The Daughters of Zion will hold their annual business meeting on April 7, at nine o'clock in the forenoon in Ensign Hall, on West Lexington Street. This hall is the building east of Ensign Publishing House. The sisters are requested to remember the date and make their arrangements to be present. All interested are cordially invited.

ADVISORY BOARD.

We trust that the above notice will attract the attention not only of each member of this organization who contemplates being in attendance at our approaching General Conference, but also of each sister who is interested in the work which this organization is striving to do. If you are a reader of the Home Column and have ever been benefited by anything which it contained, now is the time to express your appreciation of and gratitude for the earnest, unceasing labors put forth by these sisters that your homes might be the purer and better because of the aid they have diligently sought to offer you to that end. Please make a note of the date, time and place of holding this meeting, before you start for conference and when you are there, be sure not to forget it, but go prepared to offer not only the encouragement of your presence but a word of cheer and sympathy which will be most thoroughly appreciated.—ED.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Sydia Supry, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of cancer.

Sr. Mary West also asks for the prayers of the Saints. Last April she was thrown from an electric car, her hip was fractured and she has since not been able to walk without crutches.

Our Present Needs.

Man's needs and man's wants are two different things. A man may need a few things, and, at the same time, he may want a great many things. He may want things he does not need, and he may need things he does not sincerely want.

Some such thoughts as these may have caused John Quincy Adams to write his poem entitled the Wants of Man, a few stanzas of which are as follows:

Nor wants that little long,
'Tis not with me exactly so;
But 'tis so in my song.
My wants are many, and, if told,
Would muster many a score;
And, were each wish a mint of gold,
I still should long for more.

"What first I want is daily bread—
 And canvasbacks and wine,
 And all the realms of nature spread
 Before me when I dine.
 Four courses scarcely can provide
 My appetite to quell;
 With four choice cooks from France beside
 To dress my dinner well.

"What next I want, at princely cost,
 Is elegant attire;
 Black sable furs for winter's frost,
 And silks for summer's fire.
 And cashmere shawls, and Brussels lace
 My bosom's front to deck,
 And diamond rings my hands to grace,
 And rubies for my neck."

The writer of the poem goes on through the catalogue of man's wants, but we return to our subject, Our Present Needs.

Whose present needs are we discussing? We understand it to be the present needs of the Sunday-school.

Sunday-schools, as well as individuals, may sometimes confuse their wants and their needs. Sunday-schools, as well as individuals, may want some things they do not really need, and may need some things they do not sincerely want.

In some parts of our district, there may be children of Saints who are not in Sunday-school, and the reason they are not may be that the Saints have no meeting-house of their own, and the people of the neighborhood may not be willing they should have the use of the schoolhouse.

I have read a statement concerning a noted educator. He was very successful in his work of teaching. I have no doubt that, in a good, well-furnished schoolroom, well lighted, well ventilated, well warmed in winter and well cooled in summer, provided with the best text-books and all the apparatus and school supplies he could desire, in a bright, cheerful, comfortable room, he could teach, teach well, enjoy himself, and make the work enjoyable to the majority of his pupils.

But this was not what I read of him. I read that, if you placed him out in the woods, gave him a log for his seat, and placed his pupil on the other end of the log, he could teach and teach well, enjoy his work himself, and entertain and instruct his pupil.

And I have read of One greater than this man. I have read of that Teacher who rose in Galilee nineteen hundred years ago. He taught in the temple and in the synagogues when he was permitted, but it was by the seashore that he taught of the net cast into the sea, and it was by Jacob's well that he taught the woman of Samaria that he has power to give the living waters of eternal life. It was on a mountain that he taught what was, perhaps, his greatest sermon. It was in this outdoor school that he taught lessons in which the fowls of the air and the flowers of the field were his living illustrations, in which was manifested the care of God for the works of his hands.

In Sunday-school work we may want many things. How much do we need, and what do we need? We may think we need a church building, an organ, song books, quarterlies, clocks, bells, blackboards, decorations. We may count the cost of these things, say we can not meet it, and excuse ourselves for having no Sunday-school.

But it is possible to hold a Sunday-school without any of these things, if we consider that the prime object of a Sunday-school can be carried out, granted that you have but two things in right condition, teachers and scholars.

You may have no church building, but you have homes of your own. Why not have Sunday-school at home, or, in pleasant weather, out of doors in some convenient place? The Master did so.

You may have no organ, but you have your own voices to raise in sweeter music than that of an inanimate instrument, if you sing with cheerful hearts that love God.

You may have no quarterlies, but you have the Bible, and, if obedient children to God, you have the Teacher sent of God, the Holy Spirit, to enlighten your minds and to unfold to you the meaning of the Scriptures. You have the knowledge of the truth in your heart, and you can try to impart your knowledge to others.

I do not wish to be understood to say that it is not a good thing to have good rooms and good supplies for Sunday-school, if we are able to have them. Those things certainly should be helps and conveniences in our work, but they are not absolutely essential.

The success of God's work has never yet depended upon the money in men's pockets. The gospel is preached among the poor by the poor. It is true that money and the things money can buy may assist in our work, but our success does not depend upon our having those things.

God has told us in his word what things are necessary. If we accept his definition, we shall know what our present needs are. Our present needs are what the needs of his work always are.

Our heavenly Father, in defining our needs, says, "No one can assist in this work except he be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever is intrusted to his care."

These are our present needs. We may be teachers, officers, or members of schools well equipped in all material things, but we need to be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being also temperate in all things.

We may belong to schools that meet in dingy, uncomfortable, unpleasant quarters, and we may labor under many disadvantages, but we may gain good and do good even there, if we have what our work needs for the basis of success, humility and love, faith, hope, charity, and temperance. And there can be no real success in our work, if these qualities be lacking in us.

The poem from which we have already quoted, after naming many of man's material wants, says,

"These are the wants of mortal man,
 I can not want them long;
 For life itself is but a span,
 And earthly bliss a song.
 My last great want, absorbing all—
 Is, when beneath the sod,
 And summoned to my final call,
 The mercy of my God."

But every true Latter Day Saint has another want still. He wants not only the mercy of God, but also the approbation of God. We hope to hear him say, "My child, you have done well."

Then let us seek to cultivate humility and love, faith, hope, charity, and temperance, and do the best we can with the materials at hand to "build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness."

This is our present work, and more heartfelt consecration of ourselves to this work is our present need.

The Electrical Review, not content with being merely up-to-date in a technical way as concerns the advancement of science upon electrical lines, has recently made an improvement in the mechanical make-up of the paper, and now presents to its readers a clean, neatly printed paper, its article headings, department headings, and sub-headings all being in harmony with the body of the page, the whole presenting an appearance marked for its simplicity and pleasing effect. The variety of topics handled by the Review makes it an interesting magazine to the reader.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 3.

Dear Herald Readers: Just following debate with D. H. Bays, I held a few meetings at the Clear Creek Branch near where the debate was held, and to note what value the debate had been to the Saints there fully repaid me for the many tedious hours I had spent in preparing for it, and the time and ability used in conducting it. With the expression of gratitude by words for the great benefit the debate had been to them was associated the hearty hand-shake, and the tear of heartfelt joy. Truly I had become much attached to this little band of the Saints of God.

From there I called at Rhodes, Iowa, where I was blessed in talking to a few of God's children on Sunday evening. On Monday, January 26, I made my first visit to the Saints at Richland Creek Branch, whom I tried to assist and encourage in every way that God gave me ability, and truly I was much blessed,—never more in my life,—and this was all necessary for the good of the tried ones. Since leaving there such reports come as indicate progress, but in some ways not an attainment of spiritual growth to the extent as was desired and sought for. The trials the Saints here have endured during the past year have been very heavy, so much so that in all cases they have not been endured in patience. Let patience have her perfect work, brethren, while we run the race that is set before us. Received great assistance from Elder M. M. Turpen here, as did I also during the debate.

From thence Bro. Turpen went to the stake conference at Lamoni, Iowa, and I to Washington County, near Gracehill, where a great interest had been awakened by the preaching of Elder H. A. McCoy, who had gone there by the urgent invitation of Bro. and Sr. E. L. Moorman, who had through private conversation and the scattering of tracts prepared the way, and who gave a home to the missionary when he arrived. I found an anxious lot of people, many of whom had listened to what they had heard with wonder and astonishment, yet with joy did they receive it. I sent a note to the Moravian minister, Reverend Ronug, to attend the services; which he did, at which service I spoke upon the Biblical evidences of the existences of such a record as the Book of Mormon. He at once felt he was obligated to warn the neighborhood of so gross a deception, and announced that on the next Sunday night he would speak upon "Christianity vs. Mormonism." I attended, he having about fifty or sixty in attendance, while but about two miles away Bro. McCoy was preaching to over one hundred. Reverend Ronug had bought of me the Book of Mormon, and told the people that after examining it he had found it taught morality and virtue, condemned polygamy, and was in fact a clean book, and would do no one any harm to read it, but it was the product of one well acquainted with the Scriptures, a Mr. Spalding as he believed. He made reference to the revelation on the Civil War and volunteered to circulate them to the audience if he had them. I had a score or more with me, and accepted his offer; and while he circulated them I was permitted to circulate other tracts I had brought for that purpose. On Tuesday night I replied, at which time the minister was present. I do not believe he will ever accuse Reverend Spalding of being the author of the Book of Mormon again. Since then he has bought the Doctrine and Covenants.

On Monday I presided at a baptismal service when Bro. McCoy baptized into Christ six repentant souls. On Wednesday, the 11th ult., came to Des Moines on my way to Truro, where I preached, proceeding on my journey the next day. To this place I came to present the gospel in a new place near where resided Sr. Templeton, sister of Elder Frank Russell, who had by her saint-like life won the respect of the Progressive Friends who consented to the use of their church, where under adverse circumstances I occupied, leaving, I trust, a good impression with all who heard, and believe I did, judging from the expressions of all with whom I conversed, or from whom I heard. Here I found opposition of a very trying character, but I pray and hope that those then effected to oppose may be led to rejoice in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I was cared for at the home of Sr. Templeton, who, with her children, did all to make my stay pleasant.

Came to Des Moines, the 18th ult., and assisted during the conventions and conference held here, during which time one of the most profitable and spiritual assemblies I have ever attended was experienced. The spiritual conditions of the Des Moines District is advancing very satisfactorily, the work in the city being by far in the most satisfactory condition socially and spiritually it has been in for years. Brn. McCoy and T. F. Jones are near Eddyville, where there seems to be a splendid interest, Bro. Turpen is at Runnells, and Bro. C. J. Peters is in Warren County, where quite an interest exists. I close my work in the city Thursday night, then visit Runnells for a few services when I go to Clyde, where the first part of the late discussion was held, and from whence came an urgent invitation to occupy, much interest being begotten through the discussion.

The last two months has been one of much encouragement to the missionaries, and we rejoice because of it.

This year's work has been one of discouragement, conflict, and trial to the missionaries till of late, yet with gratitude we now view the efforts of the past. In every point in the district where labor has been done, there has been progress made except at Perry, and if there has been progress there it is not yet perceivable. While this condition exists yet some noble Saints are living there, who I trust will overcome doubts and discouragements enough to unite in a continued effort to save themselves from this untoward generation, and thus prepare the way for the saving of others, with the same zeal that has characterized their past efforts.

With hope in the final triumph and in the coming of Christ in glory, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

OMAHA, Nebraska, March 15.

Editors Herald: Yesterday we baptized here in the city six persons. One man and five youths, the ages of the latter ranging from ten to sixteen. Their conversion was effected by parental influence, Sunday-school work, and ministerial work, but we are sure that the Lord gave the increase as the Spirit seemed to so indicate to the writer at confirmation services.

All goes fairly well and the Saints are hopeful so far as I know. Love to all.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, March 12.

Editors Herald: Our district conference met Saturday and Sunday March 7 and 8, at this place. Elder Sheehy, as minister in charge, was present and presided. Statistical reports of the two branches in this district show a small increase in membership over all losses. Bro. D. C. Carter, of Baldwin, Maryland preached a good sermon to us on Saturday evening. Bro. Sheehy occupied at both morning and evening services on Sunday. I preached at five o'clock in the afternoon in a police station near to the church. All denominations hold services there. We had a large crowd present. If it will do no other good it will advertise us somewhat. Our energetic Sr. Hettrick, who attends services there had arranged for me to occupy.

I was invited some time ago to lecture before a society here on the following: "Resolved that Reed Smoot, Mormon apostle, is not a proper person for the United States Senate." I declined to accept the invitation. I knew of no evidence that would prove him to be polygamist, which seemed to be the principal objection against him. By newspaper reports I note that a crusade against polygamy is soon to be inaugurated in this city. Mass-meetings are to be held, the object of which is to "stir public sentiment in favor of an amendment to the constitution." These meetings are held under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Women's Christian Temperance Union, and the International Council of Women for Christian and Patriotic Service, whose headquarters is at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Doctor Sarah J. Elliott, who is reported to have had some experience in Utah, is to be the principal speaker. I have written some of these parties calling attention to two excellent articles by President Joseph Smith, in reference to polygamy, etc. The "Origin of American Polygamy" is ably treated by him in the Arena for August, 1902, and the North American Review for March, 1903, contains another article from him on, "Polygamy in the United States. Its Political Significance." I wrote a letter to one of our city papers here a few days ago which was published. In it I inserted the resolution passed by our late General Conference, favoring legislation prohibiting the practice of polygamy. I trust through these various sources that no intelligent person will be so unjust as to misunderstand the well-defined position of the Reorganized Church on the polygamy question. The only legislation that will strike the fatal blow to polygamy will be to prohibit any man from living with more than one woman as a wife. To prohibit "plural marriage" will not do it. The marrying part is as it seems to be, quite insignificant.

During the last year I have done a large amount of correspondence with editors, publishers, etc. I have seen some very good results therefrom. The truth is bound to win its way in time. I think we should keep the matter agitated and our lights burning. The difference between our faith as the Reorganized Church and the institution in Utah, must be well comprehended before we can expect to have the confidence of the people. Whatever we can say through the "press" on that line is potent to our success. Thousands of people do not know there is such a thing as the Reorganized Church. Let us advertise anywhere and everywhere we can.

At the close of the conference year I can say that I think the work in this place has made some progress. My labors have been mostly directed in the interest of the cause in this city. I have had the valuable assistance of Elders George H. Smith and Hosea H. Bacon. Bro. Archibald D. Angus, as priest of the branch has labored willingly and faithfully. Bro. Henry Carr occupies the seat in the watch tower of the teachers' office, and is showing himself to be efficient and capable for service along that line. Our two young brethren, Walter and Edwin Lewis, are filling their office and calling as deacons, in a commendable way. Bro. John Zimmermann acts as Bishop's agent. Bro. O. T. Christy is solicitor for the chapel fund. The debt on our new church is gradually being reduced. Sr. Laura Christy is yet faithfully in charge of the musical part of our services with a number of other willing and able assistants.

The Religio is doing good work under the presidency of Henry Carr. We have good attendance and interest in this department. The Sunday-school cause is moving onward under the direction of Ellsworth B. Hull. We have a "Sisters' Prayer Union and Busy Workers' Society," recently organized. They are doing good in many ways. Sr. Florence Smith presides. We hold priesthood meetings regularly every month and we believe it is a source of much good. Taken as a whole the work is in a good condition and our services are being better attended all the time. Unity and good will prevails, and this is so necessary to progress. Once in a while a few have the boldness and courage to take up their cross and accept the gospel. Three more were buried with Christ in baptism on Sunday, February 22.

Because of the illness of my father I was absent from my field about three weeks. My appointment for the conference year here is near the end. The pleasant and agreeable association with Saints and friends here has endeared them all to me. As we look forward we ponder, what will be our orders for next year. I feel resigned to do as directed and follow where wisdom's path may lead. However, since I have been in this city now for two years I have thought that perhaps a change would be well. A new man with new talent perhaps could invigorate and inspire new life and renewed activity among the flock here. I expect to leave here about April 1 to attend the General Conference. May the Lord bless his people and prosper his work.

Fraternally,

156 W. Ontario Street.

W. E. LA RUE.

CHICAGO, Ill., March 23.

Editors Herald: Conference year is fast drawing to a close, with its record of failure or success. The summary of conditions in Chicago can not be detailed, but we believe that progress has been made; improvement in some lines, more unity, a better feeling, increasing appreciation of the necessity for discipline and order necessary to the growth and development of the church.

There have been some additions to our number, and the prospect seems good for the future; baptism this week, and others near and deeply interested, and the future prospect good if wise provision is had for the administration of the gospel—the feeding and proper care of the flocks already gathered into the fold. Some, quite a number, of substractions from church membership became a necessity, but it clears the atmosphere of bad odors, while no blood was drawn. A better era of feeling and fellowship, we believe, obtains; spiritual aid, recognition from the only source to which wise people will look for approval, has been vouchsafed.

There is much yet to be accomplished, and the day of perfection for us all is yet far away, and to flatter ourselves that otherwise is the case, is to invite defeat. The constant self-examination which the gospel enjoins is an absolute necessity in order to be able even to listen to proposed suggestions for betterment.

There is nothing more lacking nor more of a hindrance to the unity necessary to growth than a disposition to belittle lawful attempts of others. A lack of love, fellowship, or good will towards those who exercise the universal right of disagreement with us in opinion; tolerance, Christian forbearance, long-suffering, if need be, with those who err ignorantly, and an appreciation of the Spirit of the great Christ-heart that can recognize all the external as well as the internal forces that impel human action, and of the power and force of the last great commandment, "Love one another,"—not a clannish association or fellowship, but the broad and safe gospel contention, that "love is the fulfilling," not evasion, "of the law," for purposes of self-justification.

We may not likely return to Chicago another year as a minister for Christ, but we have learned to love the people and are interested in their gospel salvation. May God, through the conference, send them "wise" "builders." He or they should be a worker or workers, not only with men, and in exercise of physical muscle, but first of all, "with God." It is easier sometimes to exercise a man's legs than his conscience or his brain, albeit the former may oftentimes command or engage the attention of the superficial observer, and judgment be rendered that fails to watch or to take into account the matter of results or consequence.

"The kingdom of God" neither comes nor grows towards permanency with "observation" of the carnal or natural eye. Were any of us ever on board a large, magnificent ocean steamer or vessel as she leaves port freighted with a great cargo of possibilities of hope or fear, success or disaster? In whom are resident, more than all, the responsibilities for a battle with storm and tempest, rocks and reefs, and dangers that may encompass the ship and threaten the voyagers, which shall result in safety or a wreck? Is it with the man down in the depths of the ship, who, ten or twelve hours in a day, may exercise to the limit or capacity his physical muscle? To the novice, especially in his experience, as on pleasant days, no sign of storm, he is the worker.

Let us go aloft for the day is fair. There is another man, in the cabin perhaps; he is surrounded by pleasant company, and a temporal and social environment for the time, that is in strong contrast to the coal-heaver below, or even the ship's crew attending to their duties. This man is the ship's captain. Now he is on the bridge, watching the barometer, glass in hand, watching the rising and threatening clouds; winds arise and blow, thunders peal, and the tempest is on. To whom do we look for safety when peril is ours? Who is the worker, the thinker, the brain-worker, who bears the responsibility of the care of a thousand souls upon his own heart and soul? Who in times of calm, prepares himself for emergencies, and when they arise, meets them successfully? Who foresees signs of danger and of storm while skies are only streaked with faded color lines?

To successfully combat all the forces that threaten disaster to the ship we call "Zion," can not safely be left to the novice and the inexperienced, the crew nor passengers, nor the man in the bottom of the ship; and no matter what volume of different and introductory advice may come from all or any as to the ship's management or direction, the success of the voyage must depend in a very large measure upon the wisdom, experience, knowledge of men, and of devils, masked behind innocent forms, whose subtlety is not superficially perceived, of the ship's officers!

A bad or unqualified man, whose commission as an officer has been forced by a contention not warranted by the law, nor facts which should govern ordinations—one unused to the complications involved in the management of these forces, may fail to guide in safe channels the ship in which our dearest hopes are involved, and ultimately wreck that which he or they were not qualified either by gift or calling to be intrusted with the management of. I have maintained for years, and my convictions grow with the years, that the kingdom of God will never "appear" in its beauty, as fitting illustration of "the law of the survival of the fittest" in church building and government, until we have a larger supply of "wise master builders" at the head of local branches of the church.

The world has the right to, and our people should be educated to demand, a better representation of the greatest ethical and spiritual system of educational possibilities involved in development of gospel resources inaugurated through the angel's message, that is in the world to-day, but which is so lamentably lacking in some quarters.

If "this gospel of the kingdom" is to be preached and stand "as a witness" against the world, it must be of a character that will stand intelligent cross-examination here and at the final bar, if intelligent men and women are to be saved or condemned by it.

Then let us try, every man, "to learn his duty," and then, "act."

Let the deacons who are called of God do that which the law enjoins.

Let the teachers teach the law to members and exhort, or even insist, in case of violation, upon attention and obedience to it.

Let the priests preach, after attending to the flock and branch duties that require a care for the flock, and assist the elder as occasion requires.

Let elders preside, whose qualification and ordination and choice permit; and if ruling "well," be counted worthy of due honor; and if not (and the law, not personal spite or favoritism, should determine this), turn them out, and obtain by fair and intelligent vote as possible the right one.

May God bless the gospel workers everywhere. The church and its mission never seemed so glorious, so important, or so full of possibilities as now.

My physical powers seem to be waning, but I could wish myself again young and strong to engage in our great battle for right and truth as God himself in his gracious mercy has revealed it unto me.

I hope to be able to attend the General Conference and enjoy with all the measure of success we are hoping and praying for.

In the faith,

M. H. BOND.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, March 22, 1903.

Editors Herald: I inclose herewith some correspondence that I have recently had with our friend (?) and anti-Mormon leader so-called. Possibly there may be some thought therein that would interest your readers, but if not, kindly return to me at Lamoni.

I am interested in this latter-day work and can not always keep my mouth shut when I hear and see the truth assailed. The more I know of the gospel the more I desire to help to convey the message to others or try the harder by word and example to let my light so shine that others may be benefited thereby. And if those who now fight so hard against the principles of life and salvation could only see the folly of the course they are pursuing, it seems that they would at least desist and turn from their evil ways.

Let me add in connection with this that the HERALD comes to me regularly as a beacon light, so to speak; for I am alone so many Sundays and the HERALD is my only preacher, and I prize its reading. May its usefulness continue and increase and be the means of assisting many in the struggle of life, especially for the life beyond.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

CHAS. F. CHURCH.

CHAS. F. CHURCH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir: Your favor received. Send you copies of the Helper and enroll you for one year on our list.

I send you sample tract. I have issued six. I am to deal fairly by the so-called Mormons of whatever denomination.

I have an impression that you are not "one of them." Have a reason for the impression. If you are not, ask me and I'll hand out the reason.

Yours,

R. B. NEAL.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, February 21.

MR. R. B. NEAL, Grayson, Kentucky.

My Dear Sir: Your favor of the 4th inst. was duly received on my return home a few days ago, and I take this opportunity to reply. I will also acknowledge receipt of the two copies of the Helper, and Tract No. 2, and I have taken my earliest opportunity to peruse their contents, concerning which I wish to say a few words.

I fear that your impression that I "am not one of them," was not well founded, for it has been my lot to be cast among this people, the Reorganized Church, since my early boyhood days; but I have had the opportunity to be associated with all, or many other classes of religionists that are familiar all over the country, as I am a commercial salesman, and from Sunday to Sunday I meet with different classes of worshipers of different cities and towns. I am also brought into contact with the pastors and priests of different denominations, as I sell art glass for church windows, and in all this, I have an excellent opportunity to view the religion of Jesus Christ from the standpoint of differing creeds and sects, but in none of them have I found the pure principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ so plainly set forth and so nearly taught in harmony with the New Testament as in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Still, I have no sword to cross with any one, for they all have the same right to liberty of conscience and action in the matter of religious belief that I have, but I feel sorry to think that in this enlightened age any one with as much ability and education as I am willing to credit you and your coworkers with possessing, and having such good opportunity for seeing, as well as hearing and learning by means of authentic writings, of those who know the facts in the case, should ever be led or induced to put into print and ask a thinking public to believe such misrepresentations and foolish stories as are contained in this little paper.

I shall try to think that you are honest in the matter, and want to save some from the so-called delusion, but I want to urge you to take up the authentic works of the church commonly called "Josephites" (not the Utah Mormons), and carefully examine without prejudice the tenets of faith and the claims of Joseph the Seer, and I will say to you that you will find none of the so-called "horrors of Mormondom" contained therein, but on the other hand, the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ in their plainness and simplicity. Further, you must remember that we are in no way, shape, or form responsible for the wickedness in the Utah church, any more than any other Christian denomination, and there is no church extant that has done as much missionary work as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to try to show the deceived and deluded honest ones in the mountains of the West the errors that they have been led into by cunningly-devised plans of evil-designing persons. You should also be willing to give every one their just dues and accredit them with that which you desire for yourself; namely, honesty.

Further, wish to say that I can well challenge the world to produce a leader of a people who is able to show a cleaner and clearer life record than has Joseph, the Martyr, or his son Joseph of our time; none of the leaders excepted. I say this advisedly. His enemies claim otherwise, but so also did the enemies of Jesus Christ. However, we do not pretend or try to place the two on a level (as certain foolish ones have apparently desired to make it appear that we do); for Jesus was the Son of God, begotten of the Holy Ghost; and the other, a mere man of our time, but one whom the Lord chose to do a certain work; and he did it, the claims of some to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, brother, if you have the truth in the religion you are engaged in, you have no need to try to tear down any other work, even though it be from and carried on (as you think), by evil influences or from an evil power; for, as it is stated in substance by one of the New Testament writers at one time, "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught; but if it be of God, ye can not overthrow it; lest haply ye be found to fight against God."

Then too you can accomplish more good by teaching the way of life (if you have it), and try to get these poor deluded (?) people to accept the truth, but the policy of trying to tear down another's faith without offering something better will never have the desired result.

I am glad to note that you say you are to "deal fairly" with these people, but who is to be the judge in this matter? How would it look for the Latter Day Saints to jump on to the Presbyterians, Methodists, or even the Christian Church and try to hatch up or revive old, worn-out threadbare stories, most of which were false in the first place, and told by lying lips, to hurt the influence of either John Wesley, Alexander Campbell, or others, and announce ourselves as "anti-Wesley," or "anti-Campbellites," or what not, and try to destroy the good that they may have done? And we have just as good foundation for taking such a course as have your people in the movement that you style "anti-Mormon movement."

In regard to this movement let me say to you that you will not injure the cause which you seek to destroy, but you will only the more advertise it and get it before the people, giving our ministry the opportunity to explain and teach the truth to the world, and the honest in heart will accept it whenever they can see it as it is.

You say you have "an impression" that I "am not one of them," and have a reason for so thinking, and if I write that I am not, you will be willing to tell me why you think so. I shall be glad to have you give me this reason any way.

You may not care to peruse this already more lengthy letter than I anticipated writing you, but I see this subject differently from you, and I am sure you will be glad to take at least a short view from the other side.

Let me urge you in closing that you be not found fighting God's work, but search the Scriptures (Holy Bible), for in them is found eternal life, and we can not afford to spend our time kicking against the pricks, as Paul put it.

Trusting you will take this in the kindly spirit in which it is intended, and consider carefully and prayerfully the course that you and your colleagues are pursuing, and ask yourself if you are keeping the golden rule, and try to find out whether or not you are fighting the truth. Or still again, granting for argument's sake that you have the truth, why are you not trying with all your might to diffuse that light, instead of trying to tear down what you think to be a weaker people and work?

Trusting that this will not weary your patience or intrude on your time, and that I may have the pleasure of hearing from you at no distant day on this, to me, all-important subject, I am,

Very truly yours,

Home address, LAMONI, Iowa.

CHAS. F. CHURCH.

GRAYSON, Kentucky, February 23.

CHARLES F. CHURCH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 21st inst., to hand. I must compliment you not only upon the matter, but upon the manner and spirit of it as well.

It is quite a contrast to a number I'm getting from "Hedrickites" as well as from "Brighamites" and "Josephites."

I can understand fully why you, reared, brought up, in that faith can receive "Joseph Smith, Jr.," as a prophet, seer, revelator.

The "elders" by their pugnacity have brought on this fight. Wherever you find them they are on the war-path against all others; the Utah elders in some sections, the Iowa elders in other sections. I feel certain that I can "weigh an argument" and I know that I am not averse to truth from any source. The conflict is on and your best and ablest men are coming to the front. If their sword-hand can not keep their heads, I am sure it will be the fault of the cause they plead, not lack of zeal or ability on the part of the men.

My "impression" that you were not "one of them" was based on the fact that you sent in twelve cents instead of ten to pay for the Helper. My impression is that as a rule the elders don't waste even a stamp.

Here's to your success as an "art glass" salesman, and may much good come out of this hot contest now on as to the truth of the claims of so-called Latter Day Saints.

Respectfully,

R. B. NEAL.

MANCHESTER, England, March 7.

Editors Herald: I have much for which to thank my heavenly Father. He has blessed me with the light of this gospel and a portion of his Holy Spirit, which helps me to overcome.

We are holding services at our home on Sundays and Wednesday nights; also a mothers' Bible class on Thursday afternoons, which we sisters feel is very helpful. The brethren are trying to spread the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard by going around with tracts. I hope the Lord will bless them in their endeavors.

I desire to live faithfully to the end, that I may meet the little ones which have gone before. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister,

ELIZABETH NIXON.

DOW CITY, Iowa, March 24.

Editors Herald: On the evening of the 18th inst. the Ladies' Aid Society of the Omaha Branch gave an entertainment for the benefit of the branch which was quite enjoyable. The chapel was well filled, a good number of those not of our faith being present, and some took part with the Saints in the exercises of the hour. The program was well carried out and the best of order obtained.

Near the close, when the curtains were drawn back, the Aid in full force were busily engaged with their work, while Sr. Alice C. Schwartz entertained the audience by reading a composition representing the special object had in view by the sisters in giving the entertainment, written by Sr. Rachel Brown. It was pleasant to see so many sisters thus working for the good of the church while being entertained in so pleasant a way. Long live the Ladies' Aid Society of the Omaha Branch, and may its members multiply and its power for good increase!

On the evening of the 23d inst. the writer was agreeably surprised while calling at the home of Bro. and Sr. C. M. Hollenbeck with Bro. F. R. Schafer, when from sixty-five to seventy of the Saints came walking in with cakes and fruit to have a social time together and present a token of love and respect for their pastor before he left for home and General Conference. Such tokens of love and confidence are as refreshing to the missionary as is an oasis in the desert to the weary traveler. Not that they are so far apart, but the social features of such gatherings, together with the object had in view, break the monotony of the ordinary experience of missionaries of our church. Judging from what we see and hear there is a good feeling in the branch referred to, though there is still room for improvement along certain lines.

A beautiful bouquet on the pulpit every Sunday morning is indeed pleasant and inspiring, and naturally lifts the mind heavenward. Thanks to the donors.

Some men and women wait and wait,
 Until their friends are dead,
 And then they gather flowers rare
 To scatter o'er their heads.

They stand beside the cold, cold clay,
 From which the spirit's fled;
 They ring their hands, and cry, and pray,
 As though they'd wronged the dead.

They wish they had them back once more;
 That they once more might live;
 That they might kiss them o'er and o'er
 And tell them of their love.

Then why not love your friends while here,
 And speak your words of love
 To cheer their hearts and calm their fears
 And fill their homes with love?

This world would seem by far more sweet,
 And life would be prolonged,
 If we would teach each friend we meet
 By acts of good performed.

If I have friends who love me dear
 I would much more prefer
 Their acts of love, their words of cheer,
 Should be my part while here.

For me I would prefer much more
 The flowers beside my path;
 I'd have them blooming at my door
 And climbing every lath.

I'd have the fragrance, rich and rare,
 Of love's most holy flowers
 Within the hearts of those now here,
 Enlarging all their powers.

I'd have our church, while here below,
 The sweetest place on earth;
 I'd have the Saints and children know
 I appreciate their worth.

Even heaven itself, should it be without music and flowers, would be like home without a mother.

How pleasant it is when Saints can dwell together in peace and labor together in harmony for the development of self and the salvation of souls. How very precious the truths of the gospel are to the hungry soul as the mind grasps them by the influence and power of the Holy Spirit. The vision extends to the world beyond, and the mind expands as it grasps the things of God, making the heart to overflow with gladness because of the goodness and love of God. Cheering indeed is the knowledge given to the faithful and humble followers of Christ that the Master still lives, and the work is divine, and the gospel of Christ is still the power of God unto salvation to all them who believe and obey its elevating precepts.

When in possession of the Spirit all doubts and fears are melted away like the dew before the morning sun.

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

"Then let us be pure as the lilies,
 And joyous and glad as the rose,
 So when Jesus selecteth his jewels,
 In Zion we'll find our repose."

Yours in gospel bonds,
 CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, March 19.

Editors Herald: A crusade against polygamy and "Mormonism" is on in this city. I have attended two of the meetings and heard Doctor Sarah J. Elliott speak. Among other things I heard her say that Joseph Smith was an "epileptic" and of "disreputable character," also that he had "fits," that his mother was a "gypsy;" that the church was organized in 1832; that Joseph Smith was shot down in Missouri. This lady spent several years in preparing for this work in Utah. I send you some of the pamphlets handed out at the door. One of them says Joseph Smith was a polygamist, while the other one says he "was disobedient to the heavenly vision."

Like those who opposed Paul, crying "some one thing some another," it does not make a great sight of difference what it is, so they cry. Joseph Smith certainly told the truth, or rather was told the truth, when he was told that his name was to "be had for good and evil among all nations." It would be easier to apologize for his having "fits" than for the truth which was revealed through him. We who believe in his prophetic calling have at least the consolation to know that "fits" is not a contagious disease; very seldom does one ever recover, however, from the contagious truth taught by him, especially when they come to a full understanding of it.

The article on polygamy in March North American Review is doing good work now as a reference.

Yours in the faith,
 WILLIAM E. LA RUE.

SPRINGDALE, Arkansas, March 20.

Editors Herald: I am now living near Springdale, and wish to know where and who the saints are here, and what is the nearest branch, as I wish to be associated with the church work and to be permitted to meet with them if possible.

This is a very pretty country; some fruits now blooming. We have been here but a short time and can not say as yet how we may like living here, but we find plenty of work on our little ten-acre fruit farm.

MRS. W. G. VANDERPOOL.

MORNING SUN, Iowa, March 12.

Editors Herald: We rejoice when we read the good news in the HERALD and Ensign. I can not see how some Saints can get along without the church papers. We are isolated, and could no more live without the church literature than without food for the body. There are only four Saints near here: my brother-in-law, Frank Kaestner, and his wife, and my husband and I. I was baptized last September by Elder Roth, and my soul rejoices that I was permitted to hear the true gospel and that the good Lord sent Bro. Roth here to open a new place. He had the house full every night when the weather permitted and had a good interest. He removed a great deal of prejudice and made many lasting friends to the cause. He makes everything so plain that a child can understand him, and he has a kind word for every one who meets him and thereby makes friends for himself and also for the cause he so much loves. We all hope that General Conference will return him to this field. He visited us last week, but the roads were so bad that holding meetings was impossible.

I used to belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and thought I was all right; but when I married, my husband showed me in the Bible what he believed, and I read Elder Roth's sermons, "The Kingdom," also "Church Unity," and saw at once that the Methodist Church was not the church of Christ according to the Bible. And so far in all my investigations I have found none but the Latter Day Saints who are right. Therefore I rejoice in the doctrine of Christ as taught by his servants. Elder Roth's last visit with us has done us much good. We hope he can come again and hold another series of meetings. We would be glad to have any of the elders call on us and preach in our schoolhouse, which we can have at any time.

May God bless every effort put forth for the salvation of the honest in heart. Remember us dear Saints, in our isolated condition, and pray that we may be able to hold out to the end.

Your sister,

MATTIE KAESTNER.

RED WATER, Texas, March 17.

Editors Herald: I can not say it is all sunshine, for it has been cloudy and raining off and on for about four months. The country roads are impassable. In many places the people can not get to market and some are suffering for something to eat. The creeks and rivers are all overflowed; a great deal of fencing is washed away and the poor farmers can not get in their fields to do anything, and the like of railroad wrecks I never heard of before, and destructions in every way. Bro. E. L. Henson and myself are striving to tell the truth to the people; but owing to the bad roads not many can get out; but we are striving to build up the Saints and encourage them until the Christian warfare is over. I had the pleasure of leading a fine little girl into the waters of baptism Sunday evening. So one by one they come in. To-day Bro. Henson starts for home, and I go elsewhere to tell the beautiful gospel story.

E. A. ERWIN.

PORTLAND, Oregon, March 20.

Dear Herald: Recently I was away for six weeks, and on my return found my table loaded with HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves, and Hopes. How good they looked! I had missed them so while gone.

I have been praying earnestly to know if it were best for me to go home to Eldorado Springs, Missouri, this spring, taking in General Conference on my way, or stay here this summer. I have so wanted to go to conference, and wondered if any one else desired it as much as I. But if sure it were God's will for me to stay here, should try to be content. In reading yesterday a brother said such good things on the subject of prayer. I agreed with him, that one spiritual prayer-meeting is worth more than several sermons. And I thought, "I can read sermons in our papers which are a great help to me, but not one social meeting have I attended since October, and I am so hungry for them. Can I go without them for six month or a year longer? And I felt that that article was an answer to my prayers, that I should again mingle with the Saints in public worship. There is great opposition here; my nearest kin will not look in one of my papers, or listen to anything I might say, and say they "hate the Latter Day Saints worse than anything on earth." They "don't see why I want to go back," as I have "nothing to go back to," as I "have no children there." "No one to go back to!" How little they know of the tie existing between Saints. If good we love them; if they stray we grieve and pray for them; if in trouble we sympathize with and encourage them. The children in the church are precious lambs to be cared for. "Nothing to go back to!" When there is a tie binding us together stronger and more enduring than that for kith or kin. No! they can not understand it, but would have us stay and go on Sunday excursions with them, card parties, and the like, being the height of their enjoyment. I sometimes feel that I am doing so little good; but then again I feel encouraged.

I must tell you what a stranger did, a Latter Day Saint living two hundred miles from here. On her way to California she called. I took her in my rooms and we had a pleasant chat, said she got my address from HERALD, a letter of mine. Told her I did not know if it had been printed, as I was too poor to take it; that I took the Ensign, which was all that I could afford. In about an hour after she left, her husband came to the door and handed me a package of two large linen tablets, two packages envelopes, and laid two dollars and a half in silver on top of it. The tears came; not alone for what I received, but the kindness of the giver. I appreciated it much, and I am now taking the HERALD; do not feel that I can ever do without it again.

Sr. Bessie Simpson and her daughter, from Wallula, called a few days ago. She is a niece of Sr. Alice E. Cobb, of Lamoni, and has been in the church but a little while. She is very zealous as is shown by the fact that though she will be here but a few months, yet she is round hunting up the few scattered Saints in Portland, and wants to start a little Sunday-school.

I lately spent several pleasant days in Bro. Hudson's family. They miss the church privileges. The youngest daughter, fourteen years of age, wants to join as soon as opportunity offers.

I hope to meet many of the HERALD readers, at conference, and shake glad hands.

MRS. M. J. PHIPPS.

TULSA, Indian Territory, March 20.

Editors Herald: About two years ago I attended conference at Cove, Arkansas, thinking of locating there in order that we might attend Sunday-school. I found nothing there to do so I said that if I could not take my family to a Sunday-school I would take a Sunday-school to them. I returned to Texas determined to have a Sunday-school in our home; but I neglected it until the next spring, when Sr. Newton wrote that she was expecting a report from my Sunday-school at our next district conference. So I at once got the Gospel Quarterlies, and we had Sunday-school at home until last summer, when Bro. E. L. Henson organized a Sunday-school in our neighborhood. It soon played out for lack of energy, but we have continued our home Sunday-school, hoping that some day we may have the opportunity of uniting our efforts with a body of Saints. We hoped the goal was reached when we came to Tulsa; but imagine our disappointment when we found that Bro. Bailey lived twelve miles away and no organization anywhere near. There are a few Saints living in Tulsa, and some across the river from us though I do not know how far. We live about three miles due west of Tulsa.

As a result of our little home Sunday-school, before we had it a year one of our children demanded baptism, then another, and soon all who were old enough, except one, were baptized. May we live so that we may keep them in the faith. If the district superintendent will send blank, I will report the work of our Sunday-school.

I will give another experience by which some of the Saints may profit. In the spring and summer of 1900 I prayed continually that God would bless me with a good crop, so I could pay off my debts and also pay my tithing, of which I had payed but little. God did bless me. I was still owing some tithing, and thought I would wait until I got my cotton all gathered; but I spent the money as fast as I sold my cotton, and when it was all sold and I settled up with my landlord, I had to sell a cow to pay him up. That left me with one cow, a team and wagon, and fifty acres of land, and debts amounting to over one hundred dollars. I have gone down hill ever since; in fact, have been under the chastening hand of the Lord I have nothing left now but fifty acres of land, which if sold would leave me very little money after my debts were all paid. This is a bitter experience, still there is one consolation, God has said that he chasteneth those he loves.

Pray for me, if you think me worthy of it.

G. L. RATHBUN.

BUFFALOVILLE, Indiana, March 24.

Dear Herald: Husband and I are always glad when the HERALD arrives and anxious to know its contents. We would like very much to take all the church papers; hope we can ere long.

When I last wrote we were near a branch, but for some time we have been alone. Husband's folks have just moved here and we hope by the Lord's help to get a branch started. So far circumstances have prevented the elders from reaching this place, but we hope they will come before long. We are very anxious to hear some good preaching again. How we miss the church privileges we used to have!

As is usually the case in making a new opening, we have opposition to meet but believe there are some of God's people here who will obey his command, "Come out of her [Babylon] my people." Nearly all the people here are Baptists and Lutherans, and most are good neighbors.

"There are good people in all the churches" is a statement we so often hear. Certainly there are. God has a people in this confusion of churches, this "mystery Babylon," but his command to these people is, "Come out of her, that ye be not partakers of her sins." And it is our duty, dear Saints, to help clear the way for these people and to lead them to the true church. How shall we do this? By treating them as the Jews did the Gentiles of old as if they were something vile or unclean? and are nothing in God's sight? Nay, verily. We must endeavor to win them to the right way through love and patience. This may be hard to do at times when prejudice is so strong, and such bitter things are said against us as a body, but we fail in duty if we do otherwise. I realize my own weakness along this line and I pray God to help me to win souls for his kingdom in and through the Christ-like spirit. It is true other churches say evil things against us, and misrepresent us in every way possible, but that is no reason why we should mistreat them in turn. We should be able to say with Christ, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." The Christian rule is, "return good for evil," not evil for evil, as is so often practiced.

We should take a firm stand for the truth as it has been revealed in these last days. For we can say of a truth, we know this doctrine is of God and that this is his church. But let us not, using a Bible term, become "puffed up," "high-minded," etc. For if God has a people in other "churches," as we admit, this is not the way to win them. I fear we often wound the feelings of some of these honest-hearted ones by not taking proper care in presenting the position our church takes in relation to other "churches," and it is so much harder then to get the truth before them. Then, dear Saints, let our attitude toward those of other faiths be full of love, and pray God that his Holy Spirit may direct in all our words and actions, and that we may be worthy the name we bear. We make higher claims than any other organization, I believe; therefore we should live better, be honest and upright in all our dealings with mankind. We should not preach one thing and practice another, but practice what we preach; show by our every-day life that we are really God's people and worthy the name of "Saints." How it grieves me to see the finger of scorn pointed at anyone who bears that name, because of some wrong he has done! As long as the accusations are false, God will take care of results. It is when they are true that the sting is felt throughout the body and all are made to suffer more or less.

Pray for us, Saints, that we may so live that none can truly say we are not what we profess to be, and that we may raise our baby boy up in the way that will be pleasing in God's sight.

I ever pray that the cause may prosper, and that all the honest hearted may come to a knowledge of the truth.

Your sister,

ANNA MAY CUMMINGS.

BISBEE, Arizona, March 21.

Editors Herald: For over a year the Saints in Arizona have been anxious for me to visit them. A desire to know the status of the work in the Territory prompted me to call here on my way to conference. I first visited Phoenix. While there I went out to the Sanitarium and was privileged to visit with and administer to Sr. May Canfield, formerly of Mesa, California, who is now suffering from nervous prostration and other troubles, I pray God may bless her as her whole heart has been in the work. I found Sr. Sturges a tower of strength and firm in the faith. She is one of the sisters I baptized last year. Her trials have been many and it seems that the combined hosts of Phoenix are arrayed against her. She was one of the foremost workers in the Presbyterian Church. They are doing all they can to win her back but she is firm. I spent the afternoon with the Presbyterian minister. He treated me very courteously. I came to this place Friday morning. Am privileged to speak in the Methodist church-building to-night. Am placed on probation; they will let me know to-night whether I may have it any longer.

There are only a few Saints here, Bro. and Sr. Rehwald, James Farley and wife, Jack Farley, Isaac Bailey and wife, and Sr. Fike, who lives about ten miles from here near the Mexican border. They all seem strong in the faith and willing to do what they can. Called on the ministers this morning. I am the first missionary to visit these points. No special effort has been made to open up the work in this great Southwest, outside of California. This is a typical mining town. Indications are that it will become one of the largest in the country. I have secured some excellent mineral specimens for Graceland. Expect to stop a few days at Angola, Kansas, to visit my mother, and then on to conference.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

BEARDSTOWN, Illinois, March 24.

Editors Herald: We have a nice church here and a nice Sunday-school, and I rejoice in the work of God. We only have twenty or thirty Saints here. Some of them not being very well this winter, we preferred having our prayer-meetings at our homes until the weather got better.

Dear Saints, the time is passing fast, and we have no time for idleness, for we are to be judged according to our works; so if we have no works I feel that we will be like the foolish virgins.

I am young in this work, but would not turn back for all of the pleasures of this world for I feel if we gain all this world and lose our souls, what would it profit us? I desire to do all that I can for this work, and be faithful to the end. May God add his blessings and prosper his Saints everywhere.

Your sister,

MRS. CORA AVERY.

LOGAN, Iowa, March 23.

Editors Herald: I have been afflicted for some time and unable to attend church, which is indeed, a great loss to me; but sometimes when called upon to suffer is when we learn the greatest, and best lessons, and sometimes receive the greatest blessings. It has been so in my case, for the weakness of man and the greatness of God has been shown to me. When I have been administered to I have been blessed, strengthened, and helped.

I ask the prayers of the Saints, that I may be more faithful and be given strength to resist evil, and be made strong and well, that I may ever serve my Master well, and be of service to others who are my friends, helping them to see the true light.

Your sister,
MAY BENC.

CAMP DOWNS, Ormoc, Leyte, P. I., February 1.

Editors Herald: This is a dreary and lonesome country to one who has been brought up among churches and Sunday-schools. I landed at Manilla, from the Transport Sheridan, May 1, 1902, since when I have had no chance to meet with a religious congregation. There is no post chaplin here, and the camp is under quarantine; nothing to read and no place to go to spend Sunday. I have received a number of HERALDS from my sister, and that is all that I have to satisfy my mind at all. Of course there are lots of newspapers, but they do not satisfy me, as I would like to have some communication with a church that I can understand what is said. The churches here all conduct their services in Spanish, or some allied language. There is a vast field here to work in, as there are only a few protestant churches in the city of Manilla, none outside of it. It is almost five years now since the Americans first planted their flag on this side of the Pacific, and thousands of dollars have been spent in war and strife, and none in the improvement of the welfare of the poor down-trodden human soul. They have just began to discuss the question now of the opportunity they have lost.

JOHN F. FARNES.

Corporal, Company C, Eleventh Infantry.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 21.

Dear Herald: Your pages are perused each week with deep interest, and we regret that more of those who are of the household of faith do not have you in their homes.

There are many things of interest in our district that we would like to tell to others, but a few of these will suffice. Since the district conference Elder Mintun has gone to his home at Woodbine and thence to General Conference. Elder Turpen has been laboring in the southern part of the district. Elder McCoy has been in Mahaska County, and has done a good work in the way of gathering up scattered members and getting them into branches, and some holding the priesthood who have been inactive have lately become active.

The district will be represented at the General Conference by several who are preparing to attend. The angel of death has recently visited the home of Bro. Sherman Owens, at Baxter, and taken two of his little ones.

Church work in Des Moines is progressing. The session of the district conference held in the city did much to help the work. The spiritual gifts manifested during the conference encouraged the Saints and the gifts have been enjoyed since the conference. The membership of the Des Moines Branch has now almost reached the two hundred mark, and in union there is strength, and there is a tendency on the part of all toward union and active work. A systematic distribution of the tract written by Elder Mintun has been made of the ten thousand which were printed, and another edition will be printed and distributed. The first distribution was made by the Saints from house to house.

One interesting event to all the Saints of the district has been the convention of the United Mine Workers of Iowa held in Des Moines, during the early part of March. At this convention a Latter Day Saint, in the person of Bro. Edwin Perry, of Albia, was chosen president of the organization of United Mine Workers of America in Iowa. This organization is one of force and strength, and to be president of the same is a high honor, indeed. The Iowa Register-Leader of March 7, contained a double column half-tone portrait of Bro. Perry and an interesting sketch of his life.

Bro. Perry was born in Wales in 1854 and came to America in 1869. His father died when Edwin was but eleven years of age and the mother died a few years later, thus leaving the boy an orphan at an early age. On coming to America Bro. Perry settled at Oskaloosa and soon became well known there and an influential citizen. For five years he was superintendent of the Oskaloosa Gas Company, and was at one time president of the Oskaloosa board of education, and for seven years was secretary of the Knights of Labor. Bro. Perry united with the church in 1898 and has been and is now an earnest Latter Day Saint. He has a family of five children, and with his wife they have resided the past year at Albia, but will soon become permanent residents of Oskaloosa again. Bro. Perry's election to the presidency of the organization, of which he has long been a member, is cause for congratulation upon the part of all his friends.

The Saints of the district are now looking forward to the convening of the General Conference. Our district conference asked for the return of the four elders now laboring in the district, and it is hoped that the missionary force will be increased the coming year, as there is need of more laborers here. With twenty counties of the State, including our capital city of ninety thousand people, and a total population in the district of five hundred seven thousand people, it is seen that four general missionaries are a very small number of men for the district. It is expected that a much larger number of the local ministry will be active in church work than has been during the past year; and with the missionary force the coming year it is hoped that a vigorous presentation of the claims of the church will be made throughout the district the coming year.

I am hopeful of the final triumph of the work and the salvation of God's people.

A. A. REAMS.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, March 14.

Dear Readers: I appreciate the many good articles and letters in the church publications, feel thankful to God for inspiring the minds of men and women to write such. I have great reason to be thankful for the privilege of reading church literature, for in the past two years I have attended meeting but once away from home. Our nearest place of meeting is nine miles, and in the two years I have not been able to drive that distance, being afflicted with chronic appendicitis, which caused me great suffering the first year; but in the past year I have been some stronger so that I am able to enjoy myself with the church books and do some light work at times; but, though, I have not the privilege of attending meetings, only the few held at our own house which are feasts to me of course. I enjoy the consolations of the gospel, and more than ever is my spirit alive to the work, being constantly renewed by the whisperings of the Holy Ghost which reveals to us the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and unfolds many beautiful things to our understanding. Often, when all alone, engaged in studying the word; I have received many grand blessings which brought joy unspeakable to my soul. The meditation of which brings a calm, heavenly feeling. To-day as I read the letter of Sr. Morgan in the last HERALD, oh how I felt the spirit of it, and it brought to my mind blessings I have received that were similar to those she related. Many times during my sickness when weary in body and mind and placing myself in a resting position, then would the Father bring some words of comfort and encouragement. Sometimes in the form of a sweet hymn, certain parts of it would be impressed upon my mind and I know it was by the power of God, for he knows when we need strength and comfort,

When earnestly engaged in God's work and having once tasted the real spirit of it, the joy and happiness it brings to the soul we find nothing else in this world to compare with it. No, nothing! The blessings of the gospel are for all to enjoy; and those who hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled. So we are all privileged to advance in wisdom and knowledge which brings spirituality. But amid the cares of life it seems so many are satisfied with very little understanding of the work, while others are using their talents and as much of their time as possible in the work and developing their faculties, bringing out latent powers, using them to the honor of God. This is necessary, for our faculties and powers have to be fully exercised sometimes, and it is through exercise and experience that the soul grows.

How much we ought to appreciate the opportunity God has given us to come here and under the influences of the gospel to become full grown men and women and fulfill the purpose of our creation. It is consoling to know that if we are faithful to God in all things we shall be permitted to complete the work we have to do; and when I have completed my little work I am willing to go, not before.

Often we find our plans in life are changed. I expected to follow school-teaching, at least for a time. I taught one year, then stopped to study one year, expecting then to continue teaching. But at the end of the year I took sick and have been so ever since. So that has changed things. Yet I am entirely satisfied with conditions just as they are, realizing the Lord knows best. I always desired the Lord's direction in all things and was greatly blessed in my studies.

I have learned that we can not mark out our path in life. I hope to live so close to the Lord that he will direct all my steps; and where it pleases him to place me, there I can do my best. This is one thing I believe we ought all to seek for, the place we were created to fill, for we know that a square will never fit into a circle. I am willing to suffer if it is through suffering I will learn the lessons I must learn; and I believe there are some lessons we can not learn otherwise. So I feel like saying:

"Spare not the stroke! do with me as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose, that I may become Thy perfect image, thou my God and Lord."

I hope to be submissive and learn with willingness to do God's will. In our weakness we sometimes would like to know why things are as they are. But the Lord reveals to us what is best for us to know; we must learn to walk by faith, and so move on even if we do not understand why the Lord works so. In the blest hereafter we shall know, if not before why he has led us so.

Having such a loving Father who is infinitely wise and just, we can trust him for all. Oh, how I love him since I have learned to know him! How great and wonderful his works are, and how perfectly planned! He does not fail to notice the least of his creatures, but is mindful of us all. When I think of how he has watched over me, especially in the past two years, I can not help but feel his great love and power and I feel it has been by his power I have been able to endure the affliction of body and weariness of mind which he only knows. But these light afflictions can not be compared with the blessings that follow. They make us forget our past wishes and strengthen us for coming trials. Under that blessed spirit we feel nothing too hard to endure. But without the Spirit of God we can not stand firm before the trials of life. But thus far I have learned that "as our days may demand so our succor shall be."

I delight in the Religio work as it is a part of God's work. We have a home class of nine members, sometimes known as the pioneer home class of the Eastern Michigan District. We appreciate the Quarterlies and we are thankful for such a work. Hope the home class work will spread and find its way to every Latter Day Saint home that the locals can not reach. Great benefits will be derived. Since we have begun our home class we have had several little entertainments on "special evenings," which all seemed to enjoy, and we were blessed in our efforts as in the other part of the work. We all enjoy music and singing, and many pleasant times do we have in that way. What a power there is in music and song, even in the sweet song of a bird. What inspiration we derive from it. Yes, and children, too, feel its cheering influence. I can never forget the effect singing had on my pupils at school. When dull days came and all would feel rather weary, we would put our work aside, and take our song books and have a lively sing. What an effect it would have! With faces aglow, and renewed courage, a disposition is manifest to resume their tasks. Just so in this warfare of ours we need our strength and courage renewed. But the kind Father has made the provisions, and he never fails to grant us the needed blessings.

I hope to stand firm under all circumstances, and to live near to God each day and to do that we have to be watchful and prayerful, be calm and self-possessed in our actions, and examine ourselves to see if we are developing symmetrically. This takes constant labor.

May God help us to do our work and do it well. With love to all the Saints, I am,

Your sister,

EMMA VOLZ.

Editors Herald: In the early part of the winter Elders Crippen and Baker came into our midst and held some meetings; left at least one interested. But the weather was bad, and holidays at hand, so they left. Elder Kephart came at a later date and began meetings at the same schoolhouse; but it seemed the people had heard all the gospel they cared to hear, so another schoolhouse was engaged and meetings began. Interest increased with a full house for two weeks, and some if not all regretted to see Bro. Kephart close the meetings. He went some five miles to another schoolhouse and began the work again; but the crowd was not as large as at the former place; nevertheless some are interested. Bro. Kephart showed the difference between us and the Utah people so plainly that any who heard can not again class us with that sect.

Bro. Kephart baptized Sr. Shoots, a school-teacher. We boys cut about twenty inches of ice for the baptism, and believe we have another member of whom we need not to be ashamed. We have moved from the old home five miles northwest into a new town on the Great Western Railroad; and have had little chance to do work; but as a hall in town has been completed, the writer with Bro. M. B. Skinner who has moved to this place engaged the hall held the first public meeting in this town last evening, the writer endeavoring to break the bread of life. We had a hearing of about sixty people and good attention, and hope we shall be able to organize a Sunday-school here soon.

The missionaries or local brethren will be gladly received at this place. We are greatly pleased with the efforts of the missionaries this winter, and have found that Bro. Kephart is at home when he is telling the gospel story. My heart is made glad to know of the blessings that God has given and will give to the obedient. I am endeavoring to do the best I can. I have found by experience that God will recognize his servants if they will make the effort. I exhort my fellow deacons to do the work of the office and surely God will greatly bless your efforts.

I desire the prayers of God's people.

Editors Herald: You are correct in thinking Ulster County is in New York. I have been there many times. I had relatives living in Kingston, Ulster County, New York.

Your sister,

Editors Herald: I have arrived here, feeling quite well. I do not know whether there are any Saints here or not. I shall be pleased to hear from any here, or in adjoining towns. As soon as I can I wish to go in the field and labor for the Master. The orange-trees are loaded with rich, yellow fruit; almond-trees are in full bloom; roses and other flowers are quite plentiful, but will be more so in two or three weeks. This is a wonderful change from Michigan.

I hope to do good, and my mission here not in vain.

Editors Herald: Elder Mortimer and I just baptized and confirmed two yesterday, as a result of our two week's stay with this one of the oldest branches in Canada,—Usborne, the scene of much bitter persecution and mobocracy in the past.

We leave next week; he for home, en route to General Conference, and I for other points to make openings on new ground.

Editors Herald: Where I live there are no Saints, and I am three miles from any church. I hope the Lord will send his servants here; it is a good place and much work to be done. I have promised to give my house up for his work. I am living in Essex County. I never in my life experienced such trials, and felt the comforter so near. God bless the Saints all over the world.

Dear Herald: I have belonged to this church a year and a half and am glad I joined this lonely band of God's people, for I believe it is the true church of God. I was administered to twice before I joined. One time I was relieved of pain instantly. Bro. W. J. Booker preaches for us sometimes. I will be glad to see him return. Bro. Allen preached for us about a year ago and he did lots of good in this settlement. There are about twenty members here, but only a few are living faithfully. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may continue until the end.

BENAN, Iowa, March 24.

Editors Herald: We are doing what we can for the cause of Christ. We have Sunday-school, Religio, and preaching services every Sunday if it does not storm. The branch is scattered some living as far as six miles from our meeting place. We have had some good meetings this winter. Bro. Baker and Crippler were here first, then Bro. Kephart came and preached in three different schoolhouses. He was well liked, and some were interested, and wanted him to come back. They thought he was so plain in his preaching that any one could understand. He baptized one.

FLORESVILLE, Texas, March 20.

Editors Herald: I notice many are writing of the evils of the tobacco habit. I was a victim to the poisonous cigarette for about fifteen years, beginning when only a boy; but by the help of God I have been enabled to quit it. God will surely help any one if he will only pray earnestly and live that life which is pleasing in God's sight.

I find there are many glorious realities in this latter-day work, and that God will reveal many things to his children even though some are scattered and alone in the world: His angels are there to own and bless the faithful ones.

I was also a slave to coffee, but by God's help have quit that also. I am striving to live a temperate life in all things.

I have heard no preaching since Bro. Harp left. Hope conference may see fit to send him here another year. Bro. C. Jackson has promised to come over and preach some for us in the near future.

It has been raining here until, most of the time, the roads are impassable. On the 25th we had over seven inches of rain in one day and night. Crops are all late.

I ever pray for the upbuilding of God's kingdom and the spread of the everlasting gospel.

E. JACKSON.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 28, 1903.

Editors Herald: Left my mission field the 24th, and am here preparing for the duties of General Conference. After a long absence I see some change in our village, and many new faces, both as residents and students of Graceland College.

When I last wrote you, it was upon my arrival at Montrose, where I remained for several days, and preached to the most attentive and largest audience that it has been my privilege while doing missionary work in the Nauvoo District.

At Burlington, my next place, sickness, death, and unfavorable weather were against holding meetings. However, the attendance was above the average. Bro. Albert Giesch and family are still passing "under the rod" of sore affliction. Their son Carl, who fell into a vat of boiling water seven months ago, is still a great sufferer, and upon a change of doctor it was decided to take him again to the hospital, and seek to aid him to a return of health by skin grafting. It will require about a hundred square inches to cover the unhealed parts.

Went to Keb; there found a revival-meeting in full blast in our house of worship, which had been running for six weeks. Mr. George Scott being the chief actor, upon inquiry he informed me that he belonged to the Mennonites, a church organized some twenty years ago by a man at Berlin, Ontario, which place is their headquarters. They have but one elder in the whole church, and Mr. Scott holds no office, never having been ordained; nevertheless he preaches and baptizes all who will demand it of him, and do so in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Gnost. Verily the Master understood his business and the blindness of the people when he said: "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." Bro. James Richardson has for a long time held the fort there, but at present is in poor health and considerable depressed in spirit.

My next was in Ottumwa; spoke at the home of Bro. E. H. Lewis, to the few Saints and fewer outsiders. There might be a good work accomplished in that city, if some active, progressive man could be spared to devote his entire time to it.

The opening of spring and the frost coming out of the ground has made the roads almost impassable.

Had the whole church been assembled last evening in the chapel of Graceland College, I opine that the debt would have been immediately wiped out, and a safe balance for running expenses remained in the hands of the treasurer. I am strongly of the opinion that our people do not comprehend the importance, value, and high standard of Graceland College, both of the faculty, and the students, and likewise the golden opportunity there is therein for the youth of the church. We still need help in all departments, and especially do we invite Saints to send us their children, that we may prove to all the usefulness and the moral standing of this church institution.

The first music by the sleeping frog was upon St. Patrick's day, and this and the presence of the modest robin give us hope that winter has gone and spring in her beauty will soon cheer us.

Notice of Change and Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

The Saints and friends of the Kewanee, Illinois, District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, will please take notice that on the resignation of Bro. D. C. Smith, Dahinda, Illinois, Bro. William R. Norris, of Kewanee, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for said district, and authorized to act in said position according to the rules and regulations governing in such appointments.

The Bishopric further extends special thanks of the office to Bro. D. C. Smith, who has faithfully performed the work of agent hitherto and who retires by reason of insufficient time to look after the duties of said office and perform his other work.

We trust the Saints and friends will remember the new agent, Bro. William R. Norris, and that every one in the district will forward of his means to aid in the gospel mission work in said district, sending same to William R. Norris, 630 North Walnut Street, Kewanee, Illinois.

Remember, the Lord blesses those who faithfully perform the work of duty in life.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 23, 1903.

Book Depot in England.

We are glad to inform the Saints in England, Scotland, and Wales that we have established a special book depot in Manchester, England, and those who desire can send their orders for books that we publish to our Manchester agent instead of to this office. Books will be sold at the same price as from this office, but for cash only. The brethren who have been acting as our agents in the different branches will make their arrangements for the sale of books with our Manchester agent. We trust that the Saints will give us a hearty support in this new move and the work generally be benefited thereby. Send your orders and make all remittances payable to William R. Armstrong, 10 Rye Street, C-on-M, Manchester, England, whom we have appointed as our agent for the English Mission.

INSPIRATION.

HOW MAY ITS TOKENS BE RECOGNIZED.

Considerable anxiety is felt and in some instances expressed, in regard to the subject of inspiration, who are affected by it and how.

"Try the Spirits," written and published in the Times and Seasons, and reproduced in HERALD in 1869, contains much that is valuable upon the subject of inspiration, but it is lacking in sufficient definiteness to furnish the average Saint a criterion by which he may determine the question whether he is or has been inspired to a greater or lesser degree.

That there must be in some form a realization of the promise of Jesus, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," found at the close of Matthew's gospel or testimony, is to the Bible believer a necessity; for of all the prophets whom the devotee can not afford to be proved false, Jesus is preëminently the one. Paul understood this, when in discussing the subject of the resurrection with the Corinthian saints he wrote, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

It is to this same Paul, the changed Saul of Tarsus, that we are largely indebted for a treatise and conclusions touching the presence and action of the Spirit through which inspiration must come. And, while we do not concede to this apostle infallibility, or give to his words the weight and power we do to those of the man Christ Jesus, we are of the opinion that from the time of his conversion, and his baptism at the hands of Ananias, he walked in the light of inspiration; especially so in his spiritual teaching and gospel walk and conversation. We can not account for his high morality, his clearness of perception and statement concerning spiritual things, upon any other hypothesis. This gives us confidence in the thought that now as then, those who unhesitatingly obey the gospel, the influences of which wrought so wondrous a change in Saul of Tarsus, will be changed, their lives sublimated by a spiritual recreation through which all things become new.

It is clear that the various manifestations of the Spirit named by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12, and Ephesians 4, were purposely given as indications to mark and identify the fact of spiritual presence in and with the disciple. It must have been intended that in the "LESSONS of the Operatic Season" is the title of an article contributed by Mr. Joseph Sohn to the section of "Music" in the April-June Forum. Mr. Sohn is by no means pessimistic as to the development of opera in this country, but on the contrary quotes with approval Wagner's prophecy that his successor would come from America.

A SERIES of articles at present running in the Autumn Leaves should receive the careful reading of all young men of the church who desire to fit themselves for service along lines that may be indicated by the Spirit or by their own natural qualifications. We refer to the articles entitled "Education and Personal Qualities that will Help a Young Man in Church Work." Some of the ablest men of the church will write for this series. President Joseph Smith deals with the subject in the April issue.

institution of the gospel economy the conditions of spiritual life were to continue the same; and, hence, when the disciple realizes that even now, though centuries of time as men count time have passed since Paul wrote, there is ample evidence in the experience of thousands that Christ Jesus has kept the spirit of the promise made in Matthew 28:20, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The end of the world is not come, and the "inspiration of the Lord must still give men understanding."

We would not be understood as stating that all men who obey the gospel are necessarily thenceforward under the ministration of inspiration, and infallible in thought, word, and action, for we do not so believe; but we do believe that as Paul, James, Matthew, and others, wrought as chosen and called ministers for Christ and his gospel, did at times and on occasions speak and act as moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and were inspired as the needs of their day and mission required, and did walk and labor in the light of that inspiration, so men may and do now walk and minister in the same light of inspiration; and that too when they may not be wholly conscious of movements within them. We believe that men may now live so closely to the instruction and spirit of the word that they think and teach within the scope and light of that word. How else can we understand the full meaning of what the apostle wrote, "To one is given the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge; to another faith." These three are by far the most important ministrations of the Spirit through which inspiration may be imparted for the accomplishment of the purposes and work assigned to the disciples and the church then, and why not now? It is possible for men now to be moved upon by the Spirit in these three important ministrations, not only from time to time; but they may so live as to think, speak, and act within the province and influence of each of them from continued habit, and may do so without that self-consciousness of observation and recognition that prophecy, tongues, discerning of spirits, demand and receive. Hence we can but conclude that it is now as probable that many who are really desirous to know and feel within themselves that they may have been, are, and may be inspired, as were the men in New Testament or Book of Mormon times.

Let those who may have been disturbed by anxiety give these things a consideration and be encouraged.

"SCOTLAND'S TERRIBLE THIRST"

The following sent us by Sr. Thorburn, taken from the Glasgow Weekly News of recent date, furnishes statistics which are appalling:

On Friday the results were published of the United Temperance Council's Vigilance Committees. On Saturday last the members of the Council counted all persons who entered thirty-five public houses in Motherwell, the chief center of Scottish steelmaking. The watch lasted for two hours in the evening, fifty-two hundred seventy men, nine hundred twenty-four women, and three hundred sixty-eight children, or a total of sixty-five hundred sixty-two, entered the public houses. The population is only thirty-one thousand, so that fully one fifth entered the public houses. The houses in the steel town are the worst in Lanarkshire, although many men earn six pounds weekly.

CORRECTION.

In tabulated reports of ministry, Henry Southwick is credited with attending 1,020 meetings. The number should be 120.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In making his annual report Bro. C. A. Butterworth writes: "I am improving in health, and will soon be able to take an active place at the post of duty. The work in general is steadily progressing, and the additional laborers sent us last year have been a great help and blessing to this mission. The brethren in New Zealand are using every legitimate means to firmly establish our work there, and are succeeding as well as could be expected. Three new missionaries are taking the field this year, and will greatly assist in building up the work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. G. H. Graves, of Chicago, writes that the outlook of the work from his standpoint is good. He is sanguine of a good work being done there in the near future.

Religio Convention.

THURSDAY, APRIL 2.

On Thursday evening at eight o'clock, J. A. Gunsolley, president of the Religio Society, called to order one of the largest delegations of Religio workers in the history of the organization. A good feeling was manifest, which promised well for the Religio cause. For about half an hour before convention was called to order there was such a shaking of hands as fairly made one's hand ache.

Bro. Gunsolley in calling the meeting to order expressed the thought that to him the outlook was very bright for Religio, and felt proud of the record it had made in the past year. He thought he could clearly discern God's guiding hand, and believed that there was manifested more seriousness and determination, more investigation and development, in the past year especially. He called attention to the fact that the convention was handicapped by their time being more limited than heretofore, and made an earnest plea for frankness, earnestness, and unbiased conduct in expediting the business transactions of the convention.

The committee on credentials not being ready to report, a time was given to short speeches. Etta M. Hitchcock was first called upon, and responded in a happy vein. She in her work as General Secretary had seen what would justify her in the belief that the Religio was getting on a firmer foundation, and that God was with the various local societies, and that his Spirit was leading the young people onward. She felt grateful to God for what the Religio was accomplishing.

J. F. Mintun was next called upon. He always had been interested in the Religio work and felt that interest increasing with the passing years. Before the organization of the Religio he had felt the need of such a society,—a need which the Sunday-school did not supply. He hoped to keep that interest until the Religio had reached the goal of its ambition, a close and cordial relation to the church.

Bro. Mintun was followed by R. M. Elvin, J. L. Butterworth, and J. W. Burns.

Report of committee on credentials was then read, showing the following disposition of delegates:

St. Louis District, 17; Southern California, 11; Glasgow, Scotland, 2; Jonesport, Maine, 5; Little Sioux District, 22; Australia, 10; Bevier, Missouri, 6; Lamoni Stake, 41; Honolulu, Hawaii, 4; Kewanee, 8; Clinton, Missouri, 7; Tabor, Iowa, 4; Chatham, Ontario, 19; Eastern Colorado, 13; Independence Stake, 40; Des Moines, 20; Far West, 37; London, Ontario, 28; Gallands Grove District, 15; Massachusetts, 18; Shenandoah, 3; Necedah, Wisconsin, 4; Council Bluffs, 4; Wilburton, Indian Territory, 3; Sharon, Pennsylvania, 2; Higbee, Missouri, 5; Malad, Idaho, 4; Spring River, 13; Clinton, Missouri, 10; Burlington, Iowa, 2; Omaha, Nebraska, 6; Northern California, 18; Northern Michigan, 23.

The credentials report was followed by an anthem sung by an octet of Independence singers.

The secretary was authorized to select assistants, and the chair was authorized to appoint ushers, and John Soderstadt was appointed with power to select assistants. Sr. Nellie Brokaw was chosen organist, authorized to select assistants. The chair appointed Charles Fry chorister, he to choose assistants.

The chair was authorized to appoint an auditing committee, and he selected J. L. Butterworth, F. H. Keown, and Bert Barrett.

Some more persons were called on for short speeches, and the following responded: T. W. Williams, Louise Palfrey, Evaline Burgess, A. E. Mortimer, Jennie Newton, Marie Clark, and John Kaler.

John A. Robinson, Jr., next played a well-received trombone solo, and then after announcements adjournment was had till next forenoon.

FRIDAY, APRIL 3.

The prayer session at nine o'clock, in charge of J. A. Gunsolley, was largely attended. Several earnest prayers were offered and many testimonies borne, the Religians from the various parts of the world testifying of the wonderful growth both in numbers and interest in the past year, and of the grand outlook for the Religio as one of the auxiliaries to the church.

Business was resumed at half past ten.

Credentials committee made additional report in the way of corrections and additions. Committee was continued.

J. A. Gunsolley made report as president of the society, in which he presented the outlook of the work from his standpoint. He thought the growth of the society steady and solid if not rapid, and that an air of seriousness was more manifest than heretofore, and that more persons appreciate the importance of the work. In a financial way the society had advanced, and was now out of debt, with a balance on hand. The Quarterly had made a success which surpassed the hopes of the most sanguine. The lessons and programs had given quite general satisfaction. The Home Department in charge of Sr. Young has made good progress, and the extension of the work of the Good Literature Bureau was highly gratifying, though just begun. Many States and foreign countries have been helped. The work in Scotland has been planted by Sr. Thorburn and husband, and there has been a revival in the Australasian Mission. The missionaries everywhere are interesting themselves and others in the society. The Arena and other publications had tried to occupy the space as best they could, and Sr. Palfrey as editor had done well, and the Arena had come to be recognized as their official organ. Thanks and enduring gratitude were due to Bro. Campbell for the work he has done on the published programs. The rally day of the Religio and Sunday-school instituted for the benefit of Graceland College had netted over eight hundred dollars, though it was less than they had expected. He wondered why it was that the Religians did not manifest more interest in Graceland than they do. He thought he could see the guiding influence of God's hand, thus recognizing the work of the Religio. The present spiritual and financial condition of the society is good, but the spiritual might be better. We must be careful of ruts. Carnal condition is dangerous; a spiritual condition one of safety. Have we not an element of superficiality? Many fail to appreciate the spiritual phase of our work. Religion must appeal to intellect, but this alone fails to reach Christ—it must appeal to the heart. Prayer-meetings are neglected. Why allow the evil one to cheat us of a blessing? May God help us to see it, and occupy higher ground. He stated that the series of articles on the archæology of the Book of Mormon would be published as a book, and Sr. Palfrey had made a gift of the financial part of the book to the society. He stated there was much need of closer contact between general and local societies, and thought a weekly periodical would help, as also would better attendance at conventions. Can we not arrange for district conventions to hold over Saturday and Sunday? One good convention a year is better than a dozen with poor attendance. Amidst all encouragement we must still walk by faith; when it is of sight it is no more faith; and without faith it is impossible to please God.

Ammon White, vice-president, reported that he had spent the greater part of his time in the general ministry, but had accomplished something in the way of local organizations. He was glad to see an increased interest in the work of the Religio, and thought the ministry should generally take more interest in the work of that society.

Etta M. Hitchcock, secretary, reported that in the past year the Religio work had been established in England, Scotland, Honolulu, Australia, and Canada. To-day we have hundreds of local societies, and nearly seven thousand members. It has been very successful, and the ministry is unusually active in Religio work, and of much assistance.

Will J. Mather, treasurer, made financial report. The receipts for the year were $406.22, expenditures, $245.95; cash balance, $161.27. On Quarterly, receipts, $984.58; expended on Quarterly, $700.02; leaving a balance of $284.36. Auditing committee reported above correct.

Sr. Louise Palfrey, editor, made oral report. She spoke of the cramped condition of the Arena. She had received much kindness and encouragement in her work from the Religians.

Sr. Dora Young, superintendent of the Home Department, reported that there are now nearly five hundred members. Two home classes have been organized into locals, and it is due to the home class that there are four local organizations in the Little Sioux District. She mentioned several who had helped materially at a sacrifice of time and money. She hoped that the superintendent would be given power to appoint State workers or superintendents. The financial side is brighter than last year. Systematic home study is a boon to humanity. "May its tribe increase."

The Gospel Literature Bureau made report through J. R. Epperson. They have distributed HERALDS, 4,128; Ensigns, 3,904; Autumn Leaves, 837; Glad Tidings, 196; Prophetic News, 69; tracts, 19,231; Hopes, 4,047; Quarterlies, 559; Bibles, 2; Book of Mormon, 16; and other literature to the total of 40,383 pieces.

In all the reports of the officers, and also in letters of appreciation, high praise was given the Religio

Quarterly for the efficient help it has been to the work.

A committee on literary extension was appointed, consisting of the executive board and the Arena editor, and empowered to carry out such measures as they deem wise. The object of this committee is to provide additional space over what they have at present in the Arena.

Following this adjournment was had till afternoon session.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Business session again opened at half past two, President Gunsolley in the chair.

Additional report of committee on credentials was read, and returned to committee for correction.

The special order was the consideration of the report of the committee on revision of the constitution and by-laws, but owing to the fact that the report had not yet been returned from the printers, other business was taken up.

The chair was authorized to appoint a committee to revise the three leaflets. Subsequently the chair appointed the secretary to revise leaflet number one, A. A. Reams leaflet number two, and J. R. Epperson number three.

Being authorized by motion, the chair appointed a committee of three to draft resolutions to express appreciation to Sr. Palfrey of the gift of the work on archæology. He appointed S. A. Burgess, Lulu Suman, LaJune Howard.

The report of the committee on revision of the constitution and by-laws being in, it was taken up, and by motion considered section by section.

Work on this was proceeded with for a time, when it was suspended and election of officers taken up, and the following elected: J. A. Gunsolley, president; Ammon White, vice-president; Etta M. Hitchcock, secretary; Will J. Mather, treasurer; action on librarian deferred.

The amendments of constitution were again taken up, and the rest of the session devoted to it. Not getting through, adjournment was had till evening.

EVENING SESSION.

Reassembled at half past seven, in the upper auditorium. The revision of constitution was proceeded with, and the most of the session devoted to it, the work being suspended for a time, once while the mandolin club of Independence gave a selection which showed much work and practice on the part of the club. It was very well received.

The revised constitution was adopted section by section, only slight changes being made, until that part concerning constitution of locals was reached, when a motion prevailed referring the document to the executive board, it to perfect as best it can and publish as the action of the convention. No doubt the constitution as amended will be published in the Arena, hence we do not give it space here.

A librarian was elected, J. R. Epperson being the one appointed.

Several bills of expenses were allowed, and the report of the committee on resolutions of thanks for the gift of Sr. Palfrey was read and adopted. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to her.

A motion then prevailed providing for the president of the society to spend about two months of his time to the interests of the Religio work, the society to place in the hands of the Bishop such a sum of money as would cover his ministerial expenses for that time.

This finishing the business of the convention, adjournment was had, the doxology was sung, and the eighth convention of the General Religio Society was over.

Sunday-School Convention.

The twelfth convention of the General Sunday-school Association began its first session at half past nine on the morning of April 4, with Superintendent T. A. Hougas in the chair. In his opening remarks he expressed the thought that they had never gathered at a convention so full of hope as to the outlook as this one. The time for business being limited by reason of to-morrow being Sunday, the usual "short speeches" were eliminated.

The credentials committee, which had previously been appointed by the executive committee, made report, giving delegates to the various districts as follows: Alabama 9, New South Wales 21, Arizona 1, Central California 14, Northern California 21, Southern California 33, Eastern Colorado 22, Central Illinois 11, Kewanee 25, Nauvoo 23, Northeastern Illinois 34, Des Moines 38, Eastern Iowa 15, Fremont 40, Gallands Grove 32, Lamoni Stake 116, Little Sioux 66, Pottawattamie 44, Northeastern Kansas 22, Northwestern Kansas 15, Massachusetts 46, Eastern Michigan 40, Northern Michigan 78, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana 34, Clinton 41, Far West 68, Independence Stake 117, Nodaway 15, Northeastern Missouri 17, New York 10, Central Nebraska 13, Northern Nebraska 19, Southern Nebraska 17, Kirtland 26, Oklahoma 19, Chatham, Ontario, 4, London, Ontario, 130, Philadelphia 10, Pittsburg 21, Scotland 3, Northeastern Texas and Choctaw 17, Utah and Idaho 31, Castle Rock, Washington, 3, Necedah, Wisconsin, 3, Porcupine, Wisconsin, 3.

The Secretary, D. J. Krahl, selected J. F. Mintun and Annie Allen as assistants; F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister, to select assistants; Belle James, organist, to select assistants; and the regular janitors of the branch were appointed by the chair to act for the convention.

Reports of the general officers were then taken up. Superintendent Hougas made written report. He said the Sunday-school was never so useful, and that it had prospered beyond the fondest hopes, and he felt grateful for its phenomenal rise and growth. We are face to face with conditions which cause universal unrest. But natural discontent is wholesome, and is a sign of strength rather than weakness. All great advancements are preceded by a period of discontent. Immediately after last convention he set about getting his business in shape to go into the field, but did not succeed until the latter part of the year. He had taken quite an extensive trip through the East, and had done much good. Concerning the department in the HERALD, he said that time had prevented doing justice to the space, though he had done the best he could under the circumstances. The time is not far distant when radical steps must be taken to own and supply literature for little tots, teachers, and all. He had asked for items concerning Sunday-school history, to supply the church historian, but the request was not complied with as it should have been. The superintendent and assistant had attended the international convention of Sunday-school workers held at Denver in the spring of 1902, and there had got many good thoughts concerning Sunday-school work. He spoke highly of the home department, and thought there was not a school which could not introduce the home department without good results. Concerning the Study Hour, he stated that the reason of its suspension was that the editors appointed by the Convention resigned, and the Executive was unable to secure other editors. In a financial way the Sunday-school Association was still on a firm basis, though the income had been reduced by lowering the price of the Quarterly. Concerning song-book for the Sunday-school, he thought prospects for such at present were not good, as the material on hand was not such as to guarantee excellence. He had the very best of feelings for his associates.

J. A. Gunsolley, assistant superintendent, by reason of other work, had not been able to do all that he could wish, but had accomplished some work for the good of the cause.

A. Carmichael, second assistant, spoke of the need of better teachers in the schools, and thought that where excellence in teachers was secured good work would be accomplished irrespective of the tools employed for them to work with. He had devoted his time towards the end of securing better teaching material.

The secretary, D. J. Krahl, reported a general advancement. New report blanks had been provided and provision made for the schools to report quarterly to the districts, and the districts to report yearly to the General Association. The time for reporting had heretofore been irregular. He gave the total membership as 18,122, and submitted a tabulated report of districts and schools.

John Smith, treasurer, reported: Balance on hand in April, 1902, $2,762.00; total received, $3,157.61; disbursements, $4,225.88; balance on hand, $1,708.76.

Lucina Etzenhouser, general librarian, reported that she had been absent from home for a large portion of the year, and hence had not been able to do what she might have otherwise. She had corresponded with district authorities, urging the appointment of district librarians, with good results. She had also gotten good results from sending out report blanks. She urged the need of a book catalogue, and saw it slowly materializing. She recommended the appointment of competent persons to review and recommend suitable books. She stated that there were 329 schools, 56 of which had libraries, with a total of 3,168 books; also five circulating libraries. This gives an idea of what there is to be accomplished. Lack of funds is the difficulty. She recommended that the collections of one Sunday in each month be devoted to library purposes.

Financial reports of the general officers were read, and bills allowed.

The editor of the Quarterly made report, and spoke of the great assistance she had derived from the typewriter the association had given her. She stated that the lessons had been prepared till October, this being a little in advance of where she was this time last year. She saw enough in the New Testament for another year's lessons, and then the association must decide on a further course of texts.

A lengthy report was read from the editors of the Study Hour in which they offered resignation, stating their reasons therefor. They urged the necessity of supplying the place of the Study Hour for the benefit of the primary work.

The committee on revision of Quarterly lessons reported that the task was made a pleasure because of the small amount of correcting necessary, the corrections being merely changes of words.

John Garver, of the Athenian Arena, published by the students of Graceland College, made a plea in behalf of Graceland, and told from a student's standpoint what they were doing at Graceland College. He was soliciting subscriptions for the Arena, and thought that the people of the church through the medium of the Arena could tell somewhat of the work that was there being done.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Business was again taken up at half past two. T. A. Hougas in the chair.

Report from Sr. Allie Thorburn, from Glasgow, Scotland, was read, telling of the Sunday-school work in that city.

S. F. Mather, of Manchester, England, reported concerning the Sunday-school work in that district.

Report from the South Sea Islands was read from Sr. Burton, telling of some of the difficulties under which they work in the Sunday-schools there. She estimates that there are about a thousand native members in the Sunday-schools.

Gilbert J. Waller reported the condition of the Hawaiian Sunday-schools, stating that the crying need there was teachers, as they did not have suitable material. The use of a translator is necessary for teachers under present conditions. They use the Quarterly. In the one Sunday-school they have thirty scholars. Besides that they have an afternoon class of Japanese and Hawaiians.

J. W. Wight reported the work in New South Wales. The work is in good condition.

Some more expense bills were then allowed.

A petition from a body of primary teachers which had assembled to discuss the question, was presented, asking that the convention take steps to prepare or provide for a series of lessons adapted for infant class work. This was discussed at considerable length, when a motion finally prevailed to grant the request, and the matter was then referred to a committee of five, composed of Anna Salyards, Margaret Blair, Ruth L. Smith, Eva Bailey, Viola Blair.

The election of officers was taken up, and resulted in the selection of T. A. Hougas for superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley for first assistant, A. Carmichael second assistant, D. J. Krahl secretary, John Smith treasurer, Lucina Etzenhouser librarian.

The auditing committee reported treasurer's report correct.

After some discussion a motion finally prevailed providing that after January 1, 1904, the business of the association be put on a cash basis; that is, all literature furnished be paid for in advance.

The following were selected as members of the revising committee: R. S. Salyards, John Smith, and Duncan Campbell.

Editorial work was provided for by referring to the executive committee for action.

The executive committee was authorized to meet all legitimate running expenses.

Motion prevailed providing for a continuance of the missionary work, similar to last year, subject to the approval of the appointing powers of the church.

The secretary was authorized to select an assistant.

The recommendations of the librarian were taken up, and a motion prevailed referring them to her for action.

A motion was made to refer the matter of a song-book to the Board of Publication, but action thereon was deferred till evening session.

Adjourned till evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

Met in the upper auditorium at half past seven, and after the reading of the minutes, the special order of the evening was taken up, namely, graded text-books, which had been deferred from last year. A motion providing for the appointment of a committee to draft outline of lessons for a graded text-book was lost after some discussion, which left the question to be decided whether or not text-books were to be adopted to succeed the Quarterlies. A number of lengthy speeches were made, pro and con, when the motion was put and lost by an overwhelming majority.

The song-book question deferred from the afternoon session was then taken up referring it to the Board of Publication for action.

Some other motions were then made relative to it, but adjournment was had in the midst of the consideration.

Adjourned till eight o'clock Sunday morning.

Original Articles.

INSPIRATION, REVELATION.

It was Homer, the Greek, who said, "All the folks yearn after the gods:" and for the universal reason that the gods might answer questions of local or general interest which mortals could not answer.

Webster defines the word revelation as, "The act of revealing, disclosing, or discovering to others what was before unknown to them."

Theologically, "The act of revealing divine truth," that which is revealed by God to man, the Bible, etc., "Inspiration."

"A supernatural influence which qualifies men to receive and communicate divine truth," etc.

The better idea as regards both terms is, in our opinion, found in Webster's definition concerning natural revelation, viz.: "The act of revealing or disclosing to others what was before unknown to them."

In Mark 12: 30 we have the recorded statement of Jesus Christ that in the first of all commandments regarding a love toward God was the necessity of employment or exercise of the minds of men. Farther on, thirty-third verse, when the scribe answering him, said, "To love God with all the understanding," etc., was "more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices," Jesus commended the wisdom of his answer by saying, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God;" and by parity of reasoning, if this be true, he, whomsoever he may be, that fails, either through inability or disposition to use or employ his powers to the extent of an understanding in service or worship, may be in reality, "far" from the kingdom of God, no matter what his physical environment or association may be.

In Matthew 13: 19 we hear the Savior again saying, "When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth that which was sown in his heart" and heart only, we add for emphasis.

"But he that receiveth seed into good ground, is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it," etc.—Verse 23. Again, "Jesus saith unto them, have ye understood all these things." "Therefore, every scribe which is instructed into the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."—Matthew 13: 52.

"Then opened he their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures."—Luke 24: 45.

"For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; . . . and they have known surely that I came out from thee.—John 17: 8.

Again, "If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

A failure to receive of ourselves, and to know surely and continuously of the truth, is to subject ourselves to the danger of slavery instead of freedom.

While it is true that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them," yet must it never be forgotten that the agencies employed by the Spirit of God are not altogether extraneous or independent of men's natural gifts and forces.

Man's power to reason, as we have plainly seen, is not to be discouraged or destroyed, but enlarged and augmented through the influence of that power and spirit which invites coöperation of man's powers in the effort at determining truth.

The effort to introduce after the silence of centuries, to an inexperienced generation of men, the mysteries of the occult in religion: this attempt at exploration into the vast field—this unknown, and untried region where, not only God, but demons dwell, requires an out-fitting and a preparation which we believe is not always adequately provided for.

The way into the "holy of holies," the approach to the throne where the heavenly Majesty sits; where our superiors, who themselves are "charged with folly," the angels bow in awe and reverence, dwell, should not be made with foolish and unbecoming haste, or lack of suitable preparation.

I believe that something like this must have been in the mind of the Lord when in 1829 he said to Oliver Cowdery, "Behold, you have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me: but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind;" etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3.

The failure of Oliver Cowdery to translate was evidently because of neglect or lack of understanding as to the necessity of using those agencies by and through which a successful approach to and association with the divine mind was to be had.

The Jew, if ever delivered from the skepticism, indifference, and labyrinth of unbelief into which he has fallen, and converted to a belief in the Messiahship of Jesus Christ, is to be won by appeal to the highest natural force and test.

"I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them,"—Hebrews 10: 16, (See Jeremiah 31: 33,) and as a result, "They shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother saying 'Know the Lord;' for they shall all know me."—Jeremiah 31: 34..

In Book of Mormon, Enos 1:2, we have the prophet saying, "While I was thus struggling in the Spirit, behold, the voice of the Lord came into my mind again, saying," etc.

This divine intelligence did not strike the prophet Enos in the region of the stomach, or back, or feet, but in that only region and seat of test and judgment to which God does, and men should make appeal, the mind.

"The law of the Lord is perfect," says the Psalmist, and it is about the only perfect thing under the sun, but the carnal mind is not subject to its provisions and rule (Romans 8), but often, even in the church is subject to other influences and control; but, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," no matter what his environment.

"Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son, Jesus Christ," says the beloved disciple; and in his association alone are we always and absolutely safe.

Under a proper interpretation I can sing as heartily as any, "We thank thee O God for a prophet," for God alone knows where I would have been had it not been for the work and fact of a prophet in my day; but when I sing, I want to "sing with the understanding also," that God did not stop with a prophet, but that he has continued to give in addition, apostles, sevens, high priests, evangelists, pastors, teachers, and gifts even to the laity, and that "the perfecting of the saints" can not come to us outside, or apart from all the provisions made, and as we have no "file leaders" in an absolutely independent or isolated sense, but that God has prepared for a general convocation of all the perfecting agencies, as neither quorum of presidency, apostles, seventy, high priests, elders or laity, alone, constitute the educating, saving, or consenting forces whose universal verdict alone constitutes law, so, and by so much only as the whole church rises into a state of spiritual power of assimilation of the divine suggestion, and honesty and inflexibility of purpose to sustain and carry out in our lives the divine counsel, will the time ever come when Christ shall be able to present to the Father "A church without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing."

The February number of the North American Review contains an article written by Mr. Clemens (Mark Twain) on "Christian Science," or as he calls it, "Eddyism," in which is found the following:

"It is not the ability to reason that makes the Presbyterian or the Baptist, or the Methodist, or the Catholic, or the Mohammedan, or the Buddhist, or the Mormon; it is environment. . . . A Presbyterian family does not produce Catholic families, or other religious brands, it produces its own kind; and not by intellectual process, but by association."

While we believe that environment and association has less influence upon ourselves as a body of religionists; while more independence of thought and action may be had by us than by nearly, if not all or any other religious or church associations, still, to what extent does, or may the criticism justly apply to us?

In Job 32:8 we read: "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." And we have tried to argue that by just so much as there be a failure of the Spirit of God to read understandingly, by just so much is there an absence of inspiration or revelation in its correct sense or interpretation.

Judged by this rule, if our experience goes for anything, we have been the victims of ignorance and personal fancies; the victims of carnal or fleshy desires; occult forces, perhaps, whose character has not been subject to the intelligent and safe analysis provided for in the law, as regards the great question of inspiration or revelation in these last days.

"He that hath my commandments, [this denotes an acquaintance, knowledge, or familiarity with them,] and keepeth [observeth—obeyeth] them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."—John 14: 21.

This absolutely clears the way for all to reach a perfect source of revelation and information; and our claim is that the height of privilege in the question of safety in these matters is gauged unqualifiedly by the ability to possess, to know, and to "keep" the commandments of Jesus Christ.

In saying this, however, I do not deny the right or fact that God has and does, or may continue to speak through, or by whatever agencies he will to any one, or all of his people. But in order to be of significance or worth, the message if coming from the Almighty must reach the understanding of those to whom it is addressed, otherwise there has been no revelation. In fact, to illustrate, I believe at times the oracle itself may not comprehend or understand so well the character or meaning of the utterance or communication as do those to whom it is addressed. The message is from "Him in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge," to him or her the divinity of whose life has fitted him for the reception of the divine communication.

Baalam's beast of burden was little benefited unless he might have been saved another beating. But Baalam was, and if God has "bestowed more abundant honor on the uncomely parts" in the church it is not with the idea, we apprehend, of encouraging ignorance, or discouraging knowledge through personal contact, and the ability to receive and assimilate.

late through the power of understanding and discernment of that which is devilish, human, or divine.

"Have salt in yourselves," said the Savior; a residuary force, a constant supply of that intelligent and saving quality to discern. The cultivation of this altogether necessary gift by which we may be able to separate the human from the divine, the false and doubtful from that which is true, will save those whom God has set in the church "to discern all these gifts," from the exceedingly trying task of subjections or control of that hasty and unwise oracle that is constantly upon the lookout for "signs" and sensational effects, and can be satisfied with a "revelation" that may not reveal; so full of uncertainties or out of harmony with the facts and truth, as to destroy instead of establishing the faith of the weak among us, or of the stranger within our gates.

"Wherefore let all men beware how they take my name in their lips; for, behold, verily I say, that many there be who are under this condemnation; who useth the name of the Lord, and useth it in vain, having not authority. Wherefore, let the church repent."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 15. But when we undertake to force matters along the line of pre-conceived ideas or desires, either for the sake of gratifying an abnormal craving for sensational exposition of the gifts or to strengthen our own contention by an attempt to force the indorsement of the Almighty, we become destroyers instead of defenders of the claim we make of latter-day revelation, and thereby, though unwittingly perhaps, become agents of the adversary whose business it is to destroy the claim of heavenly light and information by prostituting and bringing into ridicule and contempt the very means through which God designs to reach the brain, to educate our affections into a love of that which is practicable and true.

"With him," said God of Moses, "will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches."—Numbers 12: 8. And this because he was "faithful in all my house." (Numbers 12: 7.) Our idea is farther illustrated in the saying of this wise, meek, and faithful lawgiver, when as recorded in the previous chapter he said:

"Enviest thou for my sake? would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them."—Numbers 11: 29.

Evidently according to the record, there were some then, as now, who thought they were, or wanted to be, prophets. (See Numbers 12: 1, 2, and 16: 3, 11, etc.)

What a lot of trouble it would have saved Moses and Aaron and Miriam, Korah, Dathan, Abiram, and their company if they had known enough to get near the Lord and hear of him, what was his will instead of entertaining a false and flattering spirit concerning ministerial honors, and heavenly prerogatives and matters of this kind that now, as then, in various quarters do trouble modern Israel.

"Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold the glory which thou hast given me."—John 17: 24. "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them."—Verse 22. And it can only be that true discipleship that has risen into the light and power of an ability to discern and behold what that glory of which he spake is, that can ever be permitted to realize or enjoy it, and that, as we are informed in our day, is the glory of intelligence. (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.)

"All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also, otherwise, there is no existence." That is conscious, intelligent existence. (Paragraph 5.)

"Nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

The glories of an astronomical appreciation and education and study of the "heavens" that "declare the glory of God," as referred to also in this section and paragraph, is a wonderful stimulant to praise and true worship. And in the day of the Lord's coming, when Saints are purified from error by knowledge of the truth, when the time comes when "my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. . . . And hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof," etc., (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5,) are opened to the vision and understanding by and through Him of whom it is said, "The word was made by him," as sitting upon "the circle of the heavens" in the presence and in the midst of power of Him who said, "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory."—John 17: 24. How the soul does fill with raptured exultation, in the intelligent prospect of "things which God hath prepared for them that love him," as the astounding and astonishing wonders of the processes of creation are unfolded to the mind and comprehension in this glorious yet awful school of the Almighty God.

How small then, brethren, will the estate and the times appear to us, if memories preserve, when we as a child spake as a child and understood as a child. When we saw "through a glass darkly" and not "face to face," when we did not know as we are known, but "in part" only. (1 Corinthians 13: 11, 12.)

How cheap, unworthy, if not blasphemous will then appear not only the foolish and delusive suggestions of "glory" employed or entertained in spiritual Babylon to-day, and to which and by which religious "conversions" are obtained; but the fact also that we "prophesy in part" and "know in part" and comprehend, sometimes after an exceedingly limited fashion, what the end of our salvation, when it is reached, will be.

We should, in my opinion, get out from under the shadows of past traditions and fictions or ignorance concerning the character of rewards, as well as punishments hereafter, and learn that "hell" to us is to "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power" and that "heaven" is to be able not only to endure his presence when he shall come to be glorified in his saints (2 Thessalonians 1:9), but that we shall with him and them "be glorified together" because our teaching and education here has been that, "The glory of God is intelligence."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Something each day,—a smile,
It is not much to give,
And the little gifts of life
Make sweet the days we live.

The world has weary hearts,
That we can bless and cheer,
And a smile for every day,
Makes sunshine all the year."

She Hath Done What She Could.

Upon our return home from a three month's absence, among a package of mail, which by accident had not been forwarded to us, we found a card from Sr. Almira Snow, who for years has been one of our most faithful correspondents. It was dated February 9, and contains words of thanks for some little kindness which the Lord had put it into our heart to show her. She expressed herself as still saddened by her disappointment in failing to reach the Saints' Home in Lamoni as she had expected to do last fall, and spoke of Sr. Sarah L. Weed, of Nebraska, having offered her a home, and said: "If it was in Massachusetts I should start for it just as soon as the weather would permit, but it is six hundred miles beyond Lamoni." Continuing to open letter after letter, we were astonished to find in one the announcement of her death, and learned later that it occurred on the 23d of February last, and that Bro. Foss in preaching her funeral sermon used the text: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labors and their works do follow them," and we thought more appropriate words could not have been used.

For years Sr. Almira has been a very great sufferer, but it has only been when entirely disabled by sickness that her labors have been laid aside. Activity of mind and body characterized her to a remarkable degree, and even to the end of her life she has with God's blessing been enabled to support herself, and at the same time write for our church publications many articles of sterling merit, not one of which ever contained any but the most ennobling sentiments, and if the good advice given in them was heeded there would be happier homes—many of them—in the church to-day. In her last communication she said, "I am glad to see our periodicals first class. I have had my day and others are having theirs. God bless the work in every department." We are not prepared to say with her that our periodicals are first class, but we do say if the talent of the many was but half as faithfully improved upon as was hers, they might be among the very best in the land.

There is ever a feeling of sadness comes with the thought of death, but in thinking of the great change which has come to our dear sister we can not find it in our heart to grieve that the dear Lord has seen fit to take her to himself. That she has exchanged the toil, weariness, and pain of life for the blessedness and rest of paradise. That for her are ended the long weary days and nights of suffering and pain, and that while denied the coveted boon of the Saints' Home in Lamoni she has been given the higher and better one of that home into which her purified spirit was prepared to enter, and in which she shall rest until He who redeemed her and in whose blood she was washed shall bring her with him when he returns to earth to reign. May it be as truthfully said of us, when our summons comes, as of Sr. Almira.:

"She hath done what she could."

In Memory of Sr. Almira M. Snow.

A dear friend and saint has been taken away;
Called home to that city of bliss.

In her pilgrimage here, she gave comfort and cheer
To our hearts, and her counsels we miss.

Our loss is her gain, and while here we remain
May we each have a warm, tender place
In our hearts for the friend who kindly did send Good words of instruction with grace.

Her trials are o'er, she will suffer no more,
Her spirit has found its release;
From the old house of clay God called it away
To that city where all is sweet peace.

While we tarry here, may we each strive sincere,
By our efforts to gain the reward;
When this life-journey ends, may we meet the dear friends,

In the presence of Jesus, our Lord.

MRS. J. HEATON.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 9.

Dear Sr. Walker: I have not written to you since I was a little girl when I used to answer enigmas in the much-loved Hope. I am now mother of three little boys. The other day I noticed what you said about the mothers not using the space allotted them in the "Column." It does seem that we sisters ought at least to write a letter occasionally when you do so much that is a comfort and strength to us.

How much mothers need comfort and strength none but mothers know; how little we realize, when we set sail on the ocean of life, of the storms and tempests we will have to face, and how weak and powerless we are to face them without the divine arm to lean upon.

Daily my heart is lifted in prayer for strength and wisdom to teach my darling boys to be good, honorable men, finding their chief joy in serving God.

It seems to me nothing will help one to realize his own faults like teaching the little ones, for they are little mirrors reflecting one's faults as well as virtues, and when you start to correct them you suddenly realize that that is one of your own faults; so how can you correct the child until you have corrected yourself? Thus they help us to a higher level while we strive to teach them the divine way.

How the little helpless fingers draw us nearer to God and every thought of love for them is also a thank-offering to him who gave them to us. What a desolate old world this would be without the sunshine of their little faces.

"Bless the little children,
Let them come to me."

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 23.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS.

Dear Brother: As foreign correspondent of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society I presented to the district conventions of the Sunday-school and Religio associations the sad calamity that had befallen the South Sea Islands Mission, and many of those associated with us in these departments of work, following which a committee was chosen to draft an expression of our feelings as Sunday-school and Religio workers, who brought in the following, which was unanimously and feelingly adopted, February 20, 1903: "Just noting in the HERALD of 18th inst. the sad calamity that has befallen the islands of the sea, and with them several of our brethren and sisters of like precious faith:

"We, by this means, express our heart-felt sympathy for the bereaved ones, whether bereft of friends or property, and mingle our feelings of sympathy with words of condolence, praying our heavenly Father to grant comfort, and raise up friends who shall minister the supplies that will meet present demands. And under the promptings of the desire to prove ourselves friends indeed a collection was immediately taken, amounting to nine dollars and thirty-six cents [to which was added three dollars and twenty-one cents ere the convention closed. J. F. M.] to be sent by J. F. Mintun, Foreign Correspondent of Zion's Religio-Literary Society; and a further resolution was passed unanimously, that all superintendents of Sunday-schools, and presidents of Religios in the Des Moines District, present this privilege of contributing to the same end to their schools and locals, the amount thus contributed to be sent to J. F. Mintun, by March 15, to be forwarded to the needy ones."

This was one of the most profitable conventions ever held in the Des Moines District. Prospects are bright for much progress to be made in all departments of God's work, during this year.

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

How May Our Conventions be Made Profitable to the Schools of the District?

Look well to the selection of delegates. Be careful whom you send lest they do not represent you. The thought should be in our minds: "This is the Lord's work. Who will attend to it at the convention?" Why place in nomination for delegates the names of such who, when at home, have no interest in Sunday-school work? If no part is taken in a Sunday-school by a person when at home, he will not likely make a good delegate to represent it abroad.

Our conventions would be made profitable to each school in the district by learning the needs of the respective schools and supplying them. The needs could be made known at the convention by the delegates from the different schools.

The benefit we derive from a lecture, book, or convention, depends on how much we treasure in our minds of the good things expressed. Ofttimes good thoughts expressed by others, and good methods of conducting difficult lines of work, leave us, and are seldom recalled. A small note-book in which to write these good things would be of much worth to most people. The delegates should, when they attend convention, make a note of the good methods suggested which would be beneficial to their respective schools, and present them for the school's consideration on their arrival home. In this way there would be a chance for better ways to be learned and applied.

It would seem that the convention could be made profitable to each school in the district if the schools would, through their delegates, meet in convention and make known their difficulties, whatever they may be, and seek true methods for overcoming them.

The whole is made of many parts. If the parts are strong the whole will be strong. The benefit the convention may give to others will depend on how each one does his part there: whether faithfully or unfaithfully.

P. M. HANSON.

Sticking to the Point.

A teacher, after preparing his Sunday-school lesson thoughtfully and having in mind a few points that he is determined to impress directly and forcibly, is annoyed by the tendency of his scholars to "mind-wandering." He can not make them stick to the point. What is to be done in such cases? That is a practical question, and every teacher has felt the need of a solution.

In the first place the undisciplined mind is always inclined to wander. The difference between the trained and the untrained mind is shown in the power of sustained attention that results from the discipline of study. Lack of attention is not always a mark of willfulness or indifference. The teacher should not be discouraged by it, and feel that he is entirely at fault because he fails to hold attention.

But he is not to give up and let the talk wander where it will. Bring the scholars back to the lesson and to the point. If they wander again and again, still bring them back. Stick to the point yourself, and you will make some points stick in the minds of the scholars.—Selected.

Letter Department.

MELBOURNE, Australia, February 27.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to say the work is moving along rapidly in Australia. Temporal conditions, however, hinder somewhat. The country is suffering from a seven years' drought, and while considerable rain has fallen in the last six months yet the sufferers have received only slight relief. The rain came too late for the last crop, and while the next one may be good, yet, in the meantime the people must suffer.

Recently Bro. D. McIntosh and the writer attended a session of the Victorian Parliament. The subject under consideration was the railways. The discussion developed the fact that the railroads are not a success. Nearly everything said was in criticism. Really "extravagance," "incompetency," or "corruption" could be written over every department of the service. And yet the roads themselves are built with more regard to human safety than are our own. I agree with Bro. E. L. Kelley in thinking the English method (in use here) of side-doors for entrance and exit is better for thickly populated sections where frequent stops are made than our plan. Ours, however, is better for long trips, especially through sparsely settled countries. There are other respects, too, in which the system here is more convenient than ours. In general results, however, the American system is evidently the best in the world.

May God bless the coming conference.

In bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

OGDEN, Utah, March 28.

Editors Herald: We are still alive and at work here. Still I could wish there were a little more spiritual life manifested among our people in these parts. However, we have had a few incidents calculated to revive and renew us in the faith. The first was an excellent district conference, and the second was the presence of visiting elders and brethren from various parts of the field and en route for General Conference. Elder H. L. Holt stepped off from the train here the evening of the 3d and consequently was with us once more. It seemed quite like old times to labor with this brother again, and we at once put him into the harness and were pleased to find him the same willing worker that we had labored with in years gone by. And his labors at this place as well as at Plain City, and near Roy, also in Salt Lake City, and at Sandy, were certainly of the nature to strengthen and help the Saints, as well as to open the eyes of the sinners present. Having labored so long together in years gone by it was only natural that we should enjoy his stay with us this time, and we were glad that others enjoyed his preaching also. He left us yesterday, expecting to spend Sunday in Denver and reach Kansas City April 1. Bro. John Vanderwood went with him. Bro. W. H. Kelley was with us at conference, and we were pleased to have it so, and sorry that his stay was so short, he leaving us for Lamoni the 9th instant. Brn. S. D. Condit and G. L. M. Brokaw were also with us and spoke for us to the pleasure of the Saints.

Next in order of events was a visit of one night and a lecture upon "Book of Mormon and American Archæology" by Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser on his way east. This was a treat and enjoyed by us as well as by several of our Utah elders. By the way, "Utah" seems to be awaking to the fact that they have need to come to us for light. That is, judging from the amount of Book of Mormon literature I have sold to their elders since coming here. Is not this in harmony with the statement that "Out of Zion shall go forth the law?"

We do not expect to get to conference this year but will keep busy holding the battle line here. Bro. S. D. Condit is in Salt Lake City now and we expect A. B. Phillips to-night on his way east. He will stay and preach for us to-morrow. Bro. Arthur Allen made us a call of one evening on his way east, but as he did not expect to stay over night we did not get a sermon from him this time. We would say to all the brethren going through that we look for them to stop and rest by preaching for us here. Do you hear that, Bro. Albert Carmichael? Now on your way west, if you have a couple of days to spare in Ogden, do not hide away. We have commenced mission-meetings at the home of Bro. and Sr. E. Chapman, 2904 Washington Avenue, for every Friday evening. This with meetings at Plain City Tuesday and at or near Roy Wednesday evening and our services here and at Plain City Sunday (four services and ten miles separated) does not leave us very much spare time. Still we manage to get in an extra night here and there occasionally.

The number of our baptisms has not been very large this year, nor are there prospects for many in the near future; still we are trying to do our part. Tenting season will soon be here and if we are continued in this mission my wife with Allie and Charley and myself expect to become dwellers in tents once more. This and street preaching is about the most feasible way of reaching the public ear in this field. My wife is quite busy with the Sunday-school and Religio work here, as well as assisting me in my varied labors as president of this branch. Our general health is reasonably good. With a prayer for the blessing of Christ upon the brethren in conference, and for the welfare of Zion at large, I am,

A. M. CHASE.

ADA, Indian Territory, March 26.

Dear Herald: We have a little Sunday-school here of about twenty in attendance, but I think as the weather gets warmer there will be more. There are only three families of Saints here but hope there will be more in the future. Bro. S. W. Simmons came here February 27, and preached twice. The first day of March he began a discussion with a Holiness preacher. They talked night about for a week, and I think much good was accomplished. Bro. J. F. Grimes came here March 5 and stayed until the 16th, preaching six times. We are always glad when the elders come and our doors are always open to them.

I was baptized by Bro. H. O. Smith at Paul's Valley, September 24, 1900. I have had to pass through some very severe trials. I have had to give up a dear, devoted mother, and my darling sister. There were but five months and seven days between their deaths. My sister left a little girl of four summers and I have the care of her. I ask the prayers of the mothers that my life may be such that should she try to follow in my footsteps she would not be far from right.

Sometimes I feel discouraged and almost cast down, but I know this work is of God, and I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may live a life worthy the name I bear, and may I live so as to never bring reproach on the work that I so much love. I should like to hear from Abbie Childres.

Your sister, LEAH CRAWFORD.

COLLINWOOD, Ohio, March 22.

Dear Saints: I gladly renew for the HERALD. It certainly is a "blessing" to me, as I can not hear a sermon plainly enough to feel interested, and one can learn so much from its pages. I enjoy reading it.

I, too, have had some experiences before and since I joined the "Latter Day Saints."

For many years, until God in his own way called me, I lived what I supposed a Christian life; yet I used to wonder why it was that I never heard or saw any "signs" as they used to do in olden times; until one night while watching my dear little girl, only girl, I saw a vision. It was my grandma who had passed away, and she said "Edith, do you wish to make sure of heaven?" And I said, "Oh yes, but where is my baby," as she seemed to stand there where my baby was. She disappeared, and Baby Ruth was still there sleeping sweetly. Two or three days after my little girl died of spasms. After that all I lived for was to try and understand God's word. I joined the Baptist Church. My two boys also did. I did not know of the Latter Day Saints then. I studied for months before I received my consolation, but it came. To try to describe it would only seem to mar it; I could not. But this I know, there is a true God, and God is love. I have felt the presence of those persons, God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Oh! joy indescribable, nothing on earth could compare with such happiness. What can compare with the joys of eternal life.

Dear Saints pray for me that I may never forget, but keep this on my mind, this promise of happiness.

EDITH OVENDEN.

OROVILLE, California, March 15.

Dear Saints: I want to bear my testimony to the goodness of God to me, for he has indeed blessed me always and when isolated from you he is ever present by his Holy Spirit. Oh, may I ever live worthy of it, for its presence is more to me than all the goods of this wicked world.

Dear Saints, the Spirit bears witness that the coming of Jesus is very near, and O, will I be one that will be ready to enter the pearly gates? Many, many times I ask myself this question. I must live "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord," not live a part of the law, but all of it, and only by his help can I do it. Only through prayer can I get help, and if I pray always as I should he will surely do his part and give the Holy Spirit to teach me every day how to live. Saints, we must not be afraid to sacrifice the things of this world for the gospel's sake. Only think how glad we were that the gospel was sent to us. Surely some one sacrificed to help send the elder that brought the gospel or the church papers to us. No matter how it came, it was a blessing and always will be, if we live as it teaches. It teaches that only a few will be saved when the Savior appears. Now what is it that is going to hold us down, so we can not rise to meet him? Is it such fine homes, or too much gold in our pockets, that weighs us down, or is it too many fine clothes, so many that our hearts are set on them so we can make a fine appearance? If we were looking for him to come as we expect company, would we rush and put on our best house dress, or would we think first if we had on the robe of righteousness? If we expected to go out to meet him on the street or at church, would we put on our finest apparel, or would we say to ourselves, "Does my face shine with his Spirit, so he would recognize me as his own?"

If we really expected to meet him at a reunion or General Conference would we rush to the merchant's counter to pass our dollars for nice clothes, while we saved the nickel for the Lord, or would we seek our closets to pray that we may be counted worthy to meet him? Dear Saints, do we realize that this habit of fine dress and style has got so it is a curse because it will turn the heart to stone, or so nearly so that it will be easy to let the gospel suffer and bills go unpaid to keep pace with it? We look at the drunkard with contempt or pitying eye, but do we look at ourselves, drunken with pride, in the same light?

We, the Latter Day Saints who bear many testimonies to the fact that we have the true light of the gospel, should stop and think how many dollars we spend for style that we do not need, and then think how many there are who need the gospel sent to them, and how many poor there are who need help. Many of us ask for the Spirit to be poured out at conference, when while getting ready for that very meeting, or a reunion, in place of spending extra time on the knees in prayer, so we will take the Spirit with us, we put the extra time in preparing nice clothes and plenty of good things to eat. Then when we get there we expect the good Lord to bless us spiritually when we have only worked for the temporal so-called blessings. Saints, let all those who expect to attend the coming conference, just forget the things of this world and prepare for a blessing from heaven, and God will surely do his part.

There are not half so many real spiritual meetings among the Saints as there should be. We can not get the blessings from God that we ask if there are duties left undone. I know of a worthy Saint, a widow, who had to go out and work, while her little children ran the streets learning evil, and the older children had to leave school to earn the little they could to help support themselves. They attended Sunday-school, but could the teaching there compare with a kind Christian mother's care. No, indeed not. It is not to the interest of the church to have the children come up like weeds. What was the Savior's teaching concerning the poor widow and orphan? Will the Saints that have plenty and some to spare be justified in his sight? Can the Lord bless us in fine stylish clothes, when our means have gone to the rich merchant of the world in place of to the Bishop of his church?

Now this is plain talk, but it is no plainer than the Spirit gave it to me, and especially while at two different reunions. Please try real plain, neat clothing, Saints, and send in the dollar in place of the nickel to the Bishop and see how light-hearted you feel, and how much more of the Lord's Spirit you can enjoy. The robe of righteousness is far more pleasing to God. Never mind the world, they only care for your money and not for you. Sometime I will tell you of a vision I had about the dress I had to meet the Savior in.

It takes prayer to make great sacrifices, and may we all ever be granted that Spirit that teaches us how to live in a pleasing manner before him. I long to see the church progress faster, for there are such grand blessings for us if we only live for them. Pray for me.

Your sister,

MRS. DAVID.

MELBOURNE, Victoria, February 28.

Editors Herald: We are doing very well in this mission. The work is opening up nicely everywhere. The people are disposed to hear and obey the truth.

The Age, a paper published in this city, gave a lengthy account of the recent disaster in the Society Islands. Among other things this remark occurs: "Mr. Gilbert, an American missionary, with true Yankee ingenuity devised an apparatus for condensing water to quench the thirst of the people." This, I presume, is our J. W.

I leave here March 4 for Sydney, where I shall remain for a time.

May God bless the coming conference. In bonds,

SAN FRANCISCO, California, March 24.

Dear Herald: All is going nicely with us, and we are still moving upward and onward in the cause we love. Our branch is in a good, prosperous, and spiritual condition. The attendance at our meetings is good, and much interest manifest. Our Sunday-school meets at fifteen minutes till ten o'clock in the forenoon. We have preaching at eleven and half past seven, prayer-meeting Wednesday evening, Prayer Union Thursday afternoon, Religio Friday evening, and often we have other meetings during the week, so there is not much time wasted. We occupy a hall at 1925 Mission Street, of which we have the exclusive control. A good spirit prevails and I have been blessed in presenting the word. Those of the Saints who are most active in the work are really living in the Spirit. It is our almost constant companion, and we are all growing in grace. The same Spirit prevails in Oakland, and that branch is also coming "up higher." We are putting forth greater efforts to serve the Master and he is blessing us accordingly. All our officers are trying to do their duty, and all the members are being strengthened thereby. Elder J. M. Terry is preaching here and in Oakland every Sunday. He is aided by the local ministry. Of late we have had help from Elders R. Etzenhouser, E. Keeler, H. L. Holt, so the truth is continually ringing from our pulpit. Tracts are being distributed continually, and we are letting it be known that we are alive. We have enjoyed much of the Spirit in administering to the sick, in fact we seem to be entering upon a new era, one of more assurance and satisfaction, one of more nearness to our heavenly Father, one of more confidence and trust.

It may be strengthening to your readers to hear of one of our late experiences. One of our most devoted members, Sr. McKee, was taken very seriously sick a little over one week ago. The doctor was called in, who pronounced it a case of appendicitis, and declared that unless she was removed to the hospital and an operation performed immediately she could not live until night. A second doctor was called with the same result. And as they would not listen to a removal, he said he would not take the case, as she could not live. The family—husband, two sons, and two daughters remained home and spent the entire day at her bedside. An absent son was also sent for. The elders who had been sent for reached the house early in the evening. They went there with all the faith they could muster, and continued in prayer for divine aid. In company with the family they knelt in prayer at the bedside. The elders led in prayer, followed by each one of the family, the chief request of each was that power might be given to rebuke the disease, that the afflicted one might recover. The Spirit of God was present during those prayers and the family was in a good spiritual condition to be blessed. The Spirit was felt during the anointing with oil, but during the confirmation it was present in such great power that they trembled violently under its influence, while tears of joy rolled down their cheeks. The gift of tongues was given and many promises were made to the afflicted sister. She was told that she should get well and that she should testify that she was raised up by the power of God, that as she had been healed before by the power of God, he would also heal her now. The tongue and interpretation were really prophecy to her. Under this heavenly influence the disease and sickness were rebuked, and all present felt to rejoice. With the removal of the elders' hands from the sister's head the pain departed, and she began to improve. Soon some young relatives came in, and conversation turning on youthful things, she was soon laughing and talking cheerfully with the children. She continued to grow better, next day she was up a little while. Improvement continued, and Sunday she attended church in our hall at both morning and evening services. I heard her say "It was all done by the power of God," and there were tears of gratitude in the eyes of her and her husband when I shook hands with them and bade them good-night.

May God bless his Saints that they may grow in grace and faith, and learn more of him and what is required of them. As an individual I am strong in the faith and anxious to do my part in this great cause.

Yours in bonds,

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

GLASGOW, Scotland, March 20.

Editors Herald: I am more anxious to get the HERALD and Ensign than ever before, that I may be able to hear how the dear ones are getting along in Joseph's goodly land. There are also many plain and precious things contained in these papers that are a feast to the soul, which tend to lift us up and make us pure examples of the living Christ.

When I read of how the Lord is blessing his people here and there in the land of Zion, it inspires me to write and tell you that God is blessing us also. On February 28 my husband baptized two more precious souls into the kingdom of God, John and Alice Anderson. I am sure they will do what they can to assist in the work here.

When my husband first carried a tract to Sr. Anderson, she told him she was a spiritualist, but he said "I don't care what you are if you will only read this tract." She said she was willing to read anything. She had been raised in the convent, and leaving them she believed in spiritualism.

Bro. and Sr. Anderson both became members of the Religio before they were baptized. Bless the Religio, who could afford to be without one, even if there are only ten or twelve present. As long as we enjoy the sweet Spirit of the Master, what need we care if we are alone. There are only twelve Saints in this large city of Glasgow.

When I see the drunkenness of men, women, and children, my soul cries out within me to my Father in heaven, almost asking him the question, as if I were talking with him face to face, How long, O Lord, shall this terrible monster, alcohol, be permitted to drag down to destruction these, the workmanship of thy hands? Is there no way to defeat the enemy of all righteousness out of his prey? Awake, O inhabitants of the earth, how long will ye sleep and slumber in death? Is it any wonder the world is full of such terrible wickedness, when the Book of Mormon plainly tells us that because the abominable church has taken away many of the plain and precious things that were contained in the Bible, many would stumble and fall? It is true, and may God hasten the day when this terrible wickedness shall be cut short. Think of two missionaries in this great city of a million inhabitants, only a speck compared with the countless numbers of theologians in this large city. But if God is with us what need we care if all the hosts of heaven and hell be arrayed against us? We know that we are safe, if thou, O Lord, art nigh unto us.

Dear Saints in the land of Zion, you know not how to appreciate your grand opportunities, until you get away from home and loved ones, where prejudice runs high, opposition on every hand; it makes you think you would like to be at your dear old home, comfortably enjoying the association of those that are of the one common faith. But we were never known to be cowards, especially since making a covenant with Christ, in the waters of baptism, so we are desirous of standing by the Master's cause, more firmly grounded in the faith that was once delivered to the Saints, for it will not be very long and we can afford to suffer the persecutions that the world heaps upon us and rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer for him who suffered for us. Never was such love manifested before. No wonder the angelic hosts of heaven sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Who can help loving such a kind Father who would offer his Son that the human race might be permitted to come back into his divine presence once more.

There is so much work to be done here and O so few to do it, that I find myself crying out unto my Father, O give us grace and strength to do thy will as thou would have us.

I wish some of the Religios in America would send me some tracts, and I would try and distribute them. Bro. Arber and my husband it seems need all they have for their work. I have given some away, but if I had some this summer, I think I would surely distribute them. I have received the Ensigns now and I want to place them in the depots and other places. I will be pleased to receive tracts from any who may see fit to send them. Would like also if some of the Good Literature Committees would gather up some Hopes and send them for our school, as we are not able to get them.

I would love to meet with you all in General Conference, but I can not this year, but pray earnestly that the Spirit's power may be felt to a marked degree in your midst, bringing much joy and peace to the Saints, as well as bringing to pass much righteousness to the church as a body.

Your sister,

ALLIE THORBURN.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, March 20.

Editors Herald: We have just had a series of meetings, as Bro. W. J. Booker has been with us. He is a father in Israel in imparting the word to the Saints. Bro. Jesse Reeder has also been with us. He is ever a welcome visitor at our home.

I do not see how the Saints can get along without the church literature, as it contains so much food.

Dear Saints, I feel that if we would live and obey the word of wisdom we would be blessed abundantly. I desire to live by every word of God. Let us arise, Saints, and shake off the coals from our garments and strength will be given us. We are the children of light if we do the will of our heavenly Father.

The latter part of January, I dreamed that I looked toward the north and I beheld a large field of corn. It was stout and had good, full ears, from two to three on each stalk. The season set in rainy and the corn began to shoot out new ears and, though the rainy season continued, it continued to mature more corn. I said to the people, we have plenty of hard corn. As there was no end to this great season, I felt that the rain had set in in that our Bro. W. J. Booker was teaching us the law of tithing.

I desire the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful, pay my tithing, and have part in the first resurrection.

Your sister,

T. B. COOPER.

RAYMOND, Idaho, March 25.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote, I have been laboring principally in the Snake River Valley, doing what I could for the advancement of the cause of Christ, visiting Saints and friends in Soda Springs, McCammon, Pocatello, Blackfoot, Moreland, and Idaho Falls and vicinity. Attended the Idaho District conference held in Blackfoot, on the 28th of February, where we met William H. Kelley, who materially assisted us in our deliberations, by his fatherly counsel and advice. He also preached twice during the conference, which was indeed a treat to the Saints who heard him, and especially to the ministry. The conference passed off pleasantly and I believe much good was done. In the conference minutes as published in HERALD of March 18, the name of Bro. John E. Vanderwood is omitted in the ordinations. He was ordained an elder.

The good work is onward in the Rocky Mountain Mission, and Married.

HAND—WERT.—At the home of the bride's parents, at Newton, Iowa, March 25, 1903, at 8.30 p. m., Bro. William Ignus Hand, of Chelsea, Iowa, to Sr. Ida Mae Wert, Elder C. Scott officiating, assisted by Elder Ferguson. Some sixty or more guests witnessed the solemn pledge entered into by the happy couple. They will be at home to their friends at Chelsea, Iowa, after April 1. May peace and success attend their united efforts through life, is the wish of all their friends.

Died.

ANDERSON.—Bro. Peter B. Anderson was born December 8, 1843, in Denmark, died at his home March 8, 1903. United with church in 1880 and remained firm in the faith. During the last days of his life he bore testimony of having a hope of taking part in the first resurrection. He leaves a wife and two children, who hope some day to unite with the loved one. Services conducted by Bro. James Lippincott.

FAUNCE.—At Nebraska City, Nebraska, Sr. Sarah E., wife of Bro. Francis Faunce, aged 50 years, 2 months. Though reason trembled at the severity of affliction's assault, our sister passed away in peace on March 12. Baptized by Elder R. M. Elvin in 1890, she was "faithful to the end." Funeral services were conducted on March 15, by M. H. Forscutt. The widower being our ex-chief of police is so well and favorably known that only about one half of those attending were able to secure even standing room in the church. Interment in Wyuka Cemetery.

VARLEM.—At his home near Diamond Valley, Alpine county, California, February 12, 1903, Bro. Peter Varlem; born in Norway, August 10, 1841; baptized July 26, 1888, by Elder Heman C. Smith. The deceased leaves five sons, three daughters, and grandchildren. Funeral services by Elder D. R. Jones.

MORANT.—At North Platte, Nebraska, March 12, 1903, Richard, son of Bro. Samuel and Sr. Jessie Morant, at the age of four months and four days. The child was blessed February 11, 1903, under the hands of Elder Daniel W. Shirk. He was a beautiful child but the Father saw fit to call his spirit home before he had come in contact with the evils of this life. Funeral at the house March 14. Sermon by Elder C. H. Porter, preached from Matthew 18: 1, 3.

THOMAS.—Bro. Thomas Thomas was born May 24, 1832, at Llanelly, Carmanshire, Wales; baptized June 6, 1864, at Folsom, Sacramento County, California, by George P. Dykes; ordained an elder in March, 1865, at Brigham, Boxelder County, Utah, by Jeremiah Thomas; died March 10, 1903, in Harrison County, Iowa. Funeral sermon by Elder Joshua Carlile.

BUTTERY.—At his home in East Hampton, Massachusetts, March 11, 1903, Rufus Buttery died after an illness of one week, aged 67 years 4 days. He leaves a widow and seven children. He was baptized in the Silvermine River, December 7, 1896, by W. A. Smith. He has lived a life becoming a saint of God. Peace to his ashes and may God add his blessings to those bereaved of his association and give the needed strength that they may bare up under the great trial. Sermon by Albert E. Stone.

BRO. J. W. A. BAILEY writes from Warrensburg, Missouri, under date of April 1: "We have a nice little branch six miles north of town, and we have preaching the first and third Sundays of each month by Elder Abrahams. He is a good, wide-awake man. About three weeks ago we organized a Sunday-school, which is doing well so far."

JOSEPH GIRARD, of 22 Crampton Road, Penge, London, England, wishes us to announce that he will welcome from authors and publishers, and any others, bibliographical information concerning "Mormonism," as he has undertaken the compilation of a descriptive catalogue of books in all languages and of all persuasions, relating to the subject.

Sunday-School Conventions

SUNDAY, APRIL 5.

Sunday's exercises were under the charge of the General Sunday-school officers, and the local Sunday-school. At eight o'clock a prayer-meeting was held, and at half past nine the Independence Sunday-school held its regular session. At the eleven o'clock services there were some addresses on Sunday-school topics, the principal speakers being T. A. Hougas and Adam J. Keck. In the afternoon a prayer and sacrament service was held, in charge of J. A. Gunsolley and T. A. Hougas, the special topic for testimony being the Sunday-school and its work. In the evening a paper by Duncan Campbell was read, after which an address on individuality was given by T. W. Williams.

General Conference.

The fiftieth conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints convened in the upper auditorium of the church building in Independence, Missouri, at ten o'clock on the morning of April 6. Joseph Smith and his counselors were chosen to preside over the conference, and R. S. Salyards was chosen secretary, with privilege to select assistants. He chose A. J. Keck and F. A. Russell. After a hymn was sung, Patriarch A. H. Smith offered prayer. The organization was further perfected by choosing Bro. F. G. Pitt and Sr. Belle R. James choristers, to have charge of the music and song service. B. C. Smith, presiding deacon of the Independence Branch, was selected as usher in chief. Sr. Belle James was appointed stenographer of the conference, and A. E. Mortimer, W. S. Pender, and A. B. Phillips were chosen as committee on credentials. T. W. Williams, W. E. La Rue, and Ammon White were chosen as press committee.

The order of meetings, appointing of speakers, etc., was left with the presidency of the conference, and the order of meetings was announced as follows: Prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in the morning; preaching services at a quarter to eleven; business session at two in the afternoon, and preaching services at half past seven in the evening.

The credentials committee retired, and while awaiting their return a number of short speeches were given. President Joseph Smith spoke as follows:

We are here as the accredited ministers and delegates of the church from different localities to transact such business as may be necessary to be done. This has become a custom since the institution of the church, and the sixth of April has been chosen as the day on which we meet.

I wish to suggest at the outset that we are meeting for the purpose of doing what business is necessary. It does not follow that it is necessary for us to make business and thereby make mischief. I hope that the feeling that has characterized the assemblies of the Saints during the latter part of the week past will continue with us and that the supreme motive of our lives as members of the church, suggested by our brother last evening, be the rule governing our session and our conduct while we are together. To forget that we are as individuals entitled to the supreme place in our thoughts and in our utterances, to sink self and to substitute in our thoughts Christ and his service. If we will do this, it will help us, not only to facilitate our work, but at the same time that it gives an incentive to us, it will give us a representation with our cotemporaries, both here and those who are abroad.

I can not forget that the church over the entire earth, so far as we, as a people are concerned, will be represented on this floor by men who are reputedly men of God and who should, on all occasions, act as men of God. We have been instructed in the past that the Holy Ghost is not an accuser of the brethren. I believe this is true both in an individual social manner, but it is also true in our collective capacity, and as we represent the church abroad, we ought to keep it in mind clearly that we should act as men of God.

I suggest still further that in our discussions during the session of the conference that we say what we have to say from our affirmative standpoint and not spend so much time combating what others may have presented. I think we can get along much better and reach better conclusions than we can by attempting to destroy another's argument, to make our affirmation from our own standpoint. If my understanding of the School of the Prophets is correct, after it is organized, no such thing as an argument against one who had preceded an orator, would be allowed. He has to speak from his own standpoint and his own individuality, with reference to what another may have stated or written, in such a way that it could not be understood that he was objecting or making an objective argument.

I see no reason why we may not bring this principle to bear in our conference affairs. I see no reason why we may not as individuals on the floor and as delegates and ministers, every one present speak his own thoughts and conclusions without attempting to tear down the work of some other. I think we will reach a better understanding. We ought to avoid the attempt to coerce others into our opinions. I remember that it is said of one of our eminent lawyers—I think his name was Choate—some years ago an active man at the bar, that he made it his point in advocating cases where he was arguing before a jury, to keep at that jury until he overcame and broke down the personality of every man connected with the case on the jury in order to win his verdict, and he would talk just as long as it was necessary for him to accomplish that one specific object.

We are so constituted as individuals, almost the whole mass of us, that if we were satisfied that some one who was opposed to us was deliberately setting forth to overcome us, we would become like steel and it would be almost impossible to reach a unity. You know that is true, brethren.

I remember having a spiritualist, who sat by me one time, undertake to dominate my individuality, and he built up a barrier between me and himself that he could not possibly overcome; just the same, if I was to undertake to talk you men down, I'd have a job that would last me until I am older than I am now.

One of the reasons why I make this statement is this: I believe that the disciple who is in the discharge of his duty, humble, upright, fearless and independent, recognizing the power of God and the ministration of Jesus Christ, becomes by second nature, so near to the Spirit of his Master that he is more or less all the time in thought and in speech inspired. I do not mean to be understood by this that everything that we may do as individuals is necessarily an inspired speech or an act, but it ought to be acknowledged that the same principle that is at work in the world by which a man in any calling becomes so permeated with the principles of his calling that he thinks in specific lines under the inspiration that should govern him in the carrying on of that work in that calling; the same as a military man, a general, for instance, thinking always along the lines and governed by the principles that are at work in making a machine called an army, partakes of the spirit of it, and sleeping or waking he is under its influences, and it applies to every other calling. And why should it not apply to ours? And if a man is at work in such a calling as ours, subjecting his daily thoughts to a consideration of those things that he should say and do as a minister, is it anything out of the way for us to believe that the supervising power of Christ himself will see that our thoughts and words are more or less governed and controlled by him, and thus we become from time to time inspired and speak under the influence of inspiration?

I believe that some of our doubtful men—that is to say some of those men who are with us who apparently are walking without the continued intervention of manifestations which they can see and recognize openly as being from God, have received a sufficient degree of the spirit of wisdom under the ministration of Christ as stated by the Apostle Paul in the 12th chapter of Corinthians, that they are really wise, not by nature but by the intervention of the Spirit that supervises the giving to every man a gift that he might profit withal.

I want the brethren to take that thought under advisement and say whether or not it is necessary for us, or whether it has been designed that we should all work and move and think and speak in accordance with the direct and open manifestations such as we recognize as an open manifestation of revelation? Is it not practicable for us to believe that Christ in his ministrations takes cognizance of the subjects that he has chosen to work with upon the earth, that he will see to it that those principles and powers referred to by the Apostle Paul in the 12th chapter of Corinthians are at work with them and they are blessed with the spirit of wisdom, and I am surprised that we had not recognized years ago that the apostle puts this first, and as we step from the threshold of the church into it the very first manifestation we find is that of wisdom, and a man may be a wise man for a long time and not know it himself, especially if he is a modest man, as I believe you elders are, most of you. Hence if moved under the influence of this spirit he may possibly speak by revelation and not recognize it himself, and only until the time come that the consequences will be known, is it recognized by others. Think along the past in your lives and see if you can not now place in your memory individuals who must have been moved upon by this spirit of revelation in the gift of wisdom.

Then there is the gift of knowledge; and you will find that diffused over the church, in the household, among your wives and daughters as well as sons and gray-haired sires, that what they see they understand, and they comprehend what passes around them, taking observation of them and if such a man is a disciple, is moved under the inspiration of this kindly light that has led him in the way of truth, is it anything strange that he may have received such knowledge by revelation that he absolutely is at times thus inspired? What is it that gives such a brightness and perspicuity to the word when it is read by a man who has really the Spirit of Christ in him? What is it? Is it not inspiration?

I received a compliment on Saturday that I do not know when I have received anything that has pleased me much better than that. I met a man at the door of the post-office who shook hands with me upon the strength of having heard me read a hymn in Nebraska City twenty-five years ago at the dedication of a little chapel there. He said, "I remember you reading that hymn and I remember it because I had never heard a hymn read so well as that was." Well, I had forgotten almost that I had been there—it has been so long. I can not give myself credit for being the reader, but I read that hymn under the influence of the Spirit, and wasn't I inspired in reading it? I think so. I only speak of that to illustrate.

We may have made a mistake in the past. I believe the same thing occurs in regard to the gift of faith. A man may be inspired to be faithful.

I know of men who have gone into the field who have trembled when they have faced the people. I remember one man who was sent from Nauvoo to St. Louis with another, and he said that from the time he started until he reached home, he never was present at a meeting that he was not filled with a degree of fear. What was the cause of it? It was that he might be asked questions that he could not answer and that he, failing to answer or answering wrong would bring discredit to himself as a minister and to the work that he was called upon to represent, and he said in conclusion, that he never was asked a question but that he had the answer in his mind or given to him at the time that the question was asked, until finally he said, "I came to the conclusion that the good Lord would not let them ask a question that would throw me."

We are in a much better condition morally as a body of people than we have ever been. Further than that, some of you may remember that a few years since—I will not say how long—I brought the attention of the ministers in the conference to the consideration of this thought, that there were things transpiring in the world that would require from us as a people the exercise of qualities that we may not then have had, and the use and capabilities of men whom we did not seem then to think or those whom we did have must be educated up until they were able to stand in a position where the world would compel them to stand. Well, we have reached pretty near the place suggested by me at that time and we have found men for every emergency, until, instead of being treated lightly as we were when we met here the first conference we ever held here, we have been met now with respect. It has been the result of our having stood steadfastly to the propositions with which we started out until men have learned to respect us because of our earnestness and our devotion and our consistency.

We have an opportunity to lose that regard, or we have an opportunity to continue it, and it remains for us as individuals and as a body to continue and persistently press forward as we have been progressing.

Mark Twain in his argument in the North American Review in talking about fashions in religion itself, gives his readers to understand that in all the denominations except the one to which he belongs, the men are insane. I am not going to tell you what denomination that is but he gives as a reason, that they did not think about religion as he does. If everybody is insane that does not think as we do, there are a good many insane people, are there not? Bro. Banta voiced a similar sentiment when upon one occasion, after hearing a man talk said, "That man is sound in the faith." When asked why, he said, "Because he agrees with me." He thought as he thought.

We will have some small speeches from different representatives, and I presume that I am making no infringement upon your kindness if I introduce my associate, Bro. Frederick Smith.

Fred M. Smith:

I do not know that I have much to say. I realize that I am decidedly young in the faith and the work and hence I can not but feel that you would a great deal rather that I would show by my works what I am, rather than by telling you.

I have been cognizant of the responsibility that I have taken upon me, and I have realized that in taking up this life's work, I have given up anything that I might have in the way of ambition in making something for myself like most young men do; but I gladly do it for the sake of the work, and trust that what little I shall be able to do will be for the good of the cause. That is all I have to say this morning.

R. C. Evans:

Mr. President, Brothers and Sisters: I am sure this morning that I occupy a similar position to my brother who just addressed you. I very, very much prefer to hear and see than to speak.

The work, as it looms before the vision of my understanding, is calculated in its nature to beget within me, hope, faith, and confidence, and I implicitly trust in the promises of God, believing them to be invulnerable.

I am here, as I believe, because God requires me to occupy, and I expect, so long as reason reigns upon its throne, to do my very best in every condition, under every circumstance, and trust that doing my best I may meet with the approval of God and the support of my brethren.

A. H. Smith, Presiding Patriarch:

Bro. President, Brethren of the Conference, Sisters, and Saints: It is with feelings that I can not express in words that I stand before you to-day in the opening of this conference. In looking back over the history of my past labors, the experience in the work, it is with great satisfaction that I see so many representatives of this work from so many different parts of the world.

I remember when I entered in upon the ministry I knew nearly every man that belonged to the Reorganization, could call them by name when I saw their faces, but there is a multitude that I meet now that belong to the church and are in the work that I can not tell their names—do not know them by sight. I recognize them by the Spirit many times as members of the one body.

Nearly forty years of my life have been spent in the ministry, in the effort to establish this work permanently and to reach all men with the hope that has been so satisfying to me, and in those long years of service and many varied experiences, none have been so bright and satisfying in some sense as the experience of the last two years.

It has been two years since I met with you here—two years since I was permitted to meet in conference. I do not know how it is with the rest of you, but I know with me the loss of a General Conference is very keenly felt, and at your last General Conference I was far away from home on the other side of the world, but I was passing under experiences there that were new and somewhat trying, but it is a satisfaction to me now to be able to say to you that our Father who has promised his aid has been with me, and in all the trying changes that I passed through, I have recognized his preserving care, his hand over me, leading me, directing me. When I could not see that that was before me but a step at a time he led me on and on in safety.

I rejoice in this thought because I believe that my experience is the experience of others, and as we have struggled under the various environments that have been around us, each one fulfilling his part, we have felt more or less of this protecting care and the inspiration spoken of by our brother, and have realized that the strength that has been shown has not been ours as individuals. It has been the strength and power of God ruling and overruling for the establishment of his work.

I passed up through the different phases of experience and positions in the church, and under every circumstance while occupying these positions, I believe I have felt keenly the responsibilities that have been placed upon me. And at that last conference by the pleasure of God, I believe I was relieved of some of the responsibility that rested upon me, as I thought.

My experience since has demonstrated the fact that it was necessary that this release should come and I find now that there is that responsibility resting upon me that demands of me all my powers of endurance, both physically and mentally. I am conscious of the fact, too, that I can not fill the position that God has called me to, successfully and agreeably to his divine will, unless he aids me, and in my past experience I have discovered that the prayers of the Saints availed much. I have felt their influence when upon the plains alone, only the sky above me showing its brightness by the brilliancy of the stars, and when I was alone in danger, I had the testimony of the Spirit that the Saints were praying for me. It gave me an assurance, a strength to calm my fears and enable me to feel that I was in the hands of the Lord, and that he would do his will and it would be right. I have felt the influence and the prayers of the Saints when I have been on the bounding billows, when the waves were all around and the winds were raging; have felt the influence of the Spirit coming to me and comforting my heart and saying to my fears, Be still. I have realized how good it is to be in the protection of a loving God and Father and I rejoice in this work. It is all that I have, all that I am. I have placed myself entirely upon the altar. There is no reservation. I simply ask that God may inspire me, that I may fill the position that he has called me to, acceptably to him.

I know that I will have your support, your prayers. I know that by the aid that shall come to me in this respect if I am true to myself and to my God and to you, I shall do the work that God has allotted me, but I need your prayers to keep myself humble and make me just that servant that God desires me to be.

Now in all my experience, I believe I never have felt that the prospects for this great latter-day work were so bright as they are now. I want to tell you brethren, there will be clouds. Don't fear them. Trust in God and do right and the clouds will pass by and you will see the light and feel the warmth of the sun in the presence and blessing of God. There will be controversy, there will be contests, there will be enemies to meet. All these things we must expect, but as we have met them in the past and as our testimony from time to time is that God has been with us in the meeting and in standing in defense of this work, why should we fear when the clouds arise in the horizon now? Why should we tremble when we are to-day under better conditions and circumstances to meet the world than we ever were? speaking of the body. Never has been the church in such condition as it is now, never in the condition to understand and realize the hope that is in the heart of the Latter Day Saint of the great fulfillment that has been prophesied relative to the work as now, and all that remains is for us to prove true, true to God, true to our covenant that we have made with him, true to the conditions that he surrounds us by, true to the admonition of the Spirit in its leadings, all we have to do is to place our trust in God and move right forward in the discharge of our duty, and we will see the accomplishment of this work. God will demonstrate it to us so that we may comprehend and understand it and be filled with the joy that should come to our hearts by reason of the signs of the work as it progresses along the line that has been declared by our heavenly Father.

Be true to each other. Remember the feelings of your brethren for and to each other; do not trespass upon them, nor hurt them unnecessarily; do the work that is yours to do. Remember this, that God is accomplishing his purposes and bringing them about, and he moves in a mysterious way sometimes to bring them about, and, though we may not see it all, we can comprehend that that is within the range of our vision, learning our duty, doing our duty, we shall establish the work in that manner that by and by the day shall come when it shall be heralded from the heavens above, that the Lord Jesus, our Lord and Savior, is coming. If we live not to see it ourselves, those that follow us engaged in the work will see it, and if we sleep when the day shall come and the trump of God shall sound, we shall arise and go forth to meet him if we are true to him and do the work that has been assigned us.

Now in this conference I trust and I feel assured that the Spirit of God will be with us, as we have had the earnest of it in the meeting to-day. It will be with us to give us strength and power and wisdom as we have prayed, and if we do our duty to God, be humble and meek, manifesting the character of the Master, we shall accomplish the work that has been designed by our gathering together.

Now may God bless, and give you each the strength necessary to perform your duty acceptably to God, in Jesus' name. Amen.

W. H. Kelley, of the Twelve:

Brothers and Sisters, and Mr. President: I am very glad to meet with you here this morning in another conference—it is no new thing for us. I can say truly that this faith is as dear to me to-day as it ever has been, and I believe that I am in the faith this morning. There is one thing that I take great comfort in, and that is I have never had a man or woman come to me and tell me that I had taught them an error, so far as relates to this latter-day work, this gospel plan; nor that they had been deceived by what I said. I have been able to influence some to unite with the church, to believe in this work, and as far as my knowledge of the matter is concerned, they have always taken comfort in what they have learned and have expressed themselves as having been benefited and enlightened along lines and in ways that light never came to them before. Some skeptical people have been led to believe in the existence of God and the mission of Jesus Christ in the world, and have been comforted in the gospel hope by this message that you and I are here to represent to-day, and in which we have been so much interested.

I have never been troubled with doubts about the faith. I believe it is all right. If we can only move aright and be right ourselves, there is no question about the final result of the faith. I believe it will culminate in the return of the Lord Jesus Christ to this world, and those who are faithful to this trust will share in the rewards he has promised to the people who serve him. I have implicit faith in that, and it is that which has encouraged me in the past and is the means of bringing me here now. Of course we have all learned that we do not gain worldly fame, worldly honors, worldly treasure by spending our time in this work—it is a sacrifice of time, of means, with no earthly expectation of reaping this side of the realization of the promises of God to come to man for service rendered here in his cause. We started out in that way and we so feel now.

I have seen the development of the Reorganization in the long past. I suppose I stand along among the oldest ones now that belong to the Reorganization. As expressed by one brother, at one time I knew a large portion of those who belonged to it. It has developed, gained strength and power, and we have attained to that condition that we occupy to-day, and I am very pleased to note the remark of the president this morning, that we have attained a moral tone higher and better than anything that has characterized the church in the past as a whole; and if we can only hold that, we can be strong, and we will have the proper standing before our heavenly Father.

As a matter of experience during the last year, I have been in comparatively a new field to me. There are some things inviting there, and the work so far as the members of the church are concerned, is very similar to that elsewhere where we have traveled. Their faith and hopes are in this cause, in its triumph. In our administrations we have been sustained by the presence of our heavenly Father as in the past, though we have not been so well physically; but when called upon we have been able to meet every emergency as it came.

The suggestion referred to, made by a brother when he first went out to preach that he was fearful that he would have a question propounded to him that he could not answer, I am of the opinion that it rather hits us all; I am sure I have been there, and I am not so well informed now but what sometimes I am a little shaky, because there is no person that knows it all. In a matter of that kind, I know better how to get along with it now than I used to. I suppose we have all learned something in that line. I believe we have the credit as a class of people of being able to come as near giving a reason for the hope that is in us as any other association in the world; in fact, we are accredited with being very ready in that regard, and in the Bible as well as in other things.

In regard to the people out in the West where we have labored, we all feel a little interest in them. There is a chance for missionary work there. They are a people that are strong in their opinions and very determined in their purposes. I do not find any fault with that, because you and I have a good deal of that about us; but there is this difference: we move with an enlightened confidence and determination. We have been taught from the beginning to prove all things, to inquire into everything that comes along, to be swift to hear. These other parties have not been so taught. They are taught from mouth to mouth, to be obedient to file leaders, rather than follow their own judgment concerning what is written, that whatever those file leaders say, that is law. Now it is very difficult for a person to educate these people into the habit of acquiring an intelligent faith and a confirmed feeling in that faith from reading the text-books so as to represent themselves along the side of a class of people that have so formed their opinions and conclusions. So while it is a good thing to be firm and very confident, it is not a good thing to be so firm and confident in a matter in which you have not thoroughly investigated or tested, and to be over-confident in an error or that which is doubtful is not commendable in any individual. There is that difference existing, and it occurs in the world largely. I find in my experience that there are good men and good women everywhere and they are influenced, some in one way and some another, and most all have something or somebody they have confidence in, and when they determine a matter from this or that man's judgment, that settles the matter with them for the time being, but the proper method of advancement, by which to go forward and become the light of the world is to fill the provisions made in the gospel, to prove all things and hold fast that which is good, and to try to have an intelligent reason for the faith that we hold and try to be able to assign it—this is the royal way to progress, and not simply because we feel very firm and very fixed in our purpose, but because we are right. We may become fixed in our opinions in the wrong—that is the condition of a great many people, for we can not all be in the right, no matter how fixed we may be in our opinions. We may allow integrity of heart and sincerity of purpose to all individuals in a religious sense, but all can not be right.

So I am interested in the work in the West and I believe that there is a good people there as well as the other kind. They are becoming stronger in some sense, their organization makes it such. They have been prospered in the last few years temporarily, and they have a wonderful faculty of turning everything to their advantage, and we give them credit for that. I will tell you a case. Some of you are conversant with it. During the big storm over there on the Islands, there was one of our missionaries there and two of theirs that had to climb trees to keep from being drowned. Now after the storm had raged for two nights and two days, one of those men said that he was moved upon to command the storm to stop and his brother told him to do it then, and he did command the winds to cease and it ceased in about ten minutes. If he had not done that I suppose all those on the Islands would have perished and the Islands been wrecked, but unfortunately he did not think about it until a great many people were killed.

Now I am in the faith this morning, and I trust that during our session here we may have one of the most pleasant sessions we ever had in conference. We are here on the land of Zion. It seems as though we are moving on. I remember when I was quite a boy, living up here in Iowa, they told me that we would never get here, that the people would kill us just as quickly as they would a wolf should you go there, and this man said, "If you are ever permitted to enter that land all the world ought to be Latter Day Saints." He had lived here.

Now I believe there is a spirit down in this country that people think that Latter Day Saints are very much like other people, they like to have them as neighbors; this ought to be encouraging to all of us, because it must be our heavenly Father is controlling; he is moving upon the people outside and inside to carry the work on, and leading them to appreciate the value of the work, so it really seems that God is with us in this regard, and all of these developments ought to encourage us and increase our faith. God is able to perform his own work to-day, and all we have to do is to put ourselves under its influence and all will be well.

Now may the Lord bless us together, and enable us to be wise and discreet and gain the rest that is prepared for the people of God, is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

Gomer T. Griffiths, of the Twelve:

Mr. President; Brethren and Sisters: My mind has been wandering to-day, over the past, and it reverted to the time when I was quite a small boy in a little village in the state of Illinois and a conference was held in that place. One of the visitors to that conference was our worthy President. His hair and beard were black then. That was thirty-eight years ago. As a matter of course I had been taught by my parents as a child at home that he was the prophet of God, and I remember when I was sitting in the audience I gazed upon him, believing with all my heart that he was what my parents represented him to be. I had faith in them and in their word, although I did not know it to be a fact. I paid close attention to the words that fell from his lips; but the thought was as foreign from my mind as the heavens are from the earth that I would be associated with him in carrying on this great gospel work.

I have been engaged in this latter-day work and in the ministry prominently and incessantly for twenty-six years, and I am glad to-day that God has directed me in that channel, and I have always been proud to defend our president, whom I have known now nearly forty years.

I presume you would like to know how the work is progressing in England and the British Isles. I am pleased to report this morning that God is moving there among the people as well as here in the United States, and that he is raising up an army of young men to carry the work on to final success in that land, and they are very desirous and have been praying and longing for many years to look upon the face of our worthy President and to hear his voice among them, and an effort is being now put forth to bring that about; and they are looking forward with great expectation to see and hear him this coming summer at their mission conference, and I hope that he will be permitted to cross the deep waters. I believe that it will give the work prestige; and if it does not give the work prestige from a worldly standpoint, I know that it will be a source of joy and great consolation and will result in more good spiritually to God's people in that country. Many of them will never be permitted to see him as we have and to hear his voice as we have heard it. Hence I hope that we will second the effort over here. I believe it will be a blessing to him and I know that it will be a blessing to the work.

The work is growing in that country. Within the last few months I have organized a number of branches in localities where two or three years ago there were no prospects in view whatever. We have to-day in the city of Glasgow, Scotland, a lively branch and the persons that God has moved into the work there are some of the best people in that city, and we have a number on the verge of uniting. Now if we can have the help that is desired and ought to be placed there, in a few years from now where we now have two branches in all of Scotland we will have many, and we want you to remember them in your prayers. Likewise in Wales and in various parts of England we have organized not only branches, but districts. We now have six districts in that country. We have able, talented men, spiritual men and women that love God with all their hearts, who are willing to sacrifice. They have not the advantage of the Sunday-school and Religio associations that you have here, but they are coming into line little by little. We have made a beginning, we have been sowing the seed and God will bless it and in the future we are looking forward to great additions to the church.

There is one feature that I have to meet that is very discouraging. The Utah church has a great many missionaries there. We have their influence to counteract. They go from house to house, tracting. They are very faithful in that work. They stand in the streets and in the parks and they proclaim their kind of gospel from morning until night, and as a matter of course it is to our disadvantage. We have, I think, about ten missionaries to counteract that awful influence that is brought to bear against this latter-day work, but notwithstanding that fact our local men in that country are a credit to this church. They preach on the streets on Sunday and also tract the houses and do all within their power to get the gospel before the people, and their work has not been in vain. God has stood by them, comforted their hearts and blessed the seed which they have sown, and we will reap a great harvest there some of these days.

We had the mission conference there in August, and I believe there were between fifty and sixty elders present. That is not a small showing, and we have altogether about one hundred elders in the British Isles, besides the priests, teachers, and deacons; and it would do your heart good if you could only meet with them in their conference. The power of the Lord was with them to a greater degree than I have witnessed many times in this land, but their hearts are in the work; and while they are apart from us in body, they are with us in spirit.

I am glad I am in this land. I have never enjoyed myself better in my life than in the past few years. When I have attended to my duties faithfully, God has stood by me. I am on the altar, and wherever God says go; I am going, and when I get to the point where I will offer an excuse, I will step down and out and make room for somebody else who will go.

I trust God's wisdom will be with us, that his power and light may be given us in all that we may do, that it may redound to his glory and the good of this great church and kingdom on earth is my prayer.

Adjourned till afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Business was resumed at two o'clock, President Joseph Smith in the chair. After singing and prayer, the credentials committee not being ready to report, the report of the Church Recorder was read. Joseph Smith at this juncture yielded the gavel to his associate, Fred M. Smith. The report of the Recorder showed a substantial gain in membership, though the statistics showed some rather peculiar things as compared with other years. Iowa, which has for many years been in the lead in gain in membership, this year showed a total gain of two, though baptisms there had been about as usual. This showing was accounted for by the Recorder stating that very many of the Saints had moved from Iowa into newly developing country, as for instance Oklahoma, Oregon, etc. The total number of baptisms was 2,498; the deaths numbered 565; expelled, 163; the net gain in membership being 1,783, making the actual membership of the church at present 48,737. He thought that another year would place the actual membership above fifty thousand. He spoke of the needs of his office, that the work had increased until more room was needed, desk room and otherwise.

R. S. Salyards made written report as secretary of the church. His report covered his work in detail, and indicated quite clearly what had been accomplished in his line. It is difficult to make a summary, but it will of course appear in full in the published minutes.

Joseph Smith made oral report on behalf of the First Presidency. He stated that they had labored together agreeably and acceptably.

The report of the credentials committee being ready it was then read, and was returned to the committee for corrections.

A petition was read from the Spokane Branch, Washington, concerning T. M. Parr, and referred to a committee of three, F. M. Cooper, W. S. Macrae, James McKiernan.

Several petitions from various places were read, asking the return of certain missionaries to certain places, and referred to the First Presidency and Twelve.

A petition from Northern Minnesota asking for a change of name to that of the Minnesota District was read and granted.

A petition from the Lamoni Stake authorities, concurred in by the authorities of the Nodaway District, was read asking that a certain portion of the Nodaway District be detached therefrom and added to the Lamoni Stake. This was referred to a committee. The committee appointed was composed of Arthur Allen, J. W. Peterson, and J. D. Stead.

A petition from the Eustis Branch, Nebraska, was read, in which they asked to be added to the Southern Nebraska District. This was referred to a committee of three, D. M. Rudd, R. B. Howlett, and Henry Sparling.

A petition from the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District, asking that a high priest be appointed to that district, was referred to the First Presidency and Twelve.

A document was read from David McIntosh, Australia, in which he brought the charge of heresy against Walter Haworth. This was referred to the First Presidency and Twelve.

A petition from Henry Broadway was read, asking an investigation of the action of the New South Wales District against him. This was referred to the Bishop's court.

A petition from John D. Bennett, of Lamoni, was presented, but not read. After one or two motions concerning it, it was laid on the table.

A petition from the branch at Netawaka, Kansas, asking for the ordination of Harry Thomas as elder, was referred to the missionary in charge of that territory.

A petition from the Southern Missouri District was read, in which they asked the assistance of the conference in bringing to justice the disturbers of meetings throughout the land. This was laid on the table.

Charles Derry, now an evangelical minister, offered his resignation as member of the standing High Council of the church. His resignation was accepted.

At the evening services U. W. Greene was the speaker, assisted by W. E. La Rue.

APRIL 7.

The morning prayer services were in charge of W. A. McDowell and John Harp.

At the preaching services at a quarter to eleven John T. Davis was the speaker, assisted by G. H. Wixom.

The afternoon business session opened with R. C. Evans in the chair. After singing and prayer, and reading of minutes, additional and corrected report was received from the credentials committee, and adopted.

Report was read from the church librarian, in which he called attention to the great lack of shelf-room, stating that there were nearly as many books piled away as were on the shelves. The expenses of the library had been kept as low as possible. The librarian had appointed Wilbur B. Paul assistant. Asked for old and rare editions of the works published by the church, as well as works which had been published against the church.

Committee appointed on the petition from the Eustis Branch made report in which they recommended certain boundary lines to comply with the request of the branch, subject to the approval of the the Southern Nebraska District. The report was adopted.

The Seventh Quorum of Elders, in England, made report, stating that there were now sixty-eight in the quorum.

The Sixth Quorum of Priests also in England made report. Their membership is now 29.

The Second Quorum of Teachers, of Lamoni, Iowa, made report, stating that their president, G. W. Blair, had been ordained a high priest, and his place had been filled by the selection of John Weedmark, who chose as his counselors A. K. Anderson and N. W. Smith. Present membership twenty-three. They asked for the ordinations of the officers, which request was granted and the ordinations ordered provided for.

A petition signed by H. A. McCoy and J. F. Mintun, authorities in the Des Moines District, Iowa, was read in which they asked that certain unorganized territory to the north of the Des Moines District be added thereto. This was granted subject to the approval of the Des Moines District.

A petition was read from the Independence Stake, asking that General Conference make request that only efficient and experienced clerks, so far as possible, be appointed to serve in branches and districts. This was ordered spread upon the minutes with the understanding that the publishing of it would be construed as making the request.

A petition from the Burlington Branch, Iowa, was presented, asking for the repeal of General Conference resolution number 284. This was referred to a committee of five, composed of E. L. Kelley, Columbus Scott, F. G. Pitt, I. M. Smith, Ellis Short.

The roll of ex officio members of the conference was then called, following which the committee on incorporation in Canada reported that in their judgment it was not best to incorporate there for the present. This report was received and the committee continued.

The committee on revision of church history reported that it had examined the manuscript for the fourth volume of Church History, and that the manuscript was placed in the hands of the Board of Publication for publication as soon as practicable.

There being need for the convening of the High Council, President Smith nominated four high priests to serve temporarily to fill vacancies. J. M. Terry, C. J. Hunt, J. A. Tanner, R. C. Longhurst were nominated, and the choice ratified by vote.

A lengthy report was then read from the Church Historian, in which the general developments of the work for the past year were concisely summarized. We do not attempt to give a summary, but refer our readers to the published minutes which will appear later.

Following this a motion prevailed to take the petition of John D. Bennett from the table. This was followed by a motion that it be referred to a committee to report as to whether or not the petition should be considered. The motion to refer prevailed, and the committee appointed was composed of F. M. Sheehy, J. B. Carmichael, and U. W. Greene.

At the evening session F. M. Sheehy was the speaker, being assisted by R. B. Howlett.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8.

The morning prayer services were in charge of S. F. Cushman and E. H. Durand.

O. B. Thomas was the speaker at the morning preaching services, being assisted by O. H. Bailey.

Business session opened at two o'clock, Fred M. Smith in the chair. After the usual opening exercises an additional report from the credentials committee was read and adopted.

The Second Quorum of Elders reported twenty-one members present at conference. The seventy-nine members reporting had delivered 2,254 sermons, and had baptized 115 the past year.

The committee to which was referred the petition of the Lamoni Stake concerning boundary lines, reported recommending the establishment of boundary lines according to the petition. The report was adopted.

The secretary of the High Council reported that C. E. Butterworth had resigned as member of the High Council, and that his resignation had been accepted, making two vacancies in that council.

The committee appointed on the petition from the Burlington Branch reported, defining charges such as might be brought in order to allow those desiring to withdraw from the church to do so. We refer the reader to the published minutes, as the report was somewhat lengthy.

A motion prevailed that no new business be introduced after three o'clock Thursday afternoon.

An application from the Bishop for order to sell real estate property in California was presented, he stating that such order was necessary under the laws of the state of California. The request was granted.

The time and place for the meeting of the next conference was then taken up, and in the usual way it was determined that when we adjourn we do so to meet at Kirtland, Ohio, April 6, 1904.

A petition from John S. Page at Los Angeles, California, was presented, appealing from the action of Armstrong Branch, Kansas, and was referred to the presidency of the Independence Stake for report to this conference.

A report was read from the general officers of the Religio Society concerning their ninth annual session. The report showed the society in a flourishing condition. The general officers had been reelected.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College made report, which was followed by a report from the treasurer of the college.

The report of the Bishopric to the conference was read, which included the report on the college indebtedness, which showed an indebtedness of eleven thousand dollars. The report stated that owing to demands made upon the church finances the building of suitable church offices had been put off, but that the Bishopric was now ready to receive instructions concerning the same and that the instructions would be carried out.

The auditing committee had examined the books, and reported same all right.

The retiring members of the Graceland Board of Trustees, R. M. Elvin and I. W. Allender, were by motion appointed to succeed themselves.

Adjournment for the day was then had.

In the evening Willard J. Smith was the speaker, assisted by James T. Davis.

THURSDAY, APRIL 9.

The morning prayer services were in charge of W. P. Pickering and Amos Berve.

Preaching at a quarter to eleven by F. C. Keck, assisted by A. McCallum.

Business was resumed at two o'clock. President Joseph Smith in the chair.

After usual opening exercises, a lengthy report from the Daughters of Zion was read, showing a present membership of seven hundred thirty-one.

Report from the Fifth Quorum of Elders was read. Fourteen members present. Eighty-three members reported 3,616 sermons, 194 baptisms.

First Quorum of Elders reported twenty members present. Seventy-seven members reported 2,141 sermons, 130 baptisms.

Second Quorum of Priests reported thirty-nine members preached 574 sermons, 16 baptisms.

Second Quorum of Seventy reported thirty-one present. Members of the quorum had preached 7,030 sermons, baptized 394. Present enrollment fifty-six.

Board of Publication made report, in which they suggested that the date of closing yearly accounts be January 31 instead of December 31. This suggestion was adopted. The Board reported the business prosperous. The HERALD Office had made a yearly gain in present worth of over three thousand dollars, while the Ensign had gained over three hundred.

Board of Auditors reported on HERALD, Ensign, Bishop's, and College accounts. Accounts all right except in some minor details.

A report from A. H. Smith, Presiding Patriarch, was read concerning the work of the Order of Evangelists. The Order had organized at this conference, there being eight present. A summarized report of the labors of the members of the Order was also given.

A report was read from the General Sunday-school Association, summarizing the work done at its convention.

The committee to which was referred the petition of T. M. Parr, of the Spokane Branch, Washington, reported, recommending that it be referred to the missionary in charge of that field. It was discussed at some length, when a motion prevailed to dismiss the matter.

A resolution with preambles, that we reaffirm our action of one year ago concerning polygamy, was introduced. The preambles were objected to by some, and a substitute finally prevailed that we reaffirm the action of one year ago, which is as follows:

Whereas it is currently reported that polygamy is still practiced in Utah and adjacent States and Territories, in defiance of the laws of God and the laws of the land; and,

Whereas the laws enacted by State legislation seem to be inadequate to prevent or prohibit the practice of polygamy without the intervention of Federal enactment; therefore, be it

Resolved that we, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in General Conference assembled, favor the enactment of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy in all the States and Territories under the jurisdiction of the Republic.

A motion was then made that this action be published in a leaflet and sent to the elders for gratuitous distribution. Substitute prevailed that the First Presidency compile such resolutions and actions on this question as they deem fit, and have published in pamphlet form.

A resolution on proposed amendments to Book of Rules was read for consideration subsequently.

A committee on administration to the sick was appointed.

At the evening session F. A. Smith was the speaker.

APRIL 10.

The morning prayer services were in charge of E. W. Nunley and James Moler.

Preaching at fifteen minutes to eleven by W. H. Kelley, of Indiana, assisted by T. T. Hinderks.

Business session at two o'clock, R. C. Evans in the chair. Minutes read and approved.

Report from the Third Quorum of Elders. Twenty-two present. Forty-two members reported 1,803 sermons, 69 baptisms. H. R. Harder had been chosen president, and George Kemp and P. Pement counselors, and their ordinations were asked for. Motion prevailed that the ordinations be provided for.

Fourth Quorum of Elders reported fifteen members present. Eighty-two members reported 3,839 sermons, 199 baptisms. President A. Barr had resigned because of advanced age, and J. A. Grant was chosen, and his ordination was asked for. It was ordered provided for.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported recommending T. J. Sheldon for ordination as seventy. They also offered resolutions of sympathy and condolence on the death of James M. Scott. The ordination was referred to the missionary in charge of England.

The remainder of the session was spent in discussing the resolution offered the day before concerning the owning of stock by the church, etc., but a motion finally prevailed striking the actions concerning it from the record.

The speaker for the evening was Warren E. Peak, assisted by Charles E. Crumley.

APRIL 11.

Morning prayer service was in charge of G. H. Godbey and G. A. Smith.

Preaching at the forenoon services by E. H. Durand, assisted by F. D. Omans.

Business session at two o'clock, Joseph Smith in the chair. After usual opening exercises, the report of First Presidency and Twelve on document of David McIntosh relative to W. J. Haworth, was read. They recommended referring document to the missionaries in charge of Australasia. Report was adopted.

Fourth Quorum of Priests reported 256 sermons, 11 baptisms.

Report was read from the Fourth Quorum of Elders. J. A. Grant, president, had chosen E. J. Goodenough and J. W. Gilbert counselors. Ordinations were asked for and approved.

First Quorum of Seventy reported holding six sessions. Sixty-two members reported 6,614 sermons, 249 baptisms. Resolution of sympathy and condolence to survivors of South Sea Islands calamity were presented by quorum, and adopted by conference.

Report from Fourth Quorum of Deacons was read. Six persons reported twenty-eight sermons.

Committee on petition of J. D. Bennett reported, recommending return of petition to petitioner. After some discussion the recommendation was adopted.

A resolution was presented and adopted, instructing clerks of elders' courts to make legible abstract of evidence, so that in case of appeal the documents would be in presentable shape.

A resolution proposing amendments to Book of Rules, as previously published in HERALD, was moved, and discussed at some length, when it was decided by vote to defer till three o'clock on the afternoon of the second day of next conference. This was followed by a motion ordering publication of next edition of Book of Rules delayed till after such action as might be taken on day specified. This prevailed, and then E. L. Kelley, F. M. Smith, and F. M. Sheehy were appointed committee to revise Book of Rules, the changes to be published sixty days before next conference.

On motion the acceptance of the resignation of C. E. Butterworth as member of the High Council by the High Council, was approved.

Bishop Kelley then stated he had no changes to recommend in the composition of the Board of Publication, and by motion the present Board was sustained.

The report of the Board of Auditors, as previously read, was adopted, following which A. Carmichael was chosen to succeed himself as member of Board of Auditors.

Recommendation of librarian concerning needed shelf-room was taken up, and after some discussion was referred to the Bishopric for action.

A letter was read from a person in Kansas City, claiming to have a relic from the Nauvoo Temple, and referred to J. D. White and R. M. Elvin.

That part of the report of the Bishopric relating to church offices was taken up and discussed. The Bishop was instructed to proceed with a building for such offices, as fast as the condition of the finances would justify.

A motion instructing the Bishop to locate such buildings in Independence, Missouri, was lost.

By motion preaching services were ordered for half past two Sunday, and Heman C. Smith requested to speak.

After usual announcements, business session was adjourned till Monday.

Preaching in the evening by E. L. Kelley.

APRIL 12.

At half past nine in the morning the Independence Sunday-school held its regular session.

At eleven o'clock President Joseph Smith was the speaker.

At half past two, as per vote of conference, Heman C. Smith was the speaker.

At half past seven in the evening R. C. Evans was the speaker.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

Friday, October 28, 1859. To-day called on Bro. M. V. Follet (he is a brother of King Follet, of Nauvoo, Illinois, whose funeral sermon was preached by Bro. Joseph). He is trying to be skeptical, yet says if the Bible be true the Saints have the true religion if any one has; is very kind to me, and is the first subscriber I have received for the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD. I have just received a letter from Bro. Blair, informing me of the interesting time at conference held at Sandwich, Illinois, on the 6th inst., and that it is the purpose of the church to publish a monthly paper as soon as practicable. I rejoice to hear this glad news. It certainly will be a new era in the Reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Elders William Marks, Z. H. Gurley, and W. W. Blair publishing committee, and Elder Isaac Sheen, editor. The last named has but recently joined the Reorganization and resides in Cincinnati, Ohio. I am glad our hope is beginning to be understood in the East; and by the grace of God assisting me, all Western Iowa shall at least know of our faith. May the HERALD live for ever, and soon be a weekly, is my earnest prayer.

Sunday, October 30. Held preaching service at Sr. Polly Graybill's; her son Levi, from Wheelers Grove, was present and all alive in the faith. Had a large audience and most of them were old members of the church in Nauvoo, Illinois. Sr. Graybill is an excellent woman; very firm in the faith of the gospel, as are the most of her family, though some of them are reading the Boston Investigator, an infidel publication; but all treat me with the greatest respect and kindness. This evening went home with Bro. Gatross to visit his sick wife who has the typhoid fever; and through the prayer of faith the Lord has immediately healed her and she is now rejoicing in the blessing of the Lord; for truly the fever has left her. All the glory is the Lord's, I praise his holy name, for he truly confirms his word with signs following the believer now as in the days of the ancient apostles. Bro. Levi Graybill of Macedonia, and Sr. Margaret Stokes of Council Bluffs subscribe for the HERALD.

Tuesday, November 1. I visited Bro. Rees Price, who lives ten miles east of the city. He is interested in the latter-day work as taught by the choice Seer, though now very much depressed and disheartened through the wicked apostasy of Brigham Young and the horrible disgrace he has brought upon the innocent Saints by his blasphemous teaching of what is called in the Book of Mormon the "grosser crime" practiced by David and Solomon. Yes, it is true while the popular churches of our day condone and make apologies for those men of Bible times, who practiced those crimes which were the sequence of adulterous hearts, yet they are ever ready and quick to condemn the Saints of our day because such wicked men have gone out from us; who indeed are only fulfilling the prophecies of their own Bible, "Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy." But thank God I am a living witness of the fact that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is founded upon eternal truth, and the apostates who leave it will never be able through their treachery to join in with the self-styled orthodox churches of this world to destroy it; but in the eloquent language of the inspired Apostle Peter, they will by reason of their heresies establish the divinity of his words spoken nearly two thousand years ago, when he said the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

No devout ones of the popular churches now, ever refer me to any saying or teaching of Joseph Smith, and say it is bad doctrine, or its tendency is not in the highest sense thoroughly pure Christian, but they always quote Brigham Young, or some other slanderer, who has been misrepresenting Joseph Smith and the doctrine he taught. But thank God, O, my soul, my face never turns crimson with shame because of anything the choice Seer ever said or wrote upon religious subjects; and his political views were of a high order, evincing true patriotism of an American, honorable and just to all men.

Wednesday, November 2. I returned to Bro. Samuel Wald's and he was telling me to-day that Brigham Young was in his neighborhood when the news first came to them of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He said he heard Brigham say: "If I can get the confidence of the Saints, I can lead the church as well as Joseph did." And during the conversation Brigham continued: "This is the happiest day of my life."

"At that time," said Bro. Wald, "I thought he wished to comfort us, as we all felt bad and very sorrowful; but since Young's apostasy and assumption of authority without ordination to the Presidency, and his terrible, corrupt doctrines of blood-atonement and polygamy, I have believed he was at once, as soon as he heard of the death of Joseph, seized with ambition, and the spirit of the Devil to take the leadership of the church." If this statement of Bro. Wald's is correct, (and he is a very candid and careful man,) it is very evident that Young was happy at the death of Joseph; for it gave him the opportunity to gratify his ambition which he never could have done during Joseph's life, and he was the only one in the church I ever heard of that was happy upon hearing of the death of the Martyrs.

Saturday, November 5. During the week I have visited Brn. Jonathan Haywood, Hartwell, David Hall, and others of the old Saints in the neighborhood. All seem much interested in our hope, and the coming of Joseph to take his father's place. I have been from house to house preaching the gospel of Christ, and the reorganization of the church, incessantly all the week.

Sunday, November 6. I held meeting at the Wix Mills Schoolhouse. Infidelity is the leading thought of the people in this neighborhood, and the Boston Investigator is the literature in their houses generally.

Monday, November 7. I wrote a letter to Elder Edwin Cadwell of Amboy, Illinois, and sent him a list of eight subscribers for the HERALD, and four dollars, the first money I have sent for the publication, and returned to Bro. Calvin Beebe's, on Farm Creek. Saints all in good spirits.

Thursday, November 10. I attended prayer and social service. The Saints are indeed rejoicing in the hope of the gospel and the steps they have taken in the Reorganization, and say, "We realize that the church of Christ has indeed been brought to us in such a clear light that we feel firmer in the faith of the gospel of Jesus Christ than we ever were in all our lives before." It is very encouraging to me to have these old Saints, who were members of the church in the days of Joseph, now confirm my mission in such strong terms of love and confidence.

Sunday, November 13. I held services at Bro. Beebe's. His large home was crowded with an appreciative audience who listened with interest while I spoke upon the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. The Holy Spirit was given us in great power in attestation of its worth, bearing evidence of its truthfulness as the great things of God's law written to Ephraim. It is a source of great satisfaction and joy that I can always refer to it as a book full of good instruction and the purest Christianity; and I know there is not a Christian minister in the whole world who dares criticise its teachings, or deny its purity and holiness in a single doctrinal thought found in it. In the evening prayer and fellowship meeting all the Saints took part and manifested great interest in the welfare of the church. Most of the people in this place are members of the church, and often refer to the interesting meetings they enjoyed in the days of Joseph, and the dark night which has intervened since that time until now. But now all seems bright to them; for the Holy Spirit bears witness to the work of the Reorganization, and the "coming of little Joseph to take his father's place," as they often express it.

Monday, November 14. To-day I took dinner with Bro. William Campbell of Cag Creek; he subscribed for the HERALD. In the afternoon I came to my brother Edwin's at Council Bluffs. Delia and their sweet little girl, Lenora, are so good, it is quite a rest to me to feel at home among my own folks.

Wednesday, November 16. I wrote a letter to Bro. Edwin Cadwell and sent him six dollars for twelve subscribers of the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD. It is very encouraging to think we shall soon have a paper of our own to help spread the doctrine of the reorganization of the church; for it certainly will reach many of the old Saints the elders can never visit. At present I am the only missionary in the vineyard of the Lord. A few others are doing some work in their local fields as circumstances will permit, with the care of their own dear families on their hands; no one to assist them from a financial standpoint. But, thank God, the Holy Spirit is their helper in defense of the truth of the gospel against the latter-day apostasy, and the popular churches of the world which are in fact but another departure from the former-day apostasy. And while we gladly give them credit for all the good they do, yet none of them are the true church of God after the apostolic pattern, in doctrine or organization. While we are but fragmentary in organization yet we believe in every element of the gospel of Christ as taught in the Bible, thank God, O my soul!

To-day I hastened to Union Grove, Harrison County, to fill appointments, and was hospitably cared for by Bro. Woods of this place. I am thankful for Bro. Beebe's horse, which is such a help to me to reach the long distances over these bleak and chilly prairies this time of the year, with often not a single house to break the monotony for five to twenty miles.

Thursday, November 17. In the evening held meeting at Bro. Jones' cottage. Subject, First Principles of the Gospel. Full house of eager listeners to hear the pleasing story of a full salvation through Christ's gospel.

Union Grove, Sunday, November 20. I held services at Bro. Samuel Wood's at eleven o'clock. Had large audience. Subject, The Kingdom of God. It is a great pleasure and joy to speak of our hope in Christ, and bear witness in the power of the Holy Spirit, not only of the gospel of Christ, but of the coming of Joseph to take his father's place in the church in God's own appointed time. The Protestant churches are more or less interested in choosing their presiding elders and bishops; the Roman Catholic in electing its popes (which name is not heard of in all God's Holy Bible), and sometimes not chosen without shedding blood and loss of many lives, and all know that God has nothing to do in their appointments any more than he has to do in appointment of the leader of any other society in all this broad earth. Revelation from God is out of the question in the matter of choosing their presiding elders in every church of all this broad earth, except among the true Latter Day Saints. O, what a contrast and a picture to the whole world, and what joy to my very soul when I can say and know by the revelation of God to me through the Holy Ghost, and by the blessed ministrations of the angels of God, I do know that our heavenly Father appoints the presiding officer of his church on earth in these days as in days of old.

The Roman Catholic Church and all her apostate daughter and granddaughter churches of this age may read, yes, do read in the Bible that God "set" (gave) apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, with miracles for the perfecting of the Saints and the work of the ministry, before their several churches had a being or name in the earth; but not one ever heard the voice of God, saw an angel of light, or received a revelation from God acknowledging it as his church or appointing one of its ministers to preach the gospel, or to take charge of the church of God on earth. This was the general theme of our discourse to-day, interspersed with many proof-texts. Oh, how happy I am to know for myself that our heavenly Father has not lost any of his loving-kindness for his church in our day, and has not changed or had any variability in his dealings with his children, as taught by Jesus Christ that God was more willing to give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him than earthly parents were to give good gifts to their children. My very soul is enraptured in the love of God my Savior, to know that he does speak to us and appoint our ministers, and there are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers inspired now as in days of old, and that the presiding minister of our church is a prophet appointed and called of God as Moses was, to receive revelation as a law to govern the church. And like John the Baptist, who could prophesy of the speedy coming of the Messiah, so can I prophesy that Joseph, the son of the Martyr, will soon come to take his father's place in the church.

Again this evening we held prayer-meeting; much interest and all the Saints spoke and prayed. Mr. Thomas Shearer arose and confessed Christ and belief in his doctrine, and in humility of heart requested baptism at our hands and I announced that the ordinance would be attended to at nine o'clock next morning.

Monday morning, November 21. At nine o'clock in the forenoon a large audience gathered at the water's edge and I made a few remarks on the importance of the everlasting covenant which is the gospel of Christ, and that those who entered into gospel relations were parties to said covenant on the one hand and Jesus Christ on the other. Jesus says, "My words are words of life unto life or death unto death." The entire neighborhood seemed to turn out to behold the sacred ordinance of baptism consecrated by the example of our blessed Redeemer. It was a solemn occasion, while I baptized Bro. Thomas Shearer and his wife, Elizabeth J. Confirmation meeting was an interesting service. All the Saints were happy, and so was I glad in my very soul to see so many turning to the Lord in this place to live lives of holiness. May God help them to keep themselves unspotted from the vices of the world, is my fervent prayer. I took great pains to instruct the dear Saints that the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost was a legal ordinance ordained of God to entitle them to the Holy Ghost, which would lead them into all truth, and enable them to detect every false spirit, if they continued faithful to their covenant they had made to-day. Quite a number spoke of their blessed hope since they had joined the Reorganization, and the dark and cloudy days of the latter-day apostasy have all been cleared away by the bright light of our hope which has been made plain by attestations of the Holy Spirit. I took dinner at Bro. Wood's. He has an interesting family all in the faith of the gospel of Christ. This afternoon I journeyed on to Gallands Grove, twenty-three miles north of Union Grove, and found a welcome home at Bro. Uriah Roundy's; he is a true Latter Day Saint. Was in the church almost from the beginning, and well acquainted with the choice Seer and his father's family, he says they were a good family, honest and upright in all their dealings; that his mother was one of the best women he ever knew; a very charitable woman, full of love and cheer for everybody who was trying to do right, and Father Smith, the great patriarch of the church, was indeed a loving and good man of God,—all of his boys were conscientious, honorable men. William was the exception in some respects; but he says, "I did not blame him much, for he had seen so much persecution all his days heaped upon his father's family—it sometimes made him feel desperate, and he had a temper to contend with, and he made some trouble through his hasty acts."

All the old Saints have a very great reverence for the Smith family; and yet as to William, they regret some of his doings.

The attestation of the virtues, truthfulness, and loyalty of the founders of the church in every place I go, is no ordinary evidence in favor of the choice Seer and his family. All bless his memory and say he was a good man; and never yet have I met a man who is not a member of the church, who was personally acquainted with Joseph Smith, but what always spoke of him in the best respects and believed him honest in his religious convictions, and an honorable, upright man in all his dealings. This indeed is a glowing picture to me in contrast with the vile epithets hurled against him by those who were never personally acquainted with him, and yet his bitterest enemies are the clergy of the popular churches of our day. When I ask them, "Did you ever see Mr. Smith?" they answer, "No." "Did you ever see his writings?" Again comes the emphatic answer, "No, and do not want to." When I inform them I have taken great pains to read all of Mr. Smith's writings and have found they always teach pure Christianity, honorable dealings, man with his fellow man, they again retort, "His writings are beneath my notice, and I would not spend my time to read them, or allow his books in my house to be read by our children."

All such men are incompetent witnesses against Mr. Smith, and as American citizens would not be considered eligible to a jury in a case against him.

While the men in the church in all this country have the best of reputation for truth and veracity, and are the best of witnesses in any court of our land, and after passing through so much persecution, for many of them lived in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois when they were under the fiery trials of mob violence, and also witnessed the apostasy of Brigham Young, yet they are firm believers in the latter-day work and gospel of Christ, and not one of them ever saw a wicked act of Joseph Smith, or heard an unbecoming remark from his lips. There are thousands of such witnesses in this country, as this place is well settled by old members of the church. While I am holding meetings nearly every day, and many times two a day, I am at the same time going from house to house preaching all the rest of the time, when not taking rest in sleep.

Tuesday, November 22. I held meeting in the schoolhouse; had a very large audience, all intensely interested, while the Holy Spirit bore testimony to every heart confirming the word to the joy of every soul.

Thursday, November 24. I took charge of prayer and social service; Saints all took part and spoke in glowing terms of their joy in the renewal of the glorious latter-day work. Many of the Saints here were well acquainted with the Prophet Joseph, and all speak of him in terms of love and honor.

Sunday, November 27. I preached to a large congregation, of our hope in Christ and of his doctrine, urging the necessity of holiness of heart, and that we shall all be judged at the last day, out of the books, the word of God, and receive rewards according to our deeds, whether good or evil. I gave liberty for remarks, and many arose and spoke with much earnestness and warmth of their hope in Christ and determination to be faithful in righteousness to the end. Several wished to be baptized, and some wished to renew their covenant by doing their first work over again. They explained that they had lived so beneath their privileges during the dark and cloudy day of apostasy that they really felt they would have more faith if permitted to be rebaptized. I therefore adjourned our meeting to regather at the waters, and I immersed the following precious souls: Brn. John A. McIntosh, Alexander McCord, Milton Linch and his wife Elizabeth, and Luther McCord; the last three new members. In the evening services I confirmed those baptized. Our meetings were all very joyous to-day, and many took part and bore their testimony in love for their Savior and his blessed gospel.

Monday, November 28. To-day came to Mason Grove, twenty-five miles north. Bro. A. McCord accompanied me with carriage. I appreciate his kindness very much; surely the Lord will reward him. Our dear heavenly Master has blessed me wonderfully in all my labors in his vineyard, and though I am holding public services most every day, and many times two and three meetings a day during the week day as well as on Sabbath, and talking all the time, it would seem, around the fireside and in the family group, I hardly ever become weary or tired. We also have had beautiful weather all the fall so far, which seems almost a Godsend to us in the interest of his blessed cause in all this land.

We find Bro. Jesse Mason, an old-time Saint, almost bewildered with the temporal affairs of this life, and has been so distressed over the apostasy that he has forgotten the altar of the Lord in his prayers; but he is kind to us, and is an old acquaintance of Bro. McCord's. We also visited Brn. Milton Huff and Thomas Dobson, and told them of the Reorganization and the promises to us that one of Joseph's sons will ere long be called of God to take his father's place in the church.

Tuesday evening, November 29. I held meeting in the schoolhouse. Had very large audience; I may say, a packed house of eager listeners; and this evening after service we are invited to lodge with Bro. Dobson. Bro. McCord is no little help to me in this place. In his testimony he tells the old Saints here why Bro. Briggs comes to us with the old Jerusalem gospel again, just as it was in the days of Joseph, the Seer, and the same Holy Spirit comes with it. It does my soul good to hear others affirm our hope and attest to the divine Spirit that is giving me comfort as the same Spirit that was enjoyed in the days of Joseph. The old Saints here rejoice to hear of our hope and the Reorganization, and learn of our glorious manifestations from the Lord concerning the coming of one of Joseph's sons to take his father's place in the presidency of the church. Many in this place were well acquainted with the Prophet Joseph, and all join in speaking of him in the highest terms as a true prophet of God, and free as an angel from the accursed doctrines of devils as taught by Brigham Young's apostasy, as they call it.

Wednesday, November 30. I held another meeting; the entire neighborhood turned out; the best of order and respect was shown me. Methodist and Baptist members seemed as much interested as the old Saints. Subject, the doctrine of Christ as the only way to eternal life. From the words of the Apostle John, the divine, "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 John 9. I had great liberty and blessing of the Holy Spirit in speaking the word to-night; dwelt upon the thought that the doctrine of Christ in the Bible is always used in the singular number but the doctrines of men and devils are always used in the plural. The reason of this is, no one principle of the doctrine of Christ is sufficient to save any one, but the doctrines of devils or men are held by them severally, that it does not make much difference what your doctrines are, so you only believe in Christ. My dear brethren and friends, that is one of the great distinguishing features between the doctrine of Christ and the doctrines of men. The one is very particular and insists that every principle of the gospel is couched in the Christian religion, while anti-Christ in all of its multiplied phases is always willing to compromise, omit, change, or add to, just to suit the times or caprices of the individual or environments, while I insist in the language of our dear Lord and Master, "My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me."—John 7:16. I feel charitable towards all, and love all Adam's race, but not of that kind of love expressed by the "Pharisees and lawyers [who] rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him."—Luke 7:30. The foregoing was the leading thought of this discourse, while I took great pains to show what Christ's doctrine is. As I reflect upon the wonderful provision God has made to save the race, it seems strange that those of the learned clergy of this age resort to moralizing sermons and exhortations and ignore the doctrine of Christ entirely, even when they dwell upon the principle of faith they rob it of all its essential elements, as taught in the gospel, in which there is answer to prayer or the gift of knowledge from God. But I rejoice with my whole soul to know that the gospel principles are so easy to be understood by those who will not close their eyes and stop their ears lest they are converted in these days, "as it was in the days of the Savior."

Thursday, December 1. We returned to Gallands Grove, Bro. McCord enjoying our visit at Macon Grove, and is built up very much in faith, and says he would like to be with me all he can in this glorious work. It is a beautiful day; no cold weather or snow yet this season. It is a great blessing to me as I do not feel that I have a single day to be hindered by stormy weather.

I took charge of prayer services this evening. Saints all in the best of spirits, and all spoke of their love in the gospel work. The spirit of peace and unity filled every heart.

Friday, December 2. I held meeting at Bro. J. A. McIntosh's cottage; house full of listeners who are indeed full of hope; sister of the house happy, the sun shines in her sky all the time now. The change is so bright since I first visited this dear family. I blessed four of their darling little children, after the pattern given by our dear Lord and Master. And he laid his hands on them and said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. I ordained Bro. Alexander McCord to the office of elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Sunday, December 4. Services in the schoolhouse. Elder Andrew Jackson preached an able discourse on the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, from the words, "I have written to him [Ephraim] the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing."—Hosea 8:12. "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold, . . . and they shall hear my voice."—John 10:16. He showed that Ephraim was west of the land of Judea, a multitude of nations, and that Jesus appeared to them after his resurrection, and, from thence is the shepherd the stone of Israel. (Genesis 49:24.) He is indeed a very forcible and logical reasoner. It was a feast to me to hear his clear cut logic and proof in evidence of the blessed book. I made a few remarks confirming his beautiful discourse, and invited all to come to Christ in faith through obedience to his doctrine. A very worthy young lady, Miss Emiline Miller, niece of Bro. Uriah Roundy, arose and said, "I desire to be baptized, and I ask the dear Saints to pray for me that I may meet you all in the celestial kingdom of God." She truly manifested to us that she had received of the Spirit that leadeth unto repentance and love of the gospel of Christ. We dismissed the meeting and repaired to the water, and I baptized her in the presence of a very large audience. The spirit of peace and solemnity brooded over the happy assembly, impressing every heart that the Lord was truly pleased with the sacred ordinance. At seven o'clock in the evening I discoursed on the wonderful mission of Christ from the text, "We trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially those that believe."—1 Timothy 4:10, and "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."—Zechariah 9:11. O, what a blessed thought it is to realize that poor erring mortals, who die in their sins, and are punished in the prison-house, may yet have the opportunity to hear the truth of the gospel of Christ, and be saved in some of the lesser glories, though they have been robbed of the better resurrection through false doctrine of men and devils. Saints were all happy, and those not of the church were very much pleased, and said, "We could have listened all night, for thou hast almost persuaded us to be Christians to-night, for we certainly want to come forth in the first resurrection." Elder Jackson assisted me in confirming Sr. Miller and ordaining Bro. Milton Linch, teacher of the Gallands Grove Branch, just before we closed our services. The blessed Spirit of God was with us in very deed in all our services to-day. Saints are all kind to me, and may the Lord bless them is my constant prayer for them day and night.

Wednesday, December 7. I came to Bro. Benjamin Leland's; Bro. McCord brought me ten miles in his spring wagon. I felt very thankful to him for his kindness. I came the rest of the way on foot. This evening Bro. Leland and I visited a Mr. Gallop, who is all infatuated with Mr. Gladden Bishop, who is stopping at his house. He is another false pretender to leadership among the scattered Saints. It is really astonishing how such wicked impostors can influence men with their glaring false doctrines. He applies most of the sacred passages of the Bible that have a bearing on the second advent of the Messiah, to himself; and he is the one to do the great work of the Father in the last days in restoring Israel. Mr. Bishop, like Granville Hedrick, whom I met in 1857, holds that the choice Seer was a true prophet a short time, but fell into transgression and lost his standing and favor with God. This evening he seemed to take delight in repeating and rehashing all the scandal that had been circulated by his bitter enemies in the sectarian world, then had the effrontery to turn and ask me what I thought of his position. I replied: "The very first revelation of the angel of the Lord, when he came to Joseph with a message from God, revealing his calling, said to him, 'Your name shall be known among the nations, for the work which the Lord will perform by your hands shall cause the righteous to rejoice and the wicked to rage; with the one it shall be had in honor, and with the other in reproach.' And now, Mr. Bishop, you have my opinion of any man who speaks in disrespect of Joseph Smith. Neither you nor the apostate Mormons, nor any of the popular clergy of the Protestant churches that I ever met, has ever seen any personal act of Joseph Smith, that was not honorable, virtuous, true, and good as an example worthy of imitation by any Christian gentleman, and I have been personally acquainted with many thousands of them; and when I ask them, 'Did you ever see any moral wrong-doing in Joseph Smith?' and like yourself, to-night, and you have been acquainted with him for years, you and they invariably answer me, 'No, sir.' Here in Western Iowa are many thousand members of the church, who lived in Nauvoo and have been acquainted with him for years; some of them as early as when he lived in Kirtland, Ohio; many nonmembers of the church, who were personally acquainted with Elder Joseph Smith, and they all unequivocally tell me he was a good man and a Christian. I also lived in Nauvoo in the years of 1856 and 1857 and met with great numbers of people there, and no man or woman, who was personally acquainted with Mr. Smith, ever did speak against the man in my presence; and I took great pains to question people on that matter. There were people there who would repeat the scandalous stories about him, but without a single exception they were not personally acquainted with him. They got their information from the popular charges of pious scandal-mongers, who never met Mr. Smith. I honor the name of Joseph wherever you find it written indorsing anything he ever said upon religious subjects; it is always in harmony with the teachings of Jesus the Christ.

Thursday, December 8. I held meeting at Bro. Samuel Wood's in Union Grove, with a full house, mostly members of the church. All welcome me back with cheerfulness and faith in the reorganization of the church. O, how vivid it is to my mind that a church without authorized living apostles and prophets in these days, as in the dark days of the apostasy, in what history calls the dark ages of the Roman Catholic apostasy, the people are so easily led by presumptuous, wicked aspirants, who are prompted by unholy ambition and a thirst for worldly power, who are ever ready to make merchandise of the people for their love of filthy lucre. May God deliver our blessed church from another such apostasy, is my fervent daily prayer. Thank God, I know my prayers will be granted, and though the church may, yes, will, pass through severe trials, yet it will triumph and come off and achieve more than victory and receive her crowned King in glory, and our apostles and prophets with the dear Saints will receive the plaudit, well done, for thou hast been faithful.

THE great improvement in the condition of the Irish farmer due to the spread of coöperative societies is well brought out in a talk with the Hon. Horace Plunkett, printed in the April Review of Reviews. This contribution by Mr. Plunkett well supplements the study of the Irish question by Mr. Walter Wellman, which appears in the February Review.

CAN PALESTINE AGAIN BECOME A FERTILE LAND?

In view of the contradictory reports concerning the Jewish agricultural colonies established by the Rothschilds and Montefioris in Palestine, and of the program of the Zionists to reestablish Jewish nationality in the land of their fathers, it is of interest to hear what specialists say as to the possibility of making Palestine again a land flowing with milk and honey, changing it from a country that now barely supports 600,000 to one that will sustain between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000, as in the days of Joshua, or between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000, as in the times of King David. A most valuable contribution on this subject, entitled "Die Niederschlagsverhältnisse Palästinas in alter und neuer Zeit," by Doctor Heinrich Hilderscheide, fills two entire numbers (Nos. 1 and 2) of the Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästina-Vereins (Leipzig). It gives a wealth of statistical data on the meteorology and climatology of the Holy Land, and then, on the basis of these data, the writer has this to say:

"The question whether Palestine can not again be made as productive a country as it was two thousand years ago can only be answered if the causes are examined that have led to its present degenerated condition. If these lie in permanent changes in the climate, in a decreased average of annual rains, and other factors not under the control of mankind, then it is useless to hope that money or energy will restore the pristine productiveness of the land. If, on the other hand, the causes lie in historical and political changes, chief among which is the mismanagement of the country by the Turkish authorities, then there can be no reasons why such a restoration should not take place. Both of these views have had ardent champions among the specialists, among the advocates of the former view being Hull, Franz, Fisher, and Zumoffen, while Condor, Lartet, Ankel, and others are equally decided in their defense of the second opinion.

"A candid examination of the facts in the case shows that they are decidedly in favor of this latter position. The former view is really based upon a petitio principii. It is presupposed that there have been radical changes in the climate of Palestine in historic time, and that these changes have been produced by the ruthless destruction of the forests. Now the fact in the case is that we have no proofs whatever that the forests of Palestine were in the Biblical times any more extensive than they are now. We have no evidence from any author of note that there ever has been such a ruthless destruction of forests. No passage in either the Bible or the Talmud permits us to draw the conclusion that in former times the average of rainfall was any greater than it is at present. Ever since meteorological observations have been scientifically taken in Palestine (and in some cases, as in that of Jerusalem, these go back for decades), the climatic conditions have remained practically the same. In fact, the rain-producing causes, such as the near Mediterranean Sea, are the same as they were in Biblical times.

"There is accordingly no evidence of history or science to show that the climate of Palestine has changed materially from the time when the land flowed with milk and honey, to the present age when so much of the country is a stony and barren waste. Other causes have been operative, and these have been chiefly direful and destructive political conditions that began as early as the period of the decline of the Roman empire, and have reached their acme in the corrupt Turkish rule of the last four centuries, the oppression of the officials, the management of the taxes, and the like. The people have in the course of time become indifferent to all progress, as progress only signified new oppression. There can be no doubt that this historic land, if put under proper care and correctly managed, can be restored to its former flourishing condition. The ocular proof of this can be seen in the very flourishing condition of the Württemberg Temple colonies, which were established in 1868 near Jerusalem, Sharon, and Haifa, and which are veritable garden spots in the land, and that, too, in localities that before the days of these colonies were virtually desert land. The fact that the Jewish agricultural colonies can not make equally good reports is to be explained partly on the ground of mismanagement and partly because the colonists have not the good will and enterprise necessary for the work."—Translation made for the Literary Digest.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

ASHTON, Illinois, March 7.

Dear Mothers: I have finished reading Sr. L. W.'s letter in HERALD, and I wondered if we understood just how important her thought of teaching the little ones the Bible at home was. I remember not many years ago I was chosen teacher of the infant class of the Sunday-school. As all my experiences in teaching had been with older classes, how my heart sank with dread and fear of my inability of teaching a class of such bright, fun-loving, restless little tots. Well, I prepared my lesson as usual, but the problem I could not solve was how to explain the lesson to these little ones who were brimming over with fun and mischief, and yet have them understand it perfectly.

Sunday came all too soon, and after asking God's help and trusting the result to him, I reached my class to find all in their places, and if anything more restless than ever. After repeating the golden text, which all knew, I asked the question, "Who can tell us anything about our lesson?" A little hand went up (and it was one that I surely thought too restless to know even what was told him), but as soon as permission was given to speak he told the lesson just as it was in the Quarterly and then gave a practical illustration so that every child could understand just what the lesson meant. I listened in amazement to hear the child of not over seven years give such a practical illustration, and on being asked, "Who taught you your lesson?" he replied, "Mamma." I thought surely if we mothers knew just how much depended on us we would try hard to fill our missions. Their little minds can understand the Bible if it is explained in a simple way. O, such questions as they will ask! Sometimes so difficult to answer, but if we fail to make them comprehend, I think it wise to tell them when they get older we will explain it to them again.

I once had a bright, inquisitive boy of my own to teach, and sometimes I felt my inability to satisfy that boyish love for knowledge. When I failed he was satisfied with the promise to explain when he grew older, but he is now being taught by his dear Savior and has no need of an earthly teacher.

A MOTHER.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, March 1.

Dear Sisters: It having been so long since I wrote for publication, I feel much like a beginner. Perhaps a few have wondered what has become of me, but I assure you that it has been through no desire to give up the work I loved so well, but the Lord saw fit to fill my hands so full of home duties there remained no time for outside work. Indeed I have taken the role of a missionary's wife and you know few of them are ever heard from. Yet how often I am made to grieve when I look at our own dear little Hope and see nearly every article selected. As Sr. Walker has stated, only those who have contributed for its columns are privileged to criticize this state of affairs. I believe without boasting that I may class myself in that number. At the time I was contributing to the Hope there were a number of others who did likewise, and very few selected articles appeared. But this state of affairs did not please either as rumors came to me from time to time that the editor had a few favorites, and it would be useless for any others to send any contributions. As for myself I knew this to be untrue, though Sr. Walker and myself have never met, nor so much as corresponded. Then the Lord saw fit to silence the willing pens of some by the hand of death, and others, as in my own case, by added burdens; but the complainers have been slow indeed to fill up the ranks, and our editors have had to do the best they could with their selections, and I for one think that their work is a credit to them.

I was pleased, indeed, to see the contribution from Sr. Ruby Hoffman, whom I have known from a little girl, and I hope that we shall see her name often, and that other young sisters and brothers likewise may follow her example. The Autumn Leaves is advancing rapidly I think. Let us strive to bring the Hope up to the same standard.

March 9. I started this letter over a week ago, but failed to finish it. We hoped to move on the morrow to our new home at Moorhead, but all our plans were overthrown, as our two little ones who were in school came down with the measles the latter part of last week, and we must now wait until our little flock is well again. They are doing nicely so far and we trust will continue so.

I regret somewhat to leave this place, as there is a noble little band of Saints here, and we have enjoyed our association with them, but the thought of getting located in a comfortable home of my own makes up for all.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may run with patience the race laid out for me, and be able to guard my boy and girls, who are deprived so much of a father's care, from the evils ever present about them. Ever praying for the advancement of the cause we love, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Convention.

At half past nine o'clock on the morning of April 4, the twelfth annual convention of the General Sunday-school Association was called to order by the General Superintendent. A large representation was present from almost every section of the country in which our work is represented. Zion's Religio-Literary Society had on the previous evening closed one of the most successful and best attended conventions in its history. Peace, harmony, and love had characterized the work throughout the entire session. And the good spirit that was present in the work of the Religio was carried over into the work of the Sunday-school.

It so happened that the second day of the convention was Sunday, which necessitated the transaction of two days' business in one. The General Superintendent exhorted the workers to keep in mind the fact of being crowded for time and that they should regulate their actions accordingly, which they readily did. The work was done with as much dispatch as possible consistent with the importance of some of the movements. We will in their order make mention of all that was done which is of sufficient interest and importance to justify.

Sunday was a beautiful day, and from the opening of the prayer and social meeting at eight o'clock in the morning till the benediction at night all was peace and joy.

The morning social service in charge of the first assistant superintendent, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, was strengthening to all who were privileged to enjoy it. Many strong testimonies as to the work of the Sunday-school and the blessings received therein were given by both old and young.

At the regular hour, the Independence Sunday-school held its regular session. Thus it was that the visitors were privileged to see in actual operation one of the largest schools in the association. Many expressed themselves as pleased with the working of the school, and that notwithstanding the fact of a very large crowd of visitors making the rooms very crowded.

At the eleven o'clock hour there were two addresses. One on "The Why, the What, and the How of the Library," by the General Superintendent. The other, "Amusements for the Child, the Youth, and the Adult?" by Bro. Adam J. Keck. And notwithstanding the fact that Bro. Keck had but a few hours notice of his subject, the address was logical, practical, and pleasing, and considerable good will surely come therefrom.

The afternoon was spent in a union, social, and sacramental meeting in charge of the Sunday-school and Religio organizations. The meeting was strongly indicative of the close ties that exist between the two organizations and the church to which they both owe their existence and which they both love so well to aid. Well might we sing, "Blest be the tie that binds."

At the night session two very strong and practical addresses were delivered. One written by Duncan Campbell on "How do we account for the lack of development among the young and the old along spiritual lines." The essay was strong and practical and sounded the key-note to the matter. It was read in a very pleasant style by Bro. F. A. Russell. It will be published in due time if proper arrangements can be made.

Bro. T. W. Williams' address on "Individual effort essential to individual salvation," was a fitting close to a splendid convention. Full of logic and eloquence, and savored with earnestness and spirituality, it was one of the parts of the convention program for which we can render thanks to a loving Father, and say in our hearts, "It is good to be here."

THE BUSINESS OF THE CONVENTION.

Aside from the routine business of the convention there were but two important questions passed upon. They were the matter of providing a primary teacher's help and the "text-book" question.

PRIMARY OR INFANT CLASS HELPS.

A committee of five consisting of Mrs. Anna Salyards, present editor of the Gospel Quarterly, Margaret Blair, Ruth L. Smith, Eva M. Bailey, and Viola Blair, was appointed into whose charge the matter of providing a primary class help was placed. Just how soon the help can be published it is impossible to tell at the present time, but it will be issued with all possible dispatch consistent with good work.

THE TEXT-BOOK.

The graded text-book question had been quite thoroughly discussed during the year and the delegates seemed ready to dispose of the question. Several delegations came instructed to vote against the adoption of the text-book, giving as a reason that they were satisfied that the Quarterly was doing a work sufficiently good to justify its continuation. The question was discussed at some length and when the vote was called the motion to substitute a series of graded text-books for the Gospel Quarterly was lost almost unanimously. This, it would seem, would settle the matter beyond a hope of recall for time indefinite.

THE ELECTION.

For the first time in the history of the association all of the general officers were sustained or reelected. They were reelected and almost unanimously. In fact this was a convention in which all seemed to be of one mind. Every important question was affirmed or denied by very large majorities. We are led to interpret it as an indorsement of the work done by the several officers. And I believe we speak the mind of all when we say that we are indeed happy that we have been able to thus merit the hearty support of our fellow-workers.

CASH BASIS.

Another rather important action was taken. It was ordered that, beginning with the mailing of Quarterlies for first quarter of 1904, all orders for Quarterlies must be accompanied with cash. This may seem to some to be a very rigid rule or order of the General Convention, but it arose out of necessity. Necessity not for the cash so much as from the fact that there seemed no way possible to induce schools to use the proper system in the ordering of Quarterlies. Many schools will change secretaries every few months and no attention is paid to the old order for Quarterlies. The new secretary will send in a new order, making no reference to the old or standing order, and as a result two sets of Quarterlies are sent. Again, other schools have sent duplicate orders. One superintendent sent an order for Quarterlies "for fear the secretary would forget it." They returned the extra Quarterlies, to be sure, but that did not remove the trouble already taken or pay the postage already paid. The business department gave notice that something must be done to relieve this situation, and the only thing left for us to do was to place the matter on a cash with order plan. It is not likely that duplicate orders will be sent if cash must accompany each order.

However, it is not intended that none shall have Quarterlies who are not able to pay for them in advance. If it is impracticable for you to pay for your Quarterlies in advance, or if you are not able to pay for them at all and need them, write to the General Superintendent and he can give you an order for what you need. We wish to call the especial attention of district workers to this latter point. We do not want to see the work in new localities crippled on account of the cash in advance order. We can help you out whenever it is necessary if you will let us hear from you.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MISSIONARY.

The General Superintendent was sustained in the missionary work. During the past year he was not able to do as much in the field as could have been done had circumstances been different. Business and other matters not in the way this year kept him from the work some parts of the year that should have been devoted to field work. While it will not be possible to reach all the places this year that should be reached, it is hoped that many places long needing the assistance of a general worker will this year be visited and the work receive some of the much-needed assistance. We shall be pleased to correspond with workers from the various sections as to the needs of the work and as to the best times and places to reach each section. It is a well-known fact that one familiar with the location of the schools of a district and also familiar with the needs of the schools can lend very great assistance to a stranger in planning a tour through the section. Let us hear from you.

THE OUTLOOK.

The general condition of the work at large or the general outlook will be very nicely shown by the reports of the several officers which will be given from time to time as space will permit.

THE NEXT GENERAL CONVENTION.

The next General Convention of the association will be held in Kirtland, Ohio, April 4 and 5, 1904, just preceding the next General Conference at that place. This will give our fellow workers of the Eastern districts an opportunity to attend which they do not so conveniently enjoy when the convention is in the West. We favored the conference and convention going east for this reason, and we trust the workers will begin to plan from now to attend the convention of 1904, as it is as convenient to you as it will be for some years to come thereafter. It will do you good, and you can do the convention good. You need to get into closer touch with the work, as does every one. You are entitled to some of the benefits to be derived therefrom as is every one. It is a work of mutual benefit, this association work, and let us all be glad to both share with our fellow workers and to receive the benefits to be derived therefrom.

THE SONG-BOOK.

The matter of a new song-book for the schools was discussed and it was decided to refer the whole matter to the Board of Publication for its consideration and action. The Board has taken active charge of the matter and has a committee now at work collecting and arranging for the publication of the book. Any one having compositions suitable for a Sunday-school song-book, or having selections that are choice and suitable therefor, should send same to Herald Publishing House. They will be properly cared for and either used or returned to the proper owners upon request for same to be returned. Do not neglect or delay this matter as the work will in all probability be completed in a few months. We would like to hear from many, as we wish this book to be equal to the best. Think about it and act now.

THE BOOK CATALOGUE.

Our general librarian is making good progress on what we are pleased to call the book catalogue. This is calculated to be a classified list of books suitable for the Sunday-school library, containing brief descriptions or reviews of the books, prices, names of authors, publishers, etc. It will be a splendid guide to the intending purchasers of library books whether for the home or the Sunday-school library. How soon it can be completed we are unable to say but it is hoped it will be sometime in the near future.

The department of "Educational Research" in the April-June Forum is occupied by an article by the editor, Doctor J. M. Rice, on "Talent vs. Training in Teaching." Doctor Rice discusses this question in the light of investigations he has recently made with respect to the quality of arithmetic teaching in the public schools.

Letter Department.

Do I Understand Aright?

I understand that in order to become a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, the heart must be prepared to accept his ordinances; we must make a complete surrender of everything we love that is not approved by him, or in other words, come out from the world and be separate; and I often find some little thing will stand in the way of serving him. And when we have been baptized into his church and kingdom we are, in order to make any advancement, obliged to obey the laws of the kingdom, and if we do this we may expect to be prospered here. If I understand aright we are to become a prosperous people; the riches of this world are to be ours. He has promised to provide for us and watch over all our interests, direct us in all our ways, lead us in the right and keep us from going wrong, if we are willing to be kept. But while he is willing to do all this for us, it is only when we obey him that we are so blessed. While we can look to him for all of these blessings, we often find our hearts far from him. When trials arise and we are obliged to do hard things, we are apt to think the Lord is dealing hard with us, and wonder why we are so tried. But in after years, on looking back, we can see his purpose in doing as he has; see that it was for our best good, to help us to overcome our own hearts.

Let us pray for one another when we see each other's faults, and look deep into our own hearts, and see if we could do any better under like circumstances.

R. A. BURLINGAME.

GLASGOW, Scotland, March 22.

Saints Herald: The dear old HERALD ever comes laden with good tidings from afar. It seems to us that we could not maintain such a degree of spiritual life if we were deprived of its regular visits. It is soul-cheering to have the means of knowing how the work of salvation is progressing in every land. The efforts that are made, and the blessings realized by our brethren becoming better acquainted, thus creating a loving interest in each other, bringing us all closer together, and nearer to our heavenly Father, is as it should be, that we can feel that sweet bond of charity which unites the children of God.

This finds the few Saints of this city rejoicing in the work, and more especially by two more having been baptized into the kingdom of God by Bro. Thorburn. These are the results of tract distribution. Bro. and Sr. Anderson are very nice young people, and have taken hold of the work in fine style; if they continue as they have begun, they will prove to be a blessing to others. They were confirmed the following day, Sunday, at our morning prayer-meeting, by Bro. Thorburn and the writer, when we indeed had a pentecostal shower. The good Spirit of the Master was present to a great degree. A prophecy was given through Sr. Thorburn, when all were in tears for joy. We were told the Lord was well pleased with what had been done, and if we were faithful we should be the means of doing much good; also we were told that there were many in the city who would obey the gospel. This was indeed cheering and consoling to us, and we desire to profit by the divine instruction given.

The work in Scotland is moving; if only slowly, we trust surely. We have now two organized branches, one in Hamilton and one in Glasgow, and have Saints in Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Kelty, and Kinnaird, though I am sorry to say the outlook for the work in Hamilton is not as good as we should like to see it. Some have moved away because of work, thus leaving the branch weak. Bro. Rushton's absence is felt, while he is prosecuting the work in England and Wales, but his home is still here. Sr. Rushton is giving the Saints what cheer and comfort she can. Glad to say both her two children and herself are much improved. Bro. and Sr. Skene are much missed also, but we trust they will be the means of establishing the work in Aberdeen, their native town.

What is needed here, in my humble opinion, is a good high priest to spend all his time in the interest of the cause; one used to open-air preaching. Great credit is due Bro. Munro for the way in which he has so nobly stood by the work for years.

Bro. Thorburn and myself take turn about in going to Hamilton and assisting all we can. Recently I have also put in one day a week tracting from door to door with the hope that some may become interested and made to see the glorious light of the gospel.

Of late most of our time has been spent in this city, taking the word from door to door, sometimes having an opportunity of explaining our claims. Some have treated us very unkindly in calling us Mormons, others swearing at us because we have disturbed them by going to their doors, others slamming the door in our faces without giving us a chance to explain our position. Utah Mormonism is very largely responsible for the opposition we have to meet. A few of the more reasonable kind have asked us into the house, where we could more fully tell them of the angel's message, and some have even insisted upon us taking a small donation, though we would tell them we were not there to get the people's money, but to bring them tidings of great joy. One old lady, perhaps thinking I looked hungry, twice gave me a bannock (a Scotch cake) she happened to be baking.

I have learned much since coming to Scotland, and would not like to be without the experience thus gained. I trust that I may have accomplished some little in assisting to start the work again in Scotland. There is, I believe, need for at least six good missionaries in order to properly establish the work. Once this is accomplished I am sure the church will have cause to be proud of the results. I am as desirous as ever to do all I can for the furtherance of the righteous cause, but after May this will be done in a local way, my vocal powers not being equal to street preaching. I shall remain here, however, for some time; shall try to get work at my own trade. Have great reason to be thankful to our heavenly Father for the liberty enjoyed in the discharge of duty, also health, and every blessing bestowed by his bounteous hand.

May the work continue to prosper under the guidance of God's hand, and finally Zion will be redeemed.

Your brother,

126 Petershill Road, Springburn.

JOSEPH ARBER.

MT. CARMEL, Illinois, March 28.

Dear Herald: I am all alone and among unbelievers, but I bless God for the knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I feel thankful that I had the privilege of hearing and obeying it. My father and I have been here for the past five years, until the 10th of this month the Lord called him home. He was buried by the Grand Army of the Republic as there were no Saints near. I have two little children and hope to live to bring them up in the Lord. I ask all to remember me and my trouble in their prayers.

LEORA GREISS.

BLUE RAPIDS, Kansas, March 23.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the brethren who have written to me regarding our town, that we have a church free from debt one block from the center of town. The town has a population of twelve hundred. There are one flouring-mill, one oatmeal-mill, four plaster-mills, and a plow factory. The bottom land is extra good. Now, brethren, the man who comes to see for himself need blame no one but himself. Would be pleased to have some of the elders stop, when going to or coming from conference, and spend a few days with us. We are in need of the bread of life. I love the gospel and want to do what I can to help.

Your brother,

T. H. BARRETT.

ADELAIDE, New South Wales, February 17.

Editors Herald: I left Melbourne January 7 for this field, and have been busy ever since my arrival, endeavoring to get the truth before the people. Have been doing mostly open air work on account of the excessive heat. The people do not care to go indoors. Have had splendid audiences to preach to on the streets, and also in the park; good attention throughout. It is no trouble to get a crowd here; but it is a trouble to get them to obey the truth. Some will say that it's all truth that we preach, but that is about as far as they get. Bro. Jones arrived on February 12, he being appointed to that field, but could not get away earlier in the year. It is much easier to work when there are two; but there is a scarcity of laborers in this island continent.

There are only five members here altogether, all sisters, two of whom were baptized last winter by Bro. Jones, the rest moving here. Strange to say, four out of the five were formerly Brighamites.

There are five Utah elders here, but they are not making any progress to speak of. It was a great blow to them losing some of their members. They do not care to see the Josephite elders on the scene, and positively decline to discuss the issues. I have visited all their members here and talked with them. They are good, honest people, but in doubt as to what to do.

We have taken a hall here, and open next Sunday. Expect a few out. I expect to be here another fortnight, and then return to Melbourne, leaving Bro. Jones to fight on alone for the present.

Humility, patience, and perseverance seem to be the main things required to attain success. There are many obstacles in the way in opening up new fields; but once a start is made and the work established they can gradually be overcome. I ever pray for the welfare of Zion.

W. MACKIE.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, March 30.

Editors Herald: We have been having a great attraction here of late in what is known as the cabbage patch. A Mrs. Sarah Hedges claims the Lord talks to her and is using her to bring about a great work. She has built a stable about thirty by forty feet and two stories high but with only one floor. Notwithstanding it is built of heavy lumber it is covered on the outside and lined on the inside with sheet iron. She has built a large altar about twelve feet long and about six feet high with steps leading up to it. In one corner is a large manger from which two cows in an adjoining shed are feeding. The stable and shed are in a large lot surrounded by a sheet iron fence. Over the gate is an arch surmounted by a large cross, both of which are painted red.

Mrs. Hedges claims Christ is coming to this stable after he has raised and done a mighty work through her and called men to the ministry. For three weeks she has been saying that on the 29th of March the Lord was going to preach through one of her cows. She also said that a light would shine in the stable and that the Lord would be there and preach, but that you could not see him for he would have a spiritual body. When the people came to hear the cow preach yesterday she said the Lord had forbidden any services until the next Sunday when there would be services all day. There are thousands of people going to see this strange woman and hear her talk. She will stand out in the cold, damp weather and talk all day. Her husband works at the Louisville & Nashville car shops for one dollar and fifty cents per day.

Three years ago I preached in her house and she said that the Lord had sent the gospel to her house; but she rejected it. It is wonderful to see how she has been given to believe a lie. Such is the case when one rejects the truth. My prayer is that I may be able to live in touch with God's truth and be saved with all Israel.

Yours for truth,

J. W. METCALF.

1819 Ninth Street.

BERKELEY, California, March 30.

Editors Herald: I can not begin to tell you how thankful I am for the knowledge of the gospel in its fullness. The gospel is like an orchard full of all the delicious fruits of the universe, which will satisfy the hungry man's every desire. Dear Saints, we are in possession of this orchard, and the hungry world is passing by. They do not know of the fruit which we enjoy. Shall we not say a word to them of our abundant supply of fat things? Or shall we explain, or give them a tract which may tell them all, and point out the trees laden with plenty, for their use if they will simply take God and Christ for what they say?

It seems as though there is a veil around the world which has been placed there by the theologians of high standing, so far as education and science are concerned. This veil is between them and this orchard full of God's blessings, and every time a Latter Day Saint attempts to draw aside the veil and give a glimpse of one tree, or tries to hand out a pear or an orange, some one in the background will pull the draw-string, the veil is closed, the individual can not see or hear anything which he can comprehend, and the beauty of the workings of God are placed far from his reach.

My companion and I are striving to live lives that will be acceptable in the sight of our Lord. We attend the Oakland Branch meetings. My earnest prayer is that the latter-day work will be spread, and that thousands may see and know where the orchard of the Lord is, as they pass down the road of hunger and thirst for the truth.

Yours in the faith,

W. P. BUSH, D. M. D.

PATON, Iowa, March 27.

Editors Herald: I am young in the faith but nevertheless enjoy the great blessings of the restored gospel. I, like the sister, can say how good it is that when separated from those of like faith we can still keep in touch with the work by means of church papers and books. I am going to spend more of my money (what little I have) for the cause of the church and Graceland College. We Saints should be more liberal to our church and spend less on ourselves. I want to do all I can to see this gospel roll forth, and when I read the soul-cheering letters from our many valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord, I think, Have I done all I could, and am I willing to sacrifice for the work?

I thank and praise God that my eyes are opened to this work.

My soul is thirsting for more knowledge of this blessed work of God. I have opposition to meet from those around me, but may their eyes be opened before it is too late. There are no Saints here and I am sorry to say my husband is not a member. I hope to live to see him one. I am a mother, too, and realize the necessity of our being Saints. I am sorry to say that when I married it was more for this world than for the life to come. Now I realize what a mistake I made. Although my companion is good to me in every possible way, yet the greatest thing of all is the lack of harmony which goes out with those who believe alike in regard to the great gospel work. I wish to warn every young Saint who contemplates marriage. Make your choice a careful one, so that in time to come you will not have to regret the step taken. I know Saints who are young and thoughtless like I once was, but be careful in all things. How careful we should be in bringing up our precious little ones that God has given us. They take pattern from us in everything, and how careful we should be in our teachings to them.

May the Lord bless his people everywhere, and his ministers as they go forth battling all kinds of obstacles and bearing much for the cause they represent. It is a cause worth fighting for and my greatest aim is to have part in the first resurrection and dwell with Christ a thousand years upon the earth.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. H. R. WISE.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 30.

Editors Herald: There is a salubrious, sunshiny, springlike feeling in the atmosphere without, and a quiet yet strenuous bustling about among the housewives here within doors. A general renovating in going on, the dining tents are pitched, and all are anticipating an exceptionally important conference and a good time generally.

Some of the elders we do not hear very often, among them T. W. Chatburn, Heman C. Smith, and A. J. Keck, also I. M. Smith and others, have varied the discourses for us of late, and we have heard many interesting sermons. Good music, instrumental and vocal, has also added to the interest of the meetings which have the appearance of a conference in size every Sunday.

The choir will greatly miss the presence of its efficient director, Bro. O. L. James, also Srs. W. N. Robinson and Belle James, who have so long dedicated their musical gifts to the song service, and who have given invaluable aid to choir work. But we hope their stay from Independence will not be long and that we shall all hear their voices again joining with us in church praises and Sunday-school songs.

Your sister,
ABBIE A. HORTON.

EDMORE, North Dakota, March 22.

Editors Herald: I often wish we lived close to some Latter Day Saint church, yet the isolated Saints can do much good in their condition. I invited the Congregational minister home with us not long ago. We discussed many religious topics. Finally he said, "Well, Mrs. Langton, you just drop these little points of doctrine and come into this organization and help build a Congregational church at Lawton" [five miles from us]. I said, "Never, for I heard one of your ministers say that 'it will be free for all denominations except a few.'"

You may be sure I told him a few things.

I have done some talking with Seventh Day Adventists, and they asked to read the Book of Mormon.

Your sister,
PEARL LANGTON.

LAMONT, Iowa, March 19.

Editors Herald: Are we to become subjects of the kingdom of God so as to inherit eternal life; if so what must our lives be? We should seek the Lord with our whole hearts, thus bringing our wills in subjection to his will. The Son of God came not to do his own will, but the will of the Father. So must we do this in order to be true subjects to him. We must repent and be baptized and forsake all kinds of wickedness, then we are prepared to work for him.

What can I do that will please him more than to work continually as a servant for him? David said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray;" so then affliction brings us nearer to God and takes away the dross that is in us. May we let the Lord have his own way in purifying our hearts, that he may rule within our temples.

appoint one in each branch to collect funds to purchase tracts and distribute them throughout the district. Upon motion the district officers were sustained. By request of the New Philadelphia Branch their church was dedicated at 2 p. m., Sunday, March 8, sermon by O. B. Thomas, prayer by G. T. Griffiths. Adjourned to meet at Akron, Ohio, October 3 and 4.

Convention Minutes.

Independence Stake.—The Sunday-school association convened at Holden, Missouri, March 6, 1903, at 10 a. m. Mrs. D. H. Blair superintendent; A. A. Horton secretary, assisted by J. A. Robinson, Jr. Reports were read from the following officers: Superintendent, secretary, treasurer, and librarian; also school superintendents and secretaries. Schools reporting: Mount Zion 466, Armstrong 124, Holden 107, Second Kansas City 76, First Kansas City 54, Chelsea Park 41, Argentine 41, Post Oak 40, Lees Summit 32, Northeastern Kansas City with two additional schools, 29, Ivanhoe Mission 36, Bethlehem School in Independence 114, Knobnoster, last report, 12; total enrollment, 1,172. Treasurer's report: On hand and collected, $57.64; disbursed, $54.30; balance on hand, $3.34. Audited and found correct. The librarian reported that the work was progressing, and that the circulating library was now established and would be maintained by a monthly donation from each of the schools in the stake. Bills ordered paid were: Stake librarian $1.15, superintendent $2.44, secretary $3.00. The literary exchange committee reported. Election of officers: Sr. D. H. Blair superintendent, Kearney Kelley assistant, J. A. Robinson, Jr., secretary, Fred Koehler treasurer, and Sr. Lucina Etzenhouser librarian. Delegates were chosen to the General Convention and were instructed to cast the full ye and nay vote. A committee appointed for the purpose of acting upon the request of the General Secretary in regard to reporting, reported to the assembly indorsing the method, and the report was adopted. A paper, "How to equip teachers in knowledge and train them in method," was read by Dora Young, and the paper, together with the subject of the establishment of a teachers' training class, was quite generally discussed, after which Srs. D. H. Blair, B. C. Smith, Dora Young, and Bro. W. W. Smith were appointed to outline a two-year course of reading, for Sunday-school teachers of the stake. The following resolution was adopted: Resolved that it is the sense of this body that we do not approve of the graded text-book system. A motion was carried to petition the General Convention for a kindergarten help. Adjourned to meet at Kansas City September 11, 1903.

Kirtland.—Convention convened at New Philadelphia, Ohio, March 6, at 10 a. m., with district superintendent D. L. Allen in charge, B. D. Allen secretary. Following schools reported: Sharon, Cleveland, Akron, Byesville, New Philadelphia, Kirtland, Conneautville. An entertainment was given in the evening, which was instructive and enjoyed by all.

Conference Notices.

The Southern Nebraska District conference will meet with the Nebraska City Branch on May 10 and 11. Remember that all reports must be in writing, and branch reports made out on blanks furnished by the church. The question of changing boundary lines of the district will also come up. J. W. Waldsmith, president.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday-school association of Southern Nebraska District will convene at Nebraska City, May 8 and 9. Please send in all reports. Walter M. Self, superintendent.

Died.

SNOW.—At Brooksville, Maine, February 23, 1903, neuralgia of the heart, Sr. Almira M., wife of Joshua Snow; was born in Sargentville, February 20, 1835. In early life she joined the Baptists. In 1871 when she obeyed the gospel she was promised that if faithful she would yet see to read the Book of Mormon, as she had been blind for several years, and later it was fulfilled. Her real worth to the church is better understood by her writings to Mothers' Home Column and Autumn Leaves, signed "Aunt Almira." Funeral from Baptist church; sermon by S. O. Foss, assisted by J. J. Billings.

GEORGE.—Sr. Elizabeth (Parker) George was born December 19, 1862; became a member of the church May 8, 1877; died at Netawaka, Kansas, March 15, 1903. A husband, four children, father, mother, brother, sisters, and many friends mourn. She lived and died a Saint. Funeral sermon by Elder M. F. Gowell, at the Congregational church, Netawaka.

COCKERTON.—William E. Cockerton was suddenly removed from earth-life by the accidental discharge of a gun, near his home, near Gilroy, California, on March 9, 1903, at the age of 36 years, 9 months, 8 days. He leaves a widowed mother, three brothers and three sisters to mourn, among whom is our worthy brother, J. M. Cockerton, also Doctor Daniel Cockerton and Sr. Essie Cockerton. He was buried by the side of his father, at Livermore, where the funeral was conducted by Elder J. M. Terry to a goodly audience of sympathizing friends. Loved in life and honored in death.

REED.—At Lexington, Tennessee, March 13, 1903, Dilithi C. Reed; born in North Carolina, December 5, 1818. She was the mother of ten children, seven left to mourn. She was baptized March 9, 1884, by Elder James Caffall, and remained faithful until death. The remains were laid to rest in the Haleys' Creek Cemetery, near her old home. Funeral services conducted by Mr. Jackson, Methodist.

HOGABOAM.—At Burlington, Iowa, March 13, 1903, Sr. Evaline A. Hogaboom, aged 79 years, 5 months, and 20 days. She was born in 1823, in Erie County, Pennsylvania. In 1840 her parents removed to Pike County, Illinois, where in 1850 she married Alphonso Hogaboom. Of three children born, two died in infancy, but a daughter survives her, Sr. Emma Lacy. She united with the church in 1877, being baptized by W. W. Blair. At her request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached her funeral sermon, service being held on Sunday, March 15, at Burlington.

PHILLIPS.—Mrs. Florence Phillips died at her father's house, near Dawson, Nebraska, on March 27, 1903. Born on May 12, 1879, married to Mr. George Phillips May 28, 1900. She leaves a husband and parents to mourn. Funeral services conducted by Elder J. B. Gouldsmith.

CRITCHFIELD.—At Mt. Carmel, Illinois, March 10, 1903, after a long illness, John Critchfield passed peacefully away, aged 70 years, 4 months, 11 days. He served his country faithfully as a member of an Indiana regiment during the Civil War. He united with the church October 2, 1873. He leaves a wife, two sons, and a daughter to mourn. Funeral services conducted by the G. A. R. Interment at Rose Hill Cemetery.

LONDON.—Near Harper, Oklahoma, December 3, 1902, Bro. Landon, aged 75 years, 2 months, 5 days. Leaves a wife and nine children to await their reunion beyond the vale. He was married to Margaret Hinchly, November 4, 1848; united with the church in August, 1879. He was loved and respected most by those who knew him best. Sermon by James Yates.

BUTLER.—At Rosetta, Idaho, March 18, 1903, Sr. Mary Catharine Butler. Born December 12, 1847, in Linn County, Oregon, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Fields. She was married to Jason R. Butler in 1863. Baptized by Elder J. C. Clapp in 1870. She leaves a husband, nine children, and many grandchildren, and other relatives. We know of no greater tribute to pay her memory than to say that those who knew her best loved her most. She died strong in the faith. By her request there were to be no funeral services until some elder of the Reorganized Church comes.

The World's Work for April.

The World's Work for April has the longest, the most varied, and in some ways the most interesting table of contents in the magazine's history. Frederic Emory, Chief of the Bureau of Commerce, describes the work the new Department of Commerce and Labor will do, and there is an intimate view of George B. Cortelyou, written by David S. Barry. There are three articles bearing on education: George Iles writes picturesquely of the Leipziger Free Lectures in New York; A. R. Dugmore tells of a remarkable public school on the East Side in New York where children of twenty-five different nationalities study together; and a novel investigation of "What is the Best College?" is made by E. J. Dexter. The personal story of how the Methodist Church collected $20,000,000 for education and benevolence is told by the Reverend Doctor Mills, who conducted the canvass; and there is an article full of human incident about the work of the Y. M. C. A. by Raymond Stevens. Henry Norman, editor of the World's Work's English edition, has an article on the Automobile which, while full of new facts, is almost as vividly prophetic as one of H. G. Wells' anticipations. Katharine C. Budd describes the "Model American House." Two of the most striking articles in the number deal with foreign countries: Major W. Evans Gordon, M. P., made last year a most exacting investigation of the country from which the masses of Russian Jews emigrate to America and England; the conditions under which the people live at home are accurately described in his article on "Whence Come Our Immigrants?" and Wolf Von Schierbrand, the author of "Germany," relates many interesting experiences of his career as newspaper correspondent in Europe. There are handsomely illustrated articles, one by Professor John Gifford, of Cornell, on Railroads and Forestry, showing how the scientific forester can be of service to the railroads; one by Albert Bigelow Payne about "Flat-dwelling in a Great City;" another about Lloyd's and the safety of the seas, by Chalmers Roberts; and yet another about the Greatest Lemon Ranch in the World by W. S. Harwood. Professor H. Morse Stephens, of the University of California, sums up the historical work of John Fiske; Doctor W. S. Rainsford pays a noteworthy tribute to the late Frank Norris, author of "The Pit;" and F. N. Barksdale describes the daily routine of a railroad president's work. The March of Events and Among the World's Workers are particularly full and well written, and the full-page portraits are as good as the World's Work ever published.

Walking the Most Wholesome Exercise.

Walking is the simplest, the most natural, and the most wholesome of all exercises. No athlete ever trains for a contest, no matter what its nature may be, without walking a considerable distance in the open air each day. Many keep in vigorous health by this alone, and, no matter what other exercise you take, you must walk. But, first of all, learn how to walk. A great many people walk in an aimless, shuffling manner, and secure but little benefit from the exercise. In walking for exercise, the effect is better if the mind is directed toward some pleasurable end. Walk with consciously directed movements until you have brought every muscle under perfect control of your will. Moping along in an aimless, lackadaisical manner does little good physically and harms one mentally.

The necessity of maintaining a proper, erect position of the body must, says a writer in the April Cosmopolitan, be borne in mind. Bear the weight on the balls of the feet, keep the shoulders back and down, the chest high, but do not hold the abdomen inward, as is taught by many athletic instructors. Let it be relaxed, for this part of the body should move in and out with each breath. There should be perfect freedom to breathe normally.

Photographing Animals.

Until the last year or so all of the pictures of fine live stock which have been appearing in the farm papers were made from drawings and, as the artist tried to picture an ideal animal, the illustrations looked as much like the real animal as a wooden Indian looks like a live Indian. The first paper to run its illustrations from actual photographs was the Twentieth Century Farmer, in fact even to-day it is the only publication which has its own photographic department and which spends the money to send its photographers to the farms of the best live stock breeders in the West. They travel as well to the fairs, stock shows and the best farms and orchards, in fact everywhere, to get timely pictures to illustrate the Twentieth Century Farmer. If you have never seen it, send your name to the Twentieth Century Farmer, 2335 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska, for a free sample copy, or 25 cents for three months trial subscription. Price per year, $1.

It contains each week from twenty-four to forty-eight pages, and the illustrations are only one of the many features which make it the handsomest and most interesting farm journal.

Think Clearly Before You Write.

Old-fashioned text-books on rhetoric made much of the subject of style. A long list of desirable qualities was given, and a longer list of rules for securing these qualities. It was a serious matter to write at all, with all these rules staring you in the face. But the new rhetoric has simplified all that. The many qualities of style have been reduced to three: Clearness, Force, and Beauty. If you understand an article at the first reading, the style has Clearness. If it holds your attention, it has Force. If it pleases you it has Beauty. These three qualities of style are the essential ones; they comprehend all others. Sometimes they are given different names: Clearness is disguised as Perspicuity; Force is called Energy, or Strength; Beauty is called Elegance, or Grace, or Harmony; but the qualities are the same. Of the three, Clearness is the most important. If people do not understand what you say, they can hardly be interested in it, or pleased by it. Force and Beauty, then, depend upon Clearness, so it is doubly important to secure this. Clear writing depends primarily, then, upon clear thinking. Master your subject before you begin to write. Have clearly in mind what you want to say, and you can usually say it clearly.—Benjamin A. Heydrick, in April Chautauquan.

The April "Arena."

The Arena for April opens with a thoughtful and timely paper by John M. Berdan, Ph. D., on "American Literature and the High Schools." This is followed by a brief but suggestive "Plea for Simpler Living," from the pen of the Honorable Samuel M. Jones, mayor of Toledo. "Hamlet, Prince of Denmark," is the title of a profound essay by Doctor Axel Emil Gibson. "Democracy or Autocracy—Which?" is considered by J. W. Bennett, and B. O. Flower presents "The Message of Mazzini," the second paper of a series on the Italian patriot. "A Study in Advertising," by Henry C. Sheaffer, is a uniquely interesting production, and "Modern Dramatic Realism," by Fannie Humphreys Gaffney, is one of the best articles of the number. An interview with J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., on "New Zealand—Political, Social, and Religious," is most entertaining, and "The Town That Was Sold," a prophetic satire by P. M. Crosby Magnusson, A. M., Ph. D., is of timely significance. Editor Flower's departments of "Topics of the Times" and "Books of the Day" are unusually interesting and instructive. Editor McLean announces a symposium on "Mormonism and Polygamy," for the May number.

The leading article in the April-June Forum is a review of "American Politics" by Henry Litchfield West, who deals particularly with the legislation of the last Congress, the fight on the Statehood Bill, the suggested nominations for the next presidency, and the appointment of colored men to federal offices. A. Maurice Low discusses the most important "Foreign Affairs" of the quarter with special reference to the revival of the Eastern Question and the internal and external politics of Germany. Alexander D. Noyes treats of the events and tendencies of the same period in the world of "Finance." Recent progress in "Applied Science," especially in engineering, is described by Henry Harrison Suplee. Literature is represented by a review of Sidney Lee's "Life of Queen Victoria," contributed by Professor W. P. Trent. Under the heading of "Music" Joseph Sohn sets forth the "Lessons of the Operatic Season." A paper on "The Educational Outlook" is contributed by Ossian H. Lang. Doctor J. M. Rice's "Educational Research" for the current quarter takes the form of a discussion, based on his investigations in public schools, of the respective importance of talent and training in teaching. The special articles concluding the present number are "The Present Estimate of the Value of Human Life," by Professor Rudolph Eucken, of Jena, "The Scope of a Permanent Tariff Commission," by Albert H. Washburn, and "A Rambling Discourse on Submarine Navigation," by Commander F. M. Barber, U. S. N., retired.

The April Cosmopolitan is a carefully balanced magazine. It appeals to the individual tastes of the many, and the many tastes of the individual. There are seventeen stories and articles—one hundred and one pictures. Chief place is given to a striking article on "The Americanization of the Canadian Northwest," written by William R. Stewart. A personal sketch of Björnsterne Björnson, the prophet-poet of Norway, is most entertainingly written, and is illustrated with a number of beautiful photographs of the poet's home. "To Love or To Be Loved," is a philosophical essay, by Lavinia Hart, in the course of which she shows that to love means increase of physical beauty—an end which may also be gained by physical exercise, as is shown in the same number by Bernarr MacFadden in an article entitled "Health Made and Preserved by Daily Exercise." Doctor George F. Shears writes on "Medicine," as part of the series, "Making a Choice of a Profession." "Famous Cures and Humbugs of Europe," is by the late Julian Ralph. "Romances of the World's Great Minds" (Calumet and Hecla), by S. E. Moffet. There are also two sketches—one on the great financier, Jacob H. Schiff; and the other on the sugar king, H. O. Havemeyer. Field-marshal Viscount Wolseley, K. P.; H. G. Wells, Henry Seton Merriman, Seumas MacManus, and several other well-known writers contribute to this number of the Cosmopolitan, which is particularly remarkable for the variety of its fiction.

The April number of Country Life in America is nearly as large as the double gardening number, but sells for the regular price. "Tarpon Fishing in Florida" is illustrated by splendid photographs of these seven-foot fish leaping out of the water in pursuit of smaller fish. "The Story of a $2,100 House" is inspiring and suggestive, being the personal narrative of an actual experience. "Photographing in the Tree-tops" shows how two expert bird photographers climb a tree one hundred and twenty feet high and secure a complete pictorial life-history of the red-tail hawk. "The Airedale Terrier" tells of the remarkable transformation of a fighter and poacher into a self-contained dog suitable for a lady's escort. The illustrations show his wonderful swimming powers. "The Salvation Army's Farm Colonies" is the record of an interesting experiment for making self-supporting farmers. "How the Vireo Outwitted the Cowbird" shows a "two-story" nest built to fool our native bird which has the cuckoo's habit. "New England Wood Roads" is a superb five-page pictorial feature. "The New Life in the Dahlia" explains the reason of the dahlia revival and tells how to grow the new creations. Other interesting and practical articles are "A Garden for Birds," "How to Grow Pineapples," and "The Warfare against Mosquitoes." It is evident that this refreshing magazine has no difficulty in maintaining its pictorial standard. It evidently aspires to be the most useful as well as the most beautiful magazine devoted to the whole field of outdoor life.

After I have washed my white gloves and ribbons in gasoline, I do not throw it out, but pour it into a quart fruit-jar, then screw the cover down tight. It is then ready for numberless other uses, such as dampening a cloth with it and wiping off my gasoline-stove and my tea-kettle. It removes the grease and dust better than soap and water. When there are no fires in the house, I slightly dampen a cloth with gasoline, and wipe over my carpets, and the zinc under the stoves. Its most practical use, however, is in the bath-room and lavatory. The spattermarks of hard water are difficult to get off without a liberal use of hot water, lye, soap, and labor. I have found that the white-porcelain surface of bathtub and lavatory can be polished to spotless condition with almost no labor if a cloth dipped in gasoline is used. It would answer as well with a zinc bathtub, I know, for it polishes zinc beautifully.—April Woman's Home Companion.

The April Review of Reviews is well stocked with good articles on live topics. The editor, in "The Progress of the World," discusses the financial side of the Panama Canal proposition, which was taken quite out of the category of academic questions by the Senate's action in ratifying the treaty with Colombia. The Delaware situation and many other matters of political and social interest are also editorially treated. The award of the Anthracite Strike Commission is reviewed and analyzed by Doctor Walter E. Weyl. Professor Harry Pratt Judson sets forth the municipal situation in Chicago on the eve of the city elections. "Political Conditions in Russia," apropos of the Czar's recent manifesto, is the subject of a well-informed article by N. I. Stone. Mr. Lawrence Reamer writes of "A New Régime for American Opera," referring to the retirement of Mr. Grau and the introduction of Mr. Conried as manager of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City. The Honorable Horace Plunkett outlines the remarkable progress recently made by the Irish farmers along the lines of associated effort. Two railroad projects of unusual importance—the Trans-Canada and the South Australian land-grant line—are described in detail. Mr. David E. Cloyd contributes a unique study of school conditions in the South. In connection with the centenary of the state of Ohio, Mr. Murat Halstead writes about some of the characteristic features of that commonwealth's settlement and growth, while our newer West is represented in a brief paper by Charles M. Harger on "Pushing Back the Arid Line." In this number of the Review appears a reproduction of the famous Sargent portrait of President Roosevelt, recently completed, about which so much has been written.

THE CONFERENCE.

Whether the annual conference of 1903 will pass into history as anything remarkable or otherwise, it will certainly live in the memories of those who participated in its deliberations and bore a part in the disposition of the subjects brought up for examination and determination.

The temper of those engaging in the discussion, which to a greater or a lesser extent occurs in our assemblies, was excellent, and showed that notwithstanding a man might stand earnestly for his own convictions of propriety, expediency, necessity, or right, he could be mindful of the possibility that he might err and another be of the better opinion, and that he should extend to his brethren the same consideration of earnestness and integrity that he expects or demands from them for himself.

Reports show that the work in the general field is in a fair condition. Also, that the local ministry is doing more than usual to keep the work moving in their neighborhood. There has been a fair increase by baptism and inquiry is likely to bring more.

A saddening influence was cast over the conference by the sickness and death of Bro. Thomas James and the sickness of the wife of Bro. James C. Crabb, of the High Council, who died about the close of the session; and by the unfortunate condition of Bro. W. S. Loar, a member of the Independence Branch, who was suffering from an operation for some sort of a swelling on the back of his head and neck, which it was thought might prove fatal.

The weather was good, and the daily sessions of the Saints in the various quorum meetings and the business sittings were attended in such a spirit of confidence and trust that all felt that the Lord was interested in the work and gave his Spirit for the strengthening and comforting of all.

The High Council held a number of sessions beginning April 8 at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and holding at intervals, as the way was clear. There was but one case before them, but that one was somewhat of a trying one to consider and determine.

The conference was the shortest one held in several years, occupying but eight days of actual sittings, beginning on the sixth and ending on the fourteenth. What the result may be it is not needful to forecast, the predominating spirit that prevailed being BRETHREN publishing books or pamphlets should remember to place copies of such publications in the Church Library. There are a number of brethren who have published books, etc., who have not done so. Why not, brethren? In the Library should be found copies of everything published for or against the work, and as the Library has largely been built up by donations, the publishers of books on church doctrines especially should not wait for some more generous buyer of the book to place a copy there.

an excellent assurance of intention and integrity of labor, in both the traveling and the local ministry. There is a good basis for the hope that the year will be fraught with more than usual energy and enterprise in the field.

As an illustration of the adage "All things come to them who wait," we add to these notes of the conference that on Saturday, the 18th inst., the manuscript of the Book of Mormon and papers connected therewith, long kept in charge by Elder David Whitmer, were given into the possession of President Joseph Smith, by Mr. George W. Schweich, of Richmond, Missouri, the grandson of Elder David Whitmer, and will now be lodged with the archives of the church for safe keeping.

If Joseph Smith, the Seer, ever made the statement accredited to him by some, that "where the records were, there would the church be," and it has any significance, then is the church with the Reorganization, for that church has now both the Inspired Translation, or the Holy Scriptures, and the Book of Mormon.

THE SHENANDOAH "SENTINEL" ON "LATTER DAY SAINTS."

The Sentinel, of Shenandoah, Iowa, in its issue for April 8, contained an article of about two and a half columns descriptive of the "Church of Latter Day Saints" and some of its history. It is very fair in its tone and generally accurate in statement. After speaking of the history of the Shenandoah Branch the writer of the article said:

The membership is composed of excellent people. As individuals and as a church they have won the respect and esteem of the community. Their church [building] is growing old and inadequate in size and it is hoped the society will so prosper that a new and better structure will soon take the place of the old, for the Saints' church has a permanent place in Shenandoah.

We are pleased that the Sentinel recognizes good citizens in our Shenandoah brethren.

In another place in the same issue the Sentinel gives some news concerning the General Conference as gleaned from Srs. F. Redfield and Mamie Pace, two of our excellent Shenandoah Saints. The article is illustrated by a good half-tone portrait of President Joseph Smith. The article closes in the following language:

Mamie furnishes us copies of Zion's Ensign, published daily during the conference, and containing full reports of proceedings, reports, and sermons. There are three "Stakes" in the church, Lamoni, Independence, and Kirtland, Ohio, the latter the place of its origin, and there the conference will meet next year. Is it not a little strange that in the space of an ordinary lifetime this most modern of Christian churches should rise and flourish as it has done, based on what would seem to men the dreams of a visionary youth? The division at Salt Lake is, of course, larger in numbers, but it is evident that the Reorganization having the legitimate succession—the son of the Prophet and himself a prophet—at its head, and being in closer touch with the civilization of the age, is destined to be the one Latter Day Saints' Church of the world. The Brighamites can never spread beyond the Salt Lake region.

We say it is the most modern of churches or sects. This is true unless it be true that Christian Science and Dowieism can be called churches, and it does not appear that these have reached that point. But the Saints are as properly a church as the Methodists or Congregationalists.

"PREHISTORIC METAL-WORKERS IN AMERICA."

Under the above caption the Washington Times for April 7 contained the following which will be of interest to many of our readers:

An interesting visitor at the National Museum last week was the Reverend W. M. Beauchamp, one of the greatest authorities on Indian archæology, historic and prehistoric, in New York State. Mr. Beauchamp has made a special study of the Iroquois, particularly their metal-work, and has published several books on the subject which are accepted authorities.

According to Mr. Beauchamp, the Iroquois were not acquainted with the use of metal until the arrival among them of the Jesuit missionaries. The Jesuits early taught the Indians the principle of working copper into ornaments and utensils, and found them apt pupils. The earliest copper articles made by the Iroquois appear to have been fashioned from metal obtained by breaking up copper kettles. Later sheet copper was introduced and the manufacturing grew in importance.

The Iroquois also learned to work silver, and the desire for silver ornaments became a craze with the tribe. Wealthy Indians went around with a couple of hundred dollars' worth of silver ornaments on them and acquired more whenever the opportunity presented itself. Great skill was displayed by the native craftsmen in working silver. They had complete outfits for the purpose and developed beautiful figures.

There are now living old Indians who followed the trade, but they are doing little or no work. When the precious metals rose to a high premium as a result of the Civil War, the Iroquois could not resist the temptation to sell, and in consequence to-day there is a remarkable scarcity of ornaments which were at one time plentiful. Numerous beads and smaller pieces yet remain, but the bands for the head are very rare, and even such an assiduous collector as Mr. Beauchamp has not been able to get one.

A wide field for investigation is offered by the medals and decorations given by the French to the Indians as a reward for services in peace and war. Many of these relics are preserved in the New York museums as interesting revelations of the French method of flattering savages.

While the Iroquois did not know the art of working copper until taught by the French, according to the authorities, some race or tribe which preceded them in New York was quite familiar with the metal and employed it in the manufacture of both ornaments and implements. Who these people were is not known, but when they migrated or were exterminated they failed to leave their knowledge behind, and their Iroquois successors continued to live as stone-age savages.

Old camp and village sites, which usually furnish the greatest number of prehistoric relics, do not reveal many copper weapons or ornaments. The reason is that copper articles were scarce and valuable among the pre-Iroquoian people and anything lost around a settlement would be sought until recovered. The copper relics now in the museums and collections were either lost in travel or in battle or hunting.

HAWAII TERRITORY, NOT "HAWAIIAN ISLANDS."

The editor of the Paradise of the Pacific in his his issue for March protests against public speakers and congressmen following the "habit of classing Hawaii with the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, Samoa, Guam, and Alaska under the collective definition of 'outlying possessions' or 'foreign possessions.'" He resents the idea of our "Island Territory" "being segregated with the semi-civilized lands" of some of the "outlying possessions." He is right, too, in objecting. It seems hard for very many of the people of the United States to awake to the fact that the Hawaiian Islands of a few years ago now constitute Hawaii Territory. They seem slow to gather the fact that Hawaii is just as much a part of the Union as are New Mexico, Oklahoma, or Indian Territory. We have actually had people look at us in wonder and astonishment when we have used the expression "Hawaii Territory." But it is a fact, the little island paradise is a part of the Union, and our patriotism really makes us glad to say "Hawaii Territory" rather than Hawaiian Islands.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

H. E. Moler wrote from Holden, Missouri, April 17: "In this week's issue of the Democrat-Enquirer, of McArthur, Ohio, I notice that the Anti-Mormon Society was incorporated at Columbus, Ohio, on Friday, April 12. The following officers were selected for the coming year: President, James M. Darby, Ohio; treasurer, W. T. Hilton, Omaha, Nebraska; general secretary, John T. Bridwell, McArthur, Ohio."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

According to the Beacon Journal of Akron, Ohio, date of April 11, an immense tract of new coal land has been discovered in Hanover Township, Pennsylvania. Eight new veins have been discovered which were never before found in the upper coal fields, while below them are the twelve veins now worked in other parts of the upper region. The twenty veins, it is said, aggregate one hundred fifty feet of coal, the lowest one being twenty-three hundred feet. This will be good news for those who feared the exhaustion of the supply.

The Beacon Journal for April 11, of Akron, Ohio, reports that Professor Warren Morehead, curator of the department of Archæology of Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, has discovered on a farm east of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, the burial ground of a prehistoric people. He found ten skeletons, several in a fair state of preservation. He classes them as the remains of an extinct race of mound-builders. The skeletons were in receptacles built of flat stones. Stone cups and a stone knife were found.

A proposition to place a statue of Brigham Young in the Hall of Fame at the St. Louis Exposition has called forth a storm of protest from many quarters.

"The District of Columbia has five hundred eight liquor selling places, and its annual drink bill on a conservative estimate is $6,358,075," says the Washington Times for April 13. "An average of $21.17 for every man, woman, and child in the District."

According to the belief of a class of religionists who are reported by the daily press to be gathering to Benton Harbor, Michigan, Christ will come again to earth in three years, and the members of the church known as the House of Israel are gathering there to be present at that time. It is expected that there will be one hundred forty-four thousand gathered there before the three years have passed.

Recently more accurate accounts of the earthquake at Andidjan, a city of forty-six thousand inhabitants in Russian Central Asia, which occurred on December 16, 1902, show that nine thousand houses were destroyed, four thousand persons perishing in the ruins. The awful destruction was wrought in a single hour. The whole city, which was one of great beauty, was laid in a heap of ruins.

Nearly all the Lamoni delegates to General Conference returned home immediately after the close of conference, though some remained awhile.

The First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric remained after conference and held joint sessions on the morning and afternoon of April 16. They adjourned to meet on May 1, in Lamoni, to hear report of committee appointed at the Thursday council.

The HERALD force was represented at conference by the following: Joseph Smith, editor; F. M. Smith, associate; F. B. Blair, business manager; La June Howard, proof-reader; Silas Shippy, compositor; and Arthur Smith, binder.

Brn. Tucker and Hanson are having some severe experience in far-off New Zealand, but they are keeping at work. Bro. Tucker in a recent letter to Bishop Kelley indicated that Bro. Hanson, at the call of Bro. Wight, would go to Australia. Bro. Tucker would remain in New Zealand trying to hold the ground gained. They find very few openings for preaching, so rely on tracts and what street preaching they find chance to do. Keep at it brethren, success will come.

It will be greatly to the credit and spiritual advancement of the eldership that they do not disparage the work of each other by unwise remarks and improper comparisons, one against another. All are laboring for a common cause and for mutual success and triumph; therefore all should in the spirit of labor be one. Not many can endure the careless, flippant criticism which some are in the habit of passing upon the efforts of others in the stand; better not make them.

General Conference.

MONDAY, APRIL 13.

Morning prayer service was in charge of J. E. Meredith and R. B. Howlett.

At a quarter to eleven A. E. Mortimer was the speaker, assisted by W. P. Robinson.

Business session at two o'clock, F. M. Smith in the chair.

Report was read from the Second Quorum of Deacons, Lamoni, Iowa, showing that eleven members had reported.

A report was read from the First Quorum of Priests, showing six hundred forty sermons and fifteen baptisms. They had chosen J. J. Luff president, and he had chosen two counselors, and the ordinations of these were asked for. The ordinations were indorsed and ordered provided for.

A report was read from the Seven Presidents of Seventy, in which a number of names were recommended for ordination to the First and Second Seventy as follows: For the First Seventy, N. C. Enge, J. F. Curtis, and J. F. Grimes. For the Second Seventy, A. J. Layland, J. B. Lentz, O. H. Bailey, H. A. McCoy, J. W. Metcalf, F. D. Omans, James T. Riley, N. V. Sheldon, Walter W. Smith, Amos Berve, R. O. Self, Leroy G. Wood, and W. H. Greenwood.

Reports were then read from the First and Second Seventies in which the recommendations from the Seven Presidents were ratified, and by action on each name the recommendations for ordination were approved by the conference, and all who were present, except J. F. Grimes, expressed willingness to accept the ordinations. Bro. Grimes asked that in his case the ordination be deferred. The ordinations of those not present were ordered referred to the missionaries in charge of their respective fields.

A report was read from the Quorum of High Priests, showing fifty-six members present at this conference. Reports of the members showed 6,377 sermons preached, 291 baptisms. A long list of titles of papers was given which had been read before the quorum at the various sessions.

A report was read from the committee on the petition of J. S. Page, of California, in which reasons were set out for recommending the return of the petition to the petitioner. The report was adopted.

The request of the College Board of Trustees that a man be placed in the field in the interests of Grace-land College was taken up, and a motion finally prevailed that it be referred to the Bishopric and the Board of Trustees for action.

A series of motions were then passed by which the various church officers, the quorums, the church papers, etc., etc., were sustained.

A resolution was passed expressing the appreciation of the fairness manifested in the work of the reporters for the Kansas City papers in writing their reports of the conference. George McQuaid, of the Journal, and A. B. McDonald, of the Times and Star, were especially named in the resolution.

A report was then read from the Quorum of High Priests stating that J. A. Grant and Henry Greenwood had been recommended for ordination as high priests. The recommendations were approved.

After the usual number of announcements, adjournment was taken for the day.

At the evening service O. H. Bailey was the speaker, assisted by C. G. Lewis.

TUESDAY, APRIL 14.

The morning prayer services were in charge of Henry Kemp and A. V. Closson.

At the morning services W. S. Macrae was the speaker, assisted by Arthur Allen.

Business was resumed at two o'clock, Joseph Smith was in the chair.

A report was read from George Horton, who for many years had been janitor of the Independence church, but who, because of declining years, had given way for another.

Additional report was read from the Second Quorum of Elders.

The Fourth Quorum of Elders made additional report. J. A. Grant, their newly chosen president, had been called into the Quorum of High Priests, and hence they had chosen E. J. Goodenough to succeed him, with D. E. Powell and S. J. Madden as counselors. The quorum requested the ordination of these men, which was granted.

A report was also read from the Quorum of High Priests recommending the ordination of Thomas Taylor, which was approved.

A report was read from the Bishop's Court in the case of Henry Broadway, which was referred to them by the conference. The court held that Henry Broadway was indebted to the New South Wales District, and recommended the approval of the action of the District. The report of the court was approved.

A short report was read from the committee on archæology, in which they recommended the names of Louise Palfrey and R. Etzenhouser to fill vacancies in the committee. The report was adopted and the names indorsed.

An additional report was read from the Fifth Quorum of Elders.

The Presidency recommended the names of T. T. Hinderks and J. A. Tanner to fill vacancies in the standing High Council. The recommendations were approved.

The following appointments of the Twelve by the First Presidency were then read and approved:

F. M. Sheehy and U. W. Greene: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Eastern and Middle States, District of Columbia, Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, and Maryland.

A communication was read from George McQuaid, of the Kansas City Journal, and A. B. McDonald, of the Times and Star, in which they expressed appreciation of the courtesy which they had received by the conference.

The president of the Third Quorum of Elders asked for the ordination of George Kemp as second counselor. It was granted.

Being requested by motion, Bro. F. G. Pitt sang a solo, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord." He sang it feelingly, and it was very much appreciated.

The ordinations to the various offices were taken up, and the following were ordained, after prayer by Joseph Smith: As members of the standing High Council, T. T. Hinderks and J. A. Tanner. As high priest, J. A. Grant. As seventy, J. F. Curtis, A. J. Layland, J. B. Lentz, O. H. Bailey, H. A. McCoy, J. W. Metcalf, F. D. Omans, James T. Riley, N. V. Sheldon, Walter W. Smith, R. O. Self, L. G. Wood, and Amos Berve. E. J. Goodenough was ordained president of the Fourth Quorum of Elders, and D. E. Powell and S. J. Madden as counselors; and George Kemp as counselor to president of the Third Quorum of Elders.

The speaker for the evening was T. W. Williams. This being the closing service of the conference, a motion prevailed to adjourn as per previous motion, to meet in Kirtland, Ohio, April 6, 1904.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

Friday, December 9. I came to Council Bluffs, and to my surprise found my sister Mary and husband, Curtis F. Stiles, at brother Edwin's. I had not seen them since the spring of 1852. They are in good health and spirits, though grieved and depressed at heart religiously, because of so much wickedness and distress brought on the church by the presumptuous leaders of the latter-day apostasy. They have been to California and just returned to the States. I am very glad to see them. They have many interesting things to tell me of the beautiful country. On the way they stopped in Utah a short time and met many of the Mormons at Mountain Meadows; saw the bleached bones of the dear people who were murdered—and saw many of the clothes of the women with bullet holes in them and now worn by the people of that valley. While there they saw two of their leading men who came and called a meeting of the members of their church, and in the harshest language forbade them to talk over the matter of the horrible massacre, but did not say a word disapproving the wearing of clothes of that rich company or say a word about burying their dead and bleached bones. John D. Lee and others of the Mormons were well known as parties in that horrible butchery of one hundred and twenty emigrants, was the common talk in the Territory when they were there, so they report.

Saturday, December 10. I purchased some clothes, cost ten dollars, and visited with my dear people and many of the Saints in the vicinity of the city for a few days.

Sabbath, December 18. Held meeting in the city district schoolhouse. A few were out to hear; only six strangers, besides my friends and relatives.

Sunday, December 25. I attended meeting in the Methodist church. The minister exhorted his people in a very moral way to be good, and as usual, said nothing about the doctrine of Christ. All he said I can indorse with all my heart. I truly believe no one can be a true Christian without being in every sense a moral man, yet a moralist without obeying the doctrine of Christ is not a Christian.

Friday, December 30. My brother-in-law accompanied me to Farm Creek, and again I find Bro. Beebe in best of spirits, taking charge of the Saints in the branch.

Sunday, January 1, 1860. I held meetings at Bro. Beebe's cottage this morning, subject, First principles of the gospel. Prayer and social service in the evening. Saints are all alive in the work and every member took part in the most humble and loving manner, testifying of his hope in Christ, and the blessed Holy Spirit gave much comfort to the dear Saints. Another New Year's Day has come to us with a renewal of the blessed Spirit, and I rejoice in God, my Savior, with all my heart. I hope to do more for the advancement of the latter-day work this year than I have in any year before. I breathe this fervent prayer: O, thou God of Israel, help me to do all thy will, and have the faith once delivered to the Saints. Amen.

The weather is cold and snow covers the ground, but looks beautiful; so clean and pure as it covers these vast prairies, resembling "the fields of the woods" so graphically described by King David in his forty-eighth and one hundred thirty-second Psalms. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her provision; I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priests with salvation, and her Saints shall shout aloud for joy."

O, will the church be more completely organized with Bro. Joseph the president and prophet this coming year? is the earnest solicitation of my heart; in fact many of the Saints think if the Lord would once more raise up a prophet like Joseph was, they would never be troubled again in their faith; but I do not think this, for there will always be hard trials before the Saints until the coming of the Son of God in his second advent. I am enjoying the hospitality of Bro. John Richards, he is a son-in-law of Bro. Beebe, a most humble and devoted man. His wife, bright and cheerful, makes home happy by her very presence—so humble and good. Indeed a happy home is a heaven begun on earth before the millennium is ushered in by the coming of the Son of righteousness.

Thursday, January 3. I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Beebe last night. He is a good, humble Saint, and only wants the right. Has had a long experience in the church, and was well acquainted with Joseph the Prophet. He gave me three dollars to help support the publication of the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, which is to be published in Cincinnati, Ohio. Also subscribed for three copies, one to be sent to a sister, Julia Daniels, of California. He also gave me five dollars, and has let me have a horse and saddle for the remainder of the winter. It will be a great help to me, for I have been traveling these lonely prairies alone and on foot so long, it seems a god-send to me, for I did not solicit it, but it is all a volunteer act on the part of Bro. Beebe. Now I shall be able to do so much more in the vineyard of the Lord. He will surely be rewarded for his share of all the work I will do more than I could possibly accomplish if it were not for his kindness. To-day I came twenty miles to Bro. Reese Price's, nine miles north-east of Council Bluffs, and he has just been telling me of a dream, or vision as he calls it, a short time since. He says: "While I was in the vision I was instructed that the Lord had sent John Smith to his cousin, Joseph Smith, before he called Joseph to take his father's place as president of the Church of Christ." It is a very singular dream or vision (for he does not seem to know which it is), whether it means anything or not.

Thursday, January 5. I came to Council Bluffs and made appointment for meetings and put up written notices in the city in many places, worded as follows: "Revived among the True Latter Day Saints. Meeting held Sabbath, January 8, at seven o'clock in the evening in schoolhouse, district number 2. Everybody cordially invited."

Sunday, January 8. At half past ten o'clock in the morning I preached at Mr. Martin V. Follett's residence. Had a house full of listeners. After services I baptized Catherine A. and Matilda C. Follett, and Edson Runyon. I realized that Bro. Runyon had but a short time to remain with us; he has consumption and is very weak and frail. In his pleadings to me for the sacred ordinance of baptism, he said, "I want to obey the command and follow my Lord and Master, and I am not afraid the water will injure me, or the exposure will do me any harm." And sure enough, he has not seemed to be suffering any ill effect, though it is a very, very cold day, and the ice more than two feet thick where the baptism was administered, near Wix Mill. As I lifted him into the water, which was about three feet deep, or nearly to my waist, a solemn awe and sadness rested on me. I had the sensation of bells tolling at the death of a dear friend, and I realize that the dear young man will soon be in paradise. Sr. Matilda Follett is also very poorly in health, and so feeble I left her for the last one; and when I lifted her into the water a sudden feeling of joy and bright hope seem to burst upon us all. A glowing heat came over the frail, sick ones, and our wet outer garments froze and served to keep the wind from penetrating, so none of us suffered any with the bitter cold weather. This evening I had a very large audience in the city, and the blessed Spirit confirmed the word in much power and assurance. Subject, The gospel and church government, and its apostasy and reorganization, and of the especial blessing of the choice Seer, which says, "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18. So often has the power of the Holy Spirit confirmed to me the evidence of the coming of Joseph to take his father's place in the church, that I have no hesitancy in saying I know it will come to pass without doubt. Quite a number of the old Saints and many of other churches attended our meeting.

Monday, January 9. I confirmed Bro. Edson Runyon into the church with the laying on of hands according to the rules of the church, and anointed him with oil, and was very solemnly impressed by the Holy Ghost to administer the Lord's Supper to him, but did not, and regret it very much. May God forgive me for not obeying the direction of the Holy Spirit in this matter.

By this instruction also I now know the importance of this holy ordinance, as I never did before. I thank God from my very soul that Bro. Runyon is feeling very much better, for to-day I hear there are threats being made to arrest me for baptizing the poor sick young man, if there are any ill effects following his exposure and baptism; but I have no fears that the Lord will permit any such event to disturb me in ministering the sacred ordinance, hallowed and consecrated by his example, and authorized by his own command.

Tuesday, January 10. I confirmed the two sisters Follett at their father's home. Matilda has been sickly from her birth, but is feeling much better to-day.

Sunday, January 15. Held meetings in Wix Schoolhouse at half past ten in the forenoon, and in the evening at half past seven. Very large audiences both morning and evening. I think much good was done to-day to lay the foundation of our work in this city.

Tuesday, January 17. Had prayer with, and administered the sacred ordinance for the healing of the sick to Sr. Follet. She is feeling much better than she has for many years. The honor is all the Lord's. Praise his holy name.

Wednesday, January 18. I had a large audience this evening in Crescent City, seven miles north of Council Bluffs. Indeed our meeting was very interesting. So many are old members of the church, but they have been living a long time without meetings, and our hope is really new to them. But the Lord's Spirit bore testimony to the word, and all the people seemed good and honest; many of them were well acquainted with the Prophet Joseph, but since the rejection of the church they have neglected their altars and house of prayer; but I have not a doubt that we shall soon have the Reorganization planted in this place.

Thursday, January 19. I had a house full of listeners this evening at Bro. Samuel Wood's residence, three miles east of Council Bluffs. Many are beginning to appreciate and love the gospel of Christ in this neighborhood. Bless the Lord, O my soul!

Friday, January 20. Bro. and Sr. Follett make me a beautiful home. They are so kind to me, though he has lost all hope in the gospel. He says the apostasy of Brigham Young has destroyed his faith. He loved Joseph and believed he was a good man, but can not believe his son will now come to take his father's place after so long a time; for if the Lord wanted him to help the Saints he would have called him long ago, and he has lost all interest in reading and is involved in secular matters altogether. His daughter Matilda made me a present of a beautiful large scarf; one of her own make. I appreciate it very much, as it adds to my comfort while riding across these wild, sparsely settled prairies, and holding meetings nearly every evening. Often I have to go five to ten miles after services at night. And often many of my audience come five to ten miles to my meetings, from one settlement or village to another. And Sr. Matilda's present shall be noted in my diary as a benefactor to one of the little ones who is trying to make the world better because he lives in it, and to God shall be ascribed all the glory. While I have all confidence in the gospel, and not a doubt but Joseph will ere long be with us, it is indeed strange that so few are alive to the interest of the church, or are willing to make any sacrifice to build it up; but it is all my hope and joy. I appreciate every token of interest from others who are led to sacrifice to establish truth and righteousness in the world.

Sunday, January 22. At half past ten in the forenoon I held meeting again in Crescent City; had a house crowded with earnest listeners. Subject, History and spirit of the latter-day work, and the gospel of Christ restored by the angel was the all-important theme, and the only means of salvation, and what it imports to be in all its elements to sanctify and purify the soul, and our only hope. While the accursed practice of polygamy always was and is a pollution of the flesh, and a destroyer of all the finer feelings of the heart, had ever gendered strife, and every wicked work, and was prohibited by the command of God in the Book of Mormon, and called the "grosser crime," after upbraiding the people of ancient days of wicked and abominable sins. The large hall was packed with an appreciative audience, and much good done to correct the influence of Utah Mormonism. There are quite a few of their members in Western Iowa.

Bro. John A. McIntosh, of Gallands Grove, was present, and has just been telling me of his five years work preaching the gospel in the days of Joseph the Seer. "Ah," he says, "Bro. Briggs, they were the happiest years of my life. I was on a mission when Joseph was killed, and when I came home to Nauvoo in the fall of that sad year, and found Brigham Young at the head of the church there, teaching and practicing polygamy privately, and denying it publicly, I was angry, and for a time I could not govern my feelings, and I cursed and swore; I was heart-broken and in despair. I felt all was lost and those innocent souls I had brought into the church would be disgraced or leave the church and be lost, and I felt so bad and distressed in mind I went into the world to forget and drown my trouble. I knew Joseph Smith was a pure, truthful man of God, and taught holiness and virtue; and now to have the blackest crime of whoredom taught, pleading the example of David and Solomon as evidence of its divinity, was more than I could endure. I often gave way to tears and then again I would tip-toe and swear; and then again I would pray and seek forgiveness. One night I had a dream or vision that comforted me, though I could not understand it then. In my dream I thought I saw an angel and he came to me with a pillow-slip, or pillow-case, as some call it. It was beautiful and white, and inside of it was another case more beautiful, and finer than the first or outside one. The angel said to me, 'There is a precious pearl for you inside of these cases provided you can get it safely in your hand, and take it out; but you must be very careful or you will lose it by allowing it to slip out of your hand, but if you can get it out, all right; you have secured eternal life.' I stripped up my sleeve and took hold of the mouth of the pillow-slip and was very careful to keep it tightly around my hand, wrist, and arm, until I firmly grasped the precious pearl in my hand, and then carefully took it out of the case. The angel stood by me, and saw me take it out; he then exclaimed, 'You have now secured eternal life in the kingdom of God.' When I came to myself, I felt that the dream or vision was from God. The two linen cases mean the two priesthoods, the precious pearl was the gospel of Christ. But the personage was dressed in a black suit of clothes, and I could not understand that. For years the dream would often come to my mind, and give me comfort during the dark and cloudy storm of apostasy that has come over the church since the days of Joseph. When you asked the blessing at my table the first time you were there, my dream flashed into my mind, and I knew you were the person I had seen in the vision, and all my joy and comfort in the gospel returned to me, which I had experienced when I used to preach in the days of Joseph. Why, Bro. Briggs, I saw you in the vision just as plain as I see you now."

It does me good to hear Bro. McIntosh talk of his acquaintance with the Seer and early experiences in the church. He is a good man. In the dark and cloudy days of apostasy he may have drifted with the world, but his every experience now indicates that he has been an honest man all the time, and grieved at heart through the latter-day apostasy. This evening he preached a good, soul-cheering gospel sermon, interspersed with his early experiences in the church, and I am assured he is going to do a good work in Western Iowa; for all his neighbors and extensive acquaintances and the old Saints have great confidence in him as a man of integrity and sterling worth, and he is an honored justice in his township.

Friday, January 24. I held meeting at eight o'clock in the evening at Bro. Philip Gaytroth's residence; large congregation; much interest manifest by Saints and their neighbors who were present. Bro. McIntosh bore testimony of the work, and comforted my heart as he compared my efforts with the blessed work in the early days of the church.

Wednesday, January 25. This evening we held meeting at Bro. Joseph Bardsley's. His son took my horse to notify his neighbors of our appointment, and several came, but the boy has not returned, and a snow-storm is raging furiously; a real western blizzard. We think perhaps he has stopped at some of the neighbors over night, but I confess I feel very anxious about the boy. His parents seem to have no fears about their child, so I will try and dismiss all fear for his safety.

We had a good meeting; quite a number present. Bro. John makes it very interesting with his lively conversation during the night. He was in the Southern States on his last mission in 1844, preaching the gospel, and also trying to raise money to print the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures. When he last saw Joseph, he was very anxious to have it published. It is so very stormy and dark that the brethren and sisters can not go home. I am so tired the dear people make room for me, and I retire twenty-five minutes to two in the morning.

Thursday, January 26. This morning Bro. Bardsley's son has returned home with my horse; he was lost on the prairie, so he stopped, and, standing in the storm all night, held my horse, and in the morning he was only three fourths of a mile from home. Well, we are all glad to see him; he had a tedious night of it, standing near the horse for a windbreak. Most of the audience sat up all night, as there was no room for lodging. We are at New Morton's, which is near the Lone Tree in Pottawattamie County, Iowa. To-day I went to Union Grove and held services at Bro. Samuel Wood's; good large audience. Bro. McIntosh is a very great help to me in all my meetings.

Friday, January 27. Elder J. A. McIntosh preached an interesting discourse on first principles of the gospel at Bro. Kirkpatrick's; all the Saints enjoyed it very much. January 28 he returned home to Gallands Grove.

Sabbath, January 29. Elder Jones preached at the schoolhouse on the first principles of the gospel. I appreciate the word delivered by others very much, as I seldom have the opportunity of hearing others since Elder Blair left me for his home. In the evening I again held preaching service at Bro. Wood's. Subject, Resurrection of the dead.

Gallands Grove, Iowa, January 30, 1860. I arrived at Bro. J. A. McIntosh's after a tedious ride in the cold. Found him in the best of spirits and hope in the reorganization of the church. And to my surprise here is the first number of the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD. Have read it with much interest, though disappointed and sorry to find the letter of Elder I. Sheen of October 9, 1852, taken from the Cincinnati Commercial. He says the Book of Mormon condemns ancient as well as modern polygamy. The Salt Lake apostles also excuse themselves by saying that Joseph Smith taught the spiritual wife doctrine, but this excuse is as weak as their excuse concerning the ancient kings and patriarchs. Joseph Smith repented of his connection with this doctrine and said it was of the Devil. He caused the revelation on this subject to be burned.

Every public utterance and printed statement of Joseph, and Hyrum, his brother, before their cruel martyrdom, attests the fact that they never favored it in the least degree. But Bro. Sheen's letter in this first number of the HERALD will be used by our enemies against the true position of the Reorganization in relation to Joseph being responsible for that accursed doctrine. Bro. Sheen must have given credence to Young's lie, when he said, "Emma burned it." Emma told me she never saw such a revelation until it was published by Pratt in the Seer. Young says she burned it; and now Elder Sheen says Joseph had it burned. That is a new statement and the first I had heard of it.

I have met thousands of the old members of the church who were well acquainted with Joseph, and yet I never saw a man who heard Joseph teach polygamy; but they said that they had heard him denounce it as a corrupt doctrine.

In the Times and Seasons for two years we had been warned against that abomination by Joseph and Hyrum Smith; and they took great pains to denounce it as a corrupt and wicked practice. And it is evident from Elder Marks' letter in this same HERALD that Joseph never had any affiliation with it; and proposed immediately to make a thorough investigation and find out who were in any way favoring it, and cut them off from the church. Bro. Marks said this to me personally, referring to his talk with President Smith upon this conversation set out in this HERALD. He has not given it in full as he did to me. I said to him, "Did you, when you had that conversation with Bro. Joseph, think he had been in any way mixed up in polygamy, or had favored it?" He replied, "No. I had more confidence in him at that time than I ever had in all my life before, and was satisfied that he was pure from that gross crime. I had been troubled over the condition of the church for some time, and been fearful that Joseph did not bring the pressure against some men in the church that he should have done. You see from John C. Bennett's time there had been so many rumors going the rounds, I was fearful that there might be something in the stories afloat that might implicate Joseph. But Joseph was so free and positive in his denunciation of polygamy in every form, that I took courage; and I could see Joseph was in earnest and felt just as I did about it. But before the Sunday following our conversation, Joseph was having his suit, and he was killed before he had a chance to commence his investigation against those whom he had suspicioned of teaching it privily. But I thought he had been deceived in some of the men and elders of the church, and had too much confidence in some of them. But I guess it was to be so to fulfill the Scriptures in relation to the latter-day apostasy."

I then said, "Bro. Marks, did you ever see the revelation on polygamy before it was published in 1852 by Mr. Pratt?" Marks emphatically replied, "No, never."

"You were president of the stake at Nauvoo, and if Joseph had such a revelation, would you not have been privileged, according to custom, to have seen it, or heard of it?" He replied, "Yes, without a doubt. There was no such revelation in existence during Joseph's life. Brigham Young and his clique got that up after Joseph's death; for if there had been any such revelation in existence when I lived in Nauvoo, just after Joseph's death, Brigham Young would have showed it to me when I opposed his measures. But he never pretended to any such thing to me, that there was such a revelation on the subject from Joseph."

Another mistake I notice in this HERALD. New organization! I never heard that name before applied to the Reorganization. The word new contradicts the idea that has always been understood by us as a church. The term reorganization conveys the idea that the church has been disorganized and is now again being established as it was before; but not another thing or system which had never been before.

I am sorry on account of these errors. They are evidently the errors of Bro. Sheen, who has but lately united with the church. But I am really sorry that they are in the first HERALD. Our enemies will take advantage of them to do us an injury, if possible. May God help us is my fervent prayer. For the sake of the lambs of the church, right, only right, is all I want. By the grace of God helping me, for that will I ever contend while God gives me breath, in all these matters that affect our glorious church. Amen.

Well, I am glad in my heart to see the HERALD, and know the church has a paper to give the current news of the progress of the work being done by our ministers. It has the minutes of the October conference in it, and am sorry to see that Bro. Blair is appointed "to travel as circumstances might permit." That means he is still hindered, so he can do but little ministerial work in the vineyard of the Lord, except local work this winter, on account of financial embarrassment. Bro. William Marks to visit Western Iowa, but I hardly think he will come to our help this winter. Bro. Samuel Powers and Z. H. Gurley, I know their circumstances, and they will do but little traveling, and my brother Jason is doing but little local work, preaching in his own neighborhood. That leaves me the only missionary in the vineyard of the Lord, a minute man, to labor all the time in all this wide world, without anything to hinder; thank God, I am willing and anxious to do all I can to move the cause of Zion. But I must take courage and press on, for I have splendid audiences most of the time; crowded houses of eager, hungering souls, starving for the words of God. Bro. McIntosh this evening has given me many interesting incidents of his early experience in the church in the days of Joseph, also that the gifts of the Holy Ghost were with him daily in all his ministry for five years. He says the worst persecutions always came from professors of the sectarian churches. "There was nothing too low for them to report against us, and they would send their reports ahead of us to prejudice the people so they would not come to hear the gospel. But we always got the ears of the thinking people. Why, one time I went into a neighborhood and they reported a mob had killed me in the place I had come from. When I returned from my last mission in 1844, Joseph was a martyr, and the whole church seemed so changed in spirit at Nauvoo, from what it was when I left on my last mission. Many of the best Saints were leaving the city and scattering everywhere. My whole soul revolted at the usurpation of Brigham Young, ruling in despotic arrogance; I was crushed in my spirit; I remembered those dear, innocent souls I had brought into the church, and knew they were doomed to disappointment, deception, and perhaps be led into the vile practice of polygamy. Their wicked deception while practicing it in secret and denying it publicly, and I always did detest a liar, caused me to weep, and I cursed and swore. Finally I got into despair and wandered off into the world in darkness until you visited me last summer, and when I saw you bless the bread at my table I recognized you as the one I had seen years ago in a vision, who brought a precious pearl to me in a pillow-slip. Thank God, I now see light again, as I did in the days of Joseph, and I will try to redeem all the time I possibly can to make up for my wild days in sin during the dark and cloudy days of the latter-day apostasy."

It is interesting to hear the old veteran rehearse his experiences as a young man in this wonderful work of God. If he has been in the dark and wilderness during the great trial that came to the church in 1844, he has been an honorable man all the time, as attested by his neighbors, as they say, "If Uncle John McIntosh has done wrong it has only been to himself; he has never injured any one else." I predict success and much good for our blessed cause through his labors, for he has the confidence of all his neighbors and acquaintances, far and near, and he is endowed with a goodly portion of the Holy Spirit.

Tuesday, January 31. Visited Bro. Alexander McCord. He is alive in the faith of the gospel of Christ, and was well acquainted with Joseph in Nauvoo. He sold Brigham Young a wagon, but never could get his pay for it; also enlisted in the Mormon Battalion and went to the Mexican War in 1847. He says, "After Brigham Young solemnly promised to see that my family was well taken care of, if I would enlist, Brigham Young got all the money from the Government for my services! All my family ever got from him was a piece of sole-leather, and I was mustered out of the army in California and managed to get back to Iowa as best I could." He is an honorable man and well-to-do now, and has a welcome home for our elders. Himself and wife are warm-hearted Latter Day Saints, and have a nice family of children. I also visited Bro. Strong, who is a real, earnest Latter Day Saint.

Wednesday, February 1. This morning Bro. Strong gave me Brown's Pocket Concordance of the Bible. I shall appreciate it very much, with thankfulness. It will be handy as a ready reference help. I am so busy all the time I do not have time to read and study the Bible as much as I would like. I also came to Bigler's Grove to-day and visited Mr. McHenry. His wife is a daughter of Bro. William Marks and a member of the church, and expresses much joy on hearing of the revival of the work, and seems to realize that once more her father is alive in it as in the days of Joseph. It is like home to me; she is an excellent, intelligent woman, and loves the gospel. He is worldly and indifferent, but very kind to me. They have a comfortable home. She used to be in Nauvoo and was well acquainted with Bro. Joseph, and Emma, the Prophet's wife. She bears a wonderfully good testimony of the Smith family. She says they were true and pure-minded children of God, and Joseph was a prophet of the Most High. She has a bright little niece living with her, and as I look at the little one it seems sad to think she has no affectionate mother to caress her, as only an own mother can. I do not wonder God says in his law to Moses, if the orphan mourn at all I will hear it, and Jesus says, Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. I love little children, and especially those who have no precious parents to affectionately cherish them.

Thursday, February 2. I called on Bro. J. M. Adams. He used me very kindly, but is opposed to the Reorganization, and prophesied to me, in the name of the Lord, that the Church of Christ will never be organized among the Gentiles again, for he was commanded of the Lord five years ago to preach the funeral sermon of the Church of Christ. His argument is that the church will never be organized again until the seed of Jacob, or the Lamanites, receive the gospel; and the blessing of Joseph referred to in the revelation of 1841, is the blessing of the Nauvoo House, and is not his blessing in the priesthood. He is a good social man and has a nice family and is comfortably situated, but he is blind spiritually as midnight darkness. Personally prepossessing, I really love the man, but can not see any deliverance for him. It is a fearful thing for those once enlightened and who have known the power of the gospel, to then be led astray by false spirits.

The sectarian popular churches are led by their fellow men, and deny the gifts of the Holy Spirit that lead into all truth; are all in the dark through the former-day apostasy. But the latter-day apostasy has left the bewildered unfortunate ones to be led by wicked spirits and devils.

I feel very sad to-day when I look out on the religious world and see deception following deception in every land and nation. The infidel and atheist fold up their arms and say, We are free men, for we do not believe in religion. But how barren, indeed, are such men, who have no hope in God or a future life!

THE CHRISTIAN'S TREE OF LIFE.

A THEORY.

The Savior came into the world for a certain well-defined purpose; which was to restore to the sons of God that which was lost through Adam. Among the things that were lost was the right to the tree of life, which, in the following, I will try and show how it was restored. "And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup and gave thanks and said, Take this and divide it among yourselves; for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come. And he took bread and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you. This do in remembrance of me."—Luke 22: 15.

"Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled. Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you."—John 6: 26.

Is it not evident that the Savior alludes to the eucharist, the great grace? First, we have "Labor not for that meat which perisheth." Then labor for "that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." Is not the inference plain? The hearers so understood him, as is evident from their reply; "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Their argument is, how can you give us bread that will keep our bodies in perpetual existence? Why, God himself gave our fathers bread from heaven, and they are dead, yet you say that you can give us bread that will perpetuate our existence for ever. Are you greater than the God of our fathers? We must remember that the people regarded him as the son of Joseph the carpenter and a great taururgist, nothing more. Jesus understood them, and not telling them that they were mistaken, that he did not mean to be understood literally, replied: "Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world. Then said they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread." The World's Sunrise replied: "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." He continues: "You say, your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead." And, although a God-given bread it could not preserve them unto eternal physical endurance; but I offer you that bread which will keep your bodies in eternal endurance. "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, . . . if any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I give for the life of the world." Understanding this literally, as indeed Jesus intended they should; the Jews argued among themselves, asking each other, "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" Jesus said unto them, "Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of man, and drink of the blood, ye have no life in you." Though they had physical life, yet it could not endure for ever. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

"There, now you've done it," exclaims some good brother. Evidently Jesus meant that they would not be left in the grasp of death, but be resurrected at the last day to a glorious life of immortality. Just so, but what of those who have not partaken of the divine emblems of the Christian's Tree of Life; for according to this, none but those who have partaken of it will be raised up at the last day?

To the writer it means that though we, who do partake and fail to fulfill the whole law of righteousness, fail to live the righteous life that Melchisedec, Elijah, and Jesus did, hence we come under the Adamic penalty. The divine Master will rescue us from the power of death and bestow upon us the gift of eternal life of the physical body, therefore we become sons and daughters of God, being born of the Spirit. "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." They have been born again, born of the spirit, as Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

"He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him." This in-dwelling, according to the Master's words, can only be accomplished by and through partaking of the Christian's Tree of Life. By eating the flesh and drinking the blood of the the Master of Life, it becomes a portion of our physical organization, and as it is the divine feast, it most certainly should be renewed every Lord's day. The body is never without a portion of the Divine One. And as the Master is possessed of eternal endurance of the body, how can those in whom he dwells and who fulfill the law of righteousness succumb to death? "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." Here again the World's Consoler compares himself to the Tree of Life, of which the first Adam was deprived, "Lest he put forth his hand and take also of the Tree of Life, and eat, and live for ever," continuing in possession of physical life.

This living Father is the Great First Cause, who hath life inherent in himself, unbestowed, underived. Life itself and the source of life to all, the source of cosmic energy, by and through whom the vast Cosmos, the Universe of universes originated, lives, moves, and has being. "He is in the sun, and light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2, 3.

This living Father hath bestowed the same power upon the Savior. For as the living Father hath life inherent in himself so also hath he bestowed it upon the Son. I have apparently digressed somewhat, but this seemed to be the place to introduce the claim concerning the living God. To resume:

Many of the disciples hearing this teaching and understanding it literally said, "This is a hard saying [strong doctrine] who can hear [believe it]?" Jesus did not tell them that it was not to be understood literally, not even to prevent them from rejecting him. For "from that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him."

Surely, if the Master had meant these teachings to be understood in a spiritual sense he would have told them so and kept them from rejecting the only way to be saved; but he did no such thing, on the contrary he simply turned to the twelve and asked them, "Will ye also go away?" Evidently meaning, is this doctrine too strong for you or do ye still need to be fed upon milk? "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"—John 11:25. Here again the Master teaches the "hard doctrine" and asks the woman if she believes it. Paul says: "Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh condemnation to himself. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."—1 Corinthians 11: 27, 29, 30. What are we to conclude from this teaching of one of the greatest of the apostles, the especial minister of the Gentile church of Christ?

Is it not evident that if they had not eaten and drank unworthily of the sacred emblems—the Christian's Tree of Life—they would not have been sickly, that their bodies would have been maintained in health to a ripe old age, perhaps to the patriarchal limit, even though they had not fulfilled the whole law of righteousness, and if eaten in the purity of holiness they would have been preserved from decay and the consequent death of the body?

Again, Paul says: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised [reëmbodied] incorruptible, and we shall be changed." If the Saints will not all sleep, what is it will keep them alive? Of course this is to be at the second advent, nevertheless the argument holds good. They do not die. They, according to the reading, are changed from bodies mortal to bodies immortal. Their bodies of flesh and bone and blood are freed from the ultimate of natural law. Decay and disintegration have no power over them. But why do these particular saints escape the penalty? Evidently, because they have fulfilled the conditions of the law and eaten and drank of the divine tree of life worthily and have been sanctified and made holy and meet for the fullness of the redemption achieved by the second Adam.

Was the sacrifice on Calvary full and complete or but partial? If it was full and complete, then death was fully and completely conquered, and man can through absolute purity of life and faith and in obedience to the teachings of a resurrected Savior reap the full and complete fruit of the redemption brought to pass by the world's great Consoler. If, on the other hand, it was but partial then death was not fully conquered, so far as the saints are concerned, and, I write it in all reverence, and almost in fear and trembling, our God is helpless, while seeing his saints whose lives have been pure and holy, sanctified to his cause, overcome and slain by his adversary.

It may be said in reply, the time will come when death will be completely conquered and the saints of God completely rescued from his grasp. Nevertheless the memory of having been vanquished and kept from entering their Father's kingdom clad upon with the royal robe, the wedding garment, will ever remain, as with the sons and daughters of Job, of whom some were slain, others taken into captivity.

The fact of their father's increased wealth and prosperity did not repay them for their sufferings. So with the saints, an eternity of bliss will not efface the fact that they, after having been washed clean in the blood of the Lamb and obeyed the Lord to the very utmost of their power, and had been assured of immunity from death, were finally conquered and held prisoners for ages? No, either the sacrifice on Calvary was full and complete, or it was but partial.

In conclusion, either the eucharist, great grace, was given to replace the Tree of Life, or there is no particular meaning to it, for the "This do in remembrance of me," was needless to those who went forth preaching the gospel. They could not forget him or his teachings and needed no such reminder. The fact is that the true teachings of the Master have been lost, buried beneath a mass of contradictory stuff, fables invented or imagined in the brains of the pagan followers of Christ, the Simon Stylites and others of the first, second, third, and fourth centuries, and probably much later. Some relic of the truth is yet apparent in the practice of the Romish church in administering the sacrament to those supposed to be dying. Did the exoteric Christian churches understand what the eucharist is intended for, they would realize that the days of healing the sick and restoring to, and preserving our bodies in health are far, very far from being done away with.

I commenced this article as a theory, which, as the reader knows, is an argument founded upon certain things which seem to lead to a certain conclusion.

If there be no well-grounded truths to sustain the argument, it remains in the realm of theory, but if there be one, two, three, or four well-established facts sustaining it, it is lifted out of the realm of theory and becomes a fact.

One Night's Session of General Conference.

AS REPORTED BY ALICE E. COBB.

The great stone church is lighted
From base to steeple vane;
No niche or nook is slighted,
But every window pane
From out its rainbow tinting
Emits a lambent ray,
That sparkling, glowing, glinting,
Turns darkness into day.

To see the stone walls glistening,
The church dome all aglow,
Gives one a mood for listening,
And thitherward we go.
The sacred threshold crossing,
(With zeal and faith increased,)
Sweet thoughts come, soul engrossing,
Of Christ, our Great High Priest.

He seems so near and gracious!
Here pews and speech are free!

The shrine seems grandly spacious!

And presently we see
Through open doors fast pouring
(Not called by burnished bell)
A happy throng, adoring
The God of Israel.

Ere long may be heard pealing
From many hundred pipes
Deep mystic tones, not sealing
Old Jewish rites and types,
But gladsome music thrilling
The soul with metered rhyme,
Till tongues are moved to trilling
In melody sublime.

Soon ceaseth the vibration
Of organ peal, and now
In humble adoration
The worshipers all bow,
Attempting to get nearer
The cross to which they cling,
To greet the souls Prime Cheerer
Our Everlasting King.

When comes pathetic ending
By softly breathed amen,
Then voice and pipe tones blending
Will sweetly ring again.
And when as though petitioned
All music murmurs cease,
A man steps forth commissioned
By Christ, the Prince of Peace.

With pathos, power, and pleasure
He wields the two-edged sword,
Quotes scripture without measure,
To deify our Lord.
He tells the grand old story,
Repeating o'er and o'er
That Christ, the King of glory,
Is King for evermore.

He preaches on, expounding
The gospel as a whole,
With reasoning astounding
He talketh to the soul;
Words flowing fast and faster
By spirit power are hurled,
Declaring our dear Master
The Savior of the world.

He pictures out in plainness
The Father's matchless love!
The Son's life pure and stainless!
The message from above!
Proving true that priesthood powers
Within God's servants dwell,
And that o'er this church of ours
Reigns King Immanuel.

Our souls for truth are yearning,
And knowledge like a stream
Flows fast, and we are learning
The glorious gospel scheme.
Angelic hosts seem posing
To aid our mental force;
But, all too soon in closing
The eloquent discourse.

The mystic spell is broken,
The closing anthem sung,
The benediction spoken,
The wide doors open flung;

Out through the spreading portals
The congregation throngs,
Rejoiced that trusting mortals
May come with prayers and songs

Into this sacred building,
So near the Temple site
That lights herefrom are gilding
Its verdant sod to-night.
Our footsteps homeward trending,
Our thoughts are backward cast,
And deftly they keep blending
The present with the past.

Memory sheds a lurid ray
O'er scenes almost forgot
As we slowly wend our way
Beside the Temple Lot;
Steps toward home not half complete
When words of old re-sound,
"Take your shoes from off your feet,
For this is holy ground."

Ah, truly we are treading
Where martyrs' feet have pressed!
These same fair skies outspreading
Once sheltered God's oppressed.
These verdant hills so sightly
Threw back across these vales
The echoes that rose nightly
From little childrens' wails.

O'er these broad plains so cheery,
Where fruits and grains are culled,
Once women wandering weary,
Their moaning babies lulled.
But God, who heard the groaning
And witnessed the distress,
Hath said there'll be atoning
For deeds of wickedness.

Then let his message bearers
Enlarge the gospel scope,
Be watchful, willing sharers
Of Zion's precious hope.
Let Saints strive on, observing
Laws of the great I Am,
And all unite in serving
The God of Abraham.

Yes, stand firm! be not ensnared
By foes or woes, or wrongs;
Be with vibrant voice prepared
To chant the gleeful songs
That every ransomed sinner sings
(When Jesus crowned shall be Lord of lords and King of kings)
Throughout eternity.

Pinhole Photography.

Photography without a lens would seem at first glance to be impossible. It is so generally understood that for good work a good lens is necessary that it is scarcely credible that some of the finest photographic work is obtained without the use of a lens at all, merely by the aid of a minute hole in the side of a light-tight box, which is arranged to contain a sensitive plate. But the practicability of this method of photography is amply proved by the fine specimens that accompany an article on the subject, by Juan C. Abel, in the May Delineator. One of the distinct advantages of pinhole photography is the slight expense incurred in apparatus; any kind of a light-tight box will suffice, provided it can be opened to insert the plate. Explicit directions for procedure are given in the article.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Thou knowest, Lord, the weariness and sorrow
Of the sad heart that comes to thee for rest—
Cares of to-day and burdens for to-morrow,
Blessings implored and sins to be confessed;
I come before thee at thy gracious word,
And lay them at thy feet, thou knowest, Lord."

The Young Girl in the Home.

A college graduate, however profound and brilliant, however fully furnished mentally, is hardly fitted to be an all-around woman, whose lot it may be either to marry a man of small means or to administer the affairs of a millionaire's household, unless she practically understands cooking, catering and general home management. Nor may the twentieth-century spinster dispense with this excellent knowledge, and particularly to-day when the trend of young girls is away from house service and toward factory and shop there is a demand for the fullest possible training of the mistress, in order that her maids may remain in her employ and domestic service with its obvious advantages for women cease to be shunned by wage-earners.

Never will our girl of fifteen more readily and more delightfully take the first steps in this department than in an interval saved from school at one end and college at the other and utilized to the best attainments by an accomplished mother.

Fifteen takes its perplexities very seriously and grieves without restraint over its sorrows. Never was there a greater mistake than to suppose that early girlhood is a season of unalloyed pleasure. To many girls it is a time of restlessness, of quicksands and reefs, of romantic dreams which bring only disappointments and of poignant pain to sensitive natures which are wounded because misunderstood.

The reserves of girlhood are an unfathomed sea. For no reason which she can explain, the young girl often withholds her thoughts and fancies from her parents and folds herself in secrecy, like a rosebud not yet ready to bloom. It may be that her mother, who is her natural confidante, has been so busy and so cumbered with outside service in the church and society, that she has lost her hold upon her child, and when this occurs it is a deplorable misfortune. For a daughter's first refuge should be her mother, her next best shield her father. Now and then it happens that a much occupied father understands his little girl in a subtle way uncomprehended by her mother. Her inexperience needs a guide, and she must be piloted over and across the perils which lie between her and the happy days awaiting her farther on. The two watchwords of her life are sympathy and freedom, and she needs both in equal measure.

Every young girl can not arrange her life as she desires. With severe endeavor and splendid self-denial some daughters of the mountain farm and of the city tenement secure a college education; but others must early begin to assist their families by their own toil. In the great shops of our cities, and in every factory town, scores and hundreds of very young girls go to their daily vocations and bring home their weekly stipend to help clothe and feed the younger children and to ease the load which hard-working parents carry. The accidents of circumstance do not materially affect the character of the girl of fifteen except that outside life and hard work as a rule mature her early.

Exposed to the rougher winds of fortune, to the greater publicity, she is not to be the less shielded, but rather the more, by her parents and friends. As a rule the mother of the young working girl is alive to the need of caring for her during her evenings and holidays and all honor should be given to women, themselves weary with long hours of labor, who mother their young daughters as sedulously as do mothers who move in a different sphere, with homes of plenty and the ease of a long purse at command.

A room of her own, as tastefully appointed and comfortably furnished as possible, should be every young girl's retreat. Here she may enjoy the half hours for devotion which tend to the soul's growth, and may read and study and entertain a girl friend and be as independent of the rest of the family as she pleases. In this, her den, her nook, her bower, her special fancies may be indulged and her individuality find fit expression.

If a girl admit me to her room, I need no other interpreter of her character. Her daintiness, her delicacy, her fondness for art, her little fads and caprices are here revealed. Does she care for athletics, her room tells the story. Her mandolin or banjo, her books on the swinging shelf, her desk, her dressing-table explains her, for wherever we live we set our seal, and this unconsciously. The untidy girl keeps her room in a chaos and confusion: it looks as if swept by a small cyclone. The orderly and fastidious girl has a place for each belonging and puts it there without effort and without fuss. As for the room itself, it may be plain to bareness, or beautifully luxurious, a cell, or a shrine, it owes its grace or lack of charm more to its occupant than to its paper and paint, its bed and bureau, its rug and chairs.

When a mother can not give her young daughter a whole room for herself, she should at least contrive for her a little sanctuary, by means of screens and curtains. Some one spot where she may rest the sole of her foot, should belong to the young girl, if only a corner under the stairs, or a good-sized closet with a window and door.

With its delicate papering of rose-pink or robin's-egg blue, its furnishings in white, its rocking-chair, its table, its sheer muslin draperies, its simple engravings on the wall, its cups and saucers that she may give her chum a cup of tea or chocolate, the girl's room need cost little in money. All the good things in this world do not depend on gold and silver, nor need we resign our right to beautiful surroundings because we must keep a strict rein upon expenditure and have an eye to ways and means. Unless a young woman learns early to make the most of her little in hand, she will never be successful when she has a large sum in her stewardship.—Margaret E. Sangster, in the Winsome Womanhood.

Never Be Little Again.

Oh bring yourself down to your little one's grief
And give to his infantile troubles relief;
Don't turn him away with a word and a frown,
Though he seems like a cross he will turn to a crown.
The "mother boys" always have made the best men—
And they'll never be little again.

Don't spend all your time over fashion's demands,
Or over the heathen in far-away lands;
Tho' well in their way they can never compare
With the good you may do to the children you bear.
They may go from you, too, and you can not tell when—
And they'll never be little again.

It will not be lost, all the care you bestow,
When unto the years of discretion they grow;
They will be the kinder when you are grown old,
Your day will go down in a sunset of gold.
The reward of your toil it will come to you then—
But they'll never be little again.—Isabel Richey.

How May the Sunday-School be Kept "Evergreen?"

Doubtless you will decide long before I am through that a very green author was chosen for an evergreen subject. If so, we have one thought in common.

When we think of an evergreen Sunday-school, we think of one that has life, made so by the influence of the Holy Spirit. A school that draws its life from on high is not content to tread the same paths year in and year out, but believes in "expansion" in growing and absorbing all good, and making itself felt for good in the world.

The place of meeting does not necessarily need to be in some beautiful building, cleanliness and order being most essential. If the Spirit's presence abides there, the surroundings will be forgotten, for God has a way of his own in causing us to forget earth and earthly things and causing our minds to be fixed on him.

Since the main characteristic of an evergreen Sunday-school is life, a live set of officers and teachers must be forthcoming. The very best to be had should be sought after and chosen, not in haste but after due consideration and much prayer. The superintendent should understand the needs of a Sunday-school and be capable of devising ways and means beneficial to the whole body.

In addition to this the superintendent should be humble, full of faith and good works, one that can inspire officers, teachers, and scholars to higher and nobler things. Such a one will be filled with love for the work, and nothing short of success will crown his efforts.

Each officer should be willing to do his part, indeed much success in the school is measured by willingness of each member of the whole body. How grateful one always feels when asking some one to fill a vacancy for the day, to receive the response, "Yes, I will do the best I can."

It doesn't really seem necessary to say anything about teachers making a thorough preparation of the lessons from week to week. Of course it is expected they will acquaint themselves with all facts in the lessons, and by faithful attendance at teachers' meetings, come to a uniformity of thought, that no conflict may come in the teaching, and aside from this, they should delve for something bearing on the lesson not mentioned in the Quarterly. It will tend to hold and increase an interest. It should also be remembered that "Turning the logs makes a dull fire burn," and that "Variety is the spice of life." So occasional changes in the presentation of lessons and reviews prove beneficial.

Officers and teachers do not make the school by any means. They need the cooperation of fathers and mothers, such ones as will manifest an interest by their own and their children's presence. We deplore the lack of interest on the part of parents in Sunday-school throughout the church. What an increase of life they might give to an evergreen Sunday-school.

Some one has said that "Children are tiny feathers from the wings of love dropped in the sacred lap of motherhood." The innocents are sent from a law of love, and how sacred the task of caring for one of these little ones. Oh, the weight of responsibility that rests upon parents. The children are lent to us for a term of years, that we may develop all that is good and noble within them, indeed it is part of our life work to mold or mar, which shall it be? If we instill in their minds principles of truth, we also "will grow in grace and in a knowledge of the truth."

These little ones must be handed back to the Father at some time, it may be a few short years, more or less, and as the child is so the man will be, and how can we better prepare them for their homeward journey, than teaching them in their childhood, to have faith in God the Father, and Christ his Son, and where can it be taught so well as in an evergreen Sunday-school. It is true they can be taught at home, but much good will be lost by lack of association and exchange of ideas.

All that will come may come, and should be made to see the stamp of welcome on the face of each officer and teacher. Careless or indifferent scholars should be made to feel that their absence is noticed with regret. They should be labored with, and we think it commendable to request the whole school to remember in prayer the negligent ones.

Remember at all times the efficacy of prayer; scholars pray for the teachers, teachers pray for the scholars, teachers and scholars pray for the officers, and the officers pray for the whole school, that the Holy Spirit may be the source of life or fountain-head from whence the school may draw its sustenance and prove itself ever green.

Examples in punctuality, cheerfulness, patience, kindness, enthusiasm, and a degree of firmness, should stand in bold relief before the school at all times. Onward and upward should be their aim.

Music is an important factor in Sunday-school and fortunate indeed if willing material for an organist and chorister may be had. Music has the power to uplift and draw all mankind nearer to their Maker. Since it is the language of emotion, the proper kind will often bring the good within us to the surface, causing us to forget for a time our trials and cares, bringing cheerfulness and good-will, which but prove as guide-posts on our journey of life.

What child or even "grown-up" does not enjoy marching to and from class work? And who shall say that it does not help to develop the keen sense the little ones already have of the law of order. Surely music helps to keep the school "evergreen."

We will speak of one evil that may creep in unawares and sap the life of the school. It is the deadly poison envy. We should remember that through envy Cain slew Abel, Christ our Redeemer was persecuted and cruelly hanged on a tree. Many similar instances might be mentioned, and we realize to our sorrow that much of it exists in our ranks to-day. We plead again, that you remember that prayer unlocks the doors of heaven, and this evil and everything conducive to its growth may be rooted up, and the Spirit of love planted instead, enabling us to keep the Sunday-school evergreen and by continuing in that love the evergreen features will manifest themselves.

After all,

We must not forget, that man is mortal still,
And evil sometimes comes against our will,
But if we bear and forbear with another
We'll work in unity and love together.
Now if we have aided any, we have done our part.
It was hard for us to make the start,
But by example to prove our teaching true,
We led by prayer, then wrote this unto you.
We hope from this, some thoughts you will glean
To prove your school an evergreen.

Schmidt-Free Debate.

Pursuant to arrangement the above-named gentlemen met in the Brighamite hall, corner Payne and Belden Streets, Cleveland, Ohio, Monday eve, April 6, to measure the claims of their respective societies by the standard books of the church. The debate continued six sessions, three of which were given to the investigation of the Reorganized Church, and three to the claims of the Brighamite Church.

Elder E. P. Schmidt represented the Reorganization, selecting the undersigned for his moderator. Elder Free defended the doctrines of the Utah church, with Elder Walker as his moderator. The arguments began, continued, and closed without a third party as chairman. The propositions debated are as follows:

FIRST PROPOSITION

"Resolved that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true church, and that its president, Joseph Smith, was, and is the true and legal successor of his father in church presidency, and that said church is in harmony with the teachings of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, given through Joseph Smith, Jr., and also according to authentic history, in faith and practice." E. P. Schmidt affirmed; Elder Free denied.

SECOND PROPOSITION

"Resolved that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, is the true church, and that Brigham Young was the true and legal successor of Joseph Smith, Jr., in church presidency; and that said church is in harmony with the teachings of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, given through Joseph Smith, Jr.; and also according to authentic history, in faith and practice." J. R. Free affirmed; E. P. Schmidt denied.

Both disputants are young men, in fact just merging from boyhood. The grounds were canvassed very nicely by the Reorganized representative, and the claims of his proposition were doubly demonstrated; but the Utah men, who through rebellion inhabit the land of salt, do not yet see "when good cometh."

Nine elders of the Brighamite hierarchy attended throughout, and I doubt if the oldest has yet reached thirty years of age. The spirit manifested through them is arrogant, brassy, and impudent; the old, dark spirit of apostasy. How sorry I felt for those young men! Brought up under the blighting influence of corrupt leaders, envired by a dark and misty atmosphere, their entire life so far, gone wrong,—abnormal, wrong in most every relation, and they young, presents proof monumental that the fountain is impure, else the stream would be different.

Elder Schmidt knocked him out on every proposition, principal and subordinate, but they could not see it. Polygamy, Adam-god, and blood-atonement were publicly and persistently defended by these elders. Two reporters were on hand every session, and the Plain-Dealer and Leader were quite fair, especially the Leader. Reporter for this latter paper has a mind of his own, and soon held the right in a tilt with the Brighamites. Srs. Emma and Lyle Warnock, stenographers, were kind in assisting along the lines, and gave a decided advantage.

The debate was not largely attended, something like fifty to seventy-five people on an average, mostly members and friends of our church.

The Saints of Cleveland are sound in the faith, and established. The week's work was rounded up by two lectures Sunday by S. W. L. Scott, subjects, "Joseph Smith and his Work," and "Brigham Young and his Work."

Hopefully yours,

KAITANGATA, New Zealand, March 2.

Editors Herald: We renew our subscription to the HERALD for another year. We could not get along very well without it for it is the best paper we can get for general church news. I do not see how a Saint can take other papers and reject the HERALD and be in touch with the church, for I know we want all the food we can get. If I did not get the HERALD I could not have the spiritual life I now have, for it is the bread of life given to the children of the kingdom. Peter was told to feed the sheep and the lambs. But the scattered sheep, Saints, are fed by the church papers. I hope the Saints will look to church papers and leave other papers out if necessary.

We have been in New Zealand nine years and knew what it was to be alone until Brn. Tucker and Hanson came; then we had the gospel preached in the Spirit of the Master. We will have to meet persecution from the people until they know the difference between us and the Utah church. The best way to get the difference before the people is to go from house to house and give them tracts and talk with them. Take small ones first and then we can give them others. But if we sit in the house all day, and go out a little in the evening, I do not think we will do much in gospel work. We have to adapt ourselves to the ways of the people, not hold to the ways of another country. I have been here long enough to see the people and to understand their ways. Bro. G. R. Wells thought that visiting from house to house kept us more in touch with the Spirit of the Master. We hope to see the day that more will come into the church.

We wish the HERALD success, and that it will be in the hands of every Saint. May God bless the HERALD staff is the prayer of your brother,

THOMAS DIXON.

BRIDGEPORT, Washington, March 24.

Editors Herald: I have been trying for eight years to have the elders come here and preach the gospel. I have laid the foundation work of the gospel as best I can, by distributing what church literature I had. If the elders can come they will find plenty of work to do. I have had great evidences of this latter-day work. I hope conference can send an elder here. I have not heard one of our elders for a long time. I am in my eighty-second year. I ask the prayers of the Saints, and wish to express my love and respect for all the brethren and sisters.

Your brother,

J. W. WHITNEY.

COLUMBUS JUNCTION, Iowa, April 5.

Dear Herald: Bro. J. W. Peterson has been here and delivered six sermons with good liberty in the Reformed Church. Yes, in the Reformed Church, just think of it; two years ago they would rather had us mobbed than to let us use their church! But a great change has taken place since then; our bitterest enemies have become good friends.

When persecuted we endeavored to return good for evil, and so far as possible do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and in a great measure we were successful. The Presbyterian minister had some family trouble and was silenced; the Reformed minister left his little flock for a larger salary. The Methodists are the only ones that have a regular minister at present.

The attendance at our meetings was not what we would liked to have had, but those that did attend paid good attention. Some few were deeply interested, for with tears in their eyes they thanked Bro. Peterson for his sermons. At the close of the last sermon one old gentleman asked a few questions on baptism which Bro. Peterson answered to his entire satisfaction. As he went out of the church he said that was the best sermon he ever heard. Others expressed regret that the meetings had to close. Bro. Peterson went from here to General Conference.

Our prayers are that God will bless his people everywhere, that they may be bright, shining lights, and that the honest in heart may be brought to Christ.

Bro. Roth our labor has not been in vain, for which we thank the Lord. I had a dream not long ago that I should make one more grand effort to get the gospel before the people here, and if they then rejected it I was to turn them over to Satan for I had done my duty. I made the effort, the above is the result.

Should any of the elders see fit to come this way we will give them a home, make them welcome, and try to get a place for them to preach.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may prove more faithful, and that we may fight on unto the end.

Your brother in Christ,
I. M. LANE.

TAWAS CITY, Michigan, April 4.

Editors Herald: We as a little band of Saints are holding up the banner of Jesus. We have many trials, but I know we must fight the fight of faith and be faithful to the end. When Jesus comes he will reward us and give us a crown of righteousness and we will have the pleasure of being with Jesus and God the Father. We must be faithful and please God and serve him with our whole hearts and minds.

We are building a church. I long to see it finished and ask God to help us by giving us health and strength to complete it. We are opposed by those who do not know the gospel. They say all manner of evil against the church, but we must expect it, for when Jesus was on earth his foes persecuted and crucified him for teaching the gospel to sinners. We know there is a class of people that loves darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. I pray God the time will soon come that all the honest in heart will obey the gospel and live it and prepare to meet God. We all have a work to do and a soul to save.

I remain,
JOHN BELLINGER.

Editors Herald: We are still plodding on in London. Sometimes we get smiles, sometimes frowns; we don't please all, but we feel our heavenly Father is pleased, and that pleases us. The consoling thought we have is that God is our Father, and comes to our help when he sees we need him. We trust the weather will very soon enable us to take up open air work again. We are hoping for increase soon. We are trying to sow, knowing that the reaping time will come. May the Lord bless and direct his people to the end.

Yours in the one hope,
T. J. SHELDON.

* TULSA, Indian Territory, April 6.

Editors Herald: Since moving to Tulsa we have found a number of Saints who seem to be anxious for the spread of the gospel. We have plenty of material here to organize a branch, and we are hoping the president of this district will look after us. The Saints are anxious for some of the elders to visit us and preach a week or two. We can get a place, so there is no excuse.

I am so glad we are among the Saints who love the gospel, for it is meat and drink to my soul. There are one or two elders and one teacher living in the city, and others a few miles away. From what I have heard since I came here, I believe good results will accrue from efforts put forth if we are faithful. Several on learning we were Latter Day Saints have asked what our doctrine was and for literature to read, and the Book of Mormon also. I have given out several tracts, "The Latter Day Saints; Who Are They?" Two Methodist ministers are taking meals at my house, and they asked quite a number of questions concerning the Book of Mormon. I explained it and our position, and the differences between us and other denominations the best

I could, and made use of the opportunity to give them some tracts and the epitome of faith. They were very nice about it, but the results remain to be seen.

We hope before long to have a Sunday-school at this place. We must hold up our colors. We hope the elders in this part of the district or the missionary in charge will take this as a notice and make it convenient to come as soon as possible; the Saints will make them welcome. I have a son who desires baptism.

HELEN LOGAN SHERWIN.

OGDEN, Utah, April 11.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from Provo, Utah, where I was called by the sickness and death of Sr. F. L. Sawley. A boy was born to them about two weeks previous to this. For a while all seemed well with mother and son, and then came a relapse, and Monday we were called to administer to her. All was done for her that could be done, but she passed away the morning of the 8th, at about nine o'clock. The neighbors were very kind, and in our short service at the house the 9th, at three o'clock in the afternoon the Seventh-day Advent minister offered prayer, and their choir furnished the music. The brother of Sr. Sawley, Bro. Paxton, came from his home in Wheatland, and reached Provo the evening before her death. They took the body back to Wheatland, Missouri, for interment, a Sr. Atwood, of Independence, Missouri, who had been visiting friends in Provo, accompanying them and caring for the baby as far as Kansas City, Missouri. They expect to reach Wheatland some time to-night. May the Master comfort the mourners.

A. M. CHASE.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 30.

Editors Herald: The presence of a force of Utah elders in the city has recently stirred the question of "Mormonism" and caused it to receive more than usual attention and notice by the press. I am glad that the attention of the public in this city is being awakened to the fact that there is a material difference between us and the Brighamites, and that such distinction should always be recognized by every one who essays to speak or write on the subject of Mormonism.

100 Dent Street.

E. P. SCHMIDT.

From Over the Border.

Editors Herald: I came here yesterday, not to Bayfield exactly, but to a point about four miles north where resides a family by the name of Gliddon. It is right on the eastern coast of Lake Huron, the house not being much more than a good stone's throw from the bank which is from eighty to one hundred feet high and slanting.

I have come here to tell the beautiful story, a new place, all strange faces, a faith unheard. And in the early sun rays of this April morn I found myself in the encircling solitude of cedar's grandeur supplicating Him who lives for ever and ever. I felt the melting sweetness of his Spirit ever blessed as I sought him to be with me in my single desire to do nothing but good. About two weeks ago I was promised, by the divine Master, the guardianship of angel messengers and that I would be abundantly blessed in carrying out my long desire, which was to leave ruts of others, beaten paths, old roads, and go out among outsiders, on new ground.

Within two weeks I have made two openings, left people searching, reading, thinking. All of this will be useful to others if I return not to this field. It is my desire to be free from jealousy as to who does the reaping. It is evident there will be reaping done by some one at those points where fasting, prayer, walks—even in mud and rain—talks, and tracts have sown the good seed. Honesty is almost everywhere—more or less. Some of them are in the dark night of error. Some of them are guarded, overguarded by pious hirelings who care more for their pocketbooks than their salvation. It requires an effort to reach them, but beaming love, the simplicity of the restored gospel, impartial attention to all will win its few.

Later. Since writing the above I have walked to Bayfield and back, eight miles, to learn the possibilities for an opening. It is an exceedingly interesting town with a population of about seven hundred I should judge. I inquired what churches were there. Was told that there were Methodists, Presbyterians, and Church of England, only the three.

"Are there no members of any other, besides these?" I asked.

"Yes," they said, "but not in town." They said there were people who held to the Dowieite faith or something akin thereto. I asked again if there were none at all living in the town who held either to Christian Science or Dowieism.

"Yes," one of them broke in at last. "I think John McCloud holds that way." Finding out very near where the gentleman referred to lived, I set out to the post-office, then to his place. I found a family of Highland Scotch whose readiness to entertain me and whose kindness to a stranger surpassed possibly my own expectations. I found them very religiously inclined, but dissatisfied with the town churches which they thought were not worthy of their money and devotion. They offered me lodging as well as the use of their house to preach in, all free. The former I thankfully accepted and, if I fail in getting a more public place, shall also accept the latter.

One can see herein the wisdom in following the counsel of the Master who said, when we go to a town or city, we are to inquire "who in it is worthy." I did this and, although I never saw the town before and the restored gospel was never heard there, the first house I went to I was received.

Of late I have been well received by the faith-healers. If I fail in finding any of them I inquire for infidels. Orthodox Christians will generally turn you away. There are more of them and they have men hired to poison their minds, to tell them who they may receive and who they may not receive. Take these other weaker classes who can not keep a preacher, they are more receptive. Bees always return to the same place till the sweets are exhausted or a better quality is obtainable somewhere else. In Clinton the Christian Scientists used me fine and I rather look to see it result in full obedience.

I hope to be able to warn Goderich, the county town, before our June conference.

My colaborer, A. E. Mortimer, left me two weeks ago yesterday. He is now I hope enjoying, for the first time, the General Conference, the society of minds and men of whom he has heard and read, but hitherto unseen by him.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

BAYFIELD, Ontario, April 7.

BAY CREEK, Michigan, April 14.

Editors Herald: I am still in the conflict and trying to press my way on to the work and prize of my calling.

We have quite a large branch here, and nearly all seem to be in the unity of the faith. The way seems bright and a harvest is expected soon. I was ordained a priest March 18, and on April 5 I had the privilege of leading my companion and another young sister into the waters of baptism. This completed my joy. It was long looked for, about five years; but God finally answered my prayer.

Last Sabbath my father baptized two more of our family, the mother and daughter. The mother has been wanting to be baptized for over a year but wanted her family to go with her, but they were seemingly uninterested except one daughter who had been baptized.

We ought to be the most thankful people on earth, but I sometimes think we are not thankful enough. It seems we ought to take the lead in everything, but I fear sometimes we are behind, especially when it comes to zeal. We have the knowledge but not the zeal. I feel we will have to get it before we can enter Zion.

My whole aim is to do something for the cause, and help someone see the beautiful light that has made me all I am, and will make me all I expect to be. Pray for me and mine that we may at all times be found doing our duty.

JOHN A. DOWKER.

MALAD, Idaho, April 11.

Editors Herald: I became a member of this church nearly three years ago. I am thankful that one of God's servants came to show me the true light. I was baptized by D. W. Wight.

If God's people will strive to live upright before our heavenly Father, he will help us, if we are only humble and prayerful. Our heavenly Father has helped me in many ways, and I feel thankful to him for his goodness. I rejoice to-day that I am a Latter Day Saint, for this is the only true church of God. I ask the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister,

ANNIE RICHARDS.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, April 14.

Editors Herald: I feel I could not do without the HERALD and other church papers, and receive the spiritual strength and knowledge so much needed by every Latter Day Saint. Many are seeking more light, and how can they hear without a preacher, and how can they preach except they be sent of God, and he that is of God will speak the words of God, will teach all truth—the old Jerusalem gospel, the only plan of salvation whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God. Paul says if any man preach any other gospel, let him be accursed. Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, let him be accursed.

Saints, there is a great responsibility resting on those who are children of the kingdom. They should warn their neighbor; keep plenty of good literature to give to make the gospel plain to those who are seeking light. I am trying to do what I can to get the angel's message before the people. I have given out a good deal of literature, and talked with a great many. If we could get the people to see we are not like the Utah church, and show them by scripture and history that there has been an apostasy, their minds would be more open to receive the truth. I met a lady not long ago, and in conversation with her on spiritual things, she told me of seeing the Savior in vision, and several other visions. She made the remark she wanted the highest glory, she did not know I was a Latter Day Saint. She and husband are Methodists, and seeking something higher. I told her my experience was much the same as hers when I was in the Methodist Church, and I kept seeking light until the Lord led me on to receive the restored gospel in this the latter day. I then told her how I came to obey the gospel; explained many things to her and gave her the Book of Mormon and some other literature, and tried to explain my belief to her. She afterwards said that if she belonged to this church she would want the name changed on account of the way the Utah people had done. I told her no, we would not change our name, for it had been given of the Lord, and we are the original church. Several other ladies are reading our literature.

If there are any of the Saints who have not had a knowledge of God's love and the gospel, let them seek it with prayer and faith, living worthy to receive it and it will not be in vain. God says, "Draw nigh to me and I will draw nigh to you." It takes constant prayer and watching, for the flesh is weak. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Keep the Word of Wisdom, keep the celestial law, keep our bodies pure, that the Holy Spirit may dwell in us, and the destroying angel will pass us by when the plagues come upon the earth. How will we feel when the angel shall sound his trumpet and reveal the secret acts of men and the thoughts and intents of the heart?

My heart rejoices when I read of so many coming into the church; also of the gifts of the Spirit in prophecy to the Saints that Christ would soon appear. Truly the time is near.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that my children may be speedily brought into the kingdom, and that we may all be faithful and partake of celestial glory. My husband is working at Morrison, Oklahoma. He is a carpenter. We hope soon to have a home among God's people, where we can be taught in a more perfect knowledge of the Lord. If any of the elders or Saints are passing through here, please stop off and see us. We live in the northeastern part of the town. Several families of Saints live near town.

Your sister,

MRS. EFFIE J. McCULLOUGH.

SOUTH PITTSBURG, Tennessee, April 5.

Editors Herald: I appreciate the weekly visits of your paper very much. It gives me comfort to read the good, spiritual letters contained in its pages. I have been a member of this church over two years and have never regretted the step taken. I was shown the light through the efforts of Bro. Jacob Gross. I was a Methodist and quite prejudiced against this work; but I thank God that Bro. Gross in his kindly way was able to show me the light. I expect to do more for the Lord in the future than I have in the past. We did have a branch here, but it is disorganized now on account of Bro. Gross moving. He has done what he could for the work here.

I have been over some of the Northwestern States visiting some of the Saints; met Bro. and Sr. Shaw in Kingsley, Iowa, who are fine Saints and doing well. I was looking up a location. I would have stopped over at General Conference had I not been so early in the season.

I have a wife and four children but I am the only one that belongs to the church. Saints, pray for me that I may hold out faithful so that by my godly life I may be able to bring them to Christ.

Adjourned to meet at Lone Star the first Saturday and Sunday in August.

Convention Minutes.

Alabama.—Met in mass-meeting with the Flat Rock Branch, April 11, 1903, at 3.30 p. m. Superintendent J. S. Wiggins being absent, Bertha D. Harper was chosen to preside; E. W. McCall, secretary pro tem. Reports from Lone Star and Pleasant Hill Schools were read. The latter was referred back for correction. The following officers were elected: E. N. McCall, superintendent; Bertha D. Harper, assistant superintendent; L. G. Sellers, treasurer; O. M. Sellers, secretary. Adjourned to meet with the Lone Star Branch, Friday, at 3 p. m., before next quarterly conference.

Standing High Council.

The Council met at the call of the president, April 8, at the home of Bro. Frank Criley, Independence, Missouri.

Eight sessions were held, marked by earnestness to the labors of the Council, and a spiritual unity comforted and confirmed the work done.

Counselor Charles Derry sent his resignation to the General Conference, and Counselor Charles E. Butterworth submitted his resignation to the Council. These resignations were accepted.

Counselors Calvin A. Beebe, James H. Peters, and John Chisnall being absent, the five vacancies were supplied by selecting High Priests Robert C. Longhurst, John M. Terry, Charles J. Hunt, Joseph A. Tanner, and Albert Carmichael.

Counselor John A. Robinson died April 12, 1902, and no session of the Council until April, 1903, the secretary was directed to prepare memorial expressing to his family our regards and sympathy.

Because of the serious and fatal illness of the wife of Counselor James C. Crabb, he was excused after the first session.

The president nominated High Priests Temme T. Hinderks and Joseph A. Tanner to fill vacancies. These brethren were ordained in open conference on the 14th.

The following case was carefully and patiently considered:

Buffalo Prairie Branch vs. F. Needham and E. W. Hutchins, for unchristianlike conduct; on appeal. F. Needham for self and E. W. Hutchins, appellants. From decision of elders' court before F. M. Sheehy, John Midgordon; Bishop E. L. Kelley present.

This case came on for examination before the High Council, sitting at Independence, Missouri, April 8, 1903, at 10 o'clock a. m., notice of such sitting having been duly given in the SAINTS' HERALD.

The Council was duly called together on the day named and at the time set; and the examination begun. The statement of appellants, the record of the trial court, with the decision of said court, with the action of the branch thereon, being duly presented and examined, with all documents filed in the case.

Appellants not appearing; C. L. Holmes and M. B. Holmes on behalf of the branch.

The Council sat from time to time and finished its examination of the statements and evidence submitted; April 15, 1903.

After such hearing the President delivered the opinion that the parties had been labored with so far as they would permit such labor to be done, that the evidence submitted was sufficient to establish guilt. He therefore gave as his opinion that the decision of the elders' court should be affirmed. Decision of the elders' court therefore affirmed.

Done at Independence, Missouri, April 15, 1903. (Signed.)

JOSEPH SMITH, }
R. C. EVANS, } Presidents.

Attest: Opinion and decision of the President confirmed by the unanimous vote of the Council.

ROBT. M. ELVIN,
Secretary of Standing High Council.

Informal Council.

An informal council of the First Presidency, Traveling High Council, the Bishopric, and the Quorum of High Priests was held on the evening of the 14th in the lower auditorium of the stone church, Independence, Missouri, for the consideration of the condition of the work in branches and districts, and the appointment of high priests to pastoral labor. The object of this meeting was that a mutual understanding might obtain, so that all may work together for the uplifting and permanently establishing the cause of Christ, wherever the standard of the gospel shall be planted.

The following brethren spoke freely and earnestly upon topics of interest: F. G. Pitt, A. H. Parsons, William H. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, R. May, J. S. Snively, J. Luff, R. M. Elvin, W. A. McDowell, G. H. Hulmes, F. M. Sheehy, E. L. Kelley, A. McCallum, M. H. Bond, A. White, Heman C. Smith, R. S. Sal-yards, J. D. White, J. B. Carmichael, and Joseph Smith.

Excellent feeling manifest throughout the session.

On motion, adjourned.

JOSEPH SMITH, President.

Died.

ERVIN.—Bro. Jesse Ervin suddenly passed away on April 2. A widow and six children mourn. Five in Christ's church, one not. Baptized in 1872, he was "faithful ever." At about 10:30 the morning of his death his wife said, "Take a nap." Before eleven o'clock she went in and found him sleeping a lifeless sleep. A telegram called Elder Forscutt from Independence. He came and conducted the services of a very large funeral on April 5. Both city papers eulogized the deceased in glowing terms. He had said in prayer service, "Sometime I shall be found unexpectedly dead, but I am ready to go."

HALL.—Sr. Hilga Hall, wife of Elder John Hall, at Salt Lake City, Utah, March 31, 1903, of inflammation of the bowels. She was born at Orebro, Sweden, June 20, 1872; baptized February 6, 1901, by D. W. Wight. The death of our sister is particularly sad, she having scarcely reached the prime of life, and leaves husband and six little children, the eldest of whom is not yet twelve years of age, and the youngest a babe only five days old. She was a kind, loving wife and mother, a faithful Saint, and was beloved by all who knew her.

FRAZIER.—At the "Saints' Home," Lamoni, Iowa, April 8, 1903, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Sr. Elva Frazier, aged 32 years, 11 months, and 16 days. She had dwelt in the "Home" over two years, and was loved because of her gentle nature and her willingness to do anything that she could to assist others. She suffered many years and her death was very sudden. Her parents are dead, but she has brothers and sisters in Carroll County, Iowa. Funeral sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. C. I. Carpenter. She was baptized in 1891, by Bro. H. O. Smith.

KAHLER.—At Manteno, Illinois, March 28, 1903, of heart failure, Mrs. Louisa C. Kahler, aged 61 years. She was born at Montezuma, Indiana, August 25, 1841; married to Joseph C. Kahler December 8, 1859. To them were born seven children, two dying in infancy. She leaves a husband, five children, thirteen grandchildren, a sister, and two brothers to mourn. Was baptized May 15, 1870, at Wilton Center, by E. C. Briggs, and remained faithful until death. Funeral services at the Presbyterian church in charge of Reverend Goff.

ELLIS.—At Llanelly, Wales, January 23, 1903, Nora Gwendoline, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Henry and Bodina E. Ellis, aged five weeks. Funeral in charge of F. J. Pierce.

SMITH.—Emma McCready Smith was born February 27, 1849; married to Clark Smith September 1, 1873. To them were born five children, two having preceded their mother to the other shore. She leaves two sons, one daughter, and an aged husband to mourn. She united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints April, 1900, and remained a faithful member until the day of her death, April 13, 1903. Funeral at the Shuck Schoolhouse, near Richmond, Oklahoma Territory, by Elder H. F. Durfey, assisted by Elder Shuck of the Disciple Church.

SAWLEY.—At Provo, Utah, April 8, 1903, of blood-poisoning, Sr. Mary Rebecca Paxton Sawley, wife of Elder F. L. Sawley, and daughter of Elder Ethen and Mary W. Paxton, departed this life, leaving a two weeks old baby boy and a sorrowing husband to mourn, besides many other relatives. Last May she left home and loved ones and accompanied her husband to his mission field. She was born February 27, 1877, near Wheatland, Missouri; baptized September 13, 1896; married F. L. Sawley February 2, 1902. Thus a pure life and a loved one has gone from among us. Funeral services by Elder W. H. Mannering.

CRABB.—After an illness of five days, of pneumonia, Sr. Charlotte Ann Crabb, wife of Elder J. C. Crabb, died April 15, 1903, at Independence, Missouri, aged 59 years, 6 days. She was in attendance at General Conference with her husband. She was baptized May 26, 1862, living a devoted, self-sacrificing life until death. She was the mother of thirteen children, eight of whom survive. Her's was a noble life, a worthy example as wife, mother, neighbor, and Saint. Funeral service at Saints' chapel, Little Sioux, Iowa, April 16, by Elder J. F. Mintun.

The April number of the North American Review is notable for the variety and the timeliness of the topics with which it deals. A handsome portrait of Mr. Henry James, the author of "The Ambassadors," the novel now appearing in the Review, is given as a frontispiece to the number. Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie contributes an appreciative study of "The Work of Mrs. Humphry Ward." Benjamin Taylor discusses "Shipping and Subsidies." Mark Twain closes his critical examination of Christian Science with an article entitled "Mrs. Eddy in Error." An American Business Man answers in the affirmative the question, "Is the Monroe Doctrine a Bar to Civilization?" Professor Goldwin Smith, reviewing Mr. A. F. Pollard's recent work on Henry VIII, presents "A Gallery of Portraits" of some of the leading personages connected with the reign of that bluff monarch. Lloyd Sanders expounds the Mohammedan law relating to "The Sultan and the Caliphate." Five distinguished American painters, T. W. Dewing, Childe Hassam, Robert Reid, Edward Simmons, and J. Alden Weir, unite in paying an enthusiastic tribute to the late John H. Twachtmann. J. H. Hollander, Professor of Finance in John Hopkins University, points out the relation which should exist between "Political Economy and the Labor Question." Doctor Gilbert Reid calls attention to "The Unsatisfactory Outcome of the Chinese Negotiations" and the reason for it. J. Charlemagne Braque sets forth the "French Side of the Newfoundland Difficulty." C. H. Stevenson describes the origin and the aims of "The United States Fish Commission. Erastus Wiman enlarges upon "Canada's Growing Commercial Independence." Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay contributes a drama entitled "Gabrielle: A Dream from the Treasures contained in the Letters of Abelard and Heloise," and the number closes with the fourth part of Mr. James's novel, "The Ambassadors."

PROFESSOR WILLIAM HOLMES, of the Bureau of Ethnology, Smithsonian Institute, reports finding a remarkable sample of aboriginal mining in Franklin County, Arkansas. He says that of the twelve aboriginal mines in the United States which he examined, the Arkansas mine is the most extensive and wonderful. Professor just recently returned to Washington from his Arkansas trip. The mines were worked in a black hematite ore, "almost as hard as iron itself, and in some places the tunneling was seven or eight feet high by five in width. Large quantities of stone sledge-hammers were found in the tunnels, there being thirteen hundred in one pile which had been thrown together by the present-day miners in passing to and fro from their work.

The Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints are much exercised over the organization of the Anti-Mormon Association of the Churches of Christ. Since the Omaha convention their pages have given a great deal of space to that movement. More than any other religious body, they appreciate its importance, and they are now putting forth every effort to anticipate anything that the Association may do against them.

Their interest justifies the following claims of the men who are appealing to the disciples to aid them in meeting this delusion:

1. That the active and aggressive propoganda of the elders depends for its success on their ability to find and debate with men who know nothing of the teaching and history of Mormonism. In the present generation they are eminently a controversial people, and their successes are gained in communities where religious controversy flourishes, and the people and preachers know them not.

2. That they are at the greatest possible disadvantage wherever they are met by a man who understands them and their methods of work. The "Saints" would far prefer not to meet the men who are at work in the Anti-Mormon Association. They anticipate defeat in any such contest.

3. If the church will do its full duty in the matter, we can solve the Mormon question. I am in receipt of a letter that says of the Utah field, that the sects are unable to do anything, but if we enter the field, and present the truth in a spirit of love, much can be accomplished. The letter was written by an ex-priest of the Salt Lake church.

Little has been said in our own papers about this work since its inauguration. The time has come for us to bestir ourselves, and show the followers of Joseph Smith that we are so much devoted to the Lord Jesus Christ, the one and only Savior, that we will do all in our power to save them from the blighting effects of putting a false prophet and his revelations between the believer and the Christ. Mormonism is as destructive of true Christianity as Mohammedanism. This is as essentially a missionary question as the conversion of Turkey or the South Sea Islands. The imperative necessity for action arises from the fact that this paganism is in our own land and at our very doors.

The foregoing statement of Mr. Bridwell indicates quite clearly the peculiar animus of the movement which he chooses to call the Anti-Mormon Association of the Churches of Christ; it abounds in errors and misstatements.

1. The Reorganized Church is not "much exercised" over the organization of that particular association; and only upon the fact that it is a part of the general onslaught that has been made by sectarian animosity upon the faith and doctrines of the church which the Reorganized movement represents. Nor is the Reorganized Church putting forth any more effort to anticipate what the association referred to may do against it, than it has been all the while doing to meet the attacks of similar character with which it has been long familiar.

2. The success of the Reorganized Church has no sort of dependence upon the seeking for and finding men unacquainted with the history of the church and its faith. The elders are not seriously endeavoring to secure the opportunity to debate. Debate is usually thrust upon them by just such men as are engaged in the Anti-Mormon Association.

The very name of the association is indicative of their purpose and intention, which are to endeavor by all means in their power to overthrow "Mormonism." And, in their zeal to do this, they forget to be Christian whether they belong to the "churches of Christ" or not.

It is true that the Reorganized Church is composed of "controversial people." They have been forced into this attitude for two reasons: First, their faith enjoins it upon them to "be ready to give to every man a reason for the hope that is" in them. Second, because they have been constantly attacked by men who have constituted themselves guardians of the people's consciences and have urged wordy warfare upon them.

One of the reasons for the formation of this Anti-Mormon Association is given in the closing sentence of paragraph number one of the foregoing articles, and at the same time the same sentence is a sufficient denial of the statements of number two.

If the successes of the Reorganized Church "are gained in communities where religious controversy flourishes," it shows that either their truths are better than are those of the men who oppose them; or that the methods employed by their opposers are of such a character as to turn the minds of the people against those methods. This sentence also shows that in those communities where the freedom of religious controversy is enjoyed "Mormonism" as advocated by the Reorganized Church has nothing to fear from the Anti-Mormon Association, or its allies.

This statement that the Reorganized church gains its successes in places where religious discussion is held freely is an unintentional compliment to the ability of the elders of that church, an admission of the soundness of their doctrines, and a confession of the good sense and honest mindedness of the dwellers in such places, or it is a deliberate insult to the fair mindedness and common acuteness of the community, as also to its ability to take care of itself.

Is it because those of this Anti-Mormon Association have met the elders of the Reorganized Church in discussion, and that such discussion has been followed by accessions to the ranks of that church, that this league has been formed; and does that form a part of the hostility against Mormonism?

3. The assertion that the "Saints," referred to in paragraph two of this article "anticipate defeat" in contest with members of this Anti-Mormon Association, is a misstatement if it was intended to apply to elders of the Reorganized Church. No such fear has ever held one of those elders from accepting fair propositions, or engaging in a frank interchange of views before the public.

Efforts have been made to put the elders of the Reorganized Church to disadvantage by those who thought they knew them and their work; and it may be that such effort has been successful in some instances; but in the outcome untruths, false assumptions, and improper methods employed against the gospel teachings of these elders have fallen to the ground powerless, or returned upon their antagonists to their discomfiture. We are not aware that any discrimination against "men at work in the Anti-Mormon Association" had been made by the elders of the Reorganization.

4. We suppose that "the church" referred to in paragraph three is intended to be applied to the church of which Mr. Bridwell is a characteristic member; and it is possible that he intends to include in that word "church" all "the churches of Christ," indicated in the opening statement. The letter referred to as received from "the Utah field," carries the idea that "the sects" have failed to accomplish anything in Utah; the supposition being that it means in reclaiming the people from "Mormonism." We do not enter the field of controversy in defense of the "Mormon" church in Utah. That church has able men to look after its own positions, and we leave them to make their own fight against the Anti-Mormon Association. But we venture the assertion that "if the church," to which reference is made as to "its full duty in the matter," will gather its shekels and put them into the hands of Bridwell and company, the same shekels will be squandered in just as vain an effort as the "sects" have made in the past. The men who will solve the "Mormon problem" will need to labor in a different form of love than is likely to be manifest in this later association. "Much" may "be accomplished" but it will not be the emancipation of Utah's Mormon devotees. We predict for such movement if undertaken a splendid failure.

Mohammedanism did more for the land and the people where it rose and flourished than this anti-Mormon league will ever do in its time and period of existence.

Joseph Smith and the revelations given of the Lord through him have raised no barrier between the faithful believer and his God. Mormonism may be destructive of false conceptions of "true Christianity," or of Christianity as understood by the Anti-Mormon Association; but that it has struck a blow at the supremacy of Christ Jesus as the Savior of the world, speaking for the "Mormonism" presented and advocated by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we emphatically deny.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it the duty of the teacher to visit the Saints from house to house in his branch?

The teacher is not the visiting officer of the church, only as he is requested by the priest to assist him, or is designated by the branch to do it, and is willing, in which case he should do so.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of April 19, Mary Johnson writes from Laporte, Michigan: "I love to read the HERALD and Ensign. I sent for Bro. Sutton while I was sick, and he came and laid hands on me, anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, and I can testify I received a blessing. How thankful Saints should be to receive so many blessings from the Lord. I have forgotten Sr. Jane Heaton's address, so I wish to acknowledge the receipt of Autumn Leaves; also a bundle of Hopes. I send my HERALDS, and Ensigns to others hoping they may do more good."

T. J. Sheldon in a recent letter wrote from London, England, as follows to Bishop Kelley: "In London we are in need of finances. We are trying very hard to open up the work in new localities, and we need money for hiring halls, etc. If the missionaries here had bicycles much more could be done. Send your contributions to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, U. S. A., or to Bishop Thomas Taylor, 68 Bristol Road, Burnbrook, Birmingham, England. State whether your donation is for bicycle or for the general mission expenses in London. Brother, sister, spare a dollar if you can; we want to get the gospel before 'London's millions.' How much can you do to untie our hands? London has six million inhabitants. Christ died for every one." We publish this extract from Bro. Sheldon's letter at the suggestion of Bro. Kelley. What can you do for London?

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A new exchange which is reaching our table is The Smiths, "a magazine for people named Smith." It is published by Smiths, edited by Smiths, and its contributors are Smiths.

The electric passenger-cars now being used on the Chicago, Elgin, and Aurora electric railway are designed and built to maintain a speed of seventy miles per hour and upward. Where will the speed limit stop?

We often have requests to publish a remedy for cancer. We therefore publish in another column a "cure" which has appeared in our columns before.

In Household Words, a magazine published in London, England, issue for March 21, Bro. J. W. Rush-ton has an article on "Polygamy and the Latter Day Saints," in which he shows the true Latter Day Saint Church never believed nor taught the practice of polygamy. Household Words is a magazine founded by Charles Dickens.

The May number of the Arena contains a symposium on "Mormonism and Polygamy," in three parts. The first part is by Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah church, the second is by President Joseph Smith, of the Reorganization, and the third is by James T. Bridwell, of the "Anti-Mormon Missionary Society." The symposium thus sets forth the subject from three distinct viewpoints.

We have received a fac-simile copy of the first number of the Wireless, a daily sheet published at Avalon, Santa Catalina, an island in the Pacific Ocean, off the Southern California coast, in latitude thirty-three and one half degrees north, longitude one hundred eighteen and one half degrees west. The news published by it is received daily by wireless telegraph, whence its name. It is said to be the first newspaper in the world publishing sure-enough wireless telegraph dispatches. The system used is not the Marconi system and has no connection with it, says the Los Angeles Times, the projector of the Wireless enterprise.

The daily press for April 24 contained a dispatch from Berlin to the effect that the governments of Prussia and the grand duchy of Mecklenburg have decided to expel "Mormon" missionaries, because they are "propagating a form of religion incompatible with the laws of the State and public morals." The despatch also states this will affect one hundred forty-five missionaries in Germany and ninety in Prussia.

By letter from Bro. Peter Anderson, Porsgrund, Norway, we learn that the Scandinavian edition of the Book of Mormon will be ready for mailing sometime about the first of July. They are at work printing it now. Scandinavian Saints who desire to secure a copy of it can place their orders with the HERALD Publishing House. Bro. Anderson writes that it will be neat work and quite cheap, although it will cost more than at first calculated.

By the Enterprise, of Dow City, Iowa, issue of April 24, we note that on April 18 John R. and Serelda Rudd celebrated their golden wedding. The occasion was celebrated at the home of their son, D. M. Rudd, and many friends and relatives assembled to do honor to the occasion. The HERALD extends congratulations.

CHARITY.

The greatest of these is charity.—Paul.

Charity is the pure love of Christ.—Mormon.

Love is our highest word, and the synonym of God.—Emerson.

There are thousands of Saints who ardently desire the success of the gospel work. They are anxious to have their relatives, their friends, and all their acquaintances come under its influence. They are conscious that the gospel has been to themselves a source of supreme blessing, and they wish its benign effects to spread everywhere until all mankind shall taste the good it brings. This desire is good. It is itself one of the most precious effects of the gospel.

But the gospel influence does not stop with the desire that others shall share its blessings. Its power translates the desire into action. Effort is made to bring the gospel light to bear upon the minds of those in whom there is an interest. This is one of the first effects manifested by the one whose own life has come under the power of the gospel. With the desire to aid others to see the light there arises the wish to be qualified for that work. One instinctively feels that certain qualifications are necessary to enable him to do this effectively. This feeling is in harmony with the teaching of the word. In the revelations of God we read: "Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things, whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.—Doctrine and Covenants 3:1. Doctrine and Covenants 4:1 twenty-sixth edition.

It will be noticed that among the qualifications enumerated in these quotations it is enjoined that a man must be full of love, that among other things charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work. Many other scriptures abundantly confirm the sentiment that charity, or love, is a leading factor in bringing to pass the salvation of men. It was love that prompted God the heavenly Father to engage in the work of man's redemption: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

"But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Romans 5:8.

"In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."—1 John 4:9, 10.

It will be seen from these statements that the Lord possesses in a rich degree one of the chief qualities that he enjoins upon those who would assist in gospel work; in fact so strongly is he endowed with this quality, that the apostle expresses it in the words, "God is love." And this love of his it is which makes gospel work possible. It shines through it and gives it force and power. It attracts the honest and innocent, and fills the soul with joy and peace. Thus it satisfies the longings of the spiritual nature, and endows the heart with a divine content. It stills those cravings of the inner man which David referred to when he exclaimed: "As the heart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for to see God, for to see the living God; when shall I come and appear before thee, O God?"—Psalms 42:1, 3, I. T.

All sincere and genuine love is characterized by a willingness, a disposition to make sacrifices for the sake of that which is loved. The love of God for the world disposed him to undergo the sacrifice of his Son in order to secure its redemption from sin and its penalties. It was this that moved him to send the Christ into the world to be the propitiation for our sins. This is what moved the Savior to give himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. This is the kind of love that must move those who would assist in this work if their assistance is to avail anything. They must be full of that love that will prompt them to make all needful sacrifices to fulfill the demands of the Lord upon them. All sacrifices required by the work will be free and spontaneous on the part of the one whose heart is full of love to God and man.

Where love prevails service will be rendered with pleasure and without compulsion. From this it will appear that love is an essential of real freedom, and that where love is lacking liberty is lost. All forms of slavery indicate the want of love. No one who loves another will hold that one in the toils of involuntary bondage. True love itself is free; it can not be constrained. It is spontaneous in its action, and compulsion perverts and degrades it. Thus all free service is loving service; if love be absent the service is not free in the highest sense. We conclude then that true gospel freedom is inseparably associated with love.

Love is pure. And because it is pure it purifies the heart of the one who is affected by it. All acts performed under the influence of love are pure in motive. Love drives unclean thoughts from the mind, but cherishes sentiments of purity. When allowed full and permanent sway it purifies the entire life and character. Nothing unclean or unholy can enter where love abides continuously.

Love is an element of genuine power. It strengthens a person for the performance of disagreeable duties. When it goes wrong it nerves his friend to admonish him concerning his fault, but also gives him power to do so in a kindly manner, and makes rebuke effective. It makes it possible to reach the better part of man's nature and administer correctives that otherwise would not be received. It stimulates a person's latent powers and sets in action hidden forces that might otherwise remain dormant. It gives virtue to faith. Without it faith is unprofitable, only a negative quality. "Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." "In Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love."

DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

Friday, February 3. I visited Bro. Phineas Cadwell; he is very friendly to me and has faith in the gospel, but is influenced by Bro. Adams, and is darkened in mind in relation to authority in the church. His wife is real lady-like in appearance, and I am informed very prejudiced against the Saints, though a very devoted Baptist. He loves her and no doubt feels like Watts when he said, "Suffer not beloved study to prejudice your mind so far as to despise all other learning."

Sunday, February 5. I held services in the schoolhouse. Only eight came to the meeting. Subject, the government of God and the disorganization of the church and the evidence we have received of its reorganization, and of the promises that one of Joseph's sons will be called of God to take the presidency of the church. I gave liberty for remarks and Bro. Adams took great exception to my discourse, and argued that the blessing of Joseph referred to in the revelation where it says in thee and thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed referred to Joseph and Jesus Christ. His spirit is very much wrought up against the position taken by the Reorganization.

Bro. Cadwell had his eyes opened quite fully to the sophistry of Bro. Adams, but more especially to the bad spirit manifest in his opposition to our views on lineal priesthood, which we hold is in general to all, who are called of God, but especially holds good to the highest officer in the church, as it had been confirmed to Joseph by an oath as it was confirmed to Abraham.

I have had a very pleasant visit with Bro. and Sr. Cadwell. She is a very intelligent and brilliant woman to converse with, though not a member of our church, a good consistent Baptist lady, loved by all who are acquainted with her, and I believe will yet be a defender of our blessed hope in Christ. Her love of right is prominent in all of her expressions with a cheerful countenance. It gives me encouragement to meet with such good people, though they do not belong to the Latter Day Saints. I believe the Lord does certainly bless them, and I am glad the true faith in Christ does not lead the children of God to hold prejudice against any one who differs with them in faith or belongs to other churches. I felt to advise Bro. Cadwell not to express any anxiety or argument to his wife to persuade her to become a member of our church. He is too anxious and appears to her to be almost arbitrary in urging his views to her.

Monday, February 26. Visited Bro. Steven Mahoney; he is an interesting man to converse with, and was well acquainted with Brn. Z. H. Gurley, Mather White of La Harp, Illinois, and the choice Seer. He speaks of them as grand, good men, honorable in all their daily walk and conversation. I am at Bro. Lamb's. His son is reading the books on the latter-day work this winter. I gave them much encouragement in relation to the church while I rehearsed to them my experience in the Reorganization in Wisconsin and Illinois. They were very friendly to me and I shall ever remember their kindness.

Tuesday, February 7. I came to Mr. Nelson Follett's; he is a brother of King Follett. He lives in Raglin Township, Harrison County; he is not at home, but I left my horse in his barn and this evening I am visiting with Bro. Streeter. He loves the gospel, but like so many of the Saints who are scattered in this region, has been discouraged by the apostasy of B. Young, but my visit has given them new hope. I am visiting every house bearing testimony of the riches of the gospel to us in our glorious hope, and the Holy Spirit is indeed attesting the word to their hearts, and they can see that the Reorganization is their only hope.

Little Sioux, Wednesday, February 8. I came to this place, and found Elder Jahial Savage, sixty miles north of Council Bluffs. I was acquainted with him years ago in Wisconsin, when he was an able preacher in early days of the church, but he is much discouraged now, and his secular business troubles him, and he laments over the disaster which causes the way of truth to be evilly spoken of by well meaning people of the popular churches; but he loves the gospel of Christ with his whole heart and was an eloquent defender of the faith in the days of Joseph, and speaks of the choice Seer with endearing terms of love. He is with us in his affections, but I fear his temporal affairs will hinder him from doing much for the work.

Thursday, February 9. At half-past seven this evening held meeting at Bro. John Johnson's, three miles east of Little Sioux. Had a good attendance and much good done.

Friday, February 10. I came to Mr. Allen Seller's who is sick in bed and without fuel. His wife has been chopping it for some time. I helped them what I could by chopping them some wood, and doing other work. They are Gladdenites, a poor, spiritually blind people, who are following a fanatic and wicked man. I have tried to comfort them all I could, and on the 11th worked the best I could to take the heavy burden from off the sister who looks so frail.

Sunday, February 12. Held meeting at Bro. Streeter's; large audience, the entire neighborhood were in attendance, and were much interested in our first services in Raglin Township. Many of the people here were formerly from the state of Maine and old Saints. Elder Pearce is a wise, careful man, but they have been discouraged so long they have in a great measure forgotten their daily altars, though they seem to love the gospel.

Preparation, Monona County, Iowa, Monday, February 13. I came to this noted little village just before sunset. It was the headquarters of Charles B. Thompson. I am hospitably received by Elder Roland Cobb, keeper of a hotel and general intelligence office of the place. I had met with him some years since at Elder Blair's at Amboy, Illinois. He was then on a mission in the interest of Beneemyism, a firm believer in the first principles of the gospel, but had side-tracked with Charles B. Thompson, who had claimed special divine call and introduced into his wild scheme an old doctrine of the ancient idolaters of India, and a sect among the Romans of the transmigration of the soul, and common stock business as an agent for Baneemy; but in his precaution for the welfare of the souls of men, he had taken the pains to have all the real estate deeded to "Charles B. Thompson." A large tract of valuable land is now involved in a chancery suit. His affectionate brother of St. Louis, Missouri, is the innocent purchaser of Charles' estate in this region of the state of Iowa. The regular meal time was past, but I soon had a sumptuous repast prepared; and while I was enjoying it, Elder John Gallop, of Lelands Grove, came in and very happily greeted me with "We are all glad to meet you, and want you to preach to us this evening." I replied: "I have just arrived, cold and tired, and have not decided on any arrangements for meeting, and am on my way to Belvidere for to-morrow's appointments." He expressed much solicitude for the sake of the people, who would all like a meeting this evening. He also very kindly informed me that President Gladden Bishop was here, and would be pleased to hear me. I thought I could discern a sinister motive in urging me so persistently. I knew he was pretty nearly a stranger and had been here but a few days with his master, who had been holding meetings every evening for the last ten days, and that he was a far-reaching, crafty man, not slow in quoting scripture as in historical lore; a debater, logical reasoner, and withal had been at Washington in the lobby watching the parliamentary usage, hence had more of the polish acquired as a speaker and withal had the reputation of being an interesting preacher. But soon after Elder Gallop left me, Elder Cobb came into my room and said, "Elder Briggs, we would like very much to have you preach for us to-night. Elder Bishop has been holding meetings some days, and has the people stirred up considerably, and we are so situated that we can get out the people in this place in thirty minutes." The town was built in a circle, and the houses very close together. I informed him I was on my way to Belvidere, but always willing to talk of my hope in the gospel and the latter-day work, and consented if he would make the appointment. In forty-five minutes a messenger informed me that my audience was waiting. I hastened to the assembly (it was a school-house where Mrs. Elijah Cobb was teaching school), and was indeed surprised to find a packed house of bright, intelligent-looking people, with cheerfulness beaming on their countenances, to welcome my arrival. But I admit I felt there was really a little music in their hearts as they thought how soon I would be vanquished by their champion who had been interesting them the last few days. I took in the whole situation at a glance, and realized how frail I was. I was all alone. Mr. Bishop sat just in front of the stand. I opened meeting as usual, congregation sung a beautiful hymn, and I made a short prayer. After the second hymn I was alive to the situation, and to the fact that the people before me were dazed and fairly challenged with admiration of the eloquence and bold claims of Mr. Bishop, as the one mighty and strong to do the great work of the Father in the last days, to restore Israel. I had been acquainted with him by reputation from my childhood and knew he was an ambitious, wiry, cunning manipulator. Had met him once before in a private circle where he put in the evening telling of his claims as the one suddenly to come to the temple.

I used the following words for my text: "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."—Isaiah 59:19. I took the premise that these words had reference to a future time when the Lord would set up his work after conferring priesthood authority by the ministration of an angel, and during said dispensation an apostasy would be brought about. I dwelt upon the angel message with the gospel to be preached to all people as attests Revelation 14: 6, 7, and that for fourteen years this gospel of the kingdom had gathered one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand into the church, and in the year of our Lord 1844, came the blighting time of great trial and a loose reign for apostasy was given and they in turn had brought in a flood of iniquity that had brought shame to the name of Latter Day Saint. But during the lifetime of the choice Seer, the would-be apostate aspirants had but little chance to make much impression upon the church. A comparison between the genuine and their false claims was too apparent to blind the casual observer. But when the Prophet and the Patriarch fell martyrs, the trying time came to the church, and those not truly led by the Spirit of God were deceived by the false and presumptuous leaders, inspired by the evil one who quickly presented their claims. The true Latter Day Saint who waited in supplication upon the Lord, as early as the 18th day of November, 1851, received instructions from the Lord that fully cleared away all the clouds and misgivings that had hovered as a pall over the church since the martyrdom of the Prophet, and a standard was truly raised against the iniquity that had come in like a flood and the revelation to us commanding the truly appointed minister to preach the gospel of Christ as the power of God unto salvation, and say in the due time of the Lord, God would call one of the sons of Joseph to the Presidency of the church, for it was his right according to the law of lineage and blessing. I quoted the texts usually employed in defense upon the subject of the Presidency and lineage, such as the chief ruler came to Judah, but the birthright was Joseph's. (1 Chronicles 5:2.) "And he blessed them (Ephraim and Manassah) that day, saying, In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manassah."—Genesis 48: 20. And in the restoration of Israel, "For I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn."—Jeremiah 31:9. I used the text, "Ephraim is my firstborn" in the sense that Ephraim will be the first to receive the gospel in the last days; and to prove that fact I quoted Lehi's blessing to one of his sons on this continent. "For Joseph [of Egypt] truly testified, saying: A seer shall the Lord my God raise up, who shall be a choice seer unto the fruit of my loins. . . . And he shall be esteemed highly among the fruit of thy loins. And unto him will I give commandment, that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, his brethren, which shall be of great worth unto them, even to the bringing of them to the knowledge of the covenants which I have made with thy fathers. And I will give unto him a commandment, that he shall do none other work save the work which I shall command him. And I will make him great in mine eyes: for he shall do my work."—2 Nephi 2: 8-12, (large edition). I took the ground that that Seer was Joseph Smith, that he would not fall or lose his standing before God; for he was to be great in the eyes of the Lord which could not be the case if he was a fallen prophet. The prediction clearly says he "shall do my work," hence any man since his martyrdom who claims leadership in the church and at the same time advocates that Joseph invented or established any other system which would contravene and negative the true work of God, exhibited the cloven foot, and stamped at once upon himself that he is an imposter or a false prophet. Joseph was to be highly esteemed by his brethren, and when any man accuses the choice Seer of originating a system, or a doctrine that would stamp upon his name infamy and crime, and at the same time claim to be a believer in the divinity of the Book of Mormon, is a way-mark by which all true Latter Day Saints may know that such men are imposters and deceivers. The evidence of that fact is clearly revealed in the revelation and prophecy which says (of the Prophet Joseph who was the president of the priesthood), "For this anointing have I put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee and in thy seed, shall the kindreds of the earth be blessed."

The blessing of Abraham was given to him by an oath, in like manner was Joseph's blessing decreed by an oath from God, who can not lie, to be placed upon the head of Joseph's posterity after him, not upon some apostate from the faith, who would privily bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, by reason of whom the way of the truth shall be evil spoken of. (2 Peter 2: 1, 2.) And with many other references I endeavored to make clear indeed that in the due time of the Lord, that one of the sons of Joseph would be called to the presidency of the church.

I had great liberty in presenting the word to-night. Thank God with my whole soul! When I closed my sermon I invited any one who chose to make remarks or ask any question upon the subject I had presented. Elder Bishop was immediately on his feet and in a very adroit manner rehearsed and commented on the subject of the evening. He denounced the idea of lineage and the blessing of Joseph; simply referred to the fortune to accrue to him was a subterfuge, as there was nothing in it; and after speaking an hour, gave way. Elder Forges spoke an hour negating my discourse, and Elder Roland Cobb spoke another hour. Just think of four hours continuous preaching! I then closed our meeting by benediction.

It is needless to say I quietly withdrew from the meeting. Elders R. Cobb and Perrin, Brn. Edward Johnson, Oran Butts, Silas Wilcox, Thomas, and Bronson Lewis, and Elijah Cobb were present, and many others who were formerly members of the church in Nauvoo, or their children.

I retired rather sad in heart to-night, to think how blind the poor people are who were once enlightened with the glorious gospel of Christ. The most of them here do not indorse Gladden Bishop, yet he has a certain influence over them, and they do not know just how to answer his sophistry. I do not blame them, but I am sorry, sorry. They were all intensely interested to grasp all that was said to-night. The large audience, old, middle-aged, and young people, all sat four hours as quietly as though it were but thirty minutes. May God have pity and mercy on us all, is my fervent prayer.

Tuesday, February 14. The dear people I met this morning are cheerful, yet seem to look upon me as vanquished, and not able to answer the onslaught poured out last evening. As I left them I felt they rather had sympathy and pity for me, and without a single word in reference to our meeting, bade me good-bye. Bro. Cobb wished me well, and cordially invited me to stop with him again on my way from Belvidere.

There are some good people in Preparation, but they have been in the dark so long, yet anxious to know the truth, but they have allowed themselves to be led by emotions, enthusiasm, and zeal, rather than a proper understanding of the word of God, and the sure teaching of the Holy Spirit, which is the Spirit of promise that leads into all truth; have neglected their prayers and put too much confidence in men, or trusted in the arm of flesh.

I truly love my fellow men, for they are all children of God by creation, for whom Jesus Christ came to save from their sins. I truly love to labor for them in Christ's stead, saying "be ye reconciled to God," instead of following after poor human beings who are ambitious for worldly honors.

Belvidere, Monona County, Iowa. Tuesday, February 14, 1860. Here I received a happy greeting and a hospitable home at Bro. Hugh Lytle's. It is such a rest to find these good people; though I have never met them before, yet they seem like old acquaintances and dear friends. We called on Brn. John Outhouse, John Thomas, Albert Clemens, and some others, announced an appointment for to-morrow evening at seven o'clock.

The revival of the latter-day work in the states of Wisconsin and Illinois was our theme among the Saints to-day; and when I assured them that the Lord had revealed to us that in the near future Joseph, son of the choice Seer, will soon be called by the God of Israel to take the presidency of the church, it seemed to fire the old Saints up with faith at once and gave them great joy. The law of lineage seemed to put in new life, a thought they had not understood before; and indeed our visit has been very profitable to-day. The Saints here are truly in the faith of the gospel and all aver in solemn words of truthfulness they know Joseph was a pure and virtuous man; free from any contamination of the apostasy of Brigham Young. Many of them were well acquainted with the choice Seer; and at the expulsion of the Saints from Nauvoo, they drifted off here ashamed of the name of Mormon, when held up in the light of Utah Mormonism.

Wednesday, February 15, 1860. At half past ten o'clock in the forenoon I had a large audience and splendid attention while I presented the hope of the true Latter Day Saints and the law of lineage; also read the resolutions passed by the first conference of the Reorganization, which was held at Beloit, Wisconsin, June 12 and 13, 1852, and recorded in the pamphlet entitled, "A Word of Consolation to the Scattered Saints," published by the church, and reads as follows:

First. Resolved that this conference regard the pretensions of Brigham Young, James J. Strang, James Colin Brewster, and William Smith, and Joseph Wood's joint claim to the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as an assumption of power, in violation of the law of God, and consequently, we disclaim all connection and fellowship with them.

Second. Resolved that the successor of Joseph Smith, Jr., as the Presiding High Priest, in the Melchisedec priesthood, must of necessity be the seed of Joseph Smith, Jr., in fulfillment of the law and promises of God.

Third. Resolved that the office of First President of the church, grows out of the authority of the Presiding High Priest, in the high priesthood, no person can legally lay claim to the office of First President of the church, without a previous ordination to the presidency of the high priesthood.

Fourth. Resolved that we recognize the validity of all legal ordinations in this church, and will fellowship all such as have been thus ordained, while acting within the purview of such authority.

Fifth. Resolved that we believe that the Church of Christ, organized on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1830, exists as on that day, wherever six or more Saints are organized, according to the pattern in the book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Sixth. Resolved that the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ, is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Seventh. Resolved that in the opinion of this conference, there is no stake to which the Saints on this continent, are commanded to gather at the present time: but, that the Saints on all other lands, are commanded to gather to this land, preparatory to the re-establishment of the church in Zion: when the scattered Saints on this land, will also be commanded to gather and return to Zion: and to their inheritances in fulfillment of the promises of God. And, it is the duty of the Saints, to turn their hearts and their faces towards Zion, and supplicate the Lord God for such deliverance.

Eighth. Resolved that we will to the extent of our ability, and means, communicate to all the scattered Saints, the sentiments contained in the foregoing resolutions.

Ninth. Resolved that this conference, believe it the duty of the elders of this church, (who have been legally ordained) to cry repentance and remission of sins to this generation, through obedience to the gospel: as revealed in the record of the Jews, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants: "and not faint in the discharge of duty."

The reading of these resolutions was very impressive and gave a foundation for the Saints to build upon, and to see the glaring latter-day apostasy in all its deformity; and the source from which they may look for deliverance. I am blessed with the Holy Ghost in power to present the word of the Lord in much assurance, demonstrating by the sure word of prophecy that the gospel of Christ is in truth the foundation for all Saints to build on in humility. Yet the church and kingdom of God has an organization like Ezekiel's wheel in a wheel, called officers, helps, and governments, or quorums (as we call them) of the ministers: to wit; apostles, prophets, evangelists, bishops, elders, pastors, teachers, and deacons, with miracles placed in the church as it pleased God. That the Saints may not be tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine, and those officers are all ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one ordaining; if done at all according to the will of God. And the pretention of apostates to assume that the highest presiding officer of the church could fill that office without a previous ordination to the presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood, is clearly a violation of the law of God, as revealed to us in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, which says, "The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation."—Section 99, paragraph 6.

And again, "Every president of the high priesthood . . . is to be ordained by the direction of a high council, or general conference."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17. "And he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost, which is in the one who ordains him."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12. And what is more, "The duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church to be like unto Moses. Behold here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42. And the authority like unto Moses to give commandments as a law to the church, is clearly stated in section 43, paragraphs 1 and 2, which says:

Verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church through him [Joseph] whom I have appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations from my hand; and this ye shall know assuredly that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him; for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead. And this shall be a law unto you that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

And to make it plain my dear brethren and sisters, so you can see that Joseph did not lose his gifts, blessings, and standing before God; I will quote from the revelations of Jesus Christ to him which says: "Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began. Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood, a savior unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 84: 34.

But yes, says the objector, false prophet, and usurper. The little word, "If ye continue in my goodness" "If he abide in me" is a very doubtful little word, and indicates the possibility that Joseph may fall and lose his gifts and great blessings to lead Israel, and in such an event he would not have any inheritance to hand down to his posterity or lineage after him.

Yes, very truly we are always ready to admit that men are liable to err and go wrong while in this world of trial and temptation. Abraham, the father of the faithful, and friend of God, was one like all others in this world of sorrow, and many vicissitudes of this life. He left all that was dear to him to secure a land of promise and was a stranger all his days; not even receiving a place to put his foot upon the promised land as his own. Yet in his great trial, and it may be said his last great trial, he was commanded to offer up his only son. Mark the words his only son Isaac, and after he had offered him up, with his whole heart rung out in tears and anguish, then God comes to his rescue; and the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven and said, "Abraham, Abraham: and he said, here am I. And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. . . . And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time and said, by myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and has not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, . . . and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou has obeyed my voice."—Genesis 22: 11–18.

Abraham had passed through many trials up to that time, and all his hope was based upon the condition, If thou art faithful. That little word "if" still stood in his way. Oh, if I can prove faithful I shall succeed to the chosen one; to bear off the crown and be a great blessing to all the families of the earth.

But now this momentous era of all eras since God called me to be his servant has come; and as I know God can not lie, so I know in my seed shall all the kindred of the earth be blessed; for it now has become a decree of the Almighty God of heaven, and by an oath has God sworn that in me and my seed shall all the children of man be blessed. Ah, my dear brethren, heaven and earth may fail, but the word of the Lord can not fail; for it is attested by the oath of God that can not lie. So now in like manner has the Almighty God of heaven said to Joseph, the choice Seer.

"For this anointing have I put upon his head that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindred of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph. In thee and in thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed; therefore let my servant Joseph and his seed after him have place in that house from generation to generation for ever and ever, saith the Lord."—D. C. 107: 18.

What was Joseph's blessing? To hold the keys of the kingdom; to receive the law like Moses, a light to the Gentiles and through his priesthood, a savior (not Savior) unto my people Israel?"

Joseph's blessing now no more rests upon the little word if; but like Abraham, he has secured his blessing by and through the oath of Almighty God, that his anointing and blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him. Not after Brigham Young, James J. Strang, Charles B. Thompson, Alpheus Cutler, Gladden Bishop, or Grandville Hedrick.

Just let us see for a few moments the claims of these gentlemen for the presidency of the church. Brigham Young says in his first epistle after the martyrdom of the choice Seer! "You are now without a prophet in the flesh to lead you. . . . Let not another presume to take his place for he stands in his own place and always will." And again he says, "I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet like Joseph was." "That's so," many of my audience cried out, "for I heard him say so." And he was never ordained to the office of president of the priesthood in a high council or general conference. And instead of teaching "those revelations which you have received and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." He said the Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants are no better than a last year's bird's nest, almanac, or the ashes of a rye straw. And instead of "Thou shall love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else," and "Wherefore my brethren hear me and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife. . . . For I the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women," Brigham Young says: Cleave unto many women and have many wives to increase your glory. Instead of intelligence being their glory, it is having many wives; and their glory is enhanced in ratio to their numerous wives. I am ashamed that any member of the church should be deceived by such an impostor.

JUDAS SAVED.

If our books teach that Judas is saved or will be saved, then I know of no one that need to fear the judgment, for so far as we know, there is no one whose hands are seared so red with the blood of innocence, or whose heart is so black with crime as was his. Jesus says, "Those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the Scriptures might be fulfilled."—John 17: 12.

The meaning of the word "perdition" is utter ruin or destruction and the utter ruin or destruction of this man was in fulfillment of the Scriptures. The books must harmonize if they are properly understood, and it is plain to be seen from the Bible that Judas was not saved. "Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?"—John 6: 70. It cannot be that Jesus would employ or permit a devil to sit as a judge over Israel. To my mind, Judas was only temporarily in the Quorum of Twelve, "that the Scriptures might be fulfilled."

Acts 1: 25 shows that Judas "fell that he might go to his own place," thus plainly teaching that when Judas was in the Quorum of Twelve he was not in his own place, but in some one else's place. The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants can only mean that the Twelve as a quorum and not as individuals shall sit as judges. A radical interpretation put upon the language would exclude all the apostles but the original twelve, and that would leave out Paul who was "not a whit behind the chiefest of the apostles." There has been more than three times twelve apostles in these last days, and surely every one who has magnified his office is entitled to equal honor with all others.

But it says that those who were with Christ in his ministry, etc., and that would include Judas; but let us read again. "For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein; and, His bishopric let another take. Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his first resurrection."—Acts 1: 20-22.

Matthias was the one chosen, and he would fill the requirement, for he had been in the ministry from the beginning. So when the matter was laid before the Lord, they asked God to show which of a certain two the Lord had chosen, not which one he was going to choose.

So I think it is clear that Judas was condemned, or lost; that he was out of his proper place while in the Quorum of Twelve; that he fell that he might go to his own place; that he can not be redeemed. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.

In conclusion, permit me to say that it is a dangerous doctrine to preach that Judas will be saved, for the conclusion would be, if Judas can be saved, who may not be saved?

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 6, 1903.

"WHAT WOULD BECOME OF US?"

BY MORONI TRAXLER.

We find that Genesis 1: 29, 30, (I. T.) says: "And I, God, created man in my own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him: male and female created I them. And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and of the fowl of the air, and of every living thing that moveth upon the earth." These verses have reference to the spiritual creation of man only, and the injunction to "be fruitful and multiply" was given in heaven, for Genesis 2: 5, 6, (I. T.) says: "For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth; for I, the Lord God, . . . had created all the children of men, and not yet a man to till the ground, for in heaven created I them." We here learn that all who were to live upon the earth until the end of time were created on the sixth day, and the above commands were not only given to Adam and Eve in their spirit state, but to the entire race, before Adam and Eve were naturally upon the earth. Sometime after the seventh day the Lord formed man out of the dust of the earth, and planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he "had formed:" And while the first pair were in Eden there is no record of any command for them to "be fruitful" or "multiply" in that condition, and the general command given to all the race in heaven was looking forward to the long period of time since the expulsion from Eden. All that was given to man in the garden of Eden was his agency; he received his knowledge in the day that God created them, (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7,) which was the sixth day, and before man was placed in Eden, the first opportunity they had of exercising their agency was when Satan tempted them to partake of the fruit God had forbidden them to touch. The test came and they chose to yield to Satan rather than to obey God, hence the banishment.

The Bible tells us that Adam was not deceived, but the woman; and he realized that by her transgression she would become separated from him and thus defeat God's purposes, so Adam sinned knowingly, and walked out of Eden with the woman, to share whatever condition God would place upon them. So "Adam fell that men might be." (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 1: 8.) If Adam had not fallen we would have remained as we preëxisted, as God had created us in heaven, being innocent, and Adam and Eve "would have had no children" (2 Nephi 1: 8) and would have remained there in immortal innocence. For further proof we quote the language of Adam and Eve as found in Genesis 4: 10, 11, I. T.: "And in that day Adam blessed God, and was filled, and began to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth; saying, Blessed be the name of God, for, because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God. And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying, Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient."

Adam and Eve ought to know whether or not they would have had children before the fall.

LOUISVILLE, Ontario, March 24, 1903.

C. L. SNOW.

It seems to me, if we will read the second book of Nephi, first chapter, beginning at the forty-fourth verse, and read to the close of the chapter, we might get some light on the subject. I believe that if Adam had not transgressed there would have been no children born unto him and Eve, few nor many. I mean to say it was absolutely necessary for Adam and Eve to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil before they could multiply or have children. "Wherefore, the ends of the law which the Holy One hath given, unto the inflicting of the punishment which is affixed, which punishment that is affixed is in opposition to that of the happiness which is affixed, to answer the ends of the atonement, for it must needs be that there is an opposition in all things."—2 Nephi 1: 54, large edition.

But we are told by some of the writers if Adam and Eve had not transgressed, things would have been much better; they would have had knowledge all the same, and children would have been born, and the commandment to multiply would have been kept all the same, and everybody, of course, would have been righteous. The above is not in line with what is written, "To the law and to the testimony," etc. Let us read the next verse, 55: "If not so, my first born in the wilderness, righteousness could not be brought to pass; neither wickedness; neither holiness nor misery; neither good nor bad." This proves conclusively that it is necessary to taste the bitter as well as the sweet. We must have both the bitter and the sweet; in other words, it was necessary to eat the forbidden fruit.

Some may say, Did not God command them not to eat of that fruit? Yes he did; but he had a purpose in that command. It was to bring in his law that was to govern man.

Some will say Adam and Eve ought not to have eaten of that fruit. How do you know they ought not? Would you blame a horse for eating grass if you turned him in the garden where there is plenty of it? Certainly not, for the horse has no knowledge of good and evil, knows no law. But God intended man should be governed by a higher law than the beast, so he prepared the means to bring it about. That forbidden fruit was the means, then the atonement was prepared. Does not God work everything after the counsel of his own will? If God did not aim for Adam and Eve to eat that fruit, then his works and designs and purposes were frustrated; yet the Lord says that can not be. Doctrine and Covenants, section 2.

Some seem to think that the forbidden fruit contained evil and nothing else. Remember the tree was called the tree of the knowledge of good and evil—just as much good as there was evil. So if Adam and Eve had not eaten the fruit they would have remained like the beast, without the knowledge of good and evil. God knew it would be good for them to eat that fruit. Read the 56th verse: "Wherefore all things must needs be a compound in one." Read all the verse, please. A compound of good and evil is the thought, a fruit that contains both good and evil. So after Adam and Eve ate the fruit they had knowledge then of both good and evil. Where did they get this knowledge? From the fruit called forbidden fruit. The above shows the wisdom of God in combining both good and evil in one fruit, then giving the law to govern in all things. If sin had not been brought into the world there would have been no law, so listen to 2 Nephi 1:59-63, large edition: "And if ye shall say there is no law, ye shall all say there is no sin. And if ye shall say there is no sin, ye shall also say there is no righteousness. And if there be no righteousness, there be no happiness. And if there be no righteousness nor happiness, there be no punishment nor misery. And if these things are not, there is no God." Now read verse 65: "And now, my sons, I speak unto you these things, for your profit and learning: for there is a God, and he hath created all things, both the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them is: both things to act, and things to be acted upon; and to bring about his eternal purposes in the end of man, after he had created our first parents, and the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and in fine, all things which are created, it must needs be that there was an opposition; even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter; wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man, that he should act for himself."

The foregoing states that the forbidden fruit was just as necessary as the tree of life. Adam and Eve had to eat of the forbidden fruit that man might be, and in order that man might answer the end of his creation; and besides they would not have had the knowledge of good and evil if they had not eaten the fruit. Furthermore, man could not have acted for himself; that is, would have had no agency. "Man could not act for himself, save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other."—2 Nephi 1:66. So we have the statement in Doctrine and Covenants that there are two powers that work with man; one entices to do good, the other entices to do evil. This agrees with Paul when he said, "When I would do good, evil is present." So after Adam and Eve had partaken of the forbidden fruit they were driven from the garden of Eden and they then brought forth children. "And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed, he would not have fallen; but he would have remained in the garden of Eden."—2 Nephi 1:74. "And all things which were created must have remained in the same state which they were, after they were created; and they must have remained for ever, and had no end."—Ibid., 1:75. "And they would have had no children; wherefore, they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery; doing no good, for they knew no evil."—2 Nephi 1:76.

To my mind my proposition is proven.

WILLIAM HAWKINS.

I FULLY indorse the HERALD answer, "Nothing; we would not have been." That is, we would have had to continue in the condition we then occupied.

My object is merely to present a couple of quotations which I fully believe will answer the two questions involved, Did Eve bear any children to Adam before the fall? and, If Adam and Eve had not fallen, would the multitudes who have existed on this earth since they fell have had a bodily existence here on this earth?

I am a firm believer in the principle that known unto God are and have been all his works from the beginning; that is from before the time that the grand council was held, and at its close all the sons of God shouted for joy, because this planet was to be created, that they upon it might take upon themselves a body for they (or perhaps it might be more proper to say we) knew that the spirit was not perfect without the body no more so than that the body without the spirit is perfect. And also that in God there has been no afterthought in regard to this earth and its final destiny; upon the same principle that an architect who thoroughly knows his business draws a plan for a building and writes out his specifications, and the first-class mechanic to whom the plan and specifications are delivered, and he has gathered from them his instruction as to the erection of the building they, both the architect and the mechanic, in their mind's eye can see that building as it will appear after its completion. Just so with God the great Architect and his Son Jesus the Christ who was chosen and intrusted with the plans and the specifications became the chief mechanic; for we read that by him all things were made that are made and will continue so to be until the time shall come when all things shall be completed and he the Son shall deliver the whole into the hands of his Father, he himself becoming subject that God may be all in all.

And now for the quotations promised: "And in that day the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son, saying, I am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth, and forever; that, as thou hast fallen, thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will. And in that day Adam blessed God, and was filled, and began to prophecy concerning all the families of the earth; saying, Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God. And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying, Were it not for our transgressions we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient. And Adam and Eve blessed the name of God; and they made all things known unto their sons and their daughters."—Genesis 4: 9-12, I. T.

Again: "And as Enoch spake forth the words of God, the people trembled and could not stand in his presence. And he said unto them, Because that Adam fell we are; and by his fall came death, and we are made partakers of misery and woe."—Genesis 6: 48, 49, I. T.

These quotations in connection with the words of the prophet Lehi, 2 Nephi 1: 8, fully, to my mind, establish an answer to the two questions involved in the controversy.

BAROMETER READINGS.

We often hear: "It is going to rain soon; the barometer stands at 'stormy.'" It is high time that barometer-makers stopped putting their instruments on the same level with the frog-in-a-bottle affairs, by marking them "Clear," "Very dry," and so on. Properly understood and used, the barometer is a reliable instrument, not only for measuring the weight or pressure of the air, but also in connection with the weathercock and the thermometer, for prophesying weather conditions in the near future.

What a good barometer does tell is the weight of a column of air of definite cross-section, reaching upward from the level of the instrument to the surface of the aerial ocean which surrounds our earth. But no matter what the condition of the weather, this weight varies with the depth from the surface of the aforesaid ocean, so that if the column stands at seven hundred sixty two millimeters at the level of the water-ocean which lies at the bottom of the aerial one, the same instrument would stand at a height of one thousand one hundred seventy-eight meters above the sea level at only six hundred sixty-three millimeters. This being the fact, a barometer that at the sea level stood at "Very dry," would, under the same conditions of temperature of the air and of the instrument itself, indicate "Stormy" when carried to a height of one thousand one hundred seventy-eight meters above the sea.

The "prophecies" of the mercury barometer are different for various temperatures and degrees of moisture of the air in any one country, and for different countries. Further, the "weather indications" of an aneroid and of a mercurial barometer for the same readings are different; because a good aneroid is not influenced by the air-temperature.

Those who use the mercury barometer scientifically and for scientific purposes, use tables giving the following data:

(1) Height of the column of mercury for each distance above sea-level; (2) "corrections" for the height, for different latitudes; (3) logarithmic corrections for temperature and latitude; (4) the height of a column of air corresponding to each difference of one millimeter or of one special fraction of an inch, in the height of the mercury column; (5) "corrections" for the height of the mercury for different barometer temperatures, at different heights above the sea, and which latter corrections must be applied, before the height of the mercury column can be used with the other tables; (6) the average temperature of the air at the sea-level for each month for the district where the observation is made.

It may be noted here (a) that the differences of temperature during the day vary with the latitude; (b) the higher the latitude, the greater the variation; (c) the average temperature for the twenty-four consecutive hours in the day is that of nine a. m., and (d) the average temperature daily between nine a. m. and five p. m. occurs at noon.—Robert Grimshaw in Scientific American for November 8.

Prepared Readings for May Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Having previously considered the place of bread in the diet of man, we now take up the preparation of it for use, hoping we may be able to present a few facts which we gather from the aforesaid bulletin, and our own experience, that will help us to such an understanding of the combination of the necessary ingredients of bread—water, flour, a little yeast, and salt that good bread may be the rule among us. The digestibility of bread depends largely upon its lightness. To insure this it is necessary to have good yeast, of which there are many kinds on the market now, so that the housekeeper need not be at loss for good yeast, as was sometimes the case fifty years ago. We do, however, have a particular liking for the old-fashioned soft potato yeast, made by boiling about three good-sized potatoes in about a quart of water until quite soft, then mash and mix thoroughly with two tablespoonfuls of flour and one of sugar, adding the water they were hoiled in to the paste, and when just lukewarm add a cake of yeast foam which has been previously soaked in a little cold water; then set in a warm place to raise. It will be ready to use in about twenty-four hours. It should then be tightly bottled and kept in a cool place. Of this yeast from a half to a cupful will be sufficient to start the sponge for an ordinary baking.

"Yeast is really a mass of tiny plants which only grow in the presence of heat, moisture, and material to feed upon, and develop best at a temperature of from seventy-five to ninety-five degrees Fahrenheit."

"Ordinarily bread is mixed with water, but where milk is abundant it is advisable to mix with it, for though the dough is slower raising, it is equally light, and contains a larger percentage of proteids and fat than water bread, and is equally digestible.

"There are various methods of mixing dough, but certain general principles apply to them all. As yeast develops best at a moderately high temperature, the materials of the dough should be at least lukewarm, and the mixing and the raising should be done in a warm place, as free from drafts as possible. If all parts of the dough are to be equally aerated by the gas from the growing yeast, the latter must be thoroughly mixed with the flour and water; moreover, as the presence of oxygen aids in the growth of the yeast, all parts of the dough should be exposed to the air; both of these results are accomplished by the kneading. Too little yeast will, of course, yield a badly raised loaf, but too much yeast is just as dangerous; the bubbles formed in the gluten of the flour, unable to resist the pressure of the excessive amount of gas, break open, the gas escapes, and the dough becomes heavy and soggy. Too much yeast also gives an unpleasant 'yeasty' taste to the bread, due partly to the presence of superfluous yeast cells, but more especially to other microscopic growth-producing fermentations. Even when used in small quantities, yeast has a decided influence on the flavor of the bread. The amount of yeast which should be used depends on the strength of the flour. A flour in which the gluten is abundant and tenacious can resist a much stronger pressure of gas than one poor in gluten, which if it does not fall entirely, is likely to make a loaf with large holes and heavy, badly mixed masses between. Similarly the proportion of water which should be used varies with the strength of the flour. The standard cook-books suggest an average of about three parts of flour to one of water, the ratio changing with the quality of the flour. In general, nothing but practical experience with the material at hand can teach one the exact quantities of each to mix.

"What are perhaps the two most popular ways of making bread at home are what are called the 'quick-raising' method and the 'slow-raising' method. In the quick-raising method a stiff dough is made of flour, water, and yeast, with a little salt. It is thoroughly kneaded, and then allowed to raise until double its bulk when it is again kneaded, thoroughly made into loaves and set to raise again. The loaves should scarcely double their size this time before they are placed in the oven to bake. More yeast is used by this method than by the slow-raising method, and some prefer it because the bread is off hands sooner, though the quality is not quite so fine. By the slow-raising method a batter is made of flour, water and yeast, and allowed to raise for several hours, often over night. [It has always been our practice to mix with this sponge a tablespoonful of sugar and one half tablespoonful of salt; but as salt tends to retard fermentation some prefer to add it at the second mixing; but pity those who have to eat the bread if it is left out entirely.] This sponge is then made into a stiff dough with more flour, thoroughly kneaded and placed in a warm place for a second raising. Afterwards it is kneaded again and made into loaves to raise for baking. We want to suggest here that the dough should be stiff enough to remain in a rounded mass when set to raise, and not so soft that it will spread out of itself. Neither should it be kept too warm. The heat should be even as possible all around it, and from seventy to eighty degrees."

Numerous varieties of rolls, light cakes, etc., may be made by using with the sponge a little shortening, milk, eggs, sugar, dried currants, etc., as one may desire. And as we have not space here to give directions for making them, we suggest that the sisters who have a method of their own for making any of these fancy breads that their own families particularly enjoy prepare recipes for making them and present them at their local meetings for the benefit of the other sisters. "Every utensil used in bread-making should be scrupulously clean, not only on principles of general decency, but because otherwise bacteria may get into the dough and produce harmful fermentation."

We may have our bread properly mixed and nicely raised for the oven, and then spoil it in the baking. If the oven is not hot enough the gas in the dough will continue to expand, until it bursts the little cells in the dough, and the bread will be full of large holes—and will soon dry out after it is baked. The effect is just about the same as if it had been allowed to raise too long before being put into the oven. If the oven is too hot a hard crust is formed before the heat reaches the center of the loaf, and the crust will perhaps be burned before the inside is done. As there are but few of us who have thermometers in our ovens to regulate the heat by, we must find some other way of doing it. If we have a good heat to begin with, then watch our bread very closely for about fifteen minutes. If we see it beginning to get brown in two or three minutes, or even in five minutes, we know that the oven is too hot; so we at once close the drafts, and perhaps open the door a little, and so on, regulating the heat according to our knowledge of our own stove. At the end of fifteen minutes our bread should be a nice, light brown all over the top. We may then safely trust our bread to the regulated oven, only watching it occasionally until it is done. A good-sized panful of bread should remain in the oven about an hour, and should then be of a nice golden brown color. Smaller loaves, of course, should not be in the oven so long. Light rolls and biscuits may, and should be, baked in a hotter oven than large loaves.

On being taken from the oven, bread should be placed where air can circulate all round it until it is thoroughly cool. Some good bread-makers place out of doors. We do not advise wrapping the bread in cloths when put away. It tends to cultivate mold: but it should be kept in a close tin box, or stone jar with a cover to it. We hear a great deal said in regard to the nutrient value of different kinds of bread, as wheat bread, rye bread, corn bread, etc., so we quote from the bulletin: "Judged by their composition all breads are nutritious foods, and too great stress should not be laid on the variations in composition of the different kinds."

When we think how simple is the process of bread-making, we wonder that there are so many poor bread-makers, and so many housekeepers who are willing to put up with the poor excuse for bread that is often sent out from the bake shops. Neither does baker's bread recommend itself from a pecuniary standpoint, for we have often estimated the comparative cost of home made and baker's bread, and find that the latter costs nearly twice as much as the former, even when the cost of fuel is considered, and we find that our computations agree with that of official statisticians. Though the process of bread-making is simple, watchful care must be exercised all through the process, and it is no use for one to expect to make good bread, who sets her sponge and then lets it stand until it sours before making it up into dough; same with the dough, or if it is set in too warm a place, so that the yeast is killed by the heat. One hundred fifty-eight degrees Fahrenheit kills the yeast; so it would be very easy to spoil the bread by mixing with too hot water.

"Statements of a popular nature are frequently met with on the unwholesomeness of hot bread. The fact that the bread is hot has little to do with the matter; but hot bread does not so readily yield to mastication as stale bread. In the case of rolls or biscuits where there is much crust this difficulty would be somewhat overcome. If digestion depends so largely on the mastication of our food, should we not accustom ourselves to the use of such bread as is most likely to be masticated."

The General Sunday-School Convention.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

To the Brethren and Fellow Sunday-school Workers in General Convention Assembled, Greeting: In presenting our annual report to the Convention we do so endeavoring to make it as brief as possible to accomplish the object of the report. There are often many things that can be seen by an executive eye that the Convention needs to know that are obscure from the eye of the masses of the Sunday-school workers. To such we shall attempt to direct your thoughts.

A careful and honest study of the present status of the Sunday-school can produce but one dominant conviction: that the Sunday-school never was so gloriously useful, so essentially a part of this great latter-day work as it is now. From the very incipency it has been blessed and has blessed. It has prospered beyond our fondest hopes. It has had its "ups" and "downs," but it has successfully arisen a little higher after each than it was before. And though it has now, and I suppose always will have its problems to wrestle with, it is on a firm foundation. Small things no longer turn its course or impede its progress. "We should have only gratitude to God for its phenomenal rise, progress, and usefulness."

I apprehend that we are all of the conviction that it is vastly easier to ridicule and to adversely criticise than it is to aid and assist suggestively the cause we love so well. We will all concede, too, that "an ounce of constructive aid is worth a ton of destructive censure." These thoughts kept well in mind may help to shape our attitude toward the problems that must confront us hereafter. We are, to a certain extent, very like Doctor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania said of the great Denver convention last June of the International Sunday-school work. He said: "We are face to face with a condition in our Sunday-school work that causes almost universal unrest. We know what we desire as a result of Sunday-school service. We frankly admit that we do not achieve fully the result we labor patiently and prayerfully to attain. Hence the discontent that too readily assumes the forms of denunciation for the system and despair for the outlook. This discontent is natural. It is to be expected. It will be a sorry day when it is no longer felt. Its presence is not a sign of weakness but of strength; not the evidence of decay, but of growth; not the proof that the cause is waning, but that it is growing; not the harbinger of an evil day, but of a dawn more splendid. All great advance is preceded by a period of anxious suspense. After the winter of discontent, comes the flowering and the fruitage of the gladsome summer-tide."

OUR WORK.

Immediately after the close of the last General Convention we set about preparing to dispose of our business so as to be able to better concentrate our energies and attention to the Sunday-school work; but regret to say that it is only within the last month that we have succeeded in removing all of it. We were thus hampered with business and other matters so that our time and efforts could but be divided. However, we are happy to say that we were able to do much that was needed to be done.

Aside from keeping up the routine of duties, correspondence, and the general oversight of the work, some items of which will receive special mention, we made a tour extending through the Southern Indiana District and Ohio, on through the Philadelphia District where we met with them in district convention, through Brooklyn to the Massachusetts District. There we made a stop at the reunion at the beautiful little Silver Lake and threw in our mite there. We met with many whom we had known before and many we had not. But we were not long a stranger there. The kind hospitality of the Massachusetts Saints will not admit of that. The ten days spent at this place were we believe, productive of much good to the cause. But we had to pass on. We took boat from Boston and were soon in Maine where we spent some two weeks, organizing a district association in the Western Maine District, and think had it been possible to have remained till the district conference of the Eastern District that an organization could have been effected there too. But we had previously set the date of their conference for the meeting in the Ohio District for the reorganization of the district work there so could not remain in Maine. Returning we stopped at Boston, Fall River, and Providence in the Massachusetts District and held a meeting at each place. From thence we passed to the district convention of the Pittsburgh District at Wheeling, thence to Creola, Ohio, where we assisted to organize a district Sunday-school association. And after an absence of about two months we turned our course homeward. We left the eastern section with a heart full of hope for them and the work there. There are many noble workers there now and many more that will eventually develop into substantial workers. And while I can not say that I love the rocks and rills, I can say that I love the people that live there and shall rejoice should providence ever throw my lot among them again. The remainder of the year has been devoted to the work from my desk chiefly, having been in the field only on short trips.

The Sunday-school missionary plan is a success and should not be abandoned, but the General Superintendent will never be able to do all that could and should be done and do justice to the office work. At best he should make but about two or three tours per year of not to exceed two months each. The general work will suffer if he does.

THE DEPARTMENT IN THE HERALD.

We have kept the department in the HERALD going after a fashion. With more time at our disposal, better work can be done. But at best it is merely a substitute for what we should have. But we are not able to suggest a remedy for it at present. But the time is not far distant when some radical steps must be taken along the line of Sunday-school literature. We need literature for the teachers and officers; we need literature for each of the different ages or classes from the little tot up. And as soon as we are competent as an association to provide it, I think the way will open up. This should be pondered over for some time, as we must not take radical steps suddenly. The time is coming when the Association will see the necessity of owning and controlling that which comes under its direct supervision and upon which a measure of its success depends.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL HISTORY.

In the latter part of 1901 I believe it was that we made a call for help from the several districts for items of history on Sunday-school matter. Each district was asked to appoint some one to prepare a brief but comprehensive history of the work in their district, much on the same plan as the general Church Historian has worked. Several districts did their work well and very promptly. Had all done likewise, we could have had our chapter on Sunday-school work ready for the fourth volume of the Church History. But as it is we were able to do nothing. More than half of the districts have not been heard from at all. We have written several times in some instances, but can receive no reply. It seems a matter of deep regret that we can not get our brethren to reply, as the work is a very important one. We would that something could be done to make it yet possible to complete the history of the Sunday-school movement of the church of latter days.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

In the latter part of June Bro. Gunsolley and I attended the great International Sunday-school Convention at Denver, for the purpose of getting whatever of good that might be found therein. It was a profitable session for us. The ablest Sunday-school workers of America and some from Great Britain were present. And we supposedly had the cream of American Sunday-school workers there. Sure it was that there was much rich thought along Sunday-school lines of work expressed. And while we can not hope to adopt all that seemed good, because not adaptable to our peculiar needs, we, nevertheless, got many thoughts that will enrich our store of knowledge, and will be heard from from time to time.

An Anti-Mormon Meeting.

Editors Herald: Having been called to Red Oak, Iowa, last Monday I learned that announcements were out for Mrs. Weed, a "representative of the National Anti-Mormon League," to give an address in the Presbyterian church that evening, April 20. With several of the Saints, including Bro. James Caffall, we attended, and from our notes and observations pen the following:

The meeting was held in the Presbyterian church with the pastor in charge, the audience numbering probably a little over one hundred. Mrs. Weed, who was announced as from New York City, is of medium stature and about middle age, was dressed in black, and wore a gold crucifix suspended from her neck. She began her address by saying that she was sent out by the "Inter-denominational Council of Women, and also represented the W. C. T. U.;" that it was not her "design or intent to fight Mormons, but to fight polygamy;" that her subject would be the "Menace of Modern Mormonism." The apparent contradiction of the last two statements was carried out all through the address, for while the subject of polygamy was fairly well interspersed, the main effort was directed against all that so-called "Mormonism" ever did or does now involve, from its "beginning down."

A large part of her store of knowledge was gained while in Utah, and especially from a certain bishop there, to whom she represented herself as being very much interested in "Mormonism," by which means she learned many of the inner workings of the church that were not usually known by nonmembers. Many good things were said about the "Mormons" and their religion, all of which were sadly clouded, however, by her concluding remarks along that line, which were to the effect that the good was merely a deceitful cloak to hide the evil; that "Mormonism was a wolf in sheep's clothing," etc. Other information had been gleaned by her from works written against the "Mormons."

Following is given a few quotations from the address:

"They ['Mormons'] have a faculty of absorbing the good of every religion."

"Their knowledge in the Scriptures and of every other religion, gives them a power in argument that they can not be met."

"They number among their followers men and women of unquestioned intelligence."

"The apathy of the Christian churches is the harvest of the 'Mormons.' Let us arouse ourselves to our conditions and the dangers that confront us."

"Mormonism is not only a religion but a political despotism. They have a balance of power in five States, and when the three new ones come in they will have eight. They need only thirteen to for ever prohibit any amendment to the constitution. They now have twenty-five hundred missionaries out, and their power is growing all over the land."

Speaking of the Book of Mormon, she said:

"There is absolute indubitable evidence that it had its origin in a practical joke—the Spalding Romance. The original manuscript is in possession of the Spalding family, and you only have to read the two to be satisfied of their similarity."

On polygamy she said:

"Polygamy is absolutely the warf and woof of this people. Joseph Smith is said to have had eighty wives. It was Brigham Young's boast that he expected to have one million posterity in one hundred [?] years."

"The history of the Mormon church from the beginning to the present is one of covenant breaking." "I am here to ask for coöperation. Coöperation drove a polygamist from Congress, and coöperation will drive this curse from our land."

The following resolutions were read, and an affirmative vote only was called, a few not voting:

"Resolved that we earnestly request the United States Senate to investigate the charges made against Apostle Reed Smoot of the Mormon church. If it be found that he is a polygamist, we ask that he be expelled from the Senate on account of unlawful practices. If it be found that the Mormon church claims and teaches supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to control its members in civil as well as religious affairs, as we believe it does, we ask that he be expelled as one giving his highest allegiance to a government other than the Republic of the United States of America, and therefore wholly ineligible to a seat in the highest legislative body of the Republic.

"Resolved that we earnestly petition the Fifty-eighth Congress to submit an amendment to the constitution of the United States, to the legislatures of the several States defining marriage to be monogamic, and making polygamy and polygamous cohabitation under whatever guise or pretense a crime against the United States punishable by severe penalties."

Because of the intolerant spirit manifested, and the extravagant and false statements made which struck directly at our own faith, as well as at the reputation of innocent men and women who were prominent in the early church, we felt it our duty to call attention to some of them. When informed of the Reorganized Church Mrs. Weed said she knew nothing about any such organization, only that she had heard once in Utah that there was a body called Josephites; but later in the conversation she spoke of knowing that the Mormon elders often went under our name, showing that she had some knowledge of us. She seemed unwilling to give us credit for our position; but as we continued to protest against her method of classing us with the Utah church and insisted on her making the distinction she finally promised to do so in the future. In discussing polygamy we insisted that it is not, nor ever was, a doctrine or practice of the real church of Latter Day Saints, nor that Joseph Smith was the author of it in any way. We assured her that the Book of Mormon was purely monogamic, and asked her if she had read it. "Y-e-e-e-s—, but not as you have, of course." We read to her the resolutions reaffirmed by the last General Conference, favoring an amendment to the constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy, and called attention to the fact that while the country is just now arising in an organized capacity to blot out polygamy, the Reorganized Church was the first to send missionaries to Utah to call that people from their errors, and that our missionaries have been proclaiming against it for nearly fifty years.

Many other matters were discussed, which kept us busy till ten o'clock, the minister and about fifteen others being attentive listeners. Our opinion of this whole anti-Mormon movement, judging from what we have seen, is an appeal to the ignorance and prejudice of the masses; not so much against polygamy, as against the whole system "from the beginning to the present," including all that was restored by the heavenly messenger, and which the world is unprepared to receive. God's people have been judged and condemned without evidence; and people of intelligence to-day will, instead of judging "righteous judgment," as the Scriptures teach, accept the false statements of prejudiced minds and avowed enemies of the Saints to the exclusion of such testimony as would be received in a civil court. Is there any escape from the divine law, "For with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again"? It is our purpose to defend the truth wherever found, and the innocent. While we have no sympathy with the pernicious doctrines of Utah, we are assured that the people who hold them are misjudged and misrepresented; and yet because of those doctrines others who have no part in them are also caused to suffer.

The recent General Conference did wisely in rejecting the preambles to the resolution relating to the amendment to the constitution of the United States. The church could not afford to affiliate with or indorse any such movement as represented by Mrs. Weed; but it can afford to do its own work in its own way, and stand upon its own foundation.

CHARLES FRY.

TABOR, Iowa, April 23.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, April 21.

Editors Herald: It seems that the Saints of the most high God have a great deal of opposition to meet in this part of the Lord's vineyard; but we are all still striving to do all we can to keep the gospel stone rolling.

We have a regular Sunday-school service every Sunday; prayer-meeting every Sunday evening, and testimonies which are quite strengthening to each other. The darkest hours turn out to be the best. We ought never to get discouraged; we ought to be willing to press continually forward, to climb up higher in this grand and glorious gospel, that is being preached over the land for the last time. As this is the last time for the revelation of the gospel, to be carried through the earth, we ought to continue to press on and give no heed to the opposing power. Of course Satan is always seeking to overthrow all good, and as long as we continue to stay away from church, when we have church privileges, we will be subjected to follow the evil power; although we may feel very sad at times. But if we attempt to give up to such feelings we shall miss a grand opportunity to do ourselves good, and probably others. As time is so precious, we have no time to lose, for all the time that is lost will in the near future be needed.

Since I have moved to Indian Territory I find a great need of the truth to be placed before the people, for they are so ignorant concerning the gospel of Christ. I pray God that he will give me his Holy Spirit, that I may be useful in helping to spread his gospel and bring souls to him. I ask an interest in your prayers.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 23.

Editors Herald: I wish to express my thankfulness to God for his kind and watchful care over me and my family the past year. I also thank the Saints and friends of the Des Moines District for their kindness to me. Am pleased to be permitted to return to that district again this year. While presenting the gospel we have been graciously remembered by the Lord, and felt the peaceful influence of God's Holy Spirit. My uppermost thoughts are to bring darkened souls into light; for I know what it is to be outside the glorious light of the gospel.

I will leave home for my field of labor the 24th. May faith, knowledge, and good works increase among the people of God, is my earnest desire and prayer.

T. F. JONES.

NEW ALBANY, Indiana, April, 1903.

Editors Herald: The past week has been one of strange things for me, as I have been associated with the children of the world, and many trials and blessings have been mine. I feel grateful for both, for they tend to elevate the mind and heart. I have been among strangers mostly, and have been trying to do a little in behalf of this work. It is indeed strange that most of the people of the world, believing as they profess to believe that the coming of Christ is near, go on in the wicked ways of the world, and when the truth is presented to them they, instead of hastily accepting it, will turn their hearts and minds from it and not suffer themselves to hear lest they be ensnared in some awful trap that they think is being laid for them.

When I see the truth rejected and the people of God sneered at and scorned, and so many other like things, I can only be stronger in the faith and take more courage to move on.

Let us then be more diligent in the work and be more anxious to spread the good tidings, cut ourselves loose from the things of this world, instill into our hearts the good things God has intended for us, and humble ourselves before him unto obedience to his will so that when the last trump shall sound and this old earth be baptized with fire, we may be among the ransomed of God's elect.

I hope for the redemption of Zion soon.

OGDEN, Utah, April 15.

Editors Herald: We were out to hear the champion of the "Mormon" presidency last night, Elder B. H. Roberts, at the tabernacle in this place. It was a new experience to me, and thinking it might be of some interest to others I will give just a brief outline of his remarks. He was advertised to speak on the successorship in church presidency. By the way, Bro. Chase in his street work last summer, aired this subject quite extensively before this people and later in his appointments all through this country, the requests came up from their own people that he would give them our views on this subject, and of course he complied but not always to their satisfaction. Possibly this may have been the inspiring cause of last night's lecture. He began with a half-hour preface, assuring and reassuring his audience that it was not on account of any disturbance in their own minds whatever that he had chosen the subject for the night, for they were perfectly contented with their presidency from Joseph the Seer down to Joseph F. Smith, but it was in order that their elders that were being sent out might be thoroughly posted upon these points of doctrine. He said he was not going to undertake to discuss every quibble that the Josephites might bring up, especially on the subject of marriage, for it was utterly futile for the Josephites to undertake to convince them that Joseph Smith was not the author of the marriage covenant as held by their church together with, under some circumstances, the plurality of wives; for they would never look into the faces of their fathers and say they had taught them lies.

First he represented the work of the restoration as the dispensation of the fullness of times, wherein the gospel with the priesthood was brought to earth for the last time never to be thrown down or taken away. Of course we agreed with him on this point. He then went on to show that the keys were held by the presidency in conjunction with the twelve and seventy. This last seemed to have been made necessary to meet such emergencies as arose when their presidency and twelve were all in hiding from the law and some one must have authority to preside at their conference. We agreed with him on this, too, but wondered why he did not extend it to take in the entire Melchisedec priesthood. From this he attempted to establish the fact that after Joseph's death the Quorum of Twelve were rightfully the Presidency of the church, holding the keys belonging to that Quorum, and that the church as a body at a special conference held at Nauvoo, August 8, 1844, had acknowledged and sustained them as prophets, seers, revelators, and presidents of the church, citing us to Times and Seasons, volume 5, pages 637, 638.

I find on reading this citation that no such action was taken by the church, but that the Twelve were simply supported in their calling, whatever that might carry. Evidently the progress of the church along these lines was not so rapid as Mr. Roberts would have it, so he thought it necessary to force the text to express what he thought it should mean. He next cited the resolution of the October conference, of the same year, wherein Brigham Young was sustained as president of the Twelve and one of the presidents of the whole church. Then enumerating nine members of the Twelve holding office at Joseph's death, who came to the valleys of the mountains, declared that these nine all participated in the organization (he was careful not to say reorganization) of the Presidency at Winter Quarters; which upon investigation we find also to be untrue, as only seven of the original Twelve were present at that meeting, John Taylor and P. P. Pratt being in Salt Lake Valley at this time, and in order to get a majority of the Twelve left at Joseph's death Brigham Young must have voted for himself. Right here he remarked, "So you see there did not have to be a great ugly gap of sixteen years waiting for a kidling to grow up to fill this place."

By the way, I heard the question asked at the close of his effort, "That's funny, where did he get that word I wonder, never heard it before?"

I answered, "I do not know, but suppose it is one of the results of his trip to Washington where the plurality of wives and multiplicity of kidlings had caused him so much disappointment, and consequently the impression remained with him."

Well, he next declared that as the Doctrine and Covenants specifically provided for descent from father to son in two offices, namely, that of bishop and patriarch, by this special provision it must necessarily exclude such descent in all other offices. It seemed a little strange to us, that, while he remembered that the blessing of faithful Aaron descended to his faithful sons, he forgot that the Lord had said he would put the blessing of Joseph upon the head of his posterity after him. The rest of the time was spent boasting of what they as a church had done, telling of the translating of the Book of Mormon in different tongues, the many nations they had sent missionaries unto, also naming and locating the number of temples they had erected, and said there had been more work done in these temples for the dead than had ever been done for the living since Joseph's birth. "And what have the Josephites done? They are not in it, never have been, and never will be in it." He then presented the church in its persecutions, as he termed it, as an evidence of its being true and faithful and asked, "Who have been so persecuted, not the Josephites, they forget what Peter said 'If ye suffer as evil-doers what thank have ye.'" He went on to state the persecutions that they as a church had suffered, at different times, and how it had hindered them in trying to spread the glorious gospel of light and liberty and stated that in all this the Josephites were the very worst, that they had hindered them more than all the other churches together. We were glad to hear this confession, for it seemed that, although we were so small in numbers, a mere nothing, and were not in it, as he had before stated, we were a little too much in it for their satisfaction.

Well, in conclusion I might say, as did Bro. Chase last night, the whole effort was a miss, misquoting, misconstruing, misrepresenting, and misapplying. But when I mentioned this fact to some of their members coming home on the car they said, "How do you know he misquoted?" I simply said we had the books with us and turned and read as he quoted. Of course they could say nothing to this, only utter surprise and confess that they had never read it for themselves. We find this to be the worst fault with this people; they do not know, do not care to know; will not read, but just take the opinions of their living oracles. God save us from such oracles!

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

SEDALIA, Kentucky, April 14.

Editors Herald: I like to read the HERALD and Ensign. I do not see how a Saint can do without them.

From what I can see and hear the Saints in this district are taking more interest in the cause of Christ. Saints, let us all live nearer to God's commandments. We all do things that we ought not to do, you will admit that; so when you do something that is wrong or something you ought not to do, make a note of it. When you have done this for a few days, if you think you can not overcome them all at once, decide which one you can overcome the easiest; overcome that one, then the next one; take them one by one till you overcome all of them, asking God to help you.

I see there are a good many Saints who do not pay tithing. Saints, why do you not pay tithing? Have you got anything, or do you make anything? If so, my Bible teaches me that you ought to pay tithing. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3: 8-12.

I am sure you do not want to rob God. If you are working for a landlord, you pay him a portion of what you make, do you not? Why not pay the Lord a part? "Well," some one says, "we made a contract to pay the landlord part." All right, did you not make a vow to keep God's commandments? "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38. "Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year."—Deuteronomy 14: 22.

In regard to tithing Christ said, this "ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Matthew 23: 23. Why not obey all of his commandments, is not one commandment just as binding as another? If not, why not? If you can not pay all at once, pay part when you get some money that you want to pay as tithing. Do not wait to get more, for you may spend what little you have. Pay it to the Bishop's agent. When you get the money the second time it will not be as hard for you to pay as it was the first time. My prayer is that one and all may live up to their duty. Pray for me, that I may live as I ought to the end.

Your brother,

W. C. Cook.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, April 16.

Editors Herald: I am glad that I am still standing as a soldier in the ranks of the Latter Day Saints; and although I realize each day my weakness, I also realize (and such a glorious realization it is, too) that as I go to him in prayer I receive strength for the trials and temptations of life. I then feel like saying with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." O, if we could only go oftener to him for help and strength, how different things would be; and how much sorrow and discouragement would be banished.

The work here is slowly progressing; a little better interest manifested than before. Bro. S. O. Foss has been holding some meetings here, and we expect Bro. J. N. Ames will be here soon. There seems to be a fair interest taken in our Sunday-school work; although some that could attend, do not avail themselves of the opportunity. May the Father above help such everywhere, to realize that they are not only neglecting an opportunity, but a duty as well. Let us one and all see to it that we attend the meetings and Sunday-school whenever possible, and exercise constantly the means of grace; thereby making the world better by coming in contact with us, and causing our souls to grow as well.

I pray that the dear Lord may bless his Saints everywhere. I ask your prayers.

WALLACE A. SMALL.

CARDIFF, Wales, April 4.

Editors Herald: My interest in the gospel restored is ever on the increase, and my delight is in striving to fulfil my mission. Ere this missive reaches you the General Conference of 1903 will doubtless be a matter of history, and the work of the Lord will have received an impetus for good. My earnest prayer to God is that the work of the Reorganization will this coming conference year excel all others numerically, and also in a deepening of spiritual life among its devotees. The signs of the times certainly indicate that the hastening time is upon us, and happy will we be if we shall be counted worthy to stand. Our Father in heaven by his Spirit has given me a knowledge that this work is true, hence I feel happy in the hope of the gospel.

The other Saturday (Sabbath) morning I strolled into a Jewish synagogue, and for the first time in my life witnessed their mode of service. I was bidden to leave my hat on, and was handed a Hebrew book containing their prayers and songs. If it had only been Welsh I could have digested it all right; but the rabbi evidently took me to be a full-blooded Jew. Presently the book was exchanged for a Hebrew-English liturgy. During the whole service they just chanted their long prayers one after the other. It brought to mind forcibly the time of our Savior in the long ago. What astonished me most was their articles of faith. Their belief about God is "that he hath no bodily likeness, nor is he corporeal." Is it not too bad that even an Israelite according to the flesh should have such a perverted conception concerning the personality of God? In his explanation to me after service, the rabbi would have it that all expressions concerning God having hands, fingers, feet, face, eyes, and ears, were only figurative, and therefore can not be taken to mean what they read.

Their expression in prayer concerning the female side of the house was a stunner: "Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who hath not made me a woman!" Then follows what the poor women say: "Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who hath made me according to thy will." I found them enthusiastic enough over the return of the Jews to their own land, and introduced the thought of God raising up a latter-day prophet, seer, and revelator, pointing towards the "restitution of all things." Finding him eager to listen and to read, I gave him reading matter.

I feel proud of that new tract, "The Church of Christ, Where Is It," for it bristles with points in such an attractive manner that it can not fail to become convincing to those who seek for light and truth. May the Lord by his Holy Spirit bear witness to the truth of his word. Glad I am indeed of having the privilege to engage in so holy a cause. I lay my all at the Master's feet, be it little or much. I can do no more, only as he gives me strength. May we all try to do more from a pure love of God, who first loved us when we were yet sinners.

I see the summons came for Brn. Archibald of St. Joseph and William Gurwell of Fanning, Kansas. Good, faithful men, who stood at their post to the last! They have surely gone to their long and well-earned rest. Thus the old pass away and the young must fill their places in the ranks. Some are dropping off on this side of the water, too, and there meet and greet the happy throng who have only gone on before. Bro. William Lewis was called to officiate the last rites to Sr. Elizabeth Evans, of Hirwain, near Aberdare. She lived and died a saint indeed. Tried and true, she was faithful unto death. And even though her lot was a thorny one, being bed-ridden and helpless for the past twenty-five years, yet she had the veritable patience of Job, and had the hope of the gospel always uppermost in her mind. Wishing all God-speed, I now take my leave. My permanent address is 29 Hicks Street, Llanelly, South Wales.

FRANK J. PIERCE.

Lighthouse Dromana, VICTORIA, Australia, February 24.

Editors Herald: I am isolated most of my time, also far away from any organized branch, so it is an impossibility for us to meet very often with the children of God. Although deprived of the privileges extended to those in organized branches we are not alone by any means, for we find, although so far away from God's people, we have the same Holy Spirit guiding and directing our footsteps. We also are able to keep in touch with the work, thanks to the ever welcome HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Standard, which convey many cheerful messages to our drooping spirits.

We think the church papers should be found in every home. The price is really so low that one would think the papers within the reach of the poorest Saint. I am convinced those who unfortunately neglect to support this arm of the work suffer great loss in failing to partake of the spiritual food contained in the HERALD. How grand it is to drink in the truth as given to us through the Palmyra Seer. It is like a draught of clear, cool water to the thirsty soul.

We feel indebted to you, dear HERALD, for the many useful hints contained within your pages concerning the training of our little ones. We have two little ones, and our desire is to train them aright; and we constantly read and digest the valuable instruction and advice given by some of your experienced correspondents.

We feel that great honors are to be won even in this great world of ours in this special direction, the training of the little ones. If we do our duty it will be the means of molding their little minds so that when they mature they will understand their duty and become bright gems in God's kingdom. It must indeed be cheering for the faithful Saints to realize they have not failed in the performance of their duty in preparing the little ones for a life of usefulness.

We are greatly pleased to hear of the progress of the work in this land. Surely the hastening time is upon us.

Sixty have been added through baptism since Bro. J. W. Wight's arrival. I am pleased also to see the activity shown by the missionary force in general. The dark clouds are dispersing rapidly, and the silver lining begins to make its appearance. The prospects look bright in this land for a speedy spread of the angel's message. We appeared to be under a cloud for a considerable time and the work appeared at a standstill, but now we are well organized and things work in such a systematic manner that it must continue to progress.

We are pleased with our mission paper. Although small it brings measures of knowledge to the hungry soul, therefore we feel it must do a vast amount of good. It is cheering to us to know how the Saints are progressing and what our brethren are doing for the advancement of truth.

We have had the pleasure of Bro. and Sr. Butterworth's company for a few days. We are pleased to notice improvement in Bro. Butterworth, though he is not yet able to take up his ministerial duties as actively as in days gone by. But we are hopeful that the future will find him occupied in his high and holy calling in the same earnest manner that has marked his career in days gone by.

We have just said good-bye to Bro. J. H. N. Jones and Sr. Patia, they having left for their field of labor, "Adelaide," South Australia, where they join Bro. and Sr. Mackie. May the Lord go before them and bless their efforts and direct his work.

In hope of eternal life, I am,

W. JONES.

MCKENZIE, Alabama, April 19.

Dear Herald: I love this work, and my heart has been made to rejoice many times while reading the soul-inspiring letters and testimonies of the brethren and sisters, which is evidence of the fact that the Lord is working among his people. I have been in this church for twenty-one years, and will ever praise the power and influence that led me to the light.

It has not been my privilege to see many of the faces of those who are actively engaged in the work, but have become acquainted with and learned to love them by reading their letters and articles in the church papers; especially is this so with Brn. M. T. Short, J. A. Robinson, and Sr. Almira Snow. Surely they have gone to their reward, for they were a blessing to others while here. I am always glad to see letters from those who have labored in this mission and to learn of their whereabouts and their continued interest in this latter-day work.

The conference of the Alabama District convened with the Flat Rock Branch last Saturday and Sunday. There was a goodly number present from all the branches, except one. The visiting Saints were kindly cared for by the brethren, aided by their neighbors. A large crowd was present Sunday morning and evening. Bro. S. D. Allen, from the Florida District, was present, rendering valuable aid in the business of the conference, and Sunday-school convention also, in the dispensing of the word. He seems to be a diligent worker and possessed of a disposition to have things done right. The slothful and careless sometimes call it being too particular, but the church will never suffer any great loss at the hands of such men. May God speed the day when he will raise up many more such noble defenders of his work in the Southeastern Mission; for surely they are greatly needed.

This was one of the best conferences held at that branch in twenty years. The Saints all seemed strong in the faith, and the official members especially seemed determined to do more in the future, and I believe they will. The two elders in this branch were absent from services to-day, so I think they were out trying to get the work before the people. May the interest continue to increase until all who have been called to labor in the vineyard may enter the field, gird on their armor and fight the fight of faith until the crown is obtained and the victory won.

I have anxiously waited to hear of the conference appointments, hoping that the number may be increased greatly this year everywhere, and that two or three might be sent to labor exclusively in this district. To all who have been impressed with the necessity of renewing their efforts, may the good Spirit aid you in the discharge of your duty, and Satan be not able to hinder the spread of the light of truth; and a prosperous year be realized in gathering into the fold from the different fields, a rich harvest of souls, is the prayer of your humble brother,

J. R. HARPER.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 21.

Editors Herald: I expect to start for my field of labor, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District to-morrow. Shall stop in Illinois to see my father, and then on to my field. My home address will be 1217 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. I do not yet know what my field address will be, but will notify my correspondents when I reach there and locate myself, that is, locate my headquarters. In the meantime, any mail sent to me at my home address will be promptly forwarded.

In entering upon my work for the coming year I feel a peace within my soul, a joy of heart, and a confidence in the gospel, far exceeding that of former years. I am not expecting, however, to turn the world upside down, convert all the sinners within my field, nor even convert all the Saints within my field; but I do hope, by the help of the Holy Spirit and by the help of the Lord's people, to be able to do some good for the cause. I am fairly well acquainted with many of the Saints in that field, and, having labored among them from 1892 to 1895, I feel sure I shall have their confidence and their support; and I assure them that I am pleased to be with them once more.

There comes a pang to my heart when I think of not being permitted to see the dear faces in the Eastern mission this year, and the thought will intrude itself, Shall I ever see them again? The Eastern Saints have been very kind to me, and I have learned to love them dearly. My prayer to God is that they may be blessed, cheered, strengthened, and kept within the Master's fold.

To the Saints in my present field I wish to say: Let us "Put on the whole armor of God," and allow nothing to stand between us and our God. It is a war that calls for valor, and for sacrifice; let us put everything upon the altar. I feel that the Lord will be with us in the work, and, if we faithfully do our part, the victory will be ours. "Onward and upward."

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, April 7.

Editors Herald: On April 5 our mail arrived on the Steamer Mariposa, bringing good news from home, and letters full of sympathy and kindly sentiments towards the brethren here. The letters of sympathy were read to the Saints after the close of the afternoon sacrament-meeting, during which meeting the Lord blessed us and comforted us through the gift of tongues. When the check of twelve dollars fifty-seven cents was presented to them from the Religio and Sunday-school workers of Des Moines, which was sent through Bro. J. F. Mintun, and placed in the hands of Bishop Metuaore as directed, they were very much pleased, as it was a token to them that the kind words of sympathy which accompanied the check were real, as also the kind word of remembrance and sympathy from the Far West District in their conference in St. Joseph sent to them by Bro. C. P. Faul were all received with every token of gratitude by the many Saints, many of whom had gathered to Papeete for conference. Portions of the letters of President F. M. Smith, full of sympathy and wise council and comforting words to them were read and altogether we had a very pleasant Sabbath.

I think that the Saints in comparison with the other natives have not suffered severely. Of course there are cases of severe loss of relatives and friends among the Saints as well as among others, and loss of property also; but not so great as among others. Our chapels in Hikueru and the unfinished one in Raroia with the tabernacle there and the chapel in Makatea are the only ones destroyed by the storm; but the chapel in Takapoto was injured some. The sea did not get up to our chapels in Tikahau or Avatoru.

The Saints are moving along as usual. None of them are suffering for the want of the necessaries of life; and although it will take them some time to recover their former prosperous position, in the meantime they will not want for their usual foods and clothing, although there may not be so many silks and satins as formerly. But they again take up the thread of their daily tasks with a buoyancy and cheerfulness most wonderful after so distressing a calamity. We have not been able to learn exactly the number of Saints who lost their lives in the storm, but probably less than sixty.

The account of the storm in the HERALD of February 7 is fairly good, but it may be well enough to correct a few of the mistakes. Sr. Gilbert was the only white woman on the island of Hikueru at that time, and she is here now, and there is no report here of a suicide there of a white woman. There were nearly five hundred fifty persons lost their lives, counting those on the two vessels which are still missing; the Perle and the Leon. No reports have been received of further loss than has already been reported. Probably the sea was not more than twenty or thirty feet higher than the usual high tides at any of the islands. The story of the four hundred survivors swimming three or four miles to the Excelsior is a mistake. About two hundred fifty people went on board the Excelsior there, in the boats of the Excelsior, about one hundred of whom were landed at Makemo; the rest came on to Papeete.

Our conference opened yesterday with less than two hundred present, the smallest conference for many years I suppose. The Saints could not get vessels to come in from the far off islands, although there are some from Hao and Manihi; but the main part of the Saints were intending to come in the Teavaroa, but she is not expected here for a month yet.

We are as well as usual, and long for the time of joyful working in redeemed Zion. Peace be with you all, and upon the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

ALBANY, Oregon, April 20.

Editors Herald: Wife and I enjoy reading the letters, especially those from brothers or sisters we know. There are only two other Saints in Albany, and I think three in Lebanon. We live about midway between the two above-named towns.

Things are very quiet here now, but we think some will join the church when the elders return this summer. I hope they will be able to stay with us a good while this summer. We hope they may baptize several and organize a branch here in Albany. We are getting tired of being where there is no branch, and no preaching except in the summer.

S. W. MOORE.

OSKALOOSA, Iowa, April 22.

Editors Herald: While we have not as much to report of those things which can only be accomplished through faithful and diligent efforts, yet we are thankful that through faithful efforts on the part of some the work is not standing still. There has been a number of names added to our branch record through the efforts of Bro. H. A. McCoy, by gathering up the scattered ones in this vicinity. There is much room for improvements along many lines here, some of which the Saints could make with profit to the work. Other needed improvements are of a nature that the Saints here and possibly the church could not at the present time meet their requirements. We have a city whose population, including her suburbs, numbers about thirteen thousand, and one of the things most needed here, in consequence of the existing condition of things, is a resident city missionary whose time could be wholly given to city work. But as there are much larger cities than ours that can not thus be supplied we can only look forward with hope for the day to come when the church will be in a condition to move forward along those lines.

Bro. Edwin Perry and family have recently removed from Albia to this city, which is their former home, they being members of the Oskaloosa Branch. We are glad to see Saints coming back, as quite a number have left here in the last few years.

Bro. Perry, it will be remembered, was elected president by the United Mine Workers at their convention held at Des Moines this spring. The territory over which Bro. Perry presides, comprises the state of Iowa and one county in Missouri. The Saints of Iowa have a right to feel glad and thankful that prejudice is so far removed that one of our number has been chosen to a place of responsibility and trust.

We hope to see advancement made in this vicinity the coming summer, and feel willing to make any sacrifice necessary to help in the advancement of the work.

C. B. BROWN.

Miscellaneous Department.

Pastoral.

To the Missionaries, Local Officers, and Members of the Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia Mission, Greeting; Having been appointed minister in charge of the above-named mission, I herewith take this means of inviting your coöperation and hearty support, trusting that our heavenly Father will abundantly bless our united efforts to build up his kingdom, and to win souls to him. The following brethren have been associated with me in ministerial work, and I desire that they occupy in the following places until further notice:

T. W. Williams, Eastern and Central Oregon, with Portland as objective point, if necessary arrangements can be made.

Arthur Allen, Eastern and Central Oregon.

H. L. Holt and David Smith, Western Oregon, to operate the tent.

David C. Powell and F. J. Chatburn, Eastern and Central Washington.

J. W. Roberts, N. V. Sheldon, and D. A. Anderson, Western Washington and British Columbia. It is desired they operate the tent during the summer.

The traveling ministry are hereby admonished to devote the principal part of their time in opening up new fields. However, you are at liberty to visit branches occasionally, especially the branches that are weak, and where an interest can be awakened.

Special attention is called to the fact that all matters requiring regulating are to be referred to the minister in charge, who will attend to this part of the work either directly or indirectly as soon as practicable.

We urge upon the ministry, traveling and local, not to engage in public discussions without first consulting those in charge; and consent of branch (officers if in limits of branch) should be obtained. It will be considered a breach of rules if the ministry do not report punctually the first of every quarter, viz.: July, October, January, and March 10, as the one in charge has to report to First Presidency. It is to be hoped that the Saints will not neglect to do their part in honoring the temporal law, as it will be impossible to make the work a success without financial help.

I expect to be with you in the mission as soon as the way opens up.

All matter requiring my personal attention please direct to my permanent address.

Praying God's blessing, to attend our labors, in the interest of the salvation of man, I remain,

Your coworker and brother,

R. F. D. No. 2.

WILLOUGHBY, Lake County, Ohio.

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

To whom it may concern: I appoint the following brethren in charge of the two departments of work in the different "fields of labor" in my charge: Spring River District, F. C. Keek, of the seventy, in charge of the missionary work, and High Priest John T. Davis in charge of the membership branches, as their pastor, to "feed the flock," so long as he acts in the capacity of district president.

Both departments of the work in the city of St. Joseph in charge of High Priest J. A. Gunsolley.

Far West District, (except the city of St. Joseph), Walter W. Smith, of the seventy, in charge of the missionary work, and T. T. Hinderks, of the high priests, in charge of the branches, so long as he acts in the capacity of district president.

Independence Stake, presidency of the Stake in charge of both departments, they to make choice as to which will take charge of the different departments.

Northeastern Missouri District, John Kaler, of the seventy, in charge of the missionary work, and Joseph A. Tanner, of the high priests, in charge of the branches, so long as he is retained district president.

Clinton District, Elder T. R. White in charge of the missionary work, and High Priest James Moler in charge of the branches, so long as he acts in the capacity of district president. Nodaway District, D. C. White of the seventy, in charge.

Southern Missouri District, Henry Sparling, of the seventy, in charge.

The thirteen counties in Southeastern Missouri, not in any organized district, J. D. Erwin, of the seventy, in charge.

St. Louis District, Willard J. Smith, of the seventy, in charge. The city of St. Louis the objective point for himself. Southeastern Illinois District, F. M. Slover, of the seventy, in charge.

Central Illinois District, R. T. Walters, of the seventy, in charge.

Northwestern Kansas District, M. F. Gowell, of the seventy, in charge.

Northwestern Kansas District, Elder S. J. Madden in charge. The brethren who were appointed to labor in Southern Kansas will please report directly to me.

At any time during the conference year, should the good of the work demand any change from the above, I will feel at liberty to make such changes; otherwise they will remain intact. All should report promptly to the minister in charge of his respective field on the first of the following months: July, October, January, and March. Your reports must be full and complete. This will not prevent one and all to write me directly, at any time you feel so to do. I am glad to hear from my men at any time, and share their trials, and rejoice with them in their triumphs. The ministers placed in charge are expected to keep me thoroughly posted, as to all of the important movements for or against the work in their charge. Do not covet debates; but if they come to you by reason of you preaching the word, entertain them, subject to my approval. Let your opposers be the aggressors in "wrong-doing;" and you in preaching of the word. Do not be busybodies, nor entangle yourself with other men's business. In a word, keep yourselves clean so as to invite the Spirit of the Master to be with you in all of your work. May the God of peace be with you. Amen.

Your brother and coworker in Christ Jesus our Lord,
I. N. WHITE.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 20.

To the Isolated Saints and Friends in Virginia and West Virginia: Having been appointed to labor in the Virginias, I desire the cooperation of those located where there are opportunities for presenting the work. My address till June will be Wilburton, Indian Territory.

Notice to First Seventy.

All members of the First Seventy whose home address has changed since last spring as noted on Circular Letter No. 4, who have not already informed me of change will do so by first mail after reading this. J. F. Mintun, secretary, Box 384, Woodbine, Iowa.

Reunion Notices.

The Southwestern Iowa reunion will be held at Henderson, Iowa, from Saturday, August 22 to 30, 1903. Full particulars later. D. Hougas, of the committee.

Notices.

To the Saints in Indian Territory: Bro. E. A. Erwin, who has been appointed to labor in Northern Indian Territory desires to know of opportunities for preaching. His address is Wilburton, Indian Territory.

Will the Saints kindly respond to my appeal for church literature? The distributing bureau of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society is the only source from which I received literature, in reply to my former notice. The Lord will bless all who assist in spreading the "good news." R. W. Farrell, West Sullivan, Maine.

Died.

TWADDLE.—At his home near Franktown, Nevada, March 24, 1903, Bro. Alexander Twaddle died suddenly. He was born in Utah, April 21, 1858; baptized at Franktown, Nevada, February 4, 1868, by Elder E. C. Brand. He leaves a wife and two small children, also three brothers and two sisters.

SMITH.—Mrs. Mary Ann Smith, wife of Louis W. Smith, at her home in Kamas, Utah, April 13, 1903, after twenty years of great suffering of tumor and dropsy; was born in Shropshire, England, May 3, 1839; came to Utah in 1861; was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Robert Warnock; married Louis W. Smith July 8, 1863. Four children were born to them, three of whom, with her life companion, survive. She was well known and loved throughout the county. The funeral was largely attended.

CLARKE.—Elder William Clarke, born June 27, 1836, at Shirleywich, Staffordshire, England; baptized September 17, 1869, at Stoke-on-Trent, England; died March 23, 1903, at Milan, Dutchess County, New York. He came to this country in 1884 with his family and while being compelled to pass through many trials he remained faithful to the cause until he was called home. Memorial services in honor of Elder Clarke were held in the Saints' chapel in Brooklyn on Sunday evening, March 29, in charge of Elders George Potts of Brooklyn and Elder Meredith of Birmingham, England.

HUTCHINSON.—Sr. Ollie May Hutchinson, at Akron, Ohio, April 16, 1903, of the dread disease consumption; aged 19 years, 10 months, 15 days. She was baptized January 26, 1903, by V. M. Goodrich. Although she suffered much at times, yet she was patient and had a confirmed hope of a glorious resurrection. She was kind and gentle and loved by all who knew her. Her end was peaceful and she gave evidence of seeing heavenly messengers just before departing. Funeral discourse by V. M. Goodrich from Revelation 14: 13. Father, mother, and two sisters survive her.

Cure for Cancer.

I have often noticed in your columns deaths from cancers, and I have often thought to send you a remedy that has proved successful in many hands in every case that I have applied it to cancers. The remedy is this:

Spread a plaster of common sticking plaster, cut a hole a trifle larger than the cancer so that there will be a small margin of good flesh, about the sixteenth of an inch, all around the cancer. Apply the plaster over the cancer, leaving the cancer and this small margin exposed; then apply over the cancer and resting on the plaster the cancer plaster composed of

One part wheat flour,
One part bloodroot (sanguinaria) ground fine,
One part chloride of zinc.

Mix the sanguinaria and flour with water, then the chloride of zinc. Mix well and apply over the cancer, letting it remain from twenty-four to forty-eight hours, according to the time the cancer has been standing. Then take off the cancer plaster and dress with any good healing salve. In from a week to ten days the cancer will drop out. (Don't try to press it out.)

Then heal with any good salve. Probably the best healing salve is the All Healing or Black Salve. It is the best for a cancer.

BLACK SALVE.

Take rosin and beeswax two ounces each, sweet-oil eight ounces. Melt them together, stirring in while near the boiling point four ounces red lead; stir until brown, and when nearly cool add two drachms pulverized camphor and stir until cold, then box for use.

To pulverize the camphor put a few drops of alcohol upon it when it will readily powder under pressure of a table-knife.

I remain your brother in Christ.

The Changing Channels of Religious Literature.

An investigation into the number and the circulation of religious newspapers in the United States has been made by the editor of the New World, a Roman Catholic paper published in Chicago; and it presents some interesting (and presumably authentic) facts. The Catholics have the largest number of papers, with the largest combined circulation—naturally because they have also the largest membership. Next come the Methodists, then the Baptists, then the Presbyterians, then the Jews, and then the Episcopalians. But there is only one Methodist church paper to every 53,000 Methodists; one to every 38,500 Catholics; one to every 31,000 Baptists; and one to every 3,100 Jews.

The circulation of most of these papers is proportionately to church membership less than it formerly was. Their average circulation is a little more than 4,000 copies each. The number of church papers shows a constant tendency to increase, for all the small sects have their own; but most of them show also a strong tendency to become (with all respect) a kind of trade papers. Their dissemination of church news and of official information and the like is coming to be one of the principal reasons for the existence of many of them. As a class they have less general influence on the whole community than they had a generation ago. But, on the other hand, the best weekly and monthly periodicals of serious purpose—the weeklies and monthlies that are not church publications—give the whole religious public a far better and more various religious literature than any public in any country ever before had. Religious literature is not declining—it is becoming broader and better—but what may be called sectarian literature becomes less and less influential.—The World's Work.

A Delicious Pudding.

Soak a package of gelatine for an hour in a cupful of cold water, and then stir into three cupfuls of sugar the juice of two lemons and one pint of boiling water. This should dissolve the gelatine. If it does not, all may be put over the fire for a few minutes until the gelatine and sugar are both dissolved. Set the jelly thus made aside to cool. When it is quite cold, and has begun to form, beat the whites of six eggs to a stiff froth, and whip in the jelly a spoonful at a time. It must all be stiff when it is done. Use a Dover egg-beater. This process is a little tedious, but it is necessary to work rather slowly to get a good result. If the bowl is set in a pan of iced water while the beating goes on, the pudding will form more quickly. When it is stiff, a mold must be wet with cold water, and in this are arranged strawberries that have been capped and rolled in fine sugar. The snow-sponge is put in a spoonful at a time, and when the berries are fairly covered, another layer of them goes in; then comes more sponge, and so on until the mold is filled, the top layer being sponge. The mold is put on ice for several hours, and when the pudding is to be served it is turned out on a dish, cut in slices, and served with thick cream poured over it.—May Woman's Home Companion.

A Stirring Chapter of Standard Oil.

That is certainly a stirring chapter of Standard Oil History which Miss Tarbell narrates in the April McClure's, and which she calls "The Defeat of the Pennsylvania." The fight arose over the building, in 1877, by the Empire Transportation Company, a protégé of the Pennsylvania, of a couple of independent refineries. Mr. Rockefeller objected and called on the Pennsylvania to stop the Empire. The Pennsylvania refused and the fight was on. It did not last long. Things went against the railroad from the start, and in the spring of 1877, the Pennsylvania passed its first dividend. The Standard at the same time paid a dividend of fifty per cent. Needless to say, the Pennsylvania accepted defeat, the independent refineries landed on the bargain counter, where Mr. Rockefeller, always on the lookout, promptly picked them up, and the railroad, a month or so later, was again shipping Standard Oil at Standard rebates. It was about this time that Mr. Vanderbilt sold his Standard stock. "I think they are smarter fellows than I, a good deal," he said. How smart, Miss Tarbell's story goes a good way to suggest.—Miss Tarbell's April Paper.

In the May Leaves Emma Burton gives a stirring and realistic account of the recent storm in the Tuamotus.

Farmer's Wife Gets a Share.

Most farm papers are gotten up with the idea that they are read only by the man who runs the farm. Probably they are, because there is nothing in most of them to interest any one else, and very often it is pretty dry reading for him. There is one farm paper, however, that is not built on this plan—the Twentieth Century Farmer—whose editor has kept the whole family in mind in getting up the paper. There are two pages that are given over to the things that interest the farmer's wife, and a page for the young folks. Besides this, she always reads the stories, Frank Carpenter's letters of travel, the poultry department, and some other departments.

You can get a sample copy free by writing to the Twentieth Century Farmer, 2385 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska, or, better still, subscribe for the paper. Price, 25 cents for three months' trial subscription, or $1 for a whole year. It is a big dollar's worth, 24 to 48 pages every week, handsomely illustrated and chock full of the very best reading in every issue.

The Arena for May opens with a characteristic feature—a symposium giving different aspects of a live public question, from varying standpoints. This month the subject is "Mormonism and Polygamy," which is discussed by the president of the Mormon church, the president of the Reorganized Church, and the general secretary of the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association. These papers are followed by a lengthy report of the municipal ownership convention, recently held at New York. Edwin Maxey, LL.D., contributes an article on the "Aftermath of the Venezuelan Affair," and Colonel Wm. Hemstreet discusses "The Problem of the Blacks," urging the emigration of our negroes to Cuba. Editor Flower has a valuable essay entitled "Jefferson's Service to Civilization," and I. A. Hourwich outlines "Religious and Political Liberty in Russia." "Free Socialism" is defined by William L. Garver, and John T. Yates gives his conception of "True Patriotism and Good Citizenship." "A Federation of Labor," to offset the trusts, is proposed by James A. Slanker, and "The Rochdale, Coöperative Movement in California" is described by C. Y. Roop. In his regular departments of "Topics of the Times" and "Books of the Day," Editor Flower gives much interesting and valuable information.

The "Lounger" in April Critic announced that the May number of the Critic will be an Emerson number apropos of the centennial of his birth. Emerson's life will be viewed by a number of strong writers, and their articles will be profusely illustrated. The Critic's determination to keep before its readers an up-to-date magazine is manifested by the fact that the management is offering a series of prizes for suggestions as to the improvement of the magazine.

The Electrical Review is one of the foremost of technical journals, and keeps well in the van of the magazines devoted to the interests of electrical sciences, theoretical and applied. Its special numbers are timely and up-to-date. One of the recent special numbers was the "Export and Domestic number," issued April 11. A glance at its contents shows it to be world-wide in its scope and interests.

Fred M. Smith writes of the steam turbine in the May number of the Autumn Leaves. His article is illustrated with a picture of J. J. Astor's turbine, the patent on which he has donated to the public.

THE ADDRESS OF THE JOINT COUNCIL.

The following address to the Saints, of the joint council of the Presidency, the Bishopric, and the Twelve, should be read with careful examination and candidly considered. It is clear from a consideration of the revelations given to the church both before and after the organization of the church in 1830, that there was no intent upon the part of the Almighty to put any authority into the hands of men to oppress their fellow men, but that he would give them wise laws and direction how to conduct themselves in a spiritual way, and that in the promulgation of the gospel and carrying on of its spiritual work there was to be in connection therewith a system of finance commensurate with the needs of those engaged in it and consistent with the ordinary necessities of men.

It is not consistent to believe that God in his wisdom should neglect so important a factor in the great work of the last days as the monetary department would be. And from what appears in the revelations he seems to have taken into account the conditions under which the church would develop in a temporal government, and has ordained that the great part of the work should be done under the republican form of government, in which the people are the great arbiters of the law.

It is not wise for the church to undertake any work which may bring them into conflict with the laws of the land, which we are charged to observe by the voice of revelation direct.

The general fear that men will be deprived of the care of their means or properties which by industry and care they have gathered together, undoubtedly deters a great many from the observance of any financial rule for the benefit of the body—the church; but those who carefully read this address will discover that the rights of the individual member are distinctly recognized, and are in no sense abridged, but form a component part of the law itself.

We can therefore cheerfully commend the reading of this address and ask for it the consideration which every earnest-minded Saint should give to whatever is presented to him.

The address was adopted by unanimous vote, therefore indicating that all the members who were present had sufficiently canvassed what was presented to be willing to give it their cheerful indorsement. The ELDER PETER ANDERSON'S mission address is Porsgrund, Norway. He will attend to all mail sent to this address.

THE opening number in the May Autumn Leaves is an excellent poem by Adam Keck. It is illustrated with a fine reproduction of an india ink drawing by David H. Smith.

subject had been presented to a joint council at the conference, and which met after the adjournment of conference, and after a period of examination, in order to facilitate the determination of the questions involved, the matter was submitted to a committee properly chosen by the council; and this committee reported at an adjourned meeting of the council and made it the especial subject for their attention. This should have insured an earnest study of the subject during the interval of separation, and the most careful consideration of it when again convened, thus providing for a clear judgment in the matter.

It is not intended to coerce the opinion of any or to demand an unwilling or unintelligent observance of any rule suggested, but it is intended to present a fair exposition of the understanding of the men engaged in the council of what is couched in the law in its various parts; and it is in this light that it is presented.

ELDER JOHN SMITH closes his series of articles on stake organization in the May Autumn Leaves.

AN APPEAL TO THE GOVERNMENT FOR THE UTAH ELDERS IN GERMANY.

The following brief statement taken from a dispatch will serve as an introduction for a few thoughts on the subject of governmental interference in behalf of religious propagandists engaged in ministerial work abroad.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—The Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, has received from Senator Reed Smoot of Utah a telegram invoking the influence of the United States government to prevent the carrying into effect of a decree expelling Mormon missionaries from Prussia and the grand duchy of Mecklenberg in Germany. According to press dispatches this action was decided upon by the States named for the reason that the missionaries were preaching a form of religion incompatible with the laws and public morals of the States, polygamy being part of the missionaries' doctrine.—Chicago Tribune.

It is pretty generally understood that from the inception of the HERALD its attitude towards the dogma and practice of plural marriage, or polygamy, has been hostile, and the reasons for such hostility have been given from time to time, as was deemed advisable.

Notwithstanding this pronounced hostility the HERALD has always opposed and denounced any sort of oppression or proscription by which those opposed to Mormonism have unwisely attempted to stay its progress. The persecution by violence visited upon the elders of the Utah church, has been as heartily and strongly deprecated and denounced by the HERALD, as that manifested toward elders of the Reorganized Church has been; and for the same reasons. Proscription and persecution are the evil-handmaids of superstition and the false in religion, and can not be tolerated in right-thinking communities.

The expulsion of the elders of the Utah church from Prussia and Mecklenberg, is stated to be for the reason that it is supposed that they teach what is not conducive to good citizenship, including polygamy.

Of course, we do not know whether those from Utah laboring in Germany, publicly teach polygamy; but do know that President Joseph F. Smith, in his article in the Arena for November, 1902, affirmed in relation to the clause in Jacob, chapter two, closing the command to the Nephites to observe the one wife rule, as follows:

“The commandment that the Nephites should have but one wife was for that people, and that time, with the intimation that a further and different commandment might be given at another time and to another people, and that the law then declared was but temporary. Careful reading of the law of God to the church in these latter days, in its earlier years, will show that, while its members were then required to practice monogamic marriage, the declaration, as quoted by Mr. Smith,¹ that ‘one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband,’ bears the implication that a man might possibly be permitted at some time to have more than one wife, while a woman was to have ‘but one husband.’”

This affirmation of the present head of the Mormon church in Utah is taken up by the elders of that church in the field, and with it they advocate the dogma and affirm it as the faith of the church which they represent.

If it is now true that the present leader of the Utah church has forbidden the teaching of plural marriage, or polygamy, by the elders of that church, we shall be pleased to see the statement officially made by him. And it occurs to us that if the Secretary of State has been requested by Messrs. Kearns and Smoot, senators from Utah, to interfere on behalf of the rights of missionaries sent to labor in Germany, or elsewhere, upon the ground that polygamy is not taught, nor authorized to be taught as a tenet of the church, it will be not only in order, but in place and necessary for such official statement to be made.

We believe and the HERALD has ever held that the right to advocate their faith belongs to every people, and should not be abridged, nor denied. And we so think in this instance; but believe that there should be no double dealing, no representation abroad to the German Government, and to the authorities of the United States, that the faith of the church was one thing, and at home that the faith of the church was quite another thing. If the national Government is asked to interfere and secure the right to propagandize in Germany, the statement of the church as to its faith and doctrines should be made in good faith. If it is not, it will surely result in final exposure and disaster, and this the church can not afford.

HEALTH DIRECTIONS.

The following "general directions" given by the Institute of Physicians and Surgeons of Rochester, New York, constitute a most excellent set of rules for daily conduct. They are worthy careful and thoughtful reading:

1. Diet.—Eat such wholesome, well-prepared food as seems to agree with you, but never overload your stomach. Do not be a slave to any habit, even that of drinking tea or coffee to excess. Each obstacle or bad habit overcome, will be a triumph of the spirit over the body, and help you upward on the road to the possession of that inheritance which the Creator has in store for man—the power to control his bodily conditions to the extent of maintaining his physical, as well as his moral health.

2. Bathing.—A full bath should be taken as often as once each week; oftener would be better, especially in warm weather. In taking a warm bath do not remain too long in the water, as the effect is weakening. Do not fail to take a foot-bath each night on retiring; it is better to take one each night and morning. The feet are encased from the air more than other parts of the body, and, therefore, require special attention. As far as health is concerned, the daily foot-bath is of far more importance than the daily face-bath. Very much of the impurity, or waste, of the system may, and should be passed off through the feet. The stockings should be changed as often as three times each week. President John Quincy Adams changed his every day.

In some cases, blotches, or breaking out of the face, may be cured by changing the stockings daily and bathing the feet morning and night. Whether or not you are so troubled, such a course will improve the complexion and the health and tone of the skin of the whole body.

3. Breathing.—Practice expanding your lungs each day, as you arise, and before dressing; also, just before retiring at night, after you have removed your clothing. First, inhale a full breath through the nostrils, and, before exhaling, draw in more air through the lips by a sucking process, which should be continued until the lower, as well as the upper part of the lungs is filled as full as possible. Then begin to exhale slowly, taking as long a time as you conveniently can to empty them.

Repeat this process five or six times, or more, in succession; not, however, rapidly enough to make you dizzy. Do this five or six times, morning and evening, taking five or six inhalations, or more each time. Select these opportunities when an abundance of fresh air is admitted to your room. Be particular to breathe pure air day and night.

4. Thought.—Few people seem to realize the wonderful power which the mind possesses over the body. "As a man thinketh, so is he," is literally true, and applicable alike to our physical and moral natures. Do not let your mind dwell on your ills, and do not admit for one moment, even to yourself, the possibility of disease becoming your master. Always control your temper; not alone when things go well with you, but more particularly under irritating circumstances. He, who under trying circumstances gains a victory over himself, is a hero. "He who ruleth his own spirit, is greater than him who taketh a city."

Dwell on the bright side of life; cultivate a cheerful disposition by thinking and saying pleasant things to all with whom you associate. Have a good hearty laugh each day and make other people laugh too. Every true enjoyment is augmented by companionship. If you have no one with whom to laugh, laugh alone; laugh every day, if you have to laugh about nothing.

In speaking of your friends and acquaintances dwell on their better qualities of mind and heart. Refrain from conversation of an unprofitable character, particularly that of a degrading nature, and in this way you will influence others to follow your example. Do not permit them to make a receptacle of your mind for vile trash in the form of stories, supposed to be funny.

There are enough clean, wholesome stories and jokes to render all others entirely unnecessary. Fill your mind with pure thoughts, leaving no room for the impure.

No matter how practical, or even prosy, your occupation may be, if useful and honorable it should not restrain you from having the loftiest ambition for spiritual growth and development.

"There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." Let your spiritual and moral self control all your acts, keeping the natural (physical) body in complete subjection. Cultivate an increasing love and reverence for God and all things good. Live for others as well as for yourself. A life of service for others is a consecrated one. Other things being equal he will live longest who most serves others.

MORMONS IN GERMANY.

The following is from the daily journals for April 27. We clip from the Chicago Tribune.

It is the right thing to do, this appealing to the ruler of Germany, to be permitted to enjoy similar privileges in the kingdom as are granted to missionaries of other denominations. But it is a little surprising that Elder Cannon should put the Book of Mormon in the hands of the Kaiser with the view of showing that the Utah elders do not teach polygamy; providing that the contention of President Joseph F. Smith in his article in the November, 1902, Arena is correct, that is that the sentence, "for if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things," means that though monogamy was the rule then the Lord of hosts would at some future time command differently, and the sentence was a preparatory prophecy to that effect, and that the plural marriage doctrine and practice in Utah were the fulfillment of that prophecy.

What would be the result if some one who knew of this teaching of the president of the Utah church should send a marked copy of the November Arena to the Kaiser with a mischievous intent, and he should read it? What would he think of the effort of Mr. Cannon to make it appear that the church he was representing in Germany was not teaching polygamy?

BERLIN, April 26.—Hugh J. Cannon, the Mormon missionary, intends to appeal to Emperor William for permission for the Mormons to remain in Germany, hoping that his majesty's policy of religious tolerance may include the Mormons.

In his petition Mr. Cannon sets forth the morality of Mormon doctrines and refers to the inability of his adversaries to cite any example of the Mormon teachings which have been subversive of the laws of the state or of orderly citizenship. He declares, also, that by command of the supreme head of the church polygamy is not taught.

Mr. Cannon last Wednesday sent to the Emperor and the Empress copies of the Book of Mormon in German. If no aid is extended to the Mormon missionaries by Emperor William, and if the orders of expulsion are enforced, all the missionaries will leave quietly.

Mr. Cannon expects the United States to intervene in cases where missionaries have been maltreated, as, for instance, in the affair at Olsbrücken, Prussia, last January, when two missionaries were dragged through the streets of the town and imprisoned for three days. They were deported to Hanover, where they were again placed in jail and later sent on to Hamburg.

Affidavits of these occurrences have been forwarded to Senators Kearns and Smoot, who, it is stated here, have asked Secretary Hay to demand an apology from Germany in this matter on the ground that American citizens were treated brutally.

Among the converts to Mormonism made in Germany are several policemen who were sent to observe the missionary meetings.

BRO. J. M. STUBBART recently visited some of the ancient ruins in New Mexico, and he writes an interesting account of his observations for the May Leaves. He accompanies the article with a hasty drawing of the ruins.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

According to some statistics contained in the American Grocer for March 25, the annual drink bill for 1902 was \$1,369,098,276, and the average yearly expenditure for the past five years is \$1,239,108,955. The bill for 1902 represents an expenditure for stimulants of \$17.33 per capita for the inhabitants of the United States, or 14 $\frac{1}{10}$ cents per day. This includes all drinks of a stimulating nature, such as alcoholic drinks, tea, coffee, cocoa, etc. Since 1880 the use of alcoholic beverages has nearly doubled, having increased from 10.09 gallons per capita to 19.48, a gain of over 93 per cent. For the year ending June 30, 1902, the consumption of the leading beverages in gallons was as follows: Coffee, 1,498,910,304; beer, 1,381,875,437; tea, 396,420,115; spirits, 157,206,554.

According to a clipping from the Gregory County Pilot, published at Bonesteel, South Dakota, issued April 16, the Easter entertainment at the Latter Day Saint church in that town was a decided success. It states that the services were the first held in the new Latter Day Saint church at that place, and says that the members might well be proud of their new possession. "It is not only a credit to them, but to the entire community," says the Pilot.

Miss Christine Brown, of Boston, "heals by harmony and music." This is one of Boston's latest fads. She prescribes music for all sorts of human ailments.

Collier's Weekly for April 4 contained a short article on the devastations by water in the South Sea Islands, and among other things it said: "From far to the westward, in the Southern Pacific, comes news of typhoons which have wiped out sea islands and swept into an ocean grave whole tribes of natives. At Tuomatu, six hundred natives were drowned and three islands bowled over into the bottomless deep. This despite the fact that a Mormon missionary sends word to the faithful that the typhoon ceased, the ocean obeyed his will and the floods receded at his command."

We call the attention of our readers to the calls made in this issue by two committees of the Board of Publication wherein they ask for contributions and assistance in a musical way. Do not wait before you respond, but do it right now.

Bro. I. N. White reports that the Sparling-Blalock debate up to time of writing, April 27, was progressing favorably.

Bro. and Sr. M. H. Bond were visiting in Lamoni the latter part of last week and the forepart of this. They stopped on their way to Chicago.

Some of the brethren in Lamoni have formed a cooperative society. We understand it will be run on the Rochdale plan. It is planned to handle merchandise.

As time rushes on towards the consummation of all things, the fight of truth against error becomes warmer. It behooves the Saints to be ever alert to the interests of the cause we love. Increase your faith by a closer walk with God. In the teachings and commandments of our Master, the Christ, lies our safety. Therefore search the Scriptures, for they testify of our Lord.

* The quorums of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric were in joint session in Lamoni, on May 1 and 2, holding sessions forenoons and afternoons. As a part of the work accomplished they have issued an epistle to the Saints, which is published in another column. Getting through with the business before them, some of the members left on the Saturday evening train, though some remained in Lamoni over Sunday. Those leaving Saturday night were Brn. Griffiths, Greene, Sheehy, and Evans. Brn. White, and Luff, of Independence, remained in Lamoni over Sunday.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, occupied the pulpit in Lamoni Sunday morning, and Bro. Joseph Luff in the evening. Bro. Hilliard, we understand, is expecting to canvass the Lamoni Stake in the interests of the financial branch of the church.

There is a unity among the Saints which is growing stronger day by day. It bodes good for the work. If the Saints are but united, all the leagues and combinations formed against us will surely come to naught.

The religion of Latter Day Saints makes good citizens. Everywhere Saints who are living their religion win the respect of their neighbors. It is a testimony for the cause.

A good life is a potent sermon. Are you preaching, Saints, by your lives? Are you living testimonies of the cause of truth?

Song service has always been a concomitant of religious exercises. Cultivate your musical talents, young Saints; and learn the spirit of our songs, so that you may sing songs of praise with understanding.

An Address to the Saints.

The quorums of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric met in joint council at Lamoni, Iowa, May 1, 1903, and after careful consideration adopted the following address and provided for its publication in HERALD, Ensign, and in tract form. There were present, Joseph Smith, F. M. Smith, and R. C. Evans of the First Presidency; W. H. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, G. T. Griffiths, I. N. White, F. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, and U. W. Greene of the Twelve; and E. L. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric.

JOSEPH SMITH, President of Council.
 FRED M. SMITH,
 HEMAN C. SMITH, } Secretaries.

The Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in joint council send greeting to the Saints of the progress and conditions of church work, and particularly that part relating to temporalities, trusting to encourage the faithful helpers everywhere and to stimulate all to efforts of diligence in fulfilling the law of Christ.

1. NECESSITY OF FULFILLING THE LAW.

As a people we expect to find acceptance with God only so far as we are willing to do his will and keep his commandments. Jesus taught:

“If ye love me, keep my commandments.”—John 14: 15.

The inspired Psalmist sung of the mercies and blessings of the Lord that followed those and their families who failed not to obey him:

“The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children’s children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.”—Psalms 103: 17, 18.

These promised favors and benefits, as a people, we desire and seek; but it must not be forgotten that their realization depends upon our readiness to do. It is by faithful performance of duty that we are made heirs of promise and entitled to a place among those who love God.

“And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.”—1 John 2: 3.

“For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.”—1 John 5: 3.

We are not only promised acceptance with God by these citations through obedience to all of his laws, but are assured to begin with, that he does not demand more than we shall be able to perform.

“His commandments are not grievous.” But God requires an effort on our part to fulfill his law. This should be made in meekness, but with courage; every one moving to his or her task with cheerfulness, and a fervent desire to accomplish through the love of God, all that he has asked.

“Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.”—Psalms 112: 1.

Forty-two years ago the Reorganized Church was instructed to comply with the laws relating to temporalities, and potent reasons mentioned for so doing.

“In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the Bishop, to execute the law of tithing.”—Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.

The law then is binding upon the church and should be administered; put in force, fulfilled, as any and all others relating to the body—the church. The officers mentioned are required to perform this work as a duty. And the fact must not be overlooked in this connection, that if these officers are charged with the administration of the law and are to be held responsible for making a proper effort to carry out their part of the work, that each and every member is under equal obligation to obey, or comply with the same, and that responsibility for a disregard or disobedience, can not be escaped. Entire, full, and complete obedience is demanded for this law as any other; and a failure to keep, must now as in the past bring the church under condemnation.

“Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.”—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

2. MANNER OF ADMINISTRATION.

To obtain the benefit for which any gospel law or usage has been instituted, the administration must be by a voluntary acceptance, or willingness, on the part of the one complying. People can not be assessed, or deprived of their properties by the church against their will. Christ promised an eternal reward to those who fulfilled his law here. Then the act of the observer must be a voluntary one. To lay up “treasures in heaven” requires that the act be with a free heart, willingly. There is no chance for compulsion in carrying out the law relating to temporalities any more than that touching spiritual things. To baptize a person who does not understand the object and benefits of baptism and against his will, would be an act in violation of the law of Christ. To force a person to give of his means, or deceive him as to the object and purpose, would be a violation of the law on the part of the administrator. The gospel rule is stated by the apostle:

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

"Behold the Lord requireth the heart, and a willing mind."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

On the other hand, a person who accepts the law, and desires to obey the commandments of God must not fail to perform because it will inconvenience him, or be a sacrifice for him to do so. No great reward can be expected by an individual who defers doing anything for the cause of Christ until he gets something that he can do without, just as well as not, and then turn that over to the Lord. Christ gave all for us, why should we hesitate to sacrifice for him or his work? Many in accepting the gospel are called upon to part with friends, relatives, and loved ones; indeed all must deny themselves of many things for Christ's sake; but do we waver because of this? Neither should we hesitate to sacrifice of our substance to promote the welfare of his work.

"Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5. (See Malachi 4: 1.)

In keeping this, as well as other commandments, we prove our worthiness before the Lord. Jesus referring to this law of duty in temporal matters, says:

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"—Luke 16: 10, 11.

Can anything be plainer upon the question of rendering a faithful and true account than the foregoing? And stop and consider that it is the Son of God talking; a fact in itself sufficient to disclose the great importance of each and every one setting him or herself right, in complying with the law.

3. WHAT IS REQUIRED BY IT?

1. A recognition on our part of the beneficence and supremacy of God over every good thing in this world. As he declares:

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."—Psalms 24: 1. "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills."—Psalms 50: 10.

2. The stewardship, rather than the ownership, of man, and that it is his duty and reasonable service to render an account of this stewardship to God in time, as well as eternity.

"It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father."

—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

The principle of rendering tithes to the Lord has been recognized and followed in every age wherein we have an account of a people who were accepted of him.

Abraham, the father of all the faithful in Christ, kept the law. To the High Priest, Melchisedec, "Abraham gave a tenth part of all."—Hebrews 7: 2. Jacob promised:

"And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."—Genesis 28: 22.

The Lord charged Malachi to say to the people:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house."—Malachi 3: 10. This injunction is made applicable in the gospel economy by the instruction of Christ to the Nephites after his resurrection. (Nephi 11: 1-3.) He also said to the Jews:

"But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Luke 11: 42.

The word tithe, means tenth; and the rendition of a tithe referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or "a tenth of the increase." Every one should render an account in this, for whatever we are blessed with we are indebted to God for, and it is but reasonable and just that we honor him in the tithe. The principle is: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase."—Proverbs 3: 9.

It must not be forgotten that the tithe is a part of what a person has been blessed with; God first bestows upon us, and then asks a return according to our several abilities. The widow with her mite may do this and receive reward therefor. The rich can not be rewarded if they withhold. "For there is no respect of persons with God."—Romans 2: 11.

Under special conditions of the church, other portions of giving, than the tenth, are also referred to as tithes, but the word occurs as an adjective, or verb, and not as a noun, and denotes the act of giving or taking, rather than the specific amount required under the law.

"Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 106:2. The surplus may be a hundredth part, or a half; no definite sum is indicated here by the word, but the idea of paying or giving is expressed.

Direction is also given to the Saints to consecrate of their properties for the use and benefit of the church in providing for the poor, and carrying out the work of promulgating the gospel. To consecrate is to set apart for these special church, or sacred uses. The amount of the consecration is to be determined by the person giving in agreement with the Bishop and is referred to as "that which thou hast to impart," there being provision also for a first, and subsequent consecrations.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and deed which can not be broken. . . . And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the Bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the Bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 10.

To consecrate is to set apart for a special purpose, or use, and in the consecration referred to here, a portion is set aside for the purposes mentioned in the law to be put into the hands of the Bishop of the church. The remainder is designated or set apart to the one making the consecration as his own; for it appears that the "testimonies concerning the consecration" are taken at the time. Herein a complete consecration may be had and persons entering therein receive their certificates from the Bishop.

The consecration of the "remainder" or "residue" herein referred to, is more particularly set out under the term of surplus property, and may be better comprehended under this head.

4. SURPLUS PROPERTY.

Whatever amount or kind of property can be spared by any person without injury to his business, or impairing his stewardship, is under the law properly termed surplus. In other words, it is that part of a man's properties which he has more than he has need. Individual efforts and interests are not jeopardized in the administration of this part of the law, but respected and conserved. For while a person carries on his work and properly answers to the Lord in his stewardship, he aids the church to perform its work by setting aside for its use that which he can do without, that it may perform its work, and he in turn is blessed and benefited in developing and establishing of the church work. The plan is coöperative, aiding the needy and leveling distinctions, and largely enters into the solution of the question of bringing about harmony in the social life of the people. The direct application of the order of surplus is in Zion and her stakes, (Doctrine and Covenants 106,) but the privileged administration is coextensive with the residences of the Saints and proper officers to administer, thus making the children of Zion one in their works.

"He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him."—Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.

"A few words in addition to the laws of the kingdom, respecting the members of the church; they that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up unto Zion, and they who are privileged to go up unto Zion. Let them carry up unto the Bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward. This is also an example. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:5.

5. TESTIMONIES TO BE TAKEN.

To insure justice and equity in the administration of this principle of surplus, the Bishop must be made acquainted with the holdings of each one. He can neither confirm, as just and equitable, the amounts set aside by the rich to fill the measure of the law, nor know the needs and wants of the poor who must be aided, without this. It is right and proper then, that all should file their inventories, with the Bishop; make a full and complete showing without reservation, as a solemn and sacred act in their stewardship before the Lord, so that the law may be administered in equity and righteousness. This act is referred to in the law as laying "all things before the Bishop in Zion," a term fairly disclosing the object, extent, and manner of execution of the law.

"For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion. . . . A certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the Bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things, for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward and as a faithful laborer; otherwise he shall not be accepted of the Bishop in Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:3, 4.

The Bishop in Zion referred to herein is the general Bishop, or Presiding Bishop in contradistinction to local bishops. Zion is particularly defined in the law as, "The pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 94:5. But there are references made in terms of "the place for the city of Zion;" "the land of Zion;" "the waste places of Zion;" and Zion, the "ensign of the people."

Offerings for the purpose of helping along worthy undertakings, benevolent enterprises, special educational efforts, incidental expenses to a traveling elder, and church buildings, should be made by all who can do so. In this way we may do much to build up and establish the kingdom of God. Men can do much of their own selves; as they voluntarily do this, they are made stronger instead of weaker, the Lord giving them ability to bring forth more fruit, proving the fact held out in the law that giving does not impoverish a person.

"Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:6.

6. CONCLUDING STATEMENT.

It is the duty, and should be regarded as the privilege, of every person to consecrate everything he has and is to the service of God, to be used for the advancement of his work as he may direct. The church being an organization ordained of God for the developing and promulgating of his purposes it follows that through its authorized representatives we can more effectually accomplish these purposes than in any other way. The Bishop being under the law the authorized custodian of church funds, he should be recognized and his cooperation secured in the consecration of money or property to the uses provided for in the law.

The church has no right to take of any man's property without his consent being first obtained; nor in making the consecration referred to, has the person the exclusive right to determine how means shall be used which is thus set apart for church purposes. We therefore believe that each person should make a faithful inventory of all he possesses, and lay it before the Bishop; and by mutual agreement between himself and the Bishop determine what portion he shall retain for his own needs and what portion shall be placed in the treasury for other purposes. That portion set apart for his own needs and that for other purposes to be regarded as alike consecrated to the service of God, thus making a complete consecration. When such agreement and adjustment are made, the party consecrating receives an inheritance, or a certificate entitling him to an inheritance at such time as he may need, and the church be in condition to comply.

This consecration when complied with does not release the party complying, from the obligation of paying tithes on increase accumulated after consecration; nor from making a second consecration according to the first, should the individual find himself in a position to do so.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

James J. Strang said the president of the priesthood did not need to be ordained to the office. He, too, taught the gross crime of having many wives and other abominations. And permit me to read two or three paragraphs in the "Word of Consolation to the Scattered Saints," which fully exhibits the absurdity of his claims published on pages 17 and 18. "It might be well here to notice the single clause in the Book of Covenants, on which is based the pretense of this man to the successorship of Joseph, in the presidency of the church. It is found in section 14, paragraph 2, and reads as follows: 'But verily, verily, I say unto you that none else shall be appointed unto this gift [of receiving commandments and revelations for the church] except it be through him [Joseph]; for if it, [the gift] be taken from him, he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead. . . . For verily I say unto you, that he that is [to be] ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before.' Now let us dispassionately examine this text, which is made the convert of this audacious impostor. First then, upon what contingency occurring does this authorize Joseph to appoint? We answer that of losing the 'gift' himself, and in no other case. Second, did Joseph lose this gift, or was it taken from him? We answer this by quoting from the letter purporting to have been written by Joseph to Strang nine days previous to his death. (Authority with those for whom this is designed.) 'Archangels shall place on my brow, the double crown of martyr, and king, in a heavenly world.' 'My servant Joseph, thou hast been faithful over many things, and thy reward is glorious. The crown and scepter are thine and they wait thee.' If this be the word of God, here is irrefutable evidence, that Joseph had not forfeited, or lost this 'gift' at that time. Archangels do not place the diadem which belongs to the perfected in Christ Jesus, upon the brow of the transgressor. Kingly authority 'in a heavenly world' is not conferred upon those who have been tried and found unworthy to hold the keys of revelation in this. 'Faithfulness,' and 'reward' is not applicable to Joseph at the very time he is being put out of his stewardship for transgression. 'Glorious' rewards, 'crowns,' and 'scepters,' are not the results of losing the 'gifts' of God. In plain language, the pretense of Mr. Strang involves the following absurdities: God is represented as saying to Joseph, appoint your successor, for the 'gift' is 'taken' from you; for, 'thou hast sinned in some things, and thy punishment is very bitter.' 'I have tried thee, and found thee unfaithful, thou shepherd and stone of Israel; therefore appoint James J. Strang in your stead, and he shall be like you; and come thou, who are unfit to hold the keys on earth, and receive "a double crown of Martyr and King," and "rule a mighty host" in the spirit land.' Oh, folly, stand rebuked by common sense."

It is most astonishing he could lead a single man an hour after they become acquainted with his pretensions, they are so self-contradictory. Charles B. Thompson claimed no previous ordination to the presidency according to the law. You are fully apprised of his untenable grounds, and his absurd doctrine of the transmigration of souls; an old theory of idolaters of India, revived on these beautiful prairies of Western Iowa.

Alpheus Cutler, himself informed me personally only last summer that he did not claim to be a prophet, and yet he claims to be the president of the priesthood. And the book of Doctrine and Covenants distinctly says it is the duty of the said officer to be a man like Moses, a prophet, seer, and revelator; and now let every man learn his duty or he shall not be counted worthy to stand.

Gladden Bishop, who is now at Preparation, claims to be the branch referred to in Zechariah 3:6, "For behold I will bring forth my servant the branch." Again, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch. . . . In his days Judah shall be saved, . . . and this is his name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our righteousness."—Jeremiah 23:5, 6. He also claims to be the one to "suddenly come to his temple. Even the Messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in. Behold he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3:1. Also that he is doing "the greater work of the Father." He says, "Now Christ did not suddenly come to his temple in Jerusalem—but it is to be fulfilled in Utah. How little the Mormons think they are building a temple for my reception." It is preposterous. It is a shame to think of his pretension, so blasphemous and absurd.

Granville Hedrick holds that Joseph is a fallen prophet. He even gives the date of his fall on June 22, 1834; and in the midst of a revelation beginning with the fifth paragraph, though he claims great reverence for his name, as the founder of the great latter-day work, denies the law of lineage and teaches that he is a true prophet; but he, too, fails to come in at the gate and be ordained according to the law governing the first presidency.

I had much of the blessed spirit of prophecy and again predicted the coming of Joseph to take his father's place as the true successor and prophet of God in the church. We quite thoroughly canvassed the ground of our hope and showed the untenable claims of factions that had been led away by the pretenders, who had claimed leadership since the death of the Prophet Joseph. When some one suggested to me, while I was yet speaking, "Suppose little Joseph should die, then what would you think?" I replied, "Suppose the little child had died after 'Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost and prophesied saying . . . and thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his way?'"—Luke 1:67, 76.

Ah, my dear brethren and sisters, I have reached that condition in my experience where I have no doubt on that subject of the successor of the Prophet Joseph. For I once lay prostrated on the ground, like the Prophet Daniel at the feet of the heavenly angel, and he said to me, "Go to my servants, William Marks, Israel Rogers, and James Blakeslee, and tell them what you know and most assuredly believe, and then you will be directed to others." I then knew I had received the gifts of the Holy Ghost many times just as it is described in the Bible in dreams, in visions, interpretation, prophecy, and the gifts of healing. In a word, the signs had followed the believer just as Jesus said they would; and by the gift of prophecy I had many times predicted things that came to pass. Hence I know Jesus told the truth; and in fact I can say the gifts and power of the Holy Ghost are so exquisite in knowledge to me that I can only say it is past understanding, so far as being able to tell you so you can have the exact knowledge from anything I can say, except you yourself should have the same experience. Verily it is what the ancient Apostle Paul meant when he gave the expression, It is, the peace of God "which passeth all understanding." Again he describes these glorious manifestations and knowledge of God given by the Holy Ghost in these graphic words, "Ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." And this much assurance of the gospel accounts for the wonderful words, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."—2 Corinthians 9:15.

Yes, I can now see the true meaning of those words of the man of God "caught up to the third heaven . . . and heard unspeakable words; which it is not lawful for a man to utter." The ancient apostle could as well said and moreover I am not able to utter. Yes, indeed, by all these wonderful evidences I have received implicit living faith, the promises of God to me. I spoke more than two hours; and many of the Saints said this is like old times, in the days of Joseph. All is clear now. I do not see why the Saints could not have seen this before and it would have saved all the dark and cloudy days that have hung over us so long; and the deception that has been practiced upon us.

Joseph will surely come to take his father's place, and the church will be fully organized again. Others would say, this I have been looking for ever since the breaking up at Nauvoo, but I did not know how it would be brought about. And still others would say, I always did believe little Joseph would be his father's successor. But I did not know there was so much about the lineage question and blessing being conferred upon Joseph's posterity after him.

The Saints are wonderfully wrought up to the interest of the Reorganization in this place, and the last three pages of the "Word of Consolation" which I read to the assembly seemed to have a solid foundation to help them to see the dreadful crime of polygamy in the light as God looks at it; as they had not seen it before, though they had always denounced it and had no fellowship with the Mormons who practiced it. And that all the Saints and all the world may know the circumstances under which these three pages were written, I will give a quotation from the History of the Reorganization by my brother, Jason W. Briggs, chapter 5, as given in the Messenger, published in Salt Lake City, Utah, March, 1876:

Shortly after the conference [the second conference of the church in 1852, held at the Yellowstone Branch of the church, in Lafayette County, Wisconsin, on the sixth of October], while the subject of polygamy was being discussed in connection with the revelation brought forth by Brigham Young at Salt Lake City, the August previous, and had just reached us by a reprint in the Seer, by O. Pratt, it was signified through the gifts, that the church should meet in fasting and prayer to receive instruction. This was done January 9, 1852, and among other testimonies received was the following upon this subject:

"Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God. It is not of me; I abhor it, as also the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, and the men or set of men, who practice it, I judge them not. I judge them not who practice it; their works shall judge them at the last day. Be ye strong; for ye shall contend against this doctrine. Many will be led into it honestly, for the devil will seek to establish it and roll it forth to deceive. They seek to build up their own kingdoms to suit their own pleasure; but I countenance it not, saith God. I have given my law; I shrink not from my word. My law is given in the book of Doctrine and Covenants; but they have disregarded my law, and trample upon it and counted it a light thing; and obeyed it not; but my word is the same yesterday as to-day and for ever.

"As you have desired to know of me concerning the pamphlet, it is written in part but not in plainness; it requires three more pages to be written for it shall go forth in great plainness combatting this doctrine and all who receive it not, it shall judge at the last day. Let this be the voice of the Lord in the pamphlet, for it shall go forth in great plainness, and many will obey it and turn unto me, saith the Lord."

This testimony was given in the name and by the authority of the Holy Spirit and was written at the time in answer to the prayers, with fastings, of the whole church assembled. It agreed with the law of the church to which it appeals; and like that of November 18, 1851, condemns polygamy and showed to the Saints that the so-called revelation authorizing polygamy was not and could not be from God.

In compliance with the above instruction, an article was written against it, to be added to the pamphlet; and as being the first publication of the reformation, it is here given, written by J. W. Briggs as chairman of the committee, and added to the pamphlet as follows:

"We can not forego this opportunity to raise our voice against an evil which has well-nigh completed the overthrow of the church: which Sampsonlike hath lain hold upon the very pillars of society. And instead of order, it has produced anarchy, instead of union, division; in short, instead of confidence and love, distrust and hatred. We refer to the system of spiritual wifery, taught by Brigham Young, to the 'plurality' doctrines of James J. Strang, and the fouler system (of whoredom) taught by William Smith, and his joint occupant, called 'Spokesman.' These systems, though unlike each other, are all known as a system of polygamy: under which they themselves take shelter: hence we will not treat of them under their proper names, but under the less offensive or semilegal one, viz.: polygamy. Whence came the practice, and where is the warrant for it? The first we hear of it is from the lips of Lamech, a son of Cain, who owns himself deserving of seventy-fold greater punishment than Cain himself. We conclude therefore, that none will quote Lamech as a justifying precedent: but we insist that the father of the system gives it its character. His shedding blood was but a type of what belongs to, or must accompany the system: since male and female come into the world about equal, and God having stamped upon man, (his own views,) 'that it is not good to be alone;' hence of course, if one (like Lamech,) secures one or two additional wives, he must either persuade that number of men that it was 'good to be alone,' or, he must kill them off. It seems he chose the latter, which no doubt was the easiest. It is admitted that examples preach more powerful than words. Now let no man working by a pattern, presume to be wiser than him who gave the pattern. When God made man, seeing it was not good for him to be alone, he gave him a helpmeet in one wife, and one only. Here is an example of the first organization of society. Now for the precept in conformity with this example. The law of nature is the voice of God; and in this case, can not be misunderstood: nature echoes the revealed word of God, that it is not good for man to be alone, and nature provides one helpmeet for each, and no more. Thus the example teaches that one woman is made for one man, and nature cries only one. We are well aware that it was practiced by better men than Lamech—by patriarchs and prophets: at which time it was also written, 'An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth;' which the gospel revealed in a different light, saying, 'Resist not evil.' Polygamy was, perhaps, like this mode of revenge, and many other things, suffered, because of the hardness of their hearts; but was not so from the beginning: not to be, after 'the true light shined' forth. Agreeing with this last supposition it is remarkable that all of the nations that practice this, but a single one acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world, and they practically reject the gospel.

"If it be said that the law of Moses provided for polygamy, we answer it also provided for choosing a king, which God had forbidden. If David, the man after God's own heart, be appealed to, we refer to the word of God in his case. See Book of Mormon, page 127: 'Behold David and Solomon, truly had many wives, and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord.' It is then commanded that they, the Nephites, should have but one wife, and concubines none. Alma in effect declares the same. See pages 332 and 333 [Palmyra edition].

"Some may say, that this was a law to the Nephites, but not to us. Let us see. In Doctrine and Covenants, section 4, paragraph 1, it says: 'The word of the Lord concerning his church.' Hear what the Lord says to the church. In paragraph 8, the whole church is condemned for unbelief and treating lightly the commandments. Then it is said, 'And they shall remain under this condemnation, until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments, which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written.' Here the church is required not only to say (they believe it) but to obey what is written in it. See also section 13, paragraph 5, 'And again the elders, priests, and teachers of this church, shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible, and the Book of Mormon, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them.' We have already seen what is written in the Book of Mormon, on this subject. Let us now examine the covenants and church articles. See section 65, paragraph 3. 'For marriage is ordained of God unto man, wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh.' Section 13, paragraph 7. 'Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else.' See Church Article, section 101, paragraph 2. 'You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal right belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others during your lives. Such is the marriage covenant recognized by the church. See paragraph 4. 'We [the whole church in general assembly] declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman, but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.' See section 13, paragraph 16. Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received—for a law, to be my law to govern my church, and he that doeth according to these things shall be saved, and he that doeth them not, shall be damned if he continues.

"We demand of all who have been called Latter Day Saints, do you believe these things? If you do not, you ought at once to renounce the name. But if you acknowledge the authority of the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, (or either of them) then know that polygamy is forbidden of God, and this interdict is directed to us, who have known the mighty power of God in establishing the authority of this, his word; and whoever transgresses and repenteth not shall receive according to the law. Hear it; Oh, ye deceivers, and deceived together. 'He that receiveth my law, and doeth it, the same is my disciple, and he that saith he receiveth it, and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you.'—Doctrine and Covenants 61:2. 'I come quickly, and ye shall see that my law is kept.'—Paragraph 3. 'These words are given unto you, and they are pure before me; wherefore, beware how you hold them, for they are to be answered upon your souls in the day of judgment, even so. Amen.' Herein, brethren, we have shown in few words what the law of God is on this subject, and we call upon you both far and near to obey it, lest ye be found fighting against God, and receive of his wrath in the day of his indignation. Let those who have offended in this matter, know, that 'the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.'—Malachi 2:12. To those calling themselves Latter Day Saints at Salt Lake, we commend the latter, and the following quotations. Ezra 10:14. 'Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us,' (and separate yourselves from the strange wives,) and return with weeping and with supplication to the law of God. And he that scattered Israel in wrath, will gather them in mercy, and keep them as a shepherd doth his flock. Behold this shall go forth as a restorer of paths to walk in, and a swift witness against him, that giveth not heed to the words which the Lord and his spirits hath spoken."—Word of Consolation, pages 21, 22, 23.

My dearly beloved brother, Jason, has often told me when he wrote the above he did so not knowing how much manuscript it would take to make three pages, and without any thought on the matter of quantity or number of words it would take, he handed the manuscript to the printer without any instruction in reference to size of the pamphlet and when it was published, the last three pages referred to above were in it. A copy of which is now before me.

The Saints here are indeed in the faith of the gospel of Christ, as taught in the days of Joseph; and say I have brought the same spirit with me that came with the gospel when they first heard it in the days of the choice seer; and in the evening at seven o'clock held services again, to a crowded house of listeners. Subject, first principles, and the government of God. Text, Romans 14:17. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Several not of the church were present and much good has been done to-day to the comfort of the dear Saints in Belvidere.

Preparation, Thursday, February 16, 1879, I returned to this place. Brn. Hugh Lytle and George Outhouse accompanied me. They would not allow me to come alone, and said they would like to continue with me all the time. Elder Roland Cobb welcomes me and is cheerful and soon informed me that Elder C. C. Perrin who lives about a mile from town, wished him, in case I returned to this place, to make an appointment for him. "Really," continued Elder Cobb, "I think he wants to score you, and see if he can not convert you to his way of thinking. What do you say? Shall I make an appointment for him?" I replied, "Certainly, I am on the anxious seat, and if in error I am as interested for my own conversion as he possibly can be for me."

The appointment was made, and about three o'clock in the afternoon, Elder Perrin came to see me (I had met him before but no acquaintance). Soon after introduction, he invited me to take a walk with him, and as soon as we were out of hearing of others he said, "Elder Briggs, I want to throw a stone to-night and hit Gladden Bishop. It will hit you, too, but I want to hit Bishop the hardest. He can talk all around me and you too. But I do not want him to speak in my meetings. And when I get through speaking, I would like to have you speak, but not be very hard on me; and when you are through with your remarks, I will close the meeting." My reply was, "If I feel so led may say a few words, if not you may close your meeting as soon as you please."

When meeting time came quite an assembly had gathered, and it could easily be noticed from the countenances of the large audience that they expected to see fire fly somewhere. After usual preliminaries, Elder Perrin was preaching. His only allusion to the Reorganization was the doctrine of lineage is true. But Joseph is to preside in Jerusalem of Judea—but David is to preside in Zion in America.

He then led off antagonizing some of Elder Bishop's theories. His sermon was short and arguments somewhat confused and scattering, and as he said amen, Elder Bishop was on his feet. But Elder Perrin said, "Elder Briggs, do you wish to make any remarks?" Mr. Bishop sat down, and I arose and said, "Elder Perrin virtually concedes all I wish to say as a reply to his remarks this evening. For I remember it is written by the Prophet Isaiah, 'For out of Zion shall go forth the law; but the word of the Lord from Jerusalem' and if Joseph takes a mission to Jerusalem, I shall have no objection.

"But my dear brethren and sisters, you all remember I spoke here a few evenings since and there was three brethren followed me and misconstrued and made light of all my address; and with many words for three long hours covered up all I said. Now I wish to reply for myself, and I know you will be patient with me and hear what I have to say.

"In the first place on the first general principles of the gospel all professed Christians agree that, faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, eternal judgment, and the Lord's Supper is the doctrine of Christ, or at least was the gospel of Jesus Christ according to the Holy Bible; and was taught by Jesus and his apostles.

"Roman Catholics and Protestants are very tenacious that some of the principles should be taught and be believed in now, to secure the Spirit and eternal life in the kingdom of God. But the Latter Day Saints believe that all of these principles I have just enumerated are fundamental and eternal truth; and must be obeyed or received to secure eternal life in the celestial kingdom of God; and that the doctrine of Christ must be taught by authorized ministers sent from God.

"That such a minister was established in the dispensation called the latter-day work; and in keeping with the ancient prophet who said, 'Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.'—Amos 3:7. And the opening of this last dispensation in the house of God's judgment. It was done by the angel as foreseen by John, the divine, on the Isle of Patmos. (Revelation 14:6, 7.) And the chief and highest officer of the church continued in the faith until his martyrdom June 27, 1844. He did not introduce any strange and far-fetched thing to prevent or subvert the very pure principles of the gospel of Christ in all his lifetime.

"And it is an undisputed fact that what he wrote on religious subjects, smacked with the purest Christian doctrine and breathe the spirit of holiness, and he was the author, under divine providence, of many thousand pages; and the very wickedest apostate that has left the church during his life or since his martyrdom can not point to a single public utterance he ever made that is not honorable, as a man with his fellow man. And after he had endured all manner of indignities and persecution and vexatious law-suits, not a single charge or allegation against him was ever sustained. He was then near the close of his eventful life; which was characterized by faithful obedience to all the commands of God. Like Abraham, God covenanted with him by an oath that his blessing should be placed upon the head of the seed after him, which should prove a blessing to all the kindred of the earth, as the presiding officer over that system of good government, that would be a light unto the Gentiles (and through his priesthood which had come down through the lineage of his fathers) "a savor unto my people Israel," and with many other words establishing the law of lineage, as a general rule governing the transmitting of authority from father to son, when they made themselves worthy. I clearly made it plain to the large intelligent audience this night.

Then I sat down. Elder Bishop replied for about thirty minutes. Then Elder Forges sprang to his feet to speak (this gentleman claimed to fill the offices of a minister, and a lawyer in civil courts). I claimed the right in all fairness that I should be permitted to follow my opponent. The congregation cried out, "By all means Elder Briggs has the right to the floor." I then followed his fallacious argument against lineal priesthood and his wicked attack upon the character of the Martyr. Just as I closed my address Elder Bishop was seized with some violent sickness, and was so prostrated that four men carried him out of the hall. When they laid him down on the bed he said, "I will never meet that man again."

The Lord was truly my helper, and to his praise all the glory. Many of the scattered Saints are in confusion and do not seem to have much idea of the law governing the organization of the church. While on the first principles of the gospel in theory they have but little difference, or all agree or have little contention, except in case of the "Mormons" who have included the crime of having many wives, as a means of exaltation in heaven. And to-night, Mr. Bishop applied the text in Matthew 12:19, "He shall not strive nor cry neither shall any man hear his voice in the street," to himself. He continues, "it is a fact that Jesus did talk on the streets, but I never do and the Evangelist Matthew made a mistake when he applied Isaiah 42:2 to Jesus Christ." He is the one to do the greater work of the Father in the last day, to bring about the gathering of Israel, no more to be thrown down. Also the place of deliverance is at Salt Lake City, or the place where Israel is to be hid up, as is recorded in Isaiah 26:20, 21 and he quotes the language with such confidence that it really has weight with the unsuspecting people. "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." With such congratulations he concludes by saying, "How little do the Mormons know they are building the temple for me to fulfill the prophecy of Malachi 3:1, 'And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.'"

And it is a fact that as a coincidence Brigham Young also quotes the above text in Isaiah and says, "We are fulfilling it, and we will shut up Parley's Canyon, Echo Canyon, and one or two other canyons, and will keep out both red Indians and white Indians." Ah! what a tangled mess these apostate leading usurpers are weaving to bring reproach upon the fair name of Latter Day Saint. The Apostle Peter in his second letter says of them, "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."

Well, I am sad at heart to-night to think how easily people are led away after foolish, vagrant, and absurd interpretations of the holy scriptures; and yet I rejoice to know I have been delivered from this cunning, crafty, wicked man. He has a few who are fascinated by his eloquence and bold assumptions. But the large audiences have their eyes fully opened now so he can not bother them any more, and I thank God with my whole soul.

My dear reader, when you read these lines do not smile and say there is nothing in it to mislead any one of brains. Let me assure you there is an invisible spirit accompanying such men that is not discerned by the natural, unregenerated soul who can not know like Job, "That my Redeemer liveth." The whole Protestant and Catholic world are led by just such fantastical spirits who are ignoring the doctrine of Christ and following the doctrines of men, with the consoling exhortations upon morality and solemnly affirming it is not necessary to be particular about doctrine or being born of the water and the Spirit or it is not absolutely necessary to follow the one Lord and Master into the waters of baptism. I predict that the wild schemes of men fired by the spirit of anti-Christ has but just begun its diabolical work to deceive this disobedient generation. The ancient apostle says of them, "And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thessalonians 2:11, 12.

Friday, February 17. This morning visited Bro. Thomas Lewis. He favors Beneemyism yet, his son Branson is sick; has been confined to his room most of the time for five years, and wishes me to ask the conference that convenes the sixth of April, to remember him in their prayers. I also called on Elder Perrin. His mind is in a state of confusion, but desires to love and obey the gospel of Christ.

Raglin Township, three miles northwest of Magnolia, Sunday, February 19. I came to this place last evening to fill appointment and at twelve o'clock had a large attendance. The entire neighborhood was out to our meeting. Subject the first principles of the gospel.

In the evening at seven thirty o'clock, held prayer and fellowship services. Elder Artemus Lockling and Sr. Almira Streeter spoke in the gift of tongues. The sister formerly came from the state of Maine. Spoke in the German language. A gentleman present who is not a member of the church, but who was well acquainted with the lady arose and said: "I am astonished, for I know Mrs. Streeter does not know one word of the German language, yet she spoke in great plainness in my own tongue so I could understand every word."

The Saints are revived in their faith, and promise to hold regular services now every Sunday. Brn. Morton and Caleb Streeter, Hosea Pierce, Daniel Maul, and E. W. Lamb all live in this neighborhood.

Monday, February 20. I am at Mr. Nelson Follert's who is just as kind as can be to me. Shall ever remember him for his tokens of respect for me though he does not see the necessity of obeying the gospel. This is my twenty-fifth birthday. My health is good, and have implicit faith in the gospel of Christ and hope I shall witness more events in building up the great latter-day work this year than I have ever witnessed in all my life before. I have taken great pains to learn indeed if Sr. Streeter is entirely unlearned in the German language, and in fact is quite an uneducated lady, and the German who says she spoke in his language is a candid man, and he affirms this morning she spoke plainly in his mother tongue in our meeting last evening.

A WORD ABOUT THE NAME OF "SAM."

"Zal, son of Sam, exposed on Mount Elburz, because he was born with white hair, and therefore supposed to be offspring of a deer. He was brought up by the wonderful bird Seemurgh (q. v.), and when claimed by his father, received from the foster-bird a feather to give him insight into futurity."—Persian Mythology, as cited by E. Cobham Brewer,

LL. D., of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in his Dictionary of Phrase, etc. Professor Brewer was an Englishman, and the author of "Guide to Science," "History of France," "Theology in Science" and a "History of Germany."

Vide Anthon's Classic Dictionary, Samos: Same.

Mr. Donnelly in his "Lost Atlantis," says that Sam or Sámë, the prophet of Brazil, was the Zamna of Yucatan, i. e., the culture-prophet, and came there, as per tradition, from the East, and came into Brazil from the West. (Page 167.) This idea seems to fit in with the argument of Professor Osborn in his "Ancient Egypt," in his statement in re Persian or Iran occupation of Egypt. Some authorities claim that Old Egypt was invaded and civilized from the East (Iran Peris); others, that the latter was invaded and civilized from Egypt. Osborn seems to favor the latter theory. In any event, there seems to be close connection in fact between the Persian Mythology as quoted and the statement contained in the clipping.¹

THE BLOOD OF ALL RACES.

Ethnologists of the Smithsonian Institution have investigated the Filipinos, with results that are of rare interest to science. They have called attention to the fact that in the veins of the tribes of the archipelago flows the blood of all the races and varieties of mankind. The Smithsonian Institution is giving special instructions to those intending to explore the caves of the Philippines for crania, and to search for other ethnological data.

In the make-up of the composite Filipino, the darker substratum has been supplied by Negrito, Papuan, and African negro. A copper tint and fighting blood have been furnished by Malay and Polynesian. A lighter hue and certain arts have come from Japanese, Chinese, and Cambodian. Hamite, Semite, and Aryan have stamped their image upon the islanders. Even an ancient stream of Caucasian is traced by ethnologists; and stranger still, perhaps, the discovery has been made that a rivulet of American Indian blood found its way to the cosmopolitan veins of the Filipino through the channels of two centuries of uninterrupted commerce between Mexico and Peru and the archipelago.

In view of this converging of racial streams in the Filipino scientists of the American Bureau of Ethnology hope that a detailed investigation of the habits, implements, relics, beliefs, legends, etc., of the various tribes of these islands will be undertaken. In addition to exploration in search of prehistoric crania in caves, the purpose is to make a comprehensive collection of native hammers, saws, adzes, clamps, and every primitive implement representative of stages of invention between the stone age and modern times. It is expected, too, that instruments of prehistoric engineering may be found.

It is known that some of the Filipino tribes are skillful metallurgists, inheriting doubtless from ancient Malay artisans dexterity in fine hand processes. It is hoped by the scientists that additions to one of the most interesting chapters in human history will be made through discoveries in the Philippines of the secrets concerning the ancient arts of working metals. Collections are to be made of the early poetry, tribal proverbs, legends, folklore, and all literary material, particularly that which will reveal the influence of the invasion from India that took place several centuries before the Christian era.

The anthropologists who are to attempt the untangling of the record of centuries of race interfusion in the Philippines realize that they have a very big undertaking on their hands, but this gives added zest to the research. A special request has been made of officers of the United States to assist in collecting everything that may help to throw light on the story of the early savage navigators who cruised in the channels of the archipelago. In answer to inquiries, the United States Treasury Department has assured the scientists about to embark on ethnological work in the Philippines that collections brought back for the Smithsonian Institution will not be subject to duty.—Scientific American, April 4.

TRACING EARLY CIVILIZATION.

The earliest American civilization, far antedating the generally accepted limits of pre-Columbian cultures, has been traced in Peru by Dr. Max Uhle, director of the anthropological excavations and explorations of the University of California in that country. Where, heretofore, Inca tradition had led scientists to believe that Peruvian civilization extended back only a few centuries before the coming of the Spaniards, the archæological work of Doctor Uhle has established the fact that a great civilization flourished two thousand years earlier, at the least estimate, and that a cultured race, of higher development than the Incas, was in existence before the Trojan War.

This remarkable discovery follows as a result of the studies made in the two expeditions which Doctor Uhle led in recent years at the expense of Mrs. Phebe Hearst and under the auspices of the University of California. He made thorough studies of the ruins of a number of ancient Peruvian towns, their temples and the surrounding land, excavating in a most careful manner the buildings and cemeteries at Pachacamac and at Chanchan, at Huaca del Sol and in the valleys of Chincha, Pisco and Ica. The stratification of debris and ruins, containing various marked differences in pottery and architecture, forced the conclusion that there was represented in the gradations of strata corresponding periods in the historical development of the Peruvians. This observation necessitated the departure from the general notion which regarded the various types of ancient culture as merely local styles, each being ascribed in some way to a different geographical area and to a different tribe, all more or less contemporaneous. The common fault which had previously led to false theories, was that the succession of time, as suggested in the stylistic strata, had been ignored. This Doctor Uhle took pains to correct by determining in different localities no less than five distinct periods of culture revealed in five strata which possessed plain differences in the objects and ruins, and, in many cases, were superposed upon each other in regular gradations. The establishment of this important point has overthrown all preconceived notions regarding the extent and character of the civilizations of Peru.

Beginning with the well-known period of the Incas Doctor Uhle has found an interesting culture, with some peculiar features, which immediately preceded the invasion of the Incas. Plain differences in colored earthenware and other characteristics have caused him to distinguish two more epochs, all of long duration before the early period of the classical monuments of Tiahuanaco is reached. Wonderful as the march of civilization in Egypt, is the history of the development of these succeeding cultures, for the excavations show that the earliest periods present the most highly developed civilization. Behind this dim culture, which represents the highest form of advancement as well as the farthest that the archæologists have reached, must have been an unlimited period of civilization of which no record has been left and the details of which will probably be for ever shrouded in the mists of antiquity. Just as centuries of slow development were needed to bring the ancient peoples of the Nile Valley up to the high type of civilization which conceived and erected the pyramids, so a long stretch of time is known to have preceded the development of the builders of the finished works at Tiahuanaco.

Doctor Uhle, in commenting on the conclusions which have been reached by these archæological studies says, "It will now be easier to give the correct relative chronological position to each new Peruvian culture which may be discovered. Moreover, the results are of importance in investigating the connection between the cultures of South America and Central America, for, as the oldest cultures observed in Peru are of a higher type than the later ones, it is not improbable that, if connection existed between the north and south, it took place during the earliest period. As the Peruvian cultures are now being gradually classified according to age, it would be important to know by similar means the relative ages of Central America and other South American cultures; for connections can have existed only between contemporaneous cultures, and only such, therefore, should be compared if fruitful results are to be expected. Much is still to be done in this direction for other parts of America. It is my wish to stimulate such work for all parts of the continent in order that future knowledge of the general development of American cultures may be firmly established." —San Francisco Examiner, April 13.

MUMMY OF UNKNOWN RACE FOUND IN NEW MEXICO CAVE.

In the ransacked ruins of the Cliff-dwellers very little remains to reward the patient digger for Indian treasures and throw additional light on the prehistoric people who lived in the rims of canyon walls.

From time to time discoveries of more or less importance are made by hunters crossing the canyons, but their finds proved of little value either to the scientist or the layman.

Not more than a month ago, however, a remarkable mummy was found by a New Mexican hunter named John Tex, and this mummy promises to change materially some of the hypotheses formed by archæologists, while a careful investigation of its characteristics and the peculiarities of its century-old resting-place suggest startling theories concerning the problem of this vanished race.

The mummy was discovered beneath three separate layers of cement flooring, which fact vouches for the extreme antiquity of the well-preserved body.

John Tex says that the mummy is tall, that its head is normal, that its skin is white and its hair thick and of a reddish-brown color.

These points of difference and the peculiar place in which the mummy was found lead to strange suppositions.

John Tex has lived among the descendants of the Pueblo tribes, that nation of cliff-dwelling builders, since before the eighties.

"One day last January, as I was riding slowly along through the sedgebrush which covers the plains of San Augustine, in Socorro County, New Mexico, my eye fell upon what looked like the opening of a cave in a wall of one of the lateral canyons of the Rio Grande del Norte," says Tex. "It seemed to be about two hundred feet above the bed of the canyon and some fifty feet up in the perpendicular face of the sandstone cliff.

"Upon climbing up to the cave I found that it had been inhabited, and while erosion had thrown down the outer walls of the dwelling and filled the interior with quantities of broken sandstone, I was able to push my way into the aperture.

"Finding no relics of the past occupants of this curious abode lying about, it occurred to me that I might discover something of value by digging through the heap of dust and refuse.

"Starting at a distance of about fifty feet from the cave opening, my shovel went quickly through several inches of sand fallen from the roof of the cave; then with more difficulty I dug through six or more feet of refuse, when my shovel came in contact with a hard substance, which I took to be the cave floor.

"After excavating I found this floor to be perfectly smooth, and made of the clay cement common in the communal houses in the valleys with which I am familiar.

"Knowing that it was the custom with this prehistoric race to bury their dead under their dwelling floors, I determined to try digging still deeper.

"After cracking the cement and pushing the broken fragments aside, I was surprised to come upon ashes, corn-cobs, potshards, arrow-points, and a profusion of animal bones. This rubbish filled a stratum about eighteen inches thick, below which I suddenly struck a second floor.

"Under this stratum of cement I found almost the same quantity of rubbish as was brought to light above, but what was my consternation at discovering that there was still a third floor in this oddly constructed abode.

"With the greatest excitement I swung my shovel and dislodged the debris which separated me from that which I felt sure of finding now.

"There was soon a good-sized hole gaping in the third covering of cement, and as my implement finally penetrated the opening it plunged through into a soft substance and crashed into a large decorated pot, which fell apart, disclosing the head of a mummy over which it had been placed.

"On examining the mummy, which was that of a man," continues Mr. Tex, "I found that it was wrapped in three karosses, or blankets, each about four by five feet in size.

"The outer one was decayed with age, the next one somewhat better preserved, and the inner one quite perfect. The warp of these karosses was of vegetable fiber string and the woof was made of twisted strips of fur skin, which had the fur left on, and had acquired, through the process of twisting, a likeness to soft wool.

"The head of the mummy showed that the man had probably died from a blow on the skull, for there was a large indentation directly over the base.

"The features were partly those of an Indian, for the cheek-bones were high and rather prominent, but the skull was large, with a somewhat low brow and without the slightest trace of the usual artificial flattening practiced by Cliff-dwellers.

"The man must have been of great height, for in his shrunken state he measured about six feet. He was extremely broad-shouldered and the dried muscles of his whole body proved him to have been very active and powerful.

"The large chest circumference showed him to have had powerful lungs. His arms were of great length and his hands and feet were very small for so large a man.

"As fair as the Zuni Indian of New Mexico and the Maya of Old Mexico, the mummy was racially distinct from either of these tribes. To what race, then, did he belong?

"On the right wrist of the mummy was a bracelet made of two polished bones, each two inches long, which were sewn upon an armband of deerskin. Around the left wrist was fastened a bracelet of tiny shells, run on a fiber string."

These relics are said by the authorities of the American Museum of Natural History to be very fine specimens.

As to the discovery of John Tex, they are most conservative, as there are so many explanations which might be advanced for the location in which the mummy was found, though they admit it is probably a very old mummy, and simple theories account for the difference in skin and hair.

Discoveries that many consider unimportant are frequently made nowadays, and the archæologists who have that territory in charge believe that everything found is of value and adds a link to the chain of facts relating to the prehistoric race of Cliff-dwellers.

Original Poetry.

Missionary Moods.

Dejectedly he hums a song,
A solemn, melancholy air.
His eyes are dreamy—something wrong.
He runs his fingers through his hair.
He hangs his head and seldom smiles;
He could not joke to save his life—
He is an elder, many miles
Removed from kindred, home, and wife.

He briskly walks the path adown,
And merrily he hums a tune.
Upon his face there is no frown;
His smile is like the harvest moon.

What secret force one scarcely knows
Has changed the tenor of his life—
Ah, in his pocket doth repose
A bulky letter from his wife.

Among the leading features of the May Chautauquan are two articles on the production of household stuff, both of which bring out the desirability of a revival of the old joy in handicraft for its own sake. Rho Fisk Zueblin writes of "The Education of the Producer and the Consumer," telling of the schools and periodicals which are training the maker and user of artistic handicraft. Caroline L. Hunt traces the philosophy of the development of production from the old-time independent artisan to the modern factory "hand," and suggests certain ways in which producer and consumer can come into closer and more helpful relations.

"Smile, once in a while!
 'Twill make your heart seem lighter;
 Smile once in a while!
 'Twill make your pathway brighter.
 Life's a mirror; if we smile,
 Smiles come back to greet us;
 If we're frowning all the while Frowns for ever meet us."

PAPEETE, April 7.

Sister Walker: Our conference is now in session here in Papeete again, and knowing as I do, by the many messages of sympathy and condolence that have come to us, that the Saints are more than ever interested in hearing from these islands, I improve the moment to send a few words concerning the work, and Saints here. We have no glowing account of increase of numbers to write of, but we can say there is now an increase of spirituality. The late calamity has for the time being at least, subdued, and humbled those who were made partakers of it, and all seem to have a renewed desire to do right. The good Spirit is with us in a greater degree than heretofore and has spoken to them several times in a very comforting way, and in such words of reassurance that inspires confidence and trust again, that it has drawn us all nearer together. They are quick to recognize the chastening hand of the Lord in such things. They say it was the judgments of God because of so much wickedness. During the storm Laura heard one say, "The Lord is whipping us hard. I do not know whether he intends to kill us or not." But they accepted it all very calmly. There was no suicide, or manifestation of cowardice in any way. When the trees were falling some cried out with terror, and well they might for nearly all the Saints were right among them, and for awhile they fell fast. But neither storm nor waves caused an outcry of fear or panic. From what we have learned from those who were there, the occasion seemed to have been unparalleled in coolness and courage. The one white woman that was on the island—Sr. Gilbert—distinguished herself for bravery. Not a cry escaped her lips during the whole dreadful experience.

One of our good, big elders seemed to be overcome for a while with fear. Laura was passing by and saw him in an attitude of fear, and making a low, groaning noise. She said, "What is the matter, William? Are you afraid?" He turned a rueful countenance towards her and said, "I am praying to God; is not that good?" "Yes," was Laura's reply, "but there is a time to pray and a time to work. I think this is the time to get up and go to work and help save the people." Hearing such staunch words from a little bit of a white woman (little in comparison to his size) dispelled his fears, and he went forth to duty.

The real heroism of Tapu should go on record. It is said he never seemed to think of himself at all, but made it his business to seek and to save, and when the storm was over, he also was among the saved. When a boat drifted in from the lake and was made fast to a tree, doubtless he was among the number who secured it. He sought out Bro. and Sr. Gilbert who were perched on some rocks, and assisted them to the boat, thinking it more safe than where they were. But when they concluded not to remain he helped them to the tree by which they proposed to stay. When he could do no more for them, he left them and went to the assistance of others. A child got separated from his parents and would soon have been swept away had not Tapu found him. Not knowing where his parents were, he carried and placed him in a safe position in the boat, where he was found all right when the storm was over.

This is a portion of his simple, earnest paper, "O Lord look at all these children! They are yours; many have been baptized into your church. Save them! Do not let any be lost." What was the sequel? Not one was lost. Fifty or more children of all sizes. How it came about is not known. The standing water was waist high to grown people. It was not so difficult to save them, for they could rise with the waves, and settle down again when they receded, or cling to the floating debris. But the little ones were brave too, and many of them could swim like little fishes. An eight-year-old little girl who had passed through the flood, was in the house here about three weeks ago. In speaking of the event I said to her, "How was it that you were saved when the sea was far above your head?" She did not tell me the means by which she was saved, but simply said: "I prayed to God to save me, and he did. But we all would have died afterwards if Wilmer had not made that salt water good for us to drink. Now because he did that I believe this is the true church," and was baptized shortly after her arrival in Papeete.

Another little instance is worthy of notice. A sister had taken some of Laura's clothes to wash. She had washed them but they were not ironed, and that faithful sister held on to those clothes through all that peril, and shifting about from place to place, and returned them to Laura after the storm was over, but they were still unironed as the irons were all washed away.

On Sunday before last Vairea, the brother who gave up his house in Kaukura for Brn. Smith and Gould to live in, told how he came to be saved. He was at Hikueru and was at the other side of the lake. In vision he was told to go to the city. He did not want to go, because his work was where he was, and he had intended to stay there, but the words were so plain he feared not to obey, "and," said he, "my life was saved by doing so." He said farther that the patriarch had told him in his blessing that he would be blessed by vision, and now it has come to pass so soon.

The Kitchen as a Laboratory.

The Mistress of the Home of 1925 will be a chemist. She will be a trained scientist. She will regard her kitchen as a laboratory in which a thousand wonderful experiments will be tried. The idea that the kitchen is a place of drudgery, where only those enter who are forced by circumstances, will have disappeared; and there will remain only wonder that any one could ever have been ignorant enough of the marvelous processes of science to have taken so little interest in the subject.

The kitchen itself will disappear from the basement and from the home for ever. In its place, adjoining the dining-room, so that the transit from the fire to the table may occupy but a second's time, will be the "Household Laboratory." The mistress of the house and her daughters will find no more interesting period of the day than that which is spent in the well-lighted, well-ventilated, cleanly, and comfortably arranged room given up to the constant surprises which science offers to those who will study with interest her wonders in the realm of combinations of food materials and the transformation brought about by varying degrees of heat.—John Brisben Walker in the May Cosmopolitan.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Sunday-School Convention.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

With the help of our First Assistant Superintendent we prepared and put out the Home Department literature and established, or rather introduced the Home Department work. It had been in successful operation before but is now in a systematic shape and therefore more efficacious. It will be more widely introduced in the coming year as it is just now becoming better understood. I doubt if there is one school in the Association that could not use it to a decided advantage. We recommend it to all. Samples of the literature will be on exhibit at this convention. Call and examine it.

REPORTING SYSTEM CHANGED.

With the concurrence of our General Secretary, we adopted a new system of reporting that will, we believe, improve the situation materially when once understood. If you have not yet heard from it, our General Secretary will be pleased to explain all about it to you when time admits.

THE "STUDY HOUR" RETIRED.

The convention of 1902 ordered the Study Hour continued and appointed a committee to prepare the work, with privilege of selecting assistants if necessary or desirable. The committee did not deem it necessary to select assistants. The editors stated that they expected compensation for their services. The General Association officers in executive session considered the matter and decided that whereas no public statement to that effect had been made in the convention at the time it was being considered, but on the contrary that they wanted it distinctly understood that what they had done was without compensation, and that many were of the opinion that it was to continue the same, we did not see fit to take the responsibility of determining the matter of salary for the editors, but consented to the publication of the Study Hour, and that the editors should present their bill to the next General Convention for their approval or disapproval. This was finally assented to and one issue of the Study Hour prepared, and the editors then resigned. We urged them to reconsider their resignation but to no avail. After considerable search we found a sister who would undertake it "for one quarter only." One more issue was put out and we were again without editors. Nor could any be found to whom we felt to intrust the matter. And there the matter stood.

The fact of not being able to secure editors together with the further fact that there was not sufficient demand for it to enable us to get a subscription list that would place it in the list of second-class mail matter, seemed to leave but one avenue of escape, and that was to retire it till such time as the convention saw fit to revive it.

We are well aware that some have attached considerable blame to the officers of the General Association for their action on the matter, but we would here say that excepting our General Librarian who was not present our action was unanimous. We preferred to do what to us seemed best and necessary, and suffer whatever of blame that might attach thereto rather than to sanction and do what in our judgment seemed not for the best interests of the work.

FINANCES.

The finances of the Association are on a firm basis. But from the fact that last year the prices of the Quarterly were reduced about twenty per cent, the net income of the Association has been greatly reduced. There will be sufficient for any regular expenses of the Association but it will not be wise to make any unnecessary drafts on the treasury. As the Association grows and the work expands, the expenses must expand in proportion thereto, and it will not be safe to run the treasury too low. Ill will fare the day when we are obliged to call upon the districts for support for the General Association.

THE LESSON OUTLOOK.

Were it not for the discussion that is to take place at the session to-night, we would say more upon the lesson outlook than we shall. But we may say that there is something of a call for an advanced lesson and for a beginner's course. We have experimented with the beginner's course and have, as it seems, demonstrated that it is not practicable in the form in which we tried it. We must try it in some other way if we try it at all. And I fear if we try an advanced course that we will find that the demand was not what we had thought it was. But there is a practical solution to the whole problem. The Primary Quarterly can be made to carry two distinct grades as well as the Intermediate. The beginning part can be made as distinctly kindergarten as you please to have it. It can be upon the uniform text or subject as far as practicable, and use other thoughts when regular lessons will not do. A beginner's course thus put out will at once be introduced and at hand whenever and wherever it is needed.

For the advanced course we had better give advanced treatment to what we already have. It would be unkind in us to issue another grade of quarterly covering the ground that I suppose is contemplated in time by the Religio, as some have suggested that we could. The Religio is now issuing a quarterly on the Book of Mormon. It is doing a grand work, too. Any one who really wants to study the Book of Mormon can do so either in the Home Class or in a regular local, no matter where he lives. We call the work of the Religio in this respect a complete success. And from the fact that at one time it was discussed among the leading minds of the Religio, which was the better, for them to take up the Book of Mormon or Church History, I conclude that sooner or later they will take up the study of Church History. And there is where it should be. To add this class to the average Sunday-school would be to give them something they could not handle. Members of a class studying Church History would not be fitted to take any other class in the school were they needed ever so badly. And the substitute teacher question is one we should not lose sight of.

We may be able to advantageously add another grade or two to what we now have, but we strongly advise against the issuing of any more separate grades of quarterly, or against any change that would tend to destroy the effects or advantages of the uniform lesson system. I repeat here what I have said before, that "I am strongly persuaded that of all the human agencies or plans that have borne success to this great work; of all the silent influences that have wrought upon us as a people and have buoyed us up and on to more and better work; of all the unseen powers that have drawn us toward that 'oneness' to which we must all eventually come, the 'unity' and 'oneness' of thought and study brought about by the uniform lesson, has done the most. Let us think seriously ere we contemplate a change that will remove us from the very system that has carried us almost to the zenith of success."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SONG-BOOK.

Efforts have been made from time to time to get material for a Sunday-school song-book, but with discouraging success. There seemed to be no available music that is adapted to the needs of the Sunday-school. We have before called the attention of the convention to the fact that there is lots of good church music that is not at all adapted to the needs of the Sunday-school. Any experienced choir leader or musician will tell you that there is a great difference between church music and Sunday-school music. You would not sing a national air at a funeral nor a funeral dirge at a picnic. You would select music appropriate in both words and melody to the occasion. And while the Sunday-school is a religious service, it requires a different class of music from the ordinary church service. And so it is with the song-book. We can easily find enough compositions to make several books, but they are not the proper style or do not possess sufficient of merit to justify publication. Until we can produce a book that is the equal to the best in the land, it will be financial suicide to publish it. It will be impossible to introduce a book that is not up to the standard that the world produces and secure its continued use. We have a very good selected book, but it has been used so long, we need a change. But we would better make another selection than to publish or give our sanction to the publication of a book not fully known to be strictly up to date and up to the standard. We recommend that a committee of three, all of whom shall be experienced choir leaders, be appointed to take the matter into advisement and ascertain if there be sufficient and proper material for a book. Also to investigate or examine other Sunday-school song-books with a view to adopting one for general use throughout the Association. All their findings to be reported as soon as completed to the officers of the General Association, and that the officers be empowered to act at once upon the matter whether to publish or to select a book.

In conclusion, brethren, let me exhort you to a continued and resolute effort for good. Place the Sabbath-school and the church service first and uppermost in your mind and heart, not secondary. Labor for love's sake not as a driven duty. More than for self, let us labor for God, Christ, and our fellow man.

May the good Lord bless us and help us to make the ensuing convention year one of prosperity for the Sabbath-school work; one of pleasure for having done well; one of blessing because we have drawn near to God.

"God speed the right."

Bro. Hougas expressed his grateful appreciation of the associate officers both in competence and Spirit.

Letter Department.

ADA, Indian Territory, April 28.

Dear Saints: I am not a member of any church, but I want to let the world know I believe the Latter Day Saints Church is the only true church of Jesus Christ on earth to-day. If the Lord will, I will soon be one with you. I believe God is the same to-day he was at first, for we find in Romans 8: 38, 39, "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." We find in Malachi 3: 6, "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

I do not understand the laying on of hands, yet I aim to give it more study. In fact, I have just started in studying this church. I am satisfied with it as far as I know. We find in James 5: 14, 15, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him."

I will bring my letter to a close by asking the prayers of the Saints.

Your friend in Christ,

J. W. CLEVENGER.

FARWELL, Michigan, April 28.

Editors Herald: We have a branch here and hold meetings every Sunday. We have had Bro. Devries with us for a week and he preached to us four times and we have been brought to a better understanding of our duty to the church. I have been a member of the church seven years. I have not been always faithful in the work God gave me to do, but I am thankful for his love that he had for me and my family. I am thankful for the words of wisdom that God gave to his people. I was sick when I came into the church and received no help from worldly source, but when I pleased God by keeping the word of wisdom and the commandments I was made well. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for I know that it is the power of God unto salvation. God has given me a work to do and I hope that I will do it well. My desire is to do all I can to build up the church. I trust that I may always live to have the Spirit of God to lead me on in this good work and that I may be saved when the Lord shall come. "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap."—Malachi 3: 2.

My prayer is for all Saints and for the welfare of Zion.

Your brother in the gospel,

LEONARD DUDLEY.

PISGAH, Iowa, April 27.

Editors Herald: I came here on Saturday. Preached twice yesterday to large and interested audiences. Attended Sabbath-school and addressed the same by request of superintendent. I believe this is the largest Sunday-school in this district. I also attended Religio and took part with them. A good spirit prevails. Unity of purpose for good seems to be manifest with all. Bro. Joseph Lane, as president of the branch, is the right man and in the right place. His work commends him to all his neighbors as well as to the Saints. Sr. Hoffman, as Sunday-school superintendent, is wide-awake and devoted to her work. Bro. H. Gamet, president of the Religio, is one of our live young men and is doing a good work. I am trying to discharge my duty in visiting branches and building up the Saints, and believe my labor is not in vain. Yours for good,

C. DERRY.

Editors Herald: I last wrote you in January just prior to going to Greenwood, New York, where Bro. J. B. Lentz was located, and desired to hold a series of meetings. I was feeling quite badly in body, but thought as there seemed to be an urgent call I would go and do what I could. But the "grippe" had me, and the world looked blue. I was detained over Sunday in a town about ten miles from Greenwood, as I arrived on Saturday night too late to get the last train, and none left until Monday morning. It was a long wait, but I put in the time as best I could visiting the churches and listening to others tell of the faith they had in Jesus Christ. I had opportunity to testify of the power of God to-me-ward in the evening meeting and felt how much good might be done if we had the opportunities that those of popular faiths seem to have. Monday I took first train for Greenwood and found Bro. Lentz waiting for me at the station. I was sorry to arrive in such poor condition physically, as a sick man is a nuisance anyhow. We started to hold meetings on Thursday night and continued for about two weeks. It was the hardest two weeks I ever put in and tried to preach. The Saints were very kind to me and did all they could to make my stay pleasant. Sr. Lentz especially tried her best to make the preacher well, but although I appreciated it all and tried as hard as I could to get better, I had to give it up. However, I think I would have remained had it not been for other matters demanding my presence at home. I preached for the Saints in Providence the Sunday after arriving at home, but did not do much preaching for some weeks afterwards. I continued to labor as best I could preaching at Providence and Fall River until April 1, when my work as a general missionary ended for a time at least, as circumstances are such that it is impossible for me to leave my home for the general work unless God should open a way not known to me. However, I am doing all I can for the work locally, preaching every Sunday, and hope to be able to do much good as opportunity may offer.

The Easter service at Fall River was a splendid success; the singing was very fine, and the orchestra was all one could ask for. Certainly great credit is due the Fall River Saints for their energy and tact in music as well as in numerous other lines. Bro. Harry Howlet is the genial superintendent of the Sunday-school, and is a genius in his way. On Easter he had decorated the platform with a beautiful cross about fifteen feet high I should think, and breadth in proportion. The cross was white, set off with rosettes of a different shade, and the whole by a background of darker shade than either. It was an artistic thing, and would have to be seen to be appreciated. A good audience greeted the writer on Sunday evening last in Providence and a number of strangers heard the old story ever new to us who have received the light as it is in Christ. The prospects seem to be good here for a prosperous summer's work along gospel lines; and may energy, tact, and a goodly portion of the Holy Spirit be with us all.

My permanent address will be Thornton, Rhode Island, Box 16.

GLADSTONE, Illinois, April 26.

Editors Herald: As General Conference is over and the elders are appointed to their various missions for the present year, I would be glad if some of them would give Gladstone a call and preach some for us.

We held our village election and shut out the saloons which have been running here ever since the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway started their line. I am glad they are gone. If a man lives in a place like this and is prepared always to give an answer for the hope within him he will have no time to visit saloons or any other place of vice.

Brethren, I hope earnestly for the triumph of the truth, and am willing to help what I can.

Your brother,
J. L. RUST.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, April 26.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: I am in the gospel conflict, with the uncertainty of the times, also with the world and satan. Everything surely indicates the near approach of the coming of Christ. Sometimes I think I do not care how soon it takes place, as this world seems so wicked, and have forgotten their Creator evidently, and only seek pleasure, and if religion they would sooner join a false creed than the truth. I was quite disappointed in not going to conference, but I deemed it better to pay my tithing than pay a railroad money the church needed.

In bonds,
WM. C. CUMMINGS.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 29.

To the Saints and Friends in the Fremont, Pottawattamie, and Nodaway Districts, Greeting: I regret very much having to leave you for the coming year, to labor in another field, not so well known to me as the one I have labored in so many years; especially among the Saints of Fremont, whom I have learned to love; and they, together with the Saints of Pottawattamie and Nodaway Districts, have manifested their love and respect in administering to my many wants. The many happy seasons of joy and peace we have had together in Christ our blessed Lord, in heavenly places, and tasting of the goodness of God and the powers of the world to come, will never be forgotten by me, I assure you, in this world, and I firmly believe will not be in the world to come. I shall never forget you, dear Saints, and I am satisfied you will not forget me; for our labors together for twenty years, and our close acquaintance with many of you for thirty-seven years have bound our hearts together with the gospel tie that I feel satisfied can never be broken. I bid you farewell, but not for ever, for I shall see you as often as is convenient and consistent with our gospel work. I hope to be with you at your next reunion and rejoice with you as I have done for eighteen years that are past.

It seemed really necessary that I should be at home a little oftener than in years gone by on account of my dear companion, as well as myself, advancing in years. I shall now enter into this field trusting in Him who has never forsaken me; and I am sure on conditions of my doing right he never will. I hope to meet the dear ones of this Stake, and shall strive lawfully for their fellowship and confidence, and hope and trust through the grace of our heavenly Father to bestow upon them that which they render to me.

May God be with you, dear Saints, and help you in all your undertakings in righteousness, and that you may be able to endure to the end and gain the crown of eternal life promised, shall ever be my earnest prayer.

May God speed the work, giving to all his servants power to accomplish the work assigned them, that we may all gain the victory through our blessed Lord, is the prayer of your humble servant in Christ,
HENRY KEMP.

NANTYGLO mon, Wales, April 18.

Saints' Herald: I am still in the conflict and glad that the Lord has blessed me. I have been poor in health for a couple of months; but through the ordinance and continual prayers of the Saints I am by God's mercy able to be on duty for the Master. This mission has its trials for the missionary notwithstanding the noble efforts put forth by local brethren and the missionary force. Few have obeyed the royal mandates of our Lord. Quite an effort was made last summer at street work, many inspiring sermons were delivered on the street. In the winter months our privilege to labor is reduced chiefly to tracting and doing what we can in places where we have a chapel, hall, or houses; few come out, and we can not open new places by renting halls because of the lack of funds. The burden at present falls upon the faithful few. May God bless those.

The efforts of the past year have removed prejudice to a large extent. Ground has been lost in Wales because of many moving away, some to Zion, others elsewhere but somewhere in America. Beside, there are few missionaries; one or two has been the allowance for some years; there may be causes for it. According to our history, and the knowledge handed to us by the old-time Saints, no people received more freely and gladly the restored gospel. As a result of this no people were blessed greater than those because of their readiness with the spiritual manifestations of the gospel. But the blight came, alas. But we are living in the present. I told one lady that I was glad to be tracting, talking, preaching, or anything if it only removed the stigma of Brighamism off the Lamb's bride. She was surprised, and said, "Are you, really?" I said I was of a truth. Her reply was, "Then I hope you will do good." I inquire from the aged people after saying what my business is, "Do you know anything about the Saints?" Some say one thing, others another; but I press them as to the lives and works of the "old-timers," and the answers generally are that they were good neighbors, kind and good.

The general tone of the people is respectful toward us and our literature. Some refuse point blank to take tracts, but they are of that class that Paul said would, or could not endure sound doctrine. One lady said: "I do not want your tract. My husband and I belong to a church, and nothing will shake our faith; we are going to die in it."

I will relate a dream I had one night after reflecting on our labors. It brought before my sight a nice piece of ground with young plants a few inches in height, lovely and green; and I looked admiringly upon it and wondered what it could signify. The Spirit of God signified it was the result of seed sown by the labors of God's servants here. And I was encouraged to continue my labor,—to sow that I might reap in the future. I woke and felt the Spirit's power with me, and I wept with joy. Thanks to the Giver of all good gifts. I write this to encourage the Saints and laborers in this land.

I am glad that the work is progressing splendidly in some parts of England. I expect to have good news in some form from General Conference. If we do not get more missionaries added to present force we must do our best. There is room for laborers in every land, I suppose. Any Saints desiring me to look up friends or relatives here, I will do so if near to them. It may create new openings.

GOODERHAM, Ontario, April 28.

Editors Herald: The interest at Fooley, some few miles out from Parry Sound, did not turn out as well as we expected. However, one was baptized and many heard the angel's message. My last service there was on the 17th of last month. I continued services at Parry Harbor and Parry Sound until April 1, and left Parry Sound on the 3d, bound for Cameron, according to previous arrangements, and met with the Cameron Saints on the 5th. The Saints concluded it not wisdom to hold a series of services there at that time of the year; hence on the 10th I went to Fenelon Falls and held forth there that night. There being little interest I came here on the 11th, and met with the Saints on the 12th. We found everything moving along nicely. On Monday the 13th, I tried for an opening in the village of Goodham, and succeeded in getting the Orange Hall free of charge, and on the evening of the 14th I began service and had the hall pretty well filled. I announced services for the 16th and 19th and on the 15th got a colt and cart from Chester Lake, and drove eight miles to see old Sr. Walker, who has been a great sufferer for a year with neuralgia in the face. I prayed with her and administered to her, and heard the other day that she is some better. Will the Saints pray for this dear sister?

On my way home a dog ran out and bit the colt and she began to kick, and kicked until she kicked the cart well to pieces, and I got two of my ribs broken and a bad shaking up. I was administered to three times by Jacob Staley, but had to cancel my meeting of the 16th, but was determined I would fill my appointment of the 19th, as there would be no other service held in the village that night, so I bolstered myself up in Bro. Armstrong's buggy and drove three miles, while every jolt seemed like knives piercing me. The hall was filled and we feel good was done, but I had to give up until I recovered some. People there are anxious for us to continue, hence we are billed for there to-night, and Friday and Sunday evenings.

I took a run up to Troy Hill on the 24th and preached twice and conducted their school on the 26th, and blessed two children. Things are not very favorable there for mission work. My ribs are very sore yet. I may go home and rest until after June conference, which is to be held at Waterford, Ontario.

I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people.

S. TOMLINSON.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, April 24.

Editors Herald: We are still trying to keep our dear Savior's commandments. Yet I wish there might be a little more spiritual life among the Saints here; but we must expect persecution, that is if we are trying to live right in this life. And if we were not living up to God's law we would not have so much persecution and so many trials. But we have our dear Savior to follow as our example and guide, and he was persecuted and tried, we know. He gave his life that we might live to obey his commands.

Husband and myself were both baptized into the faith June 23, 1902, by Bro. J. N. Ames, and we are not sorry that we united with this blessed church, the only true church of Jesus Christ. We are trying to win an inheritance with him by living the right life here. Dear Saints, we ask an interest in your prayers that we may ever be faithful to our Savior.

Your sister,

AMY B. SMALL.

LYDIA, Texas, April 27.

Dear Herald: I have just finished reading the last HERALD, and it does me good to read such good letters from all parts of the world, and all contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints; the same old story, the gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. What a grand and glorious thing it is to be a Saint in these latter days. If we live faithful to the end we will be ready to meet our Lord and Savior and reign with him. What a glorious thought! We ought to live every minute just as though we expected our Savior the next.

Pray for me, dear Saints; that I may live worthily and be ready to meet my Savior when he comes to reign Lord of lords and King of kings.

Your sister,

N. J. JENKINS.

MORRISON, Oklahoma Territory, April 29.

Editors Herald: The Oak Grove Branch of Latter Day Saints is growing nicely. On last Sunday three were added to the church, one being my dear wife, whom the Lord has raised from the sick-bed to obey the gospel of Christ, and live. Then praise the Lord, for he is gracious in fulfilling his promises, even in these latter days.

Conference Minutes.

Montana.—Conference convened at Bozeman, Montana, February 21, 11 a. m., President G. Reese in the chair, F. Christofferson secretary. Ministry reporting: W. H. Kelley, G. Reese, J. H. Wells, Levi Atkinson, E. E. Williams, J. Prichard, J. Eliason, Thomas Reese. Bishop's agent reported for the year ending December 31, 1902, on hand, $252.28; receipts, $791.15; expenditures, $982.85; balance on hand $60.58. Branches reporting Gallatin 101, Deer Lodge 54, Victor 37. Communication from Victor Branch, requesting the ordination of G. Reese to the office of high priest, was ordered spread on the minutes. W. H. Kelley was chosen delegate to General Conference. G. Reese sustained as district president, F. Christofferson district secretary, G. Reese Bishop's agent. Conference adjourned to meet at the call of district president.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Greeting: Another General Conference has passed, and the opening of another conference year finds me in charge of the same field as before, and we enter the work with a strong desire to see a better work done than in the past year. It may necessitate a greater effort upon our part, for we have less men appointed to this field than last year. But I hope the extra sacrifice and energy will be cheerfully given upon the part of both ministry (local and general) and membership.

In order to facilitate the work we have chosen the following brethren to assist as missionaries in charge of the fields named: John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, Lamoni Stake.

James McKiernan, Farmington, Iowa, Eastern Iowa and Nauvoo Districts.

J. Frank Mintun, Woodbine, Iowa, Des Moines District.

David M. Rudd, Dow City, Iowa, Gallands Grove District.

William A. Smith, Independence, Missouri, Little Sioux District.

Columbus Scott, Lamoni, Iowa, Pottawattamie and Fremont Districts.

T. C. Kelley, Independence, Missouri, Minnesota.

William Sparling, Clifford, North Dakota, North Dakota.

Eli Hayer, Lamoni, Iowa, South Dakota, east of Missouri River.

Romanan Wight, Dow City, Iowa, Northern and Central Nebraska Districts.

Robert O. Self, Nebraska City, Nebraska, Western Nebraska and Black Hills.

J. R. Sutton, Holden, Missouri, Southern Nebraska District. James Caffall will labor as heretofore as missionary at large in this field, and report to the minister in charge direct.

I appeal to the brethren to be more careful in keeping the items of labor, and note the conditions surrounding more fully. In making your reports see that they are full, and be particular to send them in promptly on July 1, October 1, January 1; and on March 1 make one for two months, also one for the whole year. These reports should all reach me by the 10th of the month; not later. Because of carelessness in the past (upon the part of some) our reports have been necessarily incomplete. It should not be so.

In regard to debates the same rules as heretofore will govern, namely, consult the minister in charge before engaging in them, and do not be hasty about provoking them. Preach the gospel affirmatively without attacking other denominations. As soon as practical get into your fields and make up your minds to stay there as faithfully as possible. Do not allow any trifling thing to excuse you from your duty in the field; and while in the field attend diligently to your missionary work. You are not sent out merely for a pleasure trip, but to spread this glorious gospel and establish it wherever you can get a foothold. It means work and sacrifice.

If the ministry will manifest more energy and push in spreading this work it will stimulate the membership to greater activity and increase the confidence of all. And those who are contributing their means (many of them making sacrifice to do so) will be encouraged to put forth greater efforts and the work will be better supported financially. Brethren, push out and leave the branch and district work to the local authorities, with the advice and counsel of the minister in charge when necessary, as the Lord has directed, and I am satisfied we will realize the fulfillment of the promise. A growth in the work will soon be manifest that will bring joy and peace to our souls.

Do not leave a good interest too soon. Exhaust every legitimate means to move people to obedience, especially when the interest is in new places where it is not likely to be followed up soon. Avoid unnecessary travel so far as you can, and spend the time in more thorough missionary work.

We appeal to the local ministry to arouse to greater activity. We need your hearty coöperation in this great work, and hope that every one who can possibly do so will get out Sunday appointments and faithfully fill them. I would be pleased to have a report of all missionary efforts by every local man who can do work of this kind.

We hope to receive the hearty coöperation of every member, especially those in the scattered list who are isolated from the branches, if you can give a missionary a place to stop while he seeks to open up the work in new places it will be greatly appreciated by the missionary force. Write to the missionary in charge of your district or the minister in charge of the field, giving us such information as you can.

Brethren, we should prove ourselves worthy before God and man, if we would receive the favor of God and the support of the church to help us successfully carry on the work of a missionary for Christ and build up his church on earth.

Let us live so faithfully and work so diligently that God will be pleased to work with and through us that in truth we may be coworkers with God in building up his kingdom.

Your brother and colaborer,

LAMONI, Iowa, April 29.

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

Appointments of Elder George H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, Lamoni Stake.

Thursday evening, May 7, Lamoni; May 9 and 10, Evergreen church; evenings of May 11 and 12, Lone Rock, Missouri; Greenville church evenings of May 14 and 15; Davis City, Saturday evening and Sunday, 16th and 17th; Pleasanton, Iowa, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, 19th and 20th; Lucas, Thursday and Friday evenings, 21st and 22d; Cleveland, Saturday evening and Sunday, 23d and 24th; north of Lucas, evenings of 25th and 26th. Appointments will be announced for Keb, Centerville, Hiteman, Ellston, and notice given. All are earnestly requested to attend these meetings. If these appointments conflict with any appointments of the local authorities, please notify the undersigned at once, and oblige. Bishop William Anderson of the Stake will assist in these meetings whenever practicable to do so. E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Addresses.

The Enlarged Hymnal.

The Board of Publication has decided to enlarge the Saints' Hymnal. The additional matter will be taken partly from the Harmony, partly from new and original contributions, and partly from selections from other hymnals or song-books. And that the work may be more satisfactory and better meet the demands of the singers of the many localities where it will be used, we desire that everybody should help in one or more of the following ways:

1. Take your Harmony and from it make a list of the tunes and words that you would like to see used that are not now in the Hymnal. Give name of tune, number of words as numbered in the Harp, thus: "Adoration," page 16, words number 22 in Harp.

2. Send original compositions to either of the committee. But we prefer that you do not write the name of the author on the manuscript. Write name of author on a slip of paper and pin to the manuscript. We wish to submit the music to the committee appointed to make the selections without any names being attached thereto. This will preclude the possibility of any favoritism, and will let each number stand on its own merits.

3. Make selections from other books, sending us the books if you can. These books will be preserved carefully and returned if so desired. Or, give us the exact name of selection with name of author of music, also of words; name and address of the publisher of the book; name and address of owner of copyright if different from that of book. These latter items are absolutely necessary, as we do not dare to use copyright music without consent of owner.

Come one and all that are interested in the enlargement of the Hymnal and help to make it what we want it. We need help from every section of the country or it will not meet your requirements perhaps. Let us know what your favorites are. May be that they can be gotten and used to advantage.

And let us urge upon you the necessity of acting without delay. All that is done in the way of selecting or contributing must be done soon, as we wish to have the Hymnal in the hands of the people by the first of next year, and to do this it will necessitate having all of the manuscript ready some months before that time.

Let us hear from you. Write either member of the committee. All manuscript or books or sheets will be receipted for when received and held subject to the order of the parties sending up to the time of being used.

Yours for the work,

T. A. HOUGAS, Henderson, Iowa, }
H. R. MILLS, Independence, Missouri, } Committee.

Attention, Musicians!

The Board of Publication was authorized by the late convention of the General Sunday-school Association to publish a song-book for the Sunday-school. We want you to help us get out a song-book that will be appreciated by all. Send us contributions of words, music, or words and music that will assist us in this work. If you have nothing original, but have desirable pieces that you would select from other books, send them along. WILL YOU HELP US NOW? Let us be laborers together to help build up the Lord's work.

In bonds,

F. B. BLAIR, }
J. A. GUNSOLLEY, } Committee.

Third Quorum of Priests.

As we desire to get out a new list of names and addresses, we ask that each member will send his address to W. T. Shakespeare, Lamoni, Iowa. If any have been ordained elders will they please send in date of ordination? Brethren, please be prompt. W. T. Shakespeare, president of quorum.

Born.

GAYLORD.—To Bro. Willard and Sr. Josephine Gaylord, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 29, 1903, a son. Blessed April 26, 1903, by William H. Kelley and J. E. Meredith. Named Ralph Marion.

ANDERSON.—To Bro. Benjamin M. and Sr. Mary Audentia Anderson, at Lamoni, Iowa, February 24, 1903, a son. Blessed April 26, 1903, by Joseph Smith and William H. Kelley. Named Duane Smith.

MATHER.—To Bro. William J. and Sr. Alta May Mather, a daughter, born at Lamoni, Iowa, February 26, 1903; blessed April 26, 1903, by Joseph Smith and J. E. Meredith; named Mary Margaret.

Died.

WELBORN.—Earnest Lee, son of Mr. William E. and Sr. Mary Welborn, was born May 15, 1892; died April 24, 1903, at 4.25 p. m., from the effects of dropsy of the heart. He was born at Peculiar, Cass County, Missouri, and blessed when a child by Elder I. N. White. Funeral from the home near Amo Post-office, Colorado, April 25, sermon by Elder A. B. Hanson. Interred in Fountain Cemetery, April 26.

MORE.—Elder William More was born in Virginia, April 16, 1827; died at his home in Stewartville, Missouri, March 19, 1903. He became a member of the church in 1844. In 1860 joined the Reorganization of which he remained a faithful member till his death. He was a kind father and husband. He leaves besides his wife, three daughters, one son, and many friends and relatives to mourn, but not without hope. Funeral in charge of Elder A. St. Lewis; sermon by Elder T. T. Hinderks.

DUCKETT.—Mr. Samuel Duckett was born in Cass County, Michigan; died at his home in Glidden, Iowa, April 25, 1903. He was an honest man, and highly esteemed by those who knew him. He believed the gospel but for some unknown cause he never obeyed it. Sr. Duckett and two daughters are members of the church, Sr. C. J. Hunt being one of that number. The other two daughters have not yet united with the church. Funeral services were conducted in the Church of God, Glidden, Iowa, on the 26th ultimo, by Elder C. E. Butterworth.

SMITH.—At Dennisport, Massachusetts, during a surgical operation, for cancerous tumor, Helen M. Smith passed quietly away from severe pain and distress April 17, 1903. She leaves a husband and four children, two sons and two daughters, to mourn. She was born April 22, 1847, being 55 years, 11 months, 25 days. Funeral services at the chapel where many friends and Saints gathered to pay their last tribute of love and respect to what remained pertaining to morality of our sister. Sermon by R. Bullard.

Our Foremost Astronomer on "The End of the World."

Professor Simon Newcomb contributes the leading article to the May McClure's, an exceptionally interesting forecast of "The End of the World." Though in the form of fiction, Professor Newcomb's theory is clearly the one that in his belief is of all the most scientifically probable. He holds that this world—or rather the life on it—will come to an end, as a result of a collision between our sun and a dark star. The author places the date of the disaster 3,000 years after the first successful message to Mars. All the scientific discoveries have been made centuries ago, and the earth has become a pretty dull place to live in; so dull, in fact, that for months at a time the daily papers contain only the announcement that nothing worth recording has happened. The article is splendidly illustrated by H. Lanos.

Communicable Diseases.

Communicable diseases are due to parasitic growths, which can live for a short time outside the body, but do not thrive elsewhere. Such a disease can be contracted in only one way—by the entrance into the system of specific germs derived from another person who is suffering from the disease. These germs can not spring de novo from a damp cellar, a foul refrigerator, or a neglected garbage can. Such germs, fortunately, are not conveyed to any great extent by the atmosphere. Indeed, pure air and sunshine are nature's best disinfectants. The chief danger that lurks in impure air is its devitalizing effect upon the system, rendering it susceptible to the attacks of disease of all sorts. Air laden with street dust is not so harmless. Owing to the disgusting habit of expectoration, particularly common among those afflicted with tuberculosis, or some other disease of the respiratory organs, the streets of cities and the floors of public buildings and conveyances teem with pathogenic bacteria. These disease germs may be wafted into our homes on the dust-laden atmosphere. More frequently they are brushed up by trailing skirts and thus dragged indoors. An eminent bacteriologist recently examined the skirts of a fashionable lady after she had been on a shopping expedition, and found on them thousands of bacteria, among which were the bacilli which produce diphtheria, lockjaw, and consumption.—M. N. Baker, in May Chautauquan.

DOWIE AND FINANCE.

Among the many things transpiring in the world of a religious class, one of the most peculiar and striking is the remarkable success of John Alexander Dowie, of Chicago and Zion City, as the General Overseer of the "Christian Catholic Church in Zion," and still later, "Elijah the Second," in raising money and gathering property into his own hands for his church and personal uses.

It is stated that about sixteen years ago this man left Australia a penniless adventurer, with considerable assurance and confidence in himself, a strongly magnetic presence, and a somewhat flattering success as a healer. Within that period he put in some time at San Francisco and some at Los Angeles, California; thence to Chicago where in the midst of the push of development, the bustle of trade, the conflict of political strife, and the subtle contest between religions, he has built up a body of professed believers said to number fifty thousand, and has gathered at and near Chicago a band of worshipers of whom he has made a sensational religious spectacle, and who seem to do his bidding as the behest of an autocrat, even to the surrendering of person and purse to his will.

It is very singular, and while we do not in what we are writing intend to speak in disrespect of the sentiment of devotion and worshipful emotion exhibited by the followers of Mr. Dowie, we can not refrain from expressing surprise at the apparent result of his monetary rule, or system, if system it may be called, by which he has accumulated from his subjects an immense sum total distributed in the prosecution of various enterprises, financial, industrial, mechanical, and educational, over which he himself presides and which are absolutely under his directing control, and a personal wealth of nearly a million and a half of dollars, the result of a five per cent assessment on the sums donated for the general good which passes into and through his hands.

We have no possible right to find fault with Mr. Dowie for looking after his own interests, as no part of what he has received has been taken from us personally, with or without our consent; but we use the case as one of example. Here is a man who is ruling over a people gathered together through a personal propagandism, centering in himself the spiritual and

BRO. CHARLES KAIGHAN and wife, with their daughter Gladys, of San Francisco, California, made Lamoni a long visit after the April conference. They left last week for Chicago and other eastern points before returning to their home.

PROF. WILLIAM CALDWELL, of Northwestern University, strongly advises against the use of tea or coffee. "We talk of drunkenness as a crime," he says, "but tea and coffee drinking at meals is more injurious than liquor to some men." Professor Caldwell thinks tea and coffee drinking is responsible for much of the restlessness of the American nation.

the temporal authority, and who holds in almost complete irresponsibility the disposition of not only the sum resulting to himself from the percentage referred to, but the immense amounts collected by him as "tithes and offerings," upon every conceivable project for gaining prestige and making money, that occurs to his busy brain as well.

The contrast with our own poverty as a body of believers is a pitiful one. If it is the result of lack of means and opportunity there is a possible excuse that may be available to us by and by; but if it is the result of lack of faith or a comprehensive belief, it is possible that we may be left without excuse.

1. The Presidency has never asked the church or any of its membership for money to spend in the prosecution of any scheme of money getting, personal adornment, personal ease and comfort, or for the gratification of personal pride in outward surroundings or self-aggrandizement and the glory of pomp and show.

2. The Presidency has not at any time assumed to claim control of the finances of the church, or attempted to direct as to the expenditures of the means gathered into the public treasury. Nor has the Presidency ever claimed or exercised the right to receive and hold the properties of the church as trustees.

3. The Presidency has always understood that the church finances, and the custody and care of the properties of the church, were by the direction of the revelations of God assigned as duties to the Bishopric, officers pointed out and chosen by the spirit of wisdom and revelation; who were responsible to the church for the rightful and righteous discharge of the duties imposed upon them.

The objects to the furtherance of which the means of the church in moneys and properties, gathered into the treasury and storehouse, are clearly stated in the church articles and covenants, and are not dependent upon the desires, designs, whims, or caprices of either of the leading quorums of the church, or of the Bishopric. In the prosecution of the objects thus defined in the law, the Bishopric has the right to the exercise of certain powers of discretion, and is to be aided by the counsel of the leading officers in the spiritual lines of work, when such aid is needed, or requested. But these are not authorized by their calling to improperly interfere in the administration of the financial affairs. In case of apparent or discovered wrong-doing through which the people of the church are the sufferers, the funds unrighteously used, then by virtue of their calling and in the name of the church they may interfere, according to the law.

5. John Alexander Dowie has raised and gathered from his people hundreds of thousands of dollars, and is continually demanding and receiving from them other hundreds and thousands, first for one thing then for another, in tithes and offerings, all to be sent in to the "General Overseer in Zion City," all checks, drafts, and money orders, even for the Zion Printing and Publishing House, "must be made payable to John Alexander Dowie."—Leaves of Healing, for March 28, 1903, and so with everything else.

The objects for which moneys are to be collected for the uses of the church all being stated in the articles and covenants of the church, as well as enumerated in the articles of incorporation, are always open for the inspection and understanding of the members of the church.

They are by this means made conversant with the duty of the officers charged with the collection and disbursement of the moneys used. An account of receipts and expenditures is kept. This is duly presented to the people for inspection. No such accounting is made by John Alexander Dowie, of which we are as yet informed.

6. The ways in which the moneys and properties of the members of the church choosing to contribute to the general fund reach the treasury and storehouse are and have been before the Saints for many years. They are tithes, free-will offerings, and consecrations. Each of these is fairly stated, and each is to be employed by the member contributing in accordance with his own free will and consent. There is no blind work about it. No attempt is made to deceive any member of the church as to the object for which the tithes, offerings, or consecrations are to be used, nor as to the manner of collection, the persons to whom they are to be paid or their care intrusted. No refusal to account for the funds, moneys, or properties has been or is expected to be made.

7. Why then should there be such a contrast between faith and performance as is afforded by a comparison of our condition as regards our work with the condition of Mr. Dowie and his fellows. Is it a partial fulfillment of the Savior's saying: "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not, if another shall come in his own name, him will ye receive."—John 5: 43.

8. Here are two or three quotations taken from Leaves of Healing for March 28, 1903. On page 721, under the head of "YOUR MONEY AND YOUR LIFE," he said: "I want both for God. The papers will have something for to-morrow." (Applause.)

"General Overseer—'Zion, are you willing to give me, as God's messenger, your money and your life?'"

"Audience, 'Yes.' . . ."

"The more we give of our lives the happier we are, are we not?"

"Audience, 'Yes.'"

"The more we give of our money the happier we are, are we not?"

"Audience, 'Yes.'"

"Those who are not, say no."

"I do not hear any who say no.'"

This was all said in regard to the building of a New Shiloh Tabernacle, to be built of steel and brick in Zion City, to seat sixteen thousand persons.

On page 720, under the head of "NO BOARD OF MANAGEMENT in Zion" the following is found; the statement of Overseer Dowie:

"I do not care a snap about boards of management, because I have none. It would take a pretty hard board to manage me. (Laughter.) There has never been even a committee in Zion. One of the most stupid things going is a board."

It is pertinent to inquire at this juncture, what would be the effect upon the congregations of the Saints, should the president of the church make a demand for the moneys of the Saints in terms similar to those noted above from page 721 of John Alexander Dowie's Leaves of Healing? And, these are but a sample of the methods this "Elijah" has persued from the first. If any project occurred to him requiring the use of moneys, instead of applying that already in his disposal the results of "tithes and offerings," he has made direct appeal to the congregations. He did this when he built the first tabernacle in "Zion City," to seat ten thousand. We believe the amount then demanded was some fifty thousand dollars. And it was forthcoming. Some who declined to give were read out of the brotherhood, as we read at the time.

What would be the reception accorded to the President if he were to ask for their "money and their life" as "God's messenger," coupled with the statement, taken from page 720 of Leaves of Healing, "No board of management in Zion"?

The leading men of the church have for years been made the subjects of suspicion by indirect allusions and teachings warning the people of the dangers of following their leaders, or even trusting to their teaching, as they were but men and liable themselves to be led away by ambition and false manifestations.

The leaders of the church, whoever they may be, have also heard and seen the teaching repeatedly urged by both voice and pen that the people, the Saints, were entitled to the manifestations of the Spirit by which all the teaching of the leaders might be and should be tested and tried, for the safety of the people. These leaders, or some of them, have been subjected to the suspicion necessarily engendered by such teaching without having known what words or acts of theirs were the justifiable exciting causes for it.

It is true that the members, all of them, are as a body, and each of them as an individual is entitled to receive of the Spirit which the Master, the Christ, will and does give, by which he may be guided and governed in all his thoughts, words, and acts, in the sphere, calling, vocation, and position in which he as an individual may be called of God and chosen by the people, the Saints, the church, to act. This applies with equal force to those who have been referred to as leaders, and against whose possible acts of aggression by improper teaching the Saints have been warned as it does to any and all of the members warned. So that in this there is an equality; the members in their places, the leaders in theirs.

Mr. Dowie in his method asks for moneys and lives, "as God's messenger;" upon a personal appeal for what he deems essential to his own schemes, takes the thousands demanded, applies the five per cent to his individual use, and personally oversees, directs, and controls the rest, the ninety-five per cent, as it may please him; and does this without the intervention of either board of management, or committee in Zion.

In contrast with this the leaders of the church, whoever they may be, make no appeal for money, or property except as provided in the law of the church established by revelation, a knowledge of which is within the reach of all. In that law the rights and interests of the members are safeguarded and preserved, by rules and regulations provided in the law itself and open for application to the membership of all classes.

Would the church be willing for an exchange of methods of appeal and application?

In carrying out of his plans, Mr. Dowie, on September 21, 1902, established a new order of membership, called "The Zion Restoration Host." On the night of March 23, 1903, four hundred eighty-two took the vow imposed by Mr. Dowie as "Elijah the Restorer," on the membership of this Restoration Host. We give the vow below and ask the Saints to take such vow into consideration and think of it in contradistinction to the vow known to them as their "baptismal vow," and the only one that their leaders have taught them, or attempted to enforce upon them.

What sort of a reception would be accorded to the Presidency if they, or any of them, should ask the eldership to accept and make such a vow?

That vow is as follows:

I vow in the name of God, my Father, and of Jesus, the Christ, His Son and my Savior, and of the Holy Ghost, who proceeds from the Father and the Son, that I will be a faithful member of Zion Restoration Host, organized at Shiloh Tabernacle in the city of Zion, on Lord's Day, September 21, 1902, and I declare that I recognize John Alexander Dowie, General Overseer of the Christian Catholic Church in Zion, of which I am a member, in his threefold prophetic office, as the Messenger of the Covenant, the Prophet foretold by Moses, and Elijah the Restorer.

I promise to the fullest extent of all my powers, to obey all rightful orders issued by him directly, or by his properly-appointed officers, and to proceed to any part of the world, wherever he shall direct, as a member of Zion Restoration Host, and that all family ties and obligations, and all relations to all human government shall be held subordinate to this vow, this declaration, and this promise.

This I make in the presence of God and of all the visible and invisible witnesses.

DOING.

There are a number of places in holy writ in which promises are made to the man who does things. Among these we note:

Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing.—Matthew 24: 46.

To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life.—Romans 2: 7.

There is only one remedy for the prevention of decay and death; that is action. The stirring, moving, restless action of the ocean and the lake, the running brook and lordly river is the healthful panacea with which their waters are medicated for the benefit of the dwellers on earth. We are not altogether sure that it is not the motion of the orb itself by which its atmosphere is filled with the elixir by which men live.

The life of the disciple must be one of constant doing to insure a healthy spiritual growth. The saint is not a saint except he is a doer. No amount of theory, no amount of wordy wisdom will or can bring a man into relation with and within the scope of the law of righteousness which sanctifies, unless theory and word are developed and sustained by the power of example in action.

He that doeth the will of my Father is my disciple; is the sum of the Savior's teaching, "he that continues in my word."

"Occupy till I come," can not mean the occupation of a merely speculative host; but must mean the doing of those things which fall within the lines of those things which are commanded of God.

"Let us be up and be doing."

SECRET SINS.

"Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant."—Proverbs 9: 17.

The wise man in his writing put these words into the mouth of a foolish woman who is represented as sitting at the door of her house "on a seat in the high places of the city," and calling on the passers-by to "turn in," as stolen waters were sweet and bread eaten in secret was pleasant.

The principle involved is that to indulge in gratification of the likings and fascinating pleasures of the human appetites, need not be known to others and would be sweet and satisfying.

Secret indulgence in sin, the sins of the imagination, are the product of a morbid and unhealthy condition of the mind. Those who indulge in revelings of the imagination in secret are led into habits of self-indulgence, which sap the foundations of moral life, and if no stop is called in the downward way, it is but a question of time when the victim will be both a moral, mental, and physical wreck. There is no safe middle ground. One must come within the shelter of wholesome restraint, or consent to ruin. Hundreds are warned daily by the wise, yet hundreds go heedlessly along in folly's ways, and never seem to realize real danger until moral strength is gone and spiritual disaster at the door. Some then awake to serious alarm, often too late to retrace the devious paths trodden in secret unto places of safety, where the individual may be free in right-doing.

Secret sins often leave the record of their progress on the faces of transgressors, known and read by the discerning, who pity and would save if they could. But it too frequently happens that those whom they essay to warn and persuade from danger's ways, repulse kindly meant intentions and the result is "a wounded spirit who can bear." They forget that "faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful."

The correctness of the statement that "wisdom is justified of her children" has no better exemplification than in the life and conduct of those who abstain from secret sins. Lives kept free from the influences of secret sinning are bright examples of the presence and power of the Spirit of the Master purifying the inner man. These examples are sources of strength to all with whom the lives of such come in contact.

Avoid sinning in secret if you desire to be unabashed in the presence of the Judge of the living.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

W. A. Goodwin wrote from Condon, Oregon, April 27: "Am in debate with S. O. Pool, of New Salem, Illinois. To-night is the sixth night on his proposition. The Lord is on our side; the Saints jubilant. We baptized several the 3d day of May. Pray for us."

Henry Sparling wrote from Springfield, Missouri, May 3, that he was just home from the scene of battle with Elder Blalock, of the 'Christian Church.' Bro. Sparling writes: "I was wonderfully blessed. The Saints were well pleased. I meet another 'Campbellite' on the 18th, John Giddens. All well at the queen city."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We are informed by Bro. Heman C. Smith, secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, that Bro. J. T. Hackett was appointed to labor in Pennsylvania; the action of appointment being subsequent to the time of making the appointments in the general list. The Saints of Pennsylvania will please remember this notice when Bro. Hackett comes among them.

We have received the premium list for the forty-second annual exhibition of the Iowa State Fair, to be held at Des Moines, August 21 to 29. The list promises that the fair will be up to the standard, which is saying much, for the Iowa State Fair has been of exceptionally high standard for a number of years.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

CORRECTION.—In last week's installment of this article, page 411, near the middle of second column, read February 16, 1860, instead of 1879.

Tuesday, February 21. I rode to Bro. Smith Stephenson's who lives eight miles from Magnolia in Jascon Township. It has been raining most of the day. Bro. Smith and family indeed are so kind to me I feel very much at home.

Wednesday, February 22. Stormy and very severe weather. Have visited, talked of our hope, and read the great things of God's law to Ephraim all day and have appreciated my home with Bro. Smith very much. He has a very quiet neat family, so still. Home comfortable in contrast to so many places in Western Iowa, but few can realize what a discomfort it is to be compelled to be away from home and kindred among strangers, and meet with customs so different and yet must be content and never notice the little discourtesies, as unfriendly remarks that reach your naturally sensitive disposition. I often think of Jesus. He must have had a tender, affectionate heart, and yet the Jews were envious and jealous of him and called him evil and vile names, though he never did a wrong in all his life. The awful wickedness of jealousy and envy is the incentive of more crime than most any one thing, and is so apparent in any one who gives way to it, or harbors it in his heart. Every one can easily discern it who has ordinary ability. May God help the Reorganization so it never will be cursed through jealousy of its members is my fervent prayer; for he who can not appreciate a good effort or act of his fellow mortal because of his jealousy is a wicked man and Satan is his spiritual father.

Thursday, February 23. Returned to Belvidere and held meeting in the evening; subject, first principles of the gospel.

Friday, February 24. At seven o'clock in the evening held services again; subject, divine evidences of the Book of Mormon. Large audience, full of enthusiasm and love to hear the wonderful story of the cross and the latter-day glory reestablished again, being attested with the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit as when they heard it in the days of Joseph.

Saturday, February 25. Had dinner with Bro. Outhouse and this afternoon he accompanied me to Onawa, county seat of Monona County. This is a beautiful part of the State; prairies are rolling enough to make it picturesque and a grand landscape. Surely God has designed in his creation to bless and please mankind if they will appreciate the good and beautiful and enjoy it in righteousness.

We were hospitably cared for by Bro. Isaac Ashton. He, too, is an old member of the church, grounded in the eternal truth of the gospel of Christ, but has been grieved over the wild schemes and wickedness of the apostasy.

Sunday, February 26. Held meeting at eleven o'clock in the forenoon in the Ashton Schoolhouse. Large and attentive audience. After meeting had dinner at Bro. Frederick D. Winegar's. He is a splendid man. Honesty is glowing on his very countenance and he treated us very royally. Shall ever remember him as worthy of being numbered with the Saints. In the afternoon we returned to my appointment in Belvidere at seven o'clock. Also held meeting Monday evening; subject, the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.

Tuesday, February 28. At seven o'clock held meeting; subject, restoration of all things, and the mission of Christ our Lord to the spirits in prison. Intense interest was manifest by the dear people while we presented the love of God, who sent his only begotten Son, that the world might not perish but have life everlasting.

Wednesday, February 29. At eleven o'clock in the forenoon held meeting; subject, duties of the Saints and the kingdom of God. Organized a branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The following names were handed in who wished to be charter members: Hugh Lytle, John Outhouse, John Thomas, George B. Outhouse, Elizabeth E. Jones, Mary J. Andrews, Nancy T. Lytle, Maria Outhouse, Martha M. Outhouse, Matilda Clemens. Elder John Outhouse chosen president, Elder Hugh Lytle, priest, Bro. George B. Outhouse, clerk. Voted to name the branch Belvidere. Services again this evening at half past seven, and by request appointment made for meeting to-morrow morning.

Thursday morning, March 1. At ten o'clock a large audience assembled, all on hand by the opening service hour. I discoursed on the subject of the resurrection, from the text, "The earth also shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain."—Isaiah 26:21. And, "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice."—John 5:28. I spoke more than two hours, and the following dear souls arose and requested baptism: Martha M. and Maria Outhouse, Mary Jane Anderson, George R. Outhouse, and Mrs. Elizabeth Jones wished to do their first works over again by being baptized. We adjourned to repair to the water, and there again witnessed the burial in baptism of the dear souls who wished to follow our Lord, who appeared on Jordan's banks and was baptized of John in the water and came up out of the water praying, and a voice was heard from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son; in whom I am well pleased. It is strange everybody who believes Jesus was baptized do not wish to follow his example. At three o'clock in the afternoon held confirmation meeting. Elder John Outhouse assisted in confirming the blessed souls into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I feel to rejoice in my Savior as I hear so many of the Saints say, This is like old times we enjoyed in the days of Joseph, and is a great evidence to us that the doctrine of lineal priesthood is true and Joseph will surely come and take his father's place in the church in the Lord's due time, though of course we do not know when, as things seen and predicted by the Spirit, seem so near, yet from a human standpoint it may be years in the future, but our duties are plain to us that we should preach the gospel and live the life of holiness as the whole duty of man.

Preparation, Friday, March 2. Brn. Lytle, Thomas, George Outhouse, and several others of the Saints of Belvidere, accompanied me back to this place and say they are loth to separate from me. In the evening, I held meeting in the schoolhouse; a Mrs. Elijah Cobb is teaching school here, but is not of our faith, but I hear is a good member of the Baptist Church. I had splendid liberty in presenting the glorious hope of the Reorganization in contrast to the apostasy of the various factions which have left the church since the martyrdom of the choice Seer, and though there have been several factions, most of them have been of mushroom growth. Only one of any importance is left, and that is the one sent out of the land of Zion into the great American desert, and is so accurately described by the Prophet Jeremiah 17:5, 6, "Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited." It does seem that not one of the true Saints should be deceived and led off to the accursed land of salt, and fastness of the mountains, where the Gadianon robbers used to resort to when they apostatized from the church in Book of Mormon times.

Bro. Andrew Jackson followed me in a clear and logical manner confirming what I had said in my discourse, also Brn. Lytle and Thomas made some very excellent remarks, bearing testimony of my mission work in Belvidere as the true voice of the Spirit as in the early days of the church in Joseph's time. Our meeting was quite a protracted one, but the people were very much pleased and many said they could have listened all night and never got tired. Bro. Andrew Jackson came here yesterday and is to have a discussion to-morrow evening with Mr. Gladden Bishop. The question for debate is, "Resolved that priesthood goes by lineal descent and the prophet to lead the church (as Israel) in the last days is of the seed of Joseph, the translator of the Book of Mormon according to the word of God recorded in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants." Elder Andrew Jackson, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, affirms; Elder Gladden Bishop denies.

Saturday, March 3. The hall was crammed to its utmost capacity this evening at half past seven by an audience eager to hear the debate. Eyes sparkled and expectancy was expressed on every face. Without judges or moderator perfect order characterized the assembly. The resolution for the debate was read by Elder Jackson. He then led off by quoting the text commonly used in defense of lineal priesthood and establishing the fact that a blessing was placed upon the choice Seer, and promised to descend to the head of his posterity after him. He was very clear and cogent in all his arguments. The eloquence of truth was brilliant in his defense for the right of Joseph's posterity to the father's blessing to lead Israel. Elder Bishop quoted Hebrews 7:1, 3, book of Alma, last clause of ninth chapter and first of tenth chapter, and then stated those two witnesses were against the book of Doctrine and Covenants; also that he believed Joseph erred or sinned, but believed he was a true prophet of God, but I do not believe the Doctrine and Covenants is the word of God to govern us; for the church was rejected and all the authority, and there is no one qualified to baptize legally, for the church has answered its end, and the work of the Father as taught in the Book of Mormon is now to accomplish the great restoration of Israel, yet I believe the word of God is contained in the Doctrine and Covenants.

These are some of his positions and contradictions, but on the whole the discussion was interesting and a good feeling prevailed with the audience. They had three speeches each, and closed the debate about eleven o'clock. Mr. Bishop made appointment for meeting to-morrow morning.

Sunday, March 4. This morning before I was up Mr. Elijah Cobb and some one else (I do not remember his name) came to me and urged me to preach at nine o'clock this morning, and make a general reply covering the ground discussed last evening. I suggested the impracticability of getting an audience that early, and the probability that most of the audience did not get to bed until twelve o'clock last night, and besides I have an appointment at one o'clock in Raglin Township, nine miles from here, to-day, and Mr. Bishop and his friends will think I ought to stay and hear his reply at eleven o'clock, which is impossible. The brethren replied, "We will see that the audience is all there, and we are not particular about what Mr. Bishop or his friends may think; we want you to speak at nine o'clock and will insure you a full house.

I consented, and told them to let me know when the congregation was assembled. Ten minutes before nine o'clock a messenger informed me, "All of the people of the town are waiting for you." Sure enough, the house was crowded with intelligent looking people, with smiles on their faces, music in their souls, and longing eyes. After a beautiful, inspiring hymn was sung by the entire audience I arose and said: While we believe indeed all things in religious services should be celebrated with prayer, prayer and thanksgiving to God and the songs of Zion, when sung in the Spirit and with the understanding, are the prayers of the Saints, this morning, we will waive any further preliminaries and at once introduce the subject of the morning discourse. (Elder Bishop sat close in front of me intently watching me.)

Brethren and sisters, by urgent request, I am here at this early hour, a previous appointment is announced for eleven o'clock, and I have an appointment nine miles from here at one o'clock this afternoon. It is impossible for me to attend the eleven o'clock service, but I suggest that all of the rest of you attend. With this preface, we will at once address ourselves to the subject of this service.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the all-important question of all questions, so recognized by all Christian denominations. Some of them believe that there should be properly authorized ministry, called of God to preach it, and administer its ordinances in a legal manner, or else aliens can not be transformed into citizens of the kingdom of God.

The Latter Day Saints are preëminently of this class, who believe the church of God is "Built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord . . . for a habitation of God through the Spirit."—Ephesians 2: 20-22, and also God "gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Ephesians 4: 11, 12, "and God hath set some in the Church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 28. The Saints are of the opinion that helps, governments, include what we call quorums and presiding officers, for it is not logical to say that there could be order in the church of God without a system of ministry to take charge of it on earth, like Ezekiel's vision of the wheel within a wheel. The Protestant churches, and Catholic too, all believe there should be a ministry, but none of them ever dare lay claim that God appointed one of their ministers. They are unlike the Saints who in all ages of the world ever believed that God reserved the right to himself to appoint all of his ministers. But without discussing what are the constituent parts of the elements of the gospel this morning, for we all agree to what it was, by every Christian faction, though they may now differ in relation to its perpetuity and unchangeability as essential to salvation. But no Saints ever differ in any age of the world on these matters. But the Latter Day Saints are now divided upon the subject, who is the rightful presiding officer of the church on earth. The members of the Reorganization claim that according to the law of God, one of Joseph's Smith's sons will be his successor in fulfillment of the word of the Lord to us, and according to the law of lineage and the promises made to the choice Seer.

I clearly presented the law on the subject as found in the three standard books, and then stated: I once sought by fasting and prayer to know the day when Joseph would be called of God to take his father's place, and I was truly instructed by the voice of the Holy Ghost to me that it was not for me to know the time, but it was enough for me to know my duty and do it without any reference to what other men might be called to do.

I then contrasted the work accomplished through the instrumentality of Joseph, the Seer, during his ministerial life of only fourteen years. About two hundred thousand had been gathered into the church in that short period. In all his writings, and he wrote many thousand pages, his every thought is sparkling with true patriotism to human governments, and in every sentence, the love of God, and the gospel in purity brilliantly shining in every word and line he ever wrote upon the doctrine of Christ, and no single sentence that he has left in black and white, that contradicts the teaching of Jesus Christ and his apostles as recorded in the Bible.

And in the revelation of the recent vision and angel's ministrations to Joseph it was told him by the angel of God that his name should be had for good and evil in all the world, "Your name shall be known among the nations, for the work which the Lord will perform by your hands shall cause the righteous to rejoice and the wicked to rage; with the one it shall be had in honor, and with the other in reproach."

We are all witnesses of the fulfillment of this prediction so far as the civilization has gone. By the true Saints of God, no man on earth was loved more than Joseph was during his life and since his martyrdom his memory is revered as the chosen servant of Christ to open up the last dispensation to prepare a people to "meet the Lord Jesus when he comes again without sin unto salvation."—Hebrews 9: 29. And at the same time no man since God made the world has been lied about and slandered more than he has been. His wicked slanderers are the popular ministers of this age generally; and one thing is always noticeable as a fact, whoever stoops so low to blacken Joseph's character, they never refer to his writings to prove that he has outraged society, good morals, or the Christian religion. They always resort to unreliable reports of his bitter enemies, like it was with the Pharisees, who slandered our blessed Lord, the Christ, and the ancient prophets.

The Book of Mormon in its religious part interspersed with its historical record for more than five hundred pages of closely written matter or the thousands of pages of his own written biography and documents, and of current events during his life, is not once read or quoted by his enemies to prove that he was not in the fullest sense Christian and holy in his teaching. And now for any man who once believed Joseph Smith was a prophet to join in with the enemies to slander him and to claim all those passages that refer to Christ's second coming to himself, and will soon be fulfilled when he shall suddenly come to the temple in Salt Lake, built by Brigham Young, who is fulfilling the prediction of the Apostle Peter, when he says:

"There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. . . . And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."—2 Peter 2: 1, 2. And this man Brigham Young without pretending to receive a revelation from God to build a temple anticipated the Almighty and volunteered to build a temple and a mortal man is suddenly coming to it and fulfill the prophecy of the Prophet Malachi, and he is "The Lord, whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3: 1. And a mortal man is to fulfill this. Why, my brethren, I am ashamed to refer to it in this connection. It is preposterous and ridiculous. Just think of such a man as this doing the great work of the Father.

Let us see what is said of the work of the Father in the great things of God's law written to Ephraim. "And when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel."—1 Nephi 3: 51. "Therefore when ye shall receive this record, ye may know that the work of the Father has commenced upon all the face of the land."—Ether 1: 12.

If the Book of Mormon is true the work of the Father commenced with the revelation of this sacred book.

I am astonished at the presumption of such poor frail mortal men. The work of the Father is not going to be done by any man on this earth. That is purely a work of God's Holy Spirit upon the hearts of man and preparing them by environment and circumstances by which his great work will be accomplished in their final restoration from all lands where they have been scattered just before the second coming of the Son of God.

The Reorganization believes the gospel of Christ is in very deed the power of God unto salvation as attested by the Apostle Paul in his letter to the Romans, and the one to come suddenly to his temple is none other than this same Jesus, who ascended up from Mount Olivet when his disciples looked steadfast towards heaven as he went up, and beheld two angels standing by them in white apparel, which also said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

It is our duty to live devoted Christians in prayer and humility of heart.

And while we follow the injunction of the apostle, "Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good," I suggest we follow the instruction of the prophet who said: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20.

Let me tell you plainly, the faith of the Saints in all ages of the world is summed up in the language of the Scriptures, which says: "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is he whole duty of man." While we look for one of Joseph's sons to take his place in the church, as lawgiver like Moses, yet Jesus Christ is the central thought and great leader. The head of the church which is his body, and as Paul says, follow me as I follow Christ, and any true prophet of God is only a servant of Christ and in the language of our Lord and Master who said, "For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?"—John 5: 46, 47.

My dear brethren and sisters, it is evident the Lord had false Christs in view when he said, "And again, verily I say unto you, that the Son of Man cometh not in the form of a woman, neither of a man traveling on the earth; wherefore be not deceived."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 4. "And again I say unto you, all things must be done in the name of Christ, whatsoever you do in the Spirit; and ye must give thanks unto God in the Spirit for whatsoever blessing ye are blessed with; and ye must practice virtue and holiness before me continually. Even so. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 9. With all these beautiful revelations of God before us, I am astonished that any sane man will for one moment follow a man who claims he is the one who is suddenly to come to his temple and applies those passages referring to the second advent, to himself such as he the one who "shall suddenly come to his temple even the messenger of the covenant." The covenant is the everlasting covenant of Christ so beautifully described by Saint Paul in his letter to the Hebrews, also prophesied of by Jeremiah: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."—Jeremiah 31: 31-34.

Not long ago, I heard a very devout man when he was asked to say grace at the table close his prayer and blessing in the name of Elias. Amen. While I am in favor of religious liberty and opposed to any form of persecution because of difference of opinion, on the subject of religion, yet to be consistent, while we believe the Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants as divine, there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved, except in and through the name of Jesus Christ, amen and amen. Elder Jackson closed our meeting just five minutes before eleven o'clock.

The audience all hastened out of the hall; and as I walked out with Elder Jackson, we heard loud talk and some of the people threw their hats into the air shouting: "Hurrah! hurrah for the little Josephite!" I was told that a man, a Mr. Durfey, a friend of Mr. Bishop, struck Mr. Elijah Cobb, and I saw them clinch each other and both fell to the ground, but gentlemen standing by separated them.

I was sorry of the occurrence, but I certainly said nothing to encourage such a feeling of bitterness or anger. I had contrasted truth and error on parallel lines, and tried to avoid personalities as far as it was possible, and it had the effect of creating a feeling of bitterness on the part of this anti-Christ spirit, that had taken possession of Mr. Bishop's followers that like it was in the days of Cain and Abel, he who offered the sacrifice not commanded of God became angry and sought to injure his brother. Ever since that occurrence, it has led me to believe that when any one becomes angry over religious subjects, that man has the religion of Cain who killed his brother Abel, and like Saul of Tarsus before he was converted. These two men were both devoted, pious, praying men, and when they meet opposition and those who differ from them and the truth of God, they become exceeding mad, and were intolerant, even to the shedding of innocent blood of their fellow men. That certainly is the spirit of Cain's and Saul's religion. With this thought before me, I can now see more fully the meaning of the language of Jesus, when he said, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division."—Luke 12: 51.

Mr. Cobb was not a member of any church, but probably felt pleased over the morning discourse, and with others gave expression of his approval, and Mr. Durfey, who was an admirer of Mr. Bishop, and one of his disciples, was mad, like Cain and Saul of Tarsus were, and forgot to be a gentleman, let alone his religion, and forgot his profession of Christianity, and exhibited the spirit of his father, the Devil, who was a murderer. All people ought to know when their religion leads them not to do to others as they would others should do to them, that there is something wrong with their religion, and at least they have not the Christian religion.

After our morning services Elder Jackson accompanied me to Raglin, nine miles, in time for our appointment. We had a large audience at Bro. Streeter's cottage. I had splendid endowment of the Holy Spirit again, and discoursed on the first principles of the glorious gospel of Christ; Bro. Jackson made some excellent remarks and opened and closed our meeting. O, how I appreciate the help of this grand and eloquent minister for Christ; he has a beautiful mind full of thought and well stored up with knowledge—he takes in the whole position of the Reorganization; has been an old Saint for years, but recently joined in with us. His soul has been in distress during the cloudy days of apostasy, but is now overjoyed to find we have what he first embraced in the latter-day work.

After meeting we came to Bro. James M. Adam's of Bigler's Grove.

THE TRUE TEST IS MERIT.

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thessalonians 5: 21.

I have said, and I say it again, that while our theory of religious duty and privilege is good—even grand—our practical standard is entirely too low. True, we are not justified in believing that the conduct of the Saints should now be faultless, or perfect; but we are justified in believing that it should be very much better than it is.

We claim that the great gospel system which the angel restored to the earth in these last days, is not only true, but so comprehensively grand that it includes all that is true and right, wherever found. And yet, a little careful observation will convince one that the Saints are afflicted with a degree of national, political, and religious prejudice which darkens the mind; and which leads them, at times, to reject readily, and without proper investigation, that which contains true merit, and to accept that which has little or no merit to commend it.

"Comparisons are odious," it is said; but they will never harm us so long as we are right. To me it is a fact that there are a few men and women, whom we call men and women of the world, whose teachings on moral and political questions are more in harmony with the principles of our faith, and all proper standards on these questions, than are some things which have come from the lips and pens of our own men. Now I have no disposition to influence the Saints to accept some particular school of morals or politics; but I would be glad to help them to a more intelligent belief and practice of the revelations which they have accepted, and by which they have agreed to be governed. That is, I would have them to be Saints.

Any kind of teaching that ignores the standard of merit, is dangerous and false. The question is not so much "Who did it?" or "Who taught it?" as it is, "What was done and taught?" The most humble men and women may speak the truth, while men of authority in church and state—and even angels—may convey false messages to us. Paul would have us apply the test of merit to all, and without any distinction.

"I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say.—1 Corinthians 10: 15.

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thessalonians 5: 21.

"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8.

Was Paul right in this? I think so, for several reasons, one of which is that his positions are in harmony with the teachings of the Master.

"Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."—Matthew 7: 16-18, 20.

"Search the Scriptures; . . . and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39.

"And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not. . . . And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?"—John 8: 45, 46.

"If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him."—John 10: 37, 38.

The above scriptures are very plain and instructive. From them we gather the following thoughts, and others which we do not take the space to express:

1. Paul and Jesus believed it to be possible for the people to pass a righteous judgment on what is presented to them by their superiors.

2. They believed this to be a privilege and duty of the people of God.

3. They evidently believed that a proper exercise of this much neglected right would be of mutual benefit to the people and their leaders. Indeed it is the only thing which can result in a proper acceptance and appreciation of the truth, by the people. Hence Moses said, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them!"—Numbers 11: 29.

4. A proper investigation is indispensable. It enlarges and improves the condition of the mind, destroys the dark and blighting influences of prejudice, makes us more just,—hence more like God,—and develops true charity. Without it we can never properly answer to God in the day of judgment, for then every one must answer for himself. (Romans 14: 12.)

The Lord has spoken so definitely and plainly on this subject, in our own day, that it would seem that all Latter Day Saints should know what to do. But alas for poor humanity! So frail, so weak and erring! In Doctrine and Covenants 50: 4-6, we have the following:

And now come, saith the Lord, by the Spirit, unto the elders of his church, and let us reason together, that ye may understand: let us reason even as a man reasoneth one with another face to face: now when a man reasoneth, he is understood of man, because he reasoneth as a man; even so will I, the Lord, reason with you that you may understand: wherefore I, the Lord, asketh you this question, Unto what were ye ordained? To preach my gospel by the Spirit, even the Comforter, which was sent forth to teach the truth: and then received ye spirits which ye could not understand, and received them to be of God, and in this are ye justified? Behold, ye shall answer this question yourselves, nevertheless I will be merciful unto you; he that is weak among you hereafter shall be made strong. Verily I say unto you, He that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? and if it be by some other way, it be not of God. And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? if it be some other way, it be not of God: therefore, why is it that ye can not understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth? Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.

Is it possible that any one who claims to be a Latter Day Saint will say, in the face of the above statements, that we should receive from our teachers and leaders that which we can not understand to be righteous and true? For the sake of the cause, and the men who have been called to represent it, I trust that none such can be found.

The people of the church have a just claim upon God for the same spirit of truth which qualifies the ministers to teach. As the one class is required to teach in humility, in faith, in love, and with understanding, in like manner the other class is required to receive. This is God's way, as I believe it is the better way. We are justly and always entitled to satisfaction that a message or principle is just what is claimed for it, or what it claims for itself, before receiving it. If not, how can we always "walk in the light?"

Intelligence and sterling integrity are essential to success in every department of this work. These characteristics should be used to bless others, but must never be surrendered to another. We need the same intelligence, in kind, and the same spirit that moved the Christ in the performance of all his work. And in this connection, as a fitting close to this little article, I submit a brief extract from a sermon preached by "Reverend Joseph A. Milburn in Plymouth Church," last Sunday, and published in the Chicago Evening Post of Monday. When speaking of the "poise" and character of Christ, and his success, among other things he said the following:

Now how do we account for this victory, this wonderful victory, emerging out of a defeat apparently so absolute and so pathetic? The reason, I think, is to be found in this truth of which I have been speaking to you, that Christ lived in and for the permanent, lived in and for the eternal. He did not try to command the mood of the moment, he did not seek immediate success.

If he had done so he would never have been crucified. If he had sought immediate success he would have attained immediate success. He would never have been crowned with the crown of thorns. He would have been crowned with the crown that is perishable, the temporary crown we all so much seek, the crown of the world's applause.

But building as he did for the eternities, he missed the immediate victory to gain the enduring victory. He built not for the day or for the generation or for the century, but for all the centuries and for the eternities that are yet to be, and hence his victory enlarges with the "process of the suns" and his empire extends with the increase of the years. He laid his foundations upon the rock—the permanent rock of his Father's will—and hence time's demonstration of the truth of his saying, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

And if you and I wish to live the Christ life, we also must learn to live less and less in the opinions, the moods, the tastes, the passions, that are so mutable and transient and more and more in the truths, the laws, the forces, the principles, that are permanent with the mind and purpose of the eternal. So only shall we attain the poise that is always the characteristic of the great soul, and the victory we all desire.

The Struggle for Life, or the Struggle for the Life of Others.

The struggle between duty to self and duty to others, or, as Clara E. Laughlin puts it in the June Delineator, between the Struggle for Life and the Struggle for the Life of Others, is one that comes to thousands of young men and women with impressive significance. Self-development along chosen lines, or renouncement and devotion to those who may need you—is a question that can be decided only by the individual; and whichever way he may take, if he but be guided by the best light that he has, he will do all that is expected of him. The two great evils to be guarded against are: lest the development of self make us selfish, or devotion to others make us negligent of self. A "true balance" should be aimed at.

HOW SCIENCE PROVES THE BIBLE TRUE.

In the March number of the Woman's Home Companion there appeared an article under the above heading. Through the courtesy of the editor of the Companion we are permitted to make the following extracts from the article:

Perhaps the most remarkable event in the history of modern Christianity is the unexpected confirmation of Bible truths from the hands of what seemed to be its arch-enemy, Modern Science. Fifty years ago there was practically nothing in existence by the help of which the truthfulness of the Old Testament narratives could be tested or corroborated. Volumes had been published by scientist, logician, and historian to prove that the Bible was not in accord with historical facts.

Great difficulty was experienced by the theologian and believer in meeting the argument of the skeptic, simply because no writings contemporaneous with the Old Testament were found. The skeptic, with great display of scientific knowledge, claimed that genuine history could not reach back so far; moreover, that the known historical situation was altogether different from that as given in the books of the Old Testament. But he came to grief, as it were, by his own weapon. A new department of science came into existence. The pick and spade of modern scientific investigations have come to the rescue. Parts of the old Biblical world have been opened up, and we now find ourselves face to face with the veritable contemporaries of Daniel, Moses, Joseph, Abraham.

Exactly one century ago, 1802, was the beginning of that which is the most important factor in this work. Grotefend, of Goettingen, then made his famous and ingenious guesses at deciphering a few words written in the cuneiform, or wedge-shaped characters. Some years later, 1818, Champollion deciphered the famous Rosetta Stone, the key to the Egyptian hieroglyphs. In 1835 Rawlinson, together with Hincks, accomplished that which Grotefend had not the preparation for; namely, the complete decipherment of Persian inscriptions, and finally, at the beginning of the second half of the last century, with the help of others, the Assyrian. . . .

EARLY BABYLONIA.

The origin of those remarkable Babylonian legends which so closely resemble the Biblical accounts of the Creation, Eden, and the Deluge, belongs to this country. The Deluge story, for instance, as recorded by the Babylonians, is strikingly similar to the Old Testament even in minor details. Atrachasis, the Babylonian Noah, is commanded by the gods, after they had decreed a flood, to build a ship or ark; to pour pitch over the outside and the inside, and to take the seed of life of every kind into the ship.

When it was ready, Atrachasis, embarked with his family, servants, possessions, cattle and beasts of the field, and closed the door. The heavens rained destruction for six days and nights. The wind raged, the floods and storm devastated, until the whole of mankind was turned into clay. The ship grounded on a mountain of Nizir. After seven days a dove is sent forth; but it returned, as a resting place it did not find. He then sent forth a swallow; but it also returned. Lastly a raven is let go, which did not turn back. Everything is then sent forth to the four points of the compass. An altar is erected and sacrifices offered. The gods smelt the sweet savor, and gathered like flies about the sacrificer, after which it is decided that, instead of a deluge, wild beasts and famines shall diminish mankind because of its sins. . . .

A number of very important building inscriptions from the ziggurat Etemenanki (Tower of Babel) have been found. They illustrate the fact that the story in Genesis concerning its erection is in remarkable accord with what is known from the inscriptions of the ancients who lived in the plain of Shinar. For instance, in Genesis the builders said, "Let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven." Nebuchadnezzar, on an inscription which is to be seen in the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania recording his restoration of the tower, said that he put his hand to work "to raise up the tower, that its top may reach unto heaven," and yet the tower in his day was not over one hundred and fifty feet high. It is not only that the ancients in their exaggerated conceptions used this expression to signify something lofty; but as Professor Hilprecht has recently shown, these towers were local representations of the mythical mountain where the gods were supposed to live. The foundations were "laid in the bright abysmal sea" and their heads reached into the region of Anu which is heaven. This is an example as to how the Old Testament narratives are illustrated by the results obtained through the skill of the decipherer.

EGYPT.

In Egypt we are permitted to gaze upon the very features of the Pharaohs that knew not Joseph, that oppressed Israel, or the one that was forced to liberate them from their bondage. Every line in the Pentateuch which refers to Egypt has been shown through the excavations to be in remarkable accord with the facts revealed.

The discovery which has been more important than any other in throwing light upon the early history of Palestine, and which has a greater bearing upon biblical criticism, is the find of over three hundred inscribed clay tablets in Egypt at a place called Tel-el-Amarna. They contain letters written by friendly powers and vassals from various parts of Western Asia to the Pharaohs, Amenophis III. and IV., who ruled about the middle of the fifteenth century before Christ. . . .

Of peculiar interest are the letters written by Abdi-Hiba of Urusalim (Jerusalem), Rib-Addi of Gubla (Byblos), and others, concerning a people that was making rapid inroads upon the country. "The Habiri have plundered all the territory;" they "are occupying the cities of the king;" "there is not left a single governor for the king;" "if troops are not sent the king's land will be lost to the Habiri." There is considerable difference of opinion as to who the Habiri were. Philologically considered, "Habiri" can be regarded as equivalent to the term Hebrew; and as these tablets synchronize with the Hebrew date for the entrance of Joshua into Canaan, the possibility is very great that we have in these letters references to the conquest.

PALESTINE.

Strange to say, less has been found in Palestine to corroborate and illustrate the Old Testament than in other countries well known through the Scriptures. . . .

At Diban (the biblical Dibon), in the land of Moab, a monument containing the oldest Hebrew writing was discovered. It was erected by Mesha, king of Moab (2 Kings 3:4), about 890 B. C., to record his victory over Israel in the days of Ahab, and also the restoration of his cities. It not only reads like a page of the Old Testament, but it illustrates and supplements the biblical accounts concerning Israel's relations with Moab. The only other ancient Hebrew inscriptions of any importance outside of the Bible is the famous Siloam inscription, which some boys discovered cut in a rock wall of a conduit which connected "the upper watercourse of Gihon" with the pool of Siloam. It doubtless had been made by Hezekiah (2 Kings 20:20). It records how the excavators had worked from both ends of the tunnel, and as the two gangs approached each other near the middle they were suddenly startled when they heard the voices of each other while they were yet separated by more than three cubits of rock.

ASSYRIA.

To this country especially does the biblical student look for records giving accounts parallel to the Old Testament, because the greater portion of it belongs to the period when the Assyrians were the dominant factors in the ancient world. This is the nation that played such an important role in the history of the dual kingdom. This is the country of Shalmaneser, Tiglath-pileser, Saragon, Sennacherib, Esar-haddon, and Asnapper, names we meet in the Old Testament. And this is the nation that carried Israel into captivity.

In the annals of these kings, therefore, references to the Israelites would naturally be sought for; and our expectations are not in vain, for as is the case with the records of nearly every foreign king of other countries whose name is recorded in the Bible as having come into contact with the Hebrews, so here also references to the Israelites on the Assyrian inscriptions are found, the only difference being that here they are exceedingly numerous, as would naturally be expected.

To give a single illustration from these remarkable records: All biblical students are familiar with the campaign of Sennacherib, king of Assyria, in 701 B. C., as recorded in 2 Kings 18. Sennacherib in the course of time had his annals recorded on a clay cylinder, hexagonal in form, standing fourteen inches high. An account of eight campaigns is given. The third is against the cities of Palestine. A full account of his conquest of Hittie, Phenician, and Philistine cities is first given. This is followed by the measures he took against the fenced cities of Judah. "And Hezekiah of Judah, who had not submitted to my yoke—forty-six of his strongly walled cities, together with innumerable small places in the vicinity, with assaults of battering-rams, and the blows of siege-engines—I besieged and conquered. Two hundred thousand one hundred fifty persons, small and great, male and female, horses, mules, camels, oxen, and sheep without number from their midst I brought and reckoned as booty. Himself (Hezekiah), like a bird in a cage, in Jerusalem, his royal city I penned up—I diminished his territory. As for Hezekiah himself, the terror of the glory of my sovereignty overwhelmed him. Thirty talents of gold, and eight hundred talents of silver—I caused to be brought after me to Nineveh my royal city." This is a most remarkable parallel record of that memorable campaign. Some details—for instance, the exact amount of gold, thirty talents of silver, which the Bible says Hezekiah paid—are the same in both accounts. In many respects the biblical and Assyrian records supplement each other, so that a comparatively full account of this invasion becomes known. . . .

Cyrus gives us an account of his capture of Babylon, 539 B. C. Many expressions on his clay cylinder are almost identical with some found in the prophecy of Isaiah; as, for instance, how the god "sought out a righteous prince after his own heart to take him by the hand," etc. He further gave an account of his deliverance of people held in captivity; also that he sent back their sacred things with them to their own countries, which is in striking accord with the book of Ezra.

Our Burden-Bearer.

The little sharp vexations
And the briars that catch and fret,
Why not take all to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?
Tell Him about the heartache,
And tell Him the longings, too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose
When we scarce know what to do.
Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.—Phillips Brooks.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union: As I am almost helpless, caused by a fall which resulted in a badly bruised foot and ankle I devote my time to reading. The three books are near me and I love to read them all. They are all filled with words of truth and righteousness. I have just been reading the gospel of St. John, Christ, and his disciples and their last journeyings together when he comforted them and the mutual love between him and his members. Have also read his prayer for them, to his Father. O, that beautiful touching prayer, who can read it without shedding tears? And I read of a new commandment that the Savior gave to the disciples. The commandment was a shadow of his nature. The circumstances that called it forth were an exhortation to his disciples, given at a time just preceding his departure from among them to return no more until the time of restitution.

Leaving them alone surrounded by enemies to the cause they represented, he told them they would be "Hated of all men," would be "persecuted from city to city," would be "bound and beaten," and that many of them "should suffer death." Nevertheless he told them when reviled not to revile again.

Under these circumstances and while he exhorted them to various duties, he said to them, "A new commandment I give unto you."—St. John 13:34. Now what was this new commandment? It was "that ye love one another." Within this command is found the true Spirit of our Lord and as we understand it, he who has received the word in his heart has, at the same time entered into a covenant to keep the commandments, and has been made a witness by the Spirit of its author. If this be true, every such witness furnishes testimony in the fruits this love bears.

The fruits of the Spirit that comes from obedience to the commandments He has given, are love, joy, and peace. That beautiful peace that passeth the understanding of man, and a joy, shadowed in kind words that gladdens the hearts and adds to the happiness of others, and a love that does by others as we would have them do by us. This Spirit prompts us to feed our enemies, thus proving our regard for the words of Him whose name is love. "If ye love me keep my commandments." To do this we must banish envy and refrain from the appearance of evil. Our example must be worthy the emulation of all, and we should be careful how we judge mankind since He has said "with what judgment be judge ye shall be judged." Under the influence of this Spirit wives will reverence their husbands, husbands will love their wives. Parents will be careful and not provoke their children to anger.

Patience and kindness are among the virtues it inculcates, and an observance of general Christian duties is prompted by the spirit of the new, or the eleventh commandment.

Then let us all remember the new commandment, and love one another as Christ loves us. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

PAULINE.

THURMAN, Iowa.

Dear Sister Walker: Having noticed your kind solicitation for correspondence to the Home Column, I will endeavor to cast in my mite, although I feel my inability.

"Have faith in God" is the thought in my mind. Do we as mothers realize the import of that command? I have been told by mothers (when striving to get them to exercise faith in time of affliction), "O, we can not all have faith!" To my mind that is equivalent to saying, "We can not all please God," for "without faith it is impossible to please him." We can not all have faith, but I believe it is the duty of all Saints to strive to exercise that faith that is necessary to please him. It is also written that "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Lately I have been made to exclaim, "O, that we could all have the faith of a little child!" My little granddaughter four years old was suffering severely with toothache. Her mamma applied Jamaica ginger. It burned her mouth so severely she said, "Get the olive-oil, mamma." Then she anointed the tooth with oil and said, "Can't anybody pray for me?" Her mamma knelt down and offered a fervent prayer for her relief. She then went to sleep and slept soundly until morning, and has not complained since.

Another testimony I recall as a brother related it to me. He was anxiously watching by the bedside of a very sick son when his little daughter came to him, saying, "Father, brother will get well now."

"How do you know?" he inquired.

"I prayed for him, and he will get well," the child answered, and his son began to amend from that time and did get well. The brother said that was the grandest testimony to him that he ever had, of what simple, trusting faith would do.

Dear sisters, I do feel that I can not too strongly urge you that you teach your children to have faith in God and his promises. Do not neglect to teach them to pray in faith, and do not hesitate to pray with them and for them. I feel that my prayers have been as a wall of protection around my children, and so will yours be around your children. This is a duty you can not afford to neglect, for so much depends on the mother and God requires this at our hands. If we faithfully perform our duty in this, when the Master comes he will surely find faith on the earth.

Your sister in the gospel,
ELIZA J. MOORE.

To the Sisters of the Prayer Union: My husband is in poor health, and I ask that you remember him in your Prayer Union that the Lord may restore his health. He is a firm believer in this work, but seems slow to obey.

I am still clinging to the rod of iron, and ask an interest in your prayers that God will sustain and help me to do right in all things.

Organizing a Business.

A striking feature of the march of American prosperity since the Spanish War has been the quite modern innovation of reforming business from a rule-of-thumb activity into a science. A manufacturer, for example, who started two years ago along the industrial path which men follow in prosperity—leading often in the end to the disasters of depression—recently found himself compelled to make a thorough reorganization of his business simply because it grew so fast.

"Last year," he said, "I did five hundred thousand dollars' worth more business than the year before. Everything was booming, prices were holding up, and I felt already rich. And how much do you suppose my profits had really increased? I found at the end of the year—just eight dollars and eight cents."

"What did you do?" he was asked.

"I stopped guessing about the business," he said. "I called a business 'engineer' to systematize my plant, and now, instead of guessing, I know."—R. Stevens, in World's Work.

A Children's Day Program.

THE following Children's Day Program is given in response to several calls from the workers of small schools who wished to celebrate the day but were unable to prepare a suitable program therefor. We trust that the small schools may find in it such material as they can with small cost and moderate effort utilize in an appropriate entertainment.

The music has been selected mainly from Winnowed Songs because most all schools have them. But there are many other nice pieces that may be used in lieu thereof if preferable.

Throughout the program where more than one are to go to and from the platform, let it be done while a march is played by the organist, all marching in single file, and all remaining standing until all are ready to be seated. All rising and sitting should be uniform. A little practice in this will make the movements much more orderly and quiet.

Buds of Promise.

BY MRS. T. A. HOUGAS.

1. School: Song, "I Will Praise Thee," No. 110 Winnowed Songs.

2. Invocation.

3. School: Song, "Remember In Youth Thy Creator," No. 18 Winnowed Songs.

4. Opening address by a little boy or girl.

Dear friends, on other Sabbaths of the year the children are kindly welcomed by the grown-up people and to-day we have our chance to repay you. This is Children's Day and we bid you welcome. We welcome you in the name of the Sunday-school and the children. It is a day of rejoicing. Some of us are rejoicing that we have enlisted in the service of the Lord, while others are rejoicing that to-day they will unite with the church, while our little tots are happy that we have our dear Sunday-school where we may learn the way of love and right. All nature seems to rejoice in the bright June sunshine. The flowers scatter their fragrance and the happy birds warble their sweet songs in thanksgiving. Let us join nature in its praise to the Master.

5. Opening exercises by the children.

(Let all the primaries and intermediates march on the stage, arranging themselves in tiers, the smaller ones in front. With bowed heads and closed eyes all repeat in concert the opening prayer:)

"Lord, this day thy children meet,
In thy courts with willing feet;
Unto thee this day we raise Grateful hearts in hymns of praise."
Let thy Spirit on us shine,
Lead us in the way divine.
Wipe out all our past wrongs done;
Bless us, Father, through thy Son.
Amen.

(As soon as prayer is ended, let the organist play a chord and all the class sing No. 61, Winnowed Songs. Following this song the primaries give their Psalm recitation. From the neck of each child should be suspended a piece of cardboard, on one side of which is a small bouquet and on the other the initial letter of the Psalm he is to recite. The bouquet should be turned out until the child speaks when the letter is turned to the audience. The letters spelling "Children's Day.")

PSALM RECITATION FOR PRIMARIES.

Children are an heritage of God.
 Hear this all ye people; give ear all ye inhabitants of the world.
 I will never forget the precepts of the Lord.
 Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness.
 Do good, O Lord, unto them that be good.
 Remember the word unto thy servant.
 Exalt the Lord our God; for the Lord our God is holy.
 Now know I that the Lord saveth his anointed.
 So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Draw near unto my soul and redeem it.
 And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands.
 Yea the work of our hands establish thou it.

(Song No. 135, Winnowed Songs, first stanza, only. March.)

6. A recitation by an intermediate or primary.

"CHILDREN'S DAY."

A sound of clear young voices,
 A burst of happy song,
 A rush of eager footfalls,
 The marching of a throng,
 A troop of flower-like faces,
 That brightens all the way,
 Till no one needs the whisper,
 "Why, this is Children's Day!"

Within the solemn temple,
 And down the quiet aisles,
 The children bring their banners
 And flash their merry smiles;
 And hovering above them
 I think their angels stay,
 And make the church like heaven
 Upon the Children's Day.

In that bright upper temple,
 The house not made with hands,
 I know the children's Savior
 In gracious waiting stands
 To bless them as they enter
 The straight and narrow way,
 And He who loves the children
 Draws near on Children's Day.

And none, of Him forgotten,
 Shall wander from the fold,
 His eye is on the darlings,
 The timid and the bold;
 From Christ's own safe protection
 Not one wee lamb shall stray
 Of all the flock that follow
 The cross on Children's Day.

7. A recitation.

BUDS OF PROMISE.

(Six older primaries or young intermediates and one young child, each carrying a bouquet of buds.)

First Child:

As the buds among the roses,
 Promise to be blossoms fair,
 So the children grow to manhood
 Under their kind Father's care.

Myriads have from childhood risen,
 To be noble, good and true;
 But of all those of past ages
 We will mention but a few.

Second Child:

JOSEPH.

Better than the older brothers,
 Jacob loved his little son;
 Made a coat of many colors
 For this favored little one.
 Joseph's wicked brothers sold him,
 And to Egypt he did go.
 Later he became a ruler,
 Forgave and fed his brothers too.

Third Child:

MOSES.

Down among the flags and rushes
 There was once, so long ago,
 In a basket, a fair baby,
 What his name was, do you know?
 Yes, we all know that 'twas Moses,
 That he grew (as all should grow)
 Up to do his Master's bidding.
 He led the Israelites, you know.

Fourth Child:

SAMUEL.

Can you guess the little baby
 Who was lent unto the Lord
 By his mother? With good Eli
 He lived, and kept God's word.
 Why I know it, yes and truly
 A great prophet he became,
 There unto the house of Israel.
 Samuel was his name.

Fifth child:

JOHN THE BAPTIST.

In the temple by the altar
 Knelt the holy priest in prayer,
 Raised his head and found before him,
 A shining angel standing there.
 This the message that it brought him,
 Lo, a babe shall be thine own
 In due time it came to bless him,
 A tiny boy, they called him John.
 He it was who told the people
 That the Savior soon would come;
 With his own hands did baptize him
 Heard the message "this's my son."

Sixth child:

JESUS.

But just the "blessedest" baby
 That ever there was on earth
 Was found by the lowly shepherds,
 In a manger, the place of his birth.
 Great were the things he suffered,
 In order to save us from sin.
 And now he so lovingly calls us,
 In these words, to come unto him;

All:

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven."
 (A tiny tot stands in front of others and speaks):

I'm a little bud of promise.
 Help me to be good and true.

(All sing No. 115 in Winnowed Songs, the school joining in chorus.)

ETHEL I. SKANK.

8. Recitation by a little girl.

THE BLOSSOM THAT CAME FROM GOD.

I see before me a fragile flower,
A sweet little bud in its opening hour,
Transplanted from heaven to earth's green sod—
A dear little blossom that came from God.

How pure the petals how golden the heart
Of this that's become of our life a part;
Each blustering wind makes the slight stem nod
Of this little blossom that came from God.

You ask me, "Where is it, this blossom rare?"
Our precious darling, she is standing there
" 'Tis a little child, why," you say "how odd,"
Ah, yes, but a blossom that came from God.

A blossom it is of the fairest kind,
The opening petals, her infant mind;
Not lilies, or roses, or goldenrod
Are sweet as this blossom that came from God.

Used by permission of the author, Mina Perkins Kearney.

9. A recitation for a small boy and girl.

THE HAPPY PAIR.

(Select two about the same size and of a lively and happy, or roguish disposition. Let them ascend the platform together, the girl leading the way. After reciting should retire in the same way.)

Girl:

O, I am a gay little girl,
As ever you will see;
With eyes that laugh, and locks that curl,
And happy is the time to me.
The sunshine is my very best friend,
I stole my song from the warm south wind;
My laugh from the streamlet running through the land,
While grandma says "Be happy if you will;
But don't forget to be a good girl still."

Boy:

O, I am a gay little boy
As ever you will see;
I bat my ball, I roll my hoop;
I'm as happy as a boy can be.
And my eyes will wink with a funny little jerk,
While grandpa says, "Come, get along to work."
I roll up my sleeves, I never was a shirk;
For you know I, too, may be happy if I will,
If I don't forget "to be a good boy still."
—Arranged from David Smith's "Carrie's Song."

10. Recitation by a little boy.

A LITTLE ARMY.

You have a little army,
Powerful and strong—
Be careful, boys, be careful,
Do not train them wrong!

Two are walking soldiers—
See they keep the way
That is paved with honor,
Lest they go astray.

Two are seeing soldiers—
Never let them view
Deeds that are not manly,
Upright, pure, and true.

Two are hearing soldiers—
You need have no fear
If wicked words and oaths, boys,
Never reach their ear.

Two are handy soldiers—
See them on review!
Capable and eager,
Splendid things to do!

Since your little army—
Feet, eyes, ears, and hands—
Wait to do your bidding;
Guard well your commands!

Letter Department.

NEW BEDFORD, Massachusetts, May 4.

Editors Herald: Another conference year has commenced, and I suppose most of the ministry appointed to labor in the harvest-field have gone to their posts of duty or field of toil to thrust in their sickles and reap. How quickly the years come and go! How anxious every minister should be to reach his appointed place, and lose no time, which becomes more precious each year because of the immense amount of work to be done in so short a space of time allotted us; for this is God's hastening time. Our ranks are being drawn upon by the Master and we are left to wonder why so many of our useful workers are called away; some in the bloom of youth, some in the prime of manhood and womanhood, and others whose hair is grey with years, yet we feel could have remained among us as fathers in Israel for some years had God so willed. May we who are left for a time to work here for the Master see that we do so with all our might. It may be that our Father needs these toilers from earth, for the hastening of his work in some other department, hid from mortal ken.

On April 17 I received a dispatch to attend the funeral of Sr. Helen Smith, of Dennisport, who had passed away while upon the operating table, never recovering from the ether. While addressing the audience gathered at the funeral I said, "One of us present will soon pass away, who will it be?" Little did I think the brother who was assisting me at the funeral would be visited by the silent messenger in less than a week from that time; but such was the case, for in six days our beloved Bro. Nathan C. Eldredge suddenly passed away and has left a vacant place among us we know not how to fill. There was a manifestation of genuine grief from a host of friends as well as Saints at the funeral, and the general admission was, we have lost one of the best men that ever lived. But what a blank in the home to his faithful companion and children! May our loving Father help them to bear up, and learn the lesson of preparation for the reunion in the morn of the resurrection.

But a few weeks ago while one of our Sunday-school and Religio workers, Julia Toombs, was on her way to church in Providence she was shot to death by a wretch whose attentions had been refused by our pure young sister; and thus gloom and sadness forced upon the whole branch and especially her mother and other members of the family. While we have to bow to the inevitable and must believe that whatsoever is, is right, in the household of faith, we naturally say, why these things, and then we have to leave them for the great Master Mind to unravel, or withhold the why and wherefore, as seemeth him good.

I feel to say to all in this district, young, middle-aged, and fathers and mothers in Israel, let us renew our diligence in the work and put all the energy of our souls into what is assigned us to do. We look back upon the year that has passed and have to say it has been the most severe we have ever experienced, and our faith has been tried as never before; but bless the name of the Most High he has given us strength as we have determined in our hearts to serve him, and try to be loyal to his holy cause.

May our Father bless our beloved President and his associates, and give them that excellent wisdom needed to meet the many demands made upon them; and this we ask for the Twelve, and all upon whom rests grave responsibilities. Let all make this by far the best year financially in tithes, offerings, and consecrations, that Zion may be redeemed and her children gathered.

Yours for Zion's triumph,

R. BULLARD.

RAVENWOOD, Missouri, April 30.

Editors Herald: In his article in Autumn Leaves for May, Bro. John Smith quotes a part of Nephi's vision concerning the power of God coming down upon the Saints or church of the Lamb that was scattered upon all the earth. I see he omits the words, "covenant people." By this omission of "covenant people," some of the Saints may be misled, for when the endowment spoken of here comes upon the Saints, it also comes upon those not of the church as well as the church. This omission I think destroys the meaning he wishes to convey. This endowment spoken of by Nephi I think reaches down farther than the brother wished to be understood, or his understanding is not as mine is, for mine is it will take place when God pours out his Spirit upon all flesh. Then I think it will be seen that this vision will be fulfilled and not before. I do not think it was intentionally left out by the brother. I think it is an endowment of all flesh; then we will be better prepared to do spiritual work. Our redemption as Saints is foreshadowed by revelation to be of greater power than when Israel was lead out of Egypt. (Section 100, paragraph 3.) Israel's redemption from all the land whither God had driven them will be greater than when they were lead out of Egypt. (Jeremiah 16: 14.)

In our redemption and Israel's, we see history repeats itself. We will look for our redemption when Israel is redeemed. They have waited longer than we, and I do not think God will favor us before he does them.

JOHN HAWLEY.

Editors Herald: I have heart trouble and can read but a little while at a time. I am so isolated from the church and the association of the Saints that if I could not read the church publications I would die spiritually. Brn. Daniel Tripp and George Lambert are preaching every two weeks four miles from our place. I went once but my husband is so prejudiced against the Saints he will not try to help me to go. I have four children, one in the Saints' Church, one in the Presbyterian with his father, one a Baptist, and one is not in any church. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that my family may all be brought into the kingdom, that we may all be worthy to partake of the celestial glory, and that I may live so my life may be worthy of imitation. Pray for me that I may be healed if it is God's will, and that I may receive more spiritual strength. It is my desire to live so near him that when he calls me home I will be ready and willing to say, "Thy will be done."

Oh that I may have grace and courage to overcome all the trials and temptations with which I am surrounded, and when done here enter into the rest prepared for the faithful.

Mr. AND Mrs. J. F. MORRIS.

WALKERVILLE, Ontario, May 4.

Editors Herald: It is true the duties of the missionary are many, and when found in the discharge of the same he finds that his time is wholly taken up in the efforts to build up the church and kingdom of God set up in these the last days.

I have labored some four months in Essex County, Ontario, taking up new fields of labor in the places named: Walkerville, The Gore, Windsor, and Sandwich. There are a few Saints in all of these places now, though no branch organization. Since laboring here I have had many evidences of the power of God in my labors. There have been eight baptized since I have come here, one ordained to office of priest, five children blessed, Sunday-school organized, and general good done, with a bright outlook for more to come in and a branch to be organized with some forty to fifty members.

In March, at Sandwich, Ontario, as I was visiting from house to house, I was invited into one. The woman's name was Mrs. Kenney. She had been a member of the Methodist Church from her girlhood. I was made very welcome and she seemed very willing to listen to my talk. She was a lover of the word of God and often quoted much Scripture. Well, the interest was so great that from half past ten o'clock in the forenoon till four o'clock in the afternoon we conversed upon the gospel of Christ; and while she admitted that a great deal of what I had presented from the Bible was somewhat new to her, yet she had read it and could not go back on it, as it was the words of God. She gave me something to eat and asked me to come again; and if I would labor around there she would feed me and loan me her horse and buggy to visit the people. I expect to pay her another visit in a few days.

I visited an old man by the name of Nolan who was sick. He was eighty-six years old. This was his third sickness within the last few years. At his first sickness he thought he was going to die but he wanted God to permit him to live to hear and obey the gospel, as he understood it, and prayed to God to spare his life to this end. He was born in Mexico, of Catholic parents, they dying when he was very young. He was brought up by Protestant people, so at this first sickness the priest was called in to bring comfort to the old man; but when he asked about the gospel as taught by Christ and his true servants, the priest could not satisfy him. He desired to be buried with Christ in baptism, for he read he could not get a remission of sins any other way. He asked the priest if he would baptize him as was Jesus by John, and the priest said no, but offered to administer the rights of the church. That would not satisfy him. Then the priest told him he would be damned and go to hell. But he lived, and got better. Another time came and he was taken sick again. At this time a minister of the English Church was sent for, and as his wife was a member of that church before her death, the minister thought it would have some effect upon him. The minister talked of his church and was willing to sprinkle some water upon him and admit him into the church that he represented, but the old man asked to be baptized as was Jesus in the river Jordan. The minister said no, as it was not the form of the church.

But the prayer of the old man still went up to God that his life might be spared till he could follow his Master in baptism. He again got better; but last winter was taken sick again. A person by the name of Mrs. Bonnot, whose husband and daughter I baptized, visited him; and after he related his experiences she told him she thought she could send him a man who could bring him joy and comfort before he passed away. He was able at this time to be around with the aid of a staff. I called and had a talk with him and the second day of my visit at seven in the evening we walked a third of a mile and baptized him in the Detroit River. I confirmed him that evening and was blessed with the Spirit of my calling, which brought gladness to his soul. And he said: "O elder, I feel ten years younger, Bless the Lord, oh my soul, for answering my prayer."

That same night I walked two miles to preach. The results were that one more was convinced and the following Sunday I baptized her.

Last Friday night I baptized Mr. A. T. Williams, then on Sunday blessed his child, and after attending four meetings, I went three miles and baptized Mr. James H. Kettle.

I hope the Saints will continue to send in their tithing to the Bishop so that the missionaries may be kept in the field of duty and that others may be sent, that the seeker for truth may be found.

REYNOLDS, Indiana, May 7.

Editors Herald: At this writing I am associated with Bro. C. E. Irwin, who has been here for some time holding forth, and urging me to come to his assistance; but being engaged and appointments ahead I could not come until now. I held forth in the hall last evening and to-night again if the Lord wills we think we will go to Knox, Indiana, as Bro. Irwin has been there and thinks work is needed there. We will try to find out the needs of the work and report to Bro. Cochran, district president. We have been busy and feel well and encouraged since General Conference, and I believe the missionary force will be much encouraged by reason of the unity prevailing during conference. I trust Bro. I. M. Smith may come to his mission field soon and accomplish much good during his labor of love among us.

I take it for granted this district is well suited with General Conference appointment.

The Saints of Clear Lake are usually well and doing well spiritually and financially. I expect to get towards home the latter part of next or the fore part of week after, to help some in making garden and planting, then to district conference, then on again. We only lost one appointment on account of General Conference.

G. A. SMITH.

SPRINGERTON, Illinois, May 5.

Editors Herald: This finds me busy in my new field of labor, preaching every night. Spoke three times last Sunday and taught a class and helped other ways in the Sunday-school. Am having excellent crowds; a fine interest; some ready for baptism, others investigating, and prospects fine here for the work to make advancement. I am alone at present, holding services in the Saints' church-building, in the village of Springerton. My address for a time will be Springerton, Illinois.

F. L. SAWLEY.

PORT BRUCE, Ontario, May 4.

Dear Herald Readers: I am glad to tell you I baptized four precious souls yesterday Bro. Robert Fishley, wife, and son, and daughter, and blessed three of his children. One son was away from home. The whole family is rejoicing. I have had quite a time at this place for about three months with the preacher and the people. I am still holding two preaching meetings weekly, and twice on Sunday. The other evenings we have pray-meetings. Pray for me.

T. A. PHILLIPS.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, May 9.

Editors Herald: I came to this place on the 5th inst. and will remain over during the district conference, which convenes here on the 10th and 11th. I found Brn. Forscutt, Waldsmith, Self, and others of the ministry and Saints feeling quite well, both physically and spiritually. The weather is fine and everything bids fair for a good time during conference. The Sunday-school association of the district held a successful entertainment at the church on last evening, and I am sure that such efforts on the part of the Sunday-school will prove very beneficial to the Saints, educationally and spiritually.

I feel that this will be a prosperous year for the church; and while I feel that such will be the case, I also feel that God will lay judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, and that both among the ministry and members must be recognized that undeviating fidelity to the cause of our Savior, as commanded in his word, or judgments from earth and heaven will quickly follow. Dear Saints, God will not be mocked; Zion can not, never will be redeemed except by the principles of righteousness. Therefore let us wear the garments of virtue, and true holiness, that we may indeed be recognized by our good fruits.

Another monster, whose head is plainly seen among the Saints in some places and is impeding the progress of the work materially, is that of pride. Saints may dress well and look well; but oh I am sure that the angels retreat with feelings of sadness when they behold the Saints permitting that monster of evil crushing out the spirit of true saintlike sociability from among them. I have before now extended my hand to convey my heartfelt fellowship in Christ, presuming that the brother or sister Saint felt reciprocal in spirit as I, when I would receive one of those cold, formal, tip-of-the-finger handshakes that would make my blood almost settle in my heels. I feel certain, dear Saints, that when your earthly pilgrimage has closed, and you are made to see the dark river you must cross, you will not desire that our elder Brother will use any formality then; but instead you will want to feel your hand in his hand, to receive a welcome that the Saints who possess the Spirit of true saintism will know. May we all grow more holy, is my prayer.

Saints of the Southern Nebraska District, please give your missionary in charge all the information you may possess in regard to new openings, sending such information to my address, Holden, Johnson County, Missouri, and when the missionary comes in your midst give him every assistance possible to enable him to make an effectual opening, that the labor be not spent in vain.

To the Saints in Iowa who for the past twelve years have been so kind to me in my ministerial work, I extend my feelings of deep, heartfelt thanks.

May Zion's cause prosper.

J. R. SUTTON.

CORDELL, Oklahoma, May 9.

Dear Herald: Your weekly welcome visits are very refreshing; indeed your instructions from pen of our beloved editor, your contributors of articles, letters, and all, are much like the spiritual social service of instruction, prayer and testimony, and serve much to keep up the isolated ones and faint hearts. So I do not wonder much that we as a people believe in and are anxiously awaiting the gathering; for what is so sweet as holy communion of Saints, especially to those who are for long seasons derived such communion and are out battling with the adversary of truth alone; yet not at all alone, when God's holy Spirit breaks forth, warms the breast, sharpens the intellect, and gives us words before unthought with which to ward off the cunning and twisting of language which is contrary to the spirit of Christian fellowship.

I find one difference here from what I am used to, and that is that most of the preachers in these little towns have another avocation for a living, and only gain a portion of their living from the ministry. Where I have inquired the reason have been told it was because of the poverty of the flock.

I am endeavoring to spread the gospel, but am often surprised to see those I have the most hopes of spurn it and cry, False teacher. As a matter of course I have many arguments and all manner of specious reasonings presented by those to whom I present the work. I have quite a number reading the various church publications, and am always attempting to increase the number. Have been largely enabled to do this through the kindness of Saints forwarding bundles of HERALDS, Ensigns, etc., as a result of my application to Bro. Epperson for the same.

Have recently met and presented our work to three Methodist ministers, one Presbyterian, one Brethren, and one or two ministers of other denominations. I have given these parties our literature; but usually they say they are already well posted. Have had many conversations with an Elder Hays who is a very active minister for the "True Followers." He says Bro. Hinkle had greatly misquoted them and that their authority is apostolic, and he can trace their work back eighty years himself. I now have him reading Bro. Scott's "Deception's Reign."

I have recently preached for the Adventists at their church six miles in the country. Tried to show them that while they were zealous for the schoolmaster's Sabbath, they were not teaching the doctrine of Christ.

I opened a series of meetings here in the court-house, first explaining the Utah departure. Had a good turnout, for two evenings, then bad weather broke them up for balance of week. Advertised to continue another week, and was again defeated by room being used for political meeting, church supper, and a Methodist rally in a tent only a block away. So now they must hear the gospel on the streets.

Saints, let us all be faithful, encouraging one another by precept and deed, so that all accusations against us will be false; then only will it be for Christ's sake and our everlasting joy. This year I have had my first opportunity to go out into the open field of labor; yet our families must be cared for, and not having presented myself for conference appointment at an acceptable time, I can still work for the Master, and trust his care to provide me with local employment and means, that in the future I may lay my all at the feet of the Master, saying, Here am I, Lord, send me. Saints, pray for me, for I am very weak. When I would do good, evil is present to such an extent as to nearly overcome. May our heavenly Father hold us in the hollow of his hand, is my prayer.

A. L. LIGHTFOOT.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, May 9.

Saints Herald: Leaving wife and boy nicely located in our cozy little home in Independence, Missouri, May 2, I took "Frisco" for Springfield, Missouri. Began meeting Sunday at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and have continued all the week with increasing crowds. Bro. Sparling came in from Eldorado Springs debate and he has assisted me in the meetings. The Saints are anxious to build up the work here. Bro. Sparling expects to begin tent work shortly, and Bro. Sidney Gray is going to fit up a gospel wagon for the streets. May the Lord abundantly bless their efforts to build up the work in this city.

The demand for preaching seems to be good in every place. The Saints want me to spend my entire time here. By permission I was to assist them some of my time, but will soon go from here to Piedmont, Missouri, to see what I can do in that part of the country. The demand is so great now for preaching the gospel we must depend on the Lord to direct us by his Spirit where best to labor.

The Louisiana Purchase and the Rise of the United States.

The international effects of the Louisiana Purchase were even more significant than its political effect. From it dates the end of the struggle for the possession of the Mississippi Valley and the beginning of the transfer of the ascendancy in both Americas to the United States. Even the English veterans of the Napoleonic battles were unable to wrest New Orleans from Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812. The acquisition of Florida, Texas, California, and the possessions won by the United States in the recent Spanish-American War are in a sense the corollaries of this great event. France, England, and Spain, removed from the strategic points on our border, were prevented from occupying the controlling position in determining the destiny of the American provinces which so soon revolted from the empire of Spain. The Monroe Doctrine would not have been possible except for the Louisiana Purchase. It was the logical outcome of that acquisition. Having taken her decisive stride across the Mississippi, the United States enlarged the horizon of her views and marched steadily forward to the possession of the Pacific Ocean. From this event dates the rise of the United States into the position of a world power.—American Review of Reviews for May.

Convention Minutes.

Northeastern Missouri.—Convention met at Higbee, February 13, 1903; William C. Chapman, assistant superintendent in charge; J. L. Williams, secretary pro tem. Schools reporting: Bevier, Higbee, Salt River. Treasurer reported: On hand last report, $10.42; receipts, $3.19; on hand, $13.61. A resolution of respect in memory of our deceased district superintendent, Thomas A. Tanner, was drafted and adopted. The following officers were elected: William C. Chapman, superintendent; Maggie L. Richards, assistant superintendent; George A. Tryon, secretary; Sr. L. M. Lilly, treasurer; Sr. Mary A. Richards, librarian. Time and place of next district convention was left in hands of district officers.

Alabama.—Association met in mass-meeting with the Flat Rock Branch April 11, 1903, at 3.30 p. m.; Superintendent Joseph S. Wiggins being absent Bertha D. Harper was chosen chairman; E. N. McCall secretary pro tem. Schools reporting: Pleasant Hill, Lone Star. Pleasant Hill report was referred back for correction. E. N. McCall was elected superintendent, Bertha D. Harper assistant superintendent, L. G. Sellers treasurer, O. M. Sellers secretary. Adjourned to meet with the Lone Star Branch Friday at 3 p. m. before next quarterly conference.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of Michigan, Indiana, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin, Greeting: Having been associated with you for another year, and required to take the oversight of the work, I desire to secure the coöperation of all who love the latter-day work. To the end that the work may be better cared for and represented, it is necessary that some should be placed in charge of the different divisions as may seem convenient, not that any greater honor is thus bestowed, but that the organization of our forces may be better provided for. I will therefore request that Bro. J. Arthur Davies, rural delivery number 4, Pittsburg, Kansas, take the oversight of the Kewanee District; Bro. F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois, of Wisconsin and the Northeastern Illinois District except Chicago; Bro. M. H. Bond in the city of Chicago; Bro. John J. Cornish, of Reed City, Michigan, of the Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts; Bro. Isaac M. Smith, of 1217 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri, of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Bro. George Jenkins, of Plainville, Indiana, of the Southern Indiana District.

I trust that all laborers will respect and sustain these men, as well as rendering them all the assistance that it is possible to do.

Anything necessary to be brought before the president of the mission can safely be intrusted to these brethren for transmission. It is not intended by this to bar any colaborer from addressing the general missionary in charge and making any suggestions that they may desire to make; but it would not be proper or respectful to ignore the several missionaries in charge in the field; hence anything of an official character should be presented through them.

The missionaries who labor in this territory doubtless understand the rules of reporting promptly on the first days of July, October, January, and March. Please do not neglect this, nor delay for a single day if it can be avoided, that your reports may be in the hands of the field missionary in time to report to the general missionary on the tenth of these months. It is essential that we act promptly that order and system may be preserved.

I wish here to congratulate those who labored in this field the past year on their work. With but very few exceptions you have been diligent, faithful, and careful in your conduct and in your ministerial work, which has had its effect in establishing confidence in the church, and with others with whom you have come in contact. I trust that the coming year will bring to us great success and additional light and peace.

I desire to visit every part of this vast field sometime during the year; but can not at present safely lay out any plan or program. I would like to attend all the conferences possible, also reunions, and do such other labor as I may have opportunity to do; but the conferences all being held about the same season of the year makes this difficult.

Trusting that the bond of union existing among us may be strengthened, our confidence in each other be made strong, and that our service and conduct may secure the favor of the Master, I am,

Your brother and colaborer for Christ,

HEMAN C. SMITH,

Arizona, California, and Nevada Mission: Having been appointed to represent the interests of Graceland College, and travel extensively over the entire field of the United States and Canada, it will be impracticable for me to personally superintend the work in the above-named mission constantly throughout the year. I will therefore endeavor to do the work of directing by correspondence when absent, but will reach the field and labor in it as soon and as long as practicable.

Arizona will be in charge of J. C. Clapp, who will give it all the attention his health will allow. Southern California will be in charge of W. E. Peak; Central California will be in charge of F. C. Smith, and Northern California and Nevada, except Oakland and San Francisco, will be in charge of R. J. Parker. J. M. Terry will care for Oakland and San Francisco.

Will those placed in charge please publish their addresses as soon as convenient, so that reports from their fellow workers may be made regularly, as per rule, to them? Let all remember that the last quarterly report (March 1) should contain the items covering the work of entire year.

My address will be 1038 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri, and all mail will be forwarded promptly from thence to me.

Let us with single eye and cheerful hearts carry nobly the honor of ambassadors for Christ and diligently apply our energies toward the spread of his government. There is no honor or privilege to be compared with this. Let the purity of our lives and the faithfulness of our ministry convey the impress of our appreciation of this to the characters of all whom we affect by our labors. Your brother and coworker, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 5. JOSEPH LUFF.

To the Missionaries and Saints of the Des Moines District, Iowa: May the blessings of God be unto you all. Another year has brought about conditions that privileges us to labor together in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and I, as the one appointed missionary in charge of this mission, by this means invite your hearty cooperation, spiritually and socially, praying that the loving Father may make the pathway of duty, however trying, a pleasure by reason of his presence and support. This mission is a very important one in location, and is one in which has been, and will have to be met, much opposition, which will for a time hinder our progress, apparently; but by patiently toiling on God will crown our labors with success. Be not discouraged, but be watchful, and seek every opportunity to thwart the enemy of souls, and make your calling and election sure.

The following counties are included in this mission. Winnebago, Worth, Mitchell, Hancock, Cerro Gordo, Floyd, Wright, Franklin, Butler, Hamilton, Hardin, Grundy, Boone, Story, Marshall, Tama, Dallas, Polk, Jasper, Powsheik, Madison, Warren, Marion, Mahaska, Keokuk, and Washington, and any Saints or friends living in these counties who may desire the labor of the ministry will please correspond with me, stating the needs and conditions of the work, and opportunities for labor.

I have associated with me Elders H. A. McCoy, T. F. Jones, S. K. Sorensen, C. J. Peters, and S. F. Cushman, and wherever these brethren may labor, I bespeak for them the support and hospitality of Saints and friends, trusting that in all our ministrations we may do you good, and be the means of bringing some of your friends out of spiritual darkness into God's marvelous work; and thus when the year shall close we may rejoice together because of the good accomplished. We invite the hearty support of all financially and by distributing, in getting literature into the hands of all, such as will counteract the effect of the misrepresentations so generally made by the distribution of literature now so widely scattered by others having for their special object the overthrow of the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, restored through the prophet, Joseph Smith, and the falsifying of the claims of Book of Mormon, which so clearly sustains the principle that "God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him."

The position of the Reorganized Church, as the true successor of the church organized in 1830, upon the God-ordained ordinance of marriage, and the corrupt doctrines of adultery and polygamy, will be kept before the people both by tongue and pen.

With confidence in the final success of the work of God we represent, I am, Your brother in the true faith,
J. F. MINTUN, Box 384, Woodbine, Iowa.

To the Officers and Members of the Several Branches of the Church in the Clinton District, Missouri, Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord: Having been placed in charge of the membership in this, the Clinton District, I ask your hearty cooperation that we may make this a successful year in this field. It is my desire to visit each branch and hold a series of meetings as often as I possibly can this year. Let me hear from each branch in regard to your wishes as to the best time to hold a meeting at your place. Let us make a united effort to advance along all lines. Our district conference will convene the sixth of June at the Veve Chapel. I will be pleased to meet as many of the officers and members there as can possibly get there. If there are men in the branches who desire to do missionary work, please apply to T. R. White, Lowry City, Missouri, otherwise you will be under my direction. Permanent address, 435 Holden, Missouri.

Yours in bonds of the gospel,
JAMES MOLER.

Belated Report.

From far away Australia comes the report of Bishop George Lewis too late to include it with the quorum summary. He has to his credit 7 sermons, and attended, and had charge of many services, 1 baptism, 6 confirmations, 4 ordinations, 26 administrations. Bishop for Australia, and held court once. Branch president, local laborer, and Sunday-school officer.

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

Release from Appointment.

By reason of a change of circumstances occurring since appointment by conference which prevents Bro. F. M. Weld, of Lamoni, from taking the field to which he was assigned he has asked of the Presidency and missionary in charge that he be released. This request has been duly received and Bro. Weld is hereby released from the mission assigned.

JOSEPH SMITH,
FRED'K M. SMITH, } Of the Presidency.

Notices.

To the Saints of Southern California: I wish to notify you that Bro. A. Carmichael, C. W. Earle, and A. E. Jones were appointed as a committee to raise means, provide for, and equip a tent to be used by the missionaries during this summer. Inasmuch as this is an order of the conference, you will recognize the necessity of responding to their call for help.

The reunion of Southern California will convene on the German Methodist camp ground near Orange, the latter part of August. Owing to the lateness of the reunion the district conference will be held on November 7 and 8 at San Bernardino. The Religio and Sunday-school will convene at same place on Friday, the 6th.

The missionary force is limited, and it will therefore be necessary for the local force to buckle on the armor. The brethren should keep an itemized account of all labor done according to headings in my address to the priesthood in Ensign of March 26; those laboring as branch officers reporting to the branch president the first of July, October, January, and April; those not laboring as branch officers direct to district president. Branch presidents will submit a summary of reports together with status of branch to district president by the tenth of each month named above.

All reports to be sent to the undersigned until further notice.

T. W. WILLIAMS, District President.

2802 South Grand Avenue, LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 28.

To the Fifth Quorum of Elders: The quorum secretary needs the permanent address of the following-named elders: J. A. Blackmore, W. I. Fligg, E. A. Goodwin, J. T. Hackett, Jay Hoffman, W. G. Pert, W. N. Robinson, N. Rumel, C. I. Shall-better, and G. W. Walters. Will the above-named brethren please write me at once giving full address, street number, post-office box, or R. F. D. number. Your reports were not received for last year and we are not sure of your present address.

C. I. CARPENTER, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 6, 1903.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Kansas District: By resolution of district conference it was voted last year to purchase a new top for the tent. As the missionary force was insufficient to operate it, the funds to purchase were not collected. This year the force will be sufficient and the tent will be needed both for reunion and missionary work. In order that it may be in operation as soon as possible we would ask the Saints in branches to hand in your subscriptions to your branch president or deacon, that they may be forwarded to C. E. Tillinghast, North Topeka, Kansas, by June 1. Those not in branches are requested to send in your dollars, more or less, to Bro. Tillinghast direct, or bring them to the district conference at Centralia, June 5 to 7. And may the Lord prosper you spiritually and temporally.

Your coworker,
M. F. GOWELL, Submissionary in Charge.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Nodaway District, Missouri, will convene with the Platt Branch, at Guilford, Missouri, June 6, at 10 a. m. Sunday-school convention on June 5, at 2 p. m. E. S. Fannon, district president, Sunday-school superintendent, etc.

Nauvoo District conference will convene at Farmington, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, June 6 and 7, 1903. Let all reports, both ministerial and statistical, be sent to the district clerk at least ten days prior to conference. M. H. Seigfreid, clerk.

Conference of the Southern Indiana District will convene with the Byrneville Branch, June 20, 10.30 a. m. M. R. Scott, Jr., district president.

Pottawattamie District conference will meet with the church in Carson, Iowa, at 10 a. m., Saturday, May 30, 1903. All reports should be forwarded to the secretary by May 23, so that he may have the business ready to lay before the conference without loss of time. J. Charles Jensen, secretary of Pottawattamie District.

The reunion and conference of the Minnesota District will be held at Clitherall, Ottertail County, Minnesota, commencing June 19, 1903, and holding over two Sundays. The Patriarch of the church, A. H. Smith, will be present, and it is expected that Bishop G. H. Hilliard and all the missionaries will be present. Those desiring board will write to Elder L. Whiting. Those desiring stabling write to Alonzo Whiting or Arthur Whiting. All moneys to be paid to L. Whiting or T. J. Martin. Clitherall is on the Fergus Falls branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Come and make this reunion a success. L. Whiting, president; T. J. Martin, secretary.

The Northeastern Illinois District conference will convene at Mission, Illinois, Saturday, June 6, at 10 a. m. Sheridan and Seneca are the nearest railway stations. Those attending should notify Elder John Midgorden, Marseilles, Illinois, R. F. D. 58, and they will be met at the station. All the elders of the district are required to report at this conference; also priests, who are not branch officers. Presidents of branches should report on the blank forms furnished. We trust there will be as full an attendance as practicable. Come and bring the good Spirit with you. F. G. Pitt, district president, 3810 Langley Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

The conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will be held with the Coldwater Branch, June 6 and 7, at their chapel east of the city. Bro. I. M. Smith, missionary in charge, will probably be present. A. S. Cochran, district president.

The Kewanee District conference will convene at Joy Branch, on June 6, 1903, at 10.30 a. m. All interested are requested to attend or report to Joseph Terry, Millersburg, Mercer County, Illinois, on time. Come all who can. John S. Patterson, president.

Conference of the Northeastern Missouri District will convene at Bevier, Missouri, June 13, 1903, at 10 a. m. Election of officers will take place at this conference. Send all reports to William Chapman, Higbee, Missouri. J. A. Tanner, president; William Chapman, secretary.

The Lamoni Stake conference will meet in Cleveland, Iowa, on Saturday, June 6, 1903, at 10 a. m. A good attendance is desired.

Conference of Northwestern Kansas District will be held June 6 and 7, 1903, at Bro. Milton Bonner's place, about three miles northeast of Scandia, Republic County, Kansas. Please send all reports to district secretary, E. M. Landers, Concordia, Kansas.

Convention Notices.

The Des Moines District Sunday-school association will convene at Boone, Iowa, on June 12, 1903. We trust all interested in Sunday-school work will make a special effort to attend. Elsie E. Russell, district secretary, 503 High Street, Grinnell, Iowa.

The Northeastern Missouri District Sunday-school association will meet in convention at Bevier, Missouri, June 12, 1903, at 10 a. m. Morning session business; afternoon session, reading of papers and discussion; evening session devoted to a program by school. Send all reports to George A. Tryon, Huntsville, Missouri. William Chapman, superintendent; George A. Tryon, secretary.

The convention of the Northeastern Illinois District Sunday-school association will be held at Mission, Illinois, Friday, June 5, 1903, at 2 o'clock p. m. There will be an entertainment in the evening at 8 o'clock. All are invited to attend. Mamie C. Williamson, district secretary.

Died.

FENDER.—Sr. Bertha Norena Fender departed this life at 10 a. m., April 10, 1903; was born in Montgomery County, Iowa, June 9, 1875; baptized November 22, 1889; married Bro. Ed Fender January 10, 1897. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn, one a babe two months old. She was a faithful Saint and proved the virtue of the gospel in her righteous life. She was loved and respected by all who knew her, and her faith never shrunk in the gospel but patiently watched and waited for an elder to come and administer. Funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Twombly.

ELDRIDGE.—Elder Nathan C. Eldredge, of Dennisport, Massachusetts, very suddenly of heart failure, April 26, 1903. Everything that kind hands could do was done. A true Saint, a noble man has passed on to his rest. He was born August 22, 1831, at Harwich, Massachusetts; baptized June 24, 1868, at Dennisport, Massachusetts, by Elder W. Cottane. He leaves two daughters and his companion to mourn. Funeral at their home, where many friends and Saints assembled to pay their last tribute of love and respect to his memory. Services by Elder R. Bullard.

FOUTS.—Inez Miller Fouts, daughter of Bro. David and Sr. Jane Miller, was born July 31, 1865; married to George Fouts, September 30, 1885; died at Denison, Iowa, March 19, 1903. She left four children one of which is an infant. Funeral from the Saints church in Dow City and interment in the Dow City cemetery conducted by Elder D. M. Rudd. She did not belong to any church but her faith was in the angel's message of the latter days. During her last illness she told her mother she would be baptized as soon as she was able.

SCHULZ.—At her home in San Francisco, California, Miss Emily Schulz passed away May 4, 1903, at the age of 21 years and 11 months after a lingering sickness. She was buried from Brown's undertaking parlors in Oakland, California, on May 7. Sermon by Elder J. M. Terry; prayer by Elder R. Ferris.

Profitable and Safe Investment.

Our company owns two good zinc and one lead properties, developed ready for mills. Also a fine lot of excellent white oak timber.

We have machinery bought for a one hundred-ton concentrating plant, also a complete sawmill. Both mills are now being built at Graceland Camp, and will be running in full blast by July 1, 1903.

We are selling shares in the treasury stock, for development purposes only, and we pay the necessary traveling expenses for investors, who will subscribe six hundred dollars or more for stock. We do not ask you to pay one dollar on your stock, until you come and investigate the Company and inspect our properties. If it is not as good as we represent it, the bank will return your money, and we will pay your transportation to the properties and back to your home.

Bro. E. Etzenhouser, of Kansas City, Missouri, was the first one to take advantage of our offer of free transportation. Since then Bro. I. McCord, of Stewartville, Missouri, George Juergens, of Glidden, Iowa, W. A. Carroll, of Auburn, Iowa, have taken advantage of the offer of free transportation; and since my last report, Bro. Henry Kaestner, of 826 Ash Street, Burlington, Iowa, also visited us. These brethren all made a thorough investigation, were well pleased, and are now enthusiastic stockholders in the Company, and made reports on the properties.

We expect to declare the first dividend by November 1, 1903. Write me, and I will cheerfully give you any information you desire concerning the Company, and will send you a copy of these reports.

JOSEPH WARD, Secretary,
White River Mining and Development Co.

"Platonic Friendship" Never Entered Plato's Head.

The name "Platonic" is not very accurately used when it is employed to discuss the friendship of a man and a woman into which there enters no trace of amatory sentiment. Plato, in various treatises, especially the "Timæus" and the "Symposium," speaks indeed of a love which is free from sensuousness,—being the love of soul for soul; but Plato, whose spirit was tinged with asceticism, was not treating of woman at all, and in general, what he says upon this theme refers wholly to the affection of man for man, of the binding force of high character and honor. He goes so far as to say that the true lover is to be compared with the true philosopher, rising from the contemplation of the many who are beautiful to the contemplation and love of the beauty that is abstract and absolute. In fact, when he discusses "beauty" he uses the word almost as the equivalent of "goodness,"—that is, in an ethical rather than in a physical sense. Therefore, "Platonic friendship," in its modern conventional meaning, is something which never entered Plato's mind.—From May Cosmopolitan.

The Value of Human Life.

A broad view of our present human existence reveals an entirely different condition from that shown by the spirit of pessimism—a spirit which exerts so potent an influence upon our contemporaries. The existence of the facts which pessimism sets forth in support of its views is not questioned: they remain, and deserve consideration. In reality, however, they constitute but one side of human life, which is fraught with a deeper meaning and involves far more at present than many of us become conscious of. The fact that this deeper meaning is too frequently relegated to the background and that the possibilities of the spiritual life are not sufficiently developed may be explained from the general state of modern culture. Great revolutions have been effected in the last centuries; life is directed into new channels; old doctrines are beginning to totter; and new ideas demand recognition. An equilibrium, however, has not yet been established. The law of compensation has not yet exercised its power to the fullest extent. Above all, there is still an absence of that energetic concentration which should convert man into a complete and harmonious organic entity, as opposed to the variety and multiplicity without—an entity capable of sifting, combining and clarifying all the innumerable impressions presented by the heterogeneous influence of the external world. An intellectual activity capable of rising superior to all the blows of fate is also lacking. It may, therefore, be said that the centrifugal forces are greater than the centripetal. Labor, with its enormous ramifications, is more powerful than the spiritual force within ourselves. Herein we must seek the answer to the question whether life contains more reason than meaningless complexity and whether true happiness can exist. Life, as conferred upon us, is not invested with a fixed and unchangeable value. It depends upon ourselves what value we are willing to give it. The more man seeks to concentrate his life, the more he seeks to develop a victorious intellectual activity productive of ever higher spiritual strength, the greater will be his ability to confront the complex phenomena of life with cheerfulness and courage. He will then readily understand the words of Vauvenargues: "Le monde est, ce qu'il doit être pour un être actif, plein d'obstacles" (The world is, what it ought to be to an active being, full of obstacles). In our day also happiness and confidence in the rational purpose of nature may be obtained by zealously and mightily developing the intellectual life, so that man may face all the multifarious phenomena of life as a unite endowed with strength of character and the power of conviction. Never were there greater possibilities in this direction than to-day; and it devolves upon man to avail himself of them, to the end that he may find good cheer and courage within himself and power to become victorious over the petty and depressing impressions which a first view of prevailing conditions produces. He will then tread the upward path ever sought by powerful and youthful natures, be they nations or individuals.—By Professor Rudolf Eucken in the April-June Forum.

Country Life in America.

The May number of that inspiring and practical magazine Country Life in America tells "How to Spend a Vacation." It is almost a double number in size, and its large pages are full of beautiful pictures and helpful suggestions for people of moderate means. "A Walking Vacation" shows just what a man needs to wear and carry on a mountain climbing trip of a few days or weeks. "How I Built my Vacation Home" is the story of a teacher who has made an eight-room house with his own hands at a cost of $400. "Vacation in a mountain Wagon" details a nine days driving trip of 315 miles which cost $75 for three persons. "A Camping Vacation" tells how three women camped for a month at a cost less than $11 for each person. "A House-boat Vacation" explains what it costs to buy and maintain a house-boat for people of moderate means. "Vacation Camps for Boys" shows how these model institutions are conducted. Other features of this vacation symposium include aquatic sports, canoeing, cruising, fishing, riding, and wheeling.

"The Collapse of Freak Farming" is a vigorous article by Professor L. H. Bailey which will be worth many dollars to people who contemplate raising ginseng, mushrooms, Angora goats, basket willows, skunks or other side issues of agriculture. It hits the "fancy farmer" hard. "How We Built the Grange" is the story of a suburban house that turned out exactly as it was planned. All the changes which the owners now care to make would not cost more than $50. The article explains the only way to avoid the terrible "extras" which are usually the sorest trials of home-building. "The All-Round Riding Horse" explains the points of a good one, tells what to pay and how to buy, how to manage a saddle-horse and gives suggestions to lady riders. "The Making of a Hedge" is extremely practical and the pictures are the best of the kind ever published in America. "Trout Culture as a Business" discusses a profitable new industry created by the sportsman's clubs which are restocking our streams, tells how to raise trout and shows by pictures the complete life-history of the gamiest of all fish. "The Poacher" is a magnificent double-page picture of an Indian spearing fish at night—a very strong and bold feature and a perfect miracle of photography. "Annuals and How to Grow Them" by Professor L. H. Bailey, the leading horticulturist of the country, tells how to grow sweet peas, pansies, China asters and like. "Strawberry Culture for Profit" is a series of personal stories of success in many parts of the country by people who have made net profits of $200 to $1,000 per acre.

The World's Work for May.

The Louisiana Purchase—its rapid progress and solid importance—by Charles M. Harvey, seems to be the leading and most timely article in the World's Work for May. Next to this, the editors have given emphasis to the building up of cities and suburban towns. Such articles as Transporting New York's Millions by W. W. Wheatley, which explains the difficulties of the rapid transit problem in the great metropolis, the intimate characterization by Arthur Goodrich of Mr. William Barclay Parsons, the man who is solving the problem, and an article on Building Towns to Order—the story of the rapid manufacture of suburban villages—by H. H. Lewis are full of practical and human interest. Another illustrated article—and all the foregoing are accompanied with handsome pictures—is Hutchins Hapgood's study of workers in the poorer districts of a great city entitled "The Earnestness that Wins Wealth." Among other important features are George Iles's explanation of how Canadians are being taught practical agriculture, an investigation of the work of "business engineers"—men who from the outside regulate the details of a business—by Raymond Stevens, Doctor Friedrich Hirth's article about American Opportunities in China, and a tribute paid to Yankee invention, full of striking facts about recent patents and their making, by Charles D. Davis. There are a number of short articles also, including one comparing the Naval Strength of the Powers by Captain Albert Gleaves, another by M. C. Miller about how Low Freight Rates are Made and an investigation by Grace L. Phillips of the kind of books read by children in the Ghetto of New York. Besides these are the monthly financial article—this time answering the question "Are the Basis of our Prosperity Secure?" a short appreciation of "J. P. M.'s" remarkable career by his friend, Edgar Mayhew Bacon, and the usual departments of editorial interpretation of events and of industrial progress.

The May Cosmopolitan.

Nineteen stories and articles and one hundred twelve illustrations form the contents of the May Cosmopolitan. J. Henniker Heaton, M. P., contributes an article on the British Parcel Post—particularly timely, in view of the plan, about which the entire mercantile world is showing so wide an interest, to introduce into this country the system of carrying parcels in the mail. Ella Adelia Fletcher is the author of an essay on "The Power and Beauty of Woman's Eyes." The wonderful possibilities of Scientific corn-culture are explained in an instructive paper, by

A. D. Shamel, of the Illinois Experiment Station, entitled "The Marvels of Corn Culture," illustrated with a series of exemplifying photographs. Sir Edwin Arnold has an essay on a strange subject for him to treat—the tying of knots, with many practical illustrations. A contribution which will be widely read is "Platonic Friendship," by Rafford Pyke. Mr. John Brisben Walker, offer "A Method of Equitable Taxation." Three interesting characters—Gustavus, Franklin Swift, Clement Acton Griscom, and George Gould—are sketched as "Captains of Industry." Among other features of the magazine appear "Romances of the World's Great Mines," by Samuel E. Moffett; "Teaching: its Hardships and Rewards," by Reverend James C. Mackenzie, Ph. D.; "The Food Laboratory"—an article on How to Administer the Kitchen—by John Brisben Walker; "Society's Amateur Circus," by Helmet Stag Archer; and a philosophical essay by H. G. Wells on "Accepted Institutions as Educational Agencies." The May Cosmopolitan is remarkably strong in fiction. Among the contributors are Henry Seton Merriman, Olivier Henry, Frank R. Robinson, Julia Valentine Bond, and Tom Masson.

The dedication of the St. Louis world's fair is the occasion of a brilliant series of articles in the May Review of Reviews on the Louisiana Purchase and its results, the exposition in forecast, and the city of St. Louis. The same number has an outline of the plans formed for the municipal exposition to be held at Dresden this summer, and the noteworthy features of several other European fairs and congresses are summarized in an article on the great gatherings of the summer and autumn at home and abroad. The character sketch of the month is by Mr. W. T. Stead, his subject being the Right Honorable George Wyndham, whose name has been immortalized by its connection with the Irish land bill introduced last month in the British Parliament. An illustrated article by Mr. F. N. Stacy describes the great ships for the Pacific trade being built at New London, Connecticut, for Mr. James J. Hill. There are several pages of illustrated notes on the spring fiction and other new books, and "The Progress of the World," "Cartoon Comments," and other editorial departments are marked by a distinctive freshness and timeliness.

THE following additional appointments of George H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, are made for Lamoni Stake and Des Moines District: Sunday, May 31, Norwood, Iowa; Tuesday and Wednesday, June 2 and 3, Centerville, Iowa; Tuesday and Wednesday, June 9 and 10, Allendale, Missouri; Thursday and Friday, June 11 and 12, Ellston, Iowa; Sunday, June 14, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOME of the Saints are responding quite promptly to Bro. T. J. Sheldon's call for funds to purchase a bicycle to help him in his work in the great city of London. Those desirous of assisting should send their contributions to Bishop E. L. Kelley at once.

1. By upright conversation and correct personal conduct, make accusation and trial entirely unnecessary. This is the safest and best rule.

2. If at any time one is led into speech or action that is objected to and is so far obnoxious, as to be the subject of labor by any one offended, it is a safe rule to admit at once what one has said or done, and if the person aggrieved insists that he is hurt or injured, ask pardon and let the matter drop. If reconciliation is not practicable in this way and a charge is filed with the proper officer and a court of elders is appointed, honestly state to this court what was said or done, just as it occurred, without any attempt at palliation or justification, and let the elders decide as to the extent of the wrong-doing; then accept the verdict of the court in good faith and do what is enjoined by it.

A Chinese proverb has it that "he that goes to law sells a cow to win a cat." This is often exemplified in every-day life among so-called Christians.

If any one is accused wrongfully it is often better to let the accusation fall than to give it continuous life by an incautious and fruitless defense against it.

A lie may "travel from Maine to Georgia before truth can pull on her boots," but when truth pulls in at the end of the route she will usually find the lie to be in a sadly shrunken and disreputable condition and unworthy of any notice.

3. While no man can be infallible, it is hardly safe for one to be too sure of his own wisdom and accuracy in all that he may say or do. So when one has done or said anything of which complaint is made, it is well that the one accused shall keep good natured and let an examination be made as to the facts and the wrong-doing said to be involved, before denying too vehemently what is alleged.

4. No one should proceed against another by private information to other than the one alleged to be an offender. Accusations of wrong-doing should be made to proper officers to secure attention and action. No officer can feel justified in proceeding against any one charged with wrong-doing unless the evidence relied on to establish the charge is made known to him, and is available to his demand if he proceeds upon the information given him. So, every man should feel safe if he knows himself to be innocent, though rumor may have ugly things afloat concerning him, but of which proper officers have no knowledge.

5. A good way also to avoid the bad results of elders' courts is to deal honestly and frankly with every other body, and in case of misunderstanding between brethren, or even outside persons, seek an opportunity to secure a proper understanding of any difference that may have occurred between the persons interested. In almost every instance an understanding may be reached, if both keep their tempers under control. By all means if one becomes excited and angry the other should be steady and calm in speech and conduct.

6. A final safe rule is for one never to say or do anything against another's interest and good will that will justly subject one's self to reproach, complaint, accusation, or trial.

JOSEPH THE SEER IN CONSIDERATION.

The following taken from the Standard, of Ogden, Utah, for May 4, 1903, may possibly show the trend of popular opinion in Utah toward the reinstatement of the Prophet Joseph Smith in the esteem of the people.

There may be nothing in this casual newspaper jotting; but if there is it is certainly not amiss. President Brigham Young was a long time before the people of Utah, and with good reason for it; as he was to them an able leader in material things, success in which finally made the state of Utah possible.

It may be that a proper monument in memory of the Seer, put in a convenient and sightly spot may help the people so long unable to see him behind the shadow of President Young, may incite a more earnest inquiry into the grander, more spiritual teaching of that neglected Seer, and help to loosen the bands so deftly woven about those who so eagerly suffered themselves to become entangled in the sophistries of the doctrines of sealing and plural marriages, and dogmas kindred thereto.

It is a little striking, however, that this building of a monument to the memory of Joseph Smith should have been put off until it is through the effort of a Smith that it is done. It would have been far more graceful if it had been done in the time when the Youngs were in power:

IN HONOR OF PROPHET.

A few words dropped by President Joseph F. Smith shortly before his departure for St. Louis have started a buzz of expectancy in the higher circles of the Mormon church. The words, it is believed, foreshadow an undertaking that will add immensely to the architectural beauty of Salt Lake City and place fresh laurels upon the brows of Mormon architects.

The exact words of the church president have not been preserved, but their substance was that the Latter-day Saints, in their devotion to the memory of Brigham Young, had failed in the deference due to their leader and prophet, the original Joseph Smith. While the name of Young is glorified with two colleges, a memorial hall at the Latter-day Saint university, and a bronze statue of heroic size at the corner of Temple square, there is not a single monument to recall the life, virtues or name of the father of Mormonism.

To do tardy justice to the memory of the prophet and revelator, President Smith suggests that the corner occupied by the old Deseret News building be set apart as a site for a monument worthy of his memory, which should bear his name.

MINISTERS IN THEIR FIELDS OF WORK.

It is not expected that the elders sent out into the "harvest fields of the Lord," will attempt to perform impossibilities, or do what is manifestly out of their power to accomplish. While this is true, as above stated, it is expected that when the elders, or other officers permit their names to go before the quorum of appointing officers, and receive appointments, which appointments are ratified by indorsement in open conference, all those thus appointed will use all diligence to get into their respective fields and to give their whole time and exclusive attention to labor in those fields, subject to such changes only as may be made by the missionaries in charge, or such as may result from the interference of sickness or death, the unavoidable accidents to which all men are liable.

That there may be now and then an interference in a field by a call from some other "Come over and help us," will be conceded; but in every such case, as a rule, such call should be made either through the one in charge, or be submitted to his consideration and judgment. Order is said to be "heaven's first law," and we can not reasonably expect others to "be in order" if we are ourselves not in order. This is as true of the powers of heaven as it can possibly be of the "powers that be in the church" which are "ordained of God." (Romans 13: 1.)

It is decidedly unseemly for any one, high or low in an organized body, to assume to himself the right to disregard or throw off the restraints resulting from association with and fellowship in that body, to become a law unto himself.

The elder who has an ambition to be of use to the general cause and to obtain a good repute among his coworkers, can secure this end more quickly and surely by a close and persistent minding of his own business in his own calling and within his own appointed sphere of action, than he possibly can in any other way. Besides this the elder who leaves his own field for that of another, except upon the most urgent and justifiable reasons, will subject himself to severe criticism from his associates, and may lose the ground he seeks to gain by the prestige of appointment. Then stick to your fields, brethren. Let others do as they may; their remissness of duty can not serve you as an excuse justifiable either here or hereafter. "Bro. Joseph did it," will shield no one from the rod in the Master's hand. To his Master he must stand or fall; and so must you, both answering to the same Redeemer, the "Lord of life and glory."

Do not leave your appointed field, for any cause, nor for any period of time, without at once notifying the one having charge and give the reason for going, and, if not leaving the field because of a sudden call, or the occurrence of unforeseen contingency, secure the attention of the one in charge and go with his knowledge and consent. If going into another's field notify him of your intention and the fact of occupying within his field. This will insure the observance of the admonition, "Let all things be done decently and in order."

We should all remember that while we are all laboring for Christ, we are not collaborators with him, unless our labor is performed in honesty of intention and in fact. Just as those who worship should do so "in spirit and in truth," so should those who labor in the field, the "harvest-field of the Lord," do so in honest good faith with the Lord and the church.

We have seriously considered the question what the Savior meant when he said:

He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me.—Matthew 10: 37.

If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he can not be my disciple.—Luke 14: 26.

"Or in other words, is afraid to lay down their life for my sake, can not be my disciple."—Holy Scriptures, Luke 14: 26.

What we understand by it, is in substance this; that whoever enters into relation with Jesus Christ by the adoption provided in the gospel economy accepts the call to the priesthood and enters into the work of the ministry, and thereafter places father, mother, brothers, sisters, wife, children, houses or lands before his duty to Christ is not worthy to be his disciple.

This may appear hard, but we are not responsible for it. We do not like the word "hate" occurring in the text from Luke, but it is in both versions, and must have a meaning in agreement with other sayings of the same Master, such as "love your enemies;" "But he that hateth his brother is in darkness;" "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer;" "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar."

Therefore, we believe that the true intent of the text is that the word "hate" should be understood in the comparative sense; that is, that love and duty to God should be first, love for other things secondary. The man who can not do this, is not in the truest sense a disciple.

Another thing it is essential to notice. The active ministerial force is made up of men who are "poor in this world's goods." This is the rule with hardly an exception. The Lord sends this ministry out to preach the gospel, and to prove the world. It is a standard test established by the Lord; "By this shall ye know my disciples; they will feed you and clothe you and give you money." This test is intended to apply to both classes of disciples (learners), those who bear the glad tidings to the world, and those both in and out of the church who give (consecrate) of their good things that the minister may rejoice in his ministry. The test applied (nothing like applied Christianity) in this way. The man who gives does so out of a good heart with upright intention to help the good gospel work. He gives to the missionary with trustful confidence that his donation to the cause has been worthily bestowed and will not be misunderstood, nor be misapplied. From his understanding of the preaching he has heard he has a right to expect that the preacher is not a spendthrift, and careless in what he does with what is cheerfully bestowed. The giver will also expect that the missionary will pay proper heed to the rules of the church in regard to reporting to the Bishop what assistance he receives as he travels in his field. If the missionary receives more than his needs as a minister in the field requires, the rule provides that what is over should be sent to his family, if he has one, or to the Bishop for the general fund, if he has no family; so that he too may be a consistent helper in the Lord's work.

The test as applied to the disciples in the church measures very accurately the willingness, readiness, and power to do, of all. Those out of the church who now and again help the missionary, do not expect ever to make inquiry as to how, or where what they have given has been paid away by him who received it, they leave that matter with the servant and the Master to settle. If, however, it comes to their knowledge that the one they have helped has proved himself to have been unworthy, it closes their breasts of charity to others of the recreant minister's associate laborers and tends to throw suspicion upon all. On the contrary those in the church, who give of their substance that the gospel work may be carried on, do expect that the manner in which their means bestowed for the work of the ministry is used, may be inquired into, and that there shall be no unnecessary waste of temporal things gathered for the work. Their consecrations, of whatever sort they may be, are intended to be used for the care and support of the families of their brethren in the missionary field, and who are not permitted by their calling and obligation to remain at home to prosecute their personal affairs. Missionaries who forget, or purposely ignore the principle involved in their appointment—that of labor in the field to which they have been appointed—and who linger at their homes, either in idleness, or on personal business outside of their appointments, and without previous understanding with those in charge and the Bishop, subject themselves to reproof and possible censure, for a serious neglect of duty. If he who works for another in the affairs of this world, is justly expected to meet his obligation to labor in accord with agreement; why should not he who works with God as a colaborer with Christ, be expected by his associates and his colaborers to keep the terms of his agreement.

Sooner or later the lines will necessarily be more strictly drawn, and the principle "the idler in Zion shall not eat of the bread of the industrious," will be applied.

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches."—Revelation 2: 29; 3: 22.

MASSACRE OF RUSSIAN JEWS.

The papers of the day are teeming with news from the Russian town of Kischineff of a massacre of Jews accompanied by atrocities of inhuman treatment bordering on the unbelievable. Murder and rapine in their most horrid forms ran riot; neither age, sex nor condition availing to receive mercy.

Below are some statements concerning it:

NEW YORK, May 17.—More details of the atrocities perpetrated in the massacre of the Jews at Kischineff have been received in letters to relatives in this city. One of these came from Shaie David Chaimowitch, and was addressed to his cousin, Joseph Samuel. It says that after the rioting ceased the bodies of eight Jews were found hanging in a slaughter-house. The letter is dated April 18, old style (May 1 new style) and is as follows:

"In my last letter I have already related to you the terrible outrages committed against our brethren in Kischineff. It originated by a group of small boys throwing stones into Jewish houses. These boys were encouraged by the police. Later a band of ruffians dressed in red shirts arrived on the scene. They looked as if they were organized by the police, being followed by them without molestation. They commenced by assaulting little girls in the streets and torturing them to death. The hands and feet of one carpenter were sawed off. Of other Jews the lips were cut off, the tongues were torn out—as I have written to you in my last letter.

"The lieutenant colonel of the garrison in Kischineff, a Christian, but a very humane man, went to the governor for instructions. The latter told him not to interfere. He protested and went to telegraph to St. Petersburg, but his message was not accepted by the telegraph authorities. He then went to Bender, a neighboring town, and telegraphed to St. Petersburg. After twenty-four hours a reply came to the governor to suppress the riots and use force if need be. It took but a few minutes to restore order.

"M. Poushkin, governor general, is here now and is conducting the investigation of the affair. While I am closing this I find that the butchers who went to the slaughter-house for the first time since the massacre have returned with eight Jewish corpses they found hanging there."

Another letter received from L. Greenberg from his brother in Kischineff brings the following tale of woe:

"The massacre here is much the same as there used to be in Spain. Old Jews are taken daily and the beards flayed from their faces. Many of my friends have been found nailed, hands, feet, and ears, to walls or trees. Two little children of one of my neighbors were torn limb from limb and the fragments thrown to the dogs. Before my eyes this morning a little girl was seized and her eyes gouged from their sockets. Many boys and young men were mutilated in the most horrible manner. The rioters take fiendish delight in cutting the breasts from nursing mothers and in throwing their victims from the roofs of houses into the streets. The soldiers are few and the affair becomes daily more horrible. May the great God help us!"

Leading minds among the Jews outside of Russia, are of the opinion that the only permanent relief from the intolerable persecution to which the Jews are being subjected, is to be found in the Zionistic movement and the establishment of the Jews in a state by themselves. Palestine is mentioned as possibly the most available place in view at present, with Cyprus as a secondary choice.

From an editorial in the Record-Herald for May 18, from which paper we also clip the items above we insert a reference to this movement:

Critics of this ambitious design point to the great practical difficulties in its way, which include both the difficulty of securing the desired state from any existing power and the difficulty of getting the Jews themselves to settle upon some single and satisfactory plan. The territory most commonly suggested for colonization is Palestine, and as a matter of fact numerous small Jewish colonies have been established there which seem to be doing fairly well. Certainly there must be some inducement to keep them there, for the growth of the Jewish population during the last twenty-five years has been remarkable. There were, it is calculated, about fourteen thousand Jews in the country at the beginning of the period, whereas now there are some sixty thousand. Probably half or nearly half of that number are living in Jerusalem, but many of the immigrants have taken to tilling the soil, and it is claimed that the results of their labors give promise of permanent success.

The world is in such a turmoil that there seems hardly a chance for a settlement of the Jewish question, as a race problem, in so satisfactory a way as this Zionistic idea would be. But the prophecies regarding the Jew may be fulfilled by the enforcement resulting from the cruel and persistent persecution of the nation so sorely tried in the crucible.

The friends of the Jew may hope that the issue so long pending may have been at last decided and God will bring about their emancipation, though it may be by "man's inhumanity to man."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

W. E. La Rue recently sent a contribution to Bishop Kelley to apply on the Graceland debt, and wrote: "I have long felt it my duty to contribute something to assist this most worthy institution. Surely this church can and ought to heartily sustain one college, even though it requires some sacrifice to do it."

A. L. Piper wrote from Milford, Michigan, May 11: "If any of the elders are passing by tell them to call and rest. The latch-string is always on the outside. Mother White is eighty-six and is extremely well preserved. She joined the church in an early day under Elder Serin's preaching."

THE SALVATION OF THE LORD.

SERMON BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH, DELIVERED AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, APRIL 12, 1903.

Reported by Elder Russell Archibald.

Permit me to invite your attention this afternoon to the reading of a few verses found in Lamentations:

It is of the Lord's mercy that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning: great is thy faithfulness. The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in him. The Lord is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him. It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord. It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. He sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him. He putteth his mouth in the dust; if so be there may be hope. He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him: he is filled full with reproach. For the Lord will not cast him off for ever: but though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth, to turn aside the right of a man before the face of the Most High, to subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not.

Thus reads the third chapter of Lamentations, beginning with the twenty-second verse and reading to the conclusion of the thirty-sixth.

I desire to invite special attention this afternoon to the twenty-sixth verse of this chapter: "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord."

There are several propositions in this statement, a part of which I desire to examine as briefly as I can, to make it plain. The first statement you will at once accept, I have no doubt. It needs no argument to convince one that it is good to hope. It is good for us to hope, even though we never obtain the objects of our hope; that is, if the thing hoped for is good, if it be pure, if it be holy, if it be elevating; whether we ever gain that hope or not the effort that we make in endeavoring to gain it will bring its reward and we shall obtain something for the effort, whether we reach the ultimatum of our hope or not. This is so apparent to every one who has ever thought along these lines that it is not necessary for me to introduce any argument or evidence to convince you that the first proposition made in this text is true. It is good to hope. "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord."

Now I want to say a few words in regard to this statement that we must quietly wait. I want to invite your attention, in connection with this thought, to the fact that the most potent forces in the universe are silent. It is not those things that cause the most friction and make the most noise that are the most powerful. We are sometimes much impressed with them, when the agencies that are around us are at work; when there is the disturbance of elements which cause the earthquake, which shake the very foundations upon which we stand; when the powerful cyclone passes through the land and lays destruction in its track, we think it a powerful demonstration. But there is not so much power, there is not so much potency in them as there are in the quiet influences that pervade this world of ours. The force of gravitation that holds not only our world and all things within it, but all worlds, seen and unseen, in equilibrium, does its work silently and quietly. The mighty, potent forces of light and heat that cause the generation of the seed, the budding, the flowering and the fruitage, are silent in their operations, but their results are tremendous. These silent forces of nature are the most potent in the universe; and those forces in the character of the human being that do their work unobtrusively and quietly, are the greatest and most powerful influences for good that we know anything about.

We sometimes think the man who makes a great show of himself, the man who is prominent in everything, the man whose voice is always heard, no matter what the occasion may be, and the public is attracted to him, is the most powerful man, the wisest man, the best man, the ablest man. A greater mistake could not be made than this. It is not the noise we make that makes us of influence and usefulness in this world, but it is the spirit of a quiet influence that pervades the mind, that sheds its influence upon the minds that are around it, that has the greatest power in this world. It is not he who in the heat of passion makes his physical powers to be felt, or makes his presence felt, that has the most powerful influence among men, but those who move quietly along in their avocations and duties, wielding an influence all the time for good.

We have been wrongly educated in regard to this question. We have been taught to believe that men were greatest who made the greatest demonstrations in this world. We were taught when we were but children in school that some characters who lived in the world in generations gone by were great, and we have associated the word great with their names. We talk of Alexander the Great, and of others to whom we attach this word, but they were not great; no, far from it. The world lay in subjection at the feet of Alexander, and in a measure at the feet of others; empires trembled at his approach; men's hearts failed them when he spoke and they did his bidding; but he was not great. Far from it. His greatness consisted in that which is of no practical use to men; he spread death and carnage and destruction around him, but there was no influence, or but little practical influence for good, and there was one man in the world that Alexander never brought under subjection. Others did his bidding, but this one man conquered him, and that was Alexander. He died a poor, drunken, besotted wretch, because he could not govern himself. The very place where a man ought to begin, Alexander failed, and there hundreds and thousands of others have fallen because they could not control themselves and bring themselves under subjection. Because they were slaves to their appetites, or slaves to their passions, they went down, we might say, if not disgraced in the eyes of the world they ought to have been, and are in the minds of those who think deeply and truly.

The passions that govern the human breast, those that have the greatest influence do their work with but little demonstration. Anger causes us to make more demonstration than love, but it is not so powerful, so potent. It is the influence of love shed from the human heart that makes man better himself, lifts his very soul up, and makes him a power for good among men.

There have been thousands, no doubt, who have gone down in silence to the dust, forgotten, whose names have never been known to history, whose names no earthly lips repeat to-day, whose names will never be known again in this life (notwithstanding they will be written upon the records of eternity at the last day), who are grander, better, greater than Alexander, greater than the men who have posed before this world as strong men,—men and women who have moved quietly along in their sphere, perhaps their names not known outside of the immediate community in which they lived, not known possibly outside of their family circle, have done their work in the home, at the fireside, and have shed an influence there that has been felt in the hearts of those of their fellows in touch with them. And this influence has gone on and on, transmitted from generation to generation, like the waves that are disturbed by some foreign substance, going outward and outward until their effect will not be known until they lash the further shores of eternity. These individuals have not been known, they may never be known to the world till the final reckoning day; but when some men whom we call great shall be weighed in the balance and found wanting, we will be awakened to the fact that great men have lived, that great women have lived, whom we have never known and never heard of, whose influence has been exercised where it could do the most good.

I speak of these things in connection with this statement, that "it is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord," to show you that it is not necessary to make a demonstration. It may be, at times, necessary to assert ourselves, but we are not to judge of the character of men and of their usefulness by the noise they make, by their bringing themselves into prominence, by their attracting the attention of the world. There is a better side to man, there is something that we can never weigh—as I said here upon a former occasion,—man can not weigh this character of his fellow man. It is impossible for us to judge. It will take a better mind, a purer mind, a stronger mind than ours to weigh the men that we see passing before us day by day—those who will be known there, but will never be known till that time. No man can judge that, and I am glad that there a time coming when men will be judged according to their works. Not according to what we see upon the surface, not according to what we see this man or that man doing to-day or to-morrow, but judged as a whole; all of the silent forces of his nature, as well as the things that come into prominence, taken into the account, and the man will be weighed for just what he is.

"It is good," says this writer, "that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." I have noticed, too, that the man who controls himself the best, that keeps silent—sometimes anyway—and acts in self-possession, is more liable to act wisely than he who is always placing himself prominently before the public. We are safer to act deliberately than we are to act rashly. But the text says that we are to "hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." Are we not now in possession of that salvation? Have we not already obtained it? If so, why is it good now to hope and quietly wait? In one sense I believe we have received it; in another sense I do not believe that we have received the salvation of the Lord. I look upon the salvation of the Lord as being a very broad thing to think of; it is grand, it is far-reaching in its consequences and in its possibilities.

We have been saved from some things, and inasmuch as the Lord has saved us we have received the salvation of the Lord. If there are dangers yet confronting us (and there are); if there are still before us pit-falls in which we are liable to step; if there are yet things around us that are liable to estrange us from our faith and lead us from the path of right and righteousness, we have not been saved from them. When a danger threatens me and I pass safely by that danger, whether it be a danger to the physical man or the spiritual, or the mental; if I have a trial and I overcome, I am saved—saved from that mistake. I have overcome, but until the last battle shall be fought, until the final victory shall be won, I have not been fully saved. And I am admonished here in this text that it is good that I "both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." I should then be upon the alert; I should be carefully examining things as they appear before me, upon this side or that, be upon my guard and soliciting the aid of the influences that God has promised to exercise. I should be careful lest I am not always saved as I have been in the past.

I do not know what it is to be saved from the consequences of what some of my brethren term the mistakes of the sectarian world; I do not know anything about it, I never was in danger of them. I am, what little there is of me a product of this latter-day work, and it seems to me sometimes that it would have the same effect upon me were I plucked from it, as it would if the plant there were plucked from the soil in which it grows. I know nothing else, I am nothing else, and would not know where to go; and yet I realize that there are dangers within, as well as dangers without. And though I have not been subject to the risk in the whirlpool of sectarianism, I am in danger of being beset by sins and by temptations within that will cause my overthrow. I have been saved from some things, but not from all. It is our duty to hope and quietly wait until the last battle shall be fought and we shall be fully saved.

I am thankful for the conviction that has come to my mind through the experiences of the past, through the years that I have been engaged in striving to serve God. That experience has taught me that the soul attuned to God, the spirit that is lifted up into the purer and better atmosphere, can commune with the higher powers; it can be blessed and can feel the influences of a force and power not its own; it can receive that which no mortal man can bestow. I am thankful for the developments of science to-day (though some of us did not need them) which confirm our experiences and prove these things to be true. I have been told, and I presume it is true, that if two musical instruments are exactly in accord, so that there is not a particle of difference in their tone, if they are in perfect harmony, when the notes are struck upon one the other feels the vibrations; and this fact is being demonstrated in late discoveries.

I am thankful for the success of wireless telegraphy, for it has demonstrated the fact that man, by his own ingenuity, by the exercise of his own brain, can form two instruments in such exact harmony and accord that the vibrations of one may be felt by the other upon the other side of the globe, and communications may pass from one to the other because of their perfect harmony. If the mind of man can construct, by its ingenuity, a machine that can do that, how much greater the possibilities of minds attuned to each other, in harmony with each other. If the machine can do it certainly the mind can. I am more than ever convinced of the truth of that principle, which has been demonstrated in your lives no doubt, as well as mine, when we have felt by the silent touch of unseen power the thoughts that were passing through the mind of a loved one. We have felt their sorrows and their joys when we have been far away and no means of communication but the silent influences that pervaded the heart and enlivened the soul could be heard or felt. And if this be true, is it not true that the higher a man rises and the better he is, the grander and purer his thoughts, the more he is in touch with God. And if the influences from the divine mind control his mind, they bring to him that which no earthly power can bestow, raise him higher than the influences of this world can raise him, higher than his thoughts can teach him to soar, and he can commune with God.

We listen to the forces of nature around us and they speak in tones louder than thunder, that the hope we have is well founded. We have, in our simplicity, been praying, Christians have been praying and the world has been worshiping for centuries that are gone, and have felt that somewhere in the universe there was a Being who heard them. If they were asked to explain how God could hear the voices that are offering petitions to him, how he could take cognizance of the heart and the impulses of the soul, they could not explain; they were unable to demonstrate, in reason, how this could be, but they felt it was so. Now further developments which come to our understanding tell us that it is true in nature, as well as true in fact, in revelation, that minds in accord with each other commune; and the higher a man rises into the atmosphere where God moves the more perfect the communion. And yet I would not have you think (I can not believe myself) that revelation as it has come to the world, to-day or in past ages, fully represents God in his greatness, in his goodness, in his love. Oh no, we have not risen to the heights, we have not comprehended the depths of his love; we have not been able to see God as he is and understand him as he is willing to be revealed. We have caught the whisperings of his Spirit, we have heard the voice of God, either audibly or silently, in our souls; it has brought to us what we were prepared to receive, it has brought to us just what our development demanded.

But there is something higher than that. No doubt much of the knowledge of God and the revelations that have come to us, the inspiration that has wrought upon the world and lifted it to the heights where it now stands, represents man. A revelation represents the condition of man; it represents just what man has been attuned to receive, that much and no more. The prophet that speaks in the name of the Lord reveals his standing before God; he does not reveal God. He reveals just how near he is to God; and the character of his revelation, if we were able to measure it, would measure the standing of the man. It does not measure the heights of exaltation of the divine one, though it may be true. And what is true of one is true of all others. That which we feel, that which we know, that which we realize, measures our capacity, measures our standing; it measures the heights unto which we have climbed in the grace and favor of God.

We are not yet fully saved then, and let me say further in regard to this communion with God, the man (as I remarked here upon a former occasion, I believe a few weeks ago), that thinks he never makes a mistake in a spiritual sense, that he never misunderstands spiritual phenomena, that he knows clearly everything that comes to him, has not had much experience with spiritual things. Our education is too limited to weigh all these spiritual influences and we make mistakes sometimes,—not that the spirit of truth makes mistakes, but our impression of the thing that comes to us is not perfect and we are liable to believe that we have received testimony of things sometimes that is not true.

We find that in this effort to serve God and rise to higher ground than this, we must do as I would do physically, if I fall; get up, try again. If my way seems slippery and my feet will not remain where I desire to place them, and because of these conditions they sometimes bring me down, my only salvation is to get up and go on again and again, hoping that by and by I shall ascend the heights and realize the goal of my ambition. What is true then in regard to the physical way is true also in a spiritual way. If sometimes we think our way dark and we know not what to do and we are sinking, we must go to work with our might; and if we find ourselves disappointed and we fall, we can make nothing by lying there. Our only salvation is to go on. And if the atmosphere is not clear where we are, that caused us to slip and fall, climb upward until the clouds shall disappear beneath our feet, and the sunshine shall come in upon our souls, and we may know as we are known and see as we are seen. For that blessed promise is held out to us in the word of God, and I believe in my soul that we can realize it if we will. "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord."

To be fully saved is to be in a condition where we have passed every obstacle that stands in the way of our progress, overcome every influence that would injure us, and curbed every passion that would bring us low, cultivated those graces that will inspire the mind and raise the soul, until we are able to stand in the presence of God, and realize more than we have ever thought; for we have not been able to penetrate, I am satisfied, the privileges that are ours.

"The salvation of the Lord." We look forward sometimes to that day when we shall stand in the streets of the holy city, when we shall walk upon streets paved with gold, when we shall see God and Christ upon the throne, when angels and arch-angels, cherubim and seraphim shall chant his praises, but we must not lose sight of the fact that we must be saved every day from things that threaten our peace and purity; from things that would destroy our souls, darken our intellect, and besmirch our characters. Salvation is something we must enjoy all the time, and when threatened here we must so live that we may be saved from that threatened danger, so that when threatened upon the other side we may also live that we may be saved from danger there; and so long as there are conditions around us that would destroy us, we must live in possession of that power which will save us. Do all that we may and trust for the power that will help us when and where we can not help ourselves.

We hear sometimes of people being defeated. They say a man was right but he lost; he was upon the right side of the question but the wrong prevailed. No, there is no such thing as that. There may be apparent defeat where right is in the balance with wrong; it may look to us as though all hope was gone; it may look to us as though the forces arrayed upon the side of right were going down in the conflict; but right and victory are too closely associated to ever be separated,—they can not be separated. There may be clouds that pass before those who view them, between the one and the other, that obscure the vision; but as certainly as God lives, as certainly as truth is truth and right is right, victory and truth are one and will never part company; they must overcome, they must be successful, there is no possibility of it being otherwise.

We gain much sometimes through what seems to be defeat. The man who knows how to accept what the world calls defeat, the man who knows how to meet disappointment, the man who can meet it bravely and truly and keep possession of himself, act wisely and discreetly and with judgment in the hour when he seems to be crushed, is gaining strength, is gaining power and influence in the right. He is gaining standing and acceptance with God that will count in the final time when the last battle is to be fought and the decisive victory is to be gained. There is much more sometimes in this schooling, more that tends to a man's development in what seems to be defeat to him, than there is in victory. Victory is not always glorious; shallow at times it may be. It has come sometimes upon a man to make him forget himself, and the means by which he obtained his success; he loses sight of the principles by which he gained what he has; loses control and falls to rise no more. But the man who schools himself in adversity and makes the best of it, keeps himself in possession; it is liable to humble him and make him better than he otherwise could be. He can never fail.

The Apostle Paul says he is persuaded that all things work together for good to them that serve the Lord and who are the called according to his purpose. He did not say, however, that everything would be pleasant. We may come to the conclusion that when he said all things shall work together for good, he meant to say that every time we make an effort we shall succeed in doing what we wanted to do; but he did not say that. He did not say everything shall work to your good, or apparent good, but all things shall work together for good. The defeat of to-day coupled with the victory of to-morrow; the sorrow of yesterday with the joy of to-day; the trials of the past with the successes of the future, all together, each bringing to us its lesson, each bringing to us, in effect, its development, will work together for good to them that love God. There is no experience of life that we can not gather something out of that will do us good, and make us better for that experience, if we but receive the lessons that come to us; but if we get discouraged, if we cease to hope, then we are lost indeed. "We are saved," says the Apostle, "by hope," and I believe it. It should not discourage us when other things lie in the way of duty, but we should hope; without hope we can never be saved, because we would give up the effort, cease the struggle, lay down the arms and cease to fight for victory. Hope will bear us upward and onward amidst the scowls and frowns of the world; amidst apparent defeat. Crushed to the earth we may rise again. It is said by the poet that "Truth crushed to earth will rise again," and he that is in possession of the truth, though crushed to the earth, will rise again, for so long as the truth is in him it will bring him up victorious in the end.

We have no reason to fear. All other things may pass away but truth will triumph, and by and by, if these characters of ours are patterned and formed by the influence of truth upon our souls, wherever we may find it, they will live and shine amid the wreck of worlds and the crush of matter; when everything else shall pass away we shall live, and live gloriously in victory, over everything that stands in the way of progress.

"It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord."

QUOTATIONS REGARDING FLOWERS AND MUSIC.

"Soul, perceive thy perfect hour!
Let thy life burst into flower;
Heaven is opening to bestow
More than thou canst think or know:
Now to thy true height arise,
Enter now thou paradise.
In to-day to-morrow see,—
Now is immortality!"

How this reminds us of lost opportunities. So many times we can not see our chances to make us happier, and better, also help our associates.

"There's not a single happy hour,—
An hour that's ever worth the living,—
But holds the truth within its power,
That happiness is God's own giving;

"That He in whom all fullness dwells,
Who gives to each of his good pleasure,
Reserves a bliss that far excels
The compass of our finite measure.

"My pleasant draught but makes me bold
To taste a drop of Heaven's sweetness,
And find the tiniest flower doth hold
An atom of the Lord's completeness."

Do we realize the wonderful works of God? When you see the beautiful flowers, do they remind you of the Creator? And when at night you gaze on the grandeur of the star-spangled heavens, do you utter a prayer of thankfulness that you are permitted to live in this wonderful world?

"Sound, sound the clarion, shrill the fife,
To all the sensual world proclaim,
One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name."

Do we contrast a true Christian's life with those who live in sin or those who are pretending to be Christians and yet are holding on to many things of the world? Some things we do now we may not call them sins; but he that soweth to the wind shall of the whirlwind reap destruction.

"It was only a seed that fell,
A downy and tiny seed;
And few that saw it could tell
What an evil and pestilent weed
Would spring from that little sphere,
With power to spread at the root
Till it choked out all blossoms of cheer,
And cut off all promise of fruit."

Do we ever neglect Sunday-school or prayer-meeting, because we seemingly can not make the effort to attend? We are more intensely interested in our position or something pertaining to the world. Are we willing to make sacrifices for the work in order that it may prosper?

"If only we give him his royal seat,
The earthly music will take its place,
And tremble around its feet,—
Sweeter than ever, because to our hearts
The Master is still more sweet."

"The lives which seem so poor and low,
The hearts which are so cramped, so dull,
The baffled hopes, the impulse slow,
Thou takest, touchest all, and lo
They blossom to the beautiful!"

Have you ever noticed the change in a person who has led a sinful life, and then becomes truly converted, that is, accepts the gospel in its fullness and strives to make every advancement? How different the expression, how much nicer appearance they make, and they are so good, that we can not help but love them.

"Glory to God, on earth good will and peace:
The song endures, the singers pass away,
To sing it haply in a fairer day
Where never discords come, nor concords cease.

"We sing it, too, with hearts that keep the key
Though voices falter,—listening evermore
For far, sweet echoes from that golden shore
Where we, too, hope one day in peace to be.

"Something there is in death not all unkind,
He hath a gentler aspect looking back;
For flowers may bloom in the dread thunder's track,
And even the cloud that struck with light was lined."

Do we realize that all clouds are silver-lined? So many times they may appear so dark that we can not catch a glimpse of the silver lining, but it is there nevertheless. If we would only look up instead of down, we could pierce the darkness, and realize that the hand of the Father is over us.

"O fields that know no sorrow!
O state that knows no strife!
O princely bowers! O land of flowers!
O realm and home of life!"

AUTHORITATIVE INTREPRETATION.

I would ask the attention of Protestants and Catholics to a consideration of some good solid reasons which have influenced many honest, thoughtful, intelligent and sensible people to become members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in spite of the sacrifice which it involved. Catholics claim a succession of authority from Jesus Christ to Leo XIII, and the right to interpret scripture for all mankind.

Protestants protest against that and claim the right of private interpretation of the Bible. This brings the present condition in the so-called Christian world—babel.

Protestants assume that the Bible is the only foundation on which the Christian religion must rest for its teachings—not only that it is the word of God, from Genesis to Revelation, but that nothing else is the word of God. Catholics agree with Protestants in the point that the Bible is the only inspired book amongst men, though Catholics recognize a few more books in their Bible than do the Protestants.

I know of no reason why some of the books included in the Apocrypha should not be recognized the same as, or better than, the gospel of Mark, or the Book of Kings, Chronicles, and other books which might be compared.

Thus far there is a degree of unity amongst Protestants, Catholics, and Latter Day Saints. However, there are and have been recently men on earth who have written scripture with as much authority as any of the holy prophets possessed since the world began.

On June 25, 1833, the Presidency wrote, "Respecting the Apocrypha, the Lord said to us that there are many things in it which were true, and there were many things in it that were not true; and to those who desire it, it should be given by the Spirit to know true from the false. We have received some revelations, within a short time back, which you will obtain in due time."—Church History, Volume 1, pages 298, 299.

This is evidence that the Lord is ready and willing to help us to a correct interpretation of his word, if we place ourselves in the proper position to receive it.

Behold Christendom divided! Why? Because Protestantism on the one hand believes that the Bible is the only foundation, and assumes individual interpretation, and the Roman Catholic Church on the other hand assumes to interpret the Bible without direct inspiration or present revelation from heaven.

Belief in the Bible alone is an unreasonable position. Adam taught the gospel of repentance to his children. Abel made an acceptable offering to God. Adam had no Bible wherewith to reason. He was taught by angel ministrations and direct revelation. Enoch and his people were righteous before God. They had no Bible to guide them. Noah did not have the Pentateuch. Peter did not have the New Testament on the day of Pentecost.

These citations prove that the work of God, the plan of redemption, the gospel of Jesus Christ, does not depend on any book or books for its propagation or continuance. If all the Bibles and inspired writings in the world were destroyed this minute, the gospel would still be preached with authority and men could have their sins remitted through the priesthood which has been restored to men by the angel of Revelation 14: 6.

While the apostles and elders of the primitive church used the Old Testament to confirm their preaching, in much the same way that Latter Day Saints use the whole Bible to-day, the burden of their preaching was their own personal testimony of the truth of the great revelation which had been committed to their care. So, likewise Latter Day Saints do now. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you."—1 John 1: 3.

And it was on their personal testimony, supported by the power of the Holy Ghost which bore evidence that they spoke the simple truth, that their converts accepted Christ as their Savior. It was not necessary for them to read the Bible; the Spirit of God gave them light, though some searched the Scriptures to see if these things be true.

The four gospels were written to put in permanent form the principal events of our Lord's life and death, to give an authentic record of it for posterity. But these gospels were necessarily incomplete accounts of the great matter of which they treated.

Luke tells us, The Lord appeared to them for "forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." The records are very incomplete concerning the miracles and instructions which our Savior gave during that time. It is evident, then, that the first apostles did not depend on the New Testament as the ground of their instructions. Though the Old Testament was used, and the gospels were appealed to with increasing frequency as time rolled on.

But it is a fact that the primitive saints carried on the work of Christ during the first century, at least, with comparatively little reference to the Bible, either old or new. This makes it clear that the Bible was not the only foundation of the early church. Therefore it can not be to-day. That the text of the Bible is not clear and conclusive on many points of doctrine on which it does treat, is sufficiently proven by the very discordances of those who attempt to deduce doctrine from it without any other than human aid; that it is not complete is equally manifest. As has been said, there are great gaps in its account, notably its almost entire silence on the instructions given by our Lord during the time of his risen life on earth. He taught things that were not recorded in the Bible, which he has revealed in the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

In candor, we must acknowledge that the Bible is but a fragmentary account of the Christian faith as practiced during the first century. Simply scraps of truth handed down to us. We can get the whole truth only by and through the same process which the early saints and writers of the Bible obtained it—the Holy Spirit. God has reestablished the means whereby the work he started amongst men may be perpetuated in its fullness. If the Father had told us that all of his design concerning the human race was contained in the Bible, or if Christ himself had written the book to be used as a text-book of his religion, we could accept it more readily as the only source of information. But “There are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.”—John 21: 25.

Christ did not design that his religion should depend on books for its propagation. If he had so intended he would have written one himself. He was able to do so. No, the Lord said, “And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.”—John 14: 16, 17.

“But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15: 26.

“Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come.”—John 16: 13.

We have the same Spirit of truth to comfort, instruct, and guide us to-day that the primitive church had. Will you place yourselves in a position to partake of that Spirit?

So it is a weakness to attempt to defend the Bible as the only foundation of the Christian religion. Recently, while in attendance at the Bible class of one of our popular religious institutions, Galatians

1: 11, 12 was under discussion, Paul is speaking: “But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.” I asked the question, “Where did Paul get his information and authority?” The teacher answered, “It was revealed from heaven.” I then asked, “Where do the ministers of the various churches get their authority and information?” The answer was, “From the Bible.” I remarked, “It seems God has changed his plan of operating.” The fact is, true Latter Day Saints believe in obtaining information and authority in the same manner that the prophets and apostles of old did. This plan protects us from change in the original teachings, also prevents the introduction of false doctrines or heresy, and God gives us evidence of our acceptance with him by comparing the gifts mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12 and the signs do follow us, mentioned in Mark 16: 15, 20. The Lord evidently intended that there should be an authoritative institution amongst men for the correct interpretation of scripture. This necessity is provided for in the revelations pertaining to the “School of the Prophets” received by the church since its restoration. This institution should have access to the same source, whence the ancient Scriptures originated, namely, God. The mouthpiece of the institution would then be able to interpret the word of God which we now have, according to the will of God. And he would also be able by the same power to write new scripture, that is inspired sacred writing, on old subjects, likewise on new subjects and points of doctrine which have not been previously made clear and distinct to the human mind. For this purpose it is necessary to have individual inspiration and direct present revelation from the throne of Grace in heaven. In times past when an individual received revelations or inspiration from heaven he became, to that degree, a prophet of God.

Now in order to have an authoritative source of information and instruction, there must, as in times past be a prophet of God, through whom his will may be repeated to the present generation. Since God is unchangeable all new revelations from him to men would be in harmony with those he has given in times past. Therefore anything not in harmony with that which is known to have been given by him would not be accepted as divine, by thoughtful, honest people.

The Pope or Bishop of Rome does not claim divine inspiration in the settlement of disputed doctrinal or dogmatic teachings, and when the college of cardinals is called together in council, to discuss a new proposition, they rely on erudition, history, tradition, the accepted canon of scripture, and the decrees of former councils, solely for their guide to an understanding.

In times past the people of God would ask the prophet to inquire of the Lord, to give them information, and it is recorded in many instances, that, "the Lord heard and answered," "the Holy Ghost spake and said," "the angel answered and said," "the voice of the Lord spake," "the word of the Lord came unto me," "the angel of the Lord declared," "I beheld a vision," and "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

The Roman Church, by claiming that there is no more direct revelation or inspiration, and by saying that the canon of scripture is full, separates herself from the only means whereby the will of God may be learned concerning the correct interpretation of scripture or whereby new light may be had concerning the conduct of the children of men toward each other and their Creator.

As God inspired men to write scripture, so he can inspire men to interpret the same, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and tell every nation in their vernacular tongue what he wants them to do.

These facts may be verified with an experimental knowledge, by any honest-hearted individual who will diligently seek and obediently yield to the precepts of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—No. 26.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

Bro. Adams takes great exceptions to the second number of the HERALD, because it sets forth the faith of the Reorganization as an established fact that no one can be the successor of the Martyr except one of his sons. He believes that the church in conference assembled can select any high priest, ordain him president, and sustain him by their faith; may be chosen, and God would endow him with all the gifts pertaining to the office in agreement with the law, which says: "Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11. He does not see the word "appoint" refers to a previous call or revelation from God appointing the presidency is necessary before his selection by the body. But when I pointed this out to him, his argument is, if a conference should select any man to that office, God is bound to indorse him, and appoint him to the office. I had but little talk with him this evening. I see his cherished theory is in his way. His ambition to lead a people is not favored by us, and he feels a little discomfited. I am fearful the power of darkness will so distract his mind that he will never enlist in the Reorganization; but I love the man, and he has an interesting family, though I guess they are after things of this life more than the things of the kingdom.

Monday, March 5, 1860. Early this morning visited and took breakfast with Bro. Phineas Cadwell and his excellent wife. He is all interested with us in faith, and has been telling me how he first heard my my eldest brother, Silas H. Briggs years ago preach the gospel in Wisconsin, and it had always remained with him until this day. But no opportunity had offered him the chance to obey, until he met Elder Adams in this place: but in the apostasy he did not know where to look for the church organization. And while he thinks much of Bro. Adams, yet he can see he is in error with reference to the true successor to the presidency of the church. When I was here a short time since I invited Sr. Cadwell to write an article for our HERALD and she halted me this morning with the remark, "If you think it worthy of a place in your HERALD, you may send it to the editor."

It is such an excellent article, and glowing with eloquence in the expression of God's love for the race and affection, that should ever dwell in the hearts of the Saints, I preserved it as one of the helps to guide my acts in all my ministerial life, to save my fellow men; and is word-painting such as I believe will be a help to those who are permitted to read them. They reveal the fact that one of God's children not yet in the church is certainly inspired with the central thought of our holy religion, and should be an incentive to prompt us to be faithful workers in the vineyard of the Lord, to gather all such precious souls into the sheepfold with Christ. It is as follows:

CHARITY.

Brother Sheen: A highly esteemed friend and Christian brother, one who is also a zealous, self-denying laborer in the work of endeavoring to bring light out of darkness, and separate truth from error, called on us a few days since, and invited me to send a few lines for your paper. In compliance with his wishes, I submit a few disconnected thoughts on charity.

Those who are truly worthy of the name of Latter Day Saints, will readily admit this to be not only one of the choicest, but one of the rarest and most difficult to practice of all the Christian virtues. The religion which we profess to love, and which our Savior laid down his life to establish, is largely composed of that divine combination of love, benevolence and good will, which we call charity. Saint Paul must certainly have been inspired when he painted that beautiful picture in its praise. And truly, what other of the Christian graces, or of all the amiable traits which fallen man may possess, can fill its place in the purifying, elevating or ennobling influence it exerts on our life and character.

True charity is a jewel, the possession of which, though it may not elevate to fame or worldly honor, does enrich its possessor in those heavenly treasures which we are wisely counseled to lay up for ourselves in that celestial kingdom, where moth or rust are not permitted to corrupt, nor thieves to break through and steal. True charity is a bond of union to congenial spirits in this life, and a source of perpetual sunshine to every heart where it is encouraged to dwell, diffusing joy and scattering blessings as far as its influence can reach. But perhaps we can better illumine our ideas in relation to the sweet influence of charity by contrasting it with its opposite quality, which is malice or hate, and who has not been made aware by observation, of the evil, demoniacal tendency of the exercise of this passion which poisons not only the peace and quiet of those who cherish it, but like a malarious atmosphere infuses itself more or less into the life-blood of every being within range of its circumference.

It is this baneful spirit of hate, this evil genius from the pit of vice, that destroys the peace and harmony of so many domestic family circles—that breathes its venom into the vitals of the slanderer, and by its insidious arts undermines the moral purity of many who were valued and beloved members of society. The human heart—the supposed habitation of all the passions and emotions of the soul, is often compared very appropriately to a garden where the evil weeds of envy, malice, discontent, avarice, and kindred vices are of spontaneous growth, and, unhappily, thrive, if not carefully rooted out and narrowly watched. But the choice plants of love, kindness, purity of thought and motion, universal good will, and kindred virtues of heavenly birth, must be planted in youth, carefully cultured and nursed with maternal vigilance, protected from fierce storms and sultry heat, and watered often with the tear of sympathy and affection, and even then how often does the labor seem almost in vain, so cold and barren is the soil we attempt to subdue. How very essential then, not only to our own enjoyment and usefulness in this life, but to the happiness of all with whom we are intimately or remotely associated, either in the business or domestic relations of life, that we devote a large space in the chamber of the heart to be occupied by this rare jewel. Let this beautiful fabric compose a large share of the garments with which we clothe our thoughts in our social intercourse with others, and then we may be sure we shall not have lived entirely in vain. Charity is the guiding-star of the philanthropist, the beacon-light that calls the wanderer from virtue's path back to the hearthstone of domestic bliss. And were kindly influence more universally diffused, its genial warmth more lavishly bestowed, there would be far less aching hearts and unhappy households. Our benevolent lunatic asylums would have less unfortunate inmates; our jails and prisons would be more thinly populated, and our home circles would reveal more happy hearts and joyous faces. As charity is the strongest link in the chain of human affections, so are its largest possessors most nearly allied to our divine leader, and best adapted to accomplish much in the great field where our Savior has commanded us to toil.

Let us then in our demeanor towards our brethren who are pleased to differ from us in regard to present duty, and future promise of the great work to which we have committed ourselves, exercise this excellent virtue; they may be as honest, as conscientious as we, but for some wise reason the rays of light we have received have not yet reached them; but lest I weary you beyond endurance, I will close by quoting that beautiful and significant passage by Saint Paul: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

Yours for the spread of truth,

HARRIET F. CADWELL.

Bro. Cadwell is very anxious that his talented wife should join the church, but I feel it would be wisest for him not to urge his wishes in this matter, and again I advised him to refrain making urgent expression of his wish to her. Solomon expresses the thought, "There is a time to speak, and a time to keep silent." O that God may bless dear Bro. and Sr. Cadwell, is my earnest prayer.

This afternoon I came to Bro. William Vanausdall's of Gallands Grove; he has stood firm in the faith of the gospel during all the cloudy days of the apostasy. He is an old veteran of the cross of Christ; an honorable man, loved by all of his neighbors for his integrity and veracity. He was well acquainted with the choice Seer, and bears witness of his many virtues as one of the noble men of the church; a man of God. Hyrum, his brother, he thinks was the most perfect man on earth. A model worthy of imitation by all Christians who follow Christ as an object lesson who ever reflected Christ's character in his life.

Tuesday, March 6, 1860. Visited Bro. J. A. McIntosh, who is now a zealous worker in the ministry, appreciated and respected as an example in the church; and his experience in the days of the choice Seer is a wonderful help to him and the Saints in Western Iowa.

I find Elder Leland here, and he has an appointment for this evening. He, too, was well acquainted with Joseph and the Saints in Illinois, and is a willing laborer in the church. He has a letter from Elder W. W. Blair received some time since, soliciting the branches of Western Iowa to send delegates to the General Conference. He gave us an excellent sermon on the first principles of the gospel this evening.

Wednesday, March 7, 1860. The Gallands Grove Branch met at ten o'clock this forenoon to perfect arrangements to appoint a delegate to the Amboy, Illinois, conference to be held 6th of April. Just previous to our assembling, Elders McIntosh and McCord asked me if I expected to attend the General Conference. I replied, No, sir, I have given it up. They wished me to be their delegate. The assembly was called to order by Elder Uriah Roundy, and by motion Elder William Vanausdall was chosen chairman, who requested me to open meeting by prayer. While bowed in supplication the spirit of prophecy filled the room and said, "It is my will that my servant shall attend the conference and declare my word to the assembly of my people." At the same time I saw my own name before me.

The president then stated the object of the meeting, and many others made remarks, all favoring the appointment of a delegate. I then moved that Elder Andrew Jackson be appointed delegate. This was seconded by Elder McIntosh, and Bro. Jackson was declared by unanimous vote our representative to the General Conference. The question of defraying the expenses was then introduced, and Elder Jackson said, "I will bear my own expenses. I have the money and I am willing to do it."

After the meeting closed Brn. McCord and McIntosh asked me again, "Are you going to attend the Amboy conference?" I replied that I was and had received evidence while opening the meeting that I should go. They both said, "I think you should go," and Bro. McCord gave me two and one half dollars and McIntosh a one-dollar gold piece to bear expenses.

Thursday and Friday evenings following, I held meetings in the schoolhouse, and had large audiences. Quite a number of the people not of the church attended. Saints are in the best of spirits and hope.

Lelands Grove, Saturday, March 10, 1860. I came home with Bro. Leland fifteen miles from Gallands Grove. It is beautiful weather. I have never experienced a milder winter. There has been but little wind and few cold days. It almost seems providence to me, as I have been very actively engaged all winter. When not in public meetings, from house to house, visiting both members and nonmembers of the church, and my whole conversation has been upon the gospel of Christ, and prophesying of the coming of Joseph, and the ultimate triumph of the latter-day work. Yesterday I received evidence again by the Holy Spirit that I should attend the April conference, and I am now on my journey, hoping to reach the Amboy conference, though my raiment is badly worn, almost threadbare, with only three dollars and fifty cents to supply needed apparel and expenses. But in the language of the poet, “Though troubles assail us, and dangers affright;

Though friends should all fail us, and foes all unite;
Yet one thing secures us, whatever betide;
The Scriptures assure us, the Lord will provide.”

That expresses the sentiment impressed upon my mind by the Holy Spirit, but I can not see how it is possible for me to go. It is too late now to take the long journey afoot. Surely the Lord must open up the way for me, and provide the means, or I can not attend the conference. I have labored all winter hard; and yet not one penny has been handed me to defray expenses, except three dollars and fifty cents just a few days since. But I am assured by the Spirit of God I must dismiss the whole matter from my mind, for the Lord will certainly open up the way before me so I can attend the General Conference at Amboy.

Union Grove, Sunday, March 11, 1860. Elder Leland accompanied me to this place. The Saints here and at Gallands Grove, have set apart this day for fasting and prayer to our heavenly Father, that his special blessing and direction may be given to the General Conference and that God will direct all things to his name's glory and that the reorganization of his church may be more thoroughly established. I also joined with the dear Saints in their fast in faith and we had a good spiritual meeting. All took part in the prayer and fellowship service. Their testimonies were very encouraging to me. All seemed so pure-minded in the faith of the gospel of Christ. Surely the Lord has laid the foundation of a great work in Western Iowa for the Reorganization to build on. At seven o'clock this evening I discoursed on the first principles and duties of the Saints. A goodly portion of the Spirit was with us to comfort every heart.

Elder Jones resigned and Bro. Thomas Sellers chosen in his place to preside over the branch by unanimous voice of the Saints. Elders Jones, Leland, and Wallace Wood assisted me in ordaining Bro. Thomas Sellers an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and Bro. Wilson Sellers, a priest, was elected a delegate to attend the General Conference. The blessed Spirit was our comforter to-day in all our services and the dear Saints are all revived in the latter-day work.

Council Bluffs, Monday, March 12, 1860. I came to my brother Edwin's. Wife and daughter, Lerona, are well, and I find eight letters from correspondents; most of them being good news of the latter-day work, and the revival of the Saints in the Reorganization. In one from Bro. Z. H. Gurley, in answer to one I wrote him on the words new organization, he says: “I do not think it makes much difference. It was an oversight of Bro. Sheen and can be easily corrected. . . . I do not think you better come to the General Conference; it will take you from your field of labor, and incur considerable expense and loss of time.” Bro. Samuel Powers of Beloit, Wisconsin, wrote a very affectionate and encouraging letter of the work with him. Also Bro. W. W. Blair writes a nice letter of the work where he has labored in Illinois. His wife, Sr. Elizabeth Blair, in her excellent and encouraging letter to me, says: “Elder Blair has been gone from home much of the time this winter, but we have been having some very excellent meetings in our branch, and recently we received a manifestation of the Spirit in which it was said Joseph will be at our conference the 6th of April, and brother Ed, I believe it.”

I can not say that this item of Sr. Blair's struck me with very much force. It seemed too good news to have it fulfilled so soon. In fact, it had been the theme of my fondest hope for nearly sixteen years that the Martyr's oldest son would be his successor in the prophetic office and I had received so many divine evidences by the Spirit of God that he would be called to fill that important office. But to have it come to pass now so soon as our April conference, I could not believe it and the thought soon passed from my mind, so it did not impress me very forcibly.

As this forms such an important place in my autobiography, I will add a letter I have just received from Sr. Blair. She lives with her daughter, Sr. Minnie Nicholson, our nearest neighbor; they are both excellent members of the church. They were very ill in health when I first visited them in the year 1856, at Paw Paw, Illinois, and were healed in a miraculous manner by the blessing of God while I was there.

Her letter of to-day reads as follows:

LAMONI, Iowa, March 28, 1903.

Bro. E. C. Briggs: I think it was in the latter part of February, 1860, that Bro. Reuben Newkirk, then on a mission to the Eastern States, stopped at our home in Amboy, Illinois, for a few days visit. During his stay we had a prayer-meeting at our home. All the members of the branch were there in attendance. At that time we were few in numbers, but very earnest and faithful in our service. All took part in some way, singing, praying, or testifying to the goodness of God unto them; and under the influence of the Spirit Bro. Newkirk arose and sang in tongues. I had the interpretation of one verse, and sang it with him. After he sat down I arose and said: "The Lord is well pleased with his people; and in answer to their prayers, Joseph shall indeed come as his father's successor to lead my people and be at the coming conference in April; verily, thus saith the Lord." It had been the burden of all our prayers that the time might soon come when Bro. Joseph would take his place, for we had not a doubt that he would come; but as there had been no word from him, the prediction was a surprise to us that he would be at the conference, and we rejoiced greatly.

My heart goes out to God this day in thankfulness for the many blessings and mercies I have received at the hands of my heavenly Father. May I ever prove faithful to the end, is my daily prayer.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ELIZABETH BLAIR.

Bro. Isaac Sheen's letter is encouraging; he is getting letters from many of the scattered Saints attesting their love for this latter-day work and acknowledges receipt of money I have sent him.

Tuesday, March 13, 1860. My brother Edwin gave me three dollars, and I purchased a pair of boots for six dollars and fifty cents. Visited Mr. Follet and family. His daughter is improving in health; general health is better than it has been for years.

Farm Creek, Wednesday, March 14, 1860. Arrived at Bro. Beebe's at eight o'clock in the evening. It has been a very tedious day to me, and I am so tired and weary physically, but my mind has been lit up and strengthened all day. A retrospective view of my whole life and experience in the latter-day work has passed before me; the sure evidence I have received of the divinity of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants and the choice Seer's wonderful work to bless the human family, all gave me comfort of heart, and tended to prompt my love for all my fellow men, and filled me with a great desire to do all I can during my life to make this world better because I am in it. But this evening with the light of day all gone, chilly and weary after a long ride in the saddle, I was surprised as I stood for Bro. Beebe to open his door for me, that instead of his usual salutation of welcome, he said, "O Bro. Briggs, you are on the way to conference, and I have the money to bear your expenses;" and I answered, "You are going with me." He replied, "I think not, but I have the money to send you."

O yes, this is wonderful. I can now understand why I must dismiss this whole matter of expense from my mind, "for the Lord will certainly open up the way before you so you can attend the General Conference at Amboy." Truly, no one but God's Holy Spirit could have moved upon Bro. Beebe to have made me such a liberal offer to bear my expenses to the conference, upon the impulse of the moment as soon as he saw me this evening. I feel to-night as if I could always rely on the words of Jesus to his ministers when he said: "Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? . . . for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. . . . Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."—Matthew 6:31, 34.

I had almost forgotten the matter of expense since I had received the blessed assurance that the Lord would provide the means necessary to supply my wants. Here is indeed a case in point to illustrate how easy it is for the Lord to provide for his truly appointed ministers without their worrying beforehand over the matter of real necessities.

Yes, my dear fellow workmen in the vineyard of the Lord, a minister who knows he is called of God to preach the gospel of Christ, has a thousand times more to encourage him than all the ministers of the Protestant popular churches of the world who know they never had a revelation or an angel from God acknowledging them as his ministers or their churches as his own. Why, even one of the great-granddaughter churches of the old apostate mother bases their call to preach the gospel upon the doubtful little word of two letters, "if we have authority to preach we have authority to baptize," and so their church was born upon an "if." So unlike anything our loving heavenly Father ever did when he called men into his vineyard, as attests the inspired prophet when he said, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets."—Amos 3:7.

AFFLICTION AND THE BENEFITS.

An elementary principle of Christian faith is that God is infinitely wise and just; too wise to err, too good to be unkind. He makes no mistakes; he does nothing wrong; he does not afflict willingly. When discipline is needed to bring character to perfection, he knows the kind and degree to administer; and though the subject may chafe and complain beneath the chastening rod, it is nevertheless to be received in faith, nothing doubting.

Many of the ills of life mankind brings upon himself; and of all the forms of human misery there is none like that arising from voluntary and conscious sin. Such sin leaves no doubt as to our accountability. Our own personality lies at its core and no question can arise as to the justice of the pain, whatever may be inflicted upon us. Our suffering is the result of our own action. We can find no relief in side issues, no comfort in blaming others. When our sins find us out, we must face them and own them as the creatures of our own making. After all abatements and palliations have been pleaded, an aroused conscience will go straight to its work and cry out, "Thou art the man;" for such afflictions the good Being can not be held responsible. To ascertain where human responsibility ceases and where the divine hand may be recognized, is not always easy.

Some are ready to say that God has nothing to do with the little affairs of men. He has set the universe in motion, established certain laws, and left the race to work out its own earthly salvation. To this it is sufficient to answer that there is no law, human or divine, that can execute itself. Wherever there is a law there is a lawgiver, and wherever law is seen in execution there is an executor behind it. We may say that our hearts beat according to law, that our lungs inhale and exhale according to law. Nevertheless, back of the law which governs these vital exercises, there is a great Executor of law, and that fact justifies the saying that in God we live and move and have our being. The great laws of the universe and of human life would instantly become dead but for the infinite will controlling and governing all.

Moreover, how shall the facts of life be disposed of here? If a man is born blind is he responsible for such a calamity? He is born with the germs of disease in his nature which tend to blindness and at length do result in closing his eyes to earthly objects for ever. The poor fellow lives as well as he knows how, caring for himself, bemoaning his impending fate; but in spite of all, goes into the darkness. Is he responsible? Here is a man accidentally crippled for life, it may be by a falling tree in the forest, by a machine with which he is gathering his crops, by the breaking of the vehicle on the public highway, by a team, by a train of cars, by a boiler explosion, or any of the frequent accidents of life. Is God's hand in this? Disease lays hold of a strong man and runs him down to the brink of the grave, and allows only partial recovery,—lung difficulties, throat affections, deafness, or other things clinging to the individual for life. Who is to be held accountable?

Those questions may not be answered. "We walk by faith, not by sight." It is our duty to believe that all things work together for the good of those who love God. We are to do our part diligently. We are to exercise all possible wisdom, forethought, prudence, energy, and care, and then make the best of what comes.

It is an old maxim that the diseases of the body are to be prevented by temperance, cured by medicine, or rendered tolerable by patience; and we might add, made beneficial by the contemplation of divine goodness. This is the Christian theory and a good one. But, oh, the practice! Let blindness once come upon a human being and the theory be thus tested. Only by wondrous grace can the stricken soul measure up to the standard. Let deafness come and as the voices of loved ones die away and the sounds of the great world are shut out for ever: The struggling heart grapples with the theory and finds it hard to put in practice. Human nature rebels under the strokes of the rod. Some may submit at the first coming of misfortune, but most wrestle for years or even for life. Happy, indeed, the soul that can look up under inevitable calamity and say, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." There is no richer or better lesson to be learned in this life than that of submission to the will of God. Indeed, this is the very purpose of our probation.

All Christians should study to show themselves willing learners in the great school of affliction. The Psalmist quickly perceived the divine purpose in his own chastisement. "Before I was afflicted I went astray but now have I kept thy word." Strength and efficiency come from severe afflictions. The body may indeed be wasted and worn by disease, or shattered and weakened by calamity, but the soul will be strong. This the poet knew when he wrote, "Learn to suffer and be strong." A person unacquainted with affliction is easily unnerved in its presence. Sudden illness in others terrifies him. He knows not what to do. He has never been in the grasp of disease himself, and knows nothing of its pains or the means of relief. He sees the victim in agony, but can only wring his hands and walk the floor uttering ejaculations of sympathy. Let one be there who has passed through the fires and hung in the border-land between two worlds; he is calm and collected; he takes the sufferer by the hand; raises his fainting head and pillows it upon his breast. He speaks comforting words; encourages the stricken one to expect relief, cheers him by his ready wit and skillful aid and administers such cordials and tonics as tend to his restoration. His own experience has given him strength and efficiency for this trying hour.

So in religion, Joseph's severe trials in the early part of the restoration of the gospel only strengthened him for the sterner storms that followed. He became so used to opposition and persecution that nothing daunted him. As iron tempered by heat becomes tougher and stronger, so a soul under affliction grows firmer and more capable of enduring.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"The deepest quietness has often proved to be inspiration for the highest action."

Through love to light! Oh, wonderful the way
That leads from darkness to the perfect day!
From darkness and from sorrow of the night
To morning that comes singing o'er the sea.
Through love to light! Through light, O God, to thee
Who art the love of love, the eternal light of light.

—R. W. Gilder.

Dear Home Column: This is a foggy morning. I am in bed, where I have been for weeks, but can work if I can not walk, or sit on a chair but a few minutes in a day. As I read again of the Flower Mission my thoughts went back to my beautiful flower garden near the Five Corners, or Sturdivant, as it is now called, in Crawford County, Pennsylvania. What a lovely sight it was! From my dahlias I have plucked one hundred blossoms with no two alike. They were among some of God's choicest gifts to me then with so many other flowers. As I looked upon all of them my mind always went out to that great wall of heaven. Spring in all of its beauty is not to be compared to it. I came so near dying that I was permitted to see that great wall and one of the great gates of pearl, and the loveliest flowers were carved on that gate. The flowers are tokens of God's love. How I love them! They were my greatest comfort after being brought back to still live. I say brought back. Yes, so I was. Ten or twelve were walking on the river of life, coming to me, and were part way across, walking two and two. The two first were mamma and sister Julia. I was so happy looking at them. I never saw who the rest were, but they said that was the great wall of heaven (for mamma had told us she was going there before she left us, and asked us to meet her there). She had always taught us the plan of salvation as taught by the Saints, though she never heard this gospel preached.

As I was looking at them my husband came and took me by the hand and said, "My God, Mary, you are dying. Oh my God, what shall I do?" How hard I tried to speak and tell him to let me go, I was so happy. It was the happiest moment of my life, but no, I was not permitted to go. He opened my mouth and breathed his breath in and drew it out four or five times. Each time it was like a pint of hot lead poured in and drawn out. They wavered on the water as if some one had stopped them and then they turned as if they were called from the gate. All became so dark again as it had been before I saw that great wall, and the sound of the moving of a heavy building both times. Then as it became light again I could breathe and see my husband. When I was brought back was the saddest time of my life. My grief was unutterable, compared to the joy of that short time.

The flowers are my only solace for they portray God's love. When we look at them we realize how great his love must be. One morning in my grief I was out looking at them when a personage came right before me and said, "Weep not, but tell to the world what you have seen, and if faithful to the end you shall be with me in glory," and vanished as soon as he came. I thought it was Jesus, and was comforted. It always has been a solace to me. I have loved my flowers better ever since. The picture that looks the most like him is the one that used to be on the Hope.

When I read the request to know if we would be taught after the world was purified, I thought, does not the Bible plainly teach perfection, and if not taught, how will we become perfect?

Would one of our elders in the western part of Pennsylvania or Eastern Ohio please go and see the lady who is or was Elsie Thompson, at McClellon Corners, Erie County, Pennsylvania, if she still lives. She lay dead in the fall of 1874 five days and nights and then came back to earth. We would like her testimony as she went to heaven and was taught there by our Savior but is to live here until Jesus sends for her. Thousands of people went to see her after she came back. Did any of the Saints go? If so who will tell us of it? Mine is only brief now as Bro. Joseph has it and in his own due time he will publish it, I trust.

Allow me to tell Sr. Emma their voyage is not yet complete as I tried to describe to her, although a part has come to pass. A. H. Smith had a little of it. Be of good cheer, Sr. Emma.

A SISTER.

Mothers' Home Column.

Shall we not respond to the editor's wish for more contributions for our column? The selected articles are helpful, but among our people must be many who, from their own experience and from their knowledge of our needs as Saints, could give much help to those of us who have been but a short time in the church. I wish I might hear from more of them. But let us all, young and old alike, do the best we can and do it now, not waiting till we think we can write some great thing. Unless we are willing to do the best we can with the ability God has already given us he is not likely to give us more.

I have been wondering if all who have the care of little ones give heed to the commandment to so teach them the gospel that they will be prepared for baptism at eight years of age. I recently heard of a little girl five years old who could talk Latter Day Saint doctrine and who believed in God with all her heart, and it seemed to me unusual, but perhaps it is not. How easy it is for children to have faith in God and how they enjoy hearing Bible stories. Since the first things learned are the longest remembered how careful we should be to fill the pure little minds with good things. Do not be afraid of beginning too young to teach them the gospel. A few years ago I had for a pupil a girl of beautiful Christian character. As there was a lack of religious influences in her home I once asked her how she came to care so much for such things, and she replied that it was from her mother's teachings. She was only four years old when her mother died but the lessons previously learned have never been forgotten. She has since passed through such suffering as comes to few and has taught her friends many lessons by her patience and trust in her heavenly Father. If that mother had decided to wait till her little daughter was older before teaching her what a loss many might have had.

In thinking of this friend the thought comes that if one can attain to so much through obedience to a fragment of the gospel, how much purer, stronger, and more Christlike should we be, having the gospel in its fullness. Are we? If not, why? Are we realizing as we ought the responsibility resting upon those who claim to be God's special people? What will the world think of such a claim if our lives are not in harmony? The work and sacrifice of the elders will avail little if we members fail in our part. We shall tear down faster than they can build up if we are careless and indifferent. Oh, my sisters, let us strive with all our hearts to "come up higher," to lay aside every weight that keeps us down. We must not let the cares and pleasures of this life fill our minds to the exclusion of that which is of vital importance. I fear we often spend too much thought, time, and money on that which is not necessary while the work suffers for lack of what we could otherwise give.

Having, since coming into the church, passed through a period of discouragement myself, I wish, in closing, to say a few words to those who, because of the redoubled efforts Satan makes when he sees one in earnest, may be losing heart. Never do that. Satan has great power, but greater is our Savior's power, and he will keep us if we give him the chance—even though he allows us to be sorely tested and tried. My heart is filled with gratitude when I think what he has done for us, what he will do, even causing our mistakes and failures to work for our good when we bring them to him with humble, contrite hearts. Oh, how we should serve and love such a Master. May we each so live that we shall never dishonor him in thought, word, or deed is my prayer.

SISTER MARY.

THERE is in this letter a thought which ought to waken the attention of those who read it and if the attention be awakened then surely a response would not fail to come. It is this: the absolute need which exists for literature suited to us as a people. We absolutely know that the talent is not wanting. There are many, very many mothers and sisters among us capable of supplying this need if only they would use for the benefit of the many the talent which God has intrusted to them. Is it not better to occupy now, sisters, than to say in the day of reckoning, "I knew thee that thou wast a hard Master"?—ED.

11. A class recitation by young seniors or advanced intermediates.

THE GOSPEL LADDER.

(Make of lath or other suitable material a ladder four feet high and about twenty inches wide at the bottom and fifteen wide at the top. Cover it nicely with evergreen, or tissue paper, or sheet wadding, both sides and rungs. Prepare cardboards and with letters cut from gilt paper make on them the words belief, faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, large enough to be read from the rear of the room. Let the one having on it the word belief be larger than the others as it is to form the foundation for the ladder. Let the child carry the card appropriate to the stanza he is to recite. And when done reciting, place his card in the appropriate place on the ladder. Let the first one, "Belief," stand on the floor. Those following on the little nails in the sides of the ladder. The top rungs, "Resurrection," and "Eternal Judgment," be previously placed on the ladder. The idea being that the other parts which are in our control lead up to that which is beyond our reach while here.

Each scholar should be provided with a Bible and keep it lying open on his lap during the class exercise.)

First speaker:

"Men and brethren, what shall we do?"—Acts 2: 37.

"Is there no work we can perform while here,
Or must we float like sticks upon a stream;
Or like the leaves when falling pale and sear,
Change with each gale like specters in a dream;
Or steadfast stand like oaks upon a hill,
Having in life a purpose and a plan?
Thus while we search for God, find out his will,
And what his purpose is concerning man;
We look among the words God has declared
Unto his servants in the days of old;
The principles and proverbs there prepared
Shine brilliantly, like gems when set in gold.
Therefore it is among these words I seek,
And of those duties take a hasty view."

Second speaker:

"BELIEVER."

"Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper."—2 Chronicles 20: 20.

This word was to the Jew,
But will apply to us as well, you know,
So from these words I gather this idea,
That we in God must exercise belief.
This principle concerns us much while here,
And of our duties is the first and chief.

Third speaker:

"FAITH."

"But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6.

"We do not see God, yet by reason's light
We feel there is one, and by his great word
We hope. 'We walk by faith' and 'not by sight.'
'Faith cometh by hearing,' we have heard,
And so believe. That God is good we know
Through blessings showered on us day by day,
More than we do deserve. His works all show
That he is powerful and wise. He knows
Our past, for he is from eternity;
Our present, for its very working shows
That he upholds it; and our future he Shall give us. By this we surely find
That he is worthy of our faith."

Fourth speaker:

"REPENTANCE."

"He is a God of right,
Who in the end will make the crooked straight,
And rectify the wrong. We now have faith, let us repent.

Looking at all our acts and finding there
The evil, cast it out, ere we have spent
Our little all of life, and thus prepare
For things to come. Our God desires
That we should earn the blessings we enjoy,
And thus be worthy when the time expires.

Fifth speaker:

"BAPTISM."

Yes Peter said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you."—Acts 2: 38.

John has recorded what his Master said
Of this, "Except a man be born again
He can not see the kingdom,"
Baptism then a birth doth represent
As we are laid beneath the liquid wave.
It also doth a burial represent,
Christ's entry in and exit from the grave.

Thus was the great Redeemer plunged
In Jordan's swelling flood,
Thus was the pattern given by Christ
That leads from sin to God.
Thus was his sacred body laid
Beneath the yielding wave;
Thus was his sacred body raised
Out of the liquid grave.

Sixth Speaker:

"LAYING ON OF HANDS."

Then it was John and Peter laid their hands on them, and they Received the Holy Ghost, and Simon saw
That through the apostles hands it came;
So do we also see this holy law,
And with the Holy Ghost the gifts appear
That Christ hath promised all who believe,
While unto God by this means we draw near
And knowledge for ourselves of him we do receive.

—From "An Offering" by David Smith.

Seventh Speaker:

Our blest Redeemer, ere he breathed
His tender, last farewell,
A guide, a Comforter bequeathed,
With us on earth to dwell.

He came in tongues of living flame,
To teach, convince, subdue;
All powerful as the wind he came
The ministry t' endure.

He came, sweet influence to impart,
A gracious, willing Guest,
While he can find one willing heart
Wherein to fix his rest.

And his that gentle voice to hear,
Soft as the breath of even,
That checks each fault, calms ev'ry fear,
And whispers us of heaven.

And ev'ry virtue we possess,
And ev'ry virtue won,
And ev'ry thought of holiness,
In his and his alone.

Spirit of purity and grace!
Our weakness pitying see;
Oh, make our hearts thy dwelling-place,
Purer and worthier thee!

—No. 592 Saints' Harp.

Eighth Speaker:

"Now I have entered in the fold,
The blessed fold of Christ the Lord,
Through faith, repentance and baptismal wave,
And laying on of hands; and he will save according to his word.

I now behold
The other duties that I would fulfill,
To keep my soul in paths of wisdom still.
My second life is now just in its youth,
So in my heart I needs must speak the truth;
My hatred in a narrow compass bind
To hate the wrong that in myself I find:
Supply my brain with wisdom's sweet supplies,
With open eyes to see my way aright,
And keep these principles of worth in sight;
To train my tongue to choose a proper bent,
And only in the truth be eloquent.
As no great excellence is found in me,
My heart must truly meek and humble be:
Right willing hands to do my daily task,
Earning the precious portion that I ask;
A body very chaste and very pure,
The spirits visit that I may secure;
Knees pliable to bend and give God praise,
And steadfast feet to walk in sober ways."

From "An Offering," by David Smith.

Song number 4, Winnowed Songs, to be sung by the class, the school joining in the chorus if desired.

12. A companion recitation.

(For two intermediates, a boy and a girl. Let them come upon the rostrum together and remain till both have done speaking.)

Girl:

THE LAMBS OF THE FLOCK.

Tenderly care for the lambs of the flock,
Gather them into the fold;
None are too young for a blessing so sweet
As was given the children of old.

"Feed my lambs" is the Savior's command,
'Tis a sacred charge he has given;
And he said, "Let the little ones come unto me,
For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Then faithfully watch o'er the lambs of the flock,
There is much to lead them astray.
And the people of God in the future, must be
The children we're training to-day.

Then help and encourage the lambs of the flock,
With sympathy tender and true;
Be patient, though often they stumble and fall,
For God has been patient with you.

—Mrs. M. C. Aayward, in the International Evangel.

Boy:

THE SHEEP OF THE FOLD.

We hear the plea for trying to keep
"The Lambs of the Flock" in the fold,
And well we may; but what of the sheep?
Shall they be left out in the cold?

'Twas a sheep, not a lamb, that strayed away,
In the parable Jesus told,
A grown-up sheep that had gone far astray,
From ninety and nine in the fold.

Out in the wilderness, out in the cold,
'Twas a sheep the good shepherd sought,
And back to the flock, safe into the fold,
'Twas a sheep the good shepherd brought.

And why for the sheep should we earnestly long,
And as earnestly hope and pray?
Because there is danger, if they go wrong,
They will lead the young lambs astray.

For the lambs will follow the sheep you know,
Wherever the sheep may stray;
If the sheep go wrong, it will not be long Till the lambs are as wrong as they.

And so with the sheep we earnestly plead,
For the sake of the lambs to-day,
If the lambs are lost, what terrible cost
Some sheep may have to pay.

—C. D. Meigs, in the International Evangel.

(One stanza of the song "The Ninety and nine" will nicely follow this number. To be found in "Gospel Hymns.")

13. Closing address. (By a child.)

Kind Friends: You have listened to our songs, our praise and our hopes, and as "Buds of Promise" we thank you. As buds hearts, we promise to mature wholesome fruit.

"Messenger" Stories.

Stories, illustrations and anecdotes are perhaps the main features of attractions in the Northern Messenger. But the stories are so carefully chosen that they exercise a sweet influence in the lives of old and young. Then there are special departments devoted to Temperance, the Sunday-school, the Little People and the Home. The paper is so popular that a vast number of Sunday-schools in Canada and the United States are using it to great advantage, insuring a more regular attendance, besides extending their influence for good in the homes of their scholars.
The Northern Messenger is probably read every week by well on to a quarter of a million people, and for that reason the price is extremely low.

Editors Herald: I read in HERALD for May 6, the understanding of quite a number of our leading men who held a joint council at Lamoni May 1, on the subject of finances. Their understanding of the law of tithing is my understanding; but when they speak of surplus as is given in the revelation of 1838, my thoughts vary from theirs. The question that is asked of the Lord, I think, was to settle the understanding of the elders on the subject of tithing. Then he says: I require all your surplus property, and this surplus shall be the beginning of your tithing. I like the definition the council has given on tithing, one-tenth of all over our indebtedness. If the Lord had said this surplus was the beginning of your tenths we would understand him just the same, for tenths is the definition of tithing. He says those who have thus been tithed should pay one tenth of their interest annually. The annual payment is to my mind just as much surplus as the first payment, but not so great. Now my understanding of the word surplus is all over our indebtedness and we are tithed of that. The second paragraph of this revelation you quote a part of, and you can not put any other meaning than that you are tithed of your surplus property. Now when I am tithed of anything a tenth is taken out. We may differ in what we call a surplus, or the amount; but we see by the second paragraph of the revelation whatever it is it is tithed, for the Lord says plainly that those that gather up to Zion shall be tithed of their surplus property or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you; and as we have said when a tenth is taken out of our surplus it is tithed. I hope you do not want me to bear testimony to your understanding till I am converted, and in this I am satisfied you do not.

JOHN HAWLEY.

P. S.—We see eye to eye upon enough of the gospel to establish us for ever upon the eternal foundation. I think in the millennium we will not differ so much in understanding. J. H.

ESTELLENE, Texas, April 20.

Dear Saints: I have belonged to the church for nearly two years. There are no Saints in this county excepting my husband and me, and I have not heard a sermon preached by a Saint since that time. The people are very prejudiced here, and the Saints are looked down on. I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithful. We have six children, the youngest sixteen years old, and none of them belongs to the Saints' Church. I also desire your prayers for them that they may be Saints. We take the HERALD and I enjoy reading it very much. I hope that I may hold out faithful and pay my tithing and have part in the first resurrection.

Your sister,

M. A. EWING.

KALAMAZOO, Michigan, May 7.

Editors Herald: An Irishman asked me whether I believed that Joseph Smith tried to walk on the water. I said to him, "Was not Peter your first pope?" "Yes," he answered "and he was a holy man of God."

"And did he not try to walk on the water, and sink?" The Irishman would say no more.

I know Joseph Smith was a man called of God. While I was sitting in prayer-meeting praying for wisdom, all at once I was raised to my feet, my eyes being closed, the spirit of prophecy came upon me and then I was compelled to say that Joseph Smith was called of God. I could not help saying what I did say. Men might say it was a phantom of the brain; but it was a reality by which I was to know the truth, as truth is one of the mighty weapons that will stand in eternity to blast all the faithless ones who deny revelation. It was the same spirit that told man to seek for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints, and as I was contending for the faith and wisdom to know the truth there it was revealed to me. It gave me great satisfaction to know that same God that lived then lives now, and the original faith still lives with God and is ready to reveal his will to fallen man when he comes in the way that he has heretofore marked out. When man steps aside he is a proselytizer of the original faith and that is the reason that they who do such things receive no answer from God, and as it is said in Hebrews 11: 6, "Without faith it is impossible to please him." Now if I wanted to please a friend why should I ask him to break his laws to suit my conditions? And as God is my friend it would be impossible with his immutable and unchangeable law for me to drive God by my own faith to suit my finite conditions and to lower his character to my conditions. I would be the loser and not the gainer.

Yours in bonds of love,

B. S. SHAUS.

MELVIN, Iowa, May 11.

Editors Herald: It does me good to read of the progress the church is making. The address to the Saints in HERALD for May 6, ought to be read by all Latter Day Saints with interest. I am a firm believer in prayer, but I also believe there is something more than prayer required of us. We as a people believe and teach that by our works we stand or fall. So we all agree there is something for us to do. Let us put our faith and works together, furnish means to spread this glorious work, and by so doing lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven. We profess to believe the sacred words that were written for our good and instruction; so let us be honest with God and ourselves and give of our substance to the church for its support, that our prayers may be answered, the cause of Christ may be forwarded, and the poor of the church may be clothed and fed.

The law of tithing and offerings is grand. If we have nothing of this world's goods there is nothing required. So there is no excuse for us, for if we have little there is but little required, and if we have much there is much required. There is nothing asked of us that is unjust or unfair. It lies with the Saints whether you shall be redeemed in the near future or not. Let us all take hold on the financial part of the church work, that a few may not have the load to carry, but that we all may share the support of the church. It gives me joy to see the church moving along so nicely, and my earnest desire is to move along with the church that I may keep myself in line, and be found worthy to be numbered with God's people.

We would be pleased to have some of the elders call on us, as we are alone in this place.

JAMES O. SHELDON.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, April 24.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the Latter Day Saint Church nearly three years, but I am very weak in the knowledge of the gospel. I have experienced great things in this work, proving that it is of the Lord, and I have never regretted the step made when I embraced this work. When I first became a member I realized that there was something else to do, and that was that Saints of the Lord should not be idle. So I asked the Lord in secret prayer what he desired of me. It was made known unto me that I should hold prayer every night with the family. So as I was very young and my father and mother and two sisters who were older than I were members of the church also, it was a very difficult task for me, but I realized that it was requested by the Lord and would not reject it.

Saints, remember me in your prayers.

Pastoral.

To those Interested in the Central and Northern Nebraska Districts: I have begun operation as one of the missionaries; and as I have been put in charge of the above-mentioned districts I invite the hearty coöperation of all the missionaries and locals, as we are all anxious to see as great results as our limited numbers will admit of. The brethren who are appointed to labor in these districts are better acquainted with the territory than your humble servant. We do not need to have some one tell us what to do nor how to do it, as we have all had experience along missionary lines. All there is for us to do is to be prayerful and energetic, and all see how much we can do. Would like to have any one (official or otherwise) keep me posted as to openings for preaching in their communities.

I will try to make it a point to attend the quarterly conferences of the two districts. The conference of the Northern District convenes at Blair, Nebraska, the last Friday in May, in the evening. Have not been advised when the Central will convene, but will know further on.

My advice to the ministry would be to read and reread Bro. F. A. Smith's pastoral, and give heed to the counsel there given. We expect to have the assistance of the local brethren, especially in tent work, which we expect to begin as soon after conference as is practicable.

My home address is Dow City, Iowa. Any mail sent there will be forwarded. Your brother and coworker, ROMANAN WIGHT.

To the Saints and Missionaries of the Southwestern Mission, Greeting: This is the fourth year of my ministry as missionary in charge of this field, and I trust that the past may be a prophecy of that which is to come so far as the harmony that has existed between us as collaborators in the Master's cause. Our missionary force is smaller this year than last, but I trust that the deficiency in that regard may be more than made up by the increase in zeal and earnestness of the laborers who remain, and that the local force may also awaken to renewed energy.

I have appointed as my assistants in charge, Bro. W. S. Macrae in charge of Texas, and Bro. Hubert Case in charge of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. I would be very much pleased to see more interest taken in reporting the work done. There has not been a full report of the mission since I took charge; but some have failed every time to report, so marring the record of the work done. It is easy to remember that reports are due on the first of July, October, January, and March, and it is just as easy to report the first as the tenth. Brethren, let us have an improvement along this line as well as every other this coming year. The men appointed to the State and Territories named above will report to the men in charge of those fields. Those laboring in Arkansas and Louisiana will report to me, my home address being 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

The instructions hitherto given by me in regard to debates is still in force, and yet I would not have it understood in such a way as to tie the hands of a missionary for immediate action where such is required. But in all cases where such immediate action is not required let all such things be done through the missionaries in charge.

Organized effort is being made against us and it should be met by organized effort.

One of the reasons why the missionary force was diminished this year was lack of means to support the men in the fields. The only remedy for this lies with the Saints. And where they do not know their duty in the matter of tithes and offerings, they should be taught by the ministry; and where they know and do not they should be exhorted earnestly to comply with that which is as certainly a part of the gospel law as any other part of God's commands. Our duty along this line is plain; let all take heed and be not found wanting.

The Word of Wisdom is also an essential part of the gospel law, as that law is perfect, and I can not see how any one can disregard it and expect to become perfect. Almost everywhere I go I find the people poor, and it is very difficult to get traveling expenses. In fact my expenses for traveling, clothes, etc., have not more than half been met by voluntary contributions since I have been in the southern field, but I have been obliged to go to the Bishop or his agents for money to meet these necessary expenses; and yet hundreds of dollars are spent every year for tobacco, coffee, tea, and those things which God has said are not good for man. In conversing with one brother who used these things I asked him if ten dollars per person per year would be a conservative estimate of what those things cost the Saints in Texas. He said "Yes," and he was satisfied that it really cost more than that. What is spent that way would amount to something near two thousand dollars. Two families were without the HERALD and church books and said they were too poor and badly in debt to take them. On inquiry I found that they spent twenty-five cents a week for coffee alone. I asked them if they would not like to try to do without those things and save the money and take the papers and buy the books. They consented to this and now rejoice that they are emancipated from an injurious habit and have the church literature in their homes. Much of the failure to comply with the law comes from an ignorance of its requirements, hence we as His representatives who was the embodiment of purity should teach the whole law, and to teach it one must practice it. Let the ministry then be examples in all things. I hope that if there are any among the ministry who are violating this law they will from this time free themselves from this bondage and become free through the truth. I would also exhort the brethren to hold each other's reputation sacred and to speak not lightly one condemning word.

Let those missionaries who may visit the branches refrain from trying to adjust difficulties or take sides in controversies that may occur between members. If disgruntled ones persist in telling their troubles, insist that they be put in writing and properly signed, and then placed in the hands of the proper authorities whose duty it is to regulate such things.

Much friction and difficulty may be avoided by each learning his duty and working therein.

I can be reached at any time through my home address, and would be pleased to come in touch with all the Saints and ministry and learn of the needs of the work either by visiting the various parts of the mission or by correspondence. To direct the forces successfully one must be acquainted with the field and its needs. Hoping to be able to report a goodly degree of improvement at the end of the year, I am,

Yours in bonds,

HYRUM O. SMITH, Missionary in Charge.

711 South Fuller Avenue, INDEPENDENCE, Mo., May 9.

To the Saints in Southern California, Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your district, and believing that the Lord rules in the appointments of the missionaries, or accepts such appointments when properly made, I feel anxious to begin my labors with you. I am favorably impressed with the mission and hope to have a pleasant and profitable time during our labors together.

It will be well for all to remember the following: "The twelve and seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:7. Missionaries should devote their entire time, so far as possible, to missionary work and leave the local work to those chosen and ordained to do it.

While missionary work may be needed in branches and districts and this is to be done under the direction of the missionary in charge by the missionaries, care should be taken that one class of officers does not interfere with the work of the other. The duties of the missionaries and the local officers are clearly defined, and if each can keep within the prescribed limits of the law, harmony, love, and success will follow. "The seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Twelve, or traveling high council, in building up the church and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:13.

If difficulties arise in a branch they should be referred to the local officers and the missionaries should pay as little attention to them as possible; but if in their judgment the situation is becoming serious, they should call the attention of the missionary in charge to it, but they should not become entangled in it themselves. Many a good missionary has lessened his influence and failed to accomplish his work by making a mistake of this kind.

The one in charge "may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7.

I expect to be in my field the fore part of June and my mission address, till further notice, will be 936 Eleventh Street, San Bernardino, California, in care George H. Wixom. Home address, Independence, Missouri.

To the Saints in Michigan I wish to express my heartfelt thanks for their kind and considerate treatment for the three years I have labored with them. I have enjoyed myself in their district and have been benefited by their association. The life of a seventy is one of activity and change. We can not settle in a community and build us a home and an influence and enjoy them as others do. We move out into the world as laborers in the great vineyard of the Lord to form acquaintances and attachments only to teach mankind the way of life as presented by our Master. If my sojourn among you has had an influence for good, I shall feel that my efforts have not been in vain. As I now go among strangers I shall always remember my experiences in Michigan, and I wish you success in life and celestial glory in the resurrection morning.

Yours for truth and righteousness,

GALIEN, Michigan, May 15, 1903. W. E. PEAK.

To All Who Love the Angel's Message in the Gallands Grove District: It is with deep gratitude in my heart to my heavenly Father that I address you. Fourteen years ago as a new missionary I entered this field and labored as best I could with my Master's assistance. For twelve years I have been in other fields and now return to behold the change. The change is a pleasing one to me, for now there is presented to my view a field much more widely opened, and the many new names I hear tells me that a goodly degree of progress has been made during that time. But what concerns us most now is the present. The past is gone—its labor is done. The present is before us, its work to perform. How well will we perform it? The work is for every one of us—missionaries, local officials, and members—none are exempt. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; . . . let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8. Our missionary force is small, but I believe every man is a diligent and faithful laborer in our Master's cause. We need the hearty coöperation of all to achieve the greatest success. Notify the missionary in charge of any openings you would like to have made or of the needs of missionary labor that you are aware of so that we may direct our labors where the most good can be accomplished. Let the local brethren of the ministry labor in the regions round about your homes and if you find you need missionary help, and will let us know, we will render all the assistance possible. Let us all labor faithfully for the advancement of the work "intrusted to all."

DOW CITY, Iowa.

Missionary in Charge.

Church Secretary's Notice.

CONTRACTS TO RETURN CLERGY CREDENTIALS.

Owing to the large number of former missionaries released by the General Conference of 1903, and who held clergy credentials under appointment of the General Conference of 1902, or other general appointment, attention is called to the terms of the "contract" signed by those who obtain clergy credentials, under which they obligate themselves to return said credentials "whenever the holder is required to do so, or when he ceases to be wholly engaged in ministerial or other duties account of which it is issued, or removes from prescribed territory."

Our present good standing with the railroad systems has resulted from careful compliance with their rules, by which large sums have been saved to the church through reduced rates to its ministry, also to the membership in reduced rates to general gatherings. All, we trust, will recognize the duty and importance of being particular and prompt to observe fully the terms of the contracts referred to.

Whenever persons are released from general appointment and continue to do local mission work covering part or all of the year, by arrangement through the missionary in charge, credentials may be retained to cover the periods of actual service, by arrangement with the missionary in charge, who will notify railroad authorities as in other local appointments.

Missionaries in general charge are requested to give the foregoing such supervisory care in their fields as will conduce to the general interests of the cause and of all concerned.

Respectfully,

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 15, 1903.

Special Agent.

To the Saints of the New York District, New York: It is with sorrow and regret that we announce the loss by death of Bro. Thomas Lester, the Bishop's agent for the district of New York, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Bro. Lester was a good, faithful steward of the work intrusted to his care, and will be rewarded by the Master whom he served. We are left, however, to continue the work committed, and each must perform his or her duty in order to receive a worthy commendation when we are also called upon to render an account to the just and all-wise Judge. Let us then not slacken our efforts in the least in the work intrusted to us, but bend our energies to the accomplishment of what it is possible for us to do.

Until further notice, or the meeting of the district conference of New York, Bro. Frank N. Lester will act as agent of the Bishopric for said district, discharging the duties belonging to that office, issuing receipts to all who may aid in the work.

In behalf of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church, I am,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 16, 1903.

Have You a Friend in the Northwest?

I desire the name and address of every isolated Saint in the Northwest, comprising Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia, together with the name of any friend to the cause. If any of the Saints have friends whom they desire us to call upon, please write me.

As there are some prospects that efforts will be made to open up the work in the larger cities and towns, we desire the name of every possible member or friend who might prove of assistance in the following places: Portland, Astoria, Albion, Salem, Eugene City, Canon City, Corvallis, Baker City, Dallas, Oregon City, in Oregon, and Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, Olympia, Walla Walla, Port Townsend, and Ellensburg, in Washington. Please write me at once.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

2802 South Grand Avenue, LOS ANGELES, California.

Southern California Reunion.

The Southern California reunion will convene at Orange on Friday, July 17, continuing ten days. Am informed the grounds are cozy and convenient. Plenty of room for tenting, etc. Tents and appurtenances supplied when previously ordered. For full information as to cost of tents, etc., write the secretary of the reunion committee, Sr. Maggie Pankey, Santa Ana, California. We expect a large attendance from all parts of the district. Brn. Joseph Luff, W. E. Peak, A. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, William Gibson, and C. W. Earle, and possibly Robert Parker and J. C. Clapp, of the general ministry, with N. Van Fleet, evangelist, and others of the local priesthood, will be present. There will be several auxiliary sessions of Sunday-school and Religio. Come, let us have a mental and spiritual feast. A crucifixion of the flesh for ten days will be timely and beneficial. T. W. Williams, district president, 2802 South Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, California.

Notice to the Second Quorum of Seventy.

Dear Brethren: Will all who have changed their addresses since the issuance of the last circular letter please inform me of their present addresses at once, so as to be inserted in the new circular letter which we desire to get out just as soon as possible. Also, will each member of the Quorum please send me the items of his birth and baptism. Address me at 803 Hurlburt Street, Peoria, Illinois. H. E. Moler, secretary.

Correction.

In HERALD for May 6, page 415, the article entitled, "Mummy of unknown race found in New Mexico cave," should have been credited to St Louis Republic, March 15, 1903.

Notices.

To the Saints in Southeastern Missouri, Greeting: I will be in my field soon. All who desire preaching or know of openings please write me. My home address is 202 South Willis Avenue, Independence, Missouri. My field address for the present will be Piedmont, Missouri. Let me hear from you.

J. D. ERWIN.

Conference Notices.

Northern Wisconsin District will convene with the Evergreen Branch, at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, June 6, 1903. Prayer service at 9 a. m., business-meeting 10.30 a. m. Dedication of Valley Junction church at this conference. Our secretary being absent, please send ministry and branch reports to W. P. Robinson in time for conference at Valley Junction, in care of J. W. Thompson. W. P. Robinson, district president.

The conference of the Fremont District will convene with the Shenandoah Branch, June 6, at 10 a. m. Send all reports and communications to Eber Wilcox, Shenandoah, Iowa. A. Badham, president.

The Central Illinois District conference and Sunday-school convention will have sessions at Beardstown, Illinois, June 6 and 7, and representatives from scattered parts of the district are desired to be present or report by mail the outlook for future work. M. R. Shoemaker, president.

Conference of the London District will convene with the Waterford Branch, Ontario, on June 6 and 7. As this is not a business conference no reports will be required; but we earnestly urge all who can to come and make it one of the most spiritual seasons we have ever enjoyed. Be sure to get delegate certificate from station agent. Maggie MacGregor, secretary.

The conference of the Des Moines, Iowa, District, will meet in the Saints' church at Boone, June 13 and 14, 1903. A. A. Reams, district secretary, box 761, Des Moines, Iowa.

By consent of the branches, the conference of the Northeastern Kansas District will convene at Centralia, June 13, instead of June 6, as previously announced. This change is made so that Apostle I. N. White may be present, and would necessarily date the Sunday-school convention June 12. Those coming from the west will be met at Centralia; those from the east at Corning. M. F. Gowell.

Upon consultation of the district officers and several of the branch officers it has been decided to change the date of the Clinton District conference from June 13 to June 6, 1903, 9 a. m. Therefore Clinton District conference will convene at Veve chapel, June 6, 1903, at 9 a. m. A. C. Silvers, secretary, Walker, Missouri.

Eastern Michigan conference will convene in the Guards' Armory Hall, Port Huron, June 13, 1903. All reports may be sent to J. W. Davis, 1130 Pearl Street, Port Huron. William Davis, district president.

Convention Notices.

The Nauvoo District Sunday-school association will meet on Friday, June 5, at Farmington, Iowa; Bro. George P. Lambert in charge. We hope to have a large attendance. Everybody, come! Madge M. Craig, secretary.

Sunday-school convention of the Clinton District will be held at Veve Chapel June 5, 1903. Prayer-meeting 9 a. m. Sunday-schools that have not sent in their reports are urgently requested to send in reports at once. May we have a goodly attendance, and may the Spirit of peace be with us. Iva Keck, secretary.

The Northwestern Kansas Sunday-school convention will convene near Scandia, Republic County, Kansas, June 5, 1903, at 2 p. m. All reports should be sent in by the last of May. Myrtle Coop, secretary, Downs, Kansas.

The London District, Sunday-school association will convene at Waterford, Ontario, June 5, 10 a. m. George Buschlen, superintendent, Floralice Miller, secretary.

The dedication of the St. Louis world's fair is the occasion of a brilliant series of articles in the May Review of Reviews on the Louisiana Purchase and its results, the exposition in forecast, and the city of St. Louis. The same number has an outline of the plans formed for the municipal exposition to be held at Dresden this summer, and the noteworthy features of several other European fairs and congresses are summarized in an article on the great gatherings of the summer and autumn at home and abroad. The character sketch of the month is by Mr. W. T. Stead, his subject being the Right Honorable George Wyndham, whose name has been immortalized by its connection with the Irish land bill introduced last month in the British Parliament. An illustrated article by Mr. F. N. Stacy describes the great ships for the Pacific trade being built at New London, Connecticut, for Mr. James J. Hill. There are several pages of illustrated notes on the spring fiction and other new books, and "The Progress of the World," "Cartoon Comments," and other editorial departments are marked by a distinctive freshness and timeliness.

NOTED LAWYER DEAD.

William McLennan, with whom President Joseph Smith studied law at Nauvoo, Illinois, before entering the office of Honorable William Kellogg, Canton, Illinois, for many years a leading citizen, lawyer, and politician at Nebraska City, Nebraska, died at his home, May 17, from the effects of a fall down the stairway of a fellow attorney's office at Hamburg, Iowa, May 7, while on business at that city. Mr. McLennan was an able lawyer, a shrewd politician, and successful business man. He was born in Ohio, December 19, 1821, and was therefore an old man at his death. President Joseph Smith remembers well his kindness as an instructor.

"FREE-LANCE WARFARE."

The following clipping from the Herald and Presbyter for March 18 has been sent us:

Our Campbellist friends have always strenuously advocated "Christian union," and manifest their interest in it as they have opportunity. A church news item in the Octographic Review says in regard to a certain meeting: "Three came out on the Lord's side (2 Corinthians 6: 17, 18), two from the Baptists, and one from the M. E.'s." The Scripture passage, it will be noted, enjoins: "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Believing this passage to be applicable to the Baptists and Methodists, it is no wonder that the writer, with pious unction, says of the three that they "came out on the Lord's side." In the light of such unchristian applications of Scripture it is plain what these "Disciples" mean by "Christian union." It simply means a free-lance warfare on the other churches in order to the building up of their own denomination. That such a theory and practice can obtain in this enlightened day is a grief and a pity.

The following letter was sent us by Bro. C. P. Faul, and explains itself:

PAPEETE, Tahiti, April 7.

C. P. FAUL, Stewartsville, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Your very kind letter of sympathy and condolence containing the resolutions of sympathy of the Saints of the Far West District in conference assembled in St. Joseph was received by me on Sunday last, and read to the Saints after sacrament-meeting, and will be translated and written for them. They were very grateful for the expressions of sympathy from their brethren in America, and they were all pleased to hear the name "Mareto," as they called Bro. M. H. Forscutt. Please express our gratitude and thanks to the kind Saints of your district for the words of comfort and sympathy conveyed through us to the Saints here in their hour of grief and sorrow.

Respectfully, your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH F. BURTON,

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH left Lamoni, on Saturday May 23, bound for Texas, to be present at a conference at San Antonio. He expects to be in Lamoni again by June 6, and soon thereafter will start on his trip to England. Bro. R. C. Evans will join him at London, Ontario,

INTEMPERANCE DECREASING.

From the Ledger published at Lucas, Iowa, we clip the following, which will be good reading and food for thought.

NOT ON THE INCREASE.

It is a fact proved by drinking statistics that America is becoming more temperate, but the best authorities do not attribute the improvement to the effects of legal penalties. Hard drinkers are no longer countenanced by desirable society. This is one reformatory force, and a stronger one yet is the increasing demand in many lines of business for men who are always sober and reliable.

Among these are the railroads of the land. Confirming with new evidence the frequent reports of rules and regulations demanding sober men to run their trains, thereby doing more practical temperance work than any other agency or organization—perhaps than all other agencies or organizations—in it, comes the report that the Lake Shore Road has informed the town of Collingwood, Ohio, that one million dollars will be spent there in enlarging the machine-shops if the town “goes dry” at the approaching election, and that the money will be taken elsewhere if the town “goes wet.” The reason given for assuming this position involves no judgment on the morality, or even on the propriety of drinking, either in moderation or in excess; the railway officials simply state that indulgence in intoxicants decreases the skill of workmen and prevents getting a desired and possible return for wages paid. That is an argument which can not be met except by a denial of its truth—and nobody denies it. Collingwood may or may not “go dry,” but if it does the prosperity of all its business men not engaged in the liquor traffic will obviously be advanced, and if it does not they will know exactly why they are not to have a lot of new customers and a larger population among whom to share the burden of taxation. Most towns like machine-shops, and those that have them like to see the shops made bigger and employing more machinists. No doubt Collingwood is in this class and it will be interesting to see what effect the effort of the Lake Shore to influence its electors on the temperance question will have.

It is almost needless to add that Collingwood voted against permitting the sale of liquors within its boundaries. Because of the result of the election the Lake Shore Railroad will spend one million dollars in new shops, additional to extensive buildings already erected there.

Had the village voted for the sale of liquor the railroad officials stated that this extra sum of money would have been withheld.

It is significant that what the lecturers and the clergy of the different denominational churches have failed to do by lurid picturing of the awful results of the liquor traffic and the wickedness of the saloon-keepers, the business men of the country are likely to accomplish by the application of plain common sense in business methods.

It may be that the decrease in the drink habit referred to, which we believe is correct, is largely to be attributed to this very sensible conclusion that men addicted to the habit of taking intoxicants are not to be trusted in any position of responsibility requiring the exercise of coolheadedness and quick decision of judgment. So, what appeals to the moral and religious element in man has largely failed to bring about, may be wrought by an appeal to the mercenary side of human nature. What man will not do for principle he may do for profitable employment or money. Ah, well! if Paul could rejoice in that the gospel was preached though it might be “by contention,” so we may welcome the decrease of the drink habit, though it may come from the influence of “the love of the root of evil.”

ITEMS OF LONDON.

The following items regarding the city of London, England, will be appreciated as general information concerning the great city:

The Mail says that a report recently published by the London County Council gives all that is known about the world's metropolis to the end of March, 1902. It shows that in the administrative county of London there are 571,768 inhabited houses, which shelter 4,536,541 persons, or an average of 7.93 as compared with 7.74 ten years before. Industrial workers aggregate 1,013,177, less than three fourths of whom are males. The mortality in London during that year was greater than that of Amsterdam, Brussels, Copenhagen, Stockholm, and Berlin, but less than that of Paris, St. Petersburg, Vienna, and New York. By 1904 London—i. e., the county council—will own 108½ miles of tramways and light railways. In 1901 the gross profit on those then in operation was £148,797. In the last ten years there has been a general decrease in offenses against the law, save drunkenness and arrests, for these have increased from 537 per 100,000 population to 846, or over 50 per cent. The ratable value of the city increased from £19,963,285 in 1891 to £39,769,069 in 1901.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

In Doctrine and Covenants 17:10, the priest's duty is to “preach, teach, expound, exhort and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties; and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.”

Does the word but imply that the priest can not administer the sacrament, or ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons when there is an elder present?

Not necessarily. Where a priest is the presiding officer of a branch he may do any and all of these acts referred to ex officio, and at his own discretion. When an elder is presiding, then the priest may perform the acts referred to under the direction and with the knowledge and consent of the one presiding.

In an assembly of Saints in a locality where no organization has been affected, the highest in authority is to preside and take the lead of meetings, and perform the acts referred to.

What would constitute sufficient occasion for the priest to assist the elder, when the elder is present?

The temporary absence of the presiding elder from a regular or regularly called meeting in which the acts referred to were to be performed. The fact that the aid of the priest was needed by reason of the circumstances of the occasion; the request of the branch presiding elder, or the request, or order of the branch requiring it.

The presiding officer may call on the priest, or a priest to assist him in doing any of the acts named in the law, and the priest so called upon is authorized to act with the elder.

A BROTHER writing from a busy city in the East says:

I am quite busy all the time; have not had a day off duty since last August. Then my duties as president of the branch keep me plenty of work for all spare time. I felt to write you this, that it may help encourage you to see that the Lord works with his people and stands by them when they live their religion. I have nothing to boast of, nor to take credit to myself, but I give God the praise for whatever success may come through my efforts to advance his cause, and defend his truth and his chosen servants against the attacks of modern Pharisees. My desire is, not only so to live myself, but to help the flock over which I preside so to live that their lives may be a stinging rebuke to the falsehoods of religious bigotry and intolerance with which we so often come in contact. May God bless and sustain you is my prayer.

It is truly encouraging to us to know that men of the faith have the confidence in the man, Christ Jesus, to the defense of the cause wherever they are.

EARNEST QUERIES.

Now and then we have questions presented to us for answer in which there seems to be much simplicity and yet are difficult to reply to satisfactorily to the querist. Here is a sample.

Must I have hands laid on me in order to be saved?

The laying on of hands is an ordinance of the gospel, as the same is taught in the New Testament; and yet no text occurs to the mind that states in so many words, "ye must have hands laid on you, or ye can not be saved."

The text in Acts 8: 15-17 clearly shows that at the time Philip was preaching at Samaria, and Peter and John came to him following up his work the laying on of hands was an act of an official character by which the Holy Ghost was conferred upon those who believed and were baptized.

It would seem that it was at the time fully understood that this act was an essential part of the initial ceremony by which men were received into and became a part of the church, or the kingdom of God. (See Acts 2: 46, 47.) Whether necessary unto salvation then and now the believer in Christ ought not to hesitate to believe.

I have heard the elders say that all those who were honest and lived up to the best light they had would be saved anyhow. If true, why the need of restoring the gospel?

The salvation referred to by the elders whom this inquirer has heard say this must have been that salvation stated by Jude as the "common salvation," and could not have been the one known to these elders as the celestial salvation, the result of an obedience to the commandments of God and the requirements of the gospel. The words, "if true," show that there is a chance for a doubt; and this doubt arises because of the fact that the statement is not true, in the sense implied in the question.

If I should live strictly to the New Testament gospel, and belong to some other church, why could I not be saved?

No other church that we know of other than the one organized April 6, 1830, under the teaching of the restored gospel, and the various different bands of believers therein, teach the New Testament philosophy; hence we should answer that none other offer the salvation referred to.

Is the simple fact of authority a just reason to keep one out of the kingdom of God?

Yes. Any one to be fully saved must be administered to by one having authority, or the administration is without avail.

If the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints is to be preached to every kindred, nation, tongue, and people before the second appearing of Christ, and according to all the signs of the times is so near at hand, how can this arduous task be accomplished by the small force you have?

Whether the time be long or short, the statements of Jesus in Matthew 24: 14, and Revelation 14: 6, will not be fulfilled until this is done.

THE following editorial taken from a late copy of the Daily News of St. Paul, Minnesota, is well worthy a careful reading. There is by far too loose an observance of the laws instituted of God for the government of man, as designed from the beginning, and of which we as a people can not plead ignorance because we have been told in revelation what the law was.

DIVORCE AND POLYGAMY.

The clergy of the Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Methodist churches in this country, through a joint committee representing the various churches, are to meet in Los Angeles, California, May 20, to recommend some uniform attitude for ministers to take regarding the remarrying of divorced persons.

It is quite certain that as a result the lines will be more closely drawn.

Popular interest in the question of divorces was never greater than it is now. All classes of people in all sections of the country are coming to regard divorce and remarriage as the great national social evil.

The Detroit conference of the national congress of mothers gave the question prominent place in its discussions. These estimable women took a narrow view of the matter, however, and contented themselves with demanding uniform laws, without defining the law as it ought to be, and with denouncing polygamy in Utah.

Uniformity of divorce law is certainly to be desired, provided the uniform law is good. But if, to secure uniformity, there must be such concessions all around as to result in looseness, the result might be even worse than it is at present.

It is to be regretted that the mothers were not more definite in their demands. Denunciations of polygamy in Utah, where legal polygamy no longer exists, is hardly to the point. Denunciation of the consecutive polygamy which legally exists in every State in the Union outside of Utah would have been more timely and effective.

Statistics have shown that more than three fourths of the divorces in the United States are procured for immediate remarriage to another person already selected. What condition could be imagined with a stronger and more steady tendency to undermine the home and cause to be held lightly the ties that should be held as the most sacred on earth! Courtship and engagement of persons already married is a crime and a scandal to which the law should no longer be an accessory. The mothers of the land need to worry less over polygamy in Utah than over this open, legalized consecutive polygamy that is going on in every State.

Mothers may well look with dread upon the future of their daughters while a polygamy so widespread and morally so lax prevails outside Utah and is finding its victims in annually increasing thousands in every plane of society.

Until there is a divorce law in every State forbidding remarriage of divorced persons except under certain strictly prescribed conditions, polygamy will continue to flourish throughout the country.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. I. N. White, writing under date of May 16, says of his field: "Things are moving along very nicely in the mission. I was to have been at Downs, Kansas, this morning to assist in dedicating a Union church house to-morrow, at Cheyenne, but was notified in the 'nick of time,' not to come, as the dedication had been postponed, and it was almost impossible for me to get to the place on account of the high water. Will, however, attend the Northwestern Kansas District Conference at Scandia, for June 6 and 7; then the Northeastern Kansas Conference at Centralia, for 13th and 14th, it having been changed from 6th and 7th in order to secure my presence. I believe things are going to work well in the 'Stake.' Good feeling is prevailing. About all of the men are at work, and prospects are quite good for a good campaign during the summer."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. A. S. Cochran writes that he baptized three at Lawton, Michigan, on Sunday, May 17.

Bro. George H. Graves, of 2458 State Street, Chicago, Illinois, writes that he will start for his field in Kentucky about June 10.

Bro. Amos M. Chase, of the ministerial force in the Rocky Mountain Mission has in the Ogden Standard for May 4 a challenge to the Utah church for a discussion of issues.

The number of appointees to labor this conference year, as per notes of the secretary of the church, are as follows: Quorum of Twelve, 12; high priests, 52; evangelists, 7; First Seventy, 55; Second Seventy, 52; elders, 154; priests, 23; total, 355.

THE NECESSITY OF SEPARATING THE CHAFF FROM THE WHEAT.

Luke in speaking of the Bereans, says: "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so."—Acts 17:11. Paul exhorted the Thessalonians to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thessalonians 5:21. He did not want them to accept blindly that which was delivered unto them. He knew that a blind adherence, even to a truth, was not likely to bring that joy and satisfaction that results from an intelligent obedience, nor could they be able to give a reason for the hope that is in them. One of the great errors of the present day, so far as spiritual things are concerned, is in accepting whatever is uttered from the pulpit, or published by the religious press, without proper examination and just comparison with the written word of God. While the Bereans readily received the word, it was because they found it was in perfect harmony with that which had been written by the prophets.

Jesus said, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." He knew that by comparing his testimony and his works by the Scriptures they would know that he was all that he claimed to be, that he was the one of whom the prophets had spoken.

Every preacher of the gospel should use all diligence to know the gospel of Christ, and see to it that neither from his lips or pen should anything fall that is not in perfect harmony therewith. But unfortunately the wisest of us sometimes allow our minds to be carried away with mere fanciful speculation, and permit the results to dribble through as though it was the word of the Lord, when it is only the imagination of our hearts, or the whispering of false spirits; hence the necessity of the divine injunction, "The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:5.

The writer's experience and observation have taught him the necessity of examining and testing by the triune standard, not only the teaching of others, but everything that is presented to his own mind, from whatever source it may come. He has learned,—and the lesson has been deeply impressed upon his mind,—that he is only human and needs a greater portion of the Holy Spirit to quicken his perception, enlarge his understanding, and enable him to judge righteous judgment. The warnings given by Christ respecting false christs and false apostles, and false spirits, and their subtle work shows how cunningly the evil one weaves his net to entrap our feet; and when he can not use the avowed enemies of truth successfully, he will seek to work through some of the household of faith. The past affords abundant evidence of this. And even to-day, after all the examples of satanic cunning and human weakness we find ourselves liable to be lured from the foundations of truth.

Sometimes sermons bearing many excellencies are marred by flighty imagination, and chaff comes dribbling through with the wheat, and unless we are prepared to discern between truth and error and to separate the one from the other we are apt to receive the chaff and in our turn hand it out unwittingly to the detriment of the cause we love, as well as injuring ourselves by feeding upon that which has no nutriment. I once heard an eloquent sermon on the second advent of Christ, in which the speaker brought forth abundant proof that Christ would come in person again to earth; but he endeavored to show that although it was written, "But of that day and hour no one knoweth; no, not the angels of God in heaven, but my Father only,"—that while they did not then know, it did not follow that no one would know in the dispensation when that event should take place, but that it was quite probable some would know the day and the hour. Upon this point Jesus has been very explicit and emphatic; for, in addition to the above statement and that which follows in Matthew 24: 44, 47, I. T. He says, "And what I say unto one I say unto all men; Watch, therefore, for you know not at what hour your Lord doth come" (verse 49), and again in the fifty-first verse he says, "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." In fact, the latter part of that chapter from verse 42 to the end is intended to show that the day or hour will not be known.

The foregoing instruction was evidently intended for his people who should live in the generation when that event should take place, while it should also act as a spur to the generation which would intervene that they might also be found in the path of duty. In Matthew 25: 12 Christ repeats the warning, "Watch therefore; for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." The same injunction is found in Mark 13: 47, 55. In Luke 12: 38-43, he emphasizes the necessity of watching continually. And in verse 44 we read, "And now, verily I say these things unto you, that ye may know this that the coming of the Lord is as a thief in the night."

Peter testifies, "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night.—2 Peter 3: 10. Malachi says, "The Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple." And the Lord speaking directly to his church in these last days, says, "Gird up your loins and be watchful, and be sober, looking forth for the coming of the Son of Man, for he cometh in an hour you think not."—Doctrine and Covenants 61: 6. Again, "Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3, 4. In section 49: 2, we are told Christ "will reign [in the heavens] till he descends on the earth to put all enemies under his feet; which time is nigh at hand: I, the Lord God, have spoken it; but the hour and the day no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven, nor shall they know until he comes."

With these testimonies before us we need not be deceived by those who claim to know the exact time of his coming. The prophet Moses said, "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God."—Deuteronomy 29: 29.

CHARLES DERRY.

THE ORDER OF ENOCH.

"Appoint among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesmen at once, but let one speak at a time, and let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken, that all may be edified of all, that every man may have an equal privilege."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 37.

This language refers to the "School of the Prophets." We quote it as justification for writing upon the above named subject in the columns of the HERALD. Primarily, the statement has no reference to the HERALD; yet, if we rightly understand the policy of our official church paper, in the absence of the "School of the Prophets," it may be made to supply fairly well the need for which that institution was established in the original organization of the church.

This can be accomplished by exercising the same courtesy toward each other and manifesting the same degree of wisdom that we would be expected and required to do, if occupying the floor of the "School of the Prophets." Like the latter, the HERALD guarantees "that every man have an equal privilege." If, happily, we do not abuse this privilege, may not any important subject be presented, many write, and all HERALD readers be edified? Upon this hypothesis, we proceed with confidence.

The present period is distinguished by the number and variety of its organizations. Many of these are conferring benefits, to a greater or lesser extent, upon mankind. Some of them are indispensable; as, for illustration, the civil governments of the world. We do not feel at liberty to write disparagingly of any organization which has been instituted for good and is accomplishing that object. Yet none of these should displace the Church of Christ in our affection and esteem. Neither should they turn us from the allegiance we owe to God to "seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness."

Of the various financial organizations which have been attempted outside the church to aid the poor or benefit the masses we need not write. That they were created by the wisdom of this world is admitted by all. Hence they are devoid of interest to us now. Not so with combinations of capital or financial organizations contemplated within the church. These are of intense interest to every Latter Day Saint.

I desire to confine this brief essay to an examination of some features of one such organization,—one that is provided for by revelation,—the “Order of Enoch.”

I trust others also will write respecting this organization. In my judgment, it should not be overlooked. Sufficient reason for this conclusion is found in the word of God to us, as follows: “It must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion . . . for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven.”—Doctrine and Covenants 77:1. “The order which I commanded to be organized and established, to be an united order, and an everlasting order for the benefit of my church, and for the salvation of men until I come,” etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 101:1). “It is my purpose to provide for my Saints . . . but it must needs be done in mine own way.”—Paragraph 2.

The Lord’s “way” to provide temporarily for his saints, according to these revelations, is through the establishment of “an united and everlasting order” which he revealed to Enoch; and, in our day, to Joseph Smith, “for the benefit of my church and for the salvation of men.”

Such an institution as this is certainly worthy of our best consideration. If this article shall develop thought and incite study respecting this important order, the purpose in writing it will have been subserved.

We distinguish between inheritances, either under the law of consecration or in the Order of Enoch, and stewardships in the latter.

Inheritances are homes and the occupants own them. “Let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and the church . . . ; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore, he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him.”—Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.

Stewardships represent property which an individual manages or controls for the benefit of the church, but which he does not own. “And again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you; behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken; and if the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards. But verily I say unto you, I have appointed unto you to be stewards over mine house, even stewards indeed.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101:10.

Neither should any man among these business managers claim the profits accruing from the business he controls. The profits are all put in a common treasury and used for the good of the church. “And all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things . . . shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

This order thus affords its members an opportunity of consecrating their entire business capacity to the cause of Christ. Under it they may present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service. (Romans 12:1.)

The Order of Enoch is not designed to restrain business ability, but to develop it. It aims to supply its members with all the capital each can wisely use. As evidence of this important fact, please read: “And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifested before the council of the order plainly, that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

Equality of ability in business or other matters will not be reached by us in this world, nor in the world to come, nor sameness of gifts. We use the word reached rather than attained; for, should such a condition obtain, it would not be an attainment. It would be a monotony to be dreaded, a calamity to be feared. “Having, then, gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness."—Romans 12: 6-8. And this concerning the faithful when Christ returns: "He commanded these servants to be called unto him to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading. Then came the first, saying, Lord thy pound hath gained ten pounds. And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds. And he said likewise to him, Be thou over five cities."—Luke 19: 15-19.

These men had gained different amounts by trading, according to their differing ability. Both were commended of the Lord and the difference of their talent still recognized by placing one over ten cities, the other over five.

Here it is interesting to inquire: "How did these men obtain possession of the pound they had been trading with?" The answer is: "Then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he [Christ] had given the money."—Luke 19: 15.

Men come into possession of stewardships in the Order of Enoch in the same manner. They are appointed unto them by the Lord. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.) After thus securing a stewardship, they may receive help by "the voice and common consent of the order." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.)

Of course, every man in the order has a stewardship. As the stewardships are appointed by the Lord, it follows that membership in the order is also designated by revelation. This view is confirmed by the following: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I give unto the united order, organized agreeable to the commandment previously given, a revelation and commandment concerning my servant Shederlaomach, that ye shall receive him into the order."—Doctrine and Covenants 89: 1. Again: "Verily I say unto you, it is wisdom, and expedient in me, that my servant Zombre, . . . should become a member of the order."—Doctrine and Covenants 93: 2.

Priesthood and its various offices are conferred upon men by revelation. We endeavor to instill into the minds of men who obey the gospel the necessity of preparing themselves for usefulness in the ministry, that the Lord may choose them for such work. But the opportunities and inducements to "build up the kingdom of God," are not confined to the ministry. They are open to all. The Lord said: "All are called . . . and . . . let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Has it occurred to us that the sphere of the usefulness in the church occupied by the men of business and of work is as important and as sacred as that of the ministry? Are they not equally devoted to the kingdom of God and as anxious for its upbuilding? Why, then, should they be discriminated against; why circumscribed; why hampered; why denied the inestimable privilege of consecrating their entire ability and energy to the cause of Christ?

The Order of Enoch is a part of the plan of salvation. Its establishment would remove these barriers and permit every member of it to consecrate all his talent to the Lord. Why, then, has not this organization been established among us?

For many years the Reorganization was deprived of the benefit of a full quorum of apostles. Trial and qualification of the men had to precede their designation to the apostleship. "I have still other men of my church who shall be designated in their time if they still continue faithful unto me, and in the work whereunto they are now called."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 1.

What, then, shall we say of the Order of Enoch? Will the Lord call men to membership in it and appoint them stewardships, until they prepare themselves for such work?

Do you infer the Lord will give this order to the church in its time, the same as he has many other helps; such as the patriarchate, stake organizations, etc.? Granted; but may not the time be hastened by wise thought and action on our part? (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 4.) May it not be hindered if we are unwise? (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 13.)

Upon what arm of the church will the Order of Enoch largely devolve? Its work pertains to temporalities. So does that of the Bishopric.

Have we not men in the Bishopric now who are prepared to assume the responsibilities and discharge the duties which membership in the Order of Enoch implies? Have not those who preside over the temporal affairs of the church been tested for years; have they not proven themselves men of honor and integrity; has not their record and have not the Saints sustained them as such during years of service; have not the heavens also declared to some that they are men who can be trusted absolutely to do God's work; and that they will do it!

As a people, are we prepared for the organization of the Order of Enoch among us? Have we given the matter very serious consideration? Or have we treated the revelations referring to it lightly? (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.)

We can not evade the issue. The fiat of Jehovah has gone forth. He has revealed this as his way to provide for his saints. It was his way in Enoch's time. It is still his way; "an everlasting order for the benefit of my church until I come."

We are all intensely desirous of obtaining the results which the establishment of this order would bring. "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed were his own. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all."—Acts 4: 32-33. "Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise, the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

The Order of Enoch came into existence originally by revelation in answer to petition of those holding the high priesthood, respecting "that which they had presented before the Lord," concerning temporalities.—Doctrine and Covenants 71: 1.

The way is open to us. It could be reinstated in a similar manner. Is the present time opportune?

"And it shall come to pass, that I, the Lord God, will send one mighty and strong, holding the scepter of power in his hand, clothed with light for a covering, whose mouth shall utter words, eternal words; while his bowels shall be a fountain of truth, to set in order the house of God, and to arrange by lot the inheritances of the saints," etc.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 673.

Have we not already "the house of God set in order;"—reorganized quite thoroughly? Of the work of the one mighty and strong what remains, then, but to arrange by lot the inheritances of the saints? Will not this part of the prophecy be fulfilled also? Must not we be actors in its fulfillment?

Before inheritances can be arranged by lot the land of promise must be purchased. What an impetus the introduction of the Order of Enoch would give for the accomplishment of this work! The amount of money it would bring into the treasury of the church in a legitimate way would be unimportant when compared with the endowment of grace, spirituality and power which would accompany its establishment?

May the loving Lord make us willing and obedient that we may be acquitted and approved in the day of his power.

ASTRONOMY.

I wish to furnish your readers with an account of the wonderful new star in the constellation of Perseus; called by the astronomers, Nova Persæ, one of the most singular and inexplicable objects in the northern heavens, and which has so puzzled even most learned and erudite students of astro-physical phenomena, as to draw from Sir William Huggins, the learned president of the Royal Astronomical Society in London, England, the remarkable observation concerning it, "A sign in the heavens!"

Devout Latter Day Saints at least will not be slow to recognize in this startling phenomena a fulfillment of one, at least, of the things named in our blessed Lord's prediction in Matthew 24: 26-30.

When such a cautious man, and withal such a profound astronomer and mathematician as Sir William Huggins speaks of a "sign" in the heavens and a mystery to his comprehension, we may well take it for granted that it is decidedly a new phenomenon.

There have been other stars almost equal in magnitude to Nova Persæ, which have arisen upon the horizon of learned and practiced astronomical observers, both in Europe and in America, which have bursted, as it were, in sudden, startling, and unexpected effulgence; and even attained the dimensions of a star of the first or second magnitude, but have almost invariably, after the lapse of three or four weeks at most, subsided into greyish, leaden-looking and insignificant bodies, indistinguishable to the naked eye; and finally becoming lost to sight in all but the very best and most expensive telescopes. But not so with Nova Persæ! This star burst forth with strange and startling effulgence, gradually became dimmer and dimmer for about three months, seven days, sixteen hours, then bursted forth into renewed incandescence (to use the astro-physical term). It blazed up for two months or more, and again sank to the fifth magnitude; when, of course, like the other "new stars" of the same category, it was given up for lost.

To the surprise of Professor R. Pickering of the great Lick Observatory, Mount Hamilton, California, and others who had been closely watching it, it again exhibited signs of recrudescence, increased day after day in splendor and brilliancy till at last it rivaled the celebrated double or rather triple star of the first magnitude, Aldebaran.

It so remained for, I believe, seventeen weeks and five days; when it again began to diminish in magnitude and splendor and is now, I believe in a condition of comparative quiescence.

Nova Persæ was first observed in the early part of February, 1901; and the remarkable alternations and changes I have described have taken place in the order I have stated; so far, at least, as my memory serves me, for I have not at hand a historical account giving the exact dates and times of this star's alternations in power and magnitude.

But most strange and startling of all is the wonderful mystery conveyed to our finite senses by the stupendous spectacle of the wonderful events. Professor R. S. Ball, the astronomer Royal for Ireland, says: "Let us look closely into the cause or causes of this enigmatic and marvelous phenomenon, and gaze with awe and silence upon the solemn spectacle unfolded to our view" (or words to that effect).

Imagine two vast bodies, such, for instance, as our own sun, to be traveling through interstellar space of eternal unfathomable depths, and at a speed of say thirty miles per second of time, (many of the so-called fixed stars have an even higher velocity than this I have supposed: viz, eighteen hundred miles per minute, or one hundred eight thousand miles an hour, perpetually), imagine, therefore, two such bodies at such a speed, coming into direct and violent collision from two opposite directions. The speed of both stars added together makes the initial velocity at the moment of impact no less than sixty miles per second or three thousand six hundred miles per minute, i. e., two hundred sixteen thousand miles per hour.

The collision of two such bodies flying through space at the speed indicated would,—no matter how vast their size, or how great their specific density,—be amply sufficient to develop such a heat as would reduce the two vast enormous bodies to a blazing mass of the temperature of incandescent hydrogen; a heat that is simply indescribable in our finite language. The two bodies, melted into vapor by the tremendous heat evolved by their collision, would partake no longer of the character of solid bodies; but would simply constitute one vast tremendous mass of incandescent vapor, of such a temperature that the hottest and fiercest blast-furnace fades into insignificance by comparison!

Yet it must be self-evident—in the words of Sir William Huggins—that even such a mass of incandescent molten vapor must in time cool down and partake of the lower temperature of the atmospheric air (or rather ether) in its immediate vicinity, such as other “new” stars (so-called) have done. The hypothesis, then, of collision has come to be the inexcusably accepted explanation of the new stars in Orion, in Auriga, in the constellation of Coronæ (or the Crown), and also the constellation of Cetus. But what of Nova Persæ, this star I have been describing at large? This incandescent, blazing mass of hydrogen vapor which blazes and subsides again; blazes and subsides again. There, it is evident, is the scene of a catastrophe, or rather of a series of catastrophes, such as the mind of man, even in the highest intellectual ranges of thought and philosophy, positively staggers at, and well-nigh refuses to grasp! Two vast central suns in dreadful collision! And other worlds, nay, other suns and their planets with them, drawn by the tremendous power of gravitation into the one awful center of blazing ruin and destruction.

Such, says Professor Pickering, of Mount Hamilton's great observatory, is the awful explanation of the blazing and subsidence, blazing and subsidence again, of Nova Persæ! the intense and increased magnitude of the incandescence caused by other immense suns or bodies falling into the original conflagration and ruin; which would be the resultant effect of the overwhelming power of suction (or gravitation) produced by the two vast bodies in the original collision!

Worlds upon worlds,—suns upon suns, destroyed at once and for ever! Awful as is the thought involved in this conclusion, and tremendous as is the issue conveyed to our human minds, it is possible the one and only solution of the mystery!

Let my readers endeavor to portray the effect of a conflagration visible fifty miles, forty miles; nay thirty miles! It would attract universal attention, and I had almost said all but universal consternation. But what of a conflagration visible right across the Atlantic Ocean from shore to shore, a distance of say three thousand miles. It would spread terror and alarm from pole to pole; from sea to sea; and from continent to continent; and persons of all ranks and climes would believe the end of all things at hand.

With this solemn thought, then, in the minds of my readers, let me appeal once more to the ascertained facts of astronomical research, and ask in all seriousness and solemnity, what must be the size of a conflagration visible to our little earth from a distance among the eternal regions of ether, amounting to no less than sixty-nine trillions of miles! Nothing short of the conflagration of suns upon suns; worlds upon worlds, would, as Doctor Pritchard remarked, be visible at even a thousandth part of this vast distance separating our earth from the new star in the constellation of Perseus, even using the largest telescope ever built by man.

Our spiritual “pastors and masters” of the olden school, twenty-five or thirty years ago, used to tell us that in six days God made the heavens and the earth, and that the six days there alluded to meant only twenty-four hours each day, and that from that hour of cessation there never was any more creation, and never will be; but the prophetic Spirit speaking through the mouth of the unlearned and untrained youth of Nauvoo, distinctly and unequivocally asserts that so far from God having made the earth and created everything in six days of twenty-four hours duration only; God is continually creating; and that to either his works or his worlds there is no end! (See Doctrine and Covenants, 22:8.) From the same prophetic writings we learn (and science is for ever unconsciously demonstrating the verity of the fact), that not only is the Creator continually creating, but also by the exercise of the same Almighty powers, he is continually destroying. Else, what is the awful and solemn announcement contained in Doctrine and Covenants (section 22, page 56) to intimate to our inquiring minds? These all passed away by the word of his power. Peter uses the same expression to portray the destruction of the “world that then was” by the word of his power. Only the destructive agent then was water, whereas now and hereafter it is fire (2 Peter 3:5 to 11). The beautiful and dignified lines of Doctor Watts seem just now to recur to my mind with a new meaning, and with added significance:

Before Jehovah's awful throne
Ye nations bow with sacred joy;
Know that the Lord is God alone,
He can create and he destroy.

His sovereign power without our aid
Made us of clay and formed us men;
And when like wand'ring sheep we strayed,
He brought us to his fold again.

True science, in contrast with "science falsely so-called" (1 Timothy 6:20), permits us to accept nothing as fact until it has passed the intensely careful scrutiny of actual and physical demonstration; and that demonstration must be repeated again and again; again and again; and nothing is recognized as a fact until it comes out triumphantly from the fire of the most withering and destructive critical analysis. In this crucible prophetic utterances of the Prophet Joseph Smith have been put, and after fifty years of testing have emerged and are still emerging, clear, spotless, and unscathed. We to-day see a world of scientific agnostics, a world of absolute unbelievers in the prophet's mission and message, actually proclaiming, both from pen and rostrum, the very truths that the once-despised prophet enunciated nearly seventy years ago.

In every field of the astro-physical and even in the natural sciences, men are observing and proclaiming the great truth that death and life, creation and destruction, the passing out of the old and passing in of the new are for ever but silently at work. At last, in the light of the Prophet's teachings illustrated everywhere by the grand and ever-present facts of natural history and human experience, men are slowly but surely beginning to recognize the vast world of meaning in St. Paul's dictum, "Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away."—Hebrews 8:13. And again, he "taketh away the first that he may establish the second."—Hebrews 10:9. The destructive powers of volcanic eruption, and of lurid and vivid lightnings, all proclaim as with a loud, unerring, and unmistakable tongue. Death is never absent from life; and life is never far from death.

My readers may ask, "How is it known that the light of the star Nova Persæ is really that of incandescent hydrogen and not incandescent nitrogen, oxygen, carbon, or other element? Our own atmosphere is composed of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, etc., with an infinitesimal admixture of argon; and surely it might be any one of the other four constituent gases apart from hydrogen."

Every metal or mineral heated to incandescence (or the highest heating point of glowing vapor) emits a kind of flame different to that emitted by any other metal or burning substance, though the difference of flame is one that is not visible always to the naked eye. To meet this want, a small and extremely delicate implement has been invented, called a spectroscope. This little instrument receives the light from the burning metal, or gas, or substance to be tested; splits the white, or apparently white, flame up into its component parts (or elements as they are called), much after the manner of a triangular prism, and thus by the diversified colors, or rather diversified arrangement of the colors (the flame of no two metals being exactly alike) the experimenter knows what is the composition of the light received into the spectroscope, that is, what is the exact kind of burning gas or incandescent metal, for instance, which is throwing off the light, the peculiar bands and colors of which he sees passing through the spectroscope. The decomposed ray of light, broken up into its original parts or colors, is now plainly visible, and this is called the spectrum.

The spectroscope is in astronomical observatories fitted to the eyepiece of a specially constructed telescope, so built that by means of close fitting, hermetically sealed iron shutters at the other end of the telescope, all light is rigidly shut out. The telescope is then turned by elaborate machinery, to the star, or comet, or other celestial object they wish to examine. The iron shutters, being tightly sealed will admit absolutely no light, except just the one small beam or ray, from the star that the telescope is directed towards. This ray or beam falls directly upon the spectroscope at the other end, which, as I before stated, instantly splits up the beam of light into its component elements. Near a similar spectroscope, in the same room or laboratory, an assistant is burning various minerals of metals, such as iron, platinum, rubidium, nitrogen, zinc, carbon, oxygen, etc., and each spectrum from these substances is carefully compared with the spectrum obtained from the light of the star they are examining; and only when a similar spectrum is obtained from one or another of the elements tried, is the question set at rest; for it is obvious that the only gas of burning mineral or metal which will give the same spectrum as the star, is the one which will show what exact element is burning in that great and far distant conflagration of worlds on worlds.

In this way the light of Nova Persæ was received and examined; and then compared with the light obtained from many and various vapors (or gases) and minerals; such as helium, sodium, vanadium, rubidium, iron, aluminum, antimony, zinc, cerendrum, nitrous oxide, nitrogen, iron-peroxide, selenium, barium; and all failed till hydrogen was tried alone, and hydrogen in a condition of fiery incandescence of over one thousand four hundred ninety degrees Fahrenheit, gave the exact spectrum of Nova Persæ. Thus after an intricate series of patient, painstaking, and most minutely careful experiments conducted at Greenwich, Dublin, Kiel, Prague, Harvard, Mount Hamilton, and St. Petersburg, and the same result was reached.

I have seen investigations and chemical experiments with my own eyes conducted with instruments of the highest value, and of such extreme nicety and accuracy that the weight of a fly's wing will turn the scale.

There is an instrument at Greenwich Observatory, in London, England, called a seismograph, set to measure the vibrations of the earth; and that wonderful instrument will unerringly record the vibrations caused by the little children in Greenwich Park jumping and playing at skipping rope.

I now bid my readers farewell, thanking them for their cordial interest in the little walk I have been permitted to lead them into, of those pathless fields of nature's truth and God's wonderful handiwork, which a far, far, higher intellect than mine could never unfold to them, only by a glimpse hereafter of the vast beyond.

PRESSING OPPORTUNITIES.

Do you wish to do good? The time may never again come to the present generation wherein golden opportunities are open to each and every one, as they are to-day. The Saints nor the world when they stand before the Judge of all the earth to render an account of the deeds done and work accomplished, will hardly be able to plead the excuse for having no treasures laid up to their account, that they did not have an opportunity. The injunction of the apostle to the Galatian saints was, "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."—Galatians 6:10. Are we individually and collectively carrying out this instruction in our lives? If we are, then we will be rewarded and blessed; if not, loss and condemnation must certainly be the legacy.

In the experiences of life there can be but few sadder moments than those which bring to the mind the thoughts of neglected duties; failure for want of proper effort to perform true and worthy service; lost opportunities. It is not as the loss of a few dollars, or of a dear friend whom we hope to meet and greet again on other shores; but it is the careless bartering away of a birthright; the failure of a life; the loss of the time of the earthly probation, which signifies an eternity of regret. Can we for a moment afford to occupy such a position?

One of the generations of ancient Israel failed to perform the work required of it, being unmindful of the duties and obligations belonging to those who are privileged to occupy, if they will. The apostle later reverts feelingly to their unnecessary loss, saying: "And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned."—Hebrews 11:15. However, having through lack of faith and energy failed once, they were not entitled to another opportunity.

Israel to-day is face to face with the pressing opportunities for Zion's weal; the prophetic time of the world is open to us if we will occupy; our fathers and Israel's watchers of the distant past have sought and prayed for the time of this golden dawn. Now, what will we do?

1. The gospel message must be sent to the world, and men, women, and means are required to perform this work; an opportunity is offered to each one. Will you help?

2. The Saints' Home, builded for the protection and comfort of the aged and needy, is over-crowded; many worthy Saints are being turned away for want of room. We must have an addition built at once. Will you help?

3. There must be office-rooms builded for the transaction of the general business of the church, and a library-room, and proper vault-room builded to preserve the property of the church. Will you help?

4. Graceland College, an educational institution of the church, must receive aid in its important work of fitting and training the youth in an educational and practical way for life's great struggle. Will you help?

5. Lands are to be purchased, stewardships allowed, inheritances arranged, and the waste places of Zion redeemed. Will you help?

6. Foreign missions must yet be opened up and prosecuted in the benighted parts of the earth, so that others may be led to glorify the name of God, and it requires a sacrifice and means to perform this work. Will you help?

7. A temple is to be built, the bride, the church, purged from evil and preparation duly made to receive our Lord and King when he shall come. Will you help?

Pressing opportunities are thus open to each and every one. We are not asked to do more than we can in improving upon these, but we are asked, to do all that we can.

There are two ways in which to fulfill these, but whichever way one may choose to comply with, he must do all that he reasonably can.

(a) Follow the course of fulfilling the law, discharging all surplus for the use of the work of God that the Lord may have his own, as outlined in the work of the late joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric of the church.

(b) Those not thus fully complying with the law requiring that all things be laid before the Bishop in Zion, let them make as full and complete offering consecration, tithe or gift for those proper objects as it is in their power to do and in no sense be found laggards in their efforts for good, and thus improve upon the opportunities offered, not forgetting to sacrifice for the upbuilding of the work of the Lord; for if we sacrifice and endure with him we shall reign with him.

"Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."
—Mark 13: 56, 57, Inspired Translation.

Whoever has place and a stewardship in the house of God must answer to him for his work; such a one is the ruler, the responsible party over this stewardship, and should act in due season or he must fail to receive commendation when the Lord shall come.

RUINED AZTEC SHRINES.

If any one supposes it an easy task to explore among the buried cities of Central America he will do well to remove his misapprehension by reading the report of Teobert Maler, describing the happenings and results of three years of traveling and excavating in the interest of the Peabody Museum of Harvard University down in the great rubber country of Mexico.

Not that the German-American explorer has undertaken to write at length of hardships encountered; he is too much absorbed in his subject for that. The discoveries made by Doctor Maler in the Usumatsintla Valley, and especially about the hitherto unknown city of Yaxchilan, have added a fascinating chapter to the story of what is probably the most interesting branch of modern archæology, and the explorer's enthusiasm has expended itself rather in glowing, if technical, descriptions of the new finds than in narratives of adventure.

Still there are now and then in his story little references to the difficulties of getting along in that land of tangle and swamps, alive with brilliant-hued snakes and turtles, with gorgeous purple-black blossoms of climbing plants—a land where one sleeps by night and works by day under mosquito-netting and where the evening dews are so like copious rains that men and photographic instruments have to be kept under a sheathing of oilskin.

The scene of Doctor Maler's explorations was the valley of the Usumatsintla, in the southern part of the Yucatan country, in the border-land between Mexico and Guatemala. The region is thickly tangled with tropical growths which have almost buried the ruins of a dozen great cities of the ancient Maya civilization—Yaxchilan, "the city of Green Stones;" Budzilha, or "Smoking Water," which has received its name from a nearby waterfall;

El Cayo, the "place where the banks are strewn with stones;" Anaite, renowned for the white lilies that hide the surface of the river in front of the town, and El Chiczapete, which takes its name from a tree producing a well-known Mexican chewing-gum.

These and several smaller places, once popular settlements of the people whose civilization Cortez destroyed almost five centuries ago, have given up to Doctor Maler's camera and pencil all manner of data regarding the life and art of untold centuries.

But with what difficulty these records were obtained at least may be learned from the explorer's matter of fact statements of what he has gone through. At times, for instance, the traveling on the Usumatsintla was one protracted struggle against the swift current. Thus the short passage of only a few miles from Anaite to Yaxchilan was made in a time of high water, when the poles by which the cayuco, or native dugout canoe, is ordinarily propelled up stream, would not reach bottom, even close up to the high banks.

At such times the native ties a forked stick to the end of his boat pole and draws the cayuco painfully up stream by hooking to branches of trees or shrubbery. And not only the man with the pole, but also the other occupants of the boat, are supposed to lay hold of anything protruding from the banks and to pull with all their might.

Often the craft has to be tugged by main force through hundreds of yards of thick foliage, half submerged by the flood, and then, again, passages are encountered where the waters run so swiftly that the voyagers are whirled sharply around by them and swept down stream. Sometimes Doctor Maler found it necessary to make three or four attempts before a rapid could be surmounted.

"While we rested at night," he continues, we fastened our cayuco to the branches of a great chimon and protected ourselves and our baggage as well as we could with oiled-cloths against the heavy night rains. It was not possible to go on shore, as everything was flooded. At noon of the second day we finally arrived at the ruined city, the location of which one of my men recognized by certain signs. The 'cuyo' on the low shore which generally serves to mark the spot had entirely vanished under the water. We now breathed more freely, and, glad of having thus far surmounted all difficulties, we fastened our cayuco to a tree. My men admired one another as heroes, and each asserted that had it not been for him we never could have come up the river.

"In the meantime we sought shelter in the neighboring 'shore temple.' But as the entire stone structure was soaked with rain and all the ceiling dripped with moisture, my men constructed for themselves a palm leaf hut, while I, after discovering the 'labyrinth,' settled myself within its walls with my most important baggage, for the ceilings were dry, and the great stone benches were very convenient for sleeping purposes or for spreading my things upon them.

"It was rather dangerous to spend the nights alone in that solitary ruin, on account of the tigers, but fortunately we escaped all collision with these beasts, which are always to be greatly feared. We were so fortunate as to have a month of glorious weather, which greatly lessened the difficulties of my work among the ruins. It generally rained by night and hardly ever by day. Even the Usumatsintla soon sank again to a less dangerous level, but we had another trouble to contend against. Our stock of provisions had run very low, because the men, when living at some one else's expense, eat enormously and know no moderation."

A little later the explorer succeeded in getting provisions, and put in three months of vigorous work excavating the details of a rank, overgrown city, of which no one before had ever discovered the general plan, but which finally resolved itself as a series of terraces—not streets—rising one above another from the water front. This city is Yaxchilian, one of the greatest thus far examined in this region.

It is interesting to note that if Mr. Maler's explorations had not been made at this time many of the most important buried treasures of the ancient Maya civilization would within a few years have been lost almost irretrievably, for the Usumatsintla River is slowly eating away the site of the ancient city.

Every now and then an ancient slab or tombstone, or perhaps the whole front of a palace, plunges into the stream. Mr. Maler came, therefore, in good season for preserving at least a photographic record of them. Nor was this such an easy task. Most of the ruins proved to be so overgrown with dense vegetation that they could not be photographed as a whole, and even pictures of details were necessarily taken at special moments when the sun forced its way down through the thick foliage.

Some idea of the entanglement in the midst of which the archæologists have to work may be gained from the illustrations of temple fronts in the Peabody Museum report.

All manner of richly decorated structures appear in this great terraced town of Yaxchilan—such as the substructure of a water-tower standing in mid-stream; shrines and fences scattered almost everywhere, and around the temples numerous stone stelae, or great upright slabs of stone, carved on either side, one side usually representing the ancient god Ketsalkoatl, the special deity of the city, and the other side the figure of some human hero.

Some of these stelae were found to be in a very fair state of preservation, in spite of centuries of weathering; others have suffered greatly from the climate and one of the most interesting from the work of a band of wood-cutters who while camping among these ruins thirty years ago felled a huge caobo-tree that struck the monument, knocking off a corner and forcing the entire slab into a leaning position, from which it is liable at any moment to fall. And when it does fall it will inevitably strike a beautiful circular altar in front of it, to the ruin of both objects.

The sculptured lintels photographed by Mr. Maler show immense wealth of carvings, mostly in low relief. One of these in particular may be regarded as typical of Maya art at its best. It shows a woman of rank presenting a tiger's head prepared as a helmet, to the sacrificial priest.

The woman wears something that may be accepted as shoes, her cuffs are of Maya scale work, her long dress shows a kind of pattern, her head-dress indicates that small bonnets adorned with flowers were at that time fashionable in Mayaland, the ear ornaments are very distinct, and so large that they must have been uncomfortable to wear in a warm clime, and a line of small dots borders her cheeks, terminating in a scroll.

Below the surface is a necklace of stone beads, with a medallion in front. The head-dress of the priest, rich with handsomely-carved flowers, bears a grotesque face on the top, while from the knot at the back falls a plume of feathers. He carries a sacrificial knife in his right hand and his left lies against the front of the tiger's head. Sculptured thus and set up in a prominent place, this scene must have been very effective in prompting other Maya women to give offerings to other priests.

The image of the god Ketsalkoatl occurs repeatedly among the ruins of the city. A gigantic figure representing him was discovered by Mr. Maler, in which the God is shown sitting with his legs crossed, otherwise, so tall is he, his head would have gone through the ceiling. Indeed, he looks not unlike some of the Eastern representations of the seated Hindoo Buddha. The eyes are oblique, like a Chinaman's.

It is interesting to learn that the ancient religious rites of the god may not altogether have disappeared from the face of the earth, for the wood-cutters in these forests all assert that at a certain season of the year bands of strange Indians, of whom certain wandering tribes still exist in Yucatan, visit Yaxchilan and offer sacrifices to this very image of Ketsalkoatl, burning incense in vessels adorned with feathers and performing strange dances, one of which goes by the name of the "Dance of the Toucan," because the performers all wear the stuffed skin of this tropical bird as a head-dress.—New York Herald, April 26.

THERE is no diversity of opinion as to the necessity of obedience to a child's well-being, but in the methods whereby obedience is secured there is a wide difference in the practices, at least of parents. In a paper in the June Delimitator Mrs. Theodore W. Birney gives some eminently sane advice on obedience and punishment. Mrs. Birney is not partial to the rod, and she holds that incorrigibility in children is more often due to a "lack of self-control and knowledge of temperament and child nature" in the parent than to any abnormality in the child. There is, doubtless, an element of truth in that, though some may disagree. However, there are other points in the article that many parents will do well to take to heart. The author shows a wide knowledge of the nature and needs of children.

Original Poetry.

A Wonderful Story.

Let me tell you a wonderful story,
A story both strange and as true,
How an angel from realms of glory
To the earth with a message flew.

'Twas a message of weight and of power,
To be preached to each kindred tongue,
"To fear God and give him great glory,"
"The hour of his judgment had come."

For darkness had reigned o'er the nations,
"Man's precepts" for truth had been taught,
"Blind guides" led "the sheep" into byways,
And the true way never was sought.

He came to the lad at the "plough-tail,"
A lad both unlearned and poor;
For the wise men's widow must perish,
And the way-faring man's grow more.

He gladly received the great message,
And went forth the truth to teach,
As God's loyal, humble servant,
Honest-hearted and faithful to reach.

There were many hailed him with gladness,
And many the gospel obeyed,
And received a proof of the doctrine
And testified undismayed.

And visions, and tongues, and healing,
Accompanied the message sent,
God's wonderful power revealing,
Wherever his servant thus went.

But hatred and malice followed
And dogged his footsteps so brave;
For "priestcraft" now feared great danger—
Men and devils began to rave.

In spite of all, two hundred thousand
Brave souls had decided for right,
And the truth had shed over all lands
Its grand and glorious light.

But "the powers of darkness" prevailing,
"The Saints" were driven and tossed,
Neither courage nor prayer availing,
Homes destroyed and many lives lost.

And at last a howling mob painted
Shot this revered "prophet of God,"
But he became a martyr sainted
As his blood ran out on the sod.

Stained is the State where he dead fell,
Yes! Illinois, stained is thy name,
For the blood of God's martyred prophet
Cries out of the ground to thy shame.

But enshrined in the hearts of his brethren,
Will he dwell ever supreme;
As God's leal, true-hearted servant,
Worthy of love and esteem.

All the dear ones that I love,
Keep them safe, awake or sleeping,
Lord of earth and heaven above!
Guard them, oh, most tenderly,
They are safe if kept by Thee."

An Open Letter to a Friend.

My Dear Sister: I wrote to you sometime ago but received no answer. I thought strange, as you are always so punctual, until I heard the request for prayer in your behalf. If this sickness is not sent of God to help your purification and bring you closer in his love, then it must be to harrass and if possible to drag you down, and make you distrust God. But I trust that God's hand is in it for your good, and that his name will be magnified in the prayers of his saints for your recovery. I have prayed earnestly for you, not only before, but since learning of your sickness. For near six months, I, too, have been isolated, not hearing a sermon or attending a social meeting of ours until I came to this conference. You may know I appreciate it, even as you would. There is one drawback I am all the time wishing my friends were here to enjoy it, too, eight hundred last Sunday morning at Sunday-school. The large pipe organ pealing forth its anthems of praise, with eight musical instruments, and a small organ, mingled with the voices of that large audience, you can imagine how sweet the sound in the ears of our loving Father, and how acceptable to him the praise and adoration of his people assembled in the land of Zion. At the first song, "Take time to be holy," I broke down and wept freely under the influence of the Spirit. How oft I had sung that in the privacy of my own room at home, longing for a holiness that would make me more like my Master. I had copied and pinned it on my window casing where I could read over and sing it while sitting at my work, or as an inspiration to me while writing. Yes, "Take time to be holy," for "without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

How much we all need to do that. It is not enough to obey the first principles, attend meetings and give a passive assent to it all, but we want a grand, a great and noble underlying principle deep down in our hearts, that shall make us crave all that God has for us, that shall keep us watchful, prayerful, and humble, that will make us not only willing, but glad to make sacrifices for the one we love above all others. And if sickness be sent for a good purpose, when it has fulfilled its mission, it will be taken away. Whatever be your condition, I beg you in all things to say, "Thy will be done." It is very hard sometimes to do this, and we wonder why God deals with us as he does. But he aims to lead us to trust his perfect will; for he is far seeing, and knows better what is for our real good than we ourselves.

Have been so busy going to meetings, and resting between times, that your letter has been neglected. Am to-day with a sick sister. Have swept the room, given her a sponge bath, changed her bed, and she says she feels better. Her husband has been sick for six weeks, is up and just able to get around the house, and an eleven-year old boy their sole dependence to cook and care for them. Hard lines, that!

I trust you are better situated. When we think our lot is hard, it helps us to meet with those who are worse off.

I have so much to thank God for. At times, during this conference, he has given me of his spirit insomuch that I could not have been under its influence all the time to that extent without much weakness of the body in consequence.

One thousand seventeen in Sunday-school last Sunday, and it was judged that there were fifteen or sixteen hundred at morning preaching, Bro. Joseph Smith being the speaker, and also the basement full with an overflow meeting. As I looked on that vast audience, it came to me as never before that the balance of my life should be spent in doing good and helping others. How can we be bound up in self when Christ has said "Follow me;" and his whole life was spent for others. No wonder the command was given us, "Love your neighbor as yourself." The last day when the seventies, apostles, and High Council were before us, and Bro. Pitt sang that grand song, "I will go where you want me to go, dear Lord," I saw strong men weeping. When I thought of the sacrifice they were making, all for love of the cause, leaving home and friends, to bear the scorn and insult heaped upon them, it was a solemn hour to me. Dear sister, be patient, and, with Paul, look forward to the joy hereafter, and God will send his angels to comfort you even here. This is the prayer of, Your sister,

M. J. PHIPPS.

Dear Home Column: Sr. Walker has often asked us to come in and chat. I do wish more of the sisters would step in. Home is, or should be, the dearest spot on earth, even if we live in an old log cabin it is home, and a very dear home, too, if we choose to make it such. We should keep everything about the house neat and orderly, children and self too. Never mind if it is only one calico dress and we have to go without while we wash and iron it. If we make the very best of the situation I know we can be happy and have a happy home under just such trying circumstances if we wish it. There may be times when trouble will arise and we may feel much discouraged, but there are times in the old log cabin or even in the old dugout when every heart is happy and everything in the old home is as bright and clean as hands can make it. Sitting in the armchair which is made of an old box is papa reading his newspaper while mamma is singing "Away, dull care, away," and altogether it is a happy home. Come in, sisters, and tell us what you think of it.

In my little old log cabin I'm at home,
I am happy, I am gay, cheerful all the livelong day,
Sing and drive dull care away here at home,
In my little old log cabin I'm at home.

I envy not the wealthy while they roam,
They may travel far away 'mid splendor rich and gay;
Yet am I content to stay here at home,
In my little old log cabin I'm at home.

Here is a good receipt for frying bacon:

When frying fat bacon, mix a batter of flour and water about the consistency of cream. Dip each slice in the batter, covering both sides; have the frying-pan greased and hot, into which put the slices of bacon and fry steadily until quite done and a nice light brown.

Dear Column: Your pages are so dear to me, and have been such a comfort and strength in lonely hours that I often wish that every Saint could have them to read. No one ought to be without the HERALD. It also shows us our faults and how to overcome them. It has been my preacher for years past and I shall need it for years to come if it pleases the Lord to let me remain here so long. I know I am slow to learn, but I often wish I could learn to keep all his holy laws, and know all of them. I well know that to accept the first principles of the gospel and have our name enrolled with the church is a very small part of God's service; just the beginning.

And the Word of Wisdom; how grand to think the Lord would take pains to tell us what to eat to keep us healthy; and then if we do disobey and get sick, he has provided a way for us to be healed; what unbounded love!

But this question arises: Do we as Saints believe it? Do we exercise faith in this direction? If not, why not? He tells us to live by every word that proceedeth forth from his mouth. We may not always be healed, but it may be beneficial to us in some way. He may raise us up, give us strength according to our needs, stay the hand of disease, forgive our sins, and help us to bear the pain. There are various ways in which we may be benefited by obeying God's commands. At any rate there is nothing lost thereby. I speak from experience for I know it is by the gospel I have lived for years, and by the gospel I keep on my feet and perform the labor of the day. And when I think of the goodness of God to one so unworthy as I am, I only wonder how it can be, and think what would he not do for a truly loyal Saint.

May we all learn to keep his laws and by so doing come up higher. Oh for the light of gospel truth!

RUTH A. BURLINGAME.

O Savior, Blessed Savior.

O Savior, blessed Savior, my faith looks up to thee.
You know the intent of my heart, dear Lamb of Calvary.
Though I am weak and sinful and oft have disobeyed
Thy kind and loving counsel, yet still I ask thine aid.

Thou didst not call the righteous, but sinners to repent,
And thus I humbly bow to thee with purely good intent.
Lord fill my heart with kindness and dry the falling tear,
The path of life is gladness, if thy presence bide to cheer.

FIRST ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 21.

To the General Convention, Greeting: My report as First Assistant Superintendent is quite limited in the amount of work accomplished. From convention time till June my work at HERALD Office and at home did not admit of much active work in this office. The latter part of June in company with General Superintendent, and Sr. Hougas, I attended the International Sunday-school Convention at Denver, Colorado, and had a pleasant and profitable season. Returning home my labors were confined to Lamoni Stake, being a general missionary in that field. I was chosen superintendent of the Stake Association in October and have been permitted to hold said office till the present. Have tried to occupy as best I could in these capacities. About all the general work performed outside the above has been in connection with our publishing interests assisting in getting out Home Department literature and such like.

I feel encouraged in the work, and desire to labor for its advancement, in any capacity deemed wise and desirable by the body. The Lord's kind hand has been over us for good, and he will continually lead us along right paths into larger fields, according to our faithfulness in the fields already occupied.

Ever praying for the success of the cause, and desiring to labor to that end, I remain your colaborer,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

SECOND ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

To the General Sunday-school in Convention Assembled, Greeting: The year is passed, and the record made whether for weal or woe, time and eternity can only tell.

As your second assistant superintendent, I have tried to put the great work of the Sunday-school on a higher plane on the Pacific Coast, where my work has been confined.

Have endeavored to spend most of my time along the line of instructing teachers, as competent teachers is the crying need of our Sunday-school work. All else sinks into comparative insignificance; methods, devices, apparatus—all are but means unto an end and that end is to place the teacher and the scholar in the best possible relationship for the imparting of knowledge and what is still more important, the education of the pupil in the broadest sense of the term. Given the competent instructor and the work will be accomplished, irrespective of the tools employed.

Believing this, and my time being limited, I spent very little time in discussing methods, etc.

Am fully convinced of the fact that every teacher should know the great principles underlying his profession and thus "Attune themselves unto their work."

Feel confident of the lasting good being done by a band of noble Sunday-school workers.

That the Master's spirit may characterize all our labors, is the prayer of your servant,
A. CARMICHAEL.

GENERAL SECRETARY'S REPORT.

As secretary for the year now closing I wish to report a steady advancement. While the figures show a decrease in membership of 220, this is due to the estimate placed on the membership in the South Sea Islands. The report of last year showed a membership of 2,300 while the present reports only show 1,000, making a difference of 1,300, deducting therefrom our loss as above would show a net gain of 1,080.

In connection with the superintendency I have provided new report blanks for districts and schools, with the arrangement that schools report to the district every three months, and the districts to the General Association annually for the calendar year. The necessity for a change in method is occasioned by the fact, as you have doubtless observed, that reports heretofore have been irregular and cover various periods of time.

To assist the district secretary I have written to as many of the secretaries of schools where I was aware a school existed and requested them to be prompt in sending in their reports. This will add to the work of the General Secretary and your new secretary whom you are to select to-day will have more work than there has been in the past.

The work of the year, according to reports received, show an increase in two districts, Western Maine and Alabama, and making a total membership of 18,122.

Treasurer's report showed total receipt, $5,934.61; expenditures, $4,225.88; balance, $1,708.73.

Report of General Librarian, Sr. Lucina Etzenhouser: Number of schools, 359; number of libraries, 56; library books, 3,168.

GENERAL LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

To the Members of the General Sunday-School Association in Convention Assembled: Owing to a protracted absence from home, after my election to the office of librarian, in April of last year, I was unable to take up the work systematically until the first of July. However, I have endeavored, by energetic application, to make up what I lost in time.

I have sought to familiarize myself with the work by corresponding with the district librarians, and in districts having no librarian I have written to the superintendent, urging the necessity for a district librarian and the vigorous prosecution of the library work, with good results, I think.

In July I sent report blanks, with a request that they be filled out and returned to me. About one third have complied with the request, which I consider a very good beginning. These reports contain a number of important questions which, if properly answered, will give the General Librarian an idea of the condition of the work in each district, so that when appealed to for instruction he can advise intelligently.

The book catalogue, for which there is a very urgent need, is slowly materializing. More than six hundred volumes have been recommended. This catalogue is a matter of vital importance, for upon it, to a great extent, hinges the success of the library work and should therefore be done in a thorough and systematic manner. It would be a stupendous undertaking for one individual, we therefore recommend that a number of competent persons be appointed, who, by reason of access to good libraries, could review and recommend suitable books, giving a summary of each. When we take into consideration the multiplied thousands of books representing all grades of literature that are precipitated upon the public in a decade, if you think this an exaggeration, examine the leading periodicals of the day and note the dozens of pages devoted to the advertising of (so-called) latest and best books, is it any wonder that it requires the greatest care to make the proper selections.

I here append the statistical report which is according to the best information I was able to obtain, but which, I am sure is not absolutely correct: Number of schools, 329; number of libraries, 56; number of library books, 3,168; average number of books in each library, 56; average number of schools to each library 5 $\frac{7}{8}$.

There are also circulating libraries, three of which have been established within the last year. The difference between three hundred twenty-nine, the number of schools, and fifty-six, the number of libraries represents the work that can and should be accomplished in the near future; for there should be a library in every school belonging to the Association. The chief difficulty is the lack of funds, to overcome which, we would recommend the setting aside of one Sunday's collection in each month for a library fund. The plan has been adopted and is in successful operation in one district and is contemplated in two others.

For the successful operation of the library work in each district, we believe four things are absolutely necessary: First, a district librarian; second, a library fund; third, a book purchasing committee, which should be composed of the district librarian and two others, and last, but not least, the hearty cooperation of the officers of the local school.

And now one little plea for a more universal recognition of the practicability and utility of the library work and I have done. The primary object of the Sunday-school is the study of the word of God, and next in importance and so closely connected as to make them almost inseparable, is the study of good books, thus making the library the natural ally of the Sunday-school.

The library work is in its infancy, but under the nurturing care of the Sunday-school, its legitimate home, it can be made of incalculable value to the Sunday-school cause and if permitted to develop, will one day occupy, as it richly deserves, a first place among auxiliaries of the church.

For development,

LUCINA ETZENHOUSER.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, May 18.

Editors Herald: I have been at home seven days since in March. I see the necessity of pushing the work. We see the necessity of opening up new places as well as attending to the branches and districts. I know it is not as pleasant to push out and open up new fields as it is to go from branch to branch and from district to district, but we must have new ground broken this year in Texas. We want to hear from every scattered member in Central Texas as to the chances to get an opening to preach the gospel. Do everything you can to arrange for preaching and let me hear from you. Let us all do our best this year to advance the good cause in Texas. Bro. John Harp has arrived and is now ready to go to work in Central Texas.

I feel well in the work, and thank God for his mercy and blessings to me.
E. W. NUNLEY.

CURTIS, Oklahoma, May 18.

Editors Herald: I am moving on to my mission field, where I will soon be doing battle for the cause. On my way I stopped here a few days, and by request of Bro. Pickering I assisted in a two-day grove meeting near where my relatives live. After a short stay with my relatives, by the urgent request of the Saints at Seiling, I spent a few days there to good advantage, I believe. The audiences during the evenings of the week were not large, but the interest was good. Sunday I preached three times to good, interested audiences. I felt well in the presentation of the truth.

To say I was well pleased with the country and Saints is putting it mildly. I was well-treated by the Saints and the only fault I found with the country is that it was too wet.

J. M. STUBBART.

KNOBNOSTER, Missouri, May 19.

Editors Herald: I have located my family here, so this will be my home address. This is where I obeyed the gospel fifteen years ago, and where I lived when I was sent to Australia eleven years ago. Knobnoster is in the east end of the Independence Stake and some of the Saints are gathering in here. Four families moved here of late and others intend coming in the future. We have a fourth class city nicely located, good city school, state normal only twelve miles away, at Warrensburg, the county seat of this (Johnson) county. We have nice rolling land, good soil, also timbered land, with good coal and plenty of good water. Broken timbered land can be bought as low as ten dollars per acre; improved land from thirty to sixty dollars—many came here this spring from Iowa and the east and bought lands, hence prices are advancing. If Saint's do not use wisdom they will yet learn that "the children of this world are wiser than the children of light," and in years to come may have to pay far more for good Missouri lands. Many of the Saints have located in the west end of this county and I would like to see some more locate here in the east end, for the branch here needs strengthening and a small family can do well on four or five acres with a couple of cows and plenty of poultry, as we have good markets for eggs and poultry, and four-roomed houses with four to five acres can be purchase for from five hundred to six hundred dollars. Those wishing to move to these parts ought to honor the law of God and first write the Bishop and get his advice and counsel and remember to come as the Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants, "having all things prepared before" them, so they will not be a burden after arriving in the land of Zion, but be self-supporting and a pillar of strength to this glorious work; and labor faithfully for the redemption of Zion and final triumph of the greatest and best work ever committed to man by the great God of heaven.

Bro. I. N. White has placed me in charge of the missionary work in the Northeastern Missouri District, and I desire all who know of openings for preaching the word to write me at any time during the year and Bro. A. White and I will do our best to look after the needs of the work. May the wisdom of the Lord direct all the Israel of God.

JOHN KALER.

HOLDENVILLE, Indian Territory, May 15.

Editors Herald: This finds me well and blowing the gospel trumpet about five miles east of Holdenville in a country school-house. From fifty to one hundred came every night for seven nights to hear about this marvelous work and a wonder. Two ministers, a Baptist and a Christian attended two services. When I was through with my sermon they handed me the following questions: "You say an angel delivered the gospel to your people, and the Bible says (Galatians, first chapter), 'though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'" "How do you people get patriarchs in your church?" "Where do you get priests in your church? Revelation 22: 18-19 says, 'For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book.'"

I read the questions to the congregation and said I would answer them on the next evening.

Next evening the house was full to hear me explain those questions. I had grand liberty, and the Master stood by me while I explained the word of God to the people.

We have made many friends in this place. At the close of my meetings many came to me and wished me God-speed. One man in bidding me good-bye put two dollars in my hand, and said, When can you come again? I promised to return before long or send some other elder. Let the traveling ministry not neglect Holdenville, Indian Territory.

My colaborer, H. R. Harder, and myself opened up the work here in the month of March. F. N. Perkins lives here. He is an elder, and has helped a great deal in opening up the work. There are six members of our church here.

Let all the Saints in the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District write me about labor being done in your towns and I will try and visit you as soon as possible. The harvest is great the laborers are few; but if we are united we can do all things.

FULTON, Kentucky, May 17.

Editors Herald: I love to read the many letters from the Saints, and am many times wonderfully strengthened. I want to do all the good I can to push this work on, because I know there is something in it. I know that there is a power behind it, and it is the power of the Lord.

I have not been in the work long; I was baptized July 25 last by Elder W. R. Smith. I have never regretted the step I made.

At this place there are only a few Saints, but we are trying so to live and let our lights shine that we may be instrumental in bringing others to an understanding of the everlasting gospel. There are but a few who will come to hear our elders; but that does not discourage us; all we can do is to pray for them. We have prayer-meeting every Wednesday night, and feel that the Lord is pleased with the efforts we have put forth. We have the privilege of enjoying his holy Spirit, for which we are so thankful. We know the Lord will bless us if we will only do his will. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that I may be faithful, and have a home in Zion.

Your sister,

GERTIE McCLAIN.

PEORIA, Illinois, May 16.

Editors Herald: The writer arrived in this city—a part of our field of labor—on the 8th inst., since which time we have been endeavoring to do what we can to assist in the work here. We find our people here very few in number, and in many ways handicapped because of circumstances and environments; but it seems that the few are interested in the advancement of the cause, and are anxious to do what they can to that end.

We preached the funeral of Sr. Jane Mee on the 11th inst., in the Presbyterian church building at Pottstown.

On the night of the 14th we attended a lecture by a Miss Higgins, from Utah, at the Second Presbyterian Church, upon the subject of "Mormonism." Her attack was mainly against Utah Mormonism, and she made a distinction between the Brighamites and the Josephites; but like nearly all of such lecturers, she seemed to view the teachings and character of Joseph the Seer by and through the teaching and practice of the Brighamites. There is a woeful and inexcusable ignorance relative to the teaching of the early Latter Day Saints, and it is becoming more and more apparent that such ignorance is willful. It is evident that they do not desire to know anything about the pure and the true side of "Mormonism." We had a talk with the young lady, at the close of her lecture, and corrected her on some things; but she said that she was "only dealing with the people in Utah," and that we were "unfortunate in that we bore the same name, Latter Day Saints." We replied that it might be considered a misfortune, but for this we were not responsible; and that she was misrepresenting Joseph Smith and his teachings, by accepting as facts the claims of the Utah church relative to Joseph Smith being a polygamist. It is strange that these would-be-Mormon missionaries will accuse the Brighamites of duplicity, fraud, and deceit in so many respects, and then accept as a truth their claims that Joseph Smith gave the revelation on polygamy; and this, too, in the face of the decision of a judge of a United States Circuit Court, to the contrary, who heard all the evidence that could possibly be produced on the subject. Why do they do this? Because it suits their purpose best. And their purpose, it seems, is to blind the eyes and the minds of the people to the grandeur and purity of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

We remain in Peoria until the 20th, when we go to Canton to remain over the following Sunday, as we will be expected to divide our time between the two places.

Hopefully in the conflict,

803 Hurlburt Street.

H. E. MOLER.

GLASGOW, Scotland, May 6.

Dear Readers of the Herald: I desire to correct the mistake in my last letter to the HERALD where it reads, "But if God is with us what need we care if all the hosts of heaven and hell be arrayed against us." It should read "earth and hell be arrayed against us." I have it so in my manuscript, and how I came to get it heaven when I rewrote it, is more than I can tell. It would be terrible for the Saints if the powers of heaven were against them.

While I am writing, I wish to thank Bro. John Siddal, of Attleboro, Massachusetts, for sending us Hopes for our school. If he could see how delighted the children are to get them, I am sure he would feel rewarded for sending them. We were just out of them; Sr. Anderson, of Lamoni, Iowa, Bro. J. P. Anderson's sister, gave me a nice package before I left; and they with what I had myself have lasted until now. Yes, Bro. Siddal, if you wish to send me HERALDS and Ensigns I will be glad to distribute them. I can put in all my spare time distributing tracts and papers. I have already distributed seventy tracts, for which I desire to express my thanks and gratitude to Sr. E. L. Pringle, of McIvor, Michigan, who has sent me four pounds of tracts. Also the Lamoni Religio gave me tracts. May God reward them both and all who have so kindly assisted the work in this far-off land. I was very much pleased to hear that the conventions and conference passed off so quietly and peacefully.

We were indeed glad when we heard that Bro. Joseph and R. C. were coming to the British Isles this summer. I wish a few more would come along with them. And more than all was I surprised when I read the missions to see that G. W. Thorburn was the only one for Scotland. Why Scotland is so neglected is more than I can tell. If Bro. Rushton could stay with us we would be satisfied; but he is traveling in England and Wales so much of the time that we see him only between times. And now that Bro. Arber is going to leave the field the first of June, will leave my husband entirely alone in this great city, and not only this city, but there are Hamilton, Kelty, and a host of other places to open the work. If I could preach like I can distribute tracts, I might help in this direction; but alas, no authority was given to woman to preach, so will have to be satisfied with distributing tracts.

Am very sorry to say we have had to part with Bro. William Plunkett, who sailed for Philadelphia on April 30 to look for work. One is missed so much where there are so few as here.

It is time for street preaching now, but it rains nearly every day, and is so cold and disagreeable that I would love to see a warm sunshiny day like we get in good old America, the home of the "free and the brave." However, we will do the very best we can under the circumstances and leave the result with the Master who doeth all things well. I trust that God will bless and prosper the work here as he has in the land of Zion, that righteousness may adorn every soul in this land and peace reign supreme in every heart so that when the message of peace is presented by the servants of God, having been delegated with power and authority direct from heaven, they may lift up their heads and rejoice, and with open arms receive the message and obey it; that they, too, may bask in the divine presence of the Master, rejoicing in the marvelous work and a wonder of the latter days. With glad hearts may we all prepare ourselves for the thousand-year reign with our dearly beloved Master and all the ransomed hosts of heaven. MRS. ALLIE THORBURN.

BIRCH HARBOR, Maine, May 13.

Editors Herald: In company with H. D. Simpson of Washburn, Aroostook County, I came here last night from the conference at Stonington, where I have been laboring since January. The Saints there have, among their things, been making a commendable effort to get their church finished inside, which is now about accomplished save the seating, in a style which may possibly be better than the settee. So it looked very bright and nice for the visitors and all seemed pleased and happy. Sometime in the future they will have it dedicated, when it will be convenient for Elder Greene, who was specially instrumental in causing the building to be erected, to be present. The conference was a good one and well attended both by the laity and priesthood. Ralph Farrel, recently appointed to the mission field, hopeful and energetic; S. O. Foss and C. H. Rich, just from General Conference, brim full of enthusiasm and information; E. D. Brann a new elder and a coming man; J. N. Ames and J. J. Billings full of age and good council, together with others made a good working force. There seems to be a good feeling existing in the district and a determination on the part of a good many to keep the good work moving on. The Bishop's agent's report showed life and earnestness along financial lines.

I have been well sustained by the officers and others in my efforts to forward the cause. I should like to mention some names but the list would be long and uninteresting to those not acquainted. I will mention an item, however, to show the standing of the Saints socially in Stonington. They held a supper for the finishing fund and over ninety families cooked for it, including the Congregational minister's wife—not a third of them Saints. There is no persecution here, and we are not unpopular on account of our faith.

I have not been writing much for the church paper of late but have been trying to keep busy. I see plenty to do ahead—which is the way I want it.

Hoping that we may be able to accomplish something worthy of commendation, I am as ever,

Your colaborer,

H. J. DAVISON.

OGDEN, Utah, May 19.

Editors Herald: I am now doing what I can for the Master's cause in this part of the vineyard. I arrived here Saturday and attended Sunday-school and preached twice Sunday to a small congregation of Saints, the weather being stormy. I intend leaving here for Idaho in a couple of days, where I intend to carry the good work on.

My address will be Malad, Idaho. Hoping for the best, I remain,

In the gospel covenant,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Messrs. Editors: As I came here at the request of the local minister in charge, Bro. W. W. Whiting, said request being indorsed by our missionary in charge, Bro. F. A. Smith, and as the house of worship we came to dedicate is said to be the first and therefore the only one builded by the Reorganized Church in this State, I thought the desire of our missionary that I write you about it a reasonable one, and comply.

Bonesteel is the terminus of the Chicago and Northwestern road (formerly the Fremont and Elkhorn Valley), to the Rosebud Country. It is in Gregory County, and about two miles from the Rosebud Agency, about two hundred thirty-nine miles northwest from Omaha.

Leaving home on Friday 15 for Omaha, I spent that night with Bro. Fry at the pleasant home of Bro. J. Frank Weston, and on Saturday morning was joined at the union depot by our beloved missionary in charge, Bro. F. A. Smith, with whom I journeyed to this place. At Norfolk, Bro. Levi Gamet also joined us. Met at terminus by our genial Bro. Whiting. After caring temporarily for our satchels, he conducted us to the new edifice we had come to dedicate, and in which the evidence of his zeal and devotion is sufficiently manifest to justify his statement, "Brethren, I am proud of our church, and am grateful to all who have helped us in its erection." He then so lengthily and in detail spoke so warmly of whatever had been done or given, naming the doers or givers with such evident gratitude that had they been present, they would have discovered his readiness to speak of others' good deeds rather than of his own continuous labors and sacrifices of which others told us.

On Sunday morning, May 17, the school occupied at ten o'clock. Present, by count, Bible class twenty, young peoples' class eleven, childrens' sixteen, visitors twelve. At eleven o'clock the clear, ringing tones of the new bell both attracted attention and gave pleasure, while it announced that the hour for the dedication of the new church edifice had come. When the congregation had been seated there was around the alcove and on "the stand," one minister of the Baptist Church, one of the Seventh-day Adventists, and five of our own, namely, Elders F. A. Smith, L. Gamet, W. W. Whiting, D. W. Palmer, and the writer. On their left on the choir's elevated platform the organist and nine singers who discoursed the sweet music of one voluntary and three hymns. Elder Gamet offered prayer, one of David's inspired psalms was read, and then, taking for his text John 4: 23, 24, Bro. F. A. Smith gave us an excellent discourse, full of practical good sense and wise counsel. Especially strong were his supports of the Saints' doctrine that is fast becoming an aphorism, "We contend for an open Bible and a free pulpit." His elucidation of this called from the ministers present such hearty "amens" as witnessed their strong indorsement of this doctrine.

The building is ample in size for the place, being twenty-six by thirty-eight. But in addition to this for the body of the church, there is a vestibule and the belfry in front, and a neat pulpit alcove at the back. This alcove has a window on either side which can be raised or lowered as desired, so that the officiating minister who in sultry weather needs the coolest place, will not be compelled to occupy the hottest one, as is the case where he has nothing but the solid wall behind him.

According to the committee's report the cost is as follows: lot and deed, $201; building material, $697.48; labor, $187.75; furniture, $87.84; bell, 700 pounds, $45.30; total, $1219.37. "The original owner of lot and real estate firm donated one hundred dollars of price on lot. There has also been a large amount of labor contributed, and the kindness shown us in our work of church-building by those not of our faith has been far beyond our expectations, and is highly appreciated by us."

This report, signed by Bro. Whiting in behalf of the committee, was read very distinctly by Bro. F. A. Smith, his own eulogy was made and his testimony of gratitude in behalf of the church. The dedicatory prayer was then offered by Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, and the building transferred to the care of God's heritage here.

In the afternoon the sermon was by Bro. Levi Gamet, an excellent effort, and the evening sermon by the writer. Services are to be continued over next Sabbath, both here and at Fairfax if house shall be secured there.

Yours in the one faith,
M. H. FORSCUTT.

Editors Herald: Three baptisms last Sunday was the gratifying result of my series in Clinton of seventeen sermons. I canvassed the town with tracts on each of which I had a written notice of my meetings. The editors treated me with commendable courtesy. They published several notices of the services and before I left one took considerable pains to inform himself with reference to our church polity, the secession of Brigham Young, and he offered to publish an article for me explanatory of our work, our purposes so long as it would not partake of a nature that would provoke a reply. It seems to me to be an important feature of success to seize every opportunity to get before the public by means of the secular press, and especially when it can be done without any cash cost. I know I watch like a hungry tigress and devour every opportunity that comes before me and then yawn for more. And I have at times wondered if it would not be better to withhold more of our money from the insatiable greed of railway companies—at least where we have to pay full fare like here in Canada—and use some of it to represent ourselves in the leading journals. Here in Canada the clergy rates have been withdrawn, and during last year and this all the parsons without known exception have to pay as much as other men.

Two of the three baptized, ladies, were of the Christian Scientist philosophy—not members, but readers of their literature. They had been praying unitedly for some time for God to send some one, to send a servant to build up his kingdom there. Dreams and manifestations were received satisfying their minds to some extent, but a cloud obscured their true meaning till they had listened for some time to the angel-message. Now they look back and say, "It was all pointing to this." How thankful! how rejoiced!

When I am at my happiest is probably when I am in the midst of an interesting series in a new place, preaching nightly, calling on fifty or sixty houses with tracts during the day, and studying between times. The presence of the Spirit, the calmness, the serenity it produces is a double compensation to the true man of God for all he endures.

How blessed the service of God? How nice to be in close communion with him. How much easier to learn, to talk, to work, to do all duties, temporal or spiritual. Spirit, sweet Spirit, come. Make thy home in our moving, wandering houses. Take up thy habitation in the pavilion of our hearts; cast out all foreigners and aliens and remain for evermore. What a thought! how enrapturing—the Spirit of God! That same Spirit which caused the bones of Moses, of Joseph Smith to quake, that brings us to a common level, that makes us alike, makes us like, makes us one. Wonderful! From where does it come? What is its extent? Where is it not? Is it in the air? Yes. Is it in the ocean? Yes. Is it in the earth? Yes. It is ever watchful, listens, looks, tastes, smells, takes cognizance of all, all that is. It is the eye of the Infinite from the notice of which nothing can be hidden. With it mountains are grains of sand, men are specks, elephants are animalcules, and planets are insignificant atoms. It sits on the convex of the moon and watches the movements of our earth with delight. Suns and planets are its playthings. With the stroke of the hand it shapes a universe, appoints its destiny with a lesser stroke, and with a mere finger snap it hurls through ether's lawless wilds the stars which give it light.

Buds do bloom and flowers blush;
It kisses every one.
It sees the beasts, it knows their toils,
It helps them all along.
O do not go, O Spirit kind!
You are my faithful friend;
My wants supply, my tears to dry,
A helping hand to lend.
But if you go, come back again,
You'll always find me here;
A welcome guest you'll always be,
A friend so true, so near.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

LEADBURY, Ontario, May 21.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, May 21.

Editors Herald: I am in my field of labor. My post-office address in 116 Bluff Street, Sioux City. I have been busy since arriving on May 9. I went to Sloan last Saturday by urgent request to do some baptizing. On Sunday I baptized two; did some preaching, and on Tuesday returned to the city. Bro. Oscar Case came in from a trip in South Dakota, where he baptized some, and is to baptize some more next Sunday, just over the line only four or five miles from the city. If it will not be considered trespassing I presume that we will as best we can look after those who may come in as they are intending to become members of this branch. They have already attended meetings here.

I request those who have friends or relatives living in this city, upon whom they would like to have me call, give me their names and addresses and I will look them up.

I hope the Lord will bless us all in our labors of love, and that this may be a prosperous year for the church in every department. I hope the Saints will remember us in this city. Their is but a few of us, with little means. We realize that without God's help we will fail; so pray for us.

To the Brethren Appointed to the Eastern Mission for this Conference year, Greeting: We enter upon another year as collaborators in life's great harvest-field. There are encouraging conditions in many parts of the field, and we trust that every man will energetically prosecute the work assigned him. Let all enter upon duty without unnecessary delay. Remain in your special fields as courageously as you can. We advise you to consult with those in charge when or before you leave your fields, so that system and order may prevail.

So far as possible the districts have been provided with high priests to assist local officers in caring for the necessities of the branches. Unless receiving an especial assignment to local work, the seventies, elders, and priests appointed as missionaries will be expected to heed the divine admonition and prosecute "the work of preaching with a warning voice, baptizing, organizing, and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields, . . . leaving the burden of care in organized districts to the standing ministry."

We especially request the brethren to be prompt in reporting to those in subcharge of their respective fields, on July 1, October 1, January 1, March 1, and on the last date one covering the entire year's work. See that reports give conditions and prospects more fully. You are advised to consult with the one in charge before entering public debates; avoid wasting time traveling from place to place, but on making a new opening remain until satisfied that all have had sufficient opportunity of obeying the gospel.

We trust the isolated Saints will assist the ministry by securing openings, then notifying the submissionary of help needed. The following assignments have been made to the various fields:

Nova Scotia, S. O. Foss; Maine, H. J. Davison and C. H. Rich; Massachusetts, R. Bullard and A. B. Phillips; New York, A. H. Parsons, New York District in charge; Western New York, J. B. Lentz in charge, F. S. Brackenbury assisting; Philadelphia, W. E. LaRue; Pittsburg District and Western Pennsylvania, F. J. Ebeling, Conneautville, Pennsylvania, in charge, R. Baldwin, L. D. Ullum, J. D. Porter, J. A. Becker, assisting; R. M. Elvin, Pittsburg and vicinity.

Virginia, H. R. Harder and James Craig; West Virginia, J. L. Goodrich, Byer, Ohio, in charge, D. L. Shinn, E. H. Durand and J. F. Williams assisting. The burden of the districts and branches will rest upon Bro. G. H. Godby, high priest.

Ohio District, R. Etzenhouser, 304 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri, in charge, T. J. Beatty, E. E. Long, William H. Kelley, assisting, S. J. Jeffries, high priest, caring for the branches.

Kirtland District, O. B. Thomas, 69 Auburndale Street, Cleveland, Ohio, in charge, E. P. Schmidt, S. W. L. Scott, J. R. Beckley, J. E. Kelley, and James Carlisle, assisting; L. R. Devore in charge of Kirtland Temple; V. M. Goodrich, high priest, caring for the branches.

E. C. Briggs has been appointed evangelical minister to Ohio, and expects to enter the mission soon.

We expect to tract systematically as large a portion of the mission as possible, and shall expect the hearty coöperation of every Saint in this laudable effort to set us right before the people.

Ever praying God's richest blessings to attend you all, we remain,

Your coworkers in the vineyard of the Lord,

F. M. SHEEHY,

U. W. GREENE,

Ministers in Charge.

To the Ministry and Saints of the British Isles, Greeting: Inasmuch as the church in General Conference at Independence, Missouri, held during April, 1903, has been pleased to appoint the undersigned as missionary in charge of the above mission, I herewith solicit your hearty coöperation and sympathy. I feel very incompetent of my own strength and ability to succeed the able brethren who have preceded me in this work. My experience is not only of a very limited nature, but also in a state of incipency, being conscious therefore of my defects and knowing the predilection of all men to contrast one with another I ask you to extend your sympathy toward me and sustain me in faith and prayer before God. I believe the work generally is in a fair condition, but yet leaves much to be desired, we have been successful in making a good number of converts, but I discovered with great sorrow that our weakness lies in not being able to sustain and nourish the Saints in our branch and local organizations. I do therefore urge the necessity of branch and district officers acquiring an intelligent understanding of their duties and privileges and faithfully discharging the same. One of the most grievous neglects in this respect I have found to be the visitation of members by the branch priest. I suggest that if the branch officers would meet once a month or once in three months for counsel and report it would prove of great benefit to the officers and ultimately the branch. Let the ministry uphold the dignity of their calling, ever remembering the unspeakable favor God has bestowed upon us in calling us to be fellow laborers with him. In some places I have found a spirit of criticizing which is carried to an uncharitable length and has degenerated into faultfinding and some have excused themselves of doing what they concede is their duty because of the faults they find in others. This disposition is contrary to the Spirit of Christ and will stultify spiritual development wherever it is encouraged.

I do earnestly plead with you that we endeavor this coming year to develop individually the characteristics of Jesus Christ, as every organism acquires its shape, color, and peculiar characteristics by the particles of which the organism is composed becoming possessed of these characteristics themselves, so in the church at large the character, color, and aspect is built up and attained by the acquisition of that character by the units. So for Christ to be manifest in the church, he must be manifest in the individual.

The following brethren have been appointed to labor in the following localities: William Lewis, Evan Morgan, Thomas Jones, and J. G. Jenkins, in Wales, Bro. Lewis in subcharge; George W. Thorburn, in Scotland; Thomas J. Sheldon, in London District; William H. Greenwood, in Sheffield District; Thomas Taylor and Frank J. Pierce, in the Leeds District; William Newton and E. J. Trapp, in South of England; John Davis, in the Birmingham District.

The above-named brethren will please report to me every month so that I receive the report of the month's work on the first or second of following month.

I trust that unity and peace may obtain, and that the efforts of the missionary ministry will be supplemented by the local brethren.

To the Saints I would point out that so large a force of laborers will entail considerable expense, and will mean much sacrifice, not only to the missionaries but to all, every member should share in this responsibility. Let all, therefore, as God shall bless and prosper you, remember the bishopric in this country. I join with the bishopric in congratulating you because of your splendid efforts in the past, and also because of the helps so generously and ungrudgingly given to the missionary brethren privately.

May God richly bless all throughout this coming conference year and the fruits of the Spirit be manifested more and more in us as individuals, is my prayer.

I have received word from Bro. Griffiths that (D. V.) our esteemed president, Bro. Joseph Smith, is intending visiting this country during this year. I know all will be delighted to meet with our brother. We expect Bro. Joseph will be with us at our conference in Leeds, to be held in August, and very probably he will visit various branches in the mission; so I suggest we begin in time to prepare for his visiting that his presence with us will prove a lasting success to the work.

With love and best wishes to all, I remain,

Your servant for Christ's sake,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Brandon St., HAMILTON, Scotland, May 12, 1903.

To the Saints in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, Greeting: From the pastoral address of our missionary in charge, Bro. Heman C. Smith, I learn that I am placed in charge of the missionary work in this district. I am now in my field of labor, and shall strive to the best of my ability to advance the cause of my Master during the year; but I am only one, and I shall need and expect the hearty coöperation of all who are interested in the advancement of the work. To the missionary force of the district I wish to say: Be men of God, in word, in thought, and in deed. Be sure that your example at all times is worthy of imitation. The time for labor is short, judging from the signs of the times, and men who go out to represent the lowly Nazarene should be wholly consecrated to the work. We may not have gold, silver, houses, nor land, to consecrate to the Master for the good of his cause, but we can consecrate ourselves; give our hearts, our time, and our talent to him. And if we unreservedly consecrate our lives to God, be ever so weak, ever so small, he will not despise the offering. Much depends upon our example, brethren, and hence there is great responsibility resting upon us. Let us then, as men of God, plead for one another at the throne of grace. The fervent prayer of a righteous man, we are told, availeth much; and by living righteous lives and praying fervent prayers we may do much towards upholding one another in this warfare. Of course no minister who has the love of the work at heart will allow his tongue to speak evil of a fellow laborer. We are all one, brethren, and are all laborers together with Christ for the salvation of the world; and when I say anything that will injure or weaken your influence for good, while you are representing this work, I hurt the cause we all love just to the extent I hurt you and weaken your influence. If any become transgressors, the law must be executed; but there is no excuse for men of God indulging in tattling and backbiting, nor in helping to circulate second-hand reports. Guard your brother's reputation as sacredly as you would guard your own, and seek his good as zealously as you would seek your own good; but never uphold dishonesty nor wrong-doing in any one.

I trust, if the Lord will, to meet you all at the district conference, in June. Let us come together in the fear of the Lord, and in the spirit of humility and meekness; and let us come praying, too.

My field address is Fremont, Steuben County, Indiana. And for the present you may address me in care of M. R. Clark, or in care of box 279.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

To the Ministry and Membership of the Far West District, Missouri, Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the missionary work and membership and branches of this the Far West District, Missouri, (except St. Joseph) we are glad to be able to say that there is a fine outlook for both departments of the work, if all will take the proper care to represent the Master, as well by a righteous walk as by precept.

We take this means of inviting your prayerful coöperation in the work intrusted to our care of preaching the gospel to the world and caring for the flock.

This mission is a very important one, both in point of location, being one of the "waste places of Zion," and in membership, there being something near twelve hundred Saints within its boundaries. The following counties are included in this district: Caldwell, Ray, Clay, Platte, Buchanan, Clinton, DeKalb, Daviess, Livingston, and Grundy. Any Saints or friends living in these counties, who desire the labors of the missionaries in their neighborhoods, will please correspond with Walter W. Smith, 2505 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri (permanent address), stating the opportunities and needs for labor. Those in the branches will please correspond with T. T. Hinderks, R. F. D. No. 1, Stewartville, Missouri, stating the needs of your branch and the best time to hold meetings in your neighborhood. I have associated with me in the missionary work, William E. Summerfield and Benjamin J. Dice, also William E. Haden, till the close of the tent season. We bespeak for these men the support, spiritually and temporally, of the Saints and friends among whom they labor.

Our missionary force is small, and we will be obliged to look for some of our work to the local men who can give part of their time to the spread of the truth, and shall expect the missionaries when laboring in the branches or their vicinity, to do all they can to encourage and build up the work, and thus go hand in hand to advance the work of God.

Let all the local men in the field, who can assist some in the missionary work, report to submissionary in charge.

In hope of the final triumph of the work, we are,

Your brethren and collaborators,

WALTER W. SMITH, Submissionary in Charge.

T. T. HINDERKS, District President, in charge of membership and branches.

To the Saints and friends in Oregon and Washington: Bro. David Smith and myself having been appointed by the late general conference to the above mission, but more especially for the present to Western Oregon to do tent work, we shall be pleased to hear from those who think an opening may be had for tent work in their vicinity, or any who want preaching without the tent. We are anxious to use the tent before the heavy rains set in. I expect to be in the field by the time or before this is printed; Bro. Smith as soon as he can. I shall be pleased to meet old friends again, and to coöperate with them again, as in the past, in teaching the people "our gospel." May we all so labor that when the work of the year is ended we may feel a consciousness of God's approval. Please write us at Bandon, Oregon.

In the gospel work,

SAN BENITO, California, May 14.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

To the Saints of Northern California District: We your servants want a few words with you. It has certainly occurred to you that we are the most highly favored people on earth, having in possession the very best type of Christianity. This is the "pearl of great price." How much do we love it? How much are we sacrificing for it? Why not make this incoming conference year the best in the history of the district? Not disparaging the past, we can do better in the future because of additional experience and knowledge. The few can not do this; what is needed is a concert of action, which means each one do something, in the spirit of harmony.

VISITING.

We, by your vote at the last conference having been placed in charge of the district wish to visit every part, especially where work is most needed. We wish not to take pleasure jaunts, but go out on working tours. The work is so great we need help, not only of the priesthood but of the membership. There is work for each and all.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

We are deeply interested in the Sunday-school, and shall give it special attention. If we are not officers, we are workers with just as much love and earnestness. Let us make the Sunday-school shine in the district.

RELIGIO.

As not a whit behind in importance comes the Religio, which forms a splendid field for work for the youth, the child, the adults. All can be edified here, as also in the Sunday-school.

REUNION.

The committee is working to perfect arrangements to make the coming reunion, September 4 to 13 a great success. Features are under contemplation that will make it interesting and edifying. The Sunday-school and Religio work will be emphasized. Let the workers begin to prepare for this event.

CONFERENCE.

The district conference will convene at the reunion grounds, Oakland, on September 7, at 10 o'clock; the Sunday-school convention on Tuesday, the Religio on Wednesday. The work will be interspersed through the reunion as circumstances and time permits.

Come now, let us make this a year of earnest work for the Master. We want to be in close touch with the work. Let us know your wants and opportunities and we will serve you as best we can in keeping with our special work as missionaries.

Your brethren and servants,

J. M. TERRY, President of District.

1219 Chestnut Street, Oakland, California.

E. KEELER, Associate President.

1654½ West seventh Street, Oakland, California.

As it has pleased the Lord and the appointing powers to place me in charge of the Colorado Mission, I trust that all the Saints in said mission will help as best they can to advance the Master's cause.

All who desire labor done in their respective neighborhoods will help greatly in the work by letting me know of their needs.

All ministers who are so situated as to labor a part or all of the time in mission work, please let me hear from you. I desire, as per the rule of the church, that all missionary work be reported to me July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1.

My home address is Lamoni, Iowa. Send communications there for the present.

Trusting that this may be a prosperous year to the mission, and that God's spirit will greatly assist in the work, I am,

Yours for the good of the cause,

J. M. STUBBART.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

Let those whom this may interest take notice that Bro. Frank J. Updyke, of Greenwood, New York, has been appointed Bishop's agent to receive and receipt for church funds in behalf of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in and for the western part of the state of New York. Saints and friends may safely give or deposit their offerings to aid gospel work, with Bro. Updyke. Let every one perform his duty, if but to the amount of the widow's mite, so that the law may be fulfilled and the Lord's work benefited.

Witness my hand this 21st day of May, 1903, A. D., at Lamoni, Iowa.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY.

Special Appointment in the Interest of Graceland College.

To the Saints and Friends of Graceland College: Please take notice that Doctor Joseph Luff, of Independence, Missouri, has been by consent of the Presidency of the Reorganized Church, and arrangement with the Bishopric of said Church and the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, appointed to travel and work in the interest of the College for the present year, and to present its work and place among the educational institutions of the country to the people, and to collect and receipt for funds and donations in its interest, both on account of the general running expenses of the College and the College debt. We therefore commend the brother and his work to all lovers of learning and benefactors and helpers in the work of establishing the truth, and bespeak for him a candid hearing, and cheerful help. Witness: Daniel Anderson, chairman; I. W. Allender, secretary, Board of Trustees. Fred'k M. Smith, for the Presidency. E. L. Kelley, for the Bishopric.

Notices.

The Saints who expect to attend the reunion at Clitherall, Minnesota, commencing June 19, will please write to L. Whiting, one of the committee on arrangements. Board and lodging can be obtained at $3 per week. Barn room and hay at twenty cents per day for full team. Every effort will be made on the part of committee to make all as comfortable as possible. So do not fail to write how you want accommodations. L. Whiting.

To the Clerks of the Branches in the British Isles Mission: Will the clerks of the various branches in England, Scotland, and Wales please take notice. Some time ago the secretary of the mission was appointed local historian. This was indorsed by action of mission conference. The local historian, Bro. W. R. Armstrong, sent word to the various branches asking for historical items of the branches from date of organization up to present date. So far this has been neglected. Please let us urge you to attend to this important duty at once. John W. Rushton, President of Mission. Wm. R. Armstrong, secretary of mission and local historian.

10 Rye Street, C-on-M, Manchester.

Reunion Notices.

The Massachusetts District Reunion will convene at Silver Lake, August 1 to 10. Full particulars will be printed later. O. L. Newcomb.

The annual reunion of the Dakota District will be held at Bottineau, June 26 to July 2, 1903. A large tent is being purchased, and ample arrangements being made for hay, stabling, and pasture for teams. Bottineau is situated on a branch of the Great Northern Railroad, and those coming on the Northern Pacific from the south or southeast change at Casselton. The Minnesota Reunion is one week previous, and we have invited the same force of speakers. Bottineau is pleasantly situated at the foot of the Turtle Mountains, sixteen miles from the International Boundary and easily accessible to Saints from the southern part of Northwest Territory who desire to drive. Railway convenience is not good from Canadian side, Deloraine on the Canadian Pacific Railway being thirty-five miles distant. We shall be glad to welcome all. The following brethren, associate members of the committee, are authorized to receipt for subscription to tent fund: William Oaks, F. G. Spalding, George W. Day, and J. E. Gordon. William Sparling, chairman.

Conference Notices.

Northern Michigan District conference will convene at Whittemore, Iosco County, June 27. Prayer service at 9 a. m.; business session at 10.30. We trust there may be full and complete reports from all the branches and local ministry. J. A. Grant, president.

The Gallands Grove District conference convenes at Dow City, Iowa, June 13, at 9 a. m. J. M. Baker, president.

The Southeastern Illinois District conference will convene with the Brush Creek Branch, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, June 13, 1903. All the branches are requested to report. I. A. Morris, president.

Conference of the Chatham District will convene in Blenheim, June 20, 21, 1903. A. Leverton, president, Richard Coburn, secretary.

Special conference will be held in Saints' chapel at Beals, Maine, June 6, 7, 1903. Ernest W. Wilson, clerk.

Convention Notices.

Religians of Little Sioux District, Iowa, will convene at Pisgah, June 4, 1903, at 8.30 p. m. Locals please mail reports to secretary not later than June 1. Nellie E. Ballantyne, secretary, Moorhead, Iowa.

The next convention of Kewanee District Sunday-school association will be held at Joy, Illinois, June 5, 1903. Come prepared to help make the convention a success spiritually. Mrs. Ed Lamb, secretary.

There will be a convention of the Fremont District Sunday-school association at Shenandoah, Iowa, beginning 8 p. m., Thursday, June 4, 1903, closing Friday night. Everybody needed. Mrs. T. A. Hougas, superintendent.

A certain leading Divine of Ontario, when criticising the newspapers of Toronto, complained that during the late fight in that Province about the "Referendum," the majority of them had nothing positive at all to say on the matter, which had led him to the conclusion that the ordinary "daily" no longer has any opinions on subjects of public interest, but, like telephones and telegraph wires, are mere transmitters. There is a certain amount of truth in this statement. Not only is this the case, but in many instances the matter is ever worse. Some papers only have opinions when paid to express them. If a sufficient amount of the "filthy lucre" is brought forward, they can be induced to have very decided and very strong opinions upon almost any subject. There is one paper, however, we are glad to say, which "none of these things can move." It has its opinions upon every public question and upon all occasions it is ready to utter them with a fearfulness and a candor which must commend it to right-thinking men. This newspaper is the Montreal Daily Witness, published by John Dougall & Son. The Witness makes for righteousness and truth regardless of cost and consequences. It stands four square to every wind that blows. It has principles (which is a somewhat rare thing for a newspaper to have in these days) and by these principles it is prepared to stand or fall. Personally, I value the Witness for many things. I like it because of the reliability of its news. I am also partial to the Witness because of its educative influence. Every subject of interest is there discussed in strong, vigorous, fearless editorials, and better still, all are dealt with from a Christian standpoint. These editorials bear the stamp of a high order of literary merit, and almost a painful conscientiousness. It is indeed a refreshing thing in these days, when men talk of the "almighty dollar" as if it were almighty, to find a newspaper whose principles go right down through the pocket, and whose owners are willing to sacrifice for conscience sake. There are papers that publish religious things because these may secure for the paper an entrance into the homes from which they would otherwise be excluded. But the religion of the Witness permeates the whole paper. Long may it live, abundantly may it prosper, and long may it be spared to inform, educate, inspire and uplift humanity.

Yours very sincerely,

Country Life in America with its sumptuous illustrations and wealth of practical information covers an astonishing range of subjects in its June number. "A Plant-Hunting Vacation," shows some wonderful orchids and rare wild flowers which have never been so beautifully pictured before. "First Principles of Poultry Raising" has some wise caution and good common sense that beginners should heed. "Discovering a Country Home" is a breezy story by a man and wife who abandoned a city flat, tried a rented house in the suburbs and found happiness in the real country. "How to Grow Cherries" and "Bee-keeping for Pleasure and Profit" are good practical articles. "How to Build a House-boat" and "A House-boat for Two Thousand Dollars" are suggestive and valuable for people of moderate means. "The Pacific Salmon" gives the life history of the quinnat salmon in a series of pictures. The double page illustration is a picture of the cut-throat trout, the gamest fish of western North America. "Personal Experiences in Gardening" is a series of eight short articles describing new and ingenious practical devices and profitable results. "Our Friend the Pig" tells how to take care of a pig and is illustrated by amusing pictures. Two other striking pictorial features are "Casting a Net for Mullet" and "How an Insect Sheds its Skin," the latter a series of ten pictures of the seventeen-year locust. As a whole the June number is a brilliant one and shows that Country Life is not only able to maintain its wonderful pictorial standard but actually to improve it every month. Each number is a fresh revelation.

The June World's Work is the annual "World at Play," number with many vigorous and practical articles on timely vacation topics and with perhaps the most remarkable illustrations this magazine has ever published. Outside of the recreation idea, are such important and interesting articles as Mr. Carnegie's, "The Secret of Business," Guy Morrison Walker's thoughtful "Railroad Mileage and Wealth," and a resumé of the report of Moseley Commission of English workmen who visited America in the winter, showing the difference between English and American working conditions. The portion of the magazine given over to the vacation idea includes Lawrence Perry's "The Business of Vacations," an interesting account of the practical business side of the modern vacation, and articles by Franklin Matthews describing the increased "Vacations for the Workers" and by Doctor A. T. Bristow on "The Most Healthful Vacation" from a doctor's point of view, both presenting practical facts and interesting suggestions. John R. Spears writes about "The Cup Racers," showing that the sport of yacht racing is one of the most practical of possible experiments in naval architecture. Distinctly open air and refreshing are Edwin Sandy's delightful fishing reminiscences, Dan Beard's practical article on "The Art of Camping," Ralph D. Paine's "To the Arctic in an Automobile." Frank M. Chapman's story of the sport to be had from "Hunting With a Camera," and Henry D. Sedgwick, Jr.'s brilliant word picture of a trip "On Horseback Through the Yellowstone National Park." M. G. Cunniff contributes an interesting article about "The Comforts of Railroad Travel," and Raymond Stevens writes about "The Appalachian Club and Mountain Climbing," while Grace Gallatin Seton and Walter Camp tell some of the exciting and memorable summer experiences that they have had. The magazine is rounded out by a book review that will be found of use in selecting "Fiction for Summer Reading," the editor's March of Events," and the little articles written "Among the World's Workers."

A GOOD DEFENSE.

Reverend Bailey, of the Presbyterian form of Christian belief, attacked Mormonism, "the menace of the age," at Wheeling, West Virginia, May 6, in a lecture delivered in the Third Presbyterian church in that city.

To the assumptions and animus of the lecture Bro. O. J. Tary, our faithful brother in charge of the flock in that town of iron and steel, took exceptions, and replied to Reverend Bailey's strictures, so far as these affected the general faith of the church, as the same was held in the church from 1830 to 1844, and is now held by the Reorganized Church. His points are well made, as reading the reply made in the Wheeling Telegraph, for May 16, 1903, will show:

EDITOR TELEGRAPH.

Sir: In a recent issue of your paper, your readers were regaled by the Reverend Bailey's exposition of "Mormonism as it is To-day," given in his lecture at the Third Presbyterian Church on the sixth of May. That his lecture fairly represents the peculiar doctrinal teachings of the dominant church of Utah, I readily admit. But that it does great injustice to a people who are not only innocent of the evils declaimed against, but always uncompromisingly opposed to them, I am just as positive. For this reason I ask space in your columns to present some facts that have a very important bearing upon the subject under discussion. So far as the lecture relates to the existence of evil teachings and practices of Brigham Young and his followers, I have no word of defense to offer. I have neither time nor inclination to defend any guilty parties. Had the reverend gentleman traced the evils of which he complained to their true source, and not laid the blame of them on innocent people, there would have been no occasion for this article. He started out on the premise that, "A tree should be judged by its fruit," and proposed to examine Mormonism in that way, then proceeded to contrast the doctrines of Brigham Young with the New Testament, after having referred to Joseph Smith as the founder of Mormonism. Let your readers note these facts. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized in 1830. In June, 1844, Joseph Smith and his brother were shot to death by a mob, who, after a fruitless effort to fasten on him any crime or violation of law, said: "If the law can not reach him, powder and ball can." For the space of fourteen years he occupied the foremost position in the church. His writings, his publications and utterances are on record. If he or the church with which he was associated is to be tried by the rule which Reverend Bailey laid down, then his official acts and writings, together with the accepted doctrinal tenets of the church up to his death must be made the basis upon which the test shall be applied. Why did not Rev. Bailey introduce these if he proposed to make Joseph Smith and the church he represented responsible for the present conditions in Utah? There can be but one answer—they would not serve the purpose. Did he not quote from the books of the

THE Church Library is an institution which should be remembered by all the members of the church. Its needs at present are many, and efforts should be made to place it on such a working basis that all can be proud of it. Remember it, Saints, and let us make such an effort in its behalf that it will make a good showing by the time it is placed in its new quarters. We have spoken of its needs many times, and we trust the Saints will remember the Library liberally. Donations of books and money are always acceptable. Works on "Mormonism," archæology, and history are especially desired.

THE second number of Paul Hanson's "Notes from New Zealand," in the June number of the Autumn Leaves, deals mostly with the laws and customs of the country.

Mormons, giving name and citing the page? And is not this authoritative, the reader may ask? He quoted copiously from Brigham Young and his successors, which is authority on the position of the apostate church of Utah; but is it consistent with reason or common sense to hold that up as the teaching of a man that was dead before such pernicious doctrines were introduced? Why did he not say these were introduced by Brigham Young and maintained by his successors? Posing as he did, as the exponent of the gospel of "mercy," he holds up to view the apostate doctrines of one man, and denounces the system of religion that never did and never can accept such preposterous innovations. The position of the church during the life of Joseph Smith, on the marriage question, on loyalty to the laws of the land, in fact on every question that effects good citizenship are matters of public record, but not one of them was introduced. Every quotation was from Brighamite authors.

At this juncture the point will doubtless be raised that Brigham Young succeeded Joseph Smith and continued the same system of religion that Mr. Smith taught, hence, his teachings must be those of Mr. Smith. To have people believe this seems to be the object of most lecturers on this subject. If this position could be upheld by facts, no blame could be attached to them for it. Here I may be told that I should not question the sincerity or veracity of such learned and able men, for they certainly know what they are talking about. Very well; let us look into the evidence at this point.

The only evidence supporting this position is that obtained from the people in Utah. This is held up to the people by such men as Reverend Bailey as absolute proof that Joseph Smith was responsible for the evils of Utah Mormonism. If their testimony is good on this point it must be good on other subjects, for the same fountain will not put forth sweet water and bitter. Does the Reverend Bailey accept without impeachment their declaration that they have abandoned polygamy, and that their agreement to do so was sincere? Is their sincerity on any religious question taken at par by him? If not, then be consistent and reject their evidence on the origin of polygamy and other evil doctrines. Brigham Young led a part of the church to Utah, and there led them entirely away from the church of which they had been members, first by rebaptizing them, then by the introduction of many false and wicked doctrines. Those who refused to follow him were reorganized in 1856, and since 1860 have had as their president the son of Joseph Smith, who resides in Iowa, and who for many years has been editor of the official church paper of the Reorganized Church. This church from the highest official to the humblest layman has at all times and in all places taken a decided stand against the innovations of the Utah church. Its claim to successorship of the original church organized in 1830 is supported by the decision of Honorable L. S. Sherman, judge of the Lake County, Ohio, court in 1880. Also by the decision of Judge Phillips, of the United States Court for the Western district of Missouri, handed down March 3, 1894.

Space forbids giving the text of these decisions, but suffice to say that they clear the true Latter Day Saints of the odium that attaches to the dominant church of Utah. They brand Brigham Young as an usurper, and the one who introduced the order to "obey counsel," and established secret oaths and secret societies contrary to the original church. In the face of these facts, the man—I care not from whence he comes or how many titles he may have attached to his name—who will denounce Joseph Smith and the system of religion he taught as the tree from which the evils of Utah Mormonism grew, strikes hands with the guilty cohorts of Brigham Young in their dastardly efforts to fasten their crimes on innocent people, and becomes particeps criminis with them in refusing to acquiesce in the authority of the courts. "By their fruits ye shall know them," applies as a criterion with equal force to all. By this the true Latter Day Saints' Church is willing to be tested. But bringing fruit from a foreign tree and using that as a test on one which does not produce it, can not be reconciled with any principle enunciated by Him who is our only safe guide to follow. Let truth shed her effulgent rays throughout the land, and justice be meted out to all.

O. J. TARY.

WHEELING, West Virginia.

THE JEWS AS JEWS, IN RUSSIA.

Writers upon the late disturbances in Bessarabia in which some half a hundred Jews were killed outright and three or four hundred hurt and wounded by abuse and maltreatment, some of whom died and some others will die, differ quite materially as to the originating cause of the dislike of the Russian against the Jew.

Baron Emil G. Hirsch expresses the opinion that the primary cause is, First, the fact that the Jew is a cleaner, more intelligent, thrifty, and energetic citizen than the average Russian. That as an agriculturist, laborer, workman, artist, and business man he is superior, wins his way and thus excites the envy of his less prosperous neighbor, the Russian.

Second, the laws and edicts of the Russian government have been and are of that character that the Jew is discriminated against, forced into the larger cities because forbidden to live in the smaller villages in any number, in some instances not more than one family, and thus compelled to depend on their business wits rather than on agriculture.

Mr. Hirsch admits that the Jews differ from the Russians, and are necessarily forced to be clannish, and to live by themselves, i. e., withdrawn from close social intimacy with their Russian neighbors by reason that they will not lower themselves to live as these neighbors do.

Rabbi Hirsch, referring to the policy of the Russian government, writes:

The Russian Government is moved to this policy partly by religious fanaticism, partly by the desire to make the Jew a counterirritant to the dissatisfaction naturally spreading among the non-Jewish subjects. The Jew is the scapegoat. Having reduced him to as low a level as fiendish cruelty could, the Russian now points to the Jew and exclaims: "Look at him: is he desirable?"

. . . The Jew will not sink into the mire, no matter what the indignities are that are intended to accomplish his moral ruin. Hence, the auger of the impotent minions of cruelty.

The Rabbi affirms that the outbreak at Kischineff was due to the raising the fanatical cry that the Jews used Christian blood in their passover ceremonies. This was the old cry against the Christians under the Roman rule; but served to inflame the passions of the ignorant and superstitious Russian rabble, peasants, rowdies, and loafers. The Rabbi continues:

Lazy, shiftless the Bessarabian saw the Jew thrifty, and economical, and frugal. This aroused his envy. The blood accusation furnished ready pretext for reprisals, and, once feeling that the authorities were only too eager to let him have his fun, he was not slow to avail himself of the opportunity. His lust and his desire for loot certainly found their reckoning in this innocent sport of killing and robbing and outraging Jews.—Chicago Tribune, May 19, 1903.

The Russian consul in Chicago, Baron von Schlippenbach, admits that the report of the American consul at Odessa, that 45 Jews were killed, over 400 wounded, 700 houses robbed, and 600 shops plundered is correct. He admits beating and killing, but denies gouging out of eyes and cutting women open.

He gives as some of the causes for the riot; that the Jews have monopolized many of the trades; that they dominate in the mechanical branches; that they control the corn and wheat trades; that they at one time had the dramshops, but the government took this privilege from them, as it was said they were cheating the people and were considered responsible for drunkenness. This last Baron Hirsch denies.

Consul Schlippenbach states:

The Jew, controlling most of the business, is notorious for the sharp bargains that he drives. He thinks of nothing but overcoming the peasants. He is thrifty at their expense. It was resented.

You who have never been in Russia can not realize how clanish these Jews are. They keep together in this country, but much more do they isolate themselves in Russia in their social life. Their customs, both in religion and daily life, are widely different from those of the same class of peasants who are not of their race. Incredible as it may seem, all this is resented.

The Jews avoid military service. That is the reason so many of them come to this country—to avoid serving in the army. This is also held against them. It is true that there are Jews in the army, and they make good soldiers, with a strong sense of duty, and some of them are brave, but they generally avoid service if they can.

I deny that the Jews are persecuted on account of their religion. There is much religious freedom in Russia.

The condition of the average Russian peasant is worse than that of the Jew peasant in the same locality. The Jews are more prosperous, more careful of what they eat, and there is comparatively no drunkenness among them.—Chicago Tribune for May 19, 1903.

As if to accentuate the estimate of Baron Schlippenbach, Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador at Washington, gives as a reason for the feeling against the Jews in Russia, that the Jews will not work in the field or engage in agriculture. They prefer to be money-lenders.

The Jew is a money-lender. As such he takes advantage of the Russian peasant and soon has him in his power to his financial ruin, discouragement, and discomfiture. The patience of the peasant is exhausted, and then trouble ensues. The Jews are in the minority, and, of course, when rioting begins he fares badly at the hands of an infuriated mob.

From these various statements it may pretty fairly be inferred that whether the Czar's paternal care discriminates against the Jews in favor of his Russian subjects, or not, the chief cause of complaint is that the Jew is a Jew and not a Russian, differing in nationality and characteristics, customs, religion, and practically all that constitutes him a Jew.

The laws of Russia regulating banking are such that the Jewish money-lender can not indulge in usurious practices, under severe penalties if violating the law. But the fact remains that the careful Jew becomes prosperous and in time emerges from poverty and has money to lend to his neighbors. Of course he stipulates for security and all the interest the law will permit, and this in Russia, as everywhere else, is followed by the entailed results, failure in the ability of the borrower to pay, through the improvidence of the debtor, or nature's withholding her earthly bounty, so when pay-day comes the Jew is an extortioner, a threat, a menace, a destroyer—anything by which to characterize the grasp of the money-lender upon his victim. One does not have to go to Russia to obtain instances to illustrate the sentiment and the situation.

How natural, then, for the ignorant and superstitious Russian, strongly entrenched in his creed, to raise the red flag of danger from the Jews, and in a whirlwind of passion glut his flame of rage upon the hated Jew, inadequately protected as he is in Bes-sarabia.

It is to be hoped that out of the agitation which has occurred by the massacre at Kischineff, there may arise better conditions of treatment for the oppressed, as sympathy for the victims of murder, rapine, and robbery calls out the latent good and love for humanity existing in the different governments of the world.

“TRACES OF EARLY RACE ON SAN BERNARDINO RANGE.”

The following clipping from the Press, of Riverside, California, issue for May 23, was sent us by Bro. T. S. Brown. We give it space because of its interest to students of archæology.

Los Angeles Times: Frank W. Bennett, a capitalist of Boston, who has spent the winter in Southern California, has made some interesting archæological researches in the San Bernardino mountains, and has unearthed and shipped to his eastern home numerous antiquities which he believes go to prove the existence long ago of a higher and much better civilization than the California Indian ever knew.

Mr. Bennett has recently sent his treasures to Boston, where he will bring them to the notice of the archæological experts as soon as he reaches home, about the middle of June.

Interviewed in Los Angeles a few days ago Mr. Bennett said: “About fifteen miles to the southeast of Fredalba, near Grayback, I came upon a number of half-buried earthenware relics which convince me that a fine ancient civilization flourished there. I spent almost the entire months of March and April investigating in the mountain country, and I have collected a varied group of specimens.

“I have no idea what people or peoples made and used the implements and utensils I have found, but I know that some of them are works of art. I have one dish, embossed with ancient figures which have no meaning at all for modern eye, which is certainly a marvel of the potter's craft. It is about three feet in depth and is eleven inches across the top, heavily glazed without and within, and as perfectly and symmetrically turned as though it had come from the finest kilns of Europe. But little decoration is attempted, and in fact all there is consists of merely a string of strange characters about the vase, probably forming a phrase or sentence. In work the characters somewhat resemble ancient Chaldean, but as I am not an expert on Assyrian language I will have to be excused from translating.

"These relics which I discovered were not in a mound, nor was there evidence of any artificial construction of earth or masonry or other material. By the appearance of the strata I think an earthquake had shaken up the side of the hill very vigorously, perhaps within the last hundred years and had opened this fissure. The rains of the ages have worn a deep gully, and this year the fragments were washed out.

"In addition I found fragments of bows and arrows and some sort of war instrument resembling a huge slingshot, but which I can't exactly classify. The battle-axes, of which I have two rather mutilated specimens, are antique freaks, and although I have inspected many museums, I never saw anything quite like them. The bows and arrows, though, I believe, belong to a later day, possibly some of the earlier Indian tribes having used them.

"There were no evidences of a town or city, and except in this one particular gully on an unclassifiable hillside, there were no relics of any sort. All around the country is primeval in its wildness, and it seems as though from the birth of time nothing has existed there of any moment. Of course, one picks up here as in other places a few Indian fragments, such as arrowheads and the like, but they have no connection with this particular find of mine.

"My theory is that at a remote age a people and a nation existed in this western part of the United States at once powerful and intelligent. Certainly what I found leads me to believe that their craftsmen excelled in fine arts, for no Greek ever turned out a more perfect specimen than is this vase I describe. It has yet to be renovated and cleansed before all its perfect lines will become apparent, and I propose to have this done at once on my arrival in the East. Then I will either forward it to the Anthropological Department of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington or present it to some of our eastern museums.

"I have not finished my investigating in Southern California. I haven't anything better to do, and so I am coming back next year for a thorough exploration, and I believe that before I am through I shall dig up some marvelous ancient history."

GENEROUS CONTRIBUTION.

The following letter was recently received by Bishop William Anderson, in acknowledgment of moneys sent for relief of the Scandinavians:

HONORABLE WILLIAM ANDERSON, Bishop of Lamoni Stake, Church of Latter Day Saints, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Bishop: I am in receipt of your letter of the 13th inst. inclosing draft for $62.83, being the amount of collections from members of the Latter Day Saints' church in Lamoni and adjoining towns in behalf of the famine sufferers in Sweden, Norway, and Finland. I deem this a very generous contribution and appreciate fully the sacrifice made by the bestowers.

Hoping for you and yours all that God in his infinite wisdom has planned for you, I am,

Yours very truly,
J. B. HARSH, Commissioner.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE STRUCK.

By letter from U. W. Greene, dated May 24, we learn that on the night of May 23 Kirtland was visited by a very destructive rain and hail-storm. About nine o'clock, Bro. Greene states, the Temple was struck by lightning. The northwest corner of the tower was split as far down as the roof, and considerable damage was done to the roof, and the plastering was broken off in several places in some of the upper rooms. Bro. Greene estimates the damage to the Temple to be from twenty-five to fifty dollars. Both auditoriums are intact. Bro. Greene writes: "Growing crops were damaged by the hail. About ten o'clock this morning Sr. Currie gathered enough hail-stones to freeze ice-cream. It seems as though the prince and power of the air would destroy this building if he could."

We are glad to know that the historical building was not damaged to any greater extent than it was, and trust that after the repairs have been made it will be as good as ever. No doubt many of the Saints are looking forward with much pleasure to the convening of the next General Conference in the old building. Long may she stand.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Margaret Reed wrote from Myrtle Point, Oregon, May 19: "My heart is made very sad by the departure of Bro. and Sr. Crumley from Myrtle Point. I had learned to love them dearly. Every one here seems to think well of them, and they were loved by the Saints."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

H. O. Powell, of Cayucas, California, wrote on May 21 that he wishes some of the elders would call, and promises a hearty reception.

Under date of May 28 Bro. J. B. Lentz wrote that he was holding meetings at Niagara Falls, New York, "with some interest manifest."

Sr. Annie Mizell writes from Hulda, Mississippi, that they have a lively little branch there. They expect to hold a Sunday-school picnic on July 4, and hope to have Bro. Roberts with them by that time. They are glad Bro. Roberts has been returned to that mission.

In Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and neighboring States the recent heavy and continued rains have caused a serious condition of affairs to ensue. The streams have become swollen until past records for high water have been broken, and thousands of families have been driven from their homes, and many lives have been lost in the floods. At Topeka, Kansas, fire added to the horror, many of the buildings burning as they floated from their foundations. Des Moines, Iowa, has met even a worse fate than it did last year. Hundreds are homeless, and much property destroyed. Throughout the farming districts fears are entertained that the cold and the continued wet have destroyed large portions of the crops. Train service through Iowa and Missouri has been greatly hindered, many schedules being abandoned for the time being. Mails are being retarded, and in Lamoni recent newspapers are at a premium.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

In the year 1827, Joseph Smith surprised and startled the world by the announcement that he had been visited by an angel from heaven, who told him of an ancient record, written on plates of gold, that was deposited in a certain hill in Ontario County, New York, containing the history of a fallen people, and the word of the Lord to them from time to time, prior to their fall. These people were the aborigines of America. This announcement was met with the rankest opposition by those professing to be followers of Christ; and often the vilest misrepresentations were resorted to in order to oppose the claims of this man.

The unpopularity of such a claim was due to the fact that the people commonly believed that the day of ministration of angels, and of direct revelation from God were things of the past; that the Bible contained all the revelations God ever gave to man, or ever would give, and hence, contained all that was needful for the benefit and enlightenment of mankind. Therefore they seemed to think that any man who should come making the claim that God had spoken to him, or that he had seen an angel who told him that there was another record, other than the Bible, that contained the word of God, should be denounced as an impostor.

We propose, in this treatise, to enter into an examination of the subject of the Book of Mormon and learn what it purports to be, and see if the Lord, through his prophets, has had anything to say concerning the coming forth of just such a work. And if we shall find that it comes forth in direct fulfillment of prophecy, we should accept that as grand evidence of its divinity.

First, we desire to see whether or not it was probable that the Lord had a people on this continent previous to its discovery by Columbus. We will now turn to Acts 17: 26, 27:

And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us.

From the foregoing it will be observed that all nations of men are of one blood, designed to dwell upon the face of all the earth, and that God has determined the bounds of their habitation; further, that it is the privilege of every one to seek the Lord, (no matter where they may dwell,) and the promise is that they shall find him, because God is not far from any of us, whether we dwell in Asia Minor, America, or the isles of the sea. In fact, we find that earthly location is no barrier to the reception of God's favor and blessing.

When Columbus discovered this land, he found it already inhabited by a people who had long dwelt here; a people who seemed to have Hebraic rites and customs. Their language, also, seemed to indicate that they were of Israelitish descent. The question has often been asked, "Who were the ancestors of this people?" "From whence came they, and how came they to this land?" Various ideas have been entertained, speculations and theories indulged in, but no positive information regarding their origin has ever been given until the coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

This book tells us that a colony of people, who were descendants of Joseph, left Jerusalem about six hundred years before Christ,—or in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah—being instructed and directed of the Lord to go into a land of promise; a land that was choice above all other lands. After traveling for eight years in the wilderness, they crossed the great waters and landed somewhere on the western coast of South America. This colony consisted of two families; those of Lehi, and Ishmael. Their principal leader was Nephi, who was the son of Lehi. Nephi's elder brethren were, Laman, Lemuel, and Sam. Two sons were born to Lehi during his sojourn in the wilderness, viz., Jacob and Joseph. After their arrival in the promised land, they began to till the soil, raise crops and herds and engage in the various industries of civilization and it was the endeavor of Nephi to have his people observe and do the commandments of the Lord. But Laman and Lemuel, it seems, were not disposed to follow that which was right, nor to keep God's commandments as taught by Nephi, and soon there arose a rebellion in the colony which resulted in Nephi, and all who believed the word of the Lord, separating from the rest and going into another part of the land where they established a kingdom, and began to be an industrious and thriving people. Thus they were formed into two separate bodies, and finally became two great nations.

While the Nephites were a righteous and industrious people, tilling the soil, building cities and houses of worship, the Lamanites (as those who refused to follow Nephi, but followed Laman, were called) became an idle and filthy people. They delighted in all manner of bloodshed and wickedness, and would eat raw meat and drink the blood of animals. Because of their wickedness the Lord cursed them, and caused a skin of blackness to come upon them, whereas they had been white and exceedingly fair. This was done that they might not be enticing to the people of Nephi. The book gives a history of the growth and development of the two nations, and of their wars and contentions which arose on account of the warlike and love of bloodshed nature of the Lamanites, who were constantly attacking and harrassing the Nephites with the avowed intention of exterminating them. The Lord had said, to their first leaders, that the Lamanites should be a scourge to the Nephites to stir them up in remembrance of their God, and that if the Nephites should go into wickedness they would scourge them even to their destruction, which was eventually fulfilled; for the Nephites having turned away from the Lord, and gone into great wickedness, about four hundred years after Christ, fell into the hands of the Lamanites and were nearly all destroyed.

The Lamanites (now called Indians) remained in the land and were found here by Columbus and other early European explorers. This book gives the only true solution of the origin of the American Indian.

In March, 1820, Joseph Smith, then a mere lad, attended a religious revival which resulted in his seeking the Lord for light relative to his duty. In answer to prayer he saw a vision. The Lord appeared to him and told him to join none of the churches, "for they were all wrong." On September 21, 1823, he was visited by an angel named Moroni, who told him that the last dispensation was about to be ushered in, and that if faithful he would be chosen as an instrument in the hands of God in bringing his work forth. The angel also told about the plates, known as the Book of Mormon, which contained a history of the Nephites and Lamanites. The next day, at the direction of the angel, Joseph was permitted to see the plates, and on September 22, 1827, he obtained the plates. Early in 1828 he began the work of translating the plates by means of the power of God, and the Urim and Thummim which were found deposited with the plates for this purpose. The translation was completed in 1829, Emma Smith, Joseph's wife, and Oliver Cowdery having done most of the writing for him.

The plates were shown to three witnesses by an angel who told them that they were translated by the gift and power of God. We give their published testimony verbatim as it appears in the fore part of the Book of Mormon:

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

MARTIN HARRIS.

These plates were also shown unto eight other witnesses who saw and handled them. The following is their testimony as published and found in the fore part of the Book of Mormon:

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, Jr., the translator of this work, has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands: and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety, that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

The testimony of eleven men who declare that they have seen and heard, should receive careful and serious consideration. Each of those witnesses remained true to his testimony till the day of his death, although some of them were not all the time connected with the work.

WHY CALLED THE BOOK OF MORMON.

This is a question often asked, and one that many do not understand. Some imagine that the name in itself is a great evil; others think that the word Mormon is a synonym of all that is bad. But before we form our opinion, or pass judgment upon this work, let us give it fair and careful examination. Solomon says: "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him."—Proverbs 18: 13.

Paul said: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thessalonians 5: 21.

Remember there is never anything lost by an earnest, careful investigation. There are many who have condemned and ridiculed the Book of Mormon who, if they had only acquainted themselves with the facts in the case, would have found it far different from what they had thought it was. The Book of Mormon takes its name from its compiler, Mormon; this was a man's name. The Book of Mormon is composed of the writings of various men, as the book of Nephi, book of Jacob, book of Alma, book of Mosiah, book of Helaman, etc. Mormon abridged from the writings of these writers, and many others, and compiled them into one book, and hence the name, Book of Mormon.

WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS ABOUT THE BOOK.

The Bible plainly predicts that just such a work was to come forth; and when these predictions are carefully examined, we can not see how any one can doubt the divinity of the Book of Mormon and at the same time believe all of the Bible. Yet if the Bible were entirely silent on the subject, it would not necessarily invalidate the claims of the book, so long as its teachings do not conflict with the teachings of the Bible. But between the two there is perfect harmony.

We call attention of the reader to the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah. The chapter begins with the pronouncement of certain "Woe to Ariel, to Ariel the city where David dwelt!" that there should be heaviness and sorrow, that there would be a siege laid against her, that she should be brought low, and whisper out of the dust, etc. This, no doubt, referred to God's judgment upon Jerusalem which was exercised by the king of Babylon. We find by reading the chapter that the people were to merge into a drunken, slumbering, and staggering condition, as see verses 9 and 10. The people were to be without prophets or seers.

"And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I can not; for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned."—Verses 11, 22.

It will be remembered that this Nephite colony left Jerusalem about six hundred years before Christ, just before this woe came upon "Ariel." And Ariel, or the people of Ariel, were to speak "out of the ground," and "whisper out of the dust." How could they speak after they were dead? Only by their records or writings. Hence the prophet says: "The vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, read this I pray thee."

A part of the book which Joseph Smith found was sealed: and he was commanded to translate only the unsealed part. After he had begun the work of translation, he made a transcript of the characters, "words of the book," and sent them by the hand of Martin Harris to Professor Anthon, professor of languages in Cambria College, New York, with the request that he should read them. We give the statement of Mr. Harris:

Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said that they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and he said that they were the true characters. He gave me a certificate certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct. I took the certificate and put it into my pocket, and was just leaving the house, when Mr.

Anthon called me back, and asked me how the young man found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel of God had revealed it unto him. He then said to me, "Let me see that certificate." I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying that there was no such thing now as ministering of angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him, he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed and that I was forbidden to bring them. He replied: "I can not read a sealed book." I left him and went to Dr. Mitchell, who sanctioned what Professor Anthon had said respecting both the characters and the translation."—Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 773.

It will be seen that the foregoing literally fulfills the prophecy of Isaiah; the learned man could not read a sealed book.

The book (not the words only) was delivered to him that is not learned, "Saying, read this I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned." This was fulfilled when the book was delivered to Joseph Smith. He was without education, and realized his lack of learning. It is said, even by the enemies of Mr. Smith, that he was very illiterate. We have been told by those who were acquainted with him that his knowledge at the time of the translation of the Book of Mormon, did not extend sufficiently to enable him to know that Jerusalem was a walled city.

Turning again to Isaiah's prophecy, we find that the Lord says: "Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."—Isaiah 29: 13, 14.

From the foregoing we observe that God would not trust his work to the wise and prudent of the world, but would take the work in his own hand, and by using the unlearned as instruments in his hand, would do such a marvelous and wonderful work as to cause the boasted wisdom and prudence of men to sink into insignificance. In this we see that God acted like himself in all former ages. When he had a great work to be accomplished, he did not call upon the worldly-wise, nor the educated; but he chose weak, humble instruments, that the glory might belong to him. Paul says: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise: and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—1 Corinthians 1: 26, 27.

WHEN THE SEALED BOOK WAS TO COME FORTH.

Answer: Just a little while before Lebanon, or Palestine, should become a fruitful field. Isaiah presents the following as an event to take place shortly after the book comes forth, and the "marvelous work and wonder" has begun: "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?"—Isaiah 29: 17.

That Lebanon, or Palestine, after the dispersion of the Jews, became a barren land and unfruitful, we presume none will deny. This took place in fulfillment of a prophecy of Moses which he spake to the children of Israel, telling them what would befall them in the event of their turning away from the Lord. (See Deuteronomy 29: 22-25.) Jesus said to the Jews that their house should be left unto them desolate.

Again he said: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24.

This prophecy was literally fulfilled; the Jews were slain and scattered, and even their land was cursed and became unfruitful, and so remained for centuries. But in the year 1850, we are told, dew began to fall on the land of Palestine; this continued until the year 1853, when the former and latter rain was restored. Vegetation began to spring up, to the great surprise of the natives, and since that time the land has become very fruitful.

All this was to take place just a little while after the coming forth of the sealed book. The book came forth in 1827 to 1830; Lebanon was restored in 1850 to 1853, which was comparatively "a very little while" after the coming forth of the book.

Another event that was to take place shortly after the coming forth of the book, was a manifest change in the feelings and condition of the Israelites, Jacob's face was to lose its paleness.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale."—Isaiah 29: 22.

As already shown, Israel was to be scattered and downtrodden. Nearly all the prophets of the Old Testament have referred to this condition, and all have supplemented their prophecies of Israel's downfall, by the promise that in latter times they should again enjoy the favor and blessing of God. Please notice, especially, Jeremiah 30: 18-29; 31: 31-34; 32: 40-44.

We observe that in the last sixty years the Jews have been favored by (we think) a divine Providence. They are fast regathering to Jerusalem and the Holy Land, and almost wherever we find them, it seems that wealth is flowing into their hands. Isaiah 60: 16, speaking of Israel, has well said: "Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles."

Israel's condition to-day should indicate to the careful student of Bible prophecy, that the time has come, and is past, when this sealed book should come forth. If this prophecy (in Isaiah 29) does not refer to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, we would like for some theologian to step forward and tell us definitely to what it does refer.

We next refer the reader to a prophecy in Ezekiel, as follows: "The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand."—Ezekiel 37: 15-17.

In the time of Ezekiel the word of the Lord was written upon parchments and fastened upon sticks, and hence were called sticks or rolls; equivalent to books, or records. There are two sticks, or records, spoken of here by the prophet; one of these is the stick of Judah, and the other the stick of Joseph in the hand of Ephraim. It is at once apparent that the stick of Judah must have been the record of Judah, or of the Jews, or what is known to us as the Bible. But what is this stick of Ephraim? If the one meant a book, the other would also mean a book; if the one was sacred writing, the other would be similar. The stick of Joseph, or Ephraim, was a record that contained the word of the Lord and a history of a portion of the tribe of Joseph. The Book of Mormon is that "stick" or record. It tells us that Lehi was a descendant of Manasseh, who was a son of Joseph; that Lehi's posterity occupied the land known as America, and to them was the word of God given, of which word they made a record, and which record is found in the Book of Mormon.

Finally the two sticks, or records, were to run together and become one. You may ask, what about the stick being in the hand of Ephraim, if those who came to this continent where the descendants of Manasseh? For an answer let us turn to Genesis 48: 14, 20, where we find Jacob blessing the two sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh. It was customary in those days to pronounce the greatest blessing upon the firstborn; Joseph places his sons before his father in such a manner as to cause his right hand to be upon the head of Manasseh, and the left upon the head of Ephraim. But Jacob, although his eyes were dim, was directed otherwise, and crossing his hands, or arms, he placed his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, and the left upon the head of Manasseh, "guiding his hands wittingly." The thing displeased Joseph, and he held up his father's hand to remove it from the head of Ephraim to the head of Manasseh, telling his father that Manasseh was the firstborn. Jacob replied:

"I know it, my son, I know it; he also shall become a people, and he also shall become great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations."—Verse 19.

Ephraim did indeed become a great nation, ten to one of Manasseh. (See Deuteronomy 33:17.) But we find, according to Hosea, that he became "joined to his idols," and "mixed himself with the people," notwithstanding his greatness. According to Bible history Ephraim became the greatest nation of the two. He was mixed with the nations—that is, scattered among all the nations of the earth, and we would, therefore, expect to find them in the land of America. According to the revelations and the intimations of God's Spirit to Joseph Smith, he, and those who with him were chosen of God to be instruments in bringing forth this ancient record to the people, were descendants of Ephraim. And thus the "stick of Joseph was in the hands of Ephraim; it was Ephraim's seed that has been instrumental in the hands of God in bringing forth this work.

We now desire to examine another prophecy, given in a blessing by Jacob upon the head of Joseph.

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall: the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: but his bow abide in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel;) even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: the blessings of thy father hath prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren."—Genesis 49: 22-26.

We learn from this prophecy, that Joseph was a fruitful bough. His branches, seed, was to "run over the wall," or, as we understand it to mean, over the sea; that is, his posterity was to cross over the sea and possess some land other than the land of Canaan. He was to be blessed with great blessings in the flesh, and also earthly blessings. His blessing was to prevail above the progenitors of Jacob. Who were Jacob's progenitors? Answer: Abraham and Isaac. What was the blessing that God promised to them? Answer: The land of Canaan. Then it is apparent that Joseph would receive a greater land; and the Book of Mormon teaches us that a branch of the house of Joseph did come to this land. America truly is a greater land than the land of Canaan. The blessing of Joseph was to extend "unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Suppose we go where Jacob stood, when blessing Joseph, and from thence go to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills, the earth,—that is, just as far away as we could go, we would land somewhere on the continent of America. The "utmost bound of the everlasting hills," would be the farthest, or opposite, side of the globe. Thus we can approximately locate Joseph's land.

JOSEPH'S LAND.

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelleth in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.—Deuteronomy 33: 13-17.

This prophecy is fully in harmony with the one cited in Genesis. Moses is simply repeating the prophecy of Jacob concerning Joseph, and giving it in different words, but meaning the same thing. He plainly mentions Joseph's land, and from the peculiar description he gives of it, no land can better fill that description than the land of America. This land was to be blessed with all the precious things put forth by the sun, moon, earth, dew, deep, etc. Surely this was to be a choice land. What land, on all the globe, is blessed with all the precious things mentioned in this prophecy as is the land of America? We answer, there is none. On this land abounds all the precious things put forth by the sun and dew; in it also are found all kinds of minerals that are put forth by the earth. Surely this is the land of Joseph.

The Lord told the seed of Joseph, that the nation or nations that inhabited this land must fear him and keep his commandments, or when they should become fully ripe in iniquity they should be destroyed. This was carried out after the Nephites had fully turned away from the Lord, some four hundred years after Christ. It will be observed that these prophecies all harmonize the one with the other.

FROM THE TOWER OF BABEL.

When the seed of Joseph came to this land, they found evidences and traces of a people having preceded them, but who had long since become extinct. These people had come from the Tower of Babel at the time of the confusion of tongues. They also found a record of this people, which, when translated by the gift and power of God, gave them a history of those most ancient inhabitants of this land. Moroni gives a synopsis or an abridgment of their history in the latter part of the Book of Mormon. Let us hear what the Bible says about the scattering of the people at the time of the confusion of languages at the Tower of Babel:

And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded. And the Lord said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do. Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech. So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city.—Genesis 11: 5-8.

The reader will notice the statement that "The Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth." This would certainly include the land of America, for it was then, as now, a part of the earth. And as they were scattered and came to this land there would be nothing unreasonable nor improbable in the thought that God would reveal himself to them, and that a record might be kept that at some future time might be brought forth for the benefit of other nations.

Concerning the dispersion referred to, Josephus gives the following:

"After this they were dispersed abroad, on account of their languages, and went out by colonies everywhere; and each colony took possession of that land which they lighted upon, and unto which God led them, so that the whole continent was filled with them, both the inland and the maritime countries. There were some also who passed over the sea in ships, and inhabited the island.—Antiquity of the Jews, book 1, chap. 5, par. 1.

This statement of history agrees with the Bible account, and harmonizes with the claims of the Book of Mormon. Thus far we have seen that the claims of the Book of Mormon are in harmony with Bible history and prophecy.

"OTHER SHEEP."

"And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd."—John 10: 16.

Who were those other sheep? We could hardly say the Gentiles, for Jesus calls them dogs. (Matthew 15: 26.) A dog is an enemy to the sheep. Jesus said, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." This would not admit of his going to the Gentiles, nor of their hearing his voice; consequently those other sheep must have been a people who were of the house of Israel. But where were they? Does the Bible tell us about Jesus going to any of the house of Israel save those of the land of Judea? No, but the Book of Mormon solves the problem by telling us that Jesus, after his crucifixion, came to this land and visited those people who were of the house of Joseph—of the house of Israel—and that they did hear his voice. (Book of Mormon, page 443.)

OUT OF THE EARTH.

Some have objected to the way and manner in which the Book of Mormon was preserved and finally came forth; that is, being concealed in, and coming forth out of the earth. Moroni, one of the last prophets of the Nephites, was directed of the Lord to hide in the earth the record of his people, who had become almost extinct by their warrings, and on the account of their great wickedness, that it might be brought forth in future generations for the benefit of others. (See Book of Mormon, page 495.) This was done that it might be preserved from the hands of the Lamanites who overran the land and sought to destroy all records pertaining to the Nephites, and that it might be brought forth in latter times for the benefit of all people, and to bring to them a history of the former inhabitants of this land.

We believe that David prophesied of the coming forth of this work, and the manner of its coming forth as will be seen from the following: "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase."—Psalms 85: 10-12.

"Truth shall spring out of the earth." What is truth? Answer: "Thy [God's] word is truth."—John 17: 17. God's word is truth. Those plates of gold that were taken out of the earth contained the word of God. "Our land [land of Canaan] shall yield her increase." It did not, however, until after truth (Book of Mormon) sprang out of the earth.

ANTIQUARIAN EVIDENCE.

It would be impossible, in a treatise of this kind, to enter at any great length upon a research of American antiquities; but we will present a few statements made by some of the most eminent authors. At the time of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon comparatively little had been written or was known concerning the evidences of prehistoric races. But since the coming forth of this work various discoveries of antiquities have been made, all of it, or nearly all, substantiating the claims of the Book of Mormon. Relics abound in Mexico, Central America, Yucatan, Peru, etc., which prove that an enlightened and civilized race or races of people who were skilled in the arts and sciences inhabited these countries. The mounds and ruins of North America likewise indicate that a people, other than the American Indians, have occupied here.

Pidgeon says: "It can not be any longer doubted that there has been a day when this continent swarmed with millions of inhabitants, when the arts and sciences flourished."—Traditions of De-coo-dah and Antiquarian Researches, p. 5.

Baldwin says: "To find the chief seats and most abundant remains of the most remarkable civilization of this old American race, we must go still farther south into Central America and some of the more southern states of Mexico. Here ruins of many ancient cities have been discovered. . . . The chief peculiarity of these ruins, that which especially invites attention, is the evidence they furnish that their builders had remarkable skill in architecture and architectural ornamentation. . . . The rooms and corridors in these edifices were finely and often elaborately finished, plaster, stucco, and sculpture being used."—Ancient America, pp. 93, 99.

Bancroft says: "The resemblances in the different groups of ruins in Chiapas, Yucatan, and Honduras are more than sufficient to prove intimate connection between the builders and artists. The differences pointed out prove just as conclusively that the edifices were not all erected and decorated by the same people, under the same laws and religious control, at the same epoch."—Native Races of Pacific States, vol. 4, p. 359.

The Book of Mormon claims that two distinct and separate peoples occupied this land at different times. The first coming from the tower of Babel, and the second from Jerusalem.

Short says: "The Neolithic and Bronze ages preceded the Palæolithic at least in the Mississippi Basin—not that the last inhabitants deteriorated and lost the higher arts which are well known to have been cultivated upon the same soil occupied by them, but that they were preceded by a race possessed of no inferior civilization, who were not their ancestors, but a distinct people with a capacity for progress, for the exercise of government, for the erection of magnificent architectural monuments, and possessed of a respectable knowledge of geometrical principles."—North Americans of Antiquity, page 27.

The foregoing agrees with the Book of Mormon account of the people from the tower of Babel having preceded the Nephite colony.

Quoting from Pidgeon again, we find the following: "From these facts, in connection with the traditions of De-coo-dah respecting the ancient inhabitants of those regions, as of various languages, customs, and color, we are led to the conclusion that at least two distinct races of men have occupied this territory at different eras, and that both became nationally extinct anterior to the occupation of the present Indian race."—Traditions of De-coo-dah and Antiquarian Researches, p. 176.

WRITING-LANGUAGE.

One of the Book of Mormon writers said: "If our plates had been sufficiently large we should have written in Hebrew."—Book of Mormon, page 500.

Thus we see that they had a system of writing that was shorter than the Hebrew; evidently a kind of phonetic system of writing. In harmony with this thought, Baldwin says: "The ruins show that they had the art of writing, and that, at the south, this art was more developed, more like a phonetic system of writing than that found in use among the Aztecs. . . . It is known that books or manuscript writings were abundant among them in the ages previous to the Aztec period."—Ancient America, p. 187.

Boudinot says: "There is a tradition related by an aged Indian of the Stockbridge tribe, that their fathers were once in possession of a Sacred Book, which was handed down from generation to generation, and was at last hid in the earth, since which time they have been under the feet of their enemies." American Encyclopedia, Article, Boudinot. Compare with Book of Mormon pp. 95, 495.

That the Indians seemed to retain a tradition that white men once occupied this land in connection with their forefathers, may be seen from the following: "Near the summit of the mountain dividing the waters of Loup and Armstrong Creeks Fayette County, West Virginia, there is a remarkable stone wall. Paddy Huddleston was probable the first white man that settled in Fayette County. Captain W. N. Page, C. E., talked with him and although very old he remembered talking with the Indians; one of their legends was, that the Kanawha Valley had been occupied by a fierce race of white warriors, who successfully resisted the approach of the red man from the west for a long time; but finally succumbed and passed away in death. Indians claimed never to have occupied the valley except for hunting expeditions; that they found these relics old, when they first entered the valley. Their origin beyond his records."—History of the upper Ohio Valley, 1891, by John P. Hale, p. 184.

The evidence here presented is not a hundredth of what might be presented, but we hope that this will be sufficient to cause the seeker after truth to investigate and examine still farther. To all such we recommend the reading and study of "Baldwin's Ancient America," "North Americans of Antiquity," and "Native Races of Pacific States;" for a compilation of archæological evidences supporting the claims of the Book of Mormon, we recommend the reading of a little work entitled, "Book Unsealed," by Elder R. Etzenhouser.

DID SOLOMON SPALDING WRITE THE BOOK OF MORMON?

It has been claimed by many of the opposers of the Book of Mormon that a Reverend Solomon Spalding was its real author; that it was a plagiarism of a writing entitled the "Manuscript Found." For many years this notorious manuscript was lost sight of and could not be found in order that a comparison might be made with the Book of Mormon; but in 1885 it came to light in the hands of L. L. Rice of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. The original copy is now deposited in the library of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, and can be examined by those desirous of satisfying their curiosity. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have been furnished with a certified copy of the "Manuscript Found," and it is now published and on sale by the Board of Publication at Lamoni, Iowa. Many people have believed this foolish story, and accepted it as a fact that Solomon Spalding's Manuscript Found furnished the basis of the Book of Mormon. But to those who will be considerate enough to make an examination of the subject and compare the Book of Mormon with the Spalding Story it will be apparent that the former could not have been copied or plagiarized from the latter.

In order to show to the reader how this notorious manuscript came to light we present herewith an article that was published in the Bibliotheca Sacra, and republished in many leading journals of the East and West, among them the Herald, of Grinnell, Iowa; The Western Watchman, Eureka, California; The New York Observer, and Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine:

The theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon in the traditional manuscript of Solomon Spalding, will probably have to be relinquished. That manuscript is doubtless now in the possession of Mr. L. L. Rice, of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, formerly an antislavery editor in Ohio, and for many years State printer, Columbus. During a recent visit to Honolulu, I suggested to Mr. Rice that he might have valuable antislavery documents in his possession, which he would be willing to contribute to the rich collection already in the Oberlin College Library. In pursuance of this suggestion, Mr. Rice began looking over his old pamphlets and papers, and at length came upon an old, worn, and faded manuscript of about one hundred and seventy-five pages, small quarto, purporting to be a history of the migrations and conflicts of the ancient Indian tribes, which occupied the territory now belonging to the states of New York, Ohio, and Kentucky. On the last page of this manuscript is a certificate and signature, giving the names of several persons known to the signer, who have assured him that to their personal knowledge the manuscript was the writing of Solomon Spalding. Mr. Rice has no recollection how or when this manuscript came into his possession. It was enveloped in a coarse piece of wrapping paper, and indorsed in Mr. Rice's hand-writing, "A Manuscript Story."

There seems no reason to doubt that this is the long-lost story. Mr. Rice, myself, and others, compared it with the Book of Mormon, and could detect no resemblance between the two, in general or in detail. There seems to be no name or incident common to the two. The solemn style of the Book of Mormon, in imitation of the English Scriptures, does not appear in the manuscript. The only resemblance is in the fact that both profess to set forth the history of lost tribes. Some other explanation of the origin of the Book of Mormon must be found, if any explanation is required. Signed, JAMES H. FAIRCHILD.

The following letter was written in answer to the suggestion of President Joseph Smith that the Manuscript be sent for safe-keeping to some historical society in Chicago, Illinois:

HONOLULU, Sandwich Islands, March 28, 1835.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH:

The Spalding Manuscript in my possession came into my hands in this wise. In 1839-40 my partner and myself bought of E. D. Howe the Painesville Telegraph, published at Painesville, Ohio. The transfer of the printing department, types, press, etc., was accompanied with a large collection, of books, manuscripts, etc., this manuscript of Spalding among the rest. So, you see, it has been in my possession over forty years. But I never examined it, or knew the character of it, until some six or eight months since. The wrapper was marked, "Manuscript Story—Conneaut Creek." The wonder is, that in some of my movements, I did not destroy or burn it with a large amount of rubbish that had accumulated from time to time.

It happened that President Fairchild was here on a visit, at the time I discovered the contents of it, and it was examined by him and others with much curiosity. . . .

This Manuscript does not purport to be "a story of the Indians formerly occupying this continent;" but is a history of the wars between the Indians of Ohio and Kentucky, and their progress in civilization, etc. It is certain that this Manuscript is not the origin of the Mormon Bible, whatever some other manuscript may have been. The only similarity between them, is, in the manner in which each purports to have been found—one in a cave on Conneaut Creek—the other in a hill in Ontario County, New York. There is no identity of names, of persons, or places; and there is no similarity of style between them. As I told Mr. Deming, I should as soon think the Book of Revelation was written by the author of Don Quixote, as that the writer of this Manuscript was the author of the Book of Mormon. Deming says Spalding made three copies of "Manuscript Found," one of which Sidney Rigdon stole from a printing-office in Pittsburg. You can probably tell better than I can, what ground there is for such allegation.

As to this Manuscript, I can not see that it can be of any use to any body, except the Mormons, to show that it is not the original of the Mormon Bible. But that would not settle the claim that some other manuscript of Spalding was the original of it. I propose to hold it in my own hands for a while, to see if it can not be put to some good use. Deming and Howe inform me that its existence is exciting great interest in that region. I am under a tacit, but not a positive pledge to President Fairchild, to deposit it eventually in the library of Oberlin College. I shall be free from that pledge, when I see an opportunity to put it to better use.

Yours, etc.,

L. L. RICE.

P. S.—Upon reflection, since writing the foregoing, I am of the opinion that no one who reads this Manuscript will give credit to the story that Solomon Spalding was in any wise the author of the Book of Mormon. It is unlikely that any one who wrote so elaborate a work as the Mormon Bible, would spend his time in getting up so shallow a story as this, which at best is but a feeble imitation of the other. Finally I am more than half convinced that this is his only writing of the sort, and that any pretense that Spalding was in any sense the author of the other, is a sheer fabrication. It was easy for anybody who may have seen this, or heard anything of its contents, to get up the story that they were identical.

L. L. R.

Here is another letter from Mr. Rice that will be read with interest by those who are inclined to investigate this matter:

HONOLULU, Sandwich Islands, May 14, 1835.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH;

Dear Sir: I am greatly obliged to you for the information concerning Mormonism, in your letters of April 30 and May 2. As I am in no sense a Mormonite, of course it is a matter of curiosity, mainly, that I am interested in the history of Mormonism.

Two things are true concerning this manuscript in my possession: First, it is a genuine writing of Solomon Spalding; and second, it is not the original of the Book of Mormon.

My opinion is, from all I have seen and learned, that this is the only writing of Spalding, and there is no foundation for the statement of Deming and others, that Spalding made another story, more elaborate, of which several copies were written, one of which Rigdon stole from a printing-office in Pittsburg, etc. Of course I can not be as certain of this, as of the other two points. One theory is, that Rigdon, or some one else, saw this manuscript, or heard it read, and from the hints it conveyed, got up the other and more elaborate writing on which the Book of Mormon was founded. Take that for what it is worth. It don't seem to me very likely.

You may be at rest as to my putting the manuscript into the possession of any one who will mutilate it, or use it for a bad purpose. I shall have it deposited in the library of Oberlin College, in Ohio, to be at the disposal for reading of any one who may wish to peruse it; but not to be removed from that depository. My friend, President Fairchild, may be relied on as security for the safe-keeping of it. It will be sent there in July, by a friend who is going there to "take to himself a wife." Meantime, I have made a literal copy of the entire document—errors of orthography, grammar, erasures, and all—which I shall keep in my possession, so that any attempt to mutilate it will be of easy detection and exposure. Oberlin is a central place, in the vicinity of Conneaut, where the manuscript was written.

I have had an idea, sometimes, that it is due to the Mormons to have a copy of it, if they took interest in it enough to publish it. As it is only of interest as showing that it is not the original of the Book of Mormon, no one else is likely to wish it for publication.

Miss Dickinson, whom you call a granddaughter of Solomon Spalding, represents herself to me as his grandniece: "My great-uncle, Rev. Solomon Spalding," she writes.

Rev. Dr. Hyde, President of the Institution, in this place, for training Native Missionaries for Micranesia, (a very prominent and successful institution), has written an elaborate account of this manuscript, and of Mormonism, and sent it for publication in the Congregationalist, of Boston. I presume it will be published, and you will be interested in reading it.

Very respectfully, yours,

L. L. RICE.

In a postscript Mr. Rice says he found the following indorsement on the Manuscript:

"The writings of Solomon Spalding proved by Aron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller and others. The testimonies of the above gentlemen are now in my possession.

(Signed) D. P. HURLBUT."

COPY OF MR. RICE'S LETTER TO PRESIDENT
FAIRCHILD.

HONOLULU, H. I., June 12, 1885.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD:

Herewith I send you the Solomon Spalding Manuscript, to be deposited in the library of Oberlin College, for reference by any one who may be desirous of seeing or examining it, as a great deal of inquiry has been made about it since it became known that it was in my possession, I deem it proper that it be deposited for safe-keeping, where any one interested in it, whether Mormon or anti-Mormon, may examine it. It has been in my possession forty-six years—from 1839 to 1885—and for forty-four years of that time no one examined it, and I was not aware of the character of its contents. I send it to you enclosed in the same paper wrapper, and tied with the same string that must have enclosed it for half a century—certainly during the forty-six years since it came into my possession. I have made and retained in my possession a correct literal copy of it, errors of orthography, of grammar, erasures and all. I may allow the Mormons of Utah to print it from this copy, which they are anxious to do; and a delegation is now in the Islands, awaiting my decision on this point. They claim that they are entitled to whatever benefit they may derive from its publication; and it seems to me there is some justice in that claim. Whether it will relieve them in any measure, from the imputation that Solomon Spalding was the author of the Book of Mormon, I do not attempt to decide. It devolves upon their opponents to show that there are or were other writings of Spalding—since it is evident that this writing is not the original of the Mormon Bible.

Truly, yours, etc.,

L. L. RICE.

The foregoing correspondence is taken from the preface of the Manuscript found as published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Any one who will take the Manuscript Found (Spalding Story) and compare with the Book of Mormon will readily see that the one was never copied from the other. And so far as Mr. Spalding ever having written some other manuscript story which was stolen by Sidney Rigdon or any one else, is only a mere supposition; or at the most an assertion. No proof has as yet ever been put forth to verify the assertion. So the theory that Solomon Spalding wrote the Book of Mormon falls to the ground. In the efforts of opposers of this work to account for its coming forth some other way than by the direction of the Almighty, it seems very hard for them to agree. While some say that Spalding wrote the book, others say that it was Oliver Cowdery that really wrote it; still others say that Joseph Smith wrote the book himself, but he copied the sacred part of it from the Bible, and the historical part of it was taken from suggestions set forth in the writings of Boudinot, Caleb Atwater, and Ethan Smith. There is always confusion when men attempt to oppose the work of the Almighty. The only way in which the existence of the book can be explained is, that it is a divinely inspired record, and came forth by the direction of the Almighty.

We ask the reader to carefully consider the evidences we have thus adduced; weigh them in the balances of reason and justice, and then act accordingly.

The claims and teachings of the book are not unreasonable, as some assert, but is in direct harmony with the Bible. God is unchangeable and is no respecter of persons; and having a people on this land in the ages ago, it is both reasonable and probable that he would speak to them as he did to his people on the Eastern Hemisphere; and if he revealed himself to his people, it is very probable that they would make a record of that which he gave them.

All the researches in American Archæology that have been made only support the claims that are made in, and for the Book of Mormon.

It has withstood all manner of opposition for over seventy years, almost every available manner and form of opposition having been used against it in an endeavor to prove it a fraud, but yet thousands of good honest people believe that it contains the word of God to a people who lived on this continent anciently, and believe that the teachings contained therein will benefit all those who will accept them.

The Book of Mormon is true; and every effort made to try to prove otherwise will only make it the more apparent, in the end, that it does in reality contain the word of God.

THE BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPT.

Joy filled our heart when we read the glad news that the historic Book of Mormon manuscript had been placed in the hands of the Reorganization, for we had patiently waited for it to be lodged there.

I present herewith all I have of a newspaper report of a visit of Orson Pratt and Joseph F. Smith, of Salt Lake City, Utah, who visited David Whitmer at his home Richmond, Missouri for the purpose of procuring the sacred treasure:

In 1879 two Mormon-apostles, Orson Pratt and Joseph F. Smith, a son of Hyrum Smith, who was killed with the prophet at Carthage, visited Richmond for the purpose of obtaining these time-worn sheets. Mr. Whitmer received them courteously, and Apostle Pratt said: "Father Whitmer, we desire to purchase the manuscript, and we are authorized to say to you that you may name your price, and be sure you put the price high enough, for the church has plenty of money in its treasury, you know."

Old Mr. Whitmer replied with quiet emphasis: "Elder Pratt, there isn't gold enough in the world to buy it."

It is asserted that Pratt in a conversation with another citizen of Richmond that day said the church would gladly have paid $100,000 for the manuscript.

The above is of special interest at this time and emphasizes the true value Mr. Whitmer placed on a sacred trust put in his hands for safe-keeping. His grandson, George W. Schweich, who was intrusted with the manuscript at Mr. Whitmer's death, and who placed it in the hands of President Joseph Smith of Lamoni, Iowa, for the Reorganized Church, will certainly have an honored name in the sacred history of this church for his thoughtfulness and judgment in the matter.

One Hour With Jesus.

One hour with Jesus the shepherd of the fold,
I esteem of more value than silver or gold;
The peaceful communion sent down from above
Makes clear to my vision his mission of love.

The world and its folly—I bid them adieu,
I find there no comfort that's lasting and true;
One hour with Jesus, that noble true friend,
Brings peace to my soul that will never more end.

One hour with Jesus—a feast to my soul!
My burdens are light and my yoke easy borne;
Though hardships and trials I may have to meet,
The Spirit bears witness the end will be sweet.

One hour with Jesus the friend of the weak,
Is very consoling on land or the deep;
The path may be thorny or waves mountain high,
There is joy in the thought that my Savior is nigh.

One hour with Jesus the joy of my life,
Will cleanse from the heart all malice and strife,
And give me new courage to press my way on,
In sunshine or darkness, in calm or in storm.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Program for June Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Hymn 90, Saints' Harp. Prayer. Scripture reading, Galatians 6: 1-10. Reading from Home Column with discussion. Supplementary reading with discussion. Roll-call. Business. Hymn 675, Saint's Harp. Dismissal prayer.

Reading for June Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

PREPARED BY HORTENSE SELLON CRAMER.

(The principal part of this reading was taken from a paper in the "Kansas City Mothers' Union Bureau of Exchange," which paper was compiled by Mrs. Mary Harmon Weeks from the works of Edward Smith, W. O. Atwater, Edward Atkinson, Helen Campbell, and Sarah Rohrer, and from pamphlets printed for free distribution by the Experiment Station of the Agricultural Department at Washington, District of Columbia. The rest is from a pamphlet printed by the Illinois Congress of Mothers, by Mrs. H. M. Dunlap, chairman Domestic Science Committee.)

"I have come to the conclusion that more than half the disease which embitters the middle and latter part of life is due to avoidable errors in diet."—Sir Henry Thompson.

"I think the greatest charity of the day is to be accomplished in enabling men whose income is small, to know how to spend their earnings wisely, and this charity I can conceive to be one especially dependent for its success upon the efforts of individual women studying the subject, and applying the fruits of their study in individual homes."—Edward Atkinson.

"The food we eat, the air we breathe, the thoughts we think, are all factors in gaining health and happiness.

"With little thought and study every home can be supplied with good air, but it requires diligent application and earnest study on the part of every mother to give to her family a food ration, that will supply the growth of the child and the waste and repair of the adult."—Mrs. H. N. Dunlap.

The tendency is to economize—not in clothing, fuel, house rent, etc., but in food.

Lack of information about food and nutrition is the cause of waste.

There seems to be widespread prejudice against economy in diet. The remedy will come only with the spread of knowledge of the subject.

We are inclined to a one-sided diet. Either too much of the heat-producing foods, and not enough of the bone and muscle and brain foods are used, or the other extreme.

"First of all study the classification of foods, and select your daily bills of fare with the idea of feeding the body as well as gratifying the palate."

CLASSIFICATION OF FOODS.

Carbonaceous or heat or force-giving foods. Starches: Potato, macaroni, rice, sago, and white bread. Sugars: All sweets. Fats: Fat of meat, oils, cream, butter, and nuts.

Nitrogenous, or flesh-forming or muscle-making foods: Beef, mutton, poultry, eggs, milk, cheese, old and ripe peas, beans and lentils.

Inorganic food: Water and salt.

Fruits give us many of the acids necessary, and vegetables the minerals.

Our dietitians say, to-day, for the growing child, one fifth as much; to the adult, one fourth as much nitrogenous food as the carbonaceous gives about the proper food rations.

Nitrogenous foods, or proteids, then, are flesh foods, hydrocarbons or fats are heat foods, and the carbohydrates or sugar, starch, etc., are work foods.

Most of our flesh formers we get from the animal kingdom,— though the elements are contained in both. Of the commoner foods, codfish contains the largest amount, cheese, peas, beans, and lentils next, all seeds and vegetable tissues and lean beef stands third. Fats are derived from both the animal and vegetable kingdoms. Work foods we get chiefly from vegetables.

Americans work faster than Europeans, and the climate is more exacting, so our workmen need more protein to supply the waste.

The most healthful food is that which is best adapted to the wants of the user. We must choose the foods that have in them the elements we need and in the most digestible form.

To secure the most appetizing result is one province of cooking. Flavor, or savoriness is an aid to digestion, but this means something very different from our American theory of black pepper over everything.

The use of sweet herbs is regarded as a foreign fashion, and the American who says, "Give me good plain cooking," has his portion of dyspepsia in large part because of the lack of intelligent use of these things—pleasure-giving things. The plainest simplest food, by their use, is made enjoyable.

Many labor under the the false impression that the costly food materials are somehow essential and economical. The maxim that "the best is the cheapest," does not apply to food. The "best" food, in the sense of that which is the finest in appearance and flavor, and is sold at the highest price, is rarely the most economical for people in good health. The food that is best fitted to the real wants of the user, may be of the very kind which supplies the most nutriment at the lowest cost.

Saddlerock oysters at fifty cents a quart, contain no more nutriment than a quart of milk at five. Salmon has no higher food value than mackerel. The plain substantial food materials, like the cheaper meats, and fish, milk, flour, corn-meal, oatmeal, beans and potatoes, are as digestible and nutritious, and as well fitted for the nourishment of people in good health as any of the costliest materials the markets afford.

The oatmeal and herring of the Scotchman are inexpensive, but give physical and mental vigor. Similarly the famous New England dishes of codfish and potatoes, pork and beans, and bread and milk.

Potatoes form a great deal of fuel material in the form of starch, but lack protein. The nutritious material of codfish contains little else. Add a small quantity of fat in the form of butter, and you have a well-balanced and nutritious food.

Beans are rich in protein, pork supplies the fat, so we have another inexpensive dish, chemically and rationally gratifying to the palate and highly nutritious.

If one feels an unsatisfied craving after having eaten a reasonable amount, it is because the proper proportion of the food principles have not been present.

Scientific cooking does not preclude variety and seasoning. By a little knowledge of which foods contain certain properties, we can combine those which will give the best results.

Pork and beans are sensible, but not beef and beans. Green peas and beans go with almost any other food as their principle constituent is water.

We must be careful not to use too much sugar, or foods whose starch will be converted into sugar, or the result will be indigestion or sour stomach. A full grown healthy adult should not consume more than two pounds of sugar a month. He should consume half a pound of butter a week, and the same of olive-oil. The green succulent vegetables, and fruits, supply the salts to our blood.

Pure sugar in the form of chocolate creams and lemon-dops is furnished to our soldiers, but their diet differs from ours so materially that they need this where we do not. The starches in our daily food furnish so much sugar, that too many sweetmeats are injurious.

Many favor a vegetable diet, but a purely vegetable diet is not economical, as either the best and most expensive cereals and vegetables must be used, or the quantity taken must be so large that the digestive tract is disturbed. Some canned vegetables contain very little nutriment. "In trying one hundred pounds of canned string beans it was found that the consumer purchased ninety-five and eighty-three one hundredths parts of water, which in some instances is paid for at the rate of five dollars per pound for the actual dry material." One vegetable beside potatoes is enough to serve at dinner, and is as much as the system requires. Rice should be used with an animal food, not with potatoes.

The fruits that furnish the most nourishment are the banana, fig, prune, and grape. The best fruits to offset constipation are, fresh apples, figs, prunes, peaches, and berries.

Dates, figs, bananas or prunes with almost any cereal makes a good breakfast. With the dry foods, as malta vita or force, berries are very nice.

Some foods which go well together are, pork and beans; beef and potatoes; mutton and rice—chicken and rice; duck, macaroni and potatoes; beef, potatoes, (never fried), cabbage; mutton, rice, spinach or kale; duck, potatoes, turnips, macaroni; chicken, rice, celery, leeks; fish, potatoes, parsnips, cucumbers. Roast pork and potatoes supply four times as much carbon as is needed.

Soups of all kinds are usually enjoyed, and help to supply the necessary amount of liquid required by the system. The clear soups and vegetable soups are good, and the cream soups if properly prepared are delicious and nutritious. These can be prepared from corn, and peas, green or canned, tomatoes, fresh or canned, salsify, celery, squash, onions, and turnips.

Salads add a great deal to the enjoyment of the meal, and may be prepared very simple, with olive-oil, pepper, salt, and vinegar, or with a mayonnaise dressing. A cooked dressing, similar to the mayonnaise, in which butter is substituted for olive-oil, is acceptable.

For those who like salads there is much material to choose from. Celery and cabbage, cabbage orange and nuts, or apples, cabbage and nuts; lettuce, watercress, ripe tomatoes and cucumbers.

The General Superintendent announced auditing committee, R. O. Self, Nebraska; Hubert Case, Oklahoma; and S. W. Tomlinson, Canada.

Financial report of the General Superintendent showed receipts $329.25, and expenses $376.71. Financial statement, J. A. Gunsolley, First Assistant Superintendent receipts, $69.34, and expenses $66.64; balance, $2.70.

Financial statement A. Carmichael, Second Assistant Superintendent's receipts and expenditures $25. These three reports were referred to auditing committee, who reported them correct.

Editor of the Gospel Quarterly made the following report:

REPORT OF THE EDITOR OF "GOSPEL QUARTERLIES."

To the General Sunday-school Association in Convention Assembled: As I seat myself to write my annual report I am reminded of the valuable assistance rendered me in my work this year by the use of the typewriter furnished me by the kindness of the Association. I wish to express my appreciation of the machine and desk and can well do so after having used them a year and having realized how they lighten labor that at best is not easy.

I have to report to you that the Quarterly lessons are prepared up to October and are now in the hands of the printers, the revising committee having kindly consented to do the extra amount of work that enabled the office to receive the copy three months ahead of the time when those lessons will be entered upon by the schools. In this respect we are in a little better condition than we have ever been before.

I have further to report to you that I see in the New Testament material for one year more, out of which to arrange lessons. We must then consider, if we do not now consider it, what text to use as the basis for the lessons for ensuing years.

Heretofore it has always been left with the editor to decide this question when it has arisen, but at this juncture, it would seem better that the Association should express its will in this matter.

In one year from now we will find ourselves at the close of the New Testament, and the question will at once arise in the mind of each one who thinks on the matter, "Shall we go forward and follow the course of history as it naturally leads us, inquiring into the apostasy of the Christian church, the work of the reformers, and the restoration of the gospel, or shall we turn back and review the ground we have already gone over?"

Without wishing to discuss the question here, I state my opinion that, if the new material referred to is taken up by any of our classes, it should be by advanced senior classes, and that the primary, intermediate, and first senior classes should continue to study Bible text.

It is, perhaps, apparent that this would necessitate the publication of an advanced senior quarterly. Should this in time be accomplished, our advanced intermediate work be further developed, and first primary lessons be added to what we now have, we shall then have six grades of work to meet the needs of our Sunday-school.

These six grades of lessons will then be in quarterly form, easily accessible when wisdom points out the necessity of change or opportunity for improvement.

I submit this question to you at this time in order that we may not be compelled to give it hurried examination and action at the close of another year, and because we are now considering a question closely allied to it, that of graded text-books.

I may be permitted to add that, should we decide to work toward the publication of six grades of lessons in the Quarterlies, prudence may dictate that the change be accomplished gradually and not so abruptly as to entail arduous toil.

I desire at this time to state that for the past eleven years I have furnished my own supplies of paper, books, etc., but, as typewriter supplies are now added to the expenses, I ask the Association to furnish paper and typewriter supplies, the expense of which is not legitimately mine. The books I may need from time to time I am willing to purchase.

Respectfully submitted,

CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

REVISING COMMITTEE.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 3, 1903.

To the General Sunday-school Convention: We, your committee appointed a year ago to revise the Quarterly lessons, beg leave to report that we have performed the duty assigned us to the best of our ability. Our task was made a pleasure by reason of the small amount of correction needed, and even that little was mostly a matter of wording only. The lessons as they came into our hands gave evidence of painstaking care in their preparation, and carried with them a spiritual and devotional atmosphere. We pray that the inspiration of the Holy Spirit may attend the study of them, and that an increased degree of light to the youth of the church, upon the gospel economy, may be the result of it.

Your brethren and fellow laborers in the gospel work,

JOHN SMITH,
DUNCAN CAMPBELL,
Of the Committee.

REPORT OF "STUDY HOUR" COMMITTEE.

To the General Sunday-school Association in Convention Assembled: We, your committee, appointed at the last convention to prepare to edit the manuscript for the Study Hour, a help for primary teachers, beg leave to report as follows:

Soon after our appointment by the convention, we received word from the executive officers not to proceed with the work until further notice from them. We met with them in consultation, and afterwards waited many days for notice to proceed, which notice did not come until we asked expressly for their final decision in the matter.

We then, in limited time, and handicapped by Sr. Resseguie's illness, prepared the manuscript for the July, August, and September quarter, the work being done while Sr. Resseguie was confined to her bed. Nevertheless we feel that we were greatly blessed by divine aid and assistance. Often the way would seem to close up, hedged about by insurmountable difficulties, when the blessed light would burst upon us, clearing away the obstacles and difficulties. For these experiences we are grateful, and it was indeed a sacrifice to relinquish the work, which, to both was at once such pleasure and a source of much inspiration and development. But it became necessary to resign, Sr. Resseguie because of nervous prostration, and Sr. Anderson because of her health at the time. These resignations were handed to the executive officers, and it is because their published notices in Herald and Study Hour do not explain the necessity for our resignation, that we feel this explanation at this time and in this report to be due to us as well as the convention which intrusted us with the work. We do not wish it to appear that we inconsiderately or lightly threw aside or gave up this responsible work, which we have, on the contrary, felt honored in having had placed in our care and which was only relinquished with much reluctance. For those days of labor in the cause of "these little ones" were days of rare and peculiar experiences which are valuable to us both.

But the need of some such work is as great now as it ever was. The teachers of the very little ones need some provision of lesson and material. . . . Let us recognize the need and be prompt to supply it to the best of our ability and understanding.

ZENITH, Illinois, May 21.

Editors Herald: Since arriving in my field of labor, April 24, I have preached twenty-one times and officiated in other duties. I am well pleased with my field of labor so far.

Bro. Slover, missionary in charge, and Elder Sawley, are also in the field and at work. We hope our effort this year will be crowned with success. My mission address is Zenith, Illinois.

MONTE VISTA, Colorado, May 25.

Editors Herald: Having been called by telegram from Pueblo to this place to administer to Sr. Kennedy's boy Clyde I succeeded in getting the Christian church building to preach in. Held services for two weeks, baptized three, and left others almost persuaded who say they will be with us before long. I will return to Pueblo to-night to take charge of the tent work for the summer.

Clyde has improved some but is still in poor health.

We had a good prayer-meeting yesterday. I shall ever remember the kindness of Saints and friends extended to me while I was with them.

Your brother,

J. F. CURTIS.

FANSHAWE, Indian Territory, May 25.

Editors Herald: We are just through with a series of sermons by Elder E. A. Erwin, of Texas. Sinners were taught the great will of God, and the few Saints greatly edified. One and all speak in the highest praise of Bro. Erwin.

The gospel in its fullness has just been presented to us within the last few years, by Brn. Simmons, Harder, Anderson, and Erwin and they have been met by much opposition. Ere long we expect to see a branch at this place which will be self-supporting.

It has been but a short time since I was permitted to hear the truth; but I thank God I have heard the word of God, which has saved me from infidelity. I thank God for the great work accomplished by the latter-day prophet, Joseph Smith.

If an elder comes near us we would be glad to have him stop and preach. My family consists of my companion, who is a Saint, and three boys, all grown into full manhood, and are strong believers and ere long will all be in the church for which I am so glad. Pray for us. J. H. LEWIS.

INDIA, Tennessee, May 21.

Editors Herald: I have been quite busy since conference answering calls for preaching. I stopped at Holden and Knobnoster, Missouri, on my way from conference, looking for a location, for my family. I was well pleased with Knobnoster. It is a good location, and property is much cheaper than at Holden. Think I will locate there this fall or next spring.

The work is progressing in Kentucky and Tennessee but we are sadly in need of more missionaries. We had hoped that the conference would give us at least two more elders for this field. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. There are scarcely enough men to hold the ground that has already been gained. But by the help of God we will do the best we can. The district has a nice tent thirty-five by forty-five feet that was purchased last fall. There has been several calls for the tent already, but unless Bro. Roberts helps us out in the district we will not be able to run the tent to much advantage. On the 28th of April I was called to go to Dyersburg fifty miles southwest of Fulton to baptize a brother. Bro. Cook accompanied me, and while there secured the use of the large union church at Finley six miles west of Dyersburg. No Latter Day Saint elders had ever been there. We began our meetings on Thursday night. Had good crowds, which increased each night; but Bro. Cook had to return home to preach a funeral at Highhill on Sunday, so I stayed and preached the three following evenings.

On Saturday night a Baptist preacher attended. I spoke on the apostasy of the church, with good liberty, and as usual extended liberty for queries, when the Baptist brother arose and began asking questions. I realized the Savior's language when he said, "it should be given us in that hour what we should say." The first question was, "What difference does it make if we do believe in and worship a God without body, parts, or passions?" Then other questions followed, the last one being, "Sir, do you take the position that the gospel ceased to be preached for twelve hundred sixty years?" I answered in the affirmative, stating that it was preached in word only after the apostasy, and since then it had been restored in its ancient form and was now being preached "not in word only but in power and in the Holy Ghost and much assurance." He accused me of being a "Mormon," but refused to prove his assertions. I asked him if he had ever investigated our position or read our history, and he said he had not. When I quoted, "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him." The encounter made me friends. I believe much good will be done there if the work is followed up.

When I returned to Fulton I found that W. R. Smith had just arrived. He was on his way to Murray to join C. L. Snow, on their way to Eastern Tennessee, where they are to labor this year. We held forth at my place for a few days with increasing interest, then having a call to go to Brandon to baptize, I carried Bro. Smith along. We arrived at Murray the 12th to find that Bro. Snow had gone to South Pittsburg, Tennessee. Bro. Smith decided not to start until he heard from Bro. Snow, so he went with me to Brandon, where we held forth until the 18th. The lady who was to be baptized decided to put it off a while, as her people objected and some of them made some very great threats. We came to this place to-day. Will hold forth here till over Sunday. Bro. Smith will either start south to-morrow or Monday. Ever praying for the advancement of the kingdom,

Yours in the conflict,

J. R. McCLAIN.

St. JOSEPH, Missouri, May 28.

Editors Herald: I hand you herewith clipping from the Daily News, of Monday, the 25th, noting the visit of Bro. Joseph to our city. The papers are disposed to treat us very fairly, announcing our Sunday services and otherwise giving us favorable mention from time to time.

With reference to the church work in this city, I am much encouraged over the outlook. Many good Saints are making their influence for good felt by those around them, and commanding their confidence and respect, which is as it should be. We have four places where we have regular Sunday preaching appointments, four Sunday-schools, three Religio-Literary Societies, three weekly prayer-meetings, one Sunday-school teachers' meeting, and one choir practice. You will see by this that the missionary has no lack of employment.

Four elders from Utah are holding forth on the streets and have attended services at the church a few times. Our energetic Bro. C. E. Guinand and some others have been holding them to the issues, notwithstanding they have done the usual amount of squirming and twisting.

We are always glad to see any of the Saints when in the city, and should any of the elders chance to be passing we can usually arrange to give them a hearing and are very glad to do so, if they will notify me a little in advance. My address is 510 North Twelfth Street.

In bonds,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

COLUMBIA, Missouri, May 22.

Editors Herald: I came here on the 18th instant from Boonville, where I have been trying to labor in the office of district president, looking after the scattered sheep who have not the privileges of branch service. There are at that place six noble souls who are sacrificing for the cause we all love so well, and are living consistent lives. Our object in coming here is the same that took me to Boonville. However, there is only half as many Saints here as at the former place,—Bro. Alfred Evans and wife, and Sr. Alice Sipple, the latter resides in St. Louis, but is here taking a three-year course in the University Hospital to be a trained nurse. From what we hear she is doing well and is highly spoken of. Bro. Evans and wife are devoted, earnest members, desirous of letting their light shine, and of getting others acquainted with the latter-day work.

This place seems to be the "Athens" of Missouri. They have the State University here, the Christian and Baptist colleges for females, and a high school; and, as if that were not enough, we witnessed to-day the laying of the corner stone of the Columbia Normal Academy, and heard Colonel Switzler (of fame as a Missouri historian) deliver an address upon the topic of "Doing things that become historic acts." His talk, while short, was good, and finished with an appeal to the audience to always assist in educational work. We think if it was convenient this would be a good place for about a month or six weeks solid tent work. There are so many visiting students, and transient residents, that if they could be induced to hear it would widely advertise our work. We hope to see the day when the gospel will be put on a solid basis here; for at present we are only preaching it to a few in a private house. I expect to go from here to Huntsville, where a few families have been sacrificing to erect a church about three miles north of the town. An interest was worked up there two years ago by Brn. Walter W. Smith and Earl Corthell.

We started this year with the intention of doing a good year's work, but thus far have met with some disadvantages in a physical way, also some coming from the adversary of our soul. We hope, however, to surmount every obstacle that may be in our pathway, and press on toward the prize, laboring for the good of God's people and his work. May the peace and blessings of our Savior abide with us all, is the prayer of your brother and coworker in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

JOSEPH A. TANNER.

STANBERRY, Missouri, May 28.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. C. Vaughn and myself came to this place a week ago with tent. Have met with but little interest, if any. Last year an Evangelist came here with a big tent and the people "flocked" out by the hundreds, and with good music and funny stories the preacher converted the good people to pay him nine hundred dollars, so I am told. Bro. Vaughn and I have made ever reasonable effort that could be made to get the people out, but have failed. The gospel is no drawing card in this town. I have thought of what the Savior said, viz., "Shake off the dust of your feet against that place," but it would be hard to find the dust the last week, so much rain. We expect to go next week to Darlington and from there to Albany. Ever thankful for the gospel,

Your brother in Christ,

D. C. WHITE.

LOS ANGELES, California, May 18.

Editors Herald: I have been sick ever since I left General Conference, a recurrence of a nerve and stomach trouble of three years ago. Am slightly improved the past few days. One meal a day seems to be helping the difficulty. Was at San Bernardino over last Sunday. Bro. J. C. Clapp was also present, he having come on to the coast from Arizona. I spoke in the morning, he in the evening. Bro. Earle and wife are expected this week.

The vanguard of the Presbyterian Assembly is here. The Assembly proper opens Thursday morning. I attended one of the preliminary sessions last evening and listened to two able discourses from Reverend Doctor Robert F. Coyle, of Denver, Colorado, he being considered the most eloquent man in the Assembly, and prospective moderator for the coming year, and Doctor J. Wilbur Chapman, of New York. The addresses were of that character they could have been accepted in any church, even our own, so far as the general thought was concerned. They sounded the general feeling of the body, however, and, as Mr. Chapman indicated, the Presbyterian Church is on the eve of a crisis such as they never have passed through, and that the next six months will determine either the eventual perpetuity or final dissolution of the Presbyterian body. I gathered that there is every reason to believe that the various Presbyterian branches will be practically united before the end of the year, and it is very evident the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and some others are to confederate along general missionary lines, denominationalism continuing in name only.

The burden of these two addresses was an appeal to eschew formality and ostentation; to return to primitive Christianity and gospel methods. Rich churches, cushioned pews, fine choirs, and eloquent preachers were not essential to Christian expansion, but humble disciples, fervent self-sacrificing ministers, preaching and living the Galilean gospel, delivering the message on soap boxes, on the street corners, in the byways, were the only permanent instruments of Christian expansion and imperatively necessary at the present time. Admission was made that the church was not reaching the masses, and the church was to blame. Doctor Chapman confessed that in his New York church a poor man could not attend, and asserted that this was the case in most places and showed up the inconsistency of such a condition. These men are learning that oblivion stares them in the face unless they come back to primitive methods. Will they do it? Let us wait and see.

The evening's lesson was taken from Acts first chapter, and special stress was placed upon the necessity of a recurrence of the experiences of Pentecost.

It is evident that a strong fight is to be made against the permanent seating of Reed Smoot from Utah. Strong anti-Mormon resolutions will obtain. I shall endeavor to furnish every delegate to the Assembly with some matter dealing on our attitude on polygamy.

If I am able will attend a number of the sessions and report any special legislation.

Expect to get into my mission some time during the summer, if health will permit.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

2802 South Grand Avenue.

WATERVALLEY, Kentucky, May.

Editors Herald: I have been feeling very well in regard to the work lately, and I can more fully realize the grandeur that there is in it. Dear Saints, I wish I could find words to express my feelings and thankfulness to God for what I have in this work. I thank him so much that he has permitted me to receive the light of this gospel. I have the pleasure very often of conversing with my neighbors and friends in regard to the doctrine of Christ, which strengthens me very much.

Dear Saints, it seems to me that some of us complain of persecution too much. I do not think we ought to care much for that, for Christ said what need we care if the whole world hate us, it first hated him. As for myself, I do not want to be popular, for the scripture says, "The friendship of this world, is enmity with God." I do not believe any true Latter Day Saint will seek for popularity.

Just about the time I made up my mind this was the true church of God I studied and bothered a great deal about my folks, and certain friends whom I thought would scorn me and be ashamed of me; but after I embraced the work and as I obtained the Spirit of God, that wore off, and I would think of the consoling and comforting passage where Christ says if we are not willing to forsake father, mother, sister, and brother, we are not worthy of him. All of my people are against me, and none of them hardly ever visit me; my father more especially. It is just a shame how he tried to influence me to turn from this work, but not a word could he say that would weigh anything at all with me. It makes me so sad at heart to think of them being ignorant of this restored gospel, but I am thankful above measure to think I have received light.

I ask the question why is it that some of you will still hold on to this unnecessary pride and style of the day? You all know that it is against the teachings of the scriptures, and then why is it so hard to give it up? I had quite a struggle on this line when I first came into the church, but thank God, I believe that is one of the faults I am now clear of. We are required to dress in modest apparel as becometh women, professing godliness. How can we feel meek and humble as would be pleasing to the Lord and use so much style and pride of the day? Of course, the principles of the doctrine of Christ are more essential to the salvation of our souls than the leaving off of pride, yet we also know that the Book of Mormon says that we must be stripped of pride before we are prepared to meet God, and we seem to have such an aversion to the sectarian practice of religion; so let us have an aversion to this style which we all know is the work of the evil one. We all know that it would set a good example to the world if we would all combine and dress in modesty. It seems to me that the Saints are seeking popularity just that much or they would not use it. Do you suppose that it is pleasing to the meek and lowly Christ for us to walk stiff-necked and seem haughty. Let us truly live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.

I hear some of the Saints condemning others for keeping the Utah elders. I had a sister ask me the other day what I thought about letting them stay around my home a day or two. I told her I would not feel it our duty to keep them more than one night. If they were to come along and ask to stay over night I would think it wrong to refuse, but next morning they must leave, and also while here not worry us in trying to prove that Joseph Smith taught polygamy. She disagreed with me and said she did not intend to allow one to stay one night at her home. She thought she was justified by the scripture: "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed." At the time we were talking I did not know just what to do with that, but since I have thought about it I do not think we can apply that to those Utah elders at all, unless we apply it to the sectarian world in general, because there are none but us who have, as we understand, the true gospel, and if we are not to receive the Utah elders we must also refuse Methodist and all other denominations. Now this is my idea. Will some one please explain that passage? I would like to have some light on what it really means.

I will close asking the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my companion and children, and myself. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am strong in the faith.

BOBBIE WILLIAMS.

DEER LODGE, Montana, May 22.

Editors Herald: I started on my mission from Independence, April 15, arriving at my destination, Bozeman, Montana, April 17. This is my first trip to the West; having heard and read a great deal about the wonderful things in the West, and being one among the curious, I would naturally be looking for something great to come in sight, as I was hurled along, that would meet my expectations. Boarding the train late in the afternoon and running over territory I had been over before, there was nothing out of the ordinary to excite my admiration. After an almost sleepless night, the light of another day found us in the sand hills of Nebraska. Sand hills, did I say? Yes, actually there is so much sand, in that country, it has been piled up; one might think to make room for all of it. Our train ran for miles and miles through that forsaken country. I say forsaken, because I could see but little signs of people living there, and I wondered why those who were there would remain when there is a goodly land not far away called Zion; back in Iowa and Missouri. It did not require any stretch of my imagination to understand why the Lord did not choose that country for his people to gather upon. As I passed through that country I remembered Bro. R. O. Self had been appointed a mission there and I wondered what he had done that the Twelve, would want to punish him, by sending him to that wilderness. I had lately got acquainted with Bro. Self, and really, I liked the man very much. I concluded the Twelve believed the Lord had some people in that region of country he wanted gathered out from among those sand hills.

After a long and wearisome ride across that barren country, it worried me because I was expecting a change of scenery, some of those wonders I had been hearing about, and I could see nothing but sand and sand. Oh my that sand! The Black Hills came in sight, and then I remembered they too were a part of Bro. Self's field of labor and it reminded me of Jeremiah's prophecy that the Lord would send his servants to hunt his people from the hills and the holes in the rocks, as well as the mountains. So I guess it is all right, Bro. Self; it is the Lord's work; the Lord must have had a hand in sending you there. It does not make so much difference where we labor, after all, if the Lord sends us and gives us success in our labors. So may it be.

After leaving the Black Hills some distance in the rear, and looking ahead, I could see the Rocky Mountains with their snow-capped peaks reaching heavenward. Then I began to think who it was that had been sent to the mountains; and Jeremiah's prophecy came forcibly to my mind again; that some of God's people were there. When I had taken a good look at them I concluded rocks had been piled up as well as the sand; and I was going to have a difficult time finding some of them, but that it the Lord's doings.

We arrived in Bozeman without any accident, feeling well and hopeful in a strange land among strangers. We were soon acquainted with the Saints, in this place. I told them I was a missionary to the Rockies and as I arrived so soon after conference they had not heard of my appointment. I told them I was looking for something to do, and was ready for business. They took it for granted I meant what I said, and gave me a trial. I preached over two Sundays; did what I could to interest both Saint and sinner. I was very much pleased with the appearance of the Saints in Bozeman, and the very kind reception given me. Judging from their actions they were not as well pleased with my appearance in every respect, for I had not been there long till I saw the Saints had discovered that the Saints in Bozeman wore better clothes than their missionary. They were not willing it should be so, and they clothed me as they thought I should be. The Bozeman Saints have certainly treated me royally.

My next stop was Willow Creek, where I visited with the Saints and preached in the Methodist church over Sunday; then on to Jefferson Island where I spent nearly all one day, in climbing one of the highest mountains I could find. I did not find any one on the mountain, and do not believe Jeremiah intended for me to go up on top of that rough pile of rocks to hunt for the Lord's people. I stayed off the mountains the remainder of the time I was there. During the day I spent a good share of my time in fishing on the banks of the Jefferson River. Fished for men at night. Baptized one man in the Jefferson on Sunday; a good man of more than fifty years of age. During the seven days stop in this valley I preached eight discourses to good-sized interested audiences.

Next stop was Butte, a mining camp, the largest in the world, fifty thousand inhabitants. My stop there was short. Met Bro. Atkinson, Srs. Sunds, Shrader, Dempster, and her son Charley, who was elected to the Legislature last fall. By invitation and the kindness of Sr. Dempster, I was escorted through the "Columbia Gardens," on Arbor Day, where about seven thousand school children were having an outing. Preached once. Attended prayer service at Seventh-day Adventist church, arranged with them to use their church sometime in the future. Bade the Saints good-by, and moved on to Anaconda, where one of the mining company's big smelters are said to be the largest in the world. The Rothchilds, Rockefeller, W. A. Clark, mining millionaires, are smelting over four hundred thousand tons of ore every twenty-four hours; from that ore is taken seven hundred fifty tons of copper, daily, besides the silver and gold. The gold is supposed to pay all expenses of mining and smelting.

It commenced snowing soon after I arrived, and we had one of the worst snow-storms for years. However, I preached on Sunday, and on Monday I had all my teeth extracted—eleven in all—and left for Deer Lodge, where I am at present sharing the hospitable home of A. Christofferson, waiting for the weather to settle and my gums to get well. Will try to speak for them Sunday. Snow fell to the depth of forty-five inches not a great ways from here. How is that for an introduction to a tender-foot? Plenty of bear in the mountains close by; black, cinnamon, grizzly, deer, elk, mountain sheep, mountain lions, wild-cats, etc. If I do not get a shot at some of those fellows when the game law comes right, I will be disappointed; "they will be afraid of me."

In conclusion I will say, wherever I have met the Saints in Montana they have been generous, kind, and good to me, and our association thus far has been the most congenial. If there are Saints in Montana who know of places for preaching, and will assist an elder by giving him a bed and a morsel to eat, while he preaches to the people, write me at Bozeman, care of Gomer T. Reese, and we will do the best we can for you.

In the field, J. D. STEAD.

EVERETT, Washington, May 8.

Dear Saints: I do not enjoy the blessings of the gospel like I used to do. Standing alone I have become weak. My faith and hope are as strong, but in a way I have backslidden until I can hardly pray. I feel so unworthy to be called a Saint. I have never met a single person of our belief since I have been in the State, and my husband is not a Christian, so you see I am indeed alone. I am a poor writer and can not express myself, but hope the dear Saints will remember me in their prayers that I may become strong in the faith again.

If you have any printed matter to distribute among the people I would be glad to hand it around here. I have never met any one here that ever knew there was such a church as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. If they have ever heard of the church they say it is the same as the Utah Mormons, so I fear there would be a great deal of prejudice; but perhaps some would read and be convinced. Oh, if there could only be a branch established here I feel that it would be such a blessing to the people. May God grant that the word may be heard here, is the prayer of an unworthy servant.

OLIVE TOLER.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, May 13.

Editors Herald: We have now moved over the border and this is truly a lovely country, and financial prospects look bright. We have an intelligent, whole-hearted people here mostly, and as we attend their services our hearts are filled with pity that such an honest-hearted people has not yet been privileged to hear the gospel in its fullness, though my earnest prayer is that that time is in the near future. We think this a good place for an opening, as there are schoolhouses now available and the country is sufficiently settled to warrant good attendance. There are several Saints within twenty-five miles of us that we know of. I have met with Sr. Spurrier. She says there are five families of Saints in her vicinity, but scattered some ten miles, so it is difficult for them to organize a Sunday-school.

We hoped to have homesteaded there, but fate decreed otherwise. It is a great sacrifice for us to be deprived of the association and privilege of worshiping with those dear ones of the one faith. If any of the Saints know of services to be held in the neighborhood of Sr. Edith Spurrier, please let us know. Any elder coming near us will find a welcome at our house, and we believe much good could be done if our people could be privileged to deliver a few sermons. Being a Latter Day Saint myself I endeavor to explain the gospel of Jesus as best I can to all inquiring, and have given out some tracts, and already some seem interested. I do trust many may yet be called to accept the gospel in its purity.

We feel much encouraged by the favorable reports of conference. Surely we all as Latter Day Saints have an incentive to obey our Lord's great and good command "onward and upward."

Being associated for three years with Lamoni Stake Saints, we now feel lonely and miss the help and advantages of improvement in spiritual life that we are so greatly in need of. Although partially isolated we feel God is with us, and if God is for us who can be against us? If any Saints are within reach of us we will welcome a call from you as we apprehend more good might be done if Saints knew of each others whereabouts. We love this latter-day cause and think a Sunday-school would be of much good if it were possible to organize one.

We hear that seven thousand people have come to Canada from the United States between the first of March and the first of May and they are still coming. The immigration is truly wonderful. Many foreigners have come also. Any one who cares to make our acquaintance with regard to gospel work or otherwise will find us by coming five miles due west of Weyburn and then four miles due south. As this country is filling up so very fast we would advise any contemplating locating here to come at their earliest possible convenience. There is a good opening for a good doctor and also for a dentist in Weyburn.

Saints, pray for us that we may be faithful to the truth until death.

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 24.

Editors Herald: Since coming to Independence my family and I have had what is known as the measles. It is difficult to be afflicted. We came here the 24th day of April, 1903. A few days after arriving my companion took down with measles and pneumonia and is very sick with erysipelas. It has been quite a trying time with all of us since coming to Zion; but let the Lord's will, not ours, be done. The Lord will have a tried people, so we as Saints of the Most High should not get discouraged over nothing.

We have received great relief, but are not entirely blessed with perfect health. If we could always be blessed with perfect health we would never know what sickness was, but we can not always have everything in this world as we would like to have it. O, I do pray God that I may be able to bear all that is sent upon me. May God hear our prayers and give us health. I do feel so thankful to the good Saints of Independence for the kindness which they have shown toward us while we have been here. May God bless each one of them for their kindness toward us. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

W. R. RUSH.

NEWCASTLE, N. S. W., Australia, April 21.

Editors Herald: The gospel is slowly winning its way in this country. The work moves about the same here as elsewhere. Any one who has had general experience in America can easily judge as to how the cause advances here. With the exception of Independence, Lamoni, and some other leading places progress is not any better nor faster, on the average, there than here.

The reunion of the New South Wales District has just closed. It was a decided success. It included both the Sunday-school and Religio conventions. Both associations were well represented and the meetings were conducted with an interest and zeal worthy of such noble institutions.

The dear old HERALD is appreciated now as never before if possible. The principle, "Distance lends enchantment to the view," may be verified in more ways than one, "As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."—Proverbs 25: 25. May blessings be upon the heads of whoever they were that invented the art of printing and the modern mail system.

In gospel bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

New York Juvenile Asylum Graduates.

The management of the New York Juvenile Asylum desires to learn the present addresses of as many as possible of the graduates of this institution, both young and old. If this should come under the notice of any of them, or of their guardians, they will be much interested to learn of a new movement which the Asylum has under way, the particulars of which will be forwarded on receipt of a written request, mailed to the superintendent, Mr. Charles D. Hilles, at Amsterdam Avenue and One Hundred Seventy-sixth Street, New York City.

Miscellaneous Department.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission, Greeting: We are associated together again in another year's labor, and I trust the time may be passed as agreeably and pleasantly as was the last conference year, yet with more gratifying results. The demands are great and it will require diligence and zealous effort to meet them. We should occupy as opportunity offers. This is the only sure way of success, as we can not always control circumstances, more than others, if we would. We can trust in the Lord and persevere.

The work of the recent General Conference was conducted in wisdom, peace, and unity, gratifying to all in attendance. This is encouraging as well as being a good example. The mission field has assumed such a wide range and the demands are so great, that it was difficult to secure the proper working force for any one field, but the demands of each were provided for as best that could be done with the force at hand. Like those in other fields, we will have to get along and do the best work we can with the force assigned us, and wait patiently for the "Lord of the harvest" to send more laborers into the harvest. Hence it is urged that local officers of branches and districts, help the cause as best they can, and the membership as well. There is room and work for all. It is valiant soldiers who merit rewards.

In order to divide up responsibility and the better concentrate and direct our efforts, the following appointments are made to the "fields of labor" herein mentioned. Gomer Reese to Montana, S. D. Condit to Idaho and Western Wyoming, and A. M. Chase to the Utah District. These to take direct charge and oversight of the mission work in the "fields" mentioned. Those laboring in connection with the ones thus named will please report to them their labors, while they will be expected to report to the one in charge of the mission according to rule.

For the present W. S. Pender and J. E. Vanderwood will labor in Idaho; D. L. Allen and J. D. Stead in Montana; A. J. Layland and J. H. Condit in Idaho and West Wyoming. H. N. Hansen and Swen Swenson will labor in the Utah District and south, and will report to the missionary in charge direct when out of the fields of labor mentioned above.

Bro. Stead is now at work as assigned. Bro. Allen will follow soon. Others will arrive later, including the missionary in charge.

I hope to join the laborers as early as possible. May God be with each and all, make us equal to our respective tasks and crown our efforts with success. My mission address is Box 181, Salt Lake City, Utah. Home address, Lamoni, Iowa.

Fraternally, in the faith,
WM. H. KELLEY, Missionary in Charge.

Annual.

That is, once a year we have Graceland College commencement exercises, and they mark an important period in the history of the institution. We as a church have reason at the present juncture to feel proud of the work done in Graceland, and if you will carefully note the forthcoming catalogue and compare it with those of past years, it will be no hard task to discover the positive, healthy advancement made.

We have had a fine class of students, that have done excellent work, and this speaks well for the ability and faithfulness of the faculty.

And now for future work that demands our immediate attention.

The debt against Graceland has been considerably reduced, nevertheless there is a growing deficit in the running expenses, and this should be stopped by a hearty, liberal, united, and speedy contribution of the Saints and friends of the institution.

At once we need help to get out the annual catalogue for 1903-4, to pay the printer as soon as the work is done, and pay for postage stamps. No! not even for the benefit of our loved Graceland would dear old Uncle Sam change, or depart from his business rule of "cash or no trade." So we need immediate aid to publish and send out the catalogue, and there are other necessary expenses that have to be met, such as our janitor, the care, and improvement on the building and grounds incident to wear and tare of use, so that when the wheel of time rolls round we shall be fully and amply prepared to begin the college year of 1903-4.

As servants of the church to superintend this work of Graceland we have no other resource or people to go to for the all-needful, and therefore do not feel under any obligation to apologize for seeking your financial assistance, or of informing you of the condition of the institution. Perhaps some may dislike this frequent parading of our wants; if so, permit me to say that the general church in conference assembled appointed severally the members of the Board of Trustees, but made no special or specific provision for the money to run the institution. In the absence of provision for such money, we consider it as our duty to raise the needed funds, and have employed such methods as seemed best to accomplish our work, which we fully realize can not be accomplished without your earnest and united assistance.

Some have advised and advocated the shutting down of the college, and allowing it to remain closed until the debt be paid. In my humble opinion such a policy or act would be suicidal to the church. I do not favor such surrender or backdown on our college enterprise.

If you do not wish to hear from me upon this topic, flood the mail with your contributions in favor of Graceland, so that I shall neither have time to think nor write upon the subject on account of being kept so busy sending out acknowledgments. Try this plan and see how happy we will all be.

If more convenient for you, hand or send to Bro. Joseph Luff, 1038 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri, who was chosen by Bishop E. L. Kelley and the Board of Trustees to be a special missionary in behalf of Graceland College for the present conference year; or, if you so prefer, send direct to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Box 18, Lamoni, Iowa, the Treasurer of Graceland College. And likewise rest assured that I will faithfully receipt for all moneys sent me.

More anon,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Conference and Reunion Notice.

The Western Oklahoma reunion will be held in Hershey's Grove, one mile east of Guy, Dewey County, July 3 to 12, 1903. Nice grounds, good water, pasture, and fuel. Elder H. O. Smith, president Southwestern Mission, Elder T. A. Hougas, superintendent Sunday-school Association, and other good speakers are expected to be with us. Our district conference will convene at same place at 10 a. m., Thursday, July 9. Every man in the district holding the priesthood is expected to report, either in person or by writing. We hope to have full reports from all branches. All reports and business for the conference may be addressed to the secretary, H. F. Durfey, Seiling, Oklahoma. Saints, come and camp with us and help make this meeting a success. By order of the committee. W. P. Pickering, district president.

Reunion Notices.

To the Saints in the Southeastern Illinois District, Greeting: This is to notify all concerned that our next reunion will convene August 1, and will continue until the 10th. It will be held at Dryfork church, which is five miles west and one mile south of Jeffersonville, Illinois. Bro. I. N. White and other good speakers will be with us. All who desire tents should notify J. F. Simms at least ten days before the meeting begins. His address is Fairfield, Illinois. All those who desire to write me concerning the needs of the work in this field should address me at Zenith, Illinois, and they will be answered promptly.

Yours in the faith,
F. M. SLOVER.

Died.

FAUNCE.—Sr. Sarah L. Faunce died at Nebraska City, Nebraska, March 12, 1903, aged 50 years, 2 months. Deceased was born at Elizabeth, Jo Daviess County, Illinois, January 12, 1853. Married F. Faunce May 2, 1869, and became the mother of eight children, five of whom survive her. She received the "angel's message," and was baptized August 31, 1890, by Elder R. M. Elvin, at Thurman, Iowa, to the truth of which she testified to the end. May comfort be given husband and children. Funeral sermon by Elder Mark H. Forscutt. Burial in Wyuka Cemetery.

ERVIN.—Bro. Jesse Ervin died at Nebraska City, April 3, 1903; born at Waynesfield, Ohio, June 23, 1839. He accepted the gospel and was baptized in December, 1872. His widow, formerly Miss Nancy Pell, and six children survive him. Firm in his convictions respecting the church of his choice, he enjoyed its spiritual manifestation in the gift of tongues. In meeting he said, "Some day I will pass away unexpectedly, and be found dead." He desired that his call might be unattended by a lingering sickness. In the morning, feeling poorly, his wife advised him to lie down. Shortly a letter was taken in to him, and he lay upon the bed a corpse. Funeral sermon on the 5th by Elder Mark H. Forscutt. Burial in Wyuka Cemetery.

TUCKER.—Fred'k L. Tucker born at Chardon, Ohio, on December 25, 1827, and dying at Nebraska City on April 30, 1903, he filled his allotted sphere, and with honor. Married Miss Melinda Fields on February 14, 1856. Fourteen children were given them, twelve of whom and the widow remain to mourn their loss; twenty-three grandchildren also. Baptized by Elder George Shute, May 19, 1873, he remained true to the end. Faithful, but not demonstrative, he wrought silently for God and humanity. Funeral sermon was by Elder M. H. Forscutt, and burial place, Wyuka Cemetery, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

LESTER.—Sr. Minnie M. Lester departed this life January 14, 1903, of heart-failure, at the home of her parents, Bro. Benjamin and Sr. Delariae Bates. She was born at Caseville, March 1, 1884; was baptized at Bay Port, June 10, 1894, by J. J. Cornish; was married to Bert Lester, October 28, 1900. She leaves a husband, a little girl eighteen months old, father, mother, one brother, and many friends to mourn. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was faithful to the end and passed away in peace to rest in paradise until the morn of the first resurrection. Funeral service at Saints' church at Shabbona, Michigan, by F. C. Smith. Interment at Elkland Cemetery near Cass City.

WILLIAMS.—Sr. Maud A. Williams, of Cleveland, Iowa, passed from this earth life to the rest beyond, after a brief illness, at Denver, Colorado, May 8, 1903. She was the daughter of Bro. Robert D. and Sr. Ann Williams. Her remains were brought to the Saints' church at Lucas, Iowa, where services were held. The sermon was preached by Elder John Smith, assisted by Elder John R. Evans, on May 11. The Daughters of Rebecca, of which she was a member, were the pall-bearers, and held their service over the grave. A promising life quickly nipped, she being but 22 years, 8 months, 23 days old. Buried in Cleveland No. 3 Cemetery.

YOUNG.—At Bevier, Missouri, May 9, 1903, Sr. Mary M. Young; was born at Brookfield, Ohio; baptized March 30, 1885, at Bevier, Missouri, by Elder G. T. Griffiths; married to A. G. Young, January 26, 1896, at Peoria, Illinois. She lived a faithful life, and leaves to mourn a husband, two little girls, and two sisters. Funeral services conducted from Saint's Church, by Elder J. A. Tanner.

DAVIES.—April 17, 1903, of diphtheria, Alma Nephi, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. William and Caroline Davies, at Gilfach Goch, South Wales, aged two years, nine months. Funeral in charge of William Lewis.

RICHARDSON.—Bro. Thomas Richardson was born December 4, 1861, at Florence, Nebraska; died May 11, 1903, at Omaha, in his forty-second year, leaving a wife, six little children, an aged mother, two brothers, and two sisters. Funeral at Saints' chapel, Omaha, by Elder Charles Fry.

EATON.—At the home of her brother, Bro. Sylvester Rew, Lamoni, Iowa, May 14, 1903, Sr. Abbie M. Eaton, formerly Hogue, aged 69 years, 4 months, and 8 days. She was born in Rochester, New York. Was baptized near Lamoni in 1884 by Bro. Lewis Gaultier and tried to be faithful under many trials. Her last years were those of suffering. Funeral sermon at Bro. Rew's house by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

SENSER.—Sr. Rosena, at Rosedale, Kansas, April 23, 1903, aged 65 years. She with her husband united with the church in Michigan in 1870, he having passed on before her fourteen years ago. She lived a holy and faithful life and died with full hope of a rest in the paradise of God. Five children are left to mourn. She was beloved by all who knew her, which was demonstrated by many kind acts while she was sick, and at the funeral. Sermon by F. C. Warnky, assisted by A. H. Parsons.

GILLESPIE.—At Kirtland, Ohio, Sunday, May 10, 1903, of spinal meningitis, Deacon John Gillespie, Sr. He was born August 9, 1841, at Worthington, Cumberland County, England; was baptized May 14, 1868, by Elder Edwin Hulmes, at Allegheny, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania; was ordained December 6, 1868, by Elder James Wagner. His wife, long suffering from blindness, and a large family survive to mourn their loss in his departure. It is to his credit here and hereafter that he was a faithful Saint, zealous to perform the duties of his office, and a model deacon.

DECATUR.—At San Francisco, California, May 18, 1903, Sr. Candace A. Decatur (better known as Mrs. F. G. Hoagland), aged 48 years, 1 month. She leaves a husband and two sons to mourn their loss. When a young woman was very zealous as a church worker. She died in the faith, a consistent and zealous Saint hoping for a glorious resurrection. Funeral from her late residence, 945 Sanchez Street, San Francisco, May 20. Sermon by C. A. Parkin.

LA RUE.—Isaac B. La Rue was born April 28, 1832, in Wayne County, Indiana; died at Millersburg, Illinois, May 20, 1903, aged 71 years, 22 days. He moved with his widowed mother and family to Mercer County, Illinois, in 1845. In 1850 he went to Iowa and made his home with his sister. In 1855 he returned to Mercer County, Illinois, and married Melissa J. Adams. Five children were born to them, viz., Mrs. C. A. Hall, Pueblo, Colorado; Mrs. J. W. Houghton and Rachel La Rue, Davenport, Iowa; Mrs. Lydia Porter, Ainsworth, Iowa, and W. E. La Rue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. His first wife died March, 1881, and on November 8, 1883, he married Clara A. Frank. Four children were born to them, two of whom died in infancy; those remaining being Glenn L. and Ira B. He united with the church in 1863. Was ordained an elder the same year, and labored as a local minister. He passed through many trials, but through all he retained a firm faith in the gospel to the end. Services by John S. Patterson. Interment in Millersburg cemetery.

MEGGERS.—Edith Pearl, infant daughter, of Mr. Henry and Sr. Maud Lane Meggers, was born March, 4, 1903; died May 22, 1903; age 2 months and 21 days. Funeral by George H. Shearer, at Latter Day Saints' church, Little Sioux, Iowa, May 23. Text, 2 Samuel 12, latter part of twenty-third verse. "Father, mother, weep not for me," for "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

Much depends upon the mood in which one sits down to write a letter. It is a good rule never to write unless you feel like writing. If it is a blue day with you, you could sit down and order a dozen lead pencils, and the stationer be none the wiser, but beware of writing to a friend in such a mood. If you were talking to him, he would know by your expression, by the tone of your voice, that you were not yourself, and make allowances. But in a letter he sees only the coolness, and not the reason for it. Again, it is not well to write under great excitement. At such times you say more than you mean. If you spoke these things, your friend, seeing your agitation, would understand that what you had said was not your sober judgment. But when it is written in cold black and white, and read by some one a hundred miles away, it has quite a different effect. We have all, I suppose, written letters that we would be glad to recall: they are usually written at such times. Wait for calmer moments: your friends deserve your golden hours.—Benjamin A. Heydriek, in Chautauquan for June.

How a Tuberculosis Patient Lives Out of Doors.

No matter how cold it is, no matter how stormy, feel perfectly safe in staying out, but be sure of two things. First, that you do not get chilled. Put on extra comforts until you are warm enough, and a hot-water bag for the feet is good, although I have never needed one. Secondly, that it does not rain or snow on you. Moisture is not harmful unless one suffers from rheumatism. For that this same cure is used, with the exception of staying out when it is damp. With fifteen inches of snow and the thermometer at eleven degrees I laid out on my porch eight hours a day, and it was glorious.

A Kenwood rug is laced across the bottom, so that one can slip into it as though it were a bag, and no cold air can penetrate. It hooks down the front with openings for the arms, so that a book can be held with ease. This one is literally as "snug as a bug in a rug." Before I get in I put on a heavy coat and mittens and wrap a woolen scarf around my head, and in extreme weather I tuck a steamer rug around me, over my Kenwood. If one doesn't have these rugs, comforts will do, but he should be sure to use enough. At first I felt helpless, as I did not know how to wrap up enough to keep comfortable.

Sometimes the glare of the sun hurts the eyes. Tie the handle of an umbrella to the arm of your chair, and by using little devices for keeping it in place, you will soon learn to tilt it at the right angle.

At 10 o'clock take a walk, beginning with five minutes a day, and increasing to an hour. Do this very gradually, for the one point with lung trouble is never to become fatigued. Go back to your chair until luncheon. After that the chair again. It sounds monotonous, but one soon becomes used to it and can be even happy; in fact, cheerfulness is essential, for nothing can cure you if you constantly meditate on yourself and your sacrifices.—Evelyn Mae Hart, in Review of Reviews for June.

Noted Correspondent and Traveler.

Few newspapers in the United States are able to command the service of as brilliant a corps of correspondents as that of the Chicago Record-Herald. Its choice of a Washington correspondent is indicative of the Record-Herald policy of obtaining the best there is to be had. Walter Wellman, the well-known authority on political subjects and one of the ablest writers of the day, acts in that capacity.

Mr. Wellman was born in Mentor, Ohio, November 3, 1858. At the age of fourteen he began his newspaper experience, establishing at that age a weekly paper in the little town of Sutton, Nebraska. In 1878 he returned to Ohio, and a year later established the Cincinnati Evening Post. In 1884 he became the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Herald, and in 1892 he visited Central America and the West Indies, and located the landing place of Columbus on Watling's (San Salvador) Island, and marked the spot with a huge stone monument. Mr. Wellman's dashes to the north pole are well known. In 1894 he made the first of his two arctic voyages of exploration, reaching the latitude of 81 degrees northeast of Spitzbergen. In 1898 he returned to the North, penetrated to Franz Joseph Land, returning again to this country in 1899. On each trip he met with wonderful success in the discovery of new islands and lands, and brought back with him scientific data and information of great value to the American Geographical Society.

Mr. Wellman has been a voluminous writer for scientific magazines and popular periodicals. On returning from his arctic trips he renewed his connection with the Record-Herald, and is now the Washington correspondent of that paper. His incisive discussion of contemporary affairs has given him a high place in the regard of statesmen and scientists of the day.

A VISIT TO SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

By invitation of Bro. H. O. Smith and the Saints of the Southwestern Texas District the Editor made a visit to that field and attended the conference and reunion held at San Antonio, beginning May 29, 1903.

This journey included a stop at St. Joseph, Missouri, to fill the morning hour at the church, Sunday, May 21, and the attending of the evening service of Children's Day, at Independence.

This was a very agreeable surprise to the desk-tired editor, and not having been heralded was a surprise to the Saints as well, whether agreeable or otherwise. Certainly the officers and teachers who conducted the affair from start to finish are deserving of commendation, for a better and more entertaining entertainment we were never privileged to attend.

Leaving Kansas City, at thirty-five minutes past nine in the evening, May 25, we kept going steadily south via the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railway, for a night and a day, and reached Dallas late in the evening to meet Bro. James Christianson at the station to be conducted to his home, 124 Wood Street. There we met Sr. Christianson and family, brother, and two fine boys, and Brn. H. O. Smith and T. J. Sheppard.

After a night's rest Bro. H. O. and the Editor left for San Antonio, another long day's ride. We arrived at this beautiful gem of a southern city, located at the head waters of the San Antonio River, at half past nine in the evening. Brn. George Gifford and "Dick" Neal met us, and by rapid transit took us through the city to South Flores and Mitchell Streets, the Editor to Bro. Gifford's home, Bro. H. O. to Bro. Polk Neal's to sojourn.

The time was occupied; to what advantage others must state; suffice it to write that the Editor occupied the pulpit temporarily set up in Connor's Grove, from Thursday evening to Monday evening inclusive, with two sermons on Sunday. These services were only fairly attended, though quite well advertised. But for reasons not fully understood, except it may have been the place of meeting was too far from the city's center, and not in a popular locality, few other than our own people were interested.

The conference business was taken in hand by ELDERS JOSEPH SMITH and Richard C. Evans, of the Presidency, expect to be absent in their visit to England until the last of September, or the first part of October. During their absence the matters of church business and correspondence at Lamoni headquarters will be in charge of Counselor Frederick M. Smith, who will represent the Presidency. He will attend to such matters as require the attention of the Presidency so far as it will be practicable to do so. The officers and Saints will please take notice of this arrangement.

June 9, 1903.

Figures given in the Chicago Tribune for May 17 show that Andrew Carnegie has given away nearly one hundred millions of dollars. A large part of that sum was given to various libraries.

Bro. H. O. Smith, at the request of Bro. David Palmer, assistant district president, and by vote of the assembly. The reunion services were in charge of the missionaries, Brn. H. O. Smith and W. S. Macrae. The song service was in charge of Bro. H. O. Smith, who with his "pony organ," assisted by Srs. Gifford and Neal, kept the singers in good form.

The transition from the region where cattle and hogs are staples and "corn is king," to the one where "cotton is king," and cattle and hogs are incidental to his reign, is but a magic step or so taken in two days and a night; but what a change it is.

From the region where the snows of northern winters cool the winds and keep the husbandman busy to house and feed his stock, to the region where, if need be, the semitropic vegetation is sufficient to keep the stock with but little attention and no shelter from storms.

This year the season is backward, unusually so, and the cotton and corn are struggling with the cold and sweeping rains, in both the north of the Indian Territory and south of Texas, but the middle portion has been dry.

What about the people? The people, that is, the Saints, are an excellent people, and kind and hospitable to the stranger in their midst. They have the faith, and delight in hearing the word preached.

Bro. H. O. Smith, W. S. Macrae, E. W. Nunley, and the Editor were the visiting ministry and all were looked after in true Southern hospitality, the best the people had, and that was good.

We found the branch numbered eighty-six, Bro. Polk Neal presiding. Bro. D. Palmer, looking after the district as assistant to Bro. John Harp, who labored in that field the last conference year. Bro. Macrae will succeed Bro. Harp, and we believe will be well received in his work.

We were made welcome at the homes of Brn. Neal, T. J. Jett, Palmer, Sr. Merritt, Bro. Ed McRae. The latter is County License Inspector, but found time to take us to two of the old Spanish Missions, dating back to 1734, or thereabouts, and some of the beautiful environments of the typical Southern city. We ate dinner and supper at his table, and made our evening effort in the face of a "frowning providence" in the shape of a threatening rain-storm, which damped the preacher as well as the congregation, though no one got wet.

We enjoyed the trip and the associations with the Saints, and the appearance of the country. It was our first trip to Texas, and we were agreeably surprised. San Antonio is a city of sixty-two thousand inhabitants. We visited the Alamo, the old building in which Captain Travis with his little band of one hundred and seventy-six withstood the Mexican General Santa Anna and his army of five thousand, for days, and finally perished after killing some sixteen hundred of their assailants, one only escaping to tell the tale of heroism. The State has made rapid strides and will soon stand among the first as she is the largest in the Union.

PRESBYTERIANS DENOUNCE "MORMONISM."

At the meeting of the Presbyterian assembly held at Los Angeles, California, May 29, the following resolutions concerning "Mormonism" were adopted:

"Whereas this hierarchy, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, persists in the active encouragement and practice of the crime of polygamy in disregard of their own pledges and oaths to the contrary; in contempt of the ethnical convictions of the American people and in defiance of the laws and constitutions of the State and the United States; and,

"Whereas this hierarchy recently, January 20, 1903, through the Utah legislature, has had elected to the United States Senate a high ecclesiastic, one of the chief authorities, the Apostle Reed Smoot, in direct violation of its pledges to the Nation to refrain from interference with the affairs of States; and,

"Whereas this apostle, Senator Reed Smoot, is a direct representative of polygamy, born of its system and in cordial sympathy with it as a divine institution, revealed as a law of primary obligation, and made mandatory by the most solemn sanctions: and has encouraged its perpetuation and practice by his personal influence as an apostle; and,

"Whereas in thus doing this the apostle senator aids and abets criminals, menaces the American people, is unfaithful to the laws and constitution of the United States, pays his first allegiance to the first presidency and apostolate to which he belongs, and is a reproach to the honor and dignity of the American Senate; therefore,

"Resolved that this assembly most respectfully but earnestly calls upon the people of the United States to use their utmost endeavor, employing all honorable means to secure the expulsion of Apostle Reed Smoot from the halls of the national senate, and urges the senate itself and each member thereof to exhaust all legal means to this end, and in accordance with the provisions of the federal constitution.

"This assembly also calls upon the people and Congress of the United States in both houses and each member of each house to employ and exhaust all legal means to secure such amendment to the federal constitution as shall define legal marriages as monogamic and make polygamy under every guise and practice a crime against the United States punishable by adequate penalties, including the disenfranchisement and disqualification to vote or to hold office in the United States or in any State or Territory under the jurisdiction of the United States."—Chicago Tribune, May 30.

BOOK OF MORMON IN SCANDINAVIAN.

Attention is called to the fact that under the care and labor of Brn. Peter Anderson and Peter Muceus, the Scandinavian edition of the Book of Mormon is about ready for the market and will soon be on sale. The brethren who may desire copies of this work will do well to subscribe at once. Send to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Prices, $1, $1.25, $1.50, according to style of binding.

It would be well for those who are able, to buy two or more copies for distribution to neighbors.

FOR THE ENGLISH MISSION.

The following appointments have been made for Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, in their visit to the English mission. Unless changed for unavoidable causes, these appointments will be filled in their course. Those interested will please take note of times and places.

London to June 28; Lydney, June 29 and June 30; Cardiff, July 1 to July 3; Llanelly, July 3 to July 6; Aberaman, July 6; Duais, July 7; Nantyglo, July 8 and 9; Birmingham, July 10 to July 12; Stafford, July 13 and 14; Leicester, July 15 and 16; Clay Cross, July 17 to 22; Sheffield, July 23 to 28; Leeds, July 28 to August 3; East Manchester, August 4 to 6; North Manchester, August 7 to 9; Northeastern Manchester, August 10 and 11; Salford, Manchester, August 12 and 13; South Manchester, August 14 to 17; Stockport, August 18 to 20; Warrington, August 20 to 23; Carnarvon, Dublin, and Belfast, August 24 to September 3; Glasgow, September 3 to 10; Hamilton, September 11 to 17.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In writing of President Smith's anticipated visit to England, Bro. W. R. Armstrong writes from Manchester: "We anticipate 'times of refreshing' from the Lord when Bro. Joseph visits this Old World country—this land of Bibles."

Under date of June 3, S. W. L. Scott wrote from Coldwater, Michigan: "Conference convenes here this week. Bro. Asa is here now. I was called to Knox about two weeks ago to baptize Bro. Delbert Prettyman, who had been given up by doctors and institutes as hopelessly down with sugar diabetes. Since his baptism every condition of disease has changed the other way—toward recovery. Letter to-day says: 'He walked up to the city the other day, and feels fine.' It is considered miraculous."

In writing of the flood condition of Armourdale, one of the suburbs of Kansas City, Bro. E. C. Harrington wrote on May 30: "The Saints are very fortunate, as only a few live in Armourdale, the most of them living in and around Armstrong, for which we ought to be very thankful. I believe there must be nearly or over one thousand families driven from their homes."

A brother in Nebraska recently wrote to Bro. Kelley as follows: "After reading and meditating upon 'An Address to the Saints,' dated May 2, 1903, I am convinced of a duty that I have long desired to understand, that of placing our temporal affairs on record, thereby showing by our acts that we are willing to consecrate our all if need be for the work of the Lord, as well as giving our bodies a living sacrifice, which is our reasonable service. It seems to me but reasonable that elders especially should lay all things before the Bishop by inventory; else how can he take an 'account of the elders,' who 'shall pay for that which they receive.' (Doctrine and Covenants 72:3.) Please send me blank invoice sheet and instructions, and may God give us faith that we may be led by his Spirit into the light as fast as we are able to see it."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. R. M. Elvin, secretary of the Quorum of High Priests, has handed us a very neatly printed list of the names and addresses of the members of the quorum. It is the neatest quorum circular we have seen.

Brn. F. A. Russell and E. J. Clarke, of Grinnell, Iowa, have recently appeared in print in the Grinnell papers in defense of the latter-day work. The articles were called out by attacks on the faith made from the Baptist pulpit at Grinnell.

The Gazette, of Wray, Colorado, issue for May 29, in speaking of the memorial address by Bro. J. B. Roush, said: "We do not hesitate in pronouncing it one of the best Memorial Day sermons we ever heard, both in point of spiritual food it contained, and words of eulogy for the departed heroes. The Post was highly pleased with Elder Roush's address."

"Yellowstone National Park" is the title of a neat little folder sent us by the Burlington Railway. It is descriptive of that beautiful reservation, the "play-ground of nature." A copy can be obtained by addressing P. S. Eustis, of the passenger department, at Chicago, Illinois.

C. J. Hunt appeared in the Republic, of Marathon, Iowa, issue for May 29, correcting some false ideas concerning the religious faith of the Latter Day Saints.

The commencement exercises of Graceland College were extended over four days of last week, beginning Monday and closing Thursday morning, when the final graduating exercises were held. Eighteen young people graduated from the various departments of the college. The commencement address was delivered by Honorable Johnson Brigham, State Librarian of Iowa, whose address we are much pleased to present to our readers in this issue. His masterly and scholarly handling of his subject can not but be appreciated by all thoughtful readers. We were glad to have Mr. Brigham with us on the occasion.

Mr. Charles M. Barber, who has been acting as president of Graceland since the resignation of Mr. C. O. Taylor, closed his work in Graceland with the commencement exercises. He expects to spend another year in Chicago University. Mr. Barber did a good work in Graceland, and we wish him success in whatever worthy enterprise he may choose to undertake.

GOD IN LITERATURE.

BY JOHNSON BRIGHAM, STATE LIBRARIAN.

Commencement Address Delivered Before the Students of Graceland College, Lamoni, June 4, 1903.

Mr. Brigham prefaced his address with a few remarks expressive of his keen appreciation of the invitation to deliver the Commencement Address at Graceland College, the invitation coming from a college holding another religious belief than his own. He was gratified to find he held so much in common with his audience, himself being not only a believer in the same God but also a believer in the same Headship of the church, the same upward trend of history and literature, the same philosophy of high thinking and right living. He thanked President Barber for the theme suggested to him, the more heartily because the commencement addresses of the period seem to lay greatest stress upon material success as following "the strenuous life." The theme suggested gave him fine opportunity to emphasize the great fact that success not founded upon the eternally right was failure—and worse than failure, and that they only win who fight with God. He then spoke as follows:

The wisdom of ages is embodied in the saying, "A man is known by the company he keeps." The thought may be broadened out so far as to include the books he reads, and the God—or gods—he worships. We may with historical accuracy extend the thought to a people, or an age. Paraphrasing an old proverb, we may safely say, "Reveal to me the god a people worship and I will take the mental and spiritual measurement of that people." By the multiplicity of side-lights which literature throws upon the life of a people the historian is enabled to get that perspective without which the picture, or series of pictures, he would present is as flat as a Japanese landscape.

The true historians of a people, or an age, are its poets. The true history of Ancient Greece is found in Homer's epics; of India, in the Mahabharata; of the England of the Edwards and the Henrys, (barring chronological inaccuracies,) in Shakespeare's plays; of mediæval religious thought, in Dante's Divine Comedy; of seventeenth century religious thought in Milton's Paradise Lost; of eighteenth century religious thought, in Goethe's Faust.

Would you know the ideals of ancient Greece? Find them in the gods they worshiped. Especially is this true respecting the Iliad, in which we find their gods in action. The astonishingly brilliant childhood of the Greek race as revealed in Homer has been the study of the ages, commanding the profound research of many of our greatest minds.

Brilliant as Homeric civilization was, its theology was strangely childlike—even childish. The Greek of the Homeric period, though in many respects manly—and even godlike—was in soul measurement a child,—full of inconsistencies, vagaries, whims. In his gods, we see himself reflected. His Jove is only qualifiedly omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent; and besides, is vain, arrogant, even rakish, richly deserving the disciplining his ill-treated spouse, Juno, from time to time administered to him. At most, this alleged omnipotent one was only a shrewd manipulator of the forces of nature and of mind. At best he was scarcely more than a modern captain of industry,—the head of a great merger of heavenly industries with a far from loyal body of assistant managers. And all these gods were men of like passions and weaknesses as the precocious Greek child-man, in whose teeming brain Jove and his Board of Control were conceived.

Let us stop a moment to note some of the strikingly human—even childish—traits of the Homeric gods, and the childishness of the Greeks in their treatment of the gods of their own creation. And note, in passing, the similarity of this ancient faith with that of the ancients of our own time—our American Indians.

The Greeks saw in every touch of good fortune the favoritism of their gods; and when bad luck came to them, with brutal consistency they blamed their gods therefor.

The Greeks believed that their gods' gifts, like kissing, went by favor. For example, it was clear to them that Helen and Paris were divine because they were favorites of Venus; and Agamemnon, because of the scepter he held as a present direct from Jove.

How boyishly boastful was Jove's assertion of his claim to omnipotence! Hear him: "Come, gods, and try me; hang a golden chain from heaven, and suspend yourselves therefrom; yet would you not draw from heaven to earth your supreme counselor, Jove, even with your utmost labor; but, whenever I willed to do so, I could draw it up, together with earth and ocean, and you all, and, binding the chain around the top of Olympus, suspend all these dangling in the air!"

It is impossible to find in nineteenth or twentieth century literature a conception of a god so garrulous and boastful, so lacking in that quiet consciousness of power—the characteristic of all human approaches toward omnipotence. We can imagine a Charles M. Schwab thus boasting of his power to build up or destroy; but I am sure the shrewder Pierpont Morgan would have transferred the offending assistant superintendent to Tartarus, without other show of power than the act itself.

As a matter of fact—Homeric fact I mean—Jove's omnipotence was far removed from our twentieth century conception of God's omnipotence. For example, we learn that, once upon a time, Neptune, Juno, and Minerva would have actually chained Jove down had not Thetis called up Briareus, the hundred-handed, who rescued the alleged all-powerful one from the unholy combination. The grateful Jove, thereupon, promoted his liberator to a seat by his side. How human the story! How indicative of the childhood of the race!

Jove's omniscience also had its limitations. Take a single example throwing light upon certain other human—very human—qualities of this man-made god. Thus runs the story: Juno, Jove's shrewish wife, growing jealous of her husband and Thetis—and not without cause—sent the wind-footed Iris to earth with a message for Thetis' earth-born son, Achilles, directing him to arm himself "unknown to Jove and the other gods" and break up the clandestine meetings of her husband and Achilles' mother.

We here have a decidedly Greek conception of the marital relation and a thoroughly childish conception of omniscience.

The lesser gods and goddesses, the specialists in this heavenly and yet very earthly trust, were no better and no worse than their chief, and doubtless, no worse and no better than the Greeks who conceived them. They were petty, jealous, quick to anger, not plenteous in mercy, unreliable, forgetful of promises, capable of the cleverest duplicity and equal to godlike action only on great occasions. For example, Ulysses refused to take the unsupported word of Circe and Calypso, and insisted on their oath in confirmation of their promises—a severe reflection on divine probity!

The lesser deities had the crudest conception of justice and of universal law. Their universe was a confusion of conflicting decrees uttered in response to personal feeling or unreasoning favoritism. Take the first prayer in the Iliad, which Chryses offered to Apollo, concluding with:

"May the Greeks feel thy darts
Piercing their hearts,
Smarting for tears of mine!"

Apollo cleverly responds to Chryses' pious prayer by sending the pestilence into the camp of the Greeks, destroying vast numbers.

Mars, the god of war, in his hand-to-hand fight with earth-born Diomed, did not acquit himself nearly as well as Richard Harding Davis's chief soldier of fortune! Diomed forced his spear deep into the flank of Mars, Minerva having inspired and directed the blow. And Mars, instead of bearing his wound in silence after the manner of the modern historical-novel hero, bellowed like a wounded bull. Homer tells us that his bellowing was as loud as that of nine or ten thousand men in battle! Mars then makes haste to Jove and applies for an order on the Olympian dispensary. The order is granted and this strikingly human god is treated by the physician and surgeon to his majesty, Jove, and is straightway healed!

The Greek gods were farther removed from actual omnipresence than are we of Iowa, with our steam and trolley-car systems, our telegraph that will send a message westward half way round the earth and arrive at its destination before the registered date of its transmission? While the telegraph has thus conquered time, the telephone has conquered distance. I can talk from Des Moines with Chicago and distinguish the voice of my friend as readily as you can distinguish a voice in the hall yonder! This is approximate omnipotence beside which Iris, Juno's wind-footed messenger to Achilles, was slow; beside which Thetis' twelve-days' delay in communicating his son's rush-message to Jove would hardly be termed "rapid delivery!"

II.

Strangely like the gods of ancient Greece are those of ancient India as revealed in the Indian epic, "Mahabharata." In Dutt's highly poetical and cleverly literal translation, we find the Greek characteristics lavishly displayed, — fitful generosity, spite, love, jealousy, and childish favoritism. For example, Yama, seeing the devotion of Savitri to her wounded husband, drew the spark of life from her husband's body and walked off with it. The wife pursued the god demanding that he return the soul of her husband. He declined. Her importunities continued. He equivocated, telling Savitri he would be pleased to accommodate her; but, really, "the dead come not back to life." Wasn't there something else he could do for her? To shorten the story, Yama finally yielded the point, granting the faithful wife the restoration of her spouse. "Have thy object," answered Yama, "and thy lord shall live again."

"He shall live to be a father, and your children too shall reign,
For a woman's troth abideth longer than the fleeting breath,
And a woman's love abideth higher than the door of death."

III.

Virgil has not improved on the gods he borrowed from Homer. As you know, the whole story of Æneas hinges upon the adventures of the hero tossed about on sea and land by the power of the gods, on account of the unrelenting wrath of cruel Juno. On the first page the poet demands that the muse declare unto him why the queen of heaven should drive such a pious man to so much hardship and then he exclaims, "Is there such resentment in heavenly minds!"

Do you remember that first reported regatta, in the fifth book? It presents a vivid picture of life in action and, incidentally, of the religious mainspring of successful action; namely, the intervention of the gods. Four ships, or boats, were selected from the fleet, and all were equally matched with ponderous oars. They chose their places by lot. They wait the signal. They start. They plow the watery furrows. The onlookers applaud. Gyas leads. Cloanthus closely follows—a better rower, but with a bulkier boat. Then Pristes forges to the front, only to be passed by the Centaur. As they near the goal, Gyas leads. Cloanthus forges ahead. Gyas gives way to tears of vexation. He hurls his pilot into the sea and takes the helm, himself. Passing over the exciting details of the race, let us hasten to the climax. Cloanthus was in the lead but Gyas was gaining upon him. The race would have been given to Gyas or would have been a tie, had not—and this is the point I am aiming at—had not Cloanthus, seeing the danger, opportunely stretched out his hands to the sea and prayed: “Ye gods, I vow I will sacrifice to you a snow-white bull, and spread the entrails on the salt-wave and will make a libation of pure wine, if you will let me win this race.”

He said, and lo! the whole choir of Nereids and Phorous, and other not otherwise occupied gods and goddesses of the deep heard him from the bottom of the wave, and one of them with a mighty hand pushed on the boat of the thriftily pious Cloanthus,—and the goal is reached—the race won!

Thus were the gods employed much of their time ministering to the wants of their troublesome earth-born kin, and of those who bought their favor with sacrifices and libations.

IV.

Turning from the theocracy of the Greeks, the East Indians, and the Italianized Greeks, we incline to forget the under-life of their gods and heroes and to dwell on the picturesque features of the story, thinking only of the surface life of those who saw their deities “through a veil of dreams woven by song.”

The lament of Schiller over the lost “Gods of Greece” almost makes us pagan for the moment.

“Between men, heroes, gods, harmonious then,
Love wove sweet links and sympathies divine.”

“Well might each heart be happy in that day,
For gods, the happy one, were kin to man!
The beautiful alone the holy there!
No pleasure shamed the gods of that young race.”

“Cold, from the North, has gone
Over the flowers, the blast that killed their May;
And to enrich the worship of the One,
A universe of gods must pass away!”

Schiller's sentiment is beautifully voiced in these lines; but who of us could really wish to bring back the universe of man-made gods, in place of the one only God of the universe!

Dante, alternately rejected and claimed by nearly all the sects of Christendom, alternately despised, rejected and lauded to the skies by the critics, the most read by his adorers and the most generally unread and unknown of all the great world-poets,—Dante, the religious poet and historian of mediævalism, has pictured to our imagination a God half-heathen, half-Christian, sometimes recognizable by twentieth century tests, oftentimes as far removed from us as the deities of ancient Greece and India. Doctor Caird aptly compares the “Divine Comedy” as “the portal of a great cathedral, through which we emerge from the dim religious light of the Middle Ages into the open day of the modern world, but emerge with the imperishable memory of those harmonies of form and color on which we have been gazing, and with the organ notes that lifted our soul to heaven still sounding in our ears.”

Carlyle styles the author of the Divine Comedy “the spokesman of ten silent centuries.”

Dante's other-worldliness stands out on every page, and yet no one—not even Elizabeth Stuart Phelps in her smaller way—has so thoroughly peopled the other world with the creatures of this world and equipped them with so much of this world's thought, feelings, and emotions. It is amusing, when it is not pathetic, the ingenuity of the poet in devising appropriate punishments for those who had grievously sinned while on the earth.

Interesting as is the volume devoted to the transgressor's hereafter, the reader emerges from it as from a Chamber of Horrors. The student of literature breathes freer and feels far thankfuller than before on emerging from those ten dark centuries into the fresh clear air of modern life, in which one can rejoice in fields and flowers and song of birds and the uplift of mountains and the soul-broadening outlook of vast prairies and wide seas. The twentieth century reader turns from Dante's Inferno conscious that the God whom he reverences in love and not in childish dread never intended that we should shut our eyes and ears and souls to the wonders of his handiwork, passing our days in meaningless penance, in egoistic assumption that everything he has given us to delight the eye, the ear, the soul, is but a trap for the unwary, a cleverly devised scheme to test our faith.

Before moving northward in our search for God in literature, I want to quote from the Persian Jami,—the fifteenth century poet and mystic,—a beautiful conception of God:

“Each speck of matter did He constitute
A mirror, causing each one to reflect
The beauty of His visage. From the rose Flashed forth His beauty, and the nightingale
Beholding it, loved madly. . . .

“On the sun
His beauty shone, and straightway from the wave
The lotus reared its head. . . .
His beauty everywhere doth show itself,
And through the forms of earthly beauty shines,
Obscured as through a veil. . . .

“Wherever thou seest a veil,
Beneath that veil He hides. Whatever heart
Doth yield to love, He charms it. In His love
The heart hath life. Longing for Him, the soul
Hath victory. . . .
Pure love, like beauty, coming but from Him
Reveals itself in thee. . . .

“He alike
The treasure and the casket. ‘I’ and ‘Thou’
Have here no place, and are but phantasies
Vain and unreal. Silence!—for this tale
Is endless, and no eloquence hath power
To speak of Him.”

VII.

To omit a reference to Shakespeare in any general review of any phase of world literature would be as absurd as to attempt the play of Hamlet with the Prince of Denmark left out. But, in my several previous attempts to follow other lines of thought through Shakespeare's immortal tragedies and poems, I have been impressed with the this-worldliness of the great dramatist, in striking contrast with Dante's other-worldliness. While Shakespeare is the profoundest character reader and philosopher in all literature, we search his works almost in vain for direct and soul-elevating thought of God. Perhaps the nearest approach is that pagan-christian assumption common to all warlike and victorious peoples that God is preëminently a God of battles and is—or ought to be—on their side. As for instance, the grateful piety of Henry V after the battle of Agincourt. Hear his self-complacent prayer:

"O God, Thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to Thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all! . . .
Take it God,
For it is none but thine."

This one great lack in Shakespeare finds a voice in that strangely fascinating soliloquy of Macbeth:

"Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more."

VIII.

Milton's God, as I see him, is a strangely complex deity—now sitting, dove-like, "brooding on the vast abyss," then fusing the mass into a planet and sending it revolving round his central sun; now peopling a sulphurous hell with fallen angels under consummate leadership; now reinforcing heaven with souls literally purified by fire. Speaking of the leadership of the hosts of hell, one of the severest criticisms ever passed upon Paradise Lost was that of a lady who, when asked her opinion of Milton's masterpiece, said:

"O, I like it—very, very much; but for the life of me, I can't help falling in love with Satan!"

It is a fact that, from Blair—of "Rhetoric" fame—down to the latest critical student of Milton, there is almost an unbroken consensus of opinion that, as the real hero of Æschylus' "Prometheus Bound" is Prometheus, so the real hero of Paradise Lost is Satan.

As a conception of God's omnipotence, omniscience, omnipresence and love, it is more mediæval than modern, in that it presents to the reader's mind a being of such bad eminence as to be able to fill the very God of heaven and earth with consternation, confronting him with a rebellion which shakes the very foundations of his heaven.

You remember the severity with which General

Alger, our Secretary of War, was condemned for his failure to anticipate the war with Spain; and the unsparing denunciation heaped upon the English Secretary, Brodrick, for his unpreparedness at the outbreak of the war with the Boers. But their unpreparedness was foresight extraordinary compared with the hot haste with which Milton's heavenly hosts were marshalled in defense of their king!

The incongruity of this mythical war in heaven seems to have dawned upon the poet, for at the outset of his narration of the fierce battle between Satan's hosts and those of the King of Heaven, the poet, through the mouth of Raphael, utters this apology:

"Though strange to us it seemed
At first, that angel should with angel war,
And in fierce hosting meet, who wont to meet
So oft in festival of joy and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great sire,
Hymning the Eternal Father."

Then follows another one of Milton's splendid descriptions of Satan which make it hard for the virtuous reader to keep his sympathies where they belong:

"High in the midst, exalted as a god,
The apostate in his sun-bright chariot sat,
Idol of majesty divine, enclos'd
With flaming cherubim and golden shields;
Then lighted from his gorgeous throne, for now
'Twixt host and host but narrow space is left,
A dreadful interval."

Dreadful indeed! An interval in which the fate of worlds hung in the balance,—Omnipotence endangered! the King of Heaven in fearful jeopardy!

Without stopping to linger on the matchless beauties of Paradise Lost, let us pass on to a later revelation of God in literature, for, to my mind, not in Milton's masterpiece shall we find revealed the God whom we would worship.

IX.

As we enter the eighteenth century, we seem to be nearing home. Far behind us now are the gods of the Greeks, of ancient India, of ancient and mediæval Rome, all more or less the creatures of prejudice and whim, each in his own way more or less ignoble. We have parted company with the well-nigh impotent omnipotence of Milton's warring King of Heaven. Shakespeare, centuries in advance of the philosopher of his age, has in a general way prepared us for Goethe, the widest ranged thinker and poet of his time, the usherer in of nineteenth century religious thought, the author of that greatest of soul-dramas, "Faust."

To Goethe the universe was an expression of the mind and heart of God, an embodiment of Eternal Reason and Eternal Love—a new departure. Evil was, as he puts it in "Faust," the power that always "wills the bad and always works the good."

Goethe's God as voiced in "Faust" was Almighty Love, ever striving upward, creating and cherishing all. To Goethe the raging storm never sends any but beneficent waters to the valleys; to him the flaming thunderbolt but cleaves the poison-laden air, making it pure. All the messengers of love proclaiming the eternally creating power that lovingly enfolds us.

Eckermann, who was to him what Boswell was to Doctor Johnson—and more too,—says Goethe believed that man is so inter-penetrated with the divine that he can at least apprehend parts of the Highest. Goethe found revealed in God's universe eternal activity, eternal reason, eternal love. To him "Our Father" was a beautiful and helpful prayer, and he added, "In God's name let him pray it who will;" but—and here we see something of the reverence of the Old Testament prophets and priests for their Jehovah, the nameless one,—his profound reverence is well embodied in the words of Faust:

"I have no name to give it;
The name is sound and smoke
Obscuring Heaven's clear glow."

But was this nameless one—this more than Father—a personal God? In his poem, "Gott und Welt," he asks:

"What would a God be who merely propelled the universe from without and let the All revolve in a circle about his finger?"

Once in a conversation with Rochlitz, the latter said: "Let us not omit to give God the honor and acknowledge his moral government in the world."

Goethe stopped suddenly and said: "Acknowledge it! Who can help acknowledging it? But I, for my part, in silence."

"In silence! Why in silence?" asked his friend.

The solemn answer was: "Who can express it, save for himself? . . . Who, feeling, dares say, 'I believe him not?'"

Spinoza spoke of Goethe's God as "an indwelling Deity." The words which Goethe leaves with us as his best attempt to name the unnamable, to describe the indescribable are these: "The All-enfolder, the All-upholder! He holds and upholds."

X.

Whatever there may be of my theory of literary evolution measurable by an author's, or an age's, conception of God, to me the theory finds strong confirmation in that rich, pure organ voice which came to us fifty-three years ago from the Isle of Wight. Tennyson's "In Memoriam" marks the highest flight of modern poetry in its attempt to reach the Infinite.

Wordsworth in his "Intimations of Immortality" strangely filled and moved the soul with his questionings as to the mystery of the Godhead, and of man's relation to God. But the gentle Wordsworth saddens us. Looking in on his own soul-life, he sings exultantly of his lost youth:

"Trailing clouds of glory, do we come From God, who is our home."

But—"the clouds that gather round the setting sun" take on for him a sorrowfully sober coloring, and in the shadows of age he has "thoughts that too often lie too deep for tears."

But, with Tennyson the thought is happily reversed. His "In Memoriam" is the nineteenth century epic of the soul, as Milton's "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained" was the seventeenth, and Dante's "Divine Comedy" the thirteenth century soul epic.

The twentieth century is not likely to develop a pure organ voice like Milton's or Tennyson's; but it promises to have a host of minnesingers who will see to it that the message of the ages,—the ways of God with men,—shall not die away.

Of all the literary bequests left us by the century just gone, none can be named more valuable than Tennyson's soul epic.

As you know, the poet lost his friend and the lover of his sister, Arthur Henry Hallam, and this untimely death plunged his soul into the deepest gloom. While he still held it truth "that men may rise on stepping-stones of their dead selves to higher things," yet, still, he lost heart in contemplating the years of bereavement before him, and from his heart he could only exclaim, "Let love clasp grief lest both be drowned."

For years the mourner remained buried in his grief. The reader wonders how it happens that a nineteenth century Christian thus joins with the heathen poets in inconsolable mourning for his loved and lost. But Time, the philosopher and friend, renews his miracle of grace and finally we see a light shining through the poet's cypress trees. Tennyson is now able to say from a full heart:

" 'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all."

The Christmas bells arouse a new train of thought in his distracted mind. In the Christmas festivities he could sing:

"Rise, happy morn, rise holy morn,
Draw forth the cheerful day from night.
O Father, touch the East, and light
The light that shone when Hope was born."

Doubt and faith alternate in his bosom, until finally he reaches this ground of belief:

"Oh yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill, . . .

"That nothing walks with aimless feet."

And again:

"I can but trust that good shall fall
At last—far off—at last, to all,
And every winter change to spring."

Later he exclaims:

"I falter where I firmly trod,
And falling with my weight of cares
Upon the great world's altar-stairs
That shape thro' darkness up to God,

"I stretch lame hands of faith, and grope,
And gather dust and chaff, and call
To what I feel is Lord of all,
And faintly trust the larger hope."

Another Christmas comes and goes, and in the light of time he sees with clearness what was but dimly seen through tears. Still thinking of his friend he says:

"God's finger touched him and he slept.
The great Intelligences fair
That range above our mortal state,
In circle round the blessed gate
Received and gave him welcome there."

One by one "he forgot his doubts" and facing "the spectres of the mind" he laid them one by one. Thus he came at length "to find a stronger faith his own."

Another holiday season brings from him that noble song of the future, "The New Year," revealing a splendid awakening of the soul, and with it deliverance from "the grief that saps the mind,"—an awakening to the duty of man here on the earth, so far as he may be able, to ring out all forms of evil and ill, and "ring in the Christ that is to be."

The poem proper closes with a noble prayer in which we find the faith that comes to the soul grown strong through suffering and over-mastered doubt.

"O living Will that shalt endure
When all that seems shall suffer shock,
Rise to the spiritual rock,
Flow through our deeds and make them pure,

"That we may lift from out the dust
A voice as unto him that hears,
A cry above the conquered years
To one that with us works, and trust

"With faith that comes of self-control,
The truth that never can be proved
Until we close with all we loved,
And all we flow from, soul to soul."

Loth to leave the theme so long uppermost in his mind, the beautiful postscript, which pictures the wedding of his sister, concludes with the poet's last grand conception of God:

"That God, which ever lives and loves,
One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event
To which the whole creation moves."

Now we are ready for that noble prelude of faith and love and praise which, to my mind, belongs to the end, not the beginning of the poem. Where in the whole realm of praise can we find a strain more exalted, more exalting! Let me conclude this outline of "In Memoriam" with three of the most elevating stanzas of the prelude:

"Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen Thy face,
By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
Believing where we can not prove;

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust:
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die;
And Thou hast made him: Thou art just.

"Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be:
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O Lord, art more than they."

XI.

I can not conscientiously pass that great unmeasurable force in literature, Robert Browning, without a passing mention. That Browning was deeply religious all who read him, comprehending him even in part, must admit: but aside from an occasionally clear note of optimism, such as Pippa's glad refrain,

"God's in his heaven, All's right with the world,"

"Upward tending all, though weak,
Like plants in mines, which never saw the sun,
But dream of him, and guess where he may be,
And do their best to climb and get to him."

The groping of Browning's soul Godward is well pictured in that other saying of Paracelsus:

"If I stoop into a tremendous sea of cloud
It is but for a time: I press God's lamp
Close to my breast; its splendor soon or late
Will pierce the gloom: I shall emerge some day."

XII.

That greatest of Russian novelists and religious philosophers, Tolstoy, has many vagaries relative to the working out of his schemes of brotherhood, but in his relation with God his philosophy is extremely simple. It is all included in the title of one of his works, "The Kingdom of God is within you." It can be still further condensed into the one word, "Love"—the mainspring of nearly all Tolstoy's actions, however eccentric they may seem. To him it is a simple and obvious truth that human life can have no other meaning than the constant fulfillment of that "for which the Almighty Power has sent us here." And the only significance he finds in life consists in helping to establish the "Kingdom of God"—that Kingdom coming not by observation; but establishing itself in the hearts of men.

XIII.

I can not well leave Russia without recalling that one great poem by Derzhavin which has forced its way into all languages, passages from which hold firm place in the memory. A poem addressed to God would be sacrilege, were it anything less than this. I like to recall such passages as these:

"A million torches lighted by thy hand
Wander unwearied through the blue abyss;
Lamps of celestial ether burning bright—
Suns lighting systems with their joyous beams;
But thou to these art as the noon to night."
"Though but an atom 'midst immensity, Still I am something, fashioned by thy hand."
"Thou spirit of my spirit, and my Lord!"

XIV.

The Belgian Maeterlinck, latest of the literary philosophers and poets to approach the mystery of mysteries, finds the incomprehensible and adorable One in his own soul, as in the soul of the universe. He finds this desire of his soul for God the link of brotherhood between himself and the beggar who passes his window, and through that bond of union he comes to love the beggar more for that he understands him better. "From the conscious and infinite love," he says, "must the true morality spring, nor can there be greater charity than the effort to ennoble our fellows."

"To love God," he further says, "and to serve him with all one's might will not suffice to bring peace and strength to the soul of man. It is only by means of the knowledge and thought we have gained, and devolved by contact with men, that we can learn how God should be loved."

Deeply suggestive is his illustration of the common attitude of the soul toward God:

"Ah! truly, too much of our life is spent in waiting, like the blind men in the legend who had traveled far that they might hear their God. They were seated on the steps, and were asked what they were doing in the court-yard of the sanctuary. 'We are waiting,' they replied, shaking their heads, 'and God has not yet said a single word.' But they had not seen that the brass doors of the temple were closed, and they knew not that the edifice was resounding with the voice of their God."

XV.

In the galaxy of great American poets, Bryant ranks first by priority of birth, and there are knowing critics who feel sure he will last longest. That almost infant prodigy, "Thanatopsis," has been termed by some a pagan poem. While the criticism is not false, it is not quite fair, and for this reason: Its theme, resignation, is part of the religion of all sensible men, Christian and pagan, and so far as it goes its philosophy must command the mental assent of every reader. Neither your religion nor mine can be said to enjoy a monopoly of "unflinching trust." And you and I have known Christians so weak in the faith, that they approach death not joyfully, nor even resignedly, but "like the quarry slave at night, scourged to his dungeon." In nearly all religions and among nearly all peoples we find at least some few who exemplify the joy which follows loving service and others who show forth the remorse which follows unfaithfulness to ideals of duty.

Bryant's trust, rising above the philosophic mood, takes a grand flight in that other early poem, "To a Waterfowl," closing with the unforgettable words:

"He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright."

That trust took form with the years, and in his old age came that sure note of confidence in the final reunion of loving souls parted by death. To him, now, the "Almighty Hand, that from an exhaustless urn pours forth the never-ending 'Flood of Years'" is wholly benevolent. In God's reign "no grief shall gnaw the heart, the eternal Change that waits on growth and action shall proceed with everlasting concord hand in hand."

XVI.

In a like strain of trust and hope, our gentle Quaker poet, Whittier, turns from his indignant protests against the curse of slavery to contemplation of the Eternal Goodness. The message Whittier has left us breathes the spirit—not of "resignation worse than murmur," but joyous confidence such as uplifts the soul in such memorable passages as this:

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I can not drift
Beyond his love and care."

XVII.

Longfellow's God, so far as we may find him in his verse, dwelt chiefly in the souls of men, shining out in their lives. In his latest utterance, "Keramos," for example, the Potter at his wheel is a relentless toiler and the ultimate purpose of his toil is not apparent. And yet, the poem is not without its trust that all is well. The most significant of its several refrains reads thus:

"Turn, turn my wheel! This earthen jar
A touch can make, a touch can mar;
And shall it to the Potter say,
What makest thou? Thou hast no hand?
As men who think to understand
A world by their Creator planned,
Who wiser is than they."

XVIII.

Lowell declares himself in a somewhat firmer tone. In the joy of his youth he loved God's sunshine; and in the gloom of age, intensified by bereavement, he recorded this testimony:

"I am happy in my right
To love God's darkness as his light."

Lowell's was preëminently a patriot's God, a "God of Nations." In his youth he saw in national crises "God's stern winnowers," and the "great Avenger," "standing in the shadow, keeping watch above his own." He traced Christ's bleeding feet by the light of burning heretics. Nineteen years after the appearance of "The Present Crisis," and soon after the crisis of slavery had been met, his noble Commemoration Ode included this solemn admonition:

"Bow down, dear land, for thou hast found release!
Thy God, in these distempered days,
Hath taught thee the sure wisdom of his ways,
And through thine enemies hath wrought thy peace!
Bow down in prayer and praise!"

XIX.

The simple, joyous faith of Holmes lasted to the end. The man never ceased to be a child. Brushing away all perplexing theologies, his life philosophy ever was, "He doeth all things well." Take a single illustration. When his dear friend, Sumner, died, he smiled through his tears and sang:

"Thou orderest all things well;
Thy servant's work was done;
He lived to hear oppression's knell,
The shouts of Freedom won.
Hark! from the opening skies
The anthem's echoing swell,—
O mourning land, lift up thine eyes!
God reigneth. All is well."

XX.

The most subtle and indefinitely powerful influence in American literature is that of the simple-hearted, high-minded, broad-souled man, the hundredth anniversary of whose birth has just been strikingly commemorated. The very subtlety of Emerson's influence makes it difficult to measure the man as a force for God in the world.

The orthodox found Emerson's God vague, uncertain, impersonal, and therefore not wholly satisfying to their soul wants. Then too, the orthodox mind had for centuries been taught to look up to God as an ever-present help in time of trouble, while Emerson's God, as he, himself, says, "did not bow the heavens to console and comfort man."

Emerson saw the man side of the Divine-man, and he ran counter to a religious epoch that would see only the divine side.

The God whom Emerson worshiped was not a mere abstraction—not a mere symbol. He was such a God as the orthodox Professor James, of Harvard, in his recently-published and widely-read Gifford Lectures, entitled, "Varieties of Religious Experience," presented so ably and acceptably to the orthodox Scotchmen of Edinburgh: not a finely woven fabric made from mediæval theologies, but a God who is the very atmosphere of our individual as of the universal life. As Professor Caird, whom James approvingly quotes, has well said of himself, Emerson, let his consciousness be "possessed and suffused by the Infinite and Eternal life of the spirit."

XXI.

Two erratic souls that still confound the critics who would classify and catalogue every poet for ready reference,—I refer to Edgar Allen Poe and Walt Whitman,—must not be passed without mention, for there be many who stoutly insist that American literature is chiefly memorable by reason of the works of Poe and Whitman.

The author of "The Raven" has left upon my mind no clearer impression of God than that of a Nemesis from whom man vainly strives to escape. Poe lived and wrote chiefly in an atmosphere of woe and gloom, and has left us nothing more consoling than his raven's soul-haunting "Nevermore."

Whitman, quite as severely censured in his time, is not as easily disposed of. Brutally frank in his animalism, he was naturally misunderstood when he sought expression for the earthy passions which he felt had come from God, no less than the high ideals of the mind and the noble aspirations of the soul. His uncouth verse is hard reading along these lower lines; but when he reaches the higher levels he inspires. Compare Whitman's joyous approach to death with Bryant's calm acceptance of the inevitable and Tennyson's sad insistence that there shall be no wailing when he puts out to sea. Hear his glad Song of Parting:

"Joy, shipmate, joy!
(Pleased to my soul at death I cry,
Our life is closed, our life begins,
The long, long anchorage we leave,
The ship is clear at last, she leaps!
She swiftly courses from the shore,
Joy, shipmate, joy!"

Whitman will not let himself become "curious about God." In all objects and in all expressions he finds something of God. In his opinion, "no man has ever yet been half devout enough; none has yet adored and worshiped half enough." His "Passage to India" is a very ecstasy in its thought of God and of himself as sailing on "the seas of God." Listen to him in this exalted mood:

"Thoughts, silent thoughts, of time, and space and Death, like waters flowing,
Bear me indeed as through the regions infinite,
Whose air I breathe, whose ripples hear, love me all over,
Bathe me, O God, in Thee, mounting to Thee,
I and my soul to range in range of Thee."

Here I must arbitrarily bring my search for God in literature to an abrupt close.

If my subject has seemed to you too ambitious, and has been found too large,—in other words, if I have wearied you,—I trust you will put some share of the blame upon certain of my friends here in Lamoni who suggested this large theme for me.

As you have observed, I have confined my review to a few great masters in literature,—and those few, poets all. The explanation is easy. Poetry is the most condensed, and withal the most exalted form of words. All great souls are essentially poets, whether their poetry is in form of verse or prose. My purpose, as those who have followed me in my wanderings through many fields have doubtless discovered, has been to develop the great fact brought out by the study of comparative literature, that nations and civilizations, like individuals, are measurable by their ideals; and, inferentially, I have endeavored to show that no people, no individual, has thus far been able to conceive of God without unconsciously merging with that conception some degree of its, or his, own individuality. In other words, all our conceptions of God are tinged with our own earthiness. The most the race has attained in the mental evolution of the ages, from Homer to Tennyson, is growth in spiritual discernment. This fact should humble us before God, and give us a broader charity toward men. The conclusion which must force itself upon us after this hour's excursion in the realm of books is that the God seen by the mind's eye of Homer, the God who rose before the mental vision of Milton, the God whom our own American poets trusted so implicitly, and some of them so lovingly, the God whom the awe-stricken Job heard from out the whirlwind, and whom you have heard in the still small voice of conscience,—your God and mine,—is above and beyond, and in character unaffected by all human ideals. His thoughts, his acts, the laws of his being and action, are in their entirety so far beyond our ken that we are driven away from our weak, mannish attempts to fathom infinitude—the self-confessed weakness of our man-made logic forcing us back to the simple faith of our childhood, that, whate'er of seeming ill may befall, “we can not drift beyond His love and care.”

HAVE WE PROPHETS NOW?

If by a prophet one who predicts or foretells is meant, the race is long extinct, but in another use of the word, especially favored by the New Testament writers, we have not a few still, thank God and, used thus, one can heartily join in the wish of Moses—“Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets.”

The desire to foresee the future has, in every age and in all nations, been an instinctive craving of humanity; sometimes from worthy, sometimes from trifling, sometimes even from criminal motives. The belief that the higher powers are, in some way, so associated with everything in nature, that the commonest appearance may be a hint of warning or encouragement from them, early led to fancied interpretations of such fancied omens, which offered themselves in the movements of the heavenly bodies, the phenomena of the seasons, and even in the most common sights and sounds of animate or inanimate nature. Whether the sacred chickens pecked up their food heartily or refused to eat, decided the march of an army or the fighting of a battle. As the Israelites took the murmuring of the wind in the tops of the mulberry-trees as the sound of marching and fancied it was the ghostly advance of God himself and his host before them, against the Philistines, the Greeks heard the intimations of the gods in the whispering of the leaves of the oaks of Dodona. The flight of birds, the movements of the entrails of a sacrificed beast, the soundness of its liver and heart, the cries of birds or beasts and their appearance on this hand or that or an unlucky number of them seen at a time, were all divine encouragements or warnings to carry out or to abandon any purpose, public or private. As to the heavens, the fate or good fortune of kings and nations was fancied to turn on their revelations, as interpreted by the professional “stargazers.”

Attentive reading of the “Prophets” of the Old Testament will at once show that they were much more the preachers of righteousness to their generation than predictors of the future fate of nations or states. The ordinary burden of the utterances are warnings of the danger of political alliances with outside powers, enforced by a keen insight into their comparative weakness or strength. The overthrow of Damascus by Assyria, or of Egypt by Assyria or Babylon, and the certainty that in their turn petty races like Moab or Edom would suffer from the great powers no less severely than Israel, whom they had assailed, must have been foreseen by many besides the recognized prophets, though the warnings of these were made more weighty by their official standing as a sacred order. We are to remember, moreover, that Dervishes, and even common Arabs, at this day, habitually ascribe their religious utterances to the inspiration of the Almighty. “Thus saith the Lord” is as often on their lips as on the lips of Isaiah.

The “prophets” of the New Testament were no longer, except in rare cases, predictors, but rather the earnest God-impelled preachers of the apostolic age. Among the many offices of the early church they are a separate class from the teachers, “speaking for God,” as their name implies, from an irresistible impulse, like that of Saint Paul in his cry, “Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel.” In this New Testament sense every true speaker for God is a prophet, with all a prophet's responsibilities to God and man; while the most fluent orator is not if he does not speak from the heart, though he may “whisper out a clear harangue, and cold as it is clear.” Enthusiasm is essential, and that means inspiration from above, for enthusiasm is, literally, “having God in us.” Thank the heavenly Father we have still many prophets in all sections of his church, and one can only wish, like Moses, that all the Lord's people could claim the illustrious names. It needs no human ordination to enroll a man in this order of “servants of heaven.” If the pulpit be, as it is, the special throne of divine agency, he who says a loving word to a brother, to win him to God, is also in his measure, a true prophet. But he who has had a real call to be an ambassador for the Eternal—that is, who enters on the ministry of preaching with deep sincerity; an enthusiast from his heart for his divine Master, thinking nothing of himself and willing to be and to suffer for the truth even to the uttermost, fearing no one but God and valiant for the truth like our great exemplar Jesus, seeking not the wool of the sheep, but their souls; bearding the Devil in all the shapes he takes in these days, yet with firm self-control, bearing himself not wildly, without practical wisdom—such a man is a second John the Baptist, proclaiming with a divine commission the approach of the Savior, and owned by him as one of the greatest of men born of a woman, though he can boast of no special training, however valuable that may be and is, and though he even like the apostles, be “unlearned and ignorant.” Men like Whitfield or John Wesley, or with all his extreme notions and foolish Judaizing, such a man as Father Dolling, who died for his poor sunken flock, were true prophets of the Bible type, whether Old Testament or New. And so have been many humble workers, famous in heaven, on earth less known, like Oliver, a cobbler, I think, one of Wesley’s local preachers, who left us the treasure of such hymns as “Lo, He comes with clouds descending,” and “The God of Abr’ am praise,” and so are many, more or less known in the great universal church now, whether ordained or laymen. But the so-called students of prophecy who pry into the future which must always be dark to us, are very much the reverse of true prophets, after misleading the simple by their feather-brained conceits. Setting out with false views of what the prophets sought to impress on those whom they addressed, and taking no pains to study them in their chronological relations, which would show that they concerned themselves, as a rule, with their own times, they assume that their harangues to their contemporaries were intended to light all future ages.

The dream of “British Israel” is one result of this unthinking and lazy ignorance. The restoration of the Ten Tribes is another, but the supreme folly is the perennial use of new theories as to the meaning of the “Book of Revelation.” That wonderful example of the literary cypher-writing favored among the Jews from the time of “Daniel” about one hundred sixty-five years before Christ, was, as it plainly states, a grand word of cheer and support to the churches of Asia Minor, then suffering bitterly from the persecution that everywhere followed the edict of Nero, putting Christians under the ban of the imperial law. Their cry for divine vengeance on their assailants opens the book, and its answer occupies it to its close. Rome was soon to fall, and Christ’s kingdom to be set up in the earthly Jerusalem, as a great Jewish Theocracy, with our Lord at its head, warring against the heathen and breaking them in pieces like a potter’s vessel. It begins and is essentially connected with that age, though, incidentally, the future of the terrestrial kingdom of God, as finally established in a new Jerusalem of miraculous size and oriental splendor, let down ready built from the skies, to Palestine, is painted for the everlasting consolation of the sufferers, including the multitude who have escaped from “the great tribulation” of Nero’s awful wickedness, after the burning of Rome in A. D. 64.

But from a very early date the delay in the return of Christ led the restless eagerness of men to know the times and the seasons which Jesus told even the apostles it was not for them to know; the Father having set (or appointed) them within his own authority (Acts 1:7), has led to ever-recurring misapprehensions and follies, often of the direst consequences to Christendom. Thus, before the year 1000, men everywhere made over their lands and goods to the church, that it might pray for their souls in view of the near approach of the day of judgment. In Luther’s time it led to the wild excesses of John of Leyden at Munster. In England, after Cromwell’s death, it kindled that dangerous fanaticism of the fifth monarchy men.

Even in our own day, moreover, if it can not rouse insurrection or spread ruin, what immeasurable folly has it not exhibited? Who does not remember Doctor Cumming’s multitudinous predictions of the visible coming of Christ to set up his flesh and blood kingdom of God at Jerusalem? Poor man, he ended his days in an asylum. But though he be now long dead, the race of prophecy-mongers still lives and no doubt will live as long as human simplicity, credulity, and audacity abound as they always do.

I have before me a prophetic book issued by a Mr. Baxter, famous as having, long years ago, published a volume to show, beyond question, that Napoleon III, was the destined ruler of the world—the wretched sham ruler who ended his days a landless fugitive in England, and died there a generation ago in a London suburb. The book before me announces the “Great Affairs at Hand.” Between 1897 and 1908 we are told there are to be wars that will form the ten kingdoms (of prophecy). The coming Napoleon’s rise and career, for the author has another Napoleon up his sleeve. Jewish sacrifices to be restored. Christ’s advent to translate the 144,000. Great revivals of religion. Subsequent great tribulation for three years and a half, closing with the end of this age, in 1908. The White horse of revelation is to appear this year, in 1903. The Red horse in 1904. The Black horse bringing universal famine in 1905, and the Pale horse spreading pestilence and death on an awful scale in 1906. Such are the follies, repeated continually, which moon-struck superstition evokes from the abuse of portions of scripture.

Be contented to understand a prophecy when you see it plainly fulfilled, and not till then. Meanwhile, may all the Lord's people be prophets in the grand old way of Isaiah, Amos, Hosea and their noble brethren by witnessing for God's truth; that is, for all that is holy and lovely, and against all that is the reverse. Do not be afraid to speak for the right and you will be a true prophet.—Northwestern Christian Advocate, April 29, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

My Little Boy That Died.

Look at his pretty face for just one minute!
His braided frock and dainty buttoned shoes;
His firm shut hand, the favorite plaything in it—
Then tell me mothers, was't not hard to lose
And miss him from my side—
My little boy that died?

How many another boy, as dear and charming,
His father's hope, his mother's one delight,
Slips through strange sicknesses, all fear disarming,
And lives a long, long life in parents' sight!
Mine was so short a pride!
And then—my poor boy died.

I see him rocking on his wooden charger;
I hear him pattering through the house all day;
I watch his great blue eyes grow large and larger,
Listening to stories whether grave or gay,
Told at the bright fireside,
So dark now since he died.

But yet I often think my boy is living,
As living as my other children are.
When good-night kisses I all around am giving,
I keep one for him, though he is so far.
Can a mere grave divide
Me from him—though he died?

So, while I come and plant it o'er with daisies
(Nothing but childish daisies all year round)
Continually God's hand the curtain raises,
And I can hear his merry voice's sound,
And feel him at my side—
My little boy that died.—Miss Mulock.

Dear Sisters: I must thank you very much for those little pamphlets you sent to me some years ago; advice to mothers which I have found so instructive to me in guiding my children in the path of virtue. I have moved to Alpena where there is a branch of Saints. They have meetings twice a week including Sunday and also Sunday-school of which I have been a teacher for over a year. I lived back in the woods fifteen years away from any church or even a school, but I am thankful to my heavenly Father for his continual watchcare over me in all those trying years.

I held my Sunday-school in a place in the woods. I had the Quarterlies sent me by mail so as to instruct them in the right way, but I did not make as much headway as I do now for there was nothing too bad for their father to say against this latter-day work, and they were so afraid of him. But I am so thankful I have moved to Alpena. When I came here over two years ago I had three children at home with me, but my little boy the Lord saw fit to take to himself. He was twelve years and six months old and had obeyed the gospel. I have two girls yet left in my care who have also obeyed the gospel. I have one daughter married but she joined the Free Methodists with her husband. She said she could never go through with the trouble that her mother had and she would go with her husband wherever he would go. They are a well-mated couple. I have really never seen as good among the Saints. They work together for each other's good, both in temporal and spiritual things. It is my humble prayer that God will open their eyes to see the true and living way of eternal life. There is nothing so precious to me as this gospel. In all the thirty-one years nothing has ever thrown me entirely from its path. I have been tried to the very utmost but by God's assistance and grace I am to-day strong in the faith.

I have cooked in camps where the rudest of mankind were assembled and yet by God's help have come my way scathless. I was in one camp a long way from home. The camp was built down at the foot of a high hill. I worked there during the summer months. Some of the time would have my youngest girl with me and when she would return then I would have my boy. We erected our altar of prayer away up on the top of a high hill and would go up there once a day and offer up our supplication to God that no intruders would mar our peace, and his gentle spirit would come with such assurance we knew we were accepted. One time my little girl was taken sick in that camp and she was getting worse all the time. One morning when I was getting the lunch ready for the men to take with them for their dinner, she said. "Oh mamma, mamma, why don't you come and pray for me? I am sure I would get well." So I came to her bedside and offered my humble prayer to the one we loved in such trying times. The severe pain left her and she slept about two hours and awoke feeling better. She said she would get up and see if she could stand. She got up and walked across the floor gently and back again, and said there was no pain so she dressed herself. From that day to this prayer is her great healer. And I may say the same. I have not cost my husband any doctor bills. I have been sick and nigh unto death but told them I did not want any doctor as my great Physician was close at hand.

I am poor in this world's goods but I am thankful I am rich in the abundance of Christ's greater riches. He is my present helper in all that I do. I am thankful for this gospel, its full, complete salvation. Trust and obey him and verily thou shalt be fed, with the blessings of heaven and of earth and be kept unspotted from the world. One must arise above the murky atmosphere of earth life. God commands us to obey him with all our hearts. This is perfect love. Sanctification is the preparation for service. Sanctification fits us for the Lord's coming. Death only liberates the spirit from the body but sanctification liberates the spirit from sin.

Your sister,

ELIZA A LESTER.

Dear Mothers: It is Sabbath evening and after five hours tussle with the dear baby suffering from earache, I pick up the HERALD and turn to the Home Column to find, perchance, a soothing balm for my weary spirit.

And as I read,

"God will not always chide us,
He will comfort, cheer, and guide us," the tears fill my eyes at the immediate relief afforded by the message. And I thought, "Oh, I must pass it on." Try to cheer some other burden-weary soul. If I but can it will be better to me than if I could have gone to church to-night. Once baby seemed better, husband came home from his work earlier than usual and I entertained the strange idea of going to night preaching. One of our deep thinkers was to speak and O, how I longed to go! It would seem like being young again to go to night preaching with the "best man in the world." It is so long since I have had the chance. But baby commenced fretting again and I laid my longing aside, as I must almost always do and took up my cross again firmly crushing back the fret which you know will come. For "I came not to do mine own will, but His that sent me" said He who is our pattern, and I take this to mean, he didn't do what he felt like doing but did what it was his duty to do—and that without fretting. And so must we do if we would follow in his footsteps.

And oh just think where following in his footsteps will take us—back home. No more sickness or heartache or disappointment or discouragement. But strength to do without getting tired and sick. Think how we can do all we wished to do here and could not. We can study. We can learn. We can help others. Fulfill all our righteous longings, if only we follow him.

So let us, though the way be dark, though the waves of affliction roll o'er us, though Satan encompass our souls, let us steadfastly continue faithful unto the end of our probation.

APRIL.

[If the sisters will carefully consider the letter of "April," will it not come to them that if one mother, weary and overburdened could summons the courage to put aside her own disappointment and give of her sorely-taxed energy an amount sufficient to enable her to "pass on" a cheering thought or sentence, that surely many of them might do even more than this? Think of it, will you not sisters?—Ed.]

The Question of Amusements.

NEGATIVELY.

1. All forms of amusement are to be avoided which tend to undermine or endanger one's physical health. Any forms of recreation which rob one of sleep can not well be justified on any grounds. So also those forms of recreation which exhaust one's physical energy unduly, and unfit one for the stern and real work of life, are questionable. Recreation, to be real and helpful, ought to send one back to his work with glowing cheeks and bounding pulse.

2. Those forms of amusement are to be avoided whose associations are questionable. Many forms of popular amusement are conducted in questionable places, by questionable methods, by questionable persons, and for questionable ends. No one who has a fine and high regard for his personal integrity can consent to be a party to questionable ways and deeds. Just so far as our presence at such places recognizes and encourages these questionable practices we had better abstain. Better that we pluck out the right eye or cut off the right hand, than by our presence to become a stumbling-block to some weaker brother.

3. Those forms of amusement are to be shunned which arouse and stimulate a morbid desire and appetite. One can not too carefully watch the springs of life; out of the heart are the issues of life. You have seen the storm-cloud gather on a summer's day. As you look up at the blue and cloudless sky, you see a thin film and vapor gather and float lazily across the heavens. Now a breath of wind catches it, and it seems about to dissolve and disappear. In a minute you look again, and now the haze has become a cloud. While you look it grows and thickens and spreads over the face of the whole sky. Before long the heavens are black; now the lightnings flash and the thunders roll. Look within the heart, and every one will see the same process there. The book may be fascinating, but if it suggests evil imaginations, it can not be too rigidly avoided. The place of amusement may be brilliant and attractive, but if it paints evil pictures upon the walls of the soul, it can not be too carefully shunned.

4. Those forms of amusement are to be avoided which tend to become stumbling-blocks in the way of others. It is possible that one may himself indulge in these things without harm. But "none of us lives to himself, and none dies to himself." Every man is responsible for his influence. The apostle has laid down the principle which should guide men always and everywhere: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak" (Romans 14: 21).

POSITIVELY.

1. All forms of amusement to be Christian must be means to an end. So far as recreation is made an end in itself it soon palls on the taste, and leaves a bitter taste in the mouth. Well has the apostle written, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." A soul sodden with pleasure is already a lost soul.

2. Those forms of amusement are to be preferred which minister to the higher parts of man's nature. De gustibus non est disputandum. What is one person's delight is another's abomination. No strict, hard, and fast rule can be laid down as to what is higher and lower. But it may be said that the mind is higher than the body, and the spiritual appetencies are higher than bodily sensations. Grecian mythology tells of Gryllus, a companion of Ulysses, who was first feasted by Circe and then transformed into a hog. Ulysses obtained a charm by which he was enabled to restore all these swine back to men again. But one man, Gryllus, refused to resume his former shape. Fenelon has produced a profound and witty dialogue between Ulysses and Gryllus. Ulysses: "If you had any feeling at all, you would be only too happy to become a man again." Gryllus: "I don't care for that. The life of a hog is much pleasanter." Ulysses: "Are you not shocked at your baseness? You live only on filth." Gryllus: "What does it matter? Everything depends upon one's taste." Ulysses: "Is it possible that you have so soon forgotten every noble and advantageous gift of humanity?" Gryllus: "Do not talk to me of humanity; its nobility is only imaginary." Ulysses: "But you count then as nothing, eloquence, poetry, music, science, etc.?" Gryllus: "My temperament as a hog is so happy that it raises me above all those fine things. I like better to grunt than to be eloquent in your way." So long as a man lives only in the basement of his brain he will be content with base pleasures. The man who has a high and worthy appreciation of the grandeur and dignity of human life will prefer those pleasures which minister to his higher nature.

3. Those forms of diversion are to be commended which increase the joyousness of life and add no sorrow. Men can not too carefully avoid those forms of pleasure which give "a moment's joy to wail a week." Men, it has been said, can not too rigidly shun those deeds by day which destroy their peace of soul by night. This is what Paul means when he says, "Happy is he that judgeth not himself in that which he approveth. But he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith; and whatsoever is not of faith is sin." [Revised Version according to American Revision Committee.]

Happy is that man whose eye is single and whose insight is clear; happy is he who does and allows only those things which his insight approves.

4. Those forms of diversion are to be encouraged which awaken in a man a true appreciation of the beauties of the world and the handiwork of God. Nature, the wonderful and many-leaved book of God, is ever new and ever beautiful. Why will men be content to shut themselves up in narrow, close rooms over cards and games when the wonderful book of nature invites them to come and read! There are certain pleasures which elevate and ennoble the soul—music, art, poetry, natural science.

"Religion never was designed to make our pleasures less." The story is told of Carlo Borromeo, a saintly man, that one day, while engaged with some friends at a game of chess, the question was started what they would do if it were known that they were to die within the hour. "I would go on with my game," said Borromeo, who had begun the game for God's glory in order to fit himself for God's work. Religion will give one some clear and sufficient principles by which to test pleasures; it will give one a spirit that will lead him into the enjoyment of true and helpful and elevating pleasures. No one who has a regard for his higher life can refuse to try the spirits of pleasure that he may know whether they be of God or not. The man who brings every pleasure to the test of his insight and the principles of the gospel can not fail to know with a certainty that can not be gainsaid what forms of diversion are lawful and expedient for him.—Reverend Samuel Zane Batten, in the New Citizenship.

Letter Department.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, April 14.

Editors Herald: We have received several letters from the kind-hearted Saints of America, containing expressions of sympathy and condolence for those who suffered the loss of parents, children, or friends, and property in the storm and high tides of January last. The comforting letters from the conference of Far West District, forwarded by Bro. C. P. Faul, and from the Sunday-school convention and Religio of Des Moines, forwarded by Bro. J. F. Mintun, were translated and read to the brethren, and the gifts of the Sunday-school convention and of the Religio of Des Moines amounting to fourteen dollars and seventy-seven cents American coin was cashed for thirty-five dollars and sixty cents Chili money which was placed in Bishop Metuore's hands to be sent to those who suffered loss. I wish to express in this manner the thanks and gratitude of all the Saints in this mission to all who have so kindly remembered their brethren here in their hour of adversity and afflictions, and assure them that their acts of kindness in thus sending kind words of sympathy and help in this hour of sorrow were appreciated, and will be treasured up by them. I may add that so far as we can learn there is no case of real need among our people here; of course there was loss of relatives and friends which causes much sadness and sorrow among us; and much loss of property—but principally this loss falls on the traders, although some of our brethren lost heavily, and as some will desire to know about what loss the Saints and church have sustained we note the following, which may not be exactly correct. There were seven boats lost belonging to the brethren of Hao, and four belonging to the brethren of Raroia, and one belonging to Tapu of Arutua, and a boat belonging to the governor of Tikahau, was damaged badly but is repaired. She is thirty-four feet long, (the "Evanelia" was thirty-seven feet keel). A great many cocconut-trees were destroyed, but not so many as at first reported here, and many of the trees which are left had the cocoanuts blown off them, which were swept away by the sea, so that one season must pass before much bufa can be made on a few of the islands. Raroia will be the worst sufferer so far as heard from. The trees of the islands to the north and northeast of here were not much damaged by the storm, but an insect is injuring them badly on Makatea, Matahiva, Tikahau, Raroia, Arutua, and Apataki. It is bad also on this island. The boats when new cost from three hundred to seven hundred dollars American money.

Our chapel of Hikueru was probably the largest and best chapel we had in the Tuamotus. It was built and dedicated in the early spring of 1897 at a cost for material of seven hundred eighty dollars American money, the labor being performed by the brethren without cost. It was entirely destroyed, as was also the Bethel and the ends and sides of the stone chapel in Raroia; and the chapel in Takapoto was damaged some, the chapel in Makatea was not injured by the sea it being on higher land than most of the houses there.

There will not be much change in the mode of life of the Tuamotu people, except that they may not eat quite so much foreign food, and perhaps not be quite so extravagant in spending money; but the fish is as abundant as ever, cocoanuts still grow on the trees which are left standing, and flour can still be bought for about twenty to twenty-four dollars per barrel, and other foods in proportion. And these people, so poor in their mode of living, are yet a rich people, but rarely benefited by it because of their very improvident way of life. In two weeks time or less a family can make a ton of bufa, worth now here one hundred ten dollars Chili. But by reason of the storm some will not be able to make much bufa for a year, and ten years must pass from planting to a full crop, although at five years some nuts are gathered. On the diving islands they make from five to seventy-five dollars per day; also on rare occasions obtaining a pearl worth from twenty to four thousand dollars. But with it all they are content to live in a niau, (cocoanut leaf) house. Occasionally the women wear silks and satins, and the men fine Prince Albert suits. Of late several have built houses of grooved and tongued lumber; yet they often prefer to live in a niau house near by. But step by step these people are coming up, much faster than a casual glance might show. If Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith, Bro. and Sr. L. R. Devore, Bro. and Sr. H. Case, and Brn. Gland Rodger and C. W. Wandell could come here now they would doubtless notice many advancements made by this people since they were here, see some of the benefits of their toils and labors, and rejoice, realizing that they who sow good seed beside any waters will reap in joy at the great harvest day. But alas, there is not only an advancement in good, but they are apt scholars in the evils of civilization so apparent here and thus the cares and labors of the missionaries are not reduced, for sin is on the increase, wickedness abounds in the last days are troubled times.

Our conventions and the conference passed off pleasantly and peaceably, less than two hundred being present, principally by reason of the disastrous storm, vessels and boats not being obtainable. There were representatives from the following islands: Makatea, Tikahau Avatoru, Tiputa, Apataki Kaukura, Takapoto, Niau, Anaa, Hao, Tubuai, Raiatea, Mehetia, and of this island, Tautira, Tiona, and Tarona.

The difficulty in getting a correct record of the members of the branches was shown when the reports of branches were read, as Avatoru which reported eighty members on their books, could find but sixty-two, as the present number of Saints living there, while Tiputa reported fifty-two, of whom thirty-seven are residents of that island. In these cases the others are probably numbered with other branches; but another effort will be made by the mission secretary and his assistant this year to get this matter rectified. The conference ordered one thousand copies of the Doctrine and Covenants printed, and by the advice and counsel of the Presidency and the Bishop they will be printed here. This work has already commenced. We are all well and hopeful, and pray that the blessing and peace of the Master may rest upon all the Israel of God.

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. BURTON.

CONDON, Oregon, May 26.

Editors Herald: Seeing nothing from this part of the world lately I write that you may know we were not all killed in the late theological battle with "Campbellism." I was challenged to meet one Elder J. H. Moore, and accepted. He was gentlemanly toward us, but uninformed, so did not put up much of a fight. He tried to have me release him from the second proposition and let one S. O. Pool take his place, remarking that as Mr. Pool and I were to enter the arena at the close of our debate, Pool would ring in the Book of Mormon any way, but I held him to his agreement. This was only a preliminary. They had sent to "Illinois" for one of their best men; in fact one of their elders told me yesterday he was the next best man to Clark Braden. He was surely an apt pupil under Braden. He seemed to want to unbalance me, get me angry; but with the Lord's help I kept cool and smiled at his sarcastic and false accusations. He used seven nights trying to show a church identical with the New Testament church, without calling upon Alexander Campbell, but the last night he admitted Alexander Campbell in such a way he thought his cause was solid, but his Satanic Majesty ruled supreme on my proposition (church identity). Not once did he attempt to answer my argument but yelled Joe Smith, polygamy, Book of Mormon, Sidney Rigdon, Spalding Romance, etc. I simply kept cool and followed my proposition completely. He then used abusive language.

The next night the deputy city marshal went to the house where he was staying and told him he would place him under arrest if he used any more such language, and that night, after I had begun talking, the marshal sent for me to come out. He asked me if it was true that Pool used ungentlemanly language the night before. I told him I would not complain; but if he wanted to know to come and hear. He said he would stay and if he used indecent language he would arrest him; but Pool was very calm the balance of the time. What was the result? Well, the Saints were a great help to me, and are jubilant. I baptized four and several others are very near. Will come in due time. Did I do it? No, I was but a weak mortal in God's hands; to him be all glory. Come up higher, Saints, for God is on our side.

Ever for the truth,

W. A. GOODWIN.

PAPEETE, May 6.

Dear Reader: Our yearly conference is over, and the visiting Saints have all returned to their respective islands, so it is very quiet now about Taronā, and especially in the missionary house, for Bro. and Sr. Gilbert have gone too. They went home with the Niau, not an unpronounceable name Bro. Elbert, just say what the pussy says when she is at the door and wants to come in, only say ne instead of "me," Saints on Nari Salmon's new schooner that is propelled by gasoline when there is no wind.

A few weeks prior to the time of Bro. and Sr. Gilbert's leaving for the Paumotus, they had a great dread of doing so. Their nervous system had sustained a greater shock than they were at first aware of; and when the wind would blow, and the sea roar and beat on the reef, it would fill them with dismal feelings of terror; but duty called them thither,—only a few Saints here and an empty treasury. The printing of the Doctrine and Covenants had commenced, so Joseph must needs stay with it. Therefore they saw no other way open up to them. The Lord was truly very good. Comforting words were spoken to them by the Spirit. Laura had expressed a wish that they could go in the gasoline schooner. She was not in port then, nor did we know when she would be; but a few days before they were ready to go, the gasoline schooner came in and made a very short stay in port, and was going to the island they wished to visit first, so took them as passengers. The weather had been squally for a day or so before they left, with both wind and rain, heavy squalls, too; but notwithstanding that, as the time drew nearer they both became more cheerful and unconcerned about going. We accompanied them to the shore, and had to wait there some time. Laura expressed a wish that it would be calm so that they would have to run by the gasoline. While we waited the wind died away, and they had to get up steam. And for a few days it was beautiful here. We hope it was with them also. We enjoyed their company much while here, and pray that the blessings of God will attend them while at the Paumotus. We have enjoyed their company very much. Am glad she had the opportunity of a good long visit in Papeete, though not glad of all that caused them to come. Traveling in the Paumotus is a hard place for white women. I think sometimes too hard, but the reward will be greater.

Since conference, and until the people left, we have been enjoying a relaxation from the many duties that continuously claimed our time and attention during the past conference year; it being the busiest, I think, with us both, of any one year of our missionary life, but crowned with the satisfaction of having accomplished all that we set out to do. Personally speaking we added a self-imposed task of making simple lessons for the Sunday-school children of Taronā during the past year, as they needed them, besides those printed for the present year, and furnished the class with from four to six copies each month. This was not so easy as writing them out in English. I would struggle a whole day perhaps with a single lesson to get it in such native as Alfred (our best authority on the Tahitian language) could understand. Then he would correct it, and I make the corrected copies. I also furnished the children of Niau, while visiting there, with lessons for eight months of the year.

But to return, we had a good conference season, with good spiritual meetings, with interesting testimonies manifesting the Father's watchcare over this people, and their faith in the operations of the Spirit. And not only at conference time, but the prayer-meetings have continued to be spiritual and encouraging. We are pleased to say that there was no sickness or death on the grounds, and we are proud to record that there was no occasion for an elders' court, neither was there for an open confession, or seeking forgiveness of the church. No offenses were found against the law of God or man. A more promising condition of things than has obtained at a conference gathering at any previous occasion. Heretofore two cases on trial have been the least known since we have been at the islands. This degree of righteousness has not been brought about by one missionary or two, but is the long-awaited-for fruits of much labor bestowed by all.

We were also much pleased a few evenings ago to learn from Alfred Sanford (our branch president) of the good name Taronā and her residents have among the city officials. A French policeman remarked in a recent conversation with Alfred Sanford, that Taronā had the best record of any settlement in Papeete, or the outlying suburbs. That there had never been an arrest of any one belonging to the place, or any call for police interference in any way. "Taronā" was not on the police books, neither was there any drunkenness, swearing, bad conduct, or quarreling seen or heard on the place, and it was the only place in their jurisdiction of which he could say so much. For all these things we thank God and take courage. It is pleasing also to know that the governing officials here recognize in some of our elders qualifications to hold government offices. Besides policemen, six of our people are governors in the various islands in the Paumotus. There may be more than six; but those we know of. Three of this number have held that office for years, while the other three are of more recent appointment. It is correct, however, to state that the governor of Niau (youngest son of Pohemiti) is not at present a member of the church, though is recognized as one of our people, and it is his full intent to return to the church and bring his pretty wife with him as soon as his domestic relations are settled in legal form. This, both he and his wife expressed to us while at Niau last year. Hoerau, the governor of Tikahau, united with the church a long time ago, though for the past six years he has stood aloof, yet was never cut off. But the storm and his losses in consequence—that of one of the largest and finest boats in the Paumotus—aroused him to a sense of his duty, and he came before the church and confessed his backslidings and was restored to fellowship.

The excitement of the storm, and its immediate effects, are wearing off, and our people are settling down again to their usual cheerfulness and way of living. Losses set very lightly on this people, except those who lost their boats or their children; for these they grieve, but they live about the same. Very few indeed measure their outlay by their means or what they can pay for, but by what the merchants will let them have on credit. One of our refugee sisters from Hikueru, and another from another island were dressed in lovely soft, white silk at the evening entertainment, their "oaqa" at conference time.

It is a continuous diamond cut diamond game between the natives and the merchants, or traders as they are called. The latter are entirely dependent upon the natives for all the "bufa" and shell that they export. For though the government controls the opening and closing of the lakes, the shell is the property of the natives only, not of any individual but of whoever dives and gets the shell. White men are not allowed to dive. The natives know this, and they know too that they are not dealt honestly with. They know that they are not paid a fair price for what they sell, and are charged an unfair price for what they buy. So it does not trouble them in the least to be in debt a year or two in advance for their living. In fact the traders like to keep them in debt to secure their trade, but they are on the alert to patronize whoever treats them the best. It happens sometimes that when they get too heavily involved and the trader presses them any for payment they leave him and go over to another, and if they have no land there is nothing to get, so they get even with the traders once in a while. Another advantage the natives have is that of living on any island they choose. There is always one or more diving places open for all to go who wish, but Hikueru was the richest of all.

Takaroa was open shortly after Hikueru was closed up, and Anaa will be open in October. The loss of the merchants' books will give many the opportunity to commence anew; making them better off than they were before. Another advantage with them is, that their real necessities are very few. The food that they subsist on mostly is free and grows all the year around, and the needful clothing at those islands where no white people dwell is very little. They can rebuild houses of the niau, for though the trees have fallen the branches are still on them. Of course the niau houses will not be as good as their frame houses, but Sr. Devore seldom had any other to live in while here, except when in Papeete. But of late, say the past two years, the natives have been indulging in so many extravagant luxuries recently imparted, the bicycle prominent among them, that those who can not get them feel very poor. Joseph has had letters from nearly all the islands since the storm, and none speak of distress or want except those at Raroia. Their island fared the worst of any on which the Saints lived, and we believe they are the most in need. And yet the brother's letter was amusing in one sense. It was the brother in whose house we lived while Bro. Smith was at that island, and who took a great fancy to our silver knives and forks. He says: "Our houses are all broken down, we have no clothes [they don't call a pareu clothes] nor any good food. Send you us some coffee and sugar and send me six silver knives and forks. If you have no money to pay for them, send you to the land of America and get them." Of course Metuaore and the Saints here had a good laugh over the letter, to think that his most urgent request or desire was silver knives and forks, for which he had no use.

They have rebuilt their niau chapel, and all the Saints live in it. There are few of them left. It is a very difficult matter to help the people here, on account of their very liberal customs, and numerous "fetii" (relations) who would swarm around them, and live off of them till every mouthful was gone. It would not matter whether those relations were in the church or not, or whether they were needy or not. For example, when we went from Takaroa to Arutua with Tapu he took with him ten pounds of coffee, and a generous quantity of sugar to sweeten it. That coffee lasted them just three mornings. There was none on the island, and the news of his having some spread quickly, and every native on the Islands came to drink coffee with him, and they did not drink sparingly either. It is not counted any out of the way for the many to thus prey upon one, and devour his substance, but should he ever refuse to give even to the last mouthful, it would be a reproach that he would not be able to live down. So we can not help the few, as we would often like to, without helping the many. We know that any trading vessel will take the natives free of charge to any diving rahui whenever they want to go, and if they really take hold with a will and work, I think they need not suffer.

SR. EMMA BURTON.

"Report of the British Isles Bishopric."

Under the above heading, in the HERALD for February 25, 1903, on page 191, there appeared the following:

"We believe it to be the duty of the missionary staff, whose families are supported by the Bishopric of these Islands, to report faithfully to us whatever moneys they may receive from the Saints, over and above the legal allowance we pay to their wives and families, according to the instruction of the Presiding Bishop of the church. The statement is also made that none of the missionaries so far, have reported to us [the bishopric]."

From the above, the readers of the HERALD will conclude that the missionaries in the British Isles have treated with contempt the instructions of the Presiding Bishop, and the bishopric of the British Isles. I am sorry that such statements should be sent broadcast all over the world. They do injustice to the missionaries and could be avoided, if the bishopric had informed the missionaries of the instructions of the General or Presiding Bishop. We are only about ten missionaries, and a postal card or a statement made at the British Isles conference held last August that the missionaries of these Isles were to report to the home bishopric, would meet with the approval I believe of all the missionaries in this land. No desire on my part (and I believe I speak for my colaborers) to treat our home bishopric with disrespect, or to ignore the instructions of the Presiding Bishop. We are subject to the powers that be, and cheerfully will we honor them in their calling at home or abroad.

My reasons for not reporting to the British Isles bishopric, and I presume that the other missionaries have the same reasons, is, first, I did not understand that I was to do so, from the fact that I received from the Presiding Bishop the blank form that is annually sent the missionaries to fill out and return. This I did. Now if it was the instructions of the Presiding Bishop to report to the British Isles bishopric, why send this blank to me? It is plain to my mind that the British and Presiding Bishoprics are to blame for the failure on the part of the missionaries not reporting to the home bishop. I am perfectly willing to report to either or both, so let us have an understanding along this line.

Again, "we further believe that all moneys sent here from the Presiding Bishop of the church or any other person in America, or elsewhere, in aid of the work here, should be paid through the bishopric here so that a proper and official account may be kept by the bishopric who alone are responsible to the church, for the conducting of the financial business of the church in the territory over which they have been appointed to preside."

I indorse the above, if money is sent for the use of the work in general; but I can not see why any person in the States can not send a missionary money if he so wish, for the benefit of himself and the work in the part he is laboring, without sending it to the bishopric. It has been the privilege of the members as far back as 1860 to send to missionaries in various fields, means to help them in aid of the work; and I think that they should still have that privilege, especially when they have paid into the hands of the Bishopric, their tithing and free-will offering.

The fact that the Bishopric sends blank forms to the missionaries annually to report all moneys received by them from Saints and agents, is in itself evidence that persons may hand or send to the missionaries means to help them in carrying on the work. And while it is true that the Bishopric is responsible for all moneys coming into their hands, it is also true that the missionaries are held responsible and are expected to give an account of all moneys received and expended; so the statement as a whole, that the Bishopric alone is responsible is not correct.

Last year there was a personal appeal made to some in the States for help for the work here in Wales. Some responded. The missionary in charge, Bro. G. T. Griffiths, turned the money over to the Bishop's agent, Bro. H. Ellis, and he has paid it out as the calls have come. Others in this land gave to Bro. Ellis what they could towards the support of the work outside of their tithes. Here in Wales we have had to pay for the board and lodgings of some of the missionaries and the above received from parties in the States and here has been applied. I have received from loved ones in the States means that has helped me in my work, which if I had not received some part of the work done by me, would not be done. The branch here in Llanelly received from a brother in Pittsburg ten dollars sent by Bro. F. Blair of the HERALD Office. I can not see why the Saints in America and elsewhere can not send, if they wish, to different parts of the world, without troubling the Bishop, means to the missionary, when, as I have already stated, they have paid their tithing.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

Suggestions Upon Letter of Elder William Lewis.

First. All missionaries in the British Isles Mission should make their individual reports annually to the Presiding Bishop of the church the same as missionaries in any other mission or district of the church. These reports are kept on file, and form the basis of the accounts with elder's in the Bishop's annual report. All missionaries are looked after by the Presiding Bishop of the church either directly or through other bishops, or by agents appointed by him in districts and missions.

Second. It is proper for the Presiding Bishop to send or receive moneys to or from any district or mission of the church for maintaining and carrying on the church work and the proper and official account of the same is kept by the Presiding Bishop and due report made thereof.

Third. It is proper for any person who desires to do so to contribute to any missionary to aid such in his work, and such missionary when he receives more than is necessary for his use in his work should turn the surplus over to the Bishop at once. This he can do by sending to the Presiding Bishop or turning over to the local bishop in the mission field where he is laboring who will report the same in his annual report to the Presiding Bishop.

Objection is properly made against missionaries sending out and making personal appeals for help to be sent directly to them. This is the work of the bishops, and the missionary looks to the bishop when the people, or Saints, do not give the "cup of cold water," or "meat and clothing" as they should.

Fourth. The law when properly carried out need cause no friction nor jealousy between missionaries and bishops, nor between bishops themselves, as the church is one not many, and the world is not so large that the organization effected by our Lord will not reach every part, or fail to reach every worker, supplying fully and effectually every need.

Very respectfully in the gospel hope,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Editors Herald: As I read from day to day of the terrible floods and disasters of different kinds that are taking place in different parts of this great globe, how forcibly it impresses upon the mind that the end of time is fast approaching. What greater warnings can we have than these perilous times we are living in? Just a little while, and this great earth will be in its purified state. Still there are so many people who heedlessly pass these things by, as if they were every-day occurrences and of no note whatever. We can see those around us, with an indifferent air, upon whose heads the great white frost has fallen, and the sun with its intense heat can never melt it away. This denotes to us that the seed-time has been, the ripening time has come and ere a few days pass by the great harvest will have taken place. Then there are those who are just at the noon-time of life, reaching forth and grasping for all the pleasures of the world.

We read in the different papers of the day how ardent the reverends of different denominations are plotting, to keep their congregations together, and especially the young. What are to become of such? Oh if we all as Latter Day Saints can only live to let our lights shine forth, we may sooner or later rescue some poor soul that has wandered long years in total darkness. " 'Tis a glorious thing to be, in the light." While none of us know how long our sojourn in this life is to be, it behooves us to be up and doing while it is yet day, for the night comes when man's work is done.

Work for the night is coming,
Work through the sunny noon;
Fill brightest hours with labor,
Rest comes sure and soon.
Give every flying minute
Something to keep in store;
Work, for the night is coming
When man works no more.

The great debt is facing us one and all, and sooner or later it will have to be paid. So let us each one strive to leave behind us a record, that as its pages are looked o'er and o'er again, by those that are left, after we have departed, that in that book may be found the history of one that has passed on before.

Ever striving to live a life worthy to be called a Saint, I remain,
SR. IDA L. JONES.

BLAINE, Washington, May 17.

Editors Herald: Having recently moved here from Michigan, we find that we like our new home very much indeed. This town is lovely. It is located at the very line which separates British Columbia and the United States. It overlooks beautiful Bellingham Bay on the west and the snow-capped mountains of the Cascade Range on the east. The town is built on a plain which stretches away from the bay, and the streets are level and pleasant, running towards the water in two different directions. There are large salmon and crab canneries, also two large mills here, one making shingles and lumber, and the other only shingles.

There are no Saints here, but we have made the acquaintance of some very nice people. A few days after Bro. Hower went to work in the shingle-mill one of the other workmen came to him and asked him if he were not a Christian, and he said, "Yes, I try to be." Then the man said, "Well, I thought you must be, for you do not get angry and swear when things go wrong." The man is of Christian Science faith, and a very nice man. We have talked with him about the gospel and compared it with his faith a little, but he is hard to convince. I wish I could tell you all of our conversation, but it would occupy too much space. It was very interesting to me for I love to talk upon the gospel. The more it is unfolded the more beautiful it becomes. How gratifying it is to know one's religious faith will stand the most rigid cross-examination. We exchanged church literature with him and hope he may find something which will give him some light, for he seems like one mesmerized as regards spiritual things.

It seems always to be our lot to live where there are no Saints; but we find sweet solace in the church books, HERALD, and the dear little home paper, Glad Tidings.

We noticed in the report of General Conference that several traveling missionaries were appointed to these northwestern states, and if any of you ever come this way just remember that Bro. and Sr. Hower live in Blaine, and they will be very, very glad to see you. Do not think there has ever been any preaching in this place, so maybe there will be a chance for a new opening here after a while.

We would like the address of the elder who is appointed to this part of the state and if there are Saints living near us we would like to hear from them also.

SEQUATCHIE COLLEGE, Tennessee, May 26.

Editors Herald: I came to my field of labor the 7th of May and have been very busy trying to get the work before the people. As yet I can see but little interest. I came to this place the 22d, began meetings the next night to a small crowd, perhaps thirty, increasing all the time. Last night there was a large crowd out.

I am having a new experience of late in missionary work. The first night of my meeting there was a lady preacher out to hear me. She drove her horses and buggy up near the window and remained sitting in her buggy during the services. Her presence outside caused some little confusion in the congregation, but I was soon able to get the attention of the people again. Next day she came back and took her seat near the door. After I was through preaching she rose up and began to tell the people that she had been led astray a few times and made to believe water baptism was essential to salvation, but she was out of all that muddle now, for she had lately been taught by the Holy Ghost that water baptism was not essential to salvation and she could prove it by the Bible, and read where it says by one spirit are we all baptized into one body. She said she agreed with Elder Snow that the true church of Christ ought to have all the officers in it that were spoken of in the Bible. Then she named all of them just about as we do. She said water baptism was all right under the law of Moses, but it was nailed to the cross when Christ came. She then made a fine argument showing that the New Testament was the will of the testator and was binding after the death of the testator; it was simply a deed, and no one could prove by that deed that water baptism was taught after Christ. When she finished I invited her to come back and attend my meetings, and if she liked I would give her one half of the time to defend her faith. So last night she was on the stand ready to use the first half of the time. I opened the meeting and introduced her as the speaker and stated that it had been agreed that the sister would use one half the time. She arose and said she did not understand Elder Snow timing the Holy Ghost; that she spoke by the Holy Ghost, and was not going to time it either; she would speak as long as she wanted to. Here I asked her pardon, stating that I was only timing her and not the Holy Ghost. Well, it would be too lengthy to tell all that was said, but her main effort was to do away with water baptism and to prove that it would not do to depend on man preachers, for all were corrupt, none good, not one, none of them had the Holy Ghost, but she had it and that when any one had the Holy Ghost they could speak in tongues and prophesy. She said she could prophesy, then began to try to tell something in the future, such as the coming of Christ. So the Holy Ghost was teaching her all the time. She knew the principles Paul referred to in the sixth chapter of Hebrews were dead works, nailed to the cross when Christ was crucified; no longer in force, we had no use for them. She occupied forty minutes. I shall not attempt to tell how I met her arguments, for it will be useless to do so with Latter Day Saints. But I talked forty minutes, and while I was talking she did more talking and squirming than she did when she was in the stand. One man remarked at the close of the meeting that she was only helping to hill up the work Snow was engaged in. I can not tell yet what the results will be, as it is my first experience with a woman preacher. However, I feel well in all my efforts. She is to come again to-night, so I understand. I shall continue to treat her fairly, and let the people judge for themselves as to where the truth is. This same woman went some thirty-five or forty miles last year to get a preacher to come here and tear down "Snow's work," as she calls it, and when he came he did not prove to be the man she was looking for. Perhaps this is one reason why she has lost faith in all man preachers, and has concluded to come against the work herself.

She gave us a new thought. She says woman led men into darkness or sin, and that they were going to lead them out. So a hint to the wise is sufficient. Let our women catch on and remember that we were in the lead the last we heard from her, and my recollection is that she was the first one to set up a standard of purity anyway, when God compared his church to a woman. That settles it as to the man being the standard. So take courage and lead out in the proper directions, setting up the standard of purity and righteousness and we men will only be glad to fall in line and follow on as long as we can see the beacon light. But you must remember that we have not forgotten Eve yet, and if you want us to follow on, raise high your light that we may see over Eve's head.

I must say that the last conference at Independence was a source of much strength to me. Before I went to the conference I dreamed of seeing the conference assemble. The President and his counselors together with the Presiding Patriarch were the first ones to speak. After they spoke I was commanded to watch. This was the end of the dream. At the conference the ones referred to above were the first ones to speak. When they got through the dream came to my mind and I remembered the command to watch, and so I did watch till the close of the conference. As a result of my watching I am willing to say to the readers of the HERALD my faith was made strong in the above men, which was lacking to some extent before. I am now sure the above men are filling their offices according to the best of their ability. Then I watched the movements of the quorums. There I could plainly see the hand of God ruling, and in the joint meeting of the Seventies there was a unity of spirit that gave me great strength. I formed a love for my quorum that I never experienced before. Now I know as never before what it is to love the brethren. I have entered my field this year with more courage than ever before. Do not understand me that in my watching I never saw any stumbling-blocks, for I did. But they only help to make me stronger in the faith when I see the cloyen foot of the adversary creeping out here and there to try to prevent the advancement of the latter-day work.

Brethren, I have seen for years the necessity of this church standing closely by the written word. Revelation is all right and binding on the church, when it comes through the proper head. All others to be taken on their merits. It is best to be a little careful, for I have seen some manifestations of the Spirit that did not harmonize with the written word, and they come through men who were honest and thought they had the Spirit of the Master.

I am traveling alone, but I am to meet with Bro. W. R. Smith, next week; he will be here in East Tennessee to-day. I am to meet him at Jasper as soon as I close here. I have traveled with him before and I got along with him all right, except that we would argue sometimes pretty warmly over the use of tea and coffee. I thought he was too strong on the use of tea and coffee.

Will say in conclusion that there are many things to hinder the progress of the work here. I have but little faith in accomplishing the amount of work that is required here to open up the field until things take a change. To my mind this field is hardly ripe. If it ever gets ripe there are a few probably that will come into the church here at this place soon, but only a few. Shall labor on and trust God to give the increase. C. L. SNOW.

Editors Herald: Seeing so many deaths and trouble caused by heart trouble, I give my experience. I have always had heart trouble; but for a few years past they always give cayenne pepper, mixed with sugar, and wet enough to make thick or heavy molasses of it. Put in the mouth an eighth or sixteenth of a teaspoonful. Repeat if not enough until the desired amount is administered. It will give action to heart when all else fails. It is also a diphtheria cure. If it burns too much put sugar in the mouth. If pepper is put well back in mouth, it does not burn much.

We also give the pepper to stock, even for an attack of pink eye. Some here died from it, and others went blind. We have lost none, and had but very little. A great many cattle and horses died during the severe winter here, but we escaped so far.

Your sister, MARY E. TURNER.

OGDEN, Utah, May 30.

Editors Herald: The 6th to the 21st of this month were spent by us visiting and preaching to the Saints of the branches at Salt Lake City, Sandy, Pleasant Grove, and Provo. We enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit of the Master on the trip. At present we are preparing to take up the campaign of street work for the summer. We have secured a gospel surney and horse and hope to commence the work the latter part of the coming week. We have also secured a new "baby organ" and our family will assist us in this work. We hope also to have help from the local force of the priesthood and singers wherever we may be operating. We desire to order our work in the way and places where it will do the most good for the district. We trust that the Saints and friends will not forget us in that work. We are still alone except for the help of our family, but hope soon to meet the rest of the force assigned to this field, or at least to know that they are in the field here.

At the present writing there is some sickness among the Saints of the district. Night before last was spent at the bedside of our aged brother, James Weaver of Layton, Utah. He is very low with dropsy and heart trouble also a little asthma combined with his other ailments. It looks as though he would soon be called home. He is in the faith and prepared for the change.

To-morrow the Sunday-school here will hold special exercises for Children's Day at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and we expect to speak in Salt Lake City at half past seven in the evening.

With our trip to Layton the evening of the 21st we had an example of the opening of the way by the overruling power of the Spirit even under seemingly disadvantageous circumstances for the sowing of the gospel seed. When we arrived at the depot to take our train that was scheduled to start for Salt Lake City, at ten minutes past seven we found it was late. Well, we got tired of waiting in the depot so inquired of the depot master and were directed to a reclining chair car that would go with our train and so found a chair and prepared to take things as easy as possibly. Others were soon coming in trying to do the same thing and we soon found that we had for near neighbors a young capitalist and his family consisting of wife, two children, sister, and father. Upon giving him our card he inquired whether we had embraced the gospel in Utah. We told him that we were from Iowa and called his attention to our card once more and we were soon engaged discussing polygamy, "obey counsel," "sealing," "tithing," etc., and even though the conductor forgot to visit our car or permit us to have an opportunity to get off at Layton but carried us on to the city and then brought us back after midnight, we felt that it was all right. And our friend expressed a determination to see and hear more of our people saying, "You talk good sense and logic and one can get some good from hearing you." And his wife said, "I do not know much about our church, but I know of polygamy and I hate it." They were going to attend the exposition at St. Louis soon now and promised to look up our people there, also in Salt Lake City upon their return.

Well, we are at work out here and enjoying a portion of the good Spirit in that work. Praying for Zion's prosperity, I am as ever,
A. M. CHASE.

ROLFE, Iowa, May 25.

Editors Herald: A few Saints and friends congregated at the home of Mr. and Sr. B. Hancher in Rolfe yesterday at three o'clock in the afternoon, where I preached to them for an hour. About two hours after services a heavy rainstorm and cyclone struck the town, killing a Chinaman and destroying about one hundred thousand dollars worth of property. The interesting town of about one thousand people is a pitiable sight. Truly, "Men's hearts are failing them for fear looking for the things coming upon the earth."

Conference Minutes.

Society Islands.—Conference was called to order by J. F. Burton, prayer by Metuaore. The following officers were elected: J. F. Burton president, J. W. Gilbert and D. M. Pohemiti assistants, Pohemiti and Turatahi secretaries for the Tahitian and J. W. Gilbert for the English language. J. F. Burton made some statements as to why the conference was convened at Papeete instead of at the place to which it was adjourned. That that place had been destroyed by a terrible storm and the chapel at that place was swept away. That a few missionaries and church officials such as could be gathered together at Papeete after the storm, decided to convene the conference at Papeete, as that was the only place that they were sure of not having been destroyed at the time, the time also being so short that we could not wait for intelligence from other places and send notices to them in time for the conference. A communication was read from Raroia stating that 24 lives were lost during the late storm at that place and that 15 were lost at Takume, an island near there. Reports of elders were read as follows: J. F. Burton, preached 52 times, baptized 2, administered 100 times, and visited the island of Niau, also the islands of Makatea, Raroia and Kaukura en route. J. W. Gilbert, preached 89 times, baptized 3, confirmed 3, administered 134 times, ordained one, and married one couple. "This is not all of my labor, the portion done during the fore part of the conference year being recorded in a book that was swept away in the great storm at Hikuero. I labored in the islands of Tahiti, Makatea, Raroia, Kaukura, Aratika, and Hikuero, acting as president of the Tahiti division. While at Hikuero the island was swept by the most terrific hurricane that has ever been known in the history of the South Sea Islands, completely destroying every building, washing the whole village into the lagoon, uprooting the coconut-trees or breaking them to the ground, and killing 377 of the inhabitants. The whole island was completely submerged for a time to about waist deep on the highest place, the waves coming in from the ocean and the wind also blowing the water of the lagoon right up on the land from the opposite side at the same time. Those that were saved had to find the highest points or climb trees. Wife and I climbed a tree and were in it for about three hours. After the storm there was a dearth for fresh water. After three days I besought the governor to give me a company of men to help me and I would make a condenser and distill water for all the people. He was skeptical at first, but when he drank a bowl full of water that we condensed from a small one we had constructed, he gave me the men I wanted, and in five hours we had the fresh water running into the bucket. We made sufficient to do the 900 people, and the governor said as much in his official report, but gave me no credit for any of it. After seven days it rained and ended the necessity of distilling water, and on the eighth day the steamer Excelsior came to the rescue and took the people away, and we then went to Papeete."

Tibuta present number 52, number last report 54, net loss 2. Several requests for ordination were read, and a committee was appointed to investigate and report to the conference. Teuira, Metuaore, and Tufaunui were the committee. J. F. Burton reported that he had prepared and had published during the year a pamphlet containing the counsel of the Patriarch and the minutes of his conferences. That the committee appointed to prepare Sunday-school lesson book had done their work, and the booklet had also been published. That the bishop had prepared a blank receipt book, which was also published, as follows: 600 of the Patriarch's books, $71.50. 600 Sunday-school books, $114. 50 blank receipt books, $40. Total $225.50. Money paid to printer $147.50. Money on hand for the same purpose, $8.10. Money yet lacking, $70.40. On motion it was decided to have 1,000 copies of the Doctrine and Covenants published, and to sell them at $1.50 each, French money.

By vote Anaa was the place chosen for the convening of the next conference, April 6, 1904.

The committee of investigation on ordinations reported, recommending the following for ordination: Tane, of Niau, to the office of priest; Taihia, of Avatoru, to the office of priest; Moerai, of Makatea, to the office of priest; Atahi, of Avatoru, to the office of teacher. On motion it was decided to ordain forthwith those who were present, Tane and Atahi. A hymn was sung and prayer offered by J. F. Burton, and J. W. Gilbert and Pohemiti were appointed to ordain. The former ordained Tane, and the latter ordained Atahi. Adjourned to 8 o'clock April 8.

April 8, J. F. Burton in the chair. Bishop's financial report was read and referred to a committee for auditing. Tuteirihia, Tufaunui, and Tetuarere were the committee. The appointments for the ensuing year were read as follows: J. W. Gilbert president of the Fakarava Division with Pou as assistant. D. M. Pohemiti president of the Tahiti Division with Taneterau as assistant. Teuira president of the Raroia District. John Hawkins president of the Kaukura District. Metuaaro president of the Manihi District. Tuteirihia president of the Anaa District. Tetaku president of the Raiatea District. Kehauri president of the Tupuai District. Varoa president of the Tahiti District. Tuteirihia a Pamanu, Taruia, Titi, missionaries to Raroia District. Maevatua, Tepiki, Teiho, Rere, missionaries to Raiatea. Tapuni and Vaearea missionaries to Kaukura District. Pori and Taihia, missionaries to Anaa. Turatahi missionary in the Fakarava and Tahiti Divisions. Teariarotaha, missionary to Tupuai. The auditing committee on Bishop's report reported the books correct. The report was from December 31, 1901, to April 1, 1903. Receipts, $1,189.15; expenditures, $1,060.55; balance on hand April 1, $128.60.

The following report from the Sixth Quorum of Elders was read: Report to the president of the conference of the labors of the local elders and also of the missionaries of the Sixth Quorum of Elders, April 3, 1903, at Papeete, Tahiti: We have held four sessions, 26 members being present. The quorum chose by vote of hand Bro. Teuira as president pro tem. The quorum has lost four by death and one by expulsion. Two new names have been received as members of the quorum, and there are yet six vacancies. The quorum has labored during the past year as follows: Sermons, 999; assisted, 23 times; baptisms, 26; confirmations, 44; ordinations, 3; children blessed, 24; administrations to sick, 467; consecrations of oil, 13; elders' courts, 17; administrations of sacrament, 64; marriages, 4. Dues received at this session, $16. Bro. Gilbert came into our meetings and instructed the quorum as to the real work to be done by an elders' quorum, referring to Doctrine and Covenants 104:41 as outlining some things to be done, and citing section 85:21 in regard to the duty of the president. The following are some of the questions we have discussed in our meetings: What is hell, and where is it? What points in the confirmation prayer must not be left unsaid? What special things in ordination prayers must not be omitted? What will obviate adultery among members of the church? Who was successor to James, the Lord's brother, in the presidency of the church? Which is first, faith or evidence? (The last question may seem obvious to those who read only the English Bible, but in the Tahitian language the same word, ite, is used for "evidence" and "knowledge," hence the endless discussions arising from its use.) Written April 7, 1903. Teuira, president pro tem; Pofatu, secretary.

The spiritual authorities in America were all sustained by vote. The president of the Island Mission was sustained by vote. The secretary of the mission, D. M. Pohemiti, was sustained by vote. Assistant secretary of the mission, Turatahi, was sustained by vote. The bishop, Metuaore, and his counselors, were sustained by vote. The presidents of all the divisions and districts were sustained by vote. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Saints in America for their words of condolence and sympathy, and their contribution for the assistance of those who suffered and lost their loved ones in the awful disaster at Hikuera.

Adjourned as per previous order, benediction by Kehauri. J. F. Burton, president; J. W. Gilbert, secretary.

Eastern Iowa.—Conference convened at Green Valley, near Onslow, Iowa, May 23, at 10 a. m., president Warren Turner in chair, Florence Green, secretary. Florida.—Conference convened the Santa Rosa Branch May 9 and 10, 1903, S. D. Allen presiding, Asa E. Bailey clerk. Ministry reporting: W. J. Booker, G. T. Chute, E. Powell, W. A. West, S. D. Allen, William Moroni Hawkins, J. H. Johnston, Asa E. Bailey. Branches reporting: Santa Rosa and Calhoun. Bishop's agent reported: Received since last report $15, paid out $15. The district president having sent a teacher into Santa Rosa Branch to labor in connection with the priest, Moroni Hawkins, with some transgressors the subject was taken up and discussed. Much opposition was manifested but the committee and its work were finally indorsed and the items of labor ordered preserved for the use of the elders' court. The committee was ordered discharged however before its work was complete. There being many cases in the district to come before an elders' court the following elders were appointed to Convention Minutes.

South Sea Islands.—The Sunday-school convention convened at Papeete, Tahiti, April 10, 1903, with assistant superintendent, Emma Burton, in the chair. The following officers for the convention were chosen by acclamation: J. W. Gilbert chairman, Emma Burton assistant, Teuira secretary, Turatahi assistant secretary, Laura Gilbert foreign secretary. Assistant superintendent, Sr. Emma Burton, reported having taught the school at Taronā and visited the one at Niau, and assisted them in making simple lessons for the children and teaching in those two schools. She also reported that she had prepared six simplified lessons for the children, corresponding with the last six lessons in the book for the older people, with the same lesson texts and golden texts. These lessons have been printed by the use of the mimeograph and are to be used during the ensuing year. She had received and reported Christmas offerings from Niau, Kaukura, Arutua, Hao, Amanu, and Manahi. The names had been sent to America and printed in the Blue Hope. She urged the Sunday-schools to send in their offerings by the last of December, so the names can be sent to the Hope in time for publication. Sr. Gilbert reported that she and Bro. Gilbert had visited seven regular Sunday-schools and had organized one temporary one at the diving island, Aratika. That they had helped these schools in learning the new order of lessons, and had inaugurated teacher's meetings in all the schools visited. That they had found the work in a fair condition and a good interest manifested. That the natives had shown a great deal of determination in mastering these lessons, which are the first they have ever had with no printed answers. (An examination was held one evening during the conference, in which seven schools took part, and sixteen questions were asked each school; none answered less than fourteen, and the highest mark given was fifteen and one third. The questions were taken from the first six lessons in the new book, without any previous preparation, except what they may have prepared after the announcement was made concerning the examination, which was only a day or two. A very lively interest was taken in this examination by all, and all were pleased with the results, and we missionaries were surprised to see how well they answered the questions.) She reported also that she had prepared six simplified lessons for the children to be used in connection with the first six lessons in the book for the older people with the same lesson texts and golden texts, and with from three to four review questions for each lesson for the superintendent to ask the children in the general review of each lesson. Partial reports were read from the different schools as follows: Kaukura reported 72 scholars; Makatea 33; Taronā 35; Ayatoru 40; Tiputa 22; Tikahau 35; Niau 65. Of the other schools in this mission not reporting, most had been hindered by the late storm, being on the islands that sustained the greatest damage. Sr. Burton gave a good talk encouraging the workers for the year to come, urging them all to participate in the Christmas offerings, and showed them their names in the Blue Hope, (which was afterwards read by the secretary). Bro. Gilbert translated Sr. Walker's little note to this mission in the Hope, and read it. It was received with evident pleasure. Bro. Burton spoke words of admonition and encouragement. Sr. Gilbert made remarks urging all to move along in all the departments of the church work, and not to give all the time to one department to the detriment of the others, as she had seen in one branch where they had carried the Religio work to a great extreme, holding the sessions till the small hours of the morning, to the great detriment of other meetings. A motion prevailed that all schools should make a report January 1 and send to the foreign secretary so they can be condensed and forwarded to America in time for the General Convention there. It was decided by vote that the Sunday-school should pay one half of the mimeograph debt, which was $17.50. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Tapu general superintendent; Sr. Emma Burton assistant; Sr. Laura Gilbert second assistant; Teuira secretary; Emma Burton foreign secretary. On motion Anaa was chosen as the place for the next convention, April, 1904. Laura S. Gilbert, Secretary.

Eastern Iowa.—Convention met at Green Valley, near Onslow, Iowa, May 22, 1903, at 2:15 p. m., Jesse F. Rulon, district superintendent, in charge, Florence Green secretary. Schools reporting: Fulton, Clinton, Green Valley, Muscatine. Two new schools were reported organized in district, one at Osterdock, one at Waterloo. Adjourned to meet at Waterloo, September 4, 1903.

If we seek the oldest civic building in the United States, we shall find ourselves in the quaint old adobe palace of the governors in Santa Fé, New Mexico. This long, low structure, in the second oldest city of the United States, has been the seat of government under the Spanish, Mexican, and American régimes for nearly three hundred years. It now contains the museum of the New Mexico Historical Society, of which the Honorable L. Bradford Prince, a native New Yorker and former governor of New Mexico, is president. Governor Prince considers this "the most historic building in the United States."

The oldest church ruins are the neglected remains of the San Miguel Mission in Santa Fé; and the long line of Spanish missions in California, beginning with that of San Diego affords in a very picturesque series further reminders of the Spanish pioneers.

For the oldest relic of Protestant Church architecture we must leave the region of the Spanish pathfinders and stand upon a little island lying up against the left bank of the James River, Virginia, about thirty miles above Hampton Roads. Here at Jamestown, where English-speaking America was born and Protestant worship first established in the New World, in 1607, stands a solitary and impressive church tower, built of brick, about thirty-six feet high and eighteen feet square, looped in the third story for firearms. The church of which this is a part was begun about 1639. The ruin was donated by Mrs. Louise J. Barney to the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities.—Edward Hagaman Hall, in Charitauquan for June.

KIPLING ON MORMONISM.

In our Selected Article column this week we have given space to an extract from one of Kipling's works. In 1889, in passing through the United States on his way from India to England, he spent some time seeing parts of the United States. Of what he saw, he wrote, and what he wrote he sent to an Indian newspaper, the Pioneer, and what he sent the Pioneer published as a series of letters from the great war correspondent. These letters were afterwards compiled, and Kipling's book, "American Notes," was issued.

His travel across the continent took him through Salt Lake City, and an unlooked for delay gave him opportunity to give "Mormonism" what he probably considered a thorough investigation. How thorough that investigation was our readers may judge.

One thing very evident in reading the article is that Kipling is a man of exaggerated statements, and as such is unreliable. No doubt this exaggeration comes to some extent from his long experience as a newspaper correspondent and toadying to the public's proclivity for the sensational in news. That it is not all due to his experience in newspaper work may be believed by some. Be that as it may, our reading of Kipling's notes on "Mormonism" has disposed us to take his statements on things in general with a grain of allowance.

ZIONISTS ON RUSSIAN MASSACRE.

The Zionist movement has received a new impetus from the massacre of the Jews in Russia. At some meetings of Zionists held in Pittsburg, on June 7, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the recent barbarous outrages in Kishinev and other Russian cities which have shocked humanity have again exposed to view the generally weak and defenseless position of the Jewish nation; and,

Whereas these massacres have proved that the continued settlement of the Jewish people in Russia has been and is attended with serious personal danger and unnecessary and futile martyrdom, thus demonstrating the need for action other than that of providing relief after such unfortunate occurrences; and,

Whereas the tendency of the nations is to restrict immigration.

Therefore this convention reaffirming the Zionist principles, calls upon every Jewish congregation and community throughout the United States and upon every individual Jew to give heed to the piteous appeals of our people, and in the common interests of

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."
 Careless conduct on the part of a minister may ruin the effects of his best sermons. A minister's life should bear the impress of the teachings of the gospel.

humanity and the particular necessities of the Jewish people to help end their present plight by affording the Zionist movement the cordial and financial support which will enable it to achieve the purpose for which it is organized—the settlement of the Jewish people in Palestine.

Greetings and letters from eminent Jews of the world were read before the meetings. Doctor Max Nordeau sent the following from Barritz:

I trust you will continue to develop into a power and to the benefit of the Jewish people, whose position in the world is more appalling than it has been at any moment in the last century. The name of Kishinev written with letters of blood and fire in the old and ever new martyrology of Israel is sufficient by itself to bear out this statement. It shows that for our people there is no such thing as progress. For us history has not moved onward by one step for the last eight hundred years.

We are still in the fearful period of the crusades, when the warriors of the cross trained themselves to their heroic work by the wholesale slaughter of Jews and the looting of defenseless ghettos. It shows also that Zionism is the only way to lead our miserable brethren in Russia and elsewhere out of their present hell. I would despair of Judaism, and of humanity as well, if the free and happy Jews of America were to turn a deaf ear to the blood-curdling tale of Kishinev.

Israel Zangwill sent the following message:

The Kishinev massacre has brought home to the blindest the need of a publicly and legally safe-guarded home for our unhappy race. When you come to consider where this centralized home should be you will find no place as practicable as Palestine, or, at least for a start, its neighborhood. May the strenuous town of fire and steel in which you meet inspire you to build a great bridge over which Israel shall pass to his ancient home and his glorious future.

PRESIDENT SMITH GOES TO ENGLAND.

On Thursday evening, June 11, President Joseph Smith left Lamoni for England. He expected to be joined enroute by Bro. Evans, the two to sail from New York to-day, on the City of New York. The itinerary arranged for him will keep him busy there until about the middle of September so that it is not likely he will return to Lamoni before about the first of October. We trust his mission to King Edward's domains will be prolific of good.

ASSASSINATION OF SERVIA'S KING AND QUEEN.

A little past midnight on Thursday, June 11, occurred a tragedy which shocked the entire civilized world. On that night King Alexander, of Servia, and his queen, Draga, were murdered in their palace by members of the Servian army. The bloody plot was planned and carried to its cold-blooded culmination with the dispatch of men nerved to the task by much deliberation. King Alexander died defending his queen, who was the cause of much of his troubles. It was against Queen Draga that the revolt was aimed, but to accomplish their object the revolutionists did not hesitate to shed the blood of their king.

The whole affair, in all its horribleness, reminds one of the bloody times of old Rome, or the work of semi-civilized barbarians. That such a dastardly deed has been committed in this enlightened age is a shock to civilization. It is on a par with the recent massacre of the Jews in Russia.

Beside the killing of King Alexander and Queen Draga the blood-thirsty assassins murdered two of the queen's brothers, three cabinet officers, and some of the members of the royal guard, also the former minister of war. The Servian army has proclaimed Prince Peter Karageorgevitch king of Servia, to succeed the murdered king.

The bloody deed has caused even more consternation in Europe than here. Crowned heads tremble for their safety. It is feared that anarchists and lawless socialists of the extreme and dangerous order will be encouraged to become more active in their attempts to overthrow and kill persons of power and authority. We fear the Belgrade affair is but another indication of European unrest.

Whither are we tending?

RUINS OF OLD MEXICAN CITY.

The following appeared in the Kansas City Journal for June 14:

RUINS OF A CITY FOUND.

Mexico City, June 13.—The ruins of a large city have been discovered in a remote part of the state of Puebla, by Francisco Rodriguez, an archæologist who has just made a report of his find to the government authorities here.

The city contains large pyramids and extensive fortifications. It is situated in the midst of a dense forest, and a large amount of excavation will be necessary to learn its true extent and importance.

A commission will be appointed by the government to explore the ruins.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Floralice Miller wrote from Waterford, Ontario, June 9: "We have had a splendid conference. It has been enjoyed by a large number of Saints. Religio and Sunday-school conventions were the best we ever held. We are all getting encouraged and have been blessed since coming together, but are sad at parting from each other. I am staying over a day or two to organize a Religio to-night."

In a letter dated at Porsgrund, Norway, May 30, Bro. Peter Anderson wrote that he and Bro. Muceus had finished preparing the Book of Mormon for the printers, and that two thirds of the book had been printed. Of the condition of the work he writes: "We are gaining ground right along, three having been baptized lately at Christiansand by Bro. Enge. Others are interested there, at Grimstad, Porsgrund, and Christiana." Concerning the work of the Utah elders there he wrote: "A Brighamite elder named Christensen, from Moroni, Utah, publicly advocated polygamy as a divine principle, in my hearing, on three different occasions, viz.: at Porsgrund, March 9; at Skien, March 29, and April 5, this year. And the elders are defending it right along, in conversation with the people. This I have from people in this vicinity whom they have visited. No, the elders of the Utah church are not allowed to discuss with us. They have only met us once; after that I received the following note from the elders in Skien: 'You may consider all public discussion and conversations at an end.' They stand but little show where the people have an opportunity to see the differences between the true and the false."

W. C. Temple recently wrote from Davenport, Iowa: "Last Sabbath I was much comforted by an excellent sermon at the Latter Day Saints' hall in Davenport. It was delivered by Elder W. E. La Rue on his way back to his field of labor from his father's deathbed and funeral. I only realized after it was too late to thank him for the comfort given, how much of comfort was in it for me. So if you feel to give this room it may show him that it is given him to bless the brethren in his ministry."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

R. O. Self wrote from North Platte, Nebraska, June 8, that he has been laboring in that vicinity since May 13. They are expecting to use their tent in that district from now on, it having been too wet thus far.

In a printed list of the graduates from the University of Boston for 1903, we notice among the list of graduates from the department of law the name C. O. Leeka. He is a son of Bishop William Leeka, and is a former student at Graceland. He has made an excellent record as a student in the Boston institution, carrying extra work in order to graduate this year. We are certainly glad to see ex-Graceland students making good records.

The past few weeks have been disastrous ones for many towns along the waterways of Missouri, Kansas, and some of neighboring States. The rivers have risen to points at some places never known before, and death and destruction have followed in the wake of the angry waters. As noted in our last issue the property loss at Kansas City, Missouri, amounts to many thousands, and even millions. St. Louis has been experiencing one of the worst floods known for many years. East St. Louis suffered much from the high waters, the levees which protect the town breaking in many places. Besides the great property loss it is believed that very many lives have been lost, though the exact numbers may never be known. The Mississippi and Missouri Rivers have been exceedingly high, and their floods have been augmented by large volumes of water from such rivers as the Des Moines, the Kansas, and many other rivers and creeks. The floods have been especially destructive at Topeka, Kansas City, and St. Louis, and outside aid is being asked for from all these places.

Bro. William Newton left Lamoni on Thursday last in company with President Smith, and expected to sail from New York on the same vessel with Bro. Smith and Evans providing he could get a berth.

"The Mormons" is the title of a pamphlet by W. J. Haworth, published by the Australian Board of Publication, and is number 4 of the "Gospel Standard Library." The object of the pamphlet is to make clear the difference between the Utah church and the Reorganization.

P. A. Flinn wrote from Sulphur, Indiana, June 3, that he and C. E. Harp were at work. He speaks well of Bro. Harp's labors.

A clipping handed us recently by Bro. F. A. Smith, taken from the Gregory County News, Bonesteel, South Dakota, we note that Sr. Willoughby, mother of Bro. W. P. A. Willoughby, was injured on May 31, in a runaway. Her arm was broken. She got much relief through administration.

Added to the terrible havoc caused by high water in the Missouri and Mississippi and some of their tributaries, comes the news in the daily press for June 15 that the town of Heppner, Oregon, has been almost completely destroyed by a cloudburst. It is thought that between three and four hundred lives were lost in the flood.

Morgan D. Lewis appeared in the Daily Courier, of Taylorville, Illinois, March 11, in an article in which he repudiates the name "Mormon" and calls attention to the differences between us and the Utah people.

Bro. Alvin Knisley appeared in the New Record, of Clinton, Ontario, June 4, in an article on "Latter Day Saints," in which he briefly points out some of the characteristics of the faith and work of the Reorganization. The article was written in the form of questions and answers.

Bro. Henry Sparling feels encouraged over his recent debate with Elder John Giddens, of "Anti-Mormon" fame. Bro. Sparling thinks our cause has gained prestige in the encounter.

THE anti-diphtheria serum discovered by Professor Roux, of the Pasteur Institute, is now being made in the form of lozenges for use during convalescence. The professor had observed that bacilli found in the mouths of patients several weeks after recovery were liable to convey the disease to others. The lozenges overcome this and also render preventive inoculation unnecessary.—Scientific American, June 6.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH, OR RETROGRESSION?

God's revealments are reflective of his designs and purposes, and explanatory of man's duties and responsibilities; but none of his revealments savor of coercion or compulsion, yet are very explicit in making known the fact that those choosing to accept those revealments voluntarily place themselves under a grave responsibility to culminate in justification attributable to a well-spent life, or condemnation attributable to retrogression. No man can serve two masters (Matthew 6:24), which makes manifest the fact that those possessing a sound mind during their probationary condition will give evidence of a decision of character in favor of one of the two masters.

The claim as to the impracticability of a given number of men seeing eye to eye upon a given topic finds no favor in God's revealment. Hence Christ's prayer that his disciples might be one, as he and his Father were one. (John 17:21.) And I would not indulge the thought that Christ would pray for that which was impossible, or claim that a practical evidence of a Christ imposed resignation is possible without a constant struggle or overlook the fact that there may be confronting exigencies that to meet them successfully may require a greater amount of courage to do the right than it would to allow ourselves to be inveigled in the meshes of wrong-doing. Yet despite these facts the recognition of and enlisting under Christ's blood-stained banner means a spiritual growth to justification in Christ or retrogression to condemnation out of Christ to priest and people, for God is not mocked, hence as we sow so must we reap.

I know of no advantage to accrue to me (if possessing the power) to lessen human rights, as I know of none obtainable by a failure on my part to discriminate between human rights and God's decrees.

If it so be as I have believed and taught, that the acceptance of a legally tendered position in the church of the living God is tantamount to making a covenant with the living God to acquit one's self of duties attaching to the accepted position, and evince such a gospel stability as to neither stop short of or transcend law-imposed duties, is there not a necessity for the exercise of vigilance in discriminating between that which is in opposition to law-prescribed duties and proclaiming against it, as for the exercise of vigilance, in the advocacy of law-imposed duties; if not, why not?

I would not claim that this is right or that is wrong simply because I so claim, for such a procedure might come under the head of dogmatism, making me either appear as an ignoramus or a dictator in embryo, to be developed and encouraged or turned down, if those with whom I were connected had the needed stamina and a sufficient amount of love for principle, as preventive to holding men's persons in admiration because of present advantage; for if there were no sycophants, there might be fewer despots or tyrants.

The verity and therefore the explicitness of God's word, is, as it would seem, thought by some to be harsh or lacking charity, so they essay a temporizing affair, which is as sure if persisted in to beget a love for theories, as day is to succeed night. If in our acceptance of the gospel we are born into a spiritual realm, that gospel being truth, God's truth, we can only continue in that realm of truth, as we practically observe law, reflected by God's truth, to govern us as adopted citizens.

I know of no more potent reason for complying with Christ's injunction, namely, "Search the scriptures" (John 5:39) and that found in Doctrine and Covenants 1:7, "search these commandments," as a help, to acquire a proper conception of that found in Doctrine and Covenants 46:3, which composes holiness of heart, etc., that ye may not be seduced by evil spirits or doctrines of devils, or the commandments of men, for some are of men, and others of devils.

Addressing adopted citizens, Paul says: "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."—Ephesians 2:21, 22. Further in Ephesians 4:16, we read: "From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, making increase in the body unto the edifying of itself in love;" and learn, first, that in this body fitly joined there is a compactness; second, that the perpetuity of this compactness is effected by that which every joint (part) supplieth; third, that the effect attributable to body, the perpetuity of this compactness, is, that it, the edifieth itself in love. That Christ's body (church) exists as a whole in integral parts; that when active in the performance of those duties imposed, they, each part, add a supply which is productive of the above effects. Hence if a joint or joints or parts fail to add their supply, whether this failure to supply is attributable to sheer negligence on the part of one or more joints, or are hindered by undue interference of other joints or parts, the effect on the body is the same. Hence, in the perpetuity of this compactness, by that which every joint supplieth, it so stimulates the body to diligence and duty that it thereby edifieth itself in love, thus growing into an holy temple of the Lord. A failure on the part of these joints or parts to add or give their supply must have a corresponding depressing effect on the body, culminating in a failure to edify itself in love, or so I believe.

Hence the significance of the following: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty and to act, in the office in which he is appointed with all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty, and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.

Since my identification with the latter-day work I have learned that given and accepted law is above the whole body or church, and I have no intention to unlearn this fact in my declining years. And however prominent other defects in my character may be, I am fully prepared to answer to my Creator for this belief, touching the verity of his divine law. And when being confronted with life's stern realities, I have thought my faith was weakening on this point, I have turned to, and more diligently studied that incomparable exposition of divine law given by the young Palmyra Seer, beginning thus: "And again verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law is preserved by law." Yes, yes! It is enough! Law is the rule of action for priest and people; has been and now is, and ever will be; "and whosoever shall fall on this stone will be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

These are a few of my proclivities to which I give publicity, with due deference to all who may read. Possibly more anon.

REMISSION OF SINS AND GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

Since the remission of sins is the earnest desire of all repentant sinners, and the Holy Ghost the satisfying and saving power attending, it becomes of no little interest to know just when and how such is to be secured. I have heard it claimed by some of the brethren that our sins are not remitted until after the imposition of hands. After giving some little thought upon the question I humbly submit the same to the HERALD readers, with no other purpose in view than the benefits which might accrue thereto. According to the standard books of the church as I comprehend them, I am certainly committed to the belief that our sins are remitted at the time of baptism in water, providing the requisite faith and repentance precedes.

We enter the kingdom through the door of the sheepfold (church), which door, according to Nephi is repentance and baptism by water. "For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water: and then cometh a remission of you sins by fire, and by the Holy Ghost." This plainly teaches us that we become citizens of the kingdom at baptism, and it is hardly to be supposed that we enter the kingdom with all our worldly sins clinging to us, waiting the imposition of hands. Now in the kingdom, we are entitled to the promise, not a command, even the gift of the Holy Spirit. Nephi begins with a new sentence as follows:

"And then are ye in this straight and narrow path which leads to eternal life; yea, ye have entered in by the gate; ye have done according to the commandment of the Father and the Son; and ye have received the Holy Ghost, which witnesses of the Father, and the Son, unto the fulfilling of the promise which he hath made, that if ye entered in by the way, ye should receive."—2 Nephi 13:4. This makes it quite plain that the entering into the kingdom is by baptism by water, called the gate, by which our sins are remitted by the Holy Ghost, after which we receive the promise, even the witness of the Father and the Son as the abiding Comforter.

We are "baptized into Christ." (Galatians 3: 27.) Are buried with Christ in the act of baptism. If then we are placed into Christ in the act of baptism, we certainly must be in his church.

In many places in Holy Writ, like the one in 2 Nephi 13:4, the Holy Ghost is mentioned in a two-fold office. First, as a convincing power to prepare us for the waters of regeneration. Second, as a confirmatory power to sanction the work done and to seal us sons of God, as the abiding Comforter promised to all baptized believers. (See John 14: 16-17.)

Our sins are remitted by the Holy Ghost, but this is not the promised witness which follows the laying on of hands. The same Spirit, but different in purpose. Every individual who honestly and humble seeks admission into the church of God receives of his Spirit in more or less degree according to the peculiar make-up of the individual. Paul, Peter, Cornelius, and many others received a great portion of the Holy Spirit before entering into the church because of their peculiar environments, but I am not ready to admit that that was the abiding Comforter attendant upon the laying on of hands. Peter received sufficient of the Holy Ghost to enable him boldly to declare Jesus to be the Son of God, although the Holy Ghost as the promised Comforter had not yet come. The following from God's word proves conclusively that all receive of the Holy Spirit before entering the church: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him."—John 6: 44. "Not by works of righteous which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3: 5. The logical conclusion of the text is, there must have been a portion of the Holy Ghost given sometime prior to the "washing of regeneration," or baptism, or there could be no "renewing."

Doctrine and Covenants is quite to the point on this. "All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:7. The foregoing is quite explicit upon the fact that all those who seek admission into the kingdom of Christ, must receive of the Spirit of Christ prior to baptism, but only as a convincing power, bearing us along toward the kingdom of God, after which we are to receive the fullness, even the absolute knowledge of God and Jesus Christ, against which the gates of hell shall never prevail, but continue, if faithful on our part, to be our constant monitor and comforter. In Acts 2:47, we have it stated that God added to the church all who shall be saved, which can only be done by the convincing and drawing influence of the Holy Ghost.

Jesus Christ says of the Holy Ghost, "And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment."—John 16:8.

Marginal reading says "convince" instead of "reprove." I presume this will be amply sufficient proof to support the fact of the Holy Ghost having much to do in accomplishing the new birth.

In view of the fact, then, supported by abundance of evidence, is it not altogether probable that the birth to which the Savior referred when addressing Nicodemus, was nothing more or less than the Spirit which leads or bears all honest souls into the church militant? Then comes the baptism of the Holy Spirit to seal us heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. (See Ephesians 1:13; Romans 8:17.)

We are now prepared to further the thought that the birth to which the Savior referred when addressing Nicodemus was the drawing and convincing power of the Holy Spirit, which, in connection with water baptism, makes the one complete birth. We do not hold the birth of the Spirit and baptism of the Spirit to be synonymous. The former always precedes the latter. The very language of the Savior to Nicodemus plainly supports the position taken. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." The nouns "water" and "Spirit" are so used in the text to make them coequal and coextensive, both having the same end and object in view, which is the entering into the kingdom of God. Now then, by virtue of the kindred relationship, the inseparable connection, and equal limitation of the two words, if any one can get into the kingdom of God without the birth of the Spirit, he can just as easily before the birth of the water. The new birth would be incomplete without the Spirit as would the birth of the infant who after being conceived would never be quickened. Inasmuch as conception and quickening must necessarily precede the natural birth, so must water and Spirit precede the spiritual birth. James 1:18 says we are begotten by the word. Christ says (John 6:63) it is the Spirit that quickeneth, hence the words begotten and quickeneth go together in accomplishing the birth into the kingdom. The first step in the new life in coming in contact with conditions where we can hear the word, next receiving the word, are begotten. This may possibly take weeks and months in satisfying our reasoning faculties, removing prejudice, establishing fortitude, and rounding up our rough characters for the important journey; but during all this time the Spirit of God is gradually bearing us into the kingdom of heaven. Finally we are led to the door (baptism); there we put on Christ, put off the old man. We become dead to the world, thereby necessitating being buried. Thus making a beautiful analogy between heaven and earth. Every step leading up to this glorious condition, the Holy Spirit is, or should be, the actuating power. Thus we enter new conditions, breathe more freely, feel better, in altogether new surroundings, partaking of a different atmosphere by the receiving of the Holy Ghost conferred by the laying on of hands by those having authority.

You will pardon me for personal reference, but I was as literally born of the Spirit the Sabbath before baptism as I was the Sabbath after baptism, or ever have been since. While the outpouring of the Spirit seemed to be as great in the former, yet the effects were infinitely different. In the former case the Spirit of God overshadowed me and showed me the awfulness of my sinful state; the beauties to be gained by living a life of a Saint, showed me the disgusting features of the wicked world, and literally filled me with an unrest and disquietude, filling my soul with a longing for a better life, pointing out the many evil habits I had to overcome before attaining to it, with a blessed assurance that in Christ I would be able to conquer, and at last be received in the haven of rest. The following Sabbath I was baptized; thus I was truly born into the kingdom by water and the Spirit, after which came that blessed and hallowed influence to confirm the work and acknowledge it as pleasing to God by opening up that cherishing fountain from which I have ever since drank to the utmost satisfaction of a famishing soul. Ages may roll upon the swift wings of never-returning time with its forgotten history recorded upon the yellowed pages of eternal oblivion, but those experiences will never be forgotten. I was truly "born again!" Having, we believe, removed the obscurity from the statement of the Savior to Nicodemus (for truly it is confusing with the interpretation frequently placed upon it) I shall direct my attention to a few thoughts relative to the remission of sins by the Aaronic priesthood.

We have heard Hebrew 9:9, 10 quoted where Paul speaks of "carnal ordinances" which only pertains to the flesh in support of the belief that sins are not remitted under the Aaronic priesthood. We object to this being applied unqualifiedly to the Aaronic priesthood from the very simple fact Paul says this order of things "stood only in meats and drinks." This can not be properly applied to the Aaronic priesthood, because much of the work done in this priesthood is purely of a spiritual character. This was evidently the Levitical order which was included in the Aaronic. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:1.) "There are in the church two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood." The Aaronic priesthood is very closely related to the Melchisedec it being an appendage to the greater. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:8.) The offices of teacher and deacon are appendages to the Aaronic priesthood. "And again, the offices of teachers and deacons are necessary appendages belonging to the lesser priesthood, which priesthood was confirmed upon Aaron and his sons."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:5. This is very strong inferential evidence that the offices of teacher and deacon once existed under an order separate and distinct from the Aaronic priesthood, but was afterwards included, and made a part of it, and they evidently were those who administered in "carnal ordinances." Hence we conclude the Aaronic order has prerogatives prior to and independent of the Levitical order which administered in types and shadows looking forward to the restoration of the holy priesthood. This view of the matter makes the argument of Paul quite clear as to who administered in "carnal ordinances only," and also makes complete harmony with the several operations of the different orders of the priesthood outlined in modern revelations.

Believing we have made the distinction clear between those who administer in carnal things and those who have the right and power to administer in spiritual things, we submit the following plain declaration.

"The power and authority of the lesser or Aaronic priesthood is to hold the keys of the administering of angels, and to administer in outward [not carnal or fleshly only] ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:10.

The Aaronic order of priesthood is clearly set forth in the above as separate and distinct from the Levitical, chiefly because the things mentioned therein the teacher and deacon can not officiate, consequently the offices of teacher and deacon must have been originally purely Levitical.

Again, "Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism and the remission of sins." There are three things in the above to which we wish to call special attention. "Repentance," "baptism," "and the remission of sins." They are all connected with the conjunction "and," making each one of the same importance and duration as the others. If the sins are not immediately remitted, when preceded by gospel repentance and baptism, I fail to see any meaning in human language. It will also be noticed that the holy priesthood was taken from the earth in the days of Moses and not restored till Christ came, a period of fifteen hundred years, the lesser priesthood remaining, hence, it will hardly do to say that there were no sins remitted on the earth during all those long years, which would be true did not the right and power to remit sin inhere in the Aaronic priesthood. There are no time elements permissible in the clause, "and the remission of sins" over and above its two associates, "repentance" and "baptism." If the object of baptism, which is the remission of sin, could not be secured by the one having the authority to baptize, why the need of baptizing at all?

Baptizing is a commandment with the promise attached, and it occurs to me as soon as the commandment is complied with, the desired object should be secured. When Naaman obeyed the command to dip seven times in Jordan for the leprosy, the affliction immediately disappeared. (See 2 Kings 11:14.) When Christ told the blind man to put clay on his eyes for the recovery of his sight, the desired end was straightway secured. No time elements in those cases after complying with the commands. The same is true when baptized for the remission of sins by any holding the authority.

As a conclusive and concluding proof of the Aaronic priesthood having the right to forgive sins. I have only to read the account of the baptism of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery.

"We still continued the work of translating, when in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, 'Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.' . . . Immediately upon our coming up out of the water, after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery than the Holy Ghost fell upon him and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass. And again, so soon as I had been baptized by him. I also had the spirit of prophecy, when standing up, I prophesied concerning the rise of the church, and many other things connected with the church, and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 34-36.

The angel at the time of conferring the Aaronic priesthood upon Joseph and Oliver told them it held the keys to baptize for the remission of sins, although conferring the lesser priesthood only. It is quite clear according to the account given by those men that their sins were forgiven right at the time of their baptism, and were also filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied many things, and this too, before ever the Melchisedec priesthood was given them. They were truly born of the water and the Spirit before hands were laid on them.

Hoping some light may have been thrown upon the subject to all those interested,

I am sincerely for truth,

THOUGHT ON CO-OPERATION.

Why do the Saints continue to give their money to the world's people when they can just as well keep it among themselves and all be benefited collectively by so doing. There are just two ways that it can be done. The first and right way is to start a storehouse according to the plan that God has given the church; where the Saints may get all their supplies. If the church will not do this, then let the Saints become coöperaters by going into a general merchandising business on the Rochdale plan of coöperation, doing their own business instead of paying others to do it for them. It will give them the necessaries of life at wholesale cost, saving to themselves the profits now taken by others. The volume of business in Lamoni and Independence will be sufficient to warrant them in going into the manufacturing of the goods handled. This will result in their becoming their own employers, owning the factories in which they work, under improved conditions and amid healthful and pleasant surroundings. Thus products are passed directly from producer to consumer at the least possible cost, and the producer receives a larger income for his toil.

Not only the Saints at Lamoni and Independence would be benefited by this plan of coöperation, but all the Saints throughout the United States and Canada could partake with them in this great blessing, for goods could be shipped to all parts of the country, and the Saints could organize stores in every State where there were branches of thirty or more families, and by this means the stream of finance would be made to flow into Zion instead of out, as it does now. We could sell our goods cheaper to the people of the world than they possibly could get them anywhere else because we would not have the middlemen to contend with, and our goods would be of a better quality also, which would create a demand for them.

Some will say this is not the Lord's plan of doing business. Neither is the plan we are working under now. The nearer we get to God's plan the better pleased he will be with us. The present system of doing business is unrighteous because it destroys, tears down instead of building up, while coöperation brings together, unites, builds up, and works together for the good of all.

So let us commence at once to coöperate on business lines, until the church is ready to do business on the Lord's plan; then we can turn everything over to the church. To this end I will ever work and pray.

KIPLING'S ESTIMATE OF MORMONISM.

[In his "American Notes" Kipling has a chapter devoted to "Mormonism." The material for "American Notes" was gathered by Kipling in 1889 when he made a trip across the United States while on his way from India to England. We present this chapter from Mr. Kipling's "Notes" because our readers will be interested in his opinion of "Mormonism" and because it affords Latter Day Saints an opportunity to judge or measure Kipling's ability as an accurate writer.—EDITORS.]

SALT LAKE.—I am concerned for the sake of Mr. Phil Robinson, his soul. You will remember that he wrote a book called Saints and Sinners in which he proved very prettily that the Mormon was almost altogether an estimable person. Ever since my arrival at Salt Lake I have been wondering what made him write that book. On mature reflection, and after a long walk around the city, I am inclined to think it was the sun, which is very powerful hereabouts.

By great good luck the evil-minded train, already delayed twelve hours by a burnt bridge, brought me to the city on a Saturday by way of that valley which the Mormons aver their efforts had caused to blossom like the rose. Some hours previously I had entered a new world where, in conversation, every one was either a Mormon or a Gentile. It is not seemly for a free and independent citizen to dub himself a Gentile, but the Mayor of Ogden—which is the Gentile city of the valley—told me that there must be some distinction between the two flocks.

Long before the fruit orchards of Logan or the shining levels of the Salt Lake had been reached that Mayor—himself a Gentile, and one renowned for his dealings with the Mormons—told me that the great question of the existence of the power within the power was being gradually solved by the ballot and by education.

“We have,” quoth he, “hills round and about here, stuffed full of silver and gold and lead, and all Hell atop of the Mormon church can't keep the Gentile from flocking in when that's the case. At Ogden, thirty miles from Salt Lake, this year the Gentile vote swamped the Mormon at the municipal elections, and next year we trust that we shall be able to repeat our success in Salt Lake itself. In that city the Gentiles are only one-third of the total population, but the mass of 'em are grown men, capable of voting. Whereas the Mormons are cluttered up with children. I guess as soon as we have purely Gentile officers in the township, and the control of the policy of the city, the Mormons will have to back down considerable. They're bound to go before long. My own notion is that it's the older men who keep alive the opposition to the Gentile and all his works. The younger ones, spite of all the elders tell 'em, will mix with the Gentile, and read Gentile books, and you bet your sweet life there's a holy influence working toward conversion in the kiss of an average Gentile—specially when the girl knows that he won't think it necessary for her salvation to load the house up with other women-folk. I guess the younger generation are giving sore trouble to the elders. What's that you say about polygamy? It's a penal offense now under a bill passed not long ago. The Mormon has to elect one wife and keep to her. If he's caught visiting any of the others—do you see that cool and restful brown stone building way over there against the hillside? That's the penitentiary. He is sent there to consider his sins, and he pays a fine, too. But most of the police in Salt Lake are Mormons, and I don't suppose they are too hard on their friends. I presoom there's a good deal of polygamy practiced on the sly. But the chief trouble is to get the Mormon to see that the Gentile isn't the doubly-damned beast that the elders represent. Only get the Gentiles well into the State, and the whole concern is bound to go to pieces in a very little time.”

And the wish being father to the thought, “Why, certainly,” said I, and began to take in the valley of Deseret, the home of the Latter Day Saints, and the abode perhaps of as much misery as has ever been compressed into forty years. The good folk at home will not understand, but you will, what follows. You know how in Bengal to this day the child-wife is taught to curse her possible co-wife, ere yet she has gone to her husband's house? And the Bengali woman has been accustomed to polygamy for a few hundred years. You know, too, the awful jealousy between mother wife and barren behind the perdah—

the jealousy that culminates sometimes in the poisoning of the well-beloved son? Now and again, an Englishwoman employs a high-caste Musselman nurse, and in the offices of that hire women are apt to forget the differences of color, and to speak unreservedly as twin daughters under Eve's curse. The nurse tells very strange and awful things. She has, and this the Mormons count a privilege, been born into polygamy; but she loathes and detests it from the bottom of her jealous soul. And to the lot of the Bengali co-wife—“the cursed of the cursed—the daughter of the dunghill—the scald-head and the barrenmute” (you know the rest of that sweet commination-service)—one creed, of all the White creeds to-day, deliberately introduces the white woman taken from centuries of training, which have taught her that it is right to control the undivided heart of one man. To quench her most natural rebellion, that amazing creed and fantastic jumble of Mahometanism, the Mosaic law, and imperfectly comprehended fragments of Freemasonry, calls to its aid all the powers of a hell conceived and elaborated by coarse-minded hedgers and ditchers. A sweet view, isn't it?

All the beauty of the valley could not make me forget it. But the valley is very fair. Bench after bench of land, flat as a table against the flanks of the ringing hills, marks where the Salt Lake rested for a while as it sunk from an inland sea to a lake fifty miles long and thirty broad. Before long the benches will be covered with houses. At present these are hidden among the green trees on the dead flat of the valley. You have read a hundred times how the streets of Salt Lake City are very broad, furnished with rows of shade-trees and gutters of fresh water. This is true, but I struck the town in a season of great drought—that same drought which is playing havoc with the herds of Montana. The trees were limp, and the rills of sparkling water that one reads about were represented by dusty, paved courses. Main Street appears to be inhabited by the commercial Gentile, who has made of it a busy, bustling thoroughfare, and, in the eye of the sun, swigs the ungodly lager and smokes the improper cigar all day long. For which I like him. At the head of Main Street stands the lions of the place; the Temple and the Tabernacle, the Tithing House, and the houses of Brigham young, whose portrait is on sale in most of the booksellers' shops. Incidentally it may be mentioned that the late Amir of Utah does not unremotely resemble His Highness the Amir of Afghanistan, whom these unfortunate eyes have seen. And I have no desire to fall into the hands of the Amir. The first thing to be seen was, of course, the outward exponent of a creed. Armed with a copy of the Book of Mormon, for better comprehension, I went to form rash opinions. Some day the Temple will be finished.

It was begun only thirty years ago, and up to date rather more than three million dollars and a half have been expended in its granite bulk. The walls are ten feet thick; the edifice itself is about a hundred feet high; and its towers will be nearly two hundred. And that is all there is of it, unless you choose to inspect more closely; always reading the Book of Mormon as you walk. Then the wondrous puerility, of what I suppose we must call the design, becomes apparent. These men, directly inspired from on high, heaped stone on stone and pillar on pillar, without achieving either dignity, relief, or interest. There is, over the main door, some pitiful scratching in stone representing the all-seeing eye, the Masonic grip, the sun, moon, and stars, and, perhaps, other skittles. The flatness and meanness of the thing almost makes you weep when you look at the magnificent granite in blocks strewn abroad, and think of the art that three million dollars might have called in to the aid of the church. It is as though a child had said: "Let us draw a great, big, fine house—finer than any house that ever was,"—and in that desire had laboriously smudged along with a ruler and pencil, piling meaningless straight lines on compass-drawn curves, with his tongue following every movement of the inapt hand. Then I sat down on a wheelbarrow and read the Book of Mormon, and behold the spirit of the book was the spirit of the stone before me. The estimable Joseph and Hyrum Smith struggling to create a new Bible, when they knew nothing of the history of Old and New Testament, and the inspired architect muddling with his bricks—they were brothers. But the book was more interesting than the building. It is written, and all the world has read, how to Joseph Smith an angel came down from heaven with a pair of celestial gig-lamps, whereby he was marvelously enabled to interpret certain plates of gold scribbled over with dots and scratches, and discovered by him in the ground. Which plates Joseph Smith did translate—only he spelt the mysterious characters "caractors"—and out of the dots and scratches produced a volume of six hundred closely printed pages, containing the books of Nephi, first and second, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, Omni, Mormon, Mosiah, the Record of Zeniff, the book of Alma, Helaman, the third of Nephi, the book of Ether (the whole thing is a powerful anæsthetic, by the way), and the final book of Mononi. Three men, of whom one I believe is now living, bear solemn witness that the angel with the spectacles appeared unto them; eight other men swear solemnly that they have seen the golden plates of the revelation; and upon this testimony the Book of Mormon stands. The Mormon Bible begins at the days of Zedekiah, King of Judah, and ends in a wild and weltering quagmire of tribal fights, bits of revelation, and wholesale cribs from the Bible.

Very sincerely did I sympathize with the inspired brothers as I waded through their joint production. As a humble fellow worker in the field of fiction, I knew what it was to get good names for one's characters. But Joseph and Hyrum were harder bestead than ever I have been; and bolder men to boot. They created Teancum and Coriantumy Pahoran, Kishkumen, Gadianton, and other priceless names which the memory does not hold; but of geography they wisely steered clear, and were astutely vague as to the locality of places, because you see they were by no means certain what lay in the next county to their own. They marched and counter marched bloodthirsty armies across their pages; and added new and amazing chapters to the records of the New Testament, and reorganized the heavens and the earth as it is always lawful to do in print. But they could not achieve style, and it was foolish of them to let into their weird Mosaic pieces of the genuine Bible whenever the laboring pen dropped from its toilsome parody to a sentence or two of vile, bad English or downright "penny dreadfulism." "And Moses said unto the people of Israel: 'Great Scott! what air you doing?'" There is no sentence in the Book of Mormon word for word like the foregoing; but the general tone is not widely different.

There are the makings of a very fine creed about Mormonism. To begin with, the church is rather more absolute than that of Rome. Drop the polygamy plank in the platform, but on the other hand deal lightly with certain forms of excess. Keep the quality of the recruits down to a low mental level and see that the best of the agricultural science available is in the hands of the elders, and you have there a first-class engine for pioneer work. The tawdy mysticism and the borrowings from Freemasonry serve the low-caste Swede and the Dane, the Welshman and the Cornish cottar, just as well as a highly-organized Heaven.

I went about the streets and peeped into people's front windows, and the decorations upon the tables were after the manner of the year 1850. Main Street was full of country folk from the outside come in to trade with the Zion Mercantile Coöperative Institute. The Church, I fancy, looks after the finances of this thing, and it consequently pays good dividends. The faces of the women were not lovely. Indeed, but for the certainty that ugly persons are just as irrational in the matter of undivided love as the beautiful, it seemed that polygamy was a blessed institution for the women, and that only the spiritual power could drive the hulking, board-faced men into it. The women wore hideous garments, and the men seemed to be tied up with string. They would market all that afternoon, and on Sunday go to the praying-place. I tried to talk to a few of them, but they spoke strange tongues and stared and behaved like cows. Yet one woman, and not an altogether ugly one, confided to me that she hated the idea of Salt Lake City being turned into a show-place for the amusement of the Gentile.

"If we 'ave our own institutions, that ain't no reason why people should come 'ere and stare at us, his it?"

The dropped "h" betrayed her.

"And when did you leave England?" I said.

"Summer of '84. I am from Dorset," she said. "The Mormon agents was very good to us, and we was very poor. Now we're better off—my father an' mother an' me."

"Then you like the State?"

She misunderstood at first. "Oh, I ain't livin' in the state of polygamy. Not me yet. I ain't married. I like where I am. I've got things o' my own—and some land."

"But I suppose you will—"

"Not me. I ain't like them Swedes an' Danes. I ain't got nothing to say for or against polygamy. It's the elders' business, an' between you an' me I don't think it's going on much longer. You'll 'ear them in the 'ouse to-morrow talkin' as if it was spreadin' all over America. The Swedes they think it his. I know it hisn't."

"But you've got your land all right."

"Oh, yes, we've got our land an' we never say aught against polygamy o' course—father an' mother an' me."

It strikes me that there is a fraud somewhere. you? You've never heard of the rice-Christians have

I should have liked to have spoken to the maiden at length, but she dived into the Zion Co-op. and a man captured me, saying that it was my bounden duty to see the sights of Salt Lake. These comprised the egg-shaped Tabernacle, the Beehive, and town houses of Brigham Young; the same great ruffian's tomb with assorted samples of his wives sleeping around him (just as the eleven faithful ones sleep round the ashes of Runjit Singh outside Fort Lahore), and one or two other curiosities. But all these things have been described by abler pens than mine. The animal-houses where Brigham Young used to pack his wives are grubby villas; the Tabernacle is a shingled fraud, and the Tithing House where all the revenue returns seem to be made, much resembles a stable. The Mormons have a paper currency of their own—ecclesiastical bank-notes which are exchanged for local produce. But the little boys of the place prefer the bullion of the Gentiles. It is not pleasant to be taken round a township with your guide stopping before every third house to say: "That's where elder so and so kept Amelia Bather-shins, his fifth wife—no, his third. Amelia she was took on after Keziah, but Keziah was the Elder's pet, an' he didn't dare to let Amelia come across Keziah for fear of her spilin' Keziah's beauty." The Musselmans are quite right. The minute that all the domestic details of polygamy are discussed in the mouths of the people, that institution is ready to fall. I shook off my guide when he had told me his very last doubtful tale; and went on alone. An ordered peace and a perfection of quiet luxury is the note of the city of Salt Lake. The houses stand in generous and well-groomed grass-plots, none very much worse or better than their neighbors. Creepers grow over the house fronts, and there is a very pleasant music of wind among the trees in the vast empty streets bringing a smell of hay and the flowers of summer.

On a table land overlooking all the city stands the United States garrison of infantry and artillery. The State of Utah can do nearly anything it pleases until that much-to-be-desired hour when the Gentile vote shall quietly swamp our Mormonism; but the garrison is kept there in case of accidents. The big, shark-mouthed, pig-eared, heavy-boned farmers sometimes take to their creed with wildest fanaticism, and in past years have made excessively unpleasant for the Gentile when he was few in the land. But to-day, so far from killing openly or secretly, or burning Gentile farms, it is all the Mormon dares do to feebly try to boycott the interloper. His journals preach defiance to the United States Government, and in the Tabernacle of a Sunday the preachers follow suit. When I went down there the place was full of people who would have been much better for a washing. A man rose up and told them that they were the chosen of God, the elect of Israel, that they were to obey their priest, and that there was a good time coming. I fancy that they had heard all this before so many times it produced no impression whatever; even as the sublimest mysteries of another Faith lost salt through constant iteration. They breathed heavily through their noses and stared straight in front of them—impassive as flatfish.

And that evening I went up to the garrison post—one of the most coveted of all the army commands—and overlooked the City of the Saints as it lay in the circle of its forbidding hills. You can speculate a good deal about the mass of human misery, the loves frustrated, the gentle hearts broken, and the strong souls twisted from the law of life to a fiercer following of the law of death, that the hills have seen. How must it have been in the old days when the foot-sore emigrants broke through into the circle and knew that they were cut off from hope of return or sight of friends—were handed over to the power of the friends that called themselves priests of the Most High? "But for the grace of God there goes Richard Baxter," as the eminent divine once said. It seemed good that fate did not order me to be a brick in the upbuilding of the Mormon church, that has so aptly established herself by the borders of a lake bitter, salt, and hopeless.

My Prayer.

Weak and unworthy though I am,
I long to come to Thee.
Oh, Father, hear my humble prayer!
Help me thy faithful child to be!

Though I so oft dishonor thee,
Thou knowest 'tis not from wrong intent;
Forgive the errors of the past,
Help me to be the Saint I meant.

Perfect my weakness by thy strength,
Then when weak I strong shall be;
For thou hast said this in thy word,
"My grace sufficient is for thee."

So, trusting in thy strength alone,
Onward I will strive to go;
Learning from failures in the past
My own sore need of thee to know.

And if, to burn the dross away,
From self and pride to set me free,
There must be suff'rings cleansing fire,
O may it draw me nearer thee.

Although I so often shrink,
Yet as thou seest best, so deal with me,
Till at last shall come a time
When others in my life thy likeness see.

Harbingers of Dawn.

For happiness men live and hope,
Its sweets all long to know.
Yet through sorrows oft we grope
Anon we feel the ill wind blow.

A flitting, fitful, luring mark
Pleasure too often proves to be;
Her changing hues, now light, now dark,
Appear alike to you and me.

Oh mortal! seek ye a lasting peace,
That which fadeth not away?
In sorrow's night still to increase,
Flowing on to the perfect day?

Hearken ye then to the voice of truth,
Calling up to a higher light.
The sweetest joy to age or youth
Is found alone by doing right.

By finding the right and doing it
Is happiness made complete.
Thus by her wealth the soul is lit—
Her pearls lie at our feet.

A happy people in the long ago,
We learn from the holy page,
The secret learned in peace to grow
In that most happy age.

Their leader, Enoch, God's own choice,
Consecrated all in all;
Gladdened daily by his voice,
Receiving yet a higher call.

Their secret, reader, shall we learn?
Its priceless truth apply to-day,
Or shall we this grand lesson spurn
And from its beckon turn away?

Oh ye named of the saintly band!
Oh ye of bonds so holy,
Brethren dear of every land,
Before us dawns an age of glory.
If we but grasp the golden measure,
If we but see the happy glint,
Making purity our treasure—
Lo, in the East a rosy tint!

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Pearls from the Depths of Heart and Intellect.

Your "few things" may be very few and very small things, but he expects you to be faithful over them.—Francis Ridley Havergal.

I am not careful for what may be a hundred years hence. He who governed the world before I was born shall take care of it likewise when I am dead. My part is to improve the present moment.—John Wesley.

I wrote down my troubles every day;
And after a few short years,
When I turned to the heartaches passed away,
I read them with smiles, not tears.

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

"Enthusiasm is the element of success in everything; it is the light that leads and the strength that lifts men on and up in the great struggle of scientific pursuits and professional labor; it robs endurance of difficulty and makes duty a pleasure."

Love is indestructible;
Its holy flame for ever burneth;
From heaven it came, to heaven returneth.
It here is tried and purified
Then hath in heaven its perfect rest;
It soweth here with toil and care,
But the harvest time of love is there.

—Robert Southey.

There is not any benefit so glorious in itself but it may yet be exceedingly sweetened and improved by the manner of conferring it. The virtue I know rests in the intent; the profit in the judicious application of the matter; but the beauty and ornament of an obligation lies in the manner of it.—Seneca.

The theory of Job's comforters, that it always and at once is well with the righteous, often takes subtle shapes in our thinking. One is the expectation that every good action shall be attended with a glow of warm feeling, as a sort of reward for our goodness. In reality, we frequently have no such experience. Right action is attended often with such unpleasant secondary circumstances as to take all charm out of it. It gives offense in our social circle, or it grieves some one we love, who but half understands us; or, in some way, it carries with it a shadow to darken the sunlight. And it is better thus. For "because right is right, to follow right were wisdom in the scorn of consequence" just as truly in view of inward consequences as of outer. Were the inward consequences always such as delighted us, then doing right might become as mercenary as if we expected flocks and herds, or brownstone fronts and paying bonds, in consideration of our rightness. So we learn to serve God for God's sake, and right for right's sake, and not for meat and drink, material or immaterial.

The Force of Habit.

Habit is the deepest law of human nature. It is our supreme strength, if also, in certain circumstances our miserablest weakness. Let me go once, scanning my way with any earnestness of outlook and successfully arriving, my footsteps are an invitation to me to go the second time the same way; it is easier than any other way. Habit is our primal fundamental law—habit and imitation—there is nothing more perennial in us than those two. They are the source of all working and all apprenticeship, of all practice and all learning in the world.—Carlyle.

The Winner of the Race,

I saw them start, an eager throng,
All young and strong and fleet;
Joy lighted up their beaming eyes
Hopes sped their flying feet.
And one among them so excelled
In courage, strength, and grace,
And all men gazed and smiled, and cried,
"The winner of the race!"

The way was long, the way was hard;
The golden goal gleaned far Above the steep and distant hills,—
A shining pilot star.
On, on they sped, but while some fell,
Some faltered in their speed;
He upon whom all eyes were fixed
Still proudly kept the lead.

But ah, what folly! See, he stops
To raise a fallen child,
To place it out of danger's way
With kiss and warning mild.
A fainting comrade claims his care,
Once more he turns aside;
Then stays his strong, young steps to be
A feeble woman's guide.

And so, wherever duty calls,
Or sorrow or distress,
He leaves his chosen path to aid,
To comfort, and to bless.
Though men may pity, blame, or scorn,
No envious pang may swell
The soul who yields for love the place
It might have won so well.

The race is o'er. 'Mid shouts and cheers
I saw the victors crowned.
Some wore fame's laurels, some love's flowers,
Some brows with gold were bound.
But all unknown, unheeded, stood,— Heaven's light upon his face,—
With empty hands and uncrowned head,
The winner of the race.—Susan Marr Spalding.

If I Should Die To-night.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And, laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress,
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night!

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind with loving thought
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought.
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said,
Errands on which the willing feet had sped;
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words, would all be put aside;
And so I should be loved and mourned to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once more to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully,
The eyes that chill me with averted glance
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old, familiar way;
For who could war with dumb, unconscious clay?
So I might rest, forgiven of all, to-night.

O friends, I pray to-night
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow;
The way is lonely; let me feel them now.
Think gently of me, I am travel-worn;
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive, O hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.—Belle E. Smith.

Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
Too clear I see now it is done,
That I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun.
Too clear I see that things I thought
Were right or harmless, were a sin.
Too clear I see that I have sought
Unconscious selfish aims to win;
Too clear I see that I have hurt
The souls I might have helped to save;
That I have slothful been, inert,
Deaf to the calls thy leaders gave.
In outskirts of thy kingdom vast,
Father, the humblest spot give me;
Let me the lowliest task thou hast—
Let me, repentant, work for thee.

—Helen Hunt's Last Prayer.

Trouble comes in many forms. It may be a bitter disappointment which falls upon a young life when love has not been true or when character has proved unworthy, turning the fair blossoms of hope to dead leaves under the feet. There are lives that bear the pain and carry the hidden memorials of such grief through long years, making them sad at heart even when walking in sweetest sunshine. Or it may be the failure of some other hope, as when one has followed a bright dream of ambition for days and years, finding it only a dream. Or it may be the keener, more bitter grief which comes to one when a friend proves untrue or disgraces himself. The anguish which love endures for others' sins is among the saddest of earth's sorrows. If we knew the inner life of many of the people we meet, we would be very gentle with them and would excuse the things in them that seem strange or eccentric to us. They are carrying burdens of secret grief.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

Graceful Manners.

Graceful manners, says Longfellow, are the outward form of refinement in the mind and good affections in the heart. Good manners, says Archbishop Whateley, are a part of good morals, and kind courtesy. Manners, says Emerson, are the happy ways of doing things; each one a stroke of genius or of love, now repeated and hardened into usage, they form at last a rich varnish with which the routine of life is washed and its details adorned. If they are on the surface, so are the dewdrops which give such a depth to the morning meadows. Manners, says Burke, are of more importance than laws. Upon them in a great measure the laws depend. The law can touch us here and there, now and then. Manners are what vex or soothe, corrupt or purify, exalt or debase, barbarize or refine by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation, like that of the air we breathe in; they give their whole form and color to our lives; according to their quality they aid morals, they supply them or they totally destroy them.—Selected.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The General Superintendent attended the convention of the Northern Nebraska District, at Blair, the latter part of May. While the attendance was not large, owing to the excessive floods then existing, the interest was very good. The district is unfortunate in that the schools are mostly a great distance apart. This makes it difficult to get a full attendance of the workers at all the meetings. But in spite of all these great odds they are growing. May they be blessed.

The following is from the report of the district superintendent to the above convention. It is full of suggestion and is an index of the practical mind of the superintendent:

With the assistance of the assistant superintendent of the district and some members in South Omaha a small Sunday-school was organized there on March 30. On account of sickness and storms some of the sessions have been missed since that time, but there are a few who manifest quite a little interest.

The Omaha school is progressing fairly, quite a number of children attending whose parents are not members of the church, which is a good indication of growth. We have a fair attendance of children, but the grown, middle-aged, and old people have not been taking the interest in the past few months that we feel should be manifest. If all of us could realize to some extent our responsibility, and the importance of the example we set before the children, we might be more careful of our conduct. Children are great imitators. A mother told me not long ago about her daughter, a young lady, using some slang, and she reproved her for so doing, when she said, "Well, mamma, Miss So and So does that," mentioning the name of a prominent young lady in the church, "and I don't see where there is any wrong in it." The thought came to me, "Oh, if we could see the wrong we unintentionally do, by being so careless, we would be more humble and prayerful." Children are like ourselves. If we love any one very dearly, we are liable to think that whatever they do is about right, and we can not see their faults. So it is in the Sunday-school and church, if we like some people very much, we are liable to look over their many mistakes, while in others for whom we do not care, we would think it a grievous error. Also if we are dilatory, careless, and indifferent, the children will follow our example, so it behooves us to be earnest, thoughtful and prayerful.

If we could remember the old motto, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," we might be able to accomplish so much more. How long would many of us be able to hold a position in the world, were we filling it with as much interest as we manifest in our Sunday-school work.

Also the better work we do, the more able we will be to fill better positions, and make advancement. If we would only always be prayerful and hopeful, yet it is hard, as many times are so many things to try the Christian worker. Our head, hands, and heart are tired, we think, and yet there is work to be done.

"Just for to-day what more can heart demand,
From one who will each longing understand,
Thy love withhold no treasure so I pray,
Choose what may come, but give me strength to-day."

Can we trust our heavenly Father for all, and do the best we can? I hope we may all answer, we will try, and never grow weary.

With prayers and best wishes.

ALICE C. SCHWARTZ, District Superintendent.

The Fremont, Iowa, district convention, June 4 and 5, was the next one reached. The prevailing floods still continued to interfere with travel so that the customary large attendance was not had. Yet the attendance was sufficiently large to make the work interesting.

Two portions of the convention work are especially worthy of notice, the normal Bible study and the library work.

THE NORMAL WORK

has been carried on in this district for some years. The plan, very briefly stated, is something like this. Early in the quarter the district superintendent sent to the superintendents of the several schools outlines of the work to be done, which in this case was the general makeup, contents, aims, and characteristics of the Roman letter, and asked them to help to interest all members of their school in such work and study the book during the quarter. Then about four weeks previous to convention a list of questions in form of a blank circular letter is issued from a mimeograph and sent in sufficient number to each superintendent to supply all members of the school who will undertake the work. These blanks are to be filled out after studying the questions either in classes or alone, and sent to the district superintendent. They are there examined and any necessary correction made. The subjects are discussed in open convention, at which time the various answers are tested, and a conclusion arrived at generally.

This work accomplishes two objects at least, viz., it causes study and induces thought. It has caused many a person to read and study what otherwise he might never have seen. It is no experiment. It has stood the test for years, and is now looked upon as a permanent part of the program. Whereas at first only teachers and officers took the work, now the number studying is about double the number of officers and teachers in the district.

We recommend that all districts take up this or similar work. It will help to interest your workers and improve them too. Your conventions will grow more interesting. You can do this work no matter how far from school to school. Try it and be happy.

The other portion of the program to which we referred was question. The phase discussed was the "Objects" of the Sunday-school library. The chief objects arrived at were "information," "character building," and "amusement." The subject was well discussed in three papers and by the convention. Deep interest was shown and many trains of thought started. We mention some POINTS OF INTEREST.

The public library can not take the place of the Sunday-school library because it does not contain all of the kinds of books we need.

Parents must supply their children with good reading matter if they would do their duty. There is no excuse for reading worthless literature when there is a thousandfold more good literature than any one can ever read should he live a good long lifetime.

Every book should be selected. No one should waste time on the fiction of the common cheap newspaper or the low grade novels.

The influence of reading upon the character is just as certain as that of association with people.

Select your reading as you would your associates.

The one who lets books out to readers should be familiar with both the book and the person seeking it.

Put no book into a library that is not known to be valuable. There are more that are known to be good than you can ever buy.

"Of making of books, there is no end."

If you have not a library, start one, if but with a single book. Add to it later. Read and reread them all.

The following is from a letter from Bro. W. S. Macrae. It was not intended for publication, but is so replete with items that should be suggestive to all, that we give it place here. To all who have not yet tried the Home Department work or think it impractical or visionary we would say read what this brother has done. Bro. Macrae is and always has been an enthusiastic Home Class worker. He was among the very first to push this work among Latter Day Saints. His success has been continuous. It is just an example of what a love for the work and a little push will do. Go on, brother, and God bless the efforts you put forth for his cause. Who else will help? Every school and every district in the association should have its Home Department.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, June 2.

Bro. Hougas: I am in my field and have discovered that the Saints are somewhat scattered. There is but one Sunday-school in the district, and that is in this city, though there are two other branches. I want to introduce the Home Class Department to every Saint in the district.

I have already got orders from three isolated families for Quarterlies for Home Class.

This is just a starter. I want to get them all enlisted in the Sunday-school work.

Will you please send me about one dozen complete Home Department outfits; viz., leaflet of instruction, card, envelope, etc., and I will try and report as many Home Classes in two months.

I got one from you at conference, was called to Joplin to preach funeral next day, read the leaflet enroute; got there in time for the Sunday-school. Was asked by superintendent to talk to school.

I presented the aim of the Home Class Department and in two or three weeks Bro. J. W. Foster, the superintendent, told me they had started the ball and Bro. Shelby Carrow was appointed superintendent of Home Class Department. This shows what can be done.

Letter Department.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 9.

Editors Herald: One of the most valuable and most important agents in business of all kinds at the present age is printer's ink. In proof here is an extract from a letter: "Dear Brother: Please find here enclosed ten dollars to apply on Graceland College debt. Long live the College."

May we receive a thousand or more such letters in the near future; for we need just such cheer, aid, and encouragement.

Who will be the next to gladden our heart in the work for Graceland.

On duty, ROBERT M. ELVIN.

ADA, Indian Territory, June 5.

Editors Herald: I am now five miles north of Ada preaching every night. Expect to stay here till over Sunday, then go to McGee, where there has been an urgent call for some of our elders for six months. A Christian preacher lives there and has been investigating our work. He says he will furnish house, take care of an elder, and if we can show we have something better than they have, he is with us. I understand he wants to use part of the time as we proceed. Bro. Henry Duncan and family live near there and have been furnishing them with reading. I expect to get there about the 8th.

Before coming here I had a very good meeting ten miles northeast of Holdenville, Indian Territory, at Bro. J. D. Stewart's. Baptized two, man and wife, and left others to be gathered later. I had some bad luck coming from Holdenville to Oklahoma City. I checked my valise. It was put off at the station late in the evening, and left out all night. Some one went through it, helped themselves to such as they wanted. It was the agent's fault for leaving it out. I put in my claim for the loss to the railroad company.

I found a man at Holdenville who had heard Bro. Adamson preach a few times. He is very favorable to our church, and gave me an order of three dollars and forty cents for church books. We expect to hold a meeting in his neighborhood commencing about July 17. Bro. Gooch lives near him. They are going to arrange to make it a camp-meeting. That will be five miles south of Holdenville at what is called Sand Switch. I had better call it an arbor-meeting, and any one wanting to come and camp, all right. I am hopeful and want to do a good year's work this year. But it would suit me better if we could go two and two, and think there ought to be more attention paid to that way which the Lord said for us to go.

W. M. AYLOR.

West Ham, LONDON, E. England, May 28.

Editors Herald: Will all the Saints who are not attending the branches of Bow Common Lane, or Enfield, London, England, who are residing in the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent, or Surrey, please communicate with the undersigned. Also all those belonging to any of the London branches (who are not attending there) please give me your address no matter where you are now residing.

Further. All moneys which are in response to the appeal made through the HERALD should be sent with specific instructions what it is for. State which is for bicycle, and which for the work. All money that is intended for the work in London, should be sent with the statement that it is for the "London Mission." Some have sent just for "the work" and there is the chance of it being received by the Bishop and applied in a general sense, instead of specially to London. If you do not receive my personal receipt within one month from the time of sending it drop me a card inquiring the reason, stating the amount sent. A two-cent card is necessary from America. I state this to prevent further mistakes. Those residing outside of America send money to Bishop Thomas Taylor, 63 Bristol Road, Bourn Crook, Birmingham, England; those residing in America send to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa. They in turn will forward it to London Mission.

Some are already responding; I have received one donation on the bicycle; but more is needed. Our people here are poor and are struggling under debt. The mission work here is tedious, but occasionally we see an opening, and when we do, we then need money. I have had a place offered now two weeks, and it is waiting because we lack a few dollars. Your mite will help remove the barrier.

Yours in the one hope,

198 Corporation Street.

TAWAS CITY, Michigan, June 4.

Editors Herald: It affords me joy to read the encouraging letters and of the work of our Master. I am glad that I have enlisted in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am trying each day to live better and please my heavenly Father. Each day I want so to live that I can enjoy his Holy Spirit. As we meet in our prayer-meeting we are blessed with the Spirit of the Master, which strengthens and encourages me to go on. I know I have a work to do for my Master.

I would to God that I could live without sin; but it is almost impossible in this life; but when Jesus comes he will perfect his people and prepare us for the Father. That will be a glorious meeting if we are prepared to meet God.

As the conference is drawing near I pray God that we will have a glorious time and that the Father will reveal himself by his Holy Spirit that we will be made to rejoice in him. I would to God that all the world would obey the gospel and prepare to meet God. The time is hastening on when every one will have to stand before God and give an account of his deeds. It will be an awful thing if we are not prepared to meet him.

JOHN BELLINGER.

BEARDSTOWN, Illinois, June 12.

Dear Herald: Arriving home from General Conference I spent some time arranging the affairs of home after so long a time. On June 4 I left home for Keokuk, where I arrived after considerable delay caused by high water. I reached Keokuk at twenty minutes past one o'clock in the morning, and about five o'clock left for Carthage, Illinois, a city of note to me, for I have longed to view the old jail room where the prophet and patriarch of the early days of the church had to seal their testimony by their blood at the hands of an infuriated mob. I was made comfortable at the home of Bro. Herbert Salisbury, the husband of my niece, daughter of W. W. Scott, of Lamoni, Iowa. From thence on the early morning train I left them the 6th, bound for Beardstown, in Central Illinois District arriving in time for the afternoon session of conference. We had a very good time; all enjoyed themselves very much. There I met my colaborer, Bro. R. T. Walters, of Lebeck, Missouri. We continued the meetings during this week, closing to-night. I had the pleasure of baptizing two more on last Tuesday evening. To-morrow we have arrangements made to go west of Rushville to continue the work there, and then onward to Camden and vicinity, where I held forth at Jordon Schoolhouse just before taking my leave to General Conference. So may the work move on to victory.

T. J. BELL.

ARKANSAS CITY, June 8.

Editors Herald: The last days of April, I came to my field of labor. First point, Galena, Kansas, where I preached thrice by invitation of the branch president, Bro. Thomas Hayton, in the chapel to small congregations. I also held a series of meetings, in the outskirts of the city, at the house of Bro. F. H. Jones. Our listeners were very attentive, and gave a pressing invitation to return. Bro. Thomas Hayton is laboring very faithfully to advance the work in that city.

My next stop was at Miami, Indian Territory. Labored there for one week. Bro. Steven Briggs is in charge of the church at that place, assisted by Bro. Warren. They are zealous. From Miami I went to the Columbus Branch where I was during the recent heavy rains. Bro. J. T. Davis put in an appearance there and preached for us. From Columbus I went to Hal-bowa, where Bro. John A. Davis was holding forth in the Christian church building. I preached once there.

I reached this place last Saturday. Bro. J. S. Harding has opened his house for preaching services. We have a small attendance and will continue our efforts during the week. I wish to say to the scattered Saints in the western part of the Spring River District to correspond with me with regard to preaching in your several localities. Hunnewell, Kansas, is my field address.

ISAAC BAGGERLY.

ENTIAT, Washington, June 1.

Dear Herald: My old home has been at Gallands Grove, Iowa, for sixteen years until the spring of 1902, when I came to Washington. My husband came in December, 1901, in company with Bro. W. P. Kuykendall. Bro. Kuykendall returned to Iowa on account of poor health.

Those who have always lived a short distance from the church have no idea what it is to be away from the church.

This is a country of flowers, as I call it. We live in the Entiat Valley, surrounded on every side by mountains, except to the south, which is bordered by the beautiful Columbia River. The people here are very good in almost every way, except they are very prejudiced against the Saints. My prayer is that God will send a Latter Day Saint elder here to preach the gospel to those who have never heard it; one who stands ready to defend the work on every hand. This would be a grand place to hold tent-meetings.

From a sister,

M. L. ROUNDY.

LOGAN, Utah, June 6.

Editors Herald: I closed a seven nights discussion (or study as our Advent friend preferred to call it) with Reverend Charles Nelson of that faith, Wednesday night. We had simply a time-keeper, and spent two hours each night on each subject, each one affirming his respective churches as giving the last warning message. In addition he affirmed the mortality of the soul, and Saturday as the Sabbath of the Lord. I affirmed the necessity of a call from God, as was Aaron to entitle us to preach the gospel, and the divinity of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Our opponent was a gentleman, and I believe the examination was productive of good. At least my admiration for our cause was increased, as all efforts against it appear weak, and compared with the more popular creeds the contrast is wonderfully in our favor.

The Methodist Episcopal minister assailed the Book of Mormon here before a large audience Sunday night. The Spalding Romance was presented as the origin, with testimony of numerous witnesses as to their identity, and Nephi "getting into the walls of Jerusalem," "boats with holes in," "light provided from stones," etc., were ridiculed in a Clark Braden style.

We had the privilege of announcing that we would defend the book on the following Tuesday, but we were denied his chapel to review him in as it would savor of controversy.

In bonds,

S. D. CONDIT.

GILCHRIST, Illinois, June 9.

Editors Herald: Our conference of the 6th and 7th at Joy, Illinois, is past. A good spirit was manifested by all; preaching quite good; prayer meeting splendid. Bad weather has hindered missionary work so far badly, but we look and hope for better. My address will be, Kewanee, Illinois, 630 Walnut Street, North.

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

ST. CHARLES, Iowa, June 4.

Readers of the Herald: The duties and experiences at the General Conventions and Conference more firmly established me in the thought that as a church we are on the border line of great changes in the church and consequently great social and religious changes in the world, and since then I have noted the occurrence of events that support that thought, and the very elements are proclaiming in thunder tones the testimony of warning we bring.

I have now been in my mission since three weeks ago last Tuesday, and have been able to preach only about seven times, and have been here since a week ago last Tuesday and have only preached once, being prevented by storms and floods, all of which has brought more vividly to my mind the impressions had on last year, that there existed and would exist conditions making it necessary for the church to make more complete arrangements to reach the people by the distribution of literature, such literature to be prepared and selected with great wisdom, such as should guide the ministry in their public utterances. And in this I have been directed by the Spirit. Not only should tracts be distributed liberally, but books should be placed in the hands of the people, such as will instruct the investigative mind in channels of light, and articles should be prepared for all the papers upon the faith and history of the church to remove prejudice existing from false tradition, and from histories and encyclopedias which misrepresent us. God is directing in the departments of church work and in the educational development of the young among us to occupy efficiently these fields of usefulness, and we as general representatives of the church rejoice greatly because of it; though we feel saddened by the neglect shown on the part of so many to exercise their literary ability for the good of the general work, and the making of our publications inferior to none in point of originality and spirituality.

Since entering the mission I spoke a few times at Dallas

Center, baptized two, one the son of Sr. Goodwin, and the other the wife of Bro. Samuel Reiste, who was formerly an active member in the Progressive Brethren Church, but after a long investigation and a hard struggle took her stand with the Lord's people without reservation, and will if faithful prove one of the noblest ones among Zion's workers.

Request from Des Moines to assist the local authorities there occupied my attention for a week, but I trust wandering ones may be saved by reason of the effort. As a rule Saints there are devoted to the work, and united, but the evidences of the hastening time are quite noticeable, and truly the shaking time has come.

The Saints executed a complete surprise upon Bro. M. H. Cook on the 22d, and although the elements threatened, a goodly number were present, and presented him with tokens of esteem, by way of a leather dressing case, and some ready cash to aid him on his mission, which he contemplated soon to enter, but which on account of floods he may not be permitted to enter for some time. This reminds me that the good Saints of Woodbine showed their good will to the writer just before his departure from home. To think of these kindly remembrances of the Saints strengthens us for our duties, and binds our hearts more closely as one.

Mr. Harry Gay, who was arrested for the murder of Arthur Meade at West Liberty, was baptized by Bro. H. A. McCoy last spring, and I believe was a truly repent person, thoroughly convicted of sin, and desirous of receiving grace from God to overcome his evil tendencies. I can not believe he is guilty of such a gross crime, but has he broken his sacred covenant, surely retribution is swift in reminding him of it. Has he yielded to the drink and gambling habit again and been associated with criminal associates surely the trial of being brought under such a charge, if innocent, will cause him to hate sin the more and be more watchful, that he enter not into temptation. How his noble companion must have suffered in passing through this severe ordeal! May God spare the innocent, and save the wanderer.

Will remain here till over the Lord's day, when I will return to Des Moines on my way, and to prepare for district conference to be held at Boone the 13th and 14th inst.

So far as possible the missionaries are active, all standing at their post of duty, waiting an opportunity to minister. I am with Bro. C. J. Peters, who is assisting to reach the people with his conveyance, and his influence.

The Saints are highly respected here, and the people seem willing to converse, and recognize that we have something worthy of consideration, and I believe some will consider it worthy of acceptance.

While I have been somewhat mentally depressed and physically unwell, yet my hope of Zion and her people grows brighter, and I rejoice that I am considered worthy to suffer for the sake of the Christ.

In the faith, and of the faith,

J. F. MINTUN.

P. S.—At a business-meeting held May 25, Elder M. H. Cook resigned his presidency of the branch, and Bro. E. O. Clark was recommended to be ordained an elder, and chosen unanimously to preside. Bro. J. R. Epperson was chosen as priest and Bro. Lents as assistant teacher; the other officers remaining as before, viz.: T. P. Cook assistant priest, George W. Johnson teacher, and Fred Chandler deacon.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, June 11.

Editors Herald: I baptized five more at Pueblo, all heads of families, making eight baptized by me in the month of May.

Rain, rain, rain, and cold enough for February; but as soon as weather is favorable will start the gospel tent.

J. F. CURTIS.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, June 12.

Editors Herald: I arrived at this place on the eleventh inst., having been returned here for service in this city and district by the General Conference and authorities in charge. Thus we begin the third year of labor at this place, and we hope it shall be the most successful one of all. I have been detained from returning to my field, on account of the illness and death of my father. Now both of my parents are at rest, my dear mother having been called hence when I was but four years of age. It is a comforting thing for me to know that they both died in full assurance and hope of the joys and peace promised to those who obey the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In addition to our work in this city we shall also endeavor to make use of any opportunities that may afford in opening up the work in other places in this district. If any of the Saints or friends have relatives or acquaintances here, whom they would like me to call upon, I shall be pleased to do so. I shall also be glad to hear from any of the scattered Saints and friends in Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and New Jersey as to the opportunity for advancing the cause, preaching, etc., in their peculiar localities.

In my absence Brn. Hugus, Smith, Carr, Bacon, and others here of the local force have proved themselves able and willing to assist the work in various ways as occasion requires.

In the gospel hope,

156 West Ontario Street.

W. E. LA RUE.

ADAMS, Nebraska, June 1.

Editors Herald: We are here for the purpose of holding services, but the rain and mud have hindered thus far. Still we are on the move and looking up the scattered Saints. Have visited Brownville. Had good meetings there, also at Peru. We obtained the Christian church and will hold forth there later.

We next visited Tecumseh and held forth three times on Sunday to a full house in the evening, and then went to Sterling, where we met old friends and Saints. Bro. and Sr. W. A. Rease will try and get a church for us to occupy. They are the only Saints living there. Then on to Adams where we are still trying to hold forth the truth to the people, but the floods in Nebraska are so great that it is not safe to travel. There were three persons drowned at Sterling last week while trying to cross a bridge. It was a sad affair as the husband was the only one left of the family. Cyclones seem to be the order of the day as we have had several of them. Many people were killed, others will die from the effects, but still we move on with confidence and faith in God that all will be well with the faithful in Christ. We look for better times in the future and sunshine along the way.

W. M. SELF.

WILLOW SPRINGS, Missouri, May 28.

Dear Herald: On this lovely May morning, while the birds are warbling and all nature seems alive and aglow with beauty, I am truly thankful I am permitted to enjoy the pretty scenery in different localities of this world, and have a hope to live in a far brighter and better home in the future.

There is a little band of Saints in Pomona who need encouragement. They are a faithful few and are striving to walk righteously. I am not a member of this branch, and I wonder if some of the Aid Societies and Happy Helpers would donate to help them get an organ for their church.

Conference begins here the 4th of July. The Saints are preparing for an entertainment at that time. I truly hope the Lord may be with us, that we may have an outpouring of his blessed Spirit. I ever pray for the good work to roll on, and ask an interest in the prayers of God's children.

Your sister,

M. LUCY BRASHEAR.

DETROIT, Texas, June 1.

Editors Herald: I am now in my field. I have been detained because of sickness in my family, but I trust the Lord will favor us to that extent that my work may not be hindered the rest of the year. I will expect a hearty cooperation from the Saints in Northeastern Texas. We are short of laborers this year. I desire the Saints in the different places to arrange for time and place of meeting and consult me by letter or otherwise before announcing same, so that everything will work harmoniously. My home address is Knobnoster, Missouri; all mail sent there will reach me promptly.

Bishop Ellis Short has appointed me bishop's agent for Eastern Texas. Saints, please respond with your tithes and offerings. Remember, too, that the missionary needs postage, railway fare, and a few clothes. Administer to the needs of the work and the work will prosper.

Read Bro. H. O. Smith's pastoral in HERALD. Reread, and if you can not remember it, cut it out and paste it in your scrap-book. Its contents are valuable to us as individuals and as a collective body.

The Lord has blessed us. While the trials for the last two months have been severe, the good Master has consoled us with his spirit, and I praise the Lord for his goodness.

May the Lord prosper Zion this year. E. L. HENSON.

ELLWOOD CITY, Pennsylvania, May 14.

Editors Herald: Elder Richard Baldwin and myself have been very busy the last two weeks preaching to the people here, though the writer spoke but few times. I thought it best that the missionary should present the word, which he did in an excellent manner. The Sunday following the adjournment of conference I made an effort to try and secure the Welsh church here to hold meetings. I met the trustees and all were favorable so I sent for Bro. Baldwin to come and open up the work. He came the following Sunday and preached that evening to an audience of about forty. Meetings were announced for every evening of the week except Thursday, but that was given to us so we held a meeting Thursday. Bro. Baldwin going home, I occupied. On Wednesday before there appeared an article on "Mormonism" in one of the city papers, telling the people that we were followers of Brigham Young, and that the young men of the town could have wives in any old style they wished them, etc. I thought it necessary that it be corrected, so went to the editor with a reply, which he said he would print, and did so.

On Sunday evening at the suggestion of one of the church trustees we opened meeting on the street near the post-office. Bro. Hollibaugh, of Sharon, was with us. Each of us spoke. After that we occupied the rest of the week. In the meantime another article appeared in the same paper, called the Advocate, from the pen of a Presbyterian minister named Leslie, in which he charged upon Bro. Baldwin that he had told numerous falsehoods, etc. Appended to his statement was a statement of a Reverend Dwight Spencer, a missionary in Utah. The whole thing a representation of Utahism. So we felt to make a protest and helped them to distinguish between the two bodies which we did on Saturday evening to quite a crowd of about one hundred fifty because we had that many tracts that we distributed. Others came for them but we could not supply them.

The Reverend Leslie was there and asked some questions, but Bro. Baldwin concluded that he would be breaking in on our time and interfere with what we had to say so objected to the questions coming at that time, but told him he might ask all he wanted to after the meeting was over. Those present were very orderly except in one or two instances. The interest was all we could ask. After meeting was over liberty was given to ask questions but none were asked. Bro. Baldwin challenged Reverend Leslie to prove his assertions announcing that he could be accommodated to enter a debate for ten days, but the challenge was not accepted. He had announced he would speak on Sunday morning at his church on "Mormonism" so I went and listened. It was a weak effort indeed. After it was over I secured an interview with him for over an hour, and he promised he would make some corrections, also make a distinction between us and the Utah people in his lecture.

Some are quite interested and I believe before long more good will be done here. I am circulating some tracts and doing a little fireside preaching; also secured the privilege of preaching in another church here, but a wind-storm blew it off its foundation so it can not be used. Several will be glad to have Bro. Baldwin return. Some offered to feed him, lodge him, and pay car-fare. We have under consideration the question of bringing the district tent here. Yours hopeful of good results,

G. E. HARRINGTON.

CRYSTAL, Michigan, June 1.

Editors Herald: I reached my field April 28, and have been on duty as much of the time as my poor health would allow. I have baptized five since coming here. Last week I was in Eureka, Michigan, and was invited to preach in the Evangelical church, and did so a few evenings with good interest. The pastor was out to hear me every night. I preached in the same church two years ago when I was here. The good Lord is blessing me with the best of liberty, for which I feel very thankful. My desire is to see the work roll on and the honest in heart gathered into the fold.

Yours as ever in bonds,

F. D. OMANS.

OGDEN, Utah, June, 1903.

Editors Herald: We are now all equipped for our summer's street work, and concluded to begin in this place first. So after notifying the people somewhat by way circulating hand bills, Monday evening found us with horse and gospel surry and little organ (which stands very nicely against the dash board) driving for the public square, where Bro. Chase held forth last summer. On arriving there we started our song service promptly a quarter to eight o'clock, and although but the four of us on the grounds to begin, Bro. Chase, the two children, and myself, we made some little noise, for after singing several selections from the Hymnal and an anthem, we had a nice sized assembly of considerably over one hundred people, and during the lecture, which was a review of the efforts of B. H. Roberts in the tabernacle of some time ago, others kept coming and the subject seemed to interest them greatly, for they remained and seemed to pay the best of attention to the close; and although we know many would not agree with the speaker still none seemed to take offense. Some very plain and pointed arguments were made, but we could not help noticing the different spirit in which the lecture by B. H. Roberts and this review were given, and after the closing song and prayer and several questions answered they seemed loath to leave; but with a "good-night" and "come again" we drove away. We hope that this interest may continue through the season.

Some of the subjects advertised for the week here are "Baptism for the Living and the Dead," "Faith and Repentance" as applied to this people, "The Law of Adoption," "Some Evidences of Divine Authority of Book of Mormon." These subjects we think will interest them. We find these people are very self-satisfied, and in talking with them we have to give them a dig or two on differences to wake them up; but this can and must be done with tact, wisdom, and in such a spirit as not to anger them; for no matter how plainly we make our points, if we offend them we do no good whatever, as they will not accept it.

We have enjoyed our work with the Sunday-school and Religio here very much. Our exercises for Children's Day a week ago was considered quite a success, and was, we think, the first one of the season advertised in this place. We will miss this part of the work during the summer's street work, but we think it is left in good hands.

We would like to say to our many correspondents in the West that we have neglected much of our writing for want of time and means. We enjoy hearing from you very much, and if any wish literature let us know and we will try to supply it.

We did not attend the last General Conference, the first we have missed for five years, but were glad to hear of the peaceable, harmonious time enjoyed by those who did attend. We are still interested and hopeful.

Your sister,
MRS. A. M. CHASE.

ARTHUR, Ontario, June 11.

Herald Readers: It is some time since we spoke and will have little to say now only as we renew our subscription. We suggest a thought touching the HERALD. Some refuse to subscribe because they consider it too high priced. The HERALD belongs to us, it is our paper, we are the church; then it is ours, we hire the work done, at least some of it; those in charge see that it is done and do it well, too. No family in the church should be without it, and none needs to be without it if we manage it aright. For instance, it costs but one dollar and fifty cents a year. Where there are those too poor to pay that, let two or three or even six families club together, and that will make it easy on all, then all can have access to it. Try that plan. Same rule with Ensign. These papers should never be found around the yard, make use of them.

Our district conference just closed. We consider it one of the most profitable we ever attended. When we feel weak these are the places to grow strong; if we feel strong that is the place to strengthen others. We learn by the mistakes of others. No better place to see ourselves. The presence of holy men and women tend to bless us. Our president, R. C. Evans, has proved a blessing to us as a people, and will help to bless those across the sea in his future visit there with Bro. Joseph. We wish them peace and success in building up the church in that far-off land.

KALAMAZOO, Michigan, June 10.

Editors Herald: I want to tell the workers something about revelation from God to man in the last days of the Gentiles.

In the year 1847 I was a soldier in the Mexican War, and while at the Castle of Perote, sixty miles from the Gulf of Mexico, I had a vision in the silent watches of the night, that I was to be in another war. I saw large breastworks, the cannon firing over my head and the balls going into the timber beyond, and the sandy ditch and the sandy ground. There was a small sweet voice in that vision, saying, "You shall not be hurt, this is the last battle." After seventeen years came around I enlisted in the Rebellion; and just as soon as I stepped on the sandy ground and saw the smoke and heard the roar of the cannon, the balls rolling over my head into the timber beyond, and the sandy ground, just as true as there is a God that reigneth I knew the ground, although seventeen long years had rolled by and the vision had long been forgotten.

From the Castle of Perote to the Gulf of Mexico is sixty miles, as near as I can estimate. The distance from there to Selma, Alabama, is about sixteen hundred miles. None but God can show these things sixteen hundred miles away and seventeen years before it happened.

Now, dear friends, if you want to know whether God has a true church on earth in this age, take no man's word but throw aside all prejudice, kneel down in fasting, and God will reveal it unto you. Then all your doubts and fears will be removed.

HEARNE, Texas, June 10.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor here. We are five miles from the church and among outsiders nearly all of the time. My companion is old and sick all the time; he can do nothing but read your pages and I enjoy reading the many refreshing letters. You afford us great satisfaction; our hearts are made glad to read the letters of those missionaries we have been acquainted with and heard many years gone by.

We are happy at just making the acquaintance of our esteemed Bro. John Harp; he has done and is doing a fine work here in this part of the country, and souls are being added to the church. It thrills our hearts and minds with joy to see and hear of the prosperity of the work, and we as Saints feel the great responsibility of letting our lights shine that others may be constrained to come and go along with us and glorify our Father. I am your sister in the one faith.

Isolated Saints.

Many isolated Saints are doing much to forward the cause of truth in the localities where they live, while with some at least it is a question as to what they can do. To answer this question is the purpose of this article. Before the organizing of the Sunday-school and Religio work those near branches could find something to do if they wanted to work; but since the establishing of these societies they find plenty to do without making such great effort. The isolated Saints, however, have not yet as a rule availed themselves of the Home Class work.

But what I desire to write on especially, is what you can do for others. You have neighbors who have never as yet heard the gospel. Do you want them to hear it? If so, get some church papers and tracts and give them to your neighbors to read. If you have not the papers, send to J. R. Epperson, 1723 Walker Street, Des Moines, Iowa. He will send them free of charge. We missionaries want places to preach, for the world must be warned. If you live in town see if you can not get a church, a hall, or a private house, or the park for preaching services. Should you live in the country do what you can to get the gospel before the people. When you secure a place for preaching write the church papers or a minister direct. Do not be afraid some will call you a Mormon, but remember all they who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Now is the time to work; do not put it off till next week or next year, but to-day begin making an effort. You may get a branch raised up in six months or a year if you do your part. If your neighbors will not listen to you after doing all you can, then move out and get to where you can do something. When you move, go toward Zion. I do not say go direct to Zion, but in the regions thereof.

How to Get Thin.

The problem of reducing the superfluous flesh is a very complex and troublesome one. A certain amount of superficial fat can be dissipated by persistent, vigorous exertion of any kind. Mere thoroughgoing, general use of muscles, with its quickening of the circulation and its increase of elimination, through quickened breathing, perspiration, etc., will accomplish this much.

As to diet for "reduction," the first general rule is never to eat immoderately of anything. Then, by abstaining from sweet and starchy foods, such as cakes, potatoes, bread, etc., and from alcoholic stimulant, by not drinking anything while eating, but taking care to drink abundantly of fresh water between meals, a helpful reduction-diet will be well begun.

Together with such precaution, care must be taken to cultivate full, vigorous breathing, whereby the circulation is purified and stimulated, and the heart and lungs kept strong and clean and healthy.—June Woman's Home Companion.

Conference Minutes.

Southern Nebraska.—District conference was held in Nebraska City, May 10 and 11, 1903, J. W. Waldsmith in charge; M. H. Forscutt, secretary. We have a number of unorganized members in several places, and the conference passed a resolution requesting them to meet regularly for prayer-meeting, and if they have no one holding the priesthood with them, they are advised to choose one of their number to lead. District officers please note. Ministry reporting: Brn. Sutton, Waldsmith, Self, Thompson, and Forscutt. The change in boundary lines made at the General Conference was approved by the conference, and the Colorado brethren were invited to preach in our new field whenever convenient, and report results to the president or secretary of this district. Bishop's agent's report was found to be correct. Adjourned to meet at Wilber in September at the call of the president.

Nauvoo.—Conference met at Farmington, Iowa, June 6 and 7, James McKiernan in charge; M. H. Seigfreid, secretary. Elders reporting: R. M. Elvin, Daniel Tripp, G. P. Lambert. District treasurer, A. Grisch, reported: Balance on hand last report, $6.99; amount received, $1.45; total, $8.44; expenditures, $5.00; balance on hand, $3.44. Branches reporting: Farmington, Burlington, Rock Creek, New London, and Keokuk. George P. Lambert, Bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand last report, $117.96; total receipts, $140.21; total, $258.17; expenditures, $117; balance on hand, $141.17. Audited and found correct. John W. Peterson was elected district president; M. H. Seigfreid, clerk; and Bro. A. Giesch, district treasurer. Adjourned to meet at Rock Creek, October 3 and 4 at 10.30 a. m.

Little Sioux.—Conference convened at Pisgah June 6, 10.30 a. m. H. N. Hansen, president of the district, presided, assisted by J. M. Baker. The statistical report of the branches showed a numerical strength of 1504, a gain of 32. The spiritual condition of the branches, without exception, was reported as improved. Twenty-one ministerial reports were received showing 332 sermons preached, 784 services attended, 22 baptized, 5 ordinations, 1 Sunday-school organized. The Bishop's agent reported: Cash receipts, $546.90; remaining on hand previously, $218.84; total cash, $765.74; expenditures, $612.21. Audited and found correct. The Pisgah Branch recommended Herbert S. Gamet for ordination as priest. Sidney Pitt was recommended by the Persia Branch for ordination as elder, and Robert C. Chambers and Asa Hight, each received indorsement from the Magnolia Branch for ordination as elder. They were ordained at the Sunday morning service. Clerk reported the purchase of a new record costing $11.70, and a balance due him of $6.70. A collection was taken which paid the expense and put $2.36 into the tent fund. J. C. Crabb was chosen for district president, and he selected J. M. Baker as assistant. J. D. Stuart sustained as clerk and district historian. A. M. Fyrando sustained as Bishop's agent. The missionary in charge was sustained, and a vote of thanks extended to the retiring president, H. N. Hansen, all by unanimous consent. The district tents were placed in charge of the district president and missionary in charge. Adjourned to meet at Woodbine, first Saturday and Sunday in October. James D. Stewart, clerk.

Western Maine.—Conference convened at Stonington, Maine, May 9 and 10, 1903, J. J. Billings presiding; Eugene Brann clerk. Branches reporting: Dixfield Center 33, West Surry 22, Little Deer Isle 61, Stonington 94. Secretary instructed to correct slight error in the West Surry report. Ministry reporting: S. O. Foss, H. J. Davison, J. N. Ames, J. J. Billings, Eugene Brann, J. E. Eaton, A. C. Dunham, Ralph Farrell, E. C. Knowlton, H. R. Eaton, A. O. Candage. Bishop's agent's report was referred to auditing committee consisting of H. J. Davison and Eugene Brann. Report found correct. J. J. Billings was sustained as district president, Eugene Brann as district secretary. Recommendation from Little Deer Isle Branch for the ordination of Bro. Harlan H. Billings to the office of priest and William G. Hardy to the office of teacher. Referred to a committee of the priesthood. Committee reported favorably on the recommendation. Prayer-meeting in charge of Bro. S. O. Foss and J. J. Billings. Preaching by Brn. S. O. Foss, H. Simpson, C. H. Rich, and Eugene Brann. Adjourned to meet at Little Deer Isle, August 1 and 2.

Clinton.—Conference convened at Veve chapel, June 6, 1903, James Moler and T. R. White presiding; Bro. A. C. Silvers secretary, assisted by Bro. H. T. McAntire. Ministry reporting: James Moler, T. R. White, W. H. Mannering, G. W. Beebe, Sr., C. P. Welsh, J. T. Higdon, J. N. Stephenson, S. C. Andes, Joseph Sterling, W. H. Lowe, A. Lloyd, J. W. Paxton, C. H. Athey, E. W. Lloyd, G. W. Beebe, Jr., A. S. Leeper, A. C. Silvers. Branches reporting: El Dorado Springs, Veve, Ft. Scott, Wheatland, Walker, Nevada, Coal Hill, and Lowry City. The committee on Reunion reported the time and place for the district to be Taberville, Missouri, August 14, 1903. The report was adopted. Bishop's agent, G. W. Beebe, Sr., reported: Receipts, $522.11; paid out $211.18; balance on hand, (cash,) $10.93; balance on hand (real estate) $300. Upon the recommendation of the district recorder, Sr. A. C. Silvers, it was decided to send the district records to the general recorder, H. A. Stebbins, for correction, then the district recorder to compare and correct the several branch records. The officers elected: District president, James Moler; secretary and president, A. C. Silvers; recorder, Sr. A. C. Silvers; local historian, Sr. A. C. Silvers, sustained; Bishop's agent, G. W. Beebe, Sr., sustained. Upon evidence furnished by officers and members of Lowry City Branch of the reinstatement of Bro. W. P. Crayne, it was voted to reinstate him and furnish him with a priest's license. A committee composed of A. C. Silvers, T. R. White, and W. P. Crayne were appointed to compile the resolutions from the district minute book, and report to next conference. Adjourned to meet at Nevada, Missouri, October, 3, 1903.

Pastoral.

To the Northern California and Nevada Districts, Greeting: The undersigned has been appointed missionary in charge of the above-named districts, and as our missionary force is very small, and we are anxious to accomplish all the good possible, therefore we ask the Saints of the districts to cooperate with us in getting the gospel before the people. We would like to hear from the Saints in the different parts of the districts as to the prospects for tent or other missionary work in your vicinity.

We have two tents in the Northern California District which we expect to operate; and if the Saints will inform us about what the conditions are, we will be better prepared to direct the work to the best advantage.

Trusting we may have an early response, and a successful year's work, I remain,
Your brother and collaborer,

R. J. PARKER.

1332 Filbert Street, OAKLAND, California.

To the Saints and Friends of Wisconsin and Northeastern Illinois District, Greeting: I earnestly solicit your attention in regard to the missionary interests throughout the above field. It is to be hoped that in the cities where there are resident members or friends to the church, they will open their doors for cottage meetings when the elders come among them to labor, and that, both in city and country, where openings can be made for the preaching of the word, that such fact be reported to our home address, Plano, Illinois, and we will respond in answer to such demand for ministerial labor so far as our limited missionary force will allow.

F. M. COOPER,

Field Missionary in Charge.

PLANO, Illinois, June 10, 1903.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Pittsburg District, Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named territory, and in order to effectually and thoroughly canvass the same I address you. Never have I seen the outlook so promising for the advancing of the Lord's work as at the present. Many earnest requests have already been sent in for preaching in new places, some desiring to obey at first opportunity. To successfully meet those demands an earnest effort on the part of all, and especially the ministry, is required. This part of the mission has been well supplied with some earnest, self-sacrificing men, which brings to our minds, "unto whom much is given much is required." We are told: "The twelve and seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into new fields now widening before them: [now hear the blessed promise] in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8.

Now brethren, let us claim this blessing which is only contingent by an application of the injunction given above.

Let all those who desire preaching, or know of an opening, or have friends who would like to have an elder call on them, report immediately to me.

All branch matter needing attention should be reported to district president, James Craig, Glen Easton, West Virginia, whose duty it is to adjust and set in order.

We trust the Saints will not be forgetful of the recurring needs of the traveling elders, also that other expenses more than the mere care for, oftentimes makes their demands in the form of a shabby suit of clothes, worn-out shoes, etc., all of which costs considerable more than several years ago. See that they do not go from you without sufficient to take them on their way rejoicing.

Ever hoping and praying that the coming year will find many precious souls rejoicing with us, and all workers together for good, I am,
Your colaborer in Christ,

F. J. EBELING.

CONNEAUTVILLE, Pennsylvania, R. F. D. No. 7.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Idaho District, Greeting:

We are beginning this conference year with much to encourage. Our missionary force in this district was never before so large, and we have some earnest local workers. Why can we not depend on every Saint to act at his post of duty, especially while conditions are so promising? Remember all are called and considering the recent address sent out by the leading quorums of the church, admonishing a consecration of ourselves and property, allow me to suggest that a beginning can be made by the Idaho Saints right now, by paying tithes and offerings, that the agents may have wherewith to provide for the families of the missionaries before they are forced from the field to care for their own.

Last year of four missionaries in Idaho only one family was supplied by Idaho agents, and they were two months in arrears at last report. We have five missionaries this year, and four families that we ought to provide for and not be a burden to Saints of other localities. Will we? Then become coworkers at once by sending your tithes either to James Jennings, Idaho Falls, or to H. R. Evans, Malad City, Idaho, that we can arrange with more confidence for a complete canvass of this district.

We desire reports from all local officers as well as the missionary force in the district, the first of July, October, January, and March, of all meetings held and assisted in, numbers of sermons, baptisms, confirmations, ordinations, administrations, etc. Please report promptly the first of each of the above months.

Sabbath-school convention and district conference will be held at Malad City, July 18 to 20; and before that date we would like word from every locality in Idaho and Western Wyoming, where labor is desired, that we may arrange plans if possible to meet all wants, and make this a profitable year for the work in Idaho. I include convention notice by request of Sr. J. A. Condit, district superintendent.

LOGAN, Cache County, Utah.

S. D. CONDIT.

Notices.

The conference of the Little Sioux District, Iowa, by resolution appointed the last Sunday in June as a "fast day" for prayers to be offered for recovery to health Brn. A. M. Fyrando and J. F. McDowell; fast to begin after evening meal Saturday and to continue until evening meal Sunday. James D. Stuart, District Clerk.

Bishop William Anderson, of the Lamoni Stake, at the conference held at Cleveland, Iowa, June 6, recommended D. C. White to fill the office of First Counselor. This was approved by the Stake High Council on "condition that the transfer from his present field" to the Lamoni Stake be "arranged for by the missionaries in charge and the First Presidency." The missionaries in charge agreeing, the First Presidency hereby gives notice that such transfer is made. We cheerfully commend Bro. White to the Saints of the Lamoni Stake. Fred'k M. Smith, for the First Presidency.

To Whom It May Concern: This is to certify that I have transferred Bro. S. S. Smith from the Oklahoma to the Southwestern Texas District, and recommend him to the care and confidence of the Saints in the latter district. Hoping and praying that he will be blessed in his new field and prove himself a worthy laborer in the vineyard. Hyrum O. Smith, missionary in charge Southwestern mission. San Antonio, Texas, June 6, 1903.

Notice of Silence.

This is to certify that Elder L. W. Torrens, of Kirtland, Ohio, has been placed under silence for cause. V. M. GOODRICH, KIRTLAND, Ohio, June 3, 1903. President Kirtland District.

Conference Notices.

The annual conference of the British Isles Mission will (D. V.) convene in Leeds on Saturday, August 1, 1903, extending over Sunday and Monday, time and place to be hereafter announced. The branches are asked to take up collections as heretofore in order to defray the conference expenses, and in view of the anticipated visit of Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans we look forward to a record meeting of the Saints—a time long to be remembered. We therefore appeal to all church members in the Isles to do their best to make the approaching mission conference a great success. Please send all subscriptions for this purpose to Bishop Taylor, 68 Bristol Road, Bournbrook, Birmingham. J. W. Rushton, president of mission, W. R. Armstrong, secretary of mission, 10 Rye Street, C upon M Manchester.

The Southern Missouri District quarterly conference will convene with the Pomona Branch on July 4, 1903, 10 a. m. Take advantage of the low railway rates and give this conference a large delegation. Send all reports, petitions, and communications pertaining to the conference to me in care of Henry Brooner, Pomona, Howell County, Missouri. J. C. Chrestensen, secretary.

Convention Notices.

The Oklahoma District Sunday-school association will meet in convention on Friday July 10, 1903, at the reunion grounds near Guy, Dewey County, Oklahoma. All district officials are expected to be present; and as Bro. T. A. Hougas is expected all Sunday-school workers are invited to attend, as much valuable information may be gained. All schools are urgently requested to send reports, as the quarter ends with June. Alice M. Case, district secretary.

The Northern Michigan District Sunday-school association will convene at Whittemore, Michigan, June 26, at 1.30 p. m. Amos Berve, superintendent; H. A. Doty, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion for Utah District for 1903 will meet at Provo, Utah, from August 29 to September 6, inclusive of both dates. Come and bring your tents or if you desire to rent tents notify A. M. Chase, chairman reunion committee, 504 Sixteenth Street, Ogden, Utah.

The Western Iowa Reunion will be held at Dow City, Iowa, commencing August 28 and continuing ten days. Other announcements will be made later. A. H. Rudd, secretary.

Married.

KNOWLTON—COLLINS.—Clarence E. Knowlton, of Berkley, Norfolk County, Virginia, and Georgia Annie Collins, of Brooklyn, New York, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Elder George Potts, at the residence of the bride, 688 Carroll Street, Brooklyn, New York, on May 9, 1903. The Saints of Brooklyn Branch have lost a faithful worker in the Sabbath-school and church work very unexpectedly. Captain Knowlton has sailed in and out of many a port and carried many valuable cargoes, but we judge the Captain considers the cargo with which he sailed from Brooklyn a very, very valuable one. And the Saints and friends join in the chorus of "So say we all." May the sun ever shine on their pathway and peace be their portion.

KELLEY—DANCER.—On Thursday afternoon, June 4, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Gaulter, Lamoni, Iowa, Bro. Winfred B. Kelley and Sr. Alberta P. Dancer were united in wedlock, E. L. Kelley officiating in the ceremony. W. B. Kelley is the oldest son of Bishop Kelley, and Alberta P. Dancer is the only living grandchild of David Dancer, deceased, who was for so many years business manager of the Herald Publishing House. An excellent feast had been prepared for the occasion by the bride's mother, for a large gathering, mostly relatives of the bride and groom. After a short wedding tour, the happy couple will be at home to their friends, in Lamoni, corner of Main and Silver Streets. The HERALD extends congratulations.

Died.

BELSCAMPER.—Martha E. wife of S. E. Belscamper, died April 6, 1903, at Burnham, Missouri, after a lingering illness. She was born December 31, 1866, at Flora Fountain, Wisconsin; married December 3, 1887, to S. E. Belscamper. She leaves a husband, four children, three boys and one girl. She was baptized August 7, 1890, by John W. Peterson. Funeral sermon by A. M. Baker, at Burnham, Missouri. The remains were by her request taken to Wisconsin. She died firm in the faith.

LUCAS.—Catharine Lucas died at Warnocks, Ohio, June 4, 1903, aged 62 years and 6 months; was born December 4, 1840; baptized January 24, 1878, by Josiah Ells. She leaves a husband and ten grown children and a large number of Saints and friends to mourn her departure. She was a firm Christian, faithful companion, loving mother, and a pleasant neighbor. She was laid to rest in Old Bethel Cemetery, Belmont County, Ohio. Funeral sermon by elder James Craig, Sunday, June 7.

CAMPBELL.—Gertie R. Campbell was born May 4, 1895; died December 10, 1902; age 7 years, 7 months, 6 days. Her body was laid to rest in the Curtis Cemetery, December 11. She leaves father, mother, four sisters and two brothers to mourn. Funeral sermon by F. M. Slover.

WEAVER.—May 30; 1903 at his home in Layton, Utah, Bro. John Weaver, aged 78 years, 4 months and 23 days. Bro. Weaver was born in Herfordshire, England; was baptized there by a missionary from Utah, September 19, 1847, and came to Utah in 1853. Here he heard and obeyed the message of the Reorganization in 1871 and was ordained a priest the same year. For fifty years a resident of Layton his constant life bore witness to the truth of the gospel. A large concourse of friends, neighbors, and relatives attended the funeral and many were the tributes to the excellency of his life character. He will be missed in this field of labor. Sermon by A. M. Chase.

YOUNGER.—From her earthly home, in Oakland, California, Sr. Clarinda M. Younger passed to her heavenly home, on Sunday, May 31, at the age of 62 years, 10 months, 21 days. On June 3 the remains were taken to Hollister, ninety-five miles south, for burial. The funeral was held in the Christian church building kindly furnished for the occasion, the minister, Reverend Russell, assisting. The sermon was by Elder J. M. Terry, from Job 5: 26; John 12: 24. Many friends gathered to bid adieu to one whom they had known and loved.

JONES.—At his son's, near Greenville, Texas, May 12, 1903, Bro. R. T. Jones died suddenly. He was born in Tennessee, March 8, 1834; baptized near Lexington, Tennessee, August 15, 1888, by Elder John Thomas. He leaves two brothers, two sisters, and several children. He was faithful until death.

COOMBS.—Sr. Carrie Coombs, of Plainville, Massachusetts, on March 9, 1903, of heart disease, after months of suffering. She was born June 28, 1850, and baptized by Elder C. N. Brown, at Providence, Rhode Island, April 11, 1875. She was an exceptionally devoted wife and mother, and her departure from the home has caused deep sorrow. She served as branch treasurer in the Plainville Branch for some time. She was a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and an active member of other societies. Many friends attended the funeral and many beautiful floral tributes surrounded the casket, showing the high esteem held by those who knew her. Sermon by Elder John Gilbert, M. D., of Fall River. The Woman's Relief Corps had charge of the funeral.

FOOTE.—Charles A. Foote was born in Pennsylvania, December 7, 1836; was married to Mary Wilday, October 3, 1856, in Mansfield, Pennsylvania. To them were born twelve children, seven boys and five girls. He came to Iowa in 1880; united with the Latter Day Saints Church in 1892. He departed this life November 23, 1902. He leaves a wife, three daughters, and four sons to mourn. Funeral at Crescent, November 24. Sermon by C. G. McIntosh.

MACKLAND.—W. H. Mackland was born December 12, 1863. At the age of twenty-eight years he was united in marriage to Miss Ada Wright, only daughter of Fred and Frances Wright. He was baptized August 11, 1901, by D. R. Chambers; confirmed by D. R. Chambers and D. Parish. He was taken sick some time in November and died December 28, 1902. He leaves a loving wife, an aged mother, two brothers and four sisters. He was the youngest son of John and Elizabeth Mackland. At the time of his death he was 39 years and 16 days of age. Sermon by D. R. Chambers.

ERIXON.—Ellen V. Erixon was born December 27, 1830, in the state of Indiana; came from there to Iowa in 1852, and has lived in Ragland Township since 1853. She united with the Latter Day Saints Church in the early sixties, being baptized by E. C. Briggs. She departed this life May 7, 1903, at the age of 72 years, 4 months, and 10 days. She leaves a sorrowing husband, two sons, four daughters, and a host of friends. Funeral May 9, at the Magnolia church. Sermon by D. R. Chambers.

ROBINSON.—Sr. Lydia A. Robinson (nee Bates) died May 23, at the home of her son, J. W. Robinson, Fontanelle, Iowa. She was born in Henderson, Jefferson County, New Jersey, April 29, 1825; married to Isaac Jacobs February 22, 1844, three years later moved to Jefferson County, Wisconsin. Four children were born to them, three of whom survive. Some time after the death of her first husband she was married to Joseph Robinson. To them four children were born, two of whom survive. For over fifty-eight years she has been a member of the church. In 1878 they moved to Fontanelle. She was consistent and exemplary in her life, always ready to encourage and help. She was resigned. The funeral was held in the Congregational church, May 25. Sermon by Elder S. Butler, assisted by Reverend H. J. Wilkins.

WILTFONG.—Dotty Leroy, infant son of Bro. and Sr. Webb Wiltfong, was born June 6, 1902; died May 15, 1903; age 11 months, ten days. Funeral at Mr. A. M. Rolph's, by George H. Shearer. Text, Matthew 19: 14, with Matthew 18: 1-6.

In the article in the June number of the North American Review entitled "Race Suicide and Common Sense," a writer who describes himself as "Paterfamilias" expresses some convictions on the subject which has been brought into prominence by recent utterances of the President in regard to race suicide. The meaning which "Paterfamilias" finds in the statements made by the President is that the larger a family is the better, and with this theory he joins issue. Reverting to the days of his youth, when large families were the rule, he recalls that the lives of the mothers of these families were lives of pain, anxiety, and toil. His own mother did not have, on an average, one new dress a year, and a real nice dress was supposed to last her ten years. She was offered up as a constant sacrifice on the altar of family development, and is suffering agonies to this day for the sake of bringing a large brood into the world. If families are to be large, it is the women who will be compelled to bear most of the burdens of life; who will be compelled to give up many comforts which they crave, and which in some measure they are now beginning to enjoy, and to which they are justly entitled. It seems simply brutal to suggest that a woman should make a sacrifice of herself, merely to swell the aggregate number of human beings in the world. "Paterfamilias" expresses an unwillingness to compare Mr. Roosevelt's expressions in his recent letters to parents with the brutal sayings of Napoleon about the necessity of French women breeding soldiers, but he complains that there is altogether too much of a resemblance to suit him. Besides, to bring more children into the world than can be properly cared for, means, in view of the increasing difficulties of the race for existence, that thousands will be ushered into careers which will be nothing but a constant struggle with the chances very much against them. "Paterfamilias" concludes:

"I have for the President the greatest respect and have always supported him politically, and I can not believe that he wants to see the population of this nation grow simply because it will give us military strength. The fact is that we need better citizens, not more of them; and until there has been some way provided by which every child born into the world has as good a chance as it ought to have in the race for success, I shall continue to hold to the opinion that the fewer there are in the family the better. President Roosevelt has a large family, but he has always had abundant means to care for them. If he could know the sufferings of poor women, I do not believe he would encourage poor men to increase their families. I do not believe one woman has been convinced by what he has said on this subject. I believe in that married life where there is happiness for all, and I have little faith in the theory that if a man marries early, works and worries himself to death he may thus obtain a better position hereafter. I am certain that we ought to treat our wives better than we do. Most of us are moral cowards, who make our wives suffer and then blame it on the Lord, who, I believe, will resent such conduct. I have said some plain things because they need to be said. I can not agree with the President, whose philosophy, if it seems brighter, is yet in truth responsible for a large part of the misery there is in the world."

Most timely in interest are the contents of the June number of the North American Review. In prospect of "The Wesley Bicentennial" which is to be celebrated at the end of June, Doctor William North Rice, Professor of Geology in the Wesleyan University, contributes an article on John Wesley, his life and labors, and the results throughout the English-speaking world of the revival of religion with which his name is identified. The Rt. Honorable Lord Coleridge sketches the character and career of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, "England's Colonial Secretary."

What New York is Doing for Consumptives.

In a recent statement to the mayor of New York, the president of the health department said: "During the calendar year 1902, 7,571 persons died of tuberculosis of the lungs in New York City, while 1,312 died of other forms of tuberculosis. In 1901, the deaths from pulmonary tuberculosis numbered 8,135." The reduction in the mortality from tuberculosis in New York City since 1886 has been about 40 per cent which means, if applied to the greater city, a decrease of more than six thousand in the number of deaths annually caused by it. What such a reduction means economically to the community will be better understood when it is recalled that to a very large extent these deaths take place in the working period, between fifteen and fifty-five years of age,—the years when a person is worth most in a productive way to society. This decrease must be gratifying; and yet it does not mean that there is no tuberculosis problem among New York's many other problems. The disease remains the greatest single cause of deaths in this city, and the number of persons suffering from it is variously estimated from thirty to forty thousand; and many of these are undoubtedly infecting their associates, and thus adding to the extent of the disease.

New York has been fortunate in having had, for many years, as its medical officer, a physician who has added to his other qualifications a special interest in the subject of tuberculosis. His reputation in this particular is international, and Doctor Robert Koch, the celebrated discoverer of the germ which causes tuberculosis, recently, in a London address, highly commended Doctor Hermann M. Biggs for his splendid work in the combat of tuberculosis. The health department has required since 1893 that all public institutions in the city shall report to the department every case of pulmonary tuberculosis; and all physicians in private practice in the city were requested, and since 1897 required, to do the same. In 1894, only 4,263 cases were reported; in 1897, 9,572 were reported; and in 1901, 17,588 reports were sent in. This does not mean that the disease increased in this ratio, but that compliance with the request of the department increased. The department has also made provisions for the free examination of sputum in doubtful cases, and for the gratuitous treatment, at their homes, of those afflicted with consumption who are not financially able to employ a physician. Provision is also made for a free disinfection of bedding, clothing, and premises. It is now further proposed to erect next door to the department's building a tuberculosis dispensary especially adapted and equipped for the free treatment of the various forms of tuberculosis, and to follow up this treatment by visits to patients' homes of trained nurses in the employ of the city.—From "New York's Fight Against Tuberculosis," by Charles H. Johnson, in Review of Reviews for June.

In the first place, let us say that American college life and work as now carried on, are of themselves a better training for journalism in the technical sense than they are for any other calling, except teaching. This is in part because the work of journalism is at many points so closely related to the work of education; and also because the best college work nowadays is in such close sympathy and touch with the best social, ethical, and economic progress of the community at large, such progress being the material with which journalism most concerns itself.

Another reason is that the skillful and correct use of language, whether to state a fact or convey an idea, is of the very essence of good journalism; and our college work more and more recognizes the importance of training all students in the art of direct and lucid expression.

In college one ought to acquire the habit of seeking the truth and liking it for its own sake, in a disinterested way. One's logical faculties ought to get good training, in order that fallacious reasoning may be easily analyzed and disposed of. Scientific study should have as its great object the training of the powers of exact observation and accurate analysis.—From "Journalism," by Albert Shaw, Ph. D., in the June Cosmopolitan.

More than with any other flower does the color of the rose have special significance. Red is love, white is silence, yellow speaks jealousy. One of the legends connected with the rose tells that it became white through being bathed with the tears of mourners who sought the sweetest flowers to lay in the hands of their dead. A prettier conceit declares that all roses were white until one day young Cupid, dancing among them, upset in his merry sport a glass of wine, which dyed the roses upon which it fell, red, its own color. Another legend tells the story of a holy little maid of Bethlehem who was doomed to death. When the stakes were heaped around her the fire would not burn, but the brands which had been flaming turned to red roses, and those which had not caught, to white. From this time forth roses, red and white, were martyrs' flowers. The Turks say that red roses sprang from the blood of Mohammed.—N. Hudson Moore in the July Delineator.

Fearless and Independent.

The Chicago Record-Herald is a conspicuous example of the success with which the public rewards fearless nonpartisanship in the columns of a great metropolitan daily paper. It is an independent newspaper, in which men and measures are invariably viewed wholly from the standpoint of the public good and not from that of the interests of any particular political party. It is the very reverse of neutral—fearless and outspoken on all the great questions of the day, but presenting its editorial opinion upon independent judgment and entirely regardless of political affiliations. Partisanship is barred as strictly from the news columns as from the editorial page. All political news is given without partisan coloring, thus enabling the readers to form correct conclusions for himself. In the ordinary partisan newspaper political news is ordinarily colored to such an extent as to make it difficult if not impossible for the reader to secure a sound basis for intelligent judgment.

Work on the erection of the Street Car Terminal Station on the Iowa State Fair Grounds at Des Moines was begun last week. The station will be 40 by 120 feet and the architect's estimate on cost of construction was nearly $4,000. The structure will be unique in design. It will unquestionably prove a great improvement and convenience. The State Fair management will use the south half of the building and the street railway companies will take up fares as the crowds pass through the building to the platform from which the cars are entered. In this way the crowding and discomfort experienced in the past in the collection of fares on cars jammed with passengers will be avoided.

TESTIMONY ON "REBELLION PROPHECY."

The following letter signed by Robert Clifton was sent to the Historical Department by Bro. C. L. Snow. It may be of use to some.

SEQUATCHIE COLLEGE, Tennessee, May 25, 1903.

To whom it may concern: This is to certify that I live in Bledsoe County, Tennessee. Was born in this county and have lived in Tennessee all my life. I joined the Christian Church and am still a member, and expect to remain one till I find something better. Then as an honest man I would be expected to move forward.

As to the Latter Day Saints, I know but little. Have heard Elder C. L. Snow preach a few times, and hearing him speak of Joseph Smith's connection with the church he represented, my reverted back to an experience of my early life, when I was at a public meeting near where I now live and heard Squire Furgeson read from a small sheet of paper, what was then called Smith's revelation or prophecy. It said the Southern States would rebel against the Northern States, and that the negroes would rise up against their masters and go to war. After the reading of this prophecy I remember there was great excitement all over this country. People here became very much alarmed, thinking the negroes would kill all the white people if they did rise up to war against their masters. I distinctly remember a statement made by an old darcy when the people began to talk about the negroes rising up to fight against their masters. He remarked that he believed that he ought to be a free man the same as the whites, but they need not be afraid of him trying to hurt any white people; that he believed in being obedient to God as well.

Now whether Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God or not I do not know, but I must not say that soon after I heard the prophecy read, some things contained therein came to pass. I heard the prophecy read in the summer of 1858.

I submit the above for publication, being requested to do so by Elder C. L. Snow, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; and I want it understood that I am not in sympathy with Elder Snow or the Latter Day Saints, only so far as they may teach the truth. But as Elder Snow seems to be a man that is honest in his convictions, I see no reason why I should not testify to what I know to be the truth, and if he can get anything out of my testimony I am sure it will do me no harm in complying with this request.

Trusting that if Smith was a prophet of God, or a false one either, that I may be able to learn the facts in the case. I hope that what I say in the above may be taken as I aim it, not to strengthen the claims of Smith being a true prophet, but to simply state facts as they are when I am called upon to do so. Truth to my mind is a jewel that should have place in every man's heart.

Closing this letter with the statement of Paul, "If the truth makes us free then we are free indeed." Permit me to use one statement taken from Colonel Ingersoll's creed, "Love all truth, accept new truth."

ROBERT CLIFTON.

P. S.—The revelation I refer to is the same as the one published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. "Smith's Prophecy on the Rebellion."

LORD KELVIN ON SCIENCE AND FAITH.

We have received some clippings from Glasgow papers in which are given some extracts from one of Lord Kelvin's speeches, and comments thereon by others. We publish the clippings as follows:

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

LORD KELVIN ON CREATIVE POWER.

"Christian Apologetics" is the subject of a course of five public lectures which began on Friday night, as indicated in our editions of Saturday, in the theater of the University College. The Reverend Professor Henslow opened the course, with Lord Reay in the chair, supported by Lord Kelvin, by dealing with "Present Day Rationalism: An Examination of Darwinism."

Lord Kelvin, in moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer, said he was in thorough sympathy with Professor Henslow in the fundamentals of his lecture, but he could not say that with regard to the origin of life science neither affirmed nor denied creative power. Science made every one feel a miracle in himself. It was not in dead matter that they lived and moved and had their being, but in the creating and directive power which science compelled them to accept as an article of belief. They could not escape from that when they studied the physics and dynamics of living and dead matter all around.

Modern biologists were coming once more to a firm acceptance of something, and that was a vital principle. They had an unknown object put before them in science. In thinking of that object they were all agnostics. They only knew God in his works, but they were absolutely forced by science to admit and to believe with absolute confidence in a directive power—in an influence other than physical, dynamical, electrical forces. Cicero had denied that they could have come into existence by a fortuitous concurrence of atoms. There was nothing between absolute scientific belief in creative power and the acceptance of the theory of a fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Was there, he asked anything so absurd as to believe that a number of atoms, by falling together, of their own accord, could make a crystal, a sprig of moss, a microbe, a living animal? People thought that, given million of years, these might come to pass, but they could not think that a million of millions of millions of years could give them unaided a beautiful world like ours. They had a spiritual influence, and in science a knowledge that there was that influence in the world around them. He admired the healthy, breezy atmosphere of free thought in Professor Henslow's lecture. Let no one, he urged, be afraid of true freedom. They could be free in their thought, in their criticisms, and with freedom of thought they were bound to come to the conclusion that science was not antagonistic to religion, but a help for religion. (Cheers.) Lord Reay said that it was a grand thing to hear that prince of science, Lord Kelvin, give his testimony on behalf of religion. As president of that college, he hoped they would always maintain the open door for free discussion, and welcome the members of all Christian churches within their walls. (Cheers.)—Glasgow Daily Mail and Record, May 4.

LORD KELVIN EXPLAINS.

"Citizen" Office, London, Monday.

The following letter from Lord Kelvin, written on Saturday from his London residence, appears in to-day's "Times;"

"In your report of a few words which I said, in proposing a vote of thanks to Professor Henslow for his lecture 'On Present-Day Rationalism,' yesterday evening in University College, I find the following: 'Was anything so absurd as to believe that a number of atoms by falling together of their own accord could make a crystal, a sprig of moss, a microbe, a living animal?'"

"I wish to delete 'a crystal.' Though, no doubt, your report of what I said is correct, exceedingly narrow limits of time prevented me from endeavoring to explain how different is the structure of a crystal from that of any portion, large or small, of an animal or plant, or the cellular formation of which the bodies of animals and plants are made, but I desired to point out that, while 'fortuitous concurrence of atoms' is not an inappropriate description of the formation of a crystal, it is utterly absurd in respect to the coming into existence of the growth or the continuation of the molecular combinations presented in the bodies of living things. Here scientific thought is completely led to ask the idea of creative power.

"Forty years ago I asked Liebig, walking somewhere in the country, if he believed that the grass and flowers which we saw around us grew by mere chemical forces. He answered, 'No; no more than I could believe that a book of botany, describing them, could grow by mere chemical forces.'

"Every action of human free will is a miracle to physical and chemical and mathematical science."—Glasgow Daily Mail and Record, May 4.

LORD KELVIN ON RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

The following letter from Sir W. T. Thiselton-Dyer appears in the Times of yesterday:

Sir: When a man of known distinction gives public expression to an opinion it is, of course, received with attention. But its validity will depend, not upon his distinction, but upon the authority which he has achieved in the field to which his opinion relates.

In the domain of physics, to the exploration of which Lord Kelvin has devoted an honored lifetime, he would be a bold man who would cross swords with him. But for dogmatic utterance on biological questions there is no reason to suppose that he is better equipped than any person of average intelligence.

In a recent speech Lord Kelvin has taken occasion to define with more precision than, perhaps, he has ever done before his view of the possible attitude of scientific inquiry to inorganic nature on the one hand, and to organic on the other. And he has emphasized this in the letter published in your columns to-day.

That view is, as I apprehend, this: In the former, he claims for scientific investigation the utmost freedom; in the latter, scientific thought is "compelled to accept the idea of Creative Power." That transcends the possibilities of scientific investigation. Weisman describes this to be "the attempt to indicate the mechanism through which the phenomena of the world are brought about. When this mechanism ceases science is no longer possible." Lord Kelvin, in effect, wipes out by a stroke of the pen the whole position won for us by Darwin. And in so doing it can hardly be denied that his present position is inconsistent with the principle laid down in his British Association address at Edinburgh in 1871:

"Science is bound by the everlasting law of honor to face fearlessly every problem which can be fairly presented to it. If a probable solution, consistent with the ordinary course of nature, can be found, we must not invoke an abnormal act of Creative Power." Among the biologists of the present day I apprehend that there are few who are prepared to contend that the Darwinian theory is not so consistent.

It is a common dialectic artifice to state an opponent's position in terms which allow of its being more readily confuted. It is scarcely, however, worthy of Lord Kelvin. What biologist has ever suggested that a fortuitous concurrence of atoms "could make . . . a sprig of moss?" I confess I think that Lord Kelvin's first thoughts were best, and that it is equally absurd to suppose that a crystal could be made in the same way. A fortuitous concurrence of atoms might procure an amorphous mass of matter; but to form a crystal the "atoms" must be selected and of the same kind, and their concurrence is, therefore, not fortuitous. The fact is that the argument from design applies, for what it is worth, as much to a diamond as to a caterpillar. If it is to be rejected in favor of a mechanical explanation in the one case, it is impossible logically to maintain it in the other.

Lord Kelvin quotes Liebig as denying that "grass and flowers . . . grew by mere chemical forces." If not it may be asked, by what do they grow? If growth is to be accounted for by a "vital principle," this must be capable of quantitative measurement like any other force. If it is physical energy in another form, Liebig's dictum is futile. If not, organisms are not subject to the principle of conservation of energy. Yet this principle was first indicated by Mayer, a biologist.

Physicists, it may be remarked are not without their own difficulties. But we do not dismiss their conclusions impatiently on that account. Lord Kelvin said that "ether was absolutely non-atomic; it was absolutely structureless and homogeneous." He speaks of it as if it were a definite concrete thing like the atmosphere. But we can not picture to our minds how such a medium can possess elasticity, or how it can transmit undulations. The fact is that the ether is a mere mathematical figment, convenient because it satisfies various formulæ. As it is only an intellectual conception, we may invest it with any properties we please. The late Professor Clifford once told me that it was harder than steel. I believe it is now thought to be gelatinous. Anyhow, it is nothing more than a working hypothesis, which some day, like phlogiston, will only have historic interest.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Henry Ellis wrote from Llanely, South Wales, June 10: "We are all rejoicing at the prospect of our beloved president shortly visiting us, and we pray that his visit may be productive of lasting good to the work here. . . . I fail to see why the angel's message does not make more headway in this mission. Perchance the prophet has spoken truly where he has said darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people. Any way, this is a hard mission. We do not get free pulpits and places of worship thrown open for the doctrine of the Son of God to be preached, as we read you do in some parts of America. Brn. Rushton, John Davis, and William Lewis had rather a rough time whilst preaching on the streets of Tonypandy two weeks ago, and were compelled to seek protection of the police authorities. Whilst thus discouraged somewhat, we are still conscious of the fact that truth is slowly yet surely prevailing over error and priestcraft, and our trust is centered in him who is at the helm of the good old ship of Zion, and holds in his hands the destiny of all nations. May he, even our God, qualify each one of his servants for the work whereunto he has called them."

Willard J. Smith wrote from St. Louis, Missouri, June 16, that he had reached his field and that things are moving along nicely. He says: "Five were baptized here yesterday, and good interest prevails."

The senior editor, President Joseph Smith, on June 17 wrote the following from Brooklyn, New York: "We are to be on board at nine o'clock. It is now six. We are well. R. C. spoke last night. Steamer sails at ten this forenoon."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Elder William Lewis, missionary to Wales, and family, return to the United States, leaving Liverpool, England, on the Cedric, July 3, next.

In a letter from Elder E. Keeler, dated Oakland, California, June 16, we are informed that he and Elder Parker have been operating the tent at Chico, and have baptized five. They have arranged for a branch organization in the near future. Bro. Keeler is expecting to leave for Humboldt County soon, for a summer's campaign.

The Boone News Boone, Iowa, June 17, under the heading, "Their Stand on Polygamy," spoke of the action of the Des Moines District, in session at Boone, indorsing the action had at last General Conference favoring Constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy. The News inserted the contents of the little pamphlet issued by the First Presidency in April, setting forth the beliefs and actions of the Reorganization on the polygamy question.

FRIENDS OF GOD.

SERMON BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH, AT LAMONI,
IOWA, FEBRUARY 15, 1903.

Reported by Leon A. Gould.

I desire to read a portion of the ninth chapter of Mark, and I prefer to read it from the Inspired Translation, commencing at the thirtieth verse:

And he came to Capernaum; and being in the house he asked them, Why was it that he ye disputed among yourselves by the way? But they held their peace, being afraid, for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who was the greatest among them. Now Jesus sat down and called the twelve, and said unto them, If any man desire to be first, he shall be last of all, and servant of all. And he took a child, and sat in the midst of them; and when he had taken the child in his arms, he said unto them, Whosoever shall humble himself like one of these children, and receiveth me, ye shall receive in my name. And whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me only, but him that sent me, even the Father. And John spake unto him, saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followed not us; and we forbade him, because he followed not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not; for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part. And whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink, in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, He shall not lose his reward. And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea. Therefore, if thy hand offend thee, cut it off; or if thy brother offend thee and confess not and forsake not, he shall be cut off. It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands, to go into hell. For it is better for thee to enter into life without thy brother, than for thee and thy brother to be cast into hell; into the fire that never shall be quenched, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And again, if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: for he that is thy standard, by whom thou walkest, if he become a transgressor, he shall be cut off. It is better for thee, to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell; into the fire that never shall be quenched. Therefore, let every man stand or fall, by himself, and not for another; or not trusting another. Seek unto my Father, and it shall be done in that very moment what ye shall ask, if ye ask in faith, believing that ye shall receive. And if thine eye which seeth for thee, him that is appointed to watch over thee to show thee light, become a transgressor and offend thee, pluck him out. It is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God, with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire. For it is better that thyself should be saved, than to be cast into hell with thy brother, where their worm dieth not, and where the fire is not quenched. For every one shall be salted with fire; and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt; but the salt must be good. For if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it? (the sacrifice;) therefore it must needs be that ye have salt in yourselves, and have peace with one another."

In connection with this I desire to invite your attention to John 15: 15: "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."

The first thought to which I wish to invite your attention to-night is, that for the believer in Jesus Christ there is something higher and better than service. It is all right to serve God; and to be a servant of God is a privilege which all men ought to appreciate. But notwithstanding this, he has, in his great mercy and condescension, granted us something better. He says, as we have quoted to-night, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth."

It is, then, the duty of the servant to obey the master, without knowing the whys and the wherefores. If the master tells a servant to do this or to do that, it is his business, as a servant, to do it; and he is not expected to stop and ask questions as to why he wants it done, nor what the master expects to accomplish. The plans that he has in mind he is under no obligations to reveal to his servants. And if the servant should pause to ask the master, Why do you do so; why do you wish this done, or that done? it is very probable that his service would soon be dispensed with. He would not be needed. And if we occupied only the plane of servants, and servants alone, it might be possible that we would have to occupy in this way. But the Master has said, as we have before called to your attention, that, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." The highest and best privilege, then, that is granted to those who obey Christ and the gospel, is that they may be in the relationship, to Christ, of friends; on intimate terms with God and Christ. With this intimacy we bring about that condition of things that ought to exist between friend and friend. A better condition, possibly, than ever has obtained between friend and friend in the earthly state. For we have not yet arrived, I think, to the heights of friendship. We have not yet comprehended what it means to be a friend indeed. But we have had friends, no doubt, who were so near to us, and with whom we were so intimate, that there were no secrets between us; that what one knew he was not afraid to reveal to the other, not afraid that he would be betrayed, not afraid that his confidence would be misplaced; but was glad of the privilege of meeting his friend and unbosoming himself to that friend. And, if he had any plans for the future, he felt better after he had explained all these plans to his friend, than he would if he kept them all to himself. We know that much about friendship, whether we have ever arrived to the heights of its privileges or not. And if I understand this passage of scripture correctly (and I hope I do; for it is a glorious thought), we have the privilege of occupying that relationship to Christ, that we may be friends of his; enter into that glorious relationship with God, if we live for it, so that God will reveal his mind and will to us. It is possible, and I think quite certain, too, that he never will reveal himself fully to us in this life, because of the fact that we are not prepared to have a full revelation of God. We could not comprehend him as he is. But he is ready and willing to reveal himself to us just so far as we are prepared to comprehend that revelation. Just to the extent that we are able to comprehend him we will know him. And as we comprehend more and more of God, and become better qualified to understand him, more and more will be revealed. There is no place between here and there; there is no line between us and the Omnipotent One that the Lord has drawn and said, "Thus far shall you come, no farther." But we are privileged to go on and on and on until we shall comprehend him in his greatness, far more than it is possible for us to comprehend to-night.

As I remarked in the beginning, it would be a grand thing if we were only privileged to be servants. But when something better is offered us, I take it as granted that it is right for us to occupy. It is proper for us to aspire to it; proper for us to have an ambition to occupy the nearest relationship that is possible for us to occupy, and get on intimate terms with God, so that whatever we are prepared to understand he will reveal to us. That seems to be Christ's plan of dealing with men, with his disciples; that whatsoever the Lord had said to him, he had made known unto them. Not only is this true in the policy of Jesus Christ, but it seems to have been the policy of the Lord all along the ages. I will refer to just one other instance as I pass along. That is the case of Daniel at the time he saw some of those wondrous visions that he relates. In the eighth chapter of Daniel I read this, commencing at the 15th verse: "And it came to pass, when I, even I Daniel, had seen the vision, and sought for the meaning, then, behold, there stood before me as the appearance of a man. And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." There the voice that came to Daniel, or that he overheard, speaking to Gabriel, said, Make this man to understand the vision. He had seen the vision, but it was the Lord's will that he should comprehend it, that he should be able to grasp it and know what it meant; the angelic being was going to make Daniel understand the vision. And I know of no instance in the world, in the history of God's dealing with his people, where man has not had the privilege of understanding, if he will live for it and prepare himself to receive that which God is willing to bestow. In fact, it is philosophically impossible for a man to do a thing without a comprehension of it. There is no such thing as doing so far as carrying a principle into effect is concerned, without the mental being associated with the physical, if indeed physical power is required. There must be a mental part done as well as a physical, or the act is not done; can not be done. If a teacher tells a pupil to go to the blackboard and set down a certain amount of figures, and under them set down so and so, and under them so and so, and draw the line beneath them, and below that line write a certain sum, and the pupil does as he is told, he has not done the example. It takes a mental act, as well as a physical, to work out that example, and he has not done it at all, can not do it that way. It is philosophically impossible to do a thing without the mentality is engaged with the rest.

In this chapter we have read to you to-night, there are some points that I wish to invite your special attention to. There has been, perhaps, in all ages nearly, or ever since the Christian era, even before, an issue between the pulpit and the pew. The rights of the pulpit and the rights of the pew have been in discussion in all churches, to a greater or less extent. And it is easy to be accounted for. For every man who is engaged in trying to understand his duty will probably understand the position that he occupies better than he understands the position that somebody else occupies. And understanding the position that he occupies the best, he does not take into consideration always the rights of somebody else. And hence when one undertakes to define the duty of the other they clash more or less.

What has been true of other people is also true in regard to us as a people. We are very likely to understand our own position better than we understand anybody else's. And that is commendable, too, to a certain extent. But it sometimes brings about division; and such seems to have been the case among the disciples of old. I gather that from what I have read here. For we are told that when he asked them what they were disputing about by the way, they held their peace, being afraid, for by the way they had disputed among themselves which was the greatest among them. Some of them thought that they were greater than their brethren.

Now if there is one thing that I have admired more than another, in the philosophy of the revelations of the last days, it is this, that when you examine the law that governs the church, as found in the revelations of God to us, there can be found no body of men, associated with the general body, in which is the balance of power. I find no quorum, for instance, when I come to apply the law to them, which can have more power in its decision than some other quorum. I read that one quorum has the same power as another, and their decision has the same weight. And so on around until I undertake to put my finger where the balance of power rests, and I can not find it. There is no such place. And then when you go through all the quorums, they seem to be so well balanced, and in such equilibrium, as far as their rights and powers are concerned; then I go to the body and find all those quorums, and the several officers thereof, are to be sustained by the body, so that they can not act independently of it. And I ask the question that was asked by the disciples here upon this occasion, Who is the greatest? And I am unable to decide it by the law.

However, we are told whom we shall receive as teachers, and in authority over us. "Whosoever shall humble himself like one of these children." He had taken as an example a little child, in his arms, and held it up before them, and he says, "Whosoever shall humble himself like one of these children, and receiveth me, ye shall receive in my name." That is saying a great deal. When you come to determine whom you shall receive as an ambassador for Christ, "Whosoever shall humble himself as one of these little children, and receiveth me, ye shall receive in my name;" that is the test. The humble man who has received Christ, humbles himself like a little child, is ready to receive instruction as well as to give; he is to be received by the church, and he is to be the one in whom they shall place their confidence and trust, so far as they are justified in placing confidence and trust in man.

"And whosoever receiveth me, receiveth not me only, but him that sent me, even the Father." By receiving this humble man, by receiving this man that maketh himself as a little child, you receive Christ; and by receiving Christ you receive God. And thus, in receiving such a man as this you receive God and Christ. And the opposite of this is, that if you reject a man like this, you reject God and Christ. To reject an ambassador of Christ, one who is sent in his name, and who has done as the Lord has required him to do here, is to reject God. We must be very careful in this matter lest we reject God, when we are rejecting the teachings of men.

But there are to this question, like almost all other questions, two extremes. There are but few things in which the height of extravagance is the last degree of economy, but in the most of things these extreme views are wrong. Now, there have been too extreme views in regard to this. While there have been some who have taught in the past, especially in the valleys of the mountains, that the priesthood should be obeyed, and that their words should be accepted as the word of God, himself; that men were not to ask questions; and one individual said, in effect, when he was teaching this, that, if you go wrong by following my advice, I will answer for you at the judgment bar; I will be there, and you will not be under condemnation, but I will take it upon myself. That was an extreme view. On the other hand there are a great many people who say, I will not receive the teaching of those who are called and set apart to act in different positions in the church. I will not listen to them at all, unless it is in harmony with my views of the case. I will not stop to examine their teachings at all; I am under no obligation to hear them; I understand for myself. That is true in a sense. But did not it ever strike you as a little peculiar that those people generally wanted to tell the officers what their duty was? They do not want the officers to tell them what their duty is, but they want to tell the officers. This class of people generally desire to mark out the duty of every other in the church from the First Presidency down to the deacon, and prescribe rules of limitation for them; and if they do not act within these rules they do not accept them. That is the other extreme; both are wrong.

Now, if a man who has been sent of God, and occupies a position of trust in the church, preaches to you what you never have understood to be right before, that is the time for you to stop and examine it. If he preaches to you what you already understand, there is not much necessity for you to examine it; unless you want to examine it to see if you and he are not both wrong. You do not have to stop and ask, Is he right, if you are going to set up your own opinion as a standard of right. But if he preaches to you that which you have not before had your attention called to, it is time to stop and ask, Is that right? And ask it seriously; ask it truthfully; and investigate until you are sure. And that you have a right to do, so far as investigation is concerned. And I will say more; it is your duty to do. It is your duty to investigate and determine in your mind whether the thing is in harmony with the will of God or not. And if you are a friend of God, a friend of Christ, occupying the high plane we were talking about in the beginning, it will not be long before you will be able to determine whether the things advanced that were new to you, are correct or not. If occupying the position of a friend of God, the powers of heaven are ready to answer to your call, and by the influence of the Holy Spirit of God your mind will be wrought upon so that if you were not able to comprehend it by virtue of your own natural intellect, that intellect may be quickened, your preceptions may be enlarged, and your wisdom may be increased to that extent that you may see and understand, and move wisely in the lines of right. I want to hear somebody preach something that I did not know before, so that if it is right I may get the benefit of it, and if it is wrong I may get the benefit of the investigation and the research to find out. But I say we all have a right to determine before we act.

Now as the right of decision where there is a conflict of opinion, I just have this to say; the man who is directly concerned has the right of decision. If the matter is in regard to my duty, either personal or official, I have the right to decide. I have the privilege of receiving light from God to decide carefully whether I will act or not. And it is not your business, if not occupying the position I do, to decide in regard to it. If it pertains to your duty, and is something you are required to do, you have the right of decision. And no man, I care not what position he may occupy, has a right to dictate to you whether you shall do it or not. The decision belongs to the man who is required to act. I believe that with all my heart. I believe that is in harmony with the genius of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I once heard a brother tell an individual something in regard to being baptized that I thought peculiar at the time; but the more I have thought of it since, the more I have thought it was right. An individual came to him and said, How much shall I believe before I am baptized. I believe the doctrine you preach to some extent; but there are some things that I can not believe, and I would like to know how far a man should go before he enters into the church through baptism. I do not expect, he says, to know all things beforehand. Well, said the brother, I will tell you. Investigate all the time, do not let it carelessly go by. Engage your mind in regard to the subject and prayerfully ask for light, and then do not be baptized so long as you are satisfied not to be; but when you get to that point that nothing else will satisfy you but baptism, be baptized.

I believe that is all right. Of course you may be careless in regard to it and never come to that conclusion. But, as the brother said, investigate, prayerfully seek for light, and then when nothing else will satisfy you, move on.

I believe that is right in regard to every other thing we are required to do; we are required to seek for light. We are required to ask God for help. We are privileged to move in the relationship of a friend to God, when a question confronts us as to whether we should do or not do. Just ask for light, seek for information, investigate in humility before God, pray; and when you get in that condition that you feel it is your duty to do, and you can not be satisfied until you do, then do it. It is a safe thing anyway. If you move before that time you may move wrong. But I can not comprehend, what that individual that I was speaking of a while ago taught, that anybody is going to answer for us in the day of judgment.

In this chapter that we read to-night there are some indications, if we were to take one or two passages by themselves, without the relationship of the others, that somebody was to see for us, and somebody was to tell us what to do; but when we take it altogether we can not get that idea. "Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea. Therefore, if thy hand offend thee, cut it off; and if thy brother offend thee and confess not and forsake not, he shall be cut off. It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands, to be cast into hell. For it is better for thee to enter into life without thy brother, than for thee and thy brother to be cast into hell; into the fire that never shall be quenched, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. And again, if thy foot offend thee cut it off; for he that is thy standard, by whom thou walkest, if he become a transgressor, he shall be cut off."

Now the thought might be entertained by some, that somebody was to be a standard for us, that we should take him as our pattern, for he says, "He that is thy standard, by whom thou walkest." As much as to say, if we were to stop there, that somebody's example was to be our pattern to go by, be as a standard by which we are to gauge our lives. But immediately he says, "If he becomes a transgressor he shall be cut off." Now, if you do not stop to question, how do you know whether he is a transgressor or not? There is a judgment to come in somewhere. There must be some provision by which this man shall be judged, before it shall be determined whether he is a transgressor or not, though he may in a sense be a standard. And again it goes on to say, "Therefore, let every man stand or fall, by himself, and not for another; or not trusting another."

I think that word trusting is to be understood in a limited sense. I do not believe that God requires me to distrust my brethren. I do not see how we could build up that way. I do not see how there could be any benefit in organization; I do not see how there could be any benefit in coöperation, if we were to distrust all the time. I believe that we ought to trust our brethren, and we ought to trust them just this far: we believe they will be honorably, and conscientiously, and humbly discharge the duty that belongs to them and their office; and that we will refuse to believe anything else until the evidence is produced that they have betrayed their trust and violated their obligations.

But what it means not to trust another is that you can not depend upon him for your own salvation; that you will have to receive directly from the fountain of light for yourself. You believe that your brother upon your right or upon your left will do his duty as he understands it. That is not sufficient for you. You must know your own duty, and by the inspiration and light of God's Holy Spirit be able to comprehend what God requires of you, doing it without leaning upon this man or that man, for if you do you will fall. "Let every man stand or fall, by himself," the word says. He goes down or stands upon his responsibility, leaning alone upon the power from which his light cometh, and not upon another.

"And if thine eye, which seeth for thee, him that is appointed to watch over thee to show thee light, become a transgressor and offend thee, pluck him out."

It would appear from that, to the casual thinker, perhaps, that he meant somebody was appointed to show you the light, and you were expected to walk in the light as he showed it to you. In a sense that is so, and in a sense it is not so; for we are told that if he becomes "a transgressor and offend thee, pluck him out." And if we always walk in the light as he showed it to us we would never know whether he was in transgression or not. There is where Israel fell, once, in these latter times. Right upon that rock the old ship was wrecked! Men who were appointed as leaders, the man who was recognized by a large body of latter-day Israel as a seer, transgressed the law of God, did that which the revelations of God condemned. The voice of God to the church was, pluck him out; and they did not do it. And the result was that the body he represented was rejected. It is a dangerous thing to get into that condition. It is dangerous to go the other extreme, and say that what you have already conceived to be right, what you have already conceived to be your duty, you will measure every man by, and if he does not preach according to that, and teach according to that, you will not hear him. Hear him; if he teaches contrary to your conceptions, investigate carefully. It may be the very thing you need. It may be a higher light. It may be a step in advance, and if it is you want to know it. And when a man preaches something you do not believe, that is the time to investigate, as I said before, more especially than when he does preach something you believe. So those two extremes must be avoided. We must hear those whom God has sent, and give their teaching due weight, and due consideration, and, if possible, discover the light that they undertake to show us: when we see it, walk in it, no matter if it is contrary to our notions heretofore obtaining.

Right there, in my mind, is where the office-work of the individual comes in, whether he be of the priesthood, of the twelve, of the high priests, the seventy, the elders, or wherever he belongs. He is a teacher sent of God to men, and if he is in the line of duty and comes under the influences of the Spirit of God, he is very likely to preach something that you did not think of before. And if it be right, and he be an accepted servant of God, his prerogative and his ability will be shown in this: his adaptability and his ability to show that light to you to your comprehension and understanding. His office-work means that he is a teacher. No matter how much he knows, unless he can impart that light in some way to you, and put you in a condition that you can learn it, he does you no good. It may be his fault, it may be yours. If he teach a thing that is true, and you do not understand it, it is your fault. If he teach anything and you can not understand it, then somebody is at fault; he is at fault or you are at fault. If he be a true teacher he will have the ability and power and light with him by which he can unfold to your understanding the thing that is necessary for you to do. Give him due consideration, and respectfully hear what he has to say, investigate, praying God to know, and as the light comes to you, in connection with his teaching, that will confirm it, move on and discharge duty.

There is no room for dictation here. There is no room for arbitrary measures. And in the same spirit which Christ dealt with men, so we can deal with each other. "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." That is the principle with which Christ works with us. That is the principle with which we ought to work with each other, instructing, edifying, and teaching. I do not care how much a man knows, if he can not teach us it does us no good. If we employ a teacher in our public schools who knows all about the different branches of education, so that he can in a moment's time solve any problem that is presented to him in connection with those studies, but if he cannot explain it so that a child can understand it, he is practically useless to us, practically useless to the community. He knows enough, but he can not impart the information. His education and schooling do not educate him. I was reading a comment the other day about Abraham Lincoln that I thought was very appropriate. Somebody said that he was educated, not schooled. That is the kind of an education that all men need. Schooling is all right in its place, but it is not education always; and the individual that occupies a position as a teacher, whether in the pulpit or elsewhere, if he can not teach so that those who hear him can understand, then he is of no practical use as a teacher. But whether in the pulpit, in the schoolroom, in the offices of our civil government, or anywhere else, I despise a dictator. We want teachers. We want instructors. And that is what God intended that the men should be whom he calls: that if they were appointed to be standard-bearers, or seers to show the light, they were simply to point it out to you and get you to see it. And when you have seen it you are not only justified, but you are in duty bound to walk in that light.

I say that there has been fault on both extremes. Men have claimed more than belonged to them in this direction. The people have not been willing to grant what does belong to them in some respects. If they hear anything that is contrary, as I said before, to their former ideas, they at once reject it. They are not willing to be taught. Such people will never be led any higher than they are now. Men who will undertake to teach in any other way, only in the meek and lowly Spirit of Christ, and put themselves where Christ is, as teachers of men, are perfectly useless as officers.

Let us each one labor in his calling in the Spirit of God, in humility before God. Let us labor together as officers, and as brothers, recognizing the fact that we are all one with God; that God is just as willing to reveal himself to one as the other. His word may come to me through you; and that may be the way that he has chosen to enlighten me. He has selected men and stationed them in different offices in the church, that through them the people might be taught. But he has not selected men to tell them what to do before the lessons are learned. They are there to teach; they are there to instruct. And if you listen to their instruction, and listen to it humbly, praying for light, you will comprehend it, and you will rejoice with the preacher, and altogether you will be benefited.

And may his peace and his blessing abide with us in our efforts to do right, struggling out of darkness into the marvelous light of God, is my prayer.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—No. 27.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

Wednesday, March 14, 1860 (Continued). I rejoice in God my Savior to-night, for I can truly say I know of his doctrine that it is of God, and not of men; and while I can say indeed other churches have each a little smattering of the doctrine of Christ interspersed with their human creeds, which are changing as civilization is advancing since the dark ages emerged into the reformation set on foot by Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Knox, Zwingli, Henry the Eighth, King of England, and championed by the Wesleys, who chanted the beautiful prophetic hymn,—

Almighty God of love,
Set up the attracting sign,
And summon whom thou dost approve,
For messengers divine.

From favored Abrah'm's seed
The new apostles chose,
In isles and continents to spread
The dead-reviving news.

These beautiful verses reflect so much of the latter-day work in which we are engaged, I can not think but that if the Wesleys were on earth now they would certainly be true Latter Day Saints. But to return to my hosts. Brother Beebe is all alive to the interests of the latter-day work, and has had a long experience with the founders of the church under God's true appointed servants, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, and has never lost his first love in the gospel of Christ, though he has passed through many trials. The severest of all to him now is the loss of his good, devoted wife, Sr. Submit Beebe, and his son-in-law, John Richards. They were both well and rejoicing in the faith and doctrine of Christ seven weeks ago when I left here, but now are in the paradise of God.

Father and daughter left alone to mourn; but mingled with their tears is the joyful knowledge if faithful they will be united in the resurrection of the just and reign with Christ on the earth a thousand years. But how keenly they feel their loss! Harriet is so young to be left alone, it seems more painful to be separated from her loved husband. It is so sad, I can not but mourn with them. Bro. Beebe is like a shock of corn almost ready for the harvest. I do not feel that his separation is very long; he too must soon be called to try the realities of the eternal world, whither we are all tending. The all-absorbing question with us who are left is, Shall we be ready to hear the welcome call, Come home? The lesson in this instance: One was elderly, the other was young in years; both called about the same time; both were true Christians; yet the harvest reaper does not show any partiality for age. Is it possible that Providence may select those best prepared, and those left behind are spared in order that they may be better qualified in the near future to follow in the next harvest time? This idea is food for thought and is worthy of our serious consideration; and if it proves true should inspire us with more diligence and faithfulness in our service in the Master's cause to make this world better because we live in it.

During the remainder of this week I visited the Saints confirming them in the faith of the Reorganization. Diligence, earnest faithfulness in Christ, is the watchword of the dear people in this branch of the church. Doubts in relation to the ultimate triumph of the latter-day work are dismissed from their minds now. The gloomy day of the latter-day apostasy has cleared away and the Reorganization is the continuation of the church of God without a doubt.

Sunday, March 18, 1860. At eleven o'clock I spoke upon the first principles of the gospel. Saints are all well and in the best of spirits. By unanimous vote Elder Calvin Beebe was appointed delegate to the April conference. The Saints in our meeting discussed the question of bearing my expenses to the conference, for they said they were not willing to allow Bro. Beebe do it all. So by unanimous vote they resolved to defray my expenses to the General Conference; but as they have not the money, Bro. Beebe advances it and they will repay him.

This morning I visited and prayed with Sr. Richards. She is sixty-eight years old and very feeble, and will soon join with her son, who has preceded her so recently.

Monday, March 19. I was called to the house of mourning. Sr. Frances Richards, surrounded by her large family, is expressing joy in her hope of eternal life. She said: "I have no fear of death. Do not weep or mourn for me, for we will all soon meet again; I am going to a better home." After pausing a few moments she continued, "One thing is certain, we have had our minds too much on things of this world. My children, live faithfully, so you can meet me in the first resurrection. Farewell, farewell!" And she went to sleep without a single expression of pain and sorrow. So sweetly she sleeps before me; but the children are weeping and sobbing so tenderly, that the moments all seem sanctified to me as tokens of a brighter day made possible through a crucified and risen Savior, as foreseen by the Prophet Hosea, (13: 14,) when he said, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." Yes, indeed I feel to-day it is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting. Yet it is sad to be separated from loved ones in this life. Sr. Richards was a Christian, and had many rich blessings from her heavenly Father in evidence of the great latter-day work, and the divine calling of the choice Seer, and was fully established in the conviction that his eldest son would be called of God to be his successor in the presidency of the church.

Wednesday, March 21, 1860. A large audience of friends and neighbors gathered at the residence of Sr. Richards to pay their respects to the departed one, and mourn with the family; all attest to her integrity and christian virtues. My text was St. John's Revelation, 14: 13: "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." I was blessed of the Lord while I discoursed upon the subject of the hope of the Saints, and the resurrection of the dead, and the sure evidence that our beloved sister had so lived that she was entitled to the "better resurrection." (Hebrews 11: 35.) This is indeed a blessed promise, if all the people would so live that they could know the promises of the Lord are sure to them, that they shall live again in the new world where all is peace, and sorrow never enters. The skeptical have no consolation in comparison with the true Christian when they are called to the house of mourning, as this dear family has been this morning. And as they truly loved their mother they now have another inspiring incentive to continue in righteousness and holiness so they may meet their loved ones in the first resurrection.

Thursday, March 22. Prayer-meeting this evening at Bro. Beebe's. It was a spiritual feast to the Saints, who were confirmed in our blessed hope. My sister, Mary Stiles, gave me some new linen apparel and money, and Sr. Harriet Richards some other raiment, bright and new. So I am nicely clothed to attend our conference. It is just marvelous how I am favored just in time when I am in need. I am glad I have not worried over my wants. Truly the Lord has provided just as he has promised, when he said, "Wherefore, if God so clothes the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"—Matthew 6: 30.

Well, I shall be content in the promises of our heavenly Father and labor as best I can in this unfriendly world. The Savior and all the prophets and apostles were hated in this world, and they were on missions of love and good-will, and so I am on the same errand of mercy. But there is one thing true as it is lamentable, the popular religious churches have always been the enemies of those who have been truly sent of God. Their ministers were salaried men, well provided for by stipulated agreement from their fellow men. But the called and sent of God are under humiliation in the eyes of the world, as being poor and unprovided for, only as it seems chance provides for them as beggars who put up their plea to more fortunate pilgrims in this sin-cursed world. May God help us, my dear brethren and fellow servants in the Lord, to be faithful. If Jesus and his loving disciples could afford the humiliation of not having a place to call their own, and could carry a few loaves and fishes under their arms to satisfy hunger when they traveled on foot the high-ways of the hilly country of Judea, and the Savior by whom the world was made and without him was not anything made, could submit to be born in a manger where the oxen are wont to be fed, certainly we can endure the slightings of the sectarian churches and their apostate mother, and the insults of our kindred who should be loving brothers and sisters.

Sunday, March 25, 1860. I held services at Bro. Richard Y. Kelley's residence; good audience of his neighbors. Bro. Noah Cotton and Marcelous McCowen, who were members of the old church, were present. They are inclined to skepticism now. Subject, divine evidence of the Book of Mormon. Was blessed very much by the Holy Spirit in my effort to establish the importance of the blessed book as another witness that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. It is a remarkable fact that though the Protestant churches have so much to say against the book, yet I never hear one of their ministers quote a passage from it to show that it conflicts with the Christian religion; and I clearly proved, judging from the standard established by our blessed Lord, that the author of the book, if it were only human in its moral teaching and doctrinal parts, was a good man, for Jesus said, "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things."

Another beautiful thought connected with the mission of Joseph Smith is the fact that in all of his authentic utterances and many letters and revelations upon the subject of the Christian religion, not one word or sentence can be fairly or honestly construed by his bitterest enemies to be in conflict with the holy and pure doctrine of Christ as taught in the Bible. At the close of the services a son and daughter of Bro. Kelley arose and confessed their faith in Christ and wished to unite with the church. We dismissed our meeting and repaired to the water, where I baptized Bro. William H. Kelley and his sister Mary. Bro. Beebe assisted in confirming them in our prayer-meeting this evening. Bro. William impressed me with his sterling worth as a young man that could not be swerved from his integrity and manly uprightness, and would make his mark in the church as a champion for the truth against wrongdoing.

Monday, March 26. Mr. William B. Wilson, of the neighborhood, very kindly brought us in his private conveyance fifteen miles to Glenwood, the county-seat of Mills County, on our journey to the General Conference, and this evening at eight o'clock we held meeting in the court-house; large audience and best of interest manifest. Subject, the gospel of Christ. I endeavored to establish the fact that the doctrine of Christ is unchangeable, and its principles being eternal like its author, is the power of God unto salvation. And to ignore or leave out any part of it is to jeopardize our chances to secure the celestial glory where God and Christ are.

We accepted the hospitality of Bro. Coolege; he was a member of the church in Nauvoo, Illinois; was well acquainted with the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He says they were good, conscientious men, honorable in all their dealings, and Christians if there ever were any since the days of Jesus Christ. He has become indifferent and cold in his faith, yet he says, "I have hope, but have given up trying to defend any religion."

Tuesday, March 27. This morning we continue our journey by the public stage-coach drawn by four horses, for St. Joseph, Missouri, a distance of one hundred thirty miles. Our fare is fourteen dollars. The coachman is gentlemanly and cracks his long whip lively, though careful to avoid hitting his horses, of which he seems proud; and they are fine looking animals.

Wednesday, March 28. At one o'clock in the afternoon we arrived safely in St. Joseph; had a pleasant journey, though somewhat tedious to ride all night and until one o'clock to-day. The roads have been good, though dusty, which is remarkable for this time of the year. We passed through Sidney, county-seat of Fremont County. Took supper at Mr. Thomas's, twelve miles south of Sidney. It cost us fifty cents each. At Rockport, county-seat of Atchison County, state of Missouri, changed coaches and horses again. The country has been picturesque, with its rolling prairies skirted with light timber and its rich valleys. The hand of art has decorated with many elegant farm cottages inclosed in the beautiful fields. But few have small door-yards. Fencing is too expensive to make line fences or small lots. Our heavenly Father has indeed blessed the virgin soil of this wonderful land with plenty to make his children happy if they will do right. I feel if the church would keep the commandments of God there never would be any scarcity or curse in all this land of Zion. Nature in all its grandeur has unfurled her wings of love of grace to this part of our habitable globe, and it should be the abode of a happy people.

I had an interesting interview with a very intelligent passenger in the stage-coach, a merchant of White Cloud, Kansas. The gospel from a Bible standpoint seemed all new to him, though he had always been from a child familiar with the popular churches of the day, yet he had never got much light from the Bible. All had been darkened by the contending unauthorized ministers, who had taken it upon themselves to explain away the principles, plain experiences, and teachings of the former-day saints by saying they were no longer needed, but that a higher class of scholastic learning and moralizing sermons was all that is needed now; that the doctrine of Christ bred strife and contention; and if men are only honest and moral it did not make much difference what they believe; that a belief in a supreme being called God, or Jesus Christ, whom no one had seen since Bible times, was not material to our salvation nowadays. If we are good moralists, seemed to be his theme, and the churches of the present day did not pretend to have any certain knowledge from God, and they differed in relation to his character, and actual personal being. "The God whom the Bible speaks of," he said, "used to talk face to face with man; but the God of the popular churches of to-day is altogether a different being, without body, parts, or passions, and never says anything to any one. Either the Bible is not true or present-day preaching is false, is my conclusion, for it teaches that God is no respecter of persons, and in whom there is no variableness; and Jesus taught if any man will do the will of the Father he should know of the doctrine whether it is of God or of himself. No man pretends to know now of the doctrine, they simply believe, believe themselves into heaven. Jesus taught, 'This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.' (John 17:3.) But nowadays it is all believe, believe yourself into life eternal. If the former view is correct the latter view is an error. Hence I have concluded to try and do the best I can, and not bother myself with the contending and conflicting theories of the churches of our days." I presented a new light on the Bible to him, and he has promised to make a further investigation.

We put up at the hotel in St. Joseph. No members of the church in this beautiful little city on the banks of the Missouri River. Bro. Beebe is quite tired. The long stage coach ride has been quite severe on him without any sleep since we left Glenwood, Iowa. But he is cheerful and in good spirits and has retired while I am penning these few lines in my journal. It is rather lonesome for me, no meeting to-night, and somehow I feel a diffidence about saying anything about our glorious hope in Christ. Independence is but a short distance from here, where our dear brethren were mobbed by the infuriated, intolerent people. It may be that I am impressed too sadly to-night, on account of being so near the spot where the Saints were shot down in cold blood, little children put to death and their mothers outraged by the mob of cruel persecutors who drove the Latter Day Saints from the state of Missouri so short a time ago. I am well acquainted with hundreds who were driven from the State because their faith in Christ differed from the popular churches.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Reading for July Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

While the attention of the whole country was riveted on the great coal strike a few months ago, strikes of smaller dimensions, but, to the thoughtful observer, of almost equal significance, were taking place in the West.

The school children of various cities struck for different causes. One roomful because their teacher was removed by the Board of Education; another, because several pupils had been suspended; while still another roomful demanded a longer recess. Strikes in colleges, also, took place, one state institution being fairly brought to terms by its insistent students. These events are not the mirth-producing occurrences that some seem to think them. They are of importance; they have a meaning, and the wise are those who will endeavor to discover what that meaning is.

When the first one occurred, no doubt, most of those who read of it smiled, and said: "Oh, yes; imitation; the child is always imitating." But when strike followed strike, the child's imitation ceased to be funny; it became a serious matter—worthy, even, of an editorial in one of the leading papers of the great city of the West.

To explain the cause of the strikes was not hard for the editorial writer, of course. These expressions of youthful lawlessness came as a direct result of lack of parental control; let all parents do as one mother had done—punish the child severely—the trouble would be at an end.

This sounds much like the reasoning of the employers in the early days of labor organization. The latter were weak, only partially organized, and existing as many separate trades unions. When one body of workmen struck, their employers said: "We'll teach them not to fool thus with us. We'll punish them once or twice, and that will be enough." But was it? Every time the employers overpowered the workmen, the necessity of greater unity was forced upon them, until to-day the laboring men of all trades and classes and localities are solidly bound together, able to block the traffic of the whole nation if they so desire.

In almost every instance this attitude has been taken toward a new force: contempt for its weakness, leading to short-sighted, ineffectual attempts at its overthrow resulting either in its final triumph or else calling forth a superhuman effort for its downfall.

Let us not make the same mistake at this time. Let us consider carefully the import of this movement on the part of the children, looking into both its causes and its consequences.

It will be instructive for us, in this connection, to study for a moment the use of the labor organization. Why did the workman leave his state of independence as a worker to help form a union? Was it not because, as an individual, he found himself powerless in the hands of his employer? The latter, having the power which comes from capital, and, in later years, from combination as well, increased his demands. Working men had but one weapon—refusal to work. In the early days, when employers were isolated and labor was scarce, the refusal was effective, and a compromise was reached. Under the new conditions, however, the employer simply said, "Very well, I can find workmen elsewhere," and the man who was standing up for his rights found himself out of a job.

It did not take long for him to see the only remedy—the union of all workmen, so that when one refused to work there would be no one to take his place. Thus arose labor organization.

What is the child's situation? He is weak; those in control of him are strong. He has learned by bitter experience that alone all efforts are futile. But if men, by uniting, can get their demands gratified, why can not he and his playmates do the same?

The logic is good; all must admit that. Why, then, does the thought of children's strikes arouse such indignant protest?

"Children are put here to mind," you say. Are they? To mind whom? Their parents?

Children are put here to grow, to develop themselves. To do this they must obey—not their parents, but the law; their parents as representatives of law, social, civil, or moral.

It is right that we should be stirred over children's strikes. It shows a grievous lack, not upon the part of the children, however, but upon the part of the parents.

These attempts to get their desires by force is an expression of lawlessness, and bespeak a condition that bids fair to become dangerous to the life of the republic.

Does this seem an exaggerated statement? Turn your thoughts to the strike just ended. The seriousness of the situation a few months ago could not easily be exaggerated. The whole nation faced the possibility of a winter without coal, which meant death and disaster to numberless citizens. All readily admit that something must be done to prevent, if possible, a repetition of such a disaster. But while some are clamoring for a national board of arbitration, and others for controlling legislation, I would say: "Look well to the training of your children."

What good are boards of arbitration when men insist there in nothing to arbitrate? Of what use is the enactment of laws if men refuse to obey them? What the nation needs is a nation of men filled with the spirit of arbitration and obedience to law.

It needs but a reference to these recent children's strikes to make evident the fact that at present we are not developing such citizens. Nor will the quelling of these strikes be a sign of greater promise for the future. The boys who are compelled by parental authority or force to surrender to-day, are simply waiting for the added strength of to-morrow to make another attempt. Each defeat will spur them on to greater effort—which means that by such a process we will be training a nation of strikers.

What, then, is to be done? Where does the fault lie?

The remedy, to be effectual, must be long continued. Great results are not achieved in a day.

The fault lies in the parent's conception of his duty toward his child.

Most parents have the idea that the first thing for the child to learn is to obey him. This is not wrong, but it falls short of the true conception.

The first and greatest lesson for the child to learn is to obey; but he owes obedience to the parent only as the representative of the law. As an individual the parent has no more right to demand obedience from the child than a child has from the parent. Each soul must live its own life, and allow others the freedom to follow their own God-given propensities.

But every soul, to live its own life truly, must be in harmony with the universe—in other words, must obey the laws of the universe. The child comes into the world ignorant of its environment and of the demands that will be made upon it, and it is the parent's place to interpret the unknown. First, he requires obedience to himself as the expression of law. The child is not old enough to comprehend what he obeys. He simply learns to obey. As he grows older he, at first, thinks that he obeys his father; but should that father have the right idea of his duty to his son, it will not be long before the developing intellect will perceive that there is something behind or beyond his father to which he is required to render obedience. Then, in time, will come to the child the full revelation of a law-controlled universe and himself as an obedient part.

But in order for the child to gain this concept, the parent himself must be obedient to the law, so that at no time shall personal preference seem to be the controlling power, but always the recognition of what is right or best. If the child sees his father rendering obedience, he will feel it no burden to obey.

Coming from a law-governed home, he will expect to find a law-governed school. Suppose, however, he finds those laws irksome and feels them to be unnecessary. A child old enough to go to school is old enough to understand a simple explanation of the way in which men, who live in company with each other, must sacrifice some personal liberty for the good of all. Robinson Crusoe on his desert island, before the coming of Friday, could do as he chose; for there was no one to be injured or inconvenienced; but civilized men, living in close juxtaposition, must exert great care that they do not wrong their neighbor.

Moreover, there must be some means of regulating community life; hence our laws, and those appointed both to make and enforce them. Even though our lawmakers should seem to us to promulgate unjust laws, obedience must still be rendered, until such laws can be rescinded.

A boy brought up to obedience of law could not easily be induced to join a strike; and should a feeling of injustice lead to such action, an explanation, such as is hinted above, would, without doubt, render the rightfulness of obedience again clear to him.

A boy thus trained from earliest life would soon become "a law unto himself," and this should be the aim of every parent. To keep the child under dominion as long as possible is not the commendable thing, but rather to so develop his judgment and his will power that, at the earliest possible moment, he may, with safety, take control of his own life. He will then have no temptation to escape from parental authority, but, instead, will gladly make use of the wisdom which he finds greater experience has given to his father.

To prevent strikes there must be, then, men with the spirit of arbitration as well as that of obedience. How are we to develop that?

Fundamentally, in the same way. Begin in early childhood to recognize the value of this spirit. The interests of the parent and child often clash, but, as a rule, the former uses his authority and strength to enforce his own wishes, apparently utterly oblivious of any other side of the question. In this, as in everything else, the parent must himself live the life he would have his child learn to live. A loving consideration of the child's wishes will result in reciprocal kindness, and in time these mutual concessions will become the basis of a thorough understanding of the value of arbitration. More than that, they will inculcate the habit of seeing the other side of the question, which is of inestimable value in all times of impending difficulty. Those employers who justly consider the rights and welfare of their workmen have very little trouble with them; while many strikes would be averted could the laboringman but comprehend the difficulties under which his employer is laboring.

With a generation of men trained from childhood to a noble regard for law and a nobler regard for the rights of others, our great labor troubles would solve themselves. So I say to you, once more, look well to the training of your children.—Doctor Charles Fleetwood, Sr., in The American Mother.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Sunday-school workers of the Eastern Michigan District met in convention Friday, June 12, at the hall on St. Thomas Street; but this being entirely too small for the crowd they moved down to the Light Guards Armory, where there was room and to spare. The convention was well-attended and interesting, and will be productive of good for the district.

The afternoon was spent chiefly in institute work in charge of the General Superintendent upon subjects bearing directly upon the needs of the Sunday-school, officers, teachers, and members. And if we can judge anything from the questions put and earnestness manifest, the workers are alive to their opportunities. And we believe that we can justly say that there is as promising a generation of young people here as we have yet met in one district. And if opportunity is afforded them to keep on progressing they will in time have reasons to rejoice over what they will have accomplished. We hope to meet with them again at some time, but till then a hearty "God speed."

DISTRICT INSTITUTES.

We would call the attention of district workers to the heading. But possibly it is not clear to all just what we mean thereby, and a little explanation will not be amiss here.

Your district may have many needs. There is a constant demand for work that will assist the new worker that is just starting. Some of your teachers or officers move away, get sick, or are in some other way taken out of service and their places must be supplied. And except the few instances wherein old workers step in to fill vacancies, the new and inexperienced ones must assume the work. They need training. It is not fair to expect them to continue the work thus assumed without something being done to help them to improve. We must go over the elementary work of preparation again and again.

There is a constant demand for help for the teachers of the different grades, and for the several officers. Each one if he is earnest in his work will desire to improve. These several demands must be supplied.

The library work must be understood and pushed. So, also, with that of the Home Department and Normal Department, etc. And where, with an afternoon session for business and a night session for a possible entertainment, will your time for improvement work come in?

The institute is intended to provide for these wants. It is quite true that districts can and do do much good work in their regular convention; but it is when they in part merge the two, the convention and institute. Business is necessary and in fact we can not dispense with it. But it is only a means to an end. It is only indirectly that it does the work of improving officers and teachers. We must have something that more directly affects the matter.

The institute treats any desired topic in detail and in a way calculated to enlist the thoughts of all. The leader simply introduces the subject and directs or takes part in a general discussion as he may feel led.

The subject may be opened up by a paper or two and then made a subject of general discussion, question, or it may be added to by others. The thoughts of the paper may be repeated for the sake of review or emphasis. And thus it is that the institute worker will deduct from his audience what he wishes them to know or think about.

THE PLAN.

Have a whole day at least, once in the year. And if you can have more, so much the better. Usually better to meet on Thursday evening or Friday morning previous to the district conference. I like to see conference folks Sunday-school workers, and vice versa. The influence is good.

Plan your program of work to meet the most urgent needs of the district workers. Select such persons as you think can do fairly well to write brief papers upon the selected subjects, and divide the work with a view to getting some good work and with a view to interesting and encouraging new workers. If your paper does not cover the ground, the best can be brought out in the discussion.

Advertise your meeting both in the church papers and by letter to the superintendent of each school, and urge them to make a special effort to attend this time. If practical have copies of the program sent to each school some weeks previous to convention. All this will serve to advertise and build up the work.

Many of our district officers are quite familiar with this class work but some are not. Where needed or desired some one of the general officers will meet with you in institute work to assist therein. But you should write the general superintendent some time ahead, as he may have other engagements for your date. And, too, it is necessary to plan our work in tours so as to economize time and money.

If you do not yet fully understand the institute plan of work, write us. We shall be glad to assist you all that we can. Our address stands at the head of this column. Let us hear from every district whether you think you are able to have an institute or not.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, June 17.

Editors Herald: Leaving home and loved ones on May 28 I attended the conference of the Pottawattamie District which convened at Carson on the 30th. The weather was so bad the attendance was very small; but those present seemed to enjoy themselves. From there I went to Shenandoah to be present at the Fremont conference, floods made the attendance small, yet we had a pleasant time. Was pleased to meet Bro. C. Scott there and see him able to do service for the Master again.

On June 8 I came here to assist in the work in the city and vicinity. Am getting acquainted with the work here and feel hopeful of accomplishing some good. Here as elsewhere we need more laborers. Saints should pray for the Lord to send more laborers into the field, then strive to be laborers together with the Lord to the end that their prayers are not hindered.

May the Lord bless all those who are striving to do his will, is my prayer.

VERMILION, Kansas, June 17.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this part of the vineyard may not be amiss. Since General Conference I have felt the pulse of Atchison and Netawaka Branches in passing through, and have done considerably more at Blue Rapids, as the church there seemed to be in need of a physician. Bro. S. Twombly and self labored in the branch preaching to Saints and as many sinners as would attend, for about a month. Bro. S. J. Madden was with us for some days and Bro. I. N. White got hemmed in at Blue Rapids by the flood, cut off from mail and railroad communication for nearly two weeks. Those who attended during the rains and flood excitement were edified by his preaching, and our combined and protracted efforts ought to produce results. We know of some Saints who have made resolutions to do better.

Thirteen families, or parts of families of Saints, were moved out of their homes by the high waters. Some lost their houses and all they possessed, the Blue River cutting a new channel below the mills, having no respect to houses, trees, or water-power, Saints or sinners; yet one sister was warned in a dream and wanted to move before the destruction came. Husband not being willing, house and all went.

Surely God is pleading with the people by other means than the voice of preaching, and Saints at least should realize that "it is high time to awake out of sleep."

Our district conference at Centralia, June 12 to 14, was affected by the flood, the attendance of Saints not being as large as it would have been otherwise. We had, however, a goodly number of non-members at the meetings, and Bro. I. N. White surely did his part to expose the expositors and haters of Mormonism so called, and the sectarian craft generally. A debate is talked of by the Christian (Cambellite) brethren. Let it come.

Elder Harry Thomas is now associated with me in tent work at this place. Last night, the second night of meetings, we had a tent full and some outside.

The prospect is, so far as I can see, favorable for a good work with the tent this season, but we need a hundred or at least fifty more chairs, and the old top is in such bad shape that it needs to be repaired with a new one, or a new tent, some larger than the present cotton church. We asked ten dollars from each branch. Have only received the amount from one branch, Netawaka.

I find after seeing the tent that we will need more than we asked for, one hundred and fifteen dollars at least, for new tent and seats. Can use the old as well as the new tent, if we get it, to advantage at the reunion. Some individuals will need to contribute as high as ten dollars to make up for the lack of others, or to equal others who have out of their poverty contributed their dollars.

Send your moneys to the treasurer appointed by district conference, J. W. Burns, 219 North Fifth Street, Atchison, Kansas, and "do it right now."

We are being kindly cared for and energetically assisted by Bro. S. P. Cox and family.

Yours in the work,

M. F. GOWELL.

PISGAH, Iowa, June 15.

Editors Herald: On May 31, at Missouri Valley, I baptized three into the church of Jesus Christ. I think that the prospects for the work there are the best I have ever seen them. Bro. J. C. Crabb and I left there June 4 for the quarterly conference at Pisgah. The good Spirit was with us during the convention and conference. Our missionaries are few in this district. Bro. J. F. McDowell's health is very poor. But three of our standbys are left yet, Brn. C. Derry, J. C. Crabb, and J. M. Baker.

I have been holding meetings at this place since conference with good attendance, and yesterday I had the privilege of leading twelve down into the water and baptizing them into the church and kingdom of God. We had about one hundred seventy-five out last night. Bro. Joseph Lane is the branch president here. He is a safe man in the work of the Lord and has the confidence of the Saints and the esteem of the friends of the work.

The interest in this district seems to be good. More calls for labor than we can fill. Our local brethren are doing nicely, and if they continue they will do a good work this year. I feel to rejoice in the work of the Lord and he has blessed me this year so far.

Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.

RODMAN, Iowa, June 8.

Editors Herald: Since May 2 I have been laboring in my present field, the Galland's Grove District, and have felt blessed in my labor and have enjoyed the society of the Saints and those of the church that I have labored among. At Glidden and near there I enjoyed the hospitality of Sr. Duckett and family and Bro. George Juergens and family, the latter meeting me at Glidden and taking me to Lanesboro, where I preached twice and enjoyed the hospitality of Brn. Orman Salisbury and family, and Bert Skinner and family. At Coalville I made my home with Bro. Samuel Jordison and family, and also enjoyed the kindness of other families there which is appreciated and will long be remembered.

The Saints at this place have erected and nearly finished and almost paid for a very neat little chapel which furnishes them a fine Sabbath home, that should be appreciated and enjoyed by each and every member and many of those not yet members of the church. The Saints at this place are very kind to the missionaries, remembering that the Lord has said: "By this shall ye know my disciples: they will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money." Their liberalities are known to all missionaries who have labored among them. I did not learn when they expected to dedicate their chapel but I presume it will be in the near future.

At Rolfe I enjoyed staying at the quiet home of Bro. and Sr. Alexander Barker and the pleasant visit with Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, and Mr. and Sr. Hansher. At Mallard I made my home with Bro. and Sr. D. King, and visited among the Saints as health and weather would permit while holding services in the town.

Not being well and roads almost impassable I was not able to visit with all. I trust that those not visited will be kind enough to excuse, as we had a desire to visit all the Saints but could not. Here also there are disciples of Christ. At this place I am making my home with Bro. and Sr. William Fenn, who are making me feel at home by their kindness. By the kindness of Mr. Joseph Turner I am holding services in his hall and am having a fair hearing, all things considered. I expect to close my effort here on the tenth and then attend our district conference which convenes at Dow City, Iowa, on the 13th inst.

It is evident to my mind that the Lord will bless and help those who honestly and in love try to maintain the honor of his cause while they seek to purify self and seek to encourage and help others to see and accept and live the truth. However, unless the house is builded and maintained in love some must of necessity suffer loss.

The example and teaching of Christ makes the impression upon the mind when it is illuminated by the Holy Spirit that it is best to be kind, loving, and true towards all, but especially those of the household of faith. The gospel of Christ was not intended to crush out of the human heart the love of liberty and individual independence. There is an inherent principle burning in the breast of some people, inherited from a long line of ancestors, that hungers and thirsts for that liberty given of God and guaranteed to the soldiers of Christ under the banner of King Immanuel and the glorious stars and stripes of the national emblem of the United States of America. Such people would rather live on one crust of bread per day or die on the field of battle than to submit to that which they believe to be the unjust dictation of any man or set of men. Neither are such people often found in opposition or rebellion to that which may be considered wise and proper government. By such persons liberty is seldom if ever mistaken for license, but they readily receive and enjoy "The glorious liberty of the children of God," vouchsafed to them by the gospel of God's dear Son. How such liberty inspires the soul with love for the giver of every good and perfect gift and him who died upon the cross to make us free in the family and fold of God. Our crucified and risen Redeemer who is to inherit all things and reign as King of kings, and Lord of lords, once said: "But I am among you as he that serveth." This thought was forcibly impressed upon the writer's mind last fall after the close of the Dow City reunion when he noticed Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans putting in a good part of a day cleaning up the camp grounds which ought to have been left clean by those who occupied the grounds and enjoyed the good spiritual feast of the meetings. However, humility on the part of those who rule either in church or state is always commendable. So long as individuals are converted in kindness and by the truth, and the power of the Spirit they will always rejoice in that truth and endeavor to walk in the light; but if one could be "convinced against his will, he would be of the same opinion still." It is not wise to try the latter process in any case for it will not work satisfactorily.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

DELOIT, Iowa, June 16.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Galland's Grove district, held at Dow City, closed on Sunday night. The attendance was not very large from abroad, but all the meetings were good. All passed off in peace and unity of the Spirit; not one jar. The Sunday Saint's meeting was especially good and spiritual. God's holy Spirit was with his Saint's in the same power as of old, in tongues and interpretation of tongues. The Saints were admonished and comforted, and the young were especially warned to be more faithful, lest they be called hence unprepared. We were all made to rejoice to know that God is unchangeable, and that he gives his Saint's that same abiding comforter that his Saint's enjoyed in Christ's time. "By their fruits ye shall know them," was not a meaningless saying. Truly to-day as then, the church which Jesus organized can be known by her fruits. These signs shall and do follow the believer and doer of the Father's will.

I came here yesterday, and am domiciled with our genial Bro. C. J. Hunt and his pleasant wife. I began meetings last night, and will continue over Sunday. I visited some of the Saint's to-day. Well, it is the same spirit which I find all over the church. "By this shall the world know that ye are my disciples, if ye love the brethren."

Brn. Kephart and Sutton are well spoken of here, so I am not ashamed of my boys in the gospel. I hope God will bless them. I like the Saints here. I desire to thank the Saints in my old fields, Nauvoo, Eastern Iowa, and Des Moines districts, for their unwavering love and universal kindness shown towards me the twenty-three years I labored with them. I shall ever feel grateful to our Father that I had the opportunity to labor with you. May God bless you all for your kindness, and I hope I may again labor with you.

The farmers are very much discouraged out here. The wet weather has hindered them; there is a great deal of plowing to do yet for corn. That which is planted looks sickly, but we hope for the best.

May God bless all his people, is my prayer. J. S. ROTH.

BOONE, Iowa, June 15.

Dear Herald: The conference of the Des Moines District was held here on Saturday and Sunday and was an interesting and profitable session throughout. The Religio and Sunday-school conventions were held just previously.

The usual amount of routine business was transacted, with most of the branches represented. Elder Fred A. Smith was present and addressed the Religio convention on Friday morning and was the speaker at the closing service of the conference on Sunday evening. Elder G. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric was present and addressed the Saints on the temporal law on Sunday morning. The district missionaries were all present.

The Saints of Boone extended a hearty welcome to the conference brethren. The missionaries departed on Monday for different parts of the district to take up active work along their lines.

The district tent has been in use for several weeks at Mingo and this week goes to Butler County, and will likely remain in the northern part of the district for several weeks, H. A. McCoy and S. K. Sorensen being in charge.

The outlook for the progress of church work in the district is good. Many of the local officers are especially active and seeking to lead the members on to more active work. Activity is noted along many lines, the evil power is raging both within and without the branches. Especially is the opposition strong at Dallas Center.

Many of the Saints of the district have suffered from the recent floods. The district reunion will meet at Rhodes on Friday, August 14, and continue ten days. It will be remembered that the reunion of last year was one of the most spiritual meetings ever held in the district. Peace and harmony prevailed. President Joseph Smith was present; and while the president will not be expected to be present with us this year, others of the leading quorums of the church are expected. Last year Patriarch Alexander H. Smith was present and thirty-seven of the Saints received their patriarchal blessing. This year it is hoped that there will be a good attendance at the reunion and that a majority of the Saints of the district may be able to attend, and thus enjoy the peaceful association that comes to the Saints assembled at the reunion.

A. A. REAMS.

TABOR, Iowa, June 11.

Editors Herald: This writing finds me once more "in the field," on "the firing line," on campaign duty in the army of the Lord, after a leave of absence of over two years. Am thankful to be once more in the active service after so peculiar a furlough. My efforts are not a little blessed of the Master.

The conference held at Shenandoah the 6th and the 7th inst., and the Sunday-school convention preceeding, were strong, bright, and encouraging, though not numerously attended on account of the floods that have been so disastrous in so many localities of late.

I trust the Presidency may have a pleasant journey to and from "the Isles of the Gentiles," and conduct a glorious mission while abroad. Our prayer shall go with them to a safe return.

Missionaries of the Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts please report to me at Shenandoah, Iowa, care F. J. Redfield, for July 1, 1903.

With thankfulness to our Father for all his mercies, and good will to all the Saints, I am,

Your brother,

C. SCOTT.

ADA, Indian Territory, June 15.

Editors Herald: I left my home the 28th of April to come to the Territory to labor in the interest of the gospel. The first point I visited was Bro. W. E. Craven's sawmill, near Fort Dawson. Preached six times. There has never been any preaching in that part of the country.

The next point reached was Sawyer, a new town in a fine country. I preached several discourses at that place, baptized a lady and left others near the kingdom. The depot agent at this place attended meetings and said he believed we had the truth. I was impressed there would be a branch built up at that place. We want to hold a meeting there this summer.

From thence I went to Fanshawe, and preached a week, to a full house.

I went to Wilburton, where there is quite a large branch, but it is not progressing as it should; but I am hopeful of it in the future. Bro. Montague is in charge of the branch trying to get the Saints to come up higher.

I went from Wilburton over to Chant City in company with Bro. Montague. We preached, but it rained every day we were there, and the crowds were small. I came back to Wilburton. Preached a few sermons there. Met with the Saints in prayer-meeting and then started West. Came by way of Holdenville, where Nute Perkins is doing what he can to build up the work.

Let us live faithfully.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

WHEELING, West Virginia, June 11.

Editors Herald: After recovering from a siege of typhoid fever I went down to Millstone and Oriole, Perry County, Indiana, and held twenty-four meetings and baptized twenty precious souls into the kingdom of God, and then returned home to Wirt, Indiana. On the first day of June I started for my field of labor. I arrived here the 3d and found a branch of Saints in Wheeling, West Virginia, numbering one hundred eighty good workers. Bro. J. A. Becker joined me at Wheeling. We stayed there till Tuesday, then crossed the river into Ohio, and we are now conducting a meeting at McClainville. Bro. Becker is a young man in the work, this being his first year in the missionary work, and he is an energetic worker and is a good speaker for his experience. I will leave him here Saturday and go to Pittsburg to meet Bro. Ebeling. He has written for me to come and labor there until Bro. Elvin gets there, which will be about three weeks.

So far I like my new field of labor. I hope we shall be able to open up new places and push on in the work of our Master. My limbs are sore yet from the effects of the fever. I can not walk as well as I did before.

I wish success to all the laborers this year. May the blessings of God be ours to enjoy.

J. D. PORTER.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, June 11.

Herald Readers: Springfield is moving along. We have bought a new tent and telescope organ, and expect to be in full blast in a few days with such pushing young men in the lead as Brn. S. N. and True Gray, and Bro. William Duemlers and faithful Bro. Quimley to help steady the load, and a host of others who are always willing to help in our good cause, and our noble band of sisters, things must go, you know.

In bonds,

PIPE CREEK, Texas, June 15.

Dear Herald: Leaving home May 12, seven in the evening, I took the "Katy" train from Kansas City for Dallas, Texas, arriving there at six the next evening. I was then in my mission field, and as that means work I took train for Fort Worth to Tolar, Texas, next day. Tolar is the home of T. J. Sheppard, who has gained the confidence and good will of a host of citizens of the town and adjacent country. But, like it is everywhere, when we gain the good will of the people and are in a fair way to get our faith before the people than the opposition begins. Bro. Sheppard had written me that one Thompson, a Baptist minister of a near-by town, was coming to annihilate what he was pleased to call "Mormonism." He came, and we had to listen to the usual tirade of abuse and slander, misrepresentation and falsehoods. Bro. Sheppard answered him very nicely, and there was some talk of discussion, but the Reverend gentleman would not discuss unless we would consent to him writing both propositions, or as one man said, he was willing to run a race, but only on condition that he be allowed to choose both jockeys. This we would not allow, so he departed and we continued to hold meetings. The people were honorable and fair-minded enough to come and hear what we had to say. I spoke each night during the week, and twice on Sunday to good audiences.

Sunday morning I delivered a historical sermon, giving the rise and progress of the church, the departure of Brigham Young, and the beginning of the Reorganization, and showed the differences between us and the Utah people. I was listened to with the closest attention, and many expressed themselves as being glad that they were there and would not have missed it for anything. At the close of the sermon at night, friends of the cause but not members, in true Latter Day Saint style, put their dollars and ten cents in my hand as an evidence of their appreciation and good will. One man who had informed me during the day that he had never given anything to a minister, gave one dollar of it. There are no members there but Bro. Sheppard's family, but I am confident that there will be an ingathering at that place in the near future. But we will have to fight for every inch of our ground.

Bro. Sheppard and I left the next morning for Fort Worth, staying at the home of Bro. J. E. Nicol that night, and going to Dallas next day, where I was to meet with President Smith and accompany him to San Antonio, Texas.

True to his word, Bro. Joseph made his appearance, and after a night's rest at Bro. James Christensen's (who by the way is a trusted official of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway in Texas, being their claim agent), we took train over the "Katy" for San Antonio on May 27; and after a long but pleasant ride through the fertile plains of Texas, we arrived an hour and ten minutes late at our destination and was met at the "Sun Set" Depot by "Dick" Neal and Bro. Gifford and were assigned our places.

We found Bro. W. S. Macrae had arrived in his mission something over a week before. He with local brethren had made preparations to hold a meeting in Connors Grove, a beautiful place on the banks of San Pedro Creek. A nice pavilion is built in the grove. It is an ideal place to hold a meeting. Our attendance was not at any time large, but excellent attention was paid and good was done. Bro. Joseph gave us six good discourses, and everybody was delighted with his visit. His contemplated trip to England cut his visit short with us, much to our regret, and his, as he seemed to enjoy the genial hospitality of the Southern Saints. We gave him the parting hand on Tuesday, June 2.

Bro. Macrae, E. W. Nunley and myself continued the meetings over the following Sunday, and until Thursday night. Not many of the Saints came from a distance, on account of being so backward with their work. This being a very late spring in Texas. Rain hindered some, hence our meeting was not the success we had hoped it would be, but we had so far as circumstances permitted a profitable time.

On Friday, June 12, Bro. Macrae and I started for the mountains in the missionary buggy and with a horse kindly furnished us by Bro. J. P. Neal, we managed to get to Bro. Wilson Clark's the first day, but it was raining part of the way and the mud was something awful, and reminded me of what my brother Heman told me before I came here, that when it was wet in the Black lands of Texas one did not leave any tracks but took them along with them. Bro. Macrae is talking of starting a glue factory. He thinks there is a fortune in that line to be made out of the Texas mud.

It rained all night the 12th and next day we could hardly get out of the house. It is perhaps needless to say that we have held no meetings. The weather has been so cold and damp that we have had to have a fire! Just think of that, a fire to keep warm in June and that in Texas! Texas is not so near the hot place as some have imagined. Cotton crop bids fair to be a failure unless the weather warms up. It has had to be planted and replanted some places as many as six times, and the end is not yet. One brother told me yesterday that he had planted eighteen hundred pounds of cotton seed and had not got a good stand yet. The wet weather brings the cut worms to the surface and they are very destructive.

Bro. Macrae and I intend to go farther up in the mountains about Wednesday, as the weather is fine now and we hope it will remain that way. Returning from there on the 26th to San Antonio. I will go to Seiling, Oklahoma, for a reunion of the Oklahoma Saints to be held July 3 to 13. From there hope to go to Northeastern Texas to a conference and reunion to be held July 31 to August 9; and from there to Arkansas and Louisiana, if all goes well. There is much to do in this field, and few to do it. May God bless the few and make them many so far as results are concerned, is the prayer of yours for truth,

H. O. SMITH.

ADA, Indian Territory, June 16.

Editors Herald: Bro. W. M. Aylor came about the first of the month and commenced meetings to small but attentive audiences. On the 8th he moved to McGee, twenty miles west of Ada, and commenced to preach sermon about with a Christian preacher. The preacher found himself too weak for Bro. Aylor, so they phoned to Oklahoma for the Reverend Will Ledlow. He came and with him came J. W. Chism. They wanted to take the place of the first preacher. Bro. Aylor would not do that, so they signed propositions for discussion and sent to the missionary in charge. So Bro. Aylor holds meeting in one house and Chism lectures against us in another house in the same town. Bro. Aylor has made many friends, but I do not know what the outcome will be. If we keep the Lord's commandments and live righteous lives, all will be well with us. We are told in Holy Writ that where two or three pray as touching the same thing it shall be granted. I am to ask Saints to pray for my daughter, Mrs. Mollie Arnold, that the way might open so she can become a member of the faith, she has a husband who is opposed to the gospel as taught by our people. He burns her books and tracts. He says that he will kick any Latter Day Saint off his place that comes on it. So dear Saints, pray that his heart of stone might be turned to flesh. She asks me to write this letter and to ask you to pray for her husband, that he might turn to the Lord before it is too late.

Pray for me that I may live faithful to the end and be accounted worthy to stand with the Redeemed when he comes.

Bro. E. A. Erwin came in yesterday and will preach a few mons.

Your brother,
J. M. CRAWFORD.

FORT SCOTT, Kansas, June 17.

Dear Herald: Just came here from Rich Hill, where Bro. William P. Crayn and the writer have been for a week. About half of the branch is gone, and it is lonesome at church. My colaborer had good liberty and spoke with convincing power, to the satisfaction of all who heard him, save a Holiness man who could not make his views fit Bro. Crayn's sermon.

We will meet with the Religio to-night and hope to get a week's work in here. Crop prospects are poor; fruit light; plowing and planting corn yet.

We are now at V. H. Goffs, will visit the Ft. Scott Saints, and hope to find their lamps trimmed, and each wearing the wedding garment, the robe of righteousness.

G. W. BEEBE, Sr.

ESCATAWPA, Mississippi, June 16.

Editors Herald: A large crowd from the Three Rivers Branch attended the conference at Theodore, Alabama, and it was much enjoyed by all. The convention was grand, indeed. Everything was done in order, and the pieces that were recited and the songs that were sung were rendered with that calm and sweet spirit that cometh from above. When my heart is made to rejoice and we are so bountifully blessed, it makes me want to live truer to this grand cause than ever.

We had the pleasure of seeing one more buried in baptism, and hope she will be able to live as she has started out to live. I am sorry Bro. I. N. Roberts could not be with us, but we hope to have him present at the Sunday-school picnic, July 4, at Wilson's Springs, Mississippi. The conference was well attended and all present were made glad. G. W. Sherman preached Saturday night, W. J. Booker Sunday forenoon, F. P. Scarcliff Sunday afternoon, and W. L. Booker in the evening. We desire to be faithful always.

Your sister,

GAYLORD, Kansas, June 18.

Editors Herald: The Northwestern Kansas District conference, that was to convene at Scandia Branch, June 6, 7, did not convene. High water stopped us. The tent was there. Three were baptized last week. Feeling good in the work.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 19.

Editors Herald: After an absence of about ten years, our hearts were made glad to see our President Joseph Smith again, and with him his counselor, R. C. Evans, and Elder Wm. Newton, on their way to England. They arrived here Saturday evening, June 13. Preaching services were held on Sunday at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and half past seven in the evening; President Smith speaking in the morning, R. C. Evans in the evening. We had preaching services on Monday and Tuesday evenings also, these brethren occupying with great success and much power was felt.

The Saints here have been greatly encouraged by their visit and strangers were made to wonder at the power and spirit in which the word was preached. It has been the means of doing a great deal of good in this place and the result will be in bringing some souls into the gospel.

We hope and pray the Lord will bless them on their journey and go before them in opening up the way for the gospel to be preached to the honest in heart, that many may be made to see the truth of the glad message, and accept of the same.

A few Saints were at the pier to see them off, and as we waved our flag and kerchiefs, the great vessel moved slowly out of sight, bearing its precious burden to another shore.

We hope to see them on their journey homeward, and feel to say in our hearts,

Thank God for such messengers,

Bishop's Agent's Notice.

To the Saints of the Eastern Maine District: We are engaged in a good work; there was never a better work since God laid the foundation of this earth. Are we interested; are we keeping the whole law? "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James 2:10. God has given to his church a financial law by which to support the gospel. Do we all observe that law? You will notice by the Bishop's agent's annual report for the Eastern Maine District for 1902, that more than one half of the expense of the district came from the Bishop. Now Saints, this church is a government that God has established here on the earth; we are a part of that government; will we help to support it or will we allow the government to support us? Will God respect us as subjects of his kingdom if we do not respect the laws of his church or kingdom any more than we would respect naturalized citizens of this government that were not keeping the law of the land? When I compare our church with other churches I can see that we lack interest. While they can raise from $800 to $1,000 a year with not half the number of members that we have, we can only raise $221. I believe it is not a lack of means altogether, but a lack of interest. There are some good tithe-payers in this district, but only a few. Now Saints, will we all take hold of the work in earnest this present year? Send in your tithes and offerings and help to send the gospel to the ends of the earth, then our Lord will come and bring our reward with him, but God will not bless us for what he told the people he would curse them for in Malachi's day. We read, "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase: So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."—Proverbs 3:9,10. We are in need of money to meet the expense of the district. Will each one do something and not depend on other districts to pay our bills? Send in your tithes and offering, and I will be prompt in returning receipts for same. May the great God of heaven bless you all, is my prayer, U. M. Kelley, Bishop's agent, Indian River, Maine.

Notices.

To the Saints of Pottawattamie District: Notice is hereby given that Bro. D. P. Cooper, of Council Bluffs has been appointed associate superintendent of the Sunday-school work in our district, and I request you to honor him in this capacity. Any one knowing where Sunday-schools should be organized, please report to me, or if either of us are needed at any place to help in schools already organized let us know. J. A. Hansen, district superintendent, R. F. D., No 2., Council Bluffs, Iowa.

To the Officers and Members of the Several Branches of the Northwestern Kansas District, Dear Brothers and Sisters: Let us all be faithful, encouraging one another by precept and deed. I would like to hear from every Saint that wants preaching. We can all help in this great latter-day work. May the Lord bless you all. My field address is Gaylord, Kansas. Home address, Holden, Missouri. Your brother in bonds, S. J. Madden.

To the Saints in the Colorado Mission, Greeting: As I have been reappointed to labor in this mission for another year, I would be glad to hear from any of the scattered members of the church in regard to the opportunities for preaching in your locality. My home address is Conifer, Colorado. All mail addressed to me there will reach me in due time. James Kemp.

The ministry of Eastern Michigan and all others concerned will please take notice that Bro. E. A. Goodwin, who received appointment as a missionary at the late General Conference, is hereby released from said appointment, as he finds it impracticable to occupy in that capacity. It now appears that Bro. Goodwin did not desire appointment and did not report himself for appointment. His being placed on the list without his consent was my mistake. Not finding his name on the list of those reporting the fields, and not having opportunity to consult with those who could explain, I concluded that it was an oversight, and so presented his name. I hope that no blame will be attached to Bro. Goodwin by any one for failing to occupy. The mistake was mine, so please let the responsibility attach where it belongs. We regret the mistake, but still more regret that Bro. Goodwin finds it impracticable to accept appointment for the year. Respectfully, Heman C. Smith, Minister in Charge.

Reunion Notices.

The Clinton Missouri District Reunion will be held at Taborville, beginning August 14, 1903. Board and lodging can be had at hotel for $2.50 per week, and meals for 20 cents. All those who wish lodging or meals will address A. C. Athey or Thomas McCormick, Taborville, Missouri, and should any desire to rent tents, please address those brethren so they can have time to procure them. Straw and wood free, hay and corn at reasonable prices; also pasture for horses. At the close of the reunion there possibly will be a public discussion. We have a nice park with plenty of good water. Come one and all and let us make this the best reunion of the district. Apostle I. N. White and other good speakers will be present. James Moler, Box 435, Holden, Missouri, Chairman of Committee and President of District.

The frontispiece of the July Autumn Leaves is a fine picture of the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon. One cut in the same issue shows the interior of the Kirtland Temple, illustrating Elder Henry Smith's article on the Temple.

The July World's Work has a wider sweep than is usual with this typically American magazine. Norman Duncan's entertaining article on "The Codfishers of Newfoundland" vividly describes the life of a hardy race just beyond our borders, and A. B. Lueder, the engineer in charge of the work, relates in "Building American Bridges in Mid-Africa" the unusual adventures of American workmen in the tropics, contributing also some excellent photographs. The tinted illustrations of Mr. Duncan's article surpass even this magazine's high standard of excellence. Other foreign articles, of peculiar timeliness just now, are Mr. W. M. Ivins, Jr.'s, story of Russia's encroachments in "Russia and the Nations," Professor Richard Gottheil's study of the distribution of the Jews in "A Glimpse into the Jewish World," and Frank J. Pool's "English Commercial Gentleman" which details the curious customs of a guild unknown to Americans. Of immediate practical value is George Iles' article on "Preventing Factory Fires," and likewise the information in "The Prevention of Typhoid Fever" by Doctor James C. Bayles, the expert sanitary engineer. H. A. Wood narrates the experiences of "A Farmer's Trust" with appropriate illustrations; Miss Adele Maria Shaw recounts amusingly "The Day's Work of a Librarian;" and Professor E. D. Jones reviews the latest movement in university education in "Preparing College Students for Business." Vacation and outing seekers will find of interest Albert Bigelow Paine's illustrated article on "Short Vacations by Trolley," "What the Motor Cycle Offers," which is Henry Norman's third article on automobiling, and a review of "Summer Fiction." There is also a sketch of Professor Stephen Moulton Babcock by Herbert F. John, and a stimulating literary article on "Red Blood in Fiction" by Churchill Williams. The editorial and literary portraits are uncommonly good, and the editorial departments "The March of Events" and "Among the World's Workers" are well maintained.

That there are many good things to be found in the Electrical Review is evidenced by a glance at the contents of the issue for June 13. Some of the articles are: "The Electrolytic Treatment of Galena and Reduction of Lead;" "Electrical Furnace Methods of Iron and Steel Production;" "The Electrical Equipment of the Metropolitan District Railway;" "Motor Van for the Collection and Delivering of Railway Goods;" "Wireless Telephony on Boats;" "The Pueblo and Suburban Traction and Lighting Company;" "Boiler and Furnace Efficiencies." The Review keeps abreast of the times in electrical and scientific developments.

Raising Little Chickens.

The best results that we have ever had in raising little chickens were had when we fed wheat bread soaked in skim-milk—squeezed dry and fed crumbled—for the first day or two. For the next few days this was supplemented with fine cracked grain, principally wheat and oatmeal. I believe that a large variety of seeds and fine grain is an advantage. They can be purchased in quantities of poultry-supply houses and a mixture made to suit conditions. Several combinations of these grains are upon the market which we have found very valuable. We have had well-grounded suspicions that a good deal more grit is often put into these foods than is really necessary.

All grain should be fed in a litter of chaff, where the chickens will have to scratch for it, if they are confined. This should form the first and the last feeding of the day. During the day they should be given what they will eat up clean of soft food, which should be dry and crumbly. After four weeks this soft food may be fed quite liberally.—From Country Life in America.

Don't Shear Your Shrubs!

The beauty and interest of a shrub surely lie in its natural habit and form says Professor L. H. Bailey in Country Life in America. When shrubs are sheared into formal shapes, the shrub no longer exists for itself, but is only a means of expressing some queer conceit of the shearer. Of course, shrubs should be pruned, to make them healthy and vigorous, to keep them within bounds, to increase the size of bloom, to check mere waywardness; but all this leaves the shrub a shrub, with the hand of the pruner unseen, and does not make it to counterfeit a bottle or a barrel or a parachute. If the forsythia has superlative merit, it is for the wealth of early spring bloom. Yet I know a yard in which the forsythias are annually sheared into shapeless shapes, and this is done, when they are in bloom. Last year two thirds of the bloom was cut from these bushes when it was just opening, and the reply of the Irishman who barbered them, when I remonstrated, was "Indade, they hev no shape."

Fine Exhibit of Horses at Iowa State Fair.

The exhibit of horses at the Iowa State Fair in August will be one of the finest on record. Already several barns have been taken and there are sufficient entries to insure an unusually good exhibit. The fair management announces that all contemplating making entries should not forget to have them in before August 5, as the entries will close on that date. This is necessary in order to give the secretary time to catalogue all entries. Horses will be shown each forenoon during fair week, after Monday, in the new Live Stock Pavilion. Each exhibitor will wear a number corresponding with the number in the catalogue. A large bulletin board will be used on which the numbers of the winners will be placed immediately after each class is judged. It should be borne in mind that seats in the Stock Pavilion are free and those visiting the fair will be well repaid if they visit the Pavilion each day to witness the horse show.

The requirements of good form are nowadays so commonly understood, and so easily ascertainable, that there is no excuse for a young hostess who is not informed on all the minor matters. In regard to the home dinner-table, good form demands that it should be arranged every day as carefully as though guests were expected. A little ceremony at dinner is correct. The pleasure of taking meals is greatly enhanced by attractive serving and a well-arranged table. Also, this practice obviates the annoyance that is often occasioned by a husband's bringing a friend home to dinner unexpectedly. In The Delineator for July the proper arrangement of the table is explained at length, and the article may be consulted with confidence as to the reliability of the information.

"Success Talks To Young Men."

Doctor Orison Swett Marden, founder and editor of Success Magazine, discusses the problems young men must face to attain success, every Wednesday in the "Answers by Experts" department of the Record-Herald. Doctor Marden is the author of "Pushing to the Front," "Rising in the World, or Architects of Fate," and other popular works. He is the best-known success pilot in the United States. Every young man should read these articles.

Every Friday there appears in the same department a story in the series, "Amusing or Adventurous Experiences of Well-Known People," related by themselves. In the Sunday issues, instruction is given in "A Simple Natural Method of Teaching Children to Draw," by Frederick Richardson, instructor in composition in charge of the illustration class in the Art Institute, Chicago.

Other features of the "Answers by Experts" department include articles concerning home problems of special interest to women, published Mondays; methods of developing health and vigor of body from childhood to old age on Tuesdays, and "Good Health and Good Looks for Women" on Thursdays. Every article is written by an authority of national reputation.

RESURRECTION PLANT

Spoken of in the Bible as

THE ROSE OF JERICO.

These rare and curious plants grow and stay green by placing them in water or light drained soil. When taken out of water they dry and curl up and go to sleep. It will keep in this state for years and reawaken directly on being put in water. It is an interesting and pretty house plant, and grows in winter, if not allowed to freeze. To grow it, simply place the whole plant in water; it will open up and start to grow in twenty minutes. After that just keep the roots in water, and change water about twice a week, to keep water from becoming rancid. Send for one. You will be pleased with it. Mailed to any address in the United States on receipt of twenty-five cents. Agents wanted. I also handle toy balloons, whistling balloons, return balls, confetti, canes, and all kinds of picnic and carnival goods.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Will you please give some instructions on taking the sacrament. Should those who do not belong to the church be invited to partake? If not, what is the meaning of Doctrine and Covenants 46: 2?

In the HERALD for May 1, 1870, page 272, the editor gave some thoughts on the "sacrament," and in it uses the following language: "The persons passing the emblems should not permit unbaptized persons, nor members of the church against whom charges are made for which they are to be tried, to partake if they know them."

This is in harmony with the instructions thereon given in the Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1, 2: "Ye are also commanded not to cast any one who belongeth to the church, out of your sacrament-meetings; nevertheless, if any have trespassed, let him not partake until he makes reconciliation. And again I say unto you, Ye shall not cast any one out of your sacrament-meetings, who is earnestly seeking the kingdom: I speak this concerning those who are not of the church."

Only those who are church members in good standing, that is, against whom no charges have been made, should be permitted to partake of the emblems. The weak member and those not of the church who are "earnestly seeking the kingdom" may remain in the meetings though not permitted to partake.

It would appear from the passages quoted that there are those who should not be permitted to remain. Although we have not known any one to be "cast out" of our sacrament-meetings, there may be occasions when it would be wise and right to do so. Those known to be scoffers should not be permitted to disturb the meeting. The interests and good spirit of the meetings should be safeguarded by not permitting disturbing elements to enter. Better that one or two or a few be "cast out" than that the meeting should be disturbed.

What will become of the wicked when Christ comes? If they are to be burned, where will Gog and Magog get their army?

We presume the questioner has reference to the "Gog and Magog" of Revelation 20: 7, 8: "And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea." Here "Gog and Magog" is an expression used to designate the people or peoples opposed (as in Ezekiel 38 and 39) to the people of God. In the succeeding verse we have this language: "And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them."

ACCORDING to press reports the old Order of German Baptists, whose national conference closed at Wakarusa, Indiana, June 3, voted not to permit members to use telephones in their homes. This is certainly avoiding "worldly things."

This harmonizes with Doctrine and Covenants 43:7: "For the great Millennial, which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come; for Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire; and their end no man knoweth, on earth, nor ever shall know, until they come before me in judgment."

Also Doctrine and Covenants 63:9: "I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father, and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire."

The end of the wicked "no man knoweth;" but it appears from Revelation 20:9 that the destruction of the wicked, or the army of Gog and Magog, shall take place after the thousand years of peace. Though we may not know the end of the wicked, we may rest assured that they will not remain on earth, for in Proverbs 10:30 we find: "The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth."

CRITICISMS ON THE BOOK OF MORMON.

It is interesting to note the widely differing opinions as to the merits of the Book of Mormon. In our issue for June 17 we reproduced a chapter from one of Mr. Kipling's books, in which he gives his opinion of the Book of Mormon. In this issue, in a letter from Bro. I. N. White, is an opinion of the book expressed by an outsider, which is radically different in tone from Mr. Kipling's.

We herewith reproduce an editorial from the Washington Times for May 2.

MORMONISM IN GERMANY.

There is interest in the statement that a Mormon missionary is trying to persuade Emperor William to include the Mormons in his plan of religious toleration, and that to further this end he has presented the Emperor with a copy of the Book of Mormon. To anybody who has ever seen the Book of Mormon the idea of the German monarch attempting to peruse the alleged inspired utterances of Joseph Smith will be peculiarly fascinating.

It is not that this unique volume is irreligious; far from it. There is nothing in its pages which will cause the most conscientious reader any serious pain. An archæologist of the twenty-ninth century, poring over it as a relic of the religious thought of the early American, will find nothing in it which is not consonant with a worshipful spirit. But he will be a remarkably bright archæologist if he can find out what it means by the light of nature.

It was Kipling who said that the general style of the work resembled such a sentence as this: "And Moses said unto the people of Israel: 'Great Scott! what air you doing?'" This is only a slight exaggeration of the facts. In fact, it has no literary style at all. And when Emperor William attempts to bring the logical power and analytic tendencies of the Teutonic mind to bear upon it, his bewilderment may become painful.

He will wonder whether his brain is giving way, or the translator was crazy, or the proof-reading went wrong, or the author of the book itself escaped from a lunatic asylum. An American reader may, after some studying, get at the meaning of the prophet, but there is no room for his system in the scientific correctness of German logic. We may "guess" at the meaning of the man. But German thought does not guess; it knows.

There we are again! It would appear that the Times editor depended very largely on Mr. Kipling's description of the book for his estimate. We doubt that the Times editor has read the Book of Mormon.

There is one feature worthy of note, however; no one who has read the book can truthfully say that it teaches other than good morals. As for its style, critics differ, some saying it has a marked style, others, as is the case with the Times editor, that it has "no literary style at all."

With all the criticisms, for and against, the fact is that the believers in the book are constantly and steadily growing in number. Our best wish for those believers is that they may be true to the teachings of the book.

GRACELAND PATRONESSES.

Some time ago there was organized in Lamoni a society known as the "Society of Patronesses of Graceland College." Its object and scope may be seen from its constitution, which reads as follows:

It shall be the object of the society to advance the interest of the college in every way possible consistent with the general policy of the Board of Trustees.

The officers shall be: president, vice-president, secretary, corresponding secretary, and treasurer.

Officers of the society shall be elected during the month of May of each college year, and shall serve for one year.

This society is independent of the Board; but it is expected that it will work in perfect harmony with the Board to the best interests of the college.

It shall be the duty of this society to promote the interest of the college in a financial way, as directed by the executive committee. This may be done by (1) By receiving donations either in money or merchandise; (2) By holding entertainments—such as socials, bazars, lectures, etc.

The fee for membership shall be fifty cents per year.

Any lady manifesting a degree of interest in the college may become a member of said association by a majority vote of members present when the name shall be presented. The said member may be a resident or nonresident of Lamoni.

The Society of Patronesses shall meet not less than once each college month; the time and place determined by the president.

Any member failing repeatedly to perform duty assigned by the association may be asked to resign by a majority vote.

Articles of amendment may be added to this Constitution at any regular meeting by two thirds vote of the members present.

It is the intention of the society to extend its membership throughout the church so far as possible.

Already the society is doing good work, and we see no reason why it can not be made a factor for great good in the development of a very worthy institution. We wish the Patronesses every success, and certainly hope that the sisters throughout the church will assist in its work. When the sisters unite in an undertaking, something will surely be accomplished.

Write Sr. Daniel Anderson, Lamoni, for further information.

CORRECTION.

In the editorial columns of the HERALD for June 24, page 569, under the heading, "Testimony on 'Rebellion Prophecy,'" a very important sentence in the third paragraph of the letter of Robert Clifton was given a directly opposite meaning by an error in the insertion of the word not. The paragraph should read:

"Now whether Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God or not I do not know, but I must say that soon after I heard the prophecy read, some things contained therein came to pass. I heard the prophecy read in the summer of 1858."

A "STORY OF THE BRITONS."

Those of Graceland's students who heard Hubert M. Skinner deliver a talk at chapel one morning in February last, on the subject, "The Shadowy Kings of Briton," will be glad to learn that he has written a book on the subject, under the title, "The Story of the Britons." It has but recently made its appearance from the press of A. Flanagan Company, Chicago.

Mr. Skinner's wonderful knowledge of folk-lore has enabled him to deal with the legends and traditions of the prehistoric Briton in a truly fascinating manner, and his little book ought to take its place among the most valuable of recent contributions to literature.

"Why," asks Mr. Skinner in the preface to his little volume, "should the legendary story of the ancient Britons be less familiar to American readers than that of the early Romans?" Possibly because we have been waiting for a Skinner to cull from many sources the "Story of the Britons," so fascinatingly written, so beneficially entertaining. "It would seem," says the author after speaking of the exclusion of the folk-lore of the Britons from the histories of to-day and its need for popular presentation, "that the story should be of great interest to American readers. Every citizen who bears the name of Morgan, or Jones, or Meredith, or Cadwalader, or Lloyd, or Davies, or Kellogg, or Griffith—or any one of a large number of familiar patronymics—may be deemed a descendant of the Britons. The Welsh are to-day among the leading miners and machinists of the world, as were their ancestors in Britain long before Rome became great and powerful.

"Should we not treasure as a legacy of the past the ancient folk-lore of the marvelous race, which has borne so important a part in the material development of our civilization, and which is so largely represented in the ancestry of our people?"

Mr. Skinner begins his story at the battle of Troy, and shows how Brut, a descendant of one of the famous Trojan warriors discovered and settled the "Island of Albion." Then he traces the legendary history of the descendants of Brut (pronounced with French u shows the origin of Britain) and his followers, down to the time of King Arthur, where British history begins.

We have read Mr. Skinner's "Story of the Britons" with great interest, and feel we owe to him a debt of gratitude for presenting to us in such connected and entertaining form what he has gleaned from many, many sources, in folk-lore, legends, and histories.

One of the most commendable features of the book is the way the author introduces choice selections from classical literature, from the poets, passages wherein the authors have written concerning legends and traditions. Thus Mr. Skinner introduces the young reader to literature and authors, while following the thread of legendary history.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of June 25 I. N. Roberts wrote from Louisville, Kentucky, which place he had reached on the 23d. He writes: "I have spoken each night since I reached here. But few out; however, the Saints think that our crowd will now increase."

D. MacGregor wrote from Chatham, Ontario, June 26: "Conference just over. Large crowd and good weather at Waterford, and a grand spiritual time at Blenheim. We note a gradual growth among the Saints in matters pertaining to their development."

Elder T. J. Bell writes the following in a letter to Bro. C. I. Carpenter, dated Camden, Illinois, June 24: "A week ago last Sunday when Bro. Walters and I arrived here we at once circulated an appointment for meeting at the schoolhouse two and one half miles northwest of this little town, for Sunday and Monday nights. But as the farmers were so very busy we went into Camden and secured the Christian church and commenced meeting there. Tuesday night about thirty-five were out, Wednesday night about fifty. On Thursday night only the janitor and a Doctor Watts, so we closed our meeting there and commenced at the country schoolhouse again on Friday night and continued over Sunday. Closed last night, the 23d. Bro. R. T. Walters, my colaborer, showed up the church in its true light, that the angel came to Joseph Smith, and he was the man in the hands of God in organizing the church by divine command. What a change it made with the people! They nearly all went away without bidding us good-bye. I think they will get over it or else they will become twice dead. We are arranging to be back at Beardstown over Sunday, and will go from there to Taylorville or Pana to hold some grove-meetings. We leave here with the expectation of returning in October or November."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Indianapolis News for May 30 contained an article entitled, "Latter Day Saints that Live in Indiana," which is largely a reported interview with Bro. J. B. Prettyman. The articles of faith are given, also statistics showing the strength of the church. Portraits of Bro. and Sr. Prettyman accompany the article.

In the news items in the Ensign for June 25, we note the following: "Last Sunday Bro. Joseph Luff made a very practical address in behalf of Graceland College, at the morning service. At its conclusion he announced himself ready to receive subscriptions, and five hundred thirty-four dollars and seventy-six cents was secured. This amount has been increased to nearly eight hundred dollars." Good for you, Bro. Luff! We trust you may everywhere have the success you did among the Independence Saints.

Elder F. G. Pitt has been in Lamoni for a few days. He brought with him Sr. Fasset, ninety years old, of Sandwich, Illinois. While here Bro. Pitt has been looking over songs for the new Sunday-school song-book.

We are informed that Bro. Muceus has reported the translation of the Book of Mormon into Scandinavian as being in the hands of the binder. It will be ready for distribution very soon. Send orders to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

A communication from the pen of Elder J. F. Mintun on "Polygamy and the Mormons" appeared in the Des Moines Daily News of May 29. It set forth the facts as to the origin of polygamy and the position of the Reorganization as to a constitutional amendment, with the resolutions of General Conference, in a way that is destined to make them better understood.

"The Merameck Club" recently sent an invitation to President Smith to attend the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Plano and the coming of the railroad in 1853. The day was celebrated by giving a basket picnic in Steward's Park Thursday, June 25. Many well-known speakers were present and it was a great day for the Historical Society.

ZION CITY AND DOCTOR DOWIE.

When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Psalms 102: 16.

In company with Bishop Anderson of Lamoni and Sr. Bond the writer visited what I would properly denominate Doctor Alexander Dowie's Zion, on Tuesday last.

Leaving the Northwestern depot at nine o'clock in the forenoon, passing through lovely suburban scenery, skirting the shore of Lake Michigan whose pure, clear, blue waters formed a pleasant contrast to the accustomed sights of a great city, a ride of one hour and a half brought us to this new modern mecca of social and religious hopes and aspirations. And whatever may be thought or said of the man whom thousands have already believed to be Elijah, the prophet and restorer, spoken of in prophecy who should gather together God's elect—prepare a place and people for the second advent of Christ the Lord, as an organizer, a leader of men, with foresight and ability, not only to recognize the needs of the world and of society for better ways of living as pertains to matters relating to not only the elevation of their spiritual, and social conditions, but in the case of their bodies, as relates to food, and physical environments, etc., and to reduce to practice on a large and noteworthy scale many of the reforms from evils and hindrances to success in life from which thousands in the world—including not a few Latter Day Saints—are suffering, he must, in large measure, be counted as a success.

If as a people we hold it to be a part of our duty and calling to expose error and warn people against deception, it must never be forgotten that we are, in consistency, under equal obligations to remember and strive to heed, by putting into practice the apostolic admonition, to "prove all things" and hold fast that which is good, and not let it go out from our thought, consideration, or practice, if for no better reason than that these new ideas may not be in harmony or agreement with our previous education, habit of life, our prejudices, appetites, or fleshly desires.

Forty-two miles from Chicago, with a long and beautiful beach frontage, overlooking the blue waters of Lake Michigan, running up from a mile of level on to a fine table-land with beautiful groves of natural timber interspersed over a tract covering about ten square miles of soil available for agricultural purposes, stands in its centre front a promise of a beautiful city, with ideal conceptions on the part of its founders, as relates to sanitary, social, and in many regards, religious life.

Moving in and out and around among this people, seeing and listening to the earnest advocates of this new Utopia, who have certainly a zeal and earnestness worthy of a good cause, and beholding this rapidly becoming world-wide illustration of better ways of community life, one ceases to wonder at the stream of proselytes pouring into Zion City, recruited from outposts scattered all over the globe through the ministrations of the subalterns of Reverend Doctor Dowie.

Alighting from the train, one of the first things a stranger will observe, is a notice that no intoxicating liquors, tobacco, use of cigars, etc., will be permitted. No man with pipe or the "filthy weed" in any form in sight is permitted to alight from the train. The fine and artistic arrangement of their beautiful station with lace curtains at windows, etc., is as scrupulously clean, and as delightfully inviting as a lady's parlor, and not any more so than any place worthy of the name of Zion should be in our opinion.

No swine's flesh is grown or in use for food, no drug-stores or doctors, no profane language, desecration or secular employment on Sabbath-day. The plans for a healthful and peaceful life, abundant water and light privileges, sanitation legislation and provision of the highest order, beautiful and broad highways, park systems, play-grounds, and fields for athletic sports and games, without the worldly accompaniments and vices, such as betting, profanity, vulgarity, and so forth, which one ordinarily comes in contact with at such places, are among the good things which "Zion City" stands for. And while to many of our people extremes or impracticability may be suggested in some of these rules for government in community life, yet I am forced to the conclusion that as in the days of our Savior, so of the present time it may be truthfully said that "the children of this world [some of them] are wiser in their generation, than the children of light." Therefore, to Latter Day Saints was given in 1832 counsel for improved manner of living in relation to the important matter of foods and their relation not only to our physical, but to our spiritual well-being.

The practical illustration of this counsel of the Almighty has been had by other people than Latter Day Saints. While our Adventist friends may have gone beyond the line of counsel especially in regard to the use of flesh foods, while it is true that "whoso forbiddeth the use of meat is not of God," neither is any Latter Day Saint, whether minister or member, "ordained" or authorized of God through precept or example to practice or preach the stuffing of himself three times a day on pork, ham, sausage, meats of any or all kinds, either in winter or especially in the warm seasons.

The bloodthirsty, unhealthful, unnecessary, and proscribed killing of wild game by those who have invented the love of this kind of "sport," simply for "sport," or food, true Latter Day Saints are barred from, save "only in times of famine and excess of hunger." "Woe unto him," we are told, "that killeth when he hath no need."

Of their tabernacle which seats eight thousand six hundred people, an adjoining "nursery" where mothers may leave their babes or children during services and not disturb, not to say destroy, the peace of a congregation of worshipers, every babe being numbered, and if sick or unmanageable the mother sitting in the vast congregation will see a man coming on to the platform holding up before the assembly a large placard with that number, as a notice that she is wanted to care for the child. Of the magnificent "temple" now planned, the great lace factory, manufacture of candy, confections, etc., printing plant, power-house, magnificent council-house, council of the seventies, in this in many respects model city of ten thousand people, and which it is expected will number twenty thousand by the close of this year; of the many other good and wholesome features already executed or in prospect we may not at present speak.

Of the other side of the picture, as viewed from our standpoint, and in regard to the extraordinary claims as a spiritual leader and guide of Doctor Alexander Dowie, and the religious claims and tenets of himself and followers we may only briefly say: If "the divinity that doth hedge a king," is being largely annulled in later times through such things as open criticism, murderous assault and assassinations of kings and earthly rulers, so do we believe must the assumptions of "Elijah" Dowie fail, and fall, before the analysis which an open court of investigation must sooner or later bring to bear upon his extraordinary claims. "Beware of false prophets," said the Savior, "which come to you in sheep's clothing." The texture of Prophet Elijah Dowie's "wool" is very fine in many regards, but the wool and hide, we know, are not the whole animal.

He claims originality as a "restorer" of church polity, and organization after primitive patterns, in the order of the ministry of the "seventy," for example, and fulfills by ordaining, not in quorum with specific numbers, but an indiscriminate and small army of not only men, but women, to that office and ministry.

There are also "overseers," "elders," and "deacons;" all or any of them baptize, with the triune form in immersion, etc. And in answer to our inquiries as to why the office of apostle was not included in the "restoration," we were informed by one of the high dignitaries that "God would have to attend to that."

"Divine healing," however, is the widely advertised and seemingly all important drawing card, and theme of conversation. The results up-to-date, so far as our observation has gone, being about parallel with that of Mrs. Eddy's Christian Science, and other religious orders claiming divine healing, with spiritualists, hypnotists, and healers through powers occult, etc., all of whom Doctor Dowie freely denounces.

Latter Day Saints may learn many valuable lessons at Zion City, on Lake Michigan, but when the Lord shall build up Zion, his Zion, he shall appear in his glory and the work will be done according to the ancient order as it is written in the changeless word and law, and through faithful and wise servants of his own appointment and calling.

And the gospel revelations to those who are privileged to get information and instruction through "the spirit of truth," from its great author, have an up-to-date electric light that makes the arrogant assumption of tallow candle illuminators seem in many regards sadly ridiculous, and ridiculously sad, to members of that organization which Paul in his time referred to when he said, "By the church might be known the manifold wisdom of God."

For ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light.—Ephesians 5: 8.

Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.—1 Thessalonians 5: 5.

And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true.—1 John 5: 20.

But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it has taught you, ye shall abide in him.—1 John 2: 27.

And so we feel continuously and gratefully to sing and to say:

"Praise to the Lord for the great restoration, Brought by the angel to Joseph the Seer."

In gospel hope,

ARE OUR YOUNG MEN REALLY WORKING?

Considering the great work in which the young men of our church are engaged, and the conception of the gospel which grows stronger as its depths are studied, and the magnitude of the places some are called to occupy, which from our standpoint unquestionably surpasses any earthly station, it is clear that not quite the interest and enthusiasm that should be is being manifested, although many are making rapid advancement.

It is written that not many wise and noble are called. Yet those are chosen that can do the work if they will. It is true that not many of the wise and cultured, and they that have reached prominence in the world, come into our church. But it seems to have been planned that after uniting with the church, their wisdom, experience, and education should be attained and seasoned with spirituality.

Some of the early founders were called ignorant at first, and possibly were, as regards the wisdom of the world, but by developing the talents given them and being tutored by the Spirit which is the author of all the gifts of God to men, they received wisdom, were noble, became educated, and capable of organizing and establishing a government on the earth never to be thrown down. It is undoubtedly true, that as smart men have figured in the building of our church as have occupied the most popular positions in the world. No matter how accomplished, men representing an unpopular system can not be popular. Christ's kingdom never was popular.

Why should not our men have the greatest minds, if they are men chosen with good talent, even if in embryonic state, if they receive through the gifts of the gospel, a training which means ultimately perfection? This has always been true of great men. It is a fact that there never was a truly great man, but who was in possession of righteous principles, but who believed in and accepted some of the teachings of Christ; consequently having a good character. However, brilliant intellect, developed talent, a humble spirit, and a sterling character should be appreciated in the church, and will be popular with God.

When we see innumerable illustrations of the development of talent along every line in the world, which accounts for the greatness of the nation, and how earnestly men work to reach proficiency, generally for pecuniary gain or to carry out some mental hobby, it is all for a few years and they go the way of all the earth, lost sight of and forgotten by the masses.

So then, the question, Why should not our young men use all their time and energy and give their mind, might, and strength to the service of the church? They should do the work which is for their eternal welfare, and hasten to use the talents given them. The men with the best talents doing an equal amount of work will win in the end. But the brightest talent without activity can be outpaced by the diligent, faithful toiler with less talent.

With our advantages we should do even better than our fathers did.

There is nothing to be conceived, of a higher order for man to attain, than the development of his mental, physical, and spiritual being. Intellect, wisdom, discernment, and memory can be fully rounded out through the provisions of the gospel.

It is hoped that the consideration of these few suggestions of the possibilities held out to our young men, which can not be put impressively enough on paper, will open an avenue for greater aspiration.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCH AND INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZATION.—No. 28.

BY EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

Wednesday, March 28, 1860. Sr. Yokum and her daughter, who now live at Council Bluffs, Iowa, have often told me of how the mob shot her husband and left him to die on the prairie not far from here, [St. Joseph, Missouri,] bleeding with four bullet wounds. To this day the daughter, innocent lamb, mourns when she recalls those sad days of religious persecutions and intolerance when her dear father was shot down; and though he survived for years, yet suffered until his death. I have also many times heard Elder Z. H. Gurley tell of the time he and others were fleeing for their lives at the massacre at Haun's Mill. How they covered up Bro. Yokum in the tall rank prairie grass solemnly praying for his recovery, and left him all alone while they continued their flight in the rain of leaden bullets falling all around them. Seventeen of the dear Saints, men, women, and children, were massacred at Haun's Mill. Joseph Smith and others were after the most insulting manner abused and hand-cuffed and put in Liberty jail for many months. But, ah, says many of our devout orthodox protestant ministers, it served him right, he was a deceiver, fraud, and a wicked man, and his doctrine was a blasphemous pretention. "The idea that he has revelations from God as in the days of the ancient prophets is preposterous," as I have heard many of them say. I feel in my very soul to-night while I sit in this lonely hotel in St. Joseph, Missouri, to challenge any religious minister in this world to produce one single sentence Joseph Smith ever uttered or wrote on religious subjects that was not in harmony with the teaching of Jesus Christ as recorded in the Bible. He was the author of many, many pages discussing the various phases of the moral and religious questions that are before the nineteenth century. The true Latter Day Saints are in the lead of all other churches in teaching the entirety of the doctrine of Christ in the greatest simplicity, in all its fullness and excellency, and in giving emphatic expression and indorsement to all that is good in morals, and just as positive in giving expression condemning evil and wickedness. The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants of nearly a thousand pages of closely-written matter are preëminently works of the highest class in parallel lines, contrasting good with evil and always without any uncertain expression. They teach and indorse righteousness and holiness of life. They are the publications of Joseph Smith, and never has it been proven that he ever did an immoral act in his life or a wicked thing, and his doctrine was the gospel of Christ in all its purity. Can the same be said of the reformers, the leading prime movers of the popular protestant churches? Let my readers remember that not one of them had an existence or a name in this world until the year 1517 A. D., as reformers.

Allow me to quote just a few paragraphs of what is said and written of them from a "History of the Protestant Reformation," by William Cobbett. This writer says of himself, page 360: "A parson said of me, once, by letter, 'Your religion, Mr. Cobbett, seems to me to be altogether political.' 'Very much so indeed,' I answered, 'and well it may be since I have been furnished with a creed which makes part of an act of parliament.' And the fact is, I am no Doctor of Divinity, and like a religion, any religion that tends to make men innocent and benevolent and happy, by taking the best possible means of furnishing them with plenty to eat, drink, and wear." On page 98 of his history he says, "Having in the preceding numbers shown that the thing impudently called the 'Reformation,' was engendered in beastly lust, brought forth in hypocrisy and perfidy, and cherished and fed by plunder, devastation, and by rivers of innocent English and Irish blood, I intended to show, in the present number, how the main body of the people were, by these doings, impoverished and degraded up to this time; that is to say, I intended to trace the impoverishment and degradation down to the end of the reign of the bloody tyrant, Henry VIII." On page 102, he continues, "Perhaps the world had never, in any age, seen a nest of such atrocious miscreants as Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin, Beza, and the rest of the distinguished reformers of the Catholic religion. Every one of them was notorious for the most scandalous vices, even according to the full confession of his own followers. They agreed in nothing but in the doctrine that good works were useless; and their lives prove the sincerity of their teaching; for there was not a man of them whose acts did not merit a halter." On page 173 he says, "But when the Protestant religion came, and along with it a married priesthood, the poor classes were plundered of their birthright, and were thrown out to prowl about for what they could beg or steal. Luther and his followers wholly rejected the doctrine that good works were necessary to salvation. He held that faith, and faith alone, was necessary. They expunged from their Bible the Epistle of Saint James, because it recommends, and insists on, the necessity of good works; which epistle Luther called an 'epistle of straw.'"

The Reformations differed from each other as widely as the colors of the rainbow, in most other things; but they all agreed in this, that good works were unnecessary to salvation, and that the "Saints," as they had the modesty to call themselves, could not forfeit their right to heaven by any crimes, however numerous and enormous, by those amongst whom plunder, sacrilege, adultery, polygamy, incest, perjury, and murder, were almost as habitual as sleeping and waking, by those who taught that the way to everlasting bliss could not be obstructed by any of these, nor by all of them put together; by such persons charity, besides that it was a so well-known Catholic commodity, would be as a matter of course, set wholly at naught. On pages 45 to 48 Mr. Cobbett says:

All accounts agree that Luther was a most profligate man. To change his religion he might have thought himself called by his conscience; but conscience could not call upon him to be guilty of all the abominable deeds of which he stands convicted, even by his own confessions, of which I shall speak more fully, when I come to the proper place for giving an account of the numerous sects into which the Protestants were soon divided, and of the fatal change which was, by this innovation in religion, produced even according to the declaration of the Protestant leaders themselves, in the morals of the people, and the state of society. But, just observing, that the Protestant sects had, at the time we are speaking of, spread themselves over a part of Germany, and got into Switzerland, and some other States of the continent, we must now before we state more particulars relating to Luther and the sects that he gave rise to, see how the King of England dealt with those of his subjects who had adopted the heresy.

The Protestants immediately began to disagree amongst themselves; but they all maintained that faith alone was sufficient to secure salvation; while the Catholics maintained that good works were also necessary. The most profligate of men, the most brutal and bloody of tyrants, may be a staunch believer: for the devils themselves believe: and therefore, we naturally at first thought, think it strange, that Henry VIII did not instantly become a zealous Protestant; did not become one of the most devoted disciples of Luther. He would, certainly; but Luther began his "Reformation" a few years too soon for the King. In 1517, when Luther began his works, the King had been married to his first wife only eight years; and he had not then conceived any project of divorce. If Luther had begun twelve years later, the King would have been a Protestant at once, especially after seeing that this new religion allowed Luther and seven others of his brother leaders in the "Reformation" to grant under their hands, a license to the Langrave of Hesse to have two wives at one and the same time! So complaisant a religion would have been, and doubtless was, at the time of the divorce, precisely to the King's taste; but, as I have just observed, it came twelve years too soon for him; for not only had he not adopted this religion, but had opposed it as a sovereign; and, which was a still more serious affair, had opposed it as an author! He had in 1521 written a book against it. His vanity, his pride, were engaged in the contest, to which may be added that Luther, in answering his book, had called him "a pig, an ass, a dunghill, the spawn of an adder, a basilisk, a lying buffoon dressed in a king's robes, a mad fool with a frothy mouth and a whorish face," and had afterwards said to him, "You lie, you stupid and sacriligious king."

Therefore, though the tyrant was bent on destroying the Catholic Church, he was not less bent on the extirpation of the followers of Luther and his tribe of new sects. Always under the influence of some selfish and base motive or other, he was with regard to the Protestants, set to work by revenge, as in the case of the Catholics he had been set to work by lust, if not by lust, to be gratified by incest. To follow him step by step, and in minute detail through all his butcheries and all his burnings would be to familiarize one's mind to a human slaughter-house, and a cookery of cannibals. I shall, therefore, confine myself to a general view of his works in this way.

His book against Luther had acquired him the title of "Defender of the Faith" of which we shall see more by and by. He could not, therefore, without recantation, be a Protestant; and, indeed, his pride would not suffer him to become the prose-lyte of a man who had, in print too, proclaimed him to be a pig, an ass, a fool, and a liar. Yet he could not pretend to be a Catholic. He was, therefore, compelled to make a religion of his own. This was doing nothing, unless he enforced its adoption by what he called law. Laws were made by him and by his servile and plundering parliament, making it heresy in, and condemning to the flames, all who did not expressly conform, by acts, as well as by declarations, to the faith and worship, which, as head of the church, he invented and ordained. Amongst his tenets there were such as neither Catholics nor Protestants could consistently with their creeds adopt. He therefore, sent both to the stake, and sometimes, in order to add mental pangs to those of the body, he dragged them to the fire on the same hurdle, tied together in pairs, back to back, each pair containing a Catholic and a Protestant. Was this the way that Saint Austin and Saint Patrick propagated their religion? Yet, such is the malignity of Burnet, and of many, many others called Protestant "divines," that they apologize for, if they do not absolutely applaud this execrable tyrant, at the very moment that they are compelled to confess that he soaked the earth with Protestant blood, and filled the air with the fumes of their roasting flesh.

Throughout the whole of this bloody work, Cranmer, who was the primate of the King's religion was consenting to, sanctioning, and aiding and abetting in, the murdering of Protestants as well as of Catholics; though, and I pray you to mark it well, Hume, Tillotson, Burnet, and all his long list of eulogists, say, and make it matter of merit in him, that all this while, he was himself, a sincere Protestant in his heart! And, indeed, we shall by and by see him openly avowing those very tenets for the holding of which he had been instrumental in sending, without regard to age or sex, others to perish in the flames. The progress of this man in the paths of infamy, needed incontestible proof to reconcile the human mind to a belief in it. Before he became a priest he had married: after he became a priest, and had taken the oath of celibacy, he, being then in Germany, and having become a Protestant, married another wife, while the first was still alive. Being the primate of Henry's church, which still forbade the clergy to have wives, and which held them to their oath of celibacy, he had his wife brought to England, in a chest, with holes bored in it to give her air! As the cargo was destined for Canterbury, it was landed at Gravesend, where the sailors, not apprised of the contents of the chest set it up on one end, and the wrong end downwards, and had nearly broken the neck of the poor frow! Here was a pretty scene! A German frow, with a litter of half German, half English young ones, kept in huggar-muggar on that spot which had been the cradle of English Christianity; that spot where Saint Austin had inhabited, and where Thomas A. Becket had sealed with his blood, his opposition to a tyrant, who aimed at the destruction of the church, and at the pillage of the people! Here is quite enough to fill us with disgust; but, when we reflect, that this same primate, while he had under his roof his frow and her litter, was engaged in assisting to send Protestants to the flames, because they dissented from a system that forbade the clergy to have wives, we swell with indignation, not against Cranmer, for, though there are so many of his atrocious deeds yet to come, he has exhausted our store; not against Hume, for he professed no regard for any religion at all; but against those who are called "divines," and who are the eulogists of Cranmer; against Burnet, who says that Cranmer "did all with a good conscience;" and against Doctor Sturges, or rather the Dean and Chapter of Winchester, who clubbed their "talents," in getting up the "Reflections on Popery," who talk of the "respectable Cranmer," and who have the audacity to put him, in point of integrity, upon a level with Sir Thomas More! As Doctor Milner, in his answer to Sturges, observes, they resembled each other in that the name of both was Thomas; but, in all other things, the dissimilarity was as great as that which the most vivid imagination can ascribe to the dissimilarity between hell and heaven.

The infamy of Cranmer in assisting in sending people to the flames for entertaining opinions which he afterwards confessed that he himself entertained at the time that he was so sending them, can be surpassed by nothing of which human depravity is capable; and it can be equalled by nothing but that of the King, who, while he was, as he hoped and thought, laying the axe to the root of the Catholic faith, still styled himself its defender.

He was not, let it be borne in mind, defender of what he might as others have, since his day, and in his day, called the Christian faith. He received the title from the pope, as a reward for his written defense of the Catholic faith against Luther. The pope conferred on him this title which was to descend to his posterity. The title was given by Pope Leo X in a bull, or edict, beginning with these words, "Leo, servant of the servants of the Lord, to his most dear son, Henry, King of England, defender of the faith, all health and happiness." The bull then goes on to say, that the King, having in defense of the faith of the Catholic Church written a book against Martin Luther, the pope and his counsel had determined to confer on him and his successors, the title of Defender of the Faith. "We," says the bull, "sitting in this holy see, having, with mature deliberation, considered the business with our brethren, do, with unanimous council and consent, grant unto your majesty, your heirs and successors, the title of Defender of the Faith; which we do, by these presents, confirm unto you; commanding all the faithful to give your Majesty this title.

On pages 133 and 135 Cobbett says:

For now, justice, at last overtook this most mischievous of all villains, who had justly to go to the same stake that he had unjustly caused so many others to be tied to. The three others were Hooper, Latimer, and Ridley, each of whom was indeed, inferior in villainy to Cranmer, but to few other men that have ever existed. . . .

Brought at last to the trial and to condemnation as a heretic, he professed himself ready to recant. He was respited for six weeks, during which time he signed six different forms of recantations, each more ample than the former. He declared that the Protestant religion was false; that the Catholic was the only true one; that he now believed in all the doctrines of the Catholic Church; that he had been a horrid blasphemer against the sacrament; that he was unworthy of forgiveness; that he prayed the people, the queen, and the pope, to have pity on, and to pray for his wretched soul; and that he had made and signed this declaration without fear, and without hope of favor, and for the discharge of his conscience, and as a warning to others. . . . Now finding that he must die, and carrying in his breast all his malignity undiminished, he recanted his recantation, thrust into the fire the hand that had signed it, and thus expired, protesting against that very religion in which, only nine hours before, he had called God to witness that he firmly believed!

In the language of Mr. Cobbett, I must quote again a few passages:

By making himself the supreme head of the church, he made himself, he having the sword and the gibbet at his command, the master of all property of that church, including that of the monasteries! His counselors and courtiers knew this, and as it was soon discovered, that a sweeping confiscation would take place, the parliament was by no means backward in aiding his design, every one hoping to share in the plunder. The first step was to pass acts taking from the pope all authority and power over the church in England, and giving to the King all authority whatever as to ecclesiastical matters. His chief adviser and abetter was Thomas Cranmer, a name which deserves to be held in everlasting execration; a name which we could not pronounce without almost doubting of the justice of God, were it not for our knowledge of the fact that the cold-blooded, most perfidious, most impious, most blasphemous caitiff expired at last, amidst those flames which he himself had been the chief cause of kindling.

The tyrant, being now both pope and king, made Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, a dignity just then become vacant. Of course, this adviser and ready tool now became chief judge in all ecclesiastical matters. But, here was a difficulty; for the tyrant still professed to be a Catholic; so that his new Archbishop was to be consecrated according to the usual pontifical form, which required of him to swear obedience to the pope. And here a transaction took place that will at once show us of what sort of stuff the "Reformation" gentry were made. Cranmer, before he went to the altar to be consecrated, went into a chapel, and there made a declaration, on oath, that, by the oath that he was about to take, and which for the sake of form he was obliged to take, he did not intend to bind himself to anything that tended to prevent him from assisting the King in making any such "reforms" as he might think useful in the Church of England! . . .

Having provided himself with so famous a judge in ecclesiastical matters, the King lost, of course, no time in bringing his hard case before him, and demanding justice at his hands! Hard case, indeed, to be compelled to live with a wife of forty-three, when he could have, for next to nothing, and only for asking, a young one of eighteen or twenty! A really hard case; and he sought relief, now that he had got such an upright and impartial judge, with all imaginable dispatch. . . .

It was now four or five years since the King and Cranmer had begun to hatch the project of the divorce [from the pope]; but in the meanwhile, the King had kept Anne Boleyn, or in more modern phrase, she had been "under his protection," for about three years, and, here, let me state, that, in Doctor Bayley's life of Bishop Fisher, it is positively asserted that Anne Boleyn was the King's daughter, and that Lady Boleyn, her mother, said to the King, when he was about to marry Anne, "Sir, for the reverence of God, take heed what you do in marrying my daughter, for, if you record your own conscience well, she is your own daughter as well as mine. To which the King replied, "Whose daughter soever she is, she shall be my wife."—Pages 28, 29.

And it is a remarkable fact in direct line of this same ecclesiastical Judge Bishop of Canterbury, the Reverend John Wesley, founder of the Methodist Church, claims his authority as he says, "When their champion (Mr. Nash) appealed, coming close to me, asked by what authority I did these things, I replied, By the authority of Jesus Christ, conveyed to me by the (now) Archbishop of Canterbury, when he laid hands upon me and said, 'Take thou authority to preach the gospel.'" And Wesley did not claim he had been converted until he had founded his church both in Europe and America.

"But, ah," say some of my dear readers, who may by chance note the quotations above (if my memories should find place in print), "they were written evidently by bitter enemies of the 'Illustrious Reformers.'" Just so, my reader, but you can see that it is a fact that any man can be destroyed in his reputation by his enemies, and you can easily see also that I would be a base, unprincipled man to undertake to meet you in argument and rely upon what your enemies should say against you, by referring to the statements of such enemies.

Remember I do not say these allegations against those reformers are true, and those quoted are but a small part of the infamy and crime that is charged against them by their enemies. But dare you deny them in part or as a whole in the light of history handed down from the sixteenth century to the present time? I am prepared in solemn truth before God to deny every wicked thing that is charged against Mr. Smith and that is being circulated broadcast against him all over the civilized world by the clergy of the popular churches which were founded by men who never claimed that God called them by revelation to do a work for God on the earth and many of them were criminals and died on the scaffold or by fire. Joseph Smith, though harassed by about forty law suits, was never convicted of a wrong in all his life in any court of the land and never accused of any of the black crimes the reformers of the sixteenth century were. I have been acquainted with thousands of good people in and out of the church and all of them say Joseph Smith was a good, moral, and honest man. I never saw a man in all my life who ever knew an immoral act of Joseph's. The worst crime except the gossip and slander, the popular ministers ever refer to is that he claimed to have received a revelation from heaven and by direction of the heavenly angels organized the church of Christ after the apostolic pattern.

I thank God I have read the history for and against both Catholic and Protestant churches and their founders, so I am not altogether a novice in historical lore; and if by hearing and information of what has been said and written against the founders of either Catholic or Protestant churches, it is possible to be qualified to be a juror or judge, I have had some little opportunity.

I have not been willing to judge of the truthfulness or falsity of any religion or church organization until I have heard both sides, from its friends first, if possible, and then from its enemies. And one thing I have tried to guard myself against, since I came to years of discretion, is not to allow any one to prejudice me against any individual or his religion by hearing his enemies speak disrespectfully of him or his faith; and all I ask now of any man is, in a dispassionate manner to hear and learn what Joseph Smith truly did say and teach, and if he believes in the teachings of the Christian Bible he can not honestly reject the teaching and doctrine of Joseph Smith.

With all the above thoughts like a vision passing before my mind, I can not help but feel sad and lonely to-night (not a friend near me except Bro. Beebe, and he is taking rest in sleep), as I contemplate the condition of the world and the latter-day work that must ultimately restore Israel into favor with God, just before the second advent of the Savior. If the son of the Martyr were only with us, it does seem the Reorganization would soon be a power in the world for good and have a tendency to check the apostasy of the Utah Mormons.

I must retire, as I am weary and tired, and if Providence permits we continue our journey across the state of Missouri on the morrow.

Thursday, March 29, at twenty minutes past nine in the forenoon we are on board the cars of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad. Indeed, in comparison to the slow stage-coach, the Prophet Nahum 2:3, 4 has very fitly described them when he says, "The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir-trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings. He [the conductor] shall recount his worthies [the passengers]: they shall stumble in their walk." The conductor put one passenger off because he had not paid his fare, but he counted all the worthy ones in, and I was one of them, so I continued on my journey. When we arrived at Hannibal we took steamer for Quincy, Illinois, which is situated on the banks of the Father of Waters, the Mississippi River, twenty miles north of Hannibal, and then again on the cars to Galesburg. We reached the city at seven o'clock in the evening. Bro. Beebe is not feeling very well, though is cheerful in spirits. He has been broken of his accustomed quiet and rest so many nights that he is very weary and tired. So I suggested we stay over night and rest. He readily accepted the proposition and we put up at the hotel of the railroad passenger house.

Friday, March 30. It is beautiful weather and we are feeling nicely after a good night's rest. Galesburg is a beautiful inland city. At ten o'clock in the forenoon we again are on the cars of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railroad for Mendota, eighty miles from Galesburg, and then changed cars to the Illinois Central, eighteen miles to Amboy, arriving at our destination at three o'clock in the afternoon, and walked one mile and a half to Bro. Royal Stone's. Here we met Bro. W. W. Blair and wife, and after usual greetings of fraternal expressions of kindness he said, "Did you come by way of Nauvoo?" I replied in the negative. He then said, "Joseph is to be with us at conference, or at least he said he would; but as all things human are uncertain we will not say anything about it to make talk in the world, until he comes." He then informed me that Elder William Marks, of Shabbona Grove, had received a letter from Joseph in which he said he had determined to take his father's place at the head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and desired Bro. Marks and such others as he might select would call on him immediately at Nauvoo in order that he might obtain their counsel on church matters. Agreeably to this request, Elder Marks, Israel L. Rogers, and W. W. Blair visited him on the 20th and 21st of March, and after this interview, Joseph informed the brethren that he would be at the General Conference at Amboy on the 6th of April. The council he wished to have with the brethren was their wisdom and advice about redeeming the Mormons of Utah from their evil practices of polygamy and kindred doctrines. He stated he understood that the law of God to the church was given February, 1831, and can not be superceded by any other law, and he also said he believed that many had been led into the evils of their doctrines honestly and it is advisable and proper to adopt a mild course towards the Mormons who had apostatized from the faith as his father taught it.

Thank God, O my soul! This is good news to me; too good to realize that it can come to pass so soon. My joy is too great to give expression to my feelings. Is it possible I am to realize all my hopes so soon in these matters? Like it was with John the Baptist, I feel to say is it indeed he of whom it has been prophesied should come to fulfill the many promises to the Saints? Is Joseph surely coming so soon, called of God to take the presidency of the church! Between fears and hopes I rejoice in my very soul. If he now comes to the Reorganization, the oft-repeated question, What would you think if Joseph should claim a call from God to take his father's place and unite with Utah Mormons? What would you think then? My invariable answer has been, I knew he would not unite with such an apostate people. I feel a spirit of contentment and peace, yet like one who has had great hope for some special blessing, and not altogether satisfied until the momentous event is passed into history.

How will the public announcement that Joseph, the son of the choice seer, is president of the church affect the scattered Saints in all the world? What will the professors of the sects now say of this young man? He has been in some respects before the religious world all his life, and no one has attacked his character. What will they say now, if the young man is called of God and successor of his father? I was not personally acquainted with the choice seer, but I am with this young man; and if the devoted, uninspired professors undertake to slander him, I shall know by personal experience that they are moved from selfish motives or a lying spirit. His father was an obscure unlearned young man when he commenced his religious work. This young man has been quite prominent before the world as the eldest son of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon Church, as they are pleased to call it. He has a fair education, is noted as upright and honest, and has never been associated with the Mormons, who have been so prominent in the world, because of their wicked apostasy from what his father taught. If he gives the lie to all the scandal repeatedly circulated by the popular clergy of the world by his conduct and defense of the gospel of Christ as taught by his father, what will our enemies resort to next? Will they meet this young, honorable man with an honorable defense against his doctrine? with the Bible and the internal evidence of our own books? Or will they resort to the ashes of his father, and repeat the scandals circulated by his enemies who persecuted him to death? If the son is now accepted by common consent by the church his father founded, he will indorse the doctrine published by the Reorganization, the Bible as the foundation of our faith, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as the word of God and law to govern the church. It will also be an evidence of the position taken by the Reorganization of the church against the pollution of polygamy and the kindred doctrines taught by the Utah people, that are so horrible according to the Christian standard as taught by the True Latter Saints. This is the general thought occupying my mind to-day and I rejoice with all my heart, and will await the events that must take place in the next few days. If Joseph does certainly come, What will he say to us first? is my leading thought and expectancy is happily upon the countenances of all the Saints.

Sunday, April 1, 1860, the Saints observed in fasting and prayer to our heavenly Father for his special blessings to attend our General Conference. Social service at Bro. Stone's residence and in the evening at the same place Elder Blair spoke a short time on the first principles of the gospel, and the meeting turned into a general social service. All are in good spirits; weather is beautiful and roads good.

Tuesday, April 3, Elder Samuel Powers of the Twelve, Elders John Gaylord and William Aldredge of Wisconsin, George Mory and Oliver Dunham have arrived in good health and spirits.

Wednesday, April 4. Quite a number of the brethren are here and meeting was held in the Cadwell Schoolhouse, Elders Z. H. Gurley and William Marks presiding. General council, nominating of quite a number of the elders for officers in the several quorums of the church and general preparatory work and business for the conference. The elders are in good spirits and hope, gladdened by the news that the expected Joseph will soon be with us. But few of them had learned that he had said he would attend our conference or of the visit of the brethren to see him.

Amboy, Lee County, Illinois, April 5, 1860. I accompanied several of the brethren who were anticipating friends to arrive on the next train which is now due. While we were waiting at the depot Bro. Joseph Smith came up the street to meet us. I happened to be the only one who knew him. I soon introduced him to the Saints, and he informed me that he came up on the night train before, that his mother was with him, and was at her sister's, Mrs. Wasson's, who was an old resident of the place. I then invited him to attend our social prayer-meeting to be held at Bro. Stone's this evening. He replied, "I would like to attend, but also would like to have my mother go if I had any conveyance so she could." I informed him I would see that he was provided with conveyance for himself and mother. This evening Bro. Stone's son, Lardner, took his open double-seated spring carriage and went after them. They were cheerful, unassuming, and social in conversation, yet reserved in manner, casually referred to the stormy time crossing the river on their way, but made no expression in relation to the church. Just as we reached the door of Bro. Stone's residence (the house is a very neat one story and a half cottage in L form), the congregation knelt in prayer, the parlor was closely seated and packed, but the front room had no seats and the audience was standing, and two alcoves or bedrooms, veiled in front by curtains which were drawn to one side, were where hats and caps had been placed.

Bro. Joseph and his mother sat on the edge of one of the beds while Elder Gurley offered the invocation to our heavenly Father for his blessing, and as the audience rose to their feet, a hymn was sung, and just as the closing lines of praise were sung, the Holy Spirit said to me, "Introduce Bro. Joseph as the son of the Prophet Joseph, and Sr. Emma as the wife of the deceased." I instantly said to Joseph, "Allow me to introduce you to this audience," and took him by the hand and led him to the door of the sitting-room and introduced him in the form of words as above commanded of God, and in the same manner introduced Sr. Emma. Our hope as based upon prophecy is now being realized. A joyous influence of the Holy Spirit solemnized every heart in divine presence, and Elder Gurley said, "Welcome, welcome." Bro. Joseph said, "I am pleased to meet with you, and in coming I propose to say to-morrow to you, if the same Spirit that prompts my coming prompts my reception, I am with you. He did say other words but I do not remember them so I can repeat them. I do not think Sr. Emma made any response to the glad voice of Elder Gurley to her, "Welcome, welcome, to the elect lady."

I am truly glad to record the above events, as they will ever serve as a link in the history of the great latter-day work, and they are true as God can not lie. The meeting was a spiritual feast. Many of the Saints spoke and rejoiced in the Holy Ghost. Several spoke in the spirit of prophecy, which must have been very comforting to Joseph and Sr. Emma, and all the Saints were lit up with great hope, comfort, and peace of the Holy Ghost. As the hour of service advanced I was impressed to offer prayer and thanksgiving to our heavenly Father and was led in supplication to ask Almighty God to bless the church in its effort to gather into his sheepfold the honest in heart everywhere in all the earth, and that Israel might be gathered from its long dispersion and that Joseph, the son of the Martyr, may be kept from the besetting sin of the ancient kings and prophets of Israel. I had the assurance by the Holy Spirit that my prayer would be answered and that Joseph would never be led into the gross crime of polygamy. The meeting was a happy one, long to be remembered, and will be handed down in church history as an epoch never to be forgotten. As it was getting late, Joseph said to me, "I wish you would excuse us and allow us to return." As we took them back to Mrs. Wasson's they expressed themselves pleased with the spirit of the meeting and appreciative of the Saints, but they did not shake hands with any of them, as we retired before the close of the services.

I have been quite particular in the record of events as I believe it will be of interest to the rising generation that will follow us; also because it is a fulfillment of prophecy that I would come to the church with the Prophet Joseph. Before I took my mission in 1856 it was revealed to me that I should not return to Zarahemla, Wisconsin, until Joseph would be called to take his father's place and that I was directed in Western Iowa to attend this conference, and means would be supplied to bear my expenses, all shows unmistakable evidence that a divine power had been guiding in all these matters. It was not a studied plan of mine to even meet Joseph at Amboy, but it seemed to come about as a natural happening so far as I was concerned. But now as it has come about, as current events in history, I can see how an overruling Providence has been in it all.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION.

In HERALD of May 27, in a letter dated May 19, the following statement was made: "If Saints do not use wisdom they will yet learn that 'the children of this world are wiser than the children of light,' and in years to come may have to pay far more for good Missouri lands."

I wish to make the following deduction from sacred writings, both ancient and modern: Land will be cheaper in Missouri in the years following the high prices than it has been for years past. Some may say, how do you come to such a conclusion? Let us turn to Doctrine and Covenants and other sacred writings. "The land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase, or by blood, otherwise there is none inheritance for you. And if by purchase, behold, you are blessed; and if by blood, as you are forbidden to shed blood, lo, your enemies are upon you."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 8.

Thus we see that Zion shall be redeemed by purchase and by power. Now let us look at the financial condition of most of the Saints. I read sometime since that most of the Saints are in from poor to fair circumstances, there being comparatively few rich persons in the church. At present prices how can Zion be redeemed by the Saints "by purchase"?

We also learn in section 100:3 that Zion is to be redeemed by power. How is that power to be displayed in bringing about the redemption of Zion? I believe it will be brought about by "desolating scourges" of sickness, wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, lightning, floods, etc. "And after your testimony, cometh the wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:25. A desolating scourge shall go forth among the inhabitants of the earth, and shall continue to be poured out, from time to time, if they repent not, until the earth is empty.

In conclusion let me say, I believe that by the power of God displayed in scourges, in the fierce and vivid lightning, by famine, floods, cyclones, and by people dying off from the earth, land will be cheaper than it has been for years, and thus Zion shall be redeemed by purchase.

Your brother in Christ,

Cuddle Doon.

The bairnies cuddle doon at nicht
Wi' muckle faucht an' din;
"O, try an' sleep, ye waukrife rogues,
Your faither's comin' in."
They never heed a word I speak;
I try to gie a frown,
But aye I hap them up and cry,
"O, bairnies, cuddle doon."

Wee Jamie wi' the curly head—
He aye sleeps next the wa'—
Bangs up and cries, "I want a piece"—
The rascal starts them a'.
I rin and fetch them pieces, drink,
They stop awee the soun',
Then draw the blankets up an' cry,
"Noo, weanie, cuddle doon."

But ere five minutes gang, wee Rab
Cries out fra' neeth the claes,
"Mither, mak' Tam gie o'er at once,
He's kittlin' wi' his taes."
The mischief's in that Tam for tricks,
He'd bother half the toon;
But aye I hap them up an' cry,
"O, bairnies, cuddle doon."

At length they hear their father's fit,
An' as he stukes the door
They turn their faces to the wa',
While Tam pretends to snore.
"Ha a' the weens been gude?" he asks,
As he pits aff his shoon.
"The bairnies, John, are in their beds,
An' lang since cuddled doon."

An' just afore we bed oursel
We look at our wee lambs;
Tam has his airm roun' wee Rab's neck,
An' Rab his airm roun' Tam's.
I lift wee Jamie up the bed,
An' as I straik each croon
I whisper till my heart fills up,
"O, bairnies, cuddle doon."

The bairnies cuddle doon at nicht
Wi' mirth that's dear to me;
But soon the big warl's cark an' care
Will quafen doon their glee;
Yet, come what will to ilka ane,
May he who sits aboon
Aye whisper, though their pows be bauld,
"O, bairnies, cuddle doon."—Anonymous.

The Master's Touch.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty hides unseen;
To make the music and the beauty, needs
The master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.
Great Master, touch us with thy skillful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die.
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let Hidden and lost thy form within us lie!
Spare not the stroke! Do with us as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose that we may become Thy perfect image, thou our God and Lord?—Sel.

Pearls From the Depths of Intellect and Heart.

When the loss of property and the severance of friendships have come, when the future is overcast and we know nothing of what is before us except simply this, that God's will must be done, and when we try to leave all to him the endurance which then reveals itself is the masterful power of the human will. Men trained in this experience can not be frightened nor disheartened by troubles however great.—R. S. Storrs.

The Christian life that is joyless is a discredit to God and a disgrace to itself. "These things have I spoken unto you," said Jesus, "that my joy might remain in you and that your joy might be full." Study these words. Believe them. Attempt them. Steadily accomplish them and the joy of the Lord will enter you long before you hear the word, "Come, ye blessed enter into the joy of your Lord."—Sunday School Times.

Make my heart, I pray, of kindness
Always full, as clouds of showers;
Keep my mortal eyes from blindness;
I would see the sun and flowers.

From temptation pray deliver;
And, good angel, grant to me
That my heart be grateful ever,
Herein all my askings be.—Alice Cary.

Silently the work of our lives goes on. It proceeds without intermission and all that has been done is the under-structure for that which is to be done. Young man and maiden, take heed to the work of your hands. That which you are doing is imperishable. You do not leave it behind you because you forget it. It passes away from you apparently, but it does not pass away in reality. Every stroke, every single element abides and there is nothing that grows fast as character.—Selected.

The vice of envy is not only a dangerous but also a mean vice, for it is always a confession of inferiority. It may provoke conduct which will prove fruitful of wrong to others and it must cause misery to the man who feels it. It will not be any the less fruitful of wrong and misery if, as is so often the case with evil motives, it adopts some high-sounding alias. The truth is that each one of us has in him certain passions and instincts, which, if they gain the upper hand in his soul, would mean that the wild beast had come uppermost in him.—Theodore Roosevelt.

The lines of suffering on almost every human countenance have been deepened, if not traced there, by unfaithfulness to conscience, by departures from duty. To do wrong is the surest way to bring suffering; no wrong deed ever failed to bring it. Those sins which are followed by no palpable pain are yet terribly avenged, even in this life. They abridge our capacity of happiness, impair our relish for innocent pleasure and increase our sensibility to suffering. They spoil us of the armor of a pure conscience and trust in God, without which we are naked amid hosts of foes and are vulnerable by all the changes of life. Thus to do wrong is to inflict the surest injury on our own peace. No enemy can do us equal harm with what we do ourselves whenever or however we violate any moral or religious obligation.—Channing.

When He Comes Home at Night.

The wide-thrown door—a flood of lamplight through;
The touch of hands and lips, the words are few;
A woman's upturned face and her glad eyes
That thrill a welcome to him tenderwise;
A voice that holds for him the old delight—
Her clinging arms—when he comes home at night.

The snowy little table simply spread;
The gurgling, singing kettle; on the mat
Ensnared in loud content, the old house cat;
The lamplight's radiance on a woman's head,
And prodigally over all, the beam
Of his own fireside with its cheerful gleam;

A child's shrill voice in welcome lifted high,
A romp in rough-and-tumble, hearty style,
The drooping lids and white crib by and by,
A lisping voice protesting all the while;
A little sleeping form—and bent above,
Her brooding face, alight with mother-love.

O heart that works and at its working sings!
O you who have such store of homely things,
And homely joys that seem to you so small,
There is not one that you would sell of all
For any price, or deed away the right
To what is yours—when you come home at night!

—Anna Spencer Twitchell, in Western Christian Advocate.

My Cross.

"My cross is not o'er heavy; fair and light
It looks, to those who stagger 'neath the load
Of burdens, rough-hewn by affliction's might,
They do not see what smarting galls are hid
Under its shifting lightness: can not feel
The thousand needle-points that prick and goad

The thin-clad spirit; know not that the seal
Of silence covers suff'ring; nor that mid
The fragrant flow'rs that round the light cross cling,
Are noisome nettles twined, whose venom'd sting
Rankles within the soul. If lips but smile,
None note that anguish whitens them the while;
Nor deems life's lie is aught but truth; nor guess
How the heart knoweth its own bitterness."

"Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth wouldst teach.
Thy soul must overflow. If thou
Another's soul wouldst reach,
It needs the overflowing heart,
To give the lips full speech.

"Think truly and thy thoughts
Will the world's famine feed.
Speak truly and thy word
Shall be a fruitful seed.
Live truly and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed."

Dear Mothers: In reading April's letter in the last HERALD, my heart went out to her in the deprivation that we mothers all have in not being able to attend so many places of real interest while the dear babies are needing our care. My thoughts went back to my past and I think if the dear mother knew how much harder the terrible disappointment is to be free to go when and where you desire and to return to an empty house, no dear babies to care for, no little one to hold in mamma's warm hand, no dear manly boy or sweet girl to give the good-night kiss and tuck in his own bed, but instead to find empty bed and chair and only vacancy and silence. If the dear mother knew how a mother's heart can be starved for heaven and her loved ones, she would hug her dear ones to her heart and thank God for all her trial now. My heart breathes a silent prayer that the dear mother may never know the harder disappointment, but may with all her cares, trials, and burdens be able to "pass on," and when tucking the dear ones in bed, to breathe a silent prayer for the childless mothers that they may be able to do some good here while "only waiting."
A MOTHER.

The Consecrated Will.

Laid on thine altar, O my Lord divine,
Accept my gift this day for Jesus' sake.
I have no jewels to adorn thy shrine
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make,
But here I bring, within my trembling hand,
This will of mine—a thing which seemeth small
But only thou, dear Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield thee this, I yield mine all.

Hidden therein thy searching eye can see
Struggles of passion, visions of delight,
All that I am, or love, or fain would be
Deep love, fond hope, or longings infinite.
It hath been wet with tears and dimmed with sighs,
Clinched in my grasp till beauty it hath none.
Now from thy footstool, where it vanquished lies,
The prayer ascendeth "May thy will be done."

Take it, O Father, ere my courage fail,
And merge it so in thine own will that e'en,
If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
And thou givest back my gift, it may have been
So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
I may not know, or feel it as my own.
So one with thine, so filled with peace divine.
But gaining back my will, may find it thine.

Letter Department.

SOUTH PITTSBURG, Tennessee, June 20.

Editors Herald: The Saints and friends of Western Kentucky and Tennessee who are interested in the proposed Snow and Boaz debate will be interested in knowing the present status of affairs in that line.

I received a letter from Doctor Turnbow, of Pilot Oak, Kentucky, written May 5, containing the following propositions from W. T. Boaz, he to affirm the first, I the second. Proposition one: The Bible teaches that the New Testament is a perfect standard of religion and morals under Christ. Proposition two: The Bible teaches that we, the Latter Day Saints, can and do perform miracles in Christ's name as wonderful as those performed by the early church. In reply I wrote him that I was surprised to get such propositions from a man of his reputation as a debater, as they did not contain the differences between us. I offered to debate the usual church propositions, or to furnish a man to debate them.

He replied that the propositions he sent set forth the position on those points, and that if I wanted a debate on those propositions I should say so, if not, "speak out." I wrote him again expressing surprise that he should submit such propositions, stating that it seemed clear he did not want to meet me on fair propositions. I stated that if his church be the true church of Christ, harmonizing with the Bible in faith, organization, doctrine and practice, he certainly ought to be willing to defend it. If he refuses to do so, it proves that he does not believe that he represents the truth, or at least he is afraid to defend it as such. I was ready, willing, and anxious to meet him on the church propositions.

He wrote reply on June 11, from Sedalia, Kentucky, as follows:
