for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This done, and we have done well.

"There are many other things to be taught, but shall we Sunday-school workers attempt to teach what we perhaps do not understand? Shall we attempt to teach what God has set for his ordained representatives to teach? Christ told his disciples at one time that he had many things to tell them, but they could not bear them then. We must attain to a certain degree of perfection before we are fitted to go on; before we can appreciate more than the plainest truths. We may feel very sensitively our need of instruction along lines that will tend to perfect us, but let us look to the proper source for our instruction. God has ordained a way in which these weightier matters may be taught, and that through his ordained ministry. So while in our simple lessons we may find that which suggests the 'deep things' or the 'mysteries' of the kingdom, let us teach the plain lesson there to be found and pass by the 'deep things' or the 'mysteries' till such time as God shall see fit to open our minds and understandings sufficiently to take them in. There is a principle involved upon which I think we can all agree, and that is, we had better not teach anything than to undertake to teach what we do not fully understand, or that upon which we do not agree. A small work well done is better than a greater work not so well done.

"During the latter part of last year we began gathering material for a chapter of history for the Sunday-school work to appear in fourth volume of Church History. We soon found that to have this accurate it would be necessary to call upon each district to prepare the history of the work in its own territory; these manuscripts to be used to draw from in the preparation of the chapter. Accordingly we sent a circular letter to all district superintendents whose names and addresses we had, requesting them to make provision for the work at once.

Receiving but very few responses, we made a call through the HERALD with a little better success. More than one half of the districts have not been heard from in any way whatever. Others have gone resolutely to work and have it in progress or completed. We are still hopeful that the work will be a success, but the neglect of some makes the work much more than it need to have been.

"Our work with the districts and reunions was almost completely cut out for the reasons before mentioned, the almost universal drouth. We had planned to do more than before, but conditions were unfavorable, hence the work was omitted. Our correspondence and editorial work remains about the same as last year.

"There seems to be quite an urgent and extensive demand for some definite action in the direction of the home class work. We have been encouraging and pushing it for about three years or more, and there has been considerable good come from it. But we have, till now, thought best to let the interest and demand grow till it was sufficiently extensive to warrant a general movement in that line. We recommend that some action be taken to put the work on a practical working basis. . . .

"We have adopted the plan of furnishing Quarterlies free to the regularly appointed ministry, and many of the brethren have gratefully accepted them. We note with pleasure the good will and kind feeling that is the result thereof. The association is abundantly able financially to do this, and it seems no more than due our brethren, whose means are limited enough. We want them to have the Quarterlies for the good it may do them and for the good they can in turn do the Sunday-school and others.

"We note with pleasure the success said by the Religians in the Book of Mormon study. It has been said by the executive officer of the Religio that God's hand directed them along that line. That there was wisdom in it may be plainly seen from the help it has been to the Sunday-school. The Sunday-school workers need and want the study of the Book of Mormon, but in most schools there is not material enough to handle it in connection with the regular grades of Bible study. Besides many persons who teach other classes desire to study the Book of Mormon, but could not do so if it were taught in the regular Sunday-school only. While helping themselves, they have helped others too, and we are thankful.

"As the year drew to a close we made an examination of our financial condition and found it such that we were able to make a reduction in the subscription price of the Quarterlies. Accordingly, a reduction of twenty per cent was made, taking effect with the April-June issue. And while the price is now as low as any denominational Quarterly that I know of it is still high enough to make a small margin for the association, even should the circulation increase no more. But from the fact that the circulation has constantly increased from the first, and from the fact that a reduction in price of a periodical usually brings an increase in the circulation thereof, and as the greater circulation the lower the price can be, it is only very reasonable to believe that the time is not far distant when the price may be further reduced. We will then have the lowest priced Quarterly known, unless other publishing houses reduce the price of theirs, too."

The photography of animals is a pursuit requiring infinite patience, considerable skill and a love of Nature and is not to be taken up in a haphazard manner. Mere knowledge of how to work the camera, develop a plate or make a print may enable the amateur to achieve certain more or less pleasing results with general subjects, such as landscape or portraiture; but to take a picture of animals—even domestic pets whose habits are familiar—in such a manner that their habits, their chief points, their coloring, are preserved, requires more care and thought than the average amateur photographer is wont to spend on his hobby. An article on Animal Photography which appears in the May Delineator will be of great interest to amateur photographers who are devoting their attention to this line of work. The accompanying pictures have been selected for their variety and their general pictorial as well as technical value.

Miscellaneous Department.

In the April Critic is the fourth installment of "The Great Reviews of the World" this issue giving attention to the Russian reviews. The frontispiece is a reproduction of Repin's famous portrait of Tolstoy. Lounger has as usual an interesting department, and as a whole the issue is fully up to its high standard.

Australasian Board of Publication.

At the beginning of the present year a board of publication for Australasia was chosen by the New South Wales Conference. Its duties were set forth as being to see to the publication of a mission paper and such other literature as it shall deem advisable to print for the good of the work. The board immediately set about doing the duty assigned them. The third issue of the Gospel Standard, a monthly mission paper, is now in press. In the publication of this paper, we have had the generous assistance of a number of the American Saints. Were this not so, we would be unable to print the paper. We trust that the American Saints will assist us in this way, until we are in a position to support the paper locally. We are doing a good work with the paper. We have only about four hundred subscribers all told, and as we print one thousand of each issue, we have six hundred copies which we can distribute among those not of the church. Already the paper has gone to places where the elders have never been, and the missionaries feel that it is a veritable missionary wherever it goes. How necessary that it should continue! Surely the Saints of America are large-hearted enough to assist us in this labor of love. We are still willing to receive subscriptions, and those who subscribe may send their names and money to J. R. Epperson, 1723 Walker Street, Des Moines, Iowa, and he will forward to us. Where it is more convenient, the money may be sent to the HERALD Office. Subscription price, 75 cents per year.

We have also begun the publication of other literature, and as our membership is small in this Island Continent, we think it wise to put our larger works on sale in America. We will print no works already on sale in America, so we can not be looked upon as a competitor against the HERALD and Ensign publications. Our reason for putting our pamphlets on sale in America is this: We can depend upon only a limited sale in this country among our members, and if we sell a few hundreds of each publication in America, we cover the cost of publication and still have a supply for the missionaries to use. This is in harmony with the late revelation, which says, "Let a sufficient number be printed, that the traveling ministry be furnished" with enough to distribute. We therefore have no compunctions of conscience in asking the American Saints to purchase our publications so that we shall be able to print enough for the missionaries to distribute. Some may think that we should be content with the publications of the HERALD and Ensign, and so we are; but where we want a publication which neither office can furnish us, we are justified in printing it ourselves. Another thing: Tracts, etc., printed here, will "take" better than those printed in America.

We have just published a forty-eight-page pamphlet (large pages), entitled, "Valid Christian Baptism," which is simply the article on baptism by the writer, which appeared in the HERALD for November 21, 28, and December 5 and 12, 1900. There has been a request for the articles in tract form, so we revised and enlarged it slightly, and published it. Just turn to your HERALD of the dates mentioned, and see whether you can afford to be without the articles contained therein, in handy form for reference.

We will mail you a copy of this pamphlet for 15 cents, or a dozen for $1.50. We will also mail the pamphlet entitled, "The Book of Mormon on Trial," at the same rates. Will every Saint who reads this send for a copy of each of these pamphlets? You will help the struggling workers in this land considerably if you do. A simple way of ordering is this: Put an extra one-cent stamp on a common post card, and address it to the Gospel Standard, Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, and write your order, name, and address on the other side, then mail to us. Then you can write a letter to the HERALD Publishing House, and send them your money, and it will be placed to our credit on the books. In this way the cost of a money order to this country will be avoided. Don't delay or you will be sure to forget. Write now. Walter J. Haworth, Business Manager. Wallsend, New South Wales, March 8, 1902.

Reunion Notices.

As we decided at our last conference to hold a reunion somewhere in the district next summer, and appointed a committee on arrangements, consisting of E. W. Nunley, J. W. Bryan, C. A. Schuster, S. R. Hay, W. R. Standefer, B. F. Standefer, Jr., T. L. Veale, and John W. Sherrill, we wish to hear from every member of the committee soon as to what has been done and what is proposed to be done along the lines set forth at conference. Let us have all things arranged before July. Send your reports to me at Cook's Point. E. W. Nunley.

Convention Notices.

MASSACHUSETTS DISTRICT, TAKE NOTICE.

Massachusetts District Sunday-school Association will convene May 10, 1902, 2:30 p. m. We had expected to meet with the Plainville Branch but conditions have arisen which make it impracticable to meet there. We have written Plymouth people and will notify the branches individually later as to arrangement. M. C. Fisher, District Superintendent.

Died.

CARTER.—At her home, Baldwin, Maryland, March 11, 1902, Sr. Mary E. Carter. She was born April 9, 1845, in Princeton, New Jersey; baptized by Elder A. H. Parsons, November 23, 1893, at Baldwin, Maryland. She remained true to the faith, and by her Christian life and disposition evoked the praise and good will of all who knew her. She said she was ready to go, and knew something better was waiting for her. Funeral services conducted by Elder G. H. Smith. Discourse at the Cherry Hill Methodist church, Maryland. Husband (Bro. J. Carter) and seven children mourn.

NIGHTINGALE.—Miss S. M. Page was born in Liverpool, England, September 19, 1828, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Augusta Fleming, Jackson, California, February 9, 1902. At eighteen years of age she came to America. In 1858 she crossed the western plains and located at Virginia City, Nevada. After four years sojourn in Virginia City, she moved to California. In 1860, she married John F. Davis, who died in 1864. She married William Bastian in 1868. He was accidentally killed after scarcely one year. She married John Nightingale in 1873, who died July 4, 1892.

BOREN.—J. B., son of Israel and Susannah Boren, was born in Union County, Illinois, April 6, 1817; died April 6, 1902. Was married September 25, 1840, to Nancy McIntosh, who was born December 2, 1810, and died April 12, 1868. To them were born three sons and two daughters. Bro. Boren was again married to Mrs. Agnes Branell, October 1, 1868. Funeral held in Saints' church at Crescent, Iowa. Sermon by D. Parish, assisted by S. Harding. Interment in Crescent Cemetery, April 8.

MORRISON.—David Morrison, March 27, 1902, aged 34 years, 6 months, at the home of his father, Elder W. Morrison, Egremont, Ontario. Was baptized March 9, 1881; ordained a priest July 11, 1897. Father, mother, three brothers, six sisters, a loving wife, and two children mourn. Funeral services in Saints' church, Egremont, in charge of Elder G. Henley, assisted by Elder D. McGregor. Died in hope of a glorious resurrection.

ANDERSON.—Bro. Christian Anderson, of Bedison, Missouri, passed away March 6, aged 62 years, 4 months, 12 days. He was born in Denmark; came to this country in 1874; united with the church in 1892; leaves a widow to mourn, their only child having died soon after their arrival in America. Funeral services in charge of Bro. E. S. Fannon, sermon by Elder Peter Anderson, at Union church, March 9.

BRO. J. W. PETERSON, lately returned from the Society Islands as missionary, has presented to the HERALD Office a framed picture of the Mission House at Papeete, Tahiti. The print is from an 8x10 negative, is finely finished, and shows good work. We are pleased to get the picture, and extend to Bro. Peterson our thanks for his thoughtfulness. Bro. and Sr. Peterson and their native servant girl appear in the picture.

SR. S. B. HOPKINS, of Hornerstown, New Jersey, who is eighty-seven years old, writes that she can not do without the HERALD, for they have no preacher nearer than Philadelphia, which is thirty miles away.

In our report of the doings of General Conference which has been in our last two issues, we have only attempted to give an outline of the business done. The record will of course appear in the published minutes, which usually appears as a supplement to the HERALD shortly after conference adjourns.

WITH several more evangelical ministers, a number of new members of the Twelve, a reorganized Presidency, and many troublesome difficulties settled, the outlook for a good year's work is bright.

THE CONFERENCE OF 1902.

The conference just closed will probably be considered one of the most important ones held for many years. The cloud which seemed to hang over the church when the conference began its sessions has been lifted, and the ministry can go out with renewed confidence. The men in the field can and should go to work with a zeal, feeling that the Lord has a close oversight of the work, and confidence among the brethren ought to be great.

The brethren assembled in conference manifested a kindly spirit, and the discussions which occurred on some of the questions, while they were spirited in some instances, were as a whole characterized by a spirit of fairness. The issues were met squarely and as by brethren. Now that the difficulties which have prevailed for some time are settled, there is no reason why the work this coming year should not be prosecuted with a greater vigor than ever before. The mission force placed in the field is larger than ever, and the membership as a whole are called upon to make still greater sacrifices for the sake of the cause for which we are all laboring. The day of sacrifice is fully upon us, and if we as a church arise to the demands of the times we shall have cause for great rejoicing. The signs of the times indicate that the hastening time is here, the gathering time near, and we must awake to the necessity of greater labors and sacrifices.

While the church has placed more men in the field for the purpose of carrying the gospel to the people of the world, the needs of the Saints have not been neglected, for this conference has given us three additional patriarchs, and the Saints may well rejoice that the Lord has seen fit to send among us these fathers in Israel. We greet them with delight, and hope the Lord may see fit to place more in our midst soon.

With two stake organizations in full working order, with a goodly number of "fathers to the church" in our midst, and the membership of the Twelve and Presidency complete, we have cause, we think, for rejoicing and looking forward to a glorious spread of the work and an ingathering of souls into the kingdom of our Master.

General Conference.

MONDAY.

The evening preaching was by A. C. Barmore. He was assisted by Oscar Case.

TUESDAY.

The morning prayer services were in charge of F. A. Smith and F. B. Blair.

At 10:45 H. E. Moler preached, being assisted by J. R. Sutton.

The afternoon business session was opened by prayer by M. H. Bond, after which the minutes were read and approved.

Reports were read from the Third Quorum of Priests and the Quorum of High Priests. Also a report from the Religio Convention.

The First Quorum of Elders reported, and a report from the Fourth Quorum of Priests was referred back for correction.

The auditing committee reported on Bishop's report of college indebtedness.

A communication from Runnells, Iowa, was read, which contained questions concerning relative duties of priests in branches. This was referred to the First Presidency.

The ordination of C. H. Caton, of the English Mission, as a high priest was recommended on report from the Quorum of High Priests.

The proposed amendment to the articles of association, which amendment would place the nominating of members of Board of Publication in hands of conference instead of Bishop, was taken up, and after consideration the proposed amendment was denied.

The amendment proposed in HERALD of January 8, 1902, concerning action of branches on report of findings of elders' courts was considered, and by a large vote denied.

The matter of recommendation of Quorum of High Priests to have auditing board of three members appointed, office of one to expire each year, was taken up, and after some discussion was passed. The selection of the members of this board was made the special order for the next day at three o'clock.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

The evening hour was devoted to a sacred concert given by the Lamoni choir, under the direction of Mrs. Delia Davies. It was well received, and was a meritorious affair.

WEDNESDAY.

The morning prayer service was in charge of Ellis Short and Henry Kemp, and at the morning preaching service the speaker was Arthur Allen, assisted by S. F. Cushman.

John T. Davis offered the opening prayer at the afternoon session.

The resignation of William Anderson as one of the trustees of Graceland College was read, as was also a report from the Daughters of Zion association.

A report was read from the First Quorum of Seventy, in which the following elders were recommended for ordination to the office of seventy: Charles Fry, A. B. Phillips, W. R. Smith, Walter M. Self, Adam J. Keck, and Paul M. Hanson. A motion prevailed to defer action on this matter until the next day.

A report from the Second Seventy was read, and the names of the following were recommended for ordination as seventy: G. C. Tomlinson, J. W. Roberts, and Charles Crumley. Action on these names was also deferred till next day.

Second Quorum of Deacons made report, after which a motion prevailed that no new business be introduced after Wednesday's session.

The special order for three o'clock was then taken up, and the following board of auditors was selected: A. Carmichael, one year; A. J. Keck, two years; F. A. Russell, three years.

Matter of resolution of College Board concerning moneys passing through the hands of the treasurer of the board was taken up, and in connection with it the report of the Bishop was read covering matter of college debt. It was then moved that it be the opinion of this conference that the Bishop of the church should be the treasurer of the board. This was referred to the board.

A motion to adopt the recommendation of the board that all moneys should pass through the hands of the treasurer was followed by a motion to lay on the table, the latter prevailing.

The following were then elected to fill vacancies on the college board: W. A. Hopkins to succeed William Anderson, resigned; Daniel Anderson to succeed himself, and J. A. Gunsolley to succeed himself. A vote of thanks was tendered William Anderson for his past services in this capacity.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

In the evening R. Etzenhouser delivered a lecture pertaining to Book of Mormon matters. He was assisted by J. Arthur Davis.

THURSDAY.

The prayer-meeting was in charge of G. A. Smith and W. A. McDowell.

M. H. Forscutt delivered the morning sermon, and he was assisted by Charles Crumley.

The business session was opened by prayer by Joseph Luff. Report from the Presidents of Seventy was read, as was also additional report from the Second Seventy. In the latter report was a resolution expressing sentiments favoring amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy in the United States and its Territories. This resolution was adopted by the conference, and the Church Secretary was instructed to forward record of such action to the Congressional representative from the Eighth Iowa Congressional district, and the two Iowa senators.

A report was read from the Sunday-school Association. In it was a request for the conference to approve of the appointment of Superintendent Hougas as a general Sunday-school missionary. The request was granted, and a vote of thanks was tendered the association for the substantial help extended by it to the church in the way of donating money towards the general fund and the college debt.

Report was read from the Fourth Quorum of Elders.

The report of the First Presidency on the question referred to them from Runnells, Iowa, was read, and adopted. This will appear in the published minutes.

The matter of ordinations recommended by the Seventies was taken up, and the following were approved and disposed of as the conditions demanded: Charles Fry, A. B. Phillips, W. R. Smith, Walter M. Self, A. J. Keck, Paul M. Hanson, Charles Crumley, G. C. Tomlinson, and J. W. Roberts.

President Smith nominated W. A. McDowell to succeed J. A. Robinson, deceased, as member of the Standing High Council. This was approved.

A number of other ordinations were approved and disposed of by referring to the proper authorities. By motion the ordinations of those present at this conference were ordered provided for outside of business session, and the President referred the matter to the Twelve, they to set time and place. The secretary of the Twelve announced that the ordinations would be performed that evening in the basement of the church.

By a number of motions the various officers and quorums of the church were sustained, and a number of votes of thanks were tendered to various persons, organizations, etc.

A motion was made that President Smith be asked to address the ministry at the morning service Friday. He then arose and spoke as follows:

Before you vote upon that, there are matters yet pending upon which there must be consultation, and if what I have to present, when I can do it, should receive approval, it may change to some extent the present attitude of the church in its organization, and for that reason it seems to me that there ought to be time sufficient allowed for proper consultations in the matter. You are aware that the revelation, by virtue of which Bro. Kelley is serving as associate counselor, provided that it was temporary, and the duties of the evangelical minister as have been stated, are of that character that it relieves him of presiding responsibility, and for that reason the patriarch himself ought to be released from these onerous duties and occupy within the line of consistency. On yesternight I had manifestations that it should be my privilege to present and should the matter be approved it will change the present attitude of the church so far as organization is concerned. I am quite willing to speak to the ministry so far as I am willing to do every duty that devolves upon me, and I would like to carry my responsibilities just as well as I can, but I have been under a fearful pressure this year. I have had my ears filled with all kinds of reports, some of them verging on calumny. Some of them to my way of thinking were absolutely contemptible, and below the dignity of even commonplace men, and it has been a source of worry, trouble; and to tell you the exact truth, I could not, under the condition of things go confidently to God and ask him to interfere. I thought we might possibly reach a conclusion through our own goodness, our own virtue, and our own efforts; however, I respected the fast day, I have kept myself in a receiving condition and attitude, and I am prepared to make a statement, when the proper time comes, unless we choose to go on as at present, we may; if not, further time ought to be given. I am aware that it is irksome to you elders to remain day after day so closely in attention to business. It is hard for you after your active life in your missions. It is not so irksome for us, who spend part of our time quietly, as for you; not so trying for us as for you to be confined. You begin your quorum sessions early in the morning, and you are confined all day on a strain. I know that it must be trying, but I believe that we had best conserve the interests intrusted to our care, by taking a little further time, and doing things quietly, deliberately, and dispassionately, and thus accomplish our aims by getting a better understanding of each other before we go into the field.

Now if I were one of you men passing out from this conference, I would not listen to a report against a person unless proper proofs were given me to know that it was true, and then I would make a proper report at the proper time and place to the proper person, have it properly inquired into, and thus avoid this continued piling up of that which tends to divide and separate. I have lived to see one prophecy that I uttered, completely fulfilled. The Devil has tried to separate us in our ministry, he has tried to do it, to destroy our confidence in each other, and prevent our proper work. I am fortunate in one sense of the word, if any man has any reason why he can not work with me, he has never told me, and so far as I know I have the confidence of every one of my brethren. For that reason I would like to see an era of better feeling obtain among us as brethren. There are lots of questions that bother us that to my mind ought not to last to be carried in our journey until to-morrow night or the next night. Having made this statement you may act at your pleasure as to whether I shall speak to you to-morrow morning or not.

The motion to request President Smith to address the ministry was withdrawn.

In the evening F. M. Sheehy lectured on Book of Mormon matters, being assisted by E. A. Blakeslee.

FRIDAY.

Morning prayer service in charge of F. O. Coombs and H. A. McCoy. Preaching at 10:45 by L. E. Hills, assisted by Arthur Allen.

At the afternoon session prayer was offered by Columbus Scott, after which the minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

The reports of the auditing committee were then approved.

The adoption of these reports cleared the table of business, and so at the suggestion of President Smith the session adjourned to allow the quorums of the church to act on a matter which was to be presented to them. While the quorums were out considering the matter Joseph Smith held a meeting in the auditorium, and preached to the Saints assembled there.

In the evening the preaching was by Joseph Smith, assisted by J. D. Stead.

SATURDAY.

The morning prayer service was in charge of R. M. Elvin and A. V. Closson.

Preaching at 10: 45 by I. M. Smith, assisted by J. S. Patterson:

At the afternoon session prayer was offered by H. O. Smith, after which the minutes were read and approved.

A report was read from the committee on incorporation of the church in Canada. The committee recommended that a committee be appointed to take the matter under consideration further, and by motion the same committee was authorized to make further investigation and act as thought best.

The matter deferred from yesterday was taken up, and reports were read from the various quorums concerning their investigation of the revelation or vision presented through President Smith. After hearing reports of the quorums the document was read to the conference as follows:

To the Officers and Members of the Conference:

1. On the night of April 16 I made the condition of the church a subject of prayer, intensely desirous of receiving light and information in relation thereto and my duty. I awoke at the hour of three and had in presentation the following vision:

2. I saw the assembly of the Saints and the general authorities, the latter being arranged upon a platform with the seats arranged in lines, each line from the front of the platform slightly raised to the rear. On that platform I saw the Quorum of the Presidency, the Bishopric, the Twelve, and a line above the Twelve on the seat behind them, a number of the brethren, including four of the present members of the Twelve and the patriarchs now ordained and recognized in the church. The Quorum of the Twelve was filled, and the places of the four whom I saw on the upper tier of seats were occupied by others known to the church.

3. I asked the question who these men occupying the upper row of seats were, and I was told that they were evangelical ministers, called to minister in spiritual blessings to the church and to preach the gospel undeterred by the burden of the care and anxiety of presiding over missions and districts.

4. I saw in the Presidency two known to the church, but who have not hitherto been connected with the Presidency.

5. I saw the Bishopric as at present constituted, with the attendant bishops upon either side. I asked what was the meaning of this. I was told that the Bishop should not be burdened with the spiritual care of the church except as such might be brought before him in pursuance of the law which provided for the Bishop's court.

6. I then asked what was meant by the choosing of members for the Presidency so young in years. I was informed that it was for the purpose that before the Presidency should be invaded by death these younger men should be prepared by association to be of assistance to whomsoever should be chosen as the President upon the emergency which should occur.

7. The names of those of the present Quorum of Twelve whom I saw upon the upper tier of seats were, James Caffall, John H. Lake, Edmund C. Briggs, and Joseph R. Lambert. These were sitting with the other evangelical ministers. Those whom I saw sitting with the Quorum of the Twelve were, Frederick A. Smith, Francis M. Sheehy, Ulysses W. Greene, Cornelius A. Butterworth, and John W. Rushton.

8. Sitting with the Presidency were Frederick M. Smith and Richard C. Evans.

9. The assembly seemed to be large and orderly, with the different officers of the church in their quorums assembled in much the same order as observed at our annual conferences, but did not seem to be so large as at other times I had seen them.

10. In regard to the gathering and the work of the Bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy.

11. In case of transgression in his office the Bishop should be called in question before the council which is provided for in the law, to which court all the general officers of the church are to be subject.

12. After much thought and pondering upon what I had seen as related above, together with the information contained in the answers to my inquiries, I did not see my way clear to present the matters therein contained in yesterday's session until the church had by its votes sustained the officers of the quorums referred to.

13. It will be seen that there is an apparent invasion of the rule which has been supposed to govern the selection of evangelical ministers, but for this I am not responsible; and the whole matter is hereby submitted for the approval or disapproval of the church.

(Signed) JOSEPH SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 18, 1902.

After some consideration it was adopted by resolution, and made a part of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and ordered to be printed in suitable form, also sent out as supplements to the HERALD and Ensign.

By motion the ordination of those indicated in the vision was ordered, providing, of course, that they accept.

President Joseph Smith then made the following statements:

It will be understood as a matter of course, that the brethren who decline ordination, though their places may be filled by others, they are still, by virtue of their ordinations, high priests, though they may go out of the quorum, and apostles in the sense of being sent out though they may not act with the quorum of the Twelve in quorum capacity.

Perhaps in no time in my life, in the history of my connection with the church, have I hesitated or felt the degree of hesitation in presenting what I believed I was authorized to present to the body, as I did that which has been received, from its peculiar character, and it was not without a struggle that I did it. Not that I doubted its character at all, but from the absence from it of positive direction.

But I read in this book (Doctrine and Covenants) the declaration made touching the priesthood, and in one of the sections it is stated that it is according to the vision that such things occur or are held. There is no record that I know anything of, of that vision. I have never seen it, I don't know what it was, and I have come to the conclusion that it must have been something like this presentation coupled with instructions touching it. We have taken it as a rule of practice in the church that it was according to the vision, but I do not know where that vision was recorded.

I felt under obligations to present what was presented to me to the church in its quorums for approval or disapproval. I understood it to be in the nature of a direction to us in our present condition, and if any other portion of it should have failed I should have asked from the body that they arrange the presidency as it was set forth and release Bro. Kelley of the Bishopric and Bro. A. H. Smith from connection with the Presidency for reasons which I might assign, and for further reasons that it puts them in an unfortunate position before many in the church, and their position has been animadverted upon, perhaps kindly to them, but in a way that has brought a feeling of unrest to me in reference to it, and I should have asked this from the body under my understanding of it.

I have no personal motive, no feeling of antagonism to any of these brethren who are named in this presentation, as to their being removed from this quorum. I have assured each of them personally of this fact, I have stated it to them in their quorum capacity, and I believe they understand that I have no personal motive in it. I can not have any personal feelings, I am too near the grave now, I do not know how far or near it may be.

I have been importuned to settle the question as to who should be my successor. We have advanced upon the hypothesis of lineal priesthood in this regard, and while I believe in it, I believe it is connected with fitness and propriety, and no son of mine will be entitled to follow me as my successor, unless at the time that he is chosen he is found to be worthy in character. I should not expect it. I now state to you, brethren, under the influence of, to me, the Spirit of God, that should I be overtaken by death before some of the things which are anticipated shall be wrought, you have my successor in your midst. I do not say that he should be chosen; if at the time that this emergency should occur he is found to be worthy let him be chosen, if unworthy let him be rejected and another chosen from the body as the revelation provides. And should he be found unworthy and another of my sons found worthy, let the line descend, as I believe that it ought to; for a man should be called to the office to serve in the church who had proved himself to be worthy of confidence and trust. And I certainly thank the brethren for the kindness that they have shown in respect to this matter. I respect the sentiment of those who differ and who have expressed themselves in regard to this, and I honor them none the less and as representatives of the church I shall trust them none the less than I have done in the past, in the office unto which they are now chosen. And as regards those now chosen into the quorum, I shall hope to be able to work with them as chosen of God as well as myself, and so labor with them agreeably, as individuals or collectively.

I hope to be understood upon this point.

It was then moved that President Smith be authorized to cable A. H. Smith to ordain C. A. Butterworth an apostle, if he would accept.

The President stated that the ordinations would be performed at the Sunday afternoon prayer services, and would be in charge of the Quorum of Twelve.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

In the evening the preaching was by W. H. Fuller, assisted by James McKiernan.

SUNDAY.

The Lamoni Sunday-school held its regular weekly session at 9:30.

At eleven o'clock I. N. White was the speaker, assisted by Gomer T. Griffiths.

At 2:15 the Saints assembled for prayer service.

At the beginning of the service the following ordinations took place: Frederick M. Smith, first counselor to the President; R. C. Evans, second counselor; F. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, U. W. Greene, and J. W. Rushton, apostles; J. R. Lambert, E. C. Briggs, and J. H. Lake, evangelical ministers; A. H. Parsons, counselor to president High Priests' Quorum. James Caffall declined ordination as evangelical minister.

Following the ordinations were prayers, testimonies, prophecies, tongues and interpretation, and singing by the Spirit. It was a remarkable meeting, richly enjoyed by those present.

MONDAY.

At the two o'clock session prayer was offered by R. C. Evans. After reading of the minutes, a report from the Fifth Quorum of Elders was read in which they asked for the ordination of T. J. Bell as president, and C. I. Carpenter, first counselor. The ordinations were ordered.

The appointments of the Twelve by the Presidency were read, as also the joint appointments by the Presidency and Twelve. Then the appointments by the Twelve were read. The appointments will be found in another column, on page 389 this issue. The appointments as read were approved.

Bishop Kelley, F. B. Blair, and H. R. Mills were sustained as members of the Board of Publication, and T. A. Hougas and W. A. Hopkins were chosen and sustained as members of the Board.

T. J. Bell was then ordained president of the Fifth Quorum of Elders, to succeed F. M. Smith, and C. I. Carpenter was ordained first counselor.

President Smith then made a short address, followed by Bishop Kelley. These will appear later.

A motion was then introduced and carried that the present report blanks be amended by striking out a number of the columns therein, thus shortening it.

The motion then prevailed that the conference adjourn according to the resolution determining the place and time.

Benediction by John H. Lake.

The Open Air Number of the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, which will be out April 24, will be one of the most notable special numbers of the year. In the opening article, The Serene Duck Hunter, ex-President Cleveland writes about his favorite sport with genial humor and laugh-compelling frankness. William Marconi, the inventor of the most successful system of wireless telegraphy, tells, over his own signature, of the experiments which led up to the marvelous results that he has achieved. In Tales of the Diamond President James A. Hart, of the Chicagos, recalls some good stories of famous ball players, games and enthusiasts. This is the first of two papers.

Every sportsman will read with pleasure Arthur E. McFarlane's spirited story, entitled The Old Feller's Fishin'. Among the other strong features in this number is a new Letter from the Self-Made Merchant to His Son, the second part of Paul Latzke's intensely interesting paper on James J. Hill's School for Railroad Presidents, a new installment of Conjuror's House, and the regular biweekly Washington letter by a Congressman's Wife.

Among the shorter contributions are Mr. F. A. Warner's practical paper on Farming as a Business, Mr. Forrest Crissey's timely sketch of Governor Van Sant, of Minnesota, an exquisite poem by Mr. Bliss Carman, and the usual popular departments.

THE PRESENT CONFLICT BETWEEN SCIENCE AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.—No. 2.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

If we lay aside the Bible as out of date, and as having outlived its usefulness, and look around for a rest for our longing souls, we are at a loss; all is speculation without hope, and we have to tax our imagination to the utmost, finding that we need a self-adjusting conscience and imagination that will wind itself up every time we take up another author on natural history. We do not complain at their facts, but at their reading of the facts.

HOW THEY MEASURE THE AGES.

“The father of waters has been carefully fossilizing the evidences of the flatboat between the great valleys and New Orleans, and burying at all depths from sixteen to one hundred sixty feet, and at all distances from its present bed, from one mile to twenty the recks of bodies of the boatmen and their vessels, this immense mass of alluvium more than three times the thickness of the Nile, is all stratified like it, and the layers are colored differently by the variously tinted waters of its tributaries, like the Nilotic deposit.”—How the World Was Peopled, p. 89.

At Fort Jackson human art, which indicates a highly civilized race, has been found at a depth in the sediment to indicate that man had lived there, according to Nott and Gliddon's calculations, fifty-seven thousand six hundred years ago! (See Present Conflict, pp. 454, 455.)

In an excavation at New Orleans for certain gas works, and at a depth of sixteen feet from the surface, beneath four buried forests superimposed one upon the other, the workmen found some charcoal and a human skeleton, the crania of which is said to belong to the aboriginal type of the Red Indian race, the chronological calculation of Dr. Dowler who believes in pre-Adamite man in America ascribes to this skeleton an antiquity of over fifty thousand years. (See Present Conflict, p. 454.)

“In 1856 an artesian auger penetrated a cedar log eighteen inches thick, which was buried one hundred fifty-seven feet beneath the pavement of Canal Street, New Orleans.”—Present Conflict, p. 454.

THE VALLEY OF THE NILE.

“The Royal Society has made two sets of shafts and borings at intervals in lines across the great valley from east to west, at a place where the Nile Valley is sixteen miles wide from side to side between the Arabian and the Libyan Deserts, in the latitude of Heliopolis, about eight miles above the apex of the Delta. In these excavations, jars, vases, pots, burnt clay, copper knives, land shells, bones of quadrupeds, bones of the ox, hog, dromedary, and ass, were common,” some of these sixty feet below the surface, “but no vestiges of extinct mammalia.”—Ibid., p. 458.

Another fragment of red brick, we are told, was found by Lieutenant Bey at a depth of seventy-two feet, and two hundred meters distance from the river, and taking the rate of deposit for the spot where it was found at two and a half inches (for the century) it has been calculated that this must have been buried over thirty thousand years ago.

It is said that the sedimentary deposit in a century is about six inches at the places from where certain fragments of bricks and pottery were brought up from a depth of sixty feet. Hence its age is put down at twelve thousand years old.

The Nile Valley rises its surface, it is said, from six inches to a few lines during a century, the largest quantities settle close to the stream, the smallest at edge of the inundation, so that it depends where in the valley the relics are found, all relics at the same depth are not considered the same age. These facts, together with the evidences from peat-beds, shell-heaps, cave and lake relics, stalagmite floors, the disappearance of the mammoth, the elephant, and other animals from countries where their remains are found, and the apparent changes of climatic conditions in certain countries are taken to indicate vast periods in the life of the race (much longer than the Bible narrative accounts for).

Such are some of the facts adduced, which are used generally by second parties for the overthrow of the Bible account of the origin of the human race, and from them all may learn a lesson of wisdom.

We feel that we want the truth on our side, but do we sincerely want to be on the side of truth? Are we willing to change places to keep company with the truth? With the truth all things that exist are in harmony. One set of truths will not impeach another set of truths. Lies won't fit together, but truth will. A truth from heaven (if such things be) will be in harmony with the facts from geology and archæology.

Geology and archæology are the recorders of certain facts, certain conditions, but it is not a time-keeper; it does not tell the year nor the century of its own secrets, only so far as the relics themselves reveal a date.

In ancient times there was no universal era like in our times; but they would reckon, “the first year of Cyrus,” or the “third year of Darius,” or as we would the first year of President Roosevelt. But where there is no contemporary history, then we are expected to wind up our imaginations, and follow our teacher, to the very verge of breaking the mainspring of our conscience.

In America we have no acknowledged contemporary history with the relics, but in Egypt it is said there is.

THEIR CALCULATIONS MISLEADING.

All the calculations in the Nile and Mississippi Valleys are unsatisfactory, because they are based upon the present rate of increase of sediment, and present rate of changes in the animal and physical world. The assumption is made that the agencies which effect changes were always about what they are now. But this calculation is not safe, as we will see later on, and we will leave it to the scientists themselves—and out of their own mouths judge them.

Geologists tell us first that great changes have taken place by the action of frost and by ice-drift. The greatest part of New England, and the greatest part of Old England, too, are strewn to this day with the remains of the northern drift, an evidence of ice action on a vast scale immensely greater than any now witnessed in those parts of the world.

Professor Cook, State Geologist of New Jersey, has made a map of the glaciers of New Jersey. A huge glacier traveled slowly from north to south, grinding, scratching, and polishing all in its path, tearing from the rocks it came across blocks weighing some twenty tons, which it deposited in a terminal moraine as eternal witnesses of its passage, this moraine can still be seen as an accumulation of broken rock, gravel, and clay, extending from the Raritan to the Delaware.

These periods of glaciation seem to have been intermittent, or perhaps recurrent. Sutton describes two wholly distinct deposits in Kentucky. According to him, one of these deposits is of earlier date than the formation of the Ohio Valley, and the second was not made until after the river had hollowed out its present bed. A few years ago, Professor Newberry announced his discovery on the banks of the Ohio, of a "forest bed" containing the bones of the mastodon, the mammoth, and of a large beaver-like animal intercalated between two beds of clay the glacial origin of which appeared to him beyond a doubt. "Unequivocal traces of two periods had already been observed near Lake Superior. . . . Lastly the Geological Survey of Canada has in its turn quite recently authenticated two periods."

Traces of this ice-drift are found in rocks striated or rounded like a sheep's back "by the friction of glaciers, moraines, drift gravels, terraces, and huge erratic blocks which were carried by the ice. In New England glacial striæ have been met with at a height of 3,000 feet; in Ohio, the loftiest reach 1,400 feet; while those in Iowa, Michigan, and Wisconsin, attain a height of about 1,200 feet above the sea-level. In California, a large area bears witness to the action of glaciers which came down from the Sierra Nevada; while in the forests of Brazil, in countries watered by the Amazon, as well as on the vast savannahs of the Meta and the Apuri are found erratic blocks of conical form, which some observers suppose to have been brought down by great glaciers from the Andes. Agassiz tells of similar phenomena in the very heart of the tropics in the valleys of the Amazon and the Rio de la Plata and he considered them to be so numerous that he could not but conclude that they extend all over the American continent."—Prehistoric America, pp. 17, 18.

"Man lived through these convulsions, he survived the rigors of the cold, he survived the floods, as the recent discoveries of Dr. Abbott in the glacial deposits of the Delaware near Trenton, New Jersey, seem to prove beyond a doubt."—Prehistoric America, pp. 19, 20.

Professor Putnam says he sees no reason to doubt the general conclusions in regard to the existence of man in glacial times on the Atlantic Coast of North America. (See note, p. 19, ibid.)

The human relics found in these glacial deposits "are of very hard trap, an argillaceous rock of volcanic origin. . . . They occur in the midst of boulders, some of them twenty feet in diameter, and of rocks striated and polished by the action of ice, or which have been swept along by torrents of water. One of the implements has scratches exactly similar to those of the stones amongst which it was found. This is too important a fact to be omitted."—Ibid., pp. 20, 21.

Take again the action of water in by-gone ages. Professor Humboldt tells us of traces of such action on the banks of the Orinoco in South America, one hundred sixty and one hundred ninety feet above the present level of the river and adds that "these traces prove, what indeed we learn from all the rivers of Europe, that those streams which still excite our admiration by their magnitude, are but inconsiderable remains of the immense masses of water belonging to a former age."

And even Sir Charles Leyell speaking of the alterations in the Valley of the Muse says, "It is more than probable that the rate of change was once far more active than it is now."

Professor Baldwin speaking of the Mound-builders says: "None of these works occur on the lowest formed terraces which mark the subsidence of the western streams; and as there is no good reason why their builders should have avoided erecting them on that terrace, while they raised them promiscuously on all the others, it follows, not unreasonably, that this terrace has been formed since the works were erected. It is apparent, also, that in some cases the works were long ago partly destroyed by streams which have since receded more than half a mile, and at present could not reach them under any circumstances. Those streams generally show four successive terraces, which mark four distinct eras of their subsidence since they began to flow in their present course. The fourth terrace, on which none of the works are found, marks the last and longest of these periods; and it also marks the time the Mound-builders ceased to occupy the river valleys where it was formed."—Ancient America, pp. 47, 48.

If "ice action with torrents of water," was so much greater in remote times, and within the "human period," if the rivers "are but inconsiderable remains of the masses of water belonging to a former age," if the streams show successive terraces, which mark the distinct eras of their subsidence, from what Professor Baldwin says, then that means less rainfall, that means less sediment would be washed from the bed and banks of the streams in their annual floods, and less loose material remaining within their reach and power to be carried down the streams. In the course of long periods, therefore, the amount of alluvium deposited during the annual freshets and inundations must naturally be reduced, the rainfall being less, the streams smaller, the present rate of change is not a safe basis to calculate from, hence then all calculations based upon that hypothesis must be misleading. And Professor E. Fontaine we think was right when he said that "the age of no fossil found in the alluvium of the present Delta of the Louisiana can be determined."—Present Conflict, p. 453.

In the Mississippi Valley the fossil remains show extinct mammalia, but in the Nile it does not. Sir Charles Leyell says that the age of Egyptian building "remains uncertain and obscure."

Sir John Herschel and Professor Piazzzi Smith have attempted to determine astronomically the age of the oldest pyramid, and their calculations placed its erection between 2171 and 2123 B. C. (See Present Conflict, p. 411.)

"When Champollion, in the course of his researches into the Royal Rings, came to read upon the Zodiac of Dendera, he found the title of Augustus Cæsar; while on that of Esneh, he read the name of Antonius. That temple, therefore, which M. Dupuis had declared to be 4,000 years older than the Christian era, proved to have been built about the time of its commencement; and the edifice of Esneh, which had been profoundly demonstrated to be 17,000 years old when the Savior came, was shown to belong to a period 140 years after his advent."—Ibid., p. 410.

And such are some of the calculations made use of to impeach the Bible narrative.

Sir G. C. Lewis takes Egyptologists to task in their attempt to formulate a chronology for Egypt. "Under their potent logic," says he, "all identity disappears; everything is subject to become anything but itself. Successive dynasties become contemporary dynasties; one king becomes another king, or several other kings, or a fraction of another king; one name becomes another name; one number becomes another number; one place becomes another place."—Historical Survey of the Astronomy of the Ancients, p. 368; Present Conflict, p. 411.

Great stress has also been put on certain relics found in peat-moors, but calculations along this line also like the rest, are uncertain.

Carl Vogt says, "We neither know generally within what time a stratum of peat one foot may grow, nor do we possess any scientific data to calculate the quantity of growth within a given time."—Present Conflict, p. 438.

Professor Leyell says, however, that "The overthrow of a forest by a storm, about the middle of the seventeenth century, gave rise to a peat-moss near Lochbroon in Ross-shire, Scotland, where in less than half a century after the fall of the trees, the inhabitants dug peat."—Ibid., p. 439.

From the above we see the uncertainty in the great claims which are made for relics found in other peat-moors.

Large heaps of oysters and other marine shells are found in Denmark, Georgia, California, British America, and Massachusetts, etc. It is argued by some naturalists, that here primitive man lived on marine food long ages before he learned to provide for his wants by agriculture, and that these shell-heaps represent a time in human history before he lived in cities. Some of these shell-heaps are very large, and cover several acres of ground. (See Prehistoric America, pp. 480, 481, 47 to 57.)

But, "at the present day, there are tribes of Indians in British North America, who form such refuse heaps still; while contemporary with them, there are others who have no such customs."—Present Conflict, pp. 444, 445.

Now who can tell which Indians are the oldest, the ones that are making shell-heaps, or the tribes that don't? Who is warranted to conclude that these refuse heap makers are greatly more ancient than the others that don't make any heaps at all? These fragments of humanity that formed the shell-heaps in lands remote from the early cradles of civilization, which are said to have lived on such a low plane of life, who are believed to be older than the Bible man, may have been like those who live on shell food now in North British America—why not? It is not because they are older than other people, but simply because they are outside of civilization, or civilized influences. They may have migrated at some time from some seat of civilized life, to escape a state of dependence, the horrors of war (Ether 4:1, Book of Mormon), or slavery, or banished from organized society, such men exiled, or exiling themselves, and passing into climates unprepared for the struggle with nature, and away from the centers of culture, where progress was continually making in the arts, instead of advancing, they would actually retrograde, until the commerce of other lands where civilization had gone on making progress, came to introduce the arts among them, or swept them away as by conquest, as unworthy to live!

The shell-heaps in Denmark, Georgia, California, Massachusetts, Oregon, and elsewhere, may have been in formation when men were building Copan or Babylon. Men are making shell-heaps now in North British America while other men are building Dawson City and Cripple Creek.

The coins, medals, and articles of iron found in Swiss Lakes speak for themselves (see Beginnings of Civilization, p. 206) and indicate comparatively modern times. So with the peat-bog of Bernea-Jura the bones of a horse and iron horseshoe indicate civilized life (see ibid., p. 204).

"The cultivation of the cereals, the presence of all the modern domestic animals, plainly point to a similar condition of things. The occupants of these Lake-dwellings were not mere savages; as Oswald Heer informs us, they raised two distinct breeds of cattle, cultivated five kinds of wheat, and three kinds of barley; among them was the wheat commonly called Egypytain."—Present Conflict, p. 449.

When we put these things all together, and take a general view of the entire subject, and weigh the evidence fairly, we reach the conclusion that the skeptic has not made out a good case against the Bible. Even by leaving the case in the hands of his own witnesses, it stands unimpeached, their witnesses don't agree, neither as to man's age, nor as to the number of human species. Virey argues for two Adams, Jacquinot three, Kant four, Blumenback five, Buffon six, Hunter seven, Agassiz eight, Pickering eleven, Desmoulins sixteen, Morton twenty-two, Crofurd sixty, and Burke sixty-three! That means that these professors don't know. That means that they are only guessing, and some of them guessing at random, and that seems to be a common science conclusion.

THE BIBLE CRONOLOGY.

"The extreme uncertainty attending all attempts to determine the chronology of the Bible," says Hodge, "is sufficiently evinced by the fact that one hundred and eighty different calculations have been made by Jewish and Christian authors, of the length of the period between Adam and Christ. The longest of them make it 6,984, and the shortest 3,483 years."—Systematic Theology, vol. 2, p. 41; Present Conflict, p. 396.

The following are the dates given in the Hebrew and Greek Texts, the figures indicate the age of each individual when the next was born. It will be seen that the list from Adam to Abram makes a difference of 1,356 years.

	Before the Deluge.			After the Deluge.
	Sept.	Feb.		Sept.	Feb.

—Present Conflict, p. 392.

So that the Bible chronology, like all other chronologies, are in doubt, and that doubt can never be removed, only by being corrected by inspiration. The Scriptures do not teach us how long men have existed on the earth (in their present condition). The tables of genealogy were used only to prove that Christ was the son of David, of the seed of Abraham, and not how many years have elapsed between the creation and the advent.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF LANGUAGES.

"None of the languages of modern Europe," says Lyell, "are a thousand years old. No English scholar who has not specially given himself up to the study of Anglo-Saxon can interpret the documents in which the chronicles and laws of England were written in the days of King Alfred; so that we may be sure that none of the English of the nineteenth century could converse with the subjects of that monarch if the latter could now be restored to life." The same holds true of Germany. "They who now speak German, if brought into contact with their Teutonic ancestors of the ninth century, would be quite unable to converse with them, and, in like manner, the subjects of Charlemagne could not have exchanged ideas with the Goths of Alaric's army, or with the soldiers of Arminius in the days of Augustus Cæsar."

THE BOOK OF MORMON VERIFIED.—NO. 1.

ESTABLISHED BY FORTY EMINENT ARCHÆOLOGISTS AND AUTHORS.

BY ELDER A. B. PHILLIPS.

The Book of Mormon was published in 1830, copyrighted June 11, 1829, and the plates from which it was translated were first received by Joseph Smith in 1827. It comes to us as the record of the ancient inhabitants of America, of whom but little was then written and much less known. But much has been discovered concerning these mysterious aborigines in recent years which almost perfectly accords with the Book of Mormon record in its prominent features, thus confirming it as a true history of these ancient people of whom numerous ideas have been advanced concerning their origin. On this point A. J. Conant says, page 113: "None of the many theories, some of which seemed quite probable at first view, have withstood the test of later investigations."—Footprints of Vanished Races, published 1879.

Notwithstanding the failure of all these theories, we confidently present the only work ever claiming to give a true record of these ancients, believing investigation will show it to be genuine.

Short's North Americans of Antiquity, published in 1880, says, on pages 144 and 145: "Closely allied to the theory of the ten lost tribes, is the claim set forth in that pretentious fraud, the Book of Mormon. . . . The claim, of course, merits mention only on the ground of its romantic character, and not on the supposition, for a moment, that it contains a grain of truth."

As the Book of Mormon shows that the first people came to America nearly or quite five hundred years before any of the twelve tribes were in existence, and the second colony consisted of less than twenty grown people, as recorded, of the tribe of Joseph, we fail to see that it is "closely allied to the theory of the ten lost tribes." But it is hardly proper to insert romances in a scientific work, which is evidently what Mr. Short feels that he has done, and we expect to show that the Book of Mormon is not a romance, but contains "a grain" of truth in each of its statements that we shall examine, which will relieve Mr. Short of the result of his conclusions, which, however, he has given without showing wherein the Book of Mormon contains anything untrue.

It is claimed that in 1827 the Book of Mormon plates were delivered by an angel into the hands of Joseph Smith, being inscribed in characters called reformed Egyptian, and was translated by means of Urim and Thummim, instruments similar to those used anciently by Jewish priests. (1 Samuel 28:6; Exodus 28:30.) It is a record of the descendants of Jared and his people who came from the Tower of Babel about 2240 B. C. (Genesis 11:9), and also of a people who were of the tribe of Joseph who came from Jerusalem 600 B. C., and of the people of Zarahemla who came to America at the time Zedekiah was carried a captive to Babylon.

At the time the Book of Mormon was published, what little was written of the antiquities of this continent was almost entirely in foreign publications, and so expensive that few even knew of their existence; in fact it was not until several years afterward that the more important discoveries were made, and these discoveries have corroborated the Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon statement that a colony came from the Tower of Babel, not only agrees with Genesis 11:9, but also with the traditions had by the American aborigines, of which St. Giles says in his Faiths of the World, page 298, "almost all tribes preserved the story of a flood and a great destruction and re-peopling of the earth; there were many legends, too, reminding us of the scriptural Babel Tower. . . . As in the Bible, the differences of dialect are accounted for by the interposition of Deity causing confusion of tongues."

Charnay's Ancient Cities of the New World, published in 1860 and 1884, says on pages 15 and 16 of introduction: "We are constantly referred to the tradition of a foreign origin and the native flood myths. . . . As a sequel to the flood myths we come upon traditions of the building of a tower of refuge, and this has led some writers to identify the Americans with certain of the builders of Babel, who were scattered over the earth after the confusion of tongues." How does the Book of Mormon, which was published before these works containing the aforementioned traditions, happen to agree with discoveries since made known to the public, unless it is a true record?

On pages 501 and 502 (small edition) of the Book of Mormon, we find: "The brother of Jared did cry unto the Lord, and the Lord had compassion upon their friends, and their families also, and they were not confounded" in their language. This is confirmed by Bancroft in "Native Races," volume 5, pages 20 and 21, published in 1875, as follows: "It is found in the histories of the Toltecs . . . that man and all the earth were destroyed by great showers and by lightnings from heaven, so that nothing remained, and the most lofty mountains were covered up and submerged to the depth of caxtolmoletlli, or fifteen cubits; and here they add other fables of how men came to multiply again from the few who escaped the destruction in a toptlipetlacali; which word very nearly signifies a closed chest; and how, after multiplying, the men built a zacuali of great height, and by this is meant a very high tower, in which to take refuge when the world should be a second time destroyed. After this their tongue became confused, and, not understanding each other, they went to different parts of the world."

Priest's American Antiquities, edition of 1835, page 206, says of the confusion of tongues, according to their traditions: "Among them were fifteen heads or chiefs of families, which were permitted to speak the same language, and these were the Taltecs, Aculhucans, and Azteca nations, who embodied themselves together, which was very natural, and traveled, they knew not where, but at length arrived in the country of Aztalan or the lake country in America."

The Book of Mormon states that they went northward into the valley of Nimrod, and from there "into the wilderness, yea into that quarter where there never had man been;" they crossed many waters and finally came to "that great sea which divideth the lands."—Page 503.

Nineveh and Calah were about four hundred miles north, and Calneh and Erech east and southeast, and Philistim southwesterly from Babel, (see Gen. 10: 10, 11, and 14, also Bible map.) Therefore it logically follows that they traveled west or northwest if they went where "never had man been," and after arriving on the border of the ocean they built boats "tight like unto a dish," and crossed to Central America, probably, in three hundred forty-four days, and "built a great city by the narrow neck of land." Also in this region they built "many mighty cities." (See Book of Mormon, pages 517 and 520.)

St. Giles says of their traditions, on page 298: "They have come over the sea, come from the far East, great oceans have been crossed, long journeyings have been performed." Concerning the remains of their "many mighty cities," Bancroft says in Native Races, volume 4, page 145, that Stephens and Catherwood "boldly left the beaten track and brought to the knowledge of the world about forty ruined cities, whose very existence had been previously unknown." These explorations were made from 1840 to 1849 and hence could not have been the source of the Book of Mormon record, which must be what it claims or it could not have stated this fact more than ten years in advance of science, and before their "very existence" was known.

The Jaredites were skilled in the arts and sciences, their remains being similar in some respects to those of Egypt, from which they probably learned to some extent before their emigration to America. On this subject, Nadaillac's Prehistoric America, first published in 1882, page 14, says: "To erect the monuments of Mexico and Peru, the yet more ancient ones of Central America,—the singular resemblance of which, in some particulars, to the temples and palaces of Egypt, strikes the archæologist,— must have required skilled labor, a numerous population, and an established priesthood." Page 386 says: "Everything goes to prove that the ancient races of Central America possessed an advanced culture, exact ideas on certain arts and sciences, and remarkable technical knowledge." Of architecture he says on page 411: "In certain characteristics this architecture recalls that of the Egyptians." Why should it not, as they came from that region near Egypt? Confirming this, Jones' History of Ancient America, published in 1843, pages 168 and 169, says: "Egypt claims at once the general character of the architecture, but not sufficient to establish that it is strictly of national order, as practiced on the border of the Nile;—but, enough is shown to prove, that a people built those cities in America who had a knowledge of Egyptian architecture."

Pidgeon's Traditions of De-Coo-Dah and Antiquarian Researches, published in 1852, says on page 19: "Ancient Egypt, first in science and famous in art, has also left her impress here."

Marquis De Nadaillac says in a work published 1892, Prehistoric Peoples, page 364, "Embalming was also practiced in America." He cites several instances and gives some illustrations of Peruvian mummies.

The Book of Mormon, on page 517, states that they had cattle, oxen, cows, sheep, swine, goats, horses, asses, elephants, cureloms, and cumoms. For years after the publication of the Book of Mormon the prevailing opinion was that the horse was unknown to America until brought here by the Spaniards. It was taught in at least two of our school geographies and William Robertson, Histographer to His Majesty for Scotland, in his publication of 1790, The History of America, says on page 31: "The camel, the dromedary, the horse, the cow were as much unknown in America as the elephant or the lion." (See report of Committee on American Archæology, page 95.)

Modern investigation has shown that Robertson was wrong and the Book of Mormon right, as the following will plainly show.

Larkin's Ancient Man in America, published in 1880, page 19, says: "My theory that the prehistoric races used, to some extent, the great American elephant, or mastodon, I believe is new, and no doubt will be considered visionary by many readers, and more especially by prominent archæologists. Finding the form of an elephant engraved upon a copper relic some six inches long and four wide, in a mound on the Red House Creek, in the year 1854, and represented in harness with a sort of breast collar with tugs reaching past the hips, first led me to adopt the theory." (See "American Archæology," page 75.) This new theory of 1854 had, however, been stated as a fact by the Book of Mormon more than twenty-five years before that time, saying that these animals were all useful to man, but "more especially the elephants, and cureloms and cumoms." —Page 517.

Dana's Manual of Geology, published 1880, page 571, says: "Viewing the globe as a whole, in this Quaternary era, we observe,—1. The gigantic size as well as large numbers of the species,—the elephants, lions, bears, and hyenas of the Orient far larger than the modern kinds; so also the horse, elephant, mastodon, beavers, and lion of North America."

The American Antiquarian, volume 22, page 231, says: "In the post-Pleiocene period, for example, the horses and elephants and camels of North America and Europe were so closely allied that their common ancestors must have passed from one continent to the other." The Book of Mormon shows that they came from the eastern continent.

Winchell's Sketches of Creation, published in 1871, page 356, says: "I have myself observed the bones of the mastodon and elephant imbedded in peat at depths so shallow that I could readily believe the animals to have occupied the country during its possession by the Indians; and gave publication to this conviction in 1862." He further says: "Remains of the hog, the horse, and other animals of recent date, together with human bones . . . are there lying mingled with the bones of the mastodon."—Ibid., p. 356.

The Jaredites extended northward from Central America and finally became so numerous that the whole face of the land northward was covered with inhabitants. (See Book of Mormon, p. 520.)

This record is confirmed by the following from Baldwin's Ancient America, published in 1871, page 70: "That appears to me the most reasonable suggestion which assumes that the Mound-builders came originally from Mexico and Central America. It explains many facts connected with their remains."

On page 520 of the Book of Mormon we are told that they worked in "all manner of ore," to obtain which "they did cast up mighty heaps of earth to get ore, of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of copper." This statement was opposed to opinions of the scientific world at that time, but even the manner of obtaining ore as stated in the Book of Mormon has since been established as a fact, as shown by Baldwin's Ancient America, page 43. He says: "Remains of their mining works were first discovered in 1848 by Mr. S. O. Knapp, agent of the Minnesota Mining Company, and in 1849 they were described by Dr. Charles T. Jackson in his geological report to the national government. Those described were found at the Minnesota mine, in Upper Michigan, near Lake Superior. Their mining was chiefly surface work; that is to say, they worked the surface of the veins in open pits and trenches. At the Minnesota mine, the greatest depth of their excavations was thirty feet."

These accounts agree perfectly that by "surface mining" or casting up "mighty heaps of earth" they obtained their ore, and are evidence of the strongest kind that the Book of Mormon is what it claims to be, a record written by the aborigines of America. This record also states on page 520 that they worked in "all manner of cloth," "and they did have silks and fine twined linen." For years it was claimed that these ancients did not have cloth, but it has now been proven that they could spin and weave, as is shown by Baldwin's Ancient America, on page 41: "There appears to be evidence that the Mound-builders had the art of spinning and weaving, for cloth has been found among their remains. At the meeting of the International Congress of Prehistoric Archæology held at Norwich, England, in 1868, one of the speakers stated this fact as follows: 'Fragments of charred cloth made of spun fibres have been found in the mounds. A specimen of such cloth, taken from a mound in Butler County, Ohio, is in Blackmore Museum, Salisbury.'"

Also in Maclean's, The Mound Builders, published in 1879, on page 73, we read they "used cloth regularly spun with a uniform thread, and woven with a warp and woof."

We also read in the Book of Mormon, page 520, that they made "all manner of tools" and "all manner of weapons of war," and "all manner of work of exceeding curious workmanship," and so numerous had they become previous to the Nephite civilization that they described them as "a people who were as numerous as the hosts of Israel."—Page 158.

Pidgeon confirms this in Antiquarian Researches, page 5, as follows: "It can not be any longer doubted that there has been a day when this continent swarmed with millions of inhabitants, when the arts and sciences flourished."

Also Baldwin in Ancient America, page 34, says: "No savage tribe found here by Europeans could have undertaken such constructions as those of the Mound-builders. . . . This condition of industry, of which the worn and decayed works of the Mound-builders are unmistakable monuments, means civilization." Also he says: "Relics of art have been dug from some of the mounds, consisting of a considerable variety of ornaments and implements, made of copper, silver, obsidian, porphyry, and greenstone, finely wrought. There are axes, single and double; adzes, chisels, drills or gravers, lance-heads, knives, bracelets, pendants, beads, and the like, made of copper. There are articles of pottery, elegantly designed and finished."—Ibid., p. 40.

Donnelly's Atlantis, published in 1882, page 142, says: "The American nations manufactured woolen and cotton goods; they made pottery as beautiful as the wares of Egypt; they manufactured glass; they engraved gems and precious stones."

They were also highly developed in the art of surgery according to Professor McGee, who at the American Association of Sciences Convention, at Detroit, August, 1897, said: "I have examined twenty-four cases of trepanning on nineteen skulls out of a collection of one thousand. Trepanning, the most daring and difficult modern surgical operation, was performed more plentifully in Peru in ancient days than in military hospitals of the present."—Zion's Ensign.

Youth's Companion, May 16, 1901, says at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo is "a collection of nearly a hundred human skulls which were trephined by the natives of Peru in the time of the Incas . . . the condition of most of the skulls showing that the patient recovered and survived for years."

Nadaillac says, page 267: "We meet with numerous examples of trepanation in America, and fresh discoveries are daily made by the energetic men of science in that country."—Prehistoric Peoples, published in 1892. He mentions three examples from Peru of trepanning. The great knowledge exhibited in these and numerous other remains of this ancient people are most convincing monuments of their intelligence and skill, confirming, also, the Book of Mormon as a true record of them.

Baldwin says of Yucatan ruins, page 101: "Some of their works can not be excelled by the best of our constructors and decorators." Of Mexican and Central American ruins, page 153: "Many ages must have been required to develop such admirable skill in masonry and ornamentation."

This great people was finally nearly exterminated by wars, and Coriantumr is mentioned as the last of the Jaredites found by the people of Zarahemla, who came to Central America about 588 B. C. (see Book of Mormon, pages 137 and 532), where they were found by the Nephites, who left Jerusalem 600 B. C. and landed presumably in Chili; from whence they moved northward and found the Zarahemlites about 200 B. C., who had become quite numerous, but had degenerated to a great extent in their civilization, and finally were numbered among the Nephites, by whom many of the Jaredite cities were rebuilt. Of the antiquity of the Mound-builders, Baldwin says of their skeletons: "The earth around them has invariably been found 'wonderfully compact and dry.' And yet, when exhumed, they are in such a decomposed and crumbling condition that to restore them is impossible. Sound and well preserved skeletons, known to be nearly two thousand years old, have been taken from burial-places in England and other European countries less favorable for preserving them." "This," he says, "allows us to assume that these extremely decayed skeletons of the Mound-builders are much more than two thousand years old."—Ancient America, p. 49.

On page 73 he says: "What has been said of the antiquity of the Mound-builders shows that a very long period, far more than two thousand years, it may be, must have elapsed since they left the Valley of the Ohio."

This is just what the Book of Mormon showed to be a fact, forty years before Baldwin's work. It also states that they built houses of wood in the land northward, and Baldwin in explanation of the bare mounds found in such abundance says that they doubtless were built "of wood or some other perishable material; therefore not a trace of them remains." But of the southern ruins he says: "Many of the great buildings erected on such pyramidal foundations, at Palenque, Uxmal, and elsewhere in that region, have not disappeared, because they were built of hewn stone laid in mortar."—Ancient America, p. 18. Also he says: "Everywhere in the older ruins, nothing remains but the artificial mounds and foundations of earth, the stone, the cement, the stucco hard as marble, and other imperishable materials used by the builders." But had they used only perishable material as in the north, he says: "The places where they stood with no relics save the mounds and pyramidal platforms, would resemble the works of our Mound-builders."—Ibid., page 157.

We have stated that the later civilization (the Nephites), rebuilt some Jaredite cities, the ruins of which were abundant. That there was a people distinct from the Jaredites, who rebuilt their cities, is shown by recent archæological works. Baldwin says: "The monuments suggest successive and varying periods in the civilized condition of the old inhabitants, some of the oldest and most mysterious monuments seeming to indicate the highest development." Also: "The evidence of repeated reconstructions in some of the cities before they were deserted has been pointed out by explorers."—Ancient America, pp. 76 and 156.

Short says of the later civilization: "They were preceded by a race possessed of no inferior civilization, who were not their ancestors, but a distinct people."—North Americans of Antiquity, page 27.

Baldwin says: "These are not the oldest cities whose remains are still visible, but they may have been built, in part, upon the foundations of cities much more ancient." Also: "It can be seen that some of the ruined cities which can now be traced were several times renewed by reconstructions."—Ancient America, pp. 156 and 152.

What science here proclaimed, was published in the Book of Mormon forty or fifty years previous, as follows: "And it came to pass that there were many cities built anew and there were many old cities repaired."—Page 443. We read that they also used cement in their constructions (see Book of Mormon, p. 324), which is also attested by Baldwin on page 99. Of Palenque we read: "The floors are of cement as hard as the best seen in the remains of Roman baths and cisterns." Remains of their works in cement are extended from South to North America in abundance and volumes could be written showing stupendous works to have been constructed by these ancients.

But we now consider the Nephites; a colony composed of at least eighteen people (and probably some children additional), chief of whom were Lehi and his four sons, Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi. Nephi was the junior, and from whom the civilization was named, he becoming the leader, and at his death his successor being called second Nephi; each successor for a long time taking his name. This record is corroborated by archæologists as shown by Rivero and Tschudi in "Peruvian Antiquities," published in 1853 on page 52. He says: "Its first inhabitants flowed in abundantly toward the valley of Cuzco, conducted by four brothers," . . . "The youngest of the brothers, who, according to tradition, was at the same time the most skillful and hardy."

Baldwin says this civilization was originated "by a people led by four brothers, who settled in the valley of Cuzco, and developed civilization there in a very human way. The youngest of these brothers assumed supreme authority, and became the first of a long line of sovereigns."—Ancient America, p. 264. As the Book of Mormon stated this more than twenty years before it was disclosed to us by archæologists, there is every reason to believe that the book is true.

Shortly after the Nephites "journeyed in the wilderness" from the coast, there was a division among them, one party being called Lamanites and the other Nephites, who journeyed for "many days" and finally settled down, tilled the soil, raised flocks, built buildings, and worked in iron, copper, brass, steel, gold, and silver, and "precious ores." The Book of Mormon was attacked upon the ground that the ancient Americans never at any time had iron, but not long afterward it was sustained by archæology as the following shows: On page 248 of Ancient America, Baldwin quotes from Molina, who says: "Iron, which has been thought unknown to the ancient Americans, has particular names in some of their tongues."

Baldwin says: "It is impossible to conceive how the Peruvians were able to cut and work stone in such a masterly way, or to construct their great roads and aqueducts without the use of iron tools. Some of the languages of the country, and perhaps all, had names for iron."—Ancient America, p. 248. Priest says of a mirror found at Circleville: "On this mirror was a plate of iron which had become an oxide; but before it was disturbed by the spade resembled a plate of cast iron."—American Antiquities, p. 185. Caleb Atwater says: "Iron has been found in very few instances, having oxidized. They made use of it in some cases for knives and swords, the remains of which have been discovered in many tumuli."—Writings of Caleb Atwater, published in December, 1833, page 127. Bancroft says of the Thlinkets, a wild tribe who lived north of the Columbia River: "They excel in the working of stone and copper, making necklaces, bracelets, and rings; they can also forge iron."—Native Races, volume 1, page 107. Of Peruvian remains, Bancroft says: "The ancient people were especially skillful in the construction of aqueducts, some of which were reported by the early writers as several hundred miles in length, and a few of which of less extent are still in actual use."—Ibid., vol. 4, p. 801. Baldwin says: "It is noticed everywhere that the ancient Peruvians made large use of aqueducts, which they built with notable skill, using hewn stones and cement."—Ancient America, p. 243. He mentions one which was 450 miles long. How could such works be hewn from stone without iron tools? Perhaps they did it with their finger-nails! Iron, in time, will rust away, and for this reason, alone, we have but few remains to prove their knowledge of this metal.

The Book of Mormon says on page 433: "There were many highways cast up, and many roads made, which led from city to city, and from land to land." This statement is proven true by modern writers, as shown by Nadaillac, who says of the ancient Peruvian civilization:

"At the present day its memory is everywhere preserved in the imposing ruins covering the country, the fortress defending it, the roads intersecting it, the acequias, or canals conducting the water needed for fertilizing the fields."—Prehistoric America, pp. 387 and 388. Also Baldwin, who says: "Nothing in ancient Peru was more remarkable than the public roads. No ancient people has left traces of works more astonishing than these, so vast was their extent and so great the skill and labor required to construct them. One of these roads ran along the mountains through the whole length of the empire, from Quito to Chili. Another starting from this at Cuzco, went down to the coast and extended northward to the equator. These roads were built on beds or 'deep understructures' of masonry. The width of the roadways varied from twenty to twenty-five feet, and they were made level and smooth by paving, and in some places by a sort of macadamizing with pulverized stone mixed with lime and bituminous cement. This cement was used in all the masonry. On each side of the roadway was 'a very strong wall more than a fathom in thickness.' These roads went over marshes, rivers, and great chasms of the Sierras, and through rocky precipices and mountain sides. The great road passing along the mountains was a marvelous work: In many places its way was cut through rock for leagues. Great ravines were filled up with solid masonry. Rivers were crossed by means of a curious kind of suspension bridges, and no obstruction was encountered which the builders did not overcome. The builders of our Pacific railroad, with their superior engineering skill and mechanical appliances, might reasonably shrink from the cost and the difficulties of such a work as this." "It was quite as long as the two Pacific railroads, and its wild route among the mountains was far more difficult." "They are called 'roads of the Incas,' but they were probably much older than the time of these rulers."—Ancient America, pp. 243-245.

The record of the Incas extends to A. D. 1021 and how much farther their history, if known, would take us we can only conjecture, but Baldwin says "it is now understood that they represent only the last period in the history of a civilization which began much farther back in the past."—Ibid., p. 261. Therefore, if these roads are "much older" than the time of the Incas, as Baldwin states, it would agree with the Book of Mormon account, which shows some of them to have been begun as early as A. D. 27. No people known to the first discoverers of this region could have accomplished such an enormous work as the constructing of these roads involved, and no other record than the Book of Mormon claims to be a history of these ancient people.

Frequent wars and contentions finally caused some of the Nephites, led by Mosiah, to flee from the Lamanites who had become the most numerous, and about 200 B. C. they arrived among the Zarahemlaites, uniting with them and finally spreading out over North America. Many of the people became very wicked and about 50 B. C. there was organized a secret band, afterward called Gadianton robbers, who became very numerous, dwelling in the mountains and wilderness. Prophets also began to go forth exhorting the people to repent, saying that Christ should shortly come to earth and giving signs that would shortly come to pass. Finally, 634 years after Lehi left Jerusalem, there "arose a great storm" and a "terrible tempest" and thunder that "did shake the whole earth as if it was about to divide asunder," and many cities were destroyed, some buried or sunk, the roads broken up, and especially "in the land northward" where "the whole face of the land was changed," and sixteen cities are mentioned by the Book of Mormon as having been destroyed, with many inhabitants. This tempest and earthquake lasted three hours and "a thick darkness" which lasted "for the space of three days" prevailed over all the land. See Book of Mormon, pp. 438, 439. This statement is sustained by the multitude of upheavals seen in America, by the ruins discovered in recent years buried at various depths, and by the traditions of the aborigines of this continent. Bancroft's "Native Races," volume 5, page 209, says of these traditions: "The second age, the 'sun of air,' terminated with a great hurricane which swept away trees, rocks, houses, and people, although many men and women escaped, chiefly such as took refuge in caves which the hurricane could not reach. After several days the survivors came out to find a multitude of apes living in the land; and all this time they were in darkness, seeing neither the sun nor moon." Of Aztec traditions St. Giles says there were "four great ages or cycles, each measuring thousands of years, each ended by the action of the elements." "The third age was closed by tempests and hurricanes so disastrous that only few of mortals were left."—Faiths of the World, p. 301. Where did these traditions originate, if not from actual occurrences? and how do they, in substance, happen to agree with scientific disclosures recently made, if the Book of Mormon is untrue?

After the darkness passed away, a great multitude gathered "round about the temple which was in the land Bountiful" (Central America), conversing about this fulfillment of prophecy, when "they heard a voice as if it came out of heaven;" this they heard three times, and as they looked "Behold, they saw a man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe, and he came down and stood in the midst of them." "And it came to pass that he stretched forth his hand, and spake unto the people, saying, Behold I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world."—Book of Mormon, p. 443. This appearance and teachings of Jesus Christ to the people of this continent after his crucifixion at Jerusalem are a bone of contention with those not believers in the Book of Mormon, but to us are entirely reasonable and scriptural. Christ is "the Savior of all men" (1 Timothy 4: 10). He has "made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon all the face of the earth," in order that they "might seek the Lord" "and find him" (Acts 17: 26, 27); hence why not these as well as others find him? He was to die "not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad." (John 11: 52.) He said: "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15: 24), yet he tells us in John 10: 16: "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold [Judah]: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." The fold of Judah had heard his voice, and hence his appearance to the fold of Joseph on this continent. Ezekiel 37: 15-22 shows Judah and Joseph to be the two folds that shall be gathered with Christ as their shepherd, hence those who have died in Christ of either fold will reign with him at his coming, as also those alive at his appearing who have received him. But we leave this part of the subject and examine that from archæologists, which abundantly attest that Christ did appear or was known here as well as in Palestine.

Donnelly says: "When the Spanish missionaries first set foot upon the soil of America, in the fifteenth century, they were amazed to find that the cross was as devoutly worshipped by the red Indians as by themselves."—Atlantis, p. 319.

Bancroft mentions a "cross nine feet high" on Cozumel Island which was "annually visited by a great number of pilgrims."—Native Races, vol. 2, pp. 792 and 793. He also says in volume 3, pages 467 and 468: "One of the most remarkable emblems of Maya worship, in the estimation of the conquerors, was the cross, which has also been noticed in other parts of Central America and in Mexico." Kingsborough mentions traditions in Yucatan of the Father called Yzona, the Son called Bacab, and the Holy Ghost called Echwah (vol. 6, p. 164). According to these traditions Bacab was crucified upon a cross. Of this, he says on page 166: "So in these Mexican paintings many analogies may be traced between the events to which they evidently relate, and the history of the crucifixion of Christ as contained in the New Testament. The subject of them all is the same,—the death of Quecalcoatl upon the cross, as an atonement for the sins of mankind. In the fourth page of the Borgian MS., he seems to be crucified between two persons who are in the act of reviling him." On page 163, he says Gomez while in Guiaxca was shown "drawings which had been copied from some extremely ancient painting. . . . She who represented Our Lady had her hair tied up in the manner in which the Indian women tie and fasten their hair, and in the knot behind was inserted a small cross, by which it was intended to show that she was the most holy; and that a great prophet would be born of her, who would come from heaven, whom she should bring forth without connection with man, still remaining a virgin, and that his own people would persecute that great prophet, and meditate evil against him, and would put him to death, crucifying him upon a cross;—and accordingly he was represented in the painting as crucified with his hands and feet tied to the cross and without nails." (See Kingsborough's Mexican Antiquities, vol. 6.)

In the temple "La Cruz" is a cross which Baldwin says "is supposed to have been the central object of interest. It was wonderfully sculptured and decorated; human figures stand near it, and some grave ceremony seems to be represented. The infant held toward the cross by one of the figures suggests a christening ceremony. The cross is one of the most common emblems present in all the ruins. This led the Catholic missionaries to assume that knowledge of Christianity had been brought to that part of America long before their arrival."—Ancient America, p. 109.

Evidences as clearly confirming the Bible, as are these which sustain the Book of Mormon, would be received with eagerness by the Christian world, but within the same period of time those of the Book of Mormon preponderate in number, variety, and convincing proof.

The Book of Mormon also shows that the doctrines of baptism and the resurrection were taught by these ancient religious teachers in America, and this is clearly sustained by various authors, from which we present, first, the Antiquarian Journal, volume 20, page 275, (published in 1898,) which, in a footnote says: "Mr. F. H. Cushing was initiated into one of the secret orders of the Zunis and was baptized by one of the Zuni chiefs in the waters of the Atlantic Ocean while on an eastern tour with these chiefs." Also in Rivero's Peruvian Antiquities, page 180, says: "Baptism was general among all the Peruvian nations west of the Andes."

De Roo says: "Baptism was in the Mexican empire a religious ceremony, which in Yucatan was called 'Zihil,' signifying to be born again; and the Nahua nations freely admitted that it would cleanse the soul from all sin." (See History of America before Columbus, published 1900, volume 1, page 467.)

St. Giles says of this custom: "None might marry who had not been baptized; an unbaptized person was held to be incapable of leading a good life; the banquet at baptism was called the Descent of God, and the baptized were spoken of as 'born again.'"—Faiths of the World, p. 294. A belief in the immortality of the soul and "resurrection of the body" was common both in South and North America, and especially pronounced in Mexico and Peru (see Conquest of Peru, published 1847, vol. 1, p. 89).

Bancroft says: "The opinions of the Mexicans with regard to the resurrection of the body accorded with those of the Jews."—Native Races, vol. 5, p. 86.

BURNING OF THE WICKED.

This subject is of such import that it will well repay consideration.

There is written in the Book of Revelation 16:12: "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

We read further in Malachi 4:1: "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

In connection with these two quotations, I will quote from Hosea 12:10, I. T. The Lord speaks through the prophets "and uses similitudes by the ministry of the prophets."

In consequence of this last quotation from the Prophet Hosea, I believe that the above quotations from the Book of Revelation and of Malachi should be considered as similitudes, and must be explained in that sense.

The prophecy in Revelation 16:12, which should be fulfilled in the last days, is a similitude of what was accomplished about five hundred and thirty-eight years before Christ, when the Medes and Persians under Cyrus came upon Babylon, and the whole place was destroyed and became desolate. (Jeremiah 51:43, 44, I. T.)

And the following is yet to be fulfilled: "And the sixth angel poured out his vial [the wrath of God] upon the great river Euphrates; [upon Babylon, being the wickedness of the earth; Euphrates means Babylon, as Lebanon means Palestine;] and the water thereof was dried up, [the Spirit of the Lord was taken away, Genesis 8:5, I. T., 16:3, K. J.; Isaiah 29:8, I. T.; John 7:38, I. T.,] that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared" that they might be ripe for the fire of destruction, like the destruction of Babylon of old through the Medes and Persians, who took its government away; so shall spiritual Babylon fall, and wickedness or abomination reign no longer. (Jeremiah 51; Isaiah 21:1; Doctrine and Covenants 28:5; Zechariah 14:12, 13.)

When wrath of God is spoken of, it must not be understood in the spirit of revenge, but as a figure of speech.

We read: "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all."—1 John 1:5.

The wrath of God is compared with fire. The Psalmist said: "How long, Lord? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? Shall thy wrath burn like fire?"—Psalms 89:46.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured; coals were kindled by it."—Psalms 18:8.

Fire is one of the four elements; it not only gives light and heat, but with it we try and purge the metals, and the word is used by the Almighty as a similitude indicating a power to separate, to purify. Even as metals are purified from the dross by power of fire, so will there be powers at work to separate all evil from good, every corruptible thing from incorruptible things. We read: "Therefore I am come to send fire on the earth."—St. Luke 12:58, I. T.; 12:49, K. J.

In connection with this read: "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, nay; but rather divisions."—Luke 12:60, I. T.

It seems to me that fire and division have here the same meaning. We read further: The word of God is as a fire which will try all our works at the great judgment. (1 Cor. 3:13.) Here we find again that fire is used to denote division between good and evil works. We read further: "An ungodly man diggeth up evil: and in his lips there is as a burning fire."—Proverbs 16:27.

"And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell."—James 3:6.

Here we see that fire is used to express division by showing the great harm a person with an evil tongue does, not only by making division between friends through lies, slanders, and other provoking speeches, but also by separating himself from God by defiling his body.

We read that the Lord at his coming will be "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thessalonians 1:18.

Read in connection with this: "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire and like fullers' soap."—Malachi 3:2.

Here our Lord and Savior is compared to fire, but it is to my mind clear enough that this is not intended to mean that he is like literal fire, but that he is endued with that power of justice and judgment whereby he will separate the righteous from the wicked (Malachi 3:18), even as gold and silver are purged from the dross through literal fire. Because it is written in Malachi 3:3, "And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."

Here we find that the Lord is as a refiner, that he shall purify the sons of Levi, the priesthood under the Mosaic Law, a similitude of the Church of Jesus Christ, his temple, verse 1, the holy priesthood, 1 Peter 2:5, and purge, separate, or sever them as gold and silver; as gold and silver are purged so as to become pure gold and pure silver by separating them from all other metals and of the dross, so shall he separate the wicked from among the just and shall cast them out into the world to be burned; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. (Matthew 13:51, I. T.)

The Prophet Malachi says: "In that day . . . shall ye . . . discern between . . . him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."—Malachi 3:17, 18.

So we may come to the conclusion that a separation will take place between the Saints who will be considered as pure gold (the pure in heart, Zion) and those of lesser value (silver with dross) who have to be sent back to stand their further purification in the fire with the world, so as to cleanse them of the dross; as the Psalmist said: "Thou puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross; therefore I love thy testimonies."—Psalms 119:119; Doctrine and Covenants 105:9, 10; 85:8. We have seen how fire purges the gold from foreign substance, and now let us find out in what way the silver (the slothful and disobedient ones) is purged from the dross, and how the heathen nations will be purged or judged, and by what kind of fire. We read in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore they must remain filthy still."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:8; Book of Mormon, Mosiah 8:6.

"I the Lord can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven; and he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts."—John 1:9; Doctrine and Covenants 1:5; Genesis 8:5, I. T.; 6:3, K. J.; Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 11:11.

We read further: "The hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:6.

¶ If we take these last two quotations and examine them, we must come to the conclusion that the wrath of God upon the wicked is the withholding of his blessings and the taking away of the light which they have received, whereby they fall in darkness and become subject to the power of darkness, the Devil, who, being the enemy of God and his workmanship, even mankind, exerts all his power to accomplish their destruction by wars, by desolating sickness, fire, etc.; they will take up the sword one against the other and will kill one another, until all those who are appointed unto death have met their doom; and nothing left but the pure metal without the dross. (D. C. 45: 4; 63: 9; Zech. 14: 12, 13; Ezek. 38: 21, 22; Isa. 1: 22, 25, I. T.; B. of M., small edition, page 50, paragraphs 2 and 3.)

We know that the Lord changeth not; he is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever (Heb. 13: 8; Mal. 3: 6), and we must therefore conclude that he will judge the wicked in the same manner as formerly; and we read in the Book of Mormon a prophecy about the destruction of the wicked, which happened at the time of the death of our Lord Jesus Christ, which prophecy reads practically the same as the prophecy of Malachi 4: 1; Doctrine and Covenants 108: 12, and Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2. It reads as follows: "And after the Messiah shall come, there shall be signs given unto my people of his birth, and also of his death and resurrection; and great and terrible shall that day be unto the wicked; for they shall perish; and they perish because they cast out the prophets, and the saints, and stone them, and slay them: wherefore the cry of the blood of the saints shall ascend up to God from the ground, against them. Wherefore all those who are proud, and that do wickedly, the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, for they shall be as stubble; and they that kill the prophets, and the saints, the depths of the earth shall swallow them up, saith the Lord of hosts: and mountains shall cover them, and whirlwinds shall carry them away, and buildings shall fall upon them, and crush them to pieces and grind them to powder; and they shall be visited with thunderings, and lightnings, and earthquakes, and all manner of destructions; for the fire of the anger of the Lord shall be kindled against them, and they shall be as stubble, and the day that cometh shall consume them, saith the Lord of hosts."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 11: 10.

We may therefore conclude that the results of both prophecies will be the same. (Book of Mormon 4: 1-9.)

We read in Ezekiel, that the Israelites were consumed with the fire of the wrath of God, because of their wickedness; and the result was, that the wicked (the filthiness) were destroyed, and the rest were scattered among the heathen nations. (Ezek. 22: 15-31; Ps. 66: 10-12, I. T.) We will find in Zechariah 14: 1-21, and in the two chapters of Ezekiel 38 and 39, practically the same purification of Jew and Gentiles; thus the Lord will sanctify himself, and will be known in the eyes of many nations. "Gog and his army," as mentioned in Ezekiel 38: 14, is the name for the heathen nations, which will go to battle against Jerusalem. Magog is the land or the rest of these nations which have to be purified by fire, as silver from the dross (Mal. 3: 3); therefore we read that the sixth part will be left (Ezek. 39: 2); and all those nations which are left shall come up every year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts (Zech. 14: 16).

Some might think that this battle with Gog will not take place before the end of the thousand years' reign. The answer is: That at the end of the millennium, not only Gog, but also Magog, meaning all the wicked, will come to battle against the saints; and whereas, we will read in Zechariah 14: 14, that Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem and the Lord come to their rescue; and whereas, the Jews, as a nation, are not yet converted, because if they were, they would come under the gospel law, and it is written, that the saints are forbidden to shed blood (D. C. 63: 8); therefore we must come to the conclusion that the first battle takes place before the millennium; while the second battle of Gog and Magog (the wicked ones of the earth) will take place after the millennium; and Michael, even the archangel (not Judah), shall fight the battles of the saints (Rev. 20: 7-10; D. C. 85: 35).

Some might think, "if the world is not going to be destroyed by literal fire, what then about the following quotation of Isaiah, which has reference to the second coming of the Lord?"

"Oh that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that thou wouldst come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence, as when the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence."—Isaiah 64: 1, 2.

Read in answer to this the following: "Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks."—Isaiah 8: 7; read also Revelation 17: 15.

It is clear to my mind, that when in the Scriptures mention is made of fire or of waters, it does not always mean literal fire or literal water; we have to discern the difference; so in the above revelation fire and waters and boiling, to my comprehension, are used as similitudes for wrath, the heathen nations or the wicked and commotion. It is the same thought but in another form as expressed in Ezekiel 38: 21-23.

Another might say: "But it is written that the elements shall melt with fervent heat" (2 Peter 1: 10, 12), and how can that happen unless it is literal fire? I answer, that it is not meant that there will be universal fire, and that the sky will melt; because by element is meant, the wickedness, the rudiments of the world—ungodliness and worldly lusts. (Titus 2: 12; 1 John 2: 15, 16; Galatians 4: 3, 9; Colossians 2: 8, 20.)

Another reason why, in this case, fire is not meant literal fire, because it would destroy all animal life in the world as well as vegetation; the idea, that the reason that the Saints are to be caught up is to escape burning from literal fire is, I believe, not scriptural. We read in Isaiah: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them."—Isaiah 11: 6.

If literal fire was meant, and that everything would be destroyed, except the Saints, the above prophecy, besides many others, would be a failure.

"O, no!" said another, "because Zion, the city of Enoch, was taken up unto heaven with the earth whereon it stood, and all the houses and animals with it, and will come down and be amongst us during the thousand years' reign."

I do not believe that the city of Enoch (the houses, trees, animals, and the part of the earth whereon it stood) ever was taken up, and thus I can not believe it ever can come down; but Enoch and the people of Enoch (called Zion the pure in heart) will we meet, if we are faithful, at the coming of our Lord. I can not imagine that God will take a part of the earth away, with houses, trees, etc., before the earth has been sanctified, which sanctification will take place after the millennium (Rev. 21: 1; D. C. 85: 6). I can nowhere find in the Scriptures that the houses and the earth on which they stood were taken up to heaven.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants, section 45, paragraph 2, "Is the God of Enoch and his brethren, who were separated from the earth [this looks to me that no particle of earth went with them; otherwise mention would have been made thereof, but it mentions only Enoch and his brethren], and were received unto myself; a city reserved until a day of righteousness shall come."

Some might think that this city means the houses. But may I ask of such: If we read in a newspaper that "the whole city went out to meet a certain individual," does that mean that the houses and trees and animals, etc., went out to meet that person, or does it mean the people?

We read further in Doctrine and Covenants, section 36, paragraphs 12 and 13, and in Genesis 7: 27, 70, I. T.: "And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it [the place, the city] shall be called Zion, a [not the] New Jerusalem. And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shall you and all your city [Zion of Enoch, the pure in heart] meet them there."

Where are they going to meet the people of God? Unto a place, a holy city, a New Jerusalem which is going to be prepared by God on this earth before the coming of our Lord and before the coming of Enoch and his city (the people, his brethren).

It is clear to my mind that only one city, as described in Revelation 21, will come down from heaven, and that city will be the New Jerusalem; it will come down after the millennium when the whole earth is sanctified and prepared for the celestial glory, that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever, when it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father (B. of M., small edition, p. 526; D. C. 85: 4.)

"Never a tear bedims the eye
That time and patience will not dry;
Never a lip is curved with pain,
That can't be kissed into smiles again."

Truth and Honor with Children.

"I hate lies!" said my sister one day.

"Perfectly proper, Nell," said I. "Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord, too."

"Well, I really can see no excuse for a lie."

"Can't you? I can. Unwarranted curiosity about one's private affairs. For instance, you must surely recall the time that prying Miss Staples asked you if you were engaged, before a soul knew of your engagement outside of our family. Do you remember what you said?"

My sister blushed. "Yes—I—lied."

"You did, Nell; and it was a justifiable act, too!"

"I'm not sure of that. I think, if such an instance should occur now, I could escape with neither confession nor lies."

"Possibly——"

"I always did try to speak the truth," continued Nell. "But I believe I dislike lies much more since I have children. I do so hate to have them untruthful."

I laughed, recalling some of little Frank's latest prevarications. "Did you have such a siege of it with Doris?" I asked.

"Doris has had her time, but the motive in her case was a different one. Frank is ingenious and originates a lie to gain some end, principally for the pleasure of his stomach. Doris is tempted by fear, or, rather, shame, because of some naughty thing she wishes to hide."

"Do you mean that she still does it?" I asked in surprise, not having noticed anything of the kind in the five-year-old.

"Yes, occasionally; but I can generally get her to be perfectly truthful by not making too much of the offense she is trying to conceal. She understands now that I can endure the knowledge of any sin if she is straightforward in confessing it. It surprises me, however, that it should take so long to teach my children to be truthful."

"Perhaps you are reaping the harvest of your lie to Miss Staples!"

"Don't!" said Nell, shivering. "But, really, I have tried so constantly never to be severe with Doris when she tells me of wrong-doing that I can not understand why I must still handle her so carefully. Often I must coax the truth from her, but I never consciously let her go without getting her to tell me it all."

"Both the children have good imaginations," I said.

"Yes; but they rarely are untruthful from the impulse of that alone. A few times they have told me of events that I knew had not occurred, and I have said at the end: 'That's a make-believe story, isn't it?' And they admitted it frankly enough."

"Then, too, don't you think children sometimes dream things that seem to them true?"

"Undoubtedly, we must make allowance for that."

"Well," I said, "Doris and Frank trust you implicitly, Nell; and that will certainly make your task easier."

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

First Assistant Superintendent J. A. Gunsolley reported. From his report we clip the following:

"My work has been mostly of an advisory character. I attended the Dow City, Iowa, reunion and assisted in the work there. I also attended a two-day meeting at Galland's Grove, Iowa, in the summer, representing both Sunday-school and Religio interests.

"Being employed in the publishing house, much of the executive oversight of our publishing interests has devolved upon me, and has received the best attention I could give. Especially the Study Hour has demanded no little attention. Perhaps a word or two upon this latter item, as to the financial status of this publication would not be thought amiss. It has been prepared with a great deal of labor and care. The cost to date including appropriation is about $243.00. The estimated receipts are about $30.00, leaving a deficit of about $213.00. Our bona fide subscription list is about 100, which, being less than one half the number issued (500), excludes it from the newspaper postal rates, thus requiring us to pay book postage. Of the first issue, about 250 were mailed as sample copies. We suggested in a published notice that those receiving samples who found them of use might remit price and let the association have the benefit of same. I remember one instance where a sister acknowledged receipt of sample, expressed her appreciation of it, and remitted ten cents therefor. Others are yet to be heard from. These facts are pre-ented that the convention may be in possession of such information as will be necessary to have for the proper consideration of the report of the committee on preparation of the Study Hour, that it may act intelligently as to the permanency of the work. Whether it fills a want that is sufficient to justify its continuance, must be determined by the body. I have not sufficient information to recommend either for or against.

"I am greatly encouraged in the work of the association and believe that prospects were never brighter. I am sorry to have not been able to do more and hope to be of use in the future.

"In bonds,

"J. A. GUNSOLLEY."

Report of the Second Assistant Superintendent:

"To the Convention of the General Sunday School Association, Greeting: Another year has followed the swift years of the past, and soon another General Sunday-school Convention will have done its work. Let us pray that it shall be by the direction of the All-wise.

"As I look upon the year from my limited viewpoint, I am encouraged that progress has been made. The little army of faithful workers is swelling its numbers, and beginning to see the fruit of its labor. We have received the addition to our teachers' helps so long needed by our primary workers, and are not disappointed in it; notwithstanding this has added slightly to expenses, we have been so prospered as to be able to reduce the price of the whole line of Quarterlies and still keep on a perfectly safe financial basis. In view of this, I question if the time has not come when it would be safe and wise to place a Sunday-school missionary in the field to be supported by a fund as may be provided for. Many were disappointed that on account of a lack of available funds and other hindrances, Bro. Hougas did not reach the Eastern Mission this year. I believe that if a fund were provided, perhaps by special collections in the schools, it would be supported, and needed work could be done thereby. I appreciate the work done for the Sunday-school by our church missionaries, but their first duty is to preach the gospel. I note also the progress made in the home department work; and in this field, I see before us possibilities for good to be accomplished which we have as yet barely entered upon: Here is a work in which every earnest and wise Saint may become an effectual missionary. My own labors for the Sunday-school have fallen far below my desires and hopes. At the beginning of conference year I made efforts in different ways to get into communication with the Sunday-school workers in the Eastern Mission, that I might get to know their needs, and if possible aid and encourage, but up to date I have not obtained the necessary addresses to communicate with all.

"I have visited the New York and Philadelphia Districts and striven to advise and encourage them in the way of institute work and the study of better methods. I attended the convention of the New York District held in February last and was much encouraged by their first program along these lines, and I hope that Philadelphia will make an equally good showing in their next convention.

"The Massachusetts district has been going forward under good leadership for several years; I have contributed my mite the past year, attending conventions, assisting in the programs at reunions, etc.

"Elders I. M. Smith and C. H. Rich, laboring in the Maine districts, have given special attention to Sunday-school interests there. I had hoped that an organization of a district might be accomplished there, but they do not seem to be ready for it as yet.

"It is with deep regret that I have given up hope of meeting with you in this convention. My prayers shall be for its best success.

In gospel fellowship,

"GEORGE H. GATES."

The report of the General Secretary showed a gain of 38 schools, and 2,690 in membership. Thus there are now in the General Association 46 district organizations, 357 schools, and a grand total enrollment of 18,342. Part of the report this year is based upon the report of last year, several districts failing to report. Can we not make a better showing another year? That is, can we not get reports from all the districts? I trust that district officers will not overlook the fact that reports are very necessary, and that it is the work of district officers to furnish all necessary information along these lines. Our financial condition was very good as shown by the report of the General Treasurer. It showed a large surplus on hand, the net profit from the issue of the Quarterly. While the increase was very large this year, owing to many delinquent accounts being collected, it will probably be much less next year from the fact that the cream of the accounts are now collected, but more particularly from the fact that the subscription price of the Quarterlies has been reduced twenty per cent.

The balance was sufficiently large to make it possible to donate $500 to the general surplus fund of the church, and $500 to the college indebtedness.

Letter Department.

BALDENOB, Arkansas, April 13.

Editor Herald: It is somewhat discouraging to the Saints here at present, as Bro. Sands, our elder, will be away for a few months. We have had a nice little Sunday-school ever since it was organized last summer at Bro. Sands' dwelling; have missed only three Sundays. We will begin again next Sunday and try to carry it on ourselves. We have moved out of one room in our house to make room for Sunday-school. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may not be too easily discouraged, so that when the elders come back this year they will not have the same work to do over, but that this branch may be organized more fully and that we will place ourselves in a worthy condition, so more honest-hearted souls may be added to our branch. Saints here should strive to come up higher every day, and to let our light shine that others may see our good works. How can we expect others to be added if we do not do our duty?

We had a series of meetings here last summer, held by Brn. H. O. Smith, Joseph Ward, and W. S. Macrae, that will long be remembered. There was only one soul added, my husband, Mr. Johnson. When we were first married he was very much opposed to the work. He was a slave to the use of tobacco, but quit just before he obeyed. I thought, before he obeyed the gospel, if I could only see him baptized I would be happy; but still I am not satisfied. I want to see him come up higher. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may live so as to be a good helpmeet for him, both spiritually and temporally. My life has not been sunshine altogether, especially since I obeyed the gospel, but if we are humble and prayerful, when dark clouds hover over us, when they have passed by the sun will shine the brighter, and encourage us to come up higher.

We take the HERALD and Ensign; they are welcome visitors in our home, and we gain much spiritual strength by reading their contents. We were sorry to hear of the death of Bro. Short, but oh what a joyful thought to know that he has only passed from mortality to immortality.

Dear Saints, I realize my weakness very much, but I wish my life to be a living sacrifice for the cause of Christ. Pray for me, and my prayers shall ever be for the welfare of Zion.

Your sister in bonds,

BEULAH JOHNSON.

BEAVER, Missouri, April 12.

Editors Herald: Not being permitted to attend the General Conference, I have tried to be content in my field of labor while conference is in session.

The Saints here, having no church in which to worship, I have been preaching in private houses with a degree of interest. There is talk of a church being built, but just what will be done in the matter remains to be seen. I am stopping at present at the quiet home of Elder J. C. Chrestensen.

It is a busy time for farmers of Southern Missouri. After the drouth here, prices of bread-stuffs and feed are high; but manual labor and church work must go on. No time for idling, but let us all, whether we till the soil or preach the word as missionaries or locally, all work wisely, that our labor be not in vain. Let the product of the field and the talent of the minister of Christ be used to one common end; namely, to build up the kingdom of God on earth.

Elder Premo and other Saints have recently moved in here from the Northwest, and it is to be hoped that a flourishing branch will be built up. Why not? Shall sheaves be here ungathered or waste among the mountains of the Ozarks? Let us this year make a long pull and a strong pull for the right, all pulling together and "contending against no church, save the church of the Devil," and we shall be blessed in Jesus' name.

By letter from Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, dated April 17, we learn that he had baptized a Chinaman and that on the 20th an American, his wife and two children were to be baptized.

It was thought that Bro. A. H. Smith would return by way of Honolulu and stop over a week or so en route. We have no advices personally to date, (April 29.)

THE CONFERENCE.

It will be expected, we suppose, that the HERALD will have something to say of the late annual session of conference. However, what the HERALD may have to present must be of a general character.

There was before and at the opening more or less of a feeling of apprehension as to the nature of the session and the final and general outcome.

In the minds of some this apprehension seemed to be well grounded, in view of what transpired at the sessions of 1900-1901. So when the assembly was called to order on the morning of the 7th, anxiety was seen reflected from the countenances of some, who dreaded the shock of contest.

The anxiety passed away, however, as the session progressed, until the greater part of the members were in mind prepared for any exigency that would arise, so well were they fortified in patience and good will to all.

The business of the session was quite successfully conducted to safe conclusions, and a desire for a harmony of action was quite discernible. There did not appear to be a desire on the part of any to work for or reach purely personal ends. The good of the whole and the best and the right seemed to be the object sought by all. That there were different views as to the way and the means to reach desirable results must be conceded; it would have been a very unusual assembly if there had not been. There was little if any feeling of antagonism manifested, and a spirit of concession for the sake of harmony was quite marked and found expression.

We believe that some questions and subjects hitherto causing uneasiness to a greater or lesser extent were removed from the field of controversy, and will not jeopardize the harmony of the body again.

The change effected in the quorum of the Twelve, relieving some of the older men from the care of the field and putting the labor on younger men, should be beneficial, and we trust it will be.

Those brethren chosen to be evangelical ministers have labored with greater or lesser success in the past, and acceptably to the Master, we believe, and it is certain that they will be well received in their ministry again.

Bro. James Caffall, who did not see his way clear to accept the office of evangelical minister, will labor as an high priest and apostle, in Iowa, and wherever the Spirit may direct him, or wisdom and occasion demand.

The prayer and testimony meeting on the third Sunday of the session was largely attended and greatly enjoyed by the Saints. The Spirit of prophecy and testimony was present in considerable power, and with many. It will be remembered long by those present; it was providentially the good wine at the close of the session.

The brethren, many of them, stayed until the close of the session, wisely determining that it might be necessary. The delegates chosen from the membership, sisters and brothers, showed a greater degree of interest in the proceedings than ever before, and appreciated the business methods employed to reach final conclusions.

We are persuaded that the results will be good.

CRUSADE AGAINST "MORMONISM."

On his way home from conference Bro. F. E. Cohrt wrote on April 20, sending the accompanying clipping. We give place to both letter and clipping.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, April 20.

Editors Herald: Inclosed find a tocsin for war. Listen to the modern Goliath, who spreads himself like a green bay tree. How "do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing."

As valiant soldiers, courage, brethren, it spurs us for the fray. Our adversary clothes himself in gorgeous apparel, in coat of mail, helmet, shield, and spear. But with a pebble of truth, from ye valiant sons of modern Israel, this our foe will be met.

F. E. COHRT.

AN APPEAL FOR AN ANTI-MORMON CRUSADE.

I only wish I were able to sound the alarm as I think it should be sounded. There are 10,000 Mormon elders preaching the doctrine of the Mormonic fraud. Many of the members of the Church of Christ are deceived by their teaching. Within a circuit of ten miles of this place, I know several, who would be faithful and devoted members of the body of Christ had their minds not been poisoned with this delusion. The insinuating talk, the conciliating argument by which the Mormon elder approaches the weak disciple is calculated to deceive the elect.

Any disciple who has been associated with these people, will recall the first step the Mormon asks you to take: "You Disciples are all right so far as you go but you do not go far enough." The Disciple gives his assent, and the seed is sown that has ruined individuals, families, and neighborhoods.

I think it frequently occurs that our good, faithful, and efficient ministers, relying upon their ability to stand upon the Bible and the Bible alone, engage in debate with Mormons, and after the debate is on find they have not quite surveyed the field and the result is a triumph for Mormonism in that locality. Down comes Christianity and up goes Smithianity.

I want to urge upon the brotherhood from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that we put specialists in the field to cope with and vanquish this foe; that there be an organized effort to meet this crying evil in every State and territory. Let us know, when a Disciple is to meet a Mormon, that it means a victory for the truth, that David has met Goliath and that the David is the Disciple.

I believe this is God's work. The Christian Church has the men and the means. Will a goodly number of us set ourselves apart to the work? We have had here at McArthur, Ohio, a debate between John T. Bridwell, of the Disciples and Elder McDowell, an able Saint, which illustrates what competency, ability and preparation will do. Bro. Bridwell prepared himself, and the result is that Mormonism in this locality has been dealt a deadly blow. Bro. Bridwell has no superior in this work. He is a specialist, and should make it his life work. He is a noble man, thoroughly good, never does or says anything that the brotherhood has to apologize for. Now it occurs to me, very strongly, that a number of men of his efficiency, sustained in the field, directed by a Anti-Mormon board, whose business it would be to place them where needed, could not only stay the tide of Mormonism and save scattered Disciples, but could plant churches of the primitive order.

Along with Bro. Bridwell, we have R. B. Neal, Clark Braden, D. H. Bays and others who are now able to do this work. Bro. Bridwell will go wherever called. He now contemplates a trip through West Virginia and Kentucky, and is only anxious that he may have calls enough to take him into the very heart of Mormondom—Salt Lake City. Let me make an appeal. Are there one hundred disciples who will give $10 this year for the support of this work. Let every one who will, write me pledging that amount. Don't send any money now, just your pledge, which will indicate that you are willing to join in this work. I will write for your pledge later.

We will start the work, and at the next General Missionary Convention, which meets at Omaha, Nebraska, we will organize for the work by getting together, selecting an Anti-Mormon board with a secretary and treasurer, and by a year from now we can have an organization that will be doing very effective work. Interest will grow as time goes on. For one I agree to be at Omaha and aid in permanently organizing this work, account for what is done between now and then, and continue in the work. I refer you to J. M. Morris, Walla Walla, Washington; E. V. Zollars, Hiram, Ohio, C. A. Freer, Columbus, Ohio, and I. N. McCash, Des Moines, Iowa. Hoping to hear from many, I am,

Yours respectfully,
MCARTHUR, Ohio.

JAMES W. DARBY.

[There can be no question about the pernicious activity of Mormonism, nor of the need of special preparation on the part of those who would expose its real character. In addition to competent specialists to meet their representatives in oral discussion, there should be an assortment of well-prepared tracts and books for distribution. We have some literature of this kind but there is needed some systematic method of distributing it. We commend Bro. Darby's appeal.—EDITOR.]—From Christian Evangelist, April 10.

DR. KENNEDY ON INEBRIETY.

Dr. J. F. Kennedy, of the Iowa State Board of Health, read a paper in Des Moines, sometime in March, at a meeting of the State institution superintendents and board of control, on the subject of "Inebriety and its Management." The Council Bluffs Nonpareil for March 21 quotes part of the paper as follows:

He said: "I here deliberately declare that during a professional life extending over forty-five years I have never known a confirmed inebriate that was not or had not been addicted to the use of tobacco." He said that all tobacco users are not alcohol users, but most of the latter use tobacco. They go hand in hand. He said that corporations are doing much to make men temperate by refusing to employ men who drink. "I believe the State should make the use of intoxicants a cause of dismissal from office of any State employee or official," said the speaker. School, society, press, pulpit, and literature should be used to combat the tendency to indulge in drink. A tendency to inebriety is inherited, and marriage laws should be enacted to protect society against the begetting of tainted offspring.

The following recently appeared in the daily press:

MORMONS OUSTED FROM TOWN.

Berlin, April 14.—Lorenzo Walker and Josef Zwahles, Mormon missionaries from America, have been expelled by the police from Insterburg, East Prussia, as objectionable characters.

The Mormons now have over a hundred missionaries in Germany. The police of Berlin and other large cities grant them permits to meet freely. The Berlin Mormon congregation numbers one thousand persons.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Francis Blunt writes from Whitewater, Wisconsin, April 17: "I can not do without the HERALD, as I live over twenty miles from the branch, and have not heard a sermon for nearly two years. I am now past seventy-four years old, and so badly crippled with rheumatism that I can hardly go with a crutch and cane; yet I feel I am in the faith, and with the help of God will so remain until the end."

Bro. Jephtha Scott writes from Seiling, Oklahoma, April 7: "I am glad to be able to write that the work is improving here. Some of the Saints are studying the books more lately than they ever did before; and they testify that they have through prayer received more light; so everything they read in Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants is understood, and they have received a degree of happiness they never felt before. I had made it a special object of prayer for some time that the Lord would influence his Saints in this vicinity to seek more earnestly after the truth, that they might be confirmed in the faith; and I feel to rejoice that his Saints are growing spiritually here. I pray the Lord to help this conference and to bless his work generally that this gospel may be preached in all the world. The Saints of Canadian Center Branch met in prayer and fasting on April 6, and enjoyed a good degree of the Spirit, for which we are thankful."

S. D. Condit writes from Victor, Idaho, April 14: "I have baptized ten lately; three on March 17, and seven on March 28. On the 6th instant I organized a branch eighteen miles below the Cedrine Branch. The new branch is called Teton, and has fourteen members, ten of whom I baptized since last fall. Benedictus and William Hendrickson were ordained teacher and deacon to take charge. Arrangements were made to ordain Adolphus Hendrickson priest as soon as he secures letter from branch at Moorhead, Iowa. Both at Teton and here the Saints have conducted successful Sunday-school organizations since last fall and are launching out in splendid earnest in branch work. The Lord is evidently moving upon the people, and we are surprised with successive developments and the earnestness of the people, reformation wrought in their lives, and the missionary spirit they manifest. It is the Lord's work and marvelous in our eyes."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

B. B. Tyler, a minister of Denver, is posing as an exposé of Mormonism, and in a recent issue of the Denver Republican there appeared an account of a sermon in reply to Tyler by John B. Roush. Brn. Roush and Shupe together have been giving Mr. Tyler something to think about, and we have no doubt that they will be able to show up Mr. Tyler's attacks in the light they should stand.

Sr. Mary A. Hines writes from Nevada, Iowa, that she is there nursing an old lady by the name of Hoag, and would like to have some of the Saints call on her if there are any near there. She would also be pleased to see any of the elders who might be in Nevada.

Sr. Carrie S. Crowley, of West Jonesport, Maine, writes that she is striving to live so that she will be permitted to meet her friends who have gone before. She prays that we all may live pure lives before the world.

Benjamin T. Short writes from Jeffersonville, Indiana, that he and his wife are the only Saints there. He states that a Reverend Charles Schook has made an attack upon Mormonism there, taking some of the usual erroneous positions. Bro. Short asks the prayers of the Saints, especially for his wife, who is afflicted.

I. N. Roberts desires the home address of W. H. Pruitt. Bro. Roberts' field address is Garland, Alabama.

In the mission appointments by the Twelve, as published in HERALD for last week, an error occurred in the list of elders which should be noted. J. F. Grimes was appointed to Western Louisiana instead of to Western Iowa as it appeared.

We have received through Brn. John Kaler and H. A. Stebbins, clippings from the Telegraph and Herald, both of Sydney, Australia, in which the visit of A. H. Smith to that country is spoken of, and in which a clear distinction between us and the Utah church is presented. It is clearly pointed out that the Reorganized Church is the one in true succession and that the Utah church has departed far from the teachings of the original "Mormon" church. The articles as they appeared in these leading papers can not but do our work there great good.

The Board of Publication met on Monday, April 28, in the HERALD Office. The minutes of this meeting appear in another department. It will be noted that the editorial force remains about the same that it was, except that F. M. Sheehy has been added to the staff as a corresponding editor.

Addresses at Close of Conference.

We have just closed the most important conference held for years, and I feel strongly impressed with the thought that this year will be a marked year in the history of the church. The auspices are favorable. The prospects are good, and it will but require a persistent effort to win a victory. I feel that our courage is renewed and our spiritual strength, spiritual insight, spiritual devotion are increased. We have nothing to be afraid of except our own failure to keep nigh unto the Master, and so far as it is practicable for us to do it, near to each other. We can not work unless we work for good, and every man in the field ought to know within himself the assurance that when he hears the name of a brother mentioned, wherever that brother may be as a laborer, "My heart trusts in that man."

We are charged to be clean, who bear the yessels of the Lord. This means to be clean in heart, to be clean in purpose, and to be clean in person. Whatever we may say to the contrary, the advocate of the faith must show that he appreciates cleanliness of body as well as cleanliness of mind. To keep ourselves unspotted from the vices of the world we must not go into the ways of temptation. However strong we may be, our best strength is knowing ourselves and keeping out of the pathways of temptation. If a man knows his own weakness he is only strong when he keeps away from the place where he may be tempted.

Our position so far as theologians and the faith in which theological war is waged is a strong one; but we must be careful that we do not, in the sense of security, and our strength, impose upon our hearers as boasters. I think the safest and only way, so far as boasting is concerned, is to boast only in Christ. I have noticed in my history in watching others and in watching myself, that the strongest men among us are the humblest ones, and when I have been humble I have been strong, and when I have been haughty I have not been strong. I suppose it has been upon the hypothesis that the Lord helps those who need help, and only those who are humble, earnestly humble, appeal to God in the strongest manner. I was well pleased to notice what one brother said since we have been assembled here, that the strong ones seemed to be left to get along without much help, while others that are weaker received a greater and larger portion of help. That is according to His divine mercy. That is according to our understanding of it. If our children, any one of them, is strong, we do not pay the attention to him that we do to the weaker ones. It is the weaker ones of the flock of our families that we look after the most. The strong and hearty ones we let take care of themselves more than the others. I believe that God deals with us as his children in precisely the same manner. And on account of the various gifts, or manifestations that are mentioned by the apostle, that the man who stands in the pulpit, his face glowing with the inspiration of his subject that the Master gives, that man has just as clearly received a manifestation of the Spirit as the man who speaks in tongues and prophecies. I have been made to feel the strength of the apostolic position of Paul where he said, "I would rather speak five words with my understanding . . . than ten thousand in an unknown tongue." I would rather stand on the confines of the field and know from the knowledge within myself and things around me that I stand secure and strongly entrenched, than to create a flame of transitory emotion in the congregation which I may address. You can accomplish great results by steadfast purpose and persistently hanging on. The spirit of continuity is the spirit which will accomplish this work ultimately. The spasmodic, brilliant man who leaves a shining mark behind him must be followed by the slow brother to reap his harvest. This has often been the case in the history of the Reorganized Church.

I have learned more than one lesson by my defeats. When I thought I was strong I found I was weak. I believe this represents the points that many of you reap in your experience, when you think yourselves to be strong you are really weak. And when you went into the stand and felt weak and humble and scarcely knew how to approach your subject you found yourselves to be strong.

I advise you not to be harsh. The day is coming when there must be a better unity of effort and a more kindly spirit exhibited in our preaching. Our success will be better if we show them the better side without compromising the teachings we are holding. We will break down the barriers more rapidly than we will if we insist upon our superiority and keep them at a distance. I believe the time is coming when we should pay heed to the statement in one of the revelations, to not be over-careful with those that are on the other side of the question. I believe we should be careful in this regard.

I congratulate you all on the degree of patience, the degree of firmness, the degree of compassionate consideration that I feel you have had toward one another in this conference, and I pray God's blessings to be with you, one and all. I believe the time is coming for us to urge an onward conflict in every place we can possibly reach, and these means that are reached by missionary effort, and these appointments now made are all made with an understanding with the Twelve and Bishopric that they are all of them given upon the understanding that we will send them, if it is within our power, and God will bless the sending and give us souls for our hire. Placate, so far as you can, the asperities of opposing forces.

I wish to bear witness to the good, faithful work of our brother, Heman C. Smith, who as historian has done excellently well. I am glad he was sustained, for I think we can not afford to have that work marred. He has had an able assistant in Bro. Lambert, who has well watched over what was intrusted to him. And when the work is completed we will have a good record. I trust them both: I know them both. Bro. Smith is anxious that the brethren in the fields personally will cooperate with him by keeping a record of the things that transpire under their observation and in the fields where they are laboring and where they are connected, keep him informed of the history so that it may be put upon record and not be lost. One of the things that has burdened us so far as the history of the early church is concerned is the simple fact that they did not keep a sufficient record of the events as they transpired.

Bishop E. L. Kelley spoke as follows:

Of course, I do not expect to make a speech on what is termed the temporal law, but wish to call the attention of all to the fact that we have heard a large number of names read for the ministerial field. These ministers go to all parts of the world, nearly. Australia, New Zealand, the United States, the Canadas, Scotland, Wales, and Scandinavian countries.

The Presidency asked me this morning before making the final appointments to these foreign fields if we could send them if they were appointed. We answered that if the Presidency was satisfied the Lord was directing the mission we would try and find means to send them. We believe that God works in harmony in all departments of his work and that if he calls an individual to go to Australia or New Zealand and places a duty upon the church to send him there, he will help the church to do this; and he expects that we will do our part. In this way we are his co-workers. We can not ask the Lord to do it all, and claim to have part in the work. He wants us to do our part. He wants us to exercise faith; to contribute of our means; and we have to exercise faith when we do that. When an individual has no faith in the work of God, it is very difficult for him to give ten cents for its support. But if he has all faith in the work, and believes he will be rewarded according to his works, by and by, it is not very difficult for him to say, I will help all that I can.

I call attention now to the fact that three hundred sixty names are reported on the list for missions. Now if we were engaged in a great financial business with three hundred sixty men to move out to work, and one half of them only would move out to accomplish the work and the others would be idle for a month or two, you can see that great loss would occur, and but little in comparison accomplished. What we want is unity of work, every man standing at his post of duty. This is the Lord's work, the most important that men and women can engage in; and we must see that every minister whose name is upon these lists enters the field that has been assigned him, and labor there industriously and faithfully, without ever thinking of furling the flag for one moment until the next annual conference.

And what can we not hope with reference to the accumulation of funds for the church if those of the Bishopric are enabled to say to the church during the year that every man who has been called is in his place at work? Why should not he be in his place? God gives us the special blessings of health and strength and ability so that we may go without scarcely ever having to lose a day, unless it is on account of some folly of our own. Why should we not be in our places, then, the entire year? It will be but a short time. Those who take foreign missions must be engaged wholly, and far away from their homes. Why not those be so engaged who are near by home and labor just as faithfully and stay away from home, if necessarily, just as patiently as those who are called to go to distant fields? Now we must do this. By so doing we will strengthen greatly the financial arm of the service and silence a great many complaints which come in, that we have to inquire into. Sometimes you do not know anything about the trouble we have inquiring into complaints or they are referred to the missionaries in charge, and this takes up time and takes our energies from the work where they ought to be applied. We do not want to be suspected even of having to look after an individual who is sent into the field. That is not the work of the Bishopric.

Ministers who are working faithfully in their fields need never think that the Bishopric is looking after them to see that they are in their places. They will know if they are in their places, that should the Bishop or his counselors come around, it will be but to help in the work. I speak of this that we may work in harmony. We have a right to expect to find the minister in his field unless sickness has carried him out; and let us go with sufficient faith so as to be able to say that sickness shall not do this. I heard Bro. Evans say the other day that he had only lost about seven Sundays in the past twenty years. It is only very few days I have been unable to make appointments the past twenty years; but if I had listened to the hindering things which have often come up I might have squandered one third of my time, during the time named and have justified myself by saying I thought it was my duty to first look after my family, to see if they were in good health and proper condition.

We have to trust in God, my brethren; we have to trust him not only in many things, but all things. I had to do it to-day, when I stated to the President concerning those they were sending out, and to the Twelve when they wanted to know if they should not strike some of the names off the list, that we would not have them strike them off, but wait and see if they could not be sustained. And we expect that they will be. If every one works as he should, God will help us to do it. It will not be on account of the great work that the Bishop will do, or his counselors, but our Master. When you come back, one year hence, and bring your sheaves with you, let us all give him the glory.

Those of us who are called to labor in temporal things are going to try to show that we have done our duty, and ask your coöperation. If you find out that there is anything in the department of the Bishopric in its work in the field that ought to be looked after, direct a line to the Bishop, and he will see that it is attended to at once; and if we do not, report us to the President of the church or High Council as being unfaithful to duty. It should be inquired into in that manner, and let us answer for failing to perform our duty under lawful and just complaint.

I want to have my work in such a state that I can at least conscientiously feel that when I go on the other side I will be commended of the Lord; and if I make an error here I would rather have it corrected here. I do not want to perform the duties of the office of Bishop one hour unless I can perform it in accordance with the will of God. And I trust he will never permit me to continue in the office a week when my work is no longer acceptable unto him. I have always asked him to so direct.

I trust the Lord will bless each one as we go from hence, that we may go out working and toiling for the Master. There are but a few years for us to work, when there will be such a change in the conditions of the church in this country as few are expecting at the present time. Those who are sent far from their homes ought to count it gain to have an opportunity to suffer for Christ, and move out. And those who are permitted to stay nearer their homes and suffer for him, they ought to count it gain that they might suffer for him who has done so much for all of us. Let us move out in the spirit of sacrifice, the spirit which God wants us all to move out with, and we shall have success.

Those who labor and minister in temporalities will have to sacrifice too; and if God has called upon us to sacrifice in the work that we are called to perform, let us not count it a grievous thing, but act at once as we would have done if it had been an easy thing imposed. Since God has asked us to do a work of sacrifice let us not rest night nor day until we have accomplished it. If we all do this, laboring in unity and love, from this time until the time of the convening of the next annual conference there will be such a rift in the clouds which have hung over us that will enable the light to shine more brightly than we have even witnessed at the closing of this conference. May the Lord greatly bless and prosper each and all who minister in word, and those who labor in business, to perform his great and holy work, in my prayer in Jesus' name.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VERIFIED.—NO. 2.

ESTABLISHED BY FORTY EMINENT ARCHÆOLOGISTS AND AUTHORS.

BY ELDER A. B. PHILLIPS.

So numerous are the traditions in America which agree with the Old World history that Baldwin says: "The traditions on both sides of the Atlantic are without meaning unless it be admitted that there was communication between the two continents in times of which we have no history."—Ancient America, p. 186. In another work, Prehistoric Nations, published 1873, he, on page 403, says of "very remote antiquity": "Nor is it improbable that there was communication across the Pacific."

The Nephites were an "exceeding fair" people, while the Lamanites were cursed with darkness because of their iniquity, and the Indians are their descendants according to the Book of Mormon account. The fact that a light-haired race, entirely different from the Indians, did dwell here is clearly proven.

The Antiquarian Journal, volume 20, page 259, says of a skeleton found in New Mexico: "A bunch of this person's hair was about two inches in length and was as fine as average Caucasian hair, a little inclined to be curly, and of a dark brown color, which is evidence to my mind that they were a different race from the ordinary Indians. The skulls dug out were well formed, not the shape of the Indian, but more resembling that of the white race, full in front and wide above and in front of the ears, showing that they had well developed and well shaped heads." Eighty skeletons were found at the above place.

Short says: "The silicious sand and marl of the plain southward of Arica, where the most remarkable cemeteries are situated, is slightly impregnated with common salt as well as nitrate and sulphate of soda. These conditions, together with the dry atmosphere rivalling that of Egypt, and in which fleshy matter dries without putrefaction, the human hair has been perfectly preserved, and comes to us as one of the best evidences of the diversity of the American races yet produced. In general it is a lightish brown, and of a fineness of texture which equals that of the Anglo-Saxon race. . . . The ancient Peruvians appear, from numerous examples of hair found in their tombs, to have been an auburn-haired race."—North Americans of Antiquity, pages 186 and 187.

If the Book of Mormon contains not "a grain of truth," then Mr. Short's statements are also false; for what science was long in discovering, the Book of Mormon presented years before to the world. Haines says the Mandans "were remarkable for their fair complexion, blue eyes, and lack of prowess in war."—American Indian, p. 235. Short says on page 189 of Menominees or "White Indians": "The peculiarity of the complexion of this people has been marked from the first time a European encountered them." Evidencing the truth of the Book of Mormon statement of their Israelitish origin, we now present the following from Bancroft: "Many traces of their [Jewish] old laws and ceremonies are to be found among them at the present day. . . . There do actually exist, besides, many Hebraic traces in the American languages."—Native Races, vol. 5, pp. 82, 83. Page 81 says: "The Jews were famous for fine work in stone, as is shown by the buildings of Jerusalem, and a similar excellence in this art is seen in the American ruins. The Mexicans have a tradition of a journey undertaken at the command of a god, and continued for a long time under the direction of certain high priests, who miraculously obtained supplies for their support."

High priests were a Jewish institution and were also had in America according to the Book of Mormon; this Bancroft confirms; also Donnelly says: "The priesthood was thoroughly organized in Mexico and Peru. They were prophets as well as priests."—Atlantis, p. 159.

Le Plongeon's Sacred Mysteries among the Mayas and Quiches, published in 1866, page 48, says Mr. Cushing was commissioned by the Smithsonian Institution to study the customs and manners of the Zuni of New Mexico. He discovered "the existence of twelve sacred orders, with their priests, their initiations, their sacred rites, as carefully guarded as the secrets of the ancient sacred mysteries to which they bear great resemblance."

Concerning traces of Hebrew in American languages, Priest says: "Their Jewish customs are too many to be enumerated in this work."—American Antiquities, p. 59.

Boudinot, Adair, and several others mention this singularity, and lists of Hebrew words with their English and Indian equivalents are given also in Haines' American Indian, published in 1888, page 100, from which we extract a partial list as follows:

ENGLISH	INDIAN	HEBREW OR CHALDEAN.
God	Ale	Ale Alein
Shiloh	Shilo	Shiloh
heavens	chemim	shemin
father	abba	abba man	ish	ish wife	awah	eweh eve
winter	kora	korah
woman	ishto	ishto
his wife	liani	lihene
this man	vwoh	huah
man of god	ashto allo	ishda alloa very hot	hew hara or hala	hara hara
Jehovah	Yohewah	Jehovah

Several writers show Indian words in abundance which are similar to the Hebrew. Although this appears true of only certain tribes, yet the similarity is too perfect in many instances to be regarded as accidental, and some words are identical.

Adair says: "They always invoke Yo He Wah a considerable space of time before they apply any medicines, let the case require ever so speedy an application."—History of the American Indians, p. 172, published at London in 1775.

The Prophetic Watchman, September 14, 1866, said of a stone relic: "It was found in 1860, and has engraved upon it, Moses and the Ten Commandments. . . . Over the figure is a Hebrew word signifying Moses. The other inscriptions are almost literally the words found in some parts of the Bible, and the Ten Commandments are given in part and entirely, the longest being abbreviated. The alphabet used, it is thought, is the original Hebrew one, as there are letters not known in the Hebrew alphabet now in use, but bearing a resemblance to them. All things on this stone point to the time before Ezra."—Palmyra to Independence, p. 69.

As the Nephites came from Palestine about sixty-five years before the time of Ezra, it is but reasonable that a stone engraved by them soon after they arrived in America would "point to the time before Ezra" instead of after, although many years afterward the Nephites altered their characters by combining Hebrew and Egyptian and naming it "reformed Egyptian."

The Gadianton robbers, previously mentioned, after a time became a strong and numerous band, and the Book of Mormon says of them: "And they did commit murder and plunder; and then they would retreat back into the mountains, and into the wilderness and secret places."—P. 408.

Also on page 423 we read: "The Gadianton robbers, who dwelt upon the mountains, who did infest the land; for so strong were their holds and their secret places, that the people could not overpower them." These bands of robbers are frequently mentioned in the Book of Mormon; they lived in the time of the later civilization, the Nephites, and their remains are doubtless the same that are known now as "ruins of the Cliff-dwellers," which are found in a variety of places. Some of them were discovered by Simpson in 1849, but hardly anything was published concerning them until F. V. Hayden's report to the government in 1874-76.

Justin Windsor confirms this. He says the reports of Hayden "brought to us in those of 1874-76 the knowledge of the Cliff-dwellers."—Narrative and Critical History of America, p. 440, published in 1889. For years they were thought to have been the most ancient of American civilizations, but more recent research shows to the contrary, and again the Book of Mormon record is sustained.

The American Antiquarian says: "It was formerly the opinion that the Cliff-dwellers were among the most ancient people in America. . . . This opinion has been greatly modified by recent exploration, and the evidence now is, that so far from being the earliest people they belonged to the last of three periods of occupation."—Vol. 19, p. 100, published in 1897. On the same page he says: "The people had dwelt and continued in a peaceful and an agricultural condition for many years, and perhaps centuries, but had at last suffered from the attacks of wild tribes, who invaded their possessions, kept them constantly disturbed, and drove them first to the mesas and afterward to the cliffs, as the only places where they could be secure." The Book of Mormon account agrees with the foregoing except that it shows the Gadianton robbers to have been driven to the mesas and cliffs instead of the "peaceful and agricultural people," which is the most reasonable, as the following shows: "They (cliff-dwellings) were not mere refuges for the people in the time of attack, nor summer homes for an agricultural people, . . . they made them strongholds which they occupied permanently."—American Antiquities, vol. 20, p. 87. This is precisely what the Book of Mormon stated nearly seventy years before.

The Gadianton robbers finally united with the Lamanites and exterminated the Nephite nation, after years of wars which ended more than four hundred years after Christ's birth; therefore the inference is that the Gadianton robbers were builders of both the cliff-dwellings and the pueblos, if we accept Book of Mormon history. Hence both were occupied at the same time, although archæologists have formerly supposed them to be two distinct peoples, living at different periods, yet they find it impossible to prove that such was the case. The American Antiquarian says on this point: "It is indeed difficult to draw the distinction between the earlier and later people, for the pueblos and the cliff-dwellings are built in the same general style, and contain similar relics and specimens of art, and are attended with similar pictographs and symbols."—Vol. 19, pp. 100, 101.

While the Lamanites, the descendants of which are the American Indians, were cursed with a dark skin, the Gadianton robbers were a white people, except some who had come from the Lamanites to unite with them; therefore it is not strange that their remains show some of them to have been a light-haired race.

Of Cliff-dweller remains at the World's Fair, Chicago, "Stebbin's Lectures" says, page 63: "Upon all the skulls the hair was as fine as the hair of the white people of our time, and some was both fine and light colored. Indian hair is all dark, all coarse. The skulls were shaped like the skulls of white people." Also "Appleton's Annual Cyclo-pedia," 1899, page 19, says: "A number of well-preserved mummies found by a prospector in a sealed cliff dwelling in the upper Verde cañon had well-developed skulls, covered with fine, silky hair, and were bandaged with cotton and woolen cloths of various degrees of fineness, some of it embroidered in open work."

When the Gadianton robbers amalgamated with the Lamanites it would have naturally produced a variety of complexions in their descendants, and various authors show this to be true of the Indian tribes. On this point Prichard says, volume 1, page 269: "The American races show nearly as great a variety in this respect as the nations of the old continent. There are among them, white races with a florid complexion."—Researches, published 1841.

From Baldwin we quote as follows: "It has been suggested that the Mandan Indians were a separated and lost fragment of the mound-building people, they being noticeably unlike other Indians in many respects, lighter in color, and peculiar in manners and customs. . . . That the Mandans were like what a lost community of Mound-builders might have become by degeneration through mixture and association with barbarians may be supposed."—Ancient America, p. 74.

As we have said, the Book of Mormon shows they are from the Lamanites instead of the Mound-builders, which is sustained by researches of recent time, while Baldwin says: "Those who seek to identify the Mound-builders with the barbarous Indians find nothing that will support their hypothesis."—Ibid., p. 62.

Of the Menominees, Short says: "The whiteness of these Indians, . . . early attracted the attention of the Jesuit missionaries, and has often been commented upon by travelers. The peculiarity of the complexion of this people has been marked from the first time a European encountered them."—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 189. Catlin also remarks on this singularity among various tribes. Is it likely that any man, however well educated, could have written such an accurate history of these aborigines years before the facts were known to the world, except, indeed, he had received a true record written by themselves? Indeed, if all the works of modern archæologists had been then accessible, he still could not have accomplished such a work as the Book of Mormon, which has stood the test of every modern investigation and has proven its account true in spite of its opposition to the erroneous theories had at the time it was first published.

These aboriginal inhabitants also used coins of different values, according to the Book of Mormon. This is sustained by Donnelly, who says: "A round copper coin with a serpent stamped on it was found at Palenque, and T-shaped copper coins are very abundant in the ruins of Central America."—Atlantis, p. 345.

Priest says, at Circleville, "was dug up from beneath the roots of a hickory tree seven feet eight inches in circumference, a copper coin, but bearing no comparison with any coin now known."—American Antiquities, p. 175, fifth edition.

The Pittsburg Leader, November 6, 1891, says that at Laconia, "A well was being drilled; at the depth of one hundred twenty-five feet the drillings showed they were passing through a layer of brick. . . . As there were no brick houses in town and never had been it could not be believed. While quite a crowd was around the well-hole, the men brought up to the surface a lot of mud and examined it, as they had done from the time they found the brick residue. In the mass of mud there was a small piece of metal, which when cleaned off, was found to be a piece of money. It was octagonal in shape and had hieroglyphics on it, which could not be deciphered, but which were evidently meant to represent the value of the piece. . . . It is claimed by antiquarians here that the bricks and coin are the relics of a prehistoric race which lived here many years before the Indians and built the pavements and roads which were discovered at Memphis, on the other side of the river above here."—Palmyra to Independence, pp. 94, 95. Baldwin says the Muyscas north of Quito "used small circular gold plates as coin."—Ancient America, p. 271.

An extended list of finds could be made but would be superfluous. We therefore omit them, and hasten to an account of the closing scenes of Book of Mormon history, which states that the record having been handed down from ancestors was finally deposited by the last of the Nephites in the hill Cumorah, where it continued until delivered to Joseph Smith for translation in 1827.

Traditions of "sacred records" hid in the earth are recorded in Priest's "American Antiquities," page 69; also in "Indian Myths," pages 225, 226.

Bancroft mentions "a complaint in the Quiché annals known as the Popul Vuh, that the 'national book' containing the ancient records of their people had been lost."—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 770.

Boudinot says of the Nauatalcas who live in Mexico: "That their forefathers wandered eighty years in search of it (Mexico) through a strict obedience to the commands of the Great Spirit: . . . that the book which the white people have was once theirs: that while they had it they prospered exceedingly. . . . They also say that their forefathers were possessed of an extraordinary divine spirit, by which they foretold future events and controlled the common course of nature, and this they transmitted to their offspring on condition of their obeying the sacred laws. That they did by these means bring down showers of plenty on the beloved people. But that this power, for a long time past had entirely ceased."—A Star in the West, pp. 110, 111.

The Book of Mormon was engraved upon gold plates, about seven by eight inches in size, not as thick as tin, in characters called "reformed Egyptian"; both Egyptian and Hebrew "hath been altered by us," says the Book of Mormon on page 500. At the time these plates were found it was supposed that the aborigines had left no records in hieroglyphics, much less was it supposed anything would be found approximating Egyptian or Hebrew characters; but as already shown, traces of both Egyptian and Hebrew knowledge have since been evidenced, so also hieroglyphics; even phonetic characters have been found in recent investigation. But in 1833 Atwater said: "No article has been found, within my knowledge, which contained on it either letters or hieroglyphics."—Western Antiquities, p. 138. The Book of Mormon claim was therefore scorned and ridiculed, but since then several articles have been found which prove the claim to be reasonable and in harmony with recent discoveries.

Delafield says, in Antiquities of America, published in 1839, page 43: "Hieroglyphic writings are necessarily of three kinds, viz.: phonetic, figurative, and symbolical." Page 46 says: "We find the three species of hieroglyphics common to Mexico and Egypt."

Taylor says: "There is even evidence that the Maya nation of Yucatan, the ruins of whose temples and palaces are so well known from the travels of Catherwood and Stephens, not only had a system of phonetic writing, but used it for writing ordinary words and sentences."—Bancroft's Native Races, vol. 2, p. 781.

Foster says on page 322: "The hieroglyphics displayed upon the walls of Copan, in horizontal or perpendicular rows, would indicate a written language in which the pictorial significance had largely disappeared, and a kind of word-writing had become predominant. Intermingled with the pictorial devices are apparently purely arbitrary characters which may be alphabetic."—Prehistoric Races.

Bancroft says: "The Palenque inscriptions show the abbreviated hieratic writing."—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 782.

In the St. Louis Chronicle, February, 1889, and copied by Etzenhouser in Palmyra to Independence, page 91, we read: "Rev. S. D. Peet, the well known antiquarian, is reported as having found in Illinois, two crossplates which have all the appearance of being rude musical instruments. These plates are about fifteen inches square and there are places for strings and a bridge. Along the lower edge is a row of hieroglyphics similar to those on the famous Palmyra plates, said to have been discovered by Joseph Smith and from which he interpreted the Book of Mormon." This discovery has since been corroborated by others. Another one made in Ohio is described by A. A. Bancroft as finding "a stone dressed to an oblong shape, about eighteen inches long and twelve wide, which proved to be a casket, neatly fitted and completely water-tight, containing a slab of stone of hard and fine quality, an inch and a half thick, eight inches long, four inches and a half wide at one end, and tapering to three inches at the other. Upon the face of the slab was the figure of a man, apparently a priest, with a long flowing beard, and a robe reaching to his feet. Over his head was a curved line of characters, and upon the edges and back of the stone were closely and neatly carved letters. The slab, which I saw myself, was shown to the Episcopalian clergyman of Newark, and he pronounced the writing to be the ten commandments in ancient Hebrew."—Native Races, vol. 5, pp. 94, 95.

The Book of Mormon plates, years before these discoveries, were also found in a stone box. Joseph Smith and eleven others testified to having handled and seen the plates, and also the engravings in hieroglyphic characters upon them. The witnesses have never been impeached, some of them reaffirmed their testimony at death.

On the top of the Copan altar are hieroglyphics within which may be seen, apparently, phonetic characters; they are shown by Bancroft, Stephens, Baldwin, and others. We present in this work three tablets and three other specimens of hieroglyphics (Figures 1 to 6), as taken from archaeological works:

Figure 1 is the Grave Creek Tablet, found in 1838 near Wheeling, West Virginia, of which Mr. Schoolcraft says: "There was a large oak tree, at the top of the central part of the mound, from which the tablet was taken, the cortical layers of which was stated at from three hundred to five hundred; which would show that the mound had not been disturbed for at least that number of years, or since 1838." The tablet is shown in Figure 1, plate 38 of his work, "Indian Tribes of the United States," volume 1, description page 122, published in 1851 by the authority of Congress.

MacLean says: ". . . I have no hesitation in declaring that if the authenticity of the Grave Creek Tablet has not been established, then no reliance can be placed upon human testimony."—The Mound-builders, p. 95. Some of the characters on this tablet resemble Book of Mormon characters transcribed by Joseph Smith, as a comparison will show, and yet there may have been changes in the hieroglyphics between the time and the people of each. The characters as transcribed by Joseph Smith are found in Presidency and Priesthood, opposite page 204, or in Report of Committee on American Archæology, after page 100. Figures 2 and 3 are characters found on tablets dug from a mound near Davenport. The small tablet is about seven and the large one about twelve inches in length; they were found in 1877, five and one half feet below the surface of the mound, and four feet below some Indian relics, a fact which shows that the Indians had used the mound for burial purposes, probably long after the tablets had been placed there. A more complete description may be found in Peet's "Prehistoric America," pp. 44, 45 (volume 1, published in 1892), together with a reproduction of them. Eight of the characters in figure 2, and six in figure 3 closely resemble those of the Book of Mormon, as closely as like characters could be expected to do when written by different people on different material and at a different time, perhaps, and both being copied from their originals, which would cause the same characters to appear slightly different. Figures 4, 5, and 6 are from "Antiquites Américaines," published by Charles Christian Rafu, Copenhagen, 1845, and are shown in plate 13 of that work. Figures 4 and 5 are from the Portsmouth rocks, and figure 6 from the Tiverton rocks. Page 356 says: "Many rocks, inscribed with unknown characters, apparently of very ancient origin, have been discovered, scattered through different parts of the country; rocks, the constituent parts of which are such as to render it almost impossible to engrave on them such writings, without the aid of iron or other hard metallic instruments. The Indians were ignorant of the existence of these rocks."

Several other works might be referred to which show that the art of writing with phonetic characters was had anciently in America. Le Plongeon says on page 113: "The ancient Maya hieratic alphabet, discovered by me, is as near alike to the ancient hieratic alphabet of the Egyptians as two alphabets can possibly be, forcing upon us the conclusion that the Mayas and the Egyptians either learned the art of writing from the same masters, or that the Egyptians learned it from the Mayas."—Sacred Mysteries Among the Mayas and Quiches.

The Book of Mormon says there were many records kept by their people and Baldwin says: "The ruins show that they had the art of writing, and that, at the south, this art was more developed, more like a phonetic system of writing than that found in use among the Aztecs. The inscriptions of Palenque, and the characters used in some of the manuscript books that have been preserved are not the same as the 'Mexican Picture Writing.' It is known that books or manuscript writings were abundant among them in the ages previous to the Aztec period."—Ancient America, p. 187.

The Book of Mormon, pages 203, 204, shows that they had civil courts with judges and a supreme court with a "chief judge," and Bancroft says: "In Mexico, and in each of the principal cities of the empire, there was a supreme judge. . . . He heard appeals in criminal cases from the court immediately below him, and from his decisions no appeal was allowed, not even to the king."—Native Races, vol. 2, page 434.

The state of civilization among the Aztecs was of a superior order, and yet it is agreed that it was greatly inferior to the Mayas or their ancestors. Bancroft says: "In Mexico every quarter had its school for the common people, after the manner of our public schools. There were higher schools or colleges for sons of nobles and those destined for the priesthood, wherein were taught history, religion, philosophy, law, astronomy, writing, and interpreting hieroglyphics, singing, dancing, use of arms, gymnastics, and many arts and sciences."—Essays and Miscellany, page 36.

The "Aztec Calendar Stone" shows their ancestors kept a perfect system of time, and this was announced on the Book of Mormon plates had by Joseph Smith in 1827, and is confirmed by Bancroft. Of the Nahuas he says: "Their calendar divided time into ages of two cycles, each cycle consisting of four periods of thirteen years, the years of each cycle being distinctly designated by signs and names with numbers, in orderly arrangement, as shown on their sculptured stones. The civil year was divided into eighteen months of twenty days, with five extra days to complete the year; and each month into four sections or weeks. Extra days were also added at the end of the cycle, so that our calculations are closely approached. The day was divided into fixed periods corresponding to hours. All the above divisions had their signs and names."—Ibid., page 37. He continues on page 38: "All this, be it remembered, was the condition of things four hundred years ago. Compare it with the European civilization or semi-civilization of that day on the one hand, and with the savagism of the Iroquois and Ojibways on the other, and then judge which of the two it most resembled."

Beside the Aztec Calendar Stone, they had calendars of gold which the avarice of the Spaniards destroyed. Baldwin mentions them, both of gold and silver, which fell into Spanish hands, and remarks: "But these Spaniards did not go to Mexico to study Aztec astronomy, nor to collect curiosities. In their hands every article of gold was speedily transformed into coin."—Ancient America, p. 215.

So also it was with the ancient manuscripts; all that could be found by the Spanish priests were destroyed, in order that they might have no memory of the religion of their ancestors; therefore but little can be known from their written history, outside of the Book of Mormon, until some one deciphers the hieroglyphics left among their remains.

We previously quoted from writers concerning their skill in erecting beautiful and massive buildings. The temple at Copan is eight hundred nine feet long; the width is six hundred twenty-four feet, and the wall on one side "rises perpendicularly to a height, in its present ruined state, of from sixty to ninety feet." "The whole is built of cut stone in blocks a foot and a half wide by three to six feet long, and, without taking into account the excess of superimposed pyramids over sunken courts, must have required in round numbers over twenty-six million cubic feet of stone in its construction." (See Bancroft's Native Races, vol. 4, pp. 86, 87.) This temple is inclosed by a wall about nine hundred by one thousand six hundred feet, which is about twenty-five feet thick; in all, a work which challenges us in its greatness. The great temple of Mexico was eighty-six feet high and "about three hundred and seventy-five feet long and three hundred feet broad at the base."—Ibid., vol. 2, p. 579.

The Book of Mormon as before quoted shows that they built many large cities, some of which were destroyed; this statement is sustained by Bancroft, who says: "Mexico Tenochtitlan has been estimated to contain sixty thousand houses, and Tezcuco was said to contain one hundred and forty thousand houses."—Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 560 and 569. As previously shown, only indestructible material remains to evidence the extent of these ancient cities, which must naturally have been built of wood, excepting the more important public buildings, the ruins of which plainly attest the superior skill of their builders. But many extensive ruins probably remain to be explored in this locality, and Baldwin says a great forest "covers the southern half of Yucatan, and extends far into Guatemala, which is half covered by it. . . . Its vast depths have never been much explored. . . . It is believed that ruins exist in nearly every part of this vast wilderness."—Ancient America, pp. 94, 95. The Copan and Palenque ruins are near the southern edge of this forest. Of Palenque, one explorer says: "A city which, I hazard little in saying, must have been one of the largest ever seen."—Ibid., p. 96. Del Rio gives its ruins an extent of about eight leagues (Description, p. 4), while the London Geographical Society gives it an extent of twenty miles. (Vol. 3, p. 60.) Recent explorations have been less successful in determining its extent, owing to the heavy and dense tropical forest growth which now covers a portion of its ruins.

Some of these ancient cities show such superior civilizations to that of the aborigines found here, that some may regard it improbable that they are descendants of them, but Mr. Haines, who made an extensive comparison of their conditions, says: "Whilst this higher state of civilization spoken of might have existed on the Western Hemisphere at some period in the earth's existence may not be denied, yet there is no proof, or even fair presumption that such a people, if they ever existed, were not the ancestors of the aborigines found here at the time of the discovery. The native Indian possessed as high an order of intellect as the white invaders of his country. . . .

The beginning of civilization is but the beginning of vice and corruption, and the history of the world goes to prove that it is but a question of time when vice and corruption will prevail, and when human society will relapse into its original condition from the overgrowth of what we call civilization."—The American Indian, published in 1888, p. 74.

Concerning a relapse of this kind, from the sixth to the sixteenth centuries, known as the Dark Ages, Bancroft says: "I have no disposition unduly to magnify the New World civilization, nor to under-rate Old World culture, but during these ten centuries of almost universal mediæval gloom, the difference between the two civilizations was less than most people imagine. On both sides of the Dark Sea humanity lay floundering in besotted ignorance."—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 97.

The Book of Mormon, on page 133, shows the above to have been true concerning their degenerating to almost barbarous conditions in some instances; also on page 436 that they finally divided into tribes, although of common origin; which is shown to be reasonable according to Haines, who says of the aborigines of North America: "The evidences we have, as to a common origin, are apparent to every one who has given attention to this subject, and are quite conclusive on this point, even as to those tribes and nations whose languages are radically different. . . . They all have the same, or essentially the same, religion."—The American Indian, p. 73.

Domenech says of this common faith: "All the savages of the New World, without exception, believe in the existence of a supreme being whom they call the Good or Great Spirit; they adore and pray to him, as we adore and pray to the Creator of all things. They believe likewise in the existence of an evil spirit, who is their enemy, and the antagonist of the Great Spirit, but less powerful."—The Great Deserts of North America, vol. 2, pp. 376, 377, published in 1860. This fact of a religion so universal, plainly shows that the period of disintegration among them could not have been as long as that of the Old World, and yet quite awhile must have elapsed for them to develop their many tribal, and other peculiarities.

We might fill volumes with the proofs of this record, called the Book of Mormon, but have contented ourselves with quoting a few of the principal statements made in it concerning the aborigines, as to their origin, journeyings, extent of their civilization, their cities, arts, and sciences, animals, customs of the people, religion, manufactures, mining, coins, metals, roads, and other constructions, their knowledge of astronomy, writing, agriculture, government, sacred records, the great destruction by earthquakes, etc., knowledge of Christ; the Gadianton robbers or Cliff-dwellers; and their final decline from civilization to the condition in which they were discovered four hundred years ago; all of which have been abundantly proved by more than one hundred and twenty statements from the works of about forty eminent archæologists and authors of recent time, or since the publication of the Book of Mormon, with the exception of one or two which could have been dispensed with.

American archæology is such a broad field of research that, in no one, nor a half dozen modern or older works upon the subject, can a sufficient amount of information be found for a definite outline of the principal events and statements of the Book of Mormon record, and Baldwin may well say of the "more important" as well as all other works on the subject; "not one of them attempts to give a comprehensive view of the whole subject."—Ancient America, preface.

The importance of the Book of Mormon may therefore be better understood when it is realized that it was years ahead of all archæologists on the subject and that everything discovered by recent research confirms it as a true record, engraved by the ancients upon plates of gold, and translated by the gift and command of God. The Christian world believes that God revealed the past through Moses from the creation of the world; it is therefore not inconsistent with their belief to accept this revelation of a later time, which also gives knowledge of a prehistoric people, and is consistent with their manner of recording events on metallic substances; concerning this, Brown's Antiquities of the Jews, vol. 2, page 90, says: "It is generally thought that engraving on brass and lead, and on a rock or tablet of stone, was the form in which the public laws were written."

As a fitting conclusion we present some characters for comparison, that the resemblance may be seen.

Some of the Book of Mormon characters are slightly enlarged but retain the form of the originals, so that an accurate comparison can be made.

The first line of No. 1, are Egyptian demotic and phonetic characters, taken from the works of Rawlinson in his History of Ancient Egypt, vol. 1, pp. 116 and 122, and from Wilkinson's The Egyptians, p. 214. The demotic was invented at least 700 B. C., and rapidly succeeded the hieratic, which we are told was invented "as early as the ninth dynasty." (See "Museum of Antiquity," p. 861.) As the Nephites came to America about one hundred years or more after the time the demotic characters were introduced, it would be fair to presume that the "reformed Egyptian" with which the Book of Mormon plates were engraved, would contain some characters of Egyptian hieratic and demotic and some Hebrew characters of the old type as well. This, upon examination, is found to be the case; and the first line of No. 2, which contains the old form of Hebrew, according to Rawlinson (see History of Phœnicia, page 378, and The Album of Language, by G. Naphegyi, page 54) is similar to Book of Mormon characters shown below it.

No. 3 contains, on the first line, Egyptian hieratic characters as discovered by Champollion and shown in Le Plongeon's Sacred Mysteries Among the Mayas and Quichés, preface, p. 12, the next line being Book of Mormon characters. Some of these characters it will be noticed are reversed in the Book of Mormon characters,—as the third in line No. 1—and this it should be explained does not necessarily imply that they do not stand for the same characters, as the authors quoted show that they are sometimes reversed; also the tenth character of No. 2, we are informed, was made both with the loop and with the perpendicular cross marks, and a few others which are slightly different, resemble each other enough to show a common origin, but also that, as the Book of Mormon states, both the Egyptian and Hebrew "hath been . . . altered by us according to our manner of speech."

The first line of No. 4 shows the ancient characters of the American aborigines called by Le Plongeon, "the Maya Hieratic," which is shown on page 12 of the work previously quoted, and which he says was "discovered by me" while making a tour of research in the regions of Central America, and among the remains of this prehistoric race. (See page 113, also 11 of preface.) This work it must be borne in mind was not published until 1886, at which time the discovery of these characters was first made known to the world; and Atwater said, more than five years after Joseph Smith received the Book of Mormon plates, that no characters within his knowledge had been found, of either letters or hieroglyphics; hence the fact that Le Plongeon discovered these characters, which are so identical with those had by Joseph

Smith more than fifty-eight years before, proves to unbiased minds that they are genuine; and with other confirming evidences which have been presented, enough has been evidenced to satisfy the minds of any impartial jury on earth that the Book of Mormon is indeed a true record of the people who anciently inhabited America; and the dealings of God with them are therein contained; therefore our hearts swell with gratitude to our gracious God as we lift our voices and sing:

Book of Mormon, hid for ages
On Cumorah's lonely hill,
Written by those ancient sages
Whom Jehovah taught his will;
Glad we hail it,
Fullness of the gospel still!

To the above we add our humble testimony that the work is divine. May its glorious light shine forth to all men as it has to us, until they are led to worship "in spirit and in truth" Him who is "no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him."

THE PRESENT CONFLICT BETWEEN SCIENCE AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.—No. 3.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

"If we turn to France, we meet again with similar evidences of ceaseless change. Chevalier Pertz has printed a treaty of peace a thousand years old, between Charles the Bold and King Louis of Germany (dated A. D. 841), in which the German king takes an oath in what was the French tongue of that day, while the French king swears in the German of the same era, and neither of these oaths would now convey a distinct meaning to any but the learned in these two countries.

"So also in Italy. The modern Italian can not be traced back much beyond the time of Dante, or some six centuries before our time. Even in Rome, where there had been no permanent intrusion of foreigners, such as the Lombard settlers of German origin in the plains of the Po, the common people of A. D. 1000, spoke quite a distinct language from that of their Roman ancestors of their Italian descendants, as is shown by the celebrated chronicle of the monk Benedict of the convent of St. Andrea on Mount Soracte, written in such barbarous Latin, and with such strange grammatical forms, that it requires a profoundly skilled linguist to decipher it."—Lyell's Antiquity of Man, pp. 459, 460; Present Conflict, pp. 424, 425.

Professor Hutson says: "Travelers among the Brazilian Indians tell us that when a branch of a tribe has lived apart from the main stock, it develops different customs and totally different language. This is probably universally the case with savages, and it is no doubt the reason why the great diversity of languages among the black, the red, and the yellow races is nowhere supplied with a clew which shall enable us to trace them to any common origin."—Beginnings of Civilization, p. 107.

And so pass ancient languages out of use, and new ones spring up in their stead. The remote existence of distinct languages offers no serious objection to the Bible history of mankind.

EXTINCT ANIMALS.

Man was the contemporary of many species of extinct animals, and we are told that the whole of historic times has sufficed to produce scarcely a perceptible change in those now living. This entire cycle of extinct animal existence must have occupied many tens of thousands of years; therefore the relics of man found with their remains must be as many, or at least nearly as many tens of thousands of years old. And this line of argument again makes man much older than the Bible man.

Professor H. W. Morris says, "Geology reveals past periods of vast destruction of animal life both on land and in the sea, the causes of which we can not even conjecture. There is nothing going on at present in the domains of the elephant and the reindeer which could accumulate the masses of elephant bones and tusks that are found in the frozen cliffs of Siberia, or the hundreds of antlers of reindeer that were taken out of only one of the Gower caves. These relics attest the power of past destroying agencies, and the vast aggregate of life extinguished."—Present Conflict, p. 478.

Man lived with animals long since extinct, but how long ago no one seems to know. The fossils of animals and man's relics which have been found in America and appear to have been contemporary are the smilodon, toxodon, mastodon, hoplophorus, megatherium, mylodon, glyptodon, elephant, a large bear, a large jaguar, megalonyx, a large tapir, pachydermata, palæolana, elotherium, oxen, hipparion, and several kinds of horses, some recalling the horse of the present day. (See Prehistoric America, pp. 31, 32, 35, 36, 37, 39, 42, 477, 478, 583, 534, 535. Swine, sheep, and camel. Atlantis, pp. 55, 350, and a beaver-like animal, the platyonyx, and the chlamydotherium, Prehistoric America, pp. 19, 26.)

When some of these discoveries were first made they caused a shock in the scientific world, some of them denied the contemporaneity of the men and mammals whose bones were found together, and the Argentine Scientific Society even refused to listen to the reading of a paper upon the subject. (See Ibid., p. 30.)

The cause of the change in the fauna is a mystery as well as the age in which they disappeared. But so fresh is the ivory of some such perished animals throughout Northern Russia, that according to Tilesius, thousands of fossil tusks have been collected, and used in turning; yet others are still collected, and sold in great plenty. He declares his belief that the bones still left in that country must greatly exceed in number those of all the elephants now living on the globe.

Remains of the mammoth have been gathered from the cliffs of frozen mud and from the ice on the east side of Behring Strait in Alaska. As the cliffs waste away by the thawing of the ice, tusks and bones fall out and a strong odor of animal matter is exhaled from the mud. (See Present Conflict, p. 485.)

"Another class of evidences which go to show that these large mammalians survived till comparatively recent times are found in their well-preserved remains in the frozen regions of Siberia. Of these we have the following interesting examples in Sir Charles Leyell's great work. 'In 1772, Pallas obtained from Wiljuiskoi, in latitude 64°, from the banks of the Wiljui, a tributary of the Lena, the carcass of a rhinoceros, taken from the frozen sand. This carcass, which was compared to a natural mummy, emitted an odor like putrid flesh, part of the skin being still covered with short crisp wool, and with black and gray hairs.'" And Professor Brandt adds, "I have been so fortunate as to extract from cavities in the molar teeth of the Wiljui rhinoceros a small quantity of its half-chewed food, among which fragments of pine leaves, one half of the seed of a polygonaceous plant, and very minute portions of wood with porous cells, were still recognizable. It was also remarkable, on a close investigation of the head, that the blood vessels discovered in the interior of the mass appeared filled, even to the capillary vessels, with a brown mass (coagulated blood), which in many places still showed the red color of the blood.'" —Present Conflict, pp. 483, 484.

Professor Prestwich says in view of such facts that "The evidence from the occurrence of human relics with the bones of extinct animals, as it at present stands, does not seem to me to necessitate the carrying of man back in time past, so much as the bringing forward the extinct animals towards our own times." —Present Conflict, p. 479.

And in the light of a very recent find Prestwich's opinion seems to be confirmed for "an expedition of scientists is to proceed to Kolynsk, Russia, to bring to St. Petersburg the remains of a mammoth recently discovered there and preserved more perfectly than any so far found, for this one's body seems intact; hair, skin, and flesh in place, and even the undigested food in the stomach." —Christian Advocate, for September 25, 1901.

Thus we see that naturalists waver backwards and forwards, some argue that these facts carry man back to a very remote time, while others argue that the same facts bring the extinct animals nearer our times.

It may be out of place here in this paper, but if the reader will turn to Ether 4: 3, it will be seen that the Jaredites were contemporary with the animals that the scientists are now so perplexed about; and in view of such strange facts concerning the disappearance of animal life, in the regions where found, it is natural to ask, How came they to disappear? and how subsisted these great animals in these barren and severe northern latitudes? or, how and whence came they to those climes? As yet no satisfactory answer to scientists is forthcoming. Some have suggested "a constant elevation of the whole Arctic region," which would increase the severity of the northern winters. Others suggest that the mammoth and elephant migrated north during the summer months in herds for pasture, and were caught up there by a blizzard which ended the race in these northern climes. Herds of wild oxen to the number of fifty at a place have been found frozen to death in the ice. Dr. Hamy in his work on Zoölogy of Mexico, affirms that man there was "contemporary with the gigantic animals whose destruction, according to the native writings, were completed by the Olmecs." These Olmecs are represented as occupying Mexico in very remote ages. (See the Aztecs, p. 33. And here is an incidental agreement with Ether 4: 3.)

It is said that great physical changes have taken place in the earth's surface. In Europe evidences of extinct animals, as the mammoth, cave bear, and the woolly-haired rhinoceros mixed with human relics. It is believed also that the shape of the continent was different from at present, that the "British Isles was a part of the continent. And that there was continuous land from Scotland to Denmark. And that Europe had an arctic climate." "At this time," says Professor Hutson, "Europe with alternations of intense cold and heat sufficient to allow the mighty creatures of Africa to roam northward, there was also such a continuity of land surface as to make the Eastern Hemisphere practically one vast low-lying continent." —Beginnings of Civilization, p. 132.

And what seems to confirm Professor Huston and others in this view is that, "Returning miners from Cape Nome reported that at the mouth of Turner Creek, in Kangarok district, a buried forest had been discovered, trees one hundred feet long have been uncovered, some in excellent state of preservation and others that have decayed, the wood resembles California redwood, and some of the trees are very large. About this buried forest, other evidences have been found, pointing to the fact that at one time this district had a tropical or semitropical climate; in the buried forests elephant tusks, deer horns and mammoth tusks have been found." —St. Louis Globe Democrat for October 15, 1901.

And "many bones of elephants, rhinoceroses, hippopotami, and other animals, have been found in the gravel on which London stands; they have been dug up on the site of Waterloo Place, St. James'

Square, Charing Cross, Bethnal Green, and the London Docks: and in the British Museum is laid up a flint weapon of the spearhead form, which was found with an elephant's tooth, near Grays Inn Lane, in the heart of the city. Similar discoveries have been made in the valley of the Ouse and several other streams."—Present Conflict, p. 470.

In Wales at a place called "Bosco's Den, no less than one thousand antlers of the reindeer were extracted. . . . Here also were found several well-shaped flint knives."—Ibid., pp. 464, 465.

In cutting a water-course for a paper-mill at Wells, England, were found the "bones of elephants, rhinoceroses, bears, wolves, elks, foxes, etc."—Ibid., p. 464.

"From a study of variety of natural facts, geologists have been led to the conclusion, that at the early period when the stone implements of England and France were in use, these countries were undivided by sea, and the climate in them was much colder than at present, as cold, in fact, as that which now prevails some ten or fifteen degrees farther toward the north, or in the latitude of the localities in which some of the Siberian carcasses have been discovered. Under these circumstances, therefore, the hair-clad mammoth and rhinoceros would find a congenial home at that period in the valleys of the Thames, the Somme, and the Seine, where their remains and the stone hammers and flint knives are now found lying together."—Ibid., p. 488.

Such are some of the physical changes that man has witnessed. It is said that "the hairy mammoth and his compeers had their dying day prior perhaps to the time of written history, and other species we know have been brought to their dying day within the period of history. The bear died out in the British Isles in the eleventh century of the Christian era; the Irisk elk, whose antlers stood ten feet and a half above the ground, in the beginning of the fourteenth century; the Reindeer of Denmark toward the close of the fifteenth century; the Urus, first mentioned by Julius Cæsar, in the sixteenth century; the Moa of New Zealand and the Epiornis of Madagascar within the epoch of the traditions of those islands; the Dodo and some other birds of Mauritius in the seventeenth century; the Solitaire of the island of Rodrigues disappeared somewhat later; and the last seen of the great Auk of the Arctic Regions was in 1844. Other species still are fast approaching the day of their extinction. 'The Kangaroo and the Emu,' says Lyell, 'are retreating rapidly before the progress of colonization in Australia. . . . The Beaver and Moose and Bufialo of North America . . . appear to be inevitably doomed.'"—Present Conflict, pp. 490, 491.

It is estimated that six million buffaloes have disappeared within a century (see Munsey's Magazine for June, 1901), and with such facts before us we see that the extinction of the mammoth, etc., is but one of many similar events that have taken place within the human period.

With the consent of the reader we will now turn aside, to notice a "commandment." It is true that this paper is not dealing in commandments, but we wish to notice one or two, as we go along our weary way through these relics and "dry bones."

"Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; . . . that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, date 1832.

Selected Articles.

A NEW RELIGION IN JAPAN.

Japan is thoroughly aroused by the impassioned discussion still occupying the reviews as to the possibility and necessity of endowing that country with a new religion. Neither Buddhism nor Shintoism nor Christianity appears to be longer to the taste of the elite, and each is emulating the other in searching after a supreme doctrine. Among the most earnest and ardent seekers is Doctor Inoue Tetsujiro, who, while conducting the Japanese toward the promised land of a new faith, attacks on the way all the religions and all their heads. This has stirred up the reviews against this "breaker of idols." Doctor Inoue, with characteristic impetuosity, replies, in the review Tetsugaki Zasshi (Japan), to his critics and detractors:

"My new religion is not a whitewashing of ancient doctrines. I should like to find a new substance for our life, but not a new form. The form has constantly changed throughout the ages, and all the forms are alike in value. But the substance has never varied."

Doctor Inoue expresses himself as opposed to Roman Catholicism, which he holds to be inferior to Protestantism, and regards all religions as superannuated because they are based upon exterior words and ceremonies. Christianity and Buddhism are playthings, he tells us. In fact, all religions are more or less corrupt, and his compatriots, he thinks, would only be losing their time in searching after an ideal religious doctrine, for the simple reason that there is none. The only thing to do is to create a new religion by borrowing the best from existing beliefs, and then reconciling the principles thus elaborated with modern science.

In the same review, Doctor Enryo combats the theories set forth by Tetsujiro. It would be childish, says Doctor Enryo, to try to build an entire religious edifice from certain of its parts. The believing portion of humanity is accustomed to its articles of faith. These are imperceptibly connected with the state of the soul, and it is chimerical to expect to find a man skillful enough to effect with impunity an amputation of the kind. Doctor Enryo writes further as follows:

"He [Inoue Tetsujiro] says among other things that Buddhism is impracticable and bad because it contains numerous doctrines and sacred books far too voluminous. But when we open Webster's large dictionary, are not the incalculable number of English circumlocutions and words equally formidable? What would be said, however, of any one who, acting on this principle, should condemn this language as useless or too complicated? Buddhism, it is said, teaches pessimism and asceticism. . . . This is rather due to its commentators than to Buddhism itself. . . . The Shinn priests eat meat. . . . The Buddhist sect of the Nichiren has rejected pessimism and gaily enjoys life. . . . The Mahanya, the essential doctrine of Buddhism, might be developed into a system of optimism perfectly in accord with the obligations of modern life. Was not the Christianity of the Middle Ages equally a doctrine of pessimism and of renunciation of life? See what it has become to-day!"

Elsewhere, Doctor Enryo criticizes Tetsujiro and his numerous adepts for wishing to base religion upon science:

"Is that necessary? The number of people who understand science is exceedingly limited, while religious principles interest everybody. Admitting the possibility of creating a religious doctrine that should be in complete accord with science, what a sorry religion it would give us! . . . It would above all be robbed of its primordial charm, its perfume of the past. . . . What would you think if any one were to offer you an ideal soup made of beans, meat juice, milk, and fish sauce? What a strange mixture that would be, and yet each article, taken separately, is good and highly esteemed."

He says further:

"Humanity already has a religion of this character, that of Auguste Comte. And when, after incredible efforts, I succeeded in finding his church in London, I was told that the number of these adepts has never exceeded forty or fifty persons.

Enryo concludes that there is but one solution possible of the religious problems which vex humanity, and that is to ameliorate and reform the existing religions, but not to try to create a new one, for "it is easier to repair an old building than to build a new one." — Translations made for the Literary Digest, April 12, 1902.

OUR OLDER CHILDREN.

A recent educator divides childlife into five periods—prenatal, infancy, childhood, pubescence, from ten to fourteen, adolescence, from fourteen to twenty.

Too much importance can not be attached to the first two periods, and while we believe that much depends upon the early impressions made, and the habits formed while very young, we also believe that, quite often, parents who have been reasonably successful in the early training of their children, fail in guiding them over the trying periods of pubescence and adolescence, at which time wild, impossible ideas frequently predominate.

The little one who has been easily controlled and guided will frequently, at this age, become irritable and refractory, and at times sullen, moody, and absent-minded.

The troubled parent asks: "What shall I do? I have scolded and talked until I am discouraged." We answer, scolding and fault-finding is not what your child needs, but sympathy. His or her heart is craving sympathy, and greatly needs the loving patience of wise Christian parents. The boy does not understand himself. The world looks differently to him now. How it has enlarged within the past few years or even months! He sees wonderful possibilities before him now, and he begins to think himself capable of deciding his own course, whether it be the choice of companions, anticipated pleasure, or business plans. Be patient with him, and even though you could not consent to his requests, do not repulse him by a positive denial. Counsel with him and entertain his views for a time, then gently and kindly suggest a better way and ask his opinion. Doubtless he will accept your ideas without being aware that he has been controlled. You have gained a victory, you have held your boy, and he will come to you again not afraid of being repulsed.

Avoid opposing your children or they will become obstinate and discouraged and you will drive them from you; but by kindness and tact, and by instilling right principles, get them to think right and to love the right, and their acts will be governed accordingly.

Control them, but do it as much as possible without their being aware that they are controlled. Some wives control their husbands by this tact, and husbands their wives, and why not parents their children, and so preserve the harmony of the home and hold their confidence and love?

The daughter not only should be advised of the care of her health at this time, but she needs the sympathy and companionship of a wise mother. Advise both son and daughter of the change being wrought in their physical nature at this age, by which they are to take their places in the endless chain of transmission.

Inform yourself so you can tell them reverently of God's plan. You will find no better help than Dr. Mary Wood-Allen's "Teaching Truth," "Almost a Man," and "Almost a Woman." You can not afford to leave them to the counsel of the vile and evil-minded, who may drag them to their own level of dirt and mire. When they form their first attachment do not ridicule and tease them. Sometimes it is best not to notice it, but if advice is needed, let it be given in kindness, exchanging views. Study to avoid opposition, and again let me say, use tact, be patient, and keep the confidence of your children, for as soon as you lose their confidence they are in danger.

When they have their trials in self-control, instead of scolding and blaming, be gentle with them, and advise them to be patient with themselves; tell them that you will try to help them to overcome, that nature will soon adjust all this disorder and calm these strange emotions, and they will be able to control themselves and develop into the noble man you desire for your son, and the amiable, loving, and energetic woman that you would delight to call daughter. That they are taking on manhood and womanhood and will soon take their places in the world, either to make a success or a failure. Always predict success, and it will go a great way in stimulating them to strive to attain to the high standard that you predict for them.

Make intimate companions of your children; ask their opinion in regard to your plans. I knew a mother whose boy of fourteen became very obstinate and self-willed. After much prayer and study she decided it was better to treat him as a companion. She would ask his advice as to the color and style of the dress or hat she was about to purchase, or his judgment and taste in arranging their furniture. If they were to have company he was consulted in planning for their entertainment. This companionship had the desired effect. This mother's tact and her pleasant and kind treatment won her boy. If mother looked up to him for counsel and advice it would be beneath his dignity as a gentleman to give her a cross word, or to refuse her wishes.

If by lack of sympathy or patience you lose your hold upon your boy or girl, you may never be able to regain it. The question comes to us as parents, How can we so govern, control, and develop ourselves that we shall be competent to train, develop, and guide the dear ones that God has committed to our care?

Let us study our children and their needs; take helps, of which there are so many now; inform ourselves, and seeking the help of God add to our knowledge, love, patience, and sympathy, and withal a large portion of the love of Christ, that we shall not mar the clay that God has given us to mould, but that it shall, under our care, become a vessel of honor meet for the Master's use.—Elizabeth L. Stevens, in American Mother.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

From the Librarian's report we clip the following:

"After being elected . . . I was not able to get to work for about two months, largely owing to other more urgent work, but partly because I had not a working list at hand of the Sunday-school districts. The General Superintendent, however, furnished me with a list of thirty-two districts, and the latter part of June I sent out letters to those districts, addressing the district librarian where one had been appointed, and in other cases the secretary or the superintendent. As a result, during the next three months, ten of the districts were heard from in some form or other.

"Not being satisfied with this first effort, another letter was addressed to each of the district associations, March 1, and as a result, twenty were heard from. It is a source of regret that the year was not a few months longer, for, doubtless, one more effort would have won the rest of them or nearly so.

"The library work is evidently still in its infancy. It is in fact hardly started yet. There are a few fine local libraries, but they are not nearly so numerous as they should be, and the district libraries are still quite small. A few districts more have been persuaded to appoint a district librarian, and several have this year taken up the idea of a district circulating library, so that when one school in a district has received its measure of use from a good book, instead of letting such valuable matter lie idle, and take up room needed for other books, under the direction of the district librarian it is placed in some other school and continues its usefulness. It also involves the idea of the various schools of the district subscribing or donating means toward buying books to be used in the district entirely, and so be placed and moved under the supervision of the district librarian.

"Some schools, in fact many of them, are hardly able to build up a suitable library alone, and it is to help them that this district library becomes of value. But even the strongest schools ought to be benefited, when it is working well. For they will have, first, the full benefit of their own books, then loaning these to be used elsewhere in the district, the district will loan them some of the books belonging to the district and some of those donated or loaned by other schools, so a greater number of the best books are placed at the disposal of all at a less total cost. How often the books should be moved would depend in part on how long it would take a school to get the full benefit of their use, and partly on the size of the district, that is how far the books would have to be moved. To confer the greatest amount of good consistent with a low expenditure for transportation should be our constant aim.

"Sr. Blanche Andrews, of Carson, Iowa, has suggested the advisability of the General Association taking up the work, and providing a general library. A small beginning could be made, say ten books to each district; they could be brought to the convention each year by delegates and returned the same way, thus saving transportation charges for the most part; it will have the advantage of a few carefully selected books of the highest type as a nucleus to the district and local library work. There are some practical difficulties here, the means of raising a few hundred dollars to start it with. Would it come out of the general treasury or would it necessarily be raised by special collections? There would also be the current expenses of replacing worn out volumes and for transportation in some cases, at least, even if we did not go on to enlarge it at once. . . . But these may be solved upon further consideration.

"In connection with these thoughts there comes the idea that Sr. Allen, our former librarian advanced so strongly, and that is a catalogue of suitable books with a short description of each, with possibly some information as to price which would certainly be a valuable aid to all of us. I have written to all district librarians, and others asking for list of books, and some district librarians have sent me short descriptions of books, but only a few have been heard from. I have also examined some books at the request of district librarians as to their suitability. . . .

"Upon request I have written a few papers for district work, sent letters to others, and clippings with suggestions to still others; but it has only been a few at best. The library work is a thing of slow growth, and it will probably be several years before it is in thorough working order. But in the meantime ground is being slowly but surely gained. . . .

"It was with deep regret that we found ourselves elected librarian last April, not because we are unwilling to work, for it would be a source of great pleasure to take up this line of work thoroughly and see it succeed, but because other work was already pressing to such an extent that we felt with our utmost effort we could do nothing like justice to the work. And so it has proven. The executive meetings after the convention last year were indeed a treat and it is a source of keen regret that I am not able to be present at the convention this year. . . . I am thoroughly interested in the work and see its needs in part. Later, it may be possible that I can help, but now in justice to all, as at present I can not give the work the attention it requires and ought to have, I can only request that my name be not considered for the office. . . . Believe me, this arises from no lack of interest or willingness to work on my part, but from my inability to continue all the work I have on hand and do it well as it should be done.

Respectfully,
"S. A. BURGESS, General Librarian."

Letter Department.

MANCHESTER, Texas, April 17.

Editors Herald: After a long, cold winter, we are having a wet spring. The farmers can not plant their crops; but while the wind blows and the rain falls we still, by the help of God, are trying to carry the angel's message on. I have just returned from Coal Gate, Indian Territory, where I went to look after the gospel work. About six years ago Bro. Montague organized a branch at Coal Gate, with several members. Trouble got into the branch and most of the members moved away. About two years ago the branch quit meeting, and the work went down. So I went up there about March 25, called the Saints together in a business meeting, Brn. McClain and Faulks meeting with me, at the home of Bro. Huffered, and we had quite a good meeting. The brethren that were present resolved to try to renew the work.

Brn. McClain and Huffered rented the opera house and we began preaching. The audience was small at the start, but the last night of preaching we had a good attendance and splendid attention. After services two or three came to me and asked me to pray for them. I baptized one and others said they would be baptized in the near future. We went to work to see if we could not get a church built in the town. One Mr. A. G. McPherson, a noble man and who, I think, will obey the gospel soon, gave us a beautiful lot in the heart of the residence part of the town, on which to build a church, and said he would give help otherwise. Bro. McClain gave fifty dollars, Bro. J. W. Huffered twenty-five, and others said they were willing to help all they could. So I hope we will soon have a nice church in the town of Coal Gate, which bids fair to be quite a little city. It has about three thousand inhabitants and is putting up some fine brick and stone buildings. It is in a lovely prairie country, with the hills rich with coal. Two new railroads are just passing through the country, so there is a good outlook for the gospel in that country. I think an elder would do well to locate there to help care for the branch and to present the gospel to the people in that country, and beyond a doubt, quite a number would be gathered in.

PERRY, Iowa, April 13.

The old saying, "If you know something good tell it to others," comes to our mind to-night as we sit thinking of the pleasant hour just passed. The Congregational church of Perry was filled this evening with attentive listeners for the reason that Lawrence Carstensen, a Latter Day Saint minister, and popular business man of the town, was to lecture on his trip to the Holy Land. The pastor of the church opened the service by prayer. In his prayer he said, "Father, we feel that this man has come as a messenger of truth unto us." After prayer, a hymn was sung, also a most beautiful anthem by Perry's best singers, after which Bro. Carstensen was introduced. With that sweet simplicity the Master taught, with a manner void of affectation, and with that naturally refined dignity that comes through the Master's blessing, our brother began his interesting talk in a beautiful descriptive manner giving minutely a picture of what he had seen in that far-away land where our Savior was one of the participants in the greatest drama of events the history of the world records. All eyes were upon our faithful brother, not a whisper was heard; but all were eager to catch every word falling from his lips. Our hearts swelled with gratitude as we saw him face his congregation so squarely, driving all prejudice before him with that Divine help promised him and all those who do the will of the Father. He talked on the wonderful events connected with that great drama, he described the once lovely Palestine, and other interesting events.

Bro. Carstensen has won the hearts and confidence of the people of the town of Perry. May it please the Master to call into his work many more young men who have tact, ability, and a studious disposition. One other pleasing feature was that after the lecture was closed, a most appropriate hymn was sung, in which were a great many words used in the lecture. One would think it especially composed for the occasion. How beautiful is consistency, how admirable a thing fittingly done. Many were the praises for our brother, from different groups of people as they dispersed to wend their way homeward. May our Father in heaven give a blessing to those outside the church who so willingly and kindly assisted our brother.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 8.

Dear Herald: I picked up a paper the other day and was attracted to an article headed, "The Marvelous Power of Self-Denial;" and recognizing it as a sterling quality in the human soul, I read, seeking for a lesson to assist me in a compliance with that principle so much admired by the good and the true. During a certain week each year believers in the Salvation Army's purposes are urged to deny themselves so as to assist in the good work. In London this year five hundred thousand dollars was raised in this way. Among the multitude who made an effort to promote what to them seemed to be a good cause, were a few examples given.

"One young woman lived for a week on brown bread and apples and managed to save $1.25, which she sent to the Salvation Army. Since $1.25 represented the difference between her usual fare and the brown bread and apples, you may believe that it was a poor woman who made this sacrifice.

"An old woman in a workhouse, who had not one penny in the world, requested the authorities to cut her rations in half during self-denial week and send to the Salvation Army whatever the other half might be worth. The managers wisely refused. The poor old woman, determined to deny herself for the sake of principle even without financial result, distributed half of her small supply of food among other inmates of the institution.

"The nurses and doctors of the North London workhouse, touched by this piety, raised a collection of $3.75, gave it to the old woman and let her send it to the Salvation Army.

"Many 'charwomen,' a class of domestics in England who work by the day and who earn barely enough to keep their families alive, arranged with their mistresses to deprive them of butter at their meals during self-denial week and turn over the proceeds to the Salvation Army."

What an admirable enforcement of their convictions, and further confirmation of the truth expressed by James: "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

The lesson that forced itself upon me was, if the people can make such sacrifices with their cause, what ought we to do with the grand cause which has been intrusted to us? Talk about paying the Graceland debt! Why, if our people would follow the examples given above it would have been brushed out of existence at once. If our people would be as demonstrative of their love and fidelity as these people, the work would move much faster than it now does. It requires what Paul speaks of as "a willing mind."

Remember, when Jesus was among men, the people would not and he could not. God always permits us to act on our agency. Brethren and sisters, with such a marvelous work as has been committed to us, let us put in practice at least as much of the principle of self-denial as others. We are called to be leaders in good works. We are called upon to "bring to pass much righteousness" of ourselves and not wait to be made ashamed by others taking the lead. Let us take the place assigned to the people of God, the light of the world. We have the example of self-denial in our Savior. When we see such devotion and earnest effort upon the part of those whose cause we look upon as being inferior to the one we represent, it ought to make us realize what we ought to do as an expression of our convictions and an enforcement of the deep-rooted effect it has upon us.

CHAS. A. PARKIN.

AKRON, Iowa, April 6.

Editors Herald: I, too, have observed this fast day, that I might be in touch with the Saints assembled in conference. How my heart yearns to be with them there! I am alone; not only separated from Saints but from my family also.

I arose at six this morning, and have spent the day in worship, by reading, singing, prayer, meditation, and in praising my heavenly Father for the daily blessings that come to me through the gospel. I have not thought of being lonesome, only the yearning to be with Saints. I know of but one Saint nearer than Sioux City, thirty-five miles away.

Sr. Lena Hughes when a girl lived with me nearly fourteen years. I taught her the gospel and she became a follower of Jesus. My own were taught but as yet none have obeyed the true gospel; yet I am hopeful because of the precious promises given me by the Spirit of their salvation and that my prayers that I am promised are treasured up shall be answered notwithstanding there is not a ray of light as to how this work will ever be accomplished. Yet I know there is nothing impossible with God. I have prayed and fasted for their salvation and I am promised that my Father who heareth in secret will reward us openly. Praise his holy name!

The HERALD and Ensign are welcomed as eagerly as a meal when hungry. I can not do without the church literature. I am always anxious to know how the work is progressing. I am so strengthened to read the good letters and sermons each week. May God prosper his servants.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be restored to health and that my family may obey this gospel of the kingdom.

Conference Minutes.

Kentucky and Tennessee.—Convened with Foundry Hill Branch, February 15, at two o'clock; M. L. Sory chosen to preside. Branch reports: Foundry Hill 62, gain 3; Eagle Creek 33, gain 1; Sedalia 127, gain 21; Haley Creek 47, gain 3. Elders reporting: J. H. Adair, L. M. McFadden, M. L. Sory, C. L. Snow, I. N. Roberts, J. R. McClain; Teachers W. J. Seaton, Bro. Oliver. Officers for the next twelve months: J. R. McClain, president; J. H. Winn, secretary; D. W. Cook sustained as bishop's agent. The conference passed off quietly and all seemed to rejoice in the one faith.

Manchester.—Conference was held March 29-31. Business sessions were held in South Manchester branch room, 4 Elvington Street, Hulme; Sunday services in Hulme town hall, Stratford Road. The chief item of business on Saturday was the election of Henry Greenwood as district president, George Baty as vice-president, and Thomas Brien district secretary. T. J. Sheldon, who is appointed to the European Mission, with London as his objective point, was with us, and right glad we were to see him. By unanimous vote he and Bro. Dewsnap, Sen., were associated with Bro. Greenwood in presiding over the conference. Sunday was a glorious day for us; Elder Sheldon addressed us upon the topic of eternal life. Sunday afternoon was a fellowship meeting, president and vice-president in charge, and it was a grand one. It was a marked feature of this meeting the part the young took in it, interspersed with the middle-aged and the aged. Sunday evening Presidents Greenwood and Dewsnap, Sen., were on the stand, and after opening services our Bro. Sheldon was again presented as speaker. His text was from Matthew 1:21, the angel's direction to Joseph: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Truly we had a good day. Monday morning found us gathering at nine a. m. for a long day's sitting. A lot of work was got through which will go to help build up the Lord's work in these parts. The Aaronic priesthood petitioned conference for voice and vote in its deliberations. This was postponed until next quarterly conference. Our late district president was presented on Saturday with an illuminated address from the members and officers of this district. Bro. Dewsnap, Sen., after having been president of this district for about twenty-five or twenty-six years, sought and obtained honorable release from the office. The whole district joined in subscribing to this address as a token of their respect, love, and esteem. It is gold-mounted and framed in a very nice oak frame. Our brother is being presented with a Bible, also, later on. The address was presented by Bro. Henry Greenwood, vice-president, and who succeeds our Bro. Dewsnap. Bro. Dewsnap received it and replied in feeling terms. May he be spared many years yet to give us the benefit of his vast experience in this latter-day work. The conference was very profitable and spiritual to all who took part in it.

Pastoral.

To the Missionary Force of the Southeastern Mission; Dear Brethren: As our conference is over and we are entering the labors of another year, I trust that all are fully prepared to wage the warfare to the fullest extent. Bro. J. W. Adams and J. W. Metcalf will operate in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, and vicinity; C. L. Snow and J. M. Scott in Southeastern Tennessee and North Carolina; W. R. Smith and S. H. Fields, Kentucky and Tennessee; J. R. McClain and D. W. Cook, Tennessee and Kentucky District; W. H. Pruitt, North Carolina; M. L. Sory, Eagle Creek and Foundry Hill, Tennessee; S. D. Allen, Florida; W. J. and W. L. Booker, Alabama and Mississippi. Dear brethren, let us now as faithful servants of God occupy the various fields assigned with credit to the church and ourselves as ministers of Christ. Let no time be lost. The harvest is great and laborers are few. Keep a record of all labors performed as required by the General Conference, and each one report the same to me every quarter on July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Please take notice and be prompt in reporting. My field address is Garland, Alabama. I hope to hear from each missionary between times of reporting, as changes in the field may be necessary. Hoping and praying for the success of all, I am, Yours in bonds, I. N. Roberts, Missionary in Charge. Lamoni, Iowa, April 23.

To the Ministry and Saints of Michigan, Indiana, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin; Greeting: By virtue of appointment from the General Conference I am expected to take the active supervision of the interests of the church among you for the ensuing year, and am intensely anxious to secure your coöperation, without which my efforts will be fruitless. I trust that at the close of the year we shall not be ashamed of the record that shall have been made. In order to further advance the interests of the work committed to our trust and to more readily meet the demands that may be made of us, I hereby appoint in charge of the respective fields brethren whom I trust you can heartily support, and to whom you can address all matters that should properly come to the missionary in charge, and whom you may counsel in regard to all legitimate demands for labor: Elder C. H. Burr will be in charge of Wisconsin. Elder J. Arthur Davies will be in charge in Kewanee District. Elder F. M. Cooper, in charge in the Northeastern Illinois District, except the city of Chicago. Elder M. H. Bond, in charge in the city of Chicago. Elder J. J. Cornish, in Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts. Elder W. E. Peak, in the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Districts. Elder George Jenkins, in Southern Indiana. Missionaries appointed to these several fields of labor will please take notice and report to the one in charge, as required by the rules hitherto governing, which require prompt reports on the first days of July, October, January, and March. Please get your reports in promptly so that those in charge may report to me on the 10th days of the foregoing months. In looking over the lists I observe that Bro. W. H. Kelley and G. D. Washburn are not appointed to any specific field. The former will please report to Elder J. J. Cornish for direction and the latter to Elder W. E. Peak. Will those in charge please publish their addresses as soon as practicable that they may be the more readily communicated with. Trusting that harmony and peace may abide with us and success under the blessings of God crown our labors, I am, Your co-worker in the cause of truth, Heman C. Smith.

To the Ministry and Saints of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and the Dakotas; Greeting: Through the providence of God, it has fallen to my lot to have charge of the mission work in the States named above. I would therefore appeal to the ministry and laity to go to with a will, and give us your hearty cooperation in spreading the glad message of the gospel as far and as wide as may be possible. I beseech you of the missionary force to get out of the old beaten trails, and make new paths into the wilderness, and open new clearings, and plant new colonies, wherever we can get a foothold, leaving the branch and district organizations to look after the work intrusted to them, and made their duty by the law, so far as it is practical. To the local ministry I appeal: Use every means you can to care for the work under your jurisdiction, whether in branch, district, or stake, freeing so far as possible the missionary force from such burdens, that they may push the work with all their might in the new openings. The laity can render much assistance in various ways also if they will. We would be pleased to have the isolated and scattered Saints correspond with us as to the possibilities of opening the work in your neighborhoods, and should you not know the address of the missionary in your district you can write me at my home address, and I will do all I can to answer the calls so far as our limited force will allow. I would call your attention, the ministry especially, to section 122: 7 of the Doctrine and Covenants, and plead with you to put it to the test in our mission this year and verify the promise of God found therein. In order to facilitate the work we have placed the brethren named below in charge of the fields named. Those laboring in the several districts will please take notice and report to the brethren named on the first of July, October, January, and March. Be careful and prompt in reporting. Also write them for directions concerning work in your several districts. (This should not be construed to mean that you should not write to the missionary in charge if you have matters of importance upon which you wish to consult him.) In view of Bro. John Smith, president of Lamoni Stake, being placed in the field under general appointment, I have felt it would be to the best interests of the work in the Stake to appoint him in charge in the Lamoni Stake. Des Moines District, J. F. Mintun; Galland's Grove District, J. M. Baker; Fremont District, Columbus Scott; Nauvoo District, James McKiernan; Little Sioux District, H. N. Hansen; Pottawattamie District, D. R. Chambers; Eastern Iowa District, D. M. Rudd; Southern Nebraska District, W. M. Self; Northern Nebraska District, C. E. Butterworth; Central Nebraska District, Levi Gamet; Brn. S. D. Payne and C. W. Prettyman in Western Nebraska; Oscar Case and William Sparling in the Dakotas. All the appointees to Minnesota will please report to the missionary in charge direct until further notice. Elder James Caffall will be privileged to labor at large in the mission as he may desire, or be invited, and his health permit, reporting to the missionary in charge direct. Bro. R. O. Self, Central Nebraska District; Bro. A. A. Baker, Southern Nebraska District; Bro. Guy J. Munsel, Northern Nebraska District. I shall try and visit you in your several fields so far as I shall be able. Now, brethren of the missionary force, let us arise and thrust in our sickles and reap without cessation until the last report for the year shall be in, and may the yearly report be so full, and evidence to God and the church that we have not been idle or slothful servants, but alive to the interests intrusted to us, and that we fully appreciate the responsibility under which we are laboring. May the peace, power, and protection of God be with you in your work. Frederick A. Smith, Missionary in Charge. Lamoni, Iowa, April 25, 1902. Home address, Box 225, Lamoni, Iowa.

To the General Conference Appointees of the Eastern Mission; Greeting: The following arrangement and disposition of laborers is agreed upon; viz.: Ohio District, H. E. Moler, T. J. Beatty (Columbus); E. E. Long, H. E. French, J. L. and V. M. Goodrich. West Virginia District, G. H. Godby, Wm. R. Odell, E. H. Durand. Pittsburg District, James Craig, L. D. Ullom, D. L. Allen, J. T. Hackett. Kirtland District, R. Baldwin, F. J. Ebeling, E. P. Schmidt, O. B. Thomas. Maine, C. H. Rich, Uriah Kelley, J. N. Ames, S. O. Foss. Massachusetts District, H. J. Davison, I. M. Smith. New York District, S. W. L. Scott, W. W. Blanchard. Scranton, Pennsylvania, J. Alfred Davis. L. R. Devore, Kirtland, Ohio. W. E. LaRue, Philadelphia District. D. J. Krahl, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. J. B. Lentz, Greenwood, New York. G. W. Robley, Providence and Fall River, for present, in charge. H. E. Moler, Ohio District. O. B. Thomas, Kirtland District. #### Railway Clergy Permits.

All General Conference missionary appointees, and all general church officers who devote their entire time to religious work, having no other occupation or business, have been indorsed to the Central, Western, Southwestern, and Trans-Continental Passenger Associations (the only associations that issue clergy permits) as entitled to clergy permits according to their published rules, which require that applicants for such permits shall be "regularly ordained ministers, devoting their entire time to religious work, having no other occupation or business." These indorsements are made with the understanding that any who may cease from religious work, or otherwise place themselves out of harmony with said rules of the railway associations, will promptly surrender their clergy permits to the associations issuing; also that "general missionaries in charge of territory are also advised to see that such rule is observed by all laboring under their direction; this to prevent even any unintentional violation of the rules that might otherwise occur." All local ministers have been referred to their missionaries in charge for indorsement, as heretofore, according to established rule. A list of names and addresses of said general missionaries in charge, including designations of territory, has also been furnished. Careful compliance with rules by applicants will secure the interests of all concerned, and protect against discriminations that might otherwise be made. In territory where railway associations do not issue permits to ministers, applications therefor should be made to separate railroad companies, some of which issue clergy permits, and some do not; while others issue only to pastors located and residing on their lines, but not to missionaries. Where a missionary appointment is changed to that of a city pastorate or mission, under rule of conference authorizing change of missionary in a field by the one in charge, a new certificate of appointment will be issued in harmony therewith, when necessary to secure clergy credential, if so requested by the one in charge. All are required, under the rules, to make their own applications. Where discrimination or misunderstanding occurs, the undersigned will, if reported, take up the matter and do what he can to aid in obtaining permits, etc. R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, Lamoni, Iowa, April 26, 1902.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

Saints and Friends in Minnesota; Greeting: Please take notice that as Minnesota is my field of labor for the coming year, I will remain Bishop's agent for said State, and trust that as you all very well know that the law of tithing is essential to salvation, I trust none will neglect their duty, but send along their tithing, and receive the blessing that God has in store for all who obey his law. My field address is, F. D. Omans, Box 337, Perham, Minnesota.

Reunion Notices.

The annual Western Iowa reunion will convene at Dow City, Iowa, Friday, September 5. The main part of the large tent top is new, insuring comfort to worshipers in any kind of weather. Other notices will be given in due time. A. H. Rudd, Secretary, Dow City, Iowa.

Correction.

In HERALD for April 23, article, "Burning of the wicked," page 386, second column, first line, "Book of Mormon 4: 1-9" should read, Book of Nephi 4: 1-9. Page 387, first column, seventh line, 2 Peter 1: 10, 12 should read, 2 Peter 3: 10, 12.

Board of Publication.

At a meeting of the Board of Publication, April 28, the following business was transacted:

An organization was effected by electing Bishop E. L. Kelley, President, F. B. Blair, Business Manager and Treasurer, J. A. Gunsolley, Secretary; President and Business Manager, Executive Committee, W. A. Hopkins to act as a member of the Executive Committee in the absence of the President.

President Joseph Smith was continued as Senior Editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, with Frederick M. Smith as Associate Editor, and Joseph Luff and F. M. Sheehy as Corresponding Editors. W. H. Garrett was continued as Editor of Zion's Ensign, with C. Ed Miller as Business Manager and Foreman.

The Religio-Literary Society was granted the use of fourteen pages of Autumn Leaves for their use, they to select their own editor.

R. J. Lambert was retained as Superintendent of the printing department of the HERALD; A. H. Mills was retained as book-keeper of the Ensign. The matter of Editor for the Hope and Autumn Leaves and the employment of other needed help for the two establishments was left to the Executive Committee.

It was ordered that the Book of Mormon Vocabulary be published as soon as practicable.

T. A. Hougas and H. R. Mills were appointed a committee to investigate the matter of an enlarged hymnal and report at the next meeting.

It was ordered that during six months of the summer season the employees be allowed half day Saturdays, and that during the remaining six months the time be nine hours per day.

Adjourned subject to call of President.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Secretary.

Died.

RUSSELL.—Alice M. Chute Russell was born December 18, 1878, in Conecuh County, Alabama. Passed peacefully away April 5, 1902, at Bay Minette, Alabama, leaving husband and little boy about sixteen months old.

CHUTE.—Ethel May was born May 4, 1900, at Bay Minette, Alabama; died December 13, 1901, at Bay Minette. She never enjoyed health.

CATO.—April 5, 1902, James LaVerne Cato, aged 10 months, son of Elder J. N. and Hattie J. Cato.

CARMICHAEL.—William W. Carmichael was born in New Trenton, Indiana, April 27, 1833. Was united in marriage to Susan M. Chappellow, May, 1857. To them were born two sons and two daughters. The former died while in infancy. He united with the church February 9, 1874, being baptized by B. V. Springer. He was ordained deacon of the New Trenton Branch, November 21, 1883. He lived a devoted life until death, which occurred March 20, 1902. Wife and two daughters mourn. Remarks by M. R. Scott, Jr.

HEMSTOCK.—At Audubon, Minnesota, April 9, 1902, Mr. Benjamin F. Hemstock. He was born May 23, 1840. He had been confined to his home for many years, and at times was a great sufferer. He had three sons and one daughter; two survive, one son and a daughter. He was tenderly cared for in his sickness by his son, Bro. Edward Hemstock. Funeral service at the house, April 10, by Elder T. J. Martin. He was buried in Oak Grove Cemetery, Detroit.

WESTON.—At Dorchester, Nebraska, of pneumonia, April 8, 1902, Alma Francis, son and only living child of Bro. William J. and Sr. Rena (Coates) Weston. Born July 21, 1896. Comforting funeral discourse by Elder Pettit, of Christian Church, himself, congregation, school-teachers, and neighbors showing every kindness. Pupils of first and second rooms attended funeral in a body, and as a farewell tribute, each lovingly contributed a white flower. The adage, "Death loves a shining mark," has been again exemplified. Our darling is safe with loved ones gone before. Blessed in 1898 in Omaha by Elder F. A. Smith.

DALBEY.—Poleaty, wife of Dick Dalbey, at her home near Lydia, Texas, February, 24, 1902, aged 49 years. She was born in Titus County, Texas, February 24, 1853. In early life she united with the Missionary Baptist Church and lived up to what light she had, but when she heard the restored gospel she accepted it, being baptized May 14, 1899, by John W. Kent. She was always willing to care for the elders and to do all she could to promulgate the gospel. Husband, five children, and a host of friends mourn.

CHATBURN.—Jonas W. Chatburn was born in Lancashire, England, March 11, 1821; died March 31, 1902, at his home in Harlan, Iowa. Came to America 1845, to Iowa 1850, to Harlan in 1867, where he resided until his death. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church May 11, 1869, and ordained a high priest September 12, 1879. Was president of the Harlan Branch for years, still holding that office at his death. He was an earnest, faithful worker right up to his death. The church lost a noble Saint, the community an excellent citizen, the poor a tender-hearted friend, the family a father, grandfather, brother, a wise counselor. He left a clean record and carried the esteem and respect of all who knew him best. A good man gone to his rest with the righteous in the paradise of God. He leaves two sons and four daughters to mourn. He was buried from the church in which he presided, the large concourse of citizens of every shade of belief mutely telling of the esteem in which he was held. Service in charge of Bro. R. M. Elvin; sermon by F. A. Smith.

HUFFMAN.—Charles Raymond, son of C. H. and Sr. Pearl Huffman, passed to the child's haven of rest, from the home of his grandparents, Bro. and Sr. A. D. Fifer, in St. Joseph, Missouri, with whom they lived, on April 21, 1902, at the age of 1 year, 4 months, 28 days. Funeral from the home on the 22d; sermon by Elder J. M. Terry.

DALEY.—Thomas Daley was born March 27, 1843, at New York, and died March 26, 1902, on the train near Winnimucca, Nevada, while enroute to General Conference. His remains were brought to the home of his father-in-law at Council Bluffs, Iowa, for burial. He was baptized July 25, 1875, and ordained a seventy June 15, 1886, being an active missionary in the Reorganized Church for about twenty-five years. Wife, one son, and other relatives mourn his departure. He was a sufferer for about eleven months, but his faith and hope were ever bright. Funeral from the home of Bro. James Caffall, in charge of Elder C. E. Butterworth; sermon by Elder F. A. Smith.

WALTER.—Sr. Frances Walter was born February 12, 1854, near Chelsea, Iowa; died April 9, 1902. She was married to Elder Charles E. Hand, April 5, 1870. There were born to them eleven children, three preceding her, leaving husband, six sons, and two daughters to mourn. She had been taught from youth to believe in God. When the gospel was preached in her neighborhood she obeyed, and was faithful until the summons home came. She was a faithful wife and companion, a loving mother indeed, and kind to all, a friend in time of need. Funeral service at the home by Elder Wm. C. Nirk, assisted by Elder George Shimel.

WILLIAMS.—Near Breeze, Missouri, April 13, 1902, at the age of 64, Sr. Williams. Her maiden name was Daek. Was married to Elder Alex. Williams in 1856, who died in 1877. She lived a widow twenty-five years, raising a large family, six of whom survive her. Many sympathetic friends were present at the funeral services, which were conducted by Elder J. M. Richards.

PULLEN.—Elizabeth Ellen, wife of David Pullen, at home, Eliza, Illinois, April 17, 1902. Born May 14, 1842, in Duncan Township, Mercer County, Illinois. Baptized by Elder J. T. Kinnaman, August 21, 1897. She was a devoted wife, a kind mother, and a good neighbor. Funeral services were held at Union church, Eliza, Illinois, conducted by Elder William E. La Rue. Interment in Eliza Cemetery. Sr. Pullen had always resided in this neighborhood and was well known and much respected. It was said to be the largest gathering for funeral service ever had at this place.

THORNE.—At her home in Willard, Utah, March 31, 1902, Eleanor Thorne. She was born December 22, 1817, at St. Johns, New Brunswick. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church August 23, 1869, by David H. Smith, at Salt Lake City, Utah. Her husband, Asahel Thorne, also a member of this church, had preceded her five years, having died February 10, 1897. He will be remembered by many of the ministry for his deeds of kindness. Sr. Thorne was taken from this life very suddenly. She was preparing breakfast, and died sitting in her chair. She lived in a Mormon community. The neighbors had been very kind to her in time of sickness and need. Her son who lived with her was a member of the Mormon church, and by his request the elders of that church conducted the services. She was buried in Willard Cemetery.

Addresses.

N. C. Enge, Elvegaden 3 and 5, Christiansand, Norway.
Daniel MacGregor, Box 648, Stratford, Ontario.

A full and authoritative statement of the cost and demands of the United States navy is presented by the engineer-in-chief, Rear-Admiral George W. Melville, in the Review of Reviews for May. The article is illustrated with photographs of the various types of modern war vessels.

The editorial department of the Review of Reviews for May gives an excellent summary and exposition of the various measures before Congress. There are also illuminating paragraphs on foreign politics—the French elections, affairs in the far East, and the South African situation, with discriminating comment on the career of Cecil Rhodes and the purpose and probable results of his remarkable benefactions.

Country Life in America for May is a timely number of this large and superb magazine containing, notably, some remarkable photographs of live trout and of brook fishing. A second installment of the "Country Home-making" series gives practical suggestions for laying out and grading the land. An illustrated article shows how a golf course for home playing can be satisfactorily made in a small stretch of ground. Other features concern the varied pursuits and things of the country: the value of "Our Mountain Forests" is told by Doctor Chase P. Ambler, with many beautiful pictures of the Southern Appalachians; "Glimpses of Brook Life" treats of the plants and animals found along the streams; and "The Inspirations of a Great Farm" tells of the development of profitable dairy herds and of business methods in farming; while "The Nursery and Nurseryman" offers information about plant-raising, with hints about transplanting. Among the timely articles on nature are "The Round of the Song Sparrow's Life" and "An Acquaintance with Screech Owls," both with remarkable photographs of the live birds, their nests and young—giving life-histories of the popular spring songster and the night-wanderer; and "The Mountain Goat," as a peculiarly American game animal, is the subject of an illustrated article by Doctor C. Hart Merriam. The calendar of all the work and recreation of the out-door world is, this month, a profusion of May flowers and birds' nests, with a great deal about gardening and floriculture and sports. In all, Country Life in America is certainly the most beautiful of magazines and the representative journal for those who love the country.

European Tourists and others destined to eastern points, will find the low rates applying over the Nickel Plate Road to New York, New England and other eastern destinations, specially attractive. The eastern terminals via this line are only from three to ten minutes from all ocean steamship docks, and the service afforded is first-class. Three trains daily from Chicago. Uniformed colored porters are in charge of day coaches, whose duties require that proper care shall always be given to keeping cars clean and attending to the wants of passengers enroute. Meals served in dining-cars at prices that are reasonable and within reach of all. Details cheerfully furnished on application to John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Chicago City Ticket Office, 111 Adams St. 18-3t.

Iowa State Sunday-School Convention.

The Thirty-Seventh Annual Sunday-school Convention of Iowa will be held at Sioux City, June 10-12. An exceptionally strong program has been arranged to make this the best convention ever held in our state. Professor E. O. Excell, the Convention Chorister of world-wide fame, who conducted thirty-two State and Territorial Sunday-school conventions under the direction of the International Sunday-school Association is to be the leader of song; W. C. Pearce, General Secretary of the Sunday-school Work in Chicago, known as the "Children's Friend," comes as the International Field Worker; Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, International Primary Field Worker, a Primary Specialist and Convention Speaker, should be heard by every Iowa Primary Worker; Reverend Stephen Phelps, D. D., of the Omaha Theological Seminary, a Bible instructor with rare talent, will give two Bible studies each day; Willis Brown of Chicago, General Secretary of the Anti-Cigarette League, is an orator of national repute. These, with the ablest Sunday-school leaders of our own state, will furnish an unequalled opportunity for fellowship, instruction, and inspiration in the great Sunday-school work of Iowa. Every superintendent is urged to have his school represented at this great convention. Credentials can be secured for delegates from your County Secretary. Reduced rates on all railroads. Free entertainment for lodging and breakfast for all delegates. For information write to B. F. Mitchell, General Secretary, Des Moines, Iowa.

The Chautauquan Magazine for May.

A condensed history of "The Diplomatic Service of the United States" is one of the leading features of The Chautauquan Magazine for May. This article, by Louis E. Van Norman, supplements the intensely interesting series entitled "Formative Incidents in American Diplomacy," which Professor Sparks has been contributing during the year. The current installment deals with Mexico and Cuba, the latter being characterized as "The Turkey of America." The Current Events Programs in this issue are arranged to cover these and other international topics uppermost in the public mind.

"Made in Germany" is the title of a careful statement of German trade methods which have made the German Empire such a formidable competitor among nations. Mr. George B. Waldron comprehensively describes the thorough preparation characteristic of the Germans when they undertake a national trade policy. In the same issue of The Chautauquan, Professor Robert Waller Deering completes a Critical Study of Goethe's "Faust." The frontispiece of the magazine reproduces a famous drawing showing "Mephistopheles in the Guise of a Monk, Appearing to Faust."

Among the practical papers are "The Utilization of Time-Waste," by Herbert W. Horwill; "Food for the Farmer's Family," by Martha Van Rensselaer; and "Children Out-of-doors," by Emma Treavor Eadie.

The travel article for the month is "Among the Alps," by Professor Oscar Kuhns. It is profusely illustrated.

In the C. L. S. C. Round Table, accounts of public libraries promoted by a large number of Chautauqua circles are presented.

Train Sets New Record.

The report of a run of fifteen miles at the rate of nearly one hundred miles an hour, which came to headquarters the other day from the Western Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, was so startling that it was discredited by the Chicago officials, and a detailed report called for.

The result is the following report from conductor G. H. Burns, which established a new world's speed record for runs of fourteen miles and over, the nearest approach to it being the run of the Lehigh Valley Black Diamond Express in April, 1897, when 43.96 miles were made at an average rate of eighty miles an hour.

Conductor Burns says: "Train No. 6 left Denver for Chicago March 24, ten minutes late, having to wait for a through California car from the D. & R. G. Railway.

"A heavy wind prevailed to Akron, 112 miles from Denver, which put us out from Akron thirty minutes late. No special instructions were given as to speed because it is customary when late to run from Akron to Wray, a distance of fifty-four miles, at the rate of seventy to seventy-five miles an hour. We passed Eckley, thirty-nine miles east of Akron, running at seventy-five miles an hour. Between Eckley and Wray, a distance of 14.8 miles, I was in the observation car. In the car were several gentlemen talking about the run. We passed Eckley at 7: 56 p. m., all hands holding watches corroborating. It seemed so short when the whistle was blown that one remarked, speaking of the engineer, 'Oh, well, he was not doing so much as we thought he might.' The speaker believed we had only reached Robb, a distance of 6.1 miles from Eckley, but at that moment the train dashed over a well known bridge between whistling-post and depot. Then I got up and said, 'Gentlemen, we are at Wray, and you have ridden 14.8 miles faster than was ever made before.' We had made the distance in exactly nine minutes, or at the rate of 98.66 miles an hour."

The train consisted of engine, mail-car, baggage-car, two reclining chair-cars, special car Grassmere, three sleeping-cars, and a dining-car, nine cars in all. It was the east-bound fast express for Chicago, the reverse of the famous train west-bound, "The Burlington's No. 1," fast express Chicago to Denver.

Book Reviews.

"A Lay Thesis on Bible Wines," by Edward Emerson. Published by Merrill and Baker, 9-11 E. 16th St., New York.

It is certainly a novelty for a maker of wines to enter the already crowded field of theological discussion; and yet, when that wine-maker is a man of varied experience, a thorough expert in his line, and a man whose education is by no means confined by the limits of his wine vaults, and when his special contribution to that class of literature is nothing more nor less than "A Lay Thesis on Bible Wines," a title which accurately describes the topic selected for discussion, the thought of incongruity between subject and author vanishes. And considering that much has been written upon the subject from a theoretical sense, and little from a practical point of view, it is easily seen that from this standpoint no one is more qualified to write upon this subject than the author.

The Thesis will undoubtedly interest all who have paid the slightest attention to the two-wine theory, or those who have any occasion to use wine in sacred rites. There is also that in the Thesis which will interest those who dally with the temperance question, pro or con. Mr. Emerson does not mince matters that require straightforward handling. From a practical standpoint the author demolishes the theory that an "unfermented wine" can exist or ever did exist. The Thesis is not merely a superficial raking over of old matter, nor a mere attack on exponents of the two-wine theory, but a practical, logical argument written, not for the sake of controversy, but advocating a return to the simple, non-prudish beliefs in connection with the wine question taught by the Bible. The author draws a sharp distinction between temperance and total abstinence, and calls to order the prohibitionist who advocates legislation which is distinctively class discrimination.

Mr. Emerson's treatment of the two-wine theory is direct and convincing. Demolishing a favorite term of the ascetics, "unfermented wine," he proceeds to destroy the foundations of their arguments, showing first that unfermented wine can not exist if the term is taken literally, and that if a substance was in Biblical times made from the grape and could be kept sweet and pure, or, in other words, unfermented, why can it not be produced to-day? Little doubt is left in the minds of the reader as to the possibility of the making of unfermented wine being a lost art. The author carefully supports each statement with competent authority. His practical explanation of the quotation, "No man puts new wine into old bottles," will surprise many, although but few can fail to be convinced by it. Of course, the basis of the argument against the two-wine theory, which is carefully explained by the author, is that it is impossible to keep grape juice which comes in contact with the atmosphere unfermented; that the winemakers of Biblical times certainly had no facilities for overcoming natural fermentation, and that it was never intended that prohibitionist theories should interfere with the solemn partaking of communion. The author argues that asceticism has done more to check the cause of temperance than to aid it. He realizes that his critics will charge him with mercenary motives, and properly forestalls their criticism with the thoroughly sound argument that he advocates temperance.

The Thesis is, in a word, a comprehensive practical statement of the many questions involved in the consideration of Biblical wines and their use, of temperance as opposed to total abstinence, of common sense as opposed to prudishness.

Coming From Jerusalem.

INTERESTING FEATURE OF THE RELIGIOUS EXHIBIT AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

St. Louis, April 10.—Mr. Walter Williams, editor of the Columbia, Missouri, Herald, member of the board of Curators of the State University of Missouri, Superintendent of one of the largest Sunday-schools in the country, and former President of the National Press Association of America, now traveling in the Old World as the representative of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, writes from Jerusalem under date of February 24, as follows:

"I have secured from Dr. L. Schoenecke of Jerusalem, the promise to exhibit at the World's Fair in St. Louis the world-famous models of the Temple of the Jews, models prepared by his father-in-law, the great scholar, Dr. Schick, and perfected by himself. Efforts have been made to secure these models for use at other Expositions but so far entirely without success.

"Some thirty-odd years ago there came to Jerusalem a German Archaeologist, Dr. Schick, who thenceforth made the Temple area his life-study. Last December he died and the fruits of his life-work are to be seen in the fine models, made of thousands of pieces of wood and showing the various temples as this learned scholar believed them to be. For three thousand years the Temple area has been sacred. Jews, Christians, Moslems alike never cross the spot. Eight great temples have been built upon it, three Jewish, one Pagan, two Christian and two Mohammedan. Of these the most notable are the Temple of Solomon, the Temple of Herod, the Church of Justinian and the Mosque of Omar, the present Haren-es-Cherif.

"Beginning at the southeast corner we see part of the Temple Hill or Mount Moriah, in Solomon's Temple, rising in rock steps up to the city wall, the valley of Kedron to the right and to the left the Tyropoean Valley, and inside the wall of the mills bastion and the 'House Mills.' Following up we see two streets leading up to the double and triple gates of the 'King's House.' On a higher terrace is the Palace of the King, Solomon. Here to the left is the 'House of the Forest of Lebanon' and, crossing above the double passage, we reach the Judgment Hall in which was the throne of the King and, further, after crossing the triple passage the King's private lodging. Above this terrace of palaces and on a higher level are the Outer Temple Walls and porches forming a great square. Inside the porches extends the Outer Court, or Court of the Gentiles, behind which none but Jews could go. A rise of twelve steps brings us to another platform or terrace called Chel or the Rampart, on which stands a large building with three wings and three stories high. Inside this building are the Middle Court and the Inner Court. Fifteen steps on which the Psalm of De Deus was chanted led up to this Inner Court and thence up five steps to the Court of the Priests and there on the Holy Rock of Sakhra, stood the altar of burnt offerings and the brazen sea. Up twelve steps more on the highest platform, stood the House of the Lord, where the Ark of the Covenant reposed, beneath the outspread wings of the cherubim in the Holy of Holies. The houses face to the east. On the north outside the temple inclosure, we see the fortress with the towers Mea and Hananeel, mentioned by Vehmeh.

"When Herod pulled down and rebuilt the Temple of Zerubbabel he enlarged the Temple area taking into the inclosure the ground space formerly covered by the palaces of the King and extending the wall to the west. A grand porch, called Solomon's Porch, was put where the line of palaces had been, but the Inner Temple and the Chel and its buildings were arranged much as in Solomon's time. The altar is large and of stone. Marble pillars in the courts have taken the place of pillars of brass. The upper room has a greater room and a middle tower on the front is left unfinished. Herod's fortress of Antonia has taken the place of the old stronghold on the northwest.

"The great Christian church of St. Mary, built in the reign of the Emperor Justinian, and called Justinian's church, was erected on the foundation of the Temple of Jupiter built in the second century by Hadrian. At this time the platform upon which the church stood was constructed, Hadrian's monument was made into a chapel of St. James and the Golden Gate in the east wall was restored. Between the great Byzantine Church and the earlier one came the aqueduct from Solomon's pools beyond Bethlehem, to the outlet among the cypress trees. On the northeast corner a large Government house had taken the place of the Tower of Antonia of Herod's time. The rock steps and cistern are seen.

"The beautiful Mosque has taken the place of Justinian's Christian church. The first building within the inclosure is the Aksa Mosque and close to it the Mosque for the women, once the armory of the Knights Templar. At the cypress trees is still the outlet for the aqueduct. Saracenic buildings, minarets, residences, schools, porches are along the western wall. On the east is the Golden Gate. In the southeast corner the surface pavement is above the subterranean space, the so-called stables of Solomon. Over the whole area are seen white marks. These are the mouths of walls or cisterns beneath. The great Mosque shows traces in its architecture of all the phases of ownership it has seen—Byzantine, Crusader, Saracen.

"Dr. Schick has reproduced with marvelous ingenuity all these buildings and the beautiful models show the result of intelligence, patient industry, and profound scholarship."

THE POPE is about to introduce a new decoration, as a mark of distinction, to Roman Catholic men and women of letters of all nations who have produced excellent work. The name of the decoration has not yet been made public; as described, it will be composed of two palm leaves surmounted by a lamb. "Both purpose and design," remarks The Catholic Telegraph, "are certainly striking, and show the esteem in which literature is held by the Pope."—Literary Digest.

"IN spite of its enormous size, says The Scientific American, "the Cathedral of Nôtre Dame in Paris has hitherto been simply lighted by wax candles, as gas, it was thought, would damage the walls and valuable paintings. Now we understand that it is about to be electrically lit. The cost of installing the electric light is estimated at ninety thousand dollars."—Literary Digest.

"HOW READEST THOU?"

Will you answer the following questions as to the meaning of Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16, "Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church." Should it not read is of my church?

The passage referred to reads alike in each edition of the Doctrine and Covenants since 1835; so we conclude it correct as given. The meaning is practically the same, however, for certainly one only can not be the whole church; besides, the word whosoever includes many, every one who is obedient to the command and does so in accordance with the principle enunciated in section 52, paragraph 4: "Wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh, whose language is meek, and edifieth, the same is of God, if he obey mine ordinances."

Again, section 42, paragraph 23. By some the claim is made that the members are to be excluded from all church trials if the elders choose to do so. There are some among the members here who claim that they have the same right to be present at a trial of this kind as they would before the courts of our land. Which construction is the correct one?

We have always understood the restriction in the section and paragraph, "And if he or she confess not; thou shalt deliver him or her up unto the church, not to the members, but to the elders," to mean that the trial of one accused of wrong-doing should be conducted before the elders, two or more sitting as a court, and not before the membership. This would give the elders so sitting the right to exclude all but the parties and the witnesses, if they deemed it proper from the nature of the case. The first construction is therefore correct.

Again, is it a good policy to elect a priest as president of a branch when there are elders living in the branch that have never held the office; especially when the priest failed to magnify his calling as a priest?

Under ordinary conditions, No. Under certain conditions, Yes. If for any good reason the elder or elders living in the branch are disqualified, and the priest was qualified to preside, then it would be good policy. If, however, an elder was qualified he should be chosen.

What is the proper course to pursue with an elder who claims he is not in harmony with the church; who says he will not act officially for the church; who claims that Joseph Smith in translating the Scriptures made them worse instead of better; who claims that the Book of Mormon is the worst conglomerated mess that he ever saw; and generally holds people who believe these things up to ridicule?

Such a man should be silenced, and not be allowed to continue such talk as a representative of the church. As an individual a man is entitled to freely express himself; but as a representative of the church he is not authorized to thus antagonize his brethren in the ministry. Let him be outside, if he holds such views.

Is it not fully as necessary to deal with a member holding the priesthood when they are not in line of duty as with one who does not? Is there any difference in the manner of procedure when dealing with one, or the other?

All are amenable to the law. There is no one exempt from prosecution for wrong-doing. There must be a difference in procedure, or Paul would not have written, "Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two, or three witnesses."—1 Timothy 1: 5. A bishop must be tried before a council; a president of the high priesthood by the bishop and a council. Members may be cited before the elders. Preliminary procedures should be alike in all classes. "If a brother offend thee," etc.

HOW SHALL I KNOW?

The twelfth chapter of first Corinthians, in which Paul writes of the gifts of the gospel, or the various manifestations which should be found in the church as evidences of the work of the Holy Ghost among the believers, seems to be plain to the reader and easy to be understood. But there is latent in many a spice of questioning which will now and again take on the form of, How do I know? That is, when Paul wrote, "To one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge; to another faith; to another the gifts of healing; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another the discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues," how can I know whether these several manifestations are the results of the influence of the Spirit, or represent the natural ability and acquired learning of the one through whom they are made?

Whether we can or can not determine satisfactorily to ourselves, as from our own knowledge, that each or every manifestation of the nine gifts of the Spirit referred to as named in 1 Corinthians 12, when witnessed by us and occurring in our presence is from the operation of the Holy Ghost upon the one through whom it is given or not, the facts remain that such gifts or manifestations of the Spirit's presence among the believers and in the body (church) of Christ was promised and were visible and recorded as in Christ's church under apostolic regime. How shall we dispose of that proposition?

The three gifts or manifestations first named can not be classed actually among the visible, or more easily noticeable of those named in the chapter, as for instance, a man or woman may continue a member of the body, the church, for many years and nothing occur by which to bring to the knowledge of others the fact that such man or woman had been walking the pathway of saintly duties under the guidance and aid of the gift of wisdom, knowledge, or faith. And yet when something does occur by which the indwelling of the gift referred to with such person is brought to light, what a revelation of Christ's loving kindness and the Spirit's wonderful prescience it proves to be.

In the case of these gifts resident in an individual, or given for exercise from time to time, there would be a need for the presence and the exercise of the gift of discernment if one was to know before the passing of time brought knowledge by discovery.

This seems to have been provided for by Paul when beginning to write this epistle to the Corinthians, he wrote thus: "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save by the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but [by] the Spirit of God."—1 Corinthians 2: 11.

"But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. 2: 14.

Modern revelation deals with this question much the same way as will be seen by the following: "And it shall come to pass that he that asketh in spirit shall receive in spirit; that unto some it may be given to have all those gifts, that there may be a head, that every member may be profited thereby: he that asketh in the spirit, asketh according to the will of God, wherefore it is done even as he asketh."—D. C. 46: 8.

From these we draw the conclusion that any one having become a member of Christ's body, the church, when present at the meetings or other places in which the gifts referred to are manifested, may ask that he may receive evidence, or knowledge by the assurance of the Spirit that the manifestation is of the Spirit, and so be comforted and assured. However, the gifts are not for a sign, i. e., they are not intended to be the only and conclusive evidence that the gospel of Christ is true, or that the church is upon the earth among men.

We know of no other way in which the question, How may I know? may be safely answered.

Of course, if a thing prophesied comes to pass it must be that it was spoken by the spirit of prophecy. If a tongue be spoken and interpreted it may be determined by the spirit of interpretation, or the discerning of spirits. So, also, of miracles and healings. These are more or less open and visible; and if done in Christ's name and by his people can not be the result of animal magnetism, hypnotism, Health Science, spiritualism, or the power of Satan in "lying wonders" or deceivableness, but must be by the Spirit of Christ, as his word asserts. See Mark 16: 17, 18; Matt. 28: 20.

DEATH'S INROADS.

The angel of death was busy with the ranks of the banner bearers about conference time. Jonas W. Chatburn, of Harlan, Iowa, one of the most reliable of men and early a member of the Reorganized Church, passed on just before conference convened. Then, while the Council of Twelve was in session, Bro. Caffall was called home to Council Bluffs, to meet his daughter, and care for the body of his son-in-law, Bro. Thomas Daily, of Santa Rosa, California, who started for conference, but left this world of uncertainties for the certainty of the land of spirits. These failed of the life of the flesh, ere yet the assembly was called to order for the business of the forty-ninth annual conference.

While the session was being held Brn. Morris T. Short and John A. Robinson, both of Independence, Missouri, were gathered in by the Reaper, and grief for their loss was mingled with the cares of the work in hand.

Bro. David L. Harris, of San Bernardino, California, came in from his field in the northwest, hoping to attend the conference before going to his home. But, sickness overtook him and on the Friday, before the session adjourned he was taken in care of Brn. Albert Carmichael and Charles E. Crumley to his far-off home, where on the 27th, the fourth Sunday of the month, he laid the weapons of the earthly warfare down in the last struggle of the life that now is and passed to that of the peace beyond.

Of all these our fellow workers we can safely say they "have fought a good fight, have kept the faith," there is a crown for them, a crown of life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

C. J. Spurlock writes from Grove Springs, Missouri, April 24, that he has visited nearly all the branches in the Southern Missouri District. He thinks he can see the need of the district president visiting all the branches to instruct the branch officers and enforce the law. He says: "Some of the branches are doing quite nicely, while others are rather slothful. There is room for improvement in all. The Sunday-school and Religio work need to be looked after."

Bro. C. L. Snow writing from Kirksey, Kentucky, May 1, says of the book, "Truth Defended," written by Bro. Heman C. Smith: "I have just read it through and it is certainly a grand work, and should be in the hands of every Latter Day Saint who wants to keep pace with the church and what it is doing, and what it has to meet. No one can afford to be without it. This little book contains so much historical matter and light on things that pertain to this latter-day work that makes it worth more to any Saint than one might think. I make this offer to anyone of the members of the church; if they will send and get a copy of Bro. Heman C.'s book, and after they have read it through, if they decide it is not worth the price, and will send the book to me I will pay to them the money they paid for it and will keep the book to loan out to others. This holds good for a reasonable length of time. Let me hear from you, Saints. I trust that this year may be one that I can say I have done more for the cause of Christ than ever before."

James Ferguson writes from Lambert, Oklahoma, April 27: "Lambert is on the Choctaw Road, some thirty miles south of Anthony, Kansas. I live two miles south of Lambert and three east. There are plenty of schoolhouses which can be procured for services, and if any of the missionaries will call, he can have a home while here, and I think a good hearing can be secured. I should like to hear from any of the Saints in this part of the country."

G. H. Godbey writes from Kenova, West Virginia, April 29: "I stopped at Wayne, West Virginia, on my way home from General Conference. This place is within ten miles of where Bro. Odell and I were attacked by a mob January 24. I preached twice and baptized a Baptist deacon and one lady. The spirit of mobocracy was running so high I thought it wisdom not to stir things up more than was necessary at the present. A brother at Genoa wrote that several were ready for baptism, and wanted to know if it would be wisdom to risk coming there. I wrote him I would not send a man nor come myself, knowing as I did that there were sixty desperadoes sworn to mob us if we went, that we would wait and let the Lord open the way for his work there, and if there were some who did not want to wait, they could come somewhere else to be baptized. I could feel a terrible spirit all the time I was there, that kept me uneasy day and night. Any one who has passed through the hands of a mob having the disposition to kill, does not want to try it again."

Under date of April 27 Asa E. Bailey writes from Milton, Florida: "I am still in the faith, but everything is very dull and we are not as active as members should be. Remember us in your petitions that we may be blessed and led out of our weak condition, and that God may guide us by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We are pleased to state that we were misinformed in regard to the prophesying mentioned in the first paragraph of our editorial under the caption of "Prophesying," on page 300, of HERALD for April 2, 1902. The brother referred to has assured us that while he did administer to the brother who was sick, there was no such promise or prophecy for recovery.

The Chicago Record-Herald for April 20 devoted about three fourths of a page to an illustrated write up of the "Latter Day Saints at Lamoni."

In this issue the Bishop's annual report appears. Our readers will note that we have printed in this issue fifty-six pages,—more than twice as many as usual.

THE PRESENT CONFLICT BETWEEN SCIENCE AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.—No. 4.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

In the light of the present conflict (supposed) between science and the Christian religion, may I ask, Whence came this wisdom, this foresight? Since that "commandment" was given this whole controversy has been brought up pro and con, some of the greatest writers on the things "that have been," and the things "under the earth," have been born. Remember these subjects, though perplexing and small, are among the things that we are to "study" and thus be prepared to "magnify" the callings "when I send you again." In the light of the present conflict we can see the wisdom of such advice, viz., to put the church in touch with coming discoveries and "theories." The Bible is our witness, but science as interpreted by the modern school is becoming in great favor, and your witness is given a back seat! And this is an age of doubt.

While here we will notice another revelation, this one given in 1831:

"And his [the Lord's] voice shall be heard among all people, and it shall be a voice as of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder, which shall break down the mountains, and the valleys shall not be found; he shall command the great deep and it shall be driven back into the north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem [Asia] and the land of Zion [America] shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5.

This is a wonderful statement—one that is far-reaching—one that may be put on trial. For if the land surface and the water surface of our globe have thus been changed, if the mighty deep has changed places, and thus oceans and islands made, evidences of such physical changes in the earth's surface will be noticed in the changed climatic conditions, in the disappearance of animal life, and also in the vegetable species native to a given locality or climate. And this is just what the new school of unbelief are now contending for, they point out these great changes in the mountains and valleys and ocean currents. But naturalists remove these great changes so far back in time as to impeach the Mosaic account of creation. Can we not see the finger of God in the above instruction given seventy years ago to forewarn his people of these things?

One thing has been clearly demonstrated by these men, viz., that geology is a witness to the recent creation of man as taught in Genesis, for man was the last thing created of whom there is no trace in any but the latest strata. (See Historical Evidence, p. 75, and note 83, p. 285.)

Professor Hutson said in 1887, "That in prehistoric times there was a continuous land from Scotland to Denmark, the British Isles were a part of the mainland. There was no German Ocean; the eastern rivers of what was afterward Britannia emptied into a mighty river of which the Rhine, the Weser, and the Elbe were also tributaries. Where the English Channel now ebbs and flows was then a valley; there was no Mediterranean Sea. That vast basin, which a later age was to offer for the coasting trade of the Sidonians, was then represented by a series of landlocked lakes. Europe and Africa formed one continuous area, and extended westward as far as where the Azores and the Canaries now lie as seagirt isles. Spain was joined to Morocco. Italy ran down to the land where, centuries later, her great enemy, Carthage, ruled. Greece included the isles now clustered near her. A great sea covered the sands that now form the Desert of Sahara. . . . The rivers were immense streams, many miles wide. The forests that grew on their banks, and were to leave behind them great formations as evidence of their existence, teemed in those days with monsters that man of that early age, when he came upon the scene, must have had courage and cunning to war with and destroy." (See Beginnings of Civilization, pp. 132, 133.)

Such are some of the "theories" about this earth of ours. Revelation said seventy years ago that at some remote time it had been divided up into continents and islands and later comes science and confirms it! But revelation goes on and says that it will be reunited again, and "become one land." What say ye wise ones?

WHAT MAN THINKS OF HIMSELF.

We turn now from man's relics, his color, and difference in physical structure, to his inner soul, his mind, his hopes, and ask what has he got to say about himself?

Professor Max Müller says, "Wherever we find man, we also find worship and religion."

Kersey Graves says (himself an Agnostic) that in the Old World's religions there are three cardinal principles. 1. The primeval innocence of man. 2. His temptation and downfall. 3. His restoration to divine favor by the death of a God. (See his Bible of Bibles, p. 335.)

In the New World the same fundamental principles were found to be the inheritance of the Red Race. Donnelly says: "And it can be asserted that there is scarcely a prominent fact in the opening chapters of the book of Genesis that can not be duplicated from the legends of the American nations, and scarcely a custom known to the Jews that does not find its counterpart among the people of the New World."—Atlantis, p. 198.

Reverend H. Olin Cady, writing from Cohentu,

Sz-Chuan, West China, in the Sunday-School Journal and Bible Students' Magazine for September, 1901, pages 602, 603, says: "Preceding and subsequent to the birth of Christ there was in China a vague expectation of the advent of some great personality. Many centuries before, in the Chung Yung, it had been written, 'In the west there will be a sage.' The grandson of Confucius wrote concerning the western sage. It is said that 'Ming Tih' 'was much given to the study of these old writings.' One night, after meditating what these things might mean, he saw in a vision a form like a man of gold. The vision convinced him that the time was come, the golden age of the sage, and he at once sent an embassy west to find the great western sage.

"It was in A. D. 61, that the embassy set out. Eighteen men with their retinue set out on the long, weary journey. Days grew into weeks, weeks into months, months into years, mountains rose and onward ever onward, they plod their dusty way; the plains of China were left behind; the great uplift of the mountains of Central Asia, so appropriately called 'the roof of the world,' had been flanked; close they had hugged them, and bending southward in what is now Afghanistan, they met some travelers on white horses, they were Buddhist teachers. Listening to their new teachings, seeing their golden images, reading their books, they thought they at last had found what they were seeking, and they turned back to China, carrying with them Buddhism, its books, images, and teachers. After six years of absence, on the last of the Chinese year 67, A. D., they stood again before the emperor, 'Ming Tih.' This was the beginning of Buddhism in China, and the images of the eighteen men were stood in every temple."

Professor Nadaillac says: "Similar myths are found among various Indian tribes; the legend of a deluge and of a savior and benefactor of the human race extends to the Alaskan tribes and is in fact almost world-wide among all classes of men in some form or other. No dissemination of merely Christian ideas, since the conquest, is sufficient to account for these myths, which appear to have their root in the natural tendencies of the human mind in its evolution from a savage state."—Prehistoric America, p. 531.

We see that Nadaillac admits that the human race is in anticipation of a benefactor—a savior; then he attempts to explain this world-wide feeling in man by saying "which appears to have its root in the natural tendencies of the human mind in its evolution from a savage state. That is, as soon as man evolved from savagery, he evolved the Christ idea of a savior and benefactor of the race! Is that it?"

Professor Brinton says: "All history, it has been said, shows man living under an irritated God, and seeking to appease him by sacrifice of blood."—Myths of the New World, p. 333.

Kersey Graves, years ago, wrote a book entitled "The Sixteen Crucified Saviors," in which he pointed out that heathen nations believed in, and had their saviors. This he does to prove that the Christ idea was borrowed from heathenism. And this he does again in a later work entitled "The Bible of Bibles," by proving that the heathens taught Christian doctrines in pre-Christian times.

Brinton referring to Count de Maistre's explanation of such resemblances in heathen and Christian doctrine says: "Therefore the strange resemblances in heathen myths to what is revealed in the Scriptures, as well as the ethical anticipations which have been found in ancient philosophers, all so far from proving that Christianity is a natural product of the human mind, in fact, are confirmations of it, unconscious prophecies, and presentments of the truth."—Ibid., p. 334.

Colonel Ingersoll in his Kansas City speech in 1892 pointed out that certain Christian doctrines were "older than the church." This enigma troubles all these philosophers. But may I ask, how old is the church? The Christ was preached in Eden, in the "seed of the woman," and this promised seed became the anticipation of all nations; hence Haggai refers to the Christ as "the desire of all nations." (See Haggai 2: 7.)

Now taking the view of the modern school, that man is not one species, but derived from different Adams, viz., a red Adam in America, a white Adam in Europe, a yellow Adam in Asia, a black Adam in Africa, and that their creations were at different times, and still we may increase the number of Adams if you desire up to Burke's sixty-three! Then laying aside the Bible promise of a Savior, how shall we account for this "desire of all nations," irrespective of color, age, whereabouts, or his civilization? The savage, semi-savage, and civilized man everywhere is found to have the same foundation upon which his religious structure rests, viz., the primitive innocence of man, his temptation and downfall, and his restoration to divine favor by the death of a God. How came the heathen in possession of the Bible idea of the fall and redemption—the Christ idea, "All history" proves him, says Brinton, to be living under the same identical conditions "under an irritated God, and seeking to appease him by sacrifice of blood."

So that no matter how many Adams we sprung from, man everywhere came to the same conclusions, viz., first, that he has a God; second, that he needs a Savior. This hope we are told is the natural product of the human mind. The human race is not only unanimous, that there is a God, and that they need a Savior, but third, that there is an evil principle—an unseen enemy. He is nearly unanimous.

Fourth, that he has a soul. Fifth, that the soul is immortal. Sixth, man, nearly everywhere in remote times, represented his hope of immortality by the cross. "In Egypt, Assyria, and Britain it was emblematical of creative power and eternity; in India, China, and Scandinavia, of heaven and immortality; in the two Americas, of rejuvenescence and freedom from physical suffering; while in both hemispheres it was the common symbol of the resurrection, or 'the sign of the life to come;' and, finally, in all heathen communities, without exception, it was the emphatic type, the sole enduring evidence of the Divine Unity."—Atlantis, pp. 321, 322.

Now if we waive the theory of a primeval revelation given to man as intimated in the Bible, and set aside the Mosaic account of creation with its promised Redeemer, and adopt the theory of diversity of species as advocated by the modern school, then how can we account for the unity of beliefs? How came these diversities of species to adopt the same symbol to represent the same idea? It is said that "the cross is the symbolic expression of a religious idea." But how came these red, white, and black species, which had been created or evolved at different times in different countries, and knew nothing about one another, to get the same ideas, and the same symbol to represent their same ideas? Was this unity of beliefs and symbol all accidental? Do we not see here an evidence of the unity of the race—a common brotherhood? Don't we see that mankind has adopted by unanimous consent the Bible doctrine of redemption? The cross is the symbol of that redemption, and it has been foreknown that the world's Redeemer would die on a cross. (See Doctrine and Covenants 36: 11.) The cross became the symbolic representative of that idea; all ancient people appear to have had a knowledge of such a provision in the divine economy, and all adopted the cross to perpetuate its remembrance.

"When the Spanish missionaries first set foot upon the soil of America, in the fifteenth century, they were amazed to find the cross as devoutly worshiped by the red Indians as by themselves."—Atlantis, p. 319.

"A few years since the Indians on our reservations, in wild despair at the misery and deaths of those dearest to them, broke in mad appeals, in furious ceremonies, to induce that longed-for Savior and friend to appear. The heartless whites called it a 'ghost dance' and a 'Messiah craze,' and shot the participants in their tracks, hastening the implacable destiny against which the poor wretches had prayed in vain."—Myths of the New World, p. 225.

And when the Spaniards landed on Mexican soil the natives "rushed into the water to embrace the prows of their vessels, and despatched messengers throughout the land to proclaim the return of Quetzalcoatl" (the Toltec Savior).—Ibid., p. 221.

We see then how deep-rooted in the human mind this Christ idea was. And if we set aside the diversity of species theory also, and adopt Charles Darwin's theory of evolution, then we have something like this:

First, the Ascidian tadpole evolved into a man.

Second, when the tadpole saw that he was a man, he evolved the idea that he was more than flesh and bones, and that he had a soul.

Third, the tadpole-man next evolved the idea that the soul was immortal.

Fourth, then, as by previous agreement, man everywhere adopted a symbol to represent immortality, the cross, a condition that he had never seen, and could not find out.

Fifth, then everywhere as by unanimous vote, he adopted the cross as that symbol, this was all accidental, too!

Sixth, then he evolved the idea that he had an enemy.

Seventh, that the works of this enemy will be destroyed by the death of a man-god.

Eighth, then he evolves the idea of rewards and punishments.

Ninth, he is found to be a worshiper everywhere, trying to please an irritated god by sacrifice.

Tenth, then he got the idea that the body, though mortal, would live again; at least this was the case with many, hence they evolved the idea of embalming the dead. This doctrine of embalming rested on the belief of immortality, so the Egyptians, Romans, Greeks, Babylonians, Peruvians, Central Americans, Canary Islanders, and Chinooks, or a belt of nations around the globe did! Did each race on his own motion, and by natural means, without superior aid or inspiration, adopt the same ideas, cultivate the same hopes? Is all this accidental harmony?

We see that he evolved into a man when he might have evolved into something else, then man everywhere, though heathen he was, evolved the same identical ideas, and then he went one step farther, and evolved the same identical symbol to represent those ideas by, and all this is done by a tadpole man, apart from any distinctions, socially, of castes, color, or location, or degrees of civilization. These ideas seem to have been the aboriginal possession of every people of antiquity, no matter what their conditions were.

Are not these common ideas evidence of common descent, of universal brotherhood? Is that not a fair inference?

Again when we ask each race for his pedigree, they usually trace back their genealogy to the same man or men.

In the Bible, the first great epoch in human history is ten generations, from Adam to Noah.

So likewise the Chaldeans give ten Antediluvian kings of long life. And the Iranians commence history with the reign of ten Peisdadien Kings, men of the ancient law. The Chinese commence history with ten emperors, partakers of the divine law. The Hindoos first count nine Brahmadikas who with Brahma, their founder, make ten. The Germans believed in the ten generations of Odin. And the Arabs in the ten kings of the Adites. (See Atlantis, p. 27.)

Thus the first great epoch with these races agree with the Bible again, not in years, but the number of rulers in it;—namely, ten.

How came the descendants of all these Adams, or the descendants of the Darwin man, to get the same idea again, and again agree with Moses? Was that accidental agreement again? Is that the way to impeach a witness? All swear that the Bible story is true!

PERIODS.

There comes to all men a lull in the affairs of life, even if such lull is but the result of other duties, or of more important business, and what is true of the individual, is likewise true of an organization.

Perhaps the time will come to this Church of Christ to "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord," but in the absence of such a commandment there remains nothing for us save faithfulness in that which hath been appointed for us to do.

The importance of the General Conference has occupied our attention during the past month, and now upon a careful examination find a falling off in the receipts for Graceland.

The Saints are to be congratulated upon the good work accomplished last year, and it is to be hoped they will not slack in their efforts, but with a will and a cheer put their shoulder to the wheel and continue to push forward the well begun work, until success and victory shall be our crown.

In the near future we shall incur additional expense in the sending out Catalogues for college year 1902-3, and we hope you will not forget us in this necessity.

Let those of tender feelings who are pained at our constant and frequent appeals think carefully and seriously, that the payment of the debt and the running expense of Graceland has not been provided for by the church in any other manner than by appeal to the Saints, and only as there is a halting or lagging upon the part of the contributors do I employ my pen.

Those of the church who are not interested in the success of this institution, or may entertain opposition thereto, will they please look upon our work in charity, remembering that we are but the servants of the body, and are seeking honestly and faithfully to discharge the imposed responsibility and duty.

Perhaps others might do much better by employing other measures. From our viewpoint, and limited store of knowledge and wisdom, we do the best we can.

As the college year closes in the early part of June, and we desire to close with all accounts paid up in full, we kindly invite one and all to supply immediate aid, for we are in the campaign for the success of our Graceland.

Hopefully trusting to the consideration and liberality of the Saints, On duty,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"He sees when their footsteps falter, when their hearts grow weak and faint;
He marks when their strength is failing, and listens to each complaint;
He bids them rest for a season, for the pathway has grown too steep;
And, folded in fair, green pasture,
He giveth his loved ones sleep."

Truth and Honor with Children.

"Yes," said my sister, looking pleased, "I think they do trust me, and they ought to. I have never consciously told either child the whitest kind of a lie. How could I expect them to be truthful if they ever heard me say what was not true? As it is, I believe, when they are older they will grow to love truth as much as I do. We often talk about fairies and brownies, and they understand these are creatures of fancy. And, perhaps as something more of a reality, we have looked upon Santa Claus. For I want my children to have all the fun that others do, and I half believe in the jolly old man myself. But last Christmas Eve Doris said, as I undressed her: 'Is Santa Claus really or believing, mamma?' And what could I do? Was I to tell my child a first lie merely to give her a little more fun?"

"I know well enough what you did," I replied.

"Of course," I said, "it's only believing, Doris, like the brownies." "Who gives us the presents, mamma?" Doris asked. "O, papa and mamma and friends," I answered. "But I want you to get just as much fun out of it as if it were true. So, when you wake up to-morrow and find your stockings full I hope you'll say, just as if it were true: 'Goody, goody! Santa Claus has been here and filled our stockings!'" "I will, I will," said Doris, laughing gleefully. And so she did."

That night as the children were eating their supper in the nursery, their mother and I sitting in an adjoining room, Frank called out:

"Mamma, Doris jus' took anuvver spoonful of jam."

"I didn't," said Doris.

"There it is!" said Nell, getting up. Presently I heard her in the nursery, asking cheerfully:

"Most through supper, children?"

Then the voices rippled on, evidently discussing indifferent subjects. With some curiosity, I arose, and looked in through the door. Nell stood beside the little table, one hand gently stroking Doris' head.

"Would you like some more jam, Doris?"

"No, mamma."

"She took——" began Frank.

"You needn't tell me," said the mother. "Doris will, I'm sure. Don't say anything that isn't true, darling; it would make me feel so badly. Did you take some jam?"

"Yes, a little."

"Did you have all you wanted? Wouldn't you like some more?"

Then Nell kissed her, saying: "I'm so glad you told me the truth," and immediately began talking of other things.

My sister's comment on the matter later was this:

"Of course, the principal thing is to get them to be truthful. Jam is entirely unimportant compared with truth."

When, later, we went down to tea, we saw Doris' doll on a chair in the dining-room. "Don't let me forget," said Nell. "I promised to put Rosie in the playhouse before I went to bed." Neither of us thought of the doll again during the evening.

That night I awoke from my first sleep at the sound of careful footsteps in the hall. I feared one of the children might be ill and looked out. At that moment my sister was about to enter the nursery.

"Any one sick?" I asked.

"No," said Nell, in a whisper. "I forgot this," holding up the doll.

"What time is it?"

"About half-past two."

At breakfast Nell told me how she had waked suddenly in the night with the thought of the doll. "I wouldn't lightly break my word to the children. Where an older person might understand an omission for good reasons, a child would lose confidence in you. Children are sharp observers and very critical. Once I hastily threatened to punish Doris if she did a certain wrong thing again. Not long after she repeated the offense; and, as I hated to punish her, I looked about for an honorable escape from doing it. She had hurt Frank. I said, if she would tell Frank she was sorry, and try very hard to be good to him in the future, I would excuse her that time. She did what I asked and all seemed happily settled; but some time after, when I found occasion to tell the children how carefully one should keep his promises, Doris remarked: "You broke your word once, didn't you, mamma?" And I learned by a few questions that the little midget had given me a black mark because of my leniency to her that day. That taught me a lesson; and I have been more careful since to promise less, but to absolutely keep my word unless circumstances beyond my control make that course impossible. In such a case (which rarely happens) I explain the matter fully to the children."

One afternoon, as Nell and I started off on a walk with the little ones, Frank said he had forgotten his whistle. "If you want it, go and get it," said his mother.

"Will you wait for me?"

"Yes, I'll wait right here."

So the little fellow ran back to the house. I have seen children look behind to see if an agreement were kept, but it did not occur to Frank to feel any doubt. It was a sunny spot where we stood, and I suggested that we should cross the street and wait under a tree.

"You go with Doris," said Nell. "But I will stay here. Frank is so little that he might think I had failed to keep my promise, did I budge from the spot."

Then, humorously, she drew with her parasol a circle about her in the gravel. We did not wait long for Frank. I said to him: "You see mamma kept her word and waited for you."

"Course her did!" said Frank. "I would be ashamed of her if her didn't!"

I carefully watched my sister through the remainder of my visit, and I never heard the slightest prevarication from her, although, now that my mind had been specially directed to the subject of truth-telling and the exact keeping of promises, I noted with horror the prevalence in other families of the apparent belief that no responsibility is to be attached to lies or breaches of honor with little ones.

I heard mother say: "If you do that again you can have no candy to-day." And the box of candy would be brought by the delinquent and partaken of before my very eyes.

"Where is my baby sister?" said a little tot one day to his mother. "I don't know," said she. "Perhaps God has taken her away. You know you struck her." And the little sister was at the time enjoying her customary carriage-ride in the care of the nurse-girl.

"Does it taste bad?" said Doris, drawing back, as her mother was about to give her a spoonful of medicine.

"I don't like it," said her mother. "But perhaps you will not mind it. When I have to take it I swallow it as quickly as I can."

"No matter how desirable the end may seem," my sister often said: "No lies, no lies!"

Nell and I looked down from a window upon the children one day as they played with little neighbors; and we heard Tommy, who lives next door and is a year older than Doris, say:

"Let's come and ask your mother; she won't fool us." And it seemed to me that out of the mouth of babes Nell's praise was perfected.—Christian Register.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

The editor of the Gospel Quarterly submitted a report of the work she had done, a part of which we give herewith:

"Heretofore my reports have been brief, but I feel that in reporting to you this year I ought to express humbly my gratitude to our heavenly Father for the blessings he has granted, not to me only, but to you as well, who are co-laborers in the Sunday-school work.

"Because we are all thus interested in this department of work, it is due you that I should tell you what the Lord has done for us in that part of the work intrusted by you to me.

"By your appointment I have labored editorially for the past ten years. No one but the Lord knows what is expressed in that statement. Only he can fully sympathize with me in bearing what is often an onerous burden, and only he can understand the deep joy that wells up in my heart as the realization of his truth dawns upon my mind and thrills my being.

"During the past year circumstances have combined to cause my work to press upon me with unusual heaviness; the third quarter of my task occupied the greater part of three months, being completed by the close of January.

"I handed my lessons in on Friday, and on the Monday I seated myself to begin my fourth quarter. I do not remember ever having contemplated a task with more anxious feeling, on account of limited time. I had but two months before conference, and in addition to my literary work had household cares greatly increased by our usual gathering. My third quarter had required three months; I knew I could not spare more than six weeks for the task facing me; my text seemed so difficult as I glanced over it that I could not hope to accomplish it in the time that remained.

"In my extremity I bowed my head upon my hands and told the Lord of my need. I told him I could not do the work alone, and that, without his assistance, I should not be able this year to complete the required work.

"And, thanks be to him, I did not fail; my work is finished; in six weeks I had accomplished as great an amount of work as I had before in three months.

"I finished the effort worn in body but strong in spirit, with a sense of nearness to my Father and friend, and with great gladness in my heart.

"I can not convey to you what the experience of that six weeks of hard work was to me; I can not tell you how the way opened up before me as I plodded steadily through the difficult text; but he who in the beginning said to me, 'I will hold thy hand,' has been faithful all along the way, and never more manifestly so than in the recent past.

"And I give thanks to him, and rejoice in the goodness of our heavenly Father.

"According to my judgment we have sufficient material to furnish good lessons in the New Testament for two years to come.

Respectfully submitted,

"ANNA SALLYARDS."

Auditing Committee's Report.

To the General Conference Assembled: We, your auditing committee, herewith respectfully submit our report. We have very carefully audited the Bishop's reports for 1900 and 1901, comparing all original entries with the necessary vouchers and found none lacking, except a few items for postage. We have carefully followed the original entries through the books until incorporated in the yearly reports.

We think it due the body that we should state the condition of the books now in use in the office. We find the books simplified, comprehensive, posted to date, and properly representing the business of the church. We find in the hands of the different Stake bishops notes and deed to the value of $1,510. These are not yet recorded as part of the assets of the church. We think it proper and advise that they should be put in the hands of the Presiding Bishop, and made a part of his accounts in harmony with articles 4, 6, and 7, of Articles of Incorporation. We find further, that the present accommodations of the Bishop's office are wholly inadequate to the demand. With only one little room to occupy, no one can keep the work in proper shape. A private office for the Bishop and more room for the bookkeepers are absolutely necessary. We, therefore, recommend that immediate measures be taken to supply these requirements.

We submit this report together with a summary of the Bishop's accounts for 1901. Your brethren,

A. CARMICHAEL,
A. J. KECK,
D. A. ANDERSON, } Committee.

Letter Department.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, April 11.

Editor Herald: Feeling that we should give an account of ourselves and of our work since commencing our labors in this mission, we essay to appear once more in the columns of the HERALD, and contribute whatever of church news we have to offer for the benefit of its readers.

When landing in Papeete I found that I had forgotten a great deal of the language in the seven years that I have been absent from the islands, and had to bend my energies to recover that which I had lost, which, however, came back to me very rapidly upon putting it to practical use, so that in a month I recovered most all that I had lost. I did nothing else much the first month but read and study the language. The difficulty I have is in not being able to understand it readily when others talk it to me; words that I know perfectly well how to use, and that I would understand if I should see them written, if spoken to me by another, would challenge my utmost attention to discern, because the language is so full of vowels that when the natives speak it so rapidly they coalesce and run together so that it is very hard for me to discern some of them. It is just the opposite with Sr. Gilbert; she can understand it much better than she can talk it, so that now she can understand most all of my sermons, and keep the run of conversation.

The Island of Raroia was our first field of operation after arriving in the mission; this is where the first of the series of conferences held by the Patriarch was convened, and where wife and I remained. The Patriarch, after leaving his blessing upon us, departed with his scribe and others to the place of the next conference. To those who know Bro. Alexander and Leon, it is needless to say we much regret to part from them, for we found by association that they are true brethren, and in them are many qualities worthy to be emulated, and we feel that our association with them made us better, and sincerely hope that we may so deport ourselves as to lend a like good influence to others with whom it may be our lot to associate.

Since I was here on this island (Raroia) seven years ago, I can say that I see some improvement; the people wear better clothes than they did then, and I think there is some improvement in church work, but not very much. A large stone church that they had commenced two or three years before I came on my first mission, and which was probably commenced without counting the cost, as it is about four or five times too large for the branch, is yet unfinished; my surprise was great, indeed, when I rode in on the Croix de Sud and saw it almost as it was when I left here about seven years ago.

So far as the marriage relation is concerned I can see no change for the better on the islands thus far visited. I have made diligent inquiry, and I can hear of but one couple that were married before first living together. Their custom is to live together for from a few months to several years before even attempting to get married; then if they do take a notion to marry, some one of the parents of either the man or the woman objects, and it is impossible under the French law for them to marry. If possibly the young folks after much begging and petitioning, get the consent of all the "fetiis" (relatives), they then have confronting them the inexorable custom of having a big marriage feast that will cost so much that it will take the young bridegroom a year or more to pay the expenses. This condition is not the fault of any missionary, for on questioning them I find that all have labored hard to instruct them properly along this line; but it may be easily seen that conditions are strongly against them getting married. On the Island of Raroia I rounded up eight or nine couples who were all members of the church, and four or five couples more of which one partner only belonged to the church. I questioned all of them and found that with the exception of one or two couples, the reason for not being married was because some one of the parents would not give his consent. Some of these unyielding parents being members of the church, we next rounded them up; after some labor with them, all but one agreed to give up and let the young folks marry. I sent the teacher to visit the unyielding one, and afterwards went myself in company with Tapuni. We then let her think over the matter for a month, after which I sent again the teacher and two deacons. The youngsters said they loved each other and wanted to marry, and as the mother's reasons were not sufficient grounds on which to prohibit the marriage, charges were preferred, and she was tried before a court of elders. The court reasoned long and patiently with her, but she still refused to give her consent; her main objection being that she did not personally like her son's consort and could not get along with her. Shortly after the court adjourned, however, she softened her heart and repented of her stubbornness. All the missionaries have labored hard to remedy this lamentable condition, but seemingly to no avail. We shall continue to try to water the seed sown, hoping that in time God may be able to give it increase.

On Raroia, Hao, and Amanu, places that I have so far visited to stay any length of time, I find that the priests of the branch do not visit the members in their homes. I called priesthood meetings and instructed them in their duty, and even went with the priests to visit the households and show them how to do, and in every instance, after they get to business and do their duty, they say they are blessed, and some have seen visions and dreamed dreams that have greatly encouraged them in the work. I find that preceding missionaries have started them in their work, but they leave it off after they are gone. These three islands though, are the most remote from Tahiti of any on which our work has been established, and hence not so often visited by the missionaries. We therefore desired to visit these first because they most needed our attention.

Hao is the place where, a few years ago, the Mormon elders took away quite a number of our people; but I find that it was not so much to the credit of the Mormon elders after all as it was to the discredit of our own members who were in charge of affairs at Hao, that so many of them left us and were baptized into the Mormon church. The officers of the branch there were negligent and went to dealing in liquor and drank and caroused and paid no attention to church duties, so that the members became discouraged and went into the Mormon church more for a place to worship than anything else. Some of them told me this, and that if the leaders had done right, they never would have left the church in the first place. The native Mormons seemed to be willing to talk over the differences between the two churches, and the presiding elder consented to have me go to their church-house and preach on the "successor" on a certain Sunday, and my hopes were aroused to some extent, only to be shattered on Saturday by the presiding elder of the Mormons coming again to see me, telling me that two of their elders from America had just arrived from a contiguous island, and had disapproved of them allowing me to preach in their church-house on the "successor." In talking with some of the native Mormons afterwards, I found that they were not at all pleased with the ruling of their American missionaries in shutting me out after they had agreed with me to preach in their church. I think that some of them will come back in time if proper labor is done.

Let not the reader judge this whole mission by the condition I have shown exists in these three islands, for these are the places that have been somewhat neglected on account of being so far from Tahiti, and hence difficult to reach, and the missionaries are not to blame for it. We have just closed our conference at Papeete, and the elders were gathered there from all over the islands; and in the deliberative assemblies I see much improvement in many ways; in debating perplexing questions they acquit themselves admirably, and in seven days of conference there has hardly been a ruffle over the assembly. The speaking by the native elders has been generally good, to the point, concise, and instructive.

Since Metuaore returned from America, he has not enough words in his vocabulary to express his high estimation of that country and the good things he saw there, and to show his appreciation of the church-people and their kindness to him while there. His testimony to the people here is quite a tribute, indeed, to the church in America.

In hope of the final triumph of truth, I am in bonds,

Your brother,

J. W. GILBERT.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, April 28.

Editors Herald: It does me so much good to read the letters in the HERALD from my brethren in the field; it may be that I can do others good in return by the little I may write.

I led two more precious souls into the waters of baptism yesterday. The third one was sick and unable to be there. One of them had been letting the Utah elders hold meetings at his house for about two months before I found it out. We got the privilege of preaching there, also, and after the second sermon he heard he shut the Utah elders off and have now come into the kingdom. There were four of the Utah elders there last Thursday night to listen to Bro. W. H. Kelley preach on polygamy. We had a good crowd out to hear Bro. Kelley and he delivered a splendid discourse with telling effect. They tried to hold up for the abominable doctrine by a strong contest after the sermon, but it only showed to those who were there the difference between the clean and the unclean, and those who want purity of life and conduct know of a surety it is to be found in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, now among men, and not in the Utah or Brighamite church.

Well I think there will be a good work done here this year, for we now have a good interest. I shall labor with my whole heart and strength to build up the work here and in the vicinity.

To the Saints; Greeting: The annual conference for the year 1902 closed with encouraging results. Those in attendance have returned to their homes, or to their several fields of labor, made stronger by their association together and encouraged and confirmed in the work claiming their fealty and service.

In some respects this was the most important conference and far-reaching in results held since 1873. The Lord gave recognition and counsel in the affairs of the church needed and pressing. Five younger men were called into the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, viz.: Frederick A. Smith, Francis M. Sheehy, Ulysses W. Greene, Cornelius A. Butterworth, and John W. Rushton, and two into the First Presidency, Frederick M. Smith and Richard C. Evans, all in the prime of manhood, of experience, and ready to bear their share of church burdens and thus relieve some who have borne them many years in the front, and some a double portion.

With this change and increased aid furnished the leading departments of the church, the work can better be carried forward and with greater confidence of desired results.

Whatever may be thought of the "vision" presented to President Joseph Smith and by him to the church, it met the conditions of the church pending, and opened the way to move forward; seemingly meeting every emergency. Viewed from the standpoint of adaptability to conditions and rendering needed relief the evidence of it containing divine wisdom is seen at once, to say nothing more of it. Viewed from any standpoint of the church's present demands and it bears the mark of divinity all through, although there was a new feature or two presented which is being tested for the first time. Paul "came to visions and revelations of the Lord." Authorized reports showed the financial condition of the church to be satisfactory. The church has not lost, neither have the Saints failed to support the financial arm of the church with their means. The people discerned the right and adhered to duty, and the Bishopric was sustained in its work. Good men are liable to be attacked at any time, and it should be comforting and encouraging when men manifest sufficient reserve force to maintain themselves under unfortunate conditions that would destroy their honor and reputation, and usefulness to the church. None seem to be exempt from attack, not even Job. Moses had his Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Paul his "false brethren," Cæsar his Brutus, the Seer, a John C. Bennett, etc., so the world jogs on much as of yore. Experiences from which one may learn self-examination. With the new recruits raised to the more prominent positions, to assume chief burdens, a better division of the church service can be made rendering the burdens lighter to all and doubtless insuring more gratifying results at the end of the year.

There were some changes made in the assignment of mission fields. Among them Brn. F. M. Sheehy and U. W. Greene were placed in charge of the Eastern Mission, and the writer put in charge of the Rocky Mountain Mission. Brn. Sheehy and Greene need no introduction to the Saints of the Eastern Mission. They are well known. May they receive your cordial support, so that acting together your efforts may tell in the interest of the cause the coming conference year, that you may labor together with fidelity and unity, so that the world may see, if it wish, that you are bearing your part nobly as true followers of Christ, the great head of the church. For your friendship and support given me now nearly twenty years, I thank you, and I shall ever remember you as those worthy and who have the cause of truth at heart. May our friendship abide; and, too, may your present helpers be able to give you better service and more telling results, that you may be encouraged and the cause honored thereby. We have passed together many pleasant hours, had some clouds and mists, but out of it all God has brought us confirmed in hope and strong in spirit. I hope to join you again sometime, and in the meantime be useful wherever I chance to be, and if it may be, with improved health. May all hearts be cheered this present year while engaged in service and each look forward in confidence to the Saints' rest when our final work is done.

Never despair, the gospel message is true and points out the same way of life, from which none should ever swerve, whatever the cross. The latter-day work furnishes the true basis upon which men may unite and render an acceptable service to God, against the insecure, contending, vascillating, and uncertain conditions and views of the world. The Saints should be thankful in that they have found the "pearl of great price," and are relieved from the bane of infidelity and skepticism, so widespread and conflicting creeds, and so go on joyfully and hopefully to the end. This being a time for renewed congratulations, on account of improved conditions and a more hopeful outlook, the above is contributed as a word of encouragement and comfort to the devoted.

There were an increased number of missionary appointees sent out from this conference, and others manifest a willingness to go, but it was not safe to send them, as it became apparent that it would be placing too great a burden upon the finances of the church, so there was no alternative but to say no, reluctant as were those holding the appointing power to do so. It will be observed that those receiving appointments are scattered over a wide field, and it takes means to get them to their places of labor. We trust none will feel that they are neglected, or discouraged in the work.

May the peace insured to the good ever abide with the Saints.
Hopefully, In the faith,

WM. H. KELLEY.

WEST BAY CITY, Michigan.

Editors Herald: I arrived in Michigan just in time to learn that Professor Walter Sims, who has debated against our representatives several times, had publicly stated that I had "backed down" from a discussion with him, and that he would force me to meet him, etc. I had been waiting for him to secure his credentials, which, it appears, he could not get. I also learned that he was about to enter into debate with Elder David Smith at Augres, commencing April 21. I immediately repaired to the battle ground, and before the debate began, in the presence of the people, announced Mr. Sims' errors, and my willingness to meet him at once. He agreed. Meantime, I was chosen moderator for Bro. Smith, and the controversy began. Bro. Smith was in fine form, and readily met his wily antagonist at every turn. At the close of the third evening Mr. Sims left the floor, and declined to remain for the other sessions in which his church would be examined. It was a signal defeat. Bro. Smith conducted our side finely. Much good will result. Mr. Sims is to meet me in the theater building, at Standish, in May.

I am feeling well, and desire to remain active until the end.

E. A. GOODWIN.

Dear Bro. Joseph: Just received a telegram stating that "Bro. D. L. Harris is dead." I leave this afternoon to take charge of funeral. Will send details later. Surely our cause hath added claim on Divinity with the ever-increasing number of valiant soldiers who are being mustered into eternal service. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

I felt the peace and power of God all day yesterday. It seemed as though a divine benediction had come to us with conference tidings. All success to the brethren with their added responsibilities and the commendation and universal appreciation of the church militant for those who have been relieved of duty too taxing for the infirmity of age and physical depletion. May God spare them for years to come to bless, cheer, and comfort his people. Ever in the conflict,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Pastoral.

To the Missionary Force and Church Membership of the Northeastern Illinois District; Greeting: Another conference year is upon us, and it is to be hoped that unity of purpose and concert of action may characterize our efforts during the present year. The measure of success that will attend our endeavors will depend upon our systematic coöperation, persistency of effort, holiness of purpose, and purity of life. We will endeavor to keep in touch with each conference appointee, as well as with the general missionary in charge, and we trust that the inspiration of God may direct all of our movements as ministers for Christ. The objective point to be sought by missionary effort will be the opening up of new fields, the enlargement of the present sphere of operation in the district, and pushing out from the old paths of former service. Where branch or isolated church membership can be utilized in the interest of missionary effort it will be proper to take advantage of conditions thus presented; otherwise we should move out from branch organization and the local church membership. Missionaries, as a rule, should keep clear of all local church difficulties such as elders' courts, branch complications, etc., leaving such matters for local church authority to adjust. Our prerogative is to "counsel" and "advise," hence it will be well to leave all local church affairs to local church authority; but if local authority should refuse to adjust and regulate "disordered" church "conditions," then it will become our duty to take steps to regulate both the authority and the conditions needing regulation. The missionary interests should be paramount to all other church interests as seen from a missionary standpoint. It is to be hoped that the entire church membership in the district, both in city and country, will see and feel the importance of the missionary work, and will render whatever assistance they can give to strengthen this vital arm of church service. Isolated members residing in the country may be able to make openings for the preaching of the word in adjacent schoolhouses or other suitable places. The Saints in towns and cities are invited to do all they can to aid missionary effort in their respective localities. It is expected that district work will be under the supervision of that veteran worker, Bro. F. G. Pitt, whose experience and executive ability will inspire confidence everywhere, and the missionary who will push out along the line of duty will find in the head of the district both a friend and efficient adviser. If ready doors do not open inviting the missionary to enter in and occupy, we trust he will have the faith and courage to move out, under the divine direction, and open the doors of God's grace when and where not invited. If conservative action is not sufficient to carry the work forward, let us test the virtues of aggressive action. All parties wishing to write me in the interest of missionary work will, for the present, address me at 526 South Third Street, Dekalb, Illinois. F. M. Cooper, Field Missionary in Charge of Northeastern Illinois District.

To the General Conference appointees of the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Southern Illinois; and also that part of Indian Territory and Arkansas that belongs to the Spring River District; and in fact, to all the holy brethren throughout these regions; come greeting: We have just passed an eventful conference; one that has been far-reaching; yes, more so than any ever yet held by the Reorganization. Every indication is that we are nearing an eventful period in the church. This calls for a careful, humble, and diligent ministry—missionaries that will be true to the trust imposed in them, both by the church and by the Lord. The church has put in the field this year the largest number of missionaries that the Reorganization has ever sent out. This was done to try to fill the urgent demand made upon the church from far and near for more laborers. We may have overreached the financial limits by placing so many in the field. But it must be remembered that after the long and perplexing and tedious investigation of the finances of the church they were found to be in a safe and honorable condition. Since this is the case there is every hope that the men of the church will come forward with their tithes and offerings and sustain the families of the missionaries that have been sent to the field in response to the continued cry for more preachers. Let the faint-hearted as well as the strong now take courage and pull all together for the final triumph of Christ's work. The missionaries are expected to avoid making unnecessary expenses by taking long rides on the railroad. Study well your points of economy. The good wife and the missionary should "pull together" regarding these matters. Be saving and frugal with the tithes of the people. To be otherwise tends to weaken confidence imposed in you by the Saints, and brings yourself under condemnation before God. Missionaries should not be found begging for means to meet their traveling and incidental expenses. The Saints should see to it that all such are kindly met without the missionary having to beg for it. This "begging" brings the missionary in bad taste with the people. Indeed, it is one of the seeds that produces the "blues" in the missionary's heart. Let the layman try it. Go from his home and give his service to the people free of charge—without "purse or scrip," then be "turned down" with, "The Lord bless you," and left to beg his way to the next appointment. Wouldn't you have enough "blues" on hand to strike out for home at once? If any think the missionary has a "soft snap" on hand, they would do well to take one trip at least, and learn the way more perfectly. I am glad to know that in a large majority of cases the Saints have big hearts, and know how to carry many of the burdens incident to the traveling missionary. For such, there is glory in the world to come. Let the Saints and missionaries take notice, that F. C. Keck is placed in charge of Spring River District; James Moler of Clinton District; Henry Sparling of Southern Missouri District; Joseph A. Tanner of Northeastern Missouri District; J. D. Stead of Nodaway District; John D. White of Independence Stake; R. J. Parker of St. Louis Dis-

The missionaries laboring in the Far West District, will please report to me direct for the present. Also the missionaries appointed to labor in Southern Kansas. All missionaries are expected to report their labors to those placed in charge. This does not hinder any missionary from writing me direct for any information or cheer that is in his judgment needed. I rather encourage such. Be of good cheer; live faithful; work diligently, and God will send his angels before you to open doors you know not of. May comfort, grace, and truth abound in your hearts, is my earnest prayer in Christ Jesus our Lord. I. N. White, Missionary in General Charge. Independence, Missouri, May 1.

Second Quorum of Seventy.

Attention, brethren! Do you desire to receive the circular letter provided for by resolution at our session at the late conference just as soon as possible? If you do, please remember that you can greatly aid us by responding promptly. What we now want is for each member to send us a postal card naming the address which you desire printed in the coming circular letter. Some of your addresses we know, and others we do not on account of changes that have been made. So we think the best way is for each member to send his address at once and then there will be no mistakes, as we will not be required to conjecture or guess at the address you desire. The sending of a postal card is but a little matter. Address the undersigned at Radcliff, Ohio. H. E. Moler. April 29.

Died.

BYERGO—At her home near Barnard, Missouri, on April 25, at 4:30 p. m., Sr. Arletta Byergo passed on at the ripe age of 84 years, 7 months, 9 days. Sr. Byergo was born in Denmark. She united with the church in 1871 and has since lived a life of devotion to the truth. She leaves seven children to mourn her loss. Services were held in the M. E. church in Barnard, Missouri, in charge of Rev. G. F. Biever, the M. E. minister, the sermon by Elder J. M. Terry, of St. Joseph, Missouri. Peace to her soul.

WINDLAND.—Sr. Elizabeth, wife of Bro. H. Windland, at Moundsville, West Virginia, April 20, 1902, in the seventieth year of her age. Baptized by Elder James Craig, April, 1874. She was faithful to the end. She gained the respect and confidence of all who became acquainted with her. When she spoke to those whom she told of the good way, it was with a gentle spirit and pleasantness. Husband, one daughter, five sons, and a large circle of friends mourn. Interment in Moundsville Cemetery, April 22, funeral sermon by Elder James Craig.

SWINNEY.—Hiram Harold, son of James and Sr. Clara Swinney, of St. Joseph, Missouri, passed peacefully away from earth's toils on April 28, 1902, at the age of 1 year, 2 months, 6 days. He was buried from the residence on April 29, 1902; funeral sermon by Elder J. M. Terry.

FULLERLOVE.—At Kansas City, Missouri, April 24, 1902, of bright's disease, Bro. Andrew J. Fullerlove, aged 65 years, 7 months. He was baptized by Elder Henry Sparling at West Plains, Missouri, in 1895. He passed peacefully away in full hope of the first resurrection. He leaves a wife and children and many relatives to mourn, many of whom followed his remains to the Union Cemetery, where Elder F. C. Warnky preached the funeral sermon. He was a devoted husband and a loving father. May God comfort the bereaved ones so that they may draw nearer to their Savior.

In the May Forum the first place is taken by a timely article on "The Polish Problem in Prussia." Its author, Mr. Wolf von Schierbrand, explains how it is that the national spirit of the Poles has succeeded in resisting the Germanizing policy of the Prussian Government. Professor G. T. Ladd's paper on "The Degradation of the Professional Office" brings to an end a remarkable series of criticisms of the present academic situation, which is also discussed in President C. F. Thwing's article on "Collegiate Conditions in the United States." Other educational topics dealt with in this number are "The Example of French Industrial Art Schools," by Jacob Schoenhof, and "The Negro and Higher Learning," by Professor W. S. Scarborough. An important statistical article is contributed by Henry Gannett, who shows "Our Industrial Position in the World" by comparison of our exports with those of other nations. A less gratifying contrast is that pointed by Professor A. D. F. Hamlin in a protest against "Our Public Untidiness." A valuable light is thrown upon Italian social and industrial conditions in an article by Doctor Wolcott Calkins on "Taxation and Business in Italy." Honorable W. C. Mains warmly recommends the Torrens system for "The Registration of Title to Real Property." The list of contents also includes "Wage-Earning School Children in England," by Thomas Burke; "The Problem of a Pure Milk Supply," by Doctor Henry Dwight Chapin; "Comparative Pension Systems," by Frederick Fenning; "American Forestry; a New Career," by J. Russell Smith; and "Reclaiming the Arid Southwest," by Robert M. Barker.

A series which should have been named "The Enchantments of our Modern Aladdins," if considered solely from the point of view of romance, is begun in the May Cosmopolitan. But these sketches possess as well a business interest equally for clerk and capitalist, for manufacturer, farmer, and merchant. The man who would understand the drift of our news in finance and business must read these lives, so full of incident, of chance, of hard labor and marvelous success. As it is, the series receives only the common-place name of "Captains of Industry." Each character is treated by a noted writer familiar with his subject.

Access to books is an open door to wide knowledge, to a disciplined mind, and to immense extension and variety of interests.—May Ladies' Home Journal.

The author of "Mary Had a Little Lamb" was John Roulston, a young man who was a visitor at the school near Worcester, Massachusetts, when the incident occurred. The heroine of the poem was Mary E. Sawyer, who afterward became Mrs. Columbus Tyler. She died in December, 1889.—May Ladies' Home Journal.

The May number of the Woman's Home Companion has as its chief feature the beginning of a charming serial story by Cyrus Townsend Brady. Its title is "Woven With the Ship." Other fiction is "The Plot Against Henley," by Will N. Harben, and the tale of Blue Beard by Elliott Flower. An article of unusual timeliness is that on Ellen M. Stone, by the secretary of the Foreign Missions Board. "Where the Circus Starts From," "The Month of May-Days" and "Behind the Scenes in a Department Store" are all of wide interest. W. G. Bowdoin has an article on Charles Schreyvogel, the painter of frontier life. A new department added this month is devoted to poetry, and there will be printed in each number some of the old favorites, as well as the newest verse.

THE WAYS OF REVELATION.

Those of us who have by long use become accustomed to the consideration of written or verbal communication, ought not to permit ourselves to be concluded in the idea that such is the only method which should be employed through which spiritual instruction and direction may reach the church.

In olden time "holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost." Some of the same class of men wrote as they were bidden by the visible visitation of angels, by dream, by vision (by day or night), and by audible voices, any one or all of these ways of communication having been used by the Lord to convey information or give direction and commandment.

It would appear that at the creation God spake to Adam face to face, as one man speaks to another.<sup>1</sup> And to Cain, even after he had committed murder in killing his brother Abel.<sup>2</sup> He also spake to Noah in process of time, stating that the "end of all flesh" had come before him, and directing the building of the ark.<sup>3</sup>

Up to about 2218 B. C. men used one language, one means of verbal communication. They had certain ambitions which they attempted to realize, but these were interfered with and their manner of speech confounded, and they were scattered upon the face of the earth as a consequence.<sup>4</sup>

In Genesis 12 it is stated that the Lord "had said," and what he had said is rehearsed; but as it does not appear previously in the history the method of the communication is not stated.

In passing through the land of the Canaanites, the Lord appeared unto Abram, making promise unto him to be continued and confirmed unto his posterity after him.

After the battle, the history of which is related in Genesis 14, there was a change in the method of communication, and chapter 15 states that "The word of the Lord came unto Abram in a vision," and though a conversation is stated to have occurred, it does not appear that either the Lord or other messenger was there. Afterwards Abram fell asleep

The city of St. Pierre, on the Island of Martinique, a French province, has been overwhelmed by an eruption of Mount Pelee, a volcano near the city, and it is estimated that 25,000 souls perished in the lava and the burning town. More particulars next week.

and during a horror of great darkness which came on him, some one said unto Abram, "Know of a surety," etc.<sup>5</sup>

"But God came to Abimelech in a dream by night."<sup>6</sup>

Jacob was visited by a dream, or spoken to by an angel in a dream.<sup>7</sup>

So, also, was Laban visited in a dream by night.<sup>8</sup>

The dream and vision of the King Nebuchadnezzar as related in the second chapter of Daniel has been taken as foreshadowing the history of the world from the time of their occurring until the setting up of the kingdom as a stone "cut out of the mountain without hands."<sup>9</sup>

It occurs in New Testament times that the dream and vision were used as a means for conveying direction to quite an extent. The record begins with the first chapter of Matthew, in which it is stated that the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream and testified in the matter of the birth of the Savior.<sup>10</sup>

The wise men were "warned in a dream," and did not return to Herod.<sup>11</sup>

Again the "angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream."<sup>12</sup>

Joel's prediction in regard to what would transpire in the latter days, has long been a source of comfort and strength to the Saints, and revelations in all the various ways in which manifestations used to be prevalent in olden times have marked the footsteps of the church in its onward progress including dreams and visions.<sup>13</sup>

By the "Vision" were some of the peculiarities of the conditions to obtain in the resurrection shown to the Seer and one of his associates.<sup>14</sup>

From section 104 of the same book containing the revelations to the church we are given to understand something in regard to the order of the priesthood, taught during the formative period of the church by vision; the instruction thus given being taken as indicative of how the church ought to be governed so far as the order is there treated of.<sup>15</sup>

Nor should it be wondered at that later on in the work of the Reorganization revelation in a dream should have been given as direction in church work.

MINISTERS GET INTO THEIR FIELDS PROMPTLY.

In conversation with Bishop Kelley we learn that the missionaries are getting into their respective fields much more promptly than heretofore, which is very commendable. It is only just and proper that what men have to do in any vocation in life they should do in the season thereof. This holds good in all secular callings and secular pursuits, and should obtain with much greater reasons in the ministerial calling to which men devote their time and talent from desire to do the Lord's will and engage in the service of good to men without hope of temporal prosperity or secular rewards.

It is an impressive fact, this of the banner-bearers going so readily and promptly out to the places where there are waiting peoples anxious to hear the news of gospel clemency and divine acceptance.

It was but a little while ago, and these preachers from the various fields were gathered in solemn conclave examining and considering questions of greater or lesser degrees of importance, some of which were freighted with grave results to individuals, workers in the same cause, for good or ill. This duty done in its hour of business time, the workers together, were renewing acquaintance with each other, or forming new ones with those not met before; and now they are away to take up the gage of battle singly or in groups as the times and exigencies may demand, zealous and full of hope.

What a scene for thought. A few days ago massed together like a serried phalanx, now at the outposts scattered over a wide area of conflict, earnest and careful, anxious for the right to succeed and willing to stand for it against any odds.

We join with Bishop Kelley in congratulating the ministry for being out and away so promptly. They must have seen and liked the HERALD motto, "Do It Right Now."

"ARE THE CHURCHES DECLINING?"

From an article entitled "Are the Churches Declining?" by a writer in the World's Work for May, we quote the two closing paragraphs. They appear at the end of an excellent article giving a plain statistical statement showing the fact that there has been a steady decrease in the number of those uniting with the main and popular denominational churches of the time. The writer of the article is clearly of the opinion that the cause of this decline lies in something else than the question of orthodoxy.

It may not be for us to say, but we may safely agree to this writer's conclusion; and that the reason may be in fact that neither of the churches chosen as comparisons may be orthodox—in accord with the word.

As for explanations—on the one hand it is contended that the churches are losing ground because they are too orthodox; and on the other hand the lack of orthodoxy is given as the primary

cause of decline. Take first the claim that the Christian church is declining because it is too orthodox. The Congregational Church is admittedly one of the least orthodox of the denominations, nor is the orthodoxy of the Episcopal Church among the strictest. Yet the Congregational Church from a gain of 19,000 in 1895 fell to a gain of less than 2,000 in 1900. Only three times since 1857 has the gain of membership in this church been as low as at the present time, and never has there been such a steady falling off as has occurred since 1894—the banner year of its history. The Episcopal Church, which attracts by its social prestige, shows nevertheless a very steady decrease in yearly gains. At the last General Convention it was reported that there were 3,896 fewer confirmations and 13,832 fewer baptisms during the three years then ending as compared with the previous three years' period. It thus appears that to be of "liberal" orthodoxy is not to insure success.

How stands it on the other hand? Are those churches also declining which show no great departure from the old orthodoxy? The Methodist statistics may be allowed to furnish the answer; for this church can hardly be accused of non-orthodoxy. Some of its ministers may be guilty of "leaning toward Unitarianism," and the higher criticism may give a less dogmatic tone to some of its pupils, but at the last General Conference the church refused to change its discipline in favor of "liberalism." Its leaders stand for "historic Methodism." In 1895 the church reported an increase of 279,259 members; in 1896 the increase was only 45,000; in 1897 it was 14,000; in 1898 it had fallen to 12,000, and in 1899 there was an actual decrease of nearly 4,000. Last year a substantial gain is reported, but when we remember that this gain is the result of extraordinary efforts it has not the meaning that it would have were it the result of normal conditions. It is plain that this church, which can hardly be matched for its good management and which is orthodox, is gradually losing ground. We must conclude then that neither orthodoxy nor the lack of it is the secret of the churches' decline. The explanation must be sought in other reasons.

IMPROVEMENT IN CREEDS.

So far as now appears there will be a necessity for a sort of adjustment compromise in the pending revision of creeds. The following from an outside layman's views expresses the situation quite accurately.

EDEN AND THE PRESBYTERIES.

One might almost think that the Eastern Presbyteries were being haunted by the shades of Adam and Eve. Two weeks ago it was the presbytery in New York. Now it is the presbytery in Elizabeth. The beginnings were in both cases the same. The ends were different. In both cases a young man applied for a license to preach, and on being questioned with regard to our first parents replied that he regarded them as dramatis personæ in a divine allegory. The New York Presbytery was unable to wink at such a departure from customary Presbyterian opinion. It urged the young man to go back to his books and sit there until he could change his mind.

The Elizabeth Presbytery, on the other hand, concluded "that the church must meet the new ideas which are constantly growing in it and that, after all, the individuality of the man is the main thing." It therefore effected a compromise with its candidate. It agreed for its own part to give the candidate a license to preach, while for his part the candidate made this statement: "I do not intend to make a text of my thoughts on the subject, but if a man comes to me looking for salvation I shall expound to him the gospel as I believe it." It appears, accordingly, that in the Elizabeth Presbytery certain subjects, opinions on which are at present in a state of continual flux, are to be avoided. Here and there on the theological map there will be a terra incognita inhabited by man-eating monsters. Into these districts the pastor will not lead the members of his flock. He will keep them in the quiet valleys where they will not be exposed to any danger. In other words, the principle is either that the subject about which the young man is not to preach is unessential to the general scheme of Christian doctrine, or else that under present circumstances it is best to leave certain questions alone.

This principle is the one advocated by Mr. Goldwin Smith in a recent letter to the New York Sun. Let the creeds remain as they are, he said, "for whatever they may still be worth," but "do not any longer impose them, or any other human manifesto, as ordination tests." The minister should be pledged simply "to preach what in his conscience he believes to be the truth." The idea, then, is to leave the creed intact, but to forget it, or, at any rate, not to take it too seriously. The ostrich has been ridiculed for a somewhat similar proceeding. No amount of sand about the head will destroy the existence of things. The fact is there, whether one looks at it or not. If the creed remains as the official Confession of Faith, it will also remain as a kind of skeleton in the closet unless it is openly recognized and obeyed. It may be, however, that in this period of transition certain doctrines will be kept on ice in the hope that they will be available later. Such seems to be the intention of the Presbyterian Church in general. The last assembly, in authorizing a committee on creed revision, provided that the revision should be for the purpose of "giving information and a better understanding of our doctrinal beliefs, and not with a view to its being a substitute for, or an alternative of our Confession of Faith." It was "to express more clearly the mind of the church," but "in no way to impair the integrity of the system of doctrine set forth in our confession." Here are two horses which it will be interesting to drive together. It will be safer to sit in the grand stand than to hold the ribbons. When the next General Assembly meets there will be a chance to "witch the world with noble horsemanship."—Chicago Tribune, May 4.

It is not a little strange that the secular editor of a secular journal should have a clearer perception of what such a problem as this creed revision, revival, or elimination apparently going on in the churches, presents to those looking on than do some, or all of the chief actors on the ecclesiastical boards. What the layman evidently sees is a fear to let go, or a fear to hang on; a sort of clerical hesitancy that indicates weakness in the church itself, or in the creeds, either of which is fraught with danger to the church itself.

COLLEGE DEBT.

The published list of paid-in College subscriptions in the Bishop's report of last week should be carefully examined to find out whether you have paid any part of our subscription or not and how much.

If your name is not already upon subscription list see that it is placed upon it at once. Let no one be left out so that he can have no part or lot in this goodly work.

Please see the Bishop's agent, or Bishop, for your district or branch, and if your name is not upon list, subscribe at once, marking the time of payment upon the list. It is hoped that soon a new published list may be made which will for ever settle the College debt business.

THOUGH DEAD, YET HE SPEAKS.

"The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality."

The foregoing is a sentence penned by Bro. Morris T. Short, near the close of his last effort for the columns of the HERALD. It deserves to pass down to the ages yet to come among the immortal sayings of the great and the good men of earth.

It is the closing thought of a man who had served as a soldier in the ranks among those who with war-like weapons went into battle where death reaped its harvest by the "abomination which maketh desolate;" but of this he never boasted. He served for long years in the ranks of soldiers of the cross, and of his record and standing as a soldier he was ever zealous and rejoiced in his service. Let his last words become a familiar phrase in the memory of every fellow soldier.

"The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality."

FROM the Daily News, of Des Moines, Iowa, for May 5, 1902, we learn that Mr. D. A. Poorman, of Des Moines, the expert accountant employed by Conference Committee to audit the church accounts in the Bishop's office for the years 1891 to 1900, and who reported at the late April session, departed this life at his home in Des Moines, May 4, at 6:15 p. m. The News has the following in regard to Mr. Poorman, which we give believing it will be of interest to our readers:

Mr. Poorman was born in Lancaster County, August 6, 1831. He located at Indianola in 1858 and came to Des Moines three years later. He has resided here ever since. Of late years he has achieved a state-wide reputation as an expert accountant.

Mr. Poorman was a son of John and Catherine Poorman. His father died while he was yet in his teens and Daniel spent his share of the estate in taking a full collegiate course at Wittenburg College, Springfield, Illinois, graduating with high honors. He went to California for two years, but returned and in 1858 moved to Indianola, Iowa, where he engaged in business and in June, 1858, married Miss Minerva A. Lindsey, daughter of Elzey and Elizabeth Lindsey. In 1861 Mr. and Mrs. Poorman came to Des Moines. Four sons were born to them. Edwin Augustus died December 13, 1886, and Frederick Marvin died July 10, 1894. Harry Louis Poorman lives in a house adjoining his parents on Eighteenth Street.

Mr. Poorman held the office of Assistant Treasurer of State under the late John W. Jones, also several other offices in the State and county. He was a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, filling at various times nearly all the offices in the order. He also belonged to the Odd Fellows and the Order of United American Mechanics. He was one of the leading members of the Buckeye Association, of the Polk County Early Settlers' Association, and for two years was secretary of the Pioneer Law Makers' Association of Iowa.

Mr. Poorman was a man of much more than ordinary ability, possessed a fine education, and was regarded as one of the leading expert accountants of the State. His services were in great demand. One of the last of his duties in that respect was for the Latter Day Saints at their annual meeting at Lamoni. He also took great delight in his home, and no more hospitable place could be found in the city.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

D. R. Baldwin has sent us some clippings from a local paper at Ravenden Springs, Arkansas, in which the conduct of a Methodist minister in shutting Bro. Baldwin out of the Methodist church is quite severely criticised. Bro. Baldwin writes, under date of April 24: "Reverend House is the new Methodist minister, who tells me he is under obligations to their conference to keep their houses of worship closed against us. Some of his own members, whose names appear on the inclosed petition, say that his action, complained of, is 'squarely against the spirit of the work.' I commenced preaching at Noland on the night of the 13th, a stronghold of the Christian Church. Elder Lemmons thought it advisable to claim half of the time, and in order to hold and increase the congregation I consented to him having every other night. I showed up his methods of dealing, but staid assiduously in the affirmative."

M. R. Shoemaker writes from Beardstown, Illinois, May 5: "I was amused at reading in last HERALD the 'appeal for an Anti-mormon crusade' and the call for one hundred subscribers to the fund of ten dollars each, etc. I should think the Disciple brethren could be accommodated with this small amount from among the 'Mormon' contingent. I for one would gladly give them ten dollars rather than see it fall through. Openings are hard to get, and I would consider this a good as well as safe investment. Let the good work go on."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Swen Swenson, in a letter on business to Bishop Kelley, from near old Far West, Missouri, states that he baptized six there lately, all heads of families. This is one way to redeem Zion, to convert her inhabitants. "Let the good work go on."

S. D. Love wrote on May 5 from Joplin, Missouri, that he would get into his field of labor at once. He baptized three on Sunday, May 4, at Central City, Missouri.

J. H. Tyrrell, bishop's agent, of Chatham, Ontario, writing to the Bishop, forwards special consecration of three hundred dollars, with the statement that "I do not wish to wait until I come to Zion's Stakes before complying with the law. I may be dead if I wait too long, then if I went into eternity I could not rejoice with those who did comply. In Doctrine and Covenants it says, 'It is an honorable act to help lay the foundation of Zion.' I want to be amongst those who rejoice in taking part in the work." The foregoing statement is one that should pervade the minds of all Saints. Instead of striving to avoid helping in the work, each should feel and say, to himself at least, How much can I do to help? If all will labor collectively and individually in such a spirit as this, the good time will not be far ahead for the children of the Master.

THE PRESENT CONFLICT BETWEEN SCIENCE AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.—No. 5.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

THE DELUGE.

Nadaillac says: "Some of these [American] legends relate to a universal flood, a myth; 'spread throughout the New World, from one pole, so to speak, to the other.'"—Prehistoric America, p. 527.

Hugh Miller says: "The tradition of the flood may be properly regarded as universal, seeing there is scarcely any considerable race of man among which, in some of its forms, it is not to be found."—Present Conflict, p. 502.

Humboldt says: "These ancient traditions of the human race, which we find dispersed over the whole surface of the globe, like the relics of a vast shipwreck, are highly interesting in the philosophical study of our own species. How many different tongues, belonging to branches that appear totally distinct, transmit to us the same facts. The traditions concerning races that have been destroyed, and the renewal of nature, scarcely vary in reality, though every nation gives them a local coloring. In the great continents, as in the smallest islands of the Pacific Ocean, it is always on the loftiest and nearest mountain that the remains of the human race have been saved; and this event appears the more recent in proportion as the nations are uncultivated, and as the knowledge they have of their own existence has no very remote date."—Present Conflict, pp. 502, 503.

Herbert W. Morris, A. M., says: "The mythologies and histories of all the ancient nations are full of the remembrances of it. It is described in the stories of the Greeks and sung in the verses of the Latins. Its memory is enshrined in the sacred books of the Parsee, the Brahmin, and the Mohammedan, and has been assigned a place in the Legends of the Scandinavian, and in the mythic records of the Chinaman. . . . Its symbols are found stamped on the coins of ancient Greece; . . . and recognized in the sculptured caves of Hindoostan, and detected even in the pictured writings of Mexico. In Cuba and Tahiti, on the banks of the Orinoco, on the pampas of Brazil, in the mountains of Peru, and in the islands of the Pacific, the traveler has met with traces or traditions of the flood, the ark, and the rescue of the favored few."—Ibid., p. 502.

With the ancient Welsh it was "Dwyfan and Dwyfach, who saved themselves in a vessel without rigging."—Atlantis, p. 93.

With the Egyptians it was remembered in the destruction of Atlantis. (See Ibid., p. 11.)

With the Greeks Noah and his wife are seen in the persons of Deucalion and Phyrria. (See Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 875; Atlantis, pp. 8, 86.)

With the Greenlanders, "Once the world suddenly turned upside down, and all the inhabitants were drowned except a few who were transformed into spirits of fire. One man remained; a woman rose out of the ground and they re-peopled the earth."—Bricks from Babel, p. 130.

"The Hawaiian legend of the flood is full and minute,—the big ship, animals saved in pairs, the birds sent out, the leaf brought back and seven days waiting."—Ibid., 180.

With the Hindoos it is "Satiavrata and seven saints," that are saved, "and from this Manu the earth was re-peopled."—Historical Evidences, p. 268.

With the Babylonians it was Xisuthrus who was saved in a floating house. (See Bricks from Babel, p. 42.) In the Chaldean Ark were Xisuthros his wife and the pilot. (See Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 874.) Another story says that Xisuthros "with his wife and children and friends." (See Historical Evidences, p. 275.)

The Chinese flood is described as "The pillars of heaven were broken—the earth fell to pieces and the waters inclosed within its bosom burst forth with violence, and overflowed it."—Historical Evidences, p. 268. The Chinese say further "Over this polluted earth rose the waters of a deluge. Fohi alone was worthy to be saved, and with him were preserved his wife, three sons, and three daughters-in-law."—Bricks from Babel, p. 139.

With the Assyrians it is "Khasisatra"—"his wife"—"and his servants male and female that are saved."—Atlantis, pp. 76, 82.

"Long ago," the Fijians say, "men been disobedient to the gods. Taarsa, the high god, undertook to drown the world. One man in a canoe was spared, and landing on a mountain built an altar to his god."

Another tradition declares that one good man was warned to entered a boat with his family and domestic animals. The Fijians have a very clear tradition, declaring the saved to have been eight, four men and their wives."—Bricks from Babel, p. 147.

The Fijian legend of the tower is, "It rose skyward, the people crowded in, all busy in building, when the foundations broke asunder, and flung the people far and wide over all the island of Fiji. . . . There are also chart legends of the creation and the fall, circumcision, tattooing, (tabu) holy water, and cities of refuge."—Bricks from Babel, p. 181.

In the Mexican deluge, "All men and beasts were destroyed, except one pair, who were saved in a hollow log of cypress wood. . . . When the deluge was subsiding Coxcox (the Mexican Noah) sent out a vulture for tidings, but the base bird remained to fatten on the floating corpses; a humming bird did better, and brought back a leaf. Coxcox then left his boat on a mountain. After this deluge a giant named Xelhua, resolved to build a hill to touch the sky; he began a brick pyramid, upon which the angry gods hurled destroying fire. . . . The Aztec had another famous tradition of Quilaztli, the woman of our flesh, and mother of all living; she was always represented with a serpent beside her in converse."—Bricks from Babel, pp. 159, 160.

Coxcox, or as he is also called, Tezpi, in another tradition, "saved himself, together with his wife Xochiquetzal, in a bark, or according to other traditions on a raft made of cypress wood. Paintings retracing the deluge of Coxcox have been discovered among the Aztecs, Miztecs, Zapotecs, Tlascaltecs, and Mechoacanese. The tradition of the latter is still more strikingly in conformity with the story as we have it in Genesis, and in Chaldean sources. It tells how Tezpi embarked in a spacious vessel with his wife, his children, and several animals, and grain, whose preservation was essential to the subsistence of the human race. After the waters had receded Tezpi "left his bark on the mountain of Colhuacan." (See Atlantis, p. 99.)

The Aztec (Codex Chimalpopoca) calls the Aztec Noah "Nata" and his spouse "Nena." They are told to prepare for the flood, and when they entered the vessel God closed the door. (See Atlantis, p. 100.)

A French student reports that he has collected some seventy-two varieties of this flood myth, so that if the Bible had said nothing about a deluge, we would still be led to believe, from what is said by other outside witnesses, that such an event had happened, for the reason that it is conceded by nearly all mankind to be a fact, and without an exception every race of people that mention it, trace back their pedigree, like Moses, to the man or men that was saved in the ark, or canoe, or raft, each one says that it was his ancestor that was thus saved, he was the favored one.

We see that populations of essentially different culture, tastes, and pursuits, the highly civilized and half civilized, the settled communities, and nomadic communities, entirely apart and unknown to each other, nations that never exchange a word with each other, it makes no difference whatever as to their social or intellectual conditions, of caste, color, nation, or the difference in physical structure, all declare that Moses and the Bible are credible witnesses!

Now if this forecast be correct, then we see that the human mind in every part of the habitable world has been revolving around certain central ideas. And all along down the dreary ages the force of tradition was attracted to certain events in history, until at last these echoes have reached our own times. This wonderful inheritance of tradition, the writer thinks is evidence that God has not left himself without a witness in their hearts, of his fatherhood, and that the race is one specie, for all claim as their ancestor the man saved in the ark.

Thus taking the facts altogether, we reach the conclusion that whatever scientists may read in the rocks, peat-beds, shell-heaps, or the alluvial deposits of the Nile or Mississippi, or however far back he may place his origin, the united testimony of humanity is that we are of one blood, and of one hope. This is the answer of the soul of man himself. He is a worshiper, trying to please an irritated God, believing that man has lost his first estate of primeval innocence, but will be reclaimed by the death of a god, and thus restored to divine favor. This Christ idea is as universal as the flood, and we see no conflict between science and the Christian religion. The Bible we think stands unimpeached.

BARNARD, Mo., January 24, 1902.

THE SUCCESSFUL MINISTER.

WHO IS HE?

When an individual truly loves a cause, be its character whatever it may, either religious, political, or social, he feels an earnest desire to see that cause prosper and move forward; and he is willing and ready at all times to do everything he can, legitimately, to have it do so.

This is true of all genuine Latter Day Saints in regard to the gospel cause. They love it dearly and greatly desire to see it spread throughout the land. And especially is it true of the ministers of that faith; for they have or should have, a deeper interest in the gospel message than others, for the reason that they are the main instruments in God's hands, in its promulgation and the success of their cause feeds that laudable pride or ambition found in the bosoms of all men at accomplishing whatever is attempted. To place it in other words, the success of their cause is success to themselves.

It therefore becomes a matter of great importance to those "who bear the vessels of the Lord" to note the successful minister and endeavor, as far as possible, to follow his example and imitate his methods of introducing the gospel message to the people. This must not be done alone for the reason referred to above, to gratify pride or ambition, but that the gospel cause might move forward more rapidly. Before he can do this, however, there is one very essential matter he must settle in his own mind, and that is to first determine who the successful minister is.

There are various ideas existing in the minds of the Saints as to his identity. Some believe him to be the one who delivers the greatest number of sermons within a certain given time, say the conference year. Others that he is the man who baptizes the greatest number into the church during the year. And there was a third class in the early days of the church

(judging from their reports given in at General Conference, and there may be a few of the same class left yet) who believed him to be the minister who had traveled the greatest number of miles in prosecuting his mission. This class, very fortunately, was not very large and was greatly discouraged by being called "galloping" elders.

We think a great light will be thrown upon the question by noting carefully a few things directly connected with the matter. First, what is the minister's duty? Second, God's purpose in having the gospel preached to man. Third, the length of time given the ministers in which to preach. These three interrogations fully investigated, we believe, will lead directly to the answer desired.

Now, as to the first we will say that the minister's duty is to preach the gospel and administer its ordinances to all mankind, to every creature, all nations, etc.

As to the second, God's purpose in having the gospel preached to man is twofold; that is, there are two reasons for doing it, or, to be still closer, two paramount reasons for doing it. The first is that he might avail himself of its privileges and blessings. The other is that in the last day God could judge all men with the same judgment, or, with impartiality, all having heard the gospel message.

Before we proceed to the last question, the length of time given the ministers to carry the gospel to man, we would make this remark: No individual can possibly enjoy fully the privileges and blessings of the gospel until he has a thorough, complete, and perfect understanding of it, and his duties and responsibilities respecting it. Neither can God in judgment fully condemn him until this same condition prevails. With these facts before us, it can plainly be seen that the first opinion as to who the successful minister is can not be correct, for he might preach a thousand sermons in his year and not bring the gospel message fully to the comprehension of one single person. And for the same reason the second one is also incorrect, for a minister might baptize a thousand members into the church and not one of them fully enjoy the gospel blessings.

As to the third opinion we can not believe that God ever intended when he sends his ministers out to preach the gospel that they should turn their mission into a foot-race to see who could travel the greater number of miles in a given time.

Now as to the length of time man has to declare the gospel message, we are led to the conclusion that it is very short. Our Savior declares in Matthew 24: 22, that unless the days of his coming be shortened, there should be no flesh saved, but for the elect's sake the days should be shortened. Also, in ancient and modern revelation he (Christ) very frequently declares, "Lo, I come quickly." Again, a great many of the signs he declared should precede his second coming have been seen. We might refer to other evidences pointing to the day of his coming as being near at hand, but will let the above suffice.

Let us now give a brief summary. The minister's duty is to declare the gospel to every creature, and in such a manner that every one can fully and thoroughly comprehend it. When he has accomplished this, his responsibility as a minister ceases, and the believer's begins. That God can not justly condemn a man for rejecting the gospel, until he fully and thoroughly understands it. That there is but a very short time for the ministers to do the vast work of carrying the gospel to every creature. Hence, then, in view of these facts, we are led to the conclusion that the successful minister is the one who can bring the gospel message in its entirety, to the full, complete, and perfect comprehension of the greatest number of people in the shortest length of time, irrespective of the number of sermons preached, the numbers baptized, or the number of miles traveled.

BIG POTATOES! MIDDLE POTATOES!! AND LITTLE POTATOES!!!

"What a queer heading?" Yes, and what a queer world; but it's the people that made it so, for in the beginning God saw that it was good. And after he had created man, he said it was very good. But that was a long while ago. Things have changed since then. One would expect to find "caste" and "social distinction" in the world since Satan established his place of business here on this earth, and it would not be surprising if the Saints bought some of his wares. But we confess that we can scarcely believe our ears when we hear "social caste," which this heading suggests, being defended and even taught among the Saints. No wonder a good brother one time prayed,

"O, Lord, there are here in L— big potatoes, middle potatoes, and little potatoes; and thou knowest that such things should not be among thy people."

The Pharisee who thanked God that he was not as other men are (see Luke 18: 11) was not justified before God; and doubtless would scarcely have entertained the sentiments contained in the good brother's prayer, that there should be no social distinction in the church. On the contrary he doubtless would have had much to say about the impious language of the uncouth old fogy; for such men usually judge by outward appearances rather than the inner meaning of the heart. He would never have thought to have remarked to his Pharisee friend, "That good old brother's prayer came from the heart, and clothed in his language, was quite expressive. We must judge people by their own standard and not ours."

There are many Pharisees in the church. A leading sister said to the writer one time, "You will have to choose your associates among the Saints if you preserve your dignity, for many of them are below our station." What a pity that our good sister could not have peeped into a little dining-room in Palestine and have suggested to the Master that he was lowering his social caste and dethroning his dignity by associating with publicans and sinners. The Savior, however, had something more noble in view than the preservation of his dignity. He doubtless knew that the word dignity as one of the Christian graces did not appear in the word of God anywhere. In contradistinction, however, humility is written on every page. That sister, no doubt, thought she was doing me a favor in thus advising me, but I must decline to accept her advice, for her idea is not the proper one. It is not the way God expects his children to deal with each other. We are all of one common family, and we should not look up to one and down on the other. All are trying to do the best they can, and if some are weaker and more sickly than we are, spiritually, then all the more they need our help, and more is the reason that we should not forsake them. We should not disdain to speak to sinners either, for Christ came to call sinners and not the righteous to repentance. If God should deal with us in that way, where would we appear? If we have the Christ-spirit, we should act like him, and labor as he labored.

To shun a brother who has fallen is to act the part of the Levite and not the good Samaritan. Simply to pass them by with a pleasant, Good-morning, or a cordial hand-shake for outward show, will not do; that is hypocrisy.

To exhibit outwardly what we do not feel in our hearts is deception. We deceive our brother, but worse than all, we deceive ourselves.

To converse very kindly with those whom some consider the lower class—small potatoes—when alone, and shun them in public, exhibits a weakness not belonging to great men. To pretend not to see them is a lie acted, and the word of God says, "Thou shalt not lie," nor make a lie either. (Rev. 21: 27.)

To talk with the brethren on most common occasions, and refuse to eat with them or to refuse to ask them to eat with you is to exalt yourself above them, and the Lord has said, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased." If that time does not come in this life it may come when the humble are bidden to the marriage supper of the Lamb and the exalted are shut out.

How very much is contained in the saying of the Savior, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Who are the meek? They that appoint themselves to a class above their brethren and sisters? They that choose the uppermost seats in the synagogue? They that pin the word caste to their garments and thank the Lord that they are not as other men? Surely they can not be considered the meek. Far from it!

How very true the statement of the apostle, "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all."—Col. 3: 10, 11. He who fails to believe the apostle must be considered among the disbelievers. We read that the lot of the disbelievers is not to be a pleasant one. (See Rev. 21: 8.) This language of Paul clearly makes no distinction, and clearly states that we are not reckoned by class or caste. It would be well for us to reflect and think upon this, as also the golden rule, and ask ourselves the question, Are we following that rule by holding our heads above our brethren and sisters?

I suppose it is impossible to entirely eradicate this evil from the church. Like offenses, it is impossible but that they come, "but woe unto him through whom they come." There will always in this life be those in the church who do wrong. It would be unreasonable to expect otherwise, but let us not defend the wrong. If there are thieves in the church, let us not defend stealing. If there are liars in the church, let us not defend lying. If there are those in the church who swear, let us not defend profanity. So, also, if there are those of the church who are heady and high-minded, let us not condone the evil, much less advise and teach it. If there must be distinction and caste in the church, let it be made according to principles of righteousness and godliness, and not according to race, color, or position, nor yet according to wealth nor education, much less according to social caste.

According to the principles of the gospel the church is compelled to be catholic, i. e., universal; for God has made of one blood all nations of men, and "in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." And, likewise, has declared that "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations" and has also sent forth his angel "with the everlasting gospel to be preached unto every nation and kindred and tongue and people." Then, as upon the continents and islands of the sea the gospel wins its way, and men of every land and clime accept it, let us treat them as brothers in deed and in truth, neither making them our servants, however willing they may be to serve us, nor exercising priestcraft over them. A good sister of olive hue was heard to remark one time to a group, who with tears in their eyes were discussing the pride of the white man, "We are not even treated so well as a dog, for we are not allowed to eat at their table, but the dogs may eat of the bones from his master's fingers." Such men I surmise might compel his brethren to fear him, but they would never love him but superficially.

With what appreciation we read of the President of a people who has declared "that all men are created equal," inviting to dinner Booker T. Washington, the "grand old colored man." How one's soul enlarges, as he reads of such great men setting the example for others. How much like the Christ-spirit, and yet, they know nothing, perhaps, of the fullness of the gospel. Shall we who know it, appear behind such men in judgment? We may rest assured that God will not hold us guiltless for such a breach of his law, nor will he let them go unrewarded.

Consider such leading men as Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, and William McKinley, who stood at the very acme of fame. And why? Not alone for their talents, but because of their humility and total absence of class or color. When William McKinley stepped aside from the procession one time, and shook hands with a simple, good-hearted farmer, whom he saw was anxious to greet him, it was published in every paper in the land as the act of a great and good man, one who condescended to men of low estate.

When the foundation of our government was being laid by "men whom God had raised up and inspired" for that purpose, I think it was Andrew Jackson, if I have read aright, who fought to the bitter end an effort to endow the President of the United States with some high flowing title and would admit of nothing but the simple title "President." He was no believer in the patting-on-the-back theory. He was inspired of God to assist in laying the foundation of our government. In after years, still following the inspiration God had implanted in his heart, we see him leaving his hoe and riding on mule back unaccompanied to the White House to take the oath of office of President of the United States, the land of the free and asylum of the oppressed. It was said of him that if his heart had been turned inside out there would not have been found a blemish on it. How gratifying to read of such men! It can rightly be said of them, "They were truly great." Look at the great inventor, Mr. Edison, informal and unassuming. How our heart beats with appreciation to read how he throws completely to the wind all social buffoonery, notwithstanding the entreaties of his wife, and simply acts a man. We often think that those who cling so closely to social caste are in need of that article to recommend them; for should they throw that away they would suffer much loss. The greatest men the world has ever known—leaders—men whom all the people love, have been men who cut themselves completely loose from pride and his twin brother, caste.

How good it is to think the thoughts of good men as they think them; to stand in their shoes; to see through their eyes, even though we know a little more grammar than they, or our expressions are a little more elegant. Perhaps of righteousness we know not so much, and our clothing, though of later style, is not more acceptable to God. Shall we then exalt ourselves above them? If we do, we do so to our everlasting hurt.

We are also persuaded that many a colored brother who, forbidden to eat at the white man's table, though not forbidden at the Lord's, could give his white brother many a useful lesson in trust and confidence in God, and put him to shame in meekness. Who is man that would refuse to eat with publicans and sinners whom the Master refused not at his table? (Matt. 9: 10, 11.) We would not be surprised that there are many who, if Jesus came to-day, and conducted himself as anciently, would feel much above him and criticise him in many things; and that, too, among the Saints.

Our worthy president, whom God chose in these last days to bring about his strange work, exhibited the Christ idea when he said, if we remember it rightly, "With me one man is as good as another, if he behaves himself as well, and that, too, without regard to race, color, or official distinction." And his son following in his footsteps said, "I believe I am approachable to every man in the church."

While it is good to read of great men, yet Jesus is our only example. In him we see nothing of social caste, nothing of race prejudice, and nothing of color hatred. The Pharisees said to him, "Thou regardest not the person of men." If we believe in Christ, let us follow in his footsteps; and as said by Jacob in the Book of Mormon, "be familiar with all men" (2: 9). Not in a hypocritical sort of way, by appearing so outwardly while in our hearts we do not consent, but let us be a brother in the church as truly as a brother in the family. By reading the contexts in Jacob, second chapter, referred to above, we see that unfamiliarity is an outgrowth of pride, which is evidently true. While caste may be termed his twin brother.

There are many kinds of pride, and perhaps in all its phases, is the greatest sin of the age. Few people are free from it; while not proud in one way they are in another.

We have heard, among the tradition of the elders, that Bro. Joseph was one time asked "if he thought it possible for the church to be again wrecked on the rock of polygamy?" and he replied, "No, but there is danger of it being wrecked on the rock of pride." Perhaps no kind of pride would sooner wreck the church than social pride or racial pride, sometimes called "caste" as a kind of sugar-coating.

Seven or more times in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the Lord has said to us in latter days, "Beware of pride." I know of no commandment in the book that is repeated so many times. In one place it says, "Beware of pride lest ye become as the Nephites of old." (D. C. 38: 9.) And yet, with all their pride, with all their haughtiness, we do not remember of having read that they became so bad that a Nephite would not eat with a Lamanite, if he were a believer. On the other hand they were most anxious to favor and associate with their darker skinned brethren when they repented. On one occasion Ammon became servant to the Lamanite king, Lamoni, that he might teach him the truth.

Latter Day Saints are supposed to be either of the blood of Ephraim or Manasseh. How the heart of our illustrious forefather, Joseph, would be pained to see how his boys treat each other many times when there appears to neither cause nor reason for their dissimulation.

Let us consider the greatness of God, and then see whether or not one man has wherewith to lord it over his brother. Consider a mind capable of creating this world and every other, and set them in their courses, and by his incomprehensible power hold them in their proper places. He created the stars and gave them their luster. He created animals and birds and fishes, and gave them powers of locomotion. He created the flowers and gave them their fragrance and beauty. All, all things, both to gladden the heart and please the eye, were made by him for his glory. As compared with God what are we? We can not even make a blade of grass. We can not feed, clothe, or shelter ourselves without using the things God has made. Independent of God we can do nothing. Indeed, independent of him, we could not exist. Shall we, who are so insignificant, exalt ourselves above the work of his hands? Rather, should we admire the flowers which faithfully observe the law which God has given them. Or the animal creation, or the earth, or the planets, all, all obey completely without the least reservation their Master.

“Alas! for the thoughts of man,
Alas! for his haughty pride,
Alas! that we with an evil tongue
Should our brother man deride.”

Consider again one so great, and yet he grants to all, however small, the privilege to call upon his name. He sees our sorrows, and knows our cares, and will regard the cry of the poor and oppressed as they cry out against their brother of caste, for he says, “For I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons.” —D. C. 38: 4. “In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.” Shall we then make a distinction among those whom God accepts? Shall we call common or unclean that which God has cleansed, as Peter thought once to do? (Acts 11: 8, 9.) If we do, we do it to our shame, and have much need to repent and humble ourselves before the great Creator of all men.

Notwithstanding Peter had been told that he must not call common or unclean that which God had cleansed, yet we find him a few years afterward, eating with the Gentiles; but when a committee sent by St. James, who was the president of the church, called at that time, he withdrew and separated himself from his brethren of the Gentiles, fearing no doubt to lose his caste. Paul said of this event, “But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to his face, because he was to be blamed.” And when “the other Jews dissembled likewise with him, inasmuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.” Paul writes, “But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the gospel,” he reproved “Peter before them all.” (Gal. 2: 11-14.)

It seems from this foregoing scripture that the Latter Day Saints are not alone in this mistake. It is no new sin. But it appears that there is need of Christ to appear again to break down the middle wall of partition, or else there is need of our observing the old commandment.

Why, in the church, do some desire to separate themselves into an upper class? Is it for the praise of the brethren? If that be the object, it is the wrong way to accomplish it. Why then is it done? Evidently for the praise of the world. For one sister said to another, as they were talking to some whom she considered the lower class, when she saw some of the world's great ones approaching, “Come, we must be going, or we will lose our caste if we are caught talking with these people on the street.” But it is a positive sin to seek the praise of the world. One of the first men of the church was reproved of the Lord one time for that very sin. It was said to Martin Harris, “Let him repent of his sins for he seeketh the praise of the world.”—D. C. 58: 8.

Some one has said, “I only desire the praise of men that I may use it to the glory of God.” But that won't do. That is trying to climb up some other way and avoid the commandment of God. One commandment can not be mended by breaking another. To seek the praise of men to glorify God with, is probably not very acceptable to God, as he cares nothing for second-hand praise. Besides it exhibits a lack of confidence in God and seeks the aid of man instead. Jesus said, “I receive not honor from men” (John 5: 41), neither should his servants seek honor or praise of men, but kindly and truly be a brother to all the brethren, to all the household of God, with no thought of praise or honor but from God.

The idea of caste and social distinction for the praise of men, or to avoid their criticism, should be so repulsive to good Saints that they would flee from it as from an adder. Flee? no, not that, either. What then? they should so completely stamp it out, that it would be ashamed, if not afraid, to intrude again on the peace of the church.

But some may say that it does not exist in the church to any extent. That there is or was less of it among the Saints than in most other churches may be true, but there was enough of it a number of years ago to call forth the good old brother's prayer, and it has not, perhaps, decreased since. The writer knows one whole mission quite considerably affected by it, and more or less of it existing in two or three others. Probably the replies to this article will reveal the fact that there is much of it, and where we least expected.

One of the Presidency paid a very high tribute to the Quorum of Twelve one time when he said, "Every one of those men is entirely fearless before men as to the results of their action." That is as it should be with all the servants of God. Fearless before the scorn of men; fearless before the criticisms of the church; but in righteousness, serving God with humility and brotherly kindness to all, and in honor preferring one another.

CHRISTIAN CHARITY (?)

A little while ago while scanning the pages of The Christian Herald, of New York, issue of April 16, page 332, I noticed the following brief article:

THE MORMON WOLF AT THE DOOR.

Although there is no "Mormon Question" under public discussion at the present time, it must not be taken that Mormonism has received its quietus. Propagandists of the faith of Brigham Young and Joseph Smith are ceaselessly spreading their pernicious doctrines in many States and gathering in converts among the more ignorant, whom they dazzle and mislead with specious arguments and alluring promises. Many of their ablest workers are knocking at the doors of Christian churches and asking a hearing for their religious heresies, trusting to the weakness of human nature to bring them new adherents. Wherever they are admitted they sow the seeds of dissension and disruption. Many a church has found reason to bitterly regret its mistaken toleration of these insidious enemies, who only seek to destroy. In many towns and villages their propaganda work has resulted in the breaking up of homes and the abandonment of religious principles for the so-called "Latter Day" religion. Their pretense that Mormonism does not now include polygamy is a shallow deceit which was effectually exposed in the case of Roberts, their expelled congressman. The first advances of Mormon advocates should be firmly resisted. There is an old saying that, "he that supps with the Devil should have a long spoon," and it is the part of wisdom in this case to avoid the supping altogether.

As I said some few weeks hence, the great majority of Christian (?) people, and especially ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ, have not the knowledge to know or the honesty to acknowledge the great difference between the Brighamites and Josephites, and thus it is with the writer of the above criticism. In the first line he says that these people are wolves. (Methinks I can hear them barking at the doors of Christian churches and cottages and the pious mountebanks hold up their hands in holy horror for fear of being immediately devoured.) In my opinion it is far better to be wolves plain and simple than to be "wolves in sheep's clothing." But are the followers of Joseph Smith either? I hardly think that any man can truthfully say that such is true. It has not been my experience with the Josephites at any rate.

This venerable writer goes on to say that "Mormonism" has not received its quietus. Certainly not; and this is just what makes these Christian pretenders squirm and wriggle, sigh and protest, so piteously. He (or she as the case may be) says that they (the Mormons) gather in their converts from among the more ignorant. To this I will say that if the so-called "Mormons" as a rule are more ignorant than Christians (so-called), they should be pitied from the bottom of the heart. Yes, and these same awful people are knocking at the doors of Christian churches and asking a hearing for their religious heresies. Crime unpardonable, an act appalling before God and man! It is almost beyond my feeble comprehension how these sinful, wretched (?) wolves can have the audacity to think of the poor innocent Christians (?) allowing themselves to be contaminated in such a heinous manner. It is an old adage of Catholicism that, "To reason is to doubt, and to doubt is to be lost." And this is about the attitude assumed by these I-am-holier-than-thou people. They sit with open-mouthed wonder and awe and, like the alligator, everything that enters therein is swallowed with a gulp. It was for this reason that I was compelled to withdraw from the spacious fold of Methodism, simply that the church shuns all honest investigation and research and endeavors to keep their members strictly within the narrow limits of their barren pasture. And it has always been my aim to steer clear of everything that withholds from me the heaven-born right to search for truth, wherever it may be found. One of old exclaimed, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." And the charge of home breaking and abandonment of religious principles is mere twaddle—slush!

It seems that the extent of these Christians' knowledge of "Mormonism" is polygamy, and ever and anon we hear a weird shriek of "Polygamy!" and the still more ignorant take up the dreadful wail, and the only reply is the wailing echo of their piteous cry. That Roberts was a bigamist I do not doubt; but was he not also a Brighamite? The last dig that these poor lacerated "Mormons" get is to be christened "devils" and our Christian friends warn us against supping with them altogether. Perhaps such nonsense may affect the "more ignorant" of Christian professors, but to any one who knows the facts of the case it is too silly and absurd to cause any uneasiness in the least. In short, it shows what spirit the professed followers of that meek and lowly man, Jesus of Nazareth, possess and show toward their fellow brothers and sisters.

Christians can not understand how Joseph Smith could have seen and done what he did do; but when they read of things far more wonderful and seemingly impossible in the Bible, why, they have no difficulty in believing this. If God is always the same I can see no reason why he could not manifest himself to and through Joseph Smith as well as Moses, Elijah, or Joshua.

A VISION.

I beheld that we were in a very large building in which was gathered a very large assembly of people and we were in a very happy state, all rejoicing together.

Now we were informed by an angel that the earth was to be purified by fire. We were invited to look out of the windows and we could see; and we did look out of the windows and the earth was covered with a very thick fog, only instead of it being the usual color of fog it was of a very bright pink. This pink color portrayed to our minds the intense heat that the earth was being cleansed with. We felt a little fear and the angels said, Be not afraid, it will not hurt you now.

We were informed by the angels that the house we were in was to be purified by fire, and that some of the material that had been put into the house by his servants was not pleasing to God, and the house would have to be purified before it would be acceptable unto him.

All eyes were turned upward toward the ceiling and walls, and we saw the parts that were not acceptable to God consumed by the fire; and we could see portions of the ceiling and walls fall down, charred and burned as charcoal. There came a fear on us, and the angels were able to see it so they said, Be not afraid, it will not hurt you now; for it is the house being purified. So after the house was purified the angels came to us again and said, The material is in the house to repair the building, and instructed us to go to the east side of the room, and we went, and all along on the floor was what seemed to be boards, very wide and of great length. There was a thought in our minds, how can we raise them so high to put them into their places. So we stooped to pick one of them up, and to our surprise it raised as we did, though we did not seem to be lifting any, and it floated in our hands, until we came close to where we wanted to put it up over our heads, and then it left our hands and continued upward until it came to the place for which it was intended and entered therein and was a perfect fit. So we continued until all was repaired. Then the house became white and was accepted by God.

Now we thought the work of purifying was over, so I went off to a room in a southwesterly direction from where we had been all this time. I do not remember of going there but I must have gone, for an angel came to me and said the inmates of the building were to be purified. I felt uneasy lest I should not be able to stand. The angel gave me no consolation. He did not say, Be not afraid, it will not hurt you now, as they had said before. We went out of the room through the door, which was on the west side of the room. As we went out, we entered another room which was very large, one which was full of Indians; and as we passed along these Indians came running after us, as if we had something they wanted, but we did not have anything in our hands.

We came to the room that we were in at first and walked along near the middle of the room, and there we stopped. The angel then said to me, You go over to the east side of the room and you will there find what you will have to do. So I left him and went to the east side of the room, and there on the floor I saw two spades. I picked them up and went back to the angel and stood by him. Just opposite of the angel stood a man who, I was made to understand, was Joseph Smith the Martyr, and between the angel and Bro. Joseph was a spring of clear water. I stepped forward to the spring and laid the two spades on the water in the form of a cross. I went to Bro. Joseph and bowed to him and said, I am glad that you have made known to me my duty. He now bowed to us as a conclusion of our conversation, and thus the vision ended.

A PLAIN TALK.

It is a sad thing for any person or society to establish the reputation of being quarrelsome or uncharitable. Variances or grievances are many. The causes may be real or imaginary, it makes but little difference which. Results are the same to the individual or the branch. Both are made to suffer thereby.

First, the same to individuals. They, the variances, tend to destroy spirituality. They may not cut off all Scripture reading, prayer, religious conversation, or attendance of religious services. The parties at variance may vigorously defend their doctrinal beliefs and be willing to even die as martyrs for their faith, but nevertheless the price paid for their variances is very high; viz., the loss of spirituality, or, in other words, the loss of the Spirit.

If we have reason to value any possession it is spirituality. If we are given the choice of parting with either our earthly possessions or our spirituality it is far better to part with the former. If need be it would be far wiser to separate from all earthly associations and friendships, even parents, children, and wife, than to lose the approving Spirit. This is the thought running through the hymn,

"Jesus, I my cross have taken
All to leave and follow thee."

Better far to be a penniless exile than to deny the faith and lose the Spirit.

We might go further with this thought and say that no sacrifice can be so great as the loss of spirituality. Given the choice between the deprivation of health and the five senses on the one hand, or spirituality on the other hand: which would you choose? Paul would answer thus: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature [man included] shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ."—Romans 8: 35-39. What a contrast between such a spirit and that manifested by parties to the average church quarrel!

"But there are reasons for my grievances." Yes. But will God accept them and justify you at his judgment bar? You have already lost his spirit which is a testimony of his disapproval of your course. Whose fault do you say it is? Will God withdraw his Spirit from you because of another's wrongs? Stop and think of this. Your answer is, "No"! Then you have done wrong.

Another question: Can two brethren quarrel when both have the Spirit? Hardly. They may differ, reason sharply, then make up and agree or agree to disagree, but the hatchets lie buried all the while. They don't strike one another. Something of this kind was seen at our last General Conference. Strong men took issue. Each stood for his convictions. There was intellectual warmth in the debate but when the whole church by delegate vote acted as a court of arbitration their uplifted hands for ever settled the differences. It would have been otherwise if the Spirit had not ruled in the hearts of these good men.

Why do not the same results always follow in our local church relations? The reason is apparent. Some one has lost the Spirit by wrong-doing and the trouble continues for the same reason.

Second, The same is true of the branch. It is a great loser by individual quarrels. When one member of our physical bodies is dislocated or diseased the entire body suffers as a result. So in the church. This is true both subjectively and objectively. The brethren not involved in the grievances are pained to see others at variance with each other. Thus the innocent are made to suffer for the wrongs of others.

Not the least of their sufferings is the reputation that quarrelsome members make for the church among the world's people. Outsiders do not judge us by our best members so much as by the least worthy. Of course it is not a fair judgment, but it prevails just the same, and the peaceable members of the family are made to pass through a kind of inquisition all the while as a consequence.

Lookers on see the spirit manifested by individual lives and draw their conclusions accordingly. Hence Saints should become the "light of the world" and "the salt of the earth;" that is, their influence should be diffusive for good. It should be an ever active principle. A thing of life. To be such they must be "living epistles," "lively stones;" in other words, the gospel in action.

A true Saint is like a magnet. He attracts others to himself and the church. "Like begets like" is not only true physiologically and psychologically, but socially. In saying this I am aware that some natures are so constituted that they repel rather than attract us. We hardly know why. They exhibit to us unlovable qualities and produce a sense of unlikeness. Hence we naturally shun such and seek others' society. So do they for the same reason, it may be. This may do outside the church of God, but must be guarded against in the church.

Saints are required to be one; that is, one in purpose, spirit, doctrine, and effort. They are brethren of one family, partakers of one nature, aiming to reach the same high standard of excellence. We must cultivate toward each other kind feelings. We need to make allowance for each other, and exercise great charity in judging one another, for the church is made up of people of every sort of disposition. Some have been well born, others ill born. Some have had every advantage of education and refinement. Others have not only been deprived of those advantages in youth and manhood, but have been surrounded with ignorance and moral degradation all their days. By hereditary laws some have received tendencies toward an upward grade of life along some special lines that from the first distinguish them among their associates. Others by the same laws come into this world with over-mastering tendencies and tastes for evil.

All these widely different characters may come into the church. They constitute a medley of humanity like the mixture of races in this country. They come into the household of God to stay. They have conformed to the laws of adoption and been made sons and daughters, and so are our brothers and sisters in the Lord. In experience they are children. In character they are undeveloped. In appearance they are uncouth. Etiquette they know little of. Can't even spell it. They like great blocks of granite split out of the mountain ledge are in the rough, and have many angular sides. To make these natures symmetrical and well rounded, much time and careful chiselling are necessary. To change rough granite into a perfect statue is not the work of a minute. He who places his order with an artist knows that he must give him ample time to complete his work.

My brethren! Let us use a little common sense and good judgment in relation to making perfect men and women out of even the average of humanity. Let us never forget that the great Master, though he be all-wise, can not unduly hasten this work of character formation, lest he like the sculptors shall spoil his work. Yes, there is a time-element necessarily connected with the process of changing rough specimens into symmetrical proportions.

God has undertaken to do it and will not fail. If he can tolerate and fellowship and love such creatures enough to dwell in their hearts by his Spirit all the while, what are we that we should slight, snub, disfellowship, and grudge against them just because they do not come up to our standard of excellence and pass muster in our review? Who made thee a judge and a divider of thy fellows? Who gave thee the right to cordially extend thy hand and sympathies to the one and to withhold them from the other.

No doubt time will work greater changes in some of these rough specimens than in you. So great will be the contrast between their improvement and ours in the end that we may feel a sense of shame because of lack of appreciation of them while the transition of character was going on to its completion.

God can receive very rough specimens of humanity because he has plenty of time and instrumentalities for perfecting his work.

We are told that "there is no respect of persons with God." If there is with us it is because we are living on a lower plane.

We are not to forget that this life is formative, probationary, disciplinary, and hence just the thing for fallen man, so that he may if he will take heed to law, pass through the necessary changes and stages for the better, and work out his own salvation; but if he will not observe the conditions and becomes rebellious, then comes in divine displeasure, afflictive providences and many serious experiences in consequence of his rebellion.

If he will not come to time it may be necessary for his brethren to call him to account and discipline him. If this is not successful he may be put back, rejected, and sent to the prison-house for correction and reformatory training.

God has plenty of time to complete his work. He is not in a nervous hurry. Many plagues brought a stubborn Pharaoh to consent to say yes. Forty years in the wilderness cured the Israelites of their idolatry.

I can not close without saying that in our early years we are likely to be harsh, hasty, hot-headed, uncharitable, earnest advocates of the law and the enforcement of its penalties. Later on our pulse lowers, our dispositions become less fiery, our natures more mellow, and we exhibit and exercise the spirit of the gospel more than the letter of the law.

ANCESTRY OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN.

That the racial problem of the Western Hemisphere has now been practically solved is asserted by Charles Hallock, who contributes an article on the subject to The American Antiquarian (January-February). This solution, he says, clears up not only "the origin of the American Indigines (miscalled Indians), but approximately the antiquity of their progenitors whose ruined and silent cities, like those of Asia Minor, long since passed out of history, and whose massive pyramids, temples, and palaces vie with those of the Old World, and are inferentially not only coeval with them but closely related." Mr. Hallock believes that these ruined cities of Central America were built by immigrants from Korea, and that they were subsequently wrecked by great disturbances of the earth's crust. Their inhabitants scattered in every direction and became the ancestors of all the present Indian tribes, who are therefore degenerate descendants of a people far advanced in civilization. Says Mr. Hallock:

"It is believed that the progenitors of the ancestors of the Mexicans were an Asiatic colony from Korea, which was at that time tributary to the Chinese Empire, a fact which accounts for coincidence of dates in the first half of the sixth century, and this opinion is confirmed by Chinese manuscripts as well as by striking similarities of appearance, language, and customs and a proficiency in the arts and architecture. Their writing was in hieroglyphics exclusively, and this medium of communication is spread all over the continent. History shows that the Koreans migrated to escape tyranny, undertaking a sea voyage of nine weeks to the northeast. No matter who first peopled Central America, the Koreans certainly were in communication with America as far back as the second year of the dynasty of Tsin, Emperor of China, who declared war against Korea. Migrants were able to maintain the high civilization of their forebears as long as their basic relation and environment remained unchanged, a postulate which is abundantly attested by archæological evidence, as well as by the enduring testimony of the petroglyphs. But finally came those stupendous terrestrial dislocations, upheavals, emergencies, droughts, denudations, and associated dynamic phenomena, which punctuated the lapse of geological time and changed the contour of the continent. By the same great cataclysm which broke up the 'foundations of the great deep,' according to the Scripture, and inundated so large a part of the globe and its antediluvian fauna and flora, the fructifying rivers of Central America were engulfed, and the acequias, aqueducts, and irrigating canals were destroyed or rendered useless. Some disjointed records of this overwhelming catastrophe are inscribed upon pyramids, temple walls, monoliths, and porticos of those massive ruins which attest to their extinguished greatness, while oral traditions, next in historical value to the libraries which Cortez and his fanatical priests destroyed, have been transmitted down the centuries, even to Southwestern Indians of the present day. Drought, famine, malignant diseases, persistent internecine wars, and ultimate depopulation supervened, and after persistent efforts to maintain themselves on the home sites, the discomfited survivors scattered, even to far-off Alaska, and up the eastern slope of the continental ridge to the mouth of the Mackenzie River, leaving traces of their successive occupations all along the Pacific coast and the mid-continental route, not only in memorials of massive masonry and exquisite pottery, but in linguistic similarities, religious practices, mortuary rites, superstitions, social habits, oral traditions, and physical resemblances of a marked character. For many centuries large communities tarried in Mexico, New Mexico, and Arizona, sections of which were populous up to the arrival of Coronado in 1540; but finally aridity of the soil, caused in large part by forest denudation, frequent tidal waves, the deflection of surface waters into subterranean rock fissures, the merciless raids of the Spaniards, and internecine wars, scattered them over the lava beds and alkaline wastes of sage-brush and cactus, to eke out a precarious livelihood with their starveling flocks. The remnants ultimately betook themselves to the cliffs and mesas, which they fortified, and attempted to subsist on crops which they forced from scantily irrigated gardens on the arid plains below. This for a distressful period, and then northward again to more peaceful and fertile localities in Eastern Colorado, where melting snows from the uplifted continental divide afforded perennial moisture. Here they maintained a long-protracted status as agriculturists and shepherds, establishing thrifty towns and villages, of which a few remain to this day as 'pueblos.' Records of their vicissitudes and dire extremity are pecked upon many a neighboring rock—of the continued attacks and defenses, and how the cliff-dwellers were finally cut off by their enemies, and how few escaped.

"The advent of the Spaniards and their ruthless quest for gold broke into the bucolic life of the Pueblos. Many were exterminated, while others, harassed and impoverished, abandoned agriculture in despair and took to the chase for a livelihood. From that to semi-savagery the lapse was easy; a condition which was aggravated by the religious superstitions which they retained, involving human sacrifice, self-torture, immolation of war prisoners, and sundry barbarous ceremonies which date back to earliest times, and obtain even now in isolated parts of North America. The sun dance of the Plains Indians is a relic of the sun worship of Chichen-Itza and Peru, with its attendant cruelties. All the Indian tribes burned their captives on occasion—a survival of ancient rites. . . .

"Untold and uncalculated years it took for the Central American migration to reach the western verge of the Great Plains, which had emerged and grown to grass during the interval since it was the quaternary floor of the sea. For nearly four centuries their polyglot descendants, who were dubbed aborigines by European explorers, have been an ethnological puzzle to the world; but time seems to have solved the problem. The hypothesis of the reversion is easy. Their progenitors, like all pioneers, unquestionably took with them all necessary 'store clothes,' tools, seeds, mechanical appliances, and domestic utensils; but after they were isolated from the parent stock and base of supplies, they learned to substitute makeshifts for whatever was worn out or lost. Dresses of skins, furs, and plaited grasses replaced their home garments, and implements of stone, horn, bone, shell, and ivory took the place of their original tools of iron, bronze, and copper. Some of the more intelligent and energetic discovered mines of various ores, and worked them in a rude fashion for a while, like those at Lake Superior, but the industry was finally abandoned because it was easier and cheaper to use what was handiest. Metal ornaments, pottery, baskets, footgear, and woven fabrics were retained the longest, because they were indispensable. The manufacture of these was an art that could not be lost. Reversion is not necessarily a slow process. It depends largely upon the environment. Intercourse brightens intellect. Isolation clogs it, and will sometimes banish it. There are to-day among the sea islands of South Carolina the grandchildren of ante-bellum negroes whose inane articulations are unintelligible to any but their own kin—a lapse of less than half a century."

According to Mr. Hallock, the Indians may be divided into two great classes, the forest tribes and the hunting or horse tribes. Between these there speedily grew up enmity. The Chippewas may be taken as a typical example of the first class and the Sioux of the second, and the last great battle between these two was fought as recently as 1857. Mr. Hallock believes that the great series of Western mounds had their origin in these interminable wars between the sedentary woodsmen and the fierce plainsmen. Some are entrenchments, displaying "much military engineering skill," while others are "great tumuli, where hosts of the slain are buried." Others still were used for "sacrificial purposes, for dykes, as sites for temples and dwellings, as refuges from inundations, as amphitheatres for ball games, and for ornamental purposes, as in public parks and gardens of the present day. Many in the semblance of elephants, leopards, turtles, rats, snakes, deer, and the like were copied from the Aztec and Toltec gardens, and from others extant in the Zuni and Mohave country. They were reproduced just as we copy patterns from the Old World." Mr. Hallock thus agrees with the best modern authorities that there was no race of vanished "mound-builders," but that the mounds were the work of the immediate ancestors of the Indians of to-day. In conclusion, the writer asserts again that "every new archæological discovery adds to the analogues which go to make up testimony to establish the more than hypothetical origin of our American aborigines, and the close relations between their ancestors of Central America and the peoples of Egypt and Asia."

If it be true that a race far enough advanced in civilization to construct the cities whose ruins are the wonder of Central American travelers has degenerated into the wild Indian tribes of to-day, that fact is certainly provocative of thought. We are accustomed to assume that our descendants must advance in civilization no matter what their environment may be. After all, we can reassure ourselves by remembering that, according to this theory, the "aboriginal" races of this continent were Asiatics. Perhaps Caucasians would not have deteriorated under the same conditions!—Literary Digest, March 8, 1902.

An article which will be of great interest to Sunday-school workers is found in the Bible World for May. It is entitled, "The Place of Biblical Criticism in the Sunday-school," and is a symposium by eight able and well-qualified men in this line. The editor of the World also has an article on "The Historical Study of the Bible" in the same issue.

CAN CHRISTIANITY AND JUDAISM BE RECONCILED?

This question is put forward by Mr. Theodore F. Seward, secretary of the "Universal Golden Rule Brotherhood" and of the Hirsch Monument Fund, and author of several books on religious subjects, and he answers it with an emphatic affirmative. "It is not the perception of any single mind," he says, "but a truth that is dawning upon the consciousness of all enlightened minds, namely, that the principles of Christianity and the principles of Judaism are not antagonistic. They are in their essence identical and sympathetic. Ideal Christianity and ideal Judaism are one." This perception is characterized by Mr. Seward as a "great discovery." "Not, of course," comments the Springfield Republican, "that this has now been perceived for the first time, for there have been many to perceive the truth, from Jesus, who proclaimed his mission the fulfillment of the Hebrew religion, and from Paul and Peter, who both held that view according to their differing geniuses, down to Moses Mendelssohn and Heinrich Heine, Dean Stanley and Felix Adler. But Mr. Seward is right in saying that this is a discovery in the lines of religious thought to a very great body of thinkers, Christian as well as Jewish, and Jewish as well as Christian."

Judaism, declares Mr. Seward (in The Arena, April), has made the following contributions to the treasures of the world's thought and life:

1. Monotheism. "The Lord our God is one God."
2. Divine Fatherhood, or the supreme providence of God in human life.
3. Human brotherhood. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."
4. The Ten Commandments, embodying a perfect system of ethics.

This catalogue, says Mr. Seward, "shows at a glance the impossibility of any real antagonism between the Hebraic and Christian systems of thought and standards of life when rightly understood." He adds:

"A gulf of division has been created where no gulf existed. We are led to wonder how such an error could be perpetuated as it has been for nineteen hundred years. And the marvel becomes all the greater as we study anew the teachings of the Founder of Christianity in order to learn his own thought concerning the question. It is seen that he took the utmost pains to forestall such an error by distinctly stating that he 'came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it.' It is a common impression among Christians that the Golden Rule originated with Jesus. Yet in restating the injunction of Moses, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself,' in the words, 'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them,' he was careful to say, 'for this is the law and the prophets.'"

If it is true that "the Jew of nineteen centuries ago, by the materialistic conception of prophecy, made the mistake of expecting an external Messiah, a King of resistless power, who would gather the chosen people together and rule the nations of the earth," it is equally true that "after the third and fourth centuries the Christian leaders made a mistake as great" in creating the dogma of an ecclesiastical Messiah. Mr. Seward continues:

"The latter was no nearer to the true concept of a spiritual Messiahship than the former. Hence the word Christian, as now commonly applied, is a misnomer. The governments of so-called Christendom are not Christian; society is not Christian; business is not Christian; the organized churches are not Christian—if the life and teaching of the Founder of Christianity be accepted as the standard. There are many individual Christians in the churches, in the business world, in society; but the fundamental structure is not Christian in the true sense of that word.

"It thus comes to pass that now, at the beginning of the twentieth century, both Jews and Christians of the progressive order are reconstructing their systems of religious thought on the basis of one God, one Humanity, and one Law of Life, which is the eternal law of Love. Both Jews and Christians believe in a God who is the Supreme Creator and the Divine Father of the human race. They are studying the ways and methods of this Supreme Creator and Father in the light of scientific truth as manifested in its latest achievements."

The persistent division and mutual misunderstanding for nineteen centuries of two classes of people, holding the same fundamental religious principles, are regarded by Mr. Seward as "the most astounding facts in history." He declares:

"Both have done noble work for humanity, in literature, in philosophy, in art, in ever-widening philanthropy; yet each remained practically oblivious to the achievements of the other. There could be but one end to such a history. The time would surely come when a mutual awakening would occur. The hidden bond of sympathy would be discovered, each would recognize the value of the other's work, and the intellectual and spiritual force of both would be combined for the benefit of mankind.

"The signs are unmistakable that the hour for such a denouement is near. Words and acts of sympathy and comity between churches and synagogues are becoming common. A Presbyterian minister, writing on the subject, says: 'I have often spoken against the anti-Jewish spirit. We are more indebted to them than to any other race. Jesus said, "Salvation is of the Jews."' A Christian publishing house is bringing out at vast expense a Jewish encyclopedia, which will not only have a great historic value but will serve as a bond of mutual respect between the Jew and the Christian. . . .

"It is beyond question that the century-old antagonism between Christianity and Judaism can not exist in the atmosphere of the modern spirit."

"The whole article of Mr. Seward," declares the Springfield Republican, "is worthy of reading for that clear humanitarian insight which belongs to him as a lover of his kind who is always advancing his thought to reach the best things said and felt and divined."

Mr. Seward's plea for unity is greeted in a sympathetic spirit by The Jewish Messenger (New York), which affirms that it has "steadily advocated" much of the doctrine that he preaches. The Jewish Exponent (Philadelphia), on the other hand, thinks that he "has evidently been led astray by the ill-considered fulminations which from time to time emanate from Jewish writers and speakers." It continues:

"Mr. Seward means well and writes in a tolerant spirit apparently with the idea of minimizing differences and emphasizing points of agreement. But he completely ignores the great and fundamental disagreements in the forms of religion, as those disagreements are manifested in the doctrines and dogmas of the denominations which amongst Jews and Christians are numerically the largest and the most important. No Jew can accept the divinity of Jesus and remain a Jew, and no Christian can deny that divinity and remain a Christian. This is a fact that has not changed and will not change, and it is therefore idle to speak of unity or to reason that it is either possible or probable."—Literary Digest, April 26, 1902.

Original Poetry.

Let me rest my weary soul,
By thy precious blood made whole;
Let me see thy blessed face
And be hid from sin in grace.

Help me to walk from day to day
In the bright and "narrow way,"
In the truth direct from God,
And in concord with his word.

Do thou help me, Lord, I pray,
An unkind word ne'er to say;
Give me a power to understand,
To be of use within thy hand.

That through thy word and grace alone
I may bring others to thy throne;
O, blessed Lord, give me the power
To live for thee from hour to hour.

Lord, this my aim shall ever be,
To tell the good news brought to me,
And of a Savior's saving love,
Of the Father, who is above.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Beyond the shadows of the present hour,
Beyond the deepening gloom,
Past storms that in the distance darkly lower,
Past all life's fleeting bloom,
With steadfast eyes that do not dread disaster,
With heart uncrushed by care,
I follow trustfully the blessed Master
Whose cross I daily share."

Let the Bairnies Play.

Oh! let the bairnies play themsel's,
I like to hear their din,
I like to hear each restless foot
Come trippin' oot and in;
I like to see each face sae bricht,
And each wee heart sae gay;
They mind me o' my ain young days—
Oh! let the bairnies play.

Oh! dinna check their sinless mirth,
Or mak' them dull and wae
Wi' gloomy looks or cankered words,
But let the bairnies play.
Auld douce wise folks should ne'er forget
They ance were young as they,
As fu' o' fun and mischief, too—
Then let the bairnies play.

And never try to set a heid,
Wi' auld age grim and gray,
Upon a wee saft snawy neck—
No! let the bairnies play.
For, oh! there's mony a weary nicht
And mony a waeful day
Before them, if God spare their lives—
Sae let the bairnies play.

Daughters of Zion Annual Meeting.

The Daughters of Zion met in the basement of the Saints' church at Lamoni at nine a. m. on Friday, April 11.

The meeting was opened with singing the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds." Prayer was offered by Sr. Walker.

The President, Sr. E. Hulmes, presided over the meeting, assisted by Sr. B. C. Smith, of the Advisory Board.

The President presented a report which will be given in full in the Ensign and Autumn Leaves.

The report of the recording secretary was read. This report showed a total membership of seven hundred four.

The report of the corresponding secretary, Sr. H. H. Robinson, was read and showed faithful work during the year in this office. In this report, as in the President's, attention was called to the great need of good literature for free distribution.

A report from the treasurer, Sr. Anna Murphy, was read, also an itemized report of money expended by the President.

The treasurer's report showed balance on hand at last report, $113; total receipts during the year, $35.13; total expenditures during the year, $135.93; balance on hand, $12.30.

By motion these financial reports were referred to an auditing committee. Those appointed on this committee were Srs. Hattie R. Griffiths, Eveline Burgess, and Margaret S. Wright.

Reports were read from the following local societies: Balmain, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia; San Francisco, California; Garland Alabama; Denver, Colorado; Wheeling, West Virginia; Inman, Nebraska; Nebraska City, Nebraska; First Kansas City, Missouri; Second Kansas City, Missouri; Independence, Missouri; Lamoni, Iowa.

An interesting report was read from the Gleaner's Society, the auxiliary society of young ladies at Independence, Missouri. They report remodeling old garments, helping to look after the needy, caring for the sick, watching with the dead, and visiting strangers coming among them. In their meetings while they work one of their number reads to them the book, "Fireside Talks With Our Girls," having furnished their readings for some time past. They report having given to the needy one hundred eleven garments during the past six months.

By motion the matter of considering the revision of the constitution was taken up.

A motion prevailed that a committee of three be appointed by the chair to revise the constitution.

Srs. Walker, Stebbins, and Murphy were appointed on this committee.

A question was asked as to how many were necessary to form a local society. The president said that no number has been stated, and where there are enough who are interested to act as officers a society can be organized.

A resolution was adopted providing that hereafter, where local societies have become disorganized, members of such societies shall be reported with the scattered members, and their names not be dropped from the list, unless so requested.

The report of the auditing committee was received, as follows:

We your auditing committee beg leave to report, we have examined the accounts placed in our hands and find them correct. We find receipts for all moneys expended. Hattie R. Griffiths. Margaret S. Wright. Eveline Burgess.

By motion the report of the auditing committee was adopted. It was moved that a vote of thanks be given to all who so kindly assisted in the program of the general society on the evening of April 10, including the address, the music, ushering, etc. This carried unanimously.

Thanks were also voted to the Lamoni Society for the reception tendered by them to the visiting Daughters and those interested in their work.

After a motion that we proceed to the election of officers it was moved to sustain the present advisory board. The vote was unanimous in favor of this motion.

Sr. Stebbins was sustained as recording secretary.

It was moved to sustain our present treasurer.

After a statement by Sr. Murphy concerning her health and the improbability of her being in Independence during a part of the year, a substitute prevailed by which Sr. Mary A. Clark, of Independence, was elected treasurer for the coming year.

An announcement was made by Sr. Mina Cook Hart concerning the gymnasium conducted by her in the interest of the work of the Lamoni Daughters of Zion, and invitation was given the visiting sisters to come and observe the work.

The meeting adjourned subject to the call of the president.

Dismissal prayer was offered by Sr. Stebbins.

A meeting having been announced for Tuesday, April 15, the Daughters of Zion met at the home of Sr. Stebbins at ten a. m. Sr. M. E. Hulmes was in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Sr. Griffiths.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The committee on revision of the constitution reported, recommending numerous changes.

By motion the recommendations of the committee were adopted.

A motion prevailed leaving with the advisory board the matter of affiliation with the National Congress of Mothers.

The meeting adjourned with closing prayer by Sr. M. Walker.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

(Concluded.)

Several items of business of minor importance were transacted, others of more or less importance were transacted, some of which we note. An amendment to the Constitution and By-Laws was passed permitting districts whose total enrollment did not exceed four hundred to resolve their delegate conventions into so-called "mass meetings" and transact the business of the convention without the necessity of the delegate vote or without restricting the voting to delegates. Thus, when the convention is called to order, the regularly appointed delegates may vote to suspend the delegate system for the convention and permit all to take part in the business of the convention. This will remove the disadvantage of being compelled to follow the delegate system throughout the convention when there are scarcely enough delegates present to do the work. It often happens that in the smaller districts there are not enough regularly appointed delegates to do business at all. While at the same time there may be many members of the schools present who could and would gladly assist to make the convention a success, but who for some reason were not appointed delegates, it often happens that a school is not entitled to more than two or three delegate votes while there are several times that many of the members present at the convention, thus it is that at times the business is of a necessity done by the few while the many sit as spectators only. Large districts or those whose enrollment exceeds four hundred are not affected by this provision. But notice is especially called to the fact that this does not in any way remove the necessity of the several schools appointing their delegates to the district convention. There must be delegates appointed to properly resolve the convention into a "mass meeting."

REVISING COMMITTEE.

The committee appointed to revise the manuscript of the Gospel Quarterlies for the ensuing year consists of Brn. R. S. Salyards, Duncan Campbell, and John Smith. It will be remembered that this "revising committee" is appointed from year to year for the purpose of revising or correcting the manuscript of the Quarterly "as to doctrinal and historical points only." It is intended as a precaution against possible error in historical matter or doctrinal points. It is intended that the lessons put out by the General Sunday-school Association shall have passed the scrutiny of not only the editor, whose work for the past ten years has won the confidence of the Sunday-school workers, but also of the three elders above-named whose knowledge of the doctrines of the church is unquestioned. Thus we feel that while it is, of course, possible for error to creep in, it is not at all probable that it will. I think we may well repose complete confidence in the work or matter there presented. May God add his blessing and help the many teachers to teach well the many beautiful truths found in the lessons as we canvass them from week to week.

Of the amount on hand in the treasury, five hundred dollars were donated to the general surplus fund of the church, and a like amount to the indebtedness of Graceland College. It would appear that the association is able to not only carry on its own financial matters, but to help on in the good work of the church. These large surpluses in the treasury arise not from collections from the several districts as many would suppose, but from the profit of issuing the Gospel Quarterly. The General Association has never made but one call upon the districts for financial aid and that was in the early days of its existence. Since the establishment of the Quarterly there has never been any necessity for a collection, hence none has ever been made. Nor do we expect that we will ever be under the necessity of making a call for financial aid unless the Quarterly for some reason should be dispensed with. The price of the Quarterlies has been reduced twenty per cent the present year, which will of course materially affect the gross income of the association, but will not yet of itself deplete the treasury. We are on a safe financial footing and hope to remain there.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MISSIONARY.

The question of a Sunday-school missionary was again considered and provision was made that the General Superintendent should be sustained by the association, and that as soon as he could so arrange, he devote his entire time to the work of the office and do as much missionary work as time would admit. It will not be possible to enter the work before the latter part of the year, but we will do all that can be done after that time. But even then it will not be possible to be in the field all of the time. The work of the office requires considerable time and can not be neglected for any great length of time. Nor is it of such a character that it can be carried on while the Superintendent is in the field. We shall be pleased to hear from persons in localities or districts where work is needed. It may be that we can arrange to reach your field sometime during the year. Let us hear from you and we will do the best we can in the matter.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEXT-BOOKS.

A petition was received from a district asking for a change from Quarterlies to a text-book for use in the Sunday-school. The matter was taken up and a resolution was presented that as soon as practicable that text-books should be prepared to take the place of the Quarterlies as now issued. This matter seemed to be an entirely new thought to some, and a change of that kind was of so much importance that the convention did not feel ready to consider or pass upon the question at that time. It was accordingly deferred till the next General Convention for consideration. There will, no doubt, be some articles printed during the year both for and against the proposed change. Or, at least, the convention so appointed.

REPORT FROM THE ISLANDS.

Sr. J. W. Peterson, who has recently returned from the South Sea Islands, gave a full verbal report of the work there, the condition of the people, their habits, customs, characteristics, etc. The lesson was one of deep interest to all present, full of feeling and one that will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to hear it. She related many circumstances that plainly illustrated the peculiar simplicity of the people, their implicit faith in God and his promises, and their susceptibility to the contaminating influences of the so-called more highly civilized people, the whites. The Saints of America could profitably consider some of the lessons learned from the people of that far-off mission. And while we have what we flatter ourselves to be the best of all that goes, and feel that we are the favored of an-all wise and loving Father, we are compelled to acknowledge that for simplicity of faith and confidence in God and in our genuine heart-felt devotion to him, we can not even approach the condition of the child-like native of the coral islands. God help us to learn the good lesson. Sr. Peterson's address occupied about one and one quarter hours, but seemed but a fraction of the time. We understand it will be published in full in the Ensign in time. You will do well to read and reflect.

THE GENERAL OFFICERS.

The officers of the General Association were sustained with the exception of Brn. Gates and Burgess who retired on account of other work.

The General Superintendent now enters upon his seventh year of service to the association and with prospects that were never brighter for a profitable year's work. The demand for work is great and we hope that the demand may be fairly well supplied. But it should not be thought that the General Superintendent can fill all the calls. The bulk of the work must of necessity be done by the local workers, or the district officers. But where we can assist or cooperate with you to an advantage in the work, we shall gladly do so.

The First Assistant Superintendent, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, continues at his former post of duty. And aside from being an all-round field worker, he is located in easy access to the publishing interests of the church, which is a very valuable factor in the work we have on hand. We have found in him a valuable adviser and would feel ungrateful did we not express our appreciation of his services.

The office of Second Assistant Superintendent was again placed in the far West, in the charge of Bro. A. Carmichael, of California. We bespeak for him your hearty support and cooperation, and welcome him to the council of the General Association.

Bro. David J. Krahl was continued in his services as General Secretary. His efficient services in that line were well appreciated and a unanimous vote for his continuance was a part of his reward for service well rendered.

Bro. John Smith will continue to "pay out money on order only" as heretofore. He will serve the association as General Treasurer for another year at least.

Sr. E. Etzenhouser, of Kansas City, will care for the library interests the ensuing year. The work before her is a great one and is yet in its infancy and therefore progress in that line is very difficult. But we have hopes that Sr. Etzenhouser will be able to carry the work to farther completion and utilize the foundation so well laid by our retiring librarian, Bro. Burgess. We bid her, too, a hearty welcome into the general work and solicit for her the generous support of all Sabbath-school workers.

OUR BEST CONVENTION.

With the evening session of Saturday, closed the tenth Gen-

Convention of the General Sunday-school Association. And considering all things, we have not passed through a better convention, or accomplished more good upon general lines, at any meeting of the association. The work was accomplished with as much dispatch as is consistent with thoroughness, and in a spirit of harmony and consideration. The Lord has been very kind to us and we should not forget to render our thanks to him for what he has done for us.

Our opportunities for the ensuing year are before us. Let us occupy as best we may. We can not afford to let the cause suffer on account of our neglect. The Master wants servants who work because they love to work; those who enter the service with glad hearts and willing hands. Shall we not with our added opportunities make the year now open upon us the best and most prosperous year that we have had? Prosperous, not in personal honor or fame, but in building up the cause of the Master. May the Lord add his blessing upon our every effort for good.

Letter Department.

LANSING, Michigan, May 5.

Editors Herald: To reach all who have written me inviting my services in a series of discourses, permit me to say through your columns that I am now flat on my back for the second time since April 4, having a siege of fever resulting from enlarged liver, according to medical opinion. But at this juncture I feel some better and hope to be out again soon.

I came to this city April 16, with wife and children, who came to visit her parents, Bro. and Sr. D. V. Kelley. Have addressed the Saints eight times on Bible subjects, and gave the Book of Mormon class two talks on American Archæology. The Saints here, though few in numbers, rent a hall for which they pay six dollars per month. They have regular services, Sunday-school, and Religio. Brethren Fish, Buckley, Kelley, and Dexter lead the van, and the efforts, involving sacrifice, are commendable. We had appointments at Hopkins for Saturday and Sunday last; but alas! I went to bed about ten o'clock Saturday. Bro. S. I. Smith, who sent money to pay my fare, and Bro. Fish who contributed for the same, have our sympathy in the disappointment. We hope all will be well in the end. We desire remembrance.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

GORDON, Alabama, May 4.

Editors Herald: Our family are the only Saints here and we have no preaching and seldom see any Saints. We have to meet with great prejudice, but hold to the faith and ask the prayers of the Saints. We have many things to be thankful for, and some severe trials. I have been under treatment by an eye specialist for more than a year, trying to regain my failing eyesight. I am some better, but if I ever see well again it will be a gift from Him from whom all good gifts come. Saints, pray for me, that if it be God's will my sight may be restored. May the Lord guide us.

Any of the elders passing this way will find a welcome with us. We live near the depot.

A. J. VICKREY.

ALDRIDGE, Montana, April 19.

Editors Herald: I am doing what I can to enlighten the people in the gospel plan of salvation; but it seems that they are so blinded in man-made religion and the pleasures of this world that they seem to be satisfied with those conditions as established in their creeds. Still I am convinced that many of them are honest and very often they are impressed by the word presented to them.

I have preached about twenty funeral sermons in the past three years, and I thank God that I have been the means in his hands to remove a great deal of prejudice.

The Church of England preacher, after he had received an answer to all of his questions in regard to our faith, thought it wisdom in our ministers to make none dissatisfied with his creed lest we would cause them to stumble, and they would eventually become infidels. I informed him that the Lord promised a knowledge to those who would do his will, and if they were without this knowledge it was evident that they had not complied with God's will; and if we were truly ministers for Christ we should be faithful in discharge of our duty, teaching them to observe all things that the Lord commanded them, so that they may know God's will and receive a knowledge that they are accepted of him, and when they receive this light they need not be afraid that they will be led into infidelity, except they will go willfully.

I felt sad when I heard that Brn. Short and Robinson had passed to the other side. I am glad they were ready. They have been faithful; their rewards are sure.

E. E. WILLIAMS.

PANTHER, Indian Territory, April.

Editors Herald: I am living here almost alone. Myself, wife, and one son belong to the church. This is a somewhat out-of-the-way place, but a splendid field in which to preach the everlasting gospel. There have been but two of the elders in this wide scope of country. I would be glad if some one would come and preach for us. If any should come this way please hunt me up. This is a new town. It is better known as Chance City. It is going to make one of the best coal mining towns in the territory. We have a very good farming and gardening country; good water, good range, very healthy, and a good chance for a company of Saints to start up in the coal mining business. There is plenty of coal land that can yet be leased. The coal is from five to seven and one half feet thick, lying nearly on a level.

I hope the time may soon come when we will all be gathered home to Zion, where we all can sing and praise the Lord together and rejoice in the holy One of Israel.

A. J. SHORES.

ESMOND, North Dakota, May 3.

Editors Herald: I am living about eight miles from Esmond, a new town, having moved here from Clifford, North Dakota. A union Sunday-school has been organized, and I have been asked to teach the senior class. The last lesson was about the pouring out of God's Spirit upon the Gentiles. I could not teach according to the lesson in the quarterly used, so presented my views, and was told by some that they had never heard the same ideas before. They did not know I was a Latter Day Saint.

I should like to hear from any of the brethren around here, that I may make new acquaintances. I should be thankful if some of the Saints would send me church literature to distribute, as I think there could be some good work done here.

FRED PERCHIE.

AVA, Missouri, May 4.

Editors Herald: Will you say to all the Saints who have contributed to help the drouth-stricken Saints of Southern Missouri, that the Saints here extend their thanks to all such. I am here in the worst part of the district, and find things worse than I at first supposed. But the help came in good time. Also, the seed sent by Bro. Graff was the best I have seen, and I have scattered it among just as many Saints as I could in order that they may get the seed.

The seed sent in by the State was very poor, and not enough to help much, as I learn it was only a peck of corn and a peck of potatoes and a few beans. So I am glad the Saints responded so we could help those Saints in need. I sent receipts to all those who sent money. If any did not get receipts notify me; I will see to it. There were a few names I was not sure I made out correctly.

HENRY SPARLING.

HARLANVILLE, Texas, April 18.

Editor Herald: I have been a member of the church six years, and it seems that every day I can see more plainly the necessity of living a more perfect life. I firmly believe that the day is near when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess the living God, and give an account for their work on earth, whether it be good or bad; and that the Father is now chastising and preparing us for that day.

There have been four deaths in our family since October: three children and my faithful father, who left us a dying testimony to the work. He was not punished very long with sickness, and the day before his death he sang, "God is marshalling his Army." He was both dutiful to his family and to his Maker, for which I am thankful. May the Lord help us in this trial and prepare us to meet him.

Our encouragement here among the outside is very poor but since conference was held here in February the Saints have formed a resolution to go ahead, laying aside worldly pleasure and try to gain the crown that awaits the final faithful. Now we have preaching and prayer-meeting every Sunday at a private house, and I feel that the Lord is as he was in olden days, that he will meet with few in number, and though humble their abode, he will stoop from his throne of glory and bless all who seek him. I ask the prayers of the Saints that we may continue.

Yours in the one faith,

LULA SPICER.

Conference Minutes.

Society Islands Mission.—Convened with the Tarona Branch, Papeete, April 6, 1902; was called to order by J. F. Burton at eight o'clock in the morning. J. F. Burton was chosen president of the conference, with Elder John Hawkins as vice-president. D. M. Pohemiti was chosen secretary with Turatahi as his assistant, and J. W. Gilbert as foreign secretary. The day was then devoted to the usual services. Elders J. W. Gilbert, John Hawkins, and Viriamu preached, and Metuaro and Alfred led the sacrament meeting.

Monday, eight a. m., conference convened for business, J. F. Burton in chair. After the minutes of previous session were read, the secretary read reports of elders. Of the missionaries and elders, J. F. Burton, preached 57 times, baptized 2; J. W. Gilbert, preached 52 times in Tahitian and 6 times in American, and baptized 6; John Hawkins, preached 51 times; Tapuni, preached 39 times, baptized 1; Tapu, preached 5 times; Kehauri, preached 18 times; Loui, preached 10 times; Tepava, preached 20 times, baptized 1; Metuaro, preached 19 times; Pori, preached 8 times; Vaiarea, preached 6 times, baptized 3; Metuaro, bishop, preached 26 times; Pohemiti, preached 13 times; Taneterau, 32 times, baptized 2; Teuiria, 46 times, baptized 1; Viriamu, 32 times; Putoa, 14 times; Pou, 29 times; Varoa, 34 times, baptized 1; Tepoaitu, 24 times; Taroi, 25 times; Rua, 22 times; Temarei, 28 times, baptized 1; Tehau, 30 times; Parepare, 25 times; Turatahi 22 times, baptized 1; Tematagihua, 23 times; Tuata, 20 times; Paeahi, 3 times; Tauruhua, 62 times; Hiti Temanava, 28 times; Tetaki, 20; Maetua, 20. Priests: Tane, preached 16 sermons, Mau-mea 15, Fariua 15, Tuhiri 70, Tagata 14. Teachers: Tautu, preached 6 sermons, Faorea 7, Hiriga 3. Deacons: Tahua, preached 14 sermons, Temere 4, Moeava 6, Puta 5, Turua 5, Tepava 4. Several petitions were read to be considered in their time. The secretary asked for a book for a record for quorums. On motion it was granted, and the money was immediately contributed.

April eight, eight a. m., J. F. Burton in the chair. J. F. Burton was accepted and sustained as president of the mission. A communication from the Amanu Branch was read, in which they offered to lend the church $600, which they had collected to build a church-house, for the consideration of eight per cent interest, to be used to help raise the mortgage on the land in Taronā, Papeete. This was accepted by vote. Bishop Metuaore was authorized to borrow $969 more, to add to the $600, which was the amount needed to pay off the debt. The island of Hikueru was chosen as the place for the next conference, as that is where the majority of the people will be at that time diving for the pearl-shell. J. F. Burton announced that the manuscript for the Doctrine and Covenants in Tahitian was now ready for the printer, and by vote it was ordered to be printed this year. Two p. m., J. F. Burton in chair. It was decided to have the minutes of the Patriarch's conferences printed, together with his words of counsel and testimony. A request from Niau for a deacon to be ordained in that branch was referred to the president of district and the president of the division. The Bishop reported that he had been to see Mr. Mapuhi about borrowing the money he was ordered to borrow, and that he wanted to lend to the church the full amount of the mortgage ($800 French coin), without interest if they would pay it back in pearl-shell and copra. This was agreed to, and the Bishop and his counselors were authorized to draw up the contract with Mupuhi and secure the money, $800 French coin, less $186.70 French coin, which the church had on hand. Upon consideration it was decided to leave the original apportionment of the Taronā debt among the several branches till the remainder who had not paid their portion should do so.

April 9, eight a. m., J. F. Burton in the chair. The Bishop's financial report was read, and Taneterau, Tapuni, and Tapu were appointed as auditing committee. Some recommendations for ordination were read, and J. W. Gilbert and Pou were appointed as committee to make inquiries. A communication from Tubuai concerning some complications of Tetuaitavai was read and referred to the president of Tubuai District. The secretary made a request that steps be taken to secure uniform branch records with printed blank forms for all the branches in the mission. After some discussion it was tabled. Two o'clock p. m., J. F. Burton in chair. A report from the quorum of elders was read and received by vote which is as follows:

Report of the quorum of elders, with the missionary elders also who belong to the quorum, in business session assembled, April 5, 1902, in Taronā, Tahiti, at eight o'clock in the morning. We have held three sessions, there being 26 of our members present. We have chosen a president and two counselors, and a secretary with an assistant as follows: Viriamu president, Loui first counselor, and Tapuni second counselor; Pofatu secretary, and Alfred assistant secretary. These officers were authorized by the vote of the hand. We have selected a court of three to hear and adjust all troubles or difficulties of members of the quorum, that may in the future arise. Teuira, Pou Haroatea, Tapu, are the court. We have selected two to keep order in all the counsels of our quorum, and also to ring the bell for the meetings: Teahu, and Taumihau. By vote of the hand we have sanctioned the removal of our brother Metuaore from this quorum into the Quorum of High Priests. We have lost by death 8 of our number, dropped 1, and received 7 new names into the quorum. During the past year our quorum has accomplished work as follows: Sermons 729, baptisms 13, confirmations 16, ordinations 24, led sacrament meetings 57, children blessed 29, blessed oil 5 times, administered to the sick 348 times, teaching meetings 20, prayer-meetings led 22, assisted in preaching services 3 times, elders' courts 23. Money collected at this conference from the elders for dues, $33. Resolutions passed in our meetings at this time are as follows: 1. Any or all elders who have been cut out of this quorum for cause and afterwards wish to again enter the quorum, must first repent and confess their faults before the quorum; then they may be received again. 2. All elders who have not quorum licenses must go and get them of Joseph Burton. 3. All licenses of elders of this quorum will be examined at the April conference of 1903. 4. In our opinion it is not best to send an elder on missionary work unless he first be examined or set apart by the spirit of revelation. 5. All elders of this quorum who fail to attend the councils must first pay one dollar into the hands of the secretary a little before the month of March. 6. This money must not be used for anything except for ink, pens, and paper to be used in the work of the quorum. The members of the quorum hereby express their desire that the Lord will greatly bless and sustain the President of the whole church, also the Twelve Apostles, Seventies, High Priests, the Patriarch, the Bishop, the Secretary of the Church, the president of this mission, and of the two divisions here, and all the officers of all the districts and branches, and also all the secretaries. April 7, 1902. Viriamu, President; Pofatu, Clerk.

A communication from Bishop Kelley concerning Graceland College was read. The committee appointed to make inquiries of requests for ordination reported that, in their opinion, it were best to refer the ordinations to the president of the district and the president of the division of the brethren in question. This was adopted.

April 10, eight a. m., J. F. Burton in chair. The Bishop read some deeds of land held by the church in different islands, upon which churches have been built, the validity of which deeds have been questioned by the officials in Papeete. On motion the bishop was directed to straighten out the matter and report to the next conference. A request from the Takaroa Branch for help to build a chapel was referred to the president of the Takaroa District. The auditing committee for the Bishop's books reported as follows: During the past year the bishop has received in offerings, $66.60; tithes, $237; land money, $375; from Sisters' Prayer Union, $23.90; for books, $81.50; total, $928.40; expended, $284.80; balance on hand, $643.50. The committee reported the books correct, and the report was adopted. The president of the Takaroa District was directed to look after the building of a church-house in Takaroa, and to return some tin roofing loaned by some parties, which was used on the old church-house. Pohemiti, Tapu, and Taneterau were appointed as a committee to assist the bishop in untangling some misunderstanding concerning some money, as to whether it was intended for tithes or for land money. The bishop stated to the conference that he had chosen Hotu instead of Elia, as, since Elia was accepted at the former conference he has been appointed by the government here as governor of Amanu, which would debar him from attending to the duties of the bishopric, and Loui as his counselors, and his statement was ratified by the conference. By motion Tearii Arotaha was directed to go to Tubuai and adjust his troubles and then return to the missionary in charge and receive direction for missionary labors. Two p. m., president of conference presented letters from Bishop Kelley with checks for $350 of American money to assist in lifting the mortgage on land in Taronā, Papeete, in case it should be needed. But as the affair was adjusted without it, it was voted to return the money to Bishop Kelley with their sincere thanks for his kindness in coming to the rescue. A song was here sung, and the president of the conference, J. F. Burton, and Bishop Metuaore, proceeded to ordain the counselors to the bishop. J. F. Burton ordained Hotu, and Metuaore ordained Loui. It was thought that ten cents would not be enough for the Sunday-school book, so the price was fixed at twenty cents.

April 11, two p. m. By motion it was ordered that the Saints living on the land in Taronā be taxed for their residence there, and that they pay it by filling in with dirt the part occupied by each one respectively. The bishop was directed to see to the matter. A petition from the Kaukura Branch asking for help to build a chapel was referred to the president of the district. The following appointments were made and ratified by the conference for the ensuing year: J. W. Gilbert, in charge of Tahiti Division, with Putoa as his assistant. Pou in charge of the Fakarava Division, with Tepava as his assistant. Taneterau, Tetaku, Titi, Raiatea District. Tapuni, Tubuai. Varoa, Tahiti. John Hawkins, Kaukura District. Teuira, Rairoa District. Viriamu, Makemo District. Metuaro, Manahi District. Vaiarea, Hao District. Kehauri, Rairoa District. Turatahi, assistant secretary, to travel at large and correct the branch records in all the branches in the mission. Pori, Kaukura District. Tuterihia, Anaa District. Tufaanui, Tahiti Division. Maevatua, Roo, Teariiarotaha, Moorea District, the latter to not commence labor till his troubles in Tubuai are adjusted. On motion, Tepiki was also appointed to labor in Moorea District. All officers, from the president of the whole church down to the deacons, both here and in America, were heartily sustained by vote. Adjourned as per former resolution, thus closing a very pleasant, peaceful, and profitable conference. J. F. Burton, President; J. W. Gilbert, Secretary.

Far West.—Conference convened with Stewartville Branch, March 22, 23, with T. T. Hinderks in the chair, G. H. Hilliard associate; C. P. Faul and A. Leaverton, secretaries. C. P. Faul, Bishop's agent, made his report: Balance due agent, last report, $139.18; received since, $1,314.27; paid out, $709.73; on hand, $604.54. An auditing committee reported it correct. Branch reports: Delano 118, gain 5; Pleasant Grove 88, loss 3; Edgerton Junction 47, loss 1; Kingston 104, gain 2; German Stewartville, no change; Wakenda 61, loss 2; Dekalb 51, loss 10; Stewartville 183, gain 3; St. Joseph 535, gain 31; Elders reporting: T. T. Hinderks, W. E. Haden, W. E. Summerfield, J. M. Terry baptized 4, B. J. Dice, J. W. Adams, R. L. Ware, S. Swenson, R. M. Jeffrees, A. W. Head, A. Booker; Priests C. W. Ethridge, J. N. Duncan, C. F. Householder, R. S. Parker, D. H. Schmidt, F. Uphoff, R. Garlich; Deacon W. C. Flanders. District treasurer, B. J. Dice, reported: On hand last report, $2.13; received, $5.65; on hand, $7.78. Moved and carried, That the district tents should be placed in charge of Bishop's agent. No change in district officers for ensuing quarter. Preaching by J. M. Terry, G. H. Hilliard, and I. N. Roberts. Bro. S. J. Hines was baptized by J. W. Adams, and confirmed by C. P. Faul and G. W. Best. A collection of $12.42 was taken up to defray district expenses. Adjourned to meet with the Delano Branch, June 21, 22.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the British Isles Mission; Greeting: We, the undersigned, having been appointed in charge of the above-named mission by the Presidency and General Conference of the church, adopt this method of soliciting your coöperation and support; and appoint the following brethren in sub-charge of the following districts and missions; namely: William Lewis, Wales and South of England. T. J. Sheldon, London and vicinity. W. Eccleston, Birmingham District. W. H. Greenwood, Sheffield District. Inasmuch as we have no missionaries to place in sub-charge of Scotland and the Manchester District, all matters requiring attention in those respective localities should be referred to the missionaries in charge, Scotland, J. W. Rushton; Manchester District, G. T. Griffiths. It is desirable that those hereby placed in sub-charge report to us every month, to G. T. Griffiths, care W. R. Armstrong, 10 Rye Street, C. on M., Manchester, England. The following brethren will please note their appointments, which are as follows: John Davis and Thomas Jones, Eastern Wales District and Southern England. Frank Pierce and J. G. Jenkins, Western Wales District. These brethren will report to William Lewis. Brn. Thorburn and Asher will concentrate in the city of Glasgow. We expect that these brethren who are appointed as missionaries will distribute tracts from house to house and preach in the open air (when the weather is favorable) at places which will be advantageous to advertising our work and arousing an interest among the people; not to interfere with branch or district affairs, but prosecute the work of "pushing the work into new fields" where the work has not been established. Inasmuch as London is not in any district, we therefore ask all elders and priests who are not branch officers to coöperate with Bro. Sheldon in missionary labor, reporting such labor to him every three months. In case there should arise any need for consultation touching branch affairs or any matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the missionary in charge, we desire that the officers will respect the counsel of Bro. Sheldon, who is appointed to represent us in that locality. We very sincerely desire that the officials of the various districts will assist us in the work of evangelization, and therefore suggest very respectfully that all ministers who are not holding any branch appointments as presiding elder or branch priests be assigned to a neighborhood in the town where they reside to preach and labor as circumstances may allow. We also ask that the practice, which has obtained in the past of appointing elders as assistants to branch presidents be discontinued (except in cases of extreme emergency), as it is not provided for in the organic law of the church and hence liable to produce unnecessary friction among branch officers. In cases where there may be a need for an elder in the district to preach in the branch such appointment can be made by the district authority, but not as "assistants" to branch elders, as that is an infringement upon the rights of the priest who by the law of the church is the legal and proper "assistant" to the elder. See Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10; Book of Rules, section 6, page 10. It will be seen that this year the missionary force has been largely augmented, and that such increase will mean greater expense to the church, hence there is a great necessity that the financial resources of the church be maintained that the Bishop may be placed in such a position that he can meet the demands of the occasion. So in this connection we very earnestly urge upon the Saints the need of conforming to the law of tithing and free-will offering as contained in the law of the church and trust that you will forward the same to Bishop Thomas Taylor, care W. A. Roberts, 68 Bristol Road, Bournbrook, Birmingham. Trusting that brotherly love will abound, that all together we shall be able to work harmoniously for the building up of the kingdom of God to the glory of his name and the salvation of our fellow men, we remain, Your brethren and well-wishers, Gomer T. Griffiths, John W. Rushton, Missionaries in Charge. Addresses: G. T. Griffiths, 10 Rye Street, C. on M., Manchester. J. W. Rushton, 5 Brandon Street, Hamilton, Scotland.

To the Missionaries, Local Ministers, and Members of the Northern Nebraska District, Greeting: Having been returned and placed in charge of this district by proper authority, as well as by your own vote, I wish to state a few facts for the good of all. There is much labor needed and our missionaries are few in number, therefore we desire that each minister, officer, and member do all he can to forward this glorious gospel, that we may labor together in love while we coöperate for the good of all and the salvation of souls. Faithfulness, diligence, promptness, and perseverance are a necessity upon the part of all if we would succeed as we should. To teach by example is of more worth to the church than to teach by precept only. We can not interest our neighbors and friends in our church and her work unless we are interested and working and godly members ourselves. Every member should feel that the life of the branch, district, and church depended upon his being at meeting on time and in possession of the Holy Spirit, and ready for present duties. As missionaries we need your confidence, faith, prayers, and help with an occasional word of encouragement spoken in love and truth. We need information as to where work is the most needed and when it will be in opportune time to locate tent or do other work in your vicinity. Who will give the information needed? Should we run the city and district tents or either of them this season we will need some financial help, so please remember and send what you can as soon as convenient to Bishop's agent, James Huff, 1818 North Twenty-first Street, Omaha, Nebraska, according to resolution of district conference. Our next conference convenes with Valley Branch, Friday, May 30, at 7:30 p. m. A full report is desired from branches and officers. In addition to reports to conference, if every minister would report to the undersigned on the first of July, October, January, and March, it would be appreciated and prove beneficial to all. My home address is Box 132, Dow City, Iowa, and my field address is 2412 Seward Street, Omaha, Nebraska. In gospel bonds, C. E. Butterworth.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Little Sioux District; Greeting: Having been appointed to the sub-charge of the mission work in your district, I appeal to you for your coöperation the ensuing year. Let each bear in mind the importance and magnitude of the work, and so occupy that the Master may be pleased to grant unto us his Spirit. The General Conference appointees are requested to move into new territory as far as practicable, leaving the branches in the care of the local ministry, whom we trust will carefully watch over and feed the flock, which is of so much importance for the progress and permanency of the work. Elders and priests not employed as branch officers should not remain idle, but extend their labor into such localities as their circumstances will allow. I trust the year may prove a successful one for the advancement of the cause we love. Your co-laborer for Christ, H. N. Hansen. Home address, R. F. D. No. 2, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

To the Ministry and Saints of Southern Indiana; Greeting: Being appointed in charge of the above district by Elder Heman C. Smith, general missionary in charge, I desire your coöperation that I may know the needs for labor in the different parts of the field. Saints not living near branches will let me know the prospect for missionary work where they live and we will try to have some one look after the work. We also want to hear from branch officers the needs of missionaries to help them. Of this you can also notify your worthy president, M. R. Scott, Jr. We want to push the work out into new places as much as we can without letting the work die out in the branches and places where the work has been looked after in the past. We believe in expansion but we do not believe in giving up what we already have. I trust that the locals will do all they can to move the work forward by keeping up the branch work and other places as much as possible, thus giving more time to the missionaries to push out and occupy in new fields. In order that we may labor in harmony with the instructions given in Doctrine and Covenants one hundred sixteen, of the elders traveling two by two, Brn. M. R. Scott, Jr., and Peter A. Flinn will see after the work in Franklin, Rush, Shelby, Marion, Decatur, Jennings, and Jefferson Counties. This is not to hinder Bro. Scott from looking after the interests of the work in the branches as district president. Brn. J. J. Boswell and J. D. Porter will look after the work in Orange, Crawford, Washington, Perry, and Dubois Counties. Bro. W. C. Marshall, central and western part of the district, the writer to help him. Dear Saints, I trust you will do all you can to help and encourage these brethren who so nobly and faithfully labored for you last year. We have no reason to believe but that they will do all they can again this year. Let us all go to with our mights to see how much we can do for the Master this coming year. Truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Report to me to my address, Plainville, Indiana, on the first days of July, October, January, and March. May each one be blessed, guided, and directed by God's Holy Spirit in the work, so much so that each one may come out at the close of the conference year laden with many sheaves, fruits of the labor done during the year. I remain, Your humble servant for the building up of God's kingdom and the establishing of truth and peace in the land, George Jenkins, Sub-missionary in Charge of Southern Indiana District. Plainville, Indiana, May 3.

To the Ministry, Membership, and Friends of Truth in the Des Moines District; Greeting in the Lord: May grace and peace be multiplied unto you exceedingly through the work of our Lord Jesus Christ. By appointment of the general missionary in charge I am requested to assume the responsibility of having direct care of the missionary work in your district, and being but a laborer with you in the one cause in the which our heavenly Father is so deeply interested, and being a stranger in your midst I ask your active and hearty coöperation by a godly walk and conversation, by assistance with voice and pen, and whatever means or labor may be required under the labor of love. I desire to supplement the work already done and now being done in the district in righteousness. So far as any of the membership or friends may be apprised of a demand for the sowing of the seed, please to inform me, or wherever it is thought the tent could be used to an advantage let me know early so that such arrangements can be made as seems necessary, and we are permitted to make with the help we have. Let us labor with confidence of the ultimate victory, and while wickedness stalks abroad unblemishingly and boastfully, let us show ourselves just as fearless in seeking the subjugation of evil, and in humility do our part of the work, whether to sow or water, remembering always that it is God who giveth the increase, and to whom belongeth all praise; to whom be honor and glory and power now and ever more. Your brother in Christ Jesus, J. F. Mintun, Box 384, Woodbine, Iowa.

The missionaries and Saints of the Southwestern Mission, which includes Oklahoma, Indian Territory (exclusive of the Spring River District), Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas, will take notice that the following-named brethren are placed in charge of the subdivisions of the field: R. Wight, of Texas; W. S. Macrae, of Arkansas and Louisiana; Hubert Case, of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. These brethren will please publish their addresses through the HERALD and Ensign as soon as possible so reports can be made promptly to them. Bro. S. W. Simmons will be permitted to labor in Southern part of Indian Territory and Northern Texas. Bro. Renfroe will labor in Northwestern Texas and Southern Oklahoma. Bro. Henson will labor in Northeastern Texas as appointed, but will hold himself in readiness to assist Bro. Grimes in Louisiana if occasion requires. My instruction in regard to debates still holds good and will as long as I am in charge of the field. Try and have plenty of sessions to give us time to get our faith before the people. Faithfulness on our part will give success and final victory. Hyrum O. Smith, Missionary in Charge. St. Joseph, Missouri, May 9, 1902.

To the Scattered Saints and Friends of Southern Nebraska District: We would like to hear from you and have your coöperation in building up the church and publishing the glad news of the gospel of Christ, that it may reach all people of our district, that every new field may be worked, and the glad sound be heard by many people. We can do very little without your helping hand, so we ask you to work with us, and if there is a chance for preaching in your neighborhood, please let us know, and we will try and fill all calls by the help of our Master, who will pay us well for what work we may do in his service. Remember, we are workers together with God in carrying the glad tidings of the gospel of Christ to our friends and neighbors, and thus do some good for the cause we all love, and the work intrusted to our care will in time to come bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God and the saving of precious souls in the kingdom of Christ. Write me at Nebraska City. Your brother in gospel bonds, W. M. Self.

A novel and successful experiment is tried in the World's Work for May in the publication of an article made up of explanatory notes to a series of sixteen full page pictures of the business streets of Cairo—"beyond the American invasion." The other fine illustrative features of the number include an article on Leland Stanford University; another on Mr. Carlin's wonderful snapshot and flashlight photographs of wild animals; a sequel to Mr. Branson's article on the Real Southern Question, entitled "The Real Southern Question Again," and a story about a wonderful dry salt sea in the Western desert. Wolf von Schierbrand furnishes another of his intimate studies of modern Germany, and Frederic Emory writes of America's new rôle as an international peace-keeper. Charles Graves has gathered together some interesting data which tend to show that the Christian church as an organization is declining. The New Banking Methods, by which the great city banks are becoming veritable department stores and bureaus of general information, are described by William Justus Boies. William C. Whitney is the subject of an intimate study of success and there is an editorial article which furnishes reasons why New York is the future money centre of the world. Short articles on Dr. David Starr Jordan; on the increasing number of Social Secretaries in stores and shops, and on the work of the United States in Hawaii, together with a study of the relation of industrialism to literature, and an article by Frank Norris on the Novel with a Purpose round out an interesting number. In the March of Events more than twenty topics of wide variety and interest are treated editorially, while in Among the World's Workers many striking developments in industry, trade, and finance are described.

European Tourists and others destined to eastern points, will find the low rates applying over the Nickel Plate Road to New York, New England and other eastern destinations, specially attractive. ### THE COMMAND OF GOD IS AUTHORITY.

Whatever God commands man to do the command carries with it the authority to do the thing commanded to be done.

When the church was instituted some seventy odd years ago, the Melchisedec priesthood was conferred for the last time before the second and final coming of Christ, to overcome evil, establish righteousness, and rule over earth in equity, according to the old-time prophecies, the revelations, and the legendary and traditional teaching of the ministry.

This priesthood so conferred was endowed with all the rights, privileges, and authority to bring forth the church of Christ, conduct its expansion and watch over its development and welfare until the coming of Christ should bring its work to a triumphant and glorious consummation.

After the conferring of this priesthood, the right to act for Christ, any man who held it and who should remain "in the faith," as the same had been given by the angel's message and by such additional revelations as were given and became the rule of faith of the church during the lifetime of its first president, the Prophet Joseph Smith, had within himself the right to officiate in any of the offices of the Melchisedec or greater priesthood in the direct pursuit of his calling as a minister for Christ, or in any emergency that might arise by the direction of the church, or the command of the Lord.

"The powers of the priesthood are incapable of annihilation." Once conferred they remain with those upon whom conferred during their good behavior. The right to act may be suspended for cause, but only personal transgression, departure from the faith, or an apostasy can wholly incapacitate the minister who has been lawfully invested with the priesthood, or disqualify him from acting in the name of the church. So long as he remains steadfast in the faith, he is a minister for Christ.

It is a rule of ecclesiastical law as old as the church, that those who may have become members under the rules of faith and practice publicly proclaimed by the ministry of the church, and which obtained at the time of their formally uniting with the church, can not be divested of their membership, nor prevented the exercise of their rights and the enjoyment of the privileges accruing to them as members by any action of the body by which a change in doctrine or practice is made. In cases where such changes have been made it has ever been ruled that those members who remained steadfast adherents to the original faith constituted the church whether these steadfast adherents were few or many. Nor could a majority dispossess a minority of either church name or property, except such minority was guilty of personal transgression or collective rebellion against recognized rules of order and discipline to which they had voluntarily given consent equally with the majority.

Following in the line of these well-known rules of church law, after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, a number of those who had been made members of the church organized April 6, 1830, through the propagandizing efforts of the ministry chosen and sent out by the church to preach and baptize converts, under the declaration of the faith, doctrines, and practice published in solemn assembly in 1835, and epitomized for the church by Joseph Smith seven years later, relying upon the rights conferred upon them by reason of their membership refused their adherence and support to doctrines and practices inconsistent with and opposed to those proclaimed by the church and accepted by them when they became members; and refused also to become submissive to the rule of President Brigham Young, who as president of a portion of the broken body, the church, became the exponent and sponsor for the doctrines and the practices against which they protested.

It does not dispose of the just claim of these protesting members of the church who continued to hold to the faith they had espoused under the presidency of Joseph Smith, to charge them with apostasy when they refused to accept the dogma and practice of plural marriage and to follow in the spiritual lead of President Brigham Young. The right to reject what to them was heretical teaching and unlawful practices under the law of the land was theirs. They might have become apostates to the doctrines and practices to which they had given adherence, but could not to those to which they had not given credence or been baptized into. However, no possible logic or sophistry could make them apostate to prospective theories or rulers.

Those who held the Melchisedec priesthood, at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, having been called and ordained thereunto according to the rules found in the articles and covenants of the church governing at the time,<sup>1</sup> were not deprived by such death of what individual rights they at the time held and the offices they were entitled to. The fact that other members in larger or smaller numbers chose to accept new dogmas and adopt practices foreign to those they had affiliated with by joining the church, did not affect their standing in law and before God. Hence, with them individually and collectively there remained the right to confer together, agree as to action, to call on any and all other members like themselves, to unite in defense of the faith and the organization, to preach the gospel, baptize, lay on hands to confirm, heal the sick, and ordain others whose calling should be certified to by the Spirit of Christ, by revelation and confirmed by the voice of their brethren the church. And, if so directed by the Lord, to regather and rebuild the scattered elements into the perfected fabric of church organization. These things they had the right to do by virtue of their holding the priesthood, call and ordination to which had been accomplished while yet the martyred prophet and president lived.

The facts of the reorganization of the church were in harmony with the foregoing truths. There were numbers of the men who had joined the church and received call and ordination. When the martyrs fell, and false doctrines and unlawful practices were introduced they rejected them; refusing to be implicated in support of them. They sought for the right ways; and finally, the Lord spoke to them and called their attention to the revelations already received by the church, and directed them to take those revelations as their law, and promised them divine favor and success, so long as they should continue to abide in that which had been confided to them.

The same Spirit which bore witness to them of the truth of the gospel and that Jesus was the Christ, again testified to them of the sacredness of the angel's message, and of their acceptance with God. By it the word of prophecy reached them that the Son of the Martyr, Joseph Smith, would soon be with them. At the same time the same Spirit called him and directed him to unite with these men who had remained steadfast in the original faith. He did as he was directed. He had been legally baptized into the church, by a properly accredited minister, had received the rite of confirmation by the laying on of hands of those holding the priesthood of Melchisedec; had been blessed by the Martyr and the blessings of his line pronounced upon him by the laying on of the Martyr's hands. No court or council of the church had ever sat in judgment against him; no decree of a church tribunal had ever been issued against him; he was a member of the church so far as obedience and the observance of the initiatory ordinances could make him one and all this was done in the lifetime and under the direction and supervision of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, then presiding over the church.

When directed to do so, this son of the Martyr, Joseph Smith, sought the association of those engaged in the work of rebuilding the broken church; and in accord with the prophecies made concerning him, and in harmony with the law and rules of the church as already published and acknowledged, he was received into the fellowship, was ordained to the priesthood of Melchisedec by those holding that priesthood, and called, chosen, and set apart to preside as the law of the church provides.

The law referred to is found in section 104, paragraph 11, of the Lamoni Edition of Doctrine and Covenants of 1897 (section 107 of the Utah edition of 1876), where it is specifically stated that there must be of "necessity presiding offices appointed of or from among those appointed to the several offices of these two priesthoods," the Aaronic and the Melchisedec. "Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body and ordained to that office and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church."

This provides that there shall be, or may be chosen from the body three men holding the Melchisedec priesthood, who shall be thus ordained to be these presiding high priests to form a presidency as a quorum of three.

Were there no other rules governing in the case any one holding the Melchisedec priesthood would be eligible to be chosen to be one of these three presidents. But in the minutes of the organization of the High Council in 1834, the statement is made that, the President of the church and the two other presidents who shall be chosen to assist him, thus forming the presidency are to be "appointed in the same manner as he himself was appointed," that is to be designated by revelation and to be chosen or appointed by the body.

This section 104, on the Priesthood, was published in the 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants as section 3. It was also section 3 in the Nauvoo edition of 1846, and European edition of 1852. So far as ascertained it was given the last of March, 1835, and has been in force since its publication.

Upon the proposition that when God commands a thing to be done such command is the enabling act and authorizes those commanded to do the work commanded to be done, it is very clear that the command given to those men to rally to the defense of the truth as it had been told and retold, and testified to over and over again in thousands of cases, their own included, to their knowledge; and to raise up a standard against iniquity to which loyal Israel could gather and be safe, should have been honored and obeyed as it was. Who is there that knows anything of the history of the rise of the church from the leading incidents of 1820 through the trying episodes preceding the publishing of the Book of Mormon and the organization of the church in 1830, and down through the years to the martyrdom June twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and forty-four, that is prepared to say the voice of God to this remnant true to the faith should not be heard and its direction heeded, with the same earnest fidelity and carefulness, as were those commands beginning with the one not to join any of the churches clear down to the last one published to the church and the world during the lifetime of the Prophet Joseph.

Who is prepared to say that Joseph Smith, the son of the Seer who was blessed by his sire, and who was directed to join in the movement to reorganize already begun by divine command, should not heed the command. Who shall say that the voice of prophecy which predicted his coming to the assembly at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860, ought not to have been heard! Who has the right to say that the action of the men holding the priesthood conferred upon them through Joseph Smith, who received it from Peter, James, and John, was not legitimate when they conferred upon that son of the Seer the same priesthood which his father had held before him, they having proceeded in the exercise of their membership and office in the church according to the command of God, and performed a rite in conferring authority to act in the name of Jesus Christ and the church, which has received the confirming testimony of the Spirit bearing witness to his ministrations for over forty years.

THE MARTINIQUE DISASTER.

The catastrophe which befell the Island of Martinique on the morning of May 8, which totally destroyed the city of St. Pierre, and instantly blotted out 40,000 lives, is one of the greatest disasters of its kind in the history of the world. On that fatal morning the whole top of Mt. Pelee was blown away, and a rain of fire fell upon the surrounding country, dealing instant death to the inhabitants. Gases and poisonous vapors spread almost with the speed of lightning, destroying and burning. The city was completely wiped out of existence, and the shipping in the harbor destroyed and sunk, with one exception. Eighteen ships were in the harbor at the time, only one succeeding in making its escape, and on it many of the crew were killed and burned.

That the St. Pierre disaster may be compared with others of a similar kind, we give a list of the great disasters in history:

	Lives Lost.
February 24, 79—Pompeii destroyed by eruption of Mount Vesuvius.....	30,000
1137—Catania, in Sicily, overturned by earthquake.....	15,000
1268—Cilicia destroyed by earthquake.....	60,000
December 5, 1456—Earthquake at Naples.....	40,000
February 26, 1531—Earthquake at Lisbon.....	30,000
September, 1693—Earthquake in Sicily buried fifty-four cities and towns and 300 villages; of Catania and its 18,000 inhabitants not a trace remained.....	100,000

February 2, 1703—Jeddo, Japan, destroyed.....	200,000
November 30, 1731—Earthquake at Pekin.....	100,000
October 28, 1746—Lima and Callao demolished.....	18,000
September, 1754—Grand Cairo destroyed.....	40,000
June 7, 1755—Kascham, Persia, swallowed up.....	40,000
November 1, 1755—Great earthquake in Spain and Portugal; in eight minutes 50,000 inhabitants of Lisbon perished; cities of Coimbra, Oporto, Braga, and St. Ubes wholly overturned. In Spain Malaga reduced to ruins. One half of Fez, Morocco, destroyed, more than 12,000 Arabs killed; 2,000 houses in Island of Madeira destroyed.....	100,000
February 4, 1797—Whole country between Santa Fe and Panama destroyed, including City of Quito.....	40,000
August 10, 1822—Aleppo destroyed.....	20,000
May 26, 1830—Canton, China, shaken.....	6,000
May 7, 1842—Cape Haytien destroyed.....	5,000
March 2, 1856—Earthquake in Molucca Islands.....	3,000
December 16, 1857—Calabria, Naples, destroyed.....	10,000
July 2, 1863—Earthquake partly destroyed Manila.....	1,000
August 31, 1868—Earthquake in Peru and Ecuador.....	25,000

Not since the time of the destruction of Pompeii has there been a volcanic eruption accompanied by the destruction and loss of life which Mt. Pelee dealt out to the inhabitants of the luckless Island of Martinique. The north part of island was devastated, and the survivors suffered greatly until relieved by the promptness of the neighboring countries in sending supplies and relief. The United States promptly appropriated five hundred thousand dollars towards the relief of the sufferers, while from all over the world came proffers of financial help.

Scarcely had Mt. Pelee blotted out St. Pierre when La Soufriere, on the Island of St. Pierre, became violent and threatened to follow the example of its brother volcano. Many lives were sacrificed to the whims of La Soufriere.

Thousands have been left homeless by the work of the two death-dealing mountains. Ghouls have robbed the homes and persons of the dead. Altogether, it is an affair the full horror of which can probably only be fully realized by the few survivors.

On the affair, the Literary Digest has the following:

The rain of fire that blotted St. Pierre from among the cities of the earth on the morning of the 8th of May is reckoned among the worst disasters of history. Mont Pelee, in the opinion of Professor John Milne and other eminent authorities on such disturbances, exploded with little warning, giving the doomed inhabitants of the island and the shipping off St. Pierre no chance of escape. The vicinity of the volcano for miles around was covered with a fiery downpour, and the air so filled with dust, ashes, fumes, and fire as to blot out all life. The total population of St. Pierre was about 25,000, and the population of the island about 175,000. It is not known at this writing how many are left, but it is considered certain that no one in St. Pierre survived. The newspaper comments consist chiefly of explanations of the nature of the volcanic eruption from a scientific standpoint, and recountings of previous disasters.

Professor Milne's theory, as given in an interview in the London Daily Express, is that Mont Pelee has "blown its head off," owing to the infiltration of water through the rocks until it reached the molten material beneath, forming superheated steam of such tremendous pressure that something had to give way. The schooner, Ocean Traveler, according to the dispatches, "arrived off St. Pierre, Martinique, on Thursday morning, and while about a mile away saw the volcano of Mont Pelee explode, and fire from it sweep the whole town, destroying it and the shipping." The steamship Roddam escaped through a shower of pieces of white-hot lava, losing most of her officers and crew either by injuries from the lava or from inhaling the sulphurous fumes. The eruption in St. Vincent, causing the death of hundreds more, has added to the anxiety and sympathy with which public attention is regarding these unfortunate islands of the Carribean.

Professor Robert T. Hill, of the United States Geological Survey, says in an article in the New York Herald:

"The present outburst of Mont Pelee, in Martinique, is apparently the culmination of a number of recent volcanic disturbances which have been unusually severe. Colima, in Mexico, was in eruption but a few months ago, while Chelpancingo, the capital of the State of Guerrero, was nearly destroyed by earthquakes which followed. Only a few days ago the cities of Guatemala were shaken down by tremendous earthquakes. In a few days, when news can be received from the inaccessible interior of Central America, it will probably be learned that some of the numerous volcanic summits of that region have exploded.

"Although widely distant, there seems to be a geological relation between the Carribean and the Central American volcanic chains.

"The whole region of the American Mediterranean, instead of being a body of water, as it appears on the map, is looked upon by geologists as a great east and west mountain system, whose ridges, except the great Antilles, are submerged beneath the waters, where profound valleys and submerged mountain crests are found between the banks and depths. This Antillean mountain system suddenly terminates at each end to the east and west, with lines of great volcanoes running at right angles to it. These are the volcanic chains of Central America and of the Carribean Islands.

"It is a singular fact that both these volcanic chains are of the peculiar type which erupt cinders and mud, and it certainly appears as if there were some sympathetic relations between them. . . .

"Across the throat of the Carribean extends a chain of islands (the Caribbees), which are really smouldering furnaces, with fires banked up, ever ready to break forth at some unexpected and inopportune moment. This group, commencing with Saba on the north, near our own Porto Rico, and ending with Grenada, on the south, near Trinidad, consists of ancient ash-heaps, piled up in times past by volcanic action. These old ash-heaps have weathered into fertile soil, which, bathed by an undue share of moisture, has become covered with ripe growths of damp and moldering vegetation. This same soil also produces all the richest vegetable products of the tropics.

"These volcanic islands have been slowly piling up since the beginning of the Tertiary Period, and their bases extend beneath the waters for a depth as great as their summits project above it, making their total height nearly ten thousand feet above their submerged bases.

"The northern islands of the necklace, like Saa and St. Eustatius, are simply crater cones, but the center of the chain consists of four larger islands—Guadeloupe, Dominica, San Lucia, and St. Vincent—each of which is a complicated mass of old volcanic vents, whose peaks attain their greatest height in Mount Dioblotim, in Dominica, 4,747 feet above the sea.

"These volcanoes do not conform to the type which most people have in mind, for from them there flow no fiery streams of lava, nor do they always give days of warning before their out-breaks. On the other hand, their eruptions consist of hot water, cinders, and mud. Their explosions come with terrific suddenness and when least expected. In volcanoes which eject lava, the ascending column of molten liquid vibrates the earth for days or months before it reaches the surface, and the people of the vicinity can always foretell the eruptions. This is not so with the cinder type, for they explode suddenly and do their damage without much warning.

"While the explosions by which the mud and cinder were ejected have been sudden, they have taken place only at long intervals of time, each one adding its pile to the surface debris and obliterating the previous landscape.

"It has been so long since any explosions occurred that most geographers, as well as the inhabitants of the islands, had considered that the forces which produced them were spent, and classified them as extinct volcanoes. It is true that the soufriere of Guadeloupe has sent up from its summit from time immemorial faint puffs of steam, and that upon Dominica and other of the islands there were a few hot springs, but for nearly a hundred years there had not been the least sign of explosion." . . .

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, writing from Guatemala City under the date of April 24, gives the following description of earthquakes which have been shaking that region:

"For nearly a week earthquakes have been tumbling down cities, towns, and villages on the western slope of the Sierras in this republic.

"On the night of April 18, at the capital, a blinding flash of lightning, followed by a thunder-storm and torrents of rain, all in the space of a very few minutes, caused the people in the streets to run for shelter. In an instant, however, the earthquake was upon them. Rushing frantically into the darkness and through the flooded streets, anywhere away from the straining rafters and crackling walls, ran the multitude, crying, praying, and a few trying to sing the 'Salve Regina.'

"News soon began to come in from the hill country, where Quezaltenango is situated. This, the second city of the republic, suffered by far the most. Hundreds of residences and public buildings were either totally destroyed or seriously damaged. Although not half of the debris has yet been removed, two hundred bodies have been recovered. Fire and flood added to the horror of the night, and many people have gone insane and others have committed suicide.

"Amatitlan, San Juan, San Marcos, Escuintla, Santa Lucia, Utatlan, and several other smaller towns have been partly ruined. The sessions of the National Congress at Guatemala City have been suspended. The meetings of the National Commission for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and which Commissioner Chandler attended by special invitation, were continued without interruption for two hours, though the earthquake shocks made the large crystal chandeliers of the palace swing like pendulums over the heads of the commissioners.

"Approximately 50,000 people have been left homeless, and subscriptions are being raised to prevent the poor from starving. —Literary Digest, May 17, 1902.

THE DENISON REVIEW AND LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The Review, of Denison, Iowa, near the home of Bro. C. J. Hunt, had in its issue for April 8, just past, a copy of the story about Lamoni, and the prophecy concerning the coming of Christ, so extensively circulated during our late conference. Bro. C. J. Hunt called the attention of the editor of the Review to the incorrectness of the article, the result of which was that in the issue for May 6 the Review gave the following clear statement about the report and our people:

In an April issue of the Review there appeared among the syndicate news matter furnished us from Chicago, an unfair and wholly untrue item concerning the Latter Day Saints. The item was published in the Review without the knowledge of either of its editors. We make this explanation to the Review's old friends among the members of that church, a church toward which the Review has always tried to be eminently fair and unprejudiced. We know the members of the Latter Day Saints to be plain, honest, and God-fearing, and while we do not know enough about their creed either to criticise or to applaud, we can assure them that the Review will remain as ever their friend in well-doing and without desire to do injury to their feelings or to insult the church in which they put their faith. In fact the more we see churches and creeds the more tolerant we become. There is hardly a creed in all the world, certainly not in the civilized world, which would not improve the moral standards of all the people were its tenets honestly and conscientiously practiced by all.

The man who is an honest faithful member of any Christian church, is a good man. What "the world" criticises is not the way church members live up to their creed, but the way in which they do not live up to it. The world would be better than it is to-day if all the people were honest conscientious Catholics, or Methodists, or Latter Day Saints, or Quakers, or Baptists, or believers in any Christian creed which could be mentioned.

The church has a mighty work to perform, a work as much in and among its own membership as among non-believers either here or in so-called heathen lands. Every church member should remember that he is a marked man, that what he does is not only marked against himself, but the mind of "the world" is charged against his church also.

Christianity there is in all our creeds but the real Christianity of the heart is above and beyond any creed. It is found in that high plane of right-living and right-thinking on which a few among the "sinners," and a few among the church, join hands for the betterment of all the world.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Christ Anderson, in renewing for her HERALD, writes from Fremont, Nebraska, May 12: "I wish to renew for the welcome church paper which I read. I am seventy-seven years old, and enjoy reading the SAINTS' HERALD. My husband died two years ago. The HERALD was a great source of comfort to him."

W. H. Kelley wrote from Kirtland, Ohio, May 14: "Everything is going nicely here. Bro. Rushton leaves here to-morrow or next day for home. Folks well."

Thomas Dixon writes from Kaitangata, New South Wales, April 21, renewing for HERALD. He says: "We can not see how the Saints can get along without the HERALD. We long for it to come. It is the best paper we have, and we like it in its new form. May its usefulness increase, and the Saints see the need of it in every home. God bless the Saints."

THE OBLIGATION OF A BLESSING.

"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1: 8.

Christ just before his ascension is here speaking to the apostles and bidding them to expect on the day of Pentecost at Jerusalem the sending down of the Holy Ghost upon them. With the reception of this great blessing and endowment of power came also an obligation. Certain duties were imposed, which were witnessing for Christ, preaching the gospel to all nations, adding to the church and continuing the work Christ had established while on earth.

Blessing and obligation were closely related, and it is the same to-day. For all blessings we receive, whether temporal or spiritual, we are in a state of indebtedness and under obligations to the Giver. We should acknowledge the true source through which we obtain blessings, and show our thankfulness for them by obedience and faithfulness to all duties they enjoin.

We are accountable to God for all that we receive, every cause or means of spiritual or earthly happiness, our time, talents, and worldly possessions. We will retain spiritual blessings and advance to higher spiritual life by faithfulness, pure living, and obeying the teachings of the Spirit; but if disobedient, impure, and sinful the Holy Spirit will not enter our hearts or remain with us. We should prove that we value earthly blessings by making wise use of them; thus they will increase and we will be able to render a good account of our stewardship.

The talents and opportunities given us should be used for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and as we have been blessed be a blessing to others.

God is willing to bestow blessings freely upon all. Eternal life is for all who bring themselves into condition to receive it. Blessings are frequently preceded by obligations. "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—John 4: 14.

The water refers to eternal life and may also be understood to mean the Holy Spirit which is our guide and Comforter, and if we allow it to guide us we will be developed and prepared to receive eternal life and thus it will be in us an everlasting spring of living water.

If the influence of the Spirit is with us it will be recognized by those with whom we come in contact even if they do not know the source from whence it comes and we are under obligations that they be taught. As Christ commanded the disciples to witness for him and the first place mentioned is Jerusalem, so we should begin at home and lift a warning voice to our neighbors and near friends.

In the Sermon on the Mount Christ said, "Ye are the salt of the earth" (Matthew 5: 13); also in verse 14, "Ye are the light of the world." He doubtless meant this for his disciples, but it is nevertheless true of all his followers. The people of God are the salt of the earth and to be the savers of men. Christ is the Savior of men and the light of the world, and all who take upon them his great name and receive of his Spirit, having their minds enlightened by the same, should enlighten others and point out to them the way of eternal life.

Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 16.

This injunction should not be misunderstood but obeyed in the true Spirit of Christ with humility and purity of purpose, not with vanity or personal display of goodness and virtue to gain the praise of men or win positions of honor in the church or society.

The object should be that through our daily lives the fruits of the Spirit be made manifest, and the result of our good works be that others are attracted and convinced of the truthfulness and saving, cleansing power of the gospel, and honor and love its Author and obey it that they may receive it for themselves.

By our living true to all its principles and teachings we can cause the gospel of Christ to be respected and honored and thus glorify our Father in heaven and fulfill the obligation of the blessing.

"TEACH ACCORDING TO THE OFFICE WHEREWITH I HAVE APPOINTED YOU."

On the recognition that the above is a part of divine provisions for the consummation of God's purposes through the preaching of the gospel, it is a solemn matter for mortals to consider. But with this, as other similar provisions, we can only demonstrate our faith therein in a practical manner. For it is possible to utter with the tongue that with which the heart is not in accord; hence man's power to deceive.

In accordance with the above injunction we are commanded to esteem every brother as ourself, and practice virtue and holiness before the Lord. (D. C. 38: 5.)

We learn that God hath placed every member in the body (church) as it hath pleased him, as a preventive to schism in the body. How displeasing to him, therefore, must it be if distressing effects of schism are made visible, attributable to transcending or stopping short of duty, which he has condescended to make so plain. But man will dash where angels dare not tread! How sad the thought! Who shall abide?

Then, too, Paul compares the physical organism to Christ's mystical body, the church. Of the former he says the suffering of one member enlists the sympathy of the whole. Are we thus related as members of Christ's body? We are, or we are not. High claims to a God-imposed spiritual rectitude must ever prove ineffective in the absence of the needed practical evidence so essential to establish the fact of gospel unity. The giving of evidence of being living epistles, known of all men for gospel integrity and evenness of tenor in the gospel race, is a necessity.

Further: From the subject matter (Ephesians 4: 16) we learn: 1. That the perpetuity of the compactness of the body, fitly joined, is effected by that which every joint (part) supplieth. 2. That this supply in the measure of every part, the body edifieth itself in love. Then, too, the necessity for the supply of every joint is made more manifest, in the light of the fact that any part failing to show himself approved by learning his duty, is not to be counted worthy to stand (D. C. 104: 44). It is immaterial whether a lack of supply by one or more points is attributable to individual negligence, or hindered by illegitimate actions of other joints; the effect of the failure to supply was the same; therefore, in the assurance that the body edifieth itself in love, as a result of every joint supplying, it follows that friction to any extent among the joints or parts will prove a preventive to the body edifying itself in love, thereby stultified as a preventive to spiritual growth no matter to what cause friction may be attributable.

We learn of friction in the past as well as evidence of its cessation by the timely interference of some of our worthy predecessors in the latter-day work. As recorded in second volume of Church History, pages 11 and 12, Joseph Smith says:

I next proceeded to explain the duty of the Twelve, and their authority, which is next to the present Presidency, and that the arrangement of the assembly in this place on the 15th inst., in placing the High Councils of Kirtland next the Presidency, was because the business to be transacted was business relating to that body in particular, which was to fill the several quorums in Kirtland, not because they were first in office, and that the arrangements were the most judicious that could be made on the occasion; also the Twelve are not subject to any other than the First Presidency; viz., myself, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams who are now my counselors; (and where I am not, there is no First Presidency over the Twelve.)

I also stated to the Twelve that I did not countenance the harsh language of President Cowdery to them, neither in myself nor any other man, although I have sometimes spoken too harshly from the impulse of the moment, and inasmuch as I have wounded your feelings, brethren, I ask your forgiveness, for I love you, and will hold you up with all my heart in all righteousness, before the Lord, and before all men.

Continuing, he says:

And I will now covenant with you before God, that I will not listen to nor credit any derogatory report against any of you, nor condemn you upon any testimony beneath the heavens, short of that testimony which is infallible, until I can see you face to face, and know of a surety.

The reader must be struck with the pacific spirit evinced by the young Palmyra Seer in such an emergency. He might have stood upon his dignity, saying, I have no apology to offer, etc.; or some other tantalizing phrases, but no, it was enough for him to know that some confession was needed; he therefore chose the godly part, and by confession became a peace-maker. In the exhibition of a bit of practical religion in such acts, though dead he speaketh. Of course it is humiliating to proud human nature to say, I am wrong; but three minutes consumed in a confession in a straightforward manner, when a necessity exists therefor, is a hundred per cent better than fifty or sixty minutes consumed in self-applause in a pharisaical spirit. The attaining to perfection is only possible by correcting errors. To be sure he is fortunate who is faultless; but where is the faultless man? The confessing of sins to thy brethren and the Lord is a law-imposed duty. (D. C. 59: 2.)

It is indeed unfortunate that the thought ever obtained among Latter Day Saints, that power or position made the man; for to the extent that such a dogma hath, or may obtain, it proves an effective preventive to a proper discrimination between men and principle, and when we fail to be governed by principle, we leave our God-given mooring, making it possible to be tossed to and fro "by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in weight to deceive. But speaking the truth in love may grow up unto him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."—Eph. 4: 14, 15.

Like other projects, despotic and absolute rule have their incipient stages; were there no knee to bow or play the sycophant, the effects of despotism and absolute ruling would be confined to narrower limits; but as it is there are those to be found quite ready to stultify dignity or manhood for present advantage; more is the pity. But once making a start on a downward grade, the momentum is proportionate to the size or weight of the object starting and the application of the brake is difficult. A flopping over in somersault fashion from a realm of light into a realm of darkness is not only dangerous, but may prove fatal. Christ, by the God-fearing Bible student and sober thinker, was and is admired because of the evenness of his ministerial career from its inception to its grand termination. He was never known to blow hot or cold in the advocacy of law to vex foes or human friends; right was always right; wrong always wrong; truth always truth. O, for such an even tenor, thus evincing a more palpable evidence of a Christ-like life. Where are we at?

Such a high spiritual rectitude may effectively prevent us being covenant-breakers.

One among other reasons the Lord assigned for speaking to and calling Joseph Smith was, that "man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God, the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers."—D. C. 1: 4.

The reasons assigned for the Lord commanding the elders to go to Ohio to receive the law is that "ye [the church] might escape the power of the enemy and be gathered unto me [the Lord] a righteous people, without spot and blameless."—D. C. 38: 7.

The law thus received is given in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7. The preparatory steps to a trial are plainly revealed in paragraph 23. The violation of law repented of is to bring forgiveness. But the probability of some sinning and failing to repent presupposes the necessity for a trial. The books containing the law of the Lord are sufficiently explanatory on this important matter, and from which we learn all are to be considered innocent until proven guilty, as we also learn when a necessity exists all sinning, whether priest or people, are to be tried as the law directs. Nor can we overlook the fact of Christ's fundamental method; viz., every word to be established in the mouth of two or three witnesses, which method obtained under the Mosaic economy as the sequel will show. And though no one was to be condemned, save in the mouth of two witnesses, yet if one man was accused of wrong by one witness he was not silenced. No, but the accuser and accused were arraigned before the priest and the judges which should be in those days. "And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother; then shall ye do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother: so shalt thou put the evil away from among you." See Deuteronomy 19: 15-19. Then we learn when evil comes to the surface it was authoritatively adjusted. And the way to do it was the very way which the Lord commanded. And so far as my research carries me I have not yet learned that the Lord in either ancient or modern revelation authorized priest or people to act as an apologist for him, to condone, palliate, or soften what he had been pleased to reveal, in which man's salvation is involved, or authorized a committee to formulate ways and means as a substitute for any of his revelations.

Further:

Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment. Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Deut. 16: 18-20.

The conception of language suggestive of a higher moral rectitude than that reflected above would be difficult; and the supposition that it could be modified or changed to suit the whims and caprices of poor, vacillating humanity would be tantamount to a confession that God's words are flexible.

There is nothing ambiguous in the above, but the fact stands forth in its grandeur, that under the Mosaic law they were to do just and right, not to respect persons, nor take a gift as a bribe; they were to aspire to a higher rectitude, as the Lord their God had appointed. Nothing more, nothing less.

And so it was when the publicans came to John to be baptized. In response to their interrogations as to what they should do, he said: "Exact no more than that which is appointed you." Do the right. And to the soldiers he said: "Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages."—Luke 3: 14.

I believe in our acceptance of the everlasting gospel we place ourselves under the standard of righteousness; and if there is any difference between officials and nonofficials as to the gravity of the responsibility assumed in enlisting under the standard of righteousness, the responsibility of the former, in that they are to be examples in righteousness to the latter, is greater. Hence when newly baptized members are being instructed as provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18, they are informed thus: "And the members shall manifest before the church, and also before the elders, by a godly walk and conversation that they are worthy," etc. But how shall the members walk godly before the elders, if they should appear ungodly?

We have found evidence as to the necessity of misunderstanding, etc., being authoritatively adjusted. When evidence of wrong exists, that is the time to act in the light reflected from given and accepted law; every word to be established in the mouth of two or three witnesses as Christ taught. It is therefore a fundamental method. (Matt. 18: 16.) Hence should it so happen that a requisite amount of evidence locating wrongdoing and the requisite procedure is prevented, made binding upon the strength of such evidence by a very much amount of less evidence, what would be the status of such a case? Would we not be divided among ourselves? If not, what kind of action would create division among ourselves? Who will tell? Further: If under the method of common consent law provisions were voted down, would not such an act be tantamount to a claim that common consent was superior to and above the law? If not, why not?

The above is reflective of some of my proclivities with due deference to all concerned. Differing nothing from those entertained in 1844, as it dawned toward Christmastide, I walked twenty miles in quest of an authorized person to administer the rite of holy baptism; save, that by the grace of God being more firmly settled, grounded, and established therein, however deficient I may have been in practically establishing this fact.

In a timely, authoritative adjudication of misunderstanding, etc., by God's revealed method, I see an effective way of vindicating the innocent, punishing the guilty, and fostering the fair fame of Christ's church. In a total neglect, when confronting exigencies necessitate action or an attempt of justification in evading it, under some policy adverse to the spirit and genius of the standard of righteousness, I see confusion and final desolation. If otherwise I am at sea touching the verity of God's revealments.

As a representative of Christ I claim the right to let the church and the world know where and how I stand touching the vital question of religion.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

REMISSION OF SINS.

HOW AND WHEN RECEIVED.

When we examine the three books on this subject, there seem to be some contradictory statements. If we conclude that "water baptism" alone remits sins, which position is based on the statement, "Baptism for remission of sins," we wish to examine this in the light as it is revealed in the fullness of the gospel. In a revelation given in the incipency of this latter-day work, we have this language: "I will also bring to light my gospel, which was ministered unto them, and, behold, they shall not deny that which you have received, but they shall build it up and shall bring to light the true points of my doctrine; yea, and the only doctrine which is in me; and this I do, that I may establish my gospel, that there may not be so much contention."—D. C. 3: 15.

This refers to the Book of Mormon, which contains "the true points of my doctrine." Now hear what it says in regard to the doctrine of Christ:

"For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water: and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire, and by the Holy Ghost."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 13: 4. And in verse 6 he says, "And now behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end."—Ibid., 13: 6.

This, we think, is in harmony with a statement made by John, who says, "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1: 7. If by his blood we are cleansed, then how do we reach his blood?

Since the body of Christ or his church is represented as a physical body, having many members (see 1 Corinthians 12), the blood is necessarily in the body. Then in order to reach the blood we will have to get in the body. How do we get in the body? Our text says, "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, . . . the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." He walked in the light by doing the will of his Father. We may walk in the light by keeping his commandments. Christ told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5. Hence could not be saved, as there is no salvation outside of Christ or his kingdom.

Now the "kingdom of God," "church," "body of Christ," etc., are synonymous terms; so, then, in order to get into the "body" or "kingdom" and thus reach the blood, we "must be born again." Now whatever it takes to constitute the new birth is what it takes to get into Christ. Paul says, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?"—Rom. 6: 3. Again, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Gal. 3: 27. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body."—1 Corinthians 12: 13. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism."—Eph. 4: 5. I gather from this that these passages all refer to the same baptism, or else the statement Christ made to Nicodemus does not refer to baptism at all, which we can not for a moment admit. Then the question, "When do we receive remission of sins?" In water baptism? If so it is outside of the "body," for to get into the body or kingdom we must be born, not only of water, but of the Spirit also; and the scriptures cited show that we are "baptized into Christ." Then it must necessarily take both the "water" and the "Spirit" to constitute a complete baptism. So we find this in harmony with later revelations: "And this is my gospel: repentance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter."—D. C. 39: 2. Again, "Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; . . . yea, be baptized even by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost."—D. C. 32: 2. The two baptisms spoken here, "water" and "spirit," constitute the new birth, without which they can not enter. The question arises then, "How do we obtain the baptism of the Spirit?" Let the books answer: "An apostle is an elder, and it is his calling to baptize [with water], . . . and to confirm those who are baptized into the church, by the laying on of hands for the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, according to the scriptures."—D. C. 17: 8.

Once more, "But now I give unto thee a commandment, that thou shalt baptize by water, and they shall receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, even as the apostles of old."—D. C. 34: 2. This is conclusive evidence that the baptism of the Spirit comes through the laying on of hands, by which we are inducted into the "kingdom" or body, and thus obtain a remission of sins or the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which is "the Spirit of adoption. (Rom. 8: 15.) If any more proof is needed, we have it in this statement: "And of tenets thou shalt not talk, but thou shalt declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism and fire; yea, even the Holy Ghost."—D. C. 18: 4.

Again, the Lord said to W. W. Phelps, "Thou art called and chosen and after thou hast been baptized by water, which if you do with an eye single to my glory, you shall have a remission of your sins, and a reception of the Holy Spirit, by the laying on of hands."—D. C. 55: 1. So according to these scriptures, one can not receive the remission of sins without the Melchisedec priesthood or laying on of hands. Thus we can understand what the Savior meant when he said to his apostles, "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained."

It may be urged that John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. (Mark 1:4.) He also taught them that one coming after him would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire. Hear him, "I indeed have baptized you with water; but he shall not only baptize you with water, but with fire, and the Holy Ghost."—Mark 1:6, I. T. John did not hold the Melchisedec priesthood, hence could not baptize with the Holy Ghost, as the Melchisedec priesthood holds all spiritual blessings. (D. C. 104: 9.)

It may be still urged that John "gave a knowledge of salvation by a remission of their sins" (Luke 1:76). That sounds like a contradiction, but we have a better translation which reads like this: "To give knowledge of salvation unto his people by baptism for remission of sins." Notice the language; he did not give salvation, but only a knowledge of salvation by the baptism which he taught, which was both a water baptism and a spiritual baptism. No contradiction here. John the Baptist was an Aaronic priest and held the keys of the preparatory gospel, and to administer in outward ordinances the letter of the gospel, the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins agreeably to the covenants and commandments (D. C. 104: 10), which baptism alone does not remit sins, for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. Hence the law of carnal commandments remained until Christ put them away, nailing it to his cross.

"Now, this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts, and could not endure his presence. . . . Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins, and the law of carnal commandments."—D. C. 83: 4. Here seems to be a conflict again, but let us see to what extent their sins were remitted under the law. It must be remembered that this priesthood could only administer in outward ordinances: "Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal [fleshly, or pertaining to flesh] ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation" (Heb. 9: 9, 10), "which sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh" (ibid., 9: 13). So in the absence of the Melchisedec priesthood there could not be a complete remission of sins; but in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year (Heb. 10: 3; Lev. 16: 34). So without the Melchisedec priesthood none could be made perfect. In the ordinances of this priesthood the power of godliness is manifest, and without the ordinances thereof and the authority of the (Melchisedec) priesthood the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh (D. C. 83: 3). One of the ordinances is laying on of hands for the baptism of the Spirit. Hence without this priesthood none could be baptized or born into the kingdom of heaven.

The Savior in speaking to the Nephite apostles called them by name, saying, "Ye shall call on the Father in my name, in mighty prayer; and after ye have done this, ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost; and in my name shall ye give it, for thus do mine apostles."—Book of Mormon, Moroni 2.

We have shown that under the law of Moses and in connection with the Aaronic priesthood, none could be made perfect. Hence the necessity of giving certain other officers for the perfecting of the saints. (Eph. 4: 11.)

We wish to present one or two more Scripture passages against the idea of a remission of sins by "water baptism" alone. The Lord said to Adam, "Even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by the blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; . . . For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified."—Gen. 6: 62, 63, I. T.

Again, "Now I say unto you, that ye must repent, and be born again" (B. of M., Alma 5:3); as much as to say, repent and be baptized.

Again, "Yea, Blessed are they who shall believe in your words, and come down into the depths of humility, and be baptized; for they shall be visited with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and shall receive a remission of their sins."—Book of Mormon, 1. e., Nephi 5:33.

"Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost."—Ibid., 12:23.

"And after they had been received unto baptism, and were wrought upon and cleansed by the power of the Holy Ghost, they were numbered among the people."—Book of Mormon, 1. e., Moroni 6:4.

Once more, "and again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; . . . and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of their parents."—D. C. 68:4.

So it seems to me that this is a very important question, and one that we should be able to define. So if the position set forth in this paper is not in harmony with the books will some brother please set me right, and at the same time have the "books" to harmonize. Yours for the advancement of truth,

J. R. McCLAIN.

LET US HAVE NO IFS.

This being a rainy morning I sat down to read the Voice of Warning, and on page 54 I find a sentence closing with these words: "Or else it will prove that Jesus Christ was an imposter and his promises of no effect." This so jarred upon me that I arose at once and got pen and paper to record my protest. I see Jesus as plainly in my mind as I see my own face in a mirror, and I see him first as the babe, then as the youth, then as the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, going up and down among his brethren healing their sick, opening the eyes of the blind, directing all to the way of life, and yet persecuted and reviled by the very ones he came to bless. Then I see him in silence before Pilate hearing the accusations of those holding the highest authority among his people, Pilate the judge saying, "I find no fault in him." And in his humiliation this his judgment was taken away and the judge, yielding to the popular clamor, turns him over to the rabble. Then I see him in the bitterness of scorn clothed with a purple robe, and on his head a crown of thorns, buffeted and tormented. Then I see him bearing his own cross up the fatal hill, and see him fastened thereto with the cruel nails, permitting himself to be offered as a sacrifice for the sins of the world, finally crying out, It is finished!

Three days pass by, days of darkness, discouragement, and gloom, and then I see him the risen Lord, the King of glory. Gone, for ever gone, the agony of Gethsemane and the suffering of the cross! All power is given him now, both in heaven and on earth. He teaches his disciples yet forty days, when they behold him taken up into glory and hear the angels as they assure them that this same Jesus shall in like manner come again.

Then by the eye of faith I see this same Jesus on the right hand of the Majesty on high, heir of all things, receiving the adoration of angels and of all the blood-washed throng, and yet to be crowned King of kings and Lord of lords, the only hope of struggling humanity.

Now drop from this sublime height to the sentence first quoted, "Or else it will prove Jesus Christ was an impostor," etc. How it shocks you! I am aware that the author believed Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, and no possibility of imposture about him. Hence the uselessness of the expression. It is akin to, though worse than, the statement often made by some of our elders, "If the Bible be true," etc., or "If this is not so, then the Bible be false," and like expressions, all of which are jarring to one who believes "that the Bible contains the word of God so far as it is translated correctly."

Brethren, the last statement is true, and Jesus is the embodiment of truth, the Son of God. Let us have no ifs about it.

OUR GIFTS AND OPPORTUNITIES.

Sitting this cold, snowy morning, at the home of Bro. Oscar Reynolds, with the wind whistling and blowing in at every crack, many thoughts have been brought to mind, some of which I present. My mind goes back six or seven years to the time I entered the waters of baptism, I being the first to take that step in our town, as a Latter Day Saint. As I was led up the bank by Sr. Keck, I remarked that my wet clothes would soil hers. But she cared nothing for that; was only too glad to do so in such a cause. "And now," she says, "I must write to Floyd to-night about it." It seemed she could hardly wait to speed on to him the glad news that rejoiced her own heart so much; for he had said to her a year before, while I was visiting them: "You mark my words, Mrs. Phipps will be a Latter Day Saint in time."

I had withdrawn from the Christian Church with which I had been connected over thirty years, for I found more in God's word than what they taught, and could be satisfied with them no longer. I did not then know I would ever go in any church again. I went to different ones, but found none that I could affiliate with. The Baptists gave me to understand they would receive me without again being dipped, although contrary to their rules. But they seemed to think me truly converted, even if I did come out of the Christian Church. Both the M. E. and St. Paul's Churches were looking anxiously in my direction. I took an active part in their meetings, and they seemed to have great confidence in me. Being then outside of any church did not deter me from doing what good I could. I could go to the mourner's bench when called on to talk to the mourners; but if the preachers had known what texts I quoted and the advice I gave them, they would no doubt have been more slow to ask my help. One thing they found I would not do, that was to go into the crowd and coax them up to the mourner's bench.

But time passed on. I can see now that God's hand was in it all. When I look back over the past years, and see how I have been led step by step, my heart fills with gratitude and love that I have such a kind and loving Father. I feel that I can say, "Truly, my ways have been ordered by the Lord." And as I saw for days before the Annual Conference of 1901 convened, when in prayer, the Spirit of God hovering over the church at Independence in the form of a cloud, so I can now see how the loving Father's eye has ever been on me, that my paths have been ordered by him, and that I have been preserved to enter, rejoice in, and do a little good in this latter-day work.

I read everything that came in my way of a religious nature. Others knew this, and they were eager to supply me with their literature, disciplines, articles of faith, etc.

The W. C. T. U. claimed much of my attention for years; and while an active worker in this, holding district, county, and local offices, writing a temperance column for our town paper, keeping in touch with each local W. C. T. U. in the district, and reporting to State organ, it seemed for years that the active leadership of new societies starting up in our town devolved much upon me, until my husband called a halt. Told those coming for my help that I had more on my hands now than I was able to do, and I positively should not take on any more work. I would not have my friends think me more capable to do all this than many others, but I had a willing mind and loving heart toward God and man, and felt a responsibility to do what I could, and God helped me.

I visited and sat up with the sick, and begged necessities for the poor. (In looking back now, think in those days I made a pretty good beggar.) I rode out often with the Doctor (my husband), and while he issued out medicine to the sick I found a chance often to administer spiritual food and encouragement. While engaged in these different avenues of work, you may be sure time did not hang heavily on my hands.

And why am I telling you all this? To what does it tend?

Years ago I would not have written this, because it looks like bragging. But I am getting on the decline of life, and if I can say anything as an incentive or stimulant to help those in earlier life to work for humanity, then I shall not have penned these lines in vain. I have never been able to understand how some have to complain that there is nothing for them to do. Perhaps you are looking for some great thing. You may want some place God sees you are not capable of filling. Take my advice. Go humbly to God in secret prayer day by day, ask his guidance, and tell him you are willing to do anything, however humble, he may put in your way.

I was deeply impressed one morning as our janitor was building a fire at church. I thought: That is his work; another must superintend the Sunday-school; another keep the books; another preach; another write for the papers that all may read; another's time be devoted to raising a large family; another to hospitality in feeding the Saints and the poor; and so on, each doing God's work and filling his mission. Each place is important, and each has to be filled. They are all needed. We each have need of the other. Well, I got quite a sermon from running out those thoughts. I believe God will bless us if doing his will. Dear Saints, shall I tell you a secret? No! it is not a secret, but a fact that makes me, oh, so thankful to my Father. I never write for our church papers but I ask God to help with wisdom to write just what is best. I have come to feel more deeply in the last year or so that God has given me this talent, to write. I realize it more and more. What I want to tell you is, every time I sit down to write, God gives me much of his Spirit, more than I often receive at other times. Isn't he good, not only to give me the desire, but to give so much of his Spirit? Surely we have a good Father. How can we help loving him? I know that we have trials; deep, almost heartbreaking we feel them to be at times, but God's hand is over all, and he afflicts us only in love.

Oh, if we could always feel that; but poor, blind human nature can not always see it, and sometimes we fail to grasp the promises that are always the same. When we can not see through the clouds that obscure the sun we know it is there just the same, but we are too apt to think God is not near when we do not feel his presence.

"There are lonely hearts to cherish,
As the days are going by."

So God has to touch our own hearts with the troubles and sorrows of life, that we may the better know how to sympathize with others, just as the Savior was tempted in all points that we are, or he could not have known how to feel for us, and bear with our infirmities, as well as comfort us in our troubles and afflictions. And we know from experience that the harder the trials the more often God comes and touches us with the finger of his love, comforting us by dreams, visions, angel's visits, and by his Spirit. It seems so natural to us to look at the things seen instead of the unseen. We want to trust to the things that are made evident before us, instead of what God gives us from time to time, with the addition of plain promises in his word, and we have to cry mightily for more faith. It is often his way of bringing us nearer to him, and implanting that faith and confidence in him that we so much need, yet so often lack.

I know there are many sorrowing ones among us, and from different causes. My heart goes out to them in loving sympathy. After I came in the church I read that we were told to desire the best gifts. I was studying which one to pray for, but soon discovered that I had the very best. It was not tongues, as I thought it might be, but the gift of love, or charity. I came to feel that it was the best, and that I had rather have it than any other, for surely with that we can have more influence for good than with any other. And so it is my daily prayer that that love may increase toward God and mankind. To be a blessing to others is the desire of my heart.

HOW MUCH SHALL WE KNOW?

While reading the Ensign of December 12, 1901, I was struck with a few sentences of a letter, or rather the thought they conveyed to my mind. One was this: "The gospel, pure and simple, is what the people need." It brings very forcibly to my mind a conversation had one time shortly after I was baptized into the Latter Day Saint Church. After hearing a sermon on "preexistence of man," I asked an elder this question (which had been propounded to me by my brother who was not in the church, but had heard the same sermon), Did we come into this world by our own free will and consent, or were we sent here without choice in the matter? If the latter be the case, why were we under the Adamic sin? Imagine my surprise when he refused to answer it, but after arguing awhile, pro and con, he said it was not wisdom to tell these things always to lay members. However, I want to say here to the elder's credit, he gave me all the information desired, and more than I ever dreamed of. I have not forgotten this conversation; perhaps never will. It had ceased to trouble me as formerly, but when I read, "The gospel, pure and simple, is what the people need," and connecting it with a talk I had with a brother who said, "All the elders know and understand these deep things, but do not think it wise to teach it," I was troubled again.

As I represent one of the people that hear the things taught from the pulpit and other sources, and one anxious to learn of God and more of the gospel, I would like to know what the "gospel, pure and simple," includes. To whom was the command given, "Feed my sheep"? Who is the shepherd? I know that it is not wisdom to tell all one knows, yet I know, too, there is a happy medium which offers an escape for the two extremes. I am three years old in this work, hardly know the first letter in the alphabet of this great latter-day work, yet a is the first letter in the word advance. And all mothers know a child three years old needs something besides mere milk, and if everything to the nourishing of the "sheep" is not given from the stand, or in fireside talks in answer to questions asked, how are the "sheep" to be fed? When Paul was told by the angel to go into Damascus to Ananias and learn from him what the Lord wanted him to do, it seems to me that Ananias delved into the deep things immediately. Some, I presume, will say Paul was a fit subject. Well, grant that he was, when a question is asked is not that evidence enough to one that food is wanted? Who shall be the judge in these cases? In Matthew 5:6 we read: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." Now, some desire to be filled. Who is to do the filling? "Feed my sheep." (John 21:17.) I often imagine if the priesthood knew how hungry and parched our hearts get for something besides bread and milk, they would give us some of the hard things that we might cut our teeth on, anyway.

In favor of my plea, I will relate the following: A few weeks back an elder gave us a feast of good things in the shape of three sermons on the deep things of the kingdom. "Preexistence of man," "Christ's mission," etc. I never saw a town so stirred in my life over three sermons. Question after question were asked by the people, and they seemed so hard and new to the Saints, they trembled, almost breathless with fear, thinking our man could not answer them. I can not tell the joy of the Saints when each was answered with such ease to the confounding of the others. One Saint said to me he almost left the church, he was so sure the elder would get caught; he would not take twenty-five dollars each for those sermons; that God seemed a new being to him, and the world seemed new also. He was more anxious than ever to live a faithful life. He was baptized just about three months ago. Some of the orthodox, hardened with prejudice, were invited and were informed what the subject would be. They came and heard, and most all have said it was the most sensible doctrine they ever heard, and quite a number are investigating. Who can tell what the people think about during these serious moments, or what they need, but God? A sister who has been in the church for a number of years said these sermons came in answer to her prayers. For some time she has felt the need of more knowledge and had asked God to give her what she needed; was looking for it by revelation, when lo! it came through his authorized servants. My opinion is that it would be well for the priesthood to take a supply of hard rubber rings and rattlers for the teething portion of the Saints, as well as milk for the "babes." Then we will have the true shepherd, and the commands, "Feed my sheep," "Feed my lambs," will be kept more perfectly.

THOUGHTS ON CONSECRATION.

Is the law of consecration, sought to be enforced by the Bishopric, in harmony with the law given of God for the government of the church as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 2, 3, 4, 10? It seems from the instruction given that individual righteousness is the principal requisite among the Saints in redeeming Zion. We read in section 36 that the Lord called his people Zion because they were of one heart and mind and dwelt in righteousness and there were no poor among them. In section 102 we are told it was because of transgression that Zion could not be redeemed in 1834. Very serious charges were preferred against the church as a body:

They had not learned obedience.

Were full of all manner of evil.

Neglected the poor and afflicted among them.

Were not united.

"And my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience. In consequence of these transgressions of my people it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion that they (the elders) may be prepared. And that my people may be taught more perfectly and have experience concerning their duty and the things I require at their hands."

It would seem there was some little excuse for the church in that day: 1. The elders were not prepared. Had not properly taught the saints their duty, either through lack of knowledge in reference to Zion's redemption, or the time to redeem Zion had not come. This seems to have been a time of trial. The Lord had told them he would have a tried people. These instructions were given to a people under different conditions than the church to-day (see D. C. 98: 10, wise men to buy land) and in my judgment do not apply to the people to-day any more than the saying of Christ to the young man, "Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor."

The Lord told them Zion's redemption can not be brought to pass "until mine elders are endowed with power from on high." "For behold I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon mine elders inasmuch as they are faithful and humble before me. Therefore it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait a little season for the redemption of Zion. Behold I do not require at their hand to fight the battles of Zion. As I have said in a former commandment, so will I fulfill; I will fight your battles."

From these scriptures it would seem the Lord accepted the effort they put forth. They had made the attempt to redeem the land, whether much or little, it matters not, according to the instruction. The Lord knew their willingness and their weakness and the terrible and overwhelming odds they had to contend with, but he was bound to try them, even as Abraham was tried. When these revelations were given, land was cheap. Now conditions have changed and can not in any sense apply to Saints or the church now. The Lord said to them, "I have heard your prayers and I will accept your offering."

In reflecting upon the charges preferred against the church in 1833, we ask, What are the indications now for Zion's redemption? Does any one know that the "little season" is past? Has the church learned obedience? Is there less evil within her borders? Do the elders understand their duty so that they can more perfectly instruct the Saints? Are the quorums united? Do they teach the same things in regard to consecration and redeeming Zion? Have they received that great endowment, without which the Lord says that Zion can not be redeemed? The Lord told the church that he would counsel his servant Joseph Smith, the then presiding officer, in reference to this matter, the redemption of Zion. (See D. C. 102: 6.) And I believe, Mr. Editor, whenever the time comes for consecration and redeeming Zion the Lord is in duty bound, under favorable conditions in the church, to fulfill the promise made; namely, I will counsel my servant, whoever that man may be that is called of God, to receive instruction for the church in reference to Zion's redemption. If he has raised up a man, a Moses man, the church is bound to receive his words as he receives them from God. Otherwise the people can not and will not have confidence in man who presumes to teach independently of that counsel. No matter how earnestly and plausibly he may try to enforce a law given to others, unless it comes through the proper channel, the man appointed of God to receive counsel for the church, and because of this lack, not having the proper counsel through the proper authority, the law of consecration is less understood by the people than was the law of tithing. (Read D. C. 122: 5.)

It seems to me, as an individual member, in view of what has been written and left on record, that the law of consecration, whether right or wrong, will not be observed unless it shall be taught and enforced by the precepts of the chief missionaries of the church by direction of the man appointed to receive counsel from God. We ask, Has this rule been observed? Will the Lord deviate or turn aside from what he said he would do when the proper time comes? In Doctrine and Covenants 102: 5 in reference to the church, when these revelations were given, the Lord says, I have heard their prayers and will accept their offering (their attempt to redeem Zion), and it is expedient in me that they should be brought thus far for a trial of their faith. We learn by section 42 it was said to the church, ye shall observe the laws ye have received and be faithful. And ye shall hereafter receive church covenants such as shall be sufficient to establish you both here and in the New Jerusalem. Faithfulness, obedience, right doing, remembering the poor are prerequisites to the redeeming of Zion. The law we have received is a preparatory law. More will be given, but the law of righteousness will always prevail in the New Jerusalem, and by it alone we can be prepared to become citizens of the new condition. Then we believe the law of consecration will take effect, will be brought into operation, will be observed, because understood, having been thoroughly instructed, properly taught by those elders that have been faithful and received additional power from on high and counsel through the Moses man. In section 98: 4, in reference to that people of old: "Notwithstanding their sins, my bowels are filled with compassion toward them; I will not utterly cast them off." The Lord knew that tribulations and sorrow awaited them and he told them notwithstanding their tribulation Zion, or the location of Zion, should not be moved, though her children are scattered. Behold, I say unto you, the redemption of Zion must needs come by power (not by consecration). Therefore I will raise up a man who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel. "And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption. . . . And inasmuch as they follow the counsel which they receive [that is the first step to be taken] they shall have power after many days to accomplish all things pertaining to Zion."—102: 10.

We find nothing more respecting consecration till four years after, when the question was asked, How much tithing is required? The answer is given in Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1. This rule has been a law to the church and is in harmony with the rule given in section 42, "If thou lovest me," "thou wilt remember the poor." And "it shall come to pass" (D. C. 106: 2) (something in the future, after many days), when the Lord has fought their battles; when the sword of God's indignation has fallen in behalf of his people; when the time comes that God remembers his promise as made in section 38, paragraphs 4, 5, "I will give it unto you for the land of your inheritance, if you seek it with all your hearts. . . . Hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws when I come. . . . Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me."

I offer these queries and suggestions for the consideration of all Saints. Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE DERRY.

THE "MORMON PERIL."

Public attention is once more directed to what the New York Evangelist terms "the Mormon peril" by a manifesto issued by the secretaries of the Home Missionary Societies of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregationalist, Disciples of Christ, and United Brethren churches. An appeal is made to resist the encroachments of "Mormonism" on the ground that "it is rapidly growing"; that "though often denied, there is no doubt that its practice of polygamy continues"; and that "its missionary activity throughout the Union is almost incredible." The Reverend John D. Nutting, the secretary of the Utah Gospel Missions and a worker among the "Mormons" during the past six years, supplements this manifesto in an article in The Independent (April 17). He says:

"The census of 1870 gave the whole population of Utah as 88,374, of which about 80,000 were Mormons. The census of 1900 finds in Utah 276,740 people, of which number about 220,000 must be Mormons—showing a net increase of 140,000 in that State alone during thirty years, in which period probably about one third of their whole number have located in regions outside. Again, in 1890, according to the census, Mormonism had only 144,352 adherents in the entire United States; while last December it claimed 310,000, nearly all in this country. If these figures can be trusted—and investigation leads the writer to believe them practically correct—Mormonism has more than doubled the number of its adherents during the twelve years which have witnessed the greatest activity of Christian work among them! A recent editorial in the Mormon organ claimed that over 100 converts had been baptized in Ohio during the past year, and over 200 in Western Pennsylvania; 1,100 to 1,300 were reported in detail from the Southern States during each of several recent years, and reliable reports of successful activity came from scores of other quarters. The latest special propaganda is that to Japan, begun last year."

"With such a rate of increase," remarks The Evangelist, "the peril which the statement fore-shadows is no chimera." Mr. Nutting sees no solution of the "Mormon problem" except through patient educational work. He declares:

"The key to the whole problem lies in finding some means by which Christian truth can be brought into wide and kindly contact with the Mormon mind. Artificial obstacles cunningly planted in the mind by a selfish 'priesthood' have thus far stopped the usual channels of religious truth. The people have been most assiduously taught that a salaried ministry and the Christian church are both of them false, hypocritical, and corrupt, working only for base and selfish ends. A system of block espionage adds its priestly force to keep the people away from the gospel in these customary channels. We must avoid these objections, though false, by taking the fundamental truth to them through unchurchly, unclerical methods at their houses showing truly our love for their welfare by evident self-denial for them."

Some of the daily papers express the fear that the new crusade against "Mormonism" will do more harm than good. "Persecution," observes the New York Mail and Express, "has always been a weapon that hurts the wielder worst." "The average person," adds the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, "will be strongly inclined to think that the peril is not quite so great as is supposed." The New York Freeman's Journal (Rom. Cath.) takes a very unsympathetic view of the various Protestant solutions of the "Mormon" problem. "Mormonism," it declares, "is an offshoot of Protestantism;" adding:

"It makes no impression on Catholic countries, Ireland, France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, or in the South American republics. If it be a political, moral, and social disease its bacilli seem to flourish in Protestant countries; Catholic countries seem to be immune. We would therefore advise the mission-boards to recall their agents from Catholic countries, where they are of no practical utility, and set them to work at and about Salt Lake, and see if they can discover an antidote and prophylactic. . . .

"Gentlemen of the mission-boards, we understand you; we know your literature and your methods; we have no confidence in you; we can not yoke with you against the Mormons; nor can we yoke with them against you. You are both alike in error and in antagonism to the Catholic Church; with the difference that you are more meddlesomely so, more aggressively so, and more offensively so than the Mormons are."

The Deseret News (Salt Lake City), the newspaper organ of the Latter-day Saints, rests easy in the belief that "there is no danger that truth will be defeated" by "slanderous attacks against an inoffensive people." It continues:

"Just such charges were made against the Nazarene and his followers. Just such misrepresentations sent him to the cross, and millions of his adherents to dungeons, to the arena, to death in its most cruel forms. . . . Had the teachings of Christianity been accepted, there is no reason to doubt that the Roman empire would have remained. By rejecting Christianity, it sealed its own doom, while the hated and feared religion went on triumphant. And why should we not expect history to repeat itself to-day? Truth can not be suppressed. It may have its Good Friday of agony and darkness, and the earth may be rent around it by the furies of hell, but it will also have its resurrection morn with the chains of mortality bursted, with angels, and joy and gladness. And 'Mormonism' is truth."

—The Literary Digest, April 26, 1902.

If one would only confess it, in nine cases out of ten the command to a child to obey is not based upon that which is reasonable but comes from some whim or caprice of the parent. A child should always be impressed with the reasonableness and appropriateness of the request for obedience before he is thrown into a state of rebellion and revolt and, as the weaker party, is forced to surrender. The article by Doctor Murray, in the June Delineator, upon the Disobedient Child, will open a new line of thought to perplexed fathers and mothers, who may be inclined to believe that the whole fault lies with the children.

Original Poetry.

I Always Go To Jesus.

I always go to Jesus,
When troubled or distressed;
I always find a refuge
Upon his loving breast.
I tell him all my trials,
I tell him all my grief;
And while my lips are speaking
He gives my heart relief.

When full of dread foreboding,
And flowing o'er with tears,
He drives away my sorrow
And quiets all my fears.
He comprehends my weakness,
The peril I am in,
And he supplies the armor
I need to conquer sin.

When those are cold and faithless
Who once were fond and true,
With careless hearts forsaking
The old friends for the new,
I turn to Him whose friendship
Knows neither change nor end;
I always find in Jesus
A never-failing friend.

I always go to Jesus;
No matter when or where
I seek his gracious presence;
I am sure to find him there.
In times of joy or sorrow
Whate'er my needs may be,
I always go to Jesus,
And Jesus comes to me.

Bless the Near Ones.

The flowers bloom in paradise,
Beyond that golden strand;
Where angels sing, and saints rejoice,
A sacred, holy band.

There fields of verdure stretch away
As far as eyes can see
Of those who've gone before away
And longed with Christ to be.

Mansions of light are ever near,
As homes for Saints above,
Who live together without fear
With Christ our heavenly dove.

Before them stands the great white throne
Within that goodly land;
For God himself to them is known
In love and glory grand.

They see his smiling face of love
For which they longed before
They reached their spirit's home above
And opened wide the door.

Jesus they see at God's right hand,
Who plead for them before
With eloquence and power grand;
But now they part no more.

The tears are wiped from every eye
And all their trouble's gone;

No one shall weep, or mourn, or cry,
For now their victory's won.

O, if you wish to meet this band
And of that life partake
Within that good and heavenly land,
You must at once awake.

The call is from your Master true
Who wants you all to work
That you may now each duty do
And never, never shirk.

For there are souls on every hand
Who need your help to-day,
The poor, the sick, a fainting band,
With hair both dark and gray.

The stranger in our Sunday-school,
The beggar at your door,
Are looking for the golden rule
That Christ once taught of yore.

For words of comfort and of cheer
Poured from the soul within;
For clothes to warm, and food to cheer,
For theirs is scant and thin.

O, have you any such a home
Within the church to-day?
If so, dear Saints, why do you roam,
Or look so far away?

The little acts of good you do,
The fountain of your love,
Should be for wife and children true
Before they move above.

Not only so, but they should be
For every needy one,
Though poor or humble, bond or free,
For thus has Jesus done.

For, if we do these little things
They joy to us will bring,
For Christ's own voice we shall hear ring,
As angels chant and sing.

Fear not, my people, good and true,
You've done it unto me;
I give you all this life that's new
For deeds of good to me.

Productive and Unproductive People.

When a man puts money to productive uses it is the man that is the larger factor in the production; and the man who does not contribute his work or his thought or his skill, but only his money, properly gets a diminishing return. So, too, with "clerks"—those that are a part of the machinery for carrying out other men's plans. They are not primarily productive. They are either the young who yet lack training and experience, or they are of the class that remains secondary, and never becomes primary in the work of the world.

There could not be a more wholesome tendency in a democracy than the tendency that Mr. Watson's obvious but interesting generalization shows—not that anybody takes pleasure in the hard lot of millionaires and clerks, but the economic righteous do, per contra, get their reward. The economic righteous are they who successfully use the millionaires' money and the clerks' time; they are they who have skill and who (above all other qualities) have imagination; for production and imagination go hand in hand. It were more accurate to say, perhaps, that imagination leads the way. A man without it must reconcile himself to remain an unproductive millionaire or a clerk, and it makes little difference to the world which he is.—World's Work.

YOUR BOY AND YOU.

There comes a time to the best of mothers when she has to realize that her small boy is gone, and that a decided, and possibly reckless, youth has somehow crowded into his place. Keep a firm hold on the reins then, good mother, but hold lightly. The curb must be there, but it must not be felt. Let your boy feel that you are always ready for him, always in the mood for his moods. If St. Paul could be all things to all men that he might save some, can you afford to be less than all things to your boys that you may save all?

Whatever you may do, or leave undone, do not fret. Wild tempests may sweep below, but the stars in their courses shine calmly on. Your boy can not steer without some heavenly body to show him the way. Transmit its light: he may be too blinded by his own conceit to see it clearly for himself.

Let your boy feel that you are always ready for him, always interested in his plans, however wild they may be. You can no longer command him. If that has been your only hold, then may God have mercy on you and on him!

His judgment is beginning to grow, perhaps. Encourage it. Take him into your counsels. It will not hurt you to ask his advice about family matters. See how kindly he will take to being looked up to. Do you not like to have your friends put confidence in you? He is only another you. If his self-respect be small, you are cherishing its growth. How do you treat the tender plants in your garden? Do you keep sunshine away from them, and step on each tender little shoot as it lifts itself up to the unknown light of a great and strange world? And as the plants gain strength and courage to stand alone, do you nip off their leaves savagely and water them as with a flood that they have hard work to stand against? Do you leave them to droop for a bit of encouragement, to grow awry for want of a little support to guide them till strong enough to stand alone? Or do you furnish props on every side, and leave the full-grown stem a derision to beholders?

Never let your boy feel that the household is complete without him. He may prefer anything and everything to his home, but when his "reasons grow," he can not help coming back to it, if you are faithful to your trust. Never indulge in despair, however hopeless the case may seem, but keep a beautiful trust in him that will shine in your welcome. He may not be worthy, but he will grow to it.

Your boy may even lie to you. Some black drop from an unholy ancestor may have come down to him, unfiltered, through the veins of many generations. But do not quail. Be able, like noble Arnold of Rugby, to assure him that you take his word for it. There are good men who were shamed into goodness. You do not commit yourself to any wrong, and if there be one germ of God-likeness in his nature, even that shall not fall to the ground fruitless. Only be strong and of good courage, and trust God to give the increase.

Some children never know a puddle till they have waded clean through it and come out sticky on the other side. Some are born with a sort of divine foresight that not only reveals it at a distance, but keeps them out of it, and it out of their thoughts as well. Thank God if the latter sort belong to you, but do not lose courage with the former. Never lose courage. Some men reach heaven via state's prison.

Remember the father who saw his son while yet a great way off, and fell on his neck and kissed him. What if the boy had been kept out of sight until he was bathed, and offered the loan of a clean, good brother's suit by one of the servants? What if he had been cautiously admitted to the table from which the small boys were removed for fear of contamination? What if the silver had been locked up, and a bit of last year's mutton substituted for the fatted calf,—good enough, perhaps, for a man who had fed among swine, but not encouraging in the line of better living; for the physical stands before the spiritual, and one must keep to the natural order of sequence.

Remember, there is no meagerness with God, no grudging. Be as divine as possible in dealing with souls and with bodies. Your nature may be small, but it lies with you alone whether it shall remain small or attain heroic stature.

Do not tell me what might have been. In the celestial economy there are no might-have-beens. Think your thoughts, and live your life in the present. The fathers may have done well, but you are not the fathers. A new work has been given you to do, and new faculties to do it with. Does not a modern hymn say,

“The fathers had not all of thee,
New gifts are in thy grace”?

And if the fathers did not have and know it all, neither did the mothers. Your lessons are new with every sunrise and dewfall. You can not go back to the old primers and copy-books, nor to your ancestors' ways of bringing up a family. If they treated their wanderers like criminals, judged them, and cast them out as vagabonds on the face of the earth, what is that to you?

“Dear child, my name was Calvin, but I see things better now.”

Take of the things of God, and show them to your child. If the heart of the mother can not interpret the sacred book, it must be a hopeless mystery. And as you would have your child grow in knowledge and wisdom after he has become a man, see to it that you yourself grow. Every year that God honors you with should be, must be, a year of growth. After fifty you are to learn the things you did not know before fifty; after eighty, the things you did not know before eighty. Bodies without souls get full grown; souls never become full grown in this world, neither, let us pray, in the world to come.

This small sermon, not unlike an occasional one from the pulpit, has lost itself in a talk; but if it finds its devious way into the heart of some mother who is losing hope and courage because of her many trials and griefs, it has done its errand without help from text or heads.—Alyn Yates Keith, in Sunday School Times.

We have received the premium list of the Iowa State Fair for the year 1902. The management of the Iowa Fair is at work early, and the prospects are that the Fair will be even better than ever, which is saying a good deal. Last year the Iowa Department of Agriculture paid out over $19,000 in premiums to over five hundred exhibitors. The exhibit of live stock at the Iowa Fair is usually second to none. Last year over six hundred fifty cattle were on exhibition there, this being only about fifty less than were exhibited at the International stock show at Chicago. A number of improvements have been made on the grounds, and some commodious buildings erected for exhibition purposes. A large stock pavillion will be erected from funds granted by the Legislature. This is for the purpose of permitting the people to see comfortably the judging of stock. No admission to this pavillion will be charged. It will also be used during the year for holding stock sales. The Fair this year promises to be exceptionally good.

Advantages of Early Teaching and Training.

Childhood is the springtime of life when careful preparation must be made for the future. The wise husbandman will keep a lookout for the little weeds in the garden, and remove them before they grow large and so deeply rooted that in destroying them the tender plants are endangered. So those who are intrusted with the teaching and training of little ones should watch for every tendency to evil, that it may be overcome before it becomes a part of the nature.

The child who from infancy has been taught the principles of the gospel will have in later years, but will be able to go on to perfection. We can hardly estimate the true worth of such early instruction. Quite often we hear older ones of the church wish they might have had the privileges enjoyed in the Sunday-schools of to-day. They can see where they might have advanced much more rapidly and attained to greater perfection of character if they had known the true principles of life sooner. Impressions made in early years are usually so much so that some great teachers have thought the well-taught child might be subjected to any influence in after life and still be true to his early training.

So many little things go to make up the sum total of this early education, that it is not always easy to trace the effect to the cause. What may seem in a child may, if unchecked, be the overthrow of the man. The hasty temper may lead to murder; the gratified appetite to drunkenness, and so on through a long list of evil propensities.

Blessed, indeed, is the child who has the advantage of being well taught and helped to live according to that teaching. Such a one has every chance to develop a character that shall make him the joy and pride of his instructors; a power for good in society, one who can be trusted in all things. Some may thus develop in later life in spite of the lack of right teaching in earlier years, but this is the exception and not the rule. In studying the lives of those who have done much for the good of the world in any way, we will find almost invariably that as children they were taught the principles of truth and uprightness. Many have come from humble homes and have not had the benefits that wealth might bring, but they live in the hearts of the people long after their more wealthy associates are forgotten. Those who are given a thorough knowledge of the principles of righteousness in their early years are in possession of a heritage which can never be taken from them, but will prove to be of great worth to themselves and to all with whom they associate.

May we as workers in the Sunday-school be instrumental in imparting this knowledge to many little ones.

Is Home Class Work Practical?

I think a home class can be as interesting and instructive as any class in an organized school, and should be found in every home where it is not convenient to attend a large school. I started a class in my home over a year ago, with only two little girls, two and six years old, as pupils. I borrowed some back numbers of the primary Quarterlies as I did not wish to sign for the Quarterlies until I was sure our class would be a success. At that time I thought very little could be accomplished with only two pupils, neither of them being able to read or sing. But with over a year's experience in the work, I can say I know we can have a good, interesting Sunday-school at home. I believe God will recognize and bless our efforts just the same as he does those in a large school. My little girls seem just as anxious for their Sunday-school time, as other little ones do who attend large schools. I think they have learned the lessons just as well. My little girl, three years old, will often ask me during the week if we can not have Sunday-school to-day; or she will want me to tell her a story about Jesus. This is proof to me they like the work, while I have felt just as much interested and blessed while teaching my little class at home, as I ever did while teaching a class in a local Sunday-school.

In one way I think we can accomplish more than a larger school. We can begin to teach the little ones at home at a much earlier age than we can in a large school. What babe will not sit quietly on its mother's lap and listen to her tell stories and sing? While that same child could not be induced to go into a class with strange children until much older, and perhaps not at all. I know it is so with my little girl. To be sure the very small child will not learn all, and sometimes they may seem to hinder your work, but let them take part in the class. You will be surprised how quickly they will take hold of the work. My girls like to lead in prayer, and I let one repeat the Lord's prayer one Sunday and the other one the next Sunday. They are too young to compose their own prayers. I think this will help them to learn to pray. Let all join in singing even though they do not keep exact time. I think some of you would have smiled could you have entered our school when we first started. Just mamma singing and two baby voices repeating the words, but not much of the tune. We now have several songs we can sing quite well.

I would urge all who are not permitted to attend Sunday-school to have a little school of their own at home. You will perhaps find it to be quite a trial to begin such a work. I know I did. I believe God has blessed us in our work, though seemingly so small. I think it as much our duty to give our children spiritual food as it is to give them food for the body, and the sooner we begin this work the easier it will be. You know "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined." We can not force the child in this work, only lead them in the right direction. And when we once get them interested, Sunday will not seem such a long, dull day, but will be looked forward to with pleasure. Who can tell the amount of good we may do by having a little Sunday-school at home? Even home ties will become more precious. And when our children go from home they are better prepared for the trials of life. They will long remember what they were taught at home. Jesus said, "Feed my Lambs."

May God bless us all is my prayer.

BELLE LEISE.

Teachers of Infants in the Sunday-Schools.

Do you know that the General Association is publishing just what you have wanted for years? The Study Hour is a course of lessons prepared for your help, containing a series of lessons for the very little ones—those too young to read, and almost too young to think. The lessons are upon such topics as are calculated to teach the idea of God through nature; also the simpler lessons of morals and ethics drawn from incidents in the life of Christ and elsewhere—simpler lessons, but often the last to be learned.

In addition to the lessons themselves there is much helpful reading upon "Studies of child nature," "Illustrations," "Suggestions," "Picture talk," "Object lessons," "Scripture study;" in short, all you need to prepare yourself to interest and instruct the babies as you have never been able to do before.

Dear teachers, you need this help. You have felt incompetent to get hold of the children as you desired to do. Your children have come to you hungry and left you unfed, naked, and unclothed. You have asked God to give you help—and did you believe you would get it? Your prayers have been heard, and through the General Association have been answered, though some of you do not know it and are still praying. Get the Study Hour and study it, asking God to help you to use wisely what he has given you in answer to your prayers, and "ye shall find rest to your souls," and you shall find food for the babies such as they can assimilate.

Editors Herald: I want to make an appeal to all lovers of truth and those who want to send the gospel to every creature, to aid us in getting a tent. We have Bro. J. W. Adams here, and he has a goodly experience in tent work, and we have started in to raise money to buy a tent. We have no district here, and we appeal to all who want to help in the spreading of this glorious gospel.

I have baptized eight since my report and others are investigating. We have a hall for Sunday afternoons only, and the rest of our time must be put in on the street unless we succeed in securing a tent. Bro. Adams is a good worker and we are sure we can reach many more by tent work than any other way. Please send donations to J. W. Adams or J. W. Metcalf. Our address is 1819 Ninth Street, Louisville, Kentucky.

Dear Herald: Among the papers we take, I always peruse your columns first. I do not see how any of the Saints can get along without you, for you are always laden with good news. Many times when I have felt downcast I have read your pages and been made to rejoice. And when the books are opened before the judgment bar of God, as a witness that shall judge the world, I believe your fair pages will be there to testify that you went to the nations of the earth and warned them to fit and prepare themselves for the great day wherein they shall give an account of all their deeds.

A few days ago I was talking to a Catholic. I asked him what he meant by the word Catholic, and he could not tell me. He said he used to know but he had forgotten. Then I asked him what the gospel was? He had not forgotten that, because he never knew. I told him Webster told us it was the will or grace of God, revealed through a mediator to fallen humanity, and that it included all that ever was revealed through Jesus Christ and the apostles. I told him that if he came short of anything that was given by Jesus Christ he would not be able to enter into that beautiful city.

Dear Saints, let us be up and doing, for I believe the hastening time is upon us. Your brother, F. N. HARP.

Editors Herald: Myself and family intend to leave here on "S. S. Sierra," May 13, for home, in company with Brn. A. H. Smith and L. A. Gould. Bro. Smith's health continues to be poor here; I think the water does not agree with him. He does his work under constant difficulty. However, his work will prove of great value to the mission.

Many of the Saints are very pleased to get their patriarchal blessings, which will be a source of future strength and blessings to them. One of the worst drouths ever known here has been raging the past six months and in some parts there is no food or water for man or beast.

Here in Sydney, vegetables are scarce and high and the outlook for winter is very gloomy, for poor people. Butter forty cents and steadily advancing, they expect it to be sixty-two cents during winter. Milk is ten cents a quart, and everything higher than I have seen it for eight years. Most of the Saints live near the coast where the drought is not near so severe, but yet all classes will be more or less effected by the great ruin wrought by months of dry neather, heat, and fire inland.

All efforts to eradicate the bubonic plague here have failed; it continues in a mild form. "Change and decay in all around I see."

Wife's health is very poor and I trust the change back to her native clime will revive her health.

JOHN KALER.

PLEASANTON, Iowa, May 13.

Editors Herald: It is now many years since the Saints of the Pleasanton Branch began first to talk of erecting a house of worship. It was not, however, until December 29, 1890, that anything definite resulted from the talk; but at a meeting held on that date various committees were appointed, their duties defined, and certain discretion given them. They went to work with a will, funds were solicited, a site procured, and a plan of building drafted. Many donated material, others gave labor, and a good beginning was made in 1891. The work had so far progressed that in the spring of 1893 the house was opened for services, President Joseph Smith preaching the first sermon. The structure remained unfinished for several years; but with the coming in of the new century a fresh effort was put forth, and the building was completed this spring. Dedicatory services were held May 11, in charge of Elder John Smith, president of Lamoni State, Bishop E. L. Kelley preached the sermon and Apostle J. W. Wight offered the prayer. Elder William Anderson, Bishop of Stake, read a brief statement giving the history and cost of the building. The Lamoni choir, thirty-five strong, furnished enlivening and appropriate music, which added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion, giving much pleasure to the Saints and citizens in attendance. There was preaching in the afternoon by Elder J. W. Wight and at night by Elder John Smith.

A genuine and agreeable surprise occurred at the close of the afternoon service. While the choir was rendering an anthem, Bro. O. W. Parker, clerk of the branch, and Sr. Bessie Leeper, daughter of one of our leading townsmen, walked up the aisle conducted by the president of the branch, and when the last strains of the music had died away Elder Wight pronounced the magic words which made them husband and wife. The choir then sang "Lead, kindly light," Bro. F. B. Blair pronounced the benediction, and for fifteen or twenty minutes congratulations were the order of the day.

The day was a happy one in the history of the Pleasanton Saints. There was good weather, good preaching, good music, and good nature. A good feeling remained after the exercises of the day were over, and it is to be hoped the happy influence will long continue to dominate the lives of the participants.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting: Having been appointed by the late General Conference, in charge of the Rocky Mountain Mission, I take this means of addressing you. Not having been in that territory for a number of years, and some of it never, and being unfamiliar with the methods employed by those preceding me calculated to secure best results, it will be necessary for me to follow the suggestions of others as to plans until time and opportunity have been afforded to take a survey of the field in person. Those on the ground and familiar with the opportunities offered and demands of the work know best how to proceed, and should push out at once diligently, and employ every legitimate available means to prosecute the work and let the people know the good we have to present to them, in public and in private, as wisdom may direct. Responsibility rests upon all of the laborers as well as the missionary in charge, to stand for the honor, success, and glory of the cause. It will be some time yet before the one in charge will be present in the mission. It can not be avoided. He intends to go via Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho, and as soon as practicable. The following is thought to be the best outline of work or plan for the present: Bro. F. L. Sawley in Salt Lake and Utah Counties, Utah, with Provo objective point. A. M. Chase from Salt Lake City north, with Ogden objective point. W. S. Pender and Swen Swenson to travel in Utah, Bro. Swenson to labor mainly among the Scandinavians. Brn. S. D. and John Condit and A. J. Layland will labor in Western Wyoming and Idaho. Bro. D. C. White will reach Montana soon and aid the work wherever his services are most needed in the mission. The missionaries should encourage the Saints in the branches and in the various localities where they chance to live, as opportunity offers, in connection with their efforts to push the work in new places. For the present, there will be no "field" laborers appointed in charge, but each missionary will be expected to report directly to the missionary in charge. The old caution is a good one, and should not be forgotten in our labors, "Be ye wise servants and harmless as doves." For we are on the Lord's errand and should be guided by his counsel, for without him we can do nothing. The gospel standard will attract the honest and truth-loving, others are especially desired. Though aggressive, we do not attack men, but creed and dogma that have no warrant in the word of God. Mere contention over dogma and "old wives' fables," etc., is unprofitable and often should be avoided. But when pushed to show the merits and strength of the faith, by the enemy, then pitch in. With "Faith, hope, and charity, without which you can do nothing," go forward, and may God supplement our every effort for good, so that with united strength and concentration of effort, splendid results may be achieved the present conference year. It is expected that the Saints will encourage all "field laborers" as opportunity offers, which no doubt you will take pleasure in doing. May the inspiration and power, in and through this great latter-day gospel message, abide with you each and all, confirming you daily, so that though our burdens be heavy we may joyfully and hopefully look forward to the future for a remuneration for all sacrifices made and services rendered. Fraternally, in the faith, Wm. H. Kelley, Kirtland, Ohio, May 13, 1902. Permanent address, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

COLORADO, PACIFIC SLOPE, AND BRITISH COLUMBIA MISSIONS.

The assignments within above missions are as follows: The city of Denver will be the objective point for High Priest J. B. Roush, and being district president, he will utilize the local force at his command in prosecuting work therein. His physical condition will not warrant extended labor throughout the Colorado Mission, nor will he be required to leave the city of Denver except at his own discretion. He will, however, remain in charge of the mission as heretofore, but Brn. J. W. Morgan and J. M. Stubbart will be associated with him in said charge, and such subdivisions of the territory as he may advise and they may agree upon, will be under their directorate, together with the assignment of localities for the several workers appointed to that mission. John C. Foss, one of the Presidents of the Seventies, has moved his family into Southern California, and he will have charge of the mission work therein. High Priests T. W. Williams and Albert Carmichael have resided there for years, and the former is district president. These will have the branches where they reside as objective points for missionary labor, extending, of course, outward as may be practicable and agreed upon between them and the one in charge, and it is expected that they will aid the latter by counsel, etc., in obtaining a knowledge of the field and its demands, and further as may be desired. Northern and Central California Districts will be in charge of R. Etzenhouser, of the Seventy. This union of the two districts for missionary work is made necessary by the limited number of laborers assigned, and the consequent probable necessity for transfer of men from one district to another to meet arising exigencies. From this field, however, will be exempted the cities of San Francisco and Oakland, which will be under the charge of High Priest J. M. Terry. Oregon and Nevada will be in charge of C. E. Crumley, of the Seventy, who is acquainted with the field to quite an extent. By the death of Bro. D. L. Harris we lose a much-needed and desirable worker; but, by arrangement with Bishop Kelley, we are enabled to place High Priest George E. Harrington in this field, and he will be associated with the one in charge, leaving Brn. Arthur Allen and W. A. Goodwin as associates under Bro. Crumley's direction. Washington and British Columbia will be in charge of J. W. Roberts, of the Seventy, and Elders N. V. Sheldon, D. E. Powell, and T. W. Davis will be the force at his command. All the laborers appointed to the several States named will please report regularly to the one in charge of said States, who will in turn embody the essence of said reports in his report to the general missionary in charge. It will be seen that Arizona has not been provided for in the above, and it may be found necessary for the general missionary in charge to select one or more of the laborers assigned to above fields to supply demands in said State, or assist him elsewhere during the year. We shall try, however, to avoid all unnecessary interference in this direction, but will expect hearty coöperation from all concerned should exigencies demand it. The laborers are exceedingly few for so great a field. This is to be regretted; but let us thereby be aroused to a greater diligence and apply our consecrated energies the more wisely, that time be not wasted nor opportunities lost. Remember that we are coworkers with Christ—his yoke is upon us—we bear his name. Let the year's record bear the evidence of this assurance. Let his example inspire us. To the extent of my strength I will try to actively coöperate with you. Will visit as many parts as may be consistent with necessity and economy. May the Master be very close to us always and make our work fruitful in such results as shall be permanent and delightful to him. Will the brethren placed in charge, as above, please publish their addresses at once so that those under their direction may know where to reach them quickly by mail? Your co-laborer, Joseph Luff.

To the Missionaries and Saints of the Ohio District; Greeting: At this the beginning of another conference year, there are increased duties and responsibilities awaiting us each; and as the church has become more fully organized, and added forces sent out into the world, it is, and should be, expected that more extensive and more thorough work should be accomplished than ever before. It behooves all who have been called from darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel, to go forth with our whole mights to aid in disseminating the grand and elevating principles of salvation that have been made known unto us. The day of the end is approaching, and Satan, it seems, is marshalling his forces for a great struggle in opposing God's work. Prospects are that we will have more and varied opposition to meet in the near future than we have had in the past. Brethren and Saints, let us be on the alert and stand ready to defend, and to aid in defending the truth of God. By arrangement of the missionaries in charge, we have to assist us during the present year the following noble brethren: T. J. Beatty, J. L. Goodrich, V. M. Goodrich, S. J. Jeffers, E. E. Long, and H. E.

French. These brethren, we feel sure, are willing to go wherever the way may open and do all they can to spread the work. We desire to keep in close touch with the brethren of the missionary force, counsel together, and work in perfect harmony for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to us. We hope the brethren will feel free to offer counsel, or any advice they may deem for the good of the cause. We especially desire to make as many new openings during the year as is possible; and to this end we ask the assistance and coöperation of all the Saints and friends. If there are houses of worship, halls, schoolhouses, or any places whatever in your vicinities where meetings can be held, we hope that you will make an effort to secure such opportunities; then notify me, as the one in charge of missionary work, and we will try to respond as promptly as possible. If the Saints will all make an effort in this direction, it will greatly aid and encourage the ministry. Let us, by the help of the Lord, make one of the grandest records in missionary work ever made in this district. All who desire to write me in the interest of missionary work, please address me at Radcliff, Ohio. H. E. Moler.

To the Ministry and all Saints in the Eastern Iowa District: Having been placed in charge of this field, I think it but just I should say a few words to you, also give you my address. Bro. F. A. Smith in his pastoral has said all that needs to be said in a general way, and I would like to have you reread it and carefully heed it. I want coöperation of every one in carrying out his instructions. Those who know where openings can be made, and those who know where openings have been made but the labor in opening has not been followed up, will please notify me. Our missionary force is small, but we will do what we can. In the interest of truth, I am, Your brother, D. M. Rudd. Permanent address, Dow City, Iowa.

To the Saints and Ministry of the Kewanee District, Illinois; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the missionary department of the district, I will ask all who have matter pertaining to that line to write me at Kewanee, Illinois; 630 North Walnut Street will be my mission address. Missionaries, please send reports on time. As we have a good country to work in, let each one try and get on new grounds as much as he can. I would like to see the Saints become numerous in this rich, populous mission. By faithful work and the Master's help it can be done. My experience in the past is that the Saints of the district are generous and willing to help forward the "great cause." I would suggest to the Saints that as there is an increased number of missionaries in the district this year there should be a greater effort on the part of each Saint to make this mission year a success by giving them financial aid and helping them in getting places to preach; also by giving your tithes to the Bishop's agent of the district, not forgetting the college. I understand this work to be one of sacrifice. The missionary must leave his home and loved ones. I confess this is hard for me to do. The Saints must not only expect to give of their surplus, but make a "sacrifice" if there is any such thing. When we consider what is given in return for all we do, "eternal life," we should be willing to comply. For truth, J. Arthur Davis. Home address, R. F. D. No. 4, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Saints of the Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan District; Greeting: The work of another conference year lies before us. May the good record made by the district during the last two years be surpassed, so that next conference we can report that we have done all required of us. Our missionary force has been increased and we expect to push the work into new localities as well as caring for the branches. It shall be our object to make a special missionary effort this year. We hope each conference appointee will remember the excellent advice given to the missionaries by Bro. E. L. Kelley in a speech at the General Conference and published in the HERALD, April 30. May the Lord increase our faith and help us to be faithful. We would like to see the local officers make a strong effort to carry on the work in their branches without much help from the missionary force. By doing this you will enable us to reach new localities and will bring blessings on yourselves. All are called on to assist financially as the Lord has prospered you. I hope the name of every Saint will be found on the agent's book this year, with such amount recorded opposite as they are able to give. As the Saints in Galien lost their place of worship by the burning of Bro. E. A. Blakeslee's store, they are trying to build a church and all the Saints who can help them in their time of need are requested to do so. The missionaries will be distributed in the mission as wisdom may direct and I would be pleased to hear from any one who desires to have preaching in his neighborhood. I expect to visit the greater portion of the mission after our conference and desire the cooperation of all the Saints. Our district conference will convene at Galien, Michigan, June 14. We expect to have Bro. Heman C. Smith with us. Expecting to see the work of God prosper and his Saints blessed, I remain, Your brother in Christ, W. E. Peak, in Charge of the Above-named District. Galien, Michigan, May 15, 1902.

Having been placed as sub-missionary in charge of Texas by proper authority, I take this opportunity to advise my fellow laborers in the Texas Mission that I am now on my way and will arrive at my destination about the first of June. I am persuaded that you all know your duties and will perform them with an eye single to God. The work is before us. Brethren, let us improve every opportunity and let victory be our watchword. My home address is Dow City, Crawford County, Iowa. Will notify you as to field address later. Your brother in bonds, Romanan Wight.

Notice to Missionaries.

The General Sunday-school Association will furnish the Senior Quarterly free of charge to all missionaries laboring under General Conference appointment if they will send us their names and mission addresses. It is not best to send the Quarterly to the home addresses as they can not be forwarded as letters are. They require the prepayment of postage to send them on. Besides this, they are apt to get lost or mislaid till too late to reach you. We wish all the brethren to have them with them and feel that they are entitled to them free as above stated. It is necessary to renew your application after every General Conference, notwithstanding your name may have been on the list before. There being so many changes in the addresses each year necessitates the making up of a new list. Your subscription will end with the April-June, 1903, issue. Do not write to the HERALD Office for free Quarterlies, but to the undersigned. A postal card will do. We would like to have your home address also. Send as soon as you know what your mission address will be. It can be changed later if necessary.

Wishing you abundant success in your work, I am, with kindest regards, Your brother, T. A. Hougas, General Superintendent.

An Enlarged Hymnal.

The Board of Publication has appointed two of its number a committee to investigate the practicability of enlarging the Saints' Hymnal. It is quite probable that the majority of the tunes will be drawn from the Harmony, but it will be necessary and desirable to secure some new numbers either original or selected. Send to T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, such original or selected manuscripts as you wish to submit and they will be receipted for by mail and carefully preserved till such time as you may call for them or they may be placed in the hands of the committee that shall be appointed to arrange the matter.

Further: Let all lovers of song take their Harmonies and from them select not more than two hundred tunes not now in the Hymnal and designate them by both name and number. Also give number of words to be used with each, thus: "Harmony 3, 'Siberia,' Harp 4." Sign your name to these lists and send as above. This should be done as soon as practicable as the board wishes to consider the matter at its next meeting in a few weeks.

Respectfully,

T. A. HOUGAS,
H. R. MILLS, Com.

Reunion Notices.

The Northern and Central Districts of California will have their reunion at San Jose City, California, September 12. J. Swensen, secretary, 662 Willis Avenue, San Jose.

Reunion of Southwestern Texas District will meet at Pipe Creek, Bandera County, June 12. It is hoped that all the Saints who possibly can will make arrangements to attend. Let us meet with the determination to be spiritually benefited and to try to do all the good we can. We expect Bro. H. O. Smith, missionary in charge, to be with us, also Brn. L. L. Wight, Romanan Wight, and John Harp, and we hope as many more of the missionary force as can will come. Hoping that this reunion will be one long to be remembered; that the work throughout this entire district will be revived; that all will renew their diligence, and that this conference year will be one far in advance to any previous one, Ruth Gifford, Assistant Secretary of District.

Wanted.

HARRIS.—Elder David Lehi Harris was born in the "Old Town" of San Bernardino, California, April 22, 1855. Died April 27, 1902. His parents and grandparents before him were members of the Church of Jesus Christ; they joined the church and remained with it in those pioneer days amid the din of battle and chaos of mobocracy; when riot reigned and right was wrong; when it was worth one's life to avow allegiance to the angel's call. His mother was born while the family were migrating to Jackson County. At the time of the Missouri expulsion they located at Montrose, Iowa. Subsequently they removed to Salt Lake. They remained there until Brigham Young, recognizing the necessity of having a strategical point somewhere near the coast where emigrants from Australia and the islands might recuperate and fit themselves for an overland trip across the desert, called for volunteers. His father's and mother's people responded to the call and came through with the first colonists, reaching Cajon Pass in June, 1851. The family with others returned to Salt Lake in 1857, residing in the southern part of the territory until December, 1875, when the mother and David returned to California where he has lived ever since. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on March 20, 1876, by Elder D. S. Mills. He was united in marriage to Sarah B. Aldridge, July 2, 1876. As a result of this union there were born six children: Marion aged 25, Minnie 17, Ella 15, Maud 12. Lloyd and Ethel preceded the father in death, Lloyd aged 6 and Ethel 3. He leaves a wife, three daughters, one son, three brothers, and three sisters to mourn his loss. Nine years ago he entered the field as a general minister, laboring two years in Central California, two years in Oregon, one year in Utah, and 4 years in Southern California. The life of our brother is above reproach. There has never been a shadow on his honor or a cloud upon his character, and as he said a few days before he died, "Yes, my record is clear. My record is clear." A large concourse of Saints and friends assembled at the Saints' chapel while Elder T. W. Williams paid an eloquent and touching tribute to his memory. Brn. Carmichael and Crumley assisted in the services.

CUNNINGHAM.—Catherine Cunningham was born February 19, 1824, at Greenock, Renfrew, Scotland. Married to John Taylor, March 29, 1846. Of this union two sons and nine daughters were born. She was baptized into the first organization August 9, 1844, by Malcom McCalm; confirmed by John McIntyre. Joined the Reorganization July 7, 1864, being baptized and confirmed by Joseph Smith. Died April 29, 1902. One son and five daughters mourn. Services conducted from family residence, Hannibal, Missouri, by J. A. Tanner.

SPICER.—On March 26, 1902, Bro. Benjamin F. Spicer, of Harlanville, Texas, aged 61 years, 8 months, 20 days. Many relatives and friends mourn. He was faithful until death.

BURNHAM.—Elizabeth Augusta, born February 18, 1824, at Middleboro, Massachusetts; died May 5, 1902, at her home, 50 Ferry Street, Middletown, Connecticut. Husband, Elder George Burnham, and two sons and two daughters mourn. Sr. Elizabeth united with the church at Brooklyn, New York, February, 1890, and has been faithful. She leaves an excellent name among all who knew her, being of a most exemplary character. She passed quietly away after many months of severe suffering. One more Saint for the saints' home of rest. He giveth to his beloved sleep. Funeral services at her home by Elder R. Bullard.

Put your purse into your head and no man can take it from you.—Benjamin Franklin.

The Chautauquan Magazine, the Chautauqua Circle books and special reading course pamphlets, all publications of the Chautauqua Institution, which have been published in Cleveland since October, 1899, by Chautauqua Assembly, will be published after October 1 by "The Chautauqua Press," with offices in New York City, Chautauqua, Springfield, Ohio, and Chicago. The new company has a capitalization of $100,000 and the president is D. J. Thomas, president and manager of the Floral Publishing Company, of Springfield, Ohio. Editorial offices of the new company will be located in Chicago in connection with the educational offices of the Chautauqua Institution. Frank Chapin Bray will continue to edit the Chautauquan Magazine and other publications of the Chautauqua Press. The new deal will become operative through a long lease of the publication franchise which was secured from the Executive Board of Chautauqua, April 26. This change of management will secure capital for pushing the publications and the change represents a new expansion policy on the part of Chautauqua with which a large number of the most important popular educational movements of the day have allied themselves for summer and winter work. Among these are the New York State Reading Courses, Cornell Nature Study Department, Arts and Crafts movement and the American League for Civic Improvement. Three successful monthly publications of the Floral Publishing Company, Home and Flowers, Pets and Animals, and the Floral World, which are the recognized exponents of Civic Improvement, Nature Study, and the Public Beauty movements, will be conducted in harmony with the purposes of the allied management.

For the Chautauquan Magazine a new editorial board has been named consisting of George E. Vincent of the University of Chicago, principal of instruction for Chautauqua; Kate F. Kimball, executive secretary of the C. L. S. C.; Scott Brown, vice-principal of Chautauqua and vice-chairman of the executive board; Professor Charles Zueblin of the University of Chicago, president the American League for Civic Improvement; E. L. Shuey of Dayton, Ohio, chairman of the educational section of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A.; Jessie M. Good, librarian Warder Free Library, Springfield, Ohio; and D. J. Thomas, Springfield, Ohio.

Such an expansion of policy has been made possible by a number of important changes in the charter of Chautauqua authorized by the New York State Legislature this month. Under the new law the name of the educational corporation (incorporated not for profit) is changed from Chautauqua Assembly to Chautauqua Institution, and it is permitted to enter upon lines of educational work and social improvement for which it did not before have specific authority. The board of trustees is made self-perpetuating for purposes of endowment and administration.

The principal offices of the Chautauqua Institution will be centralized at Chautauqua, New York. The office of the treasurer, W. F. Walworth, will remain permanently in Cleveland.

A Small Philosopher.

A Mother's Lullaby.

The winds kiss the tree-tops and murmur "good-night,"
Sleep, little one, sleep;
The sun bathes the mountain in warm mellow light,
Sleep, little one, sleep;
The birds hush their songs, the lambs cease their play,
The darkness of night steals the fast-fading day,
And fairy lamps twinkle in skies far away,
Sleep, little one, sleep.

The tired eyes close with their lashes so long,
Sleep, little one, sleep;
While mother sits rocking and crooning her song,
Sleep, little one, sleep;
The little hand loosens its hold from the toy,
And now for the land of sweet slumber and joy,
Where angels keep watch o'er my bright bonny boy,
Sleep, little one, sleep.

In another place we mentioned the fact that the Church Librarian is desirous of procuring certain books for the library. He informs us that he is now wanting volumes 1, 2, 3, and 4, of the Review of Reviews, American edition, to complete his file to date. He also wants of the same periodical, No. 103, of volume 18, for August, 1898, and volumes 1, 2, and 3, complete, of the Literary Digest. Any of the Saints who have any of the foregoing will confer a favor upon the librarian by writing to him. Address, F. E. Cochran, Box 345, Lamoni.

Editorial.

CUBA A REPUBLIC.

On May 20, just passed, the people of the Island of Cuba, an island in the Atlantic Ocean, off the south-east coast of the United States, after centuries of Spanish misrule and tyranny, became a republic and took rank among the nations of the earth as a free people.

We give excerpts of the account of the transfer of the government by General Wood, Military Governor under the authority of the United States, to Thomas Estrada Palma, duly elected President of the Republic of Cuba.

It is with pleasure that we, with all others who have sympathized with the Cubans in their long struggle for liberty, give greeting to the New Republic.

CEREMONY OF THE TRANSFER.

The actual ceremony of the transfer of the government to President Palma took place a few minutes before noon at the Governor General's palace in the presence of the Cuban Cabinet, members of the Cuban Congress, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Governors of the provinces, officers of visiting war-ships, and a few invited guests.

GENERAL WOOD'S PROCLAMATION.

General Wood read the following proclamation:
 "To the President and Congress of the Republic of Cuba—Sirs: Under the direction of the President of the United States I now transfer to you as the duly elected representatives of the people of Cuba the government and control of the island; to be held and exercised by you, under the provisions of the constitution of the Republic of Cuba, heretofore adopted by the constitutional convention and this day promulgated; and I hereby declare the occupation of Cuba by the United States and the military government of the island to be ended.

"This transfer of government and control is upon the express condition, and the government of the United States will understand, that by the acceptance thereof you do now, pursuant to the provisions of the said constitution, assume and undertake, all and several, the obligations assumed by the United States with respect to Cuba, by the treaty between the United States of America and her Majesty, the Queen Regent of Spain, signed at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

ALL MONEYS TRANSFERRED.

"All money obligations of the military government down to this date have been paid as far as practicable. The public civil funds derived from the revenues of Cuba, transferred to you this day amounting to —, are transferred subject to such claims and obligations properly payable out of the revenues of the island as may remain. The sum of $100,000 has been reserved from the transfer of funds to defray anticipated expenses of accounting, reporting, and winding up the affairs of the military government, after which any unexpended balance of said sum will be paid into the treasury of the island.

"The plans already devised for the sanitation of the cities of the island and to prevent a recurrence of epidemic and infectious disease, to which the government of the United States understands that the provision of the constitution contained in the fifth article of the appendix applies, are as follows:

"1. A plan for the paving and sewerage of the City of Havana, for which a contract has been awarded by the municipality of that city to McGivney, Rokeby & Co.

"2. A plan for water works to supply the City of Santiago de Cuba, prepared by Captain S. E. Reckenbach, in charge of the district of Santiago and approved by the Military Governor, providing for taking water from the wells of San Juan Cañon, and pumping the same to reservoirs located on the heights to the east of the city.

"3. A plan for the sewerage of the city of Santiago de Cuba, a contract for which was awarded to Michael J. Dady & Co. by the Military Governor of Cuba, now under construction.

TO PREVENT EPIDEMICS.

"4. The rules and regulations established by the President of the United States on the 17th of January, 1899, for the maintenance of quarantine against epidemic diseases at the ports of Havana, Matanzas, Cienfuegos, and Santiago de Cuba, and thereafter at the other ports of the island, as extended and amended and made applicable to future conditions, by the order of the Military Governor dated — day of April, 1902.

"5. The sanitary rules and regulations in force in the City of Havana and in any other city having official rules.

"It is understood by the United States that the present government of the Isle of Pines will continue as a de facto government pending the settlement of the title to said is and by treaty pursuant to the Cuban constitution and the act of Congress of the United States approved March 2, 1901.

"I am further charged by the President of the United States to deliver to you the letter, which I now hand you.

"LEONARD WOOD, Military Governor."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S LETTER.

President Roosevelt's letter, referred to by General Wood, was as follows:

"White House, Washington, D. C., May 10, 1902.—To the President and Congress of the Republic of Cuba—Sirs: On the 20th of this month the Military Governor of Cuba will, by my direction, transfer to you the control and government of the Island of Cuba, to be thenceforth exercised under the provisions of the constitution adopted by your constitutional convention as on that day promulgated, and he will thereupon declare the occupation of Cuba by the United States to be at an end.

"At the same time I desire to express to you the sincere friendship and good wishes of the United States, and our most earnest hopes for the stability and success of your government, for the blessings of peace, justice, prosperity, and ordered freedom among your people, and for enduring friendship between the Republic of the United States and the Republic of Cuba.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
"President of the United States."

PALMA TAKES THE OATH.

President Palma expressed the gratitude of the Cubans to the Americans, and to General Wood in particular. The latter replied to Señor Palma, and the President then took the oath of office, swearing before God and on his honor to fulfill the duties of his office. The six secretaries were then sworn in by the President of the Supreme Court, who also administered the oath to Señor Palma.

The ceremony of taking the oath was simple. All the men stood in the middle of the hall, surrounded by those who took part in the ceremony. Each official raised his right hand when sworn.

CUBAN FLAG IS RAISED.

The necessary documents were signed by President Palma, and then came the event for which the scores of thousands of Cubans had assembled before the palace—the raising of the flag, announcing the birth of the Cuban Republic.

WOOD LOWERS STARS AND STRIPES.

General Wood, himself, undid the halliards from the flagstaff and lowered the American colors. As they fluttered down the cavalry below saluted their flag, and, like an echo of the cheers that arose, came the distant boom of one of the great guns of Cabanas Fortress, across the bay.

It was followed by another, and another, in rhythmic succession, until forty-five shots had been fired, one for each State in the Union. As the first gun spoke the flags on Morro Castle and those on the Santa Clara and Punta Fortresses were lowered. The jurisdiction of the United States had ended.

In the meantime a Cuban flag had been bent on the halliards of the palace flagstaff and by his own hand General Wood raised it as an act of the United States, General Gomez assisting him.

CUBANS CHEER THEIR FLAG.

As the flag flew free the streets below fairly waved with the cheer that arose. It was caught up by the people on the roofs and rolled over the city. Again the cavalry below saluted, and again the guns of Cabanas spoke, this time with a national salute of twenty-one guns. The bands stationed on the plaza at Cabanas and at Malecon took up the Cuban national air, and the revenue cutters and battleships in the harbor thundered their strength of war. The foreign warships hoisted the flag of Cuba to their masts and bestowed upon it the honors due to nations. The ensigns of Great Britain and Italy had recognized the republic.

SCENES AT MORRO CASTLE.

Morro Castle was crowded with patriotic Cubans whose life ambition had been to see their flag float singly and alone from the tower which so long before held aloft the flag of Spain. Governor Emilio Nunez of Havana Province, as President of the Cuban Veterans and a committee of that organization, arrived at Morro at 10:30 o'clock this morning with the Cuban flag, which had been purchased by popular subscription, and which was to be used in the ceremonies, although a flag had been provided by the United States authorities.

Shortly before the arrival of Governor Nunez, Lieutenant E. A. Stuart of the United States artillery Corps, with a non-commissioned officer and two men, arrived for the purpose of lowering the American flag and to represent the United States in the ceremonies at the conclusion of the national salute.

Simultaneously with the fall of the flag on the palace where the inauguration ceremonies were in progress, the American flag over Morro was lowered in token of our nation's good faith and honor.

THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE WAIT.

The opposite side of the bay was crowded to the water's edge with a mass of people who seemed to shout with one voice. The bay resounded with "Viva Estados Unidos," "Viva Cuba Libre." From the housetops crowds of enthusiastic Cubans waved small flags of the new republic, as if impatient to see it float, and all over the bay small sailing vessels and tugs carried a mass of people shouting and screaming vivas.

As the Stars and Stripes came down a score of wildly enthusiastic men took hold of the rope that was to raise the Cuban standard aloft, and hardly had Señor Mir, chief of the signal station on Morro Castle, made it fast when Governor Nunez pulled on the rope that raised the flag, which seemed more than anything else to say to Cuban people that the Cuban republic lived.

AMERICAN PLEDGES FULFILLED.

As it floated gayly to the breeze, battle-scarred veterans embraced each other. Tears were in the eyes of all, and a whole people, as if overcome with emotion, became silent for a moment, and then, as though just realizing that they had taken their place among the nations of the earth, and remembering their best friend in the time of their direst need, in one mighty roar shouted, "Viva Estados Unidos."

The ceremonies over, Governor Nunez proposed a toast to the United States, which was drunk and then Lieutenant Stuart proposed the toast of "Cuba Libre." Three cheers were then given for President Palma, and the flag of the United States was folded, to be sent to Washington.

PALMA CABLES A GREETING.

"Hayana, May 20.—Theodore Roosevelt, President, Washington: The government of the island having been just transferred, I, as Chief Magistrate of the republic, faithfully interpreting the sentiments of the whole people of Cuba, have the honor to send you and the American people testimony of our profound gratitude and the assurance of an enduring friendship, with wishes and prayers to the Almighty for the welfare and prosperity of the United States. T. ESTRADA PALMA."

ALL THE WORLD IS NOTIFIED.

Secretary Hay to-day sent a dispatch by cable to every capital where there is resident either an Ambassador or Minister for the United States of an identic note informing our representatives that the military occupation of the Island of Cuba by the United States has this day ceased, and that an independent government, republican in form, has been inaugurated there under the Presidency of Thomas Estrada Palma. The Ambassadors and Ministers are instructed to convey this information to the government to which they are accredited.

AN EPISODE IN FRONTIER LIFE.

A brother writing from Wildman, Oklahoma, now a portion of "our West frontiers," writes us under date of May 15. A part of his letter we give below, that some of our readers may see how some others are meeting "trials and tribulations," of which we sometimes hear in prayer-meeting. It is also a life-like sketch of what many on the outposts of American progress have had to do and pass through to ultimate success on a farm.

This brother has a beautiful piece of land, a quarter section, or one hundred sixty acres, every part of which is fit for the plow. He tried to get the money to enter the land of some brother, but did not succeed; finally an "outsider" let him have the money to "file" his claim with. So this will explain what appears near the close of the letter:

I am here all alone. I have been sorely tried trying to put out a crop. Horses poor and no feed for them, and no money to buy with even provisions for myself. Two months ago I was just out of anything to eat, and my shoes were worn out, nothing but the soles to walk on. I quit my crop and with another man made some posts for one who wanted the work done, thinking we would get the cash to get the necessaries of life with. But now he says he will not pay us. Now is not that hard for an old man like me to be robbed like that? I am still barefooted, but think I will have shoes in a few days. It looks as though things were going to take a turn for my good. The little crop I have out looks good. I had the luck yesterday to get the acquaintance of a Bro. Johnson, within two miles of me. It was a real treat to both of us, for he thought he was all alone; so did I. If only he is a Josephite, I hope he is. We had time to talk but little.

I am on southwest quarter of 32, 4 north, 17 west. Wildman is my post-office, I am southwest of the office. So if you know of any Saints getting mail here, or anywhere else near give me their names and addresses so I can inform them of my whereabouts. I can not be satisfied without the company of Saints. I want the HERALD, but it looks as though I will never be able to pay for it. I have not any paper to read; so mine is a lonely life here till fall, then the folks will be here, or I hope they will. I have a lovely home here. Will be in one mile of the station, if one is built. I am in sight of the new railroad; can see the trains when running four or five miles. Not a break, not a foot of loss in my whole one hundred sixty acres; every foot can be cultivated, only for the buildings.

The good man who helped me to the filing money, I hope will be a Saint by and by. He has been blessed wonderfully for his kindness to me.

REMEMBERED DEATH OF MARTYRS.

The Nauvoo Independent for May 21 contains an account of the death of William Jackson, a long-time resident in the vicinity of Nauvoo, having lived on a farm in Appanoose Township since 1837. The deceased was born in Netherton, Lanarkshire, Scotland, June 27, 1808. Among other things the Independent says of him:

He witnessed the coming of the Mormons and the building of a city like magic within a few miles of his farm, which was named Nauvoo, and if history is to be relied upon contained a population of twenty thousand souls, with a million dollar temple, and innumerable industries. He witnessed all the stormy times that followed between these people and the settlers who had located in the county previously. He distinctly remembered the day of the killing of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, on June 27, 1844, as it was his birthday, and he often related that when he heard the news he was plowing in the field, and he unhitched his horse from the plow and rode to town to see the excitement which the news of the murder caused among the prophet's followers.

RAM'S HORN 'ON EDDYISM.

The following recently appeared in Ram's Horn:

Eddyism, which is popularly known as Christian Science, has not recovered from the effect of the shafts of Mark Twain's satire, and it is now in the hands of another critic still more able and aggressive. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, of New York City, has left to others the task which he once performed so well, keeping Tammany in leash. Now he turns his attention to some popular fads and delusions. In a recent sermon he said:

"You have, perhaps, remarked with surprise, that the Bible history of our first parents really opens with their act of misbehavior. They may have lived, or at any rate existed, a good while before committing that act, but the Bible appears to get interested in them only at the point where they commence to go bad. Man as sinner is the especial subject of the Bible. Sin is the one reality which necessitated this Bible and the Christ of the Bible, so that, by way of parenthesis, for that unique creed of thinkers, or nonthinkers, that has just been springing up so voluminously in our midst to profess to stand upon the Bible and to swear by the Christ of the Bible, and yet to make it a dominant article of their creed that sin is simply the vagary of an infatuated mind, is to perpetrate an act of knavish stupidity so colossal as to be overwhelming and so brilliant as to be blinding."

So few of our Ram's Horn people are likely to hear the following story that we repeat it for their benefit, and possibly for the benefit of their friends who may be deluded by the thought that sin and disease are imaginary woes. A man much loved in a certain community was critically ill. His wife and little son were walking on the public street when a neighbor, meeting them, inquired anxiously how the husband and father was faring. "Oh, perfectly well," said the complacent wife, a devout apostle of Mrs. Eddy. "He thinks he is ill, but is really quite well."

A few days later a broad band of crepe was hanging on the front door of his house. The same neighbor, being near-sighted, did not see it in passing, but she saw the little boy who was playing in the yard.

"How's your pa, Johnny?"

"Oh, he thinks he is dead," said the little son cheerfully.

TIME.

Old Time! Since the world began has his strides resounded in the vaults and valleys of earth, as to and fro he goes, swinging his sickle here and there to strike down some life ripe for the gathering in. No place on God's footstool but feels the pressure of his step; no form of life but sometime feels the blighting edge of his world-old blade.

Old Time! Ever going, ever coming. You seem so monstrous, so powerful when forward we look and listen for your restless steps. As you pass we notice you not, and only by the marks of your heavy hand do we realize you have been so near. By the accumulated results of your incremental work do we realize your potency.

Time, despite all our plans, our developments, our progress, our speed, our excellent system, is after all not to be cheated of his prey. His work is never less, always present, always carefully and thoroughly done. Into the life of every one comes the mutations through Time's hand.

Time, though measured only to man, yet how incomprehensible!

The following is from Ram's Horn for December 28, 1901:

Bishop Fowler asked in the Methodist Missionary Conference that $10,000 be appropriated for the opening of mission schools in Utah, which have been closed, as he believes that through such schools alone can Mormonism be at all successfully combated.

Dr. Buckley said Mormonism is alarmingly on the increase in this country, the land of its birth, and that many of its converts would as quickly die for the faith that is within them as would any member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He said Mormonism will flourish 300 years hence. Education alone will wipe out Mormonism.

BITS OF NEWS.

We note by the Ensign that a number of the Independence brethren have organized a coöperative concern and expect to establish a manufacturing plant. They have purchased the ground and seem to be moving right out. May they be successful.

Last week Elders Haldeman and Frisbey, of the Hedrickites, held services in the Saints' church at Lamoni, in which they presented the beliefs and attitudes of their church. Heman C. Smith followed them for two nights and reviewed their positions.

Bro. Elvin hands us the following "explanation": "This is to inform those who sent money for Grace-land College to me, or other members of the Board of Trustees, that the publication of the same will appear in treasurer's annual report in the forthcoming minutes of the late General Conference.

"ROBT. M. ELVIN."

Sr. M. E. Townsend writes from 116 Bluff Street, Sioux City, Iowa, May 21, that she and her husband will spend the summer at Beloit, Wisconsin. She writes that D. A. Hutchings, of Little Sioux, is with them, expecting to hold services.

Disasters seem crowding fast upon each other. Mont Pelée destroyed thirty or forty thousand lives; Mt. Soufriere added nearly two thousand more to the list; a cyclone in Texas wiped out a hundred lives; two recent mine explosions have cost nearly three hundred more, while floods and storms have been busy over large portions of this country blotting out lives here and there. Truly, humanity is frail in the hands of enraged nature!

Mont Pelée continues in eruption at irregular intervals, and hundreds of the inhabitants of the ill-fated island are leaving for other parts of the world. There are practically no people now within range of the troubled mountain, scientists studying the phenomena attending Pelée's eruptions being about the only persons who venture in that part of the island. Fort-de-France is taking on a deserted appearance, though that city is thought to be safe from Mont Pelée's outbursts. La Loufrière is still active, and it is estimated that its eruptions have caused the death of seventeen hundred persons, while hundreds of others have been burned and injured, many of whom will probably die. Much material damage has been done on St. Vincent among the plantations.

Our Church Librarian is making an effort to collect works pertaining to our history, and works written for and against us. You who have such to spare, write him.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

J. J. Cornish writes from Reed City, Michigan, May 24, in a letter to President Joseph Smith: "Bro. B. S. Lambkin has baptized two at McBain; Brn. A. E. Burr and John Schreur nine near West Branch; I baptized a fine young lady at Freesoil, a school-teacher. All done recently. We feel good in the work. Kind love to all."

May 14, B. W. Pack writes from Grainland, California: "Though few, yet we hold meetings every Sunday, and prayer-meeting Wednesdays. Bro. A. B. Phillips has baptized several here, and I think more will come. Bro. Phillips is a wise builder. May we live so that blessings may be added daily."

G. H. Graves wrote from Chicago, Illinois, May 23: "The work is onward here. Began street work May 16, with good interest. I expect to baptize some soon, if all is well. Things are brightening up for me. Pray for us, ye Saints in the Lord."

Bro. J. M. Terry wrote from St. Joseph, Missouri, May 14: "We start on our long journey to our mission field on the 21st, expecting to arrive in Oakland, Saturday the 24th, 3: 40 p. m. Our address will be 1068 Eighteenth Street, Oakland, California. We go cheerfully and in full confidence of the correctness of the move, and shall try, D. V., to bring souls to the Redeemer, and 'feed the flock.'"

Ettie Teal writes from South Boardman, Michigan: "The Autumn Leaves is doing a great work. I induce all my young friends to read it when they would not read anything else of our church literature. I hope and pray that God will bless every effort put forth for the sustenance of the Leaves."

Arthur H. Allen, of Jasper, Minnesota, under date of May 16, writes: "I have enjoyed reading the HERALD and Ensign accounts of the conference, and I can not see how any one can fail to see the loving kindness of our heavenly Father. I have been encouraged and strengthened to press on while reading, and feel that God's same peace 'that passeth all understanding' can search out the isolated ones of the church and meet with them. Surely God is in this work. Was it a mere happen-so that Bro. Alexander remained in Australia, or was it not for the purpose of God for further work after this conference? If there be any in this work who are skeptical it would seem as though the reading of the last conference minutes would remove that. Success to the HERALD."

Bro. Daniel MacGregor, writing from Mt. Forest, Ontario, May 20, says: "The glorious progression and upbuilding so manifest at recent General Conference is acting like a wholesome spring tonic in fair Canada. The elevation of President Evans having been generally expected, the sting of eventual separation was lost. His ascendancy will mean our spiritual advancement. Our conferences will soon convene. All the mission is aglow with uplifted anticipation of meeting Bro. Lake, who has assured us of his presence."

W. E. La Rue writes from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 20: "Prospects bid fair for a successful year for the church in this district. Bro. Rushton will be here with us next Sunday. We anticipate a good day's work for him. If any of the Saints have friends or relatives in these parts whom they would like me to visit and acquaint with the work, I shall be pleased to do so. My address here is 3431 North Front Street."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

According to press dispatches Reed Smoot, an apostle in the Utah church, has announced his candidacy for the United States Senate, to succeed Senator Rawlins.

We publish elsewhere in the HERALD, a communication from Bro. M. L. Schmid, of Delta, Colorado, to which we call attention of the Saints. We do this not because we either indorse the scheme, or disapprove of it! We know so little about it that we can not write of it understandingly. Many of the Saints are interested in communistic efforts, and may wish to make an inquiry as to this one.

CORRECTION.

In last week's HERALD, page 500, about half way down the first column, paragraph beginning, "Scarcely had," etc., should be corrected to read: "Scarcely had Mt. Pelee blotted out St. Pierre when La Soufriere, on the Island of St. Vincent," etc.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

What volumes of the HERALD already bound are for sale in HERALD Office, and at what price?

None.

What is your charge for binding HERALDS, present size and old size, per volume, usual leather back and corners and marble centers.

One dollar per volume.

Can you supply missing numbers of HERALDS and Autumn Leaves to complete broken volumes, and at what price?

Can supply some numbers. HERALDS, five cents per copy, Autumn Leaves ten cents per copy.

What are numbers in volume, and price per volume, of HERALDS from volume 1 to date?

Can not be supplied. Any wanting complete volumes, we will quote prices on inquiry stating volume desired.

Would it be out of order if a brother, a member of one branch, present at a prayer-meeting of another branch, should speak in the gift and call a brother to the office of a priest, teacher, deacon, and the officers and members of said branch all acknowledge the gift to be of God? Or must the call come through the president of said branch to be in order?

There is no specific rule governing the case. All members of the church present at a meeting may exercise the same liberty; those not of the branch as well as those belonging, except the right of voice and vote in branch affairs, and this may be granted by courtesy of the branch by proper motion and vote. The Spirit speaks through whom it will and the privilege to exercise the gifts is general and to all. If the officers of the branch in charge are present, witnessing the gift, and are satisfied, it should be satisfactory to all concerned.

THE CHURCH.

“And upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.”—Matt. 16: 18.

Many have said and attempted to prove that Jesus never organized a church, or that there was never effected any visible, permanent organization known as the church in the days of Christ and the apostles. Our text, however, tells us that Jesus declares he will build (organize) his church; and we have only to turn a leaf in our Bibles and we may read on another page where the Lord gives some instructions as to the manner of dealing with unruly, or disobedient members, and after all other means have failed, as a last resort, he says, “tell it to the church.” Pray tell us would it be possible to “tell it to the church” if there were none?

Again, we are sometimes told that without doubt there was an organization effected by Christ and the apostles and by them called the church, but it was never intended to be perpetuated in the form and order in which it was first organized.

We believe we have as many and as good reasons for objecting to this latter statement, as to the first. We sometimes use a maxim in life which is a truism: “By the past and the present we may judge the future.” So let us go back a little and examine the history of the past as to God’s dealings with the human family and perhaps we may or may not be surprised to learn that this is not the first time God has established his church and his gospel on earth and among the children of men.

We may go back to the days of Moses, the great law-giver of God, and by a little careful study discover that the church was on earth even then. Yes, go back still farther to the days of faithful old Abraham, the friend of God, and we will find it then. Let us turn to Genesis 17; here God appears to Abraham and said unto him, “I am the Almighty God, walk before me and be thou perfect.” And upon these conditions God says, “I will make an everlasting covenant with thee and thy seed after thee.”

This everlasting covenant could have been none other than the gospel covenant, the everlasting covenant, the one and only means God ever devised or introduced into the world for the salvation of the human family, and the only law that God ever gave that would make man perfect. It certainly could not have been the covenant that God made afterwards with the children of Israel in Mount Horeb when under the leadership of Moses, for in Deuteronomy 5 we read, “The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb.”

“The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us even us, who are all of us here alive this day.”—Deuteronomy 5: 1, 2.

Another reason why this everlasting covenant could not have been the Mosaic covenant consists in the fact that the Mosaic covenant did not and could not bring its adherents to perfection. (See Romans 8: 3; Hebrews 7: 11; also Hebrews 8: 7, 8.)

Jesus himself sets forth this fact as we may see by reading Matthew 5, where he refers to what is written in the law, the Mosaic covenant, and shows its inefficiency by giving a better law, one that would reach the heart, the source of action, rather than the outward act. A law that would purify the fountain would necessarily cleanse the stream. And in this same chapter, referring to the scribes and Pharisees, who were zealous keepers of the law, he said, “Except your righteousness exceed theirs ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven.”

These statements with the ones before cited, especially the one made by the Apostle Paul in Romans 8 in which he clearly shows us the superiority of the gospel over the law, in that it had done for him what the law in its weakness could not do, prove conclusively that the everlasting covenant which God made with Abraham, the one in which he enjoined upon him to walk before him and be perfect, which could have been accomplished only by obedience to a perfect law must, of necessity, have been the gospel covenant.

If further proof along this line is wanted, it may be found in Galatians 3: 8, where we read in so many words, “The gospel was preached before unto Abraham,” and in the same chapter we learn that the law, or Mosaic covenant, was not given “until four hundred years after the first one was confirmed of God in Christ.” If the first one was confirmed of God in Christ, it certainly was the gospel covenant. Jesus Christ was the mediator of but one covenant.

We will now pass to the days of Moses and look for the gospel and the church with him.

In Deuteronomy 18 we have a record of some of the sayings of Moses to the children of Israel, and he tells them that at some future time they shall come “Into a land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. . . . Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken.” Peter tells us in Acts 3 that this prophet was none other than Jesus Christ.

By some we are told that the only points of similarity between Moses and Christ was in the fact that both were the mediators of a covenant and the chosen lawgivers of God, and that Moses foreshadowed the coming Christ. That may be true, so far as both being lawgivers and mediators of a covenant goes, but we have already shown that God had confirmed a covenant in Christ four hundred thirty years before this and we fail to see how Moses could foreshadow a Christ that had preceded him by four centuries. But if we may discover that the gospel and the church, with all its distinctive features, did exist in the days of Moses, it may assist us to better understand this matter.

While it may be true that we have but little in the writings of Moses, or in the Old Testament to sustain this position, yet we are not without witness on this subject. The Martyr Stephen gives us his dying testimony on this subject, and of Moses he says: "This is he [Moses] that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the Mount Sinai, and with our fathers: [Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,] who received the lively oracles to give unto us." We believe this language is very expressive and deserves careful study, else we may be led into error. Our Advent friends often use this text to support the theory that the Mosaic covenant, and the gospel covenant, if not one and the same, they are at least so inseparably blended and connected with each other as to make it impossible to separate them, or to distinguish between them; but let us see if this text warrants such a position. We believe the careful reader of Stephen's sayings will clearly see that he represents the fact that Moses was in the church as well as in the wilderness before he received the two tables of stone on which the law was written.

Paul tells us: "The law was added because of transgression." We can not conceive of the possibility of adding something to nothing; there must have been something to which to add the law, hence we believe that in this language we have a strong argument to support the position that the gospel covenant was the first covenant, and it was because they transgressed first, that the second was added.

And again, what are these lively oracles that are here spoken of? Paul tells us in his Hebrew letter that the first principles of the oracles of God are "Faith, repentance, and the doctrine of baptisms, and the laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."

That these oracles, or ordinances did exist and were believed in and observed by the people in the days of Moses and before the law or second covenant was given, is evident, and was so understood by the Apostle Paul; hence we read in 1 Corinthians 10: 1-4 where he tells of those who were with Moses (and the church) and were "all baptized unto Moses in the cloud [spirit] and in the sea [water]; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ."

If we read our Bibles understandingly we only learn of one way in which they could eat of spiritual meat and drink of spiritual drink, and that the same as our Savior taught his disciples.

In John 6: 48 Jesus says, "I am that bread of life," and that he will give to his disciples of his flesh to eat and of his blood to drink; and he further says, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed."

It is evident from that which follows that at that time many who heard him did not understand him, for many of his disciples when they heard this said, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?"

But when the time came and Jesus took the bread and blessed it and brake it and gave to his disciples, saying, "This is my body which is broken for you: likewise the cup of wine saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood which is shed for you, this do in remembrance of me," there can be no doubt they then understood how they were to eat of his flesh and drink of his blood.

But, says one, this ordinance or sacrament was not known of or observed in the days of Moses. We ask, How do you know it was not? And we are answered, Because it is not spoken of in this connection. True, and were it not for the testimony of the New Testament witnesses we would be left entirely in the dark in regard to many of these things, so far as the Bible goes. But if we go back to the time when the gospel was on earth in the days of Abraham we may find this holy ordinance, the sacrament, was known and practiced long before the days of Moses and the institution of the passover. "And Melchisedec king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. . . . And he [Abraham] gave him tithes of all."—Gen. 14: 18, 20.

In this brief account we have two gospel principles named, the sacrament and tithing, and so discover these distinctive features of the church as it is described in the Old Testament centuries before the law which was added because of transgression was ever heard of.

Then comes the inquiry, if these things had been known and observed before, why necessary to again introduce them into the world? We answer, because there had been a complete apostasy and the church which was with Moses had become extinct and obliterated from the earth.

Paul tells us in Hebrews 4: 2, "The gospel was preached unto them [children of Israel], but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith [the first gospel principle] in them that heard it."

Hence a new gospel dispensation, with a recommitment of the gospel to the earth and a reorganization of the church were in the very nature of things necessary.

Now we may return to the statement, "I will build my church," and see if he made his word good. To do so it may be necessary to follow him step by step in his work.

We first find Jesus after his baptism and forty days of temptation, preaching, and calling on those who heard him to repent and believe the gospel and saying the kingdom of heaven was at hand. Walking by the Sea of Gallilee and calling those humble fishermen to leave their nets and follow him, saying, "I will make you to become fishers of men." And so by ones, and by twos, from the different vocations of life, he called those who became his disciples, and when he had a sufficient number, as we read in Luke 6:12, 13: "He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles." This was the first step taken by our Lord in the way of perfecting an organization of which there can be no doubt it was intended it should afterwards be perfected and perpetuated and known on earth as the church of Jesus Christ,—the kingdom of God,—the household of faith,—the body of Christ.

The next step in the way of organization was the choosing of the seventies: "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come."—Luke 10: 1.

By examining the two commissions we can see but little difference between the two, the one given to the twelve and the one given to the seventy. Both were authorized to preach the gospel and to represent the kingdom of God on earth.

So far as the writings of the four evangelists go we do not find much more in the way of further organization, but in Luke 24 we learn that Jesus told his disciples to tarry in Jerusalem until they should be endowed with power from on high before they proceeded with their work.

In the writings of John, chapters 14, 15, 16, we learn of certain promises made by Jesus to his disciples which were to be received and enjoyed by them after his crucifixion and final ascension into heaven.

In Acts first and second chapters we have an account of the ascension of Christ, of the choosing of another to fill the vacancy in the twelve caused by the death of Judas, and also of the coming of the promised endowment of divine power which occurred on the day of Pentecost when the Holy Ghost was poured out on the disciples.

In this account we are told of some of the effects of the Holy Ghost, and in the sermon preached by Peter on that day under the influence and power of the Holy Ghost, and in answer to the question, "What shall we do?" Peter said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost,"

That this promise is not limited to any particular age, or place, or people is evident from that which follows: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

We further read, "there was added unto them about three thousand souls;" but our nondenominational friends say it does not say they were added to the church. True, in this particular verse the word church does not appear, but in the last verse of this same chapter it does say, "And the Lord added to the church daily, such as should be saved." And if in one case they were added to the church, by what kind of philosophy do we reach the conclusion they were not added to the church in both cases?

We believe they were and that there was a church, a visible organization to receive them, and that it was so understood, and so designed by the Lord when he said, "I will build my church."

Another step in the way of organization is found in Acts 6. An emergency seems to have arisen which necessarily must be provided for: "The number of the disciples was so multiplied that there arose a murmuring because the widows were neglected in the daily ministration."

The probable cause lay in the fact that because of the increased membership the duties of the ministry increased in the same ratio until they could not fill all of the demands made upon their time, so they authorized the ordination of seven men to attend to this particular duty, and these men are called deacons.

All these events transpired in and about Jerusalem, but now we turn to Acts 13 and we read of a church at Antioch. If inquiry be made why was there a church there, and what kind of a church was there, we may answer that it is reasonable to believe that a church had been established or organized at that place as the result of the preaching of some of those whom the Lord had sent to preach the gospel in all the world, some of those to whom Jesus had said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

Some of those who had received the divine endowment of power, the Holy Ghost at Jerusalem, had gone into this country preaching the word; for proof we read Acts 11: 19 to 24: "Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only. And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord. Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch. Who when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they should cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people."

Nothing can be clearer than the fact that the result of the teaching (or preaching, and preaching is teaching) of these evangelists had resulted in effecting a church organization at Antioch, hence we read Acts 13: "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch." And that we may be able to determine something of organic structure of that church we further read, "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers." And here, so far as the New Testament is concerned, are introduced for the first time two factors in the church as an organization of which we have no previous mention; that is, prophets and teachers. And were this all we had on this subject we might be left in some doubt in regard to the matter; but the Apostle Paul, who, by the way, was just at this time and place along with his associate and co-laborer, Barnabas, called to the apostolic office and as such ordained, this Paul who testifies that he received the gospel "by revelation from Jesus Christ." In his letter to the church of God, which is at Corinth, he says: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Cor. 12: 28.

Again in Ephesians 4: 8, 11, Paul says, "Wherefore he [Christ] saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. And he gave some, apostles; and some prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."

In these two quotations we have several of the divine appointments and officers of the church named, but so far we have no mention of the title of elder. But we will again use Paul as authority. In Acts 14 we are told he was in company with his brother and co-laborer, the Apostle Barnabas, and was stoned and was left supposed to be dead, but the Lord spared him his life and he rose up and continued to preach the gospel.

Then we read of these two apostles and servants of the Lord going from city to city, preaching and confirming the souls of the disciples and exhorting them to continue in the faith, "and when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed."—Acts 14: 23.

The intelligent reader of these statements can reach but one conclusion as to the significance of this language, and that is that these two evangelists and servants of God were doing none other work than preaching the gospel, making converts and confirming them, organizing churches, and ordaining elders as pastors over them, and thus doing the very work of an evangelist and missionary in all the world.

Sometimes we are told, and in fact the idea seems to be quite general, that there is no evidence to support the thought that the apostolic office was to be perpetuated beyond the first twelve; but we believe the careful Bible student will find this to be a wrong conclusion.

We have already cited the choosing of one Matthias to the apostleship to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judas, also the calling and ordination of Barnabas and Saul as described in Acts 13; and if proof is wanted to establish the fact that these were really called to that office, we will again go over the ground, beginning at the conversion of Saul when on his way to Damascus as the story is told in Acts 9: 19, 20, we read of what followed his conversion: "And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God."

It is true that there is no mention here made that Saul was at that time ordained to any office, but we must remember that we have only a very meager and limited account of these events in the Bible story, and it is very probable that many little details are omitted.

We read in Luke 9: 1, 2: "Then he [Jesus] called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." And again in Luke 10 we have the story of the choosing or appointing the seventy, and in neither case are we told that they were ordained, but we are informed that Jesus gave them authority and sent them to preach; and if we turn to John 15: 16, we have the words of Jesus, saying, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you," hence, we believe, that with the giving authority to preach and to represent Jesus Christ and the kingdom of God on earth was involved the principle of ordination, and none understood these things better than did the disciples, whether they were at Jerusalem or Damascus, hence we believe that Saul was ordained while he was with those disciples at Damascus and thus vested with authority to preach Christ.

And again in Acts 11: 25, 26 we find him in company with Barnabas at Antioch a whole year assembling with the church and teaching or preaching to much people.

Is it reasonable to believe that the disciples or the church would permit these men to act as teachers, preachers, ministers of the word without ordination, when long before this Jesus had set the pattern and had said, "The works that I do shall my disciples do also"? We think not.

So when we come to the calling of these two men as described in the thirteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, we believe we have the story told in a few words, of the calling of two men who had already been called and ordained as ministers of the gospel, and who are now called of God to fill the apostolic office.

The reason is apparent; we are told in the preceding chapter that the church had been persecuted and the disciples scattered (Acts 11: 19).

And again in Acts 12: 1, 2: "Now about this time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword."

By this we discover that at least one of the twelve had been killed, thus causing a vacancy in this all-important quorum of the church, and if it were necessary that this vacancy should be filled when Judas the traitor committed suicide, why was it not equally necessary now?

But, says the objector, there is only one vacancy to fill and two men are called. True; so far as the Bible history goes we have the positive statement of the death of but one of the twelve, but again we call your attention to the fact that we only have a meager and incomplete history and it is possible that during this time of persecution and scattering more than one of the twelve suffered death. But be that as it may, we read in Acts 14: 14, "Which, when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out." In this quotation we have these two men named apostles.

Again in Galatians 1: 19 Paul says: "But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother."

We might cite other texts along this line, but think the above sufficient. Let us sum up: the first twelve, Matthias thirteen, James the Lord's brother (for Paul saw him soon after his conversion, and before he was an apostle) fourteen, then Barnabas and Saul (or Paul) sixteen, and there is indirect mention in the Bible of twenty-two apostles, but never more than twelve at any one time.

The office of prophet in the church, if we are to judge from a Bible standpoint of evidence, seems to be one of equal importance with that of apostle. We may judge something of its importance by reading the account of the calling of these two men to the apostolic office in Acts 13. First we read, "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers," etc., and again, "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate [or in other words set apart] me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."

Are we to conclude from this statement that the Holy Ghost was present in bodily shape and that it spoke independently of human agency? Why, there is nowhere to be found in the word language to warrant such a conclusion; were we to take this position we would soon find old Apostle Peter bearing a strong testimony against us, for he says, "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Peter 1: 21. Hence we conclude these prophets which were in the church at Antioch were holy men of God and as such were moved upon by the Holy Ghost to make his will known concerning his work in calling these men to this all-important office in his church. And this is in perfect keeping with that said by the Savior as pertaining to the work of the Holy Ghost, for he said, "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things."—John 14: 26.

Again, John 16: 12-15: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you."

In this language we are informed of some of the important workings of the Holy Ghost.

Let us now carefully examine some of the foregoing statements and see if they do not contain matter of greater importance than is now generally conceded: Jesus says, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now." This language conveys the thought that these disciples to whom he was then speaking were not then in a proper condition to receive what he had to say unto them, nevertheless it was his purpose that at some future time they should hear it, and he now informs them of the means that would be provided through which the information would come; hence he says, "Howbeit when he the Spirit of truth [Holy Ghost] is come he will guide you into all truth." "He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine and shall show it unto you." "All things are mine: therefore [for this reason] said I that he [the Holy Ghost] shall take of mine and show it unto you."

Thus we discover that "the Spirit of truth," "Holy Spirit," "Holy Ghost," are the means designed to be used, through or by which this future information or revelation is to be given, and if God is the changeless being he says he is and which we believe him to be, and Jesus Christ be the same "yesterday, to-day, and for ever," then we conclude there will be no change in the modus operandi of his business; and if in former days, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost," thus making known to the children of men the will and mind of their heavenly Father, and if by reason of this these men were called prophets, so we believe that in latter days, and in all time to come whenever God has anything to reveal he will use prophets as a means of communication, and whenever or wherever we find the church of Jesus Christ we will find it as described in the word of God, organized after the divine pattern with all the officers that were originally placed in the church: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 28.

Many more texts could be cited to prove the existence of, and necessity for prophets in the church, but we will let them pass for the present while we examine some other evidences which prove there was a church, and will also enable us to see something of its inner workings by which we may see that it really existed as a corporate body and was transacting business in the interests of the work of God, and for the salvation of souls, not only in preaching the gospel and converting men and women and organizing churches and ordaining elders as we have already shown, but was holding conferences, both district and general, thus doing all the business and performing the functions of a corporate body.

We again refer the reader to Acts 14, also to the following chapter as they contain a brief history of events which transpired after the ones we have just noticed.

After these evangelists, Paul and Barnabas, had made a tour through Pisidia, and Pamphylia, and Perga, and Attalia they returned to Antioch. "And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. And there they abode long time with the disciples."—Acts 14: 27, 28.

In the following chapter we read of certain men who came down from Judea and taught circumcision, and we read there was no small dissension and disputations between Paul and Barnabas and these men and it was finally determined to send Paul and Barnabas and certain others up to Jerusalem. In this brief account we could have no better description of a conference in so few words; but that it was not a general conference is evident from the fact that these men were chosen as delegates to go up to Jerusalem, the church headquarters, to present this vexing question to the apostles and the chief men of the church on which to pass their opinion. And we further read that these men were brought on their way by the church; "And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders."—Acts 15: 4. The following verses tell us there were some of the Pharisees there who were adherents to the same doctrine relative to circumcision. Then we read, "And the apostles and elders came together for to consider this matter."—Acts 15: 6. From this on to the close of the chapter we have an account of the deliberations of that conference; we have a synopsis of the speeches made and the arguments presented.

That there was a general discussion took place at that time and place is apparent to every intelligent reader of this chapter. These believing Pharisees expressed their opinion, that it was needful to keep the law of Moses. We must also remember that Peter had been down to Cesarea to the house of a Gentile, and had preached the gospel there and his acts had been called in question. "And now he rose up" and gave his reasons and expressed his opinion in regard to the questions under consideration. Then Barnabas and Paul were heard while the multitude kept silent and gave audience. Then James called on them to hearken, and after a brief review of all that had been presented said: "Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God."—Acts 15: 19. And in this final summing up by James he recommended the writing of a pastoral letter to them in which certain doctrinal tenets were specified; then follows the statement: "Then pleased it the apostles and the elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren. And they wrote letters by them after this manner: The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia."—Acts 15: 22, 23.

Then follows the letter: Surely we could have no better description of a general conference in all that pertains to the transactions of such business as comes before a general conference; the writing of a pastoral letter, and the sending out of conference appointees with their certificates of appointment to their respective fields of labor, and we have only to continue reading the chapter to learn that these men, Paul and Barnabas, apostles, and Judas and Silas, chief men among the brethren, went on their mission as directed by the church; and by the way as we peruse the story we learn something of these "chief men:" "So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle: Which when they had read, they rejoiced for consolation. And Judas and Silas [chief men] being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them."—Acts 15: 30-32.

We further read that "it pleased Silas to abide there [in Antioch] still." And verse 35 informs us that "Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also."

How many others were with him we are not told, but this language leads us to believe that there was quite a ministerial force at Antioch, and that quite a protracted effort was made there and no doubt quite a large branch of the church was established there, hence it is mentioned because of its importance.

We might continue this subject almost indefinitely, but it is not our purpose to weary you, so we will draw to a close. But before we do so we ask you, dear reader, if you have carefully followed us in the description of the church as we find it in the word? Are you now prepared to tell us that you do not believe that Jesus made his word good when he said, "I will build my church"? and if you admit that he did, you must as readily see his purpose in establishing it, namely, the redemption or salvation of men. Do not conclude the church has nothing to do with the salvation or saving of men; for if you do you will make a serious mistake, for in this church we have been reading about, we find ordinances which God put there as well as men to administer them, such as baptism and the laying on of hands. Baptism in water for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the baptism of the Spirit. (See Acts 8: 14-17; also Acts 19: 1-7.) Also the same ordinance for the blessing of children and the healing of the sick. (See Mark 10: 13-16; also James 5: 13-15.)

We also find the sacrament or Lord's supper, and the Master said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life [spiritual life] in you."

"Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life: and I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 53, 54.

These are a few of the distinctive features of that church that Jesus organized with apostles, prophets, sevens, evangelists, elders, teachers, and deacons. A church in which the Comforter, Holy Spirit, Spirit of truth, and Holy Ghost, were to continue as the means by and through which our heavenly Father would continue to reveal his will and mind to his children, and also to call or designate such men to fill such places as he in his infinite wisdom should see they were fitted to occupy, and when there should be a vacancy in the apostolic quorum, caused by death or other reasons, to call another to fill the vacancy, and so to continue the original and divine order of things as Jesus his Son set in order when he was on earth.

To prove this to be in perfect harmony with the written word let me ask you to turn to Ephesians 4 and read: "Wherefore he [Christ] saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men."—Verse 8.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."—Verse 11.

For what purpose?

"For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body [church] of Christ."—Verse 12.

Do we need anything of that kind now? If you are still undecided as to your answer, then read the following verse and you will discover the alwise purpose in this order of things, and how long it was the design of the Lord for them to remain: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Verse 13.

"That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."—Verse 14.

How is it, dear reader, are we Christians a unit in our faith? Why, in the United States alone, we have one hundred forty-eight different churches, each one known by a name peculiar to itself, each one teaching a doctrine (faith) peculiar to itself, and no two the same. Do you believe that God is responsible for this confusion? Do you believe that these different churches constitute the church of God, the body of Christ? Let the Bible answer; and we turn again to 1 Corinthians 12 where we find some of the texts we have before called your attention to as descriptive of the church, and Paul after showing that none of the seeming non-essential parts could be dispensed with, says: "That there should be no schism [or division as the marginal reading gives it] in the body."—Verse 25.

Again turn to the fifteenth chapter of this same letter, verse 33, and read: "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace in all churches of saints." Division causes contention, and contention destroys peace; but Paul besought the saints at Ephesus to "endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." And that they might know how it could be accomplished he said to them: "There is one body [church], and one Spirit [Holy Spirit], even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism."—Eph. 4: 1-5.

In that wonderful prayer offered by our Savior in behalf of his disciples, found in John 17, he prayed, that they all might be one as he and his Father were one, that the world might believe that his Father had sent him.

And we think we may safely venture the statement, that if the professed Christian world was a unit to-day in their faith, doctrine, and practice, infidelity would be a thing almost unknown.

But, says one, This state of affairs will never be brought about! Perhaps not in the near future, but if not, it is not because God has not given the means by which it may be accomplished.

You ask, "What is this means? We answer, Lay aside your creeds and disciplines, your traditions, your doctrines and commandments of men, which make void the law of God, and accept the Bible as it reads as the man of your counsel, and believe that it says what it means and means what it says, and do not either yourself, or allow any one else to spiritualize away its precious truth, but rather accept it as God has given it to us. Keep in mind what the apostle says in his Galatian letter: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1: 8.

Also remember the advice of the Apostle John: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed."—2 John 1: 10.

INTERPRETATION OF DREAM.

[Having published a vision or dream sent us not long since, and asked that he who sent it should give an interpretation which he wrote he had, we give his interpretation below. We neither indorse nor deny the interpretation; it must stand and be proved on its merit.—ED.]

I see you have inserted the vision that I sent to you, and by your request I now send the interpretation as it has been made known to me, and two other brothers.

The purifying of the earth seems to be the fulfillment of the scripture as found in Nahum 1: 5; also 2 Peter 3: 10, 11, 12; Micah 1: 4.

The house we were in represents the church. Those parts that were not acceptable to God and were consumed by the fire were officers high up in the house or church.

The material used to repair is in the church, who will succeed to those places occupied by those high officers in the Lord's own due time.

The purifying of the inmates of the house is in fulfillment of the Scriptures as found in 1 Corinthians 3: 13, 14, 15; also 1 Peter 1: 7; 4: 12.

In regard to the Indians, we understand that after the expiration of the time of the Gentiles to accept the gospel, which seems to be not to exceed seven years, then the Indians will begin to come into the church in large numbers.

The two spades represent the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants.

The spring of clear water is the fountain of life, or the revealed word of God from which flows life everlasting, upon which the church is built.

I will say, in conclusion, that when I first heard the latter-day gospel, I could not understand why the Saints all believed the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants. I thought at the time that the Bible was all that was necessary for us to believe; but I have long since seen that the three books rightly belong together; and thus I find myself placing them with the Bible, or revealed knowledge and wisdom of God. Hence the three complete the plan of life and salvation to man.

I am still in the faith and looking forward to the time when the saints will live, and all strive to live their religion in such a way that the Lord will bless them with every needed blessing. My prayers are for the success of the work.

A DREAM.

Yes, only a dream, a word of admonition to the children of God. As I lay on my bed one night, meditating upon the church work and the many ways it is being carried on, and the indebtedness that seems to be hanging over the church, lo these many years so hard to be removed, it all seemed strange to me; that while we believe this is God's church and work we love so much, we are not more willing to show more devotion to the work than many of us do. And while pondering over those things in my heart I dropped off to sleep and had the following dream:

I dreamed that a heavenly personage came and talked with me. As he approached me he said, "I perceive that you are troubled about many things, which ought not to be; but it will suffice to say that all indebtedness of the church should be paid by tithes and offerings. And if each member would pay one dollar, including every one, it would lift the indebtedness and the work would go forth in mighty power and the hands that are now tied shall be loosened and the way prepared for them to go forth, and wisdom and knowledge shall be increased and power given to God's servants as never before, and a glow of light will ever be with them to guide and direct, to comfort, cheer, and strengthen, and make them to ever rejoice in the Holy One of Israel."

As he turned to go away, he said, "I see you have a stream of living water under your house which is very beautiful, it looks so pure." I replied, "It is not only pure, but very beautiful and very precious." As I spoke I looked up and it was gone, and I awoke rejoicing and thanking God for the dream.

And now, dear Saints, let us each and every one try to live more humble and obedient, that our lives may be more and more exemplary before the world. I feel my inability to do what I would like to; and while I realize the record we make here we will have to face on the other side, whether good or bad, I am thankful that God knows the desire of my heart, and the intents thereof. In conclusion would say, Let us one and all, old and young, strive earnestly and determinedly to get the dollar that the personage spoke of, and see if the Lord will not pour us out a blessing.

[This dream is sent us by a very dear and devoted Saint, who has been and is now anxious to do all that lies in her power to forward the work she has been a long time engaged in.

If, (there is the rub,) if every one in the church would now give one dollar, which seems to a good many to be a small amount, there would be within a week enough money in the Bishop's hands to pay off the college debt, about which there has been so much said, and leave the snug sum of thirty thousand dollars in the treasury for the general work. But we suppose that the heavenly messenger who seemed to speak to this good Saint in a dream was at the moment of speaking a little forgetful of some facts, just like some folks are when awake. It is a fact that if each of the forty-five or fifty thousand members of the church were to pay the one dollar, there would be some forty-five or fifty thousand dollars thus put into the church treasury for a good purpose. But it is a fact equally true that all members are not able to pay the amount suggested. The good Saint who was comforted by this dream, and very justly so, might by a little carefulness easily pay her dollar, so might her husband; and so might a good many of their neighbors; but there are a great many of the members who are not in condition to take from their daily receipts even the small pittance which by slow accumulation might after awhile make up the amount. There are many families where there are members in the family circle in which the husband and father is the only wage earner, the only bread winner, and from these families even the one dollar for the whole household is at times a tax hardly to be met. What follows? This; that the chief burden must be borne by such members of the body as may have more than a pittance of this world's gear. Some willing and able ones must pay an amount of dollars that will count for a good many of the willing and unable. However, we are hopeful that while we write thus, many—all—will "take heart of grace" from what the dream implies, and heed the earnest and eager exhortation to do. At the same time, we suggest that those who may be able will not give the "dollar each" suggested, and then say, "Well, I have done my part; let the rest do theirs." The fact is, that with some the dollars are much more numerous than with others; so that if they will meet and match the "widow's mite," they will need to make their "dollar each" a good deal larger than those paid in by their less fortunate brethren and sisters. It is a suggested lesson worth thinking about, anyway.—EDITOR.]

The problem of life is not to make life easier, but to make men stronger.—David Starr Jordan.

LIFE IN THE MOON.

Knocking his nose against the moon is one of the most irritating experiences of an astronomer. But he can hardly avoid it at times. Our volcanic old satellite is continually getting in his way.

It is so provokingly near by that it resembles the hand mirror manipulated by a mischievous boy across the street. Its broad, glaring reflection, darting the sunlight into the observer's eyes or into the tube of his telescope, puts out the stars and the other more remote and really grander things of the universe.

Diana, with her spreading skirts of gauzy light, has always suited the poets very well. For them she is the premier danseuse of the celestial ballet, always in the foreground, and very captivating in the glare of the footlights.

But the astronomer's glasses long ago revealed to him the wrinkles beneath the drapery, and finding that it was only a dead goddess which made so dazzling a spectacle between him and the stars, he resented her intrusion and rejoiced whenever she temporarily disappeared behind the side scenes of the solar system.

For him the moon was generally a nuisance, although something of a curiosity and worth an occasional glance, like the skull on a doctor's table, because it served as a useful reminder.

But lately there has come a fresh revelation. This is largely due to Professor William H. Pickering, who has studied the moon more assiduously than any other living astronomer.

The moon is not dead, after all.

That is the substance of the new astronomical doctrine. There is something that lives and grows upon the lunar landscapes. It may be some form of plant life, although Professor Pickering is not prepared to say that it is exactly vegetation.

But it resembles vegetation more than anything else. And it covers vast areas that are like prairies in extent.

It has color. We may suppose that it is ablaze with something equivalent to flowers when the hot sun beats upon it. It makes its appearance as the sun rises, and flourishes throughout the lunar day—which is fourteen times longer than our day—and when the long night comes on it perishes.

But its brief duration is no argument against its possession of life. We have on the earth ephemeral forms of life whose entire span of existence is comprised between sunrise and sunset.

And if there is a kind of vegetation on the moon, is it likely that this is the end of the story?

Professor Pickering also finds evidence of the existence of snow on some of the lunar mountains, and he has accumulated much evidence to prove that volcanoes are yet active on the moon.

All these things must cause our satellite to be regarded with fresh interest.

Already the wrinkles seem less deep and repulsive. Perhaps Diana has been playing with us, and all the while laughing behind her fan.

What a rebuke it would be if the first proof that there really is life in other worlds should come to us, not from distant Mars or gleaming Venus, but from the near-by, long-despised moon, which we have so discourteously turned our backs upon.—Garrett P. Serviss, in the Chicago American, May 22, 1902.

THE DISASTER IN THE WEST INDIES AND ITS EXPLANATION.

Now that we have in a measure recovered from the first shock of the West Indian disaster, our attention is turned from the appalling accounts of human destruction to the interesting details of the volcanic phenomena. It is a general rule that the intensity of an eruption is proportional to the volcano's quiescent period. For years the people of Martinique had lived in perfect safety under the shelter of Mont Pelée and they had lost all fear of danger. First warnings of impending danger began on May 3, when the volcano threw out dense clouds of smoke. During the next night these clouds reflected the glowing mass in the crater and rumbling noises were heard. Hot ashes covered the city of St. Pierre on the 4th; and at noon of the 5th a stream of boiling mud suddenly rushed down the mountain side to the sea. The speed of this flow far exceeded that of an express train; for it is said that the distance of five miles was covered in three minutes. This sudden rush caused the sea to recede some three hundred feet and return in a tidal wave of considerable, though not serious proportions. Cable communication with Martinique was interrupted in the afternoon of May 6, and the next news filled the world with horror. An entire city of twenty-eight thousand inhabitants had been literally wiped out of existence.

From the wild and exaggerated stories of the few survivors we gather the following details: Thursday, the 8th, at 7: 50 a. m., there was a sudden, deafening explosion, and immediately the air was filled with hot sulphurous gases which withered everything they touched. It is said that the whole top of the mountain was blown off and fell in hot dust and shattered rock on the city, while mud and lava poured out of the opening thus made. An eye-witness at Morne Rouge, a town four and one half miles away, which was not destroyed, states that there were seven luminous points on the side of the mountain, just before the volcano burst, and that the explosion was followed by ten minutes of absolute darkness. Simultaneously with this explosion a tidal wave tore the vessels in the harbor from their anchorages and wrecked them on the beach. The "Roddam," which had a full pressure of steam on, was the only vessel to escape total destruction, and she worked her way flaming from the harbor, amid a shower of molten matter. In the city almost the entire population was immediately suffocated by the hot poisonous gases. This is proved from the fact that almost all the dead were found face downward with their hands covering their mouths. It is supposed that the destruction was the work of but a few seconds. The short duration of this intense heat is shown by the fact that delicate fabrics were found uninjured among the badly charred victims. The terrific force of the explosion tore up huge trees by their roots and laid them flat; heavy blocks of stone were scattered about; stone buildings were entirely destroyed. Debris covers the city for a depth of twelve feet. According to the present estimates the loss of life was almost equal to that resulting from the tidal wave which followed the eruption at Krakatoa, when thirty-six thousand people perished.

As yet few facts are obtainable of the eruption of Mt. Soufrière, St. Vincent, which occurred on the 9th of May. A large loss of life is reported and dust from the volcano spread over the Barbadoes Islands, seventy-five miles to the east. This eruption had probably a sympathetic connection with that of Mont Pelée. The topographical changes occasioned by these two volcanoes can not be accurately given at present, because of the lack of exact scientific data. It is reported, however, that Mont Pelée, which was previously 4,528 feet high, has now considerable less elevation. Rivers that were obstructed have overflowed their banks, causing floods and landslides. Important submarine changes have also taken place, for in grappling for the broken cable off St. Pierre, the cable ship "Poyer Quartier" reports that she found the sea bottom four thousand feet below the surface of the water, where formerly the depth was but a thousand feet. These changes may result in disaster to shipping until properly recorded by hydrographic survey.

Volcanic eruptions are generally attributed to the expansion of moisture in the heated subterranean rocks. The original theory that the earth is a liquid mass, covered by a thin crust of solid matter is now entirely discarded by scientists. Such conditions would seriously interfere with the rotation of the earth and the stability of the crust. We know the effect of the moon's and sun's attraction on the thin skin of ocean that covers the surface of our globe. Tidal waves are continually sweeping around the earth in a direction contrary to the earth's rotation. In comparison with this we can easily see what a tremendous drag to the rotation of the earth would result were the entire earth a liquid mass covered by a mere shell of solid matter. Scientists tell us that the wave produced would be so powerful as to make even a solid steel crust of three hundred miles of thickness yield like India rubber to its deforming influences. The theory of a molten interior was based on the observation of volcanoes and on the fact that the temperature of the earth increases on the average one degree for every fifty feet of descent from the surface. Following this theory come others, in which the earth is supposed to have a solid core and an outer crust, between which is a layer of liquid material. Any displacement of the crust covering this liquid layer, whether resulting from contraction of the earth or other causes, would force the lava to the surface through the weakest spot. In refutation of this argument the conditions at Hawaii might be considered. The crater of Mauna Loa is 13,650 feet above the sea level, and that of Kilauea is 4,040 feet. These mountains are not over thirty-five miles apart and yet both are filled with lava. How could such varying levels be maintained, if both craters were fed from the same source? This query has forced many to believe that the liquid matter was contained in local, vesicular spaces beneath the crust. Both of these theories were brought forth to reconcile the requirements of physics with those of geology, which called for the existence of fluid matter at a small depth from the surface of the earth. At present geologists have pretty generally discarded these theories as unnecessary; for it is claimed that the powerful pressure due to the earth's contraction would prevent material from attaining a liquid form. Immediately on release of this powerful pressure, however, the matter would become fluid and pour out of the mountain in the form of lava. As stated above, the power which causes the upheaval is attributed to the expansion of imprisoned vapor. From the fact that volcanoes are usually found near the sea, it was at first argued that the water oozed down into the heated regions, either of its own weight or by capillary attraction. Many scientists think this theory to be absurd, for they argue that it would be impossible for the water to enter a region under such compression, also that long before reaching a sufficient depth it would be turned into steam and forced back through the very channels by which it entered. The most plausible theory, and one now pretty generally accepted, accounts for the presence of water in heated rocks as having occurred during their crystallization period. These rocks, in the course of time, were deposited in the sea by the action of rivers. After many ages, the water-bearing rocks are covered to a great depth under layers or "blankets" of deposited matter, and the heat there encountered finally brings the water to a sufficient tension to cause an explosion.

For months after the eruption of Krakatoa red sunsets were seen all over the world, and were attributed to the volcanic dust thrown into the air. This fine dust, commonly called ashes, is merely the rock which is shattered and pulverized by the force of the explosion. In all probability the same phenomenon will follow the West Indian eruptions and in the course of a month red sunsets should be seen in New York. As in the case of the Krakatoa eruption, the dust will probably travel toward the east, following the upper currents of the air which flow in a direction opposite to that of the trade winds.

A marked series of seismic and volcanic disturbances are now occurring over a wide region, but whether these are in any way connected with the eruption of Mont Pelée is merely a matter of conjecture. We have already shown that the volcanoes in Hawaii are not connected, though they are very close together, and we may look upon this series of disturbances merely as a coincidence; for one would suppose that the other volcanoes in the West Indies would be active before the more distant volcanoes of Central America. According to precedent, Mont Pelée should continue in activity for a long period, her eruptions growing weaker and weaker as years pass by. What future changes will result from this disturbance it is hard to tell. Considerable light will shortly be thrown on the situation by the large body of scientists who are already flocking to the scene of the disaster. A short description of the unfortunate island might be of interest. Martinique has an area of 381 square miles and a population of about 190,000, of which number about five thousand are laborers brought from India and over five thousand laborers from Africa; also about five hundred Chinese immigrants. The remainder of the population is largely native negroes, the white population numbering in all about ten thousand. A large share of the interior of the island had never been brought under cultivation, although it has been occupied by the French almost constantly since 1636, a period of 267 years, the only interruption in French control being the period from 1794 to 1802, when the island was held by the British. Slavery existed until 1848, when it was abolished in this as well as other French colonies. Notwithstanding the fact that a large part of its interior has never been brought under cultivation, the island is described by Reclus as "one of the most densely populated spots on the globe; on the arable lands people are packed as closely as in such industrial centers as Lancashire, Flanders, or Saxony."—Scientific American, May 24.

A FAMILY OF CRIMINALS.

At a meeting of the New York County W. C. T. U., New York State, May 22, one of the delegates gave some interesting statistics concerning the record of the descendants of a woman of criminal tendencies who died in 1827. Among other things the delegate said of the family of this criminal:

"Her descendants have been traced. They number eight hundred. Seven hundred were criminals, having been convicted at least once. Thirty-seven were murderers and were executed for their crimes. "This family," the speaker concluded, "has cost the nation $3,000,000 for trials and executions."

Gospel Peace.

O Father, how I praise thy name,
And praise the Holy Ghost!
It brings to me sweet peace and love
And Jesus on the cross.

While reading in thy blessed word
The mysteries of thine own,
It makes them plain, yes, every one,
And all my fears are gone.

The tempter, ah! that wretched thing
Keeps standing at my door,
And tries to bid me go his way,
As many have before.

He tries to win my heart to him,
To leave this gospel dear
But, Lord, I know that it was sent
To bless thy children here.

And to it I will ever cleave,
No matter what it cost;
I know I'm thine, and thou art mine
Though here my bark may toss.

But if I do my duty here,
When life on earth is done
I'll ever stand at thy right hand,
And thou wilt say, "Well done."

The Day is Done.

The day is done, and the darkness
Falls from the wings of Night,
As a feather is wafted downward
From an eagle in his flight.

I see the lights of the village
Gleam through the rain and the mist,
And a feeling of sadness comes o'er me
That my soul can not resist:

A feeling of sadness and longing
That is not akin to pain,
And resembles sorrow only
As the mist resembles the rain.

Come, read to me some poem,
Some simple and heartfelt lay,
That shall soothe this restless feeling,
And banish the thoughts of day.

Not from the grand old masters,
Not from the bards sublime,
Whose distant footsteps echo
Through the corridors of Time.

For, like strains of martial music,
Their mighty thoughts suggest
Life's endless toil and endeavor;
And to-night I long for rest.

Read from some humbler poet,
Whose songs gushed from his heart
As showers from the clouds of summer
Or tears from the eyelids start;

Who, through long days of labor
And nights devoid of ease,

Still heard in his soul the music
Of wonderful melodies.

Such songs have power to quiet
The restless pulse of care,
And come like the benediction
That follows after prayer.

Then read from the treasured volume
The poem of my choice,
And lend to the rhyme of the poet
The beauty of thy voice.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents, like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Sisters: As Daughters of Zion we have been requested to consider the subject of the "Preparation of wholesome food." I have wondered somewhat just how we are to do this, for it is a subject which should claim our ready attention as housewives and mothers, upon many of whom depends the choice of foods as well as their preparation. When we consider how largely the health depends upon what and how we eat, we feel more than willing to discuss anything along these lines.

One rule we have at our home is to do all our own canning and to use none (or very little) of those convenient but, we believe, harmful foods which can be bought anywhere, canned and ready for immediate use, such as fruit, vegetables, fish, jellies, preserves, mince-meat, etc. I would not like to make the statement that none of these are wholesome. Some perhaps may be so, but so many contain so-called "food preservatives" that it is at least wise to avoid their use as much as possible. Now these very "food preservatives" are advertised by dealers as being "tasteless," "thoroughly harmless," and "perfectly wholesome," yet I find in the Governmental report of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1900, this statement: "No tasteless food preservative has been suggested which is entirely nontoxic [non poisonous] and which does not have a marked influence on digestion, even when taken in relatively small doses. Some there may be, whose antiseptic action is so slight that food treated with the minimum amount necessary for its preservation is not unwholesome for an adult in normal health."

How frequently we hear of cases of severe sickness, and often death caused by the eating of canned goods. Perhaps the above statement gives a clue as to the reason, for while the very small amount necessary to preserve food may not be actually dangerous, it is so easy to put in a little too much.

Again I will quote from the same report: "It is of the utmost importance that nothing should be added to foods which is toxic [poisonous] in itself, or which interferes, even to the slightest extent, with the process of digestion. This last point is especially important in its relation to invalids and children. Food treated with antiseptic drugs may perhaps be eaten with impunity by adults who are in good health, and yet turn the scale against an infant or invalid whose life is in the balance; and, indeed, we can not say that the continued use of small amounts even of those antiseptic chemicals which seem to interfere least with the normal functions of the body will not exert a deleterious influence in time."

In view of such evidence as this, it seems to have become necessary for us to give strict attention to the kind of food we eat, to choose as little as possible of these "ready prepared" foods which are liable to contain chemicals. Of course it takes time to prepare everything ourselves, but many of us do a great deal of unnecessary work. Would it not be better for our health, as well as a great deal of saving of the housewife's strength if, for instance, we make up our minds not to have too much variety at one meal? Variety is good, but let it be had rather by having something different at each meal. Do not be afraid of having the dining table appear too plain; simple food is best, especially where there are children growing up. Cake, pie, etc., should be an occasional treat, not daily fare, though fruit should be plentiful. Hot bread and biscuit are injurious if used too often, because they are hard to digest, and it is a pity where a family has to depend altogether upon baker's bread, for it is easy to learn to make good bread, and it is such a satisfaction to take from the oven our own nicely baked loaves, and hear the children's "My! don't that bread smell good!"

At our last Daughters of Zion meeting, a sister gave us her recipe for making good bread; perhaps it would not be amiss if I give mine for cooking that widely used cereal, oatmeal. I use a two-quart stone jar into which put one pint of oat flakes with salt to suit taste; pour over it two pints of boiling water, stirring while pouring, cover, and place in a kettle containing boiling water enough to come well up the jar, but not enough to boil into it. Cover also the kettle, and let boil two or three hours. Do not stir or disturb it in any way, except to keep plenty of water in the kettle, until done boiling when stir it well. I cook it in this way at dinner time to be used at supper when it can be heated in a few minutes by placing it, kettle and all, over the fire until it comes to a boil, then turn it into a dish—a really pretty mold of tremulous jelly, which has an entirely different flavor from the oatmeal which has been cooked ten minutes or half an hour in the usual way. The children like this, and it can be served in a number of ways, with fruit, as well as cream and sugar. The long cooking makes it more easy to digest.

CLARA M. FRICK.

THIS is a step in the right direction and by all means should be followed by many other communications of a similar kind, and we hope that the sisters will be heedful of the request of our Advisory Board in this matter. It is the healthful preparation of plain, nutritious food which is desired—such food as tends to the building up of strong, healthful bodies, vigorous minds, and the engendering of spiritual desires. Surely there is not a mother in Zion who is not interested in this matter. Let us hear from you, then, that we may be strengthened in our labors and many be benefited.—ED.

A Few Items of Our Voyage.

PREFACE.

In continuing this journal of our travels among the islands, and knowing that several others will write up the same subject for publication, all of whom will aim to give an account of the various instances just as they were according to his views and impressions, I for one am quite interested in seeing how nearly alike or how very different our views of the circumstances will be. There may even be apparent contradictions that a few words would set all right, such as this: In Bro. A. H. Smith's letter in HERALD of October 30, speaking of our arrival at Papeete, he makes the statement, "We were taken in carriages direct to the chapel," while the writer, whose letter appears in the same HERALD, speaks of going to the chapel in quite a round-about way. Some may question, which one is right? The answer is, both. Bro. Smith, being a stranger to the place, may not have known but what the direct road was taken from the ship to the chapel, though it was not the route we took that he had reference to, but that we went direct to the chapel instead of the house. Therefore, when the reader finds a difference in the rehearsal of the events of our travels, let him bear in mind that others, long before us, even eighteen hundred years ago, wrote up a certain series of events whose subject entitled them to a greater degree of inspiration than ours has any claim for, and yet the same incidents were worded differently by each writer, and omissions on the part of some have been construed into contradictions.

Well, I have been longer in getting ourselves away from Taenga than I expected. However, on the early dawn of Tuesday morning the natives were astir carrying trunks, boxes, baskets, and bundles of every description down to the big boat, and last but not least came the pigs and chickens. It took three of those men more than two hours carrying stuff on board, besides what had been loaded in the day before. A few, something like a dozen or more of those lumbering parcels, belonged to us American missionary folks. When the three large baskets of roast pork, all hot, brown, and crisp just from the native oven came on board, the sight and smell of it was appetizing to at least my gaunt stomach, but the fragrant odor was soon offset by a basket of raw fish being deposited close by. No covering on either. Then came great branches or bunches of cocoanuts.

"Now," said I to Bro. Alexander, "if there was a canoe on board, we would have a real native outfit." Pointing to a nice large one, he said, "That one is to go." And soon it was launched, to be taken on board after we got out through the pass. True the boat was much larger than the one we left Raroia in, but with the additional number of people,—there being twenty-two natives, including the children,—and the consequent additional loadings, we were still somewhat crowded. But the deck, or housetop, where we four took up our abode, was in a more comfortable shape, and a clean piece of matting laid on it. The morning for starting was beautiful. The rain-squalls had all cleared away; wind fair, and "pass" as smooth as could be, and we were borne rapidly out on the broad blue ocean again. The long main-boom was swung off at right angles from the mast, and a large awning put up to shade all, and high enough to sit comfortably beneath; the sun being too hot for even the natives to sit out in. No one was sick and we had a pleasant run across to Makemo, and reached the pass about one p. m., and were delighted to find the waters as smooth as oil. Personally I had entertained some unpleasant apprehensions concerning it, since it was so wild and angry-looking when we entered with the steamer on our way up to Raroia. Something like an hour and a half of stemming the current before we reached the stone wharf close to the small town, and I assure you we were all hungry. We all went ashore and made a few purchases in the way of salt, bread, and some canned fruit. A native killed and dressed a chicken for me, made a fire in an oil-can fitted up to serve the purpose of a stove, and set it on the wharf right in the boiling sun. After the exercise of patience and perseverance, and frequent trips from shore to boat, and back to shore, our chicken was nicely fried and table spread on the house under the awning, and we four swept that chicken away in a very short time. Had it not been for the quantity of bread and gravy that accompanied it our appetites would scarcely have been appeased; as it was, the plates were all cleaned off, and we looked over our shoulders longingly at the rest of the chickens that were tied on board the boat wishing that young pullet had accompanied the one that had just passed on by way of the frying-pan.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

We are very glad to publish this "short sketch" as it is a very suggestive one. Many districts have their "rural places" where conventions have never been held and from which few ever attend the conventions at other places. We have met many who have never attended a convention. They do not care to because they know nothing of what the conventions are like. They can not be induced to go to another place to attend a convention, or to go in time for anything but the district conference, perhaps. Better do as the Galland's Grove District workers have done, take the convention to them. There are many districts that need just such work. Is not yours one of them? There is a point in this. Do you see it?—ED.

Convention and Conventions.

By request I will endeavor to give a short sketch of the proceedings of the Religio and Sunday-school convention of the Galland's Grove, Iowa, District. At our last regular session prior to this which was held at Deloit, Iowa, in November, it was decided to hold one extra convention in the rural part of the district and was left to the program committee when and where it should be held. They decided to hold it December 27 and 28, 1901, at Benan. Well, we were glad it was appointed at this place. Yet as conventions in the rural parts were something new, we were somewhat doubtful as to the success with which it would meet, and we were not alone in our doubting either. But when the time for the convention arrived, it found quite a number of the brethren and sisters on hand to assist. At ten a. m. we assembled with Religio. President J. M. Baker, in chair. I will not give program as it was similar to regular convention; but suffice it to say the time was spent in listening to papers and discussing them,

At this convention there was quite a number that were privileged to attend that were never at a convention before. To tell it in their language as some have expressed themselves to me, they "did not know we had such good times at conventions." Right here will say to some that may think we did not meet with success, I have attended nearly all the conventions in the district the past three years, and I have never attended a better convention during that time. From the very first session to the close the Spirit bore witness that we were doing what was pleasing to our heavenly Father.

On Sunday last, quite a number of Saints came out, seemingly interested in the Sunday-school, that never had manifested this interest previous to this convention. I believe good has been done that is lasting. I feel the convention has been one of success. I believe that if in the future conventions are thus carried on in rural parts of the district that good will be accomplished, that can not be accomplished otherwise. Thus may the good work go on.

Defects—Illustrating.

The first defect which I shall endeavor to point out is in the method of instruction, quite commonly noticed in our schools, and is a failure to sufficiently appeal to the simplicity of the pupils' minds, especially those of the primary and intermediate grades. The methods used by many teachers of all grades lack variety and adaption, these defects being most noticeable in the juvenile departments of our work.

PICTURES AND SLATES

or hand-blackboards do not occupy their proper places in those grades, either because they are too much trouble or because the teacher feels her inability to use them. The lack of many important gospel truths being properly impressed on the child's mind is, in many instances, traceable to the failure on the teacher's part to accompany otherwise valuable instruction with impressive views, and important truths printed in attractive letters with colored crayon.

Teachers of these departments would find that taking to the class with them and there printing words and drawing simple pictures would leave a far deeper impression on the child's mind than all the telling and questioning she could think of even if the time were lengthened by one half. To illustrate: Take the ten virgins; five had oil and a bright light, while the other five lacked these. With ten marks quickly drawn on the board a teacher could draw rude pictures representing the five with oil in their lamps, and the five without it. It is not necessary to be an artist to do this. The teacher that feels unable to sketch such simple drawings would feel blessed by half an hour's practice each week on simple drawings to present before the class. The drawings need only to consist of a few rude marks for certain characters to show some contrast, or illustration of some historical event, quickly placed on the board in the presence of the class. Pupils from fifteen to twenty years of age would also get instruction forcibly impressed by such a method. An improvement in the beginning of which should, in my estimation, be in canvassing the second lesson of the quarter and should be conducted by the teacher of the class during class work. This I will term the review proper. The general review for all the grades should, usually, be conducted by the superintendent or one appointed by him; but the superintendent can not give reviews to all the classes together as each class would need. The teacher of the class should keep up a constant review as the lessons of the quarter are canvassed. The review proper should not be put off till the last lesson of the quarter. A teacher in a day school would have poor success if he put off the review till the book is finished, or if he depended wholly upon some one else to conduct the review of his class as a general review of the classes in a body should be conducted. A review of the principal thoughts of each lesson should be so kept up that but little study of the last lesson should be necessary. As the quarter is nearing its end the details in the reviews are dropped one after another until the most prominent points stand out in bold relief and the child has a frame-work, as it were, pictured out in his mind and based on the lessons of the quarter. We can improve our methods by review, review, REVIEW.

For the Galland's Grove, Iowa, district Sunday-school convention.

Letter Department.

CARSONVILLE, Michigan.

I organized a school at Dickersville, Michigan, May 11, and it bids fair for a splendid school. Our district convention meets June 27 at Shabbona, Michigan. God is blessing me in my labors, and I wish to do more this conference year than ever before.

O. J. HAWN.

CHARLESTON, Nebraska, May 19.

Editors Herald: I came to this place on the 10th inst. My sister, Lizzie C. McConnell, lives four miles southwest of here. Most of their family belong to the church, and are very anxious some preaching should be done in this section. There seems to be a good opening for work to be done here.

There is another family or two of Saints close to here. One by the name of A. W. Rusler, whose post-office is Lushton, Nebraska. About five of that family are members of the church; were baptized some three years ago, but have had no preaching since. I preached at their schoolhouse the last evening and I am sure good can be done through this part of country if the missionaries would look after it.

My sister and I attended meeting at the Methodist church on Sunday, at Charleston, and their minister asked me to occupy in the pulpit. I did so, and preached for them at night, too. I think there would be no trouble for the elders to get the use of a church here. Mrs. H. D. Havely and daughter want to be baptized. They live five miles southeast of Burwell, Garfield County, Nebraska. Some of our brethren should look after this in time. They wanted me to come and attend to it, but it is about one hundred twenty miles from here. I expect to take train to-morrow evening for Bozeman, Montana, my mission field, and would say to the brethren and sisters in Montana, those who are wanting preaching done in their part, let me know and I will try and call on you and preach for you if a place can be provided. Please write to me and let me know your wants. For the present my address will be Bozeman, Montana, in care of Gomer Reese.

ROCK ISLAND, Illinois, May 20.

Editors Herald: The campaign seems to have opened in the Tri-Cities. I arrived in Rock Island on my way to Wisconsin, Saturday morning, thinking to stop over Sunday as I had been asked to do. I found myself immediately in business. Bro. J. Arthur Davis, in charge of Kewanee District, had arrived a day or two before and found the Utah elders in evidence.

We advertised through the newspapers to lecture at the Saints' hall in Davenport, Sunday afternoon and evening on the differences between the two churches.

We both had the best of liberty. A number of strangers were present, including two young women who were either members or sympathizers of the Utah church. The elder who accompanied them remained outside of the door as we discovered after service.

On the streets we have tried to draw the fire of the Utah representatives by asking questions, etc., but no, they want "peaceable meetings." We have also reviewed their efforts, but there is no fight in them.

Last night we preempted an opposite corner of the street, intending to hold forth independently of their meeting, or without any attempt at controversy. We were somewhat late in commencing and they had the crowd to start with; but from our perch in Bro. Clow's buggy, with chart on the apostasy and restoration set up on a frame, we soon attracted attention, drew a crowd around us, and took the wind entirely out of our Utah friends' sails. They were left to "hold the sack," as the saying is. We noticed a number of interested ones in the audience who remained throughout the hour's discourse.

Some of the newspapers in Davenport have signified to Bro. Davis their willingness to print anything we may wish to write up, so will try them and improve the opportunities they afford us.

I regard the prospect as hopeful here for a favorable season if a tent can be secured according to Bro. Davis' plan, to operate with in these cities during the summer. The Saints seem to be feeling well and interested in all that is being done.

It has been impressed upon me as a lesson of the present that we must, many of us at least, be more aggressive in our warfare than we have in the past, and this not only with reference to the elders of Utah, but those of other denominations.

Instead of being comparatively idle during the summer season, street preaching in the cities and towns may profitably employ us. I am satisfied that it will be more in vogue and more in favor with us in America than it has been.

M. F. GOWELL.

BLACKWELL, Oklahoma, May 20.

Editors Herald: We are all well and feeling much encouraged after being visited by our worthy missionary, Bro. W. P. Pickering, who preached five or six sermons in Bro. A. F. Lambert's opera house. The attendance was not as good as it should have been, but in a city (we have three thousand people) it is harder to get people to hear than in country places, and I think two or three will some day make further investigations and join our band of eight Saints now living in Blackwell. Some favorable comments have been made since the meetings. One man said we were all right in claiming to be the church of Jesus Christ, for if Christ was the bridegroom his church is the bride or wife; but if Christ is the bridegroom the churches (if more than one) would be his brides or wives. That would be teaching Brighamism, and he said he knew we did not believe in polygamy.

I hope those who contemplate visiting Oklahoma will write us or give us a call.

W. D. McKNIGHT.

WALLACEBURG, Ontario, May 20.

Dear Editor: I have just arrived home from the northwest, where Elder McMullen and myself have spent the winter in trying to advance Zion's cause. Hall rent being so distressingly (to our pocketbook) high, it is next to impossible to work the towns and cities of that country; and the farmers are so busy from this on that I doubt if they would take time (to get the chance) to go to heaven, let alone going to the trouble of getting ready to make heaven on earth. Thus our main hold, getting crowds at country schoolhouses, is broken away and we are compelled to abandon for a season until nature shall take her artistic brush and bronze over the grain so that it may be garnered, and then we will once more be able to attract some of the many honest ones toward the light of the "Angel's Message." In the meantime we shall work, fight, and pray, leaving the final results with the Master, who "doeth all things well."

WALTER L. BENNETT.

P. S.—District Religio officers were here and organized a local, Sunday, 18th inst.

CHICAGO, Illinois, May 19.

Editors Herald: We have been trying to get acquainted with Chicago, and have, in a measure, succeeded, as we think. Time and further experience may, however, alter up-to-date views. But we are safe in saying that this great city has its full complement of social, political, and religious humbugs, and is fully up to date with other places in these regards; enough, anyway, to make him who loves the truth, and believing he has an important message, as relates to it, and is willing to have his claims examined by competent experts; enough, we say, to make such a person weary with the outlook, saying nothing at this time concerning the inlook that confronts him.

We were at the Northwestern depot the other day, and caught our first glimpse of "Elijah" Dowie, bending under the weight of grief and disappointment in the death of his daughter and failure of his world advertised theory as relates to her case. As we saw this new "prophet" and "restorer" of the ancient faith, surrounded by family and near relatives, as they filed into their private car, and then as we passed along the side of the long train filled with his followers who were accompanying him out to "Zion" and the place of the daughter's burial, and as we beheld another train being filled up with curiosity seekers or friends, which was to follow, we could not help the reflection, that, how fast and furious and popular a humbug will grow, while God's great and beautiful gospel of truth languishes while his servants and prophets are either unknown, unnoticed, or, if noticed, but to be ignored, oppressed, persecuted, vilified, and slain. "For false christes and false prophets shall arise and deceive many." Whether or not he may recognize divinity or superior force of insight or natural ability to forecast future events, the agnostic acquainted with history must accredit Jesus Christ with being a good marksman in order to strike at such long range such men as Alexander Dowie.

Cold weather until recently. Yesterday and to-day, hot; and prospects for a continuance. What of July, and August, and me, in this great and dirty city?

Three preaching appointments filled yesterday. Pullman, Central Branch, and west side, and we feel as though we had been dropped from the top of a five-story building: and we will not try it again, even if they cut our salary, or until it gets cooler, anyway.

M. H. BOND.

HARLAN, Iowa, May 18.

Dear Herald: At the close of General Conference I came directly here on matters of business in consequence of the death of my father, J. W. Chatburn, who so closely followed my mother to the paradise of God. We fully sense the thought now, "That the old home is not what it used to be." There is a stillness, a quietness, an emptiness that prevails on every hand, these paths their feet have trod, these places that have known and welcomed them so long; will know them no more for ever. The thought of sadness steals o'er the heart, father and mother are gone; yet the gospel hope dispels the gloom and from our heart we can apply the beautiful sentence of Bro. M. T. Short, "The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality."

Since coming here we have not been idle on the ministerial line. I have preached six sermons from the pulpit my father has filled so long. The congregations have been fair to excellent. Some who have stood aloof for years have renewed their allegiance, to the joy, comfort, and satisfaction of Saints. May they be led on into the sunny ways of gospel light, and continue until the end, is our prayer.

We preached also at Woodbine, Logan, Magnolia, and spoke at prayer-meeting in Persia. The Saints are feeling well, and our brethren in charge of the above branches are urging the fight for truth.

The onward march, as evinced by the late conference, is giving courage and confidence in the "marvelous work and a wonder."

We leave for Independence, Missouri, our home, for a few days, prior to starting for our mission field for the year. Saints having relatives or friends in Wisconsin may write us at Independence, giving name and place, and we shall cheerfully visit them in the interest of the informant and our work.

Our health is much improved, for which we are grateful.

T. W. CHATBURN.

DELTA, Colorado, May 13.

Editors Herald: I wish to call the attention of the HERALD readers to the Benevolent Free-will Society, of Delta, Delta County, Colorado. It was organized as a local organization in connection with the Fairview Branch, and would have been entirely within the branch had all the members been a unit. However, those interested proceeded to organize the society upon the lines of the law of the church, and all being poor we so framed our by-laws to reach outside our community and also the church, so that others desiring to assist in the work might have the privilege to labor with us.

Our object is to create a general fund or property held in trust for benevolent purposes under the gospel law, accessible only by the law of necessity, of any member of the society, and at the same time honor the temporal law of the church with all its holdings, and by so doing when the time comes to enter into a stake we will have property to consecrate to the general church.

We do not expect to go beyond our means to prosecute the work, but on account of our lack of means we court investigation and the interest of all members of the church, and if successful in securing aid will expand upon our present plans. Otherwise we will acquire such as we can with the means at our disposal.

There are opportunities to secure timber and coal lands within easy distance of our branch, by which we can protect ourselves against the trusts in these branches of industry, and at the same time provide a steady revenue to go into the common fund to be used for the exemplification of the gospel of Christ.

For further particulars and information any one can secure a copy of our prospectus and by-laws by addressing the undersigned (as the corresponding secretary is temporarily absent), inclosing a two-cent stamp for postage for the same.

We will be glad to correspond with any one desiring information.

M. L. SCHMID.

CENTER, Texas, May 16.

Dear Herald: I and my family are of the isolated ones. We came here last October. Center is a small but industrious town, and the county-seat of Shelby County.

The three churches represented here have held special meetings this spring. The Methodists got about twenty converts, the Baptists one, Christians five. So those I meet usually ask the question, To what church do you belong? Nearly every day I explain all I can, and the Lord has stood by me. A division has occurred in the Christian Church. Chisem came here a year ago and taught things contrary to their faith. A few agreed with him. I had quite a talk with one of the pastors concerning the dark ages and the restored gospel, and the difference between us and the Utah people. He asked me to teach a class of young ladies in their Sunday-school. I have been teaching it for about a month.

A Christian evangelist has been holding a series of meetings, and about the first night he put the church of God and the church of the devil on the board and put healing of the sick with the devil. I could see every eye on me the very moment he put it there. He said no one on earth to-day had that power, and said it was hypnotism. After church they brought him to me and introduced him saying, "You stepped on her toes." So of course I could not keep still and I invited him to my house the next day and told him I would explain what we believed and why we believed it. I fasted and prayed the Lord to guide me; and the Lord stood by me.

Dear Saints, I love this work. It is meat and drink to my soul. I was led into the light of this gospel by Bro. Ellis Short and grandma, and was baptized nearly seventeen years ago by Bro. M. T. Short. I never have regretted the step. I want to bear my testimony to the work that I know it is divine.

Four persons are reading some of our literature. One man and his wife have read the Book of Mormon. He was well pleased with it. He and his wife are school-teachers, and he is anxious to hear some of our people preach. They belong to the Christian Church. Another lady is reading the Book of Mormon and reads all of our works, and rejoices with me and is a great help. She can explain the principles. She asks quite often if any of our elders will come here. I do not know but I am quite sure that we can not get the churches. One told me he thought we could get the court-house. So if any elders can come they can stay at our house, and my husband and I will do all we can to get a place to preach. The Utah elders have been here and preached three sermons in the Christian church. They were not permitted to have the house any longer.

If there are any here that the Lord wants to bring into his kingdom he will open up the way so the people may hear. If our people could come, we have a large house, and if no other way opens they could preach in our house. We are twelve miles from the railroad, but would meet any of the elders who will let us hear from them. Our nearest railroad town is Tenaha, on the Houston East and West Railway. If there are any Saints near us I would like to hear from them. Your sister,

BELLE MOORE.

WILBURTON, May 20.

Dear Herald: Since returning from conference I have been busy preaching near here. Have enjoyed splendid liberty. I feel hopeful, though there are few Saints in my field of labor, and they are scattered; not a branch in my field, and I can not reach the few Saints without traveling. Where is the money to come from? is the question. In all my mission work in the past I have traveled with team and rig of my own until this year, and I feel at a loss when called on to go, and no conveyance. I therefore take this method of notifying the Saints and friends in Northern Texas and Southern Indian Territory that I am ready to respond to calls provided railroad fare is looked after. My home address Wilburton, Indian Territory.

S. W. SIMMONS.

DALLAS, Texas, May 14.

Editors Herald: I left home April 30, with intention of laboring in the counties adjacent to Fort Worth and Dallas. My first effort was at Fort Worth, where we found a welcome at the homes of Brn. McFarlan, Nicoll, and Umphrey. These brethren are all anxious to see the work established in that place, but we could not see any way to reach the people except by visiting each of these families and encouraging them all we could to look forward with hope to a brighter day for the work in that growing city. Preached once at the home of Bro. McFarlan to a small but seemingly interested congregation.

I have recently been holding services every night at a point eight miles west of Dallas. Some seem to be very much interested but time only will tell what the results will be.

I am expecting Bro. B. F. Renfro to join me here and labor with me for a while. Our next point will be Elam, ten miles east of Dallas, where we have some very close friends to the gospel.

All who wish to write me in regard to the demand for preaching will please write me at Elam, Dallas County, Texas for the remainder of this month. Address me in care of J. J. Elam.

This is a good field in that it is thickly settled and school-houses every two or three miles, but the people are pressed financially owing to the short crop last year, and not too promising one this year.

T. J. SHEPPARD.

SAN BERNARDINO, California, May 20.

Editors Herald: The work in this part of the Lord's vineyard is progressing as well as could be expected considering the opposition from the adverse powers and indifference of the people as regards the gospel work, many preferring the pleasures of the world to that of hearing gospel message. We have a fair attendance at meetings. Elder H. L. Holt came here on the first of the month and remained two weeks and preached some good sermons on the gospel plan. A good spirit prevailed during the services. On the 18th Elder Albert Carmichael preached to the Saints on tithing and consecration. I am glad the church is moving along these lines, which indicates that the time of Zion's redemption is approaching.

We have not had a visit from Bro. Foss yet, but perhaps will in due time. I ever pray for Zion's welfare.

A. E. JONES, Jr.

MARTIN, Texas, May 22.

Editors Herald: I came to this place Monday last to hold a series of meetings. I commence to-night with very fair prospects for good. I am now visiting the different branches of the district before conference, which will meet at Texas Central Branch, July 19. We desire everybody who can to come and meet with us and remain for a week or ten days. Let all who can, come prepared to camp on the ground. Pasturage can be had near by for stock, so people need not be troubled with horses during the meetings.

We want to have a profitable meeting and, to this end let every one who can reasonably, fast and pray on Friday before the conference, which will be July 18. Let every one invite the Holy Spirit to come with them.

E. W. NUNLEY, District President.

GALESBURG, Missouri, May 23.

Editors Herald: As I am anxious to do all I can during the coming year for the advancement of gospel work, I take this opportunity to address the Saints in Texas, my mission field. I am anxious to reach as many isolated members as possible, those removed from branch limits, and would like any in this condition to correspond with me at once, and as soon as I can make it convenient I will try and reach them. If any having friends in the mission will kindly inform me of their whereabouts, I will try and hunt them up. Please send me letters of introduction so I can go properly prepared to introduce myself.

Saints, let us all preach this coming year. I imagine this may startle some, but let me repeat a declaration that the Lord has given to us as a church. The language is found in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8, and reads: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." From this we infer that there is something for all to do, and if we expect to be blessed equally we must all perform our parts equally. It would be very unfair and not in keeping with an impartial God to require his ministry to go out into an unfriendly world and be separated from home and its associations to proclaim the gospel and permit all others to remain at home and acquire worldly possessions and not contribute to God his share. Let us not deceive ourselves, but go to with all our might and do our respective duties and all will be blessed together.

I am at present writing at Galesburg, Missouri, where I have been spending a few days assisting Bro. F. C. Keck in a protracted effort. I find him an agreeable companion and an ardent worker, one that is in touch with the church and its interests. Wish the church had a thousand such fearless advocates.

I have been associated during my transit to my mission field with that old veteran, L. L. Wight, and if the church will pay heed to his advice and counsel they will not go far astray.

I will reach my destination about June 1 where I expect by the assistance of God to labor in the behalf of his kingdom. It is indeed a lonely life to lead, separated from home and friends unless God should support us. So I would ask an interest in the prayers of God's people. I would especially request the Saints in Galland's Grove and Pottawattamie Districts to correspond with me, as I am so well acquainted with and have learned to love them, and am intensely interested in their welfare. My home address is Dow City, Iowa, where all correspondence will reach me. My field address will be announced later on.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's work, I remain,
Your brother,
ROMANAN WIGHT.

Pastoral.

Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico Mission: The ministry and Saints of the above field will please take notice. Elder J. W. Morgan, whose address is 725 East Dale Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado, will have the active oversight of the missionary work in Eastern Colorado and Eastern Wyoming this year. Brn. J. F. Curtis, James Kemp, E. D. Bullard, and C. E. Willey will please report to him and labor as he may direct. Bro. J. M. Stubbart will have charge of Western Colorado and New Mexico. Brn. K. Seli and J. B. Wildermuth will occupy in this division of the field as he may direct. Bro. Stubbart may be addressed at Delta, Delta County, Colorado. Any of the ministry not under General Conference appointment who may be able to devote a part of their time to missionary work in this mission will please report to me and arrangements will be made for their labor. Quarterly reports are desired from all of the General Conference appointees. I hope the scattered Saints will take notice of the appointment of the brethren named to have charge of the divisions of the mission and will cooperate with them in trying to secure new openings, that the work may be pushed into new fields. We would like to hear from every family of isolated Saints in this mission. We want to preach the word in every town and hamlet where there is any opportunity—in private houses and on the streets when no better opportunities are open. We hope all of the Saints in this field will remember that the address of our Bishop's agent is Charles E. Everett, 2809 Welton Street, Denver, Colorado, and will write him frequently, sending in your tithes and offerings to help carry on the work of the Lord. Let us each try to do a little more than in the past. My address is 4539 West Thirty-third Avenue, Denver, Colorado, and I will be glad to correspond with any of the Saints in regard to the needs of the work in their localities. John B. Roush, Submissionary in Charge of Colorado Mission.

To the Priesthood and Membership of the Pottawattamie District, a Kindly Greeting: Having been by proper authority appointed as sub-missionary in charge of the district, I deem it proper to call your attention to some of the duties claiming our attention. General Conference appointees will be expected to labor in harmony with that part of the revelation given in 1894 which says, "The missionaries shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts to the care of the standing ministry." They should move out from the branches and seek to make new openings for the preaching of the word. You will find an open field in Cass, Adair, and Eastern Pottawattamie Counties, the west end of the last-named county having been pretty well looked after in the past, and well provided with local officers. As this is a cooperative work the responsibility of preaching the gospel rests upon the local elders and priests as well as the missionaries. Those who are not appointed to labor in branches are urged to move out into the regions round about seeking openings to preach, making and filling regular appointments. You hope to share in the reward at the end of the harvest, so should not shirk your part of the labor, for the recompense is only promised to the faithful and diligent. The membership may also share in this work by giving financial aid, securing houses in which to preach, seeing that they are open, clean, warm, lighted, advertising the meetings, attending the same to aid in singing, and give the influence of your presence in bringing others to the service. By so doing you will help the work along. The missionaries are requested to be punctual in reporting to me the first of July, October, January, and March, so that I may be prepared to report to the missionary in charge. The local aids in the field should report to district conference. I hope and trust that the good Lord will bless all his servants with wisdom and light so that we will be found doing our duty. Yours in Christ, D. R. Chambers, Submissionary in Charge of the Pottawattamie District. Field address is Council Bluffs, Iowa, Lock Box 202.

Fifth Quorum of Elders.

Will each member of this quorum kindly send me his name and address in full immediately. I need them before I issue our annual circular letter which must soon be sent out. Fraternally, D. A. Anderson, Secretary.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Oregon: Having been continued Bishop's agent of Oregon, I take this opportunity to inform any new members who may not have learned of the continuation. All money as tithing or offering will be thankfully received, booked to your account, and promptly receipted. Alma Morris, Bishop's Agent for Oregon.

Conference Notices.

Clinton District will convene at Coal Hill chapel, near El Dorado Springs, Saturday, June 14.

Des Moines District will convene at Runnells, June 14, at ten a. m.

Northern Michigan District will convene at Freesoil, Saturday, June 21.

Northern Wisconsin District will convene at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, Saturday, June 15.

Little Sioux conference will be held at Magnolia, Iowa, June 7 and 8.

CORRECTIONS.

By telegram from Bro. G. A. Smith, Galien, Michigan, we learn that conference of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will convene at Galien, June 14, 10:30 a. m., instead of the 7th, as announced last week.

Kewanee District will meet at Millersburg, Illinois, June 7, 8, instead of one week later as published in last issue of HERALD.

Convention Notices.

Far West Association will meet with Mt. Pleasant School, Delano Branch, Friday, June 20, at 10:30 a. m.

Northern Michigan Association will convene at Freesoil, June 20, at two p. m.

Northeastern Kansas Association will convene June 13, at Atchison, Kansas, at ten a. m.

Religio Notices.

Religians of Little Sioux District, Iowa, will convene June 5, at Magnolia, Iowa, at eight p. m.

Chatham District Religio convention will meet at Longwood, Ontario, in the Saints' church, on Friday, June 20, at ten a. m.

June 10-12 is to be the great gathering of the Iowa Sunday-school Workers at Sioux City. This promises to be one of the most helpful conventions ever held in our State. A large chorus choir under the direction of E. O. Excell; instruction at each session for primary and intermediate teachers by Mrs. Bryner; Up-to-date Sunday-school Methods by W. C. Pearce of Chicago; Hours of Bible Study by Dr. Stephen Phelps of Omaha; Work for the Boys by Willis Brown of Chicago; with Iowa's Smith of Grinnell, Bryan of Des Moines, Ferguson of Cedar Rapids, Wickersham of Indianola, Van Ness of Mason City, Schultz of Waterloo, Dudley of Marshalltown, Groom of Clinton, Wells of Oskaloosa, Lace of Odebolt, Clemmer of Des Moines will make a program that Sunday-school workers should some way, some how plan to hear. The committees at Sioux City have planned to entertain a large delegation and make all who come feel welcome. All accredited delegates will receive free entertainment for lodging and breakfast. Names of delegates should be sent to Wm. Tackaberry. Your County Secretary will give you credentials. For further information write B. F. Mitchell, General Secretary, Des Moines.

The Board of Publication has appointed two of its number a committee to investigate the practicability of enlarging the Saints' Hymnal. It is quite probable that the majority of the tunes will be drawn from the Harmony, but it will be necessary and desirable to secure some new numbers either original or selected. Send to T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, such original or selected manuscripts as you wish to submit and they will be receipted for by mail and carefully preserved till such time as you may call for them or they may be placed in the hands of the committee that shall be appointed to arrange the matter.

Further: Let all lovers of song take their Harmonies and from them select not more than two hundred tunes not now in the Hymnal and designate them by both name and number. Also give number of words to be used with each, thus: "Harmony 3, 'Siberia,' Harp 4." Sign your name to these lists and send as above. This should be done as soon as practicable as the board wishes to consider the matter at its next meeting in a few weeks.

Respectfully,

THE BAPTIST CHURCH.

We are requested to give a history of the origin of the Baptist Church. "The name 'Baptist' has been borne by the denomination whom it now designates about two hundred years. It was given to them, as is supposed, either during the commonwealth in England or shortly afterwards. The name by which they were known previous to the commonwealth was Anabaptist, and the same name in German, 'Wiedertäufer' (Rebaptiser), had for more than one hundred years before been applied to the predecessors of English Baptists in Switzerland and Germany. But as in Switzerland, Germany, Moravia, and Holland these Christians had at first denied the appropriateness of the name 'Wiedertäufer' (Rebaptiser), so in England their first recorded confession of faith (A. D. 1644) is said to be of 'Churches of Christ in London, which are commonly (though unjustly) called 'Anabaptist.' . . . The German 'Anabaptists' more frequently practiced pouring than immersion; and the same statement may be made respecting the Dutch 'Mennonites.' These bodies of Christians agreed with our modern Baptists, however, in admitting only professed believers to baptism, and in maintaining an independence of a gospel church of ecclesiastical or political control. They are, in some sense, the progenitors of the Baptists of to-day, though the historical connection between the two can not easily be traced.

"Over the continental Baptists of the time of the Reformation has hung a cloud of misrepresentation for three centuries. The Peasant War (1525) and the Münster Rebellion (1535) have been laid at their door. That there were some renegade Baptists at Münster no one would deny, as there were more renegade Lutherans. . . . With respect to the Peasant War, Münzer, its leader, never was a Baptist, and never acted in concert with Baptists. In the discussions with Zwingle before 1525, the Baptists of Switzerland had maintained a view held by many of their descendants in Europe, that Christians have no right to use arms for self defense or the defense of the land; and this view was maintained by the Swiss and German Baptists at their convention at Schleithem, near Schaffhausen, September, 1527. . . .

"Until 1531-32, Baptists had been most numerous in Switzerland, and southern Germany, the Tyrol, Austria, and Moravia; after this date they appeared in large numbers in the Netherlands, and in the countries bordering the Baltic up to the boundary of Russia. When they first appeared in the Netherlands, can not be decided. Ypeij and Dermout say Anabaptists were, according to the archives of Groningen, expelled in 1517. Professor van Oostersee (Herzog's Encyclopedia, vol. LX., 346) says of the Mennonites or Netherland Baptists: "They are peculiar to the Netherlands, and are older than the Reformation, and must therefore by no means be confounded with the Protestantism of the sixteenth century, for it can be shown that the origin of the Baptists reaches further back and is more venerable. . . . The history of the Netherlands Baptists, particularly at first, is written in blood and tears."

"In 1527, at The Hague, the daughter of Weynken Claes of Monickendam was strangled and burnt; also Jan Walen and two companions at Haarlem. In 1532, Kraen of Harsenswoude, his wife, and two others, were put to death at Haarlem. In the same year nine citizens of Amsterdam suffered martyrdom at The Hague." (See article "Baptists," pp. 362, 364, vol. I., Johnson's Cyclopædia.)

It is very difficult to follow the history of the Baptist Church on account of the obscurity which has obtained through lapse of time, persecution, and the failure to keep accurate records through the transition. However, the Baptist Church in America originated with Roger Williams who was banished from the settlement at New Haven, Salem, Massachusetts, and formed a colony among friendly Indians at Providence, Rhode Island. Roger Williams was born in Wales in the year 1598. He was educated at Oxford College, was a member of the Church of England, and was designed for the priesthood. He, however, became a Puritan and emigrated to America in 1630. He settled at Salem, Massachusetts. He became obnoxious to the settlers because of his rigidly-held and openly-expressed views against the union of church and state, and his strong opposition to persecution for religious conscience in any form. He was not at the time a Baptist, though he held to views somewhat similar to them, and in his contentions against the settlers at Salem he advocated principles of which the Baptists had been the representatives. Not tolerating his views the settlers banished him and expelled him from the colony in 1635. In the spring of 1636 he settled in the State of Rhode Island, founding the colony, obtaining a charter from the king. One of the principles of the colony was that there should be no persecution for conscience sake in matters of religion; that every man was to be at liberty to worship God after his own convictions. After the colony had grown to some extent, there being no minister in New England who had been baptized by immersion on his profession of faith, in March, 1639, by an agreement between them, Roger Williams was baptized by Ezekiel Holliman, and he then in turn baptized Holliman, and ten others. These twelve persons founded the first Baptist Church on the continent of America. Roger Williams was at the time Governor of Rhode Island and Ezekiel Holliman was Deputy Governor. To these twelve, twelve others were soon added, and from that time to this the Baptist Church has had a name and standing among the religious denominations of the United States.

This position has not been easily gained. It cost the early churches and preachers much suffering. The laws of Massachusetts Colony against Baptists and Quakers were severe. The more their principles prevailed, the more violent became the punishment. The penalties inflicted, were the severest the spirit of the age—which had softened down as compared with previous years—would allow; banishment, whipping, fine, and imprisonment, besides being taxed to support the clergy of the "Standing Order." For failure or refusal to pay this tax, regarding it as unjust, they "oftentimes had their bodies seized upon and thrown into the common jail, as malefactors, and their cattle, swine, horses, household furniture, and implements of husbandry, forcibly distrained from them and shamefully sold, many times at not a quarter of their first value." In 1728 a law was passed by the General Court relieving Baptists from this tax. But it relieved their persons only, not their property. In Connecticut, Baptist ministers were put in the stocks, and afterwards thrown into prison for preaching the gospel contrary to law. In Virginia, Dr. Hawks, an Episcopalian, says: "No dissenters experienced for a time harsher treatment than did the Baptists. They were beaten and imprisoned, and cruelty taxed its ingenuity to devise new modes of punishment and annoyance." This spirit of persecution long lingered after the strength of popular feeling had bound it hand and foot, and the laws it enacted remained unrepealed on the statute books of the New England Colonies and of Virginia years after public sentiment had made their execution impossible.

Into the details of persecution suffered in the effort to force compliance with those laws we can not here enter. One episode, however, deserves mention on account of its eminence. In Virginia, on June 4, 1768, three Baptist ministers, John Walker, Lewis Craig, and James Childs, were taken before the magistrates in Spottsylvania County, and bound over for trial as "disturbers of the peace," charged with preaching the gospel, their accusers saying they could not meet a man "without putting a text of Scripture down his throat." This trial has been made memorable in history because of the part taken in it by the eloquent Patrick Henry, who, on hearing of their arrest, rode sixty miles, that he might be present at their trial, and volunteer in their defense. Seating himself in the court-room, he listened to the reading of the indictment. The words "For preaching the gospel of the Son of God" caught his ear. Rising immediately on the concluding of the reading, he stretched out his hand, received the paper, and then addressed the Court. He dwelt on the charge "For preaching the gospel of the Son of God." He asked, at the close of a most eloquent appeal, "What law have they violated?" And then, for a third time, in a slow, dignified manner, he lifted his eyes to heaven, and waved the indictment about his head. The effect was electrical. The Court and audience were at the highest pitch of excitement. The prosecuting attorney and witnesses against these three men grew pale and trembled. The Judge shared in the excitement, now becoming extremely painful, and with tremulous voice gave the authoritative command, "Sheriff, discharge those men."

The first Baptist church was organized in America in 1639, in Providence, Rhode Island. Other churches were soon after organized in the different colonies. The First Newport, in 1644;

Second Newport, in 1656; First Boston, in 1665; Middletown, New Jersey, in 1688; and the Piscataway and Cohansy churches, in the same State, the former in 1688 and the latter in 1689; First Philadelphia, in 1698; Brandywine, Pennsylvania, in 1715, and First Church in New York City, in 1724. Churches were organized at many other points where new settlements sprung up, so that within about a century after Roger Williams became a Baptist there were about seventy-five in existence, notwithstanding the oppressive laws against them.—What the World Believes, pp. 101-103.

The Free Will Baptists were organized as a denomination in the year 1780. The founder of this branch was Reverend Benjamin Randall. He was ordained by the ministers of the church in London and Canterbury, in Strafford, in March, 1780, and on June 30 following he organized in New Durham the first Free Will Baptist church. They were at first called Randallites, General Provisioners, New Lights, and Freewillers. The last name has clung to them, and they are now known as Free Will Baptists.

This is sufficient; if any one wishes to study the subject further, any standard encyclopedia will give him a brief history, and in the work from which we quote, "What the World Believes," published by Gay Brothers & Co., Nos. 30, 32, and 34 Reade Street, New York, in 1888, he will find a fair history of this branch of the so-called "Christian Church," as well as that of others.

THE "HOLY SHROUD" AT TURIN.

For some time there has been by the press of the country considerable discussion of the "holy shroud" at the Turin Cathedral. By some it is claimed to be the winding sheet in which Christ was entombed. In 1898 M. Vignon, a French scientist, by means of photography reproduced some brownish stains which are upon the shroud and obtained a picture of a human figure, said to be that of the Christ.

In the issue for May 17 the Literary Digest has the following concerning it:

A SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATION OF A RELIGIOUS RELIC.

A curious religio-chemical investigation whose good faith and scientific accuracy seem to be vouched for by so high an authority as The Lancet (London), is described by the Paris correspondent of that paper. It is a photographic study of the so-called "holy shroud" or traditional winding-sheet of Christ, long preserved at Turin, Italy. The investigators, Professors Delage, Vignon, and Colson, who exhibited their pictures and described their results to the Academy of Sciences at Paris, come to the remarkable conclusion that the marks on the shroud are due to some natural photographic action of a human body on the chemicals with which it was once impregnated. Says the report in The Lancet:

"This winding sheet has on it certain markings printed in a brown color which when photographed give a white imprint, as does a negative when printed from. These markings, therefore, act as a true negative, and M. Vignon has shown by certain very careful experiments that cloth impregnated with oil and aloes, as was the winding sheet in question, will receive an impression when in contact with ammoniacal vapors such as would be given off from a sweat very rich in urea, as is the case in the sweat of a person dying a lingering and painful death.

"Any idea of fraud need not be considered, for no one has touched this winding sheet since 1353, and no painter at that date had the skill to reproduce such an exact drawing. The impression of the head is excellent. The wounds produced by the crown of thorns and the marks of the blood drops are quite obvious. The wound in the side and even the marks of the stripes produced on the back by the flagellation are also quite evident. Each of these stripes has at its end an enlargement such as would be produced by a cord with a ball of lead at the end. It is well known that this form of scourge was employed by the Roman soldiers and such a one has been found at Pompeii. Finally, the marks of the nails in the arms are not in the palm of the hand, but show that the nails were driven through at the level of the wrist. M. Vignon's paper has created an extreme interest both in the scientific and the religious world."

The following editorial comment is made by The Lancet on its correspondent's report:

"The remarkable description which appears in our Paris notes of the photographs taken by M. Vignon seems to justify the belief that the human body is either radio-active or that it gives off 'vapors' which exhibit a similar action to light upon sensitive surfaces. We have frequently recorded in our columns the fact deduced in an elaborate research by D. W. J. Russell, F. R. S., that almost all substances are able in the dark to act on the photographic plate, and to produce a picture. The phenomenon would appear to be established always in the presence of an oxidizing process, and Doctor Russell at length came to the conclusion that peroxid of hydrogen was the main factor concerned.

"In the case of the sheet in which tradition says that the dead Christ was wrapped we have the analogue probably of a photographic plate or sensitized film. The cloth was impregnated with oils and aloes. It is well known that fixed oils are sensitive to oxidation and aloes contain constituents, allied to the pyrogallic acid series, which would probably turn brown in the presence of an oxidizing process. The action by which, therefore, the image of the dead Christ was recorded on the cloth would appear to be due to chemical change rather than to the effect of light. On this explanation an exact image even to minute details such as wounds produced by the thorns and the marks of the blood drops and of flagellation by whips of a definite kind is not by any means beyond the bounds of probability.

"It is an intensely remarkable and interesting instance of the light which the very latest developments of scientific research may throw on traditions and controversial matters in history. We are face to face undoubtedly with a set of new phenomena, giving distinct indications of the existence of emanations hitherto not recognized from both animate and inanimate bodies. The discovery of these emanations has been due to the fact that they affect the sensitized silver film, but there is no doubt that there is a very large number of substances also which are affected in a similar way, though not to the same degree as silver in the presence of albuminous substances.

"Natural photographs appear on all sides, as is proved by the simple experiment of placing an opaque object on grass or on fresh gravel exposed to the light. An exact outline of the shape of the object will be found on removing it after a time. The property of radio-activity is different, the substance in this case actually emitting radiations itself. The images due to the emanation of vapor are yet another but not less interesting phenomenon, as is abundantly manifested in the case of the traditional winding-sheet of Christ."

The Lancet thus seems to accept the idea that it is really the sheet in which the Christ was entombed, and hence that the figure stained upon the shroud is that of our Savior. The Scientific American in its issue for May 24 discusses it at some length, and does not seem to accept the Lancel's views on the matter. The article in the Scientific American follows:

M. VIGNON'S RESEARCHES AND THE "HOLY LAND."

At a meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences on April 21, some remarkable photographs of brownish stains found on the "Holy Shroud" kept in the Treasure Chamber of Turin Cathedral, and traditionally said to be the winding-sheet of Christ, were exhibited in connection with a paper by Doctor P. Vignon. Upon reproducing these stains by photograph, Doctor Vignon found that he obtained a realistic picture of a human figure, and the suggestion is that the picture is actually a representation of the body of Christ, produced by radiographic action from the body, which, according to ancient texts, was wrapped in a shroud impregnated with a mixture of oil and aloes.

In his paper published in Comptes Rendus, Doctor Vignon remarked:

"It is known from the work of M. Colson, published in the Comptes Rendus of the Academy of Sciences in 1896, that freshly cleaned zinc emits vapors at the ordinary temperature which are capable of affecting photographic plates in the dark. The researches of Russell have also shown that the striations of a plate of zinc are reproduced on a photographic plate. But it is a long step from this to the realization of an object in relief. I have succeeded in obtaining images either with medals powdered with zinc, or with bass-reliefs or objects fully embossed in plaster, and rubbed with zinc powder. These images are negatives, not by the inversion of light and shade, since they are formed in the dark, but by the fact that the reliefs give more energetic impressions than the cavities. To interpret these it is necessary then to invert photographically; positive images are then obtained in which the scale of relief is scrupulously respected, which is far from being the case in normal photographs of the same objects illuminated from the front. Naturally, upon images made at a distance, the reproduction of the most minute details could not be expected, the precision of the detail obtained being less as the distance increased. The clearness of the image depends upon the rapidity with which the action diminishes when the space increases between the emissive surface and the receiving screen.

"From a point of the active surface let a perpendicular be lowered onto the receiving plate; the foot of this perpendicular constitutes the center of a circle which makes a more energetic impression in its central region than on its edges; the clearness of the image will thus be greater the smaller the surface of the circle acted upon, and this surface varies inversely as the rapidity with which the actions decrease when the distance increases. It is on this account that the images correspond very nearly to those which would be realized if the actions were produced only according to the orthogonal projections of the different points of the active surface.

"It is a curious point that the images converted into positives frequently give rise to the impression of having been lit from above.

"This will be the case when a plane, such as the forehead, is seen from the front and forms at the same time a strong relief, while a plane near it is rapidly shifting, such as, for example, the region which connects the superciliary arch to the eyeball. When this plane shifts it appears to sink into a deep shadow.

"The truly specific character of these negative images which arise from action at a distance lies in the softness of the contours. The limit of the visible portion is the result for the eye of the receding of the surface. If this falling back takes place at a small distance from the receiving plane, the contour is still marked, though vaguely; but if this falling away is produced only at a distance greater than that at which the vapors can act, no corresponding effect is produced in the image, which gradually weakens up to its borders by insensible gradations until it disappears altogether. Practically in spite of the softness of the details and the outlines, the impressions produced by vapor are far from consisting of simple shadows; if the object is in strong relief, the image is energetic and well-marked; it appears simply as if the object were seen through transparent gauze, or as if it had half emerged from a fog.

"Negative images have also been obtained by acting with ammoniacal vapors upon cloths impregnated with a mixture of powdered aloes and olive oil; it is known that aloes contain a principle which turns brown and is oxidized under the influence of alkalis in moist air. A plaster hand covered with a suede glove which has been moistened with a solution of ammonium carbonate acts similarly. There is obtained in this way a sort of print of the hand, a negative softened at the edges and wanting in proportion in so far that the points where the hand is too far from the cloth are too faint, the points of contact of the hand and cloth, on the other hand, being too strongly marked. The fermentation of urea, easily brought about by the addition of a little urine, leads to the formation of ammonium carbonate and thus causes the browning of the aloes. The fermentation of a febrile sweat, rich in urea, leads to the same result, as is already well known."

The extension of Dr. Russell's researches on the photographic activity of certain bodies in the dark, contained in the above paper communicated to the Paris Academy by M. Vignon, has given rise to a most curious discussion, says Nature.

There is a so-called "Holy Shroud" at Turin in which tradition states the body of Christ was wrapped after the Crucifixion. An article in the Times thus refers to it and its connection with M. Vignon's work:

"It is said to have been brought from the East in the fourteenth century, and in the following century it passed into the hands of the House of Savoy, and was deposited at Chambéry. Finally it was transferred in 1578 to its present resting-place by Duke Emmanuel Philibert, who wished to spare Carlo Borromeo, the sainted Archbishop of Milan, the fatigue of a pilgrimage to its distant Savoyard shrine. The Shroud bears upon it, traced in hues of brown, what is alleged to be a double impression of the figure of our Lord, the outlines both of the face and back of which have produced themselves with wonderfully distinct exactness. So seldom, however, is it exposed to view that this remarkable characteristic had almost been forgotten when, in May, 1898, some photographs specially taken of it by Signor Secondo Pia, of Turin, with the consent of its possessor, the King of Italy, once more drew attention to this strangely living likeness. Eighteen months ago these photographs came under the notice of M. Vignon, who, recognizing their exceptional importance, at once began that inquiry of which the results were made public in a paper communicated to the Académie des Science."

In Paris, therefore, it has been generally accepted that a demonstration has been given by science of the authenticity, not only of the so-called shroud, but of all the historical events connected with it, and a much closer rapprochement between science and theology is predicted for the future.

Here, however, difficulties have been raised. Father Thurston, a learned Jesuit, writes to the Times as follows:

"Before we can profitably discuss the value of Doctor Vignon's scientific explanation of the marks on the 'Holy Shroud' a serious difficulty of quite another order has to be cleared up. The Abbé Ulysse Chevalier claims to have proved to demonstration that the linen winding-sheet exhibited at Turin is a spurious relic manufactured in the fourteenth century, and, as the writer believes, with fraudulent intent. M. l'Abbé Chevalier is a scholar of distinction, and of his perfect loyalty to the Catholic Church there can be no possible question. Moreover, his essay ('Etude Critique sur l'Origine du S. Suaire,' Paris, Picard, 1900) has been warmly welcomed by the more critical journals devoted to hagiography. In the Bollandist periodical, the Analecta Bollandiana, for instance, its Jesuit editors state (vol. xix., 1900, p. 350) that the Abbé Chevalier's discussion of the subject is final, and that 'il ne reste plus qu'à proclamer "à haute et intelligible voix," comme le voulait le Pape Clément VII.: "Hæc figura . . . non est verum sandarium Domini Nostri Jesu Christi."' "

"They go on to state that the story of the 'image of the shroud' given by Geoffroy de Lirey to the college founded by him in 1353 is not lost in the mist of ages, and does not happen to present any of those obscurities by which the historian who wishes to impart his own laboriously acquired conviction to others must at times find himself baffled. We have, for instance, the document addressed to the Pope by Bishop Peter d'Arcis, in which he denounces the fraudulent dealing of the Chapter of Lirey, who for motives of avarice pretended that miracles were worked by this shroud, whereas his predecessor in the sea of Troyes had officially investigated the matter and proved it to be a forgery. 'Et probatum fuit eciam per artificem qui illum (pannum) depinxerat, ipsum humano opere factum, non miraculose confectum vel concessum.' "

There is also another difficulty. It is stated that there is at least one other Holy Shroud in another holy place.

We are not inclined to doubt the possibility that an imprint of the human figure on a shroud may be made by chemical action, nor that there is a figure thus imprinted upon the shroud in the cathedral at Turin; but that the shroud there kept is the one which was wrapped around the body of the crucified Christ is not proven. The great age of the shroud seems beyond doubt; but in olden times winding sheets were common, and to prove this to be the identical one used around the body of the Man of Nazareth would be extremely difficult. Be that as it may, the investigations of M. Vignon have much of scientific interest. In a religious way we think they are of little value.

"CHINESE LEPPER RECOVERS."

The following news item which appeared in some dispatches from St. Louis, May 29, lends us hope that sometime this dread disease now called "incurable" will be placed in the list of the "curables."

"Dong Gong, the Chinese leper who has for nine months past occupied an isolation house near Quarantine, has apparently recovered from his malady and will be released within two months unless the disease returns. Chaulmoogra oil, the product of an East Indian tree, has been the sole treatment administered to Dong Gong by Doctor Martin C. Woodruff, superintendent of Quarantine."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. A. E. Stone, of New Canaan, Connecticut, writes as follows: "I must say if ever I get far enough away from the truth or fail to take interest enough in the work of God so as to discontinue my HERALD, I should think I was in a state of apostasy, for I am constrained to believe that it would be almost impossible for any one to keep pace with the work without the assistance of the church periodicals."

Bro. George W. York, Haverhill, Massachusetts, renews his subscription for the HERALD, and states: "I can not get along without it. It is food for me, and should be in every Saint's home."

Bro. Henry T. McClain, of Coalgate, Indian Territory, writes under date of May 27 that there are only two or three of the Saints at Coalgate, but they are going to have a church building of their own soon. One of the citizens of that town who does not belong to any church has given a lot for the purpose of building a church. So the work is progressing in that section.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Elder C. L. Snow, who has been assigned to open up the work in Eastern Tennessee and North Carolina, will be on the ground June 1, ready for duty. His mission address is South Pittsburg, Tennessee. Brother Snow has been a soldier of Christ indeed in opening up new places for gospel preaching in Western Tennessee and Kentucky.

We have received a letter from Brother A. A. Fausett from Fruita, Colorado, relative to lands in the vicinity of Fruita, and Saints contemplating moving to that part of the country might do well to correspond with Brother Fausett.

Bro. John Smith has handed us a notice requesting all persons doing business with the HERALD Publishing House to stop sending such matters to him, as he is no longer connected with the HERALD Office, and is now in the missionary field, his home address being Box 112, Lamoni, Iowa. Our patrons will please remember the request of this brother, and remember at the same time that it is not necessary to send matter in any one's name, as letters addressed to the HERALD Publishing House on matters of business, or to the Editors HERALD on matters pertaining to publication of letters, articles, etc., are more likely to receive prompt attention than if addressed to persons.

The dove of peace seems to have settled at last, and the glad news has been received that terms of surrender have been arranged between the Boers and the British. As we go to press the exact terms have not been made known, but that the long British-Boer war is over seems certain. It has been a long and hard struggle, and has cost much of blood and treasure. Glad we are that peace has come. The terms of settlement will probably be made known in a few days.

Saints who have books on matters of interest connected with the history of our church, and which they feel they could spare, please remember the needs of the church library. Write to the librarian, Bro. F. E. Cochran, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Jane.—Father, I have been so busy thinking and talking about the neighborhood gossip since I have been home that I have hardly been able to think of anything serious, but I want to tell you that I have been able to find many spare moments to spend in reading my Bible after school hours. I found many things of interest, but so many questions would arise that I did not understand. I missed you so much, especially when I was studying my Bible. And I thought that during vacation I would ask you to explain many questions.

Father.—I am glad to learn that you have not forgotten your religion; for if a person fails to obtain salvation he has made a failure of life, even if he should gain riches and fame. But what particular subject did you desire explained?

Jane.—I have thought considerable about the “parable of the ten virgins.” I will read it so I can have the points fully in mind: “And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five of them were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Lest there be not enough for us and you, go you rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, You know me not. Watch therefore; for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.”—Matthew 25:1-12, I. T. By the statements “at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins,” we learn that our Savior is explaining the condition that the church or “kingdom of heaven” will be in just before he comes to earth again. I do not understand that he is referring to any other class of people but the Saints.

Father.—You are correct, my girl; and it presents rather a gloomy prospect for the people of God. How careful we should be so we shall not be included among the “foolish virgins.”

Jane.—Yes, father; but when is this “midnight” cry to be? Was it to be made when the elders began to preach the restored gospel in 1830?

Father.—I see you have been thinking quite seriously on the question and desire more than a casual explanation. Let us read all that the Lord has said on the question. Always remember this, Jane; when you find a subject you do not understand in the Bible, take the concordance of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants and read carefully and prayerfully all that the Lord has given us on the question, and you are very apt to find something that will give you the desired information. I will now read what I was looking for: “And ye shall remember the church articles and covenants to keep them.” I read this part so you can see that he is speaking to the Saints. “And the Book of Mormon, and the Holy Scriptures, are given of me for your instruction; and the power of my Spirit quickeneth all things; wherefore, be faithful, praying always, having your lamps trimmed and burning, and oil with you, that you may be ready at the coming of the Bridegroom; for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that I come quickly; even so. Amen.”—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3. From this we learn that the Lord taught the Saints in October, 1830, that they should remain in such a condition that when the “cry” came, “Go ye out to meet him,” they should be prepared. They were to keep their “lamps trimmed and burning” from the time they obeyed the gospel till Christ should come. And lest the oil in their lamps should give out they were instructed to keep a supply of “oil with” them. They were prepared and had “their lamps trimmed and burning” before they waited. But during this waiting time their lamps burned low and the “foolish virgins” did not have “oil in their vessels” to replenish them, and before they could go out to meet the Bridegroom their lamps went out.

Jane.—But I heard one of our elders preach that the ten virgins represented the condition of a certain class of people before the gospel was restored, and that our elders are and have been proclaiming the “midnight cry” ever since 1830.

Father.—My child, you surely misunderstood him. As you observed at the beginning, this parable refers to the “kingdom of heaven,” and to it alone. Jesus said, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.”—John 3: 5. All our books teach that the kingdom of heaven can not exist among men without ordained men to officiate.

Jane.—I know that, father, and I remembered that there was no man on earth that had authority to transact business in the kingdom of God, so it was necessary for John the Baptist to come and ordain Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. You always told me God could not have a kingdom on earth without authorized agents to execute his laws, any more than an earthly kingdom could exist without them; and that where there were no ordained ministers the kingdom of God did not exist.

Father.—That is what I have always been taught. But let us read again: “The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth; yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom; pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory.”—Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1. Let us notice some of the thoughts presented in what we have just read. “The keys of the kingdom of God are committed to man,” “and from thence shall the gospel roll forth.” As the gospel is carried among the nations of earth, men are to be instructed to “prepare ye the way of the Lord.” John the Baptist came among the Jews, saying, “Prepare ye the way of the Lord.” (Matthew 3: 3.) And he taught them to do this by accepting and obeying the message he delivered. So have the ministers of the gospel in this dispensation. The “inhabitants of the earth” can “prepare the way of the Lord” by obeying the gospel, and that is the only way. And he has taught that he would have a people prepared to receive him when he comes, which shows that he will not come till this preparation is made. The “supper of the Lamb” is to be prepared and we are instructed to “make ready for the Bridegroom,” so we shall “be prepared” when the “Son of Man shall come.” Remember that all this is to be brought about as a result of the fulfillment of this statement, “from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth.”

Now let us examine this statement, “Make ready for the Bridegroom.” When were the “inhabitants of the earth” told to do this? It was when the “gospel rolled forth.” When it was preached the people were invited to “make ready” for him. They were to “make ready” or prepare to meet him by obeying the gospel. They “trimmed their lamps” and had them burning when they embraced the message the elders delivered. They were now prepared “to meet the Bridegroom,” but he did not come at that hour so they had to wait. And while they waited “they all slumbered and slept.” Slumber is defined as “a light sleep.” And while in this condition came the cry, “Go ye out to meet him.”

Jane.—Then the “crying,” “Make ready for the bridegroom,” and the cry “Go ye out to meet him,” are different messages and delivered at different times, and to different classes of people.

Father.—Surely, for the first is made when the “gospel rolls forth” among the Gentiles and from the time it is first preached. The second is after the “testimony” of the elders has been rejected and the “wrath of God” poured out on the wicked, and it is to those who believe and are expecting Christ and even the “foolish” are numbered with the “wise.” Besides it is to be delivered by the angels. Let us read again: “And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, . . . for fear shall come upon all people; and angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of God is come: behold, and lo, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.”—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

Jane.—Yes, father; but do not the angels do this work with the elders? In Revelation 14: 6 we read of “another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on earth.” I thought you had told me that the angel delivered the message and sent the elders to preach it.

Father.—True, my dear; but there is some difference between the two messages, as the one you refer to was to be “preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people,” and of necessity takes a longer time. But we will read again: “Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord.”—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3.

From this we learn that the elders are to have something to do in proclaiming the “midnight cry.” But the thought is, they will not do it till the angels reveal it. You know men did not begin to proclaim “the everlasting gospel” till the angel came and authorized them and instructed them how to do it. So it will be with the “midnight cry,” the “angels shall fly through midst of heaven, crying, . . . Behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.” When the time comes the message will be revealed to the one whom God has placed at the head of the church, and then we shall know just what part we are to take in the matter and just how to proceed.

Jane.—But, father, notice the first of the last verse you read. It says, "Send forth the elders unto the nations which are afar off," "and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people." And it goes on to tell them what to say, and among other things, we find, "Go ye forth to meet the Bridegroom." They surely were to say this as you said and in November, 1831, they were told to say it.

Father.—Yes, they were informed at that early date what the elders would preach or say in their work, but when were they to say it? They were to preach to the Jews, but when?

Now let us consider these last two quotations as to the time this statement about the Bridegroom is to be made. Turn to section 85:25 again, and read the first part of the verse: "After your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people." The testimonies of the elders were never borne till they went forth to preach the gospel. But as "the gospel rolled" forth among the nations, telling the people to "make ready for the Bridegroom," they gave their "testimony" as to the work they were engaged in. When they rejected their "testimony" the "wrath and indignation" of the Lord came upon them and after this, when earthquakes had caused "groanings" in the earth, and "the voice of lightnings and the voice of thunders and the voice of tempest" "and men's hearts fail them for fear." After all this is when the "angels shall fly in the midst of heaven," "for the judgment of our God is come." After all these things have happened, then will the angels say, "The Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

These statements show that many things are to take place before the cry will be heard that "the Bridegroom cometh." Many of those events have in part taken place, but the elders have not yet "called upon all nations" nor preached unto the "Jews." All these events will take place in their order, and among the last will be heard the cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh."

I hope that we may all prepare ourselves in harmony with the command, "Make ready to meet the bridegroom," and that while we wait we may have our vessels so filled with "oil," that when our lamps begin to burn low we may have plenty to fill them again.

Jane.—I had failed to notice the thought, father, that those virgins had their lamps trimmed and burning, when they went out to meet the bridegroom and that their oil burnt out while they were waiting. But I see they were not considered foolish for not having oil in their lamps at first, but for not having it in their vessels. If they had gone out with no oil in their lamps and had lighted them in that condition, they would have been spoken of as foolish for doing so. For while it is foolish to expect the coming of the bridegroom too soon and hence fail to take a sufficient supply of oil, yet it would be extremely foolish to expect to light a lamp with no oil in it, as I had supposed they would do.

Father.—It emphasizes the thought that we should comply with every law God has given. If you notice the first revelation we read you will see that the Saints were to keep their "lamps trimmed and burning, and oil with" them. Not only oil in the lamps, but in their vessels. Now notice the parable again and you will see that no fault was found, even with the foolish virgins, only for not having "oil in their vessels." All the lamps were burning till after the cry came to "meet the bridegroom." Then is when the lamps began to fail as they were giving them their final trimming. No fault was found for their sleeping and slumbering. This must have been permissible.

Jane.—I have sometimes thought myself that it was not necessary for me to comply with all the laws and commands of God, especially when it required great sacrifice on my part: such as paying tithing, attending prayer-meetings under difficult circumstances, telling my associates of my religious belief, and defending the church every opportunity I have. I have sometimes thought that I have joined the church and that it will be all right with me, even if I neglect doing those things that the gospel requires, when it is so hard to do them. Do you suppose, father, that is the way it is with the foolish virgins?

Father.—I rather think that is the way they reasoned. They seemed to think they would be all right till the test came, then they were found lacking.

Jane.—I shall try from this on, to perform every duty that devolves on me as a Saint. I have always loved the gospel and I hope to be classed among the "wise virgins."

Father.—There is no need of any one failing in this church, for the promise is, "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with every temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—1 Corinthians 10:13. If a person makes the proper effort, God will enable him to overcome. This has always comforted me. Good-night, Jane.

Jane.—Good-night, father.

A LEAF FROM MY DIARY.

The sense of duty prompts me to write for publication an item found on a leaf of my diary, for the benefit of the church at large. But there is so much going on in the world that is wrong and misleading, and, also persons in the church who are more ready to criticise any and everything that is presented to the church in way of a dream, vision, or revelation, than to accept it, unless it readily commends itself to "their judgment," that I hesitate, at times, to do what to me the spirit of wisdom and revelation invites me to do. In this light it is not hard to see why former and latter-day prophets have hesitated at times to present the "word of the Lord" to the people. Malachi was so timid in regard to this matter, that he prefaced his revelation of warning to old Israel with, "The burden of the word of the Lord." Apostle Paul, to encourage the timid and those that hesitated to do their duty by reason of a man-fearing spirit, wrote: "Quench not the Spirit." Every plant has its peculiarity, has its distinctive features, emits its peculiar worth in its proper time and place for the special benefit of man and the glory of God who created it. Just so with the man, woman, and child that has been baptized by the "one Spirit" into the "one body." "If the foot shall say, because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." So writes Apostle Paul. Each member in this "one body," should seek to be of some peculiar worth to the body. To that end God gives the "manifestation of the Spirit to every one to profit withal." To one is given by the Spirit the "word of wisdom," to another the "word of knowledge," to another "faith," to another the "gifts of healing," to another the "working of miracles," to another "prophecy," to another the "discerning of spirits," to another "tongues." Yes, to others dreams, visions, and revelations. All of these are of worth to the church, since God by his Spirit is "dividing to every man severally as he will," for the growth and edification of the body. It has pleased God to "set in" one member as the "ear," another as the "eye," another as the "foot," etc. Should it please God to give the "ear" or "eye" the gift of "wisdom," it should not reject God's wisdom in bestowing upon the "foot" the gift of dreams, tongues, visions, etc. To do so would certainly challenge God's patience; and more so, should it demand of God to reveal his will through these dreams, visions, and tongues, in harmony with its "judgment" of matters and things. It must not be forgotten that the "eye" and "ear" get all of their superior wisdom, if they have it, from the same source as does the "foot." The "eye" and "ear" may be "set in" a more responsible place than is the "foot." If so, they have more responsibility resting upon them, hence a larger degree of the Spirit is needed to enable them to stand in that high and responsible place. Hence, in their sphere, are as weak and unable to stand without God's special aid as are those holding lesser positions in the body. Hence he is not a whit better off, nor is he any better qualified to stand, considering his responsibility, than is the other member. Therefore, in the sight of God we are all one in Christ Jesus our Lord, and are all members one of another. "Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues; let all things be done decently and in order," is the admonition of the Spirit through Apostle Paul. With this as a preface in explanation of what is to follow, I proceed to pen what is found upon a leaf of my journal:

Saturday night, January 11, 1902, I had the following dream: I was with a large gathering of the Saints, consisting of all sizes and of all grades as to class and rank in society. At the head of this body of Saints stood a very modest looking man. By his attitude, I called him in my mind, a "commanding officer." The words and commands that flowed from his mouth were wonderful! He spake as one having authority while addressing the Saints. Every eye seemed to be upon him. While his voice was not harsh, yet I felt a force in it that brought a reverential fear to my soul; and I felt a reverence and veneration for his words that made me fear to disobey him. I stood some distance to his left and facing the main body of Saints as he did; but more surrounded by them than was he. I stood for a few minutes gazing with awe upon this remarkable personage in order to determine his mission. Presently he stretched forth his hand towards the body of Saints and said: "Fall into line!" Then another command quickly followed this, "I want none but volunteers." Every ear seemed to catch the sound of these wonderful words, wonderful they were! I myself felt some peculiar force from them that I had never witnessed from other men's words. "There is a great warfare before you; who will go, and who will be able to stand?" was the next command. At this my anxiety leaped almost beyond my control. "Who will go?" These words rang in my ears as I raised my eyes and looked towards the eastern horizon, where I thought I heard the sound as of men in a deadly conflict, similar to that when two armies at war come together. "There is a great warfare before you, who will be able to stand?" was still ringing as a salute in my ears. All of this took place seemingly in a few minutes. I saw the line quickly forming right before me. "Fall into line!" was being repeated by this "commanding officer." I could still hear the noise coming through the air of that terrible conflict that was going on. Anxiously I gazed at this body of Saints and asked myself, Who will be able to stand? I wondered and asked: "Do these Saints that are so readily falling into line comprehend what is before them? I wonder if they are deaf to the noise of this terrible conflict that is going on, which if they enter, is like taking their life into their hands."

But I saw there was no time to waste in asking questions to satisfy my puzzled mind; the line was forming, and no sooner did one step into the line than he had to march forward; seemingly he could not stop, unless he fell out of the line as it moved forward like unto a moving, endless chain. I was greatly surprised as the line passed by me to see many of the mothers, right in the front ranks. Some I knew, others I did not. Those I knew were leaders in the society that is known among us as the "Daughters of Zion." Close behind these "mothers," came many young women and some young men; the young women more readily fell into line than did the young men. As one young sister of about eighteen passed me, I called her by name, and said: "I fear you can not stand the hardships that are before you." She made no reply, but looked me in the face, and in an innocent and pleasant way, smiled. This young sister is an indefatigable worker in the Sunday-school and Religio. I seemed to have the discernment to read her heart, and said in a low tone as she passed along with the line: "How innocent, and what a pure heart! O, Lord, my God, spare her life, and give her strength to endure the hardships!"

The line at this point had, occasionally, a middle-aged man and woman in it; but it was almost wholly made up of young men and young women, and boys and girls. These, I understood, represented the Sunday-school and Religio. Another part of the line was mostly made up from older persons; but all were going in the same direction, and walking in single file. This line extended in and around and among the body of Saints, and as the commander gave command to "fall into line," one, two, three, and a half dozen, and even more here and there would step into the line; still, there were many here and there, while the marchers passed them, who hesitated for some reason to step into the line. Others there were that got themselves into little groupings here and there; these I understood were "cliques"—"social castes." This class I saw were very busy among themselves, but were some distance from where I stood, so much so that I could catch a word only now and then of what they were saying; but they were paying strict attention to how the line was moving, as I could see their hands in motion pointing at some of the members that were falling into the line raising some objections to associating and working with them; these, I understood, were their reasons for not falling into line. I saw, occasionally, a man among this last class whom they called a "leader in the church." These "leaders" seemed to be wonderful watchers-on; always ready to advise and dictate, and seemingly nothing was done just right unless they had a hand in it. This I learned from what I could hear, as they were pointing and making gestures and raising objections to some that were falling into line. I was made to marvel, when looking over this vast body of Saints, to see so many refuse to fall into line; but so it was in the vision. My attention now was directed back to the "commander," who, during all of this time had been urging the Saints to "fall into line, and be workers together in the great warfare which was before them."

At this juncture this commander raised his voice and cried, "Halt!" The whole line at once was brought to a standstill. Every eye, from every class and rank, was now turned toward this "commander." He now raised his voice again, and proclaimed: "There will be a general promotion all along the line." At this every one who had not fallen into line seemed to bestir himself to make ready for the "promotion." I have never before witnessed among our people such haste, bustle, and commotion as I saw then and there. Those who had formed themselves into little groups, whom I had learned were called the "clique," now hastily formed themselves into one body, by the command of those whom they had said, were "leaders." They were then instructed by these "leaders" to "fall into line." This they did hastily, making a line of their own just opposite from the line which had been formed by the "commander." Those that had not fallen into either of these lines were now forming into rather a promiscuous group, in between the two lines already formed; yet I saw no special leaders among them.

From the time this commander had proclaimed his intention to "promote," seemingly not more than a minute or two of time had elapsed till he proclaimed: "Promote all those who have heeded the command to 'fall into line,' in accord as it has been prepared for them of the Father, according to their faithfulness and diligence in their several callings." I heard this command go vibrating down along the line till it was lost to the ear in the far distant. By the attitude of those who had formed in a line over against the commander's line, they were expecting a promotion far in excess of those in the other line; but to their sorrow and utter astonishment this "commanding officer" paid no attention to them. This came to them so unexpectedly that all in the whole line dropped their heads in shame, and their countenances fell. I felt in my soul that this was a trying time. Indeed, there were many sad hearts there.

While I stood gazing and wondering upon this scene before me, my heart went out in sympathy for those who had made such a sad mistake; and the vision closed, and lo, I found myself wide awake.

ADDENDUM.

Editors Herald: If I am not thought burdensome, I should like to add to what has gone before, another witness to "A Leaf from my Diary." On Sunday, March 23, 1902, while attending the prayer services at Lamoni, Iowa, at 2:30 p. m., I felt moved upon to relate in part what I have written from a leaf of my diary. One sister who heard me became much interested in the vision as I related it, and sought God in earnest prayer that night for help to be one that would willingly "fall into line." She related to me the next day the following dream had the night before. She was out doors and heard a loud peal of thunder, followed by a vivid flash of lightning. This lightning formed up in the heavens above her into the following motto: "Be ye clean every whit." As she gazed in wonder and surprise at these beautiful words formed by the lightning, all of a sudden they shot down from the heavens and were placed on the side of a large building close by her; and to her further astonishment there stood a personage who spoke to her and said: "I am the same messenger that said, 'Fall into line.'" At this he raised his hand and pointing to the motto on the side of the building said: "Obey that."

Yours, that truth alone may establish the hearts of the Saints,

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD VERSUS THE UNITED STATES IN PROPHECY."

In HERALD for July 31, 1901, page 616, is an article from the pen of Bro. George E. Davis, in which he virtually affirms that the United States is the kingdom spoken of in Daniel 2:44. He concludes his article by saying, "This is a question on which some of us do not agree. It is food for thought. If you understand this prophecy better, let us hear from you." While I do not say that I understand it better, yet I understand it differently. Therefore I shall offer a few thoughts on the same, with no other motive in view than to elicit truth. The first objection is based on the fact that the United States is not a kingdom, but a republic, and is not therefore identical in structure nor principles with the kingdom of God in any age of the world. All republic forms of government derive their power and authority from their subjects, by their franchise. Not so with the kingdom of God. Kings reign over God's government by divine right. Their authority comes from God, and not from the people. Samuel 9:16: "To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel." So we see that the first king that ever reigned over Israel was made so by the command of God, and anointed by the prophet Samuel. It is affirmed that "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." (Daniel 2:44.)

From the foregoing we see that God sets up the kingdom. But who is to reign as king over the kingdom? "And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1:31-34. It is affirmed by the angel to Mary that the Lord God was to give Jesus this throne and kingdom, and he was to reign over it for ever. No president nor presidents of the United States ever claimed to get their authority from God. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him [Christ] dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his [Christ's] kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Daniel 7:13, 14.

Herod said to Christ, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" his reply was, "To this end was I born." As he is now in the high priest office, and will assume the kingly office at his coming, for his office is of the twofold nature, after the order of Melchisedec. Hence, when he steps off the throne as mediator he will assume the kingly office. And this subject seems to have been understood by the disciples from the following. Mary said, Grant that these my two sons sit one on the right and the other on the left when you come in your kingdom. The thief said unto Jesus, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

It is at his coming and kingdom we expect to receive our inheritance. See Matthew 25:31-34. When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

We might introduce many more scriptural evidences in favor of the fact that the United States is not the kingdom of Daniel 2:44. We conclude by saying there is not the slightest analogy between the two governments, and what is affirmed of the stone kingdom is not possible for this government to ever fulfill. Is this government a kingdom? Was it cut out without hands? Do we become heirs of this government by obedience to the gospel? Has it ever smote any of the ten kingdoms? Have the winds carried them away and no place found for them? Is it possible for this government to become a kingdom and fill the whole earth? Has not this government permitted the blood of prophets and saints to be shed in it? Why not class her with Mystery Babylon, for in her was found the blood of prophets and saints. Do not tell me that in the kingdom spoken of in Daniel 2: 44 any of God's servants will be slain. Our King said, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be." "And hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." Revelation 5: 10.

May we all be worthy to receive an inheritance and reign with Christ when he comes, is my prayer.

"THE ROCK."

We find in HERALD of August 14 an article headed, "Upon this Rock;" and as there are different ideas of what this rock is, we thought to give our understanding of the word of God. We shall quote from the Inspired Translation, Doctrine and Covenants, and Book of Mormon.

"And when Jesus came into the coast of Cæsarea Philippi he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am? And they said, Some say John the Baptist; some Elias; and others Jeremias; or one of the prophets. He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven."—Matt. 16: 14-19, I. T.

What was revealed to Peter? Knowledge. What was that knowledge? That Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God. This knowledge is a part of the gospel. Webster says gospel is God's revelation to man of his grace by a Savior; the history of Jesus Christ, containing his (God's) doctrine and precepts; divinity; to instruct in the gospel. "Wherefore I give you to understand that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Cor. 12: 3, I. T.

"And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 19. To what does this last word in verse 19 have reference? The same that is in verse 18. "For flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven." Again: "For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore for thy name's sake, lead me, and guide me."—Psalms 31: 3. "I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, [the law of God, the gospel, a solid foundation,] and established my goings."—Psalms 40: 1, 2. "And did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ."—1 Cor. 10: 4.

Christ was a Spiritual Rock, because he partook of the Spirit of his Father, and did his will. "Jesus said unto them, My meat is to do the will of him who sent me, and to finish his work."—John 4: 36.

Israel did not continue to follow after the teachings of that Spiritual Rock that followed them. "But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness."—1 Cor. 10: 5.

"Therefore fear not, little flock, do good, let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my Rock, they can not prevail."—D. C. 6: 16.

"Behold, I command you, that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called: wait a little longer, until you shall have my word, my rock, my church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine."—D. C. 10: 8.

When the Savior visited the Nephites on this continent he said to them: "And if ye do always remember me, ye shall have my Spirit to be with you. . . . And I give unto you a commandment that ye shall do these things. And if ye shall always do these things, blessed are ye, for ye are built upon my rock."—Book of Mormon, page 404, l. e.

Again: "Behold, thou art Hyrum, my son; seek the kingdom of God, and all things shall be added according to that which is just. Build upon my rock, which is my gospel; deny not the Spirit of revelation, nor the Spirit of prophecy, for woe unto him that denieth these things."—D. C. 10: 11.

Again: "Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church. And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish upon my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."—D. C. 9: 16, 17.

Here is a promise made to God's people that if they are faithful to the end he will establish them upon his Rock. We can come to no conclusion except that the Rock spoken of in these references is the laws of God's government. The Savior, when he prayed to his Father, said: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." If God had a kingdom in heaven he must have had people: and, therefore, laws to govern them. And as the Savior prayed that God's kingdom would come and his will be done on earth as in heaven; then the same laws that governed in heaven would govern on earth. If not, Christ's prayer was vain. And if it were granted, and God has a kingdom (church) on the earth, it is governed by the law that governs in heaven, and is the law of God's government; and to be obedient to that law (gospel) is the rock of our salvation, revealed through Jesus Christ, the mediator between God and man; and if obedient to the end of this life there is a promise left that he would establish them in his government where the gates of hell shall not prevail against them.

"And to him who overcometh, and keepeth my commandments unto the end, will I give power over many kingdoms; and he shall rule them with the word of God; and they shall be in his hands as the vessels of clay in the hands of a potter; and he shall govern them by faith, with equity and justice, even as I received of my Father."—Rev. 2: 26, 27.

CAN MORALITY EXIST WITHOUT RELIGION?

Religion plays so large a part in the ethical development of the human race that it is sometimes assumed that without religion morality could not exist at all. But although religion is admitted to be among the greatest ethical forces in the world, many modern thinkers are unwilling to concede that a rejection of theological dogma necessarily involves the repudiation of moral standards. Professor Goldwin Smith, of Toronto, who has recently been giving this question some attention, declares his belief that were Christianity and the belief in immortality to be finally abandoned, the world would experience "a bad quarter of an hour." Nevertheless, he adds:

"Whatever turn may ultimately be taken by our convictions about a hereafter, society will uphold by law or social influence rules necessary to its own security and convenience here. It may even uphold them more rigorously, perhaps cruelly, if it is convinced that the present life is all. The natural affections, parental, conjugal, and social, will also retain their force."

Professor Morris Jastrow, of the University of Pennsylvania, takes a similar view in his recently published book on "The Study of Religion." "The religious sentiment in man," he says, "has an existence quite independent of morality, and one can even conceive of religions that do not foster morality." The gods of the savages, for example, are often an "accentuation of dormant or innate cruelty," and their favor is invoked by "bribes, flatteries, and threats." It is obvious, declares Professor Jastrow, that man can not ascribe ethical qualities to his gods

"until he himself has proceeded far enough along the line of moral development to have established for his own guidance some ethical principles, however simple they may be." According to this view, it is "man's ethical sense that exerts an influence upon his beliefs," and not vice versa. Or, to put it in another way: "Religion and ethics may be likened to two streams that have an independent source, but which flow toward one another until they unite, and eventually become one."

The life and thought of ancient Greece, continues the writer, affords a striking illustration of the separation of religion and ethics. Socrates, who at first attempted to give his philosophy a religious character, was "unable to resist the movement which finds its highest exponents in Plato and Aristotle, the former enthroning Reason as the ultimate source of ethics, the latter proposing instead to assign the place to Will." The Buddhist religion has also shown "marked tendencies" in the same direction. "The pessimistic view of life, favored by the great religion of India," says Professor Jastrow, "helps to remove the religious sanction for ethics, although so strongly maintained by some of the religious thinkers, and we find systems of morality cropping up in which there is no place for a central supramundane authority imposing His laws upon mankind." In the case of Christianity, "it is not philosophy, but a skepticism as to the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, which gives vitality to the movement to divorce ethics from religion." Professor Jastrow adds:

"Religion is no longer the source of ethics, but proves a stimulus to it. Matthew Arnold's definition of religion as 'morality touched with emotion,' while defective as a definition, yet reflects this modern relationship between religion and ethics. . . . But while religion thus furnishes the stimulus to morality, it must be confessed that in the most advanced, or, if you choose, the most diluted forms of faith, the influence of ethics on religion is reduced to a minimum. There may be ethical strains in these forms of faith, but if that is the case, it is due to the inevitable entrance of ethical considerations into any purely intellectual interpretation of the universe—and its mysteries."

Some interesting facts relative to the influence of religion upon conduct are furnished by a clergyman of a Western city who has gathered statistics about those who have dropped away from the local churches during the last ten years. We quote from the New York Tribune:

"Out of 679 adults now living who have ceased to go to church during that period, 239 were originally poor church-members, ranging all the way from notorious evil-livers to indifferent worldlings. Since these 239 have formally withdrawn from the church their moral condition has in no wise changed, except that a few of them are somewhat more open in their defiance of the moral law. Of the remaining 440, eighteen have deteriorated morally since they left the church. Nearly all of them, it is declared, are persons of unusually weak character, easily led by temptation to do wrong, and one of them confessed that while he was a member of the church he was kept from evil courses not by his belief in Christianity, but by the desire not to seem recreant to the faith he professed. Sixty-three persons have apparently led better lives since they left the church, though the change has not been at all marked, and one of these sixty-three declares that he is a better man now because he wants to show his church friends that unbelief does not imply immorality. The remaining 359 of the 679 backsliders are morally pretty much the same as they were before. They continue to be reputable citizens, and are impelled by the same motives of self-interest, touched occasionally by unselfish impulses, that appeared to govern them when they were members of the church.

"It would perhaps be too much to assume that the result of this particular census would be true of the non-churchgoers of other communities. There may have been special circumstances in the city where it was taken that tended to make the result favorable as to the non-churchgoers; for favorable it certainly is. It is desirable, therefore, that some such investigation be made in other communities, as only in this way can the question be finally decided whether a rejection of the teaching of religion does or does not result in moral deterioration; and it would be better if it were made by men representing the church, as in that case religious men would have no reason to question its fairness."—The Literary Digest, May 17, 1902.

HAVANA TRANSFORMED.

From one of the most disease-stricken ports in the world, Havana has now been converted into a charming tropical city—a result which has been due entirely to American enterprise in Cuba. What a wonderful sanitary change has been wrought in the old town is graphically told by Major W. M. Black, in the National Geographical Magazine.

Shanties and sheds that had been for decades breeding-places for cholera germs were ruthlessly swept away; streets never repaired in the memory of living man were cleaned or repaved; sewers were rebuilt; and houses were unceremoniously entered and disinfected. All this work has been done, not spasmodically, but systematically. Cleaning squads were sent from house to house; apartments were cleaned regardless of the protests of their inmates. The accumulations of years from cellars were thrown out. Such an arbitrary procedure would, no doubt, raise a storm of indignant protest from the people of North America. But the health and safety of Havana demanded it.

The most admirable work of all was the cleaning of the sewers. Not since the day when they were first built had they been looked after. Many of them were choked by the refuse of decades. The American authorities not only managed to repair the sewer system and render it in every way serviceable, but did so without injuring the life of a single laborer. The streets of the city have been cleaned, and in many cases transformed. Narrow thoroughfares have been widened. A magnificent sea wall and a promenade have been built; parks have been cleared and converted from haunts for thieves into pleasure grounds for the people.

The worst pesthole in Havana was the Hospital Militar. To be carried to that place was like being carried to one's grave. Not more than 30 per cent of the patients who entered its walls ever came out alive. American surgeons avoided it; soldiers held their breath when they passed it. The sanitary squad of the Engineer Corps took possession of the building, cleaned it from attic to cellar, coated its walls again and again with whitewash, and finally left the building clean and wholesome. It is now used for a schoolhouse.

Naturally the slothful Cubans dislike the fumigation and disinfection process to which they were subjected. What was good enough for their grandfathers was good enough for them, they thought. Probably most of the Cubans, if the matter of cleaning the city had been put to popular vote, would have decided against the transformation of the town. Now that the streets are cleaned, the parks trimmed and lighted and the sea promenades enjoyable, they have revised their opinions of American extravagance and have even begun to take a certain pride in the new capital. What the effect of the sanitary improvement of the city has been is easily proven by a comparison of the vital statistics in past years. In 1896 no less than 1,262 deaths from yellow fever alone were reported to the city government. The average for the eleven years preceding American occupation was 440 fatal cases. Last year, for the first time in the history of the city, the yellow fever season passed without five fatal cases of the disease. October, November, and December, the three months in the year during which the fever was the worst under Spanish rule, passed without a single case.—Scientific American, May 24, 1902.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Like weary and worn-out children, who sigh for the daylight's close,
He knows that they oft are lounging for home and its sweet repose;
So he calls them in from their labors, ere the shadows round them creep,
And silently watching o'er them, he giveth his loved ones sleep."

A Few Items of Our Voyage.

On leaving Taenga in the morning with such a nice breeze, it was supposed that we would reach the town by noon, make only a call for provisions, and go on to the upper end of the lake, and remain over night and take the daylight for starting out to sea again. But the wind became lighter, therefore we did not arrive as soon as anticipated, and night would overtake us before we were half way through the lake, it being thirty miles from pass to pass, and rocks beneath the surface to be steered clear of. All on board were tired and sunburned, and not at all opposed to remaining where we were, and sleeping ashore. Although the people were all strangers, they kindly furnished us with sleeping-departments. We furnished our own bedclothes, and upon gathering them up in the morning, I missed getting my new pair of cotton blankets.

Early morning found us all at the boat again in time to have singing and prayer and get started just as the sun was peeping above the far-off ocean line. Our breakfast was prepared while we glided along over the rippling waters of the lake. The day was beautiful, and we had a delightful sail, in view of the shore trees and shrubbery all day. Things were better arranged on the deck, one of the baskets of meat, the basket of fish, and many cocoanuts had been consumed; the largest hog was taken ashore and sold for a good price and the proceeds divided among six of us. It did not occupy so much space when in that form as when all together, and was a more agreeable companion; and altogether there was more room.

I believe I have omitted to make mention of Metuaore. He and Pohemiti and wife accompanied us to Raroia, and were in company on our return trip. They too were visitors, and as such were entitled to a share of the aroha.

Early in the afternoon we were opposite the upper town where a few of our members abide. One of our company had some business to transact with them concerning land, so our little ship rounded a point and anchored near the shore. The women and children on board did not wait to be landed by way of canoe as we were; they just dropped overboard and swam ashore to get cool, all but Pohemiti's wife.

We made only a short call on the few Saints and received a pair of pearl shells each as an aroha from them, then sailed on to the upper pass, but the tide was running in so strong we did not attempt to go out, but came to anchor in a sheltered little nook and waited for the slack tide, and while they waited, the natives went ashore and cooked and ate their suppers where they could roast fish and help themselves to cocoanuts.

It is the custom with the natives when on a boating trip, to sleep ashore every night that an island is available.

Had we remained at our anchorage till morning it would have been a day's run to the lower pass of Fakarava; and as the lake was lengthwise along our course could have had another day's sail through the lake and waited for a new day to start out to sea, and so only have been one night out while going to Kaukura. But we greatly desired to get to Kaukura before Sunday; and having spent one more day in Taenga than was intended, we must now make up the time by sailing in the night and also by not entering the lake (which would save a little distance) until we reached the far end of the island where the town is located. Therefore just as the twilight was deepening into night our boat with her cheerful crew moved swiftly through the broad "pass" out to sea again.

We had a fine run that night, but more slow the next day, and did not enter the pass to Fakarava till an hour or more after dark. It was quite cloudy and dark when nearing the land, and those coral reefs are so treacherous, how I wished the clouds would break away and let the stars light up our course. Presently a star shone out here and there. Then two bright ones made their appearance at the very point where light was most needed, shining brightly until others were added to the number.

There was a strong tide running out, and a nice fresh breeze blowing against it. Had it been light enough we would have seen that the passage was quite rough. We could see the little white-capped waves near us, and it appeared as if we were going very rapidly, but in reality were making slow progress. The town is almost in sight of the entrance, and yet we were till two o'clock in the morning beating up to it against the strong current.

Fakarava is what is called a government island, i. e., government officers are established there and a French governor. The captain of the boat we were in was a policeman of Taenga and so had to stop at that town and get a government permit to go to Kaukura. The day we arrived was Friday, and some kind of a holiday with the Catholics in which the officers took part, consequently no business could be done till afternoon; so after "doing the town" and getting a few more eatables, the boat was dropped down stream a little way opposite a brother's house, and the sisters went ashore and did up their washing and Metuaore did the baking.

Sunday-School Department.

Origin and Mission of Sunday-School.

Under the origin of the Sunday-school we have three divisions: the first, second, and third stages. The first stage begins with the founding of the school in the year 1781, by Robert Raikes, in Gloucester, England. Business compelled him to pass through the suburbs of the town where he found a group of little children playing. Upon investigation he found that on Sunday the street was filled with miserably ragged little children of the lowest morality. This condition caused him to do considerable studying in order to find some way to assist them to lead a better life. He finally resolved upon a plan of employing ladies to teach them, whereupon he employed four ladies to teach as many children as he should send them on the Sabbath day.

In a short time a great improvement was noticed in the manners and morals of the pupils, who began to attend church with their mistresses, and by the year 1785 numerous schools had been established throughout England. The Queen of England soon became interested, and admitted Mr. Raikes to an audience, after which she became a strong advocate of Sunday-school work.

The Sunday-school entered upon its

SECOND STAGE

about the year 1800. The great hindrance to the Sunday-school work in the beginning was the lack of funds with which to employ teachers. This caused some of the more energetic Christians to offer their services without pay. This started the school upon a new career of success. A higher class of teachers offered their services, and the schools ceased to be filled with the poor alone, but the wealthy began to see the value of Sunday-school work and began to send their children. The churches began to erect fine buildings for the accommodation of the schools.

The Sunday-school Union, which was formed in 1803, had great influence in improving the schools.

In about the year 1860 the Sunday-school entered upon its

THIRD STAGE.

The establishment of and improvement in the week-day schools obviated the necessity of teaching the common educational branches of reading, writing, etc. Hence they gradually became restricted to religious instruction. This condition was the means of still greater advancement in Sunday-school work. It became so popular that it soon found its way into other countries.

As early as the year 1786 it found its way into Scotland. Its progress there is due, to a great extent, to the work of Dr. Chalmers, James Gall, and David Stowe. It was considerably opposed at first by the ecclesiastical courts, but at present is supported by all Christians. The first organization in America to promulgate the Sunday-school was organized in Philadelphia, in 1791, by members of the different denominations. The New York Sunday-school Union was organized in 1816; and in 1817 the Philadelphia Sunday and Adult School was organized. These three led to the organization of the American Sunday-school Union at Philadelphia, in 1824. Its leading object was to establish a Sunday-school in every community where there was a population.

As the new States were settled, each church paid more attention to the Sunday-school, until denominational unions were formed to promote them. In the beginning, the chief object was to commit portions of Scripture, and the teacher's duty was to hear the recitations.

Afterwards the question-book was added, followed by lesson-helpers, golden texts, blackboard exercises, etc.

After once being established, the United States led all other countries in the progress of Sunday-school work. By the year 1890, the number of Protestant Sunday-schools in the United States was 108,939, with over eight and one half million pupils. The Roman Catholic schools contained over 700,000 pupils. All the schools in England contained six and one third million pupils; Scotland, 711,000; Ireland, 338,000; France, 53,000; and Germany, 431,000.

The end in view by Mr. Raikes when he established the first school was to elevate the morals of the children. But to-day the end in view is a higher one. To-day we want the pupil to receive such a knowledge of the Bible as to enable him to follow the plan of salvation received from God through his Son, Jesus Christ, our beloved Savior. That should be the end in view by every teacher as he takes charge of his class on Sunday morning. Not simply to have the pupil recite a few sentences from memory which were assigned him on the previous Sunday and then dismissing the class without any effort on the part of the teacher to lead the pupil to that true end. By this we do not mean to say that the training of the moral character is not an important subject; but as civilization has progressed the parents have taken this duty upon themselves more forcibly, yet we find a great many children that have received no instruction at home, bringing the words of our noted educator, Horace Mann, into use: "Lost; yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone for ever." It is the same with the child that has been so unfortunate as to receive no training at home. It has lost time that is gone for ever. Perhaps if each of us would look back over our past life, we should remember of wasted time that we might have used to the honor and glory of our Father in heaven, thereby increasing our future reward.

The training of moral character may be a sufficient end for the world; but those believing in the restored gospel know the necessity of teaching the child each and every principle of the gospel as it was taught in the time of Christ.

WHAT ARE THE MEANS

by which this end may be reached? We realize that every act of the soul leaves an increased power to act and a tendency to act in like manner. Hence the necessity of having pure and wholesome means before the pupil from the beginning of its Sunday-school work so as to keep his mind filled with good deeds with which evil thoughts may be driven away. What a pleasure it is to observe the pupil that has received a good training at home, that has his mind filled with noble thoughts! What a pleasure it is to observe the energy he displays in the study of the word of God! We also observe that the pupil will follow the example of the teacher. How important it is, then, that the teacher be a true follower of Christ whereby he may instill into the mind of the pupil the pleasure in doing the will of the Father to receive the crown that is in store for him.

No teacher can do justice to the pupil who is simply an example for the pupil during the school hour. He must be an example every hour of the week, whereby the pupil will realize that he is indeed a follower of Christ. This will also be a means to bring others into the school; others will hear of the pleasant hour to be spent at the Sunday-school.

Another means is the #### MANNER OF CONDUCTING CLASS RECITATION.

We have listened to recitations conducted in such a manner as to be fruitless. There was no system of instruction, no previous preparation on the part of the teacher, no definite end in view; hence the value of the lessons was lost. It destroyed interest instead of creating it. It is very essential that the teacher has clear knowledge of the lesson and more than that he must have a general knowledge of the Bible.

In connection with this we might mention that are of great value: a teachers' meeting where the lesson may be studied and different opinions be expressed, thereby establishing a more uniform system of instruction.

These are a few of the many means necessary to fulfill the mission of the Sunday-school. Briefly stated, it is by searching the Scriptures with an eye single to the glory of God, and by unceasing prayer, putting our trust in him who knoweth all things well, whereby we shall be endued with power to lead the pupils to that living fountain where they shall thirst no more, but where they shall go on and upward in this grand and glorious work until they hear that good old plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

Under the caption "Answers by Experts" The Chicago Record-Herald publishes daily an article by an authority of national reputation on some topic of every day interest to nearly all newspaper readers. Some problem of family or school life is considered in every Monday issue; methods of developing health and vigor of body are treated on Tuesdays; various movements and mental phenomena attracting popular attention on Wednesdays; natural methods of promoting good health and good looks for women on Thursdays; momentous decisions in the lives of eminent men, related by themselves, on Fridays, and "Modern Thought About the Bible," presenting the differing views of eminent theologians on important Bible topics, on Sundays. The "Answers by Experts," in brief, tell you things you want to know and are written by men and women who do know. The list of contributors of high standing is the most extensive ever announced by any American newspaper.

The Sunday Times, of Los Angeles, California, makes a specialty of its "magazine" part which contains a vast amount of reading. It is certainly an interesting part of a wide-awake journal.

Letter Department.

MEXICO CITY, May 22, 1902.

Editors Herald: Inclosed please find a clipping of the issue of May 5, of the Imparcial, the principal Spanish daily paper of Mexico City. Possibly the following extract therefrom will be of interest to the Saints.

"Mr. Leopoldo Batres, Inspector of Archæological Monuments, has just made a discovery of great importance to the history of our aborigines. At a comparatively short distance from the superb palaces of Mitla said inspector discovered, buried under a hill, called Mount Alban, a great city with its temples, palaces, obelisks, and large groups of dwellings which extend over more than three kilometers. There are ruined temples in the walls of which are found stone tablets of one meter to one and a half in length, artistically sculptured, representing warriors and priests in their festival dresses, performing, no doubt, various of their peculiar rites.

"Mr. Batres believes that this metropolis was suddenly destroyed by some horrible cataclysm, resembling the one at Pompeii, and that by it, all its inhabitants must have perished. The skeletons found here and there in the habitations, some objects in disorder, the peculiar position in which the ruins remain, all point to the probability that about two thousand or some more years ago a deluge must have destroyed the city.

"There are two-story houses of magnificent architecture with sewerage systems and sculptured stone tablets, temples, and obelisks entirely equal to those of ancient Egypt.

"Among other things, which the Inspector of Monuments has brought from the ruins, are superb jewelry of jadis which, no doubt, belonged to the priests or great personages of the destroyed city. Among these are blades as thin as paper, others truly artistically sculptured. How (asks the Imparcial) could they do these things without the knowledge of fine steel instruments, which to-day are of such great help to art? Among these jewels was found one of approximately round form, with a face carved in the middle thereof and hieroglyphics and attributes round about it. This one exhibits such extraordinarily fine work that perhaps even nowadays no one would ask even the best artists to produce better work. An obelisk, a superb block of granite, partly covered with hieroglyphics, is already on the way to the capital.

"One thing worthy of notice is that this city as discovered is, topographically, identical with the countries governed by the Pharaohs, and described and designed by Maspero.

"The jadis of China and Indostan, the obelisks and architecture of Egypt, the hieroglyphics and civilization of the Zapotecs; indeed, a strange meddly left us by this mysterious people that lived some thousands of years ago upon Mount Alban."

Making the foregoing abstract I have tried to use the language of the compiler thereof in the Spanish language.

Before I came to Mexico I was told that I would not be the first Saint living in Mexico. So far I have met none.

The late events that have transpired in the church, I think, plainly show us that we are in the hastening time, and a time of sacrifice for the people of God. I know full well that I have failed in many things and not always honored the name I bear; yet if we never try to work in the interests of the cause we claim to believe in, we will never profit the same in the least. Therefore, this humble appeal to the Saint or Saints that may live in this country. Let us become acquainted with each other, even if it be but by correspondence. I am persuaded the truth of the statement, Divided we fall, united we stand, will also in this case be made very clear to us. I should be glad to receive the address of any brother or sister in this country, whether officer or member. See above my address.

I trust this appeal will not be in vain.

Editors Herald: After more than a three-week battle with acute rheumatism and the end as yet problematical, it is due me to say to those who have made requests that I visit and preach in their localities before starting for my far-away mission, that it now looks as though it will be impossible to comply with such requests, much as I would like to.

Though propped up in bed while I write and my strength heavily taxed, I feel before closing to solemnly protest against the publication in the HERALD of such a statement as made by a recent writer that we have Judases in the church. I do not believe there has yet been any evidence of such thought. Anyhow, the statement was uncalled for after a settlement by General Conference enactment.

Editor Herald: Am "on duty" in the mission field, trying to do what I can for the Master's cause. Openings are hard to get and crowds harder, this busy time, especially in the country. In the towns and cities closed doors bar the way, and exclude the light of the latter-day message; yet we must ever labor on, valiant, diligent, and untiring. The "enemy" is ever alert, so must be the soldiers of Christ.

We are having a "rainy" time here, hence not much chance to do missionary work. Will be glad when the weather gets more settled, and tent season begins.

Lately I had quite a novel experience in the way of preaching; that is, it was novel to me. Being unable to obtain use of a building in Rea to preach in, my parents kindly opened their house, and helped in inviting a crowd, for Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night last. Had a nice attendance Saturday night and Sunday, and on Sunday night the house was well filled and some out in the yard. An organist and choir of good singers were present, Dr. W. C. Meyers, the splendid tenor, among them. The preliminary exercises were certainly very good. Then the sermon was delivered, while a few feet from the speaker was a "phone" connected with all the lines in the country and towns round-about, with the lines connected for the occasion, the subject having been previously announced over the lines. The singing and sermon went far and wide. I shall not attempt to say how far, or how many heard, for I do not know, and will not until, perhaps, the judgment. However, I prefer to have my audience in my presence, where they can see me and I can see them, and they can feel the spirit of the occasion, get the spirit of the preaching, the spirit of the gospel. But upon this occasion we certainly reached "the greatest number of people in the shortest time," and the meeting was pronounced a success in that regard, while many favorable comments were heard.

Hope that we shall yet be able to accomplish some lasting good at Rea.

Came here Thursday expecting to go on to Cosby and Helena, but rain deterred. Will stay here over Sunday, then push on.

May this year be a noted one to the people of God for blessings received and successful achievements.

JOSEPH C. VAUGHAN.

MANSFIELD, Missouri, May 27.

Dear Herald: At present I am associated with Bro. Davis, Perhaps some of the Saints in this section would be glad to know that "Gospel Dan" has been traded for fleet-footed "Sally." We can travel through the country now at a very rapid rate.

We came to this country some two weeks ago, and have been preaching two sermons a day. This is where Bro. W. T. Roach lives, and he and his estimable wife have done everything within their power to make our work effective. The Lord surely has prospered him since he quit the missionary work. He expects after harvest to go out and labor awhile for the Master. We commenced meetings in his yard, a very pleasant place. Notwithstanding the busy season, our congregations were good and some are interested, and perhaps will be baptized if the effort can be continued after awhile. Last night we had advertised to preach on the differences between our faith and Brighamism, and we had a large crowd. We had the subject illustrated with a chart.

We close our meetings at this place to-night. In connection with our night meeting we drove over to Mansfield and preached on the street every day last week. Quite an interest was manifested and the news has gone out all over the country that the "Mormons" are in town. As a result of our street effort we were invited to come out to a schoolhouse last Sunday at eleven a. m.

We close our meetings at this place to-night and will commence another meeting in a union building about four miles from here. We try to be as happy and cheerful as possible, and are rejoicing in the mercies of God.

A. M. BAKER.

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, May 25.

Editors Herald: I have been placed as sub-missionary in charge of the Northeast Kansas District, and am now in my field at work. Brethren, let us improve every opportunity, and let victory be our watch word.

We have a large field before us. Bro. Beebe is with me. Our missionary force is small, but we will do what we can in the interest of truth. We especially desire to make as many new openings in the year as possible, and to this end we ask the assistance and coöperation of all the Saints and friends. If there are houses of worship or any places whatever in your vicinities where meetings can be held, we hope you will make an effort to secure such opportunities, then notify me. Address me at Fanning, Kansas.

S. J. MADDEN.

OGDEN, Utah, May 26.

Editors Herald: Please say to your readers that I am in my field and at work.

As Bro. Kelley, our missionary in charge, has assigned me to this place with the territory from Salt Lake County north, I will be pleased to hear from any of the Saints or friends in this territory who may desire my labors. The field is new to me, and if there are Saints or friends living here who can assist me in getting openings for the preaching of the word I will greatly appreciate such help and will do what I can to meet the demands. My mission address is 1509 Washington Avenue, Ogen, Utah.

GRAINLAND, California, May 15.

Editors Herald: I have received joy and inspiration from reading the letters of the Saints. This is a grand and marvelous work. Words can not depict the beauty of it.

I have not been one of the fold very long, and did not know there was such a gospel in existence till Elder A. B. Phillips came to us a year ago this last January. He was directed by the Holy Spirit to go to Dayton, a little town about seven miles southwest of Chico, that there were a few who would receive the truth. And how he did labor for us! He stayed in Chico and came those seven long miles every night through the coldest kind of weather to break the bread of life unto us, that he might save five (to him precious) souls, and we did not appreciate his efforts enough to provide for his comfort. That is the way the elders are treated. They suffer persecutions and hardships to save a wicked people who would stone them to death! O shame!

Thank the great God that he has directed us in the narrow way and placed our feet upon the rock. He also caused the return of Bro. B. W. Pack, one that has been a power in the Lord's work, but fell away, but through the prayers and labor of Bro. Phillips, has made a complete surrender, and is once more doing the Lord's work. He makes a good shepherd. May he ever be true and faithful.

Bro. Hommes, with untiring zeal, has kept this work moving ever since it was established in this place. We have no branch, but expect to in a short time. We are all members of the Sacramento Branch.

Bro. Phillips is preaching at Centerville, and expects to baptize a few. May the good work go on. Your sister,

SARAH E. BOYDSTUN.

PORT ARTHUR, Texas, May 28.

Editors Herald: I am still in the land and at work, although very near the water at this writing. I closed a meeting at Vinton, Louisiana, last night, where I have been preaching for the past ten days. I preached most of the time in the open air, out doors. We have a few excellent Saints living at Vinton, and they wanted help to get the gospel before their neighbors, hence they sent for me. Two parties not in our church put up twenty dollars to help pay my expenses, and then did not come into the church; but they will surely get their reward. I guess I am not a very good proselyter anyway, for not one was baptized. Some prejudice was removed, however. The lives of the Saints living there are of that character that is calculated to induce people to obey the gospel if anything will. It is a real pleasure to preach where we have such good, consistent Saints living, and it gives courage to the missionary, if he is lacking. This is as it should be everywhere a Saint lives.

I called on a brother in Beaumont this morning, and came down here at the request of a sister living here. She wanted to have her child blessed and administered to. She was better before I got here, for which I am thankful.

I go on to-night for San Antonio, Texas, and expect to attend the Southwestern Texas Reunion. Have had fair liberty in preaching so far, and hope this may be a successful year for the church, and that God may abundantly bless all church work, and all church workers.

G. H. HILLIARD.

BELLAIRE, Michigan, May 28.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother: I am at this place in debate with R. B. Brown, a Disciple minister. Three propositions:

First. Resolved that Joseph Smith was a false prophet and an impostor, and the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants and Inspired Translation of the Bible false and corrupt, and should not be accepted by Christians. R. B. Brown affirms, J. J. Cornish denies. Second. Resolved that the teachings of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are in harmony with that taught by Christ and his apostles, both in respect to doctrine and organization. Cornish affirms, Brown denies. Third. Resolved that the teachings of the Church of Christ, of which R. B. Brown is a member, are in harmony with that taught by Christ and his apostles, both in respect to doctrine and organization. Brown affirms, Cornish denies. Four nights of two half-hour speeches each evening for each speaker on first proposition. Two nights on the second, and two on the third proposition. We tried to get more time, but could not. However, we can, by the aid of the Spirit of God, tell a lot in eight hours.

We began last night in a large hall with a large crowd. I just felt alive, the Spirit being present to assist. I am of the opinion that from the present outlook much good will be done. It will break down prejudice and bring others to an understanding of our work, and build up the Saints, and encourage and strengthen them for the work before them.

J. J. CORNISH.

MILTON, Florida, May 26.

Editors Herald: We are not all dead here yet, though it seems we are quite negligent in duty. I love to feel the letters from the Saints in all parts of the world, and feel that it is a part of our duty to write to the HERALD that we may encourage each other. I love the gospel and desire to do all that I can toward helping others believe it.

Dear Saints, we have appointed the second Sunday in June, (the 8th) for a day of fasting and prayer in behalf of our Bro. Emory Wiggins, who has been afflicted since January. We have fasted and prayed for him several times, and I thank God that he is now able to go to the table for his meals and eat heartily; but his mind is affected yet but better than it has been. No one can tell what the trouble is. The physicians can not tell what it was. Emory said it was an evil spirit, and so I believe. So I hope the Saints who can will fast and pray with us in his behalf; and I ask the Prayer Union to remember him, for he is in a bad condition yet.

I hope that Bro. Roberts can be with us on that day, and administer to him. I think that it would be wise for us to have a limit to the fast of from five p. m. Saturday until five p. m. Sunday.

I hope we will all discharge our duty and live for the blessings that the Lord has promised to the faithful, that we may not give way to doubt and fear, but feel assured that the Lord will bless us. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful.

JAMES E. WIGGINS.

VICARS, Indian Territory, Creek Nation, May 22.

Editors Herald: I send you a short letter to let you and the brethren know that I and family are still alive in the faith. I am preaching some of late to increasing crowds that seem to be interested. I preached on the "two resurrections." There was one man who was man enough to tell me that he did not believe it, while there were others that say they believe it, as we present it. I believe that there will be good results if the work is pushed with wisdom. We have our meetings in a grove, have basket dinner and two discourses.

Bro. Maclin and wife of Bristow are the only Saints I know of living in the Creek Nation, so we are very much isolated. If there are any who are honest-hearted here, may the good Master speed the time when they may be gathered out and numbered with us to help carry Immanuel's banner to victory and final triumph. In bonds, your brother, F. M. MAUZEY.

Knight was ordained a priest by F. A. Smith, H. Kemp, and D. Hougas. Missions: McPaul, J. C. Moore, W. W. Gaylord, L. D. Frederickson; Pacific City and vicinity, A. J. Davidson. A motion prevailed that the officers elected at this conference hold until next February conference, after which elections be held annually. A. Badham was then elected district president and C. Fry secretary. Bishop Leeka with his counselors, and Patriarch H. Kemp were sustained by vote. Preaching by Charles Fry and F. A. Smith. Adjourned to meet at Thurman Branch, Saturday, October 11, at ten a. m.

Convention Minutes.

Fremont.—Convened at Henderson, May 22, at eight p. m. The General Superintendent was associated with the superintendent in presiding, Agnes F. Dunsdon secretary. All visiting members were given privilege to take part. Superintendent and assistant gave verbal reports. Reports were read from librarian and treasurer. The question of calling Winnowed Songs, Bibles, etc., Sunday-school supplies, was raised. General Superintendent reported that when the blanks now being prepared were out this misunderstanding would be straightened up. Suggested that the school librarians keep a file of the Hope and Quarterly. School reports were read, those incorrect to be returned for correction. Resignation of district superintendent was accepted. By resolution the chairman appointed a committee of three, Ethel I. Skank, M. E. Pace, and Emily Fry, to look into the matter of a district circulating library, reporting at some future time; the subject to be brought up at next convention at three p. m. Emma Hougas was elected superintendent, Ida Castor assistant. Next convention to be held at Thurman in October. Thus closed a very successful and peaceful convention.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Oklahoma and Indian Territory: I am glad to again call your attention to needs of the work in this mission. Many calls for preaching on every hand, and we will try and make this a busy year. We need your constant prayers and coöperation in every respect. Our General Conference was a grand, good one. Let us live humble and faithful that the good Spirit may be and abide with us richly. I am glad we can have the assistance of Brn. Simmons and Renfroe as directed by Bro. H. O. Smith. We will try and observe the following order: Brn. Pickering and S. S. Smith to labor in Washita, Caddo, Kiowa, and Cleveland Counties. Brn. W. E. Haden and H. R. Harder in Indian Territory. Brn. Montague and Aylor in both Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Bro. I. P. Baggerly in Eastern and Northern Oklahoma. Bro. J. H. Baker in Beaver and Woodward Counties. Bro. Crawley in Northern Oklahoma. Bro. R. M. Maloney in Central and Northern Oklahoma. I ask the local brethren to preach all they can. Remember dates for reporting, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Report to me at Redmoon, Roger Mills County, Oklahoma. I am now engaged in debate with one R. B. Shannon (Advent) at this place. The Lord is with us in power. Let the advice of missionary in charge be heeded regarding debates. I wish to hear from the brethren, also the Saints, from time to time. Your brother in gospel bonds, Hubert Case.

To the Saints and Missionaries of Washington and British Columbia; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named territory I would like to have the coöperation of all living in the territory named, and will say that all those who have or know of openings where there is a chance to tell the old, old gospel story can write me at the address here given and will try and do all that is in our power to answer the demands. As the field is large and the laborers are few, let us, dear brethren and Saints, realize our responsibility and do all that lies in our power for the advancement of the cause of truth. I will soon be with you, having been detained by sickness but let us do what we can and so labor that when this conference year is ended we can look back on our year's labor with the satisfaction of knowing that we have done the very best we could. My home address is Stewartville, Missouri. Field address until further notice will be Spokane, Washington. May our Father help us to do our whole duty, is the prayer of your brother and colaborer, J. W. Roberts.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Kirtland District; Greeting: Having seen by the HERALD of April 30 a notice of the arrangement agreed upon by those in charge for the mission work of the Kirtland District, and the charge committed to the writer, I wish to give notice that I am in the field, ready for work. Having been informed by Brn. Sheehy and Greene that my objective point would be Cleveland, I will remain here for awhile at least before going elsewhere. For the present, my address will be No. 2 Spilker Street, Cleveland, Ohio. I shall be pleased to receive communications from the ministry, both local and missionary forces, as well as Saints and others, with whom and in whose interest I am expected to labor. I learn from Bro. Griffiths, who was with us here Sunday the 25th, that Bro. U. W. Greene, who has taken charge of the western wing of the eastern mission, will be with us soon, to give general directions, which it will, of course, be the pleasure of each of us under his jurisdiction to do our very best to carry out. Brn. R. Baldwin and F. J. Ebeling have been appointed to travel with the district tent. Bro. Baldwin being also the district president, to him should be addressed all applications for tent work. The writer and Bro. E. P. Schmidt are instructed to labor together in Cleveland for the present. It is our ardent desire to push the work with energy, courage, and zeal tempered with wisdom, and hope to be sustained by the coöperation, prayers, confidence, and active assistance of all the Saints. May God bless our work. Yours for Zion's weal, O. B. Thomas.

Business Manager's Notice.

We wish to call the attention of the Saints to the following facts. The Book of Mormon Lectures by H. A. Stebbins are again in print and are ready for mailing. Price in limp cloth, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents; leather, $1.00; flexible, $1.50. This is a book of 287 pages and is an able argument on the divinity of the Book of Mormon from almost every point. Religio societies especially can not afford to be without it.

We have also just issued a book for the young people entitled, Book of Mormon Talks. It is written by one of our ablest missionaries with the evident idea of simplifying the great truths of the Book of Mormon that our boys and girls will fully comprehend them. It is illustrated by half-tone engravings of some of the archaeological discoveries of the present day. Price in limp cloth, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

The excellent article which was published in the HERALD of late under the heading, The Book of Mormon Verified, has been put in tract form and is now ready for mailing. We have made the low price of five cents each or thirty cents a dozen on this tract to insure its wide circulation. It is a good tract to hand to your friends.

We are now ready to fill orders on Presidency and Priesthood again. Our new catalogue will be mailed within the next two weeks. All of our books are now in print but we are still crowded in our bindery. However, we expect to fill all orders for books with no greater delay than ten days, and in the near future we hope to fill all orders the day they reach us.

We trust that we may enjoy the confidence and support of every member, and any mistakes that have occurred or that do occur in the future will be fully investigated and rectified if our attention is called to them. When sending money for books already received, simply say, "To apply on account." In harmony with latter-day revelation let us labor together for the building up of the grandest work ever intrusted to man. Your servant in Christ, F. B. Blair, Manager.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of the Southern Wisconsin District will be held on the farm of Bro. O. N. Dutton, five miles north of Janesville, Wisconsin, beginning August 30 and holding until September 8, 1902. The district conference will be held in connection with the reunion on September 6. We expect to hire a cook and have a dining-tent on the ground where all who desire can get meals at cost. Some can get meals at Bro. Dutton's at the same price, and they can also furnish lodging for a few. Those who care to can board themselves in their own tents. Tents will be rented cheap. If you want one let us know. There is plenty of stabling for horses, and feed is cheap. Dishes will be furnished for the dining-tent, but you should bring your bedding and care for yourself so far as possible. If you intend to come on the cars drop a card to J. O. Dutton, R. F. D. No. 1, Milton Junction, Wisconsin, stating that you expect to be in Janesville, and you will be met with a team. Come and let us worship the Lord for good. Address your letters to chairman of committee, W. P. Robinson, Oregon, Wisconsin.

NORTHERN MINNESOTA.

The above reunion will be held at Frazee City, Becker County, Minnesota, June 20, continuing over two Sundays. A cordial invitation is extended to all Saints and the public to be present. We expect Bro. F. A. Smith, missionary in charge; Elders T. C. Kelley, E. A. Stedman, Eli Hayer, George Hilliard, F. D. Omans, and H. Way, of the missionary force, as well as the local ministry. Board with room from $3 to $3.50 per week. Arrangements have been made for the stabling of teams and the purchasing of hay and straw. Each team will be charged pro rata. Barn rent very reasonable. Straw will be provided for the filling of bed-ticks. Any who prefer to pasture horses can do so at a slight cost. Those who desire barn room write to Bro. J. W. Brier. Those who want board write to Sr. Kate Jepson, both of Frazee City. Per order of committee, F. D. Omans, President. Thomas J. Martin, Secretary.

Conference Notices.

Saints attending Chatham Conference at Longwood, June 21, will be met, those from the west, at Appin Junction on the C. P. R. and junction on G. T. R. Those from the east on the G. T. R. will be met at Longwood. All from St. Thomas will get off at G. T. R. Junction.

Northern Minnesota Conference will be held at Frazee City, June 21, at two p. m.

Northeastern Kansas District will convene June 14, at Atchison, Kansas, at ten a. m.

Convention Notices.

Eastern Michigan Association will convene at Shabbona, June 27, at 1: 30 p. m.

Married.

SANDERS—VAN METER.—At the residence of N. W. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, May 25, 1902, Bro. Samuel Sanders and Sr. Ella Van Meter, by Bishop Wm. Anderson.

KELLEY—BLACK.—Mr. Le Roy S. Kelley and Sr. Pearl Black were united in holy matrimony at the home of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. Samuel S. Black, 1613 North Twenty-third Street, Omaha, Nebraska, May 22, 1902, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth. A goodly number of relatives and friends were gathered to witness the ceremony which made these two happy young people one for life, and to wish them prosperity and happiness. The Moran sisters furnished us some excellent music, and refreshments were good and ample and a very enjoyable time was had.

STEPHENS—KNOWLTON.—At the home of the bride's parents in Cleveland, Iowa, Mr. Arthur Stephens and Sr. Myrtle Knowlton, both of Albia, Iowa, were united in holy matrimony, Monday evening, May 19, 1902, Elder Evan B. Morgan officiating. Sr. Stephens is the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Benjamin Turner. We wish them abundant success in life's voyage.

Died.

WILEY.—George A. Wiley died at the home of his mother, Sr. A. B. Wiley, near Oketo, Kansas, March 11, 1902, at two a. m., aged 23 years, 5 months, 5 days. He was born October 5, 1878, in Mercer County, Illinois. When he was six years of age he came to Kansas with his parents and has lived in Marshall County until his death. To mourn his departure he leaves an aged mother, five sisters and brothers, and a host of friends, his father having gone to the spirit land five years before.

Dearest brother, he has left us;
Left us, yes, for evermore.
He has gone to join the angels,
On that bright, celestial shore.

Must we part with you, dear brother?
For oh, our grief is deep and sore,
But we hope to meet in heaven,
There to meet and part no more.

Though his pain has been severe,
And his trials hard to bear,
Yet the Lord of love and mercy
He has ended all his care.

Soon again we hope to meet him,
Soon again his face to see,
In our Savior's heavenly mansion
Where no sorrow e'er shall be.

Hush, tread lightly! brother's sleeping.
Yes, in death so cold, so still,
And no more we'll hear his footsteps,
And no more his place he'll fill.

He has gone to meet his Savior,
In that home beyond the skies,
And when we are called to follow,
There we'll meet in paradise.

LUNDGREN.—Sr. Mae Lundgren was born at Lincoln, Nebraska, November 12, 1871, and died at her home, Denison, Iowa, May 17, 1902. She was baptized into Christ at Deloit, Iowa, June 6, 1899, by Elder C. E. Butterworth, and she has been a firm believer in Christ and his gospel ever since. Funeral services were conducted at the home on the 19th inst. by Elder C. E. Butterworth.

PALMER.—On April 2, 1902, Bro. Charles H. Palmer, of Fall River, Massachusetts, of heart-failure. The brother had been failing for some time but seemed comparatively well a short time before his death. He was 72 years, 8 months, 22 days old. Funeral services conducted by Elder John Gilbert at the Saints' Chapel, Claflin Street. A widow and sister survive him.

JACKSON.—On May 2, 1902, Bro. John Jackson, of Fall River, Massachusetts, died of pneumonia. He was sick but a very short time. At the time of his death he was 42 years, 7 months old. He leaves a widow and five small children. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John Gilbert, at his home. The services at the grave were conducted by the Odd-fellows Society, of which he was a member.

SWAIRENGIN.—Sr. Isabella, wife of Bro. Noah H. Swairengin, died at Johns Mills, Missouri, of consumption, April 30, 1902, in the prime of life and young womanhood, leaving a husband and one child to mourn her departure. She was born November 13, 1877. One child preceded her about one year. She was a noble Saint, a loving wife, and kind mother, ever cheerful and wore a saintly smile for all. Funeral services at the Swairengin Graveyard on May 1, by Elder J. C. Chrestensen.

KYTE.—At St. Louis, Missouri, April 27, 1902, aged 81 years, 8 days, Bro. William Theodore Kyte. Born in Mocas, England; united with the church about 1841, emigrating to Nauvoo, Illinois, shortly afterward. Later he settled in St. Louis, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church July 1, 1868, by Elder Mark H. Forscutt; ordained an elder, June 13, 1869. He aided materially in building up the work in St. Louis. One son, one daughter, six grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren mourn, his wife having deceased fourteen years ago. Funeral services conducted by Elder M. H. Bond, assisted by Elder George Robley.

DOSS.—At East Garden Grove, California, May 18, 1902, Frances Doss, aged 60 years, 2 months, 6 days. Baptized by Heman C. Smith, May 19, 1889. She leaves a kind husband to mourn. Funeral service by Elder J. C. Foss.

HARNER.—Bro. Jay C. Harner was born in Steuben County, Indiana, November 15, 1870, and died at his home at Fairview, Lake Quinabaugh, Nebraska, May 22, 1902. He was baptized by W. F. Owens, and was a member of the Decatur Branch. He was the son of Grandma Sylvia Hine. Mother, brothers, wife, one son, and one daughter mourn. The wife feels her bereavement very keenly and needs your prayers. Funeral services were conducted at the M. E. chapel, Decatur, May 23, by C. E. Butterworth, assisted by J. E. Butts and Oscar Case.

EAST.—At Delavan, Wisconsin, March 27, 1902, Sr. Mary Jane East, wife of Bro. Henry East, and daughter of Bro. and Sr. A.

J. Hare. She was born December 8, 1868, at East Delavan, Wisconsin. Baptized September 20, 1885, by J. S. Patterson. Funeral took place at the Latter Day Saints' church at East Delavan; sermon by Elder W. A. McDowell, assisted by Elder Henry Southwick, to a very large congregation of Saints and neighbors. Sr. East died strong in the faith.

Mr. Francis W. Halsey, the editor of the New York Times Saturday Review of Books, contributes to the Review of Reviews for June a suggestive article entitled "Some Books to Read this Summer."

Alone among the June magazines the Review of Reviews gives a graphic and comprehensive account of the Martinique catastrophe, illustrated from the most recent photographs taken on the ill-fated island. Mont Pelée's eruptions are described from the scientist's point of view by Dr. W. J. McGee, of the Bureau of Ethnology at Washington. The Review has again distanced all its contemporaries, as it did during the Spanish War, in the journalistic treatment of historic events.

The World's Work for June contains three articles of unusually timely importance. One of them by G. W. Ogden explains in picturesque detail "Why the Price of Beef is high." Arthur Goodrich, with the aid of thirty remarkable pictures, forecasts the future of American shipping, and Henry Harrison Lewis, who has lately returned from Cuba, writes an almost sensational story about conditions in the newly-freed island. A considerable portion of the magazine is taken up with crisp, important articles on educational subjects. Among these are a discussion of the Rhodes Scholarships for Americans by Prof. H. Morse Stephens, of Cornell, who is also a graduate of Oxford; a striking article by Franklin Matthews describing the methods New York State is already applying to educate its citizens; the vivid story of a public school teacher's day's work with all of its humor and petty difficulties described; a concise discussion of a model school by Dean Russel, of the New York Teachers' College, and an illustrated story of plans already carried out for the beautifying of schools by Bertha D. Knobe. Besides these are short articles giving the personal experience of a typical city school superintendent and those of a teacher in the Philippines. London as it is when King Edward is crowned is described by Chalmers Roberts. The striking personal story of the greatest peach grower in the country is told by Mr. Hale himself and handsomely illustrated. The financial editorial for the month is an interesting discussion of the consolidation of banks, and it is ably supplemented by a view of the workings of the famous old Bowery Savings Bank in New York and an intimate estimate of Frank W. Vanderlip, the vice-president of the National City Bank. The departments, always full of interest, are made especially striking by the pictures of people who are helping in the work of Southern education—Governors Montague and Aycock, and Dr. Dabney, Dr. Fussell, Dr. McIver, and Dr. Alderman, four directors of the Southern Educational Board.

Country Life in America for June is an enlarged and superb number dealing with timely pursuits and things of summer that thrill the lover of the out-door world. Among the features beautifully illustrated are canoeing, coaching, and fishing, together with practical home-making and gardening. "Monticello, Country-Seat of Thomas Jefferson," shows the grandeur and broad-mindedness of the early President's living, and "Old Williamsburg in Virginia" tells of buried history in a rural town; while foremost as a suggestive article is "Duck-Raising for Profit," an exposition of unique methods at the Clovernook Duck-Ranch with photographs that recently won a fourth prize. Then, also, "The Harness Horse and Country Turn-Outs" shows how the various sorts of animals and equipage are to be selected and used to the best advantage; and "How to Fish for Black Bass" deals concretely with tackle, methods, and the good waters that are most accessible. A wealth of small technical detail about growing, rose-gardens, planting about the country home, and arrangement of the grounds have a timely interest to the home-maker. A calendar of country occupations, sports, and nature study covers a wide range from yachting and automobiling to matters that interest the progressive farmer. "Floating Down Stream in a Canoe" is a delightful narrative with information about canoes and camping. Unusually sane and comprehensive articles are about birds, flowers, and wild-life of June which cover the ample pages in beautiful profusion. "Butterflies and Moths" is illustrated by regal night-flyers and elaborate insects as photographed by rare chance on overhanging flowers; and other articles tell where to find beautiful orchids, bird's nests, and the various things of woods and swamps. Altogether, the number contains more and is the largest yet of this newest of the great magazines, which has had a remarkable and quick success.

A Change in the Forum.

The Forum Publishing Company has made an announcement concerning the future of the Forum which is of considerable importance in the magazine field. This excellent monthly will, beginning with the July number, be issued quarterly. The publishers make the following announcement:

The Forum Publishing Company begs to announce that, beginning with the July number, the Forum will be published quarterly, instead of monthly, as heretofore. The general character of the magazine will be the same, and its high standard will be maintained, but its purposes will be more specifically those of a review and outlook. It is believed that by publishing quarterly a review of the world's events in every field, as well as to some extent an outlook based on the conditions presented, the essential features can be fully covered.

In order that the material may present the proper prospective, the magazine will be conducted in departments each of which will be in charge of one who is eminently qualified by his training and connections to take charge of it. In addition to the general reviews, each issue will contain a number of special articles on subjects of paramount interest.

A quarterly review of this nature will have several advantages over the monthly magazine. In the first place, the field being covered but once in three months, the busy man will be enabled to keep in touch with all the important questions of the day by reading the magazine at his leisure. Secondly, it will give those interested in a special field an opportunity to find the essence of what they wish in a comparatively limited space. And, thirdly, the information will be presented in such a form that the magazine will appeal not only to mature minds, but to every member of the family.

As at present outlined, the following departments will be represented:

1. American Politics: Important Congressional legislation, insular affairs, our foreign relations, State and municipal legislation of special interest, discussion of political platforms during election periods, etc.
2. Foreign Affairs: Important measures passed by foreign governments, complications between foreign countries, the world's wars, social movements, etc.
3. Finance and Economics: Financial and economic legislation in different countries, the world's commerce, railroad development, etc.
4. Science, invention, and engineering.
5. Literature: A discussion of books that have attracted wide attention and of other important literary productions.
6. Music and the Drama.
7. Art: An account of interesting events in the domain of painting, sculpture, architecture, archæology, etc.
8. Educational events: This section will discuss important pedagogical works, the most essential features of educational meetings, new educational institutions, special educational movements, etc.
9. Educational Research: It will be the purpose of this department to publish the results of educational investigations only, as distinguished from pedagogical discussions of a general nature—work on the plan indicated by the articles on spelling which appeared in the Forum for April and June, 1897, and which represents an absolutely novel feature in the field of educational literature. The section will contain the results of the investigations of the editor, who is now continuing the researches some time ago interrupted, and will also be open to the publication of data collected by other investigators who are laboring on similar lines.

Book Reviews.

"A Revolution in the Science of Cosmology," by George Campbell. Published by Crane & Company, Topeka, Kansas, 1902. As the title indicates, the book is a discussion of cosmology from a new standpoint. The author has reached his conclusions after many years spent in investigation. The nature of the book is apparent on an examination of the author's introduction and his summary of what the book proves. In the introduction he says:

"The old scientific theory, that the primitive earth was fused as a result of intense heat, is disproved by evidence in nature under natural law, and the fact is established, that the earth was never in a state of fusion, but is at present gradually undergoing the process of fusion, and in the language of the Scripture, 'The elements of the earth shall melt with fervent heat.' The sun has undergone this process, and is now a luminous body, but was at one time opaque, like the earth and other globes of the system. True science attests the fact that the primary earth was covered with water; that the polar continents were the first lands to appear above the surface of the water, and at that time were semi-tropical countries.

"The conditions within the polar circles of the earth sustain this statement of fact, and the Scriptures also attest the truth of the proposition, and the only successful opposition has come from a misapplication of scientific knowledge, a fair sample of which is contained in an incident of the life of the late Bishop Simpson.

"Bishop Simpson upon one occasion was told by a scientist that the Bible narration of the creation was false, and was opposed to the natural law that governed the cooling process of the world. He was informed by the scientist that the primary earth was of igneous origin; that it was a ball of liquid, seething fire; that by radiation of heat from the surface of the fused globe a crust was formed, which crust has become thicker and firmer as the cooling process continued; and that the so-called inspired writers were ignorant of this fact, and boldly proclaimed that the elements of the earth 'shall melt,' when the facts were, the elements had already been melted millions of years before.

"The Bishop was further informed that, as a scientific proposition, it required about 6,000 degrees of heat to fuse the earthly materials, and that it was a physical impossibility for the primitive earth to possess this high temperature necessary to fusion, and at the same time to be covered with water, as recorded by Moses in the first day of creation; and that the Bishop could not sustain the Bible narration of creation by evidence in nature, the natural basis on which must rest the true theory of the creation of the world.

"The Bishop informed the scientist that he had perfect confidence in the truth of the Bible narration of the creation, and that he believed God in his providence would raise up scientists who would prove the correctness of the scriptural account of the creation of the world, from the evidence in nature, under natural law, as cause and effect, and thus sustain the Bible in the account of the creation by outside proofs.

"In the light of recent scientific developments, the words of the late Bishop Simpson seem almost prophetic. The revolution he foresaw in science is come; error is dissipated, and the truth of the Bible narration established as a scientific proposition, in the light of natural law, as evidenced in nature."

He summarizes the proofs presented in his book, as follows:

"First. That atoms of space were, and are, the forms of original matter, from which were developed the material creation, under a system of natural laws.

"Second. The earth was not developed from a condition of intense heat; neither was the matter of the primitive earth fused, but is now gradually undergoing the fusion process as a result of natural law.

"Third. The matter of the primary earth was cold and frigid, possessing a temperature minus more than 460 degrees; and this intense cold, coupled with electricity, condensed the matter of interstellar space, and caused combinations of atoms to form, and eventually worlds.

"Fourth. When the matter of the earth was sufficiently condensed, under natural laws, to form a globe, the water, being lighter than the solid matter, rose to the surface; and the earth at that time was covered with water, except a small continent at either pole,—which continents were formed by the parting of the waters, as the result of the revolution of the earth upon its axis.

"Fifth. The polar continents being the first land to appear above the surface of the water, it follows that these continents are the cradle of primary animal and plant life upon the earth, as the other continents were not developed until a later period and under another system of natural laws.

"Sixth. The law that developed what is now the Eastern and Western continents changed the temperature of the polar continents from a semi-tropical to one of great fridity, in which all forms of plant and animal life perished,—went out amid the roar of a tempest, in the darkness of the night, in the terror of cosmic convulsions incident to planetary growth and world development, and the remains of these semi-tropical animals now constitute many of the island groups of the Arctic seas; and even on the northern coast of Siberia polar elephants were cast ashore in such numbers that their tusks are now an article of merchandise, and are gathered and sold in great quantities by the natives as old ivory."

The author then examines the theories of world formation generally extant, and discusses them from his standpoint, and then gives what he terms the "True Theory of the Creation." At the beginning of his presentation of the "new theory" he says:

"In the investigation of natural science, as evidenced in the works of nature, the first fact that seems to impress the mind is that 'everything that comes into being proceeds from another already existing;' and this fact seems to have impressed the mind of the great Solomon to an extent that caused him to declare, as attested by Scripture, that 'there is no new thing under the sun.' If Solomon was correct in his assertion, if everything that comes into being proceeds from another already existing, then we are forced to the conclusion, as a scientific proposition, that there must have been two coexisting principles in nature, antedating all forms of creation.

"We notice in our own being, as well as in all forms of organized matter, the existence of these two principles, material (the body), immaterial or spiritual (the life). The union of these principles produces the being; a separation is followed by dissolution and death, and a reversion to primary principles, and perhaps followed by a reorganization into other forms of existence. This law seems universal in its application to all forms of the material creation. The observance of this law leads us to the conclusion that life and matter, in some form, always existed in nature; that they were not created and can not be destroyed; that their existence antedates all creation, and may be termed the positive and negative elements in the universe of matter. The positive element of the creation, the vitalizing principle in matter, is acknowledged in the existence of a God, a Supreme Intelligence, conceded to be eternal in existence, and omnipresent in form; a Being that was not created, and can not be destroyed; a Being that has existed, and shall exist, throughout all eternity as the God of nature.

"The positive element in creation being thus recognized, it only remains for us to prove the coexistence of matter, and we shall then have established the coexistence of the two principles in nature, life and matter, a positive and a negative element in cosmos, that were not created and can not be destroyed, and are the sole promoters of all planetary growth and world development.

"In order that we may investigate, and establish, if possible, the coexistence of matter with the God of the universe, it will be necessary for us briefly to direct our attention to the realms of space, and ascertain, if we can, something of its extent, its properties and function in the evolution of planetary bodies, the development of solar systems and the universe of worlds in general.

"If we pass out into the darkness of a clear light, our attention is immediately arrested by the thousands of brilliant stars, apparently set as sparkling gems in the dark vaults of the skies, as objects for our admiration and study. We select in our contemplation those stars that cast a steady light, and we say these are planets, members of this solar system; that they have no light of their own, but, like the earth and the moon, reflect the light of the sun, which is the great central body; and that each in turn performs a circuit around the sun, not only receiving its light but its solar heat from this great center of force, energy, and power.

"We then look beyond the planets, and see twinkling stars, and we say these are suns, like unto our sun: they are luminous bodies, each with a system of worlds revolving around it, and each world receiving light, heat, and electrical energy from its great central body, the sun of the system of worlds to which it belongs. We then wonder how far it is to the nearest one of these fixed stars, or suns, of which we can see about six thousand in number, with the unassisted eye. Accuracy, in our conception, would require a measurement of the distance; but in endeavoring to compute the distance even to the nearest fixed star in miles the number becomes unintelligible and confusing to the mind, and we must of necessity adopt a new unit of measure, which is known in astronomy as the "light year." Light travels at the rate of about 186,000 miles in a second of time, and would go nearly eight times around the earth while we count one. We now ascertain the distance that a ray of light will travel in one year, at this immense velocity, and compute it at 5,866,896,000,000 miles. We call this distance a "light year," and adopt it as the unit of measure in all interstellar calculations. Applying this standard to the nearest fixed star, we find it to be about three and one half light years distance from the earth.

"If we now apply this unit of measure to the most remote fixed star, visible to the unassisted eye, we find the distance to be one hundred twenty-five light years. In other words, it would take a ray of light, traveling at the inconceivable velocity above stated, one hundred twenty-five years to span the gulf intervening between the earth and the farthest fixed star visible to the naked eye of a person of ordinary strong vision. Yet, we have no conception of the magnitude of space or the distances between interstellar bodies, and our minds become confused as we attempt to comprehend infinity, even in a minor way. In our confusion, we grasp the telescope, and through it explore the regions of space to greater depths. Worlds and systems of worlds without number multiply on our vision, until they are as the sands of the sea.

"Let us now attempt to measure the distance to the far-off sentinel in space, just visible in the field of the telescope; but in this, the annual parallax disappears, the lines intersect, and the distance can not be measured with any degree of accuracy; yet we know the distance can not be less than a half-million light years. The distance is so great that if this remote star should at the present moment be stricken from the great systems of worlds that surround us in space, generations would come and go upon the earth, years would form into centuries, centuries into thousands, and thousands into hundreds of thousands, and in the grand procession of ages more than five hundred thousand years would elapse before the inhabitants of the earth would know that a sun, with its great system of worlds, had been blotted out of existence, and was no longer a part of the universe of creation. It would require that period of time for the last ray of light thrown from the blotted-out sun body to reach the earth, notwithstanding the inconceivable velocity with which light travels.

"And yet we have no conception of the immensity of space. As we increase the power of the telescope, worlds multiply on our view; and gradually the fact is forced upon the mind that space is an unlimited body, and that suns and systems of worlds in all stages of development, and in all stages of decay, and without limit, must pervade this unlimited body of space."

Then follows his theory, which the reader follows with considerable interest, closing the book with the conviction that Mr. Campbell has made an earnest and strong effort, whether his theory be accepted or not.

"Our Growing Dependence upon the Tropics" is demonstrated in the June Forum by Mr. O. P. Austin, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, who shows that the chief growth of our imports in recent years has been in tropical and subtropical products. He suggests that within a short time a considerable proportion of this trade may be carried on with our own tropical possessions.

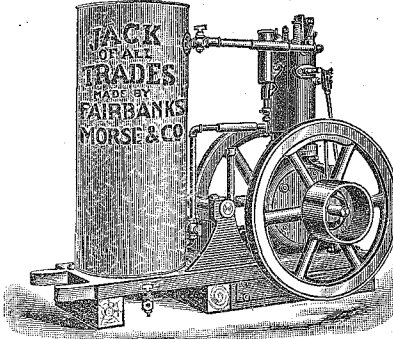

The apparent conflict between "The Old Education and the New" is discussed, in the June Forum, by Mr. Frederic Burk, who maintains that there is no necessary inconsistency between the methods of the old schoolmaster and those of the new educationalist, but that the principles upon which they are based—effort and interest—are in fact complementary.

Doctor Henry Otis Dwight's article, "Among the Constantinople Bookshops," contributed to the June Forum, appeals to students of literature as well as to bibliophiles, for it includes a notable account of present literary tendencies in Turkey—tendencies so remarkable as to indicate the beginning of a real literary revival.

THE RIGHT TO LEAVE THE CHURCH.

The question of whether a party is justified in leaving the church; that is, to withdraw from fellowship with those who compose the church, is one of the recurring questions of the time. The church does not question the right of individuals to change their opinion upon religion in principle and in form when the change is being made from other bodies than their own to one which they hold to be the church of Christ. The right of conscience is supposedly held sacred by all, and should be so held by Latter Day Saints more tenaciously than any other body, for the simple reason that one of the principles upon which the church is founded is that every man is responsible to God for his thoughts, beliefs, and actions, and to no one else in any other sense than in a unity of human association.

Persecution of any sort engaged in against believers on account of their faith is not only unmanly, but is decidedly unchristianlike, and yet it has formed one of the frequently-used weapons against those who become apostate to the beliefs which they have hitherto cherished with others. If the right to change one's belief is a good thing when it is exemplified by the act of persons leaving the so-called sectarian denominations and uniting with the church, as we understand the appellation of church to apply, then why is it not a principle not to be ignored when it is manifested in the act of those who may belong to any branch of the so-called Latter Day Saint Churches? For instance, suppose that a person who has for years belonged to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints sees reason as he believes to unite with some other religious denomination; his opinions and views in reference to the church, its declaration of faith, its organization and practices have undergone a decided change, no matter how this change may have arisen, whether by unfortunate environments, or because of a continued brooding over supposed misunderstanding or the alleged misconduct of those who belonged to the church with whom they have come in contact; why should they not be permitted to go their way, change their opinion and their church relationship if they see proper so to do?

While we fully believe that the body to which we belong is accepted of God as the representative body, spiritually recognized and owned as the church of Christ, and also believe that association with it, if such association has been entered into freely and without mental reservation upon the part of those who have been admitted into association and fellowship, practically constitute such persons as members of the body of Christ to be known here and hereafter as the church; we nevertheless believe that the statement made in the declaration on government promulgated by the church in 1835, and made a part of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is a correct and true principle, that the church has no right to put any person into jeopardy of life or property, but can only punish those who may be transgressors against church rules or discipline by withdrawing from their fellowship. We further believe in the correctness of the principle that men are to give an account to God for their thoughts, their beliefs, and their actions, and that because of this he who chooses to change his church relationship must be prepared to take the consequences if he makes such change upon wrong conclusions, having reasoned from incorrect premises.

The principles of the faith being declarations of the gospel of Jesus Christ as the same has been given us in the Scriptures, these principles are not subject to change to suit either human conceptions or the whims of those who become dissatisfied with their church relationship. The wrong actions of those who may be prominent in any organization do not vitiate the principles of the faith nor make void the promises of God to individuals. Leaders may even be moved by improper conceptions of duty, and acting upon such misconceptions may do that which makes them subjects of just censure, but this can not destroy the principles of the faith; and unless these so-called leaders shall make void the law of life, or insist upon that which degrades the individual and brings him under condemnation for wrong-doing if he yields to such domination, can the liberties of the individual justly be brought into question and his right of fellowship denied.

To the contrary to this, no disciple is justified in leaving the association with the church for incompetent reasons; and should any one venture to do so he will not only be subject to censure by those who remain steadfast to the faith, but he will also be subject to that diviner censure which will be visited upon him by Christ at the judgment day.

Elders John R. Haldeman and George Frisbey of the Church of Christ, commonly called "Hedrickites," lately visited Lamoni, and in a series of five sermons presented so much of their views on the latter-day work, the church in its organization, and what they deemed to be essential to its further and successful prosecution, as the time allowed them. It was understood at the time, we believe, both by these elders and the presiding officers of the Lamoni Branch that the positions that might be assumed by them as well as the arguments advanced by them to sustain those views, would be reviewed by some one on behalf of the Reorganization. Elders Haldeman and Frisbey closed their services on Wednesday night. Thursday and Friday evenings following, Elder Heman C. Smith, at the request of the branch authorities, entered in upon the review. The elders of the Church of Christ were invited to remain and hear this review. They stayed and heard what was said on Thursday evening, but did not stay and hear the Friday night effort. It was understood upon the part of Elder Smith that these men were to stay and hear what was to be presented in review of their position.

We do not call in question the honesty of these elders of the Church of Christ, nor do we expect to say much in regard to the positions assumed by them. However, the subject of "Baptism for the dead," "The One mighty and strong," and the "Building of the Temple in Zion," and "Stake building," were some of the topics discussed by Elder Haldeman.

The weather was somewhat stormy, and the attendance not so large as it would have been otherwise, and yet it was quite fair. The Saints at Lamoni exhibited a disposition to hear what might be presented by others possibly antagonistic of their own faith. Just why topics should be selected like "Baptism for the dead," and the "One mighty and strong," we do not know, and only conjecture. It is well understood that the Reorganized Church has made no declaration representative of the doctrine of baptism for the dead, holding as they have done that it was a permissive doctrine, and to be administered under certain restrictions imposed by revelation.

Some little time ago we wrote in reference to this subject, that we did not understand a belief in the doctrine of baptism for the dead to be a prerequisite to salvation. It would seem that some have misunderstood this statement, and we now wish to be clearly understood as stating that we believe that a person obedient to the gospel as taught by the ministers of Christ, obedient to the dictates of the gospel requirements, is a candidate for salvation though he may not believe in the doctrine of baptism for the dead, belief in baptism for the dead not being required in his confession of faith at the time of his receiving the ordinance of baptism. In other words, a man may believe in the gospel, become obedient thereto, receive administration of baptism at the hands of a properly qualified minister for Christ, and not be required to confess a belief or disbelief in the doctrine of baptism for the dead. It can not affect a man's salvation whether he believe or disbelieve in that particular doctrine, while being otherwise a believer and obedient to the gospel requirements. A belief in the doctrine when it is taught and practiced would be necessary to qualify any person to go forward in the performance of the rite in the behalf of others whose spiritual life and salvation might be affected by his engaging in the rite in their behalf. It would then be essential unto the salvation of the third party and not to the one being administered unto immediately in the flesh. It is in this sense that we made the statement we did, believing that the prospective salvation of one who accepts the gospel and desires to become obedient to it is not to be affected by his belief or rejection of the doctrine of baptism for the dead, it being a permissive doctrine to be practiced under restrictions imposed by revelation. No one can be charged with improper unbelief until such time as a permission to practice is accorded, then it may be that one might fall under condemnation if he did not believe.

As to "The One mighty and strong," the position taken and agreed to in the conference by the elders of the Reorganized Church and the elders of the Church of Christ at Independence, we thought had removed this question from its vexing position, especially as the Reorganized Church had not at any time taken a position upon it other than the one mentioned in that agreement.

Temple building has been one of the strong points advanced by the church in the valleys of Utah in the position claimed by them of being the church. It is generally understood that they profess to believe that a temple will be built by them at Independence, Missouri, in due time. It is generally believed that the Reorganized Church also expects that in due time a temple will be built in the land of Zion unto which it may be the one referred to as He who is to "suddenly come" will come.

In the contention about the possession of the "temple lot" at Independence, Missouri, there was an open and fair opportunity for the brethren of the Church of Christ (Hedrickites) to make good their claim to the right of succession of the church to which the revelation to build the temple was given. It is true that this contention was before the courts of the land; but as neither the church in Utah, the Reorganized Church, nor the Church of Christ (Hedrickites), nor yet the Church of Christ (Whitmerites) could build said temple, except they did so under the jurisdiction and subject to the laws of restriction in regard to ways and means imposed by the legislature of the State of Missouri, in reference to the land upon which the temple should be built, the material for erection, the labor employed in its building; there was no other court before which the Reorganized Church could advance its claim but the courts to which they applied. It must be borne in mind by all parties to this contention that in that effort before the courts of the land, every material point was decided in favor of the Reorganized Church; and only upon an appeal being taken to the Court of Appeals was there an apparent defeat and that was on a technicality, which in its moral aspect and bearing was to this effect, viz.: that the Reorganized Church begun its claim in the court for possession too late, having slept upon its rights; which fairly interpreted signifies that had they begun in time their title to possession would have been good. The moral triumph, the spiritual triumph in the contest was in favor of the Reorganized Church. Now we believe that the mere building of a temple in Independence, Missouri, or elsewhere, is not the most important immediate movement to be taken, either by the Church of Christ, or the Reorganized Church. The building of the temple is one of the means to an end, nor can that means be used for the accomplishment of the end sought until there has been a preliminary work which will make the building when erected a successful means for the accomplishment of the end designed.

In the revelation given August, 1833, it is said of Zion, "Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, THE PURE IN HEART." In the paragraph in which this quotation is found it is said of Zion that if she will do certain things, "She shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very grand, and very terrible. Zion is the city of our God; surely Zion can not fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he has sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower: therefore verily thus saith the Lord, let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, the pure in heart." In a revelation given June 22, 1834, after the Saints had been scattered and driven from Jackson County, the place where the temple was supposed to have been commanded to be built, the Lord commanded the scattered people who dwelt in the regions round about to be faithful and prayerful. They were not to talk judgment, nor boast of faith or mighty works, but were to carefully gather together and importune at the feet of the proper authorities for the securing of judgment and justice and redress of wrongs, in a similar spirit as is shown in the revelation which we have quoted, given August, 1833. The revelation continues:

But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws.

The revelation of August, 1833, and this one of June 22, 1834, are of the same import, the one promising that Zion shall prosper, and become very glorious and very great and very terrible, and the other one enjoining it upon the church or the people, that are to be called Zion, "the pure in heart," to so labor in accomplishing their work that the army would become very great. We can not see why this preliminary work evidently shadowed forth in these revelations touching Zion and its inhabitants did not point to a work just such as the Reorganized Church is doing, and which does not depend to any very great extent upon first the building of a temple. It is clear that any people weak in resources or in numbers can not successfully accomplish so great a work as is contemplated, and we do not believe that the Reorganized Church is losing its opportunities, or failing in its obligations, in pushing the propagation of the gospel as it was delivered to Joseph Smith and his compeers in the direction opened to them that the army referred to might become very great and terrible, to place it in a condition and attitude to respond to such a commandment when it comes, providing they shall be found worthy to assist in building the temple referred to.

If any person is fully persuaded that the position assumed by the Reorganized Church is wrong, and its procedure inadequate to the accomplishment of the great design presented in the theory of this latter-day work, and thinks he finds a better opportunity elsewhere and with other people, he ought to be at liberty to make whatever change he sees proper, he being prepared to take the consequences of his mistake should he make any, while he anticipates reaping the glory of his movement providing it should prove to be a correct one.

Personally, the editor of the HERALD sees nothing attractive in what was presented for the consideration of the people at Lamoni by Elders Haldeman and Frisbey. It seems to us that the building of the temple under the positions assumed by these representatives of the Church of Christ (Hedrickites), if they did represent that body, would be a grievous mistake and subject the builders to an indefinable and irreparable loss. It has been our belief that any movement based upon the hypothesis that Joseph Smith, the Palmyra Seer, and the one to whom the angel's message was delivered, and whose life paid the penalty of his confidence in that message and the gospel that it brought and the saving grace of the blood of Jesus Christ, was a false prophet, became recreant to his trust, and so far apostatized from the truth as to lose his standing with God, must necessarily fail and come to naught. Our observation during the forty years of our ministry and our experiences among those who have taken this position confirms this belief, and we are now fully persuaded that to make the claim that Joseph Smith became a fallen prophet, thereby vitiating the movement which begun with him and others in 1829 and 1830, will never be successful in accomplishing any great work in church building under the title or claim to be any part or parcel of the "marvelous work and a wonder." We have seen enough to justify us in this belief.

That Joseph Smith may have made mistakes may be conceded; that the church under his administration may have made mistakes, may be conceded; but that these mistakes had the effect to make void his calling as the great mover of the latter-day work, or to make ineffective the organization of the church as a propagandising power in the world of religious inquiry, can not be conceded; and it seems to us that whoever assumes to be a professor of the faith and to be in accord with the church organized April 6, 1830, who makes the claim that Joseph Smith did thus fail, and standing upon that claim, asks the approval of inquirers of their faith to the proposition that Joseph Smith did so fail, must necessarily destroy the value and effect of the claim that they may make that Joseph Smith was a prophet and a responsible instrument in the hand of God of establishing the church of God in the beginning of this latter-day work. It impeaches the integrity of their own witness sent of God. It would be much the same for a so-called association of Christians to claim the validity of the message of Jesus Christ as the Son of God up to a certain period of his life, and from thence to claim that he was a pretender, a false prophet, a deceiver, and an anti-Christ.

AN ADVERTISER AND THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Bro. W. E. La Rue sends us a copy of an advertisement by J. C. Rhodes & Son, No. 239 Market Street, Philadelphia, a leather and rubber belting, hose, and packing firm, which was laid on the desk of Brother Zimmermann, Tapestry Works, Philadelphia, which is unique in its character. We call attention to it and ask lovers of the Book of Mormon where the quotation is found in it. The advertisement reads thus: "The Book of Mormon says, 'He who bloweth not his own horn, for him shall not the horn be blown,' but when we say that our goods give uncommon value it is not a big blow."

This sounds more like an emanation from the pen of Reverend Clark Braden than any writer we know of, but it shows the peculiar, irresponsible manner in which the ordinary mortal treats the Book of Mormon and the rights of those who believe in it. If there were nothing else to mark this latter-day work as a "marvelous work and a wonder," this fact alone would prove it; but outside of the ranks of those who believe in the book all treat it as a kind of myth or "bugaboo." Were the Christian in sentiment to treat others who profess to be believers in a similar way, it would for ever keep the fires of persecution alive. There may be differences of opinion between earnest and honest-minded men which can not be settled by human tribunals, the final determination of which must await the adjudication of the great and final court of claims and human economy over which the final judge shall preside.

All the Saints have to do is to possess their souls in patience, protest against human injustice of all kinds, and strive to avoid acts of injustice towards others, and wait until the great arbitrament is a thing accomplished; then shall be their triumph.

CLAIMS TO BE GOD'S TRUE PROPHET.

The following appeared in the News, of Des Moines, Iowa, May 30:

Cedar Falls, May 30.—George W. Salisbury, a farmer of Reinbeck, aged about fifty years, intelligent and highly respected, has brought himself into prominence here by declaring that he is the inspired prophet of God and foretells of the second coming of Christ. He says he has been instructed of God concerning all things of heaven and earth and writes to Reverend John Earl of Waterloo in particular quoting Scripture to back up his arguments. Concerning himself he says: "In 1894 Christ chose me to be his servant to give his words to all who believe in him. He made known to me that the time had come to prepare for the second coming. About a month later he made known to me the fact that the "dark day" of May 17, 1780, and the falling of stars of November 13, 1833, were the fulfillment of the prophecy in Matthew 24: 29 and Revelation 6: 12, 13.

"In 1897 Christ made known to me that the majority of those composing the church would live to see his second coming. Putting these revelations with the prophesies mentioned in the Scriptures we can see that we have no time to waste if we expect to be ready for the bridegroom."

Mr. Salisbury is not insane, but is a man of widespread knowledge and is being followed closely by many whom he has influenced with his talks.

GRACELAND COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises of Graceland College began on Friday, May 31, and continued one week, closing with the exercises at the College Friday morning, June 6, when twenty-three young folks received certificates of graduation or diplomas from the various courses. On Saturday night, May 31, Professor J. F. Brown, of the University of Iowa, delivered a lecture on the subject, "Does an Education Pay?" Sunday morning, June 1, the baccalaureate address was by Fred M. Smith. Monday evening a recital by the elocution students was given at the college chapel, and Tuesday evening, June 3, at the same place the recital of the students of music was given. On Wednesday night a reception was tendered the graduating class by Professor Salisbury, and on Thursday evening occurred the graduating exercises of the Elocution Department. On Friday morning, as before stated, the final exercises were held in the chapel, at which the address to the class was by Bishop Kelley, and diplomas were presented by Daniel Anderson, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

Thus closes another year of Graceland's work, and we trust the work done will redound to the good of the cause in general, and to the good of the college in particular, and that the students who go out will by their work and conduct speak so well for the school that they will be the means of bringing more to the school next year. Indeed, we trust that many of those who received their certificates this year, will be found in the college next year carrying on their work in other branches.

Altogether, we think, the prospects for the coming year are good; and with the debt wiped out (as we trust it will be before another year commences), Graceland should rapidly swing into its place of greater usefulness, a place it should have been occupying before now. Graceland certainly has a peculiar and important work to perform in this latter-day work, which can be performed by no other school, and the sooner we place it where it is doing that work, the better it will be for the Saints and the work in general.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In sending the minutes of the Sunday-school convention of the South Sea Islands Sunday-schools, which appear in another column, Sr. Burton wrote from Papeete: "Our convention this year was as well attended or better than on some previous occasions, notwithstanding our conference gathering here at Papeete was not a large one, owing to there having been three conferences held in the mission during the year while President A. H. Smith was visiting the Islands. Yet there was a larger gathering than we anticipated, and in this, as in the conference, peace and good will was manifested by all. There was no sickness, no deaths, no trouble with members young or old. There was no feast, nor mahana oava; but matutus and singing filled up the evening hours after preaching. We regretted much that Bro. and Sr. Gilbert did not arrive from Amanu in time to attend the Religio or Sunday-school conventions, and that regret was more depressing because blended with the fear that they had not had an opportunity to come. But on Saturday morning, April 5, which was clear and pleasant, our eyes were greeted with the joy-inspiring sight of the faithful old "Teavaroa" sailing in with flying colors from masthead, and waving kerchiefs from the deck, being responded to from the front porch of the missionary house, with handkerchiefs, towels, hats, and caps. Then all was a flutter of excitement until they got comfortably located—after a series of hand-shaking—and a synopsis given of the events of their voyage; and last, but not least, the one thing needful when coming off of one of those Tahitian sea voyages, viz., something to eat. Sister Laura was in good health, good flesh, and good spirits, though she had quite a sick spell before leaving the upper islands."

Bro. C. Röell writes from Independence, Missouri, under date of May 30, to Bishop Kelley, remitting twenty-five dollars for Graceland College. As to credit, Bro. Röell says: "One dollar each for us, and the remaining twenty-three for those who can not spare a dollar." Good! Who's next with a contribution of this kind?

Under date of June 2, Bro. F. E. Cohrt writes from Underwood, Iowa: "Brn. F. A. Smith and Peter Anderson were with us at our recent conference, as was Bro. T. A. Hougas at the convention. We had a good session. The brethren gave us seasonable words by the Spirit's power. We push out with courage and ask an interest with the Israel of God at the throne of grace, that we be wise servants and harmless as doves!"

A letter received from Bro. John W. Rushton, dated at Brooklyn, New York, May 31, 1902, states that himself and Brn. Thorburn and Davis would leave at noon, on Steamship Columbia for Glasgow, Scotland. He says: "I have enjoyed my visit to America, and especially have I appreciated my association with the Saints. All along the line I have been greeted with real Christian charity and brotherly kindness, which has caused national distinctions to be entirely submerged if not obliterated. I am hopeful for a bright future for the cause in Britain. Many difficulties loom up like grim spectres, but not so forbidding and grisly but what they can be disposed of before the arm strengthened with gospel courage and a face beaming with hope and purity. My health is good, for which I am thankful."

In a letter to President Joseph Smith, written enroute from Australia to Honolulu, date of May 26, A. H. Smith wrote: "Will arrive at Honolulu to-morrow. All well. Good voyage so far. Very rough first four days, but came all safe to Aukland, New Zealand. More pleasant to Pago Pago. Have been meeting trade-winds since. Rough but rather pleasant. Will likely stay in Honolulu ten days."

Bro. S. D. Love, under date of June 3, writes that he is now at Fort Smith, Texas. He says: "I found some of the Utah people here, but they are going to 'change over,' as I showed them that they were deceived. I have been telling the gospel story on the street corners, and the people are somewhat interested. I had great opposition on the start, such as ordering me out of their houses; but I have come to stay awhile. Am now preaching at a Mr. Hammock's house. May God speed the right. Saints, pray for me that I may be blessed with the Spirit."

S. B. Kriebel writes from Union Furnace, Ohio, remitting for subscription he had taken. He says: "We are ever on the watch-tower for subscribers to the good old HERALD, as we know the value of reading its pages."

John O. Scott writes from Bisbee, Arizona, June 4: "There is no branch organized here yet, but we hope to have one organized in the near future. We have a Sunday-school, and do the best we can."

W. S. Pender writes from Payson, Utah, June 3: "I spoke five times here last week; three times in the Mormon tabernacle, and twice in the M. E. church. I find several relatives of our brother, Amos J. Moore here. I speak on 'The eternity of the marriage covenant,' in the M. E. church Monday evening."

In a letter to President Joseph Smith dated May 10, Somerville, New South Wales, Bro. C. A. Butterworth writes: "The Saints have been overjoyed through the visit of Bro. A. H. Smith, and the blessings bestowed have opened many of their eyes, and softened some hearts. Poor me! My fond anticipations were blasted, for I lay ill all the time he was here, and never even heard him preach. I have been laid up for three months and am still on the sick list."

*

My left lung is in a bad state, through a cold I contracted, and the result of whooping-cough which I had three years ago. I hope soon to be up and at work, for our laborers are few, and Bro. Kaler is leaving for the States with Bro. A. H. Smith, which lessens our force. The greatest surprise of my life came when your cablegram reached us, and I submitted, believing that God knoweth best. But still, the whole thing seems a sort of mystery why things should be so ordered. I can only do my best, and trust the Lord for the rest. I am not able to write much. Peace and love be with all."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Another scheme in the "moral" line has been brought out in Chicago. Evanston, a suburb of Chicago, noted for its morality, has placed on foot a scheme to have what they term a "moral billiard hall." Besides the necessary tables and fixtures for playing billiards, the room will be supplied with Bibles and religious tracts, and the hall will be opened each morning by prayer and religious ceremonies. The scheme is being fostered by the leading ministers of the place, who hope by this means to remove many evil influences from those who follow the game of billiards.

On the morning of June 3, President Barrows, of Oberlin College, died in his home at Oberlin, Ohio. His death had been expected for some time because of his severe sickness. Thus, another well-known and remarkable character passes away.

We have received from the Brooklyn Eagle a copy of "Anniversary Hymns 1902," published by the Eagle by permission of the Brooklyn Eastern District Sabbath-school Association and the Brooklyn Sunday-school Union, anniversaries respectively on June 5 and 6.

In another column we reproduce from the Chicago Tribune an article describing the printing office of the United States. Comparatively few persons realize the amount of matter printed by our government. Some of the most valuable literature extant is sent out by some of the departments of the government.

Sr. D. E. Harvey, of Letcher, South Dakota, writes that her family is the only family of Latter Day Saints at that place, but that when it is the Lord's will to send an elder there, they will do their best to entertain him.

Ram's Horn for May 31 had for its cover design a cartoon entitled, "Look out for the Wolves; Christ's Sheep are their Prey." In the background is illustrated a church building in front of which are grouped a number of people who are coming out of the building. In the foreground of the picture are arrayed a group of snarling, hungry wolves, intently watching the people near the church. Each wolf is named by the cartoonist. They are as follows: "Mormonism," "Infidelity," "Spiritism," "Dowieism," "Eddyism," and "Theosophy." The wolf "Mormonism" stands slightly away from, and in advance of, the rest of the hungry group. The name of the cartoonist is given as Frank Beard.

SERMON BY ELDER JOSEPH LUFF.

DELIVERED AT FUNERAL OBSEQUIES OF MORRIS T. SHORT, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, APRIL 9.

Reported by Mrs. H. B. Curtis.

Elder Morris Trimble Short, whose mortal remains lie in the casket before us, and to whose memory we are assembled to pay a final tribute of respect and love to-day, was the son of Charles W. and Elizabeth P. Short, and was born in Lawrence County, Indiana, on the 20th day of August, 1844. In 1847 he moved with his parents to Knox County, Indiana, where they remained until his twelfth year, when the family moved to Winterset, Iowa, and there remained until the spring of 1861. At this date they removed to Atchison, Kansas, and in the fall of the same year settled in the Delaware Reserve, near Oskaloosa, in Jefferson County. This was their place of residence when the war broke out, and in August, 1862, Morris, who was then about eighteen years of age, enlisted and served until the Rebellion ended, being mustered out in 1865.

In 1866, while attending the Seminary of Mechanicsburg, Illinois, he became by baptism a member of the Disciple Church. Later he became dissatisfied with that society and for a time remained a skeptic until in May, 1874, at Galesburg, Missouri, he embraced the faith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in which faith he stood steadfast, and in the interests of which he proved himself a valiant aggressor and defender for over a quarter of a century and ceased not his warfare until he answered the summons of God to rest and reward.

On the eighth day of June, 1873, he was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Massey, at Owensburg, Indiana, and settled in Joplin, Missouri. As the fruit of this union a son was born May 4, 1875, but death invaded the home soon after, and within three months both wife and child were removed and our brother was left alone. On August 15, 1875, he was ordained an elder under the hands of Elder James Caffall, and three years later, at a General Conference held at Plano, Illinois, he was ordained a special minister of the Quorum of Seventy under the hands of William H. Kelley and Zenas H. Gurley. On the 18th of August, 1878, he was united in marriage at Millersburg, Illinois, to Miss Viola Iris Vernon who with a son and two daughters born of this union survive him, and are with his aged mother and two brothers, the chief mourners to-day.

His death, which occurred about eight o'clock on the morning of April 18, 1902, terminated a sickness which had lasted for several months and a career of ministerial usefulness in the church which had covered a period of about twenty-seven years. Bro.

Short was an earnest, energetic worker, who regarded no sacrifice too great and no toil too wearying to engage in where the interests of the faith he had espoused could be served thereby. Naturally aggressive and impulsive, a man of intense feeling and quick perception, he occasionally did himself great injustice by hasty speech and premature verdict upon confronting issues. But these occasional outbursts of spontaneous feeling were more than atoned for by the generous and hearty acknowledgments and meek apologies which his mature reflection suggested and his lips so freely voiced. His abruptness was but the expression of the intensity of his eagerness and interest, backed by a zeal for right and intolerance of wrong. His candor was never venerated with conventionalism nor obscured by policy. Many saw his worst, but comparatively few ever saw his best and grandest characteristics on this account. Few hearts were more tender, and few natures more sensitive than his, and in none was affection more deeply imbedded. The best he had was never too good for his friends, and in his heart he reserved no space for enmity to man.

He loved his home, and to be long absent from it was a severe trial, but the words, "He that loveth father or mother, wife or children, houses and lands more than me, is not worthy of me," had offered a challenge to his profession of loyalty to Christ, and that challenge was met by him with over a quarter of a century of indisputable testimony, as satisfying, we trust, to God as it was trying in some of its details to himself and family. To preach was his delight, and the theme of the Restoration was his glory. He attested his affection for the church by laying his brain and heart competency upon the altar; nor did he ever flinch from any duty this invited.

Biographers may write and bards may sing of the gallant struggles made by the heroes of the past and the martyr fires that have burned along the course of history, and bosoms may heave with emotion as the graphic tracings are perused, but who, save God, doth know the story of stifled sobs, of melting eyes, of bursting hearts, of crushed ambition, and of crucified self that forms the warp and woof of the experience of that man and his family who willingly digs a grave for his personal ambition and the love of power and worldly honor that have enthused him, and, at the invitation of Jesus Christ, becomes a minister of this wondrous work of gospel restoration. Love has its meaning, and patriotism its signification no less in these, because no earthly page contains the record or proclaims the exhibition. Rather are these virtues intensified in glory as their lines of record in human character are paralleled with the faith that reposes in the divine promise and the patience that waits for its fulfillment. He who from the summit of celestial hills beholds the tears of wife and the needs of the babes around her, He whose ear alone catches the secret groaning that escapes his heart within the closets of the missionary far from home, can, does, and will reward such heroes and martyrs as these, and not least among these will rank, I believe, the brother whose departure we lament to-day. As a minister he was accounted able and forcible by all and brilliant by many. To sit under his voice sound when his brain was throbbing and his tongue was thrilled with the fire and fervor of gospel inspiration was a pleasure and an edification. He was as unique in his forms of expression as he was fluent in utterance, and the ideals of his mind, touched by the penciling of his distinct individuality, often gave his sentences and sermons a place of worthy prominence distinctly and peculiarly their own, conspicuous for excellence and beauty.

Trying, as I have been for years, to make all men whom my gospel relations tied me to a study, I have tried to measure this man, this fellow-laborer of mine; to do his motives, his nature, and his force justice I have tried to occupy his ground with his equipment of heredity, of education, and of environment and experience; I have tried to estimate the weight and judge the effects and probabilities of a hundred cases of contact with men and things from his standpoint of endowment and individuality, and I have tried to compare those probabilities with the facts of his recorded life and deportment, and the result has been that I have loved the man, loved the Saint, loved the minister, and admired the soldier, and Bro. Short has never failed of that affection and esteem in my mind and heart. As I saw him bearing the consciousness and facing the reality of coming dissolution, my affection and admiration were deepened by witnessing the courage and evident manliness with which he faced the inevitable, and the cheery welcome which he extended to approaching death. The faith of which he testified for years and which formed the frequent topic of his eloquent appeals to men when he was yet robust in health was the towering pillar upon which his soul rested, as the strong frame began to totter and the flesh continued to fail. The Arm upon which he invited the thousands of his auditors to lean was all the strength he craved when he saw that earth was receding from his vision. His farewell epistles to the Saints as published recently in our church periodicals were penned by his wife at his dictation. The words as he uttered them came between the spasmodic respirations that told him that death was feeling for his vitals. His own hand had lost its cunning and could no longer control the pen he had so often wielded in defense of the truth, but those articles speak volumes in evidence of the genuineness of the heart reliance of the man. They tell of the whereabouts of his thoughts, the vigor of his mind, and the trustfulness of his spirit in that crucial hour. Nor did these characteristics fail him at the last; the chill of the death stream to which his disease at last escorted him, brought no change within his heart nor on his tongue. He died as he had lived, "A soldier of the Cross, a follower of the Lamb." We may not measure the space that lies between him and us to-day as we stand and weep beside the casket that incloses his mortal remains; we may not, with these fleshly eyes, penetrate the mists that hang around us and hide him from our view; but through the avenues of holy testimony and promise we may peer by such faith as was his while here and learn that his removal has been but a transfer; his change has been a promotion; his death has been but a falling off of the fetters that cramped and chafed an eager and often restless spirit.

We shall commit his earthly remains to-day to the care and seclusion of the grave—earth to its quiet retreat of earth—in trust until God redeems his resurrection promise. But that narrow spot can not chain our attention nor monopolize our interest. Away, far away, our hope's assurance bears us to a realm where graves are forgotten and death is a misnomer; where life, love, and labor have perpetual meaning and unwearying exercise; amid the ecstasy of virtuous associations, of teeming intelligence and the consciousness of the God-presence and impress and favor. Yes! amid these and a thousand other delights which "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of," where the presence of seers and apostles, of patriarchs and prophets, of martyrs and of Christ have graced and sanctified the estate—the paradise of God.

To such a realm as this, faith leads us away from the grave that receives his sacred dust, and there our eyes are divorced from tears and our minds from fear as our hearts speak a last farewell to sorrow. To that bright realm our brother directed us while here; in that bright realm his contented spirit reposes to-day. And lonely as his absence leaves us here we would not wish him back. We have lost a brother and fellow-toiler; the family have lost a husband and father, a brother and son; but these losses are but the minimized measure of his eternal gain. Let us then be not surfeited with grief over the loss we sustain, but rather give place to the joy that the knowledge of his freer estate inspires. In humble resignation at the shrine of our hope let us bow, and say to Him who has permitted this event, "Thy will be done."

Let me here read the 53d, 54th, and 55th verses of the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Also the words found in the first part of the 8th verse of the 25th chapter of the prophecy of Isaiah: "He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." To these words I will add the following, which were uttered by our departed brother a short time prior to his going from us. "The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and the eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality."

How fitting, too, at this point are the beautiful words of the poet:

O, the hour when this material
 Shall have vanished like a cloud;
 And amid the wide ethereal
 All the invisible shall crowd.
 And the earth-freed soul, surrounded
 By realities unknown,
 Triumphs in the view unbounded—
 Feels itself with God alone.

Angels! let the anxious stranger
 In your tender care be blest;
 Hoping, waiting, free from danger,
 Till the trumpet end its rest:
 Till the trump which shakes creation
 Through the circling heavens shall roll,
 Till the day of consummation,
 Till the bridal of the soul.

Can I trust a fellow-being?
 Can I trust an angel's care?
 O, thou merciful All-seeing,
 Guide me by thy presence there!
 Jesus! blessed Mediator!
 Thou the airy path hast trod,
 Thou the Judge, the Consummator,
 Shepherd of the fold of God!

Blessed fold! no foe can enter,
 And no friend departeth thence;
 Jesus is their Sun, their Center,
 And their shield, Omnipotence!
 Blessed, for the Lamb shall feed them,
 And their tears shall wipe away,
 To the living Fountain lead them,
 Till fruition's perfect day.

Lo! it comes—that day of wonder,
 Louder thunders shake the skies,
 Hades' gates are burst asunder,
 See the new-clothed myriads rise.
 Thought, repress thy weak endeavor,
 Here must reason prostrate fall;
 O, th' ineffable Forever,
 And th' eternal All in All!"

These words are expressive of the sublime sentiment awakened within our minds as the death of our brother starts memory to work to-day.

Yesterday morning at a few minutes past eleven o'clock, while sitting with my quorum in the Historian's office at Lamoni, Iowa, a messenger entered and handed me a telegram announcing the death of my fellow-laborer, accompanied with the request that I should be present to-day to perform the service in which I am now engaged.

I immediately made an appeal to my brethren of the quorum asking an expression of their will as to giving me privilege to leave them; a vote was taken and within fifteen minutes from that time I was upon the stage making my way here.

A few weeks ago, perhaps seven or eight, when visiting, as I tried to do daily, our brother in his sickness, he made a request of me that, should I be within reaching distance when his death came, and that distance would not be great enough to cause any great amount of expense, I would come and preach his funeral sermon; "for," said he, "I do not want any vain flattery, I do not want that any advantage shall be taken of my death to present anything that shall extol me, but you know me and I have confidence in your judgment to say to the people that which would be proper at such a time." In fulfillment of the pledge I made him in response to that request I am here to perform this sad and solemn service to-day.

To me, there is in this statement, as made by himself, something that furnishes ground for hope, that strengthens the heart and faith. When you see a man in the vigor of his strength asserting himself, fearlessly proclaiming his convictions, and in connection with these proclamations lets his imagination reach away out into the realms beyond and picture for himself a place of rest and beautiful habitation, you may be electrified by his force and eloquence; but when you see that man wasting in the clutches of a disease that is eating away his vitals and robbing him of the ability to express the sentiments that are crowding his mind, and you find that through all he is determined and in the few words he may have the power to utter, there is but a reiteration of the sentiments proclaimed in the days of his strength, and when you see him go down until his feet touch the waters of the river over which he is to cross and his face is illuminated as the evidence comes to him that the hour of dissolution is here, you find something there that confirms you in the hope he has awakened in the days of his strength; you then have before you the evidence of the genuineness of his faith. When the solemn experience comes to us in such a form as this and we can truly say that "the moment of my mortal ending is the triumphal arch and the eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality" we can realize the truth of what is recorded in the sacred book to which I have called your attention to-day, and it comes with more than ordinary meaning to us, and establishes, as it did him, more firmly and made him secure in the supreme hour of his trial,—"Death is surely swallowed up in victory."

There is in the gospel that my brother preached for years something that answers the human demand as nothing else has ever done. I have given time, mental energy, and spiritual devotion to grasp the magnitude of this gospel of the kingdom, and I have lived to bear witness that it is worthy of my profoundest gratitude to God. I have tried to pay God the tribute of my heart's service under the impulses born of what is known as creeds, and have believed that within the realms of those creeds there was everything that was intended to beget hope or confidence and spirit rest; but it was largely a service of apprehension. But when this gospel of the Son of God, as restored in the latter days and proclaimed under the authority of the angel, saluted my ears, just as it had my brother's, it awakened an admiration for my Father in heaven, it aroused an enthusiasm; yea, more than that, it elicited my heart's deepest love, and I longed to command the powers of an angel to proclaim its beauty, consistency, and completeness: I loved, I adored. It offers every inducement that virtue and charity demand and makes it an honor and delight to testify of its greatness and its truth.

The best efforts I have ever been able to make in advertising its excellence have been followed by the consciousness that I had scarcely announced the first letters in the alphabet of its divine grandeur. I know, too, that my departed brother's experience has been as my own in this respect, and this knowledge takes away the asperities of my sadness to-day as I think of his going from us, for it crowds upon me the assurances that the "fair fields of immortality" into which death was to him "the triumphal arch and eternal gateway" are, in fulfillment of his gospel hope, being roamed by him to-day. I ask no better faith to give triumph to my hour of dissolution; I ask no better legacy of hope or assurance to be left to my friends who may some day gather around the casket which contains my mortal remains. If but the richness of royal assurance and brilliancy of hope that attended him during the weeks preceeding his demise, and which were but the natural fruitage of his faith in the gospel of which I speak, shall come as the closing portion of my life's experience here, I shall consider myself safe in the certified triumph over death, a victor over the grave, and as having already begun to enter upon my immortal privilege.

At different times when I visited him, though his breath came quick and short, and though the smallest effort meant an aggravation of his physical distress, when I would express a wish that he might be spared to resume his work as a minister, he would invariably respond with some expression of absolute trust in God, a welcome to suffering or weakness or death if it but hurried on the divine process in him. He would rise, and with tottering step cross the room, exclaiming, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless and praise his holy name." He said he had tried mortality as God had ordained and was now joyously awaiting the change to immortality.

I visited him on the evening before my departure to Lamoni to take up my quorum work there, and inquired if there was any message he wanted to send, adding that I would have the brethren remember him in prayer when we were together in quorum session. "Well," he said, "give my love to all the holy brethren, but do not occupy much of your time in prayer for me unless it is to ask of God that he will cut short the time and speed me on my way."

I wish I had command of my energies and force this afternoon sufficiently to give to your waiting ears a testimony in regard to the gospel that he preached. I wish that a multitude of people who are ignorant of the truth of that gospel might give me audience and learn what he knew and what we know about it. I believe, however, that neither the conditions nor the time call for it this afternoon, but let me say to you, that in the statement as quoted from the Old and New Testament this afternoon, there is found a truth and the announcement that this mortal will put on immortality, and this corruption put on incorruption is easier to believe after the assurance his death gives us.

When I think of the dearth of knowledge of this truth I groan within myself because of my inability to take up the weapons of this spiritual warfare and go forth as an aggressor as I have done in times that are past; but I want to take pattern from the calm resignation of my brother and say, "God's will is best, let it be done." I am conscious that my body is weakening and that my mental organs are not equal to the strain I wish to put them under, and this tells in unmistakable terms that I am moving towards the day of final change. I know not whether relief and restoration will come soon or whether I shall continue on to the point that has been reached and passed by my brother. If that be the interpretation that I am to gather from my present conditions and experience, I want to meet the issue as he met it, with folded arms and with an unclouded brow, with a heart as firm and with confidence as unwavering as the gospel can make them or as I may have felt in my life and with absolute resignation to the will of the Supreme One whom I call my Father.

This afternoon I point you as brethren, I point you as sisters, I point you as friends, I point you, although you may be strangers to me as you have been to him in the flesh, for evidence that God makes no promise without the intention of fulfilling, to my brother, I point you to him in evidence of the fact that human beings are of interest in the sight of God, and whatever my be the peculiarities that characterize every individuality in the world, God can touch, can bless and sanctify those individualities in such a way as to make them shine forth resplendent and unique in testimony of the divinity of the force which this gospel conveys to the life and character of those embracing it.

I want to say to you, when you look upon his face this afternoon, that it is your privilege to decide for yourself when your lips utter the good-bye or farewell, whether that will be a final expression on your part as regards our brother or whether it be but a reference to the short time that shall intervene between now and the resurrection morn. I repeat, it rests within your power and mine to determine whether we will accept the gospel as he proclaimed it,—the restored gospel that fired his heart and constrained him to offer his life's service on the altar of his love to the Being who is too wise to make any mistakes in calculating what human necessity is. If you accept it and allow its operation within you as did he, then the separation will be brief, and the reunion of the coming day will be one for eternal fellowship and uninterrupted happiness.

I might talk to you this afternoon about the resurrection of the dead; I might select here and there the passages of Scripture that bear witness to the fact that prophets, apostles, and all the writers of Holy Writ have believed in it, but I presume all of you are agreed as to that. There is not a demand this afternoon, as I take it, to present to you what we commonly understand as the doctrine of Christ along that line, only to encourage your faith by reference to the results of hope in these promises of God as have been exemplified in our brother. Such a picture as his death furnishes should inspire us to so occupy in the time yet allotted to us as to voice our supreme confidence in the testimony of my text and of the promises of the resurrection found elsewhere. Our triumph may be as complete in God and in his truth as others have been, as our brother's has been.

Job said, as you remember, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin-worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."

Isaiah said that the dead should live, and together with his dead body they should rise, and in his exuberance of spirit he called upon all to awake and sing for their dew was as the dew of herbs and the earth should cast out its dead.

Ezekiel was inspired to proclaim the resurrection of all Israel. Daniel declared that those sleeping in the dust of the earth should awake. Hosea said that God would redeem from death and ransom from the power of the grave. Paul confidently proclaimed the resurrection of all men, both just and unjust. It was the theme of patriarchs and the glory of the hope of seers; but the fitting climax of indisputable testimony is found in the language of the Christ himself: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth on me shall never die," and "he that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live."

This should be enough, but beyond even this the blessed Master went, when he gave to our eager spirits, our longing hearts, and our timid minds the final and incontrovertible testimony of absolute fact, of demonstration. He submitted to the conditions which brought this theory to a sublime test, and went down to the grave in holy confidence. A royal seal and a nation's guard were placed over his body to defy his resurrection prophecy, but the God element was in those utterances and could not be dislodged. The potencies which characterize the Godhead were represented in those predictions, and their absolute vindication were but a matter of short time.

When the appointed hour came, the seal and the guard and the stone were swept away as with the breath of God, and a living and immortal Jesus stood again in the midst of the people. To John on Patmos he exhibited the keys of death and hell, or certified to their possession, and down through the succeeding ages has come pealing the irrefutable testimony, the gloriously demonstrated fact, that our gospel is true, our hope is not vain; the seers did foresee and the patriarchs did know and the apostles were well assured that man was born to eternal existence and this mortal condition is but the vestibule estate. This theme on which our departed brother delighted to dwell during his life ministrations here, was not a speculation nor a mere freak of fancy. The light that illumed his soul as he approached the "eternal gateway" was but a beam that shone from "the fair fields of immortality" towards which his face was turned and into which he was being swiftly borne. The radiance of the assurance it brought is remaining with us as we contemplate his life and death to-day.

The gospel story he told in life was not a toy nor a plaything for his imagination or entertainment during health. It was the repository of his faith and it had Christ and God for its backing, and neither trial, nor persecution, nor sickness, nor death could divorce him from it. It was his all. Its principles are as safely grounded as the throne of the Eternal. They are imperishable. I rejoice beyond expression that this gospel fact is our heritage, that it has saluted our ears, charmed our hearts, inspired our activities, and that the halo of its glory surrounds this bier to-day. Truly, truly may we exclaim, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Then, earth, take these cold and mortal remains and give them quiet rest in your narrow retreat; but a vision opens before my mind this afternoon that permits me to behold my brother in a realm where exercise does not mean weariness, where pursuit of knowledge meets no disappointment, where quest of light and wisdom is not hampered by fleshly interruption or carnal suggestion, where discordant notes do not mar the melody of song or music of the swelling chorus, where passing time brings no reminders of age and decrepitude, nor does it point to any terminus of rest.

To this realm of joyous contemplation I invite the wife and children, mother and brother of the departed to-day. Away from the scenes that tell of our loss, to the estate that announces his gain—his eternal triumph—his place of spirit rest.

May the good Lord whom he served sanctify and bless the conditions attending us to our highest good and the Father's glory. Amen.

THOUGHTS ON CONSECRATION.

Under the above caption we have read an article in HERALD of May 21, and desire to send out our observations on the same. The question is asked, Is the law of consecration as sought to be enforced by the Bishopric, in harmony with the law given of God for the government of the church as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 2, 3, 4, 10? We think it is, if we understand aright what is written. "In these matters there is no conflict in the law."—Section 120: 6. We believe with the writer of the article, "that individual righteousness is the principal requisite among the Saints in redeeming Zion;" but we think obedience to the whole law, including consecration, is necessary in order to become righteous.

Section 122: 6, we read: "The law given to the church in section 42, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy is as if it were given to-day." In this section consecration is taught as set forth by the Bishopric, and we do not think section 98 is in conflict with section 42. In section 122, building up the New Jerusalem with all the attendant work is contemplated, and this can never be done without consecration. We are cited to section 36, where the Lord called his people Zion because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness, and there was no poor among them. How shall the poor be elevated and helped to better conditions so we shall have no poor, if we do not do as the Lord says in section 42: 11: "For I will consecrate of the riches of those who embrace my gospel, among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel." This being now in force, if we do not consecrate of our properties and help the poor, might not a like condemnation rest on us, as did on the old church, as cited by our brother? We think so.

As for the great "endowment," they received that as promised in 1836 in the Kirtland Temple, and the Lord has endowed every faithful man since that time, as his necessities required to accomplish the work committed to him. There was some excuse for the church in that day. The elders were not prepared. Had not properly taught the Saints to their duty, either through lack of knowledge in reference to Zion's redemption, or the time to redeem Zion had not come, the writer says. We admit this is no excuse for us. The Lord has said, "The law is as if given to-day," and the work and salvation of his people the same. (Section 122.) And consecration was also the law taught the rich young man, and might be required under like circumstances to-day, "if we would be perfect." We have seen that the elders received their endowment, so that was not the cause of failure. We have waited a little season, and we are willing for the Lord to fight our battles; but we must purchase the land, if we would have an inheritance. Section 63: 8 says: "Behold, the land of Zion, I, the Lord, holdeth it in mine own hands; nevertheless, I, the Lord, rendereth unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; wherefore, I, the Lord, willeth that you should purchase the lands, that you may have advantage of the world, that you may have claim on the world, that they may not be stirred up unto anger; for Satan putteth it into their hearts to anger against you unto the shedding of blood; wherefore the land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase or by blood, otherwise there is none inheritance for you. And if by purchase, behold, you are blessed; and if by blood, as you are forbidden to shed blood, lo, your enemies are upon you, and ye shall be scourged from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue, and but few shall stand to receive an inheritance." Is not the foregoing plain enough to show that the land must be purchased, and the poor helped by consecration? And is this not in harmony with section 98: 10: "Now, verily I say unto you, Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; let these things be done in their time, be not in haste; and observe to have all things prepared before you. And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion."

This is in harmony with section 42: 18: "And even now, let him that goeth to the east teach them that shall be converted to flee to the west; and this in consequence of that which is coming on the earth, and of secret combinations." Shall we neglect our duty and be unprepared when these things come, or shall we move forward as the Lord has commanded and be prepared when they do come?

The change in the price of land does not change the purpose or plan of the Lord; neither should it cause us to slacken our efforts, or be discouraged or dismayed. It is the Lord's work. We have been told the hastening time has come, and this means work and sacrifice for Saints.

Passing over many things named by the brother and questions asked, we find this statement: "And I believe, Mr. Editor, whenever the time comes for consecration and redeeming Zion, the Lord is in duty bound, under favorable conditions in the church, to fulfill the promise made; namely, 'I will counsel my servant, whoever that man may be, that is called of God to receive instruction for the church in reference to Zion's redemption.'" I believe the brother is laboring under a misapprehension. I think the Lord has spoken very clearly in his law, as we see it, and we do not think the Bishopric presumes or desires to teach independently of the counsel given through that servant whom the Lord has appointed. The lack of proper counsel referred to in the brother's article, does not exist except in the imagination of some, as we view it. We think we had the proper counsel, through the proper channel, and we believe the law of consecration is fairly well understood; better than tithing was in 1861 or even up to 1882. We are told in section 98: 8 that we should purchase those lands, "and possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given." The law already given! This is the one thing to do now, as made clear in the law, and as set forth by the Bishopric. The statement in section 102: 10, "and let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled after her redemption," does not in my judgment refer to consecration, for consecration is taught in section 42: 8, 10, 11, but to that which is to follow after consecration is carried out, the land purchased, and Zion redeemed, as set forth in section 102: 9, when "The nations will be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject to her laws." I believe the quorums and church are pretty well united in these matters.

And now I call your attention to the late revelation, section 126: 10: "In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy."

I believe the Lord is greatly interested in this work, and will not permit any serious wrong to be perpetrated by the Bishopric, or any other quorum of the church, and they be permitted to continue any great length of time to impede the progress of the work.

I am glad to see the brethren awake to the interests of the church. It is said that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty;" but unnecessary distrust and alarm only does harm and hinders more than it helps the work, in my opinion.

I trust the Bishopric will never be permitted (if they should have the desire) to lord it over God's heritage, or disregard the advice and counsel of those whom God has appointed to give or teach his law, but I trust they shall always have the courage to perform their duty as they may be able to see and comprehend it, for the glory of God and the good of the people. And I sincerely hope that the Lord may give the Bishopric light and wisdom, so that their advice and actions may be in harmony with the law, and for the best good of all concerned. To this end I hope I shall ever be found faithfully working, and for the success of the work I shall ever pray.

GREATEST PRINTING OFFICE.

The new government printing office is approaching completion, and will be a gigantic affair. It will cost $2,000,000 and will provide a total floor space of over fourteen acres—more than two and a half times the floor area available in the present establishment. As yet the building is entirely covered with scaffolding, but it is substantially finished except for the interior woodwork and painting.

It will be the greatest printing shop in the world, employing the services of nearly 4,000 people. Accurately speaking, 3,889 persons will toil under its mighty roof, nearly 1,000 of them being women and girls. Each year it will expend the enormous sum of $4,000,000, nearly three fourths of it for labor, and in its main composing-room 824 printers will be engaged in sticking type. Eight hundred and eighty-five employees will be occupied in binding the books and documents produced, and an additional 665 will do nothing but fold the printed sheets.

Figures like these give a notion of the gigantic scale on which the shop will be conducted. Each twelve-month it will consume for bindings the skins of 36,000 sheep and 11,000 goats, in addition to 75,000 square feet of "Russia leather," made from cowhide. It will use up in a like period 8,000 tons of white paper, 40,000 pounds of printing ink, and 37,000 pounds of glue, together with 7,000 pounds of thread for sewing books and pamphlets, and 4,000 packs of goldleaf for the titles of volumes de luxe.

One hundred and twenty-seven presses will be constantly in operation in the great building, their total output in a working day of eight hours being just about 1,000,000 impressions. These presses are of every conceivable kind, one of them being capable of printing cards on both sides from a web of bristol board at the rate of 65,000 cards per hour, while four other machines turn out 40,000 printed envelopes every sixty minutes. The quantity of type actually employed will be approximately 1,500,000 pounds, or 750 tons.

No other government spends anything like the amount of money on public printing that is squandered by Uncle Sam. In this particular Congress is always disposed to a reckless extravagance, and hence the huge size of the plant required. Public documents are an important perquisite of Senators and Representatives, who scatter them broadcast among their constituents. One hundred tons of a single report now in press will be issued and distributed in this manner, and the total number of volumes of various kinds of literature turned out by the office in a twelve-month is about 1,000,000, representing a total cost of more than $1,000,000.

Nowadays government books, like other kinds of publications, require illustrations, and the cost of these ran up to about $300,000 last year. It is safe to say that ten years from now Uncle Sam's printing shop will spend pretty nearly $500,000 annually for pictures. The most costly illustrations are for the reports for the Department of Agriculture and the bulletins of the Bureau of Ethnology, many of these being in colors. Each bureau furnishes its own pictures, but the printing office has them reproduced by firms in Boston, New York, and elsewhere. These firms print the illustrations and return them to Washington ready to be bound with the text.

The most important job the big shop has to execute is the printing of the Congressional Record. This daily newspaper, which records nothing but the doings of the national Legislature, is written from beginning to end by the official reporters of the House and Senate, who take down in shorthand every word that is said at either end of the Capitol. They dictate from their notes to typewriters, and the material, thus reduced to typescript, is sent over to the printing offices in batches by messengers. It begins to come in about six p. m., at which hour the compositors come on duty, and all of it is likely to be delivered by eleven p. m. unless there is a night session.

In any event the Record is ready for distribution early next morning. One hundred compositors are employed exclusively in the business of setting type for it, one department of the printing office being devoted exclusively to this publication, which is "set up" and sent to press just like any newspaper, being delivered every day to about 9,000 subscribers. Each Representative in Congress gets twenty-two copies daily, while a Senator is entitled to forty-two. Anybody may subscribe, the price being $1.50 a month; but the paper is not directly profitable to Uncle Sam, inasmuch as it costs $125,000 a year.

The printing of bills is another important feature of the work of the establishment. Though only a few hundred of the measures submitted to Congress in a year become laws, millions of copies of them have to be printed. A bill must go through a great many phases before it can become a law, and during the process of its evolution it has to be printed again and again—perhaps dozens of times. If finally passed, a single copy of it is printed on the finest parchment, and this goes to President Roosevelt for his signature. Having received that august autograph, it is law and is handed over to the Department of State, to be filed away in the nation's archives.

No such blank books are manufactured anywhere else in the world as are produced in this printing office. Nothing is too expensive to be put into some of them, and the lettering on their backs is of pure gold. Three blank books are made each year for the use of Congress at a cost of sixty-five dollars each. They are designed to contain the names and addresses of Senators and Representatives and their accounts with Uncle Sam. Each of them weighs eighty-five pounds, contains 1,200 pages, and is composed of the finest imaginable paper. In fact, the paper alone for the three books costs $60 and the materials for the bindings come to $48. No fewer than 350,000 blank books of all kinds are turned out every twelve-month.

The paging of the blank books is done by an ingenious machine which enables a single operator to page a book of 600 pages in ten minutes. Women do this work, as well as the stamping of titles in gold letters, which is performed by hand. For the sake of economy, however, a mixture of brass and lead called "German metal" is used for most of the books instead of gold. Hand sewing is chiefly employed in the binding of volumes. There are about 200 sewers, all of them women. Department reports are mostly sewed by machines with huge spools of thread.

One of the most striking illustrations of the capabilities of the establishment for executing hurried orders was the printing of the message of President McKinley transmitting the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the United States battleship Maine. This publication consisted of 298 pages of text, twenty-four full-page engravings, and one lithograph in colors. Although the originals of the illustrations were not in the possession of the office until three o'clock p. m. of March 28, and the manuscript of the text was not received until six p.

m. of the same day, complete printed copies, in paper covers, were placed upon the desks of Senators and Representatives by ten o'clock the following morning.

The annual messages of the Chief Executive to Congress are always nightmares to the Government Printing Office, and until they are formally received by the National Legislature there is no sound sleep for the officials in charge. Their task is like the guarding of a treasure. Once, and only once, was the message stolen. It was one written by President Hayes, and was not obtained from the Government Printing Office, but from the printing shop of the Treasury, to which it had been confided for greater secrecy.

When Mr. Roosevelt's last message was delivered at the Government Printing Office a few picked compositors were chosen to put it into type. While they were at work on it they were held under the watchful eye of the foreman. The copy, delivered in typescript by a trusted messenger from the White House, was cut up into "takes," so small that no individual could make head or tail of his own. No one was allowed to see a proof of other takes than those which he himself handled. The galleys full of type, as fast as they were made up, were placed on shelves in an iron room built like a safe. Two proofs were taken finally of the completed message, one for the office and the other on fine paper for the President.—Chicago Tribune, May 11, 1902.

THE TEACHINGS OF CONFUCIUS.

Confucius believed man to be an expression of nature, the same as the birds of the air, the fish of the sea, the beasts of the field, or the trees of the forest, but with this difference: Man alone of all created things possesses a nature above the animal—a mental and spiritual nature—one susceptible, as Confucius thought, of almost unlimited unfoldment. From whence man came or whither he is going he could not know more than could he know where any other species of animal life came from or is destined to go.

Confucius conceived man to be endowed with marvelous powers and capacities which made him little other than a veritable god upon this earth; that by nature he is constituted such, but that through ignorance he has drifted wide of the mark. To attempt to show man the way back, therefore, as well as to impress upon him the opulence of his endowment and the grandeur of his inheritance, was the aim and endeavor of Confucius' long life. This was Confucius' great scheme—to urge man to make of himself what he termed "the superior man," the perfect man.

Virtue he defined "to be able to practice five things everywhere under the heavens—gravity, generosity of soul, sincerity, kindness, and earnestness." And another of his definitions was this, "In the Book of Poetry are three hundred pieces, but the design of them all may be embraced in that one sentence, Have no depraved thoughts." This was all there was of life to him. The practice or pursuit of this would make gods of us all, he considered. This is very much the same view as that entertained by the ancient Greeks except in this—the Greeks believed in a great number of gods of a personal nature, while Confucius could conceive of only one universal, impersonal Power or Being governing in the universe.

Happiness he considered a result and not an end—a corollary, so to speak, which naturally follows or ensues from the pursuit of the end. To live simply to be happy, he considered, would be selfish—unworthy of man's endowment. This is his definition of happiness: "When there are no stirrings of pleasure, anger, sorrow, or joy, the mind may be said to be in a state of equilibrium. When those feelings have stirred and they act in their due degree, then ensues what may be called a state of harmony. This equilibrium is the great root from which grow all the human actings in the world, and this harmony is the universal path which all should pursue. Let the state of equilibrium and harmony exist in perfection and happiness will prevail."

Regarding his belief in a Supreme Being: From the perfect wisdom which he saw manifest everywhere throughout the universe he felt that there must be a supreme, overruling power governing in all things, which Power he styled the Will of Heaven. He could neither grasp nor comprehend it, yet he felt that such a Power existed. This Power he conceived to be perfect in wisdom, omniscience, and omnipotence, and hence that the action of such a being must of necessity be logical; that it must be free from mistakes, mishaps, or accidents of any kind, not only as regards the physical world, but as regards the spiritual as well. To this being he felt "profoundly reverent and humbly submissive."

Respecting a future life he was an agnostic, for the reason that he could find nothing upon which to predicate a belief. He did not disbelieve in a future state of existence; at the same time he claimed that the question of future life was a secret locked from finite mortals; that his belief or disbelief was of very little import and would in no way affect the reality.

His adoration of the Creator's works was sublime. The grandeur of this world, strewn all over as it is with beauty, was a worship lesson to him.

He was versed in astronomy and could view the starry heavens above only in a spirit of the greatest awe and deepest humility, and when we consider that there is no end to space; that there is no end to worlds which fill this space (in comparison with which ours is but a speck); that it requires forty-eight million years to reach the nearest fixed stars traveling at the rate of a mile a minute, or sixty miles an hour—and probably forty-eight million years to reach the next star from that—is it any wonder that his adoration was unbounded?

Prayer to him was idle declamation, for the reason that everything in the universe is governed by unerring, undeviating, inexorable law, which can in no whit be altered in the minutest degree. He considered that there was nothing which a definite being could intelligently ask for, only reverently submit. When dying, one of his disciples asked if he should not pray for him, to which he replied: "What good would it do?"

Sincerity, faithfulness, and truthfulness were the groundwork of all of Confucius' teachings. With him these virtues constituted not alone the cornerstone, but the foundation stones in the building of character. He could listen to nothing which bore the air of insincerity.

When asked if there were not one word which would serve as a rule of practice for one's life he said: "Is not reciprocity such a word? What you do not like when done to yourself do not do to others." (This was said five hundred years before the Christian era.)

When asked concerning the principle that injury should be recompensed with kindness he replied: "With what, then, will you recompense kindness? Recompense injury with justice and recompense kindness with kindness. To love those whom men hate and hate those whom men love, is an outrage to the natural feelings. Calamities can not fail to come down upon him who does so. He who recompenses injury with kindness is careless of his person."

Confucius knew nothing of what is termed "original sin." He knew nothing of what is termed an "angry God." He could not conceive of the possibility of passion being an attribute of infinite wisdom. Neither could he conceive of the possibility of man, a mere atom in the scale of creation, thwarting the plans or purposes of the infinite.

He considered everything in nature, from the most infinitesimal monad of matter to the larger world or grandest expression of the Creator's power, to be governed and controlled by law. "The way to reform a nation," he said, "is to commence with the individual. Reform the individual then this will reform the state and the empire."

The late Max Mueller, formerly professor in Oxford University, described him as being one of the most remarkable men in the history of the human race, and after quoting from the topics Confucius made the basis of his teachings—letters, ethics, devotion of soul, and truthfulness—says: "If we read his biography we can hardly understand how a man whose life was devoted to such tranquil pursuits, and whose death scarcely produced a ripple upon the smooth and silent surface of the Eastern world, could have left the impress of his mind upon millions and millions of human beings—an impress which even now, after 2,423 years, is clearly discernible in the character of the largest empire in the world."

At the ripe age of seventy-four he passed away, dying calmly and peacefully, without regret or murmur, entirely resigned to the will of heaven. His ashes repose to-day where they were deposited nearly 2,500 years ago, just outside of the City of K'ih-fow, in China, in probably the oldest identified grave in the world. His grave is a large mound, now covered with trees, approached by an avenue lined upon either side with cypress and opened into an elaborate gate. Here rest the remains of Confucius, worshiped and revered by his countrymen and honored and respected by millions upon millions of the earthly inhabitants.—"China," by Thomas Whitney.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"We search the world for truth;
We cull the good, the pure, the beautiful,
From grave-stones and from written scroll
From all old flower-fields of the soul;
And weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read."

A Few Items of Our Voyage.

They mix up a batch of bread with cocoanut water, and then break off little wads about as large around as one's wrist, and roll them tight in the long cocoanut leaves, and bake them in the native oven without letting them raise at all. When they are ready to eat they are as much like rolls of putty as anything one could make, but the natives eat them and say they are nice. Of course the native baker's bread is not like those.

While the bread was baking, and the clothes drying, a new supply of cocoanuts was sent on board, and a few fishes. Having thus laid in a fresh supply for our journey, and the men having refreshed themselves with a little sleep, we started off again at the eventide. None had been sick, and all had become accustomed to boating, so were just as willing to start off in the night as in the day.

The night was fair. But the early evenings were nearly always cloudy on account of the great evaporation that is going on in these tropical parts. And the moon was getting older each day, like all the rest of us, and was not such an early riser as when we first started on the journey, so the first few hours were rather somber. We would make the island of Toau about eleven o'clock, and fearing those on the lookout might get drowsy if left by themselves, we sat and sang and talked by way of keeping them company till after we made the land and rounded the point, hoping Brn. Alexander and Gould would forgive us for keeping them awake as well. They were trying to sleep on deck. Had tried the accommodations below the first night out, and did not seem inclined to repeat the experience. The painted boards had a much softer appearance than those below that were not painted. Besides, there was a great difference in the ventilation and temperature.

We ran for nearly three hours parallel with the land, but the island was to leeward. This was the only rough place there was on the way to Kaukura. We encountered a strong current while rounding the island, and a prolonged squall of wind tossed our boat pretty lively for about two hours, with an unsteady, jerking, dizzy motion because of the current. So it was away along in the short hours of the night before we attempted to sleep.

Next day (Saturday) was the most beautiful of all the week, in that there was a stronger breeze and the air some cooler, and we were nearing our journey's end. Our voyage had been as pleasant as a boating voyage among the islands is likely to be, yet another day would have been tedious. We all were getting tired and feeling the need of a "square meal."

Early in the day Kaukura loomed up in the distance, and was hailed with gladness. It was nearly eleven a. m. when we entered the narrow pass into Kaukura Lake. No rollers or breakers here. The channel or cut through the reef is very narrow and very crooked, but the reef is so near on each side and water so shallow on it that if any one had any scruples about sailing through, he could have jumped overboard and walked. The "cut" is not clear through that broad reef; one sails up on it after a little, and our sail was lowered in a hurry to keep us from sailing clear across in water ankle deep.

The natives handle their boats sometimes much as we would a refractory horse. They jumped overboard and caught her by the bows and set their feet to hold her back. By pushing on first one side and then the other, and walking and leading her by the bow-stays, she was kept clear of all the troublesome pieces of rock that had formed in lumps and cakes here and there, and after a little the tide came in sufficiently to float her over the ledge into the deep waters of the lake, and we glided rapidly up to Panau, a distance of twelve or thirteen miles.

There was a real city of boats clustered together on the mooring ground. They were expecting us, and two boats came out to meet us in honor of the Patriarch. A few only came to the shore to meet and escort us up to the chapel where the body of the Saints had gathered in their Sunday attire to receive us with speeches, singing, and prayer. It being the season for pearl diving in that lake, that, together with the desire to meet Bro. Alexander, the son of the martyred prophet, brought a goodly gathering, but we were a limp-looking crowd that passed up through the center of the chapel onto the platform with faces and hands the shade of scarlet runners, but our gait not at all like that of a "runner."

After the greetings were over we were all escorted to the house prepared for Bro. Alexander and his secretary, a good, cool house of stone and plastered walls with a broad-roofed porch all around it. Here the good Saints were bringing all the luxuries the island afforded in the way of canned food and fruits. This house was in the very center of the village, and close by the new niau tabernacle that was being built in true cheese-box style for the coming conference. Joseph and I had the same big house we always have when we go to Panau. But all ate together at Bro. Alexander's house. A native man did the cooking and I took care of the table and dishes.

Our dwelling place was quite a little walk from Bro. Alexander's, especially in such heat as we had at Kaukura, and the oft repeated walks from one house to the other, together with a portion of work at both houses and going often to a sick sister in another direction, was quite enough to keep me out of mischief. But of all the busy ones, Bro. Gould was the busiest. He gave his typewriter no rest, which typewriter was an untiring source of interest to the inhabitants of Panau; and he was seldom without an audience. Notwithstanding the short time they had allotted to finish the conference-house, every man left his work when he saw or heard the typewriter, and crowded in the room till another could scarcely have gotten in, and watched Bro. Gould half the forenoon.

Bro. and Sr. Peterson joined us, by way of the steamer, in time to attend conference, and visit a few days, then returned again to Papeete with us on a boat. She was not at all well, but could not be kept still in a gathering like that. When I told her of the fine weather and fair winds we had had coming from Raroia she said, "Well, you have got to have a storm going to Papeete, for we are going along."

And sure enough we had. The morning we started was fine. All the Saints gathered to the conference-house for singing and prayer, seeing there were some sick ones that could not walk to the shore, and here they tendered a donation of money for food on the way and at Papeete. Some bade the Patriarch good-bye at the house, but all that could accompanied us to the shore, where again there was singing and prayer, and another round of hand-shaking, and a tearful good-bye to the Patriarch.

Prayer Union.

Bro. John O. Scott, of Bisbee, Arizona, writes: "My mother, while on the road here from Flagstaff, was struck by the train last Sunday morning and had her right arm broken, and some less injuries. She desires the prayers of the Union for her recovery."

Sunday-School Department.

United Effort in the Sunday-School.

That the Sunday-school has a vast and important work connected with it, no one will deny. Our colleges and schools of learning are great stimulants in the intellectual and moral training of the race. In support of this argument, I adduce the following words from the pen of Bro. Elbert A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa. He says: "I welcome into our midst both school and college, because they mean a greater morality. They bring a brighter literature, better thought, and broader research, and bring among us men whom it is profitable to observe and converse with. Every glimpse into the life of a true scholar reveals an amount of hard, exact, systematic labor, that we had not before thought of, and gives an insight into higher and yet higher realms, where we shall live to learn, and learn how to live: improving each moment with a great thought, each hour with a noble purpose, that the days as they accumulate may work in our characters a work of refinement and of strength."

Now, the Sunday-school is not a whit behind in this noble enterprise. Indeed, it stands upon a much higher plane—that of a true religious character. And if in the presentation of these few thoughts which I may offer in this paper, I may be enabled to convince some minds of the necessity of a certain amount of activity upon all who are concerned in the benefits which accrue from a strong and vigorous Sunday-school, then for my effort I will be amply rewarded.

THE VERY TERM "SUNDAY-SCHOOL" IMPLIES WORK

or effort. "No excellence without labor" is a true motto, and might well be applied to our Sunday-school work. What could we expect from a child or an adult who frequents the school-room merely for pastime or from curiosity, and makes no effort upon his part to advance in thought and practice? Why, such an individual would be detrimental to the interests of the whole school, and the end which might have been attained deplorably marred and crippled,

We have often heard it said that lies in the gospel. That would indicate, to my mind, that the authorized ministry of Christ has a peculiar and urgent work to perform in this probationary life; and that the hearer's rejection of the message of mercy will ultimately prove to have been unwise and deprive him of his salvation. In like manner can we not say that the lies in the Sunday-school? It seems so. Especially when we note the advice given by inspiration through Paul when he wrote: "To bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

HOPE OF THE CHURCH

The church is composed of members both young and old, "lambs" as well as "sheep" of the flock. And the Lord has wisely provided not only apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers in his church and kingdom, but also helps and governments. Then do we not fully appreciate them, and recognize in them the care and provision of a kind and parental God? In this connection it might be asked, Who, then, has a work to do in carrying out the great purposes of God in the redemption of mankind? We read: "We are laborers together with God." 1 Cor. 3:9. We have already noticed that the Sunday-school is an essential part of the gospel work in the earth, and that it is intrusted to the people of God everywhere. It is also based upon a code of laws and regulations for its government, and provides that superintendents and teachers shall be in control.

We wish to briefly examine the nature of the work and the

of these several officers and others interested. The burden of the Sunday-school work rests upon the superintendent. I believe that the greatest care should be exercised in selecting a person for this important office, for many reasons, and from past observations, I fear that this is not always the case.

I heartily agree with Bro. George H. Gates when he wrote, "I believe if we can have for a superintendent a man or woman of spiritual intelligence, whose heart is in the work, together with a force of prayerful and devoted teachers, we shall have a school in due time that will manifest the vigor of growth and will display the blessed fruitage of souls, brought to the knowledge of God through obedience to his laws. One of our present needs is a constant study on the part of superintendents to meet the demands of their schools. Conditions change, classes develop, and must be rearranged, and teachers adapted to each must be provided.

Again: A school should not be allowed to run in a rut until it becomes like an automatic machine, which performs the same revolutions, whatever the material fed in. The disposition to hold to a thing because we are used to it, or to reject a method simply because it is new, is fatal to progress.

To make a Sunday-school interesting and profitable does not depend upon the superintendent alone, but quite as much upon the teacher.

A very important question might be asked here, What is the true aim of the Sunday-school? Our answer would be: "To bring the scholar to Christ, to bring him up in Christ." Hence the importance that teachers be true Christians themselves; because

"We can not teach what we do not know,
And can not lead where we do not go."

"My teacher made me what I am," is a remark often made, and is suggestive of those which are attributed to the teacher in the moulding of habits in early life. The teacher who sees only the written text-book as a part of the pupil's education, has a narrow vision. The teacher himself is the volume most thoroughly studied. And the life daily lived, in and out of the schoolroom, for a series of terms or years, tells strongly on the unfolding of the child nature. "Be what I am as well as what I teach," will find precept and example the most powerful helpers in the teacher's work. For the child is a bundle of habits, and the making of correct ones is a large part of the good teacher's work.

ELEMENTS OF CHARACTER

THE SCHOLAR,

young and old, should constantly attend the Sunday-school. Because, "all to be learned has not yet been taught;" and, "never too old to learn." And as one writer recently wrote, "The grading of studies removes all claims formerly made for the school as a 'baby concern.'" All ought to feel welcome to attend, because it is calculated to do the world good. In conclusion, I will say: Work while the day lasts, that rest may be enjoyed when it closes. The Sunday-school affords a vast field for thought and for diligent action; none should be exempt from its interests, from the little child who can barely lisp the sacred name of Jesus, up to the gray-haired men and women who are ripe in years, but nevertheless come under the teachings of King Immanuel in order that they may go on unto perfection, morally, intellectually, and spiritually.

FRANK J. PIERCE.

Letter Department.

OMAHA, Nebraska, June 4.

Editors Herald: When at Decatur from the 24th to the 26th ultimo I found Bro. Oscar Case there visiting relatives and preaching the word and making ready to go to his mission field in the Dakotas. Oscar is well liked in this field and the Saints are sorry that he could not have remained with them longer.

On the 26th ult. Bro. J. E. Butts baptized three girls into Christ, and we wish them God-speed in "the way of salvation."

Bro. Frederick A. Smith called on us of late while in these parts looking after the interests of the work, and we enjoyed a pleasant visit from him. He was among special friends while here who appreciate the work done by him in the past.

Our late conference held with the Valley Branch closing the 1st inst. was a fairly good one and much enjoyed by the Saints. Two young men were ordained as branch officers, one to act as teacher and the other to serve as deacon. The Spirit seemed to indicate that if these officers would enter into their work at once with diligence, love, forbearance, and perseverance, God would assist and bless them by his Spirit; but a failure to do so will bring disappointment and loss.

Prayer, testimony, and sacrament services were real good and profitable, and the preaching by J. A. Donaldson and James Caffall was good and appreciated. When district officers arrived they found Bro. James Caffall at work making his light to shine through the preaching of the word. He believes in working while it is called to-day so that when the Lord shall come he may be found with the faithful prepared for glory, rest, and eternal life.

Our worthy and energetic officers of the district Sunday-school association were on hand and did their part well. Sr. Alice Schwartz superintendent, and Sr. Wadkin secretary, are model officers, and Bro. Le Roy Wood, our librarian, is doing a good work. If more of our Sunday-school officers and teachers would attend these conventions it would, in the writer's opinion, help the conventions and those attending them.

We need many more example teachers and preachers who can at all times and under all circumstances do as they would be done by, and that, too, without sacrificing the principles of goodness, justice, truth, and mercy. Love is as much an attribute of God and a principle of the gospel as is justice and one will not rob the other. Where the foregoing principles inspire the mind and quicken the soul there is no room for dishonesty, fraud, deceit, hypocrisy, or jealousy, but with a firm reliance on God and a shout of victory the people of God are ever able to press forward. It is indeed pleasant for Saints to dwell together in peace with an ever present consciousness that every one you meet is a friend or brother tried and true, who will not forsake in time of trouble nor betray to an unjust enemy. Such a condition of things the gospel of Christ will bring into existence if but understood and lived up to by those who enter into the church. Where such a condition does not exist there is still room for development and spiritual growth.

Bro. James A. Donaldson is in the field and at work, and was chosen to act as assistant president of the Northern Nebraska District. His permanent address is Woodbine, Harrison County, Iowa. The Saints and officers extend to him a hearty welcome and bid him success in his work.

We think of starting a tent here in Omaha soon. We hope that visiting Saints will not forget that regular services are held at Saints' chapel, 1818 North Twenty-first Street, each Sunday at eleven a. m. and eight p. m., and Sunday-school at half past nine a. m. Come and see us.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, June 4.

Editors Herald: I went to Falls County about the middle of May. Preached a few times at one place in the county, and baptized and confirmed three, two young men and a lady. I expect them to make good members. I learn that one of them has already commenced to work to get others to turn and live. There are very good prospects for some more to come into the kingdom at that point soon. While there I attended the funeral of a little son of Bro. and Sr. J. L. Bryant. A goodly number were present and gave good attention to the services.

I next went to Wheelock, in Robertson County, and through Brazos County, where I preached some to attentive hearers. I hope for good results.

Prospects are some better for the good cause in this section of Texas. I never felt better. The good Lord has abundantly blessed me spiritually of late, for which I am thankful. I want to do more this year than ever in the good cause. I expect a good turnout at our conference at Texas Central Branch in July next. We want to hold meetings for a week after. Come praying for a good time in the service, and God will bless us abundantly.

E. W. NUNLEY.

APPLEDORE, Ontario, May 29.

Editors Herald: Since last addressing your columns I have baptized two, making twenty since fall conference. Considering the interest here manifested, together with a promise made by the Lord to this branch on the first Sunday in the year which it was my fortune to hear, I am on a fair way for having more before our conference meets next month.

To-day is election day and great excitement prevails. On this account I have considered it inadvisable to have meetings during the week, but I am as actively engaged, nevertheless, in canvassing the neighborhood from house to house and inviting the people out for an appointment to come; also in giving them literature in every house and distributing the printed word.

I came here last Saturday, indirectly from Wallaceburg, having spent a few days at Cooperville and Dresden.

During the past few weeks back I have been treated with much courtesy, and with few exceptions I have been invited to come or call again. Catholics and all have shared alike at my hands, and the scholarly divines have been themselves put to the necessity of welcoming me into their castles and discussing the differences between us. To insult me would not send me away; to deny me admittance I would advertise them; and to let me in they must sit down and face the music. I have called on some of the most scholarly men of Western Ontario, in order to hear the strongest that was to be had. What a deep satisfaction to reason with men like that and to witness the utter futility of the ingenuity of man to cope with and to withstand this great heaven-sent message.

I feel gradual improvement in spirit and body.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

PERRY, Iowa, May 31.

Herald Readers: My enjoyment of your communications, and a desire to reciprocate so far as I can, prompts me to once more pen a brief epistle.

My closing labors in the Fremont District were none the less pleasant than previous labor there except in one case where evil influences had destroyed the pleasure of a home, and the freedom of one soul, for the time being. While temporary relief was granted through the name of Jesus the Christ, yet the evil spirit would return, and was welcomed, seemingly, by the member.

Never can I forget the kindness shown me by the Saints and friends of the Fremont District, neither can I forget the willingness which was universally, or almost universally, shown on the part of all to seek for counsel, and to abide thereby, and the glorious results which were experienced. To God be all the praise.

The powers that be having decided that I should labor and have charge of missionary work in the Des Moines District, where my acquaintance was very limited, and so far as I am as yet acquainted the work is in great need of regulating and of spiritual awakening, I entered upon my duties at Boone and Boonesboro the 14th inst., associated with Bro. H. A. McCoy, district president, whom I found to be a very congenial and helpful associate, and who is a friend to those who need help. Every evidence was given that troubles long existing were adjusted, and settled for ever, but the effects of the troubles which have been remains, and must be borne until time and the power of God shall remove it. The spirit of humility and forgiveness was exercised, and the saving power of the gospel shown through this means. Good, liberal souls live at Boone and vicinity, and I felt an attachment for them.

We visited Fraser, and there found Bro. Joseph Buckley, Bro. and Sr. Robert Robinson, Bro. Frank Walters, Srs. Sinclair, Hitchins, Leadham and daughter, with whom we visited and sought to give encouragement. Arrangements had been made for services at the Wolf schoolhouse, a new opening, and where excellent interest was shown. It rained every night while we were there, and yet we had a good attendance each night except Saturday, when it was quite stormy. Urgent invitations for our return were extended, and proffers of homes from two outside families were extended, with several personal invitations to partake of their hospitality.

We came here on Wednesday last, and found conditions existing that were discouraging but I labor in hopes. A good, earnest-hearted class of Saints live here, but on the part of some their faith has not been sufficient to surmount the obstacles in their pathway. Indifference, and the cares of the world seem to be the main hindering causes to progress. Here once existed a lively Sunday-school, a prosperous Religio, and a flourishing branch; but now we find no Sunday-school, no Religio, and a partially disorganized, and drooping branch. While all desire to see the work enlivened and successful, yet too many act as though they thought "they" should do the work necessary to be done, and not "I" should do the part necessary. When will the Saints learn that the more work they are privileged to do the greater will be their reward? Too many are willing that others should do all the work, and they will enjoy the results of it, thus not accepting of the blessed privilege associated with the work of God, that all may work, and serve the Lord with all their soul, might, and mind; and faithful in the occupancy of these privileges celestial glory will be theirs to enjoy.

I go from here to Des Moines Monday and from thence to the district conference at Runnells, Iowa, the 14th.

Any of the scattered members of the district will correspond with me as soon as possible in regard to openings that possibly can be made to tell the gospel story to darkened and dying humanity. I am anxious to occupy where the greatest needs exist, so far and as soon as possible. Men of God, who hold the holy priesthood, neglect no opportunity to occupy. Let your faith be known by your works. Let not the flag be furled, but being the banner bearers, hold the banner of King Emanuel high, so that with satisfaction can the Spirit influence others to look, and by looking see that which will lead them to glorify God by the observance of his commands. I urge as many of the priesthood as can possibly do so, to attend the next district conference. You are needed there for your own and the work's sake.

May God's blessing be upon the work in the Des Moines District, sustaining not only the branch work but also the Sunday-school and Religio, with every other organization for good existing in the church. The missionary force is expected to give proper encouragement to these organizations, and never lose an opportunity to speak a word in their behalf, for they each are a part of the church work.

J. F. MINTUN.

SUNNYSIDE, Utah, May 17.

Dear Herald Readers: I am in an out-of-the-way place here, as it is a small mining camp, and there are no Saints here. But I try to live as near to my teachings as possible, and hope that the time will shortly come when there will be more who see the necessity of preparing themselves for the future.

I rejoice in taking part in the work, and especially the Sunday-school, for I think there is nothing grander than instilling in the little minds the thoughts of a Savior. My desire is that the good work will progress everywhere, and that the time may soon come when more of us will be laborers.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

FLORESVILLE, Texas, May 27.

Editors Herald: In the last six months we have had two visits from Bro. John Harp. He has preached in all six sermons for us, and last Monday he baptized two, my wife and my afflicted sister, who has been sick for about three years. She is feeling better now, and that God may heal her is our prayer. I have been made to rejoice with my dear wife and sister with me in the gospel. I was the only member here. I was baptized September 3, 1893, by Elder John Currie, and I have never doubted the truthfulness of this latter-day work; but many times I have done wrong in the sight of our Master, for which I humbly repent. May God forgive me and I will try and do all I can for his cause.

I would like to see a good branch here at Floresville. Brother Harp has promised to come back here this summer and hold meetings for us, and I think others will obey the gospel. I think there is a great work to be done in our "lone star state," in the land of cotton, and I think all the elders in the church could be used in Texas and be kept busy. I believe there are many honest-hearted people here who will believe the truth when it is presented to them. Brother Harp is surely doing a great work for our Master. May the Lord send more like him to labor in his vineyard.

We take the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and receive much benefit and pleasure from reading them. Would be pained to do without any one of them. We lend them all out to others to read.

Pray for us that we may be faithful to the end.

ED JACKSON.

FAIRBURY, Jefferson Co., Nebraska, June 4.

Dear Herald: Bro. Henry Kemp and I came here on Saturday evening, May 31, and on Sunday, June 1, were permitted to dedicate to the service of God a small church. By a hard and continued effort the few Saints here, by the generous assistance of the citizens who are not of the church, have succeeded in presenting this neat and well-built structure to the Lord. Bro. Edward F. Robertson, of Hebron, offered the opening prayer. Henry Kemp preached the sermon, J. W. Waldsmith, of Nebraska City, offered the dedicatory prayer.

We held three meetings on Sunday, also Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, with fair interest.

We hope that Elder A. J. Myers may regain his health, and yet be able to lift his voice again in the defense of God's truth, to the convincing and converting of many honest souls.

We baptized two Sunday afternoon.

Fraternally,

J. W. WALDSMITH.

LONDON, Ontario, June 1.

Dear Herald: We have had quite a visit from R. C. Evans telling us of the good things of the late conference, and preaching some interesting gospel sermons. There were two baptisms last Sunday, of two promising young sisters. We had a visit from our county judge, Judge Elliot, a man of over eighty years of age. After hearing a sermon on the justice of God in saving all of Adam's posterity, he said it was the finest effort he ever heard. Altogether it was an interesting Sunday for the Saints here and the interest increased while our brother was with us. He is now working his way to our district conference at Port Elgin, where the Saints expect to see our venerable Brother Lake and hear him still bless the Saints with his counsel and fatherly advice. May God still bless him with health and strength to continue faithful.

Between the two conferences the Religio Society here intends having an ice-cream social and entertainment of music and song, the proceeds to be used to obtain a gospel wagon, decorating it with Scripture quotations and going around the city singing the songs of Zion and telling the gospel story. Do you not think the idea famous?

We have an ideal Religio Society here, Sr. Pope, the president, with a full staff of officers always studying to make the meetings interesting. Our social is to be held on the 19th of the present month, when we expect to have Elder Evans as chairman, and a visit from Uncle John. I hope at the end of the season we may reap a harvest of souls.

I feel encouraged with the letters in the HERALD of the progress of the work. I want to try and keep up with its evidences of advancement so that we may walk and not faint. I ask your prayers that success may attend our work here.

WILLIAM FLIGG.

ST. MARYS, Ontario, May 10.

Editors Herald: I arrived home May 7, from Manitoulin Island and Sault St. Marie, Ontario. I have been away since November 4, 1901. Arriving at Manitowaning November 8, I remained on the island until February 10, leaving on that date for the north shore and the Soo. Bro. Smith, a noble man of promise, drove me over, in company with his daughter Lizzie. It was a very long, cold drive of sixty miles, over lakes and islands. We went to Walford, and stopped at the home of Mr. John Budge, a son-in-law of Bro. Smith's. We were kindly received and cared for. Next morning we took early train for Echo Bay, Bro. Smith buying my ticket. I shall long remember his kindness.

I arrived at Echo Bay to find I had eight miles to walk into the country, as I had a brother living that distance out whom I had not seen for twenty years. It was a great surprise to him to see me, as I had not notified him I was coming. I secured the Methodist church there, and had the privilege before leaving of baptizing my brother and his wife and five others, seven in all. I believe a good work will yet be done there.

Twenty-two years ago I spent one winter there. I was then a consistent Methodist, and because I then lived up to what I professed, the people believed there must have been good reasons for me making the change, and gave me a hearing and never once spoke of closing the church. I met a local Methodist preacher there by the name of William Bradley. When asked if he ever met any of the Latter Day Saints he said: "I know Elder George Bushnel well. He is an honorable man and a Christian, and well liked by all who know him." Is it not pleasant to hear those who differ from us speak so well of one of God's servants? He also told the steward of the church privately that Mr. Bushnel was a good man, and I believe what he said had much to do with bringing the steward to a knowledge of the truth, for I baptized him before leaving. I trust Mr. Bradley will yet be identified also with the church. Send him some reading, Bro. George, and write him.

My visit to the Soo was very unsatisfactory. I found some of the Saints there warm and alive to the work, but others cold and dead. There is a mad rush for gold there, and many of the Saints have caught the spirit of speculation, and through the deceitfulness of riches and cares of the world the good seed has become choked; but I believe great good may be accomplished later, as the weather was very bad when I was there and the streets almost impassable.

I left the Soo on April 25, arriving in Manitowaning on the 27th, and remained there till May 5. The outlook on the island is bright for good work to be done. The Saints there are striving hard to let their light shine, and if they will only continue to do right it will have its effect all over the island. May God bless them! One year ago the 27th of June Elder S. W. Tomlinson preached the first sermon ever preached by an elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on the island. To-day we have twenty-five members and two Sunday-schools and many friends. Bitter opposition has been given, yea, most cruel; still the work of God prospers and all is well. Some noble people are rejoicing, others are near the kingdom. God has especially cared for his servants, often in a marvelous way. May he continue to care for his work there is my earnest prayer, and bless the dear people that he has given us in the gospel.

I would like very much to visit the following places in my old field: Mitchell, Hibbert, Stratford, Rostock, McKillop, and Listowell. Dear Saints, in those places named, I have not forgotten you; and if I do not visit you it will be because I can not.

BROOKLYN, New York, June 2.

Editors Herald: Brn. Rushton, Thorburn, and Davis left New York on Saturday afternoon, May 31, at 1:20, on ship Columbia, for Glasgow. We had a very enjoyable time with them through their short sojourn in Brooklyn. Sorry to part. They were very cheerful in leaving.

227 McDougal Street.

VIOLET E. SQUIRE.

BELLAIRE, Michigan, June 3.

Editors Herald: The debate between Bro. J. J. Cornish and Rev. R. B. Brown is progressing nicely. Last night closed the second proposition, making six nights thus far. First proposition, "Joseph and the books," occupied four evenings. Second proposition, "Reorganized Church in harmony with New Testament church," occupied two evenings. The third proposition starts this evening, in which Mr. Brown affirms the Christian Church, of which he is a member, to be in harmony with New Testament Church. Bro. Cornish is feeling well in body and spirit, and has thus far ably acquitted himself as a defender of the restored gospel.

Mr. Brown has largely traversed the old beaten path of his predecessors in like work. Hence I will not take time nor space to present his line of argument.

We are confident that the work is not suffering under Mr. Brown's fire. The Saints of this place are very much encouraged and hopeful of good results from the debate.

I baptized two at Glover on Sunday, May 25. So the good work moves on.

Bro. Cornish just handed me a letter which he received from President Joseph Smith, which says, "I have arranged with Bro. Heman C. Smith to attend conference at Freesoil, June 21, 22, and Shabbona the 28th and 29th." We are pleased to announce to the membership of the district the contemplated visit of our worthy President, and trust we may have a good representation at the conference.

J. A. GRANT.

ST. MARY'S, N. S. W., Australia, May 5.

Editors Herald: I am not a subscriber, but have become acquainted with your pages through the kindness of Elder John Kaler passing his copies on to me. I feel it incumbent on me to express my thankfulness to all my dear brothers and sisters who have taken the pen up in the interest of "truth" and in relating experiences of God's goodness to them, in the time of trouble and adversity, with the object of comforting those Saints who are isolated from branches, and enduring affliction. It is indeed a noble cause, and I can bear testimony to the comfort derived from those "precious pages." I am never too tired to read them, nor do I ever read them and put them down devoid of comfort. To read them is indeed to me sweet communion, as I am one of those isolated ones, being also afflicted, having for the last six months suffered the effects of sunstroke. This affliction came upon me because of unfaithfulness, because of hiding my light under a bushel, and being otherwise indifferent when I had favorable opportunities of furthering the cause. I have been administered to, and the Lord through Elder John Kaler spoke to me and told me that such was the case, and that I would eventually get well, if faithful. I have been made to realize that we can not sin with impunity, nor indeed be slothful servants, when the Lord has decreed that we shall be up and doing.

Our hearts are made sad just now by the projected departure of Brother Kaler, wife, and family for the United States. Bro. John and wife in their long sojourn in this far country have become endeared to many of the Saints by the integrity of character and Christian consistency of life always exhibited by them. And it seems like parting with one's immediate relations to part from them. But we comfort ourselves with the thought that if it is not God's will that we should meet again on this continent we shall, "if faithful," meet again in Zion. And we look forward awaiting that happy time when "the faithful" shall meet again in our Father's kingdom. We wish Bro. John, wife, and children (who are entirely Australian) God-speed on their journey, and hope that the change will be beneficial to our dear Sr. Kaler who has been ailing quite a time now.

The Saints in Australia have been made to rejoice during the visit of our beloved patriarch, Bro. A. H. Smith, in that the blessings conferred on them under his hands have strengthened them and stamped divinity upon the work, and made most of us feel, like the woman of Samaria, to cry out, Come and see the man who told me all things that ever I did.

On hand last report, college fund, $51.10; collected, $10; total, $61.10; paid E. L. Kelley, $51.10; balance on hand, $10. Audited and found correct. Treasurer's report: Due treasurer last report, $1.22; no changes. Recommendation received from Platte Valley Branch for the ordination of Herbert H. Robinson to the office of teacher and Romain G. Brown to the office of deacon, and they were so ordained. A. W. Ballard resigned as district vice-president and J. A. Donaldson was elected to fill the vacancy. Next conference to meet at Columbus, Nebraska, the last Friday in September, 1902, at 7:30 p. m. The president, vice-president, and secretary appointed a committee on two-day meetings. Platte Valley Branch reported improving spiritually. President and secretary instructed to issue licenses to the newly ordained teacher and deacon. Preaching by Elders J. A. Donaldson, James Caffall, and C. E. Butterworth.

Pastoral.

THE CHICAGO MISSION.

Having been assigned the charge ministerially of this portion of the field in Northern Illinois, I wish to say to all interested that I expect to be with you on or before July 1, or as soon as arrangements for removal can be made. We are anxious to be about the business indicated in our calling and appointment, and a proper spirit of uneasiness that must necessarily rest upon those who are legitimately called to warn the people with the fullness of our gospel message, has its influence with us. We trust that the kindly feelings engendered by our first acquaintance with the people in this mission may be wisely nourished and preserved by us, and that if differences of opinion in regard to method or work shall in the future arise, that we shall have and acquire the grace or sense to accredit honesty and good intent, and to remember always that facts necessary to a correct and safe judgment as to motive or manner can rarely be determined by a superficial or one-sided view, and the better way in which to prevent the "root of bitterness" from "entering in and defiling many" is to withhold our enmities in thought even, until "the law of the Lord," which only "is perfect" in the adjudication of differences, be employed in determining all the facts necessary to a just and righteous verdict. I wish here to say in this connection that I do not intend to allow myself to be made partisan to personal differences of any one, and shall try to base my judgments on personal observation, association, and acquaintance. Let us remember James' advice and statement, that, "the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." I can assure you all, the officers and members of the priesthood especially, that I am not at all interested in maintaining or asserting personal prerogatives, and do not care to assume responsibilities whenever they can be legally avoided. The spirit of "vainglory" that always attaches to office-seeking in this Church of Christ must, as sure as the day follows night, sooner or later result in disappointment to every one who indulges in it, because it is the church founded by him who has said, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased," etc. I believe it to be better to make these statements to all in a general way, and in the beginning of our work in Chicago, rather than to make it in personal detail, should occasion arise or circumstances seem to warrant. There is quite a force of ministerial and earnest workers in the city, and we hope to reach many of the "sheep" in that great city who have as yet never heard the real sound of the voice of the Master. Whatever wisdom or practicability may suggest in carrying on or extending our work, as well as encouragement and instruction of Saints, in hall, tent, or street work, we shall, to the extent of our ability, be glad and rejoice in the privilege of assisting in and cooperating with the brethren, with a view to this end. The Bishop's agent for the district, Bro. Midgorden, has requested me to act for him as agent for the branches in Chicago, and contributions in tithing, free-will offerings, etc., will be receipted for by me. Let us not forget our duties and the necessities of the work in this regard. Correspondence may be directed after June 20, for fifteen days, to No. 9 Walnut Street, Chicago, Illinois, care S. C. Good. Permanent address will appear later on. Fraternaly, M. H. Bond.

To the Brethren of the Ministry of Southern Nebraska District: As another conference year has just begun, let us labor with our might and see what can be done in spreading the good news of the gospel of Christ. Let us labor in love with all mankind and with patience, which will bring about the best results. I hope we shall have a good report to offer. Report every three months to me, and I will present the same to our missionary in charge, Bro. Fred A. Smith, and the same will be presented to next General Conference. Let us see what we can do for the cause this year, that the gospel may go to many people who have not heard it before, and thus fulfill the counsel of our Lord and Master. If we sow with a liberal hand we shall reap the reward of the faithful. Praying for you all, I am, your brother and coworker in Christ Jesus, W. M. Self. Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Reunion Notices.

The Massachusetts District reunion will convene at Silver Lake, Massachusetts, August 9, 1902. Those who have attended in the past surely need no recommendation from the committee as to its facilities for camp life. We have a beautiful lake which is supplied by natural springs; one of the most beautiful pine groves with a carpet of needles; plenty of good shade; near enough to the railroad for all conveniences for travel, and yet away from the village far enough to get away from all noise or disturbances. Board will be furnished on the grounds for all who do not desire to do their own cooking, or better yet, if all would do away with their own cooking and join in with us on the commissary, we would be glad to run it on the cooperative plan, but it could hardly be made a success unless we could have everybody support it. Cot beds and tents will be furnished also at a very reasonable figure. Prices will be announced as soon as possible for all of these supplies. Your committee will do the best it can for your convenience and comfort. Let everybody make their plans for August 9 so that we may have the largest and best reunion we have ever had. We have two missionaries in charge this year whose headquarters are in the East, besides quite a sprinkling of other conference appointees and other laborers, so that we shall not want for any good thing along spiritual lines. M. C. Fisher, O. L. Newcomb, Adolph Leckney, Committee.

Conference Notices.

The Atchison, Kansas, Branch has appointed a committee to meet strangers at the depot who may attend the Northeastern Kansas District conference to be held June 14 and 15. Look for the man with a blue ribbon on his lapel.

Far West District will convene on Saturday, June 21, ten a. m., with Delano Branch, four miles north of Cameron, Missouri.

St. Louis District will convene in the Rock Church, 1240 Glasgow Avenue, St. Louis, Saturday evening, June 21, at eight o'clock.

Idaho District will convene at Malad City, Saturday, June 28 and 29, at ten a. m.

Married.

HORNER—NORTHCUTT.—On the evening of May 28, 1902, at the residence of Dr. J. B. Horner, Lamoni, Mr. Ernest Eugene Horner to Miss Ida May Northcutt, both of Lamoni. Guests to the number of one hundred witnessed the ceremony and sat down to an enjoyable wedding feast. Mr. Ernest Horner is one of Lamoni's best young men and the bride, so long known as Miss Ida Marks and for years a faithful worker in the HERALD Office, is one of Lamoni's worthy young sisters. Only one, however, for be it known that there are no superiors to the young men and women of Lamoni for worthiness and integrity to be found anywhere. May the young couple have the Lord with them in a long and happy journey of wedded bliss. Ceremony by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

Mothers and Fathers.

The admonition to teach the children the principles of the doctrine of Christ never had more significance than in this wicked and perverse generation. Every parent who has undertaken to heed this instruction from the Lord and to try to teach the very little ones has felt the need of help and suggestions. A splendid aid in this important work is furnished in the Study Hour, a quarterly for the use of the teachers of the "very little ones" in the Sunday-school. You can use this in your home instruction as well as in the Sunday-school. It contains lessons in gospel truths and moral ethics drawn from the things of nature and from the lives of Jesus and good men. This helpful little quarterly is published by the General Sunday-school Association of the church, and may be ordered of Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Price 10 cents per quarter.

To Boston and Return at One Half Fare via New York City.

If desired for the round trip via Nickel Plate Road, for Christian Scientists' meeting in June. Tickets on sale June 12, 13, and 14, with extended return limit of July 31. Let Us Tell You About It.

Murat Halstead has written a book of nearly 500 8x10-inch pages, with 100 illustrations, giving a most graphic account of the frightful disaster in Martinique and St. Vincent, supplemented with vivid and glowing accounts of similar disasters in the world's history from those of the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum by the giant Vesuvius to the present time, including the explosion of Krakatoa in the Indian Ocean causing a tidal wave to encircle the earth; and frightful eruptions of Heckla, and of Skafta that depopulated Iceland, the New Madrid convulsions in the Mississippi Valley, and all the lesser eruptions and convulsions caused by the fermented bowels of mother earth, together with a scientific treatise on the conditions and causes of volcanic eruptions imperiling the future of the earth.

Mr. Halstead has personally visited the islands of the American Indies, those of Hawaii and of the Indian and Pacific Oceans, and visited Iceland and in company with the King of Denmark viewed the great volcanoes on that island. He therefore writes from a personal experience as no author of a similar book can do.

TERMS BY THE "CHURCH OF CHRIST."

The following question in substance was asked of Elders John R. Haldeman and George Frisbey, while on their late visit to Lamoni: "Upon what terms will those whom you have invited to take part in the building of the temple which you say the Church of Christ is going to build, be permitted to take part in that work?" In reply, Elder Haldeman named a number of things necessary to be believed, and added: "They must not believe in baptism for the dead, plurality of gods, nor plurality of wives."

Many of those who heard his invitation to join in the work of building the temple were interested in ascertaining what would be the prerequisites to an acceptance of the invitation and giving the aid they might be disposed to offer. He named several things needful to be believed, but reserved the question to be more fully answered by the brethren after consultation. But these items not to be believed he seemed to be clear upon.

Paul was of the opinion at the time he wrote to the Corinthians that there were "gods many and lords many," yet to them who believed there was "one God, the Father," and "one Lord, Jesus Christ." Whether two would be classed as a plurality we may not say; but we have long been of the belief that there were two personages in the Godhead; and thought it to be possible that in the mutability of human events there might be "lords many and gods many," without infringing on the fact of there being "one Lord, one faith, one spirit," and "one God over all," for the true believer.

Who was intended to be excluded by Elder Haldeman when he made this statement we, of course, do not know. But why it should have been made at all is not so easy to determine; for if a man should confess to the beliefs declared to be essential as being prerequisite, by what rule of right can inquiry be made as to a man's beliefs other than those deemed essential.

Are not men entitled to the exercise of private judgment and beliefs upon the varied disputed points over which controversy has been waged for many years? Or is it to be a fact that, notwithstanding a confession of belief in certain dogmas is to be required, there must also be a confession of unbelief in certain proscribed theories before one is accepted, Philip said, "If thou believest thou mayest;" the Eunuch replied, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Upon this confession Philip baptized the man.

There is a little statement in the 8th of John's gospel that reads thus: "Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the scripture can not be broken; say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God."

In Psalms 82, this occurs: "God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods." "I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the Most High. But ye shall die like men, and fall like one of the princes."

It is not likely that any formal set of questions touching beliefs and unbeliefs will be formulated, but if there is, we shall be pleased to be permitted to lay it before the readers of the HERALD.

"SHUT YOUR DOORS ON THE 'MORMONS.'"

The following appeared in the Messenger, a weekly paper published at Owensville, Indiana, published in the "interest of General Baptists, and all other Open-Communion Baptists," of which the editor is James P. Cox:

MORMONISM.

One of the most cunning systems of false religion is Mormonism. Its missionary agents are almost everywhere. Often they are smooth, well-dressed, polite, but persistent and tireless in their efforts to make proselytes. Generally they are found in companies of two or three. They scatter their tracts and other literature on every hand. They talk religion and quote the Bible with glib tongue; and would deceive many Christian people who are not informed. It is claimed there are thousands of these agents or missionaries now in the field. It is high time all Christians were awake to the wiles of Mormonism.

How shall we treat them? Do not receive them into your homes, or give them the least aid or comfort. Shall we permit them to speak in our churches? Not at all. But our ministers should inform themselves as fully as possible about the whole wicked system of Mormonism, and warn the people against these wolves in sheep's clothing.

Good anti-Mormonism tracts may be bought cheap of the "League for Social Service," 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City; Evangelist R. B. Neal, Grayson, Kentucky; and the Journal, Oakland City, Indiana. We must scatter information among the people; and these and similar tracts should be distributed on all hands. Do not fail to aid in this righteous battle against this whole false and wicked system of Mormonism.

T. H. DRAKE.

OAKLAND CITY, Indiana.

The foregoing is a fair sample of the way many of the ministers of the various churches meet the question of Mormonism. They brand it as being something terribly false and shocking, and yet advise their members to refuse to investigate at all, and even to refuse to aid in any way the missionaries of the "Mormons." It seems to us that if "Mormonism" were something so horrid as these ministers claim, then the very best way to keep people out of it would be to let the people investigate it to the fullest extent possible.

The writer in the article quoted does not discriminate at all between the kinds of "Mormonism," making no effort to note the difference between the Reorganized Church, which teaches what has been called "Mormonism," and the Utah church, which teaches other things which have been called "Mormonism."

The writer in the Messenger makes the following statements: "How shall we treat them? Do not receive them into your homes, or give them the least aid or comfort. Shall we permit them to speak in our churches? Not at all." We can not but think that a person who would give such advice as that to searchers for truth is not impelled by the motives of truth. It is the spirit of persecution, the same that killed the Christ and the apostles. It lacks the essential element of Christianity, the spirit of brotherly love. If the "Mormons" are so terribly deluded, the part of a Christian would be to take them into our homes, talk with them, reason with them, and show them the errors of their ways. If the reason for the faith within us is not sufficient to refute the arguments of the "Mormons," then we had best become more firmly grounded in our faith by brushing up against some of their arguments.

For shame that a minister who professes to be a follower of Christ would advise such unchristianlike treatment to any of God's creatures! The tramps and idlers of the world get better treatment at the hands of these very people. These same ministers will advise people not to turn away hungry any human creature, no matter how low; yet to the "polite, but persistent and tireless" "Mormon" missionary their doors are to be closed. For shame!

GOOD RULES FOR PUBLIC SERVICE.

The Northwestern Railway has instituted a new departure in rules for employees; as see the following:

Chicago, May 22.—Officials of the Chicago & Northwestern road have begun a campaign against the use of tobacco in any form by employees of the passenger department while on duty. In the new book of operating rules which has just gone into effect over the entire Northwestern system, are several general rules of conduct. Among the latter is the following:

"The use of tobacco by employees when on duty in or about passenger stations or on passenger cars is prohibited."

The management has also tabooed loose pecuniary practices. Rule M says: "An assignment of wages by an employee is prohibited and will be the cause for dismissal."

This is followed by Rule N, which provides that "it will be cause for dismissal of that employee who has twice subjected this company to the service of a garnishment order on his pay."

Rules of the most stringent kind are also incorporated against the use of intoxicants or the frequenting of places where they are sold. An employee who does either is liable to immediate dismissal.

It is not such a great number of years ago since the strong ground taken by the Saints against the use of tobacco was something of a joke in the mouths of others; but the manifest injurious effect of the use of the weed in unfitting men for places of trust in employment requiring a cool head and steady nerves in services where men's lives and property were at stake, has been forced upon public attention, and companies like the Northwestern have evidently determined to be on the safe side.

Quit it! Young man, quit it, and make yourself a safe workman for any place.

MANY BIBLES ISSUED.

The following from the Literary Digest for May 31 shows the scope of the work being done by the American Bible Society:

The eighty-sixth annual report of the American Bible Society shows that 1,723,791 copies of the Bible were distributed at home and abroad last year. This is an increase of 169,663 over the issues of the previous year. Of these, 686,755 were distributed in the United States, and 1,037,036 in foreign lands. One half of the total number were manufactured at the Bible House, New York; of the remainder, a large part were printed in China, Japan, Siam, Syria, and Turkey. Under the oversight of twelve agents and of other correspondents of the society in foreign lands, 399 persons are reported to have been employed during the year distributing Bibles, the average time of actual service being about seven months.

THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD ON PROPHECYING.

The Christian Standard, for May 31, takes up the question of prophesying, in a unique manner. The Saints join the writer referred to in the expressions, "Prophecy ought to be more common to-day than ever before. God is not dead nor retired from business, hence his work can not yet be done."

This is only in harmony with Moses' expression, "I would to God that all the Lord's people were prophets." When the "intuitional knowledge and personal acquaintance" with God shall be accomplished, then the time will have come when prophecy will fail, tongues cease, and knowledge (earthly knowledge) will vanish away. There is abundant reason for believing that the spirit of prophecy is abroad in the land, and whether there be lords many or gods many, there are many prophets. We gladly hail the day when there shall be more inspirational teaching among those who make profession of belief in Christ.

Read what we quote from the Christian Standard below:

PROPHECYING.

While Professor Willett is showing the men, women, and children who read Chicago dailies, that their Bible is wrong on the subject of creation, the Christian Century takes up the subject of prophesying, and on May 8 informs its readers, through an editorial, that "the man who speaks for God a message which his generation needs, which he has derived from acquaintance with God's character and knowledge of his purpose, is a true prophet, whether he belong to the dim past of Israel's history or in the dawning of the present century." If this is true, I must be a true prophet, though I never suspected it; for I have spoken several messages which I have derived from acquaintance with God's character, and which my generation needs on the subject of skeptical theories about prophesying and the creation; but, like the other true prophets of whom I read in the Bible, I have met with certain critics who are so stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears that they will not receive my message.

The writer of this editorial must be a true prophet also; for he not only makes this revelation, but he informs us that "prophecy ought to be more common to-day than ever before. God is neither dead nor retired from business, hence his work can not yet be done." I have never thought that the cessation of prophesying was evidence that God was either dead or retired from business. I have thought that God has ceased this part of his former business because he had done enough of it. And I am not bold enough to unite with this editor in saying "prophecy ought to be more common to-day than ever before." I think that God knows better about that than I do, and that he would renew this part of his business if he only knew he ought to. Perhaps he will accept the rebuke of the Christian Century, and hereafter follow its advice. This new prophet makes an improvement on the old Prophet Jeremiah. While the latter predicts the day when all the true Israel of God will know the Lord, from the least of them to the greatest, this Christian Century prophet adds, "And that, too, not merely from instruction, but by intuitional knowledge and personal acquaintance with him." When that time comes, we shall not have to study the Bible in order to know God; and what a relief that will be to editors who are constantly exposing their ignorance of the Bible. It seems to have come already with some men, and this accounts for the fact that they know just what is true and not true in God's account of creation.

MRS. WILCOX AND SPIRITUALISM.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox has given in the American, of Chicago, a very clear and striking statement in regard to mediums and their messages from the other world. Those who have attempted to investigate modern spiritualism, and have kept their faith in God and Christ intact, or have not wholly consented to be blinded by specious attestations of genuineness made by mediums advertising their business, will remember that their experiences have enabled them to reach similar conclusions as Mrs. Wilcox has, that it is "foolish, dangerous, and wrong to appeal to those who have passed from this world unto the world beyond for message upon earthly subjects." The Saints believe in making their appeals to God through Jesus Christ, and are willing to permit him to dictate both as to what is communicated for their instruction and the manner of its communication. We give place to the statement made by Mrs. Wilcox, believing that it will be helpful to many of the readers of the HERALD.

THE MESSAGE AND THE MEDIUM.

"Dear Mrs. Wilcox: A party went to a "Spiritualistic meeting" at the corner of Exeter and Newbury Streets, Boston, and in the course of the speaker's discourse he remarked that you are a Spiritualist. The "spirits" came in profusion, with an immense sheet thrown over them in the Egyptian style (?). We think it the greatest humbug ever perpetrated on the public, and would thank you to give your views on such nonsense. We hardly think it credible that such an enlightened person as yourself could really believe that the woman under the sheet came from another world, yet such was the assertion of the speaker. These "spirits" are nicely behaved all the week, only appearing for a few moments Sunday nights.

"SUDBURY."

I have attended similar meetings in Boston and elsewhere, and never saw anything which impressed me as other than rank blasphemous fraud. A lady once took me to a "materializing" seance and assured me her dead daughter appeared to her there every week. She was an educated and gifted woman, with a beautiful daughter on earth, whose life I knew more about than did her mother. The "spirit" of the dead girl was finally announced, in a darkened room, and a more ridiculous performance was never perpetrated upon credulous sorrow. Save for the notoriety attached to such a situation, I would have turned on the lights and unmasked the blasphemers, whose tricks were palpable to any sane mind.

I urged my friend to give her time and attention to her living daughter and leave God to care for the spirit of the one who had passed on. The lady thought me "unsympathetic" and prejudiced, and continued her devotion to the "materializations," while her living daughter was on the road to ruin in less than a year through the lack of maternal vigilance and affection.

Nevertheless I believe that the spirits of our dear ones do at times return to us, to comfort, guide, and cheer. I believe hundreds of well authenticated instances exist where these spirit forms have been seen—not in darkened rooms, under linen sheets, but in broad light, and in their own likeness.

I believe thousands of instances have occurred where messages have been received from them, and I have no doubt that we are often visited by departed friends, whose presence we vaguely feel, but whom we can not see or hear. Since such visitations are our only absolute proof of a future life, I fail to understand why religious people cry out against a belief in spirit return. The Bible is full of such occurrences, and God's universe is the same to-day as it was in those historic times.

Meantime I feel that since the spirit life is the more advanced life, we should not intrude upon its higher usefulness by continual contempts to bring our friends back to earth. Let them make the advances.

It is easily understood how one in great bereavement haunts the mediums and clairvoyants, hoping for a message from a dear one to break the awful silence of the grave. That such messages have been received I have no doubt. That I myself have received them I am confident, but such occurrences have been rare, while my investigations have been frequent.

Many messages given are clearly the result of mental telepathy—the mind of the medium receiving the intense desire of the visitor and giving it back as a communication from the spirit world. There is no questioning the fact that some people are endowed with what might be termed a spiritual telephone, just as others have mechanical, musical, or mathematical genius. But even as the earthly telephone at times is unreliable, and "Central" does not always make the right connections, so these spiritual wires are not always to be relied upon.

It is foolish, dangerous, and wrong to appeal to our friends who have passed into another world for advice and counsel upon every earthly subject. Nothing but harm can result from a constant effort to bring back disembodied spirits. They have their own work to do, and we are here to work out our own destinies, to decide our own problems, and to live our own lives. No one in this world or the next can do these things for us. We are scholars in school, and we must not appeal to the graduates to come back from the busy world to give us the answers to all life's problems.

The moment those endowed with the power to communicate with spirit realms use those powers as a means of earning money they become unreliable for obvious reasons. We have only to observe the almost invariable mental and physical degeneration of the professional medium to realize that the Creator never intended such gifts to be used for material gain.

I am confident we are all often surrounded by bands of invisible forces, spirits in various phases of development who are interested in our welfare. They are God's messengers, sent to cheer and help struggling humanity. Call upon them—believe in them, but keep away from the materializing seance and let your visits to the professional medium be rare. Believe in your own divine self and in the God of Love, and all will be well with you.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Have district conferences power, under the law, to provide for the organization of branches?

If a district conference does so provide for organization of a branch, is there any one having power, under the law to change or set aside the order of conference?

"Branches are the primary and congregational organizations of the church, and may be formed wherever six or more members in good standing may be resident in any one neighborhood, one of whom must be an elder, a priest, a teacher, or a deacon. Such organizations may be effected by the missionary in charge, or by the district president, with the consent and direction of the missionary in charge, when circumstances prevent the latter from being present, or by order of the conferences."

The word "conferences" in the above quotation from Book of Rules, page 9, means district conferences if the branch sought to be organized is in an organized district; to General Conference if in an unorganized district.

PATRIARCH SMITH AT HONOLULU, HAWAII.

The Pacific Commercial Advertiser, published at Honolulu, in its issue for May 28, 1902, has a long and excellent article on the Reorganization, inspired by the arrival of Bro. A. H. Smith at that city en route from Australia to San Francisco, California, and home.

There is also a good editorial notice, which we give:

The arrival of Alexander Smith, son of Joseph Smith the martyred founder of the Church of Latter Day Saints, is likely to create a special interest in the phase of religious work which has been carried on here for several years by Gilbert J. Waller. There are two so-called Mormon churches in Hawaii, the Utah connection being the largest. The church of which Alexander Smith is patriarch and Mr. Waller high priest for Hawaii, is called the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, but is, in reality, the original church of that faith. It is the distinctive one founded by Joseph Smith and has always stoutly opposed the tenets of polygamy and blood atonement which marked the Utah apostasy. As Mr. Smith will hold special meetings while here it is quite possible that the Reorganized Church will gain at the expense of the other organization as well as from other sources of membership supply.

Bro. Smith will probably reach home about July 1, a few days less than a year since he left it.

In the Christian Leader, published at Cincinnati, Ohio, in its issue for June 10 is the following:

"In the Leader of May 20 Bro. D. McDougall, in his 'Maritime Jottings,' used two hypothetical statements in his reference to Clark Braden. We are sure Bro. McD. used these expressions solely as illustrations and without a thought of their being taken literally. Bro. Braden feels aggrieved, and especially as the Mormons have published the statements as direct charges against him. We can easily see how much evil could be done him in this way by their unprincipled journals. Had we even the remotest thought that the statements would have been taken literally, we would not have published them."

A marked copy of the Leader containing the foregoing was sent us, and we give it space. We do not know what journals are classed by the editor of the Leader as the "unprincipled journals," nor have we seen the statements to which the Leader refers, and do not know of any one using them against Mr. Braden. If any of our ministers or people have seen the statements referred to, we trust they will take due note of the explanation by the Leader, and give justice where justice is due.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Brother C. L. Snow writes from Kirksey, Kentucky, June 5: "I was called home the next morning after I got to my field of labor. May 29 our little five-year-old daughter was accidentally killed while playing with a buggy. The buggy ran down the hill, and she was swinging on the back end, when it struck a tree and caught her between the axle and the tree and broke her neck. I got home in time to be at her burial. This has been a great shock to us. My wife came very near dying of heart failure at the time. She is up now, but not well. I will be compelled to stay with her until she recovers. Think I will be able to go back to South Pittsburg by the 15th of June if my wife keeps getting better. South Pittsburg, Tennessee, will be my mission address until October."

Bro. J. Arber, of Bothwell, Scotland, writes: "We are glad to hear of the splendid conference just closed, and are anxiously looking forward to the return of our esteemed Bro. Rushton, along with our colaborer Bro. Thorburn. We are doing nicely here."

J. H. Parr recently wrote from Napa Junction, California: "I have been preaching in Yountville, eighteen miles from my home, every other Sunday all last winter, and this summer only on the first Sunday of each month. I expect to do some troubling of the water, for I have three names for baptism and others investigating. Others are trying to harm our work. The Christians or Campbellites are distributing R. B. Neal's tracts, also the letters of the apostate Ezra Booth."

Under date of June 11 W. E. La Rue writes to President Joseph Smith from Philadelphia: "I returned from Easton, Pennsylvania, yesterday, where I had been trying to open up the work. Preached five times, with some interest; but because of so much being said against us in the press of late, the dark clouds of prejudice, intensified by the interdenominational movement against us, makes it a hard fight indeed."

Under date of June 10, L. E. Hills writes from Marion, Iowa: "I am forming a club for a fine archæological magazine published in Washington, District of Columbia, by the Archæological Exploration Society. To those who will send me one dollar fifty cents, I will have the magazine sent for one year. This offer holds good for sixty days. I have just returned from DeWitt, Iowa, where I baptized one lady on the 8th instant."

L. G. Gurwell writes from Linn, Missouri, sending in three new names as subscribers for the HERALD. He wishes the HERALD was in the home of every Saint. He writes: "I have been with the Vosholl Branch since coming to my field of labor May 2. Am very busy. Because of crop failure last year the Saints are striving for the bread which perisheth, not forgetting, however, the weightier things. Crops are good here this year, and wheat harvest begins this week."

Under date of June 11, W. A. Smith writes from Independence, Missouri: "My mother died yesterday morning. We start with her remains this afternoon to Oklahoma. We are sad, but we say, 'God's will be done.' Please remember me and mine before our heavenly Father."

We have received from the Winona Lake, Indiana, Assembly, complimentary pass to the grounds. The gates were opened May 15, but the formal opening will be on Monday, July 7. Captain Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac, Miss Helen M. Stone, General Fitzhugh Lee, and other celebrities will be there as speakers. Several conventions will be held in the month of June, one of which is the Western Association of Writers, which will meet June 23 to 28. Another special day which will be of interest to many will be Capital and Labor Day, July 28, when Senator Mark Hanna and Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, will be the speakers. Winona Lake Assembly this year promises to be a good one.

Sr. Nancy Shaw writes from Winslow, Arkansas, the 13th inst.: "The Utah elders came here and talked so fairly they got husband and myself into their church; but I never have enjoyed myself as in the Reorganized Church. God sent Bro. S. D. Love to our rescue, who baptized us back into the true church, and by the help of God we will stay with it. Bro. Love is baptizing others of the Utah church here."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

One of our missionaries, alive to the interests of the publishing department of the work, sends us three new subscribers for the HERALD and says he will send more soon. What an impetus the work would receive if all were as zealous.

A sister sending fifty cents for the Hope also sends "one dollar fifty cents for the Hope received seven or eight years ago. It was when we were too poor to pay." In her prosperity she does not forget that the Lord's work must be carried on by the use of means. If all would follow her example the publishing department would be free from debt.

We are glad to see by notice found in another column of this issue that the Seventh Quorum of Elders, in the British Isles, is organized sufficiently to begin holding regular sessions. Its first session will be held in August next. We feel sure the British brethren will derive much benefit from quorum meetings, as do the American brethren. Those interested in the Seventh Quorum please read Bro. Greenwood's call in this issue.

Sr. Ella M. Fuhr, who lives ten miles from Fairbank, near Grove Hill, Iowa, will be pleased if elders passing that way will call on them. Her post-office address is Grove Hill. She is an invalid, but hopeful for good.

Bro. Peter Anderson, of the Twelve, living at Stanbury, Missouri, paid Lamoni a flying visit June 10. He and Bro. Griffiths expect to sail from New York on July 23, en route for their mission fields.

Mary M. Green writes from Appledore, Ontario, June 11: "We are busy preparing for conventions and conference. Elder Alvin Knisley is spending a few weeks at Lindsey preaching and visiting. Good interest. Look for some good results to follow."

President Joseph Smith returned Monday from Cleveland, Iowa, where on Sunday he preached the dedicatory sermon of the new church building there. The services were in charge of E. B. Morgan, and R. M. Elvin opened same with prayer, the dedicatory prayer being offered by J. C. Clapp. The Cleveland Saints have thus dedicated to the service of God a church building free from debt, and which had cost them something over eleven hundred dollars.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College is expecting to have the next catalogue out soon, and those who are anticipating attending school for the coming year, who desire catalogues, may obtain copies by addressing I. W. Allender, secretary of the Board. The Board is making a great effort to put the school on a still better working basis, and our young people who are contemplating leaving home for school should by all means make up their minds to come to Graceland. We must rally to the support of our school by sending our means, those of us who can, and those who are ready to attend college by scheduling at Graceland. Efforts are being put forth by the Board to make the school par excellence, and the Saints should come to the aid of the Board in every way possible. Let us all do what we can to make the attendance at Graceland next year the very best yet. Awake, Saints, and to the support of your school. We are convinced that Graceland has a distinctive mission, and it is our duty to see that the school is enabled to enter fully in upon that work.

In April last a new comet was added to the already large list of comets. The new one was discovered by Doctor William R. Brooks. It is called after the discoverer, and makes a revolution around the sun every three hundred twenty days. It is said to have the shortest period of any comet known. The shortest heretofore discovered was Enck's comet, which has a period of three and one half years. Doctor Brooks made his astronomical find on April 14.

We have received from the Iowa Department of Agriculture complimentary ticket to the State Fair to be held August 22-30. This year's Fair promises to be an exceptionally good one, and especially in the line of stock displays.

The people of the Independence Stake seem to be moving out in earnest along the lines of coöperation. Our readers will note by the supplement published this week that one of their latest moves is the organization of a coal company which seems to be operating along coöperative lines. We are glad to see them moving out, and wish them success. What is the Lamoni Stake doing? Who can tell?

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

I desire to give some reasons why I believe the midnight cry of Matthew 25: 5 was the restoration of the gospel, and came to the church in the wilderness, or the people of God in Babylon. That when "all slumbered and slept" was after the apostasy of the apostolic church, and before the restoration of the gospel in this generation. I have so understood it for years, and if my position be correct others will see it that have not so understood it. I will insert the parable that we may have it before us:

And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five of them were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Lest there be not enough for us and you, go you rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, You know me not. Watch therefore; for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh. Now I will liken these things unto a parable. For it is like as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway went on his journey. Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the same; and gained other five talents. And likewise he who received two talents, he also gained other two. But he who had received one, went and digged in the earth and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of these servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.—Matt. 25: 1-19, I. T.

All know what followed. Two were rewarded and one rejected. In one, half were wise; in the other, two thirds; and both represent Christ and his people.

The tarrying time, the time the lord of those servants was gone, covers the whole period from the time Christ was here and went away, until the Bridegroom returns to the church to reward his servants. Therefore it comprehends the work of the church all these centuries collectively, and every one that has had anything committed to him individually in the Lord's vineyard.

In the Book of Mormon, Alma 9: 6, we learn the manner of God's calling and ordaining: "The Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order. . . . And this is the manner after which they were ordained: being called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works. . . . Now they were ordained after this manner."

This shows that because of God's foreknowledge, he knows who will be obedient, who will be qualified for the different positions in his work, and so calls, ordains, or appoints from the foundation of the world. This shows God may have a people, or what is termed "the church in the wilderness," and men know nothing about it.

In Doctrine and Covenants 34: 2, it is said of Sydney Rigdon: "Behold, thou was sent forth even as John, to prepare the way before me, and before Elijah which should come, and thou knew it not."

And again to others (84: 3): "Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God."

This shows how Christ may have a people called the church in the wilderness, and no visible organization among men, but known, appointed, and sent of God to do a work, and not even know it themselves. This is evidently the class spoken of in Revelation 18: 4, 5: "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." This shows God had a people in Babylon, mixed up among the nations.

This is their condition as Isaiah saw. The spirit of deep sleep is poured out on all nations, including the people of God, or church in the wilderness. "For, behold, the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep. For, behold, ye have closed your eyes, and ye have rejected the prophets, and your rulers; and the seers hath he covered because of your iniquities."—Isaiah 29: 10, I. T. The church was driven into the wilderness and the world engulfed in spiritual darkness for hundreds of years. All were spiritually asleep. Even after the reformation, and until the restoration of the gospel, they were like hungry or thirsty men who dreamed they ate and drank; thought they had that which was satisfactory. But when the cry came from heaven in the restoration, and the elders were commanded to go to all nations and preach this gospel as a witness, warn the world and call out God's elect, saying, "Awake, and arise, and go forth to meet the Bridegroom;" "Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," and they received the message of life and waked up; saw they had been mistaken where they were before the fullness of the gospel reached them; received the witness of the Spirit and the knowledge of the truth, then they realized their true condition. They must come out of Babylon into the true fold of Christ.

So we have the Lord saying in Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3: "This, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness." And again, 32: 2: "And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me and hearken unto my voice." This makes it plain that the call from heaven goes to the church in the wilderness and calls them out of the wilderness.

In Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2 the Lord says to the elders: "And ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked."

This makes it clear that this gospel calls God's people out of Babylon, the church out of the wilderness, and prepares them in all things for what is coming on the world, and to meet the Bridegroom at his coming. Section 108, paragraphs 1-5, make it perfectly clear to my mind that the proclamation of the restored gospel is the midnight cry of Matthew 25: 5, and we need not expect this command to come to the church in the future at any time. We will need instructions, no doubt, how to accomplish the work in all its details; but the call to come out has been and is being made.

Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. . . . Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon. But verily thus saith the Lord, Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back, lest sudden destruction shall come upon him. Hearken and hear O ye inhabitants of the earth. Listen, ye elders of my church together, and hear the voice of the Lord, for he calleth upon all men and he commandeth all men everywhere to repent; for, behold, the Lord God hath sent forth the angel, crying through the midst of heaven, saying: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight, for the hour of his coming is nigh, when the Lamb shall stand upon Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty-four thousand, having his father's name written in their foreheads; wherefore, prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him.—D. C. 108: 3-5.

Comment could not make this plainer than it is stated; that the proclamation of the gospel is the cry from heaven to go to all nations; to the people of God in Babylon, which is the church in the wilderness, the elect of God, called and appointed from the foundation of the world according to the foreknowledge of God. This cry can not come to the church after it is called out of the wilderness and properly organized, for Christ is to come to the church, and she is now making herself ready, being the bride, the Lamb's wife. She is to be called out of Babylon and called or gathered to Zion.

In Psalms 102: 16 we read: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." It is made clear that when we receive the gospel is when we begin the preparation to meet the Bridegroom. In Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3: "And the Book of Mormon, and the Holy Scriptures, are given of me for your instruction; and the power of my Spirit quickeneth all things; wherefore, be faithful, praying always, having your lamps trimmed and burning, and oil with you, that you may be ready at the coming of the Bridegroom; for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that I come quickly; even so. Amen." The Scriptures, commandment, or word of God is called a lamp. (Ps. 119: 105; Prov. 6: 23.) The oil represents the Holy Spirit, evidently. The spirit of man is called the candle of the Lord. This language all being figurative, it is not hard to understand what is intended in this quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3; study the Scriptures, Book of Mormon, Holy Scriptures; pray always, so you may have the Holy Spirit to enlighten your minds, and be faithful, and by this means prepare and be ready to meet the Bridegroom. Not by some cry yet to come.

Section 34, paragraph 5, makes it clear that the elect will not go to sleep after they are waked up. It reads: "And the scriptures shall be given even as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect; for they will hear my voice, and shall see me, and shall not be asleep, and shall abide the day of my coming, for they shall be purified even as I am pure." Paul says: "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." It will not do to say that all will go to sleep again after they wake up and receive the gospel. It is contrary to our own knowledge and experience. We have known many who, after receiving the gospel, remained faithful to the end. And it is also contrary to the written word. Some, or even many, may go to sleep again, but not all. The elect will not go to sleep after they get from under the "deep sleep" of Babylon. If such are here when he comes they will be awake, and if gone, Christ will bring them with him.

The work of the church has ever been the same in all dispensations; to establish righteousness in the earth and prepare a people to dwell with Christ in his eternal kingdom in glory, and includes all from Adam until Christ comes, the faithful in the first, third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours or dispensations as shown in Matthew 20: 1-15. The same thought is set forth in Book of Mormon, Jacob 3; that God established his people in different parts of the earth and at different times, and all that brought forth good fruit in any age are to enjoy the fruits of their labor with Christ. This same broad meaning attaches to Christ's statement concerning the church in Matthew 16: 19 when he said, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He knew there would be a falling away, and the man of sin be revealed, and the church be driven into the wilderness. But he also knew he would bring it out again. This conflict between Lucifer and Christ has been going on all the time ever since Lucifer was cast out of heaven and became Satan or the dragon. "And the dragon prevailed not against Michael, neither the child, nor the woman which was the church of God, who had been delivered of her pains, and brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ."—Rev. 12: 7. This conflict is still going on and will continue until Satan is bound, the reign of Christ becomes universal, the church triumphs, and she is delivered from the conflict with the evil one. But now we are yet in the struggle and will be until the church becomes "sanctified, . . . fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws."—D. C. 102: 9. The church is still laboring in travail and pain, praying for deliverance from this condition to the higher one, working to establish the kingdom of God and Christ, endeavoring to prepare for the coming of the Bridegroom when his bride has made herself ready, and we enter into the millennium and Christ's reign is made universal.

The gospel as restored by angelic ministration, in this generation, is the midnight cry, and the only means of preparation to meet the Bridegroom; for it is the power of God unto salvation, unto every one that believes and obeys it. It came to the world when the church was in the wilderness, the people of God in Babylon, mixed in among the nations, and the spirit of deep sleep over all. It came to call the people of God out of Babylon and establish them in Zion.

The wise virgins are the ones where the seed fell on good ground, and they brought forth fruit (Matthew 13: 21); the faithful workers in the church, living so as to retain the Holy Spirit and preparing to enter in and occupy with the Bridegroom when he comes. The foolish virgins are those where the seed fell on stony ground and among the thorns. They received the gospel, and the Spirit when the message was taken to them; but failed to continue faithful; the deceitfulness of riches, the cares of the world, and other causes make them neglect duty; the Spirit is grieved and leaves them; hence no oil in their vessels. As a consequence they are unprepared to enter in and occupy when the Bridegroom comes. They did not improve the talent intrusted to them, hence are unprofitable servants and are cast out. The wise will not have any surplus or merit on which the unworthy can be admitted. Each one must stand or fall on his own merits, when the righteous Judge shall come. It will be too late to prepare for the great reward and enter the celestial abode if we have wasted our time; we have known the truth, hence cast out, to our great loss, which will bring weeping, wailing, anguish, and remorse. But Justice must have its claim.

The wheat is still mixed with the tares, much of it (in the field or world), therefore the world can not be destroyed until the cry goes to all nations and the wheat is gathered out and brought into the garner of the Lord, or church. The angels are ready for the destruction, but the conditions are not ripe. They must wait yet awhile. When the wheat is gathered in, there will come in all sorts of characters, foolish as well as wise virgins, and some foolish will remain in until Christ comes; then all things that offend will be gathered, or cast out; entire separation will occur as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13: "Even in the day of the coming of the Son of Man, and until that hour, there will be foolish virgins among the wise, and at that hour cometh an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked; and in that day will I send mine angels, to pluck out the wicked, and cast them into unquenchable fire."

This will be the final and complete fulfillment of the parable of the ten virgins, and the other parable of the same chapter. It does not follow because of the statement, "five wise and five foolish," that just half will be wise, for in one case two were wise and and only one foolish; but it represents the two classes. We see the part of the parable named first in the book is last in fulfillment. The call and opportunity for preparation must of necessity precede the qualification to enter in, or the grounds for rejection, when the Bridegroom comes.

If others have greater light on this parable (which I do not doubt), I would be pleased to see it on paper, and as this kind of giving does not impoverish any one, I would be pleased to see the views of those who may differ from me. I believe every one should be willing to receive light and truth (even if it is not in harmony with the tradition of the elders), until we receive a fullness of all truth, and are glorified in light and truth. To this end I hope to ever work and pray.

THE PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The one hundred and fourteenth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, representing 32 synods and 232 presbyteries, opened its sessions on May 15 in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. On the same day also the Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church South and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church were opened, the former in Jackson, Mississippi, and the latter in Springfield, Missouri. The meetings of the General Assembly have been heralded by a wealth of comment and speculation in religious and secular papers throughout the country, and wide interest is manifested in the results of its deliberations.

The first act of the Assembly, the election of the Reverend Doctor Henry Van Dyke, of Princeton, New Jersey, as moderator, occasioned some surprise, and was at once accepted as evidence of the strength of the "liberal" element. The New York Evening Post said:

"Doctor Van Dyke's election as moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly is an award of that highest honor of the denomination almost unexampled. It has usually gone to some father of the church, some great ecclesiastical administrator, or some profound theologian with a reputation as malleus hereticorum. Its bestowal upon a clergyman who, though unquestionably a fine preacher, has had his widest vogue as a writer and lecturer, and who has given up the pulpit for the professor's chair, must be taken, we suppose, as a graceful tribute to literature and to personal charm. Certainly it can not be inferred that a conservative assembly, with the burning question of creed revision to come before it, should have chosen Doctor Van Dyke to mark its approval of his liberal theology. He himself lightly put away any such significance by intimating that he suspected that many of the commissioners who voted for him thought they were really voting for his father—one of the most rigidly orthodox Presbyterians that ever lived."

The retiring moderator, the Reverend Doctor Henry C. Minton, of San Francisco, preached the customary sermon at the opening session, taking as his subject, "The Enduring Mission of Presbyterianism." He said in part:

"Any consideration of the mission of Presbyterianism would be incomplete if, in the first place, it did not note the fact as of greatest prominence, that the Presbyterian Church has always held forth to the world a confessional testimony to what it believes to be the truth of God. It has not said, with Newman, that all there is in religion is dogma, nor has it said, with Schleiermacher, that religion is all feeling or life. It has characteristically approached men on their rational side, and assuming that conviction shapes conduct, it has aimed to enlighten the intellect and to persuade the will by the plain presentation of the truth of God.

"It is idle to deny that strong counter-currents have set in against this position. Doctrine is belittled and creed is decried, and many echoes are sounded out that the function of a church in these last days is to cultivate piety and to quicken the generously ethical impulse of men—and to stop there. On the other hand, we devoutly believe that the call is made all the louder by this very tendency, for the witnessing work of a confessional church. Let us not deceive ourselves; this is a theological age; not profoundly so, but predominantly so, even though it may think otherwise of itself."

The second day's session was marked by the presentation to the Assembly of the report of the committee on creed revision. The report was read by Doctor Minton, the committee's chairman, and was for the most part unanimous, a single member, Doctor DeWitt, expressing dissent on two points. It covers the three tasks set for the committee, furnishing a "declaratory statement" as a supplement to the Westminster Confession, two additional chapters on "The Holy Spirit" and "The Love of God and Missions," and a "Brief Statement of the Reformed Faith." The nature of the "declaratory statement" has already been made public (see the Literary Digest, March 1), and is chiefly notable for its repudiation of the doctrine of infant damnation, and its explanation of the doctrine of predestination as in harmony with God's love for all mankind and his condemnation of none except for sin. The passage in the Westminster Confession in which the Pope is described as "Antichrist, that man of sin and son of perdition," is changed to read:

"The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church, and the claim of any man to be the vicar of Christ and the head of the church is unscriptural, without warrant in fact, and is a usurpation dishonoring to the Lord Jesus Christ."

The "brief statement" is composed of sixteen articles; on God, Revelation, the Eternal Purpose, the Creation, the Sin of Man, the Grace of God, Election, Jesus Christ, Faith and Repentance, the Holy Spirit, the New Birth and the New Life, the Resurrection and the Life to Come, the Law of God, the Church and the Sacraments, the Last Judgment, and, lastly, Christian Service and the Final Triumph. The second article is considered the most important of all by the New York Independent, in view of the discussions of biblical criticism. It is as follows:

"We believe that God is revealed in nature, in history, and in the heart of man; that he has made gracious and clearer revelations of himself to men of God who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; and that Jesus Christ, the Word made flesh, is the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person. We gratefully receive the Holy Scriptures, given by inspiration, to be the faithful record of God's gracious revelations and the sure witness to Christ, as the Word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and life."

Mention of Adam is omitted from Article V., "Of the Sin of Man":

"We believe that our first parents, being tempted, chose evil, and so fell away from God and came under the power of sin, the penalty of which is eternal death; and we confess that, by reason of this disobedience, we and all men are born with a sinful nature, that we have broken God's law, and that no man can be saved but by his grace."

The question of creed revision came before the Assembly for definite action on May 23, and was disposed of in less than two hours. After a discussion that was more congratulatory than polemic, the report of the committee was adopted by only two less than a unanimous vote.

By the press at large the changes proposed seem to be, for the most part, favorably regarded. The Minneapolis Times hails the report as a "triumph of the new and sweeter, if not so stately, modern spirit of theology." The Indianapolis News thinks that "the proposed statement is to be commended because it makes for greater freedom and liberality." The Detroit Free Press says:

"Naturally, a report of this kind must be in the nature of a compromise. It must be sufficiently elastic to admit a certain latitude of individual interpretation, and at the same time sufficiently rigid to hold the church together to certain definite principles of faith. The report, however, reveals the extreme caution of the theological mind in approaching a question of great moment to the church, a caution that in this case is readily understood. The Westminster Confession is so logical that its conclusions, from its premises of God's sovereignty and the infallibility and sufficiency of the Bible, have been termed 'wholly irresistible.' So logical a structure is not to be dealt with rashly. Modifications are to be considered thoughtfully, lest in making changes that seem slight in themselves the whole fabric of the confession be destroyed. And this seems to have been the thought that the committee had constantly in mind. It is trying to reconcile the old Calvinism to the new century, and to do it in such a manner that nobody will be startled or terrified by the transformation."

On the other hand, the New York Sun maintains that the committee's "laborious attempt to smother the harsh voice of the Confession under the flannel of smooth speech" is not very successful. The New York Independent says:

"We hold that a church is best off when it has no binding creed-system of theology, but is left to the instruction of the Holy Spirit and is allowed to take advantage of every modification of belief which careful study, human sympathy, and divine guidance can supply. We much fear a new creed unanimously recommended. It will put a fresh burden on the church just as the old burden was being lifted. To be sure the burden may not be as heavy, but it will bear too heavily on some consciences."

The sessions of the Assembly on May 20 and 21 were devoted to the celebration of the centennial of home missions. Among the speakers were the Reverend Doctor Charles L. Thompson, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions; the Reverend Doctor Richard S. Holmes, of Pittsburg; the Reverend Doctor S. Hall Young and the Reverend Doctor M. E. Koonce, of Alaska; the Reverend Milton E. Caldwell, of Porto Rico; the Reverend Charles F. Richardson, of Montana; and the Reverend Doctor S. E. Wishard, of Utah. The crowning event of the Assembly was the public meeting held on the evening of May 20 in Carnegie Hall. President Roosevelt was the speaker of honor, the keynote of his speech being struck in the following words:

"The century that has closed has seen the conquest of this continent by our people. To conquer a continent is rough work. . . . It is because of the spirit that underlies the missionary work, that the pioneers are prevented from sinking perilously near the level of the savagery against which they contend. Without it the conquest of this continent would have had little but an animal side. Without it the pioneer's fierce and rude virtues and somber faults would have been left unlit by the flame of pure and loving aspiration.

"Without it the life of this country would have been a life of inconceivably hard and barren materialism. Because of it deep beneath and through the national character there runs that power of firm adherence to a lofty ideal upon which the safety of the nation will ultimately expand. Honor, thrice honor, to those who for three generations, during the period of this people's great expansion, have seen that the force of the living truth expanded as the nation expanded."—The Literary Digest, May 31, 1902.

For Those Who Believe in Signs.

Sir Edwin Arnold contributes an entertaining article to the July Delineator on the ceremonies attending the crowning of King Edward, in the course of which he recalls a singular incident that occurred at the crowning of King George III. A large diamond fell from the crown of the King as he passed up the choir to his throne in the chancel, and those who believed in such things as portents and previsions looked for some event presaged by the accident. They found it afterwards, to their own content, in that separation of the American colonies from the mother country which was the beginning of the great United States of to-day.

The Birth of Summer.

The name of June suggests fair summer skies,
A silvery, crescent, sentimental moon;
A blushing rose, the idling butterflies—
Of such is June.

Our truant thoughts, recalling memories sweet,
Go gaily, madly trooping, fancy free
To mountain heights, or to some cool retreat
By the sad sea.

O gentle, blossoming, seductive June,
Month of the fairest nights, the rarest days,
All the bird notes, keyed into perfect tune
Carol thy praise.

With thy return comes Summer, bright and gay,
Each echoing hill, each twinkling star, each tree,
Beckons us from the cares of life away
To dwell with thee.

FOOD.

Not all other influences put together can equal in profound effect upon the welfare of the household that exercised by food and the attitude of mind regarding it. The well-nourished child is a happy, strong little animal, making brain and muscle and nerve for future use. The well-nourished adult is a hearty, efficient member of society, contributing his share to the common stock of public good as well as enjoying his own work and pleasure. There is little fear of disease for either child or man, since the best prophylactic is a generous store of blood-corpuscles both red and white. The human body in normal condition has a well-drilled army of "phagocytes" (white blood-corpuscles or leucocytes), to which the man needs to give no directions. But if he neglects to take suitable food or to keep himself warm, if he becomes frightened or takes drugs, his faithful army is paralyzed and the enemy finds easy entrance. The condition of this army, like that of any other, depends on its commissariat. If the food-supply is just right, the soldiers are vigorous; if it is wrong in any particular, they are weakened. Nothing can take the place of food in the human economy. Therefore the poor man is justified in spending two-thirds of his income, if need be, for food. But over-nutrition is as dangerous as under-nutrition. The protecting army may be incapacitated by indulgence in food, may be poisoned by ptomaines or narcotized by alcohol or tobacco. The body tissues may become weakened under the strain of excess, and irritability, disease, and death may follow. Food habits should be formed by young children under careful guidance. Until there is a generation which is well-trained in this matter, very little progress in the use of food as a means of securing human efficiency can be made. So long as food is looked upon either as a disagreeable necessity or as a means of merely sensuous pleasure the child will grow up with whims and fancies which will prevent the best physical development.

For the human race as a whole it has been shown that at least half the cost of life is the cost of food. Food is the essential condition of life, and the race instincts in regard to it are so fundamental that as a rule only stress of circumstances effects any sudden change. The growth of food habits is a gradual, almost imperceptible one in all nationalities, because of that instinct of self-preservation by avoidance of the unknown which was essential in the early stages of race development. Only since knowledge has replaced instinct, and readiness of adaptation to environment has produced cosmopolitan man, can there be said to exist a science of nutrition which has been founded on a study of the food habits of a great variety of people under a great variety of circumstances and on the results of experimental feeding of animals.

As a result of these studies it may be stated that a condition of complete nutrition should be aimed at but not over-stepped. It is the belief of most students of economics and sociology that it is the overfed among the nine tenths not submerged who are being eliminated by the various diseases of modern life,—apoplexy, heart-disease, Bright's disease, etc.,—and that the sterility of the better-placed portion of the community is largely due to the plethora of food and drink which induces the eating of more than the system can stand and vitality is consequently reduced. "Our appetites are stronger than they need be under existing conditions."

Unless some form of restraint is imposed in place of that asceticism and frugality with which religious ideals safeguarded the more intelligent classes in the past, the present type is likely to die out and "a more primitive man will come forward to try anew to solve the problem of the highest civilization."

Self-evident propositions may be stated as follows:

Food is that which supplies the body with such substances as are necessary to preserve it in health and to supply it with energy for daily work or play.

Food materials as a whole should contain those substances in sufficient quantities and in suitable proportions.

Food materials should not contain anything injurious, nor be so prepared as to develop any injurious qualities.

Food materials should not be so stored or packed as to produce by their decomposition any secondary substances which are in the least degree detrimental.

Good health is essential to efficient production of energy and to the enjoyment of the good things of this world.

Standards of living must include the idea of efficiency if man is to live up to his opportunities.

Food is not only the workingman's capital, it is the cultivated man's bank account.

It is because I believe in the possibility of control of even economic conditions by ideals firmly held by a sufficient number of fathers and mothers (who, alone, according to Patten, count for much in race progress) that I urge so strongly the dissemination of what scientific knowledge we have, and the importance of gaining yet more facts about food and its part in human welfare.

The moment when a family is released from the bondage of race instincts and habits as to food, in that moment danger begins for them. Unrestrained appetite in this as in other directions leads to loss of efficiency; therefore, education must come to the rescue.

If the proper study of mankind is man, then the study of that which makes him a capable, efficient member of society and not a wretched dyspeptic or a shell of walking contagion is worthy a place in any curriculum.

In no other department of household expenditure is there so great an opportunity for the exercise of knowledge and skill with so good results for pocket and health. No item of expense is so fully under individual control. The house stands out for every one to see. Clothes are scrutinized and commented upon; if attempt is made to economize fuel, light, and wages, it is sure to leak out and be put down to a niggardly soul. But in most families there is ample margin in food from which to take a respectable slice without harming any one.

It is not the food actually eaten that costs so excessively, it is that wasted by poor cooking, by excessive quantity, and by purchase out of season when the price is out of all proportion to its value. Good judgment as to the amounts to be prepared, as to the harmony of the meal, the blend of flavor; as to the right appetizers; and good humor and cheerful conversation, with the most attractive setting and perfect serving, will cut down the cost of almost any table one half. Many seem to hold the idea that hospitality requires the setting of a double portion before the guests, and this alone doubles the cost of food in some families. It may be rightly said that the knowledge of this perfect table involves expensive training on the part of the mother or mistress, and that it will be cheaper for the family to go to a hotel where the chef is paid to do this for a thousand people. True, this is what a large number of American citizens think, and if it were not for the increased death-rate and the alarming prevalence of nervous breakdowns and insanity we might allow the mere economic conditions to rule. But there is another side: fancies and flavors and combinations may be better provided for by one who has had long experiences of the tastes of the family than by the chef who suits the average of a thousand. Also the health and manners of children may be more carefully watched at home. And if bright faces and merry hearts gather about the home table in fresh cool air, sweet with the favorite flowers, will not the quiet, the restful atmosphere soothe the tired nerves more than the strange faces, the glare of lights, the rattle of dishes of the restaurant or well-ordered hotel—even though the noise is drowned in music?

In sociological work is it not considered a great step when a family is persuaded to gather as a unit about the table instead of each taking from the bakeshop or the cupboard that which will serve to keep soul and body together? No other symbol of comfort and well-being has been so universal as the family table, and yet many intelligent women are advocating a reversion to primitive ways, thus doing away with a civilizing agency.

The home can not be looked upon as an eating-house, as a laundry, as a sleeping-place; it is the school of life, and anything which renders it more efficient is worth paying for. The cost in money and time is not to be for a moment grudgingly cut down. What if the parents spend all they can earn, is it not well invested in the next generation? The cost of living must be measured by the results in flesh and blood and brain, not in houses and lands. Hence we say: The ideals toward which the family is striving come first into discussion before the expenditure can be rightly judged. The home is for the children, not merely for their nutrition but for development of character; and that must be the only criterion of its true economic value, not in dollars and cents, but in the character of the men and women which are the product of the homes just as truly as the cloth is of the loom. And it is this point of view which must justify the maintenance of the small group, which we call the family, as the unit of the social state.

Everything about the home must be judged by its bearing on character. An experienced charity-worker objected to the New England Kitchen on the ground that she could not replace the educational and disciplinary value of cooking for her poor women.

It is in the deeper meaning that excuse must be found for keeping up the custom of eating at home, for it can not be justified on economic grounds. The family table is an educational factor of greatest importance to the children. There, as nowhere else, are inculcated the virtues of self-control, self-denial, regard for others, good temper, good manners, pleasant speech. The children's table presided over by the ignorant maid and the hurried service of the adult has much to answer for in modern life.

Whatever it may cost, however uneconomic it may seem,—in the wider view of the aim of all living,—let us keep the family table even if much that is set upon it comes from outside; enough should remain to permit of its educational, æsthetic, and ethical value.—Ellen H. Richards, in The American Mother.

Why Could Not Sunday-Schools Do It?

Every one of the teachers of the very little ones—those who can not read—needs the Study Hour to help him. This is a quarterly prepared with especial reference to the needs of the babies in Sunday-school and their teachers. It contains lessons on gospel truths, drawn from nature and from the lives of Jesus and good men. Some teachers do not feel like providing these for themselves. Why could not every Sunday-school furnish its teachers of infant classes with copies of this from the general fund? Or take a special collection for this purpose? Superintendents, it is your duty to see that your teachers have this help.

The Deportment of a Teacher.

It is a great deal easier to preach than to practice, and the instructions of Christ, "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation," is a very good motto for Sunday-school teachers. I presume all Sunday-school teachers have their ideal of perfection, and are striving to reach such standard as fast as possible. A few may discover personal weakness, or stumble a few times and get discouraged.

In the first place we, as teachers, as true Latter Day Saints should examine ourselves and see that we are in the faith, with all confidence in the work and God's means for carrying it on. I believe this will give us the desire to impart the good news to others, or in other words, develop the true spirit of teaching.

Second, we should strive to put on the Christ-character, just as fast as possible, with the help of the Holy Spirit, of course, which character is not necessary for me to describe here. While we are thus cultivating self, we may unconsciously wield an influence for good; but we must see to it that we have a good supply of charity, for Paul says that without it we are nothing.

Now it seems to me that if we are doing all these things the deportment will take care of itself. However, we should always try to be at the place of meeting in good time, and cultivate (if we do not already possess it) the disposition of greeting each scholar, whether of our own class or not, with a pleasant word or smile of welcome.

When we come before our class we should always strive to come with the Spirit of the Master, showing a cheery confidence in him and a loving interest in each pupil's salvation, for that is the great object for which all are laboring.

I once saw a teacher before a class of grown-up young people foreign to any Sunday-school lesson, which seemed to take away all thought of the object for which they were assembled. A little playful talk in class may be all right if it bears on the gospel theme in some way that will emphasize a point in the lesson. A teacher should not appear as "solemn as an owl" and scowl at every move a scholar might make, but try to make the lesson as entertaining as possible. Out of the Sunday-school room we should ever have a pleasant greeting for any member of the school, and our deportment should be such that we would not be ashamed to see in any one of our pupils. "What a man sows, that shall he also reap," seems to apply to Sunday-school teaching as well as anything else.

An Arkansas Missionary.

Editors Herald: It is only in justice to my brethren who are appointed to labor in this mission that I attempt to acquaint other missionaries and the Saints in general with some of the dark features confronted by patient, faithful souls who are too enduring to mention unpleasant things lest they be thought to find fault. This is my home; I have a right to speak; you will not think I am weary, and wanting a mission elsewhere, for I am in love with the Sunny South.

About ticks: Who knows half so well the supreme benefits of these impudent little creatures as ye missionaries in tick regions?

Seed ticks by the million: About the size of the red chigger of the North. The writer seldom sees one, but knows somewhat of their proclivities, nevertheless. Thousands seem to congregate in bunches on the low bushes that hang across byways and highways. How long they hang here, hopefully, wistfully, patiently fasting, waiting to be brushed off, I venture no guess; but when this happy time comes, every parasitic mite adheres to your clothing, and immediately starts for the life-blood within.

They belong to the general division of acarus, or the itch microbe, and when well filled resemble a small-sized tobacco seed in color, shape, and size.

Yearling ticks are seemingly of the same family; just large enough to be easily seen on a white surface; when well inflated they might easily be mistaken and planted for brown mustard seed. They inhabit anywhere and everywhere; they are especially at home around old logs or dry leaves, but are never in the height of glory until they smell blood. They are as numerous and as hungry as their smaller sisters, but not found bunched together.

Dog ticks, beautiful brown, with white spot in center of back, about one eighth inch long by three thirty-seconds broad; composed of two hard skins laid together like two sheets of paper, attached at edges like a bellows; eight legs, with five joints each, attached to bow end; ingeniously equipped with four lancet blades, which are strongly barbed on outer surface, enabling him to gouge for his living in a most provoking manner. When full they make good buckshot for the boys' pop-guns.

Deer ticks or Texas ticks, dark brown, nearly black, one fourth or five sixteenths inch long, slim made; few in number in these parts, but avaricious as a pack of bloodhounds.

Bear ticks, chestnut in color; look some like a large bedbug; when filled they would sell readily by the bushel for well-matured castor beans.

The elder, well loaded within and without, now stands before his congregation, and no matter how tender or sensitive the morsel these marauders select, it will do no good to squirm or flinch, and he is not at liberty to scratch. He must just simply lean all the closer to his subject. His only resort is to concentrate so powerfully upon his work that he forgets his misery and proceeds smoothly along his line of argument.

His lot is often cast with a family of half a dozen, and only one room, which is used for parlor, dining-room, bedroom, storage room, dog-kennel, and sometimes for kitchen; it is well-ventilated, gnats and mosquitos are present. There is but one lamp: it has no chimney. He can scratch now. How he wishes for a cool sea bath! He turns in for the night, not very hopeful; the bedding savors of tobacco. The whole family chews it; the little infant of ten months is learning to smoke. The children now begin to kick, and whine, and scratch; the mother grits her teeth and groans; the old man snores until you can feel the vibration; the lousy hound pup under the bed cries piteously and drums the floor as he digs; the elder thinks of home and loved ones, while fleas and bugs join the jubilant ticks all for the purpose of developing his patience.

In the dead hours of the night he steps softly out into the wood, pulls a bunch of pennyroyal, lays aside his underwear, and regales himself with such a royal grooming as his northern brother can never duly appreciate. He now faithfully belabors his wear and the sheet he brought along. He dresses and stands in some dusty place, and thanks God for the privilege of being a true soldier of the cross; goes to the house, wraps himself securely in the sheet to shut out the intruders, and sleeps an hour or two soundly. His breakfast consists of hot biscuit, fat bacon, sorgum molasses, and coffee; or if he prefers water to the coffee he can have water. Dinner and supper consist of the same bill of fare, only corn bread is substituted.

Fruit is much easier grown here than in the North; but hardly any one bothers with raising it.

Strange as it may seem, the anniversary of our great nation is an unknown quantity in many places, and with many people, and the birth of our Savior is celebrated with fireworks and levity.

On May 19 the writer began a series of lectures at the town of Blackrock; and although I was in that part of the town four days and lectured eight times, slept four nights on a bench in the schoolhouse, and ate but three meals, one of which I walked five miles to find, and paid fifteen cents for a second, I came out feeling none the worse for the wear, having sold three copies of the Book of Mormon.

I am preaching at present in a private house in Jonesboro. I am offered a public hall, well lighted, in Sedgwick, a lumbering town fourteen miles northwest of here, where I have agreed to go soon. I am to preach next week near Nettleton.

To-morrow I try for recognition in the city papers.

There is something more than ticks in Arkansas: a silvery lining to every dark cloud.

Editors Herald: I would like to request all parties, Saints or otherwise, living in Washita, Caddo, Kiowa, or Cleveland Counties, who are desirous of missionary labor to be done where they reside, to correspond with me, as I expect to confine my labors to those respective counties. My permanent address is the above. I know what some of the hardships are that are undergone by the early settler, and if you are not fixed up as well as you think you ought to be to entertain preachers, do not let that stand in the way to the opening up of the work where you live. Saints, do not look at such things, but to the good of the work and salvation of souls. Write to me at Redmoon, regarding the chances for preaching where you live, and I will try to reach your point as soon as possible. May the good work roll on.

S. S. SMITH.

NINA, Ohio, June 12.

Editors Herald: We visited the capital city of Michigan, April 16, and delivered ten sermons, and two lectures on American ethnology, when we were disabled by sickness for a few days. Convalescing, boarded train for Hopkins Station, May 15. Engaged in a series of ten discourses with fine crowds, and interest crescendo. A number at that place are resting at the posts of Wisdom's door, with a view to entering. The closing sermon, Sunday evening, May 25, was listened to with marked attention by a large body of Congregationalists and Methodists, in addition to usual audience. They composed the elite of the town. Saints from Allegan also attended Sunday afternoon and evening. The meeting was indeed a good one.

Bro. and Sr. Sherman Smith and family, Sr. Tanner (Bro. A. S. Cochran's sister), and Sr. Larkin, formerly of Lansing, constitute the resident representation of the faith at Hopkins and vicinity, and indeed, their lives afford a splendid and magnificent specimen of what true religion can produce when accepted and lived with an eye single to the glory of God. May their neighbors and friends emulate.

May 26, returned to Lansing, attended one prayer-meeting appointment, and four days later, May 30, boarded the chariot which runs, prophetically, "like the lightning," and devoted Decoration Day to travel. At almost every station where train stopped, bands were discoursing strains of music, both major and minor, archways were festooned with garlands and flowers, while May-day sunbeams danced on the cheeks of those honoring the nation's dead, mingling in common sadness. Arriving at Oakharbor, I sought the home of our genial Bro. and Sr. Moxon where I tarried for the night.

Saturday, May 31, came across the country where I am within one and one half miles of Lake Erie. Preaching nightly, and twice Sundays, to packed audiences. Have delivered eight sermons thus far, and have appointments for over Sunday. Last Sunday Bro. and Sr. Moxon came down, accompanied by Mr. Eastwood and Edith, and we organized a Sunday-school. The interest is fine and attendance at preaching large.

The United Brethren minister set his theological buzz-saw to humming before we arrived, but the saw caught his own fingers. We can not get within view of his shadow. How true the word of the Lord, "the prophet, pastor, and priest, dealeth falsely." (Jeremiah 6: 13.) But "they shall howl, and fall like a pleasant vessel." (25: 34.) I learn that his harangue was quite severe and unbecoming but the rebound has lowered his ministerial stature. I am also informed that he was angry and fierce, while he vilified and falsified the Saints and their faith. Yet it seemed utterly powerless to accomplish the end designed. "Thus saith the Lord, that frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish" (Isaiah 44: 25), was literally verified.

June 9, yesterday (Sunday) afternoon we wended our way to the United Brethren chapel close by, and listened to one of the gentleman's effusions. 'Twas a tame affair, a plea for collection, in the interest of foreign missions, made over the missionary shoulders of Apostle Paul. Not one word against the new departure of some of his members. The Saints here, and some from Catawba Island, attended in a body.

In the evening we lectured on the difference between the truth as we hold and teach, and the Utah philosophy, in Williams' Hall. It is estimated that three hundred people were present. We were blessed with freedom in the effort. At the close a number gave us their names for baptism. Wednesday was the day appointed for services at the water's edge.

Wednesday, June 11. Have just returned from Lake Erie, where we celebrated not "Perry's Victory" but the triumph of the gospel. The heavens distilled a genial shower, and four persons were buried with Christ by baptism, while the silver waves were murmuring on the strand. Many others persuaded.

S. W. L. SCOTT.

LOOKINGGLASS, Oregon, June 6.

Dear Herald: We have not heard a Latter Day Saint preach since we attended the Bandon Reunion last August. Bro. Crumley stopped to say "Good-evening and good-bye" as he started to Lamoni, and the same as he came home a few days ago. We are thankful that we get to see him once in a while. It has only been a short time since we did not have that opportunity. The reunion was a feast of good things for us who had never attended prayer-meeting or Sabbath-school, and some had never taken sacrament before. It has helped us through the year. But I do not know what we will do the next year, as the prospects for attending this time are very poor. Most of the people of this valley belong to some of the popular churches, and do not care to hear a doctrine so old as ours. Therefore we never have preaching here any more. There is no more interest now than there was years ago when Uncle Joseph Clapp and wife were here. We do all we can by talking and loaning the papers and books. Most of the people have read "all they care to." As one man said when Brn. Holt and Chase held meetings here several years ago, "The more he heard the more he wanted to hear," so he quit. All who belong to the church here are of one family, Elder L. Buell's children and grandchildren.

It made us very sad to learn of Bro. Harris' death. We were in hopes he would be with us again this summer. We are personally acquainted with so few of the brethren, it makes us feel very sad to lose one of them. But God knows what is best for them. You who have the privilege of meeting with God's people every week know not the trials and temptations we scattered ones have to contend with. There is very little to encourage us. There is very little pleasure, real pleasure, for a Latter Day Saint out in the world. It seems as though we are just waiting for Jesus' call. And, dear brothers and sisters, pray for us that we may not wait in vain. We will know how to appreciate the company of the Saints, if we ever have the pleasure of it.

I have two little boys to care for and teach the way they should go, and with as much opposition as the world can give. I want all of you to pray for me especially that God may help and guide me in the training of my boys. I can not do it without his help. I ever pray for the welfare of the church.

Your sister,

MRS. LUCY WILLIAMS.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, June 9.

Editors Herald: The Independence Stake Religio Convention is over, and it has been very profitable to all who attended, and renewed enthusiasm has been aroused amongst us. Bro. Walter W. Smith, one of the missionaries appointed to labor in this stake, was elected president of the Stake Religio association for one year to succeed Bro. Ammon White who was elected vice-president. As Bro. White will labor as missionary in Far West District, the election of Bro. Smith as president displays the wisdom and oversight of God in our affairs. Sr. Eunice Smith was elected secretary, where she can better help her husband as president. This is another manifestation of Divine guidance. Bro. Charles May was elected treasurer, and Sr. C. Haines, Home Class superintendent. Every number on the pre-arranged program for the two-day session was carried out successfully, to the good of the work and the glory of the Master.

Sunday we had two lectures on Book of Mormon subjects, and many of the young, stalwart students of God's word were instructed in method, doctrine, and practice of presenting the truth to the world. The speakers were C. Ed. Miller and A. H. Parsons.

M. R. CRAKE.

OGDEN, Utah, June 9.

Editors Herald: We are busy here now. I could see no other way to get a hearing here, as they would not come to the chapel, so I commenced street work. I spoke upon the street four nights last week, with audiences ranging from one to two hundred. They gave me excellent attention. After our effort the elders would gather around me and for an hour longer we would have to meet questions and objections. We are trying to appeal to their reason and in a manner that will not be harsh.

I must say that we have never had a more respectful hearing than that accorded to us on the street here.

Yesterday was a very busy day with us as we assisted with the Sunday-school here at ten o'clock and spoke at eleven a. m., and then drove twelve miles to Plain City where we met with the Sunday-school there, at 2:30 p. m., and then back to this point to meet the young people's meeting at seven p. m., for the study of the Book of Mormon, and at eight spoke again of the message of salvation. Only Saints were present at our meetings yesterday, and we go again to the street work Tuesday night. We hold Sunday-school teachers' meeting to-night, and the weekly prayer-meeting Wednesday evening.

Saturday we received the sad intelligence that Bro. James Toombs, our branch president who has been suffering from dropsy for about a year past, had passed away. We go to preach the funeral sermon to-day at eleven a. m. He was a faithful Saint and will be greatly missed. We have visited him and administered to him several times since coming here, and always felt that he was in the Lord's hands. May the Master comfort his loved ones, and especially the aged wife and mother.

We find Brn. Harris and D. W. Wight greatly missed by the Saints here, and only kind remembrances of them everywhere. At the close of our effort Saturday evening on the street we took an order for one copy of the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures, which I inclose with this. If only we can get the people here to read what is written there "concerning David and Solomon" they will find less excuse for some of their errors.

I pray the work may move on in triumph, and that peace may abound.

A. M. CHASE.

1509 Washington Avenue.

PROVO, Utah, June 9.

Editors Herald: I see by the pastoral of Bro. W. H. Kelley, who is in charge of the Rocky Mountain Mission, that I am assigned to labor in Salt Lake and Utah Counties, Provo to be my objective point. Wife and I are comfortably settled and are ready and anxious to be about our Father's business. We can be easily found by any of the ministry or Saints who may come to Provo, as we live in the first house just east of our church. The traveling ministry are requested, if they can make it possible, to stop over and preach for us at any time for over Sunday. Please write me beforehand of your coming.

As the field and conditions are new to me I ask the Saints who live in these two counties to help me as much as possible by letting me know where there is a place to preach in your locality. As Saints, "not the ministry alone," we are and will be responsible to God in doing all we can to get the gospel presented to all mankind. I hope to be kept busy all the time.

I am deeply interested in the Religio and Sunday-school, and hope to be able to build up these departments of church work as far as I may be able.

I have thought it wisdom to arrange for standing appointments at Provo and Pleasant Grove. On the first and third Sundays we preach in Provo at eleven a. m., and at night. The second and fourth Sundays we preach at Pleasant Grove at eleven a. m., and at night. In Provo we have prayer-meeting every Wednesday night and Religio each Friday night.

We are pleased with our field of labor or appointment. We find the Saints here are earnest and willing to do all they can to advance the work. We feel very grateful to them for the very kind welcome accorded us on our arrival and for the many kind acts performed to make us comfortable and feel at home among them. We are pleased with the climate and the nice mountain scenery. Prospects are good for there being an abundance of all kinds of fruit.

F. L. SAWLEY.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, June 5.

Dear Herald: I have been a little late getting into my appointed field, but am now on my way. Since the close of General Conference I have tried to keep at work at what I found to do. I preached at four different points and administered to quite a number of sick, and had the pleasure of baptizing four at Lone Rock Branch, near Pawnee, Missouri, and six at Lamoni of late. I am very sorry I could not respond to all the calls, but had to hasten away to my work, so left home on the 30th of May, in company with Bro. Elvin, to attend the Nauvoo District conference at Burlington, Iowa, to convene May 31. The attendance at the business sessions was rather small, but the preaching services were fairly well attended.

On Monday, by invitation, in company with Bro. R. M. Elvin we went on board the boat Elvise and sailed down the great Mississippi to Montrose, and were made the guests of Bro. and Sr. McDonald. We visited Bluff Park, also the city of Nauvoo on June 4. For thirty years had I awaited the opportunity to visit Nauvoo, and I greatly enjoyed the trip. I am greatly indebted to Bro. Elvin for kindnesses in this trip.

We held two meetings while in Montrose. The attendance was only fair. On the 5th we returned to Burlington, and in the afternoon I boarded the train, arriving at Monmouth at 4:30, and made a stay over night with Bro. and Sr. E. W. Wilkie. The following morning I went to Beardstown, and found our Bro. M. R. Shoemaker, district president of Central Illinois, awaiting me at depot. At ten o'clock the 7th, according to previous arrangements, many of the Saints from different parts of the district met for conference work, and among them was my associate, Bro. R. T. Walters, who was chosen to preside over the conference. Our business passed off very pleasantly indeed. At night the writer was the speaker. Interest as well as attendance was very good. Bro. Luther Simpson, of Taylorville, was the speaker next morning, and all seemed to be pleased with his effort. We met at 2:15 for social sacrament service. The Saints were active, we had a good meeting. I spoke again in the evening and felt well while speaking. The meetings will probably continue all week, Bro. R. T. Walters is the speaker for to-night; and

Now to the work as best we can,
To preach the gospel plan to man;
Call on the people to repent,
And obey the gospel God has sent.

RODMAN, Iowa, June 7.

Editors Herald: After locating my family in Lamoni I left for my mission in Galland's Grove District, on April 29. I made my first stop at Coalville, six miles south of Fort Dodge. It is a mining town, but all the people own their own homes, and each family has several lots, which makes it a nice place. I found some noble Saints there, with a nice little church more than half completed, and they are doing the work themselves on days that they have no work in the mines. They also work evenings. The work is being done in a creditable manner; but while many are doing so nobly, there are some who seem dead to the work. May God help them to wake up and come to the help of their brethren.

I next went to Mallard and began a series of meetings four miles west of there. Got a good hearing and left what seemed to be a good interest. Much of this resulted from the presence of Elder Ford and Brn. Fish and Cross, with their families, which was greatly appreciated by me and was much encouragement to those who knew nothing of our work. Bro. D. King hauled me to Rodman, thirteen miles east of Mallard, and through his help a place was secured for me to stay and the use of the hall. And after attending the conference at Auburn the first of June I returned to Rodman on June 3 and commenced a series of meetings. We have a nice, attentive congregation of about fifty. This is a little town of about one hundred fifty inhabitants, and located on a railroad. This is a new opening; no one here ever heard the gospel before, but Mr. Fern and wife, who attended the dedication of the church in Mallard to hear Bro. Joseph Smith, and they so appreciated the services that their home has been opened, and I am enjoying their hospitality. I will probably remain here two weeks longer.

I feel that the spirit of the living God never before was so greatly enjoyed by me in presenting the gospel as since the General Conference.

Editors Herald: While holding tent services at Illinois City, Illinois, there came to hand the February number, 1902, of the Heomiletic Review. On page 173 I found the following quotation from Bishop Wescott. Some brother may extract a thought from it which may apply to the Book of Mormon.

S. F. C.

"If it appears that a large collection of fragmentary records, written, with few exceptions, without any designed connection, at most distant times and under the most varied circumstances, yet combines to form a definite whole, broadly separated from other books; if it further appear that these different parts, when interpreted historically, reveal a gradual progress of social spiritual life, uniform at least in its general direction; if, without any intentional purpose, they offer not only remarkable coincidences in minute details of fact, but also subtle harmonies of complementary doctrine; if, in proportion as they are felt to be separate, they are felt also to be instinct with a common spirit—then it will readily be acknowledged that, however they came in being first, however they were united afterwards in the sacred volume, they are legibly stamped with the divine seal as inspired of God in a sense in which no other writings are."

MAPLETON, Kansas, June 4.

Editors Herald: I would like to have a little space in your valuable paper, which brings cheer and comfort every week to so many homes. The work is moving on in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Having been appointed to labor in Southern Kansas this year, we have been trying to open up the work in new places and hope to be able to get the gospel before as many people as we can. This is a large field and we feel the need of the Saints to help in this great work.

Now, dear Saints, we hope to hear from every one of you who does not live in a branch, so we may be able to call on you and give your neighbors and friends a chance to hear the gospel. Jesus says this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness. Matthew 24. Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22. We can see by the above that we all should be interested in the spreading of this work. Some may think the people would not come out to hear if an elder would come. If we give them a chance to hear, we have done our part, and their sins will be on their heads and not ours. We held services last Sunday near Blue Mound, with a good attendance. Sunday night the people could not all get in the house. Some came five and six miles. Some of the people here are near the kingdom.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may be able to live so that I may have the Spirit of the Master.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, June 3.

Dear Herald: When I sat down, I had no idea of writing anything for publication, but here lay my HERALD and I thought I must just look over the request for prayer, when my eyes beheld the grand dream of a Saint seeing a heavenly personage come and talk to her (as she was troubled over the indebtedness of the church) saying the indebtedness of the church should be paid by tithes and offerings, and if each member would pay one dollar, including every one, it would lift the indebtedness and the work would go forth in mighty power, etc. Now as I read this dream the Spirit came over me in much power. I felt I must write as I was so impressed. This dream is of God, our Father. Who can refuse one dollar, so little? Some one says a good deal. Stop, brother, sister; if you desire to go to some place of pleasure very much, do you not raise one dollar very soon? If we are justified by faith, according to Galatians 3: 11, will not God bless us, and why need we doubt his promises? I have a great desire to see the church out of debt. I do not believe God ever intended we should remain in debt. Who will start to help? I for one will do my part. There are a great many calls; money is needed on every hand.

I know of a sister who says she has a purse in which she puts ten cents of every dollar she gets, just for offerings this year, so as to be sure the poor are looked after. I do feel and know that the church debt should be paid, and all, yes all, who will give one dollar shall be blessed, yea more than they can tell. Not one will miss it and in three months from the time they give it they shall see the blessing return. Doubt not the Lord's promises, for they are sure.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church eighteen years and have never been deceived. I appreciate the blessings I receive from my heavenly Father. I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD. I can not express the gratitude I have for the work I am engaged in.

We have had God's blessings bestowed upon us in this part. We have striven to hold up Jesus' work here. We have meetings regularly. Bro. Jesse Reeder is our presiding elder. He held meetings at Bro. Henry Gilley's residence June 1, 2; had a large audience, and baptized three. We will have preaching the fourth Sunday in this month. We expect Bro. W. L. Booker to be with us in July, and would be glad to have more of our elders come. Our houses are open to receive them at any time.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints.

LEWIS W. COOPER.

GREER, Missouri, June 9.

Editor Herald: We have a nice Sabbath-school here, and the children are doing very well. Brn. C. J. Spurlock and Henry Thomas came to Woodside last May, preached some good sermons, and left for Southeastern Missouri, where they may labor for this season. May the Lord be with them. Bro. Toney McGuire is preaching once a month and doing all he can in the Sabbath-school. The writer is doing but little in the school, trying to preach three Sundays each month, doing the best he can for the cause of Christ.

Sunday evening, April 13, while the writer was standing before a good-sized audience, some boys on the outside threw about a dozen eggs at the speaker and chart. Neither was hit, and, by the help of the Master the sermon was not lost, the audience listening extra well. It was bad, however, to have the ladies' nice hats soiled with the eggs. God will protect and help when we do what we can, humbly trusting in him. I want to do all I can for the souls of men.

We have a branch of fifty-four members, some living near, but the majority of them scattered over this and adjoining counties. The Saints are gradually gaining ground. The White-Braden debate at Thayer, Missouri, did good for Southern Missouri. I heard several good citizens say if a Latter Day Saint preacher had come to their houses before the debate they would have driven him off, but they would not do so now. May the good work grow to be a great mountain.

We are having fine showers of rain. The crops are growing rapidly.

May God bless all his Saints and help us to be ready to meet our Lord when he comes. In bonds,

T. J. SIMPSON.

LOS ANGELES, California, June 9.

Editor Saints' Herald: We are doing what little we can to further the interests of the work. Bro. Carmichael is busying himself in looking after the preliminaries of the reunion, which I learn is to be held in Orange County Park some few miles from Orange in the entrance to Santiago Cañon. This will be an ideal and a delightful place. It will be held beginning July 11. We are expecting Bro. G. H. Hilliard to be present. Hope Bro. Luff can drop in on us also. Would be delighted to have a number of the "westward ho!" missionaries present. Bro. and Sr. Anderson and Bro. Barmore have a large number of friends here who will be disappointed if they do not call on their way west. Sorry Bro. Wight is sick and can not come our way. May God bless and preserve him for many, many years of service in the church.

On the 25th ult. I was instrumental in baptizing an earnest and good man. From his statement to us I believe he was led of the Lord to come here for baptism. He left for the eastern part of the State the next week rejoicing in the Lord. On Decoration Day I baptized two estimable ladies from Phoenix, Arizona. They were first interested in the work through Bro. Ward, of Seattle; I have been in correspondence with them for some time; result? they too are happy in the consciousness of having fulfilled the heaven-ordained command. I baptized two more last Sunday. Indications now are that we will have a number of accessions here the coming year. We have worked hard for this during the time of our service in the city. We are delighted that harmony reigns and general good will exists among all of the membership. When Saints are living together in peace we can with safety ask the world to give heed to our message.

Your brother, ever hopeful,

Editors Herald: I have been holding meetings south of here, at Galland's Grove, in the Manteno schoolhouse. Had quite good interest considering the weather. It rained nearly every day; but we did not miss a night while there. I stopped with Brn. Shumate, Franklin, and Kuykendall. All were real kind.

I then attended our district conference at Auburn. It was a good, spiritual conference, and returned home June 2.

On June 5 our home was brightened by the advent of a welcome baby boy.

I expect to go on July 1 to my mission field in Washington, if all is well.

N. V. SHELDON.

PITTSBURG, Kansas, May 28.

Editors Herald: Brn. L. L. and Romanan Wight have just gone from this place, Pleasant View Branch, where they called to visit old-time friends, the Brn. Birds, formerly of Texas. They were filled with the spirit of gospel work and kindly dispensed its power through the word in four discourses. We appreciate the work of these brethren and feel encouraged by their testimony. Bro. Lamoni Wight in an earnest and spiritual appeal asked our Father to give them strength to hide behind the cross presenting only Christ, forgetting self in their efforts.

It was granted. Their preaching was sober, mild, deep, and so beautifully comprehensive, that children understood the meaning.

I rejoice to be a member of the church of Christ, to be associated with and have the privilege of supporting such noble, unassuming workmen as these, and many others who are gallant, unselfish laborers.

What a beautiful and meaning expression, "hide ourselves behind the cross" in our labors with God for the good of his people! May heaven help us all to reach such condition. It is a sublime height and many of us may have much to overcome and restrain, as the principle of selfishness is inherent in human nature. If we desire fame, and approbation of our fellows, it may cause us to make a strain to be eloquent in speech and manner in order to bring self to the front thus hiding Christ in our efforts. The Spirit of God can not dwell in unholy temples, and what is more unholy than for us to try to obtain praise of men in our labors for God? If we are unselfish and labor for the glory of God and the good of humanity our efforts are attended by inspiration and are admirably eloquent in simplicity and comprehensiveness and bring blessings upon us and others. On the other hand, if we labor for praise of men we do not merit inspiration and in our endeavors we fail to be approved by either God or men, and our work is worse than thrown away.

Men and women who "hide themselves behind the cross" are valuable and deserve appreciation, and are worthy examples for us to imitate if we are not already of that class.

I value the gospel for all its provisions, and especially its power to plane the rough edges of assumption, pride, and selfishness in human nature, and render subjects of intrinsic value.

My prayer is that we may all be filled with the light of the gospel, that our thoughts and deeds may be sober, earnest efforts for the glory of God, which is intelligence, light, and truth, that by our lives the worthy ones of earth will be attracted to follow Christ.

We have a branch here of more than a hundred members, some of whom are earnest workers in the various departments of church work. We appreciate the calls of the missionaries and other brethren who preach for us. We have little preaching by local force.

Bishop Ellis Short has promised us help, and we are looking hopefully for his coming.

MOLLIE DAVIS.

McCLANAHAN, Texas, June 11.

Editors Herald: I shall ever bless the day when I was made to understand the gospel in its fullness. I have been a member of the church three years, and have had many trials to bear; but I thank the Lord that he has provided that Comforter that brings all things to our remembrance; and that that remembrance brings happiness to my soul.

About three months ago I was very low with a fever. Two fine physicians had almost given me up. My husband and I put our trust in the Lord and depended entirely on his mercy; and ere the sun was down, my fever which was 105 degrees reduced greatly and I was soon well. I shall give God the glory for it.

I have had many testimonies. I have been poisoned twice and was relieved; and last but not the least I have had the blessed gift of tongues in praise to the one dear Lord. When my husband was converted I received an abundance of God's Spirit that carried me away from this world of care to that realm of heavenly bliss.

I have seen all of my children healed through administration, and one of them who is only four years old received a promise through an administration of being a bearer of the gospel tidings.

Editors Herald: Once more I find pleasure in visiting the happy bands of Saints in this manner. It has been nearly twelve months since I last wrote, but I enjoy the HERALD as a Sunday guest and counselor.

People here are very much discouraged on account of dry weather, but I believe the Saints are beginning to realize that the Lord does not mean only "draw near unto me and I will draw near unto you," but that every one must confess him in words and deeds.

About two years ago some kind of hard lump was found growing on my little boy's throat that was almost as hard as a stone, and seemed to be unremovable. I resolved that I would make it an object of prayer that I might have a perfect knowledge of the divinity of the work; and two weeks had hardly elapsed when it was entirely gone. How thankful we ought to be for every blessing that the Lord grants.

I have seen almost all the signs follow that he said would follow those who believe.

Jesus is Lord of lords and King of kings. I ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be found waiting and watching his coming.

MARY A. SPICER.

EASTON, Pennsylvania, June 14.

Editors Herald: There is no branch nearer here than Philadelphia, yet I often feel thankful that I can be of a little use by receiving our elders, so that others who have never heard may have the privilege to hear this gospel of the kingdom preached unto them. This is my testimony added to thousands of others, that this restoration is of God. He fulfilled his promise to me, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." When I was in the wilderness and wandered from the churches into spiritualism, because I could not find the Spirit of Christ in the churches, for a time I thought spirit manifestations were grand, though in my heart I doubted from what source they came. At last my eyes were opened when one Sunday afternoon I heard one testify that Jesus Christ was not any more the Son of God than he was only a good medium, "The best medium that ever lived." That finished my following a stranger. The sheep know my voice and a stranger will they not follow. (John 10.)

I had known for some time that the second coming was near at hand by what was transpiring first in one part of the world and then another; such troublesome times. I did know there was to be a special people prepared to meet him, but I did not know where to find them. I was living in Cleveland at that time. From there I went to live at Kirtland, and I shall always remember the first time going down the Willoughby Hill God sent a power on me that I took to mean, "You are bending your feet in the right path to find my people," and so it proved to be.

There is much prejudice here in Easton. Bro. W. E. La Rue came last week and preached five evenings in succession. A few are greatly interested, and if another good effort is made later on they will come into the fold. They said they never heard such plain preaching, and those few have decided to go to Philadelphia in September to hear more. Previous to Bro. La Rue coming they had been meeting every Thursday afternoon in class, and I have just finished reading to them Voice of Warning. It is closed now until September, and it is encouraging that those were the few who heard the preaching with such pleasure. I overheard two say to each other, "We'll be baptized together."

On Saturday evening a gentleman came in during the meeting and Bro. La Rue gave him a number of tracts. He said he was a Presbyterian, also that he was a newspaper reporter. He came along on the way and came into our house. Bro. La Rue sold him a Voice of Warning and he took several statements and wrote them down while he was talking with Bro. La Rue, which was about two hours. Said he would likely publish the interview in the New York papers. As he was going to leave, Bro. La Rue asked him for his name and address. He gave it and then left. It so happened that Bro. La Rue had noticed an announcement in the evening paper that a man by that name was to preach in a church near where we had been holding meetings, and we wondered if he were the man. Sure enough, the next morning as my husband and Bro. La Rue started out on the street to go to church the gentleman appeared just across the street, but with a long coat and a Bible under his arm, transformed during the night from a newspaper reporter into a full-fledged clergyman. He, however, did not speak; perhaps forgot about meeting them the night before. Maybe he is one of those who would "spy out our liberty." A novel experience at least. He asked Bro. La Rue if he were an educated man. He gave him an inoffensive reply, but afterwards said he had a notion to tell him he "knew enough to smile" when he heard a supposed educated man ask such a question.

I desire to come up higher that I may be accounted worthy.

Your sister,

840 Ferry Street.

Conference Minutes.

Western Wales.—Convened with Penygraig Branch, at Tony-pandy, May 17, 18; David Lewis, district president, was associated with the missionary in charge, William Lewis, in presiding; F. J. Pierce, secretary pro tem. Visiting brethren from the Eastern District were given voice and vote. Branches reporting: Morriston, Pontyeates, and Aberaman. No reports from Penygraig or Llanelly. Ministry reporting: Elders F. J. Pierce, J. Jenkins, D. Thomas, W. Davies, H. Ellis, J. G. Jenkins, J. O. Evans, L. Bishop, E. Lewis, and D. Lewis; Priests J. Salathiel and E. Williams; Teacher E. J. Manns. Bishop's agent's report was read, referred to an auditing committee, and found correct. J. G. Jenkins resigned as Bishop's agent. The resignation was accepted and Henry Ellis was recommended as his successor. Resolved, That we request the church authorities to send a missionary to Penygraig to labor there and around the district, to be supported by the branch. Whereas, The Saints of Penygraig Branch are putting forth a faithful effort to build a house of worship; and whereas, They are few in number and limited in means and the needs of the cause justify the effort; therefore, be it resolved, That we indorse the same and ask the coöperation of all the Saints everywhere to aid by their means and influence, that the work may be accomplished. Election of officers: David Lewis, reelected president, Eyan Lewis vice-president, Henry Ellis secretary. William Lewis was sustained as missionary in charge of Wales. All other missionaries holding appointments for Wales were duly sustained. The President, the Twelve, the Seventies, and all the general authorities of the church were sustained. Resolution of sympathy on the death of Sr. Lucy Jones, of Nantyglo Branch, Eastern District, wife of Bro. Thomas Jones, was passed. Preaching by William Lewis, Thomas Jones, and David Lewis. At the fellowship meeting Sunday afternoon the gifts of prophecy, tongues, and interpretation were enjoyed. Truly it was a sweet time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Collections were taken up on behalf of the Penygraig Branch and a vote of thanks tendered them for hospitality. Adjourned subject to call of missionary in charge and district president. Henry Ellis, Secretary. No. 29 Hicks Street, Llanelly, Wales.

Paid to F. M. Cooper, $10.90; R. Wight, $7.50; J. S. Strain, $6.75; total, $25.15; balance on hand, $2.70. The secretary presented a bill for postage of $1.65, less 34 cents from collection at last conference, leaving due him $1.31. Report approved and balance from delegate funds appropriated to defray expense of secretary's office. J. P. Carlile, the Bishop's agent, reported: Balance on hand last report, $139.77; collected since, $599; total, $738.77. Paid Bishop E. L. Kelley, $400; paid ministry, $214; paid poor, $25; total, $639; balance on hand, $99.77. Report accepted. Committee appointed to raise funds for purchase of district tent reported $75.10 subscribed, whereupon J. P. Carlile, C. A. Beebe, and D. R. Chambers were authorized to purchase a suitable tent, the soliciting committee continued, the tent when secured to be in charge of the district president and sub-missionary in charge. On request from Carson and Honey Creek for two-day meetings, the president and sub-missionary in charge were authorized to arrange for the same. Elder J. J. Christiansen and Teacher A. E. Madison were directed to labor as circumstances permit under the direction of the president and sub-missionary. Motions prevailed to sustain J. P. Carlile as Bishop's agent and district president, D. R. Chambers associate president, J. Chas. Jensen secretary. Conference adjourned to meet at Boomer, on Sunday, August 31. By order of the presidency, the conference will open at nine a. m. with prayer service.

Convention Minutes.

South Sea Islands.—Convened at Tarona, Papeete, April 4, at eight a. m. Officers of the convention: Tapu superintendent, Emma Burton and Pou Haroatea associates; Teuira secretary, E. Burton foreign secretary. Report of the superintendent and associate were read and adopted, also reports from the following schools: Raroia, Tikahau, Manihi, Tarona, Tiputa, and Arutua. After consultation on lesson books, it was decided by unanimous vote, that six hundred new books be printed and sent to the various schools in the mission, by the president of the mission. J. F. Burton, J. W. Gilbert, and Emma Burton were appointed a committee to prepare those lessons. The superintendents of schools were ordered to inform J. F. Burton of the number of books each one desired for his school. Adjourned till two p. m. Two p. m., questions were asked as to whether the convention should adopt a rule ordering each school to have a Christmas tree; after some discussion it was resolved, That this matter be left to the option of each school. If any school wished to have a Christmas tree, they may consider themselves at liberty to have one; while those who were not in favor of such, need not have them, and that neither party should make trouble to the other in regard the matter. It was ascertained by those present that the number of books needed for each island, whether there were schools there or not, would be about as follows: Tarona 38, Manihi 38, Tiputa 14, Tikahau 20, Niau 40, Tubuai 30, Raroia 30, Takapoto 24, Takarua 12, Taenga 15, Kaukura 50, Tiona 7, Avatoru 30, Anaa 15, Hao 40, Amanu 25, Vahitahi 10, Hereheretue 5, Apataki 15, Fakarava 5, Raiatea 10, Arutua 35. Resolved, That the superintendents of the schools collect twenty cents Chili for each lesson book and send the same to J. F. Burton, and if they cost more than that, the schools should make up the deficiency (twenty cents in Chili is equal to about nine cents American money). The officers for the ensuing year were then chosen: Tapu superintendent, Pou Haroatea first assistant, Emma Burton second assistant. Sr. Burton made request that Sr. Gilbert be associated with her, although she had not yet arrived from the Tuamotus, which request was unanimously acceded to. Teuira secretary, and E. Burton foreign secretary. Resolved, To defer the review of the lessons of the past year, as only a limited number of schools were represented, and to review those and the new lessons also, at the next convention. All of the authorities of the church in America were unanimously sustained by vote; also all the authorities of the church and Sunday-schools here in these islands. Convention then adjourned to meet at eight a. m., April 4, 1903, at the place of meeting of the conference of this mission.

Galland's Grove.—Convened at Auburn, Iowa, May 30, with Superintendent J. L. Butterworth in the chair, Floy Holcomb, secretary. The following schools reported: Harlan, Benan, Auburn, Pilot Rock, Deloit, Salem, Galland's Grove, Mallard, and Dow City. Coalville and Denison did not report. Balance in treasury to date, $2.61. The treasurer was authorized to make a call on the different schools of district for funds amounting to $10. Provisions were made whereby Sunday-school literature would be provided by district for tent work the coming summer. An effort was made to dispense with the delegate system, but not knowing the exact membership of district the motion was tabled until next convention. A regular session of Sunday-school was held and subjects outlined in program quite thoroughly discussed. Adjourned to meet on Friday, ten a. m., prior to and at same place as district conference.

Pastoral.

To the Brethren, Sisters, and Friends of the Sheffield District: Having been appointed by the missionaries in charge of the British Isles Mission in sub-charge of the Sheffield District, I desire that you one and all will help me to fulfill the terms of my calling by your willingness to work hand in hand. Remember that with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, therefore it requires not only our hand but also our heart and soul. Let us not, therefore, spare our time, talent, or means, but render to God and his church a full and complete service, so that when the Bridegroom comes we may be found with clean lamps full of oil and burning so brightly that our path may be clear before us. Brethren, shall we be ready? Saints and friends may send us tracts or donations to buy them. Any of the Saints who may have friends in Yorkshire, England, are invited to send addresses and we will visit them if at all possible. Remember traveling means money. I expect to be at the post of duty on and after June 18. All communications should be addressed to W. H. Greenwood, in care of Samuel Platts, 55 Spring House Road, Sheffield, England.

Having been placed in charge of Southern California, I wish to say to the missionary force, Let us work wherever the door is opened. Wherever you get a chance to talk the gospel to one or more, tell the pleasing story. Our congregations in Southern California will be small, for I see the people are more for pleasure, especially on the Lord's day. I ask the good Saints to live faithful to God. Let me know if you can have preaching at your place, or near you, and we will respond to your call. Let us all make a determined effort this year to spread the truth. Do not allow Satan to take the advantage of you, but fast and pray for the Master's Spirit. Do not be overanxious for spiritual gifts, but when given, learn how to use them for the good of the cause, and to profit withal. The missionaries will please report to me their labors, in the style they report to General Conference, the first days of July, October, January, and March, so I can forward my report to Joseph Luff, missionary in charge. My address is 1132 West Third Street, Santa Ana, California. J. C. Foss.

Changes in Appointments.

To Those Whom it may Concern: By mutual understanding and agreement, it has been arranged that Elder H. A. McCoy, who has been appointed to labor in Kewanee District, Illinois, will labor in the Des Moines District, Iowa. Conditions have so changed since the appointment was made by the General Conference that this change is both practicable and wise. Heman C. Smith, Missionary in Charge of Northern Illinois. Frederick A. Smith, Missionary in Charge of Iowa. LAMONI, Iowa, June 11, 1902.

To Whom it may Concern: Elder E. A. Davies, who was appointed by the General Conference to labor in the Northeastern Illinois District, appointment to take effect November 1, has reported himself ready for immediate service, and by understanding with the Bishop, as to support, I have directed him to labor in the Kewanee District, for the summer months at least, thus supplying the place made vacant by the change of Elder H. A. McCoy. Heman C. Smith, Missionary in Charge. LAMONI, Iowa, June 11, 1902.

Bishop's Annual Report.

CORRECTION.

HERALD, page 454, report Ellis Short, T. J. Sheppard, f., $270, should be S. W. Simmons, f., $270. S. W. Simmons, f., $168.15, should be J. F. Grimes, $168.15, the names having been changed in copying and T. J. Sheppard entered twice and name of J. F. Grimes omitted in published list.

Correction.

In HERALD of May 14, page 494, first column, pastoral from Brn. Griffiths and Rushton, beginning at close of twenty-first line, should be corrected to read, "Brn. Thorburn and Arber will concentrate in the city of Glasgow.

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Please take notice that the above quorum will hold its first meeting during the sessions of the ensuing mission conference to be held at Birmingham, August 2, 3, 4. We strongly urge all concerned to make special efforts to be present at the inaugural meeting of this quorum. Kindly forward fully itemized reports to the secretary, Samuel F. Mather, 15 February Street, C. on M., Manchester, not later than July 1. Henry Greenwood, President.

General Conference Minutes.

Press of work in the HERALD Office has delayed issue of Conference Minutes. They will appear as supplement to the HERALD about July 1-15. R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary.

Reunion Notices.

Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District will convene with the Jacksonville Branch, near Euclid, in Howard County, Arkansas, beginning Friday, August 8. After the business of conference is done the meeting will continue over the second Sunday, making a ten-day reunion. Come all who can, prepared to camp and have a good rest from your labor, and get refreshed with the Spirit. I have selected as a committee to make further arrangements, Brn. J. W. Jackson, of Euclid; J. R. McKinney, of Winthrop; and Joe McCurry, of Grannis. Further notice will be given in proper time. In bonds, A. Z. Rudd, District President, Box 27, Grannis, Arkansas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Annual reunion of Southern California District will meet at Orange County Park, July 11, and continue for ten days. Parties taking train, come via Santa Fé Railroad to Orange. From here free conveyances will be had to the grounds. Parties coming from Los Angeles, take the train arriving at Orange either at 9:40 a. m. or 6:03 p. m. Those from San Bernardino take trains arriving at Orange 9:40 or 4:50 p. m.; coming from the south take trains arriving at 4:55 p. m. Conveyances will meet the following trains only: 9:40 a. m. and 6:03 p. m. Those coming on other trains will have to wait at depot until coming of conveyances. Any coming on Southern Pacific Railroad and expecting to be met will have to so notify the committee. Those wishing board at the grounds please notify committee in ample time. Board will be furnished for such at twenty-five cents a meal. The old district tent will be put up and may be used by those who feel that they can not afford to hire. Let such bring sheeting for curtains. Note the following prices for articles furnished: Cots, single or double, 50 cents each; mattresses, single or double, 50 cents each; cots and mattresses, single or double, 75 cents each; camp-chairs, each 10 cents; tables, each 50 cents; gasoline stoves, each 75 cents; tents 8x10 to 14x16, uniformly $1.50 each. Parties wishing to hire please notify the committee at least a week ahead of time of reunion, stating size of tent, cot, etc., and they will be ready on the ground. Those having camp-stoves had better bring them, as wood is free. Besides the local missionary and presiding force we hope and expect to have the following: Brn. J. W. Wight, D. A. Anderson, and A. C. Barmore, who are on their way to their respective missions, also Brn. Joseph Luff, missionary in charge, and G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric. Others may also be present. The grounds are free, and hay will be furnished free. Rates: Let none forget to ask for blank certificate for return rates when purchasing tickets. Don't fail, for unless we can get fifty such blanks we can not get our reduction, one and one third fare. Come, Saints, and throw aside the cares of life and enjoy the communion of God's Spirit among the monarchs of the forest, the grand oak trees. R. R. Dana, Calabasas; Williams Mills, Santa Ana; A. Carmichael, Anaheim.

Notices.

All brethren laboring in Ohio, the Virginias, and Pittsburg District, wishing to consult with missionaries in charge, may reach Elder U. W. Greene after June 20 at Temple, Ohio. This address will be permanent. U. W. Greene.

Conference Notices.

CHANGE OF DATES.

Southern Missouri District will convene with the Springfield Branch on July 12, 13, in place of July 5, 6, as per last conference resolution.

That the missionary may be present, date of Texas Central conference has been changed from July 19 to July 12. Let all govern themselves accordingly.

Married.

JOY—JOHNSON.—At Providence, Rhode Island, on the evening of June 3, a large company of Saints, relatives, and friends assembled at the new home on Cranston Street, which they had been fitting up and preparing in which to celebrate the occasion of the union for life of Bro. Daniel F. Joy and Sr. Evelyn Louise Johnson. Standing under the wedding bell of daisies the vows were made, pledges received, and words spoken that legally bound our young brother and sister together by the most sacred and important of earthly covenants, Elder M. H. Bond officiating in the ceremony, Bro. Fred Roberts and Sr. Florence K. Oatley acting as groom and maid to Bro. Daniel and his bride. A solemn picture was presented, and with the solemn charge and spiritual forces that seemed to accompany, made it an occasion to be remembered. The numerous and beautiful wedding gifts testified to the love and esteem in which these popular young people are deservedly held by friends in and out of the church. Wednesday they left Providence on the New York boat for the "tour" of two or three weeks, after which they will be "at home" at 280 Cranston Street.

Died.

TOOMBS.—June 6, 1902, at his home near Willard, Utah, James Toombs. He was born January 19, 1825, at Potter's Ferry, Northamptonshire, England. He was married in 1845 to Ann Goldsworth. To them were born eleven children, nine of whom, with the wife and mother, remain. About forty-nine years ago Bro. and Sr. Toombs were baptized, and in 1868 came to Utah. Devotion to truth soon separated them from the dominant church, and when the Reorganization found them their hearts were open to receive it. They were baptized by Bro. R. J. Anthony, July 21, 1882. December 22, 1895, he was ordained an elder by Heman C. Smith, and has been a faithful shepherd to the flock at Ogden ever since. For the past between thirty and forty years he was section foreman on the S. P. R. R., and a gold medal inscribed 1899-1900, awarded him by the company for the best section on the entire system of over nine thousand miles, attests his faithfulness. His life was an inspiration to faithfulness, and he died as he had lived, in the faith and assurance of the resurrection of the just.

DONALDSON.—At Seminole, Alabama, May 11, 1902, Medora E. Donaldson and child. Deceased was born April 10, 1856; baptized December 29, 1870, in Santa Rosa County, Florida, by L. F. West. At time of her departure, was a member of the Perseverance Branch. She was a faithful member. Husband, ten children, and relatives mourn.

BUTLER.—Sr. Scrida Butler was born at Homewood, Pennsylvania, December 12, 1867, and died at her home, New Castle, Pennsylvania, June 3, 1902. She was baptized into Christ at New Castle, Pennsylvania, March 18, 1900, by Elder Richard Baldwin, and was a firm believer in Christ and his gospel. Funeral services were conducted at the home on June 5, 1902, by Elder Richard Baldwin. A husband and eight children survive her.

FENDER.—Roy L. Fender, of tumors, at Goodland, Kansas, May 17, 1902. Born April 5, 1879; baptized March 19, 1894, at Goodland, by S. D. Payne. He was a faithful child, loved by all who knew him. Had a perfect knowledge that he pleased the Lord. Funeral services at the home, a large gathering of people being present; sermon by Elder J. F. McClure.

WATSON.—May R., daughter of W. W. and Menisha Kuykendall Watson, was born at Omaha, Nebraska, April 21, 1868; died at Deloit, June 8, 1902. Was married to C. J. Newcom, August 15, 1885. To them were born four children, three of whom survive her. Their eldest child, Wave, preceded her when an infant. She was baptized into the Latter Day Saint Church at Deloit when fifteen years of age and was faithful to the end. Funeral sermon preached by J. M. Baker, June 9, assisted by William McKim and Cyrus Dobson, at the brick church, Deloit, Iowa.

LYKE.—Clarence Earl, son of Bro. and Sr. H. Lyke, at Kirksville, Missouri, May 23, 1902, while pursuing a course of study in Osteopathy. He was born in Madison Township, Poweshiek County, Iowa, November 24, 1880. Baptized in summer of 1894, from which time he has endeavored to live a consistent life. Held in the highest esteem by his instructors and classmates in school, and by all who knew him in his home community. Funeral services in the Presbyterian church in Malcom, Iowa, Sunday, May 25, Elder F. A. Russell in charge. God bless the bereaved ones.

MORGAN.—Edna May Morgan was born December 3, 1901; blessed April 5, 1902, by Elders F. J. D. Earl and P. Pement; died May 6, 1902. Funeral service held at the house by Elder F. J. D. Earl. Interment at Morgan Park Cemetery.

HERSHEY.—Bro. Hershey was born in Canda West, February 13, 1820; baptized into the Reorganized Church, May 10, 1868, by J. W. Gillen; was ordained an elder October 7, 1896, by David H. and Alexander H. Smith; died May 27, 1902, at his home in Glenwood. A faithful, devoted wife, five daughters, three sons, thirty-six grandchildren, thirteen great-grandchildren, and many friends mourn. He was faithful, and honored his profession. His home was ever open for the elders. He did what he could. Interment in Glenwood Cemetery; sermon by Henry Kemp, assisted by C. A. Davison.

PALMER.—Thomas Palmer departed this life May 22, 1902, at Watertown Asylum, where he had been thirteen years, aged 50 years, 10 months, 22 days. Married to Mary Jane Jones in 1874, who departed this life nine years ago. His parents, mother-in-law, four sisters, one brother, four children, with many friends mourn his departure. Born at Dudley, Worcester, England. Baptized April 8, 1888, at Kewanee, Illinois, by Elder J. D. Jones, confirmed by Robert Holt, Samuel Garland, Sen., J. Chisnall, J. D. Jones. Funeral services at the house Saturday, May 24, in charge of Elder J. S. Patterson.

MCGUIRE.—At Fall River, Massachusetts, March 28, 1902, Sarah Ann McGuire, after years of affliction and suffering. She was born at Halifax, England, March 4, 1864. Funeral services at the home of her brother, Thomas McGuire, March 31. Many Saints and friends assembled to honor the departed and sympathize with the bereaved. Services by R. Bullard.

SIDDALL.—Beatrice, child of Bro. and Sr. John and Cicely Siddall, born April 30, 1899; died May 29, 1902. Many friends attended the funeral services June 1. Beautiful flowers in rich profusion surrounded the beautiful little form as it lay in its last sleep; sweet songs of Zion were sung befitting the occasion, and the little one was laid peacefully away to await the angel call to immortality. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Fearless and Independent.

The Chicago Record-Herald is a conspicuous example of the success with which the public rewards fearless nonpartisanship in the columns of a great metropolitan daily paper. It is an independent newspaper, in which men and measures are invariably viewed wholly from the standpoint of the public good and not from that of the interests of any particular political party. It is the very reverse of neutral—fearless and outspoken on all the great questions of the day, but presenting its editorial opinion upon independent judgment and entirely regardless of political affiliations. Partisanship is barred as strictly from the news columns as from the editorial page. All political news is given without partisan coloring, thus enabling the reader to form correct conclusions for himself. In the ordinary partisan newspaper political news is ordinarily colored to such an extent as to make it difficult if not impossible for the reader to secure a sound basis for intelligent judgment.

In the June Biblical World the editor has an article on "The New Apologetic—a Forecast," while the articles are: "Notes and Comments on some Earlier Portions of Acts," "Elements of Peace Doctrine in the Old Testament," "The Social Teaching of Paul," "Constructive Studies in the Literature of Worship in the Old Testament," "The Council of Seventy."

Taking a day for pleasure, he [the Englishman] attends the races, and sees the highest stakes won by an American horse, ridden by an American jockey. Looking over his evening paper, he reads of the placing in American shipyards of orders for American style battleships for European as well as Asiatic nations, and learns that the scene of the coronation of the King of England is to be painted by an American artist, and that the forty thousand gold, silver, and bronze medals, ordered by the command of the king, to commemorate his coronation, are being made in Massachusetts.—Four Track News for June.

It happens quite frequently that a self-made man has a son who is simply tailor-made.—Puck.

Would'st know whither we are drifting?

Wait till Mabel strikes a pose

On commencement day, and mincing

With a gesture grand—convincing,

After blushing, twisting, shifting,

Tells us whither; and she knows!

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance. When payment is made, the date on yellow label always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires. If not changed within a month after payment is made, notify us. The paper will not be sent to persons who are six months in arrears, unless special arrangements are made. All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same. All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately, as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office. Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 50 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice. For advertising rates, apply to the business department. Entered at post-office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for Zion's Ensign, also orders for all Ensign publications.

The Open Court for June has two articles on the "Apostolic Succession." One is by an unsigned writer designated by the editors as a clergyman in the Episcopal Church, and the other is by the editor. The lay writer discusses the dogma and criticism of the apostolic succession, while the editor of Open Court discusses the subject as "an historical truth."

Coal Miners, Members of the L. D. S. Church.

The Independence Coal Mining Company, Independence, Missouri, which is composed of Ellis Short, William Crick, and R. May, will sell three fourths of its interest to members of the church. This is being put on the market for the mutual benefit of the present owners and those who wish to become stockholders.

Moneyed combines, labor unions, and strikes, when dictated to by unprincipled men, are a menace to many an honest man, and by taking a share in this Mining Company the miner will have steady work—for it is the intention to run the mine the year round, union scale wages, or as may be agreed upon—he will be free from the arbitrary wishes of strikers, and he will also be deriving benefit from the dividend resulting from his share.

There will be a position open for a manager, also for a pit-boss. These two men will be expected to buy several shares.

This mine has a good wagon trade. It is located twenty-one (21) miles east of Independence, on the Missouri Pacific Railway, and is accessible to Independence and also to Kansas City, which is the best market in the West.

The Company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. The stock capital is $8,000, one hundred dollars ($100) per share, fully paid up; but it will be necessary to increase this four thousand dollars ($4,000) in order to have a working capital and put in a cooperative store. Each miner is expected to take one or more shares.

The prospects for success are very bright, as the lease runs for twenty-seven (27) years for eighty acres of land, royalty ten cents per ton, and as much more land as the stock-holders desire, for we hold the key to thousands of acres of land.

The mine is in fair working conditions; its capacity is room for about ninety (90) men. It is "Long Wall Work," has good top, and a shaft forty-seven (47) feet deep.

The vein is seventeen or eighteen inches thick, which is the average thickness of coal in the Lexington Coal Mining District; and the coal is a first class quality, being a little better than the average grade of coal.

Now, the prospects for miners to buy shares and take hold in this mine are good, but they must act at once, for the season will soon be upon us when we will have to operate the mine.

The men who are operating this mine will have permanent work, and they will also have the association of honest, upright fellow-workmen, as only good and upright men will be allowed to own shares.

There are houses on the ground which belong to the Company and more that are at their disposal.

Brethren, improve this opportunity. Do not hesitate until it is too late.

ELLIS SHORT, President.

RODERICK MAY, Secretary and Treasurer.

BOTH FOR ONLY	1 40

Let Us Tell You About It.

Murat Halstead has written a book of nearly 500 8x10-inch pages, with 100 illustrations, giving a most graphic account of the frightful disaster in Martinique and St. Vincent, supplemented with vivid and glowing accounts of similar disasters in the world's history from those of the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum by the giant Vesuvius to the present time, including the explosion of Krakatoa in the Indian Ocean causing a tidal wave to encircle the earth; and frightful eruptions of Heckla, and of Skatta that depopulated Iceland, the New Madrid convulsions in the Mississippi Valley, and all the lesser eruptions and convulsions caused by the fermented bowels of mother earth, together with a scientific treatise on the conditions and causes of volcanic eruptions imperiling the future of the earth.

Mr. Halstead has personally visited the islands of the American Indies, those of Hawaii and of the Indian and Pacific Oceans, and visited Iceland and in company with the King of Denmark viewed the great volcanoes on that island. He therefore writes from a personal experience as no author of a similar book can do.

The Publishers of the PATRIOT

Have made such an arrangement with the publishers of this magnificent work, as enables them to offer it to all with the PATRIOT for less money than the book itself costs alone.

The PATRIOT is a local and general family newspaper of eight seven-column pages, conveying the news of Lamoni and the world, as well as publishing a large number of interesting miscellaneous departments.

Your subscription to this combination is solicited. You can not afford to let this opportunity go by unimproved.

Remember $1.40 brings you the PATRIOT for a year and this MAGNIFICENT BOOK, which will be sent to you post paid. Address

Mid-Summer Indian Carnival, Sheridan, Wyoming, July 3, 4, and 5.

For the above occasion all who desire to see probably one of the last large meetings and celebrations held by the Indians, can take advantage of the harvest excursion tickets on sale July 1 and visit Sheridan, Wyoming. See the grand celebration at which there are expected to be 1,000 Indians in regular Indian costume, reproducing Custer's last battle, assisted by the United States troops from Fort McKenzie; quite a number of the Indian chiefs who were engaged in the Custer battle, many of the old time scouts of the frontier, a grand parade each morning, rough riders, bronchos, etc., roping and tying down of wild steers, horse races, Indian races, squaw dances, Indian games, etc.

In fact, one of the grandest outings that will probably happen on the frontier in a life time. All can take advantage of this by using the harvest excursion tickets to Sheridan, Wyoming, and return at one fare plus $2 for the round trip, sold on July 1.

This will also enable you to see the Sheridan, Wyoming, country, one of the greatest grazing countries in the northwest. Tickets sold on July 1 are good for 21 days, the usual stop-over privileges allowed. Call on ticket agents for further information. J. M. Bechtel, Div. Pass. Agt.

ONLY FAITH IN CHRIST.

The following from the Westminster Quarterly will, among other suggestions, suggest careful thought upon the real meaning of Scripture obligation known as the expressed will of Christ in what is called his last "will and testament" upon believers, who anticipate receiving benefit to their allegiance to Christ as their Redeemer. The Saints are under the impression generally that however simple the Christian religion may be, the gospel of Jesus Christ finds room for both rites and ceremonies; that these are parts and parcels of the religion of Jesus Christ dominant in the hearts of the disciples, expressions of true obedience through the inward grace. Are the Saints prepared to change this opinion?

SUGGESTIONS.

1. The Gentiles contended that it was not necessary to become a Jew in order to become a Christian. Their contention was just. Peloubet summarizes the reasons thus: (a) The one condition the gospel laid down was faith in Jesus, producing a new heart and a new life. (b) Ceremonies and ritual may be helpful and any one is at liberty to use them, but to make them essential to salvation and require them of all disciples, was to subvert the central principle and power of the gospel. (c) It was to take away "the glorious liberty of the sons of God." The Jews had perfect liberty of action and could, like Paul and the other apostles, keep the whole Jewish law. But the Gentiles, too, had liberty, and no one had a right to force any form or rite as essential to salvation. (d) The unnecessary burden of the Jewish ritual was a hindrance to the conversion of the Gentiles.

2. There is danger of depending too much on forms in religion. Some of the Jewish Christians thought that Gentile Christians should adopt all the old Jewish ceremonies. In our time there are some who think everything must be done just as it was in the old days. We should not consent to be slaves to any forms, nor should we demand that others shall worship just as we do.

3. When there are differences of opinion among Christians they should meet together and talk over the subjects on which they differ in a kindly, patient way, and all will become plain and clear. The spirit of love is ready always to find the true way and to take it. The council at Jerusalem was conducted in a Christian way and decided unanimously.

4. It is very wrong to unsettle the faith of happy, earnest Christians by starting questions which trouble them, especially questions about matters that are not important. The Christians of this new church were getting on very happily until certain over-zealous persons came and started trouble.

5. The Christian religion is very simple. It has no rites or ceremonies. It requires only faith in Christ, and then true and beautiful life in obedience to Christ's commands. That was all this council decided upon as necessary. Love to Christ comes first. Then if we love him we will keep his commandments. If we love him we will also love his followers and all who are his disciples.

THE CONFERENCE AT LUCAS, IOWA.

The conference of the Lamoni Stake, held at Lucas, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, June 21 and 22, was a very successful one, and was characterized by a spirit of peace and general harmony. There was an exceptionally large delegation from the Lamoni Branch, and the attendance at the meetings on Sunday was very large, at times taxing the seating capacity of the building. The church at the sacrament services Sunday afternoon was packed, and nearly all partook of the emblems, indicating a pre-dominance of Saints in the audience.

The sermons were characteristic and well received, Bro. Joseph R. Lambert preaching Sunday morning and F. B. Blair in the evening. Saturday evening was given over to the Religio people, who rendered a program for the benefit of Graceland College, admission being charged at the door. Over forty dollars were taken in.

The conventions of the Sunday-school and Religio associations held just previous to the conference were reported by those present to have been prolific of much good, there being an excellent spirit present throughout the sessions.

The HERALD was represented at the conference by Bro. F. B. Blair from the business department, and the associate editor from the editorial rooms.

The Lucas Saints handled the rather large attendance in an excellent manner, their hospitality apparently being unbounded. Those who attended from Lamoni unite in saying that a splendid time was had, and that their sojourn among the Lucas Saints was a treat.

Some business done has an important bearing upon Stake conditions. To fill vacancies in the council three names were presented by the proper authorities, viz., George W. Blair, E. A. Smith, and E. A. Stedman. These names were approved by the conference, and Elbert A. Smith was ordained Sunday afternoon, the other two not being present.

Two were baptized Saturday.

The next conference meets with the Pleasanton Branch.

THE CONFERENCE, BEVIER, MISSOURI.

Bro. E. L. Kelley reports an excellent attendance and good spiritual meetings at the conference at Bevier, Missouri, on June 14 and 15. Bro. J. A. Tanner and J. D. Erwin of the general missionary force were present, and the Bishop's agent, Bro. J. T. Williams. The local officials and membership from Higbee, Bevier, and Salt River Branches took active parts in the conference, and the meetings were a success. Four hundred six members reported through the branches, and quite a large number of scattered members are in the district not near any existing branch.

In the afternoon of Saturday, Reverend Scarborough, pastor of the M. E. Church at Bevier, and Reverend Jones of the Baptist Church, were in attendance, and upon the conclusion of the special conference work they were invited to address the audience, which they did in a cheerful and hearty way, assuring all that they had listened with profit to the conference work and were glad to welcome the Saints in their efforts to further on the Christ's work, that there was room enough for all to work and much to do. Reverend Scarborough stated that since our church building was so near the railroad track where the switching of cars proved annoying to the meeting, the next time they held conference he would suggest that we apply for the Methodist church building in which to hold the meetings.

The Saints received the addresses of these brethren with excellent good feeling, and we witnessed a verification of the Psalmist's statement, "How pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Such examples as this reflect a little of the spirit belonging to Jesus' work, and are refreshing omens of good from these societies. Christians should do to others as they would have others do to them.

FLORAL BAPTISM.

A minister of Chicago, Reverend Harry J. Moore, has introduced something new in the line of baptism. Instead of using water for the purpose of christening the children of his church, he uses flowers, thus doing away with water altogether. An enterprising reporter of one of the Chicago papers called on the minister at his home and has thus reported him in describing the ceremony:

The use of flowers instead of water in christening our children is, from my point of view, a decided improvement. The flowers signify upon the part of the parents the desire to have the child's life as pure, bright, and fragrant as are the flowers which crown them. It is a pretty ceremony, and, to my way of thinking, contains all the elements of true baptism.

We are not disposed to quarrel, however, with those of our neighbors who may prefer the old form of baptism by water. They are entitled to their views, as we are entitled to ours.

The flower is the epitome of all the elements heretofore used by the various religionists in baptismal rites, and is, I think, the most significant and modern to its symbolism. As compared with water, the flower is far more real, tangible, and human. It gets closer to us. It is more concrete and readable. The water slips away from the hand that grasps it, the flower can be held, and studied, and admired, and loved.

Furthermore, the theology that has from of old been implied in water baptism seems to me to be false—false and injurious.

The idea is that the water washes away the sin of the candidate's soul. But surely these little children are not sinful. It would be blasphemous to call them so. They are pure and innocent, and might go straight into the company of the angels without hurting the angels at all.

But take the floral baptism and you have another idea altogether. The idea is that the life of the child should be fashioned after the purity and sweetness of the flower. The flower typifies the ideal after which the child is to strive.

When the floral wreath is placed upon the child's head it is urged to consider the meaning of the rite. The nature of the flower is explained to the little folks and they are urged to imitate the flower in their own lives—to be bright, not sour and gloomy; to live so as to make the world love them, just as it loves the flower; to be, like the flower, a blessing and a joy, rather than a hindrance or a curse.

Again, water is colorless, but from the tints of the flower we draw our most beautiful and helpful symbolism. White signifies innocence. And, by the way, if you wanted to show a little child what you meant by a clean, pure life or character, how could you do better than by calling its attention to the spotless white rose or carnation which you place in its hand or put in its hair?

Red stands for courage, resolution—the thing that wins life's battles.

Holding up before the eyes of a child a red flower, you say: "As this flower holds its color—its rich, strong, bloodlike hue, so may you in the fight against wrong ever hold your courage. As the flower is red, so you must be resolute and brave."

Purple, or blue, stands for the spiritual. It is the color of God's unstained heavens, the color of the great, blue, wide sky which stretches away and away to the infinite, while it leaves behind all that is filthy and low and mean.

In all these ways, then, do we strain, by help of the floral christening, to reach the children's better nature. We can do it better in this way than we can by the use of water, and that is why we have made the innovation.

MANY CHURCHES.

The Chicago Tribune recently contained the following from the Advertiser, of London, Ontario. Our readers may have heard of yet other religionists.

ONLY ONE HUNDRED TWENTY-SEVEN WAYS TO HEAVEN.

The diversity of view on moral and religious questions is interestingly and even startlingly illustrated by the variety of denominational opinion in the Province of Ontario. We have been in the habit of speaking of the Catholic, Anglican, Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist, as if these and one or two others comprised the divisions of religious opinion in Ontario. It will surprise many to learn that in our own province there are actually no fewer than 127 recorded shades of religious belief, and there may be some still unrecorded. The following are among those recorded:

Adventists, Agnostics, Almighty, Ammanites (Amish), Anglicans (Church of England), Angelicals, Apostles' Association, Ark of the Covenant, Atheists, Baptists, Free-Will Baptists, Believers, Bethelites, Bible Students, Brethren, Buddhists, Broad Church, Calvinists, Carmelites, Catholic Apostolic (Irvingites), Children of Christ, Children of God, Christadelphians, Christian Association, Christian Brethren, Christian Catholic, Christians, Christian Scientists, Christian Workers, Church of Christ, Church of the First-born, Church of God, Confucians, Congregationalists, Covenanters, Daniel's Band, Deists, Disciples of Christ, Divine Science, Divine Sect, Dutch Reformed, Elzeans, Evangelists, Evolutionists, Faith Healers, Farringloutites, Fifts, Followers of Christ, Free Church, Free-thinkers, French Church, Friends (Quakers), Gathered Out, Gentiles, German Catholics, German Reformed, God in Christ, Gospel Brethren, Greek Catholics, Helpers, Hittites, Holiness Movement (Hornerites), Huguenots, Humanitarians, Infidels, Jews, Jude's Church, Latter Day Saints (Mormons), Liberal Christian, Lord's Religion, Lutherans, Materialists, Marshallites, Mennonites, Messiahites, Metaphysicians, Methodists, Miciats, Millennial Dawnites, Missioners, Mohammedans, Monice, Nazarenes, New Church (Swedenborgians), New Era, New and Later House of Israel, New Theology, Non-Sectarian, One Body, Orthodox, Pagans, Pantheists, Philosophists, Pilgrims, Plymouth Brethren, Presbyterians, Primitive Brethren, Protestants, Rationalists, Reformed Episcopalians, Reincarnationists, Religion of Love, River Brethren, Roman Catholics, S. #### HAWAIIAN VOLCANO ACTIVE.

By copies of the Commercial Advertiser, of Honolulu, sent us by Bro. Waller, we note that some of the famous Hawaiian volcanoes are becoming active. In the issue for June 9 there was a letter from the landlord of the "Volcano House" to the editor of the Advertiser, as follows:

Volcano House, June 5.—Dear Sir: Yours of June 2 received. I am pleased to inform you that the crater is now active.

Sunday, June 1, at ten a. m., there was observed an outburst of gases, red dust and black smoke from Halemaumau; at noon another outburst of gases was noticed. In going down nothing could be seen in the pit on account of the dense smoke. The black lava around the pit was covered with a fine red dust.

The following Monday and Tuesday, nothing unusual. But at about 10:30 p. m. Tuesday a faint glow was seen over Halemaumau, which kept getting brighter. On going over it was found that a small stream of lava had broken out on the southwest or Kau side of the pit and running down to the bottom, forming a small lake. There is still considerable amount of smoke, which seems unprecedented when there is fire.

This evening the sight was grand. A party of English tourists saw it. The way it is now acting the fire will continue for some time.

From the record books here I find that the last fire from Halemaumau disappeared during the month of September, 1896.

Very truly yours,

F. WALDRON.

(A slight appearance was reported in 1898.—Ed.)

In the same issue the editor says:

Kilauea is doing nothing extraordinary, the "Kau flow" being a mere slop-over from the inner pool into the outer crater. So far, the imps of Pele have behaved themselves very well indeed. For over a year Kilauea has been gently working up to an eruption and there are no indications, as yet, that it will become lost to its customary sense of seismic propriety.

The Hawaiian volcanoes are famous because of the amount of scientific data which has been derived from them, and they are now being watched closely. The recent Martinique horror has startled the observers of seismic phenomena into greater activity. Scientists are boldly and recklessly risking their lives in their attempts to snatch from the smoking mountains the secret of their wonderful power. Before Mont Peléé had ceased shaking it sides scientists were climbing up the mountain to peer into its crater in attempts to see somewhat of the awful forces at work within the troubled heap. Some of the bold searchers for knowledge were driven away from the very crater by the poisonous gases and dense smoke.

Now that the Hawaiian volcanoes are showing signs of awakening they will be the mecca of many seismology specialists. However, the people do not seem to be disturbed, as may be seen by the following from the Advertiser for June 10:

Bob Scott, manager of the Hilo Hotel, is visiting old friends in town. He says that since the volcano tuned up, the heat in Hilo has been most oppressive and of another kind than the plain solar variety. It feels now and then as if it came from a furnace. There is considerable smoke in the air also.

"People in Hilo are not much perturbed," said Mr. Scott, "but there is a disposition in the country to get up at all hours of the night and stare out toward the volcano. Nobody looks for an eruption at the summit which will menace Hilo, though some fear the lava may come gushing out of the mountain side a few miles up. Probably nobody would think of it save for St. Pierre. I hear that steam is appearing even in the Kona district, where runs the crack which was made from there to the Volcano House by the earthquake of 1868.

"Quite a good many people are going up to the crater," added Mr. Scott. "Thirty-two were booked the day I left."

Letters said to have been received from Waimea and the Humuulu sheep ranch confirm a former report that the summit of the crater of Mauna Loa, Mokuaweoweo, has given indications of a possible eruption. Smoke and ashes are reported to have issued from the crater on May 31 and June 2. Captain Townsend of the Eclipse, who first reported the outbreak at Mokuaweoweo, returned yesterday from Kawaihae and said that the natives there confirmed the first story of the outbreak.

MOODY VS. SMITH.

In a letter to Bro. August H. Merkens, of Mexico City, a prominent religious worker wrote concerning Joseph Smith:

"While at Clifton Springs recently I went to Palmyra and visited the home of Joseph Smith, saw where he dictated the Mormon Bible, baptized the first converts, and reports that he found the golden plates. You probably will not believe what the people told me of him and his history. The contrast between the reputation of Mr. Moody among those who knew him best and that of Joseph Smith was very great."

The writer had in a previous part of his letter to Bro. Merkens been telling of the wonderful esteem in which Moody is held by those who remember him.

KANSAS CITY ORATORIO SOCIETY AT INDEPENDENCE.

The following is taken from the Kansas City Journal for June 17:

SANG THE "STABAT MATER."

The rendition of "Stabat Mater" by the Oratorio Society, of Kansas City, at Independence last evening, at the Latter Day Saints' church, was heard by an audience of 1,200 people. A large staging was built in the church for the accommodation of the singers, 300 in number. The magnificent chorus was assisted by the Schubert Club, of Kansas City. The solo parts were in the hands of singers of recognized ability.

The affair was under the direction of Carl Busch, and complimentary to Mr. Wallace N. Robinson, former manager of the May festival. After the concert, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson entertained the Oratorio Society at their home, near Pacific Place, with a lawn fête. Mrs. E. H. Wright, Miss Alma Koch, Professor Joseph Hoar, Doctor A. L. Murphy, Mrs. W. N. Robinson, and Mrs. S. J. Manzer took leading parts. Mrs. J. M. Stevenson, Mr. C. A. Larson, Mr. Alex. Hannum, Miss Louise Dose, and Mr. E. K. Chaffee rendered solos.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

A brother writes concerning a tract or pamphlet which had been handed him entitled, "A Stone in a Hat," which purported to give an account of how Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon, and among other things the book charged Joseph Smith with the introduction of polygamy, and claimed that volume 1 of the SAINTS' HERALD admitted such to be a fact. The brother asks us to make some statement concerning this alleged admission. We simply state that no such admission has been made in the HERALD at any time. Neither in volume 1, number 1, nor in any other number since its publication has such admission been made.

A CASE OF PERSECUTION.

Our attention is called to the fact that the spirit of persecution is still rampant in some parts of this land of boasted religious liberty. A letter from Bro. W. R. Smith, who was present at this shooting scrape, will be found elsewhere in this issue, and may be read in connection, and will show that the "Mormon converts" referred to are members of the Reorganized Church, and not believers in polygamy.

We give below an editorial from a public journal, apologizing on our part for the possibly political reference to Colonel Watterson and others, which is made in the editorial, and giving it only as a news reference to the fact of the disturbance and the view taken of it reprobating the violence done to the right of free speech by those violating the laws of Kentucky.

CONTEMPT FOR INALIENABLE RIGHTS.

A dispatch from Paducah says a Mormon meeting not far from that town was fired on by anti-Mormons recently. Mormon missionaries began work about a year ago, and made several converts. They built a church, which was burned down by earnest disbelievers in the Mormon faith. Services continue to be held to the annoyance of the good people of the neighborhood, who are now resorting to the shotgun and rifle to put a stop to the preaching of the gospel according to Joseph Smith. This is a violation of the inalienable rights of man, which the Kentuckians who are imbued with the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights of the Constitution ought to hasten to punish. There are some Kentuckians—Colonel Henry Watterson is one of them—who are disturbed because they think the natural, inalienable rights of the Filipinos are being trodden on. The Kentuckians in question should be even more solicitous for the conservation of the natural rights of men of their own State and of their own color. A Kentuckian has the constitutional right to hold and to preach the tenets of any religious denomination he pleases, so long as he does not make a bad use of the right, which the Kentucky Mormons are not alleged to have done. He has a right to build and hold services in a Mormon church. If Kentuckians are not allowed to do this in the neighborhood of Paducah, Kentucky, "anti-imperialists" should pay more attention to their own State and less to the Philippines. —Chicago Tribune, June 10.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In a letter dated at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June 17, Bro. La Rue writes: "I have a 'scrap' next Sunday with a Utah elder before the Radical Liberal League (Infidels). It will be a lively time no doubt."

M. L. Schmidt wrote from Delta, Colorado, June 17: "The work of the branch is onward. We are preparing to reach out into regions about. We troubled the waters again Sunday when two more precious souls were born into the new life. This makes three the past month."

R. J. Parker writes from Flower, Missouri, June 16: "I closed a very interesting meeting here last night. Baptized two yesterday."

Bro. I. N. White, of Independence, Missouri, writes, June 18: "We just closed a very spiritual conference at Coal Hill. Great liberty was given in dispensing of the word. The Saints of that region never felt more encouraged. I held forth a few nights at Eldorado Springs, where I met Braden a few years ago; and the people were greatly enthused to meet the man that met Braden so effectually. Had good crowds, and at my second sermon, a young lady from the Methodist Church came forward and asked baptism, which was attended to the Sunday after. One lady came forward and offered me her hand and said: 'Do you remember the lady that came to the pulpit after the debate with Braden, extending her hand and saying, "I want to shake hands with a man of God?"' I answered that I remembered the circumstance, but could not call to memory the person. She said: 'I am that lady, and am now one with you.' She having been baptized some time since. By inquiry I learned she was not the only one that had accepted the work from what they had heard at that debate. I met Brn. Moler, T. R. White, Manering, Silvers, and Stephenson, of the missionary force at the conference, and all were cheerful, and were doing a good work. Bro. Stephenson was ordained an elder and promises to do good work in that office. A reunion was appointed to be held at Roscoe, from August 9 to 17. I am greatly encouraged at the outlook of the work."

Bro. J. F. Grimes writes from Pickering, Louisiana, that there is but one member of the church there, and that it seems hard to open up the work; but he is working to organize a Sunday-school, hoping in this way to get our literature before the people. He writes: "I have been closed out of two houses this week, after having fair promise to occupy. We shall not give up, will keep trying, hoping and praying that God will open the way by and by."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A prominent daily of this country recently had an editorial on "Woman's Three Dangers." The three dangers are: In girlhood, Finery; in young womanhood, Flattery; in maturity, Intellectual Vanity. Here is food for thought, sisters.

By letter from G. J. Waller dated June 10, we learn A. H. Smith and secretary left Honolulu June 10, expecting to reach San Francisco June 16. Bro. Waller says the Patriarch's visit to Honolulu has been prolific of much good. Four baptisms while there and more expected. His work there, says Bro. Waller, will be long remembered.

A book has recently been issued by the Macmillan Company, of New York City, entitled "Story of the Mormons," by W. A. Linn. It is a book of over six hundred pages and is selling at four dollars per copy. We have received a copy for review, and expect to soon make as thorough examination of it as our space will permit.

Sr. Missouri Miller writes from Parrish, Illinois, saying that Brn. Morris, Slover, and others had recently been preaching in that neighborhood. She desires to live aright.

Quite a number of Lamoni Saints were in attendance at the conference of the Lamoni Stake held at Lucas, Iowa, June 21, 22. Several of the younger people were attending the Religio and Sunday-school conventions on Friday.

President Joseph Smith left Lamoni June 19, for a sojourn in Michigan. He was accompanied by Heman C. Smith, who is looking after Michigan as missionary in charge.

The Honolulu papers gave Patriarch Smith much and favorable mention on his recent visit there.

According to papers sent us by Bro. Waller from Honolulu, it seems that A. H. Smith on June 1, after preaching in Arion Hall on the history of this work, and outlining the differences between us and the Utah church, was led into an informal discussion on the differences, by Elder Waddups of the Utah church. The reporter stated the discussion was about as interesting as was the discourse.

Elders, missionaries, etc., who have occasion to wait for trains while passing through Aurora, Illinois, will find it convenient to call at the art studio of H. J. Atkins, at 86 South River Street, west side; so the brother writes.

Original Articles.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

Preached at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, April 13, 1902.

"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you." "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me."

This, the language of the Master. And while we have been listening for the week that is past to those debates which involve the duties of them who are called Saints, I have noticed the high and lofty plane to which our aspirations have been led, and I have been led to wonder whether it were possible for us to compass the height after the weary days' travels are over.

And now to-night, let me invite you to a theme in which there is infinite comfort; a theme that has moved the hopes of sages; a hope that has characterized Israel's hosts; a hope that must be born and have fruitage in the hearts of modern Israel, the children of the covenant of peace.

I have chosen this topic because it yields us an opportunity for that. It enables us to soften the asperities of our natures under the rasping influences that may have surrounded us, the strong incentives to do that have been presented before us, and the direful consequences of our failure to possibly reach the standard of completeness which has been presented before us.

Since the time for which our brethren could come to this place to attend this conference again, friendly hands have laid to rest Bro. Thomas Daley, of Santa Rosa, California; that is to say, they have laid his body away to rest.

Bro. Morris Short, who has been a characteristic attendant upon our meetings year after year, who has worn the helmet, carried the shield, and borne the sword of a hero of the cross, has also taken up his departure, and friendly hands have also laid his body to rest.

On the morrow, one of our brethren called from the conference, will officiate at the obsequies of Bro. John A. Robinson, another unique character, with whom we have for the last quarter of a century been so familiar.

And whether we will or no, our hearts have been made tender by the recollection of our association with these men, and others like them, whose faith has never known wavering in the hour of difficulty or danger.

And now, what is our hope touching these men? What are the conclusions of our minds? What are the aspirations of our hearts, touching the broken ties of association that have been swept aside so rapidly and so rudely by the approaching hand of death? As I listened this afternoon to that eloquent and logical exegesis of the text which our brother used, I tried to measure myself by the intellectual standard, to see whether or not I had reached the extreme on that side of the question; and in spite of myself, in spite of all the careful supervision that I was able to put upon myself, I found my heart welling up and I concluded that it might be possible for some to reach the golden mean to take both the head and the heart until there should be an equilibrium established and the character perfected, but I find myself to-night in the same dilemma that I did then; my heart responds to the touch of these ties which have been so strongly knit in the association of the Saints, and with such characters as these whose bodies have been taken to the grave, while we have been assembled here in the Master's business. And I call up my intellect to-night to give myself some reasons why my heart should not bleed, my eyes be suffused with tears, my lips tremble and quiver with the intentness of that sorrow that death brings into the family; and I can not but think it was not the brain of David that uttered that remarkable statement, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." I can not think it was possible that David should have said concerning the Holy One, speaking unto Him who had fashioned him and who sent the Holy One that he might have hope, "Thou wilt not leave that Holy One to suffer corruption." Whether or not his intellect looked back over the promises which had been uttered in the past, of which he might have been cognizant, I can not but think his spirit, with the hope of his heart, went forward, and saw with perfect vision the character that was to overcome death and the grave. And I have stood in imagination by the side of that wonderful apostle of hope and trust in the gospel of the Son of God when standing on the stairs in the castle he waved his hand to enjoin silence and then told that assembled host whose hearts were troubled, "For the hope of Israel I am called in question this day." It was that hope of Israel, was it not, that when the trials of life should be over, when the earth should have filled the measure of its creation, there should come a surcease of sorrow, there should pass away that which was imperfect and wrong, and Israel should enter into the possession of that inheritance that had been promised through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the covenant that God made with them.

And when I go with those bereaved sisters to the tomb of Lazarus; when I notice how tenderly they loved him; when I regard with what strong intentness each of them said to Jesus, "If thou hadst been here our brother had not died," I am led to wonder how it could have been that he in his public preaching, with all the knowledge of the case before him, with all the comprehensiveness of the Spirit that must unavoidably have been with him, that he could have forgotten for the time being his divinity, and in his humanity have wept for Lazarus, I can not but think it must have been by the very side, it must have been by the shade of the house where they dwelt after the day had passed and evening had begun her reign that their conversations should have led unto the hope of Israel which he had come not only to intensify, but in himself to exemplify, that by and by there should be a resurrection of the dead. How could it have been otherwise, that each of these sisters should have made this exclamation in her turn, "If thou hadst been here our brother had not died"? Had they taken better cognizance of what he said than did his disciples when he told them clearly that he must pass under the rod, and that though his body might be killed yet should it rise again? And with that faith they must have understood him when he said, "I have power to lay it down, I have power to take it again."

And you and I, my friends, children of the covenant, reinstated in our day and generation, what is our hope? Can we go back along the history of the past and with Israel stand waiting by the side of this open sepulcher and lift our hearts to God in thankfulness that though we may in this life wear the garments of mourning, sprinkle the ashes of sadness on our heads, yet there shall come a time when this active, sensitive being, untrammelled by these bands of the flesh, shall rise to greet them who have in the past trodden on the same road as we are, striving to accomplish for ourselves what Jesus accomplished for himself, and his saying unto us, "Come and follow me," has indicated to us that within our reach is the exercise of the same power. And as I think of our brethren who have gone, when I remember the strength of their characters, when I remember the tenderness of their sympathies, when I remember the matchless faith in which they have stood before assembled crowds to tell the story of the cross, I seem to feel the influence that they must feel now after they have overcome the trials of the flesh, and as expressed by Bro. Short, The day or the moment of my passing out of this existence into another is the crowning arch of God's mercy unto me.

It is a fortunate circumstance for us that Christ Jesus made the statement that "God is not the God of the dead but of the living." It is fortunate for us, my friends, in this condition of sorrow that we may possibly comprehend the statement made by Him, "He that believeth on me shall never die." Being born into that life, that spiritual life by which we shall be brought into communion with the church of the Firstborn, by which we shall become allied to the hosts of the past in the dispensations which have long been gone, when we shall have become associated with those who have been then, and with all that have dwelt upon the earth, then we shall discover and understand more perfectly that God had testified that his children, born into the life of Christ, should never taste of death.

Why is it that we cling so tenaciously to the life which now is? Why is it that we measure with such regret the lapse of time that marks our locks with the whiteness of the snow; that makes the steps to falter, wastes the strength, and awakens the desire within us to grasp with strong hands the things of the life that now is? Why is it? Is that faith of the latter-day gospel not sufficiently good for us to live by? And if it is, is it not sufficiently good for us to die by? It now seems to me that when the Savior undertook to comfort his disciples he took the best means that was at his hand, and when he uttered these words which I have chosen for my text, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me," I am satisfied that he felt, if he could but arrest the attention of his disciples, if he could but secure unto himself the strong confidence that he desired in them, if he could make them feel the wondrous ministry of his life in the flesh, he could so encourage them, so build them up, so strengthen them and so cheer them that he would fit and qualify them for the trials through which he knew they would be compelled to pass. And I am satisfied from the history that I have read, touching the life and journeys and death of these men, that he succeeded admirably; for they valued not the life of the flesh when being about their Master's business. They took it for granted that whatsoever took place with them they were as identities in God's hands and that the wondrous power that sent Jesus to the world and gave men to know that he was the Christ, would never suffer them to be overcome by the adversary. Why then do we pray, "Keep us as in the hollow of thy hand"? Why then do we ask him to spread his wings of protection over us? And what could we possibly mean by this except that in this perishing life we suffer pain and mortification of spirit? We may be put in the crucible of trial, of every possible kind, and O, that he will grant unto us power to abide, strong faith to continue, and that we may go smilingly along. Just so long as that hope is bright in our hearts, just so long shall we continue this unequal contest with the adversary of souls against our flesh, and fight, and fight successfully, and overcome at last. What comfort in that thought uttered away back yonder that though this outward man perish yet shall he rise again. While we know that corruption, chemical decay, as expressed by Bro. Short in his last piece published in the HERALD, one of the most beautiful things that I ever read from mortal pen, shall occur, and this chemical decay shall take our body back to its mortal element, yet he lifted his soul in thankfulness to God, and gave glory for the hope that was within him, and so may we, stumbling along in life's journey, as we are. Some of us are approaching very near unto the confines of that open grave. Only a few days more, a few hours, possibly, a few years at best, and those who now greet each other in apparent vigor of mind and body must face the inevitable.

And now is it not a blessed thing for us, my strong brothers, my strong sisters; is it not a blessed thing for us, my aged brothers, my aged sisters, that we also while we walk stumblingly, may walk with our hands in his, confident that though the flesh may perish, the spirit liveth for ever? I am satisfied that when God placed us upon this earth he gave us our identity. He intended that these identities should never become submerged or overcome to such an extent that they would not be under the necessity of answering a responsibility to God, and that these identities of ours, with other identities that have lived in the past, who are living now and shall live after us, shall, one by one, receive a commensurate reward for work and labor, care and anxiety, contest and triumph that shall be ours. And what a blessed hope that is, that no matter how humble a man, no matter in what lowly sphere a woman may move, no matter how high and lofty may be the character of the man whom we may name as a hero, of the woman who is set up on a pedestal and glorified because of her grace, her strength, or her beauty, each one is given the opportunity that God has designed for each one, and faculties which they may make their capital out of, and through the grace of God receive through these identities the best that is within the hand of God to give, or must be content with the poorest gift belonging to him to confer.

And what a comforting thought it is that if one be broken by reason of accident, such as happens upon this earth and in this life, there shall be given back, through the matchless mercy of God, all that could have been given to that particular identity under the best conditions of moral, mental, and physical development, that God had designed to come to the race. As I pass through the forest I know that when the seed falls to the ground it has been intended of God that it should grow straight and symmetrical or according to the peculiar character of the seed that fell upon the earth, and yet I see that hundreds and thousands of these denizens of the forest are gnarled and twisted and the symmetry broken by the circumstances of accident and storm that came upon them and the winds that tore them, but when they have performed the design of God, and when the time shall come that he has finished the design of the earth, all that was created and intended to grow shall adorn and glorify the earth as he intended it to. And can I think anything less of him concerning these identities of ours? But how much more. "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." And yet man only a little lower than the angels and God has been mindful of him, and to what intent and purpose?

As we have said, the glory of God is to bring to pass redemption and the salvation of man. Then to-night let me exhort you in the language spoken to these apostles, brethren and sisters, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God," believe in him who uttered this declaration, "believe also in me." Believe him, why? Believe him that for every loss you may have suffered in this life by no mistake, error, or design of your own, but because of the unfortunate things that may have transpired in your life, God will give it back to you with beneficent hand, full power of development, every beauty of form, every grace of symmetry. Everything that can conduce to that which is graceful and beautiful in fine and completed development shall be accorded to you over on the other side, and when the purpose of the earth shall be fully finished, he will spread his wonderful influence over it and it will be created anew for your occupation and the occupation of those for whom it has been designed; not in the broken forms in which we see humanity now too frequently, but as they would have been under the influence of the best conditions which he designed man should have surrounding him here in this life.

Let me see if I may illustrate that. I knew a woman who lived to be nearly seventy years of age, if not quite. I was frequently with her for over a quarter of a century, and during all my acquaintance with her I knew her as a woman whose form was wasted and distorted from some cause, I know not what, helpless; and yet that wasted form was occupied by a spirit so pure that no one could converse with her without seeing the beauty of the spirit that was within. She was carried to her grave a wasted form. All her life long, living under such conditions as that; and frequently when I have sat by her side and talked with her I have pictured to myself the form of Mary Bond under the influences that should be brought to bear in the resurrection, when God should give to that spirit a body that belonged to it. When God should restore to that invalid all that she had been deprived of by the conditions under which she had been born and had lived.

It was my fortune, I call it fortune, I do not call it a misfortune, I do not dare to do that. It was my fortune to lay in the silent grave the form of a beautiful girl not yet one and a half years old, to my thinking one of the brightest spirits I ever saw in a child, and I have thought, during the many years that have intervened since that day, of that form, and asked myself, Why is it that this should have occurred in my family? Why is it that these who are in the morn of life should be held to answer to the dread reaper's call? And yet, my friends, the hope comes home to my heart to-night, as it does to you fathers, you mothers who call to mind circumstances like this, and

I see by the eye of faith, through the influence of that belief in Jesus that is strengthened and confirmed by these words of my text, I see that beautiful form over yonder and realize through the promises that God has made in his Scriptures; both in ancient and modern revelation, that when the time shall come, if I shall live worthily, I shall be permitted to greet that spirit again, and mingle in the society of spirits of a similar character, to whom God's power shall have given back the beauties to which they are entitled. Paul writes, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men the most miserable." And that language of the Apostle Paul is just as true to-day as the day he penned it, and these words are immortal. They shall continue while time shall last, and when eternity shall begin you and I and all that shall be found worthy shall know to the fullest extent what was intended to be conveyed by the declaration, that if in this life only we have hope we are of all men most miserable. Our hope goes over beyond, it reaches within the vale, and, as I remember once hearing my Uncle William express it, "I have stood by the bank of the silent river, in my spirit; I have heard the singing on the other side and my eyes have beheld the lights of the city over on the other shore." That, brothers and sisters, fills our hearts with gratitude to-day, and we lift our voices unto Him who has made the resurrection possible to us, and we strike, in spirit, glad hands with the hosts to whom the Apostle Paul addressed himself when he says, "For the hope of Israel I am called in question this day."

We who have professed faith in Jesus Christ must not hesitate on the brink of the grave; we must not in our heyday of strength declare our faith in Jesus Christ, then when our feet are on the bank of the river that leads to the Valley of Death allow our faith to waver. I recommend to every one who hears me this night to get the HERALD or the Ensign and read the last lines indited by Bro. Morris Short. Put yourselves in his place, stricken down in manhood's strength, and feeling at the outset that his days were numbered, calmly, quietly, without distress of mind, without hesitancy of spirit, he puts himself into the hands of God, and if you can get into such a condition as that, as I feel satisfied that you may, you will find that this life is worth living, this life in Christ is more than worth living, it is of infinite worth! And you will be so pleased that you will cease to tell your sorrows in public, and commune in your sorrow with God in your closets.

You who are conversant with the history of my life may to-night bear me witness that I have never burdened the Saints with the stories of my sorrows. I have borne what has been cast into my lot with what complacency of spirit I could. I have not burdened the ears of others with my griefs, nor have I spread them abroad. But I must tell you that such sorrows as have come to my lot must have had a sanctifying influence upon my spirit or I have passed through the crucible in vain, and I speak not for myself in this experience but for other men, and every man who has been through such trial.

And as I regard our condition to-day, burdened with the cares of the church as we are assembled here, feeling a great desire in our hearts to further on the great cause, to be found at work for the Master here and everywhere, while together here in our association, our spirits congenial, our faith alike, we feel that we could unitedly face all the hosts of the adversary; and yet how many of you will go from here into fields where you must labor alone, except for the Master's presence, when you will not be surrounded by men of like faith, where you must give as an individual alone the reason for the hope that is within you? Then comes your trial. Then comes your hour of rejoicing, because you know he has said, "I will be with you." Now is that not a comforting thought? Is not that something that, if we will but allow it to have its full effect upon us, shall enable us as individuals, no matter where we are, to reflect the steadfast character of that man, though he may have been a transgressor, who, in the hour of his trouble preferred to fall into the hands of an offended God than into the hands of his enemy? He would rather fall into the hands of an offended God than into the hands of his earthly friends. He could say, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." That likeness was the likeness of Christ. And, as you will remember, the last time I spoke to you—those of you who were here—in reference to this peculiar thought, that if I could conceive that Jesus struggled only in his divinity, he could not impress me with the power of his example, I could not trust him as I now trust him when I reflect that it was in his humanity he fought his fight for human kind. It was in his humanity that he told you and me to win the victory; and it comforts our hearts to know that because he won we also can win; and then we can understand what the Apostle Paul meant when he said, "If the Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead be in you, it shall quicken your mortal bodies." Go and read, if you please, the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians and see what is said there. Some will say, "With what body shall we come forth?" What matters it to you or to me, with what body we shall come? The word of the Lord has been established through the words of the Apostle Paul. He will give "to every seed his own body." You need not be afraid that your spirit will not get the body that was intended for it. For God's power is just as able to give back the body that was intended for me or create out of the matter which is in his hands a new body of entirely different component parts and give to my spirit its body. Where is our need of hesitancy? Where is our need of being afraid of that pale reaper? Let him come when he will, take from our midst those around whom our heartstrings may be wound, so knit that they may break under the influence, but trust him still.

My brother David and our Bishop Kelley were born on the same day, November 17, 1844. More than half the life of that man has been spent in bondage worse than death. I would gladly have followed his form to the grave rather than to know his life so wasted, and when the thrust has been made at me that I put him behind the bars of the asylum because he had changed his faith, because he had been convinced of certain things against which we have contended, my heart has bled, I have been indignant, for if he could be freed from that bondage of the spirit and the mind, from that broken tenement in which the spirit dwells, that his spirit might be free, as free as you and I are to-night, to make the changes, I would rather take the consequences of what he might do than to see him in the condition that he is in.

I remember at one time when the conviction of his condition was forced upon me I started from the town of Plano to Sandwich wanting to get comfort somewhere. I sat down by the railroad, poured out my soul in prayer. How long I was unconscious I do not know, but it must have been some time, for when I arose the sun was sinking, and when I got up from my prostrate condition I arose with this song in my heart, I have sung it ever since, "I will trust thee, though thou slay me." And why? Cheer up, my friends. Because Christ is the power of the resurrection. It does not matter to me how soon I may be called to the other side, so my work is done. It does not matter to me how long I am continued here, so I may be permitted to labor to the end. It is a glorious life to live, this of a saint, hoping, trusting, praying, laboring for the accomplishment of God's purpose on the earth confided to us, and as expressed by Bro. Thomas Hougas on one occasion, "This gospel was good enough for James, Paul, Jesus; thank God it is good enough for me."

Where are we then? Cheer up. Sing a song of rejoicing and gladness. Let your spirits look forward to the time when we shall strike hands with the heroes of the past, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Isaiah, Micah, Zechariah, with James, and Joseph, and Hyrum, and all these modern heroes of the cross, those who have toiled before us, those who are toiling now, Robinson, Short, and Daley, those who may now go down to their rest; we shall shake hands with them on the other shore. We shall know them. There will be rejoicing there such as we can not experience in the flesh, and when I see my brethren broken by pain, twisted and distorted by disease, see them hobbling along on their staffs, waiting for their time to come that their journey will be ended, I can see them straight and stalwart in the world which is to come, their broken bodies renewed and strengthened. Therefore I say unto you, in the language of our Master, "Let not your hearts be troubled: you believe in God, believe in Jesus Christ also." And may the loving kindness of our Master give us unto the full a conception of what is waiting for us over on the other side, when that which is stated in the Book of Mormon shall be fully transpired, every portion of the body unto its proper part through the power of the resurrection in Jesus Christ.

I make no apology for what I have said. I knew not when I came into the stand what might be the course of my thoughts. Let us then enter into this work with patience, and the dignity and the virtue and the patience and the integrity of men and women of God, and you do not know what blessings will await you there. Let us cultivate lightness of heart, joyousness of spirit, and the ability to look abroad and take proper cognizance of the things of this life and give them their proper estimation, not overestimating our own faults but being always confident in the strength of Jesus Christ whom we serve.

ANOTHER SOLUTION.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN A DEVOTED SPIRITUALIST (E.)
AND THE WRITER (B.).

B.—Good-evening, my friend. Come to meeting with me to-night. You like good things, and new things, and I have a message that will be new to you. It embraces every good thing you can think of, the objectionable, offensive features do not attach. You can find no fault, nor flaws in the message.

E.—What do you think of Moses Hull's lecture that I handed to you the other day?

B.—I enjoyed his argument splendidly, but I fear Moses Hull stole it from the Latter Day Saints. [Laughter.]

E.—I do not think Moses Hull would steal.

B.—Neither do I; I simply meant to say that our people have used that same scripture, and made that same argument ever since the restoration of the angel's message, which embraces every good thing that you believe plus every other good thing in the universe. Will you come with me to meeting to-night?

E.—It has been a long time since I went to meeting, but I am not prejudiced. I have an engagement to-night, but I will go to some of your meetings before you go away. Do you believe that the spirits of the dead can come back to those left behind and commune with them?

B.—Yes, I do. Moses and Elias came to the transfiguration. The angel talked with John and said, I am of thy brethren the prophets. (Revelation 22: 9.)

When there was a demand for a divine commission to be given to men on earth, God sent Peter, James, and John to do that work. When the times were ripe for the history of God's dealings with the aborigines of America he sent Moroni to instruct the young Palmyra Seer. Paul said of the angels, "Are they not all ministering spirits?" So it is a settled, demonstrated fact that God can and does commission some to do work on this earth. But whether they can return at will, and converse through mediums, is still an open question. I have no objection to their doing so if God has so ordered.

E.—I do not see what stronger evidence any one can ask for than we already have. If you call that an open question, I can not see what you would call closed and settled. Conviction was forced upon me. I was very prejudiced when I made my first experiment. I thought I would catch the medium in some trick; presently he described some one wishing to talk with me; I recognized by his description that it was my wife that he saw. She had been dead several years. And he an entire stranger to me; this was my opportunity. I adopted a method of cross-questioning, all of which was correctly answered. In this way I drew out secrets that no living person but myself knew. The evidence was too weighty for me; I had to believe.

B.—Yes, I have heard many such testimonies, none of which I am inclined to doubt. But have you not seen operators on the public stage who could read the thoughts of their subjects?

E.—Yes, I have, and I thought of that; but I was reminded of little trifling events and secrets that I had not thought of for years, indeed; I had forgotten some of them, and it was not until all the associate happenings were related to me that I remembered, and then it all gradually came back as fresh as when it happened. There was no reading of my thoughts in that, but the faded thoughts were brought back to my mind. Talk about settled questions, why sir, no one with good horse-sense can pass through what I have and continue to disbelieve. I have had a communication with my wife, and it is no open question with me.

B.—I am not doubting a single evidence you have related, nor denying your statements in the least; it may all be true so far as know. I simply say, It is still an open question with me. I have yet another solution to the problem, if you care to hear it.

E.—Certainly, I want to hear it, please proceed.

B.—All right. I shall ask you to consider briefly that wonderful faculty called memory. It seems to be a function not of the conscious mind, but of the spirit. The mind loses track of many ordinary events; you forget where a certain tool was used last, and where it was left. Memory is called treacherous; familiar names, important duties, necessary errands, etc., are forgotten, or rather the connection between memory and conscious mind is turned off, disconnected. After a while, when you are thinking of other matters, the connection is unconsciously made and the proper message is flashed to your mind; often it is too late, and we hear, "Oh, why could not I have thought of it when I wanted to." You see that mind has no absolute control of memory. Many of these forgotten events recur to mind only on very rare occasions, when by accident or sickness one is rendered unconscious. After resuscitation they say, "Every event of my life was before me as clear and vivid as when it happened."

At the hour of death, when the physical forces are spent, and conscious mind is passing into oblivion, a conjunction of spirit and mind sometimes occurs and the departing one is conscious of every act of past life. "There is a spirit in man;" it is the storehouse of memory; nothing that is deposited there is ever lost; all the minor details are faithfully preserved.

Again, there is a certain stage in hypnotism when the conscious mind is in a very deep, oblivious, unconscious sleep, and the spirit in conjunction with an expert operator from whom nothing in the past life of the subject can be hidden. His spirit talks freely of matters so remote that they have faded from the conscious mind, also of matters which he is strongly obliged to hold as sacred secrets. And when the influence of the operator is withdrawn and the subject again aroused to activity he has no memory of what his spirit has been saying.

This is clear evidence that memory is not a function of the mind, but of the spirit.

Now to the point: Can you tell what happens when you become passive to a good medium?

E.—Yes. I usually receive a communication from my wife.

B.—Possibly you do. I would not mar your joy in the least; I simply invite your attention to something else. When you become passive to a medium and your spirits conjoin, your memory is before him as an open book. He can read your secrets, and relate your history as readily as you can read the calendar and tell the days of the week and month.

Nor do I charge the medium with sinister motives or trickery in the least, for a very large majority of them have no well-defined conception of occult philosophy. Like the average electrician they study only the results, and not the cause. Let this solution furnish food for your thought and it will likely reopen the question that has been prematurely settled and closed. Good-evening, my friend. Come to meeting when you can.

E.—Good-bye. I will go to meeting some of these nights.

D. R. BALDWIN.

Be glad, my heart, and sing thy song,
 Now while this darkness hides the light.
 The linnets, when the sky is bright,
 Carol the same notes all day long;
 But the poet's heart doth throb and thrill
 When the nightingale sings in the darkness still.

DISEASES DUE TO TOBACCO SMOKING.

"It's a bad habit," admits the smoker to his friend who asks with reference to his pipe, cigar, or his cigarette.

"If I ever catch you with tobacco in your mouth," says this same man to his son, taking his own cigar out of his mouth for emphasis, "I'll take all the hide off your back!"

But, according to a medical expert, this man, neither as friend nor father, conveys a shadow of the seriousness of his vice to either friend or son. He does not know it himself, says the physician, and, more than that, the doctor says that not even the profession appreciates the serious consequences that are inseparably connected with the smoking habit.

"It is a queer situation," he says; "while every authority is agreed that the use of tobacco is most harmful to a young person, there are physicians who will even prescribe it to a man as a sedative. And it is a soothing influence for just so far as its use as a drug makes tolerable; but one pipe too many makes it a source of irritability and nervous excitement.

"Look at it as a poison. Every pipe which has been used half a dozen times has enough nicotine in it to kill the smoker several times over. That it has not killed him is due to the disposition of the poison, to stick to the pipe. But not all of this does so. How, then, about its unquestioned influence upon the system?"

"Again, as to tobacco, there is the unquestioned story of the man who stole a bunch of tobacco leaves from a Havana dock, secreted them under his clothes next the skin. He went on with his work, perspiring freely, and suddenly fell unconscious to the floor. Treating him first for sunstroke, the man's plight was discovered, but not till he had nearly lost his life.

"There are other stories sufficiently authenticated showing how a man who rubbed tobacco decoctions over his body for a skin disease was nearly killed by the poison; of the mother who rubbed tobacco ointment on her child's head and face, causing the little one's death; and of the man who died from swallowing an accidental dose of tobacco water.

"Probably every pipe that has been used half a dozen times contains a dose of poison sufficient to kill the smoker in a few minutes. Fortunately, it stays in the pipe as a rule. But most of us get a taste of what's there now and again.

"In one case a man got a particularly large quantity of this poisonous juice into his mouth. In a few seconds he fell, unconscious, and but for the presence of a doctor he would inevitably have died. As it was, his life hung in the balance for a long time, but was ultimately saved.

"Even animals are affected in a severe manner by tobacco. A calf washed with tobacco infusion, as a remedy for some disease, died in a few hours. Doctor Murray filled three glass jars with tobacco smoke and placed in them a sparrow, a magpie, and a frog. All three died.

"Lastly, we have something to learn from the effects of tobacco on dogs. If a dose of tobacco juice be given to a dog daily, he soon loses his hair, then his teeth drop out, and next he becomes blind. Perhaps this experiment supplies an answer to the question: 'Why are men bald?'

"Of course, the work of reformers has injured the educational prospects of the would-be tobacco users. These reformers so often have spoiled all that they might have accomplished by putting coffee and tea into the same category with tobacco. These fatalities from nicotine show to the simplest that neither of these table drinks can be compared to the poisons of tobacco, and the cry of the reformer becomes at once too much 'wolf.'

"But to come to the certain influences of nicotine. Both Sichel and Critchett, well-known English oculists, discovered that a smoker who used even so little as five eighths of an ounce of tobacco a day for any sustained period suffered a wasting of the optic nerve, called amaurosis. The disease is a dulling of the sight, yet no examination of the eye will reveal the defect. Whether it is caused by the irritating effect of the smoke, or whether it operates through the nervous system, is a question, but in any case, other things being equal, it is recognized that the smoker has not as good sight as has the non-smoker.

"If the eyes suffer, so does the nose, and Dr. Armory Hare, who liked a whiff of the pipe as well as the next one, has laid stress upon the statement that every chronic smoker suffers more than his share of nasal catarrh. This is strengthened by the well-observed fact that men, more than women, are afflicted with 'colds in the head' in chronic form.

"Chronic laryngitis is one of the recognized effects of too much smoking. It may begin with the victim's remarking that he becomes hoarse without seeming cause. The acrid fumes of the tobacco have set up a slight inflammation which makes the surface more susceptible to cold, and as the smoke keeps up the irritation and the drafts catch him, he has chronic laryngitis before he knows it.

"Darwin once accused people who smoked many hours a day of having little common-sense. This observation may be regarded from the point of view of the physician with more than a shade of credulity. Smoking has a disposition to dry the mouth and stop the flow of saliva. With an insufficient amount of saliva in the stomach the processes of digestion are interfered with, and the person having a stomach full of food laying in an undigested state can not be in the most reasonable and reasoning mood possible.

"Of all these ills, tobacco-heart is one of the most pronounced and dangerous. In almost any hospital one may see victims of the tobacco-heart, scarcely able to sit up in bed and too weak to move. In the hospital these patients are refused tobacco and they soon recover.

"Angina pectoris, one of the most dangerous and painful of diseases, often is caused by excessive smoking. Some of the most prominent men in all walks of life have died from it, and in most cases they have smoked to excess.

"Does tobacco cause cancer? This question has been disputed, when answered in the affirmative, largely because among the vast number of smokers in the world so few of them have cancer. Yet in English statistics it has been shown that out of seventy-eight cases of cancer of the mouth treated in a cancer hospital only ten cases were those of women. Taking this showing, and the fact that a wound of any kind on a person disposed to cancer may produce the disease, it is not too much to suspect that the pressure of a hard pipe-stem on the lip, with the consequent irritation of nicotine, may be the direct cause.

"Aside from these most serious consequences of smoking, we have the unmistakable evidences that weakened muscles and tremulousness result in nearly all cases. This is so well recognized that for athletes in training smoking is prohibited. For rifle-shooting the smoker suffers as much from shaky nerves as from his eyesight, and few records have been made by men who were inveterate smokers.

"Yes, smoking is something more than a bad habit. Give a dose of it daily to a dog, and he soon loses his hair; keep it up and his teeth will drop out, and pursue it still further and the animal will become blind. However, it is only the reformer who sees in these statements of fact the final end to tobacco-smoking."—Chicago Tribune, June 1.

PAST AND PRESENT.

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born,
The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn;
He never came a wink too soon
Nor brought too long a day;
But now, I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away.

I remember, I remember
Where I was used to swing,
And thought the air must rush as fresh
To swallows on the wing;
My spirit flew in feathers then
That is so heavy now,
And summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow.

I remember, I remember
The fir-trees dark and high;

I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky:
It was a childish ignorance,
But now t'is little joy
To know I'm farther off from heaven
Than when I was a boy.—Thomas Hood.

Opportunity.

Master of human destinies am I,
Fame, love, and fortune on my footsteps wait,
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate Deserts and seas remote, and, passing by Hovel, and mart, and palace, soon or late
I knock unbidden once at every gate!
If sleeping, wake—if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury, or woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore,
I answer not, and I return no more.

—John J. Ingalls.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"To feel a hand extended
By one who standeth near;
To view the love that shineth
In eyes serene and clear;
To know that he is calling—
This is to hear!"

Life's Scratches.

The sorrow that speaks from folds of crepe,
In the whole wide world confiding,
Is lighter to bear than the rasping care
That never comes out from hiding.

The mind can cope with a giant grief,
Though mighty the pains that wrack it;
But its strength gives way when night and day
Life's pigmy worries attack it.

A terrible woe is a sacred thing
By friend and by foe respected;
But the meanest of ills is the one that kills
In the dark, and is never detected.

Few are the desperate wounds we get
In life's great sparring matches;
We parry the thrust that would fell to the dust,
But come to our death through scratches.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

A Few Items of Our Voyage.

Besides Metuaore and Pohemiti there were only the three who were in charge of the boat to accompany us to Papeete. This was fortunate, for the boat was small. We had not been out two hours when a squall of wind and rain made up. We three, Lillie and I and Lillie's young native woman attendant, hurried down below to get clear of the wetting, but two armed themselves with umbrellas and hurried back again. The sensation below was not agreeable. But having gone below, I stayed there till we neared Papeete. The rain was soon over, but the wind continued. For two days and one night I laid there on uneven boards and boat-ribs with only a piece of canvas spread over them, without ever sitting up, most of the time too sick to move. The others stayed on deck all night, all except Joseph, with nothing but boards to lie on and very little to cover over them, and no room to spare. And O such a night! The mainsail was reefed and one jib taken in, but the sea came over every little while, not only wetting those on deck, but leaked through the seams down on us as well. Joseph and I, Metuaore, Pohemiti, and sometimes Petoa, put the night in below decks among trunks, valises, and boxes that would not stay put. O yes, and there were some pillows, too. When the boat would give an extra lurch to leeward, I would hear a sliding and scrambling about on the house, and was afraid each time that some of them would go overboard. There was no railing. Their only protection was an oar lashed against the rigging. Sr. Peterson says she believes they would have slid over had it not been for Bro. Alexander. He did not slide as easily as the rest, and they all clung to him.

The next day was bright and sunny but very rough and a strong wind. While crossing the bar outside the Golden Gate I heard our brethren saying something about being sorry there was not more sea; they would like to have had an experience. Whether this was the kind of experience they were ambitious for I do not know, but it was an experience at any rate, one that caused us all to be glad that we did not have to be out another night; and glad, too, that we got to land in time to get a good supper, for very little had been eaten while on the boat, so it was settled by unanimous voice that we should proceed at once to a square-meal restaurant. Therefore, regardless of our seedy, salty appearance and the glowing blistered faces of those who remained on deck, we six staggered, rather than walked, through the town of Papeete, feeling thankful that it was an hour when few persons were on the streets, just between the day and the evening. Bro. Alexander's pants had become quite an outline map of the voyage. They showed forth in white, salty ridges, the high water mark of each sea that washed over them.

I am not sure that I would be using the proper term, were I to say that we did justice to the generous quantity of food that was set before us, for I am not sure that it is justice to devour everything and call for more. Towards the latter part of the meal the waiter did not cut the bread, but brought it on the table in loaves and laid a large knife down by it and went out with a tired, sorrowful look on his face. But justice or not, it will be long before I forget how good that big supper tasted. We had not had anything like it since we left Papeete, and after once getting a taste of the food that agreed with the taste and satisfied the hunger, or as much so as could be without home bread and butter, it kept two women and two oil stoves pretty busy cooking during the time our company were all together, saying nothing of the self-roasting process. Joseph suggested the fear that we would break up the Bishop. And had not Kaukura come nobly to the rescue by their aroha, and the Saints of this place contributed their portion daily, I think his fears would have been realized.

But all is cool and quiet now. Our brethren did not stay very long, and in just one week after they left for Australia Bro. and Sr. Peterson left for the Paumotu, where they still remain. We have not been altogether alone, though. On the same day that Bro. and Sr. Peterson sailed from here, December 9, Bro. John Hawkins arrived from Tupuai, and has been with us ever since. Will stay till April.

During the time our brethren were with us the weather was very dry and very warm. We often wished for rain, but none came, only a shower or two. It would rain on the mountain and out on the sea, but not here at Papeete. Since they all went away we have realized what a blessing it was to us in our rather crowded condition that there was no real rain-storm. During the past five or six weeks it has been rain, rain! Not in gentle showers, but real downpours, often driven by wind-squalls, and veering to all four points of the compass so that it found every
