RACE ANALOGY.

The following, which appeared in the Chicago Record-Herald, December 28, may be of interest to Book of Mormon students:

The discovery of a peculiar analogy between the Mayas of Yucatan and some of the oriental races is reported by Professor Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, who has just returned from a four months trip through Mexico.

Maya babies, so the anthropologist found, are marked up to the tenth month after birth with a spot of bright purple on the small of the back. Up to this time such a peculiarity of pigmentation has only been known to ethnologists as a characteristic of the Japanese, Filipinos, Eskimos, and other yellow peoples. Its appearance as a race trait of an American Indian tribe again brings up the much-exploited theory of the eastern origin of the Mayas and their kindred tribes.

"Montezuma's Bath Tub," a circular excavation in the solid rock of a hillside overlooking the valley and lake of Mexico, in which, according to popular belief, the lord of the Aztec confederacy took his daily ablutions and enjoyed the scenery, also came in for a share of Professor Starr's attention. He is inclined to believe that the basin is connected in some way with the astronomical and religious rites of the old Aztecs.

SR. ANN WEBSTER renews for HERALD from New Castle, New South Wales, and says: "I feel as if it might be the last, I am so frail; but my mind is fixed. I love the Lord, I love his work. Elder Potter comes once a fortnight with the sacrament. It is comforting. I look and long for the Master's coming. I pray all the time that the dear Lord will bless you all and increase our faith in the work, and bless you with wisdom, and lead the Lord's people."

THAT OMAHA CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

We give below two views upon our religious environments which will be of interest to our readers, especially to the ministry. The first is from the Primitive Christian, a paper published at Panama, Nebraska, by W. F. Parmifer, who is editor and proprietor, and who resides at Winfield, Kansas, in this issue for Tuesday, December 16, 1902. The paper is published evidently in the interest and advocacy of the "primitive gospel," as the same was perfected and promulgated by Alexander Campbell, if one is to judge from the zeal with which the editor arraigns and condemns the convention lately held at Omaha, by the "Christian Church," so-called.

We have called the association formed at that convention with the intent and purpose to "fight Mormonism," an unholy alliance; but we have not written nearly so harshly and bitterly of that alliance as the Primitive Christian has of the whole convention; albeit, we are of the opinion that this same editor and his colleagues would strike hand with this same association in its crusade against the "Mormons," and would do as its members did, and do, class us of the Reorganization with the church in Utah. But as the Primitive Christian, the Standard, and the Helper are bedfellows, so far as the basis of their faith and organization are concerned (if they have an organization), we are willing the first shall define the position of the second and the third without interference on our part.

THE OMAHA CONVENTION.

The Apostle James said, "Show me your faith without your works and I will show you my faith by my works." Acting upon this principle, that works show the inward or mental condition, the "General Convention" of the Christian Church recently assembled in Omaha, declared its faith by its work, fully demonstrating the claim that the Christian Church is "progressing," and pointing out so clearly where it is going that even the editor of the Standard seems to see.

Of course it is none of my business what this new sect does through its convention, any more than what the M. E. Church does through her "conferences" or other churches through "assembly" or "synod," yet the act is public property and I refer to it because it confirms the charge of sectarian affiliation which some of the members of the Christian Church have not only refused to believe, but have complained against as a misrepresentation. I wonder if they can believe it now?

Of course the action of this convention was no surprise to us who are familiar with the conduct of their city churches, and who understand their principles and their logic, but some are professing surprise among them, for up to this act their hearts were blinded by the "explanation" that the sectarian spirit was only "local," that is, only occasionally one holding that view. But now the idea is indorsed, not simply by an "occasional pastor or member" or by a convention, but by the General Convention of the Christian Church, who say of themselves in the resolution referred to: "We the representatives of the Disciples of Christ in convention assembled." An act by representatives. Of course their leaders will now try to blind, soothe and satisfy the dissatisfied, by telling them the "convention has no authority." To such I would say "be not deceived." Not stopping now to notice the silly plea of a "general convention" without authority, let us not overlook the fact, that, authority or no authority, the act tells plainly what the spirit of the convention is made of, and as there sat the ablest men of the church, it speaks the spirit of the church. Can any one suppose the "general convention" of any body of people is not composed of the leading spirits of that people? And whether its action meets the approval of every member of the body or not, its action must be taken to represent at least a prevailing sentiment—a sentiment the leaders in that body desire the people to indorse. It shows their purpose—what they are working for, and what must exist under their management. Should these words chance to fall into the hands of some who are giving of their money and their influence to perpetuate this society and convention work, let me ask if you desire to partake of her sins. If not, remember the Lord has given you but one way to avoid it: "Come out of her, my people." Will you do it? Or will you still feed this young monster of apostasy—support this new house in Babylon?

That the Christian Church has become a thoroughly established apostasy, none but the deceptive and willingly blind can or will deny. Had any one been doubtful of this prior to the action of this representative body at Omaha, they could not doubt any longer. Even the inconsistent dose of paragoric administered by the editor of the Standard in the way of criticism on the action of the convention, for the benefit of such as have not yet "progressed" sufficiently to take this "progressive" step of their general convention without moral pain, can hardly soothe and quiet them until they have so learned "the step" that they can more comfortably "keep up with the band wagon."

Although I prefer to see a man oppose the wrong, no matter who he is nor where he is, it is hard for me to keep from doubting the sincerity of some men, and that is why I refer to the criticism of the editor of the Standard as a sort of paragoric to quiet the feelings of those among them who might otherwise "get their eyes open" and see clearly the apostasy into which they are being led, step by step, under the deception of "progress" and "expediency."

The idea that the editor of the Standard, a paper that has been and still is, the chief support of the spirit that has led to the Christian Church apostasy, now cries against the only fruit such a spirit can bear, is most inconsistent indeed. Has "progress" become too "progressive"? Has "expediency" become too "expedient"? Or is his criticism simply for effect—such effect as it might have on the unsuspecting who have not yet "progressed" far enough to be sufficiently strong to accept this late progressive move, and hold such in line until they can be progressed and persuaded to endure the "progress;" until they catch a little more of the "spirit of the age," then, like their leaders, they, too, can "adopt the resolution"?

If such be not the object of the editor's criticism on the action of the convention, and he is really grieved at the action, not because he thinks it was a little too soon, but for righteous reason, then I suppose he can say: Lord, of a truth I now perceive that "men do not gather grapes of thorns nor figs of thistles." But will he still continue to cultivate "the thorn and the thistle?" Consistency, thou art a jewel!

But all of our readers may not know what this convention did. They passed a resolution indorsing the "federation of churches."

But what is that? It is an agreement between churches that they are equal and one will not interfere with the other. If the Methodist, or any other church of the federation, occupies a certain field no other is to enter that field, and all work that is done there must be done through that church. If there are more churches than seem to be necessary in any field, who shall occupy the field is determined by the vote of that field and the approval of the committee on federation. Thus the Christian Church acknowledges itself to be only a sect of the sects, as useless and unnecessary to the cause of Christ as any and every other sect. You can blot it and every other sect out of existence and still the church of Christ exists, for it existed without them and before they were born. Therefore they do not exist by the will and authority of Jesus Christ.

Thus you see this convention has now boldly cast away the plea of A. Campbell and his collaborators who sought to restore primitive Christianity. During the years of their "progress" which has now culminated in this act, they have kept many in ignorance of their real purpose, claiming to represent the work begun by Campbell. They represent that work like the Pope of Rome and his priests and cardinals represent Christ and the apostles. The "Christian Church" of to-day represents the church of Christ plead for by Bro. Campbell very much as the "sects" and Rome did in the days of Campbell, and I see no reason why they should not join the "federation." If ever there was a sect or an apostate church, the "Christian Church" of to-day is one, and among all the churches, the church of Christ has not a more bitter enemy to-day. It is so here in the town where I am writing these words, and in many other places, as thousands can testify. When did the Standard ever speak against this?

But we are told this resolution was not fairly passed, but was "railroaded through." Indeed! How fortunate! But pray, when did "railroading" become unfair as a principle of the Christian Church? If it be right to "railroad" an organ into the church, and "railroad" the church house out of the possession of those who built it, and that, too, in a "night session," as this people have repeatedly done, and such work stand without reproach, why can not this same spirit "railroad" a resolution through a convention and the act be accepted without a question, as the work of "progress"? Come, gentlemen, take your medicine now, and stop your whining. The dose may be a little bitter to some of you, but don't think about that, just think of the "progress" there was made, and how delighted your "sister denominations" will be to learn you are so "sweet spirited." Think how Belial will rejoice to know that the apostate spirit has become so strong the leaders thought they would dare to speak boldly and plainly, even if it should prove to be a few years too soon. It shows there is great progress in that direction and the day is not far distant. A hint to the wise is sufficient, but it takes more than that for the other fellow.

Brethren, you see in the signs of the times, how needful it is that we should continue to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." What satisfaction it is to never leave the truth. When others go astray, they can only get right by coming where we are. While others are boasting of their "wisdom" and their "progress," we can rejoice in our fidelity to Christ, being glad that we have given heed to the warnings of the truth that keep the truly wise out of the shame into which the "wisdom of this world," and false progress" always leads.

The Devil never worked harder to corrupt the church and teaching of the apostolic age, than he is now working to overthrow this church and teaching restored. His success is wonderful as it was in the first apostasy, still we doubt if he will succeed in making as complete an overthrow again as he did then. Yet, the tactics he now employs is as well adapted to that end, as what he then used was to that age. Our only hope is the only right: keep out the wisdom of the world, and let Christ be head over all things to the church.

EDITOR.

—Primitive Christian.

The other view is one that is taken by a layman in the business world, engaged in its activities; and, doubtless pursuing his business affairs in the spirit of commercialism which he so strongly condemns in the churches. It is a very instructive article, and is taken from the Kalamazoo, Michigan, semiweekly Telegraph, for Friday, December 26, 1902, and was an address made before the Congressional Club in Detroit:

Detroit, Michigan, December 24.—Clarence A. Black, of this city, at a recent meeting of the Business Men's Club of the First Congregational Church, declared that the spirit of commercialism is rampant in churches and that many church members are worse than persecutors of Christ. Among other things he said:

"We, to-day, boast of our democracy, of our culture, our refinement, and our civilization. We are for ever and a day pointing with pride to our marvelous record. Our churches grace the finest corners on the finest avenues. Our dress parade on Sunday is the most important display of dresses and millinery and tailors' models in the entire week. Our Easter procession to church puts the vaunted New York horse show to shame. We go in for the most artistic coloring, and our cushions and pew frames are marvels of harmony. Our music appeals to our more or less cultivated ears, largely in proportion to the cost. There is as much wire-pulling and heartburning to get into a fashionable choir as there ever was among the Jews for the best places in the temple. Our churches are clubs, more or less exclusive, with the animating spirit of outdoing their rivals. We are as much the creatures of style and fashion as was ever the greatest Pharisee in Jerusalem of form, ceremonial, and custom.

"We talk largely of the lower classes. We patronize them, have charades and theatricals and bazaars for their benefit, because it flatters our vanity. We smother our remnant of conscience with the claim that it is all for charity. We preach the story of Christ and his humanity to a congregation of scribes and Pharisees, who think love of humanity was all right a couple of thousand years ago, but the world has progressed, and the fact has become a theory now to be discussed at clubs. If a known Mary Magdalen or a roughly garbed fisherman should occupy a front seat in one of our fashionable churches, the general opinion would be that really our church needed a better neighborhood.

"When a new site is being selected for a big church, you all know that the question is not 'where shall we locate to do the most good,' but where shall we find a place on the avenue in order to keep our congregation. The money-changers are as much in evidence now as they were in the temple.

"The spirit of commercialism is rampant. Our churches bend the knee to the captains of industry quite as meekly as does the man in business, but without his excuse. A popular preacher is as much in demand and his services are bid for as openly and with a spirit equal to that shown by rival baseball magnates in securing a good pitcher.

"In discussing the merits and qualifications of the minister of God, one hears much of the fine edifice he erected, when pastor at such a place, and the signal ability with which he canceled debts in another, but little, very little of the work he has done in bringing souls to Christ. We are so busy discussing deficits, that the question of bringing sinners to repentance is quite overlooked. It is a wise pastor in these days who knows the prejudices of his congregation and does not offend the best paying parishoners.

"We Christians of to-day are a race of shirkers. The church and the great commercial classes have always been the greatest bars to reform.

"They are always on the cautious side. They stand for law, order, and custom. But once let them feel the screws that have perchance crushed out the life of a less fortunate brother, and then you are likely to have a French revolution. As long as our lives are cast in pleasant lines, we are all willing and anxious to let well enough alone. Until the scarcity of coal waked us up, who cared a picayune about the miner, his hardships, his rights or wrongs? To be sure, he was a human being, but one to be read about in magazine articles and then forgotten.

"As long as our coal-bunkers were full, what did we care that in a land of liberty and plenty, in a land where the spires of Christ's churches were everywhere, men were living in slavery, with two rights, the right to vote as his owner dictated and the right to work at a price set by his master.

"Church and society crucified Jesus Christ for espousing the cause of the people. We do infinitely worse. We enlist under his banner, we take our place in his army, and then we deliberately betray the Captain and his cause. The Jew of Christ's time had no light, we have had its radiance for two thousand years, and we prefer the company of the scribes and Pharisees to that of the lowly Master."

If the estimate of the spiritual status of the churches made by this man of business affairs is correctly reported, it is a rather unfortunate condition of things in the denominational Christian world that is disclosed by it. If the same things had been written by us of the churches referred to, our statements would have been charged as the result of sectarian spleen; but coming from a business man and stated before a denominational club, we give it place as the cool, deliberate conviction of one not only engaged in business, but also a shrewd observer of things from the pew. Coming from such a source we give it the credit of sincerity and do not lay ourselves liable to the charge of unfair representation because we may differ in faith from the denominations represented.

"ANTI-MORMON" ORGAN.

We have received a copy of the Helper, published at Olive Hill, Kentucky, the official publication of the "National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association of the Churches of Christ." Its editor is R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Kentucky. The officers of the association, as announced by the Helper are: James W. Darby, president; W. T. Hilton, treasurer; John T. Bridwell, general secretary. The board is composed of J. F. Ghormley, D. H. Bays, I. H. Keller, R. B. Neal, and John T. Bridwell. The constitution is as follows:

1. The name of this organization shall be the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association of the Churches of Christ.
2. Its object shall be to carry on the work of the Lord Jesus Christ in every community where the Mormon delusion has obtained a footing, or is likely to do so.
 - By the distribution of Christian literature;
 - By lectures and addresses;
 - By discussions;
 - And by the work of itinerant and other missionaries. We shall endeavor in every way to assist our congregations and missionary societies, and promote the general interests of the cause of Christ.
3. The membership of this association shall consist of all persons interested in the overthrow of Mormonism who contribute to its general or other funds.

4. The general oversight of the work shall be intrusted to a board consisting of five members, together with such ex officio members, as shall herein be provided for. This board shall serve for one year and shall be selected at the time and place of the International Conventions of the Churches of Christ.

5. A president and a treasurer shall be selected at the same session, each to serve for one year, and perform the duties usually pertaining to such offices. They shall be ex officio members of the general board.

6. There shall also be a general secretary elected by the board. It shall be the duty of the board to assign his duties and provide for his salary.

7. The board shall select a corresponding secretary for each State and Territory of the United States, for each Province of the Dominion of Canada, and other countries. In the United States each State secretary shall select an assistant secretary for each missionary district where the State or Territory is so divided, and each district secretary shall in turn select a correspondent for each congregation of the district. If the State or Territory is not divided into districts, the State secretary shall select such correspondents in counties or congregations as he may think proper. These secretaries and correspondents are to act under the direction of the board and general secretary.

The paper in typographical appearance and make up is far below what we had anticipated, being full of egregious errors, some of which are almost ludicrous. Here are one or two: "The elders," says an item referring to the "Mormons," "see the rural schoolhouses as good places to propogated their doctrine." In copying a letter from Joseph C. Kingsbury, they make him say concerning the disputed "revelation" on polygamy: "Written by Brother Clayton at the dedication of the prophet Joseph Smith." Speaking of a petition signed by some at Olive Hill, the paper states: "Some good men signed the petition unthoughtedly." The following is an instance of where they probably spoke the truth when they did not intend to. In speaking of a crusade which would be made on "Mormonism" by a certain group of preachers, the Helper states: "There are to be some sad and outrageous papers to be written of the fruits of the elders' work in the homes even of some of their ministers."

We now give one or two short excerpts to show the style of the attack made on "Mormonism." In an article headed "Smithianity," the editor says:

The following document will prove as handy as a hip-pocket to a Texas cow-boy for those who meet the champions of the so-called "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" in debate.

They have a habit of denying, with a brazen assurance that would make an old Government mule blush, that Joseph Smith, Jr., knew anything about the (in)famous revelation, or that he was very muchly married.

In a quotation from the letter of an editor of a county paper to the editor of the Helper, we find the following language: "We have 'Josephites,' 'Brighamites,' etc., here, and I am glad, although they all are [do] belong in the same sty, that [they are] fighting among themselves while they are slandering and abusing decent folk."

C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, who is to debate with a "Mormon elder," is quoted as follows: "Will you be so kind as to lend me again the book I borrowed before." Then the editor adds: "He found the old book now out of print, and nearly out of existence, invaluable as a helper. It is a copy of the first book ever printed against the 'ism.' It ought to be republished and scattered by the tens of thousands. If some readers of this who has some money and wants to know how to make more and do good with it at the same time I can tell him."

Concerning the statement of one of our elders in Denver, the editor says: "On the statement alone I propose to brand this elder as either 'a fox, or a f—, or a goose.'"

The many mistakes made in the paper may be accounted for to some extent by the following which appeared at the head of the editorial column: "It is difficult to publish a paper from Olive Hill, have it printed at Morehead, mailed from Grayson, and edited as it were 'in the saddle.'" The query with us is, If it is printed somewhere else, mailed somewhere else, edited somewhere else, what constitutes the publishing at Olive Hill?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. W. Wight sends us a handbill announcing debate to be held on December 1 to 4, by him and L. S. Blair, a representative of the Church of Christ. Blair was to affirm his church in accord with the New Testament, Wight to deny. The debate was to be held in Richmond, Victoria, where Bro. Wight was when he wrote on November 27. He writes: "Just a line to let you know how we are getting along. A letter from Bro. Barmore informs me of seven baptisms recently, making eighteen for him since his arrival. I have baptized seven since the debate with Blair, and two young ladies are to be baptized next Wednesday. I know of thirty baptisms in Australia the last few months. Will inclose notice of proposition we are to debate next week. Following week I affirm the Book of Mormon. Blair has lost from his church, while we have baptized ten since debating commenced."

Bro. T. W. Williams wrote from Los Angeles: "All are well here. We are doing the very best we can and are hopeful. Well wishes to you at this the beginning of a new year, and may the good Father bless and keep you and yours."

Thomas Knox wrote from Terryville, Connecticut, December 31, renewing for the HERALD and expressing his appreciation of it. He writes: "I derive much encouragement and strength from the HERALD, and were it not for the papers and the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon, I should know little of the church, as I have not had the privilege of having my name enrolled in a branch, and it is two years last August since I was baptized at Plimpton, Massachusetts. I am a long way from a branch, the nearest probably being New Canaan, Connecticut, or Providence, Rhode Island."

Sr. C. Cochran wrote from Boonville, Missouri, December 29: "Our little Sunday-school is progressing nicely. Bro. Tanner spent Thanksgiving with us, giving us some good sermons and many kind words of comfort and cheer which isolated Saints know how to appreciate. Yesterday Bro. James Cochran gave us a good talk, but to-day he and his family leave for Iola, Kansas, their home. I wish the HERALD force a Happy New Year."

I. N. Roberts wrote from Garland, Alabama, December 26: "Had a splendid Christmas-tree here at the Pleasant Hill Branch. I preached yesterday to a good audience. I am feeling well. The work is moving on nicely. Need some good helpers."

James McKiernan wrote from Farmington, Iowa, December 30: "Last week I officiated at four funerals and a wedding. One funeral was that of George Stillwell, who murdered City Marshal Coulter and Justice Musgrave the evening of the 19th and was himself killed resisting arrest the same evening. Reverend Taylor, of the M. E. Church, and Bro. R. M. Elvin assisted me at this funeral, which was on the 22d. On the 23d I assisted at the funerals of Marshal Coulter and Justice Musgrave. The 24th I joined in wedlock Sr. Vallie Horton and Mr. Fred Carr, of Montrose. The 26th, Sr. Ferris' funeral. At the same time I was having a hard siege of the neuralgia and toothache. Bro. Elvin was to be in Burlington over Sunday and then to Aledo, Illinois."

In a letter to E. L. Kelley, dated at Auaka, New Zealand, December 2, Paul M. Hanson wrote: "One young man was baptized about a week ago. He was formerly a leading light of the Christian Church. He has a good understanding of the Bible, and will be a very helpful worker in our ranks. Others are interested. I look for a great work to be done in New Zealand in the future. I am at present about thirty miles from Kaitangata in a community of Baptists and Presbyterians. Preached last night to a large and attentive audience in a schoolhouse near here. Will continue this week every night. Bro. Tucker filled the appointment at Masonic hall in Kaitangata last Sunday, hence did not come with me. The Utah missionaries have been in nearly every part of the colony. We are often classed with them; besides, the people think we want them to come to America and lay all their money at the feet of the Bishop, for so they are informed by those they regard as servants of the Most High. When the walls of ignorance are broken down and the folly of the guards exposed, will be our harvest time."

Sr. S. W. Likins, Paris, Ontario, sends two dollars as a New Year's gift to Graceland College to apply on the debt. She adds: "I love the HERALD and would hardly know how to do without it, as myself and two children are the only Saints in Paris. I wish you all a Happy New Year and every success."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Review and Herald plant, the large publishing house of the Seventh-day Advents, at Battle Creek, Michigan, burned on December 30. The loss is estimated at a half million dollars, covered by one hundred thousand dollars insurance. The fire started in the basement from spontaneous combustion. No lives are known to have been lost.

Sr. Mary Dobie wrote from Stewartsville, Missouri, December 21, 1902, expressing her appreciation of our recent editorial on "Secret Sins." She seems to be firm in the work, and expresses her determination to press onward. She corrects a statement recently made in a letter from Stewartsville that there were five Latter Day Saint churches in and near that place. She says there are but four, namely, Stewartsville, German Stewartsville, Pleasant Grove, and Dekalb.

The Iowa State Teachers' Association of January 2 adopted resolutions expressing the opinion that "greater attention should be paid to moral training," and that one of the means to this end was familiarity with the Bible. The resolutions also urged parental warfare on cigarettes.

The "Holiday Number" of the Paradise of the Pacific, our valued Honolulu exchange, has reached our table. It is certainly a splendid number. Well printed, richly illustrated, its interestingly written articles are full of information about our beautiful island Territory and its natural resources. We congratulate our esteemed contemporary on its splendid special number.

The cable between San Francisco and Honolulu is now working, the first message being sent from Honolulu to San Francisco on January 1. The United States is now in instant communication with its insular Territory, and in our morning papers we can read the Hawaiian happenings of the day before; and on the other hand the dwellers in the Pacific paradise will daily learn of our doings on the mainland. It is occasion for mainlander and islander to rejoice.

President Joseph Smith received on January 5, by the way of Des Moines, Iowa, a cablegram from Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, over the cable lately laid between San Francisco and Hawaii. "A Happy New Year to you," was the greeting; President Smith replied, "We wish you the same." Bro. Waller's word was "Lehi," meaning, A Happy New Year to you. President Smith's was "Nephi." Cablegram was sent from Honolulu on the 3d, reached Lamoni on the morning of the 5th. Puck's "girdle round the world in forty winks" may soon be realized.

By an ad in our advertising columns this week, our readers will notice that George D. Harmon will be in Lamoni for a time to fit glasses. He is a son of Bro. R. Harmon, of Davis City, well known to many of our readers.

THAT WOMAN IN THE WILDERNESS.

(All references are from Inspired Translation of the Bible, 25th edition of Doctrine and Covenants, and 1874 edition of Book of Mormon.)

It is with no little degree of reluctance that I enter into a discussion of this subject, from the fact that conviction compels me to oppose those who have justly earned for themselves a goodly degree of eminence because of their writings, which bear evidence of deep thought and sound judgment, and are held in high esteem by myself. But, inasmuch as even they do not agree as touching this matter, the claim for them of infallibility (which they do not make for themselves), is destroyed. Hence, it is just possible that all may be wrong; and in my humble judgment, they certainly are. Among other things, one writer says that to discuss this subject intelligently one must understand what "wilderness" means when used in a metaphorical sense, or words to that effect, then gives abundant evidence of a certain significance of the term when used in a certain form of metaphor or allegory, without allowing that it can be, and has been, used at other times with an altogether different significance. And he then proceeds to discuss the subject with a view to compel the same significance to the term even when used in another form of metaphor; which is to say the least illogical. It would be just as consistent to assume that fire when used as a metaphor must always signify destruction, and discuss every subject where it thus occurs, with that thought in mind. When in fact, fire sometimes signifies purification, and sometimes inspiration.

I think it by far the safer course to get an understanding of the object of, and purpose for which the "woman fled into the wilderness," as well as the reason why she fled and from what she fled, and then let the metaphorical form assume a significance not unnatural; at the same time it would be in harmony with the statements made. I think in this way it is easy to discover where the "wilderness" is.

It is true that "wilderness" in allegorical language means "wild," "confusion," "dark," etc., when used with a counterpart represented as a "plant," "vineyard," and such like terms, but I deny that it must always carry that meaning, and I also hold that it is but natural that it should have a change of meaning when there is a change in the allegorical counterpart such as the term "woman." It is not natural for women to degenerate into a barren waste of country and all the like of that, but it is for a vineyard to. Israel was likened to a vineyard and in his degeneration he became that; but when the church was likened to a woman, we have no more right to assume degeneration when she is spoken of as going into the wilderness than we have that Jesus degenerated when he was led up into the wilderness to be with God.

As to "kingdom" meaning the "authority" or "keys"—sometimes it does, sometimes it does not. In this case, I believe it does, so no controversy upon that ground; that is, if we mean the authority to "rule all nations with a rod of iron" (now of God). I have just read a long article upon this subject, and as concerning the woman what do I learn? First, that the woman became "dead," that is, a corpse; then fled from the Devil as fast as she could, then degenerated into a dark, barren, wild country, and was fed upon iniquity and corruption by wicked men; was cursed, was prevailed against, and "went to the devil" generally, wholly, and entirely. Whereas the Scriptures say that "the dragon prevailed not against the woman which was the church of God," but that she fled into the wilderness, into her own place, where she is nourished from the face of the serpent. No indication of death or degeneration, but rather of life and development. If all women were nourished and fed twelve hundred sixty years there would be no death of women until after that time, would there? But in this case there was no death after that time even, for we read in Doctrine and Covenants that the church (woman) came out of the wilderness, "clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners" (section 5:3), in all her majestic beauty. I wonder how and when she became so suddenly changed after being fed upon iniquity and abomination so long, if indeed she had been.

There is another woman spoken of in Revelation 17:4, who existed contemporaneously with this woman after a certain date which answers to the description referred to in that long article. But some might say, Was she not in the wilderness? Did not John see her there? Oh, no, John was "in the spirit in the wilderness," but he did not see her there and then, for she did not exist at that time, but from that standpoint he beheld in vision the future in which she was to figure. Enoch was ordered up into Mount Simeon, and he saw a great many things of the future from that standpoint, which did not take place there and never were on Mount Simeon. (D. C. 36:1.)

The article referred to seems to be largely negating a theory that the "woman" went to paradise. Perhaps it would be well to consider this paradise theory a little. Doctrine and Covenants 1:5 declares that this church, or the one organized in 1830, is the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth. Query: Did God have a church anywhere in the universe during the twelve hundred sixty years prior to 1830? If so, where was it? I read that in Paul's day part of the family was in heaven and part on earth. (Eph. 3:15.) Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.

We as Latter Day Saints agree that that family is named the Church of Jesus Christ, which is in reality the Church of God. Where did all the members of that church who left the earth from Paul to the last one of the true church, which is called "the woman," go to when they left the earth? Moroni, last chapter, last verse, last paragraph, says: "I soon go to rest in the paradise of God."

Again, when was the priesthood taken from the earth? I should say when the last faithful man who held it went to paradise. Where was that church, that woman, all those years? In paradise, of course. Was it the Devil's own place? No, but the church's own place, where she could be nourished and fed for any length of time from the face of the serpent, because there was no lack of prophets, apostles, patriarchs, high priests, sevens, priests, teachers, and deacons to nourish and feed her. And at the expiration of the twelve hundred sixty years she could return again to the earth in the persons of those who constituted the church or a part of it (the term "church" applies to a whole or a part of it), coming and initiating mortals into the body and placing the priesthood with the key of the kingdom upon them. "Fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

But why use the term "wilderness" to represent paradise? Well, one definition of wilderness is, uninhabited by man; another is, land in its original state, and to some there is no place in the world so soul inspiring as in the depths of a grand and beautiful forest, in fact for the same reason that is given in Doctrine and Covenants 85:17, the unseen, in a general sense, in the wilderness, because you can not see him. "The woman fled into the wilderness"—wilderness, because you can not see her; that is, mortals can not see into paradise as a rule. What is the matter with this paradise theory? I certainly believe it is all right, and I am more and more convinced that it is the only theory that carries the woman away from the serpent, hence, the only biblical one.

Some may quote as an objection Matthew 11:12, "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." True; so did Christ suffer violence and the violent took him by force and nailed him to the cross, yet he went to paradise just the same. Now, let us investigate more thoroughly. Revelation 12:7 informs us that the woman is the church, and the dragon prevailed not against the woman, but she is placed alongside and in the same catalogue with the child and Michael. "And the dragon prevailed not against Michael, neither the child nor the woman." Do not forget that, for here is a plain, clear-cut statement which will form a good basis for further investigation. It is safer to accommodate metaphorical language to plain statements, than to hold rigidly to a construction put upon a metaphor to the warping or denial of plain statements. I shall look, therefore, to see the woman take about the same course as Michael and the child, as to degeneration, etc. In verse thirteen we are told that the dragon persecuted the woman. Here we have the cause of her fleeing away. Do the Scriptures teach us to resist the Devil when he comes in a persecuting form? If so, Christ and the apostles did wrong to submit meekly. No, it is when he comes in an enticing way that we are to resist him and he will flee from us.

Verse 14: "Therefore [for this cause, persecution], to the woman was given two wings of a great eagle [for what purpose?] that she might flee into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent."

Here we have the reason why she fled, and the object to be attained by her fleeing. And is there no significance in the term "wings"? Query: How many wings would it require to carry a woman into spiritual Babylon, and how far from the face of the serpent would she be when she got there? I will let some one else answer. But for what does God give to the great eagle wings? To grovel in the mud and dust of the earth? Oh, no, but to soar far above the earth, and indeed the woman would need to do that to get away from the Devil, because we read that the Devil goeth to and fro, up and down in the earth, and where on the earth could the woman go and be away from the face of the serpent twelve hundred sixty years?

In verse fifteen we learn that the serpent sought to carry her away as a flood, but did not succeed in that even. No wonder the dragon was wroth when he found that the woman had got away from him without injury. In verse seventeen we find that the dragon went to make war with the remnant of her seed. But that is another subject. It is the woman that fled, and where she went, that we are dealing with, and not what became of what was left behind.

Concerning wilderness, turn with me to Leviticus 16, where we have some figurative or typical terms. The scapegoat there represents Christ, he who bore our sins away. Not the body, however; that was crucified, for that was represented by the other goat that was slain. The scapegoat we read about went into the wilderness, which was quite natural. Where did the antitype go? Into paradise. "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." So the typical language would be, the scapegoat went into the wilderness. The antitypical language would be, Christ went into paradise. This last thought may not be considered conclusive evidence, but we have an item which to my mind is conclusive.

In Daniel, second and seventh chapters, we have a kingdom spoken of which is not only the priesthood authority or keys, but refers to the church, which is represented there not as a woman this time, but a stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands. That little stone kingdom, it seems, was not upon the earth all the time along, but in the days of these kings, that is to say, after the breaking up of the Roman Empire, the God of heaven was to set up this kingdom on the earth, yet it was to be cut out of the mountain, and afterward become a great mountain and fill the whole earth.

We gather from Zechariah 9:10, that that which shall fill all the earth is his dominion. Yes, that is the mountain that is to fill all the earth. Now what mountain was it cut from? Not an earthly mountain or dominion, but a heavenly one. Now, when you tell where that "stone" came from, it will be easy to tell where the "woman" came from, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army of banners" (D. C. 5:3), for they both represent the same thing and came from the same place. But it is quite evident she, the woman, could not have come from that place unless she had been there.

Now turn with me to Doctrine and Covenants 26:2, where we find who were sent to the earth to set up the kingdom—"Moroni," who had gone to paradise, "John," the son of Zacharias, "Peter," "James," and "John," and possibly others, who no doubt had been in the same place with Moroni, who now constituted the church, or a part of it. Here we have the "woman" on the earth again,—come out of the wilderness (paradise), or the stone cut out of the mountain without hands. When these personages ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and they effected an organization, then the "stone" kingdom was set up.

Along with the foregoing, let me add that the Doctrine and Covenants speaks of the church before 1830 as being in, or coming out of the wilderness, but never Babylon. After 1830 we read of God's people being called out of Babylon, but never out of the wilderness. The reason is obvious. See Doctrine and Covenants 32:2: "And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth." No comment is needed here, except to say that this was given in October 1830. Some side-lights: "Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon."—Zechariah 2:7. "Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her."—Hosea 2:14.

I have already extended this article further than I had thought to at first. It is before you. If my position is true it will stand, if not, it will fall, and if so I am perfectly willing it should, for I have no desire to build upon that which will not stand the test of time and eternity. Permit me to add as an after-thought that I do not contend that "wilderness" should here mean a desirable place simply because it was prepared of God, because places of punishment are prepared of God, but because this place was prepared for the woman, in which she is to be nourished and fed, not punished.

WAS CHRIST SUPERNATURALLY BORN IN BETHLEHEM?

One of the problems that never disappears from the critical discussions of the day is the question as to the supernatural birth of Christ. It was only a few years ago that the proposal of Professor Harnack to eliminate from the Apostle's Creed the words, "Conceived of the Holy Ghost; born of the Virgin Mary" shook the Protestant Church of Germany from center to circumference. In critical circles the accounts given by Matthew and Luke of the supernatural birth of Christ in Bethlehem are generally regarded as legendary. Recently again the problem has come into the foreground through a work of Professor Wilhelm Soltan, entitled "Die Geburtsgeschichte Jesu Christi." As his position is typical of the school he represents, the work is attracting a good deal of attention. His line of argument is the following:

1. The Gospel of St. Mark is an evidence against the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem, as it is the oldest Gospel record and it has nothing to say on this subject. This Gospel knows of Jesus only as a native of the city of Nazareth.

2. The Acts of the Apostles also mention Nazareth as the city where Jesus was born, but never Bethlehem (chapters 3, 4, 6, 10, 22, 26).

3. The fourth Gospel also, especially in its oldest sections, is against Bethlehem as the birthplace of Jesus (John 6:42; 7:15, 41). It is evident from a careful perusal of these passages that they are polemical and directed against those who will believe on Jesus only if he is recognized as the son of David and as having been supernaturally born in Bethlehem.

4. The Apostle Paul, in the beginning of the Epistle to the Romans (Romans 1:3), mentions Jesus as the son of Joseph only, and in the Epistle to the Galatians pronounces in favor of a natural and human and against a supernatural origin of the Lord. The passage Galatians 4:4, correctly interpreted, shows this.

5. Even in the reports given by the first and the third Gospels, the original tradition of the human origin of Jesus still can be detected, as the son merely of Joseph and Mary, for even these declare that Nazareth was the real home of the holy family.

6. The departure from the original facts in Matthew and Luke in favor of a prophetic conception that makes Jesus born in Bethlehem in conformity with Micah 5:1, is in reality to be attributed to Gentile influence in imitation of the deification with which the Gentiles were accustomed to honor their heroes, notably the Roman emperors. The legend concerning the supernatural birth of Jesus in Bethlehem is an adaptation of the Gentile fables to the Jewish story, as can be seen in detail in the following:

(a) The legend of the conception of Jesus by the Virgin Mary through the agency of the Holy Spirit is an imitation of such myths as made Alexander the Great a descendent of Jupiter Ammon, or Octavianus a descendant from Apollo, as reported by Suetonius.

(b) The story of the song of the angels at the birth of Jesus, glorifying him as the Prince of Peace, is an imitation of similar laudations of the emperors, notably Augustus, which are found in goodly numbers in the inscriptions of Priene, Apamea, Halicarnassus, and elsewhere.

(c) The legend of the worshipping of the infant Jesus by the wise men of the East is doubtless copied from the story by Plinius and Dio Cassius of the adoration of the Emperor Nero by the Armenian Magus Tiridates.

Quite naturally, this renewed attack upon the New Testament story of the birth of Christ has aroused opposition in conservative circles. One of the strongest antagonists has been Professor Zöckler, of Greifswald, who gives a lengthy reply in the Beweis des Glaubens (Gütersloh, No. 11), the substance of which is the following:

It is already noteworthy that the author can defend his position only by an array of argumenta ex silentio and extrabiblical parallels. His claim that even a Paul and a John were ignorant of the supernatural birth of Jesus is of surpassing boldness and is overwhelmed by dozens of passages from their writings. The interpretation of Galatians 4: 4 is clearly wrong, and the whole superstructure is based upon the a priori hypotheses that the birth of Christ and the origin of Christianity are purely natural phenomena of history. And these vagaries are called "the certain results of modern biblical criticism!" This argumentation and these conclusions of Soltan only show again how purely subjective the modern destructive criticisms of the Scriptures is, and how little objective foundation it has for its radical positions.—The Literary Digest, December 20, 1902.

THE DISTINGUISHED DEAD OF 1902.

In each annual necrology the list of famous dead seems longer and the loss to each department of the world's work greater than ever before. This is only because in the close of a year names are not so fresh in the recollection as at its commencement. The list for 1902 contains no larger number of prominent names than that of 1901, and yet as will be seen, a large number of conspicuous individuals have passed away, some of whom in 1903 may be "a name and nothing more."

The world of politics and statesmanship has lost Jean de Bloch, the forceful Russian councilor of state; Cecil John Rhodes, the South African empire builder, whose work will long live after him; and Thomas B. Reed, the ex-speaker whose parliamentary record always will be a striking feature of American political history. Royalty has been fortunate, for it has lost but one of its representatives, Queen Marie Henriette of Belgium, whose sorrowful life was ended in September. The army and navy have lost one distinguished ex-union and one equally distinguished ex-confederate officer. General Franz Sigel and General Wade Hampton, and the navy Rear Admiral W. P. Sampson.

Literature and the fine arts have lost many eminent representatives. The literary world will miss Frank R. Stockton, the genial humorist; Bret Harte, the gentle satirist and ideal short story writer; Paul Leicester Ford, whose young life closed in fraternal tragedy; George Douglas Browne, the English novelist, who died on the threshold of a promising career; Edward Eggleston, the story writer; Philip J. Bailey whose one poem, "Festus," made him famous; Emile Zola, greatest of contemporary French novelists; George Alfred Henty, beloved of boys; and Mary Hartwell Catherwood, the romance historian of the early days of Canada and the West. Music has lost Philippe Marchetti, the Italian opera composer; Camilla Urso, the violinist; Heinrich Carl Hoffman, an excellent German composer; and Benjamin Bilse, the Berlin conductor. The art world will mourn the loss of Albert Bierstadt, Jean Joseph Benjamin Constance, Jean Georges Vibert, James Joseph Jacques Tissot, the painters; and Thomas Nast, the famous pioneer in cartoon work. The dramatic stage has lost Sol Smith Russell, the comedian.

The prominent scientists who have died are Professor Leopold Schenk, the Austrian embryologist; Professor Rudolph Virchow, the Berlin surgeon and scientist; and Major J. W. Powell, the director of the bureau of ethnology in the Smithsonian Institution. Among the great divines who have ended their labors are the Reverend Newman Hall, Reverend Dewitt Talmage, Cardinal Ledochowsky, the Reverend Joseph Parker of the London City Temple, and Frederick Temple, archbishop of Canterbury. The list of the distinguished dead closes with the names of Friedrich Alfred Krupp, the Essen steel master and gunmaker, and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, champion of the rights of women.—Chicago Tribune, December 30, 1902.

Mothers' Home Column.

Another Point of View.

While recognizing the picture "Violet" portrays of the flower mission girls, I feel that there is or should be a companion picture. While the writer was sick in a strange city with few acquaintances to call, she looked forward to Thursday afternoon with pleasure, not only because of the gift of flowers, which she dearly loves, but also because of the sweet, young faces and pretty clothes that seemed to bring into her poorly lighted and lonely room, a freshness of the outside world, and added longing to get well and do for others. When they came she felt that they came for love's sweet sake, the infinite love in every heart. In some it may be crushed and dwarfed, but it is surely there in some degree. And the mere acceptance of the gift in a spirit of love and gratitude must surely melt the ice surrounding it and give it a glimmer of the sunshine and warmth without that will expand the germ within; and should it fail to bear immediate fruit it has left an imprint that will be felt in after years.

There may be unkind glances at soiled bedclothes and worn furniture; but if we have done the best we could is it not possible that we may meet their glances of unkindness with a shaft of sunbeams? What of the Master? Ah, his heart was so filled with divine love that he took no offense at the seeming unkindness but grasped the opportunity to sow the seed. Should we think of them as from among the "upper ten" or feel that they are fellow travelers without the guiding star, the message of peace which we possess? And while they hold toward us a blossom whose beauty soon fades, may we not in return turn on the flash-light that shall develop the spark of divinity within them and trust that other hands as they pass on may water the seed we have sown, and as they leave us humbly breathe a prayer to Him who doeth all things well? Is it not possible that we can forgive and forget their seeming unkindness in a longing to reach their hearts and do them good? And should we pass them again on life's highway and they do not choose to recognize us, shall we feel crushed and wounded or shall we not rather thank God that we have been taught the principles of life and salvation and know of that peace that passeth understanding? May we not ask him to so fill our hearts with love that those who come in contact with us shall feel the overflow and be made better by it?

If there are two-edged swords for evil, are there not also two-edged swords for good? Grasp firmly the good and fear not. You may not be able to feel a deep fountain of love in your soul for the thoughtless one, but you may feel a pity which will lead you to render good for evil, and should you even once in your lifetime succeed in piercing through the callous surrounding the heart of one of these fellow beings who have been less fortunate than yourself you have much for which to be thankful.

Their homes and clothes may be beautiful and well kept; but would we change with them, give up the garden spot in our hearts which we have tended with so much care, carefully pulling out some of the coarser plants with a penitent tear for the sowing, and filling in their places with plants gathered from the Master's garden, patiently caring for them—while we were being directed by the "still small voice"—for the poor returns they can make us? Should we feel that they condescend to come into our condition of life? Or shall we not rather feel that by their contact with us, and the love and peace of our home, they shall be uplifted? It can be so. Will we have it so? Let us trust Him who loves even the little things of earth.

Yes, appreciate the gift of the washerwoman and do not fail to show her your appreciation; but these dear flower mission girls may need your love and prayers far more than the washerwoman.

We must live the life, dear "Violet." Keep our trust in God's wisdom, and thank him for our opportunities to do good. Though the doing leave a thorn in the flesh, we will pluck it out in the spirit of love, and thus gather about us the peace and serenity of heaven.

NELL.

LET us say to our readers that the writer of the above was not lying upon beds of roses while penning the lines which tell so plainly of that mastery of human nature and the natural instincts which we all inherit more or less. She has herself been for years a very great sufferer, and we presume it was during one of her many absences from home and loved one, caused by her affliction, that she was visited by the girls of the flower mission. How true it is that "where much is given, much will be required;" and we feel that if it was through affliction the lesson came to "Nell," then it was good for her to be afflicted, for surely the spirit of her letter breathes of "the peaceable fruits of righteousness" which Paul assures us come to those who are exercised by their afflictions.—ED.

Prayer Union.

A sister in Illinois desires the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union that she may be healed of a terrible affliction. She also desires that she may cultivate patience that she may overcome the evils of her nature.

W. C. Temple requests prayers for his health, that he may gain strength.

Sr. A. Mellon desires the prayers of the Union in behalf of her niece, that if it be God's will she may have a lump removed from her wrist. Sr. Mellon says her niece has more faith in God's power than she has in the ability of the doctors to heal her.

Letter Department.

The McMillan-Williams Correspondence.

Editors Herald: Shortly after the appearance of the McMillan letter in the Assembly Herald, reference to which was made by me in your columns, I wrote the following letter to the Doctor:

LOS ANGELES, California, December 8, 1902.

"D. J. McMILLAN, D. D.;

"My Dear Sir: I have not your address, so I send in care of the Assembly Herald. I have noted your article in the Assembly Herald for October entitled, 'Conversion of a Mormon Priest.'

"In this article you make no distinction between the church organized by Joseph Smith and perpetuated through the instrumentality of his son and now known as the 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' and the organization generally known as the 'Mormons,' with headquarters at Salt Lake, Utah. You also charge that the emissaries of 'Mormonism' have always been 'afraid to meet Christian missionaries' and say that you are 'willing to meet them for a friendly interview at any hour, day or night, on a single day's notice.'

"On behalf of the Reorganized Church as one of its representatives I accept your offer, and am now willing to meet you at any suitable place in the United States to canvass the differences between us. I will defend the claims of the church I represent; you will be expected to defend the position of the church you represent. Will you stand good to your offer? I will come properly indorsed by the president and secretary of our church; you will be expected to bring equally good indorsements, and if agreeable we will have the discussion published. The duration and order of the discussion we will arrange later. Please let me hear from you at an early date.

"Very truly yours,

"T. W. WILLIAMS.

"2802 South Grand Avenue, LOS ANGELES, Cal."

In due time I received the following:

"New York Presbyterian Church,

"NEW YORK, December 17, 1902.

"MR. T. W. WILLIAMS, 2802 South Grand Avenue,

"Los Angeles, California;

"My Dear Sir: I have your letter of the 8th instant and note its contents. I have long been acquainted with that sect of the Mormon church to which you belong. I heard your president, Mr. Smith, deliver a full course of lectures covering the claims and teachings of your sect. During my ten years residence in Utah, I had a number of neighbors who belonged to the same branch of that church. I have also accumulated a little literature, including your standard works. I have known for many years that you were an aggressive people, but I supposed that you were engaged in trying to propagate that which you regarded as the truth. I am surprised, however, to see in your letter this sentence: 'I will defend the claims of the church I represent; you will be expected to defend the position of the church you represent.' Is it possible that in this enlightened age of the world, men can be found who would engage in any such foolish business as that? In that sentence you intimate that you would attack the church to which I belong and that you would expect me to turn aside from my business as a preacher of the gospel, to defend the church. Such a proposition is preposterous. Churches are organizations of believers. The business of a minister is to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to lead men to him, who alone can take away the sins of the world, to proclaim the truth, and to combat error. If you and I can help each other to a better understanding of the truth as it is in Jesus, I should be very happy to have you call at any time. I extend you the same invitation, which I gave to the others. You ask, 'Will you stand good to your offer?' It is almost an insult to ask a gentleman such a question as that.

However, my study is a quiet place where we would not be disturbed in our conversation. If I can be helpful to you, I shall be very glad to serve you. If you have any light to reveal, I shall gladly receive it. My study is in the church, at the address above given.

Sincerely yours,

"DUNCAN J. McMILLAN."

In answer to this I submitted the following:

"LOS ANGELES, California, December 26, 1902.

"DUNCAN J. McMILLAN, D. D.,

"Seventh Avenue and 128th Street,

"New York City, N. Y.;

"My Dear Sir: Your favor of the 17th instant received. The fact of your having such a wide range of information relative to the history and organic development of the Latter Day Saints Church, coupled with the privilege you had of listening to a course of lectures by President Joseph Smith, makes your published article the more reprehensible.

"How a man conversant with historic facts could make such statements as are found on page 403 of this article relative to the manner of the translation of the plates I can not understand. Surely you have either misapprehended some statement of the Seer or peradventure have trusted to the accuracy of some other writer who claimed to quote Joseph Smith.

"In any event I must not question your honesty until all other avenues of explanation are blocked.

"First. When was it that the 'Eight witnesses testified that Joseph Smith was the "author and proprietor" of the Book of Mormon?'

"Second. Will you please give the reference where Joseph avowed that he was the 'author' of the Book of Mormon other than that which is found on the title page of the Palmyra edition, which you must know was inserted simply to comply with the copyright laws and prevent infringement of their copyright.

"Third. I wish you would give me the exact language of Joseph Smith wherein he claims authorship in the sense in which you use it in your article.

"Your next statement is consonant with the facts wherein you state that 'Joseph Smith declared that he did not write or compose a single sentence; that he was only the translator and not the author.' In this he neither contradicts any former statement and is in perfect agreement with the testimony of the eight witnesses.

"Fourth. Will you please give me this 'fuller and more explicit statement' of Joseph Smith wherein he says he 'did not translate the plates at all, that he never read a word that was on the plates, and did not understand a single character, and that no man on the face of the earth ever did.' Remember, I wish his statement and not your version of it. Please give full references.

"Fifth. As to the changes in the several editions of the Book of Mormon you say, 'If you compare the first and any late edition you will find that there have been nearly three thousand changes.'

"What has this to do with either the legitimacy or accuracy of the original translation? Suppose there were ten thousand changes in the subsequent editions of the book, in what way would that invalidate the accuracy of the translation? You are attacking the translation, and because subsequent editions are not like the original manuscript you draw your conclusions that the original manuscript is not a correct translation and therefore there were no plates to translate and Joseph Smith was an impostor. Please quote an authority who will sustain such logic, and give example.

"Sixth. Your statement, 'As to divisions, the Mormon church had a greater number of them in its first half century than the Christian church had during its first thousand years,' will not bear historical criticism. What do you mean when you say, 'Christian church'?

"Now, as to your letter to me. You say: 'I am surprised, however, to see in your letter this sentence: "I will defend the claims of the church I represent: you will be expected to defend the position of the church you represent." Is it possible that in this enlightened age of the world, men can be found who would engage in any such foolish business as that?'

"How untenable your position! You claim your work to be to 'preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ', yet you so far forget this affirmative work that you step out of your way to assail the memory of the dead, question the motive of the living, misrepresent published utterances, and distort facts, and when the parties aggrieved demand that the same jury (the public) which heard the testimony of the plaintiff shall also be allowed to hear the argument of the defendant you say, Oh, no, that is 'such foolish business;' come, let us get off alone by ourselves and I will explain this matter to you.

"My dear sir, you provoked this controversy. You made the attack. It was public and general, and no reflection on my intelligence will relieve you from the undesirable attitude of refusing a public examination of the facts on our side of the case.

"You stand in the open arena and strike us in the back, and when we turn and demand equal opportunity with yourself you say it is decidedly 'foolish' to cross theological swords; we are too enlightened for that, so put your sword up and come with me and I will treat you right when I get you into my private apartments.

"No, thank you. If you do not treat us fairly in public, I could not trust you in seclusion.

"If Joseph Smith was the charlatan and blasphemous impostor you make him out to be, the world should know it: the fanatics (?) who follow him should know it. Why, then, do you, with such invulnerable (?) facts in your possession, refuse publicity?

"To publicly assail the memory of a man and then refuse a public examination when those directly concerned demand it, is an act so utterly devoid of Christian courtesy that I can not condone it. I suppose it was all right and in line with your calling as a minister of Christ to attack and malign the life and work of Joseph Smith. If you had remained in your supposed field of action in preaching the particular kind of gospel in which you deal, I would not have troubled you; but when you strike at our people and attack our church, I demand vindication.

"You say, 'If you have any light to reveal, I shall gladly receive it.' I am not only concerned in imparting light to you, but likewise to all who may be misinformed as to our true position. As a minister for Christ you should be equally interested with me in reaching the greatest number of minds.

"In inviting me to your study and thus avoiding publicity you are doing precisely what you denounce in the 'Mormons,' for I feel very sure these men did not refuse to meet you in their own room. We have tried time and again to have them meet us publicly, but they always say as you have said, 'No, but come to our rooms. It is a quiet place where we will not be disturbed in our conversation.' When the 'Mormon priest' said that the 'Christian ministers had always been afraid to meet Mormon missionaries,' you said it was 'a lie seventy years old.' I have now given you the opportunity of proving your assertion and you say it would be 'foolish business.' Have the Mormons lied? Your letter shows that I was justified in asking you, 'Will you stand good to your offer?'

"Suppose I come to your study and show you wherein you have grossly misrepresented facts, will you then write an article for the Assembly Herald correcting the wrong impressions you have made upon the minds of thousands of Herald readers?

"I suppose it is a Christian characteristic to openly and publicly attack men and institutions, and when they demand a hearing to take them off to a 'study' where no third party can hear what is said, there to engage in a friendly exchange of thought!

Surely this is justice! Is this an application of the golden rule? How would it do for me to attack the Presbyterian Church and malign the memory of Knox and Calvin and when you remonstrated, to say, 'Come over to my study, and we will talk it over'?

"I am thankful that I am a member of an institution which we are not afraid to defend any time and anywhere.

"You know that the church you represent will not stand scriptural analysis: if you do not it is time you were finding it out; and if you will only give me the opportunity I will satisfy your mind as to this. Your church polity is untenable with the Scriptures as the standard of evidence. Your church doctrine will not stand Bible criticism.

"Awaiting your explanation of these statements which you have made,

"Yours for the truth,

"T. W. WILLIAMS."

On Christmas Eve I went to San Bernardino to officiate in the marriage of Asa Reed and Hattie Blair, the latter being a member of the Christian Church. The wedding had been arranged to take place in the Christian church; but when the pastor learned that a "Mormon" was to officiate, he placed his ban thereon, saying it would be a disgrace, etc. I wrote him a courteous note asking him to publicly meet me, and show wherein disgrace would follow, etc. I propose to take these men up whenever they throw down the gauntlet, and give them to understand that they can not attack us without opposition, as they have too often done in the past.

Bro. Carmichael is getting ready to go east. Bro. Foss is holding meetings at San Bernardino, but returns east with his family this spring. All are well, and work moving nicely throughout the district.

Yours, hopeful for the new year,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

ALBION, Idaho, December 21.

Dear Saints: As another year is about closing its record of good or evil, or of both, no doubt many of us are musing on the same, still we feel a little reluctant to bid it adieu. When it is gone we will rejoice in the morning of the new year, and may it be a glad new year to all Saints.

I have been reading editorials and letters in my last HERALD, as these for some reason seem to be first in my mind. These contain food for the weakest of all Saints, and for those who may think their senses exercised to discern twixt good and evil and so be able to digest and assimilate a little meat; milk for the weak, and meat for the strong. Some of us weaklings express our conclusions in radical terms. I, for one, hold radical views, on some points of scriptural doctrine, or advice, at least "that's what they say." The gospel net gathers quality as well as quantity, likewise the parable of the ten virgins and of the sower indicate conditions worthy our notice and study. We can not but look up with thankfulness, and

"Know then that ev'ry soul is free
To choose his life and what he'll be;
For this eternal truth is given,
That God will force no man to heaven.
He'll call, persuade, direct him right,
Bless him with wisdom, love, and light;
In nameless ways be good and kind;
But never force the human mind."

There is a great feast in these lines to the earnest, hungry mind. "Freedom and reason make us men." How very careful we should be to search the Scriptures, calling upon the Lord, that we may have an understanding heart, that we may be guided by the wisdom which is from above, "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy."

Remembering "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith," etc., contend as we may over essentials. Wisdom is the greatest gift of God. The world needs divine wisdom more than all things else. It is the "pearl of great price." It is the gospel of life, guiding in all the affairs of life. No details of our daily life are exempt from its saving virtue. These Scripture lessons have been given for babes in the gospel, to guide us through the primary, the intermediate, and the highest course of the gospel school, and must become fixtures as principles in our education. The gospel race can not be won without them. Without this wisdom we are not drawing near unto the Lord, nor will he draw near to us in love. "Wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy." From our earliest existence, to our latest, wisdom's voice calls after us, "Follow me, and you shall live long and be happy." Will we listen to her voice, or will we stop our ears to her entreaties? Often have I pondered over these things years ago.

I can not remember any part of my life when I was not familiar with the voice of wisdom and had I heeded her words I would have stood far higher than I do now. Slighting her voice is only hedging up our own pathway. I do not pass a day but I see all around me the need of people to heed the voice of wisdom, now—to-day. I do not read a church paper, or a secular one, but I see the crying need to hear and heed her voice.

In HERALD of December 17, I felt like going away on the wings of the morning to get afar off from the fever of sympathy ('tis painful) for Bro. Joseph R. Lewis while reading the story of his struggle with his appetite for that much (mis) used weed. I never sit down to a table on which hot coffee is placed without a keen sense of the flavor of coffee. Wisdom says, Let it alone, touch it not. I see little difference in coffee slaves and tobacco slaves. I am radical, yet not so much perhaps as some, but I can not afford to set before others what I do not wish my children to become addicted to. I do not remember ever being in a home of Saints who indulged in tea and coffee that the Word of Wisdom was not referred to. While I tried to word and voice my sentiment about their use kindly, I did not wish to be misunderstood. However much we prefer to pass over these things, they seem forced to the front.

I have no apologies to make to any man for what I have said about this fault of treating lightly the words of wisdom along this line. I have never held myself up to any one as a model, any further than they can see by my conduct. All Saints are called to be lights to the world, every-ones, and to exemplify the power of the gospel law in their every-day life. "Which of you convinceth me of sin," said the Master; and this is our standard, and the only standard for Saints to emulate. We, as individuals, who may not heed these words of wisdom, are sinners against ourselves and divine wisdom. They were the utterances of the Spirit of truth. I have wished many times I had been taught more perfectly in the gospel economy in early life.

I would like to be able to impress my children with a lively sense of accountability to the Master and duty to themselves and their associates to keep their bodies in sanctification and honor before the Lord, and all men. Nothing gives me a keener sense of pleasure than to hear them express the desire to make peace with God, by obeying from the heart the law of adoption into the household of faith. Had conditions been favorable I believe all of them would have seen the beauty of the way of holiness and obeyed years ago. Those who are members, and old enough to understand the terms of their covenant, seem earnest and zealous. We meet each first Sunday in the months for sacrament, and the intervening Sundays for hymn practice, and a Methodist lady, Mrs. Hattie Powell (our school-teacher), meets with us in song practice and leads in singing, as she is a good organist. We will have an organ here in a few days, to be used in the schoolhouse for instructing the children and also for such services as we may choose to hold. This lady teacher is offering her services kindly and freely.

Most of the members scattered in these regions have expressed their desires to cooperate and unite as they can for their good and the welfare of the cause. All may not see fit to meet with us and assist, but we will know, by and by, if there are any embers containing warmth yet in their hearts. Inactivity in gospel work breeds distaste for gospel food, and I believe it is possible to shrivel up so that we may not care to go to church. I would be very sorry to see any in my family get in this condition, lest what light and love they have die out, and night close down dark and drear. This Western country is not noted for developing the true spiritual element in mankind, but this is a great reason for Saints to wake up and replenish their lamps, that their lights may burn brightly, for, sure as the Lord liveth, gospel light is greatly needed in Idaho, and in Cassia County, especially. We have about six members in this vale besides the members of my household, six in number.

May the Master bless and unite the hearts of all Saints.

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

ROZELLE, Sydney, N. S. W., December 8.

Editors Herald: A line or two to say I have lately returned from three months of labor in Queensland, in the city of Brisbane, about eight hundred miles north of Sydney. I was much surprised at the climate. Had the impression I was going into a sweatbox, but found it a delightful place to live. Not so many sudden changes as in these Southern States, and the heat is not near so trying. Your readers must remember I compare coast with coast. Inland climate is quite another kind anywhere in this country.

Up to the time I left, the drought still held Queensland in its grip. Only confidence in the ability of the country to recuperate quickly was keeping business afloat. I am told that in some of the inland downs, the grass will grow an inch an hour in summer after it gets a proper soaking. All crops would soon be realized once rain came. Some rain came when I left and some since. They fear the other extreme,—floods.

It was a pleasure to have the support of so loyal a little band of Saints as there is in the Brisbane Branch. My visit was certainly profitable to me; would I could say they were benefited as much. I did not have much success as a missionary. Few came to hear in the hall; none were baptized. At times meetings on street were well attended for a few moments, but on the whole I could see very little real good in street preaching. I aimed more at advertising than sermonizing. One man, a stranger, told me I was "a fool to bust my lungs for nothing" (that is, for no salary). I told him I belonged to a long list of such fools now engaged in the foolishness of preaching this gospel in all the world; also, there were a lot of the same kind in the first century. Nevertheless, I found that the brilliant acetylene light and the blackboard furnished me by two of the brethren, and my clarinet would attract a crowd who seemed eager to see or hear a novelty. As soon as I began to speak they nearly all went away to the next street attraction. I believe I have done as much street preaching as any man in the church, and I can say very few converts ever came to us through those meetings. Tents in this country of long summers and mild winters (in greater part) is a much better way of preaching out doors. If the Saints will take hold of the cooperative scheme proposed by the bishopric of Australasia, tents can be purchased and maintained, the missionaries kept constantly at profitable work, giving lantern, chart, and other lectures during the week, and doing house to house distribution of tracts and Gospel Standards. The workers will be more contented and happy in their labors and the membership can give greater aid in tents than on streets. It is very taxing on the bodily powers to do much street preaching.

It is proposed to start a "United Church Building and Extension Fund" by calling for small three-penny shares. Four hundred such shares constantly kept going will pay off all present debts and build new chapels much faster and easier than by the present disjointed plan (?) growing out of individualism; and it will help rather than hurt the main tithe and offering fund. We believe this is the action adapted to the needs of this mission at the present time. It is to be placed before the several conferences for approval this Christmas.

Excellent liberty in the Sydney pulpit last night. More baptisms next Sunday is announced by the president of the branch; and, last but not least, a new boy has arrived at the mission cottage. I'm feeling as well as could be expected.

G. R. WELLS.

MYRTLE POINT, Oregon, December 22.

Editors Herald: My young days were spent in hard work and I got no schooling. God has helped me to read and write. I want to bear my testimony to this work, for I feel that it is of God. He has shown me so much mercy and kindness. If we do not receive his blessings it is our own fault, not his. The desire of my heart is that I might meet with the Saints, and I wish we had Sunday-school so that we could study the Quarterly.

We had a good spiritual time at our reunion last summer at Bandon. We had Brn. Crumley, Hilliard, Allen, Luff, and Goodwin with us. I hope that God will bless us with a reunion in Myrtle Point next year. The reunions at Bandon are the only ones that I ever attended in my life.

I am so glad that I came to a knowledge of the truth. My mother and I were baptized in 1864. Brn. Lambert and A. H. Smith confirmed us. I have a sister living here that was baptized when she was eight years old. She has never regretted the step. She is in poor health, and I ask the prayers of all who read this, that she may be healed. I also ask an interest in your prayers that I may have strength to do my duty, and that He may give strength to all his Saints.

I wish Bro. Crumley could have been here about two weeks ago. There was a man here by the name of Brooks, lecturing on Mormonism. He said that the Reorganized Church was the same as the Brighamite church. There was no reason nor sense to his lecture, only mud slinging. It suited some who claim that all prophets are false in these days; that Christ is all that we need now; he has done all. They do not understand that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and that he had not given all to his people.

I shall ever pray and work for the building up of the cause, and hope that I may please him in all that I do and say.

Your sister,

MARGARET REED.

FORT BIDWELL, California, December 25.

Editors Herald: I am now in the notorious county of Modoc, California, where they "hang 'em" for stealing. I stayed with a man a whole week, at Lookout, that lay in jail nine months, accused of being one of the mob that hanged five men, and I never was treated better. There are a few Saints near Lookout. Some of them are Saints in name only, having starved to death spiritually. They are the fruits of Elders J. R. Cook, J. H. Lawn, William Newton, T. W. Chatburn, F. B. Blair, and A. C. Barmore. They are badly scattered, and seldom meet for religious services. Bro. Mahlon Cannon is an elder, a good man, but is hindered by temporal affairs, and has never been able to visit the Saints at Bidwell, a distance of one hundred twenty miles from his home. There are only five Saints here at Bidwell now, and one of them is going away in a few days.

Bro. and Sr. Billup are in Berkeley, sending their children to school, but will return in the spring. This section of California and Southeastern Oregon should have a missionary located here, and if the field is not large enough he might run over into Nevada. This country is isolated from the rest of the world, no railroads or water navigation. The branch officers need instruction as well as the sheep; and where the visits are so far apart the lambs will starve to death between meals. They have not the advantage for spiritual food that they ought to have and the effect of this neglect is discernable in the members. They are careless in their conversation and conduct, and a number of the male members use tobacco and intoxicants, which they would not do if they had proper instructions, or if they persisted in the use of those things they could be disfellowshipped. The traveling elder has a hard enough time going out into the world with the restored gospel, and meets the prejudice of the world; but when he goes among the Saints who have lived below their privileges, he finds it very embarrassing to apologize for the short comings of his brethren, and much harder to get a hearing than where they have lived worthy the name.

This gospel must be preached in all the world for a witness, and somebody must do it. I have been in this county since the middle of October and have done my work as thoroughly as I knew how, and feel like sealing up the testimony. I have been handicapped ever since coming here, by bad weather, bad roads, and other denominations occupying the houses that I intended to occupy. It seems that everything has been done that could be done to discourage me, but I still hope on. I would much rather have written of good work well done, but can not under the circumstances. The Lord said to Peter, "Feed my sheep." I have tried to do it, and feel that the Saints of Lookout and Round Valley have been benefited by my visits. Bro. C. W. Rice loaned me a horse and saddle, and I am canvassing the byways as well as the highways. Only one baptism so far here. I hope others are doing better.

Yours in the faith of Christ,

E. KEELER.

MORNING SUN, Iowa, December 28.

Editors Herald: I do not see how some Saints get along without the HERALD and Ensign. We take them and think we could not do without them. We do not hear preaching very often, as we live so far from any Latter Day Saint church. I have not been a member of the church very long, but I am a firm believer. Before I became a member of the true church of Christ I was a Methodist for about five years, and I never heard one gospel sermon preached, although I tried to live right. I did not know much about the Latter Day Saints until two years ago. My husband being a Latter Day Saint for seventeen years, explained his faith to me, and seeing he tried so hard to do right, I examined his faith. Finding mine was not even in the Bible, I knew that I was wrong. I am so glad I have found the true way. I have been healed through administration by Bro. J. S. Roth. Our darling little baby boy was afflicted with boils and Bro. J. S. Roth blessed him and the boils left him and he has not had any more, for which we are very thankful. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may be faithful, even unto the end.

In gospel bonds,

SR. HENRY KAESTNER.

REA, Missouri, December 29.

Editors Herald: Since last of July have labored in Northwestern Kansas District. Twenty-five have been baptized since first of September. Have been associated most of the time with Bro. Samuel Twombly, part of the time with Bro. John A. Teeter, and part of the time have been alone. Both these brethren are whole-souled, kind-hearted, effectual, and efficient laborers, with whom it is a pleasure to be associated in the gospel work. Separation brings a tinge of regret, a pang of sorrow, which after all only serves to strengthen the bond of brotherly love and friendship which has grown between us.

Most of our labors have been in the central and western part of the district, reserving the eastern part for the winter months because more thickly settled. The farthest point westward reached is Kanorado, one half mile from the Colorado line. Of the meetings there Bro. Ed Fender has already written. Was domiciled at the home of Sr. Middleton and husband, whom we remember for their kindness and hospitality. While there Bro. Ed and the writer took a flying trip "over the line" to Burlington, Colorado, returning same day. In nearly every place our meetings were interesting and well attended. We feel assured much good has been accomplished for the work.

In some of the branches we found the work very much in the background, caused by failure on the part of both officers and members to see that the law is kept, do their duty, and live their religion. In such places we labored to instruct and encourage all and to build up the work. Our efforts were well received, good results quickly followed, a better feeling prevailed, and the work placed in a much better condition.

Have been greatly blessed in all our efforts, and especially directed at times. We are thankful that we serve a God who reveals secrets to his servants and blesses his children, and when necessary, iniquities are revealed, transgressors are made known, that the law may be put in force and a purifying and pruning take place, lest the whole branch become affected and die. We hope the good work will go on till all is adjusted, harmony and peace prevail, and the blessings of the gospel are enjoyed by all. Conditions are more favorable and we believe the dawn of a brighter day has reached the work there, and we sincerely hope no cloud will ever dispel the light, love, and good feeling that prevails.

A disposition on the part of nearly all to step in line is commendable. Lack of understanding and neglect of duty are the principal causes of unfavorable conditions arising. The law of God is perfect, and when obeyed good results and blessings follow, order and harmony prevail, the divine favors of God and the spiritual blessings of the gospel are enjoyed; the cause of Christ is maintained, the fair name of the church is vindicated, the cause we love so well advances, and all is well. But on the other hand, loss, disappointment, confusion, disgrace, and suffering follow non-observance of the law and neglect of duty. The cause of Christ is disgraced, the work of the Lord hindered, and the banner of King Immanuel is trailed in the dust, even by those who should keep it pure, stainless, and floating aloft as an ensign for all to rally round.

Brethren, as officers let us learn our duty and do it. Study to show ourselves workmen approved unto God and the church. Feed the flock, instruct them in their duties, and teach them the law governing in the church. Saints, let us as members fall in line, work and live for the advancement of the cause we have espoused. Encourage the brethren in charge by our presence at the meetings, faithfully and willingly performing our part, and by our faith and prayers uphold in the arms of love those in charge, before the throne of grace, that the Spirit of the Master may enlighten, strengthen, and inspire them in their work. Thus honor God by honoring his servants and all become workers together with God in the great cause of truth.

There are many kind-hearted and noble Saints in the district, whom it is a pleasure to know. Many ministered to our temporal wants, whom we gratefully remember and pray Heaven's choicest blessings upon them. All our labors have been performed in love and kindness toward all, and we feel we have been favored and blessed.

Missionaries who have labored in Ness County and vicinity will be pleased to learn that Bro. and Sr. William A. Coddington, near Alexander, were baptized December 13; also Bro. and Sr. Jacob Schadel, near Keuffer Schoolhouse, were baptized December 14. These new members will be a strength to the church there and of use in the kingdom of Christ. Many more are near the kingdom and we hope will soon obey.

While holding meetings near Downs, had the pleasure of uniting in wedlock two very estimable young people, Moses A. Coop, son of Bro. James Coop, and Miss Maude Higbee, daughter of Sr. Higbee. A goodly number of relatives, Saints, and friends witnessed the ceremony and partook of the bounteous repast. Hope they will soon be merged into the "one faith."

Came home to spend the holidays with young ones. Found all well. Two of my brothers from Colorado were home on a visit when I came. Had a nice visit with them. Have been somewhat incapacitated for some time on account of severe cold on lungs.

Wishing all a Happy New Year, and the Master's work abundant success, I am,

Your brother,
JOSEPH C. VAUGHN.

TOLAR, Texas, December 28.

Editors Herald: My home and field address is now Tolar, Texas, instead of Ft. Worth. I shall be pleased to hear from any interested in the spread of the gospel in this State. Through the kind assistance of J. S. Sheppard, a brother in the flesh, but not yet in the Lord, I have been made able to secure a comfortable little home for my family near this place. May God bless his work throughout the world, and especially in Texas, is my prayer.

T. J. SHEPPARD.

WAGNER, South Dakota, December 24.

Editors Herald: It is about three years since myself and wife and four of our children were baptized, and we never have been sorry for the step. We have had times of rejoicing and testimonies that prove to me beyond doubt that this work is of God. But we have not been without trials also, for I believe trials must come, for God says that he will have a tried people, and Paul said our light affliction which is but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. I believe we should bear our trials without murmuring. I am trying to overcome my imperfections and ever be found walking in the straight and narrow way; and it is a narrow way indeed when I come to measure myself by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of the Lord. But our church privileges are a thing of the past, as we have not heard a sermon since we have been here, and that is nearly two years, only as I get them in the HERALD, and I am glad when the HERALD comes and to read of how others enjoy the sermons and to learn of so many receiving the light and obeying the same.

There are about twelve here who belong to the church, and we would be glad if some of the elders would come this way, but we shall meet with a great deal of prejudice here, I believe, but I think here would be a good place for an opening. I hope that ere long some one will come this way and tell them the gospel of Christ as he taught it.

I have been a reader of the HERALD ever since I belonged to the church, and could not get along without it. I am far from perfect, but I hope to grow more in favor with the Lord and keep the Lord's commandments and endure to the end, for therein is life eternal.

I ask that I may be remembered in your prayers, that I may live faithful to the end.

D. B. COFFMAN.

KAITANGATA, New Zealand, December 1.

Editors Herald: I am glad to report some progress in the work in Kaitangata, after all of Mr. Green's efforts to expose "Mormonism." He turned many of the people against him after refusing an honorable debate. He helped to advertise the Book of Mormon, and we have sold eighteen copies on the strength of it, and two copies Doctrine and Covenants; Bro. Hanson baptized a promising young man out of his church who was one of their Sunday-school teachers. The mayor of the town presided at some of Mr. Green's lectures, also ours, and is quite a man of principle, is a Catholic, and is our friend. He made us a present of one pound. Praise to the Lord.

D. E. TUCKER.

PLAINVIEW, Texas, December 27.

Editors Herald: I am very proud to read each week of the progress of the Lord's work in many parts of the world, and of the many blessings the Saints are receiving. I would so much like to have a church nearer so I could attend. It seems that the people are so uninterested. Of course they have their churches, and many of them do not even know what they teach. I try to give out literature when I find a chance. I wish every one would take an interest in talking about the gospel and enjoy it like I do.

I want to say a word to the young ones. I have belonged to the church ever since I was a child, and I know I never gave it the attention I should. While I was trying to live as best I could, yet I neglected study. There are so many deceptions in this world, that if you do not watch you will be decoyed from the service of God. But since I am grown I find more comfort in the service of the Lord than any other work on earth. I have been healed many times of sickness; and now I have a little baby girl, and the Lord has shown his boundless mercy in healing her. I pray that I may set a good example for her and my husband that they may some day embrace the gospel. I desire the earnest prayers of all the Saints that I may be healed of an affliction of my right side. I have had it for several years and now it seems to be perishing. I have not much strength. If it be God's will I hope to be healed; if not, may he give me courage and his Spirit to endure to the end.

There are so many things written for the HERALD that are food for my soul. I find that Jesus will bless even his own more if they will give their whole life to him. He knows our wants and I have desired something to read on certain subjects and it would come to me through the HERALD.

I would be glad to see our missionary in this part of the field if convenient. Places to preach in can be secured, and it is a new opening. Schoolhouses are open in the country, and the court-house in town. I ever pray for Zion's prosperity.

ADA BATES SMITH.

DECATUR, Nebraska, December 20.

Editors Herald: It is good to be a Latter Day Saint. Strong and steadfast is the motto. I am in the faith because I love the work in every department. I love the publications, for from them I get much strength and enlightenment on the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The reading of the HERALD and studying the Sunday-school and Religio lessons have been a source of life and joy and true happiness to my soul for several years, especially when passing through trouble. Often I have needed the help of a friend, but have been compelled to bear my trials alone. But the Lord has helped me and cared for me tenderly, and to his name be all the praise, now and ever more, till every victory is won and Christ is Lord indeed. I rejoice for the association of the Saints. I love the truth and want to live for it, and am willing to die for it in the manner that the ancient worthies once lived and died for it. My prayer to God is for the triumph of truth as it is in Christ Jesus and the glorious gospel that hallows our days.

W. F. CASE.

FRONTENAC, Kansas, December 27.

Dear Herald: I am only a little boy ten years old, and am a little brother of the church. I was baptized at Pittsburg, Kansas, and confirmed at Joplin, Missouri. I have a brother thirteen years old, and another big brother who soon will be twenty-three years old, and three sisters live in Burke, Idaho, and my big brother lives in Boise, Idaho, and all of us belong to the church; also mamma and papa. I put my Christmas offering in at Blenville. I will close my letter this time, for I have never written to the HERALD before.

Your little brother,

EMORY JENKINS.

SYCAMORE, Illinois, December 31.

Editors Herald: I am the only one in the faith in Sycamore as far as I know. If there are any Saints here or near here I wish they would write or call on me. I have not met with any since I came to this part of country, and I have been here seven years. My husband has not heard enough of the gospel to obey.

As I read how the wonderful work rolls on I praise God for his glorious work, which he has restored. He loves his children, who give ear to his counsel and obey his commandments. As a follower of Christ my desire and hope is that I may be able to follow him through the dark valley of death and be numbered among those who take part in the first resurrection.

I wish there was a branch here, I so long to be among the Saints.

I have two little children; my boy is five and the girl three. I often wish there was Sunday-school here that they could go to. I teach them from the Sunday-school book the best I can.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that my health may improve and that I may be able to keep the faith.

Your sister,

EUPHEMIA JACK.

GLENWOOD, Iowa, December 18.

Editors Herald: All is well in our little branch here. We were sorry Bro. Scott could not get to this part of God's vineyard, as we should have been glad to see and hear him.

We have preaching twice on Sunday and prayer-meeting Wednesday evening. Most of the Saints come to meetings regularly. Sometimes there are only a few on stormy nights. Bro. Davidson lives in the country, but we nearly always find him at church.

We have a little church of our own now. We all worked hard to get it; and especially the Sisters' Aid Society. Many times we have been blessed in our worship, with tongues and prophesying. I can not see how some will stay away from church when it will do them so much good to come.

Bro. Charles Fry was here this fall and preached a few nights.

We are keeping Christ's ensign aloft that all may see the light if they will investigate our belief.

A. NEWWRITER.

FRONTENAC, Kansas, December 27.

Welcome Herald: I see my little ten-year-old boy has written to you instead of the Hope. He was baptized but a short time ago. We have only two little boys now at home; the other children are all in Idaho. All of my family are now in the church and I pray God to help them to hold out faithful.

It does my soul good to read the HERALD, for from its pages I learn what so many are having to go through for Christ's sake. While I read the letter department I often see a word from some dear Saint that I once knew. I always look to see if I can catch a word from Texas, my native home. If some of the Texas Saints see this they can learn where I am, and see I am still contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. Twenty-four years ago this winter Brn. Bays and Jenkins came through Joplin, Missouri, on their way to Texas, on a mission. I went to hear them. The first sermon I heard Bro. Bays preach I could see the beauty of the gospel as never before. I saw him stand up and speak through the inspiration of our dear Lord; and when I now think where he stands, I can hardly realize he was the man who baptized me. Such a noble worker at one time, and now fighting against God's truths. I can not but say, Lord, show him wherein he is doing wrong, and lead him back to the fold.

I love this work above all worldly pleasure, and I have sacrificed lots for the same and had many testimonies in regard to Joseph the prophet, for which I thank the Lord.

We are expecting to have a branch organized at Pittsburg soon. That is only three miles from here. There are no Saints here but myself, husband, and two little boys. I hope some of the elders traveling through Idaho will find my children at Burke. I want to ask the Saints everywhere to pray for my husband, that the Lord will take the tobacco appetite away from him. It seems he can not quit it. He wants to, but he has been using it since he was eighteen. Now it has such power over him it seems more than man alone can do to quit without God's help. Will you please remember him at the throne of grace. He also has a cancer on his nose. Pray God to heal it, and we will give him all the praise.

Your sister,

FLORENCE MCKNIGHT.

HAILEYVILLE, Indian Territory, December 16.

Dear Herald: My husband and I have just returned from conference at Wilburton Branch. It was the first conference we were ever at, but I hope it will not be the last. We enjoyed it very much. We have belonged to the church one year and seven months. I am proud I am a Latter Day Saint and thank God for it. We did not belong to any church before we joined the Latter Day Saints. I find it is true and the work of God's own hands. We live fifteen miles from the Wilburton Branch and we go every chance we get to take sacrament and go to church.

Bro. Ullom baptized four of us. Before he went away he got one of the elders from Wilburton, J. F. Grimes, and he preached for a while, and last fall Brn. Peter Adamson and H. R. Harder came here with the tent. They set it up in Hartshorne, one mile from here. Had fair attendance.

Elder Peter Adamson organized a Sunday-school here with us four, two outsiders, and my sister, but since my sister has come into the church. Bro. S. W. Simmons, from Wilburton, came here and held a few meetings and since conference has baptized Bro. A. L. Coffee, Sr. Coffee, and my sister, Martha Lilley. My prayer is that God will bless them with his Holy Spirit and that they may stand steadfast to the rod of iron. I look forward to the time in the near future when we will have a branch here. We take the HERALD and Bro. Fasig takes the Ensign and we can exchange. If any of the elders come this way they will find a home to stay at and the Holiness people have let us have their church house to preach in. They are broken up and a few of their members believe our gospel.

Dear Saints, pray for us that we may be faithful and instrumental in God's hands in doing some good for the cause.

Your sister,

MRS. MEALIA WHITE.

MT. STERLING, Illinois, December 30.

Editors Herald: I am the only member of the Latter Day Saints Church in this town. My husband does not belong to any church. When we were married I told him what church I belonged to and the way we believed. He had never heard anything about the Latter Day Saints, and did not care what church I attended; I was welcome to go whenever I wished, and he would go with me.

I was attacked by neuralgia in my right arm, and from October, 1900, till June 2, 1901, I could not comb my hair nor dress myself. My husband did not expect me to get well. I heard of the conference to be held at Beardstown, Illinois, and told my husband that if he would take me there I would be administered to. We went and I was administered to by Brn. R. W. Davis and R. Y. Walter. I was healed and had no need of any one dressing me or combing my hair. My husband was well pleased and said that he heard more Scripture than he had ever heard in his life before.

I am so thankful to my heavenly Father for his kindness and goodness to me, and request that the brothers and sisters pray for me.

Your sister,

LOUVERNA MILLER.

HILL CITY, Kansas, December 26.

Brother Kelley: We are living five miles west of Hill City, the county-seat of Graham County. We are isolated from the Saints. Have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for two years. I wish some of our elders could come here and preach, for I think there are some honest in heart here who would accept the gospel if they could hear it preached. Any of the elders will be welcome with us as long as they will stay. People here do not know anything about the restored gospel, never heard of it. We are doing the best we can to get the truth before them by giving them our church papers and tracts and pamphlets to read. They organized a union Sunday-school and elected me for their superintendent, and last Sabbath the school voted to use our Quarterlies, and I have ordered them for the next quarter.

I pray the Lord that they may be the means of bringing some of them to a knowledge of the truth.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
Your sister,
HELEN ACKLEY.

RIVERSIDE, Iowa, December 29.

Editors Herald: Elder W. H. Kephart and the writer have closed a series of meetings that we held over four weeks. This is a new opening. The meeting was held in the M. E. church house. They are without a preacher and their church is standing idle. The meetings have removed much prejudice, and a better understanding of our work has obtained. We have made some warm friends. Had good attendance and interest and some are near the kingdom. Bro. Crippen was with us one Sunday and preached, C. J. Hunt was with us one week, and W. A. Carroll was with us two Sundays and preached the last morning.

If any of the elders come this way we would like to have them come and preach and help to keep this work moving along. They can find a home with us, and welcome. If the elders come by rail, come to Ulmer and telephone to J. J. Carson, and I will come and get them.

The writer and Bro. Kephart went by team overland fourteen miles to the home of Bro. W. S. Ashbough, where Bro. Kephart is going to hold meetings.

I love this gospel work. May God's choicest blessings be with us, is my prayer.

J. W. BEAN.

INDIAN RIVER, Maine.

Editors Herald: I send you a new subscription for the HERALD to help pay for the new press. I have paid for it out of my own money, and I trust it will do the one it is sent to much good. She is my own daughter; married a Leavy. When she was eight years old she was taken very sick and we thought we would lose her. She could not help herself any more than an infant. Bro. J. C. Foss came to my house after she had been sick four or five days, administered to her, and she was healed instantly. She got up and dressed herself and did not lose another meal. Her hair all came out, showing she had a very high fever.

I must say a few words about tithing. When I joined the church I thought I was all right, and so I was; but when the elders commenced preaching tithing I said, I had nothing to tithe so I had nothing to pay into the church. I was living pretty well, got a pretty good pension; but still I had nothing for the Lord. I bought a place to live in, but failed to meet my payments and had to leave it. Then I bought another place and paid some money on it, but failed on that also. I told my wife I was going to try once more, so I bought a house and seven acres of land; was to pay fifty dollars per year until three hundred dollars was paid. I said to my wife, I am going to turn over a new leaf; when I pay fifty dollars on my place I shall owe the Lord five dollars and I am going to pay it, too. So I did and he has prospered me and I have my place paid for and now I settle up every three months and find out how much is due the Lord and pay it.

Now let me say to all Saints, pay your tithing by all means if you want the blessing of God. We know this is the work of God. This is God's way of carrying the gospel to the inhabitants of the world. When I read the HERALD and see how the work is prospering it makes my heart rejoice. If every one would pay his tithing, so more elders could be sent into the field, how Satan would tremble! We are all one family and each member of the family should be willing to help support the family and as God has ordered the head of the family on earth to send the gospel to all the world every member should bear a part of the expenses.

Brethren, this is a great work we are engaged in. We need to wait but a little while before the reward comes—eternal life. If we could only realize what salvation is we would be more diligent in the cause. Only think of it, no more sickness, no more sorrow, no more pain, made like Christ, see him as he is.

AARON W. KELLEY.

DENVER, Colorado, December 23.

Dear Herald: The HERALD contains so much information that I could not do without it. I left the Armstrong Branch the 27th of April and arrived in Colorado Springs on the 28th. It is a very fine city and so rich in scenery that I marveled at God's creation and felt that man is nothing. I found the branch of Saints few in numbers, but nevertheless most are striving to build up the cause under the leadership of Elders Hanson and Duncan. I left the Springs in September. Denver is a fine city with many costly buildings, especially the State capitol and the museum.

I have met many of the Utah elders here and attended some of their meetings. They are sociable and very friendly. Here as elsewhere places of amusement seem to be visited by thousands. There are also many churches and many different kinds of missions, in fact, a spiritual Babylon and sin more than I have ever seen before. The Saints have a nice little chapel, but I have never found a place where I felt at home as at the Armstrong Branch. Their Sunday-school was the best I ever attended and under the wise guidance of Superintendent E. Dawe it has prospered. How many spiritual meetings it has been my privilege to enjoy in that little chapel where I first heard the gospel preached in its fullness. Some of the Swedish people have asked me to get the Book of Mormon in the Swedish language. I asked the Utah elders to get them, but they can not get them here and have to send to Denmark for them. I am still in the faith and desire to live for my Master. May God bless the work.

In gospel bonds,

Dear Saints: A Happy New Year to all. This may seem a little late by the time it will appear in print, but my wishes or desires go into effect to-day. May this year prove one of great or unsurpassed blessings in the church. To this end let us unite all our energies—spiritual, mental, physical, and financial. Study the laws and practice the laws governing these spheres or conditions, and I cheerfully bear my testimony that so far as experience and observation have led along these lines, great blessings follow a life of obedience. Let the Saints put into practice more of the principle of self-denial, for it must be apparent to every thoughtful person that it is utterly impossible to cater to all the whims and follies and variations of the world. Well did Solomon suggest that the eye is never satisfied; nor is this principle limited to the eye alone. "Flesh is a dangerous foe to grace when it prevails and rules," and the language of the Book of Mormon is here very appropriate and applicable, "Cross yourselves." "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 25.

We have lately enjoyed the labors of Brn. Fred A. Smith and S. D. Payne in the Olive Branch, and I feel that good has been accomplished in removing prejudice, strengthening the Saints, and putting the branch in better condition.

D. W. SHIRK.

TALLYHO, West Virginia, December 27.

Editors Herald: I am a young member of this work, having been baptized February 20 last by L. R. Devore. I am thankful to our heavenly Father that I obeyed when I did. I know this is the true latter-day work.

Bro. Godbey was with us last month and preached two sermons at the schoolhouse. We had a nice little crowd. As we are only a few Saints here, three in number, we try to show people the light, but they will not hear to it, so we leave it to our Master that he may choose out all the honest in heart.

I want to do all I can for my Savior. I ask the Saints to pray for me. May we all live for the redemption of Zion.

Your sister,

ANNA KRIEGER.

FARNAM, Nebraska, December 28.

Dear Saints: Sometimes when we are lonely and discouraged, it cheers our hearts to see letters from those we know and have mingled with. I was reading Sr. Hanna's letter to-day and know what it is to see those who covenanted with God forget the covenant and wander after the pleasures of the world, and can scarcely be awakened. "Awake, Saints, awake. No time now for reposing." Know that the Savior is nigh, even at the door. So cease to have impure thoughts and conversation, remembering your words are heard of Him who has said our conversation should be pure. May God bless and keep his people, is my prayer.

Your sister in the one faith,

E. A. PAYNE.

EVERETT, Washington, December 30.

Dear Herald: In reading the HERALD to-day I came to Sr. Maud Preston Whitney's letter, and was particularly impressed by her appeal to the sisters who had the privilege of attending our own services not to miss them, spurring them on by the thought of those of us who would gladly go if we could. Yes, indeed, how many of us would be glad of the privilege others may be slighting. For myself, I would be glad of the chance to go to meeting once a month. Born into the Father's kingdom, and for eight years privileged to be with a good branch, but now isolated, I feel very much the loss of the help I thus gained. People who think there is no benefit derived from belonging to the church, that they can live just as good lives outside, overlook the fact that in organization there is strength, and that the members of a well-directed organization are in a better position to do much better work than an individual can single handed. Discouragements are bound to come, and the person who can turn to those whose interests and sympathies are identical and together seek the great Director's help, finds a broadening, comforting influence that the individual is apt to miss. I do not want to be understood as thinking the isolated ones have no chance of blessing, or very little, for it is not so, but the heart of all humanity is stirred by sympathy, and we are human.

I was also impressed very much with the opening program in the new Book of Mormon Quarterly which I received last night. Every department of the church work seems to be taking on a deeper growth in spirituality, and when I read this particular program my heart went out to the Religians as never before. The knowledge that upon January 4, 1903, the societies, while praying for the work in organized conditions, would still make it a special effort to remember the isolated ones and home classes was very sweet and encouraging. I am longing for the time when I will no longer be one of the isolated ones, for I am very hungry for the society of the Saints. So, dear Saints, while you have the privilege of meeting with God's people, make good use of it. Do not let the demands of church work seem too heavy, or some day you may know what it is to be hungry.

With best wishes for the workers in every department of the work, and praying that the year 1903 may be a fruitful one to all, I am,

Yours for the faith,

MISS BERTHA E. McCULLOCH.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, December 28.

Editors Herald: Human life is a fearful struggle. Death is constantly staring us in the face, while at the same time we have the inward consciousness that it will surely succeed at last in destroying our mortal bodies. Its final triumph is only a matter of time. Unaided by some superior power than that which nature supplies, man is unable to successfully cope with death. O life, what a mystery! Who has advanced beyond the years of childhood that has not felt the sting of death? I use the term death in its broadest sense; not referring to the final termination of life only, but rather to every depreciation of life. Life is envroned by death. How to preserve our lives from death is a question and surely is one that must be interesting to all.

To the mind of the writer no one has answered this question better than the Christ. Moreover, no one has set a better example. The amount of misery, trouble, and unhappiness that is in the world is appalling. This all-prevailing and deplorable condition must certainly touch the feelings of every true Christian heart with a deep sense of pity and sadness. To sense the situation is to cause a desire to alleviate it. The desire of every human being is to be happy. To lend a thought, word, or deed that will contribute to the happiness of our fellow man is an act of charity. To help another individual who is uneasy, troubled, and distressed into a better and happier condition is surely a commendable deed. But it is also one that is hedged in with almost unsurmountable difficulties, some of which are very peculiar in nature. The easiest method, and I think also the most effectual, is to help the individual to adapt himself to the environment which is causing the trouble, and not, as is most generally attempted, to displace the environment. Our Master has given the laws and made manifest the secrets that will enable us to adapt our lives to the environments of the world so nicely, that if we are diligent and faithful in applying them we shall not only be enabled to live, but to be happy. It seems to me that the object of Christ's teachings is to adapt and qualify man to live in the world rather than to change the world to suit man's desires. However, to enable man to see the world in a different light means just as much to him as though the world were really changed.

One of the essential requisites to our happiness, though strange it may seem to some and difficult to understand, is a knowledge of the fact that life does not consist in the abundance of the things which we possess, but the things which we possess consist in the abundance of our life. The simple truth in this expression is that life is first, possession last, and the degree of possession is gauged by the abundance of our lives. Christ said: "I am come that you might have life and that you might have it more abundantly." The mistake of making the abundance of possession requisite to life has demoralized the world. In this struggle for possession of worldly things the abundance of life is lost, while trouble, dissatisfaction, misery, pain, distress, and sorrow is brought on. We ought to realize that we are not living to eat, but that we eat to live. There is certainly a higher object in life that to eat, drink, wear clothing, and inhabit houses. And if these necessities even are of secondary consideration ("Seek ye first the kingdom of God," etc.), how much more so must be the fashions and extravagance of the world.

This abnormal and artificial growth, extravagance and fashions, is the unapprehended human parasite which indeed is becoming a stupendous monster in the civilized world. To what extent the church is effected by this monster, it is not my purpose to say. To say that it ought not to be effected by it at all, I believe would express the sentiment of every right-minded person. That it is effected by it no one, I think, will presume to deny. To better adapt individuals to live in this environment of fashion, fancy, and extravagance, and to assist them to escape its pernicious effects is the object of the writer. The natural inclinations of man is to have life and be enraptured with the world. His inclinations have been followed largely in the past, and the result is sad and very unsatisfactory to himself. To love God and be enthused with the gospel of Christ, observe the instruction of the Master. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and to establish its righteousness," will adapt and qualify men and women to live in this world with present environments; and more, it will give them abundance of life.

Editors Herald: In HERALD of December 17, page 1221, article "Sam," the date of Reverend Hazel's paper should have been 1902 instead of 1892. I wish Bro. Forseutt had extended his article on Book of Mormon names. Hope he will yet extend it farther. Religians will find Lehi (a land) in Judges 15: 14, 19. Bro. J. F. Burton tells of a Moroni in South America, having been there. There was a family of Moormon in Iowa, now resident in Missouri.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

TORONTO, Ontario, December 20.

Editors Herald: My wife and I were born in London, England, and having nearly always lived there, we naturally feel that circumstances and surroundings are very different in this city. But the feeling of being at home among the Saints, whether in London, England, or in Toronto, Canada, surely makes amends for other, and perhaps, only temporary, inconveniences, arising from the change of climate and situation.

Your publication of the words and music of Bro. Bradshaw in a recent HERALD recalled to my mind many happy hours spent in the dear old London. I am very thankful to believe that the Saints and brethren there are still "uplifting the gospel standard high;" but I am convinced, both by study of the surroundings and, what is vastly more important, by actual experience and personal observation, that London, England, is a very arduous and difficult place wherein to plant and nurture the gospel seed. And the Saints there deserve the greatest credit, both laity and ministry, for their bold and protracted stand against the combined forces of moral restriction and sin that are perpetually at work in the metropolis of the world.

Many persons think that the larger and more populous a city or township, the greater will be the harvest of souls: and the more readily can the everlasting gospel be preached unto their acceptance. But the reverse seems to be true, for it seems that the measure of success in soul-gathering is in inverse ratio to the numbers residing in a given town or city. Of course one reason for this is the abundance of counter attractions of which London contains the maxium, and other continental and trans-continental cities in proportion to their size and population. But I believe that even a deeper reason exists than that just mentioned. No doubt the science of sociology (which deals with the relations of man to his fellowman) could furnish us with a clew to what is certainly at the present time not only perplexing but mysterious; as witness the strange and altogether unaccountable variations and vagaries of the registrar general's annual returns of births, marriages, and deaths for the very same cities. But as this is a hare started by the editor in a recent number of the HERALD, page 1219, article on the "Decrease of Hawaiian Population," it is not mine, and I am not going to be tempted in running after it. A well-known writer said: "If a man start a hare, let him run after it; don't you." So I will leave that hare to the editor, or whoever started it.

But even at the risk of tumbling headlong into your capacious waste-basket, I must remark upon an editorial in HERALD for December 17. The editor there says: "One characteristic of the animal, man, which he does not share with others of the animal creation, is that of the religious or worshiping faculty." I take exception to the sentiment here expressed, that the animals, apart from man, are destitute of the spirit or genius of religious worship or veneration. I should greatly enjoy seeing it proved, if such a thing as proving a negative were possible. There was a time, and that not long ago, when it was believed and taught that the lower animal creation possessed absolutely none of the reasoning faculty inherent in man, and that all the loving and intelligent things done by the dumb friends of man for his comfort and protection sprung from instinct, and from instinct only. But careful observation and study of our four-footed friends has led to such an almost universal modification of this idea that it is now all but abandoned in the thinking circles of society and among inquiring minds.

So many, many traits of extraordinary and remarkable intelligence in cats, dogs, horses, and oxen were brought to light,—not to speak of equally remarkable traits in bird life,—that at last it began to be realized and acknowledged that there was one way, and only one way, to account for such numerous examples of foresight, prevision, and evident wisdom in the dumb creation; and that was, to grant, even against all prevalent preconceived notions and ideas, that there must be at least a proportion of the attribute known as reason in their physiological organizations; and that that reason differed only in degree, not in kind, from that possessed by the greater and nobler animal, man. Further close study and experience has now made it extremely doubtful whether the dumb creation has not a vestige of the attribute known as worship, or religious veneration. Certainly if prayer, uttered or unexpressed, is any sign of the presence of the religious faculty, it must be conceded that this faculty is latent in all, or nearly all species of the animal kingdom! An animal that is in great pain or terror will utter a cry that is so far different from the ordinary cry or roar of this species of animal, that the difference is perceptible to the most unimaginative mind and the least sympathetic ear. I have myself noticed that trait repeatedly, and can well believe that the essence if not the actual form of prayer is present, and that in no small or mean degree. I might go even farther, and cite plain and unmistakable proofs from the inspired pages of Holy Writ. (See Psalms 104: 21; 145: 9, 16; 147: 9; Job 38: 39, 41; Matthew 6: 26.) God unequivocally spoke to the raven when he commanded them to feed Elijah (1 Kings 17: 1-6).

There are numerous passages which seem to recognize in the brute creation a faculty long unknown and unsuspected by man, or God could not appeal to a faculty nonexistent in the animal creation. Look at 1 Kings 13: 28, where the remarkable spectacle is seen of a lion quietly standing by the dead prophet and his ass, and neither attempting to molest nor destroy. Here is proof of obedient submission to a divine command previously communicated to the animal which is the highest test of the presence of the devotional or religious spirit. Proof, too, though of a totally different kind, is found in 2 Kings 2: 24; where it is remarkable that none but those who mocked or ridiculed the prophet of God, were destroyed by the two bears.

Genesis 3: 1 et seq. implies strongly to my mind that in the beginning the animal creation, or at least a part of it, possessed a gift that was subsequently forfeited or lost in consequence of the fall, viz., the gift of speech. And if ever that happy time should come in the ushering in of the great "restitution," or "restoration of all things" spoken of in Acts 3:21, and the lower creatures, like man, shall be able to express themselves verbally, we shall probably not merely believe in, but know of a surety, of the prevalence and power of the religious or devotional instinct in animals, when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Christ is Lord of all, to the glory of God the Father. (Philippians 2:10, 11; Romans 14:11.) I am further strengthened in this opinion by the study of such passages of Holy Writ as the following: Psalm 10; Isaiah 11; Hosea 2:18; Romans 8:19-23.

The marvelous researches of natural history prove to us that animals, and even insects, possess means of instantly and mutually understanding one another; why not, then, a language which, though unknown and not understood by man, is plain and clear to that great Friend who is the author and originator of all life and being. (Genesis 1:20-25; John 1:1-3.) If I have erred I have done so only in believing the All-father's omnipotent creative power and energy vaster than they actually are, and that his great eternal "kingdom of the latter days" embraces forms and developments of animal life perhaps unheard and undreamed of by his nobler yet not omniscient creature man. At any rate, I am fully content, dear brethren, to restore the grand promise given us in his sacred word of holy promise in the gospel of everlasting light and promise of boundless capacity, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter."—John 13:7.

If the acquisition of our poor little muddy stream of knowledge here is so soul-pleasing and delightful, what will be our fullness of joy when we are invited to bask in that vast and overflowing sea of the knowledge of our great God, and of this marvelous work, till our finite minds and powers shall be swallowed up and absorbed into the great, eternal, and infinite I Am?

— Grace be unto all the Israel of God, is the prayer of your brother.

Elders court appointed on the appealed case reported. The following brethren were appointed a committee to name the time and place for a reunion in this district next year: J. F. Rulon, M. Drake, and the district president. District treasurer reported $2.17 on hand. Tent fund: Receipts, $26.29; expended, $26.30. A tent heater was ordered purchased for tent for next season, also the presidents of the branches authorized to take up a collection to meet tent expenses. Requested that the missionary in charge take under consideration the advisability of putting the tent in Clinton next season. Warren Turner was elected district president, John Heide vice-president, Florence Green secretary, Lena Bradley assistant secretary. The following were chosen delegates to General Conference: J. W. Peterson, D. M. Rudd, Warren Turner, Mary E. Echart, Sr. J. W. Peterson, J. R. Sutton, and L. E. Hills. Delegates were instructed to cast a majority and minority vote in case of a division. The ordination of Bro. S. Darrow to office of deacon was referred to the president of the Osterdock Branch. The district Sunday-school association reported. The speakers for the conference: J. F. Rulon, Warren Turner, D. M. Rudd, and J. W. Peterson. Sr. Florence Green acted as chorister and Sr. J. W. Peterson as organist. The conference adjourned to meet in the light of the moon in May, at the call of the district president. Many visiting Saints were present, most all the branches in the district being represented. The conference was one of peace and quiet; all felt it was good to have been present.

St. Louis.—District conference convened in St. Louis, Missouri, December 27, 1902, Vice-president R. Archibald in the chair, assisted by Elder L. G. Gurwell. Smith, owing to ill-health, having tendered to Bishop E. L. Kelley his resignation as Bishop's agent, Bro. Russell Archibald was recommended by the conference to Bishop E. L. Kelley for appointment as his agent in St. Louis District. Sunday, preaching morning and evening; afternoon, prayer and testimony. Adjourned to meet in St. Louis, March 21 and 22, 1903, at the usual hours. J. G. Smith and C. J. Remington, secretaries.

Eastern Maine.—Convened at Indian River, December 6 and 7, with Elder C. H. Rich in the chair, U. M. Kelley associate, Mamie Cummings secretary. Olive and Indian River Branches reported. Ministry reporting: Elders C. H. Rich and U. M. Kelley; Priests L. A. Woodward, F. P. Smith, and A. M. Beal. Bishop's agent's report audited and found correct. Ernest W. Wilson was ordained deacon by Elders C. H. Rich and U. M. Kelley. The officers of district were sustained. The speakers during the conference were C. H. Rich, U. M. Kelley, and A. M. Beal. Adjourned to meet at the call of district president. Mamie Cummings, district secretary.

Mobile.—Met December 13 at Bay Minette, Alabama. Three branches reported: Three Rivers 106, Theodore 44, Bay Minette 89. Elders reporting: G. W. Sherman, W. L. Booker, W. J. Booker, F. P. Scarecliff, I. N. Roberts; Priests: George Bankester and T. W. Smith; Teacher Edwin Bankester, and Deacon Frank Huver. District treasurer reported: On hand, 40 cents. Committee examined Bishop's agent's books and found them correct. I. N. Roberts was appointed to represent the Mobile District as delegate at the General Conference. G. W. Sherman sustained as president of district, Hulda Porter secretary, and

F. P. Scarcliff treasurer. Resolved to cooperate with the Alabama District in a reunion. Spiritual authorities of the church and missionaries in the field were sustained. Two-day meetings were to be continued and be appointed by president of district. The conference was a grand one, was well attended, and one more accepted the gospel. Bro. F. P. Scarcliff has baptized one since the September conference. On Sunday night Bro. I. N. Roberts discussed the differences between the Utah church and the Reorganized Church. The interest was good and a large crowd was in attendance. Adjourned to meet with Theodore Branch, Saturday before full moon in March.

Southern Missouri.—District quarterly conference convened with the Springfield Branch, December 27, 1902, Elder H. Sparling presiding, J. C. Chrestensen secretary. Ministerial reports: Seventy H. Sparling, A. M. Baker; Elders J. W. Quinley, J. C. Chrestensen, G. W. Anderson, P. W. Premo, William Taylor; Priest S. N. Gray, Jr.; Teacher O. E. Ensley; Deacon A. T. Gray. Branches reporting: Springfield 121, Beaver 29, Ava 103, Pomona 78, West Plains 63, Woodside 59. Financial secretary and treasurer's report: On hand last report, $2.19; receipts, $3.71; expenditures, $3.60; balance on hand, $2.24. Agent's books audited and found correct. Committee on Wedlock case continued. Recommendation from Beaver Branch to ordain Parley T. Plumb a priest was referred to district president and sub-missionary in charge. Johns Mill Branch was disorganized and the district secretary authorized to grant letters of removal to nearest and most convenient branches. Each branch was requested to pay one dollar per quarter to defray district expenses. Officers elected: A. W. Baker, president; J. C. Chrestensen, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer. Brethren ordained December 28: A. W. Duemler, priest; A. T. Gray, teacher. Preaching by C. H. Merritt, J. C. Chrestensen, and William Waterman. Conference adjourned to meet with the Springfield Branch, March 21, 1903, 10 a. m. A. M. Baker, president; J. C. Chrestensen, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

Mobile.—District met in convention December 12, 1902, at Bay Minette, Alabama. Meeting was opened with song and prayer by W. L. Booker. One school, Three Rivers, reported present number 54. District officers were reelected. Adjourned to meet Friday night before next district conference.

Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District.—Convened at the Saints' church in Wilburton, Indian Territory, December 3, 4, 1902. The district officers were all present. Reports were read from Jacksonville, Euclid, Grannis, Hughes, Haleyville, Wilburton, and Coalgate. District treasurer's report: Received by special collections at Euclid, 88 cents; received from Grannis, $1.35; Coalgate $1; total, $2.35; paid out, 80 cents; balance in treasury, $2.43. H. O. Smith was chosen chorister and Sr. Alice Case organist. The matter of text-books was presented and discussed, also the Study Hour. One lecture was delivered by H. O. Smith, one prayer and consecration meeting. The election of officers resulted as follows: Peter Adamson, Jr., superintendent, E. L. Henson, assistant, A. Z. Rudd, secretary, Elzie Youmans, treasurer. The following delegates to General Convention were selected: J. I. Spencer, E. A. Erwin, J. A. Phillips, Jennie Newton, H. A. Harder, Laura Harder, D. M. Dalby, D. O. Harder, Cora Harder, H. R. Harder, Ada Spencer, W. M. Aylor, Peter Adamson, Sr., E. D. Bailey, A. L. Newton, Ellis Short, Eva M. Bailey, J. W. Jackson. Delegates present at General Convention were empowered to fill vacancies, also to cast the full vote, and in case of disagreement a majority of those present to cast the full vote. A very interesting program was given by the Wilburton school. The next convention meets at same place as the next district conference and at 10 a. m. Wednesday prior to conference.

Notice to the High Priests.

Brethren of the quorum whose post-office addresses have been changed within the past year will confer a favor upon the quorum officers and upon themselves if they will inform us of changes made, so that we may send both a blank to report upon and also a program of the business to be considered at the meetings of the quorum next April.

Respectfully yours,

H. A. STEBBINS,
Secretary of Quorum.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 26.

Notice to Fourth Quorum of Deacons.

William Chapman, assistant superintendent.

Married.

YOUNG—PEAT.—At high noon on Christmas, at the home of the bride's parents, Lamoni, Iowa, Bro. Clarence F. Young, youngest son of Bro. and Sr. Frank D. Young, to Sr. Bessie H. Peat, formerly of St. Louis, Missouri, by Elder William Anderson. A pleasant company of relatives and a few intimate friends were present and enjoyed the usual kind hospitality of Bro. and Sr. C. J. Peat and their pleasant family. Many useful and appropriate presents were presented to the young couple, some of them by old-time friends of St. Louis, Missouri.

SALISBURY—SCOTT.—In the Saints' church, Lamoni, Iowa, at the close of the evening service, December 28, President Joseph Smith officiating, Bro. Herbert Spencer Salisbury, of Burnside, Illinois, and Leona Gwendolyn Scott, of Lamoni, Iowa, were married in the presence of a congregation which filled the auditorium and gallery to their full extent. It is not often that a young couple covenant with each other before so large and intently interested a body of witnesses as did these young people. Bro. Salisbury is the elder son of Don C. Salisbury, who is the son of "Aunt Katharine," sister of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The bride is the daughter of Bro. W. W. Scott, of Lamoni, and was born and raised in the town. May they be blessed in their lives for each other, for their own and others' good.

Died.

LAGE.—Sr. Louisa Lage was born at Dugesfurs, Sweden, January 30, 1845, and died at her home in Omaha, Nebraska, December 26, 1902. Funeral services were conducted at the home on the 28th instant by C. E. Butterworth, assisted by a number of the Saints who conducted the singing. Services were conducted at the grave by Bro. Edwin Ahlstrand, at request of the husband.

THOMPSON.—At Centerville, Iowa, December 20, 1902, Sr. Ann Thompson, after a brief illness, aged 51 years. She passed peacefully away in the hope of a glorious resurrection. Four sons and one daughter mourn the loss of a mother's kindly love and care. Funeral the 21st, attended by a large gathering of Saints and friends; services conducted by Elder John Smith.

LEWIS.—Gwendolyn, seventh daughter of Bro. J. R. and Sr. Susan Lewis, was born January 29, 1893, died December 3, 1902.

She was taken with typhoid fever about November 2, 1902, and after a month's suffering, though everything was done for her that loving ones could do, she passed to the land of spirits. She was baptized by Bro. George Edwards this last summer. A large attendance of neighbors and members of the church at the house, where Elder F. C. Warnky delivered a few fitting remarks, showed deep sympathy for the family and the esteem in which the little one was held. Funeral sermon in the church, by Elder Joseph J. Emmett, Sunday evening, December 7, 1902, after the burial in Elmwood cemetery, to a large congregation.

"Sleep, dearest 'Gwennie,' and take your rest:

God called you home—he thought it best.

'Twas hard indeed to part with thee,

But Christ's strong arm supported me."

BARMORE.—Near Derby, Indiana, December 26, 1902, Sr. Nona Barmore, wife of Bro. Charles Barmore, aged 31 years, 8 months, 20 days. Consumption ended her life. She was baptized by Elder V. D. Baggerly, September 22, 1891, and remained firm in the faith. She leaves a husband, two children, mother, brother, and four sisters. She had many friends who will mourn her death.

CURTIS.—Elder Frederick William Curtis, died at Stanberry, Missouri, December 18, 1902. He was born February 6, 1832, at Dunsbourne, Gloucestershire, England; united with the church October 2, 1887, at Sweet Home, Nodaway County, Missouri. He leaves a wife and eight children to mourn. "One by one the sands are flowing." Funeral December 20, by Elder E. S. Fannon.

CHRISTENSEN.—Neils Christensen, born September 28, 1857, died November 28, 1902, after nearly three years illness. He leaves a wife, Sr. Lena, a daughter of Bro. H. R. Hansen, and seven children. Sr. Christensen had anxiously cared for and fasted and prayed for her husband during those weary months, trusting that he might understand the gospel and by God's power be raised up. He was induced to study the work and apparently was nearly, if not fully, converted when the final summons came. He was buried from the Baptist church, Blackfoot, Idaho, December 4; services by S. D. Condit.

DOW.—John D. Dow, of Six Mile Grove, Harrison County, Iowa, died November 7, 1902, at his home, after enduring much suffering, at the age of 71 years, 8 months, and 1 day. He leaves an aged companion with several relatives to mourn his departure, but not as those without hope. He united with the church in 1893, retaining his faith to the close of life. Funeral services at the house conducted by Elders J. F. Mintun and S. B. Kibler.

SMITH.—Bro. W. C. Smith was born in 1854; baptized July 5, 1891, at Hiawatha, Nebraska, by Elder S. D. Payne; died December 6, 1892, at Winston, Missouri, of cancer. He suffered patiently and was anxious for the change.

FERRIS.—At Keokuk, Iowa, December 23, 1902, of heart disease, Sr. Agnes Mulholland Ferris, sister to James Mulholland, who was at one time clerk to Joseph, the Martyr. She was born August 9, 1833, at Hydepark, near Belfast, Ireland, where she also obeyed the gospel. Later in 1853 she came to Keokuk, then to St. Louis, where on October 9, that year, she married Bro. Samuel Ferris, a fellow passenger on shipboard. To them were born six children, all living but one. She was baptized by Elder Shippy, at Keokuk, August 24, 1862. She died firm in faith. Funeral at Saints' church, December 26, 1902, James McKiernan in charge, assisted by Elder R. M. Elvin and Reverend Conoran.

HELM.—Almira Helm was born near Henderson, Iowa, December 31, 1858; united with the church in early life, died at Anderson, Iowa, December 19, 1902. She leaves an aged father and mother, six sisters, two sons, and one daughter. Funeral sermon in the Christian church at Henderson by Elder A. Badham, to a large audience of relatives and friends. A good woman has gone to her reward.

ALLEN.—Bro. Caleb Allen, of Springfield, Missouri, died July 6, 1902, at Independence, Missouri, leaving a loving wife, two sons, and two daughters here to mourn his sudden departure.

WARD.—Sr. Nora G. Ward died October 10, 1902; she was born in Hickory County, Missouri, July 24, 1874, and was baptized and confirmed October 6, just four days before her death, by Elder Henry Sparling. She left a husband, mother, three sisters, one brother, and other relatives to mourn her departure. Her husband has since obeyed the gospel. Funeral sermon by Elder C. H. Merritt.

BEE.—At Lamoni, Iowa, December 31, 1902, Sr. Cora Bee, daughter of Bro. Itske Vanderflute, aged 27 years, 8 months, and 12 days. She suffered with consumption till released for eternal rest. She was baptized in August, 1888, by Bro. A. S. Cochran, and was faithful, and her life worthy to the end. She leaves one child, a fair girl of five summers. Five sisters and three brothers mourn her death. Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral sermon, Bro. R. S. Salyards had charge, and Bro. John Smith offered prayer.

CLARK.—Mary, wife of Bro. Matthias Clark, was born April 22, 1833, in Missouri. Died at her home in Tulare, California, March 31, 1902. She had been a great sufferer for a number of years. She died as she had lived, firm in the faith of the latter-day work. She leaves an aged companion, three sons, and two daughters to mourn. May our Father in heaven comfort the bereaved ones. Funeral sermon by Ebenezer Burton, assisted by Joseph Flory. The remains were laid to rest in the Tulare cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

The Russian Church in the United States.

The dedication of the new Orthodox Russian church in New York indicates the importance of Russian church missions in the East, an importance which has arisen in comparatively recent years, and which has led to the provision of a residence of the Russian Bishop Tikhon in New York for a large part of the year. When Alaska was a Russian possession the seat of the bishop was at Sitka, but with the sale of the territory to the United States the Russian garrison and officials went away, and the Orthodox Church was left with but a handful of native adherents. The bishop moved his residence to San Francisco, visiting from there the missions along the coast, and occasionally coming to the East. Russian emigration to this country, while not large in members of the Russian Church, has nevertheless brought to this country enough of them to form churches in a number of Eastern manufacturing centers. These are in charge of missionary priests sent out from Russia, and Bishop Tikhon finds it necessary to spend as much time in the East as the West. The church in New York was therefore built, money being subscribed in Russia for the purpose, in order that the church might have Eastern headquarters. The building is of a distinctively Russian style, and of a character different from any other in New York. The auditorium is almost square, and very high, extending into a central dome a hundred feet or more above the floor. A sanctuary screen from Russia is to be placed between nave and chancel. The building adjoining the church is the residence of the priest in charge, and contains apartments for the bishop.—From "Highways and Byways" in The Chautauquan for January.

Church and School in England.

The avowed object of the Anglican clergy is to control the whole education of the children whom the compulsory attendance law forces into their schools. They make no secret of the fact that what they are fighting for is not merely to have the right to give religious instruction in the time set apart for it at the opening of the school, but to saturate the whole of the secular teaching with what they call the "Anglican atmosphere." This Anglican atmosphere they know they can secure by keeping the appointment of the teachers in their own hands, and by retaining the right to dismiss them on religious grounds without appeal. By this law religious tests are virtually reenacted in England. After it is passed, one half of the teachers paid with public money will be compelled, as the condition of earning their daily bread, to subscribe to the doctrine and ritual of the Anglican church. No one objects to any religious body creating its own atmosphere in any school which it maintains at its own cost. But the whole spirit of modern liberalism revolts against the formula: "the Catholic child taught by the Catholic teacher in the Catholic school at the expense of the non-Catholic ratepayer."

Underneath all the parliamentary discussion there is a very deep and serious feeling in the hearts of the laity, even of the church itself, that the time has come when what is regarded as the Romanizing tendency of the Anglican clergy should be checked. There is a much stronger anti-Catholic sentiment in England than appears on the surface. The proposed sacrifice of the next generation of English children to the priestcraft of Anglican clericalism is resented, and bitterly resented, even among churchmen. What will be the result of forcing the bill through at all costs no one at present can foresee.—W. T. Stead, in Review of Reviews for January.

The January Autumn Leaves contains an interesting reprint of an article which recently appeared in the Scientific American regarding the unearthing of ancient tombs in Mexico.

Country Life in America for January stands first among the large and beautiful magazines of the month. It has to do with many things that interest the country lover at this season, and leading articles are about "Crocodile and Alligator Hunting," "Following the Hounds," "Camping in the Snow," as well as timely matters of the greenhouse and country home-making, all illustrated with large and superb pictures. It is not generally known that the Old World crocodile lives in the cypress swamps with the alligators, yet harpooning them in Florida lakes is a thrilling sport. One of the fox-hunting articles includes a remarkable photograph of a horse and rider making a huge leap, besides various pictures of the hunt. "Camping in the Snow" in the North Woods, the thermometer twenty below, seems an outing only for the enthusiast, yet A. Radclyffe Dugmore finds it attractive, and his story with the pictures shows the alluring side of life in the woods during the dead of winter. Among other leading features, "The Cook Estate at Lenox" shows one of the pleasantest of the luxurious homes in the Berkshires, as seen by Mr. William Miller; a practical article deals with problems of windows in the country home, and a series of articles are about greenhouses that are really built and were successful with the different sorts of flowers discussed in a practical and suggestive way; while Professor L. H. Bailey finds "The Real Apple and Where to Find It" a subject to interest the city man. "The Calendar" touches upon all sides of outdoor life, including the usual practical affairs, and suggests walking-tours, rabbit-hunting with beagles, and finding birds' nests, cocoons, many birds and animals, and even flowers during a January thaw. Small but complete articles are about growing winter flowers at small cost, inexpensive iceboats, making skate-sails, crabbing, and a hundred other things for winter and summer. Altogether, the magazine contains many surprises for the month of January and nothing more beautiful has ever been printed.

Strange that we are connoisseurs in tea and wine and pickles, and yet that, apples are merely apples. Warm and wilted and polished, they stand in trays and rows on the stands, and we buy them. Probably half the people in the big cities buy their apples thus, one at a time here and there,—Ben Davis, Baldwin, Pen-nock, anything that is bright and handsome. I sometimes think that city folk in furnace-heated houses can never know what a really good apple is, no matter how good the grocer and the caterer may be. It is in the farmhouse with a real cellar—not a basement with heater and laundry and ash-bins—that one gets apples. You sit in the "wing" beside a crackling fireplace or a wood fire in a stove that is built for service rather than for ornament. The cellar is under the "upright." You go through the buttery, through the cellar-door that has a cat-hole in the lower front corner, and with lamp or lantern in hand you go down the stairs into a subterranean world. The snow is scurrying around the house corners, but here is a dark and snug retreat, a retreat such as no city house can have. There is no smell of ashes and soapsuds, only the cool soft odor of the moist ground and the boxes and barrels of apples. From box to box you go,—Northern Spies, Tannan Sweets, Greenings, Roxbury Russets, Seek-no-further, Rambos, Spitzenburghs, Snow apples, Nonesuch, Swaars, perhaps belated Kings and Fall Pippins—even Baldwins are not good enough for this company—and you take your pick. —Country Life in America.

Those who like a spice of adventure will enjoy reading Elder L. E. Hills' account of his experiences as boy bugler with General Custer, as told in the January Autumn Leaves.

The reviews of the last quarter's progress which constitute the main section of the January-March number of the Forum cover, as usual, the leading departments of public activity, especially in the United States. The most prominent place is given to Henry Litchfield West's review of "American Politics," including, of course, the Congressional elections, and this paper is closely followed by a similar account of "Foreign Affairs" from the pen of A. Maurice Low. Of no less importance is the description by Alexander D. Noyes of the quarter's movements in "Finance," concluded as it is by a careful estimate of future probabilities. "Applied Science," in its various phases, is treated by Henry Harrison Supplee. The paper on "Literature," by Frank Jewett Mather, Jr., contains valuable criticisms of recent books, and that on "Painting," by Russell Sturgis, comments on the latest artistic developments in our own country. Ossian H. Lang writes on "The Educational Outlook," and the editor, Doctor J. M. Rice, sets forth under the heading of "Educational Research" the conclusions to be drawn from his own investigations, previously recorded, into the causes of success and failure in the teaching of arithmetic in public schools. The present issue is completed by articles on "Waterways: an Economic Necessity," by Professor Lewis M. Haupt, and on "The Passing of the American Indian," by Thomas F. Millard.

The long winter evenings are here again and in most farm houses it is a question how to spend them in a way which is not only pleasant, but also that the time will not be altogether wasted. The farmer, as a rule, can not get away from his work even in reading time and he enjoys most of all sitting down and going through a first-class farm magazine like the Twentieth Century Farmer. This is chock full of the ideas of the brainiest men in the country, practical men, who have been selected as writers because each in his own line has made a study of how to make farming pay. One idea from men like these may be worth hundreds of dollars to any farmer or stock raiser.

There is no more wide-awake weekly magazine published than the Twentieth Century Farmer and a trial subscription of three months will be sent on receipt of 25 cents, the price per year being $1. A free sample copy will be sent to any one sending their name and address to the Twentieth Century Farmer, 2385 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

It contains from twenty-four to forty-eight pages every week and besides articles dealing with farming and stock-raising, it has abundant reading matter in the way of stories and matter interesting to the farmer's wife and the children as well.

The editor has had for many years a friend, a member of the church, who is something of a philosopher, is quite a scholar, has a great desire "to know," and is somewhat eccentric in that he does not pose for the public and does not value popular opinion very high. This brother has had a marked and eventful life, struggling for the bread that perishes and the knowledge that enriches and abides. In a letter as a friend he writes of this struggle, accompanied by some stanzas of verse, which letter and verse we have asked the liberty to publish, as there is little doubt but what his experiences may be those of others of a similar makeup and the issue for him may be helpful and comforting to them. We have known of the trials and peculiar conditions through which he has passed and give place to his letter and accompanying verses for that reason and as above stated:

Dear Brother Joseph: Hail! and happiness to you! May you live to fill out the "fourscore" of the strong man, and finally be gathered home "like an ear of corn in its season when fully ripe." Dear brother, we are, both of us, near the foot of the hill, and the final resting-place of what is mortal of us is very near. For you I should think it a source of joy, and the summing up of your life's account must be to you a joyful reckoning, while mine appear to me to be naught. However, it may not be so bad as it looks. Nevertheless I am quite satisfied to lay me down and await the glorious reëmbodiment, for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and though worms destroy my body, yet in the flesh will I see God and my eyes shall behold him, and not another for me. Many years ago, my dear brother, when we were chatting—it was at the house of a brother in Sandwich—Bro. Israel Rogers married his widow—you brought your hand down on my knee and exclaimed, "We know what we know, don't we, Bro. James." I smiled and nodded; but, Joseph, I did not at that time know in the sense you meant! I walked by faith, not by knowledge. I prayed, and prayed, and fasted, but no testimony did I receive; and it is but a few years that I can say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." It was in 1895 that I did know for myself that Jesus, the Son of Mary, is indeed what he represented himself to be.

It was at a hotel. I was terribly cast down. I was almost penniless. I lay me down with very sad thoughts, even though I had, to use a Methodist term, wrestled in prayer, and during that time I could hear the other boarders playing cards in the next room. Well brother, suddenly a light commenced to shine in the room and gradually enveloped me. And, O, the glorious feeling that I had, transcending all speech to describe. The eye dimmed with tears of joy and love unspeakable, and the expression of the whole being, "Peace on earth, and good will to all men." And, Joseph, the card-players stopped their game and asked each other, "What is it?" Never, never can I forget or deny that glorious testimony and fulfilling of the Master's promise, found in gospel of Saint John 7: 17. This, Joseph, is my confession of faith. And by it, in it, and through it, I can when the time comes lay me down in the thrice glorious knowledge, that he will not leave my spirit in prison, neither will he let corruption retain its hold. Dear brother, I have written this because I know it will give you pleasure to read; it is all I can do. Accept it in the spirit it is written. Again, Hail! and God help Bro. Joseph, on this his Jubilee year.

UNDER date of December 22, Sr. Allie Thorburn wrote from Glasgow, Scotland, to Bro. and Sr. H. A. Stebbins: "We have a branch, Sunday-school, and Religio here now, and I am happy and working hard. We have not all the material to work with yet that we need, but we are praying constantly that God will add to the church daily such as he would save. We have a cozy little home, only two rooms and a hall; but if we only had our dear daughter with us we would indeed be happy. George at present is sick with the grip, but is feeling better to-day. Glasgow is a very large and wicked city; and when I see how great is the wickedness of the city, I weep, and my heart yearns for the people, that they might become righteous and honor God by keeping his laws; then would my soul be glad. I pray that the Lord may send more reapers into the field."

Enclosed you will find some verses.

The "Jubilee" I wrote after reading the account in Chronicle of your birthday party. Please accept it in the spirit it was written, and given. From
JAMES J.

"I WILL REJOICE ME IN THE LORD."

How blest are the dead
Who have died in the Lord,
For they rest from their labors
And are free, and are free.
They have fallen asleep in the Master's arms,
There to rest till the Great Jubilee,
Jubilee,
They'll awake at the Great Jubilee.

When the times are fulfilled
And the trumpets shall sound,
They'll come forth from the earth and sea;
To meet their dear Lord, as he comes in the clouds,
At the dawn of the Great Jubilee,
Jubilee,
They'll come forth at the Great Jubilee.

Then the earth will be blest
And will bloom as the rose;
From sin, pain, and sorrow 'twill be free,
'Twill be free;

For the Bridegroom will come
And will take home his bride;
At the dawn of the Great Jubilee,
Jubilee,
They will meet at the Great Jubilee.

Lord hasten the time
When the truth shall be spread
O'er the face of the earth as a sea,
As a sea;

When the people of God
Shall be gathered in one;
Called home for the Great Jubilee,
Jubilee;
They'll be home for the Great Jubilee.

JAMES J.

Brother Joseph: Some time back, in 1897, I had the following dream: A tempestuous sky, the moon at full, blood-red, and quite filled with naked sabers clashing each other, beneath it the royal standard of England, blown about on its staff furiously, and finally the southeast corner of it blown away. The following verses are based on the dream:

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

The dial of the heavens gives warning
The mid-hour of night's drawing near;
When all things on earth shall be shaken,
The sun dark as sackcloth of hair.
The moon, like to blood, will, appearing,
The peoples of earth fill with fright;
The stars to the earth, as if falling,
Bespeak the low noon of the night.
Gather home;

Come home, O my people,
Come home.

My set purpose to vex all the nations
My prophets have oft-times foretold;
And while famines and wars they predicted,
They pointed the way to the fold;
Where the sheep in my pasture, protected
From famine, from war, and from drought;
Can dwell and rejoice unmolested
By the words that proceed from my mouth.
Gather home;
Come home, O my people,
Come home.

Mine angels will soon be outpouring
The vials of wrath which they hold.
And nation will rise against nation;
Yea, e'en 'gainst the sheep of my fold.
A false spirit will—incarnating—
As a god in his temple dare sit,
And cause all the nations to worship
The beast that comes out of the pit.
Gather home;
Come home, O my people,
Come home.

With oil let your lamps be provided,
Expecting the great midnight cry;
In faith on my promise relying,
Be sure I will not pass you by.
Yea, though in the midst of life's battle
By the wayside you lie down and die;
Yet, surely my power shall reach you,
You'll still hear the great midnight cry.
Gather home;
Come home, O my people,
Come home.

While on the subject of dreams I copy from my note-book the following: At sea, latitude ten degrees and ten minutes north, longitude eighty degrees east of Greenwich, January 16, 1863, between one and three o'clock in the morning. Dreamed I was standing on the seashore, and saw an Arab dhow in the offing; bye and bye it came to anchor off shore, and a party of people landed. They appeared to be Bedouin Arabs, were dressed just as I have seen the Bedouins in Algiers, Smyrna, etc. They had a camel with them, which swam from the dhow to shore attached to the boat they landed from. When the beast was fairly on shore and dry, a curious change began to take place upon it, which when completed, left it from head to middle of body part of the American llama, and from thence to end, camel. At the line of junction—the animal was a female—the udder was part on llama side and part on camel side; one teat being on each part. There now appeared on the beach quite a number of women and children, each having a cup, and they went to the sheik (for I can call him nothing else, he being dressed just as I have seen the Bedouin sheiks), and he milking the animal, gave to each a cup full of milk which they drank and appeared to be greatly refreshed thereby. Towards the last quite a number of soldiers appeared on the beach and stood guard over the people.

Joseph, I had never seen any soldiers—and I had seen nearly all nations—dressed in such uniforms. Neither had I ever seen the seabeach where the sheik and camel landed. But in May, 1867, after a voyage of one hundred twenty-three days from Hong Kong, I sighted land (for the captain died twenty-seven days out, and I took charge). When we came within half a mile of the harbor, the place appeared strangely familiar; and to make sure of what I expected, I called my chief officer, Mr. C. Thompson, and asked him to observe as we rounded the point if there was not a long, shelving, sandy beach with a large rock in the center; and there was. That beach is the beach south of the island of San Lorenzo, which forms the south arm of the entrance to the harbor of Callao, Peru.

As for the soldiers, I do not know how the Nauvoo Legion was uniformed, but I do know that they were dressed just as I have seen it represented in lithograph.

Have you ever had an experience, psychical or whatever it may be called, as if you were two mentalities, separate and distinct from each other? Some years ago I was speaking on the "Hope of the Saints," and in the course of the sermon I used these words. "Needless to ask, 'O death, where is thy sting?' Doubtless many of you have sat by the bedside of the dying and realized the sting of the great leveller. Useless to ask, 'O grave, where is thy victory?' Not one adult within the sound of my voice but has seen that victory as the earth fell and hid the coffin from sight. But there is a time coming in the 'sweet by and by' when the sting of death will be no more, and the victory of the grave will be turned into defeat. When the Saints striking hands together, husband greeting wife and children, brothers and sisters greeting each other, wife greeting husband, all risen from the embrace of death and the grave. Ah, we talk of the joy of the soldier returned unharmed from earth's blood-stained battlefields, as he greets wife, children and friends; but how think you that will compare with the joy of the saints as rising in the full strength of a perfect physical organization, of Adam ere he transgressed, the husband greets wife children and friends, the wife greets husband children and friends, all returned unharmed from the prison of their captor?

"Talk of the shouts of the victorious army as it sees the foe fleeing before them; how think you they will compare with the glorious one of the reëmbodied saints as they shout the battle cry of victory: The song of Moses and the Lamb. Oh, grave, where now thy victory? Oh, death, where now thy sting?"

While speaking those words, the words of the song were finding lodgment in my brain, and by the time I had finished, the hymn was also, and remembered. I was perfectly conscious of the double operation and thought how my brain was performing a double office. One side intent on the sermon, the other composing.

THE SAINT'S HOPE.

"Yea, in all things we are more than conquerors."

The victory will come, by and by,
And the Saints will arise from the tomb;
To inherit the promise God gave,
(The earth in its Edenic bloom.)

Oh, how sweet, as we greet,
When we rise from the long silent sleep,
By and by.
Oh, how sweet, as we meet,
When as conquerors we rise from the tomb.

We know our Redeemer doth live,
And life, endless life will bestow
Upon those who have fought the good fight,

Oh, how sweet, etc.

"Write, blessed are the dead," saith the "word,"
Yea, all those who die in the Lord;
For they rest from their labors and toil;
And life, endless life their reward.

Oh, how sweet, etc.

Though death may our bodies destroy
And we lie down, in silence to sleep;
In the flesh we shall see our dear Lord,
And in gladness again we shall meet.

Oh, how sweet, etc.

JAMES J. STAFFORD.

VIEWS OF SOME MODERN CHURCHMEN ON REVELATION.

At the closing session of the Twenty-ninth Annual Baptist Congress, held in Boston, Massachusetts, the question, "Does Revelation end with the Scriptures?" was discussed on November 20. We give below a few of the views expressed on that occasion, taken from a report in the Globe for November 21:

THE AFFIRMATIVE SIDE.

Professor Stevens said there were two distinctive notes of revelation in the Bible, one being the supernatural and the other the authoritative. While all truth was authoritative in its force, the truth of the Scriptures was authoritative with a unique force. There was a difference in thinking a word from God to be true, and in thinking it is true because it is from God.

He said it was supererogation to refer to the question of prophecy in the church. Every church has claimed to have the prophetic power, but the study of church history afforded the best refutation of such claims.

The theory of revelation being perpetually progressive in the church is found in the idea of God perpetually dwelling in the hearts of men. The doctrine of Christian consciousness was illusive, and represented a condition, rather than a theory. Professor Stevens' time expired before his paper was finished.

Reverend Mr. Watson said: "Nothing but the supernatural method would be effective in revealing God to man and man to God. That is the purpose of revelation. It must be supernatural, but not magical. The Old Testament is a revelation of hope; the New Testament a revelation of the fulfillment of that hope. Shall God ever need to reveal himself in another form? If a new revelation is to be written, who shall write it? Who shall be the revealer? Another diviner Christ? What, then, is the need of any other revelation than that already given in the Scriptures?"

"There is but one other book corresponding to the Bible and that is the book written in the heart of man himself. No escape is more difficult than from one's conscience. There the biblical revelation has man on the hip.

"Subjecting the supernatural to the historical method makes one accept the Father, suspect the Son, and quarrel with the Holy Ghost. Christ is not a part of revelation, but the whole of it."

REVEREND MR. FARNHAM'S VIEWS.

Reverend Mr. Farnham said: "If we accept the definitions of revelation as given in the dictionaries of to-day we can hardly claim that God has made no disclosure of himself since the Scriptures were written, but we come to the positive conclusion that God has made disclosures of himself.

"According to the definitions we use in all other subjects in the world, I believe the proposition will stand that revelation is progressive. There is scriptural proof of it. It is not that the heavens did tell the glory of God, but that the heavens are telling the glory of God, and the work of his hands showeth the firmament, and night unto night revealeth knowledge. We can't honor scripture by contradicting scripture. As long as the sun and moon endure God will be revealing himself to us."

MODERN PROPHETS.

Reverend Leighton Williams said: "We all agree that something has ended with the New Testament. Now the question is, what has ended and what has not. It seems to me that the only thing that has ended is the authoritative writing of the Christian church. And we rejoice at that.

"We have nothing to fear from the application of the vital principal of the canon of the Old and New Testaments. It is a part of the rule of faith and practice for all Christian churches.

"Primary revelation is subjective. God does reveal himself in human experiences. The record of it in the Scriptures is secondary and objective. When we come to study the texture of the Scriptures little of it was wrestled out as new truth subjectively. I believe that is good Baptist doctrine, but not Protestant doctrine. We are no more Protestant to-day than we are Roman Catholic.

"We may well ask, Are there no modern prophets, no modern apostles? I believe there are plenty of them. Ruskin and Carlyle and Lowell are to be numbered among them."

Doctor Alvah Hovey, formerly president of Newton theological seminary, agreed with Professor Stevens. He said God had disclosed in the Scriptures all of his mind and character that man needed to know.

Reverend A. S. Coats of Buffalo said that modern invention gave man a larger revelation of God.

Reverend John McElwain, formerly of the Clarendon Street church, said that the potential revelation of God in physical nature was complete and final. The actual revelation of God is the discovery by man of God.

Reverend Leo B. Thomas of Boston said the issue was: "Have we authority to altar God's word? Does inspiration of the individual Christian differ from that of the apostles?"

He said we wanted religious liberty whether we have the Bible or not, but there was no record of Christ's teachings anywhere else than in the Bible, so that the Bible became the sole standard by which the Christian life was to be judged.

Reverend Spencer W. Meeser of Detroit said: "There is no higher revelation of God than is given in the life of Jesus Christ. There is no higher revelation than is expressed in personality. If God has exhausted himself he is no longer ascendant, he is prostrate."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

When the children of Israel were in bondage, why did God harden Pharaoh's heart, and then send plagues on them; and if Pharaoh was a bad man, whose fault was it?

We do not know. The Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures has it thus: "And Pharaoh hardened his heart."—Exodus 7:13. "But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them."—Exodus 8:15. "And Pharaoh's heart was hardened."—Exodus 8:19. "And Pharaoh hardened his heart, at this time also."—Exodus 8:32. And so on clear to the end of the strife between Moses and Aaron for Israel and Pharaoh for the Egyptians. The Inspired Version in no instance states that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart. It was Pharaoh's love of power and greed for what the Israelites did for him as slaves that made him harden his heart; it was not the act of God.

Pharaoh was a bad man because of the fact that he was a man only, one of a long line of kings who had a corrupt court and ruled as his caprices and passions dictated him. He was a product of his ancestry and his and their surroundings; no one was specially to blame for it; certainly not God.

What would have become of us had Eve never eaten of the forbidden fruit?

Nothing. We would not have been. "Adam fell that man might be."—Book of Mormon. The woman was in transgression, being deceived. We presume that God knew that the woman would be deceived, and so prepared for it. No one is authorized to say what would have resulted had there been no transgression; other than the one idea, man would have remained without the knowledge of good and evil. All else is speculation.

What has concerned myself very much is the first epistle of Saint John, third chapter, "He that committeth sin is of the Devil?"

The best answer to this question we know of is that in the Inspired Scriptures, the passage is rendered thus: "He that continueth in sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning."—1 John 3:8. The effect of the above teaching is that after a man is informed as to what sin is, or comes to know that he is sinning, if he continues to sin puts himself into the grasp of the Devil, becomes his servant, the servant to sin.

The other rendition would disannul the teaching elsewhere found. "If any man sin, and repent, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."—1 John 2:1.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A. M. Starkey, Sen., of Chico, California, sends in several subscriptions to the church publications and says: "I trust I shall be the means of your receiving many more orders for church publications. I think Saints should make an earnest effort to get the church publications before the people with whom they have to associate. In this way we could get the gospel before the people and ourselves be blessed because of having done our duty."

Bro. M. Rasmussen, Sykeston, North Dakota, under date of January 5, inclosing money for subscription, writes: "My mother-in-law, Sr. Susan P. Reeves, was with the Saints in Nauvoo during the troubles with the Saints, and heard President Smith say that if Brigham Young ever got the lead of the church, he would 'lead it to hell.'"

Arthur Allen wrote from Bridgeport, Oregon, January 12: "The work is moving along slowly here. I have baptized four in the past two months."

Under date of December 30 Bro. John W. Rushton wrote from Leeds, England: "We are all well at present. Under God's providential care our little girl, Dorothy, has been restored to us, as it were, from the jaws of death. She is very much shaken after the fever, but is recovering nicely. We have organized a branch in Glasgow and have good prospects of more being added to our members there. Bro. Griffiths and I are making a tour of the mission prior to his departure for America. We have spent Christmas in Leeds and have had good meetings. If all goes well we expect to organize a district in Leeds and vicinity. We need laborers. The harvest seems to be ripe, and I believe many honest hearts would thrill with delight if they were privileged to hear the gospel's joyous sound. All the missionaries seem to be hopeful. The weather is very severe, cold, stormy, and wet. Sickness is therefore more or less common. Last night I preached at Rothwell, a new opening, where our Bro. and Sr. Ely and Bro. and Sr. Harper hold out the truth in a neat, clean, little hall. They are assisted by the local brethren of Leeds, and deserve much credit for their courageous stand against popular prejudice and tradition."

Bro. W. A. Sinclair, of the Bank Breaking Committee of the Bethel Sunday-school of Fall River, Massachusetts, sends check to Bishop E. L. Kelley for one hundred dollars and fifty cents as Christmas offering of that school. A splendid showing! He writes: "We made an extra effort this year, as we should like to see Sr. Walker succeed in raising the two thousand this year. We hope that every school will do what it can to swell the amount. We feel proud of the onward movement of the work in the East; hope to continue onward." If you have not sent your offering, "Do it right now," as the account is to be closed on February 1 and sent to printer for publication in the Blue Hope.

Bro. Robert White, of Wilber, Nebraska, sends in contribution on college debt to Bishop Kelley and writes: "It seems little to me, but if all in the church would respond to the calls that have been made in defense of Graceland, soon the debt would be cancelled, and I and mine will labor to that end; also not forgetting the previous revelations as to our tithes and offerings."

Our veteran Bro. H. J. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska, sends in three Autumn Leaves subscriptions and says: "The superior literature furnished in all departments of Autumn Leaves should be an incentive to every lady over sixteen to possess a copy."

Under date of December 20, 1902, Bro. Burton wrote from Papeete, Tahiti: "We are having a siege of the measles here in Tahiti. There have been several deaths, but so far none of the Saints have died. Bro. and Sr. Gilbert are doing a good work in the Sunday-school and Religio work. They are now in Hikueru, a pearl-shell diving island. Emma and I expect to go there in February. We received by this mail a mimeograph which I will send up to Bro. Gilbert, to help him in copying Religio work, and Sunday-school work also, as well as other work. Peace abide with you ever."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A branch was organized at Glasgow, Scotland, on December 15. The organization was effected under the direction of Brn. G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Rush-ton. James Wilson was ordained an elder and placed in charge of the branch. William Plunket was ordained priest and William Carney teacher. Sr. Allie Thorburn was chosen secretary and John Hepburn treasurer. Regular Sunday services were arranged for as follows: Prayer service at a quarter till twelve in forenoon; Sunday-school at two in the afternoon, and preaching at half past six. Sacrament service first Sunday of each month; business session the last Saturday night of each month. A committee was appointed to secure a hall for services.

A few days ago a brother in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, signing his name "A brother of Pittsburg," sent us ten dollars with which to send tracts to the Llanelly Branch, Wales. We acknowledge the gift and express to the brother the thanks of the Llanelly Branch. They felt very grateful for the gift and asked God's blessings on the giver.

One of the neatest New Year's greetings received at this office this year was the one sent out by the passenger department of the Union Pacific Railway Company at Omaha. In the list of names of employees in that department we note the names of W. H. Bullard and M. N. Smith, two of our young brethren who are graduates of the commercial department of Graceland College.

Bro. C. A. Riley, of Council Bluffs, recently sent to the associate editor some of the best photographs the latter ever had taken. Bro. Riley has built up a good trade in Council Bluffs, and has won an excellent reputation as a first-class photographer. Some of the best photographs in existence of President Smith have been taken by Bro. Riley. We congratulate our worthy brother on his success as a camera artist.

The Church Library is indebted to Bro. John Maedel, Cash, Michigan, for a copy of the "Blue Book of American Shipping" for the year 1901. It is a marine and naval directory of the United States and contains much valuable information in the way of statistics. It is well printed and nicely illustrated, and the library wishes to extend thanks for his remembrance. We hope that there are very many others in the church who will remember the library by donations, and send in what books they think would be of use to the library.

We have received a copy of a little tract entitled "Marriage Suit." It is an account of the proceedings in the courts of Canada against Bro. Hiram Dickhout, who was called before the high courts of Canada to determine whether or not he as a Latter Day Saint had the right to officiate in the marriage ceremony. The tract that we have received is the second edition and is published by Hiram Dickhout, Hamilton, Ontario.

Sr. Mattie Hughes, of Rhodes, Iowa, sends in the Christmas offering for Rhodes Sunday-school and contribution on College debt and writes: "I have long hoped that I might be able to give at least five dollars, but will not withhold the mite because I can not give more. I most earnestly pray that God will move upon the hearts of his people to remove this debt this year before next General Conference."

"NO WEAPON THAT IS FORMED AGAINST THEE SHALL PROSPER."

The HERALD is laden each week with instruction to the readers thereof, that is beneficial both for this life, and to fit us for the life to come; and the cheering news from the various parts of the field is strengthening to all the Saints. It is evident that the work is progressing in spite of the opposition that has been so determinedly pressed against it from the beginning, and is now urged on with renewed bitterness, by the hireling clergy, and its continual progress is evidence of the truth of the divine utterance, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgement thou shalt condemn." This has been proved true all through its history, affording abundant evidence that the cause is God's; and did not originate with man. For more than half a century I have been a close watcher of its struggles with the opposing power, and have been an active participant in them, and though the instruments of defense were weak and unskilled, and those arrayed against it were mighty in human wisdom and cunning, yet there has been no cause for even a blush of shame on the part of its defenders. Truth has been vindicated and the enemy has been put to shame.

No greater evidence of this fact is needed than the confession of the "Christian" convention lately held in Omaha, when a special meeting of a part of that body took place for the purpose of organizing an association for the purpose of successfully fighting what they are pleased to term "Mormonism" and urged the necessity of training men to effectually meet the ministry of our church. In all these years since the organization of this church it has never been necessary to train men to defend its doctrines. They have been called and ordained of God and he has fitted them for their work. Nor have these instruments, in his hand, been called from the ranks of the learned, the wise, and the mighty in the wisdom of this world, but they have been called from the plow, the carpenter's bench, the blacksmith's anvil, from the deep mines of the earth as well as from the fisherman's nets and every other humble occupation among men, in keeping with his dealings in all ages, as it is written, "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty. . . . That no flesh should glory in his presence."—1 Corinthians 1: 27, 29. In the beginning of this work God said, "The voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1. If God's word has ever proved true—and we emphatically declare it has in all ages—this promise given in the dawn of the nineteenth century through his prophet Joseph Smith has abundantly vindicated the character of God as "the God of truth;" for though the learning of the world, the hate of hireling priests, the bigotry, and the unreasoning prejudice of professors of all shades of religion, combined with the equally senseless opposition of the avowedly reprobate of all classes, all inspired by the fiendish hate of the infernal powers, has been exerted to put a stop to this work, but their efforts have been in vain, as is now acknowledged by the vigorous efforts of all classes of religionists from the church of Rome to the latest born of the daughters of the "mother of harlots," to prevent the spread of the restored gospel. The utter failure on their part is one grand evidence that they are fighting against God, and must ever fail.

It was not enough for Satan to array all the so-called religious world, as well as the avowed reprobate portion, against the latter-day work, but a more successful way to destroy it, if it could be destroyed, was adopted by him, namely, to insinuate himself into its folds and presenting another God, even the first man, and denying the immaculate conception of the Son of God, and then appealing to the lusts and evil passions of mankind by the introduction of a plurality of wives, contrary, not only to every law of civilized man, but also contrary to the order of God, as it is written, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh."—Genesis 2: 24; (Matthew 19; Mark 10.) "The Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed."—Malachi 2: 14. Jesus further says: "Whosoever shall put away his wife and marry another, committeth adultery against her."—Mark 10: 11. Is it not equally adultery if he marry another while his lawful wife remains with him? Hence, no matter what name you may give this act of taking other women, whether "polygamy," "plurality of wives," "spiritual wifery," or "celestial marriage," it is adultery, one of the foulest crimes known to humanity, and God said to his church through his servant Joseph: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else." He further declares, "Thou shalt not commit adultery."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

These scriptures, together with the prohibition found in chapter 2 of book of Jacob, and in other parts of the Book of Mormon, positively forbid the practice of polygamy. Yet the powers of darkness have succeeded in clouding the minds of some who were more willing to be led by their lusts than by the Spirit of truth, to such an extent that in these last days there has been a great departure from the truth and purity of the gospel of Christ, and therefore "the way of truth has been evil spoken of," and thus weapons have been put into the hands of the emissaries of the arch enemy of all righteousness with which to overthrow the church of God. But thanks be to our heavenly Father, the promise remains eternally true, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper;" and again, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against thee." "They shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I, the Lord have commanded them."

This latter-day apostasy has been seized upon and held up to show that the Church of Latter Day Saints could not possibly be the church of Christ. I would ask those who entertain this erroneous idea, Was the church in the wilderness the church of God? (Acts 7:38.) Was the church established by Christ the church of God? Did the seven churches of Asia form a part of the church of Christ? There was a great departure from the true order of the church of God in the wilderness. Christ himself foretold that, "Because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold." (Matthew 24.) Paul declared, "I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."—Acts 20:29, 30. In the second epistle to the Thessalonians he says: "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work." Christ told the churches of Asia that unless they repented and did their first works, he would "remove their candlestick," "spew them out of his mouth," "fight against them with the sword of his mouth." No believer in the Scriptures would admit that the churches above referred to did not then constitute the church of God, nor can any deny that there had been departures from God. The millions of Protestants to-day charge the church of Rome with apostasy from the true faith, and derisively point to her as the "mother of harlots," forgetful of the fact that they are her only offspring. In turn she as contemptuously spurns them as bastards from the commonwealth of Israel, and points to their multiplied divisions as evidence that they can not be the church of Christ. It must be admitted that while the church of Rome, with its false claims to unity, and Protestantism with its multifarious divisions, can not both be the church of Christ, there has been a departure on the part of one or both of these contending parties from the truth, for truth is not antagonistic to itself. There can be no contradiction in truth any more than there is in God. Hence this multiplied division in the religious world is indisputable proof that there has been a departure from the true order of God.

There can be no departure from the truth unless that truth has been received. It is not found in its fullness and purity among the sects of the day. Each one may possess a part of the truth, but in its fullness neither any one individual sect nor the whole collectively are in possession of it. Yet Paul declared, "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," etc. (1 Timothy 4.) This prophecy has received a fulfillment in the apostasy led by Brigham Young in his annunciation that "Adam is our Father and God," and his denial of the immaculate conception of Christ, the "blood-atonement doctrine," or the possibility of a man's blood atoning for his sins; and his proclamation of his gospel of lust; all this in the name of the church. At the same time he and his immediate coworkers knew that it was in violation of that which God had revealed for a law to govern the church, and upon which the church had been founded. For evidence of this read the standard works of the church as published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which church is composed of those members who remained true to the original standard lifted up in the year 1830. These members again raised this standard in the year of our Lord 1853, and being led by the Spirit of God began to call upon the scattered sheep of the fold to rally around the standard of eternal truth and proceed to continue the building up of the church of Christ that a people may be prepared to meet him when he shall descend in the clouds of heaven. They have also labored to win back those who had departed from the true faith and order of God; and they are still laboring; and thanks be to God, not altogether without success, for hundreds of honest but misled souls have returned to their first love, and their former allegiance to the truth, and now rejoice as of old in the glorious hope of the one gospel of Christ—the hope of eternal life.

The missionaries of the Reorganized Church of Christ are giving proof of their love for the cause of truth and for their fellow men by leaving their homes of comfort and all that is dear to them in this life, braving the dangers of the deep, the deserts, and mountains, enduring the scorn and contempt of those whom they seek to bless, not expecting reward in this world, but willing to labor and wait until, like the unwearied and faithful Paul, they can say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." The same glorious hope of a "crown of righteousness" inspires them to action and sacrifice that inspired Paul; and as they labor on with a view to the glory of God he manifests his love to them by the ministrations of his Holy Spirit and, when needed, by the guardianship of holy angels.

Reader, whether you are friend or foe to this people, let me admonish you that all the opposition that earth and the lower regions can bring against them will not daunt nor discourage them, and much less will it stop the onward progress of this work. No! God is with them and his right arm is extended on their behalf and he will make them mighty to the pulling down the strongholds of iniquity and establishing truth in the earth. True, we are few in number; but the Master has said "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "We wrestle not with flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places;" and in God we trust for the victory.

The Master said, "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." And he has also said, "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat."—Matthew 7. Then despise not the little handful of people who are struggling under the greatest difficulties, and the strongest opposition, to build up the kingdom of God, and establish righteousness on the earth, for although they are rejected of men they are acknowledged of God, and by his power they are sustained. On him and on him alone they depend; and because they have not trusted in vain, they have been enabled to endure the scorn and contempt of the world, without hope of earthly reward, but content to do the will of God in proclaiming his truth, whether the world will regard it or not, "knowing that in due time they shall reap if they faint not."

Do not think that because they are despised by the world they are not esteemed of God. Jesus said, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15. "Blessed are all they that are persecuted for my name's sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5. With these divine assurances, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints can afford to breast the tide of opposition, let it come in what form it may, "knowing that he is faithful who hath given these precious promises."

CHARLES DERRY.

WOODBINE, Iowa, January 1.

WHY I LEFT THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

First, she misrepresents God.

In 1888 I was studying for ordination to the priesthood at St. Andrews' Theological Seminary which was located on the grounds of the palace in which lived the Right Reverend Bernard J. McQuaid, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Rochester, New York. The doctrine of the Trinity was sometimes under discussion. The Catholic Church teaches that you must believe in the Trinity; that is, that in the infinite, eternal, omnipotent, immense, and just God, there are three divine persons, who are called Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, three persons and only one God. Now, I know better than that, Pope Leo XIII and all the Catholic clergy to the contrary notwithstanding. The Holy Ghost is not a person. It is an influence. By this influence or power all God's children shall be made "one" even as Jesus Christ and the Father are one; that is, one in purpose, design, hope, faith, desire, and all the other attributes that God possesses. By the influence of God's Spirit, that is, the Holy Ghost, the obedient ones shall be made joint heirs with Jesus Christ, that is, equal with him. Therefore the children of God will become like God. They will be "one" with him.

Second. She teaches that you must tell to a confessor (priest) all the sins of thought, word, and deed, which you remember, and the number of times you have committed each mortal sin, in detail. If you voluntarily conceal a single mortal sin, through shame or fear, the confession is void and bad; God does not pardon any of your sins, you commit a sacrilege, and are more accursed by God and a greater enemy to him than you were before confession. I reject that teaching. The doctrine of auricular confession was instituted at the Fourth Lateran Synod in the thirteenth century, by uninspired men, and there is no warrant in holy Scripture for the mode in practice by the Catholics at present.

Third. Her dogma of "transubstantiation" has no foundation in "truth."

Fourth. Her teachings of "hell" are incompatible with the nature of God as revealed in his word. The thought that sinners who die without receiving absolution from a priest are damned to suffer every conceivable pain, are immersed in a sea of literal fire, tortured by all sorts of torments, overwhelmed with despair, and abandoned by all for all eternity, is inconsistent with the mercy and wisdom of our Creator.

Fifth. She teaches that when you meet with any tribulation, you should have recourse to the sacraments of penance (confession) and eucharist (communion), to the crucifix, to the Virgin Mary, to Saint Antony, of Padua, to Saint Vincent Ferrier; get some oil from the lamps burning before their altars, get a medal of the Immaculate Virgin or a little picture of a saint, or take your rosary and repeat the prayers on the beads. This last is frequently done formally, like a parrot or a machine, with no more expectation of having the petition answered than a child has when he wishes he had a million dollars.

By my acts in the past I have been placed under the ban of papal excommunication, according to the decrees of the councils of the Roman Catholic Church. She uses the fear of this cursing as a weapon to hold her members in subjection to the teachings and direction of her officers. In times past in some Catholic countries, an excommunicated person would be treated somewhat like the striking miners in the late Pennsylvania coal strike treated those who refused to join in the strike. Their houses were stoned and set on fire, their kindred were abused, storekeepers were compelled to refuse to sell them the necessities of life, and they were hampered and ill-treated generally.

But now since the United States Government affords religious freedom, thank God, the Pope's anathema has no more effect on a person here than the same words would have if spoken by anyone else. And as for spiritual authority, that was all taken away from her in the sixth century, as foretold by John the Revelator in his twelfth chapter, first to fifth verses, where in speaking of the church which was set up by Christ, John describes her as "a woman clothed with the sun," that is, righteousness. "And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered." "And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne." The man child represents the authority of the priesthood. Evidence of that authority being amongst men is shown by the signs following the believers (Mark 16:17, 20) and the gospel gifts as indicated by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12:1-14. Those signs were in the church for about five hundred years after Christ, then they ceased, and the Roman Catholic Church was instituted by the "great red dragon" of Revelation 12:3, 4. In these last days through the mercy and goodness of God in sending the light of revealed truth throughout the earth, the scorpion stings of her apostate priesthood have been blunted, and the adder fangs of her poisonous system have been pulled out.

Knowing this, the following clipping from the Christian Observer, December 17, 1902, will be read with various feelings, according to the degree of charity exercised:

A PAPAL EXCOMMUNICATION.
POPISH PROFANITY.

A Catholic priest of New York was recently excommunicated by the "Holy Father" of Romanism, and the document, or papal bull, containing the terrible sentence, has been published word for word in the English Churchman, and copied by other papers. The following is a translation from the Latin. It corresponds with the form of excommunication which has been used by the Pope of Rome during centuries past.

"By the authority of Almighty God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit; and of the immaculate Virgin Mary, mother and patron of our Savior; and of all the celestial forces, angels and archangels, thrones, dominions, powers, cherubim, seraphim; and of all the holy patriarchs and prophets; and of all the apostles and evangelists; and of all the holy innocents who are found worthy in the sight of the Holy Lamb to sing the new song; of all the holy martyrs and holy confessors; and of all the holy virgins, and of all the holy saints, together with the saints and elect of God, we excommunicate and curse the evil doer, Edward MacGlynn, and from the thresholds of the Holy Church of God Almighty we cut him off, that he may be tormented, despoiled and delivered with Dathan and Abiram, and with those that say to the Lord God, 'Depart from us, we wish none of thy ways.' And as the fire is quenched with water, so let his light be quenched for ever, if he does not repent and make satisfaction. Amen.

"May the Father, who created man, curse him. May the Son, who suffered for us, curse him. May the Holy Spirit, who was given to us in baptism, curse him. May the Holy Cross, upon which Christ went up for our salvation, triumphing over his enemies, curse him. May the Holy and Eternal Virgin Mary, Mother of God, curse him. May Saint Michael, the advocate of the holy souls, curse him. May all the angels and archangels, principalities and powers, and all the celestial hosts, curse him. May the multitude of Patriarchs and Prophets, worthy of praises, curse him. May Saint John, the Forerunner, Saint John the Divine, and Saint Peter and Saint Paul and Saint Andrew, all the other apostles of Christ, together, curse him. And may the rest of his disciples and the four evangelists, who, by their preaching, converted the world universal, and the holy and marvelous company of martyrs and confessors, who, with their holy marks, please God Almighty, curse him. May the holy chorus of the Holy Virgins, who, in order to honor Christ, have despised the things of the world, curse him. May all the Saints, who, from the beginning of the world until the eternal ages, are loved of God, curse him. May the heavens and the earth, and all the holy things that remain in them, curse him.

"Let him be accursed wheresoever he may be, whether in the house or in the stable or in the garden or in the field, or on the royal highway, or in the by-path or in the grove or on the water or in the church. Let him be accursed in living, in dying, in eating, in drinking, in hungering, in thirsting, in being awake, in sleeping, in dozing, in awaking up, in walking, in standing, in sitting, in lying down, in working, in resting and in being bled. May he be accursed in all the faculties of his body. Let him be accursed within and without. Let him be accursed in the hair of his head. Let him be accursed in his brains, and in the crown of his head, in his temples, in his forehead, in his ears, in his eyebrows, in his cheeks, in his jaws, in his nostrils, in his teeth and grinders, in his lips, in his throat, in his shoulders, in his wrists, in his arms, in his hands, in his mouth, in his breast, in his heart and its dependencies, in his stomach and the lower part of his body, in his veins, in his waist, in his groin, in his haunches and in his knees, his legs and feet, and in the nails of his fingers. May he be accursed in all the joints and ligatures of his members, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. May there not be any piece sound in him.

"May the Son of the Living God, with all the glory of his majesty, curse him; and may the heavens, with all the powers that move themselves there, rise against him and condemn him, if he does not repent and make satisfaction. Amen and Amen."

Does the reader turn from this with aversion? It is language that was recognized over and over by the Council of Trent—the official expounder of Romanism.

Does he feel tempted to smile over it as a brutum fulmen? An empty roll of thunder it now is, because few pay any attention to it. In centuries past, when superstition prevailed among men, when Protestantism was unknown, and when excommunication was followed by the refusal of all men to furnish food or shelter or clothing to the excommunicated, it caused great earthly suffering, and terrified its objects oftentimes into abject submission.

Surely we have occasion to rejoice that those days are past; that giants, Pope and Pagan both, as Bunyon expresses it, are helpless—the one being dead, the other "grown so crazy and stiff in his joints that he can now do little more than sit in his cave's mouth, grinning at pilgrims as they go by, and biting his nails because he can not come at them."

Prophecy is being fulfilled, and the Lord is calling, "Come out of her, my people." In Revelation 15:17 and 13:1 to 10, John further describes the combat between the "dragon" and the "woman":

And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. . . . And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshiped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshiped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. If any man have an ear, let him hear. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

Again let me plead, "Come out of her, my people," and enter into the beautiful light of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Selected Articles.

THE CRIME WAVE.

The statistics printed in the Speaker of London by the Right Honorable G. Shaw Lefevre as to the increase of drunkenness, pauperism, and crime in Great Britain are remarkable. The number of paupers in England and Wales in 1901 was 18,800 greater than in 1900, and during the eleven months of 1902, ending with November, this increase was swelled 13,000 more, the increase being greatest in London, where the workhouses are overcrowded.

In the matter of crime the increase of persons sentenced to penal servitude in 1901 was 193, and of persons sentenced to ordinary imprisonment 17,163. Though greater in London than elsewhere, the increase of crime was general throughout England. As to drunkenness, the convictions of persons for the three years 1893-95, were 150,000; for 1896-98, 169,000; for the last three years, 189,000. In London the same period increased from an average of 17,000 a year to 41,000. As to vagrancy the reports show that the average number of vagrants relieved daily in the workhouses increased last year by 20 per cent, and as compared with ten years ago by 100 per cent. In the meantime deposits in the savings banks are falling off fast.

In seeking for the causes of the increase of crime and its consequences, Mr. Lefevre vaguely attributes it to hard times, high taxes consequent upon the Boer war, and the increased cost of the necessities of life. But has he found the right cause? The year which has just closed was not one of hard times or of high taxes in this country, and if the necessities of life have risen in value there has been an increase of wages. Yet crime of all kinds while not increasing at such a rate here as in England has increased greatly during the year. Vagrancy may not have increased, and the most reliable authorities are of opinion that drunkenness is decreasing. Murders and suicides, however, have largely increased. Evidently other than industrial and politico-economical causes must be sought for in this country. Has Doctor McDonald, the specialist, to the United States Bureau of Education, hit upon the right cause when he says that the rapid development of society with its strain upon the nervous system, is the cause of crime, suicide, and insanity, and that "in periods of rush and strain the weaknesses of human nature become more apparent"? There is food for thought for the social philosophers in the doctor's statement that "when the nerves are unstrung by overpressure the will may become weak, depression and pessimism set in, and loss of self-control follow with its consequent abnormal actions leading on to crime and other social evils."—Chicago Tribune, January 6, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

River Dell Ranch, Idaho, December 14.

Dear Home Column: Before the close of the year, I feel it my duty to contribute my mite, hoping that the few words I may say will be of help to some one, as the many who have written at different times and are still writing have helped me. In HERALD of December 3, appears a sermon preached by R. C. Evans, which is worth reading and rereading. O how grand it is to read thus of our blessed Savior! In the same number of HERALD is an article from Sr. A. R. Corson, which is very good. I have been comforted many times by the good words from the pen of Sr. Almira M. Snow; also Sr. M. Walker, and many others too numerous to mention. May God's richest blessing rest with them all. The articles in Autumn Leaves by A. H. Smith and others are good; and that reminds me to ask if any of the Saints would like to have back numbers of HERALD, Autumn Leaves, or Hope, we would gladly send them to any address. Ask through the HERALD, Saints, and we will see it. Dear Saints, how much we are losing by hanging back in this latter-day work. I often recall an article written in HERALD by a brother in which he described the Saints as working on a building. Some worked steadily, and when they had placed several layers of brick, they were obliged to sit and wait for the slothful ones to build up their part. It is very provoking, but nevertheless true; but still when the waiting time comes it is best to wait patiently and prayerfully.

I love and believe this latter-day work as taught by the Reorganized Church; believe it to be the gospel that Christ and his apostles taught. Have had many evidences of its truthfulness; and in trials and vexations of one form and another I feel that God is near and that for some reason or other we must tread the thorny path and often be lead where we would much rather not go. According to what I hear the work is progressing in Black-foot. We live too far and husband is too busy for us to attend meetings. Bro. Wheeler often visits us and when Bro. Layland comes he preaches for us. Be sure to call on us, Bro. Layland, when next you visit these regions. We will be more than glad to see you.

Dear Saints, let us pray for the wandering ones, those that are being overcome and being led away from the light, that the Lord will feel after them and gather them again into the fold of his great love.

Dear brothers and sisters, I wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. May God bless all his children, both those in the church and out of the church.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her people, I am,
Your sister,

JANE HEATON.

REESE, Michigan, January 7.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: My heart was moved to-day in reading the letters of the Column especially Sr. Whitney's, and would say in the way of encouragement to her, not to get discouraged. For there is nothing that we have to endure but our Master has endured it before us and he knows just how much we can stand and he has promised that he will make a way for our escape so we will not be tempted more than we can bear.

Dear sisters, let us try not to neglect our duties to our children while they are young, before they leave their old home. This is our privilege and to my knowledge there is no nobler nor greater work on earth than this, to send out men and women into the world with characters molded to do right who have been taught to fear God, knowing that he knows all their secret thoughts and secret actions. I have thought sometimes my trials were almost too much, but when it got that far I have seen my way clear again. Last summer in harvest time, I was afflicted with a fever-sore on my ankle; it was an awful looking foot and the pain was sore to bear, but I felt it was put on me for a good purpose. I wanted to be administered to but did not know where there was an elder, so I sent a letter to the HERALD, thinking some of the elders would read it and come to my place, but our dear president, Bro. Joseph Smith, sent a letter to Bro. Dowker of Bay City and one to me giving me Bro. Dowker's address. This was on Wednesday and on the next Sunday my foot looked much worse. My husband wanted me to get a doctor. I told him I wanted to be administered to and I felt that there would be some elder come before night. In half an hour Elder Carpenter had come and told us that Elder Dowker would be with us soon. Now, dear sisters, imagine my thankfulness to know that God is the same as he was eighteen hundred years ago, that he has not changed, and that he ever put it in my heart to obey his commandments that I might enjoy the blessings of the gospel. I was administered to and in two weeks my foot was nearly all healed and in four weeks I didn't use any cloth on it as it was better. To God be all the honor.

Your sister,

ELIZA HANSON.

Dear Home Column: I have just been reading of the flowers brought by the "upper ten" to the sick sister, and wish to express my feelings on the subject, while it is fresh in my mind. The flowers, I think, Dear Violet, were God's own gift to you, and although they were not brought by the kind-hearted washerwoman, they were nevertheless beautiful flowers, too, so beautiful as to help you not to mind the bad behavior of the foolish girls. The kind-hearted washerwoman might not be able to get such beauties to bring you, and besides if you took the flowers just for their beauty, and kept them fresh until the poor washerwoman called, they might cheer her, too, and bring to her mind by-gone days with many bright reminiscences, and make her feel years younger. Have you thought that in after years those same foolish girls might be called to pass through hard trials, and looking back would be benefited by recalling yours and take courage to press onward?

I remember when I lived in a lonely mountain home with never a neighbor to step in to spend an hour, of once being quite sick and downhearted. We were real poor and husband was working from home and my two girls, too. One day a boy called to inquire about some cattle. He had picked a handful of wild flowers as he came up the canyon and pleasantly handed them to me. I think of them yet, for don't you know that I believe when the boy looked at the little ragged children and then at my pale face, he wanted to help me, and the wild flowers were all that he had to give at the time. And they did help me a great deal more than I can tell. Yes I know it is the way in which anything is given that does the real good, and what a pity it is for any of us to be rude to each other! Now will not some one else write of their experience along the same line? I hope nothing that I have said here will carry pain to any heart for I mean no harm whatever, and when I am wrong I stand ready to be put right.

The old year is almost gone and all no doubt have had our joys and sorrows as well as our bright hopes and we have made our sad mistakes and errors. Now with the hope of the new year in our hearts it is quite likely that a new resolve is formed in our breasts to rise a little higher, to be better in the Master's all-searching sight. At least that is my desire.

I wish to overcome the tea and coffee habit and ask the Saints to pray that with God's help I may be successful. I do pray God to bless those of his children who are trying to overcome evil. For if we each overcome his own faults, then we will be God's children and he will dwell with us.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, I remain,

Your sister in the gospel of our Redeemer,

Gather the Wanderers Home, Dear Lord.

Oh, where has the wanderer gone, dear Lord,
Oh, where will the dear one be hurled?
Away from my care, I know not where,
Out in the bleak, cold world.

I know you can see, Lord, where I can not see,
And the wandering lambs, I am told,
When bleeding and torn their shepherd they see,
Will be borne in his arms to the fold.

Lord, help me to trust thee whatever betide,
And help me to overcome sin.
Lord, help me to ever by thy will abide,
That the promised reward I may win.

And if by thine aid I prove worthy, dear Lord,
To enter that city of rest,
Oh, may I meet there free from sorrow and care
The wanderer safe on thy breast.

Prayer Union.

Mrs. Pauline Ruby, of Angus, Iowa, requests your faith and prayers in behalf of her sister, Mrs. A. C. Bell, that she may be healed of heart trouble. She is a great sufferer, and is a true saint of God, and worthy of your prayers. The Saints everywhere are requested to pray for her that she may be spared to her family. She has been administered to several times and has each time received a blessing, but she is isolated and no elder is available. Sr. Ruby also asks that she may be remembered and relieved of the affliction of deafness.

Progress.

With our boat's prow headed up the stream
Of life's swiftly flowing river,
The vantage gained by the last strong pull
Is lost but for another.

Honest labor, though well applied,
In seeding the field for the garner,
If not followed on with a vigilant care
Would never bring store to the farmer.

So if we have, by dint of persistence,
Mastered achievements, yes even one,
Let us take care, never slack'ning our labor,
Lest by our stopping the past be undone.

Prayer and its Answer.

Unanswered yet? The prayer your lips have pleaded,
In agony of heart these many years
Does faith begin to fail? Is hope departing?
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father hath not heard your prayer,
You shall have your desire—sometime—somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Though when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne,
It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,
So urgent was the heart to make it known.
Though years have passed since then, do not despair,
The Lord will answer you—sometime—somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith can not be unanswered,
Her feet are firmly planted on the rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder-shock,
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, it shall be done—sometime—somewhere.

Tuncurry.

Dear Standard: We have a Sunday-school at Tuncurry. This is good news, and will be commended by every one as a step along the right path. Those of your readers who were Tuncurry members and who have a fair knowledge of past and present spiritual conditions here, will be pleased to learn of the above.

The Sunday-school which started with the organization of the branch has long since been closed owing to reasons which at the time were justifiable. I was then a teacher, so write from knowledge. Several times of late I have thought we ought to make another effort, but for myself must plead guilty of the sin of omission in making the effort. To the young sisters belong the credit of present results. One young sister, a new arrival from southern parts, promoted the idea, and together with two other sisters told all the young folks to meet in the old familiar chapel the following Sunday for school.

Sunday afternoon came, a bright day in September; the bell rang, and nearly all the little folks in the place could be seen going to Sunday-school. I watched developments with some interest, although not then among their number. When school was over little folks formed outside, discussing memory verses, etc., and the wee folks especially seemed really interested. With the first effort I was pleased. There were only three classes then, there are five now, one of which is a Bible class of young people who are attentive and seem eager to learn. We have a regular attendance of about thirty-six scholars.

We are using Sankey's hymn-books, as they are within the reach of all, and nearly every child now has one. The sisters give the little ones a singing lesson every Thursday afternoon, and it is now pleasing to hear occasionally the familiar words of a hymn being sung by them while at their play or in their house. We also have a teachers' and Bible study class every Wednesday night for the purpose of studying the lesson for the next Sunday, and we thereby harmonize our teaching when before our classes. Every class studies the same lessons. I have just returned from teachers' class and must say that for myself it is a good thing. Since studying the lesson with others to-night I shall be much better prepared for next Sunday's teaching.

We are proud of present results and future prospects. To our Father we give the honor and will continue to pray for the direction of the Spirit that the best fruits may be assured.

Yours for truth,

J. R. TAYLOR.

Graded Text-Books in the Sunday-School.

Lest it might have been thought that in my speech upon this subject in the last General Convention I was aiming a blow at our Quarterlies as to their general makeup, I wish to disclaim any such intention, whatever my speech might have seemed to reflect to the contrary. What appears to me to be the fault in our present method is the effort to ape the Sunday-school world "intentionally." And to me the International folk have a sort of general system largely stripped of a true comprehensive method; or a going over of too much ground, a sort of prolixity of statement but a dearth of truth.

Gradation, as I understand the term, is the teaching of anything step by step and the classifying of the learners in harmony with their ability to grasp the thing taught, as well as the clear outlining of the truths to be taught in all their various grades from the very alpha of the simplest form of such truth on up to its omega in the finality of its highest development.

From my earliest school remembrance in the little log school-house, with its hard, open benches, without backs and no desks, as now seen, we had the class work and in our study learned from graded text-books. And with all our improved methods of teaching "the young idea how to shoot," instead of going from graded text-books, all our improvement has tended toward a more clearly defined system of grading and an improvement toward the idea of putting the lessons into text-book form. It is said that "comparisons are odious." This might be demonstrated by comparing the grammars of forty years ago with those of the present; and yet neither grade nor the idea of the text-book method have been left behind, but rather improved and enlarged upon.

Who would think, e. g., of asking the primary class to give the voice of a verb, even though the definition were put in the simplest form of language? And yet our International unity of text idea seems to be about on a par with this. And instead of "come out of her my people," I may be pardoned if I say that to me we are following too closely in line with the idea by putting a mature lesson, or rather a text that belongs to the higher grade is put into the hands of our primary Sunday-school pupils, and because it is clothed with simple language we, by our acts at least, argue that the primary pupil should have the ability to understand it. Or presenting it from another standpoint, we step outside of the child environment for the text and seek to bring the text within the environment of the child-mind by putting on a dress of simple verbiage. Too much like trying to fit a four-year-old dress onto a young lady! We have before us an unscientific difficulty, hence fail in our effort. Thought may soar away into the fathomless depths of the great unknown but produce nothing more than a theoretical problem as unexplainable as it is practically unknowable. But the thoughts produced inside the mind's environment produce the practical problems that are so easily explained that they become so knowable that the enigmatical incident to the theoretical problem is removed.

And just here I may be pardoned if I say that in our common school system we are but in the incipency of the attainable by virtue of teaching too much theory and not enough practice. For example, the teacher can physiologically theorize as to biceps development, but the child practically knows it by the use of the hammer and anvil. So in all our teaching, not only in the day school, but in the Sunday-school as well, we should seek to exemplify by practice. The child with a bag of candy should be shown the necessity of sharing with its fellows, thus demonstrating the example of giving and at the same time helping practically to remove selfishness.

I would then divide the gospel teaching into primary, intermediate, and senior lessons, choosing primary texts for primary lessons, the intermediate and senior texts to be based upon the question of environment as well, not forgetting the while to introduce the practical so far as possible. When the lessons are thus prepared they should be published in text-books so that in a Sunday-school sense the child could start at the bottom and, remaining all the time within the environment of its spiritual development, could "go on unto perfection" without being led aside by "International text" or "unity of text" either. I can quite understand the idea of primary unity of text, intermediate unity or senior unity; but to seek to unify three environments into one is beyond my comprehension.

Word From Wales.

Dear Herald: By request of Bro. G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge, I came to this place in company with Bro. F. J. Pierce. This is one of the landmarks in the history of the church in South Wales. At one time there were three branches, when the town had not to exceed ten thousand inhabitants. At present they claim over thirty thousand, where the membership is not to exceed twelve active members. In the year 1848 the Saints built a stone chapel thirty-five feet by forty-five feet. At the time the work was flourishing, for Brighamism had not shown its cloven foot. In the year 1863 the Reorganized Church formed a branch, and later the question as to the rightful claim to the chapel arose, the followers of Brigham claiming that it was built by them. But unfortunately for them the lease was made to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, hence the Reorganized Church got possession, and their claim never has been questioned. This victory for the Reorganized Church was some sixteen years before the Kirtland Temple became the property of the church, and much credit is due the few Saints at Llanelly at that early period, when there was but a handful in comparison to the Utah faction, for standing up for their rights and proving their case so clearly.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths has taken much interest in keeping the chapel in repair. Some ten years ago the house was by him repaired on the inside, and last winter he again had it papered. The house is fifty-four years old and needs considerable repairs, especially on the outside. The windows are old-fashioned and the woodwork not very good. The front of the chapel ought to be raised about ten feet. Ceiling is low, should be raised, and a good iron railing or fence placed in front of the building, as is customary in this land in front of all the chapels or churches, and is needed to protect the building from mischievous persons. The town council has granted us the privilege to place a railing; they refused the request last year, giving as a reason that the six feet of ground between the house and sidewalk had all those years been open to the public and was now property of the town. I called on the town surveyor, Mr. Whatkeys, whom I found to be a gentleman, and it is through his influence the privilege was given. We are to pay the small sum of twenty-five cents per year for the consideration. There is yet forty-five years on the lease, and as this is the only chapel we have in Wales, I believe that the church in the States should take some steps to have it repaired. The present outward appearance is no credit to us. While I do not wish to despise the day of small things, I do believe that the repairs mentioned would have much weight with the people; besides, they are much needed. Will Bro. Bishop Kelley and counselors please take this under consideration? We have not the means here to make the needful repairs. We need the chapel, and we want to take care of it. I look upon it as a God-given testimony in favor of this church. I do not have to say to our friends, that the courts in the States decided that this is the true and lawful continuation of and successor to the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; organized in 1830, but call their attention to this property, which I hope will be placed in creditable appearance. Please do not forget this. It is the judgment of competent judges that it will take four hundred dollars to repair the chapel and put the railing up.

Inasmuch as the courts have decided that this is the lawful church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, why let others go under that name when their teachings are so corrupt and degrading? Just think of the country being flooded with such doctrine as the Adam-god, blood-atonement, celestial marriage and plurality of wives, by a church calling themselves the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, when the courts have said they are not that church. When I was in business I had a trade-mark on my butter and cheese, namely, "The White Ribbon." This name was stamped on the butter, also the wrappers had in large type, "The White Ribbon." That was to protect my business. Do you suppose that I would allow any person to put that brand or trade-mark on inferior goods? No; the law would protect me. Has the church no rights along this line? True, we have added the word "Reorganized," but what about the balance of the name of, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints? The courts have said that we are entitled in law to all our rights and property. Some of the property we have obtained; what about the name, is that our right?

I was holding meetings at Penygroes (Head of the Rock) when the following question was asked: First. When did the Latter Day Saints Church first teach and practice polygamy? Answer: It never did. At this answer you could hear the people say, "Well, I know they did," and some would go so far as to say, "You lie." When order was restored, second question: When did the Latter Day Saints Church denounce polygamy? This was intended as a catch had the answer come as they supposed it would. But we had truth on our side and all that was needed was to tell it. Answer: The true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has always denounced the evil. This, they thought was saying too much, so I got their attention and explained that the doctrine was first publicly taught by Brigham Young and his followers in Salt Lake City, August 29, 1852; is condemned by the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Third question: What is the proper name of the Salt Lake church? Answer: They call themselves Latter Day Saints, but the courts have decided that they had departed from that faith. Fourth question: Seeing that those people have always gone by the name of Latter Day Saints, why did you not go by some other name? Answer: I stated that we had added the name "Reorganized." Last question: Why not the Salt Lake people leave that name alone, and make them go under some other? Well, I thought so too, and I still think they are no more entitled to that sacred name, that they apply to all their dirt and filth, than the bigamist that is in prison for his crime is entitled to the name of Christian or Saint. Because of their wickedness for the last fifty-five years the name of Latter Day Saint is a stench in the nostrils of the people; more so in this land than in the States. You in the land of Zion have no idea how hard it is to get the people to investigate the work. When this is made clear the work will move forward.

A vision that Bro. George Smith had over thirty years ago while he was living in Boston (he afterward moved to St. Joseph, Missouri, where he died) was related to me in St. Joseph, by him, as follows: He saw a beautiful ship, and she was surrounded by quite a number of boats and small ships, and the water was covered with driftwood and dirty-looking rubbish. On board this beautiful-looking ship, he saw the crew hard at work trying to get the ship out from that wilderness of driftwood and rubbish. He said that he could see that the ship was moving, but slowly, and he noticed quite a number of people getting off the other boats and coming on board the ship. Some he saw jump into this driftwood and were drowned, and to his surprise he saw a few leave the main ship and go into the small craft, as he called them. He thought it strange that they should do this, for he could see that this main ship was so much more desirable. He noticed one man on board this beautiful ship with coat off and sleeves rolled up, working with all his might and strength to get the ship out into clear water. He had in his hand a trumpet or bugle and was conversing with some one in the distance, and receiving instructions concerning the ship. Father Smith said after the vision had passed that he would recognize the person with the bugle in his hand, which he did at a general conference. As he was going into the room, Bro. Joseph was in the stand speaking, and this was the first time he had seen him, except in the vision. The interpretation of the vision is that the beautiful ship is the Reorganized Church, the small boats were the various factions of the church; the driftwood and rubbish were the false teachings and wickedness of the factions; and not until the ship would get out from under the stigma of those factions would she make rapid headway. Bro. Smith said: I saw her out in the clear water, under full sail, making good speed, and the sight was grand.

How true the statement that he who was in charge was working with all his might and strength with coat off, sleeves rolled up, to get the ship out from under the pressure of the driftwood and craft into clear water. No one has done more to move the ship out from the rubbish that has tried to crush her, than our worthy President. He has from the very day he took charge of the ship, worked unceasingly, and to-day she is nearly out in the clear water. May he with others who have spent their lives in the struggle, be spared to give the good old ship of Zion further help till we can see her in port. Several years ago Bro. Joseph made the statement that he might not live to see the accomplishment of the latter-day work, but he hoped to see the day when the name Latter Day Saint would be considered honorable. This is quite true in many parts of the States. May it so be in all the world. How different are the conditions that we have to meet, compared with those of sixty-five years ago, when they suffered great persecution for the gospel's sake. Our sufferings are twofold; first, the mistakes of Brighamism; second, the opposition to the gospel.

We are making slow progress in Wales in the way of additions to the church. We are working diligently to remove the driftwood. Tracts are being circulated extensively. People are willing to read, but slow in coming to the meetings. Thirty or forty years ago the Reorganization had a good foothold in this land. Since then the work has been neglected. Many Saints have moved to the States; the old have passed away. The missionary force was withheld, consequently Wales has had no missionaries. In reports of conferences held in the '60s and '70s forty and more years ago local elders were reporting, with a membership of several hundred. To-day we have only eleven local elders, and seventy-five active members. Had the missionary force been kept up from the time of Brn. Derry, Briggs, Phillips, Jones, Jeremiah, and Davies, until now, we would have had a strong foothold. As the work now is, it will take a strong, steady supply of active missionaries to bring it even where it was thirty years ago. I am pleased to say that we have some good coming men, and we hope to see them placed in the field ere long. We are blessed in our labors and there is a good feeling among the Saints. Peace, love, and the blessings of the gospel are enjoyed in visions, dreams, tongues, prophecies. The voice of the good Spirit is encouraging notwithstanding the indifference the people manifest towards the work.

I wish to say for the benefit of some that were in Wales years ago that good old Sr. Jones, of Nantyglo, widow of Bro. Isaac Jones, is still strong and active, and her memory is like a book. She remembers the days of long ago, when the work was at its best, in the days of Captain Jones, when he was here on his first mission, being sent by Joseph the Martyr. She has cared for elders of the first organization as well as this, and is a noble woman. She is in her eighty-ninth year. She makes her home with Bro. and Sr. John Jones, her son and her daughter-in-law, whose latch-string always hangs on the outside, and where the missionaries always feel at home. She is the grandmother of our missionary Thomas Jones. If he lives to see half the years that grandma has, the people in Wales will have heard many a plain gospel sermon in its purity and simplicity. May grandma's last hours be those of peace.

I have also had the privilege and honor to see Sr. Thomas, late of Neath, now of Pont Rhyd fendigaid. She, too, is one of the old veterans. She is the widow of Bro. Jacob Thomas, the weaver (y Gweydd). When I took her by the hand I remarked that I was highly honored. She wondered why I should so speak. I explained that I had read of people living to be one hundred years old and past, but I never had seen one. She will be one hundred and two the 25th of next March. She is a tall, erect, and handsome old lady. Her eyesight and memory are good. Does not look to be over seventy years old; her hearing is somewhat affected. Forty-six years had passed since I had seen her, and I was then but nine years old. After explaining to her who I was, she remembered my folks, and where they lived, for they were very intimate friends. Is there another in the church who has passed the hundred-mile stone? When a hundred years old her photo was in all the leading papers, together with a sketch of her life. I am pleased to say that her record is good, and she is widely known as a good Latter Day Saint.

I find that one drawback to missionary work in Wales is a lack of places to sleep. There never was in the history of Wales, in the mining district, such scarcity of houses. Around Merthyr and Aberdare, there are over one thousand families that are waiting for tenements. In one neighborhood there are two hundred houses of three and four rooms each, with two and three families in each house. There are two reasons for this lack of room. First, times in Wales have been good for four years up till 1902; but during this year wages have dropped thirty-three per cent; and owing to the good times people have flocked from all parts to Wales. Second; hundreds of old houses have been torn down, and have never been replaced. The prospects are for a large building boom this coming year, if the employers and miners renew the contract so as to evade the strike that is in contemplation, January, 1903.

Yesterday, Sunday, we received from the HERALD Office ten dollars' worth of tracts that some good brother of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, sent. The matter was mentioned to the branch and a hearty vote of thanks was extended to the giver. We should like to have known the name of the giver; nevertheless, if he is working on the principle of not letting his left hand know what his right hand doeth, we shall not urge for the name. Tears of joy came to the happy recipients, and may the brother live to do much good, and be blessed of the Lord. At present we are well supplied with tracts. Only we need some in the Welsh language. I have prepared one that has been sent to the Presidency, and if approved, will be translated and published in the Welsh language if we can get the means to do so. Bro. G. T. Griffiths has written a four-page tract entitled "Facts" concerning the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, showing the mistakes of Brighamism and the true position of the Reorganized Church. It has been translated by Bro. F. J. Pierce and is in the hands of an expert for inspection. This was Bro. Pierce's first effort and we hope it will be a success. Bro. John Hughes, who has done much of that kind of work in the early days, pronounced the work very good. We hope to see our way clear soon to have it printed.

Bro. T. W. Williams has very kindly offered to furnish us a few thousand of his tract, "The Latter Day Saints, Who are they?" if we get it translated, which we will do as soon as we hear from him again. (Bro. Williams, did you get my letter?) If we succeed in getting the above three tracts published in Welsh, and the church sustains not less than six missionaries for a few years, there will be some good done. Had the efforts of Bro. Griffiths and Evans, some ten years ago, been followed by more labors it would have been a blessing for the work in Wales. These brethren have warm friends here and if it were not for Bro. J. R. Evans being aged, there would be a strong effort made to get him to again come and labor. In my judgment, what the mission needs is good, young, active men who will take pleasure in going from house to house; hold outdoor meetings in the summer and not despise the day of small things. As I have said once before, missionaries that come to this land ought to have their families. Let them board at some central point; let the church furnish the home with what is needed, and at this missionary home two other missionaries could always find a stopping-place, providing the good wife and sister, would be willing to do a little extra work. If she is not, best not come. The towns and villages here are so close that three missionaries could be in one house and hold three separate meetings each night and then come home to sleep. Once the missionary house furnished the expense of caring for it would not be as much as three missionaries spend in the States for traveling. Once located here the expense for traveling would be little. One may ask, why not the missionaries make their home with the Saints? There are several reasons. First. Very few can give sleeping room. Second. There are but five places in Wales that an elder can go and labor and know that there is bed room for him. Many will give you plenty to eat and would cheerfully give you lodgings had they the room.

I was offered the use of the Congregational chapel, near Merthyr, and we are holding meetings two nights a week. I had been up there twice but could not find a free lodging place. As I have stated before, houses are scarce and those that have rooms to let, do so. If at Merthyr we had a home, we could easily reach several towns with a total population of over five hundred thousand people. The work once started there is no question but that the elders would get plenty to eat, and later on, some place to sleep. The Saints here would willingly pay so much per week into what may be called the Missionary Fund. Many who can not keep an elder over night would cheerfully pay into the fund. The expense of setting up a missionary home would not exceed one hundred twenty-five dollars. Rent per month six dollars. Now place in this home a missionary and wife, allow them two hundred forty dollars with the understanding that the good wife will look after the home. She has no rent to pay; then let two missionaries make that their home or headquarters and pay for board twenty dollars per month; light and fuel three dollars per month. Total for the first year, seven hundred thirteen dollars. The second year and on one hundred twenty-five dollars less; total for the year, five hundred eighty-eight dollars. This would place three missionaries in the field and they would have a home to go to, and could apply their labor in one neighborhood, and would have a telling effect in two years. The missionary and wife would furnish their own bedding, and if they were from this land they might furnish the home with all except the bed for the missionaries.

With such arrangements in this land where openings for preaching are close together, three elders would do much more good than to turn them loose to travel from one place to the other and then not to be able to hold meetings, only where they can find lodgings, and such places are scarce in this land. This system would do away with traveling expenses, and the expense of supporting the three elders here would not be any more than the traveling expenses of the average three elders in the States. The Saints here would willingly do their part to support such a move. I hope the proper authorities will consider our needs here and come to the support of the work as they think best. I suggest the above plan after a careful consideration and after going over the ground. The day is near at hand when there will be plenty of material here to look after the work, so far as the missionary part is concerned, if supported by the church financially, as I hope they shall be, thereby saving much expense in sending missionaries from the States.

May we be successful the coming year to have at least one home started with three active workers.

Bro. J. E. Meredith, of Birmingham, lately ordered twenty-five thousand tracts for the British Isles, ten thousand, "What we believe," and fifteen thousand, "Facts concerning the true Latter Day Saints Church." In behalf of Wales we return thanks. Bro. Meredith has also promised a sign for the chapel here. He believes in letting the people know where we hold forth. This is a much needed gift and the few Saints here are very grateful for the same. If we can now get the property repaired, it will be quite an attractive and good send off for the work in Llanelly. The Saints at Penygroes are still hopeful of being able in the near future of building their much needed house of worship. To the brethren and sisters who have sent donations to this distant land, we are very thankful. In case the house is not built, the money will be refunded to each person. The committee have deposited the funds in the post office bank department, which is perfectly safe so long as this government stands, which we hope will be till He comes to reign whose right it is to reign as Lord of lords and King of kings.

The following are the names of persons donating for the Penygroes chapel building fund: D. C. Kinnaman $25.00, Lizzie Kinnaman $25.00, M. H. Kinnaman $5.00, G. W. Best $5.00, C. H. Isleib $5.00, Charles E. Hubacher $10.00, William Lawrenson $3.00, C. E. Guinand $2.00, H. D. Ennis $1.00, W. Balbey $1.00, W. E. Lewis $2.00, Elizabeth Morgans $1.00, Thomas R. Jones 50c., Dan Jones 50c., Robert Jones $1.00, Robert Jones, Sr. 50c., Mary Jones 50c., Edward Jones 50c., Thomas Jones, Jr. 50c., Henry Green $1.00, W. Hopkins $1.00, Phœbe Williams 50c., Samuel Tommely 50c., J. E. Meredith $25.00, Mrs. R. P. Hughes $5.00, Sr. Price $10.00, Sr. M. Bishop $5.00, Bro. Swan $5.00, Thomas Jones $1.25.

I am pleased to say that many of our friends in this land have promised to give a helping hand to this enterprise, when called upon to do so, which will be soon. If others in other lands can see their way clear to help, please do so at once, for the committee is anxious to know what it can do, whether to build or not. We do not wish to go in debt if possible to get along without.

The readers of the HERALD must not take offense because I say so much about money. I would not do so if I could see some way to get along without. Even with faith we must have money. The former I have a little and I hope enough to bring about the needs of the work here, which is some hard cash.

Respectfully,

LLANELLY, December 17.

WM. LEWIS.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, January 7.

Editors Herald: The beginning of 1903 finds me in my field of labor, in fairly good health, and quite hopeful for one of my disposition. Here in the East, as elsewhere, we have Saints who are willing to work and who will work; and then we have Saints (?) who are not willing to work and who will not work. It is a good thing to be zealous in the service of the Lord; but zeal without wisdom to direct is often more disastrous to the cause than timidity or lethargy.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding."—Proverbs 3: 13. And the same writer said (Proverbs 3: 21) to "keep sound wisdom and discretion." A lack of "sound wisdom and discretion" is certainly one of the things which stands in the way of the progress of this work. I have been in several branches of the church where there were two or three good Saints, and they were good, too, who seemed to think they had not done their duty if they did not pray a long prayer and make a long talk every time they went to a prayer-meeting. The result has almost invariably been the same: the other Saints become accustomed to the few taking up all the time, and so they make no effort to use the time which properly and justly belongs to them. The few are zealous, very zealous; but they are certainly lacking in "sound wisdom and discretion." And as a rule prayer and testimony-meetings under such conditions are dull and lifeless. If the over-zealous would use a little "sound wisdom and discretion," choke themselves off, and learn to be brief in their prayers and testimonies, it would be far more encouraging for the young, and also for the timid. When will the Saints learn to be wise in these things? "Let us pray for one another."

I wish the HERALD, its editors, and all of its readers, great success in gospel work during the year 1903. Surely the time to favor Zion has come. Are we ready? Are we willing?

May the Lord bless his people, and direct his work.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

STONE CITY, Texas, January 4.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the HERALD with much interest. It is replete with good things. I would be so glad if I could say as much for this part of the vineyard as I read of in some other parts. We move very slowly in Texas. I hope we are making some progress. It seems so; but not what it seems we ought to. When I review the past year with regard to my own experience, I find it to be a checkered one. I have done what I could. Have had some of the severest temptations and trials of life, but out of them all the good Lord has delivered me. My prospects are brighter than ever before: I mean the good Lord has blessed me with greater light than ever before, for which I am so thankful. I feel as though this year is going to be one of great advancement for the good cause, even in Texas, though we have the hardest field I believe that is in the United States. I sometimes get discouraged when I look at the dark side of the matter; but when I look to the good Lord who is at the helm of this latter-day work, I take courage. So I commence this new year with greater zeal and courage, and feeling better than I ever have since I enlisted in this latter-day work. To God be the glory for it.

TRANSLATION.

AVATORU in Rairoa, April 13, 1897.

That you the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which has been reorganized in these last days may understand, because I who am writing this letter have seen with my eyes this gift which has been given to the congregation of the Saints in the branch at Avatoru in Rairoa of the Tahitian division. In the midst of that district resides a girl of the name of Tumaria, the daughter of Taihia, as I suppose about twelve years of age. She has been taken with the disease called oovi, which perhaps is leprosy; on a certain day when her disease was greatly increased, and it was thought that she would die, the French gendarme was informed concerning her, as he was in charge of that district, on which account the French governor and the governor of that district came, and as they found that it was a very bad disease and that it would be very likely to spread among the people of that district, in consequence of which the parents of the girl were ordered by the government officials to remove her outside of the limits of the district, on which account she and her parents were caused to remove outside of the district. And when this girl had learned the distressing condition she was in, she requested her parents to go for the elders of the church and request them to come and administer to her; the elders then went and anointed her with olive-oil and laid their hands upon her and prayed with her.

On the next Sabbath day the 18th of April, 1897, the Saints assembled for fasting and prayer, and these gatherings for prayer that the girl might be healed were continued until Friday, the 23d of April, 1897, when they were closed because she was healed; and when it was known that she was healed she was permitted to return to her own home in that district.

And during the years following she departed from the faith; and then it was that this girl was again taken with her former disease, and was worse than ever; as we were informed at her death and at her burial in the month of May, 1900; on which account, dear friends, let us consider the words of Christ to a person who was greatly afflicted, and whom he healed at Bethesda, "Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee."—John 5: 14.

Written by Tufaunui, president of the branch in Avatoru, and missionary in the Tahitian division at present.

An extract from his (Tufaunui's.—J. F. B.) book by the secretary of the mission; D. M. Pohemiti.

Editors Herald: The above testimony was related to me at the April conference at Avatoru in 1899, and I wanted to get the statement of the gendarme to the circumstance, but could not, as my time was so completely occupied until we left Avatoru.

The "oovi" is a form of leprosy not uncommon here. The government is talking of putting them all on the Island of Meetia by themselves.

D. M. Pohemiti copied this testimony from the diary of Tufaunui in Niau in September last.

In hope of eternal life, I am your brother in Christ Jesus, PAPEETE, Tahiti, December 20, 1902.

CHICAGO, Illinois, January 2.

Editors Herald: The letters in the HERALD and Ensign are so full of help to us all, I feel perfectly satisfied when I can sit down for an hour or so and feast on the good things written there. I always feel stronger and more able to cope with the things of this world. How we are made to rejoice at times as we read of the glorious victories, while at other times we are saddened at the hardships and many unpleasant things the elders are compelled to bear; surely they need the prayers of all that they may keep to the front. May the dear Lord bless those left at home for their lives of self-sacrifice and love.

Our sincere desire is to be faithful to the end.

We desire to do something for the cause, and we give out reading-matter to all who will accept and read it. Our Book of Mormon is loaned at present to a Christian Missionary Alliance minister, a very broad-minded man. He seemed very anxious to learn the contents of the book; he is not ignorant of our work. We had several very pleasant talks. I have attended some of their services, which are very near to us in some things. The members seem whole-souled and very much filled with God's love and Spirit. They believe in divine healing and we talked at length on this subject. They depend on the Lord for their living and the wife told me there were many times when they hardly knew where things were coming from but the Lord always provided some way out of the difficulty. They are very humble, and are out of the sects. They also hold to immersion as the right mode for baptism. I also attend a mission close to my home conducted by the Congregationalist people. The man and his wife who have been really the head of it have moved away, that is, he has gone to the northern part of Iowa and she will go later on. She is very anxious that I should enter right in with them and teach the primary class, which numbers fifteen or twenty. She said to me: "We need you, Mrs. Horton, and I can not see why you will not work with us." I told her I should be glad to help all I could. They also have asked me to take charge of the prayer-meeting once a month. I have helped them a great many times and have been blessed in so doing.

I wish I might make an opening for some of the brethren to come out and preach. Just at present I am housed up with our little daughter, who has been sick with the scarlet fever. She has recovered enough to be up, but we must stay in for several weeks yet. Have been made to rejoice at the goodness of God in our present trouble, and especially in our own case we were made to praise and thank God for his goodness. I was taken sick just when health was needed to take care of our little girl. I had chills, fever, severe pains in head, and finally sore throat. Tried to do what we could for my throat when it seemed to be swollen worse. In despair I knelt and appealed to God to remove the affliction that I might be able to care for our sick child, and sooner than it takes to tell it, all the swelling was taken from my throat. Praise God's holy name for answering the feeble prayer. Later on I was administered to, and have felt better every day. How thankful we are we have a God who hears and answers prayer.

May we all live in such a way that the Lord can own and bless us and that we may live and reign with Christ when he comes to claim his own, is my prayer. Your sister,

MINDEN MINES, Missouri, January 4.

Editors Herald: In HERALD for December 24, I noticed Bro. M. H. Forscutt's letter about knowing men by the name of Mormon. I also knew a family by that name. They lived where I was raised at Cowden Hill house, six miles north of Glasgow, Scotland. There was Mr. Mormon and his wife, and a son called James, a young man about twenty-four years of age. Mr. Mormon and his wife were well up in years, but I could not say how old they were. That was about forty-four years ago. The family was Irish.

I also have in my possession a paper called the Ulster County Gazette, published on January 4, 1800, and in it I find the name General Mormon.

I write this for the information of those who are interested in this holy record, the Book of Mormon. W. R. STEELE.

LYDNEY, England, December 23.

Editors Herald: It is so very seldom we read anything from Lydney and the Forest of Dean in the HERALD that I thought a few lines would not be amiss. The work of the Lord is still moving on here, though progress as far as baptisms are concerned is but small; but we do not measure our work by that tape. We have still a good deal of prejudice to fight down, and we are glad and happy to say that the amount before us now is small compared to what it once was. In 1897 some gentlemen prophesied that a few months would settle us; but they were false prophets, for we are here to-day, and we are here to stay. We have a nice little church here, with room enough to seat at least one hundred fifty, and to place this building as it now is has cost considerably over two hundred pounds. And as the branch is small and the members very poor in this world's goods, the burden has been laid on a few.

The branch is in a good spiritual condition, and I wish I could say the same of our temporal affairs; but we do not expect to get rich yet. To maintain our church building costs us over eight shillings each week, and this is a big pull considering we do not get many to hear us. Bro. T. S. Griffiths is our president, and deserves great credit for the way and manner he presides over his little flock. He is a hard worker in church and Sunday-school (which numbers something like forty). So also are Brn. C. Kelsey and T. Ellis, who are devoted to the latter-day work. Taking all together the branch is composed of men and women who do not fear to stand for the truth, people who strive to love each other and a people, both officers and members, always willing to learn. I most earnestly pray that through the grace of God we may continue.

We are convinced that from here the work has to spread in this part of the earth. But before it goes forward much we want some missionaries who like plenty of work and who will labor round us and tract from house to house during the day and at evening stand in the open air and preach. People will not come to us, so we must in some way go to them.

We are glad to note that the church is beginning to see the need of sending the men two and two; and better still, instead of rushing about from place to place, settle for a season in one place and labor there. We are glad of this because we feel assured that nothing but a persistent effort will persuade people to believe the truth. The members of the branch here, I am sure, will assist all in their power any who may come here to labor; but we do not bind ourselves to anything, as our time, which is not much, is required in branch duties.

We have, roughly speaking, within a circle of fourteen miles about fifty thousand people, all within easy reach, but no means of reaching them. May it please the Lord to so direct his servants that the day may not be far distant when we shall have some missionaries laboring around us. There is a big work in the Forest for the servants of God; and, the writer believes, plenty of opposition. But judging from my experience among the people, and I am among them a good deal, it will come chiefly from those who profess to follow Christ. Speaking for those who do not go anywhere, or profess anything as to religion, I can truly say a more reasonable, kind-hearted people can not be found. May the Lord bless his work, and may it go forward speedily unto the fulfillment of all things which the Lord has spoken, is my prayer.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, January 2.

Editors Herald: "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."—Ecclesiastes 7: 29. Also, "They provoked him to anger with their inventions."—Psalms 106: 29. While people of various parts of the earth are striving to invent something new, Louisville is not idle, for there is a Mrs. Hedges here who claims to have the Lord with her all the time. He first came to her on January 9, three years ago, and told her that he had called her to bring light in the world in this age (and Christ is that light, she says) even as the Virgin Mary was called to bring Christ in the world nineteen hundred years ago. She has had a new stable built on Eleventh Street, about twenty-four feet square. In it she has an altar and a table for the Lord's supper. She says before the Lord comes in person he will be over the stable in a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. She has a cow stable attached to the building, in which are two cows which the Lord is to speak through when he comes. She says when she talks it is not her but the Lord talking through her. He is also taking her through the Bible (using her own words) and marking all that is of God, and when she gets through then the good is to be taken out and all the Bibles are to be burned and the Lord through her is to give the world a new Bible. I asked her if she was to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord in this age as John the Baptist did in his day. She answered yes. I said, "Then you are both John the Baptist and the Virgin Mary." Then she changed her answer somewhat and said she was not to take the place of John the Baptist. She seems to be always ready to tell her story, and says it never causes her to take a cold though she stands on the porch and talks all day, for the Lord is always with her and will not allow her to catch a cold.

There is also a chicken house adjoining the stable, and the personal coming of Jesus is to be made known by the crowing of a cock. The stable is covered with iron within and without, so it is fire proof. I asked if she was the only person on earth at present that God spoke through. Her answer was yes.

Solomon of old said there is no new thing under the sun, but I guess he did not know Mrs. Hedges. Many people visit the place every day, but she never is too busy to explain all to her visitors; and if she is about to be cornered by some argument she will say the Lord has not shown her that yet. She has left the entire thirteenth chapter of the Acts unmarked, so it is all to be burned as false doctrine.

BRODHEAD, Kentucky, January 5.

Dear Herald Readers: We belong to the Toledo Branch, Ohio, but moved here not quite two months ago, and feel we are among the isolated ones, as we know of no Saints for many miles. We read of them in the southwestern part of the State, and if there are any nearer we would be pleased to hear from them, and would like to know what district we are in. We should like to hear from the officers, as Bro. Forbes is an elder and is ready to labor for the upbuilding of Zion's cause wherever he has the opportunity, and he wishes to work in harmony with those in authority. He has preached a few times out in the country, and the people seemed interested, attentive, and glad to hear.

This is a small country town. The people are pleasant and sociable, and we think it would be a good opening for missionary labor. We are striving to live and let our light shine that they may see by our lives that we are children of the Master we profess to serve.

The Utah elders have labored here some, so of course we are closely watched, but we know the Father will care for his own, and we do not fear their watching.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people, and ever pray for Zion's welfare.

Your sister,

EVA FORBES.

AKRON, Ohio, January 3.

Editors Herald: I have been in the work about four years and I will never forget the first attempt I ever made to send a letter to be printed. I was quite young then, and when the rest of the folks had retired I made an excuse that I wished to study, and I quietly went to my room and started to write a letter. I had completed it, and as it was quite late I was growing very tired and of course I was some excited. I started the letter on two or three sheets of paper and because they did not suit I started it on other paper. When I had finished the letter I decided to tear up the papers that did not suit me because they might give my secret away. The secret was that I wished to keep it from my mamma and papa until it came out in the HERALD. When I had finished it I quickly tore up what papers I thought were of no account and quietly folded the supposed letter and laid it under my pillow. The next morning I addressed the envelope, and when I came to read my letter I found that I had one sheet of paper that contained a part of my letter and the other papers which I had intended to tear up. I then said I would never write another letter to be published. I had to tell my trouble to some one, so I went to mamma and told her all about it. This was, as I said before, my first attempt, but I decided to try again. I took this motto: If you try and do not succeed, try, try again.

The Saints are all prospering in Akron and there is a bright day in the future for every good and true Latter Day Saint.

Yours in bonds,

VERA M. DALBERG.

WRAY, Colorado, January 6.

Editors Herald: I wish you a Happy New Year, and I trust it will be a very prosperous year for the church. I am domiciled at the home of Bro. Joseph Weller, where I have been kindly cared for, for the past ten days, while Bro. E. D. Bullard and I have been holding meetings at the North Weller Schoolhouse, which is about ten miles southeast of Wray, with good interest and fair attendance, and the people have been very attentive. We shall keep up these meetings for another week and by that time we trust that some of our hearers will be ready to enter the fold by being baptized.

I ever pray for the prosperity of Zion's cause.

JAMES KEMP.

WATAGA, Missouri, January 2.

Editors Herald: Since coming in this church I have enjoyed more of the blessed Spirit of Christ than in all my life before. I first united with the Christian Church when thirteen years of age, and tried to do the best I knew how, and felt blessed to some extent for so doing. I then united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, but some how never felt exactly at home; but I can now say I have entered into the sheepfold through the door and am perfectly satisfied. Yea, more than I ever thought could be enjoyed in this earth have I enjoyed of my heavenly Father's love. He has manifested himself to me a great many times.

When afflicted he has comforted me, and three or four times when apparently at death's very door has he sent his blessed healing Spirit, for which I feel to praise and bless his holy name.

Dear Saints, pray for me that I may fight the good fight of faith until death. I hope ever to be found ready to uphold the banner of Christ and this blessed restored gospel which I feel is the power of God unto salvation.

Your sister,
FLORENCE TOOVEY.

WEST BAY CITY, Michigan.

Editors Herald: The old year has bidden us a lingering farewell in her sad, sweet way, and has passed into pathetic silence. Experiences reaped from her fields are varied and educational. To me the year has brought both cloud and sunshine, as most years usually do to mortals. But amid the conflict I have felt and do feel that God is near the ones who trust him.

Retrospectively, I see where errors have crept in, where failures have dulled the lustre of an achieved success. But let men fail, let wrong seem to rule where right should govern, it will not detract a single sparkling gem from the diadem of principle, as revealed in the ethics of the Christ. The religion of Jesus must ever appeal to the intelligent mind, the tender heart, and the soul where the love of principle predominates. Faulty administration of law may occur, and is even expected of man, in his human frailty, but the law itself must remain enshrined in splendor.

Thus the new year finds me an humble though possibly weak devotee to the All Good. I read of the success of the brethren in the field with a prayer of gratitude to God for men of sufficient grace and strength to continue the contest, which oftentimes seems so unequal.

My permanent address is still 1007 North Catherine Street, West Bay City, Michigan.

Mail sent there will always reach me. Will the secretary of the Fifth Quorum of Elders please take notice, and forward blanks or correspondence accordingly.

I desire the correspondence of any who feel disposed to write. May a kind and indulgent Father still care for his people, is my prayer.

E. A. GOODWIN.

DEER LODGE, Montana, January 6.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a paper that I could hardly do without. It is a welcome visitor. Our branch here has a very large membership enrolled on its books, but they are very badly scattered, and only a few are here to attend meetings. We are endeavoring to keep the Sunday-school moving. We have a small attendance, but are getting along very well. We are going to start a Religio next Friday.

G. E. SPRAGE.

REA, Missouri, January 3.

Editors Herald: For the last three months Bro. Joseph Ensley and I have been laboring together, and have had some ups and downs in the way of trials and hardships, yet I do not wish to complain.

In the month of October Bro. Ensley and I started into our field of labor. We started with a poor, lame horse and a poor buggy,—a rig that I was ashamed of. But we plodded along, and after a time we got a much better rig. The months of October and November passed as we worked our way eastward through the Southern Missouri District. We found the place where Bro. A. M. Baker got the eggs dished out to him so freely that he made some complaint about the smell. We held meetings in a private house, and had a nice time.

At Cave Springs we held another series of meetings beginning on the first day of December. On the night of the 8th my subject was the Book of Mormon and prehistoric America. A fine crowd was before me, and I had just reached the main subject when "crash!" went a window glass, and osage apples whistled by my head just as if I had been placed up for a target. Windows crumbled in on both sides of me as though they were through with the house and would never use it any more. And for me to give a reason why I was not hit with anything more than fine glass would be to bring in the hand of Him whose arm is outstretched in defense of the message we bear. Two lamps, one on each side of me, stood the storm and were not even put out. One young sister was struck and knocked senseless for a moment. One or two more were hit, but not badly hurt. And of all the excited crowds I ever saw that was the worst. They ran over one another, just any way at all to get out doors, and the report soon came to me that the next would be shooting, and I told them that they would not hit any one but the preacher. So I called them to order again and finished my sermon. I preached the next night, and closed.

I am still alive and in the field.

JAMES F. DAVIS.

RAYMOND, Idaho, January 5.

Editors Herald: Since last writing I have labored in various places in Idaho and Wyoming, doing what I could for the Master's cause, also visited Round Valley, and Bear River Valley in Northeastern Utah; but conditions not being favorable at the time, I did no preaching there. From there I went to Evanston, Wyoming, where I found that the friends I expected to find had gone from home; and being a stranger, with scant funds to pay my way, I went elsewhere. I went to Spring Valley, Wyoming, where a nephew of Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, David G. Thomas, lives. He is not a member of the church. Not finding conditions favorable for religious services, I passed on to Fort Bridger, and about eight miles southeast of Fort Bridger I came to the home of J. Nelson Van Fleet, where I met with a hearty welcome. I tarried with them a few days, preaching, distributing tracts, and doing what I could to instruct those whom I met, in the gospel plan of salvation. From there I went to Cumberland, a new coal-mining town, expecting to find Bro. and Sr. Rowland, but learned that they had moved to Pocatello. Other friends also had moved away, and so I only tarried one night. From there I went to Diamondville, where Bro. and Sr. Kingover live, and although surrounded with much wickedness, they are still in the faith. Did what I could to strengthen them in the faith, and encourage them to renewed efforts to overcome all obstacles thrown in their way. From there I went to Kemmerer, where on former visits I made some friends. Was kindly received by those friends, and during my stay with them tried to get them interested in the gospel; but the outlook for gospel work at that time was not good in any of those mining towns, so I did no preaching but came on to Ham's Fork, where had formerly done considerable preaching. But when I arrived here I learned the people had all moved away except two families. I tarried with them a few days, and then on to Cokeville, the last town I visited in Wyoming. There was some interest manifested at the latter place and I hope to be able to make some converts there in the near future. From there I came to the Thomas Fork Valley in Idaho, and did some preaching near Raymond. Some appear to be interested at this place and have stated to others that they believe the Josephite church is the true church.

On December 16, I left the Thomas Fork Valley and started for Malad City, to attend the Idaho District conference. I stopped at Montpelier and McCammon on the way. Near the latter place live Bro. and Sr. Andrew Goodenough, who are still in the faith, although they have not had the privilege of meeting with the Saints for many years.

Conference of the Idaho District convened with the Malad Branch, December 20 and 21. The Spirit of the Master was present throughout the conference, and we all felt it was good to thus meet together, and I believe that good will result from the efforts put forth there to elevate the Saints to a higher plane of thought and action.

From there I went to Elkhorn where I preached four times to small but interested audiences, and believe that if a protracted effort should be made there, it would result in an ingathering of precious souls into the church. I spoke of this to Bro. W. S. Pender who is now located at Malad City and I believe he will look after the work at Elkhorn. While at Elkhorn I was kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. John Vanderwood. Bro. Vanderwood kindly letting me have his horse and buggy, or else taking me to the place of meeting with his team. I wish to mention the loving kindness of the dear Saints of Malad, of their kind hospitality and financial assistance given me while there, and especially Bro. Elias E. Richards, who hitched up his team and brought me fifteen miles or more on my journey homeward on a very cold day. May the divine Master bless them all in my prayer.

I came home on the last day of the year and spent New Year's day with my family. Preached once in Thomas Fork Valley since I came home.

The outlook for gospel work is brighter in Idaho than ever before. If all is well I expect to go to the Bear Lake Country to-morrow to labor for the Master. And may all who labor in the Master's vineyard be blessed with all that is needful to sustain them in the conflict during all the days of our warfare, is the prayer of your brother and fellow laborer in the gospel,

A. J. LAYLAND.

OAKLAND, California, January 5.

Editors Herald: I am feeling well in the work. One gave name for baptism, formerly an apostle with the Bickertonites, an enthusiastic man. Splendid meetings yesterday, the first Sunday, as in fact we are having all the time. Baptisms are very scarce, but the Saints are growing in spirituality and wisdom, those who are using their talents. Too many who might be powers for good for the Lord are permitting their talents to rest in idleness. We are laboring to awaken such, and shall so continue, leaving the results with God. We are more than usually blessed with the Spirit in presenting the word. Many earnest Saints here have started the new year with additional interest in gospel work. The missionary is well sustained and his labors appreciated by the active ones.

The work in San Francisco is moving on quietly under the charge of Bishop Parkin. We visit them about every Sunday, morning or evening. The presence in the city of Brn. J. A. Anthony, J. A. Saxe, G. S. Lincoln, Edgar Smith, with Bishop C. A. Parkin in charge, gives them a good force of workers, more than we have on this side of the bay. But they willingly come and help as they are called upon, which is nearly every Sabbath.

We have here our veteran Bro. J. B. Price, who is willing to assist at all times; also such men as J. M. Cockerton, R. Ferris, W. F. Wille, E. R. Williams, C. C. Day, and others who are each doing a good part as local helpers. Others of younger years and experience are developing for future workers in the vineyard, each to occupy in his own place and sphere, and do his own work, and not that of another.

There does not seem to be attractiveness in the gospel to make a protracted meeting possible, while elsewhere we read, not with jealousy, but joy, of crowded houses and deep interest. Why not here is a question I can not solve; but God knoweth. The indications of the Spirit are that only here and there will be found one willing to receive the truth; hence we need not expect the throngs. In conversation with a Methodist revivalist who had worked in nearly every State in the Union, he informed me that California was behind in religious interest. Again we ask, Why?

We try to view this work as that of God. "My kingdom is from thence," says Jesus, and try to recognize myself, and counsel others to recognize the overruling hand and wisdom of God in its gradual development and culmination, which is the preparation of a Zion to meet the coming Bridegroom. The part to be played by the membership now is to attain unto a pure life, the elimination of the old leaven, and the activity in the soul of the new, the love of God, the love for man. There must be a lifting above petty jealousies, which so often irritate, before Saints can dwell together in Zion with one heart and one mind. To reach this point will require all the powers of man rightly used, supplemented by divine grace and strength. When the Saints are pure in heart, the Lord will open wide Zion's gates and let them in. God's ways are the best ways. Nothing counts in this work better than a humble, consistent, pure life. Eloquence and words are nothing compared to it.

Yours in the field, praising the Lord,

J. M. TERRY.

EAST DENNIS, Massachusetts, January 6.

Editors Herald: News from this part of the vineyard through the HERALD is very seldom read. The Saints of Massachusetts are very slack in contributing to any of the church papers, and forget that the friends who have removed from us are intensely interested in any news which may come from their old home. Our young people could easily furnish very interesting news, and instructive matter to our readers in distant fields, if they would, and thus show their interest not only in their old friends, but also in the success of our HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. Let us wake up to our duties.

The silent reaper has claimed another of our number since the new year opened, Sr. Mary Ames, of Brockton, Massachusetts. Her home was always a welcome place for the servants of the Lord. We shall miss Sr. Mary.

The work in Dennisport is not as full of promise as we would like to see it. Indifference and an utter disregard to duty seem to have fastened themselves upon some. The neat, nicely carpeted and seated chapel (the work largely of the faithful few sisters) seems to have no charm to many who live very near its door. What excuse will you have to make, Saints, when you have to answer for this neglect before the Master? The golden opportunities of the now are being pushed aside, unimproved, slighted, never to pass your way again. "Arouse, arouse, why idly stand?" We have no time to idle away.

How different with the sisters of East Dennis whose lives are often made very hard by the opposition and the cruel words of their companions. They came about eight miles to meeting with faces beaming with delight and thankfulness to God for the privilege. How earnestly they prayed for the time to come when they could live in peace, and always have the opportunity to attend meeting. To this we most fervently say, amen.

Our faithful brother, N. C. Eldredge, who has labored here for many years, should have the support of his flock, and some mark of appreciation for labor among them. We are working on several cases which must be attended to by an elders' court, and thus vindicate the rights of the church. Unpleasant work to be engaged in, but most essential when sin and iniquity abound among the people of God. The great need everywhere seems to be efficient labor by branch officers. How many of the serious troubles which have to be attended to by elders' courts could be settled if handled by branch officers before they have assumed such serious proportions! The visiting of Saints in their families by the acting priest, his timely counsel, spiritual exhortations and prayers, will result in much good, and the good results be seen in the attendance at regular church services and spiritual power manifested. The Saints need these visits or our Father would not have made the provision he has for them. When this work is not done the Saints feel they have been neglected, and they lose the respect and esteem they had had towards the brother who is known as the priest of the branch, and the results are disastrous to the spiritual growth of the branch.

When a teacher fails to attend to the duties of his office, and permits evil speaking, backbiting, and hardness to prevail in the church among its membership, without putting forth proper efforts to stop this devilish work, it fastens itself upon the membership, like the octopus upon its victim, sapping its vitality, its spiritual power, until the whole body is affected and that branch of the vine loses its vitality, and fails to bring forth fruit pleasing to the Master.

Are we not our brother's keeper to a great extent? Surely as officers in the church of Jesus Christ we are, for our duties are clearly defined in this relationship. Then to Him who has called us we stand or fall, as we do or neglect to do our duty. How seriously the whole branch is affected by the negligence of one officer in the performance of his duty! The Master says "line up." If the officers will line up, the branch will "line up" with them, and if each branch "lines up" the whole church will be just where the Master wants us to be: And if we are doing this we can sing with the Spirit and the understanding,

"For now we are the Bride adoring Preparing for the great I Am."

My advice and counsel to others can be worth but little unless I am attending to my own duties; so I want to show by my works, by faithful service, that I am working towards the success I am expecting of my brother.

While we are pointing out the defects, as we view them from our standpoint of judgment in the work of the district, we have none the less appreciation of faithful service rendered by the faithful ones, for we have many faithful ones here; but we want all to come up to the position designated by the Master we should occupy. We feel to say in conclusion, "O Lord thy people bless. Arm them with holiness, hear us we pray."

Yours in the conflict,
RICHARD BULLARD.

SACRAMENTO, California, January 8.

Editors Herald: Since last writing to your columns, our district tent was prepared for use by a new top to it being made by the Saints of Sacramento, where Bro. John Carmichael and the writer began a series of meetings, preaching nights and distributing tracts in the day. Bro. John here met with a mishap of a rather serious character, for the time being, which, perhaps, might have been avoided had he followed the example of an illustrious predecessor by name, of whom it is recorded: "My son John went to bed with his breeches on." As he failed to imitate this pattern, and the embraces of morpheus were one night too powerful for him to throw off, he awoke one bright Sunday morning in the tent (where he slept in order that the tent might not be carried off in the night) and found, to his dismay, that although his bed and the tent were still there, all of his wearing apparel, watch, money, valise, and books had been appropriated by some insatiable wanderer of the night; fortunately he had other clothing at the writer's house, and as soon as possible it was transferred to him for his relief.

The heat became so oppressive that it became impossible to labor much during the day, and no interest being manifested in the meetings, we removed to Oakland and labored there and in that vicinity until time for our reunion at San Jose. At Oakland I baptized a lady eighty-seven years of age, which called forth the exclamation from Bro. Parkin: "Isn't that the eleventh hour for you?"

At the reunion Bro. Carmichael worked hard and diligently with assistance of Bro. Etzenhouser and some of the local Saints, in order to make the reunion a success from a standpoint of finance and comfort, and an enjoyable and a spiritual time was had.

After the reunion closed Sr. Bates took wife and myself by wagon to see Alum Rock Park, some miles distant from San Jose. We secured specimens of Meteor Rock, which is said to be a fragment weighing about two thousand tons, supposed to have been broken off from some meteor and hurled to this planet. There are several kinds of mineral waters within a short distance of each other in this park, and also petrified sticks, dirt, etc., in abundance. It is situated in a pretty canyon several miles in extent, and on one side is a pretty cave about fifty feet long composed of rock substances which in places hang down, forming columns that look like icicles, formed by the action of alum and moisture.

Leaving our genial Bro. Carmichael at San Jose, my labors during the balance of the year were destined to be mostly alone. A few services were held at Irvington where we were royally entertained by Bro. and Sr. E. S. Chase, and we then started for Oakland in order to be there for our conference, which met October 4. While at this place I attended a lecture in Berkeley given by Professor George H. Pepper on the "Cliff-dwellers," held under the auspices of the Berkeley University. He said: "In Chaco alone there must have been eleven thousand Cliff-dwellers." By the stereopticon he exhibited a round tower and gave his opinion that it may have been used as a watchtower. The reason assigned why the doorways entering these dwellings were so narrow at the bottom and notched wider a distance above was, that the place might be more easily defended and yet admit a bulky burden on the shoulders of a man entering hastily in retreat from a foe. Much other matter presented showed that the speaker had made considerable examination of the subject, and the writer felt well repaid for going to the lecture.

At Ione some meetings were held in Isaac's Hall, and three were baptized there. Bro. T. W. Davis generously met the expenses of these meetings. He was appointed to the mission-field but was prevented from filling the appointment, but expressed his intentions of doing so the coming year.

Being detained at Sacramento some time, as Mrs. Phillips was preparing to return to Boston, the day of separation came all too soon and she was on her way to relatives and friends in the East. The following day found me in Chico, where services were held Sunday, thence to Centerville, fifteen miles distant, where a series of meetings was held. Sr. Hintz, formerly a Baptist, accepted the restored gospel and with Sr. Starkey was baptized in Chico Creek. We have some noble Saints here who have received testimony of the work, and by righteous lives, are influences for good.

May we ever merit the divine approval, is the earnest wish of your brother,
A. B. PHILLIPS.

Officers reporting: Elders R. T. Walters, T. J. Bell, M. R. Shoemaker, Luther Simpson, Thomas Broad; Priests Abram Jones and Jacob Waltenbaugh; Deacon Thomas Lilly. Bishop's agent's report showed a collection of $498.40; paid out $376.94; balance on hand $121.46. His books were audited and found correct. Report of district treasurer: Balance last report 39 cents; received $12.01; total $12.40; expenses 45 cents; balance $11.95. Jacob Waltenbaugh, R. T. Walters, T. J. Bell, and Alice M. Simpson were chosen as delegates to General Conference. Speakers during conference were T. J. Bell, M. R. Shoemaker, R. T. Walters. Next conference is to convene at Beardstown, June 6 and 7. Our conference closed with a motion that a resolution be sent to General Conference asking to have the same missionaries returned to this field. A vote of thanks extended to the Saints for their kindness and hospitality.

Two-Day Meetings.

The Mobile District, Alabama, will hold two-day meetings at the following named places and dates: Bluff Creek, Mississippi, January 24 and 25; Bayminette, Alabama, February 7 and 8; Theodore, Alabama, February 21 and 22; Three Rivers, Mississippi, February 28 and March 1. G. W. Sherman, president of district.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

The Saints and friends of the St. Louis District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will please take notice that in accordance with the recommendation made by said district at its conference held on December 27, 1902, Elder Russell Archibald, Jr., has been appointed Bishop's agent for said district in and for said church, in place of Bro. John G. Smith, resigned on account of failing health. Bro. Archibald is well known in the St. Louis District, and in many portions of the church, and needs no special commendation from the Bishopric for this work. We take pleasure in making the appointment, and trust the Saints will unanimously aid him in the work.

It is also with regret that we part with the efficient and competent services of the former agent, Brother John G. Smith, who has been diligent and faithful for a number of years. We trust the Lord may bless and sustain him in his declining years.

In behalf of the Bishopric, witness this tenth day of January A. D., 1903.
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Notices.

Bro. Clare A. Sherman, who is teacher of the First Chicago Branch, and whose address is 1494 Van Buren Street, desires to know the addresses of the following persons. Carpenter, Calvin and Mary Gillett, Clinton D. Sandford, Mary Van Buren, Dora H. Larkey, Henry J. Hanna, James H. Tate, Eliza H. Ozier, William A. Bardwell, Rosa and Charles Kitchingman, Emile Finkbine, Philip Kitchingman, Amanda Larson, Joseph Larson, Lulu and Arthur Larkey, Mabel Daniels, Kate Kitchingman, Leonard Shaw, Ida May Crawford, Edith May McLaws, Louis Liest, Marie E. Mandole, Eliza Barling, Missouri Taylor, William G. Mette, Alta Briggie, Olive M. Dahlen, Nels Anderson, Henry Ingalls, Della Johnson, Jennie Rickert.

Fourth Quorum of Deacons, please send me your reports for the past year; also let me know if you are coming to General Conference. Come, all who can, as there is some important business to be done. If any want to join the quorum, please make application through Church Secretary. My address is Guilford, Missouri. Robert Nelson, president of quorum.

To the Pottawattamie Saints: Unable to reach you all personally I take this method of expressing my thanks to those who so generously contributed to the purchase of a roller-top desk for my Christmas present. While I appreciate the value and convenience of the gift, I am especially pleased to receive it as a token of your good will, which I hope to merit. May the joy of my Christmas be yours for the year.

Married.

PROUDFIT—COSTER.—At the home of the bride's mother, at Bartlett, Iowa, January 1, 1903, Mr. John Proudfit and Sr. Ida Coster, Elder S. Orton officiating in the ceremony, which was witnessed by a number of friends and relatives. The bride and groom will make their home at Percival, Iowa, to which they will go with best wishes and prayers of many relatives and friends. May God keep them in the narrow way.

GREEN—ECKHART.—In the Saints' chapel, near Onslow, Iowa, Bro. Orrillus E. Green and Sr. Mary E. Eckhart were united in marriage by Elder J. W. Peterson, at high noon. A New Year's sermon was announced, after which the betrothed parties marched into the church to the time of a wedding march played by Sr. Peterson and were married in the presence of Saints and friends. After congratulations were extended the entire congregation was kindly invited to partake of the wedding feast at the home of the newly-married couple. Nearly all accepted the invitation. Bro. Green's former companion was for many years assistant editor of the Hope, and his second wife stands not one whit behind in ability and intelligent understanding of the latter-day work.

Died.

ANDERSON.—At the home of Bro. and Sr. W. W. Morrison, Oakland, California, Bro. Edward Anderson passed away after a lingering illness of five years, on December 31, 1902, at the age of 30 years, 2 months, 24 days. He was buried from the church, January 2, 1903; funeral in charge of Bro. J. B. Price; sermon by J. M. Terry. Bro. Anderson is the son of William Anderson, who accompanied Bro. A. H. Smith as missionary first to the West. He leaves two sisters to mourn: Sr. W. W. Morrison, of Oakland, and Sr. Minnie F. Davis, of San Francisco. Edward was anxious to depart and be at rest.

ELLISON.—Sr. Edna, wife of Bro. Lehigh Ellison, died December 22, 1902. She was the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Jacob Lamasters, and was born September 20, 1877, in Ohio. Removed to Western Iowa with her parents in 1882, and was married to Bro. Ellison July 6, 1898; was baptized by Bro. Mark Forscutt, at Logan, Iowa, in 1894. She was a great and patient sufferer and died in the hope of the first resurrection. Funeral services at the home by Elder J. A. Donaldson.

DAVIS.—Madelene Opel, at Maquoketa, Iowa, December 31; 1902. She was born August 25, 1898. Inside of three years Bro. and Sr. Davis have laid three children away. First, Frankie passed away, then Margerie, then the baby. They are laid side by side and three little mounds mark where the earthly remains are; but their spirits are with God, they are free from their pains and afflictions. These little buds of promise are only transplanted into the kingdom of heaven, rejoicing in the presence of God and his angels. Services conducted by Elder John Heide at the house in Maquoketa, Iowa.

BROWN.—Fred S., second child of Bro. and Sr. Edward Brown, died at his home, Sargentville, Missouri, December 29; was born May 22, 1882. He was in perfect health up to a few days before his death. Was taken sick with mumps, and five days afterwards was called home. Funeral services at the home by Bro. John Billings; interment in Brookside Cemetery.

AMES.—At Brockton, Massachusetts, January 2, 1903, Sr. Mary Ames passed peacefully away after an illness of forty-six hours from paralysis. She leaves her companion to mourn her departure, but not as one without hope. Funeral services by Elder F. O. Coombs. Interment at Dennisport, January 5.

LANE.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, January 4, 1903, Bessie, wife of Edwin H. Lane and daughter-in-law of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Lane, formerly of Nodaway County, Missouri, aged 18 years, 4 months and 18 days. She left a baby one month old. Her death was very sudden and unexpected up to the last hour. Her maiden name was Coffelt, and she was a member of the Methodist Church. Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral sermon and the body was taken to Ravenwood, Missouri, for burial.

An article on the amusements of children in The Delineator for February contains a wealth of practical suggestions. Most mothers are usually at their wit's ends to provide suitable entertainment for the children. The kindergarten is an aid in the solution of this problem; but it only occupies a portion of the child's time. The work of the kindergarten should be supplemented by play and instruction of a like character in the home. The seed sown in the heart and mind of the child bears abundant fruit in later years and the good that they derive from song and story and healthful bodily exercise can not be overestimated. A love of nature, habits of neatness and order, politeness of manner can be instilled in the little one by intelligent effort.

The American Girl.

The American girl is admired and liked at home and abroad because she is the happiest, healthiest, and friendliest of girls. Usually unharmed by any self-consciousness, she is not apologetic and morbidly sensitive, as are many girls brought up in the close, conventional air of European civilization. She likes the world, and is alive to everything beautiful and good in existence. She is easily pleased, and her unstudied, fresh enjoyment of simple pleasures gives happiness to every one

American girls, when you study them critically, are not more beautiful than English or French girls, but somehow an American girl always contrives to make a pretty picture of herself, and neither she nor any one else can explain how she does it. She is adaptable to an astonishing degree, and she can dress for a walk, an outdoor game, a dinner, or a ball so as to make the impression that in each particular garb she is at her best. This power to change her appearance so as to look almost like another person is one of the American girl's chief charms, and she owes it to her keen appreciation of the people and circumstances around her. She has imagination and intuition and a genius for fitting herself to the hour.—January Woman's Home Companion.

SOME of the books needed by the Church Library: "The Mound-Builders," by J. B. Holden. "History of the New World Called America," by E. J. Payne. "Smithsonian Contributions to Knowledge." "Recent Origin of Man." "Mesozoic and Cenozoic Geology and Paleontology," S. A. Miller. "Antiquity of the North American Indian," by C. C. Jones. "Peruvian Antiquities." "Bricks from Babel." "Mexican Antiquities." "Archæological Tour in Mexico," Bandelier. "Mound-Builders' Works and Relics," Pett. "Narrative, Critical and Historical," Winsor. "Ancient Man in America," Frederick Larkin, M. D. Rawlinson's "Ancient Egypt." "The Aztecs," by Lucien Biart.

In a recent number of the HERALD we made an extract from a letter from Mattie Hughes, in which she expressed the idea that it would be a nice thing to have our college debt wiped out by General Conference time. It would, indeed, and we certainly hope the Saints will make a strenuous effort to this end.

Editorial.

A NEW EFFORT.

Another effort is being made to establish a church with a sufficiently broad foundation for all classes of believers, and in which every shade of belief and unbelief may find room and an opportunity for an expression of opinion.

We give below an article from the Open Court, in which the form of organization and some of the things to be conserved by it are presented.

There seems to be a continued effort to get rid of the consequences of the law ecclesiastical, either by a denial of its obligations as a whole or by polite evasion of its specific requirements. We have no sympathy with the movement.

FOUNDATION OF A LAY CHURCH.

What is the reason that so many people, and sometimes the very best ones, those who think, stay at home on Sunday and do not attend church? Is it because our clergymen preach antiquated dogmas and the people are tired of listening to them; or is it because the churches themselves are antiquated and their methods have become obsolete? To many these reasons may seem a sufficient explanation; but I believe there are other reasons, and even if in many places and for various reasons religious life is flagging, we ought to revive, and modernize, and sustain church life; we ought to favor the ideals of religious organizations; we ought to create opportunities for the busy world to ponder from time to time on the ultimate questions of life, the problems of death, of eternity, of the interrelation of all mankind, of the brotherhood of man, of international justice, of universal righteousness, and other matters of conscience, etc.

The churches have, at least to a great extent, ceased to be the guides of the people, and among many other reasons there is one quite obvious which has nothing to do with religion or dogma. In former times the clergyman was sometimes the only educated and scholarly person in his congregation, and he was naturally the leader of his flock. But education has spread. Thinking is no longer a clerical prerogative, and there are more men than are ministers worthy of hearing in matters of a religious import. In other words, formerly the pulpit was naturally the ruler in matters ecclesiastic, but now the pews begin to have rights, too.

Wherever the churches prosper, let them continue their work; but for the sake of the people over whom the churches have lost their influence the following proposition would be in order, which will best and most concisely be expressed in the shape of a ready-made

PROGRAM FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A LAY CHURCH.

GENERAL PRINCIPLE.

It is proposed to form a congregation whose bond of union, instead of a fixed creed, shall be the common purpose of ascertaining religious truth, which shall be accomplished, not under the guidance of one and the same man in the pulpit, but by the communal effort of its members in the pews.

NAME AND FURTHER PARTICULARS.

This congregation shall be known by the name of The Lay Church, or whatever name may be deemed suitable in our different communities, and a characteristic feature of it shall be that it will have no minister, but the preaching will be done by its own members or invited speakers.

Far from antagonizing the religious life of any church, The Lay Church proposes to bring to life religious forces that now lie dormant. Religious aspirations have as many aspects as there are pursuits in life, and it is the object of The Lay Church to have representatives of the several professions, of business, the sciences, the arts, and the trades, express their religious convictions upon the moral, political, and social questions of the day.

The Lay Church will establish a free platform for diverse religious views, not excluding the faiths of the established churches: provided, the statements are made with sincerity and reverence.

Since The Lay Church as such will, on the one hand, not be held responsible for the opinions expressed by its speakers, and, on the other hand, not be indifferent to errors and aberrations, monthly meetings shall be held for a discussion of the current Sunday addresses.

The man of definite convictions will find in The Lay Church a platform for propaganda, provided it be carried on with propriety and with the necessary regard for the belief of others: while the searcher for truth will have the problems on which he has not yet been able to form an opinion of his own ventilated from different standpoints.

It is the nature of this church that its patrons may at the same time belong to other churches or to no church. Nor does the membership imply the severing of old ties or the surrendering of former beliefs.

The spirit of the organization shall be the same as that which pervaded the Religious Parliament of 1893. Every one to whom the privilege of the platform is granted is expected to present the best he can offer, expounding his own views without disparaging others. And the common ground will be the usual methods of argument such as are vindicated by universal experience, normally applied to all enterprises in practical life, and approved of by the universal standards of truth—commonly called science.—Open Court, for January, 1903.

AN APOSTLE AS A SENATOR.

Reed Smoot, of Utah, is a candidate for the United States senatorship from Utah. He is an apostle of the Quorum of Twelve of the Utah church. There has been considerable opposition aroused by his candidacy. It would appear that President Roosevelt, under the impression that the interests of Utah would suffer in case one of the apostleship should be chosen as senator, has suggested to Mr. Smoot the propriety of withdrawing from the field in favor of some other not a member of the quorum of apostles.

In the Chicago American for January 9 Senator Kearns, of Utah, reports Mr. Roosevelt to have said:

I am deeply interested in the future of Utah, in the material upbuilding, as well as the future and best interests of the Republican party. The election to the United States Senate of an apostle would work great harm to the State. It would be very unwise. It would certainly lead to contentions and strife and bitterness here, if not in Utah, and would unquestionably be a misfortune to those who are interested in all that goes to make the state of Utah prosperous and great.

I have every confidence in the majority members of the Utah

Legislature and I feel sure if they understand the gravity of the situation as it appears to me, and as I have heard it expressed by members of the Senate, they will refrain from any action which will not result in good for the future of Utah and her people. I desire you to place me on record as kindly but firmly advising against the election of any apostle to United States senatorship.

We see no impropriety in the President having made such a suggestion. We think the President would hardly go so far as to attempt to dictate in the matter. This he could not do, it seems to us, with any degree of propriety. The people of Utah have the right to choose their senator, if he be otherwise qualified for office, whether he is a member of their church or holds office in such church. It may be as well objected that a bishop of the Church of England, a Catholic priest, or a clergyman of any other denomination should not serve simply because he holds an ecclesiastical office, as to object to one of the apostles of the Utah church simply upon the ground of his being an ecclesiastical officer. We think the President would hardly go so far as that. It would be striking at the liberties of the people a rather too trenchant blow.

If there is an impropriety in the selection of Mr. Reed Smoot to the senatorship of Utah, and the interests of Utah would suffer because of such choice, that would certainly appear during the incumbency of the office by the man chosen. We understand that Mr. Smoot proposes to continue his candidacy, let the result be what it may.

AN ILLUSTRATIVE INCIDENT.

We call attention to an article entitled, "Church Finances," by Bro. D. P. Young. This article is in direct exemplification of what we referred to in the editorial to which he takes exception. In that editorial we said just what we meant to say, no more, no less; and yet instead of referring to the position assumed in the editorial the brother assumes that certain implications might be taken from what is written.

It has ever been conceded that the more intelligent obedience is rendered, the better is the service under the obligations imposed by either commandment or necessity. It has ever been assumed by us or by other leading men of the church, that we are aware of, that any one was required to yield blind obedience unto what another may have stated simply because that other did state it. The implication is an unjust one and illustrates the principle to which we refer.

If the editor of the HERALD, either as president of the church or as editor, must not give an expression to any opinion, or what may have come within his knowledge, lest some one may imply a meaning different from what was apparent from the text, then he must remain silent; and so of every department in the church.

The point at issue is this: In a multiplicity of opinions on the same subject, all urged with equal vehemence, and in all of which there is more or less of truth and a correct understanding, to whom should be accorded the better credit for a correct understanding, those who have been called of God or the church to serve in the special department to which they are called, or those upon whom no such responsibility is placed?

Is it true that every individual member of the church has as fair a conception of the duties appertaining to the specific office and the principles upon which the service is rendered as those do who are specifically called and intrusted to act in that office? Granted that the opportunity for obtaining knowledge is open to all, do all have access to those opportunities? Do those upon whom no responsibility rests in regard to the duties of the office and calling make as diligent research, think as deeply, and conclude as wisely as those upon whom the necessity for research, thought, and conclusion necessarily devolves? Our understanding of the matter is that it is not reasonable to hold such a supposition.

There are hundreds of Latter Day Saints who will not even take the pains to own the books of the church; and some of those who have them more frequently rely upon what others say to them than upon the text in the books. Is there any probability that such persons would have as just conception of the duties of specific offices as the men who are called to act in those offices? After enumeration of certain duties of officers in the church the commandment was given, "Now, let every man learn his duty;" and this command is not, Let every man learn the duty of another. Again, it is stated in the law that it should be the duty of certain persons to teach the revelations. This means not only what the text may say, but what may immediately attach to the text in the relationship in which the rules may hold to action in the church; and we are therefore persuaded that the elder who is actively engaged in the duties of his office as a minister has a better understanding of the spiritual things of the law than the man who is not thus engaged in the ministry. We have illustrations of this occurring every day, in which the man in the front in the field has advanced further both in the word and the spirit of its administration than has the man who has simply confined himself to temporal affairs in his own interests. And if this be true of the elder, it must be true of others.

We should naturally expect the deacon to have a better conception of the care of an audience, the affairs of the sacramental service; that is, the bread and the wine, and the vessels used in connection with the sacrament, than would a member of the congregation not holding office. For the same reasons we hold that the Bishopric with the presiding Bishop at the head would have a better conception of the temporal law and its requirements, manner of carrying it into execution, than would those engaged merely in spiritual affairs. And where several opinions, each differing, are presented before the people, preference should be given to those of the Bishopric. Not that it is a principle of force or blind obedience expressed in such statement. Where there is one that knows, there are clearly many who do not know. Which has the better opportunity to know, the man engaged in such work, or those who are not? The children of Israel went out under Moses by command of God. When they upheld the hands of Moses, Israel flourished; and when they rebelled, they came under the wrath of God. It is in evidence that Israel did not yield either an enforced or an intelligent obedience, and suffered the consequences thereof.

We have hitherto held it to be our duty to present whatever we had to say without particularly guarding against possible implications that any one might choose to make, being content with our understanding and that we have had hitherto no sinister motives to serve. We wrote to the brother in reference to his criticism and received a letter in reference to it, which we publish in connection with the criticism itself. We have not yet hesitated to publish an article offered in good faith simply because we may be subject to criticism in said article.

We have been sharply rebuked for not publishing articles, some of which there has not been room for until they have passed out of date, others of which we have declined to publish because of the subject matter itself being in our judgment unnecessary or improper; and in doing this have tried to conserve the interests of the whole. No offense has been taken and none intentionally given.

"COPPER AXES AND WEDGES."

The following is clipped from the Alton Evening Telegraph for January 13, published at Alton, Illinois:

COPPER AXES AND WEDGES.

Henry Hendricks, the well known East Alton farmer, was in the city to-day with a small box filled with curious specimens of the handiwork of Indians, or more intelligent race preceding even the Indians in the occupancy of this country.

Mr. Hendricks made the find, which is one of the most interesting made in years in this locality, while grading on his farm, the old Dan Giliham farm, below East Alton, and they were about six feet below the surface of the earth. There are two copper axes and a copper wedge, all showing skill in manufacture and all showing evidences also of having been used a great deal.

There was a large piece of red paint rock and it is wonderfully full of vitality yet, although it must have lain where found ages upon ages. With its power to color, the piece found is large enough to paint a fairly large town pretty red. Among the articles is a curiously shaped and wonderfully fashioned something, its surface being smooth as glass. A hole is bored clear through it at the thickest part but what its uses were could not be imagined by those who saw the curios.

Mr. Hendricks will have the find investigated further by experts and it is possible that many other articles may be found in the same locality—articles that may serve to throw some light on the problem of nationality or race of the peoples who once populated these valleys and disappeared in some mysterious manner leaving neither history nor tradition behind them.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. S. D. Condit, writes from Logan, Utah, December 30: "Bro. Pender and wife are now located in Malad, the right ones in the right place, evidently; and it gives us much encouragement for that place. However, all around there seems to be a more promising outlook, and we hope for the best. Conference provided for a branch organization at Hagerman, and Blackfoot Saints are also praying for organization. We trust we may have your prayers."

I. N. White wrote from Independence, Missouri, January 13: "Just returned from Holden and Post Oak, where I held meetings for eight days. Bro. Hulmes was with me part of the time, but he was called home on account of the severe sickness of his wife's brother, Matthew Smith. Late this evening I hear he is dying." Later we learned that Mr. Smith died on the 14th.

Bro. E. W. Nunley writing from Cooks Point, Texas, January 14: "I am fifty-six years old; weigh one hundred ninety-five pounds, and am enjoying very good health. Am quite stout for a man of my age, and am very thankful for it. I never felt better, I am in the conflict until the end; I know the good Lord is with me every day. I again bear my testimony that I know the good work that we are engaged in is of God."

In submitting notice of convening of the Nodaway District in conference in February next, E. S. Fanon wrote on the 16th instant: "There is a prevalence of scarlet fever at present in the vicinity of the Bedison Branch, but it seems to be dying out some, and it may be we can meet at the appointed time. Had seven deaths from the fever, one from typhoid, and more sick. Surely these are troublesome times. The Saints are escaping well so far."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

H. O. Smith reports that in his mission the work has been hindered greatly in the last quarter by rains. He reports fifty-five baptisms and an average of a little over thirty-one sermons for the twenty-seven men reporting,—a creditable showing. Much opposition has been encountered.

I. N. White reports sixty-one baptisms in his mission for the quarter. The work is in fair condition in most places in that mission.

I. N. Roberts reports thirty-eight baptisms in the Southeastern Mission for the third quarter. On the 12th instant he wrote that he was holding a series of meetings at Louisville, Kentucky.

We are indebted to Bro. William Crick for a copy of the Pasadena Daily News, special edition descriptive of the "Tournament of Roses," held on New Year's Day at Pasadena, California. The edition is finely illustrated by half-tones.

By a copy of the Evening Gazette, of Burlington, Iowa, issue of January 13, we note that Bro. Elvin was holding evening meetings there at that time.

An exchange which we are glad to see coming regularly to our desk is The People, the Land, and the Book. It is a quarterly magazine published by B. A. M. Schapiro, on East Third Street, New York City. It is devoted to matters treating of the "historical people of Israel;" the Bible, and Jewish tradition and literature. It is a Hebrew-Christian magazine, and we understand that the editor is a converted Jew. Persons interested in the condition of the Jews can not but find the little magazine of considerable interest.

From advices by letter from Bro. W. E. La Rue, dated Millersburg, Illinois, January 16, we learn that his father, Bro. I. B. La Rue, is quite low, not expected to live. He is aged seventy-one years.

Sr. P. H. Phillipin, of 597 York Street, London, Ontario, is suffering from cancer. Her husband desires that so many of the Saints as can and feel to do so, will on January 28, pray for Sr. Phillipin's cure or release from pain, going before the Lord fasting, if they will.

On January 19 F. A. Russell wrote from Gilchrist, Illinois: "Good meetings here. Will continue this week."

Professor A. G. Smith, of the University of Iowa, delivered a lecture in the brick church at this place on Tuesday evening, January 13. His subject was "The Laws of Chance," and it was handled in a masterly way. It was treated largely from the standpoint of mathematics, and showed the lecturer to be a close and tireless student of his subject. Lectures of the solid character of the one presented by Professor Smith are calculated to do much more good than simply to entertain the listeners. While his lecture may have been uninteresting to some, we can not but feel that it is far better for the people of a community to spend their time and money to hear lectures of a wholesome solidity rather than go simply to be amused. We welcome to our community such lecturers as Professor Smith, and shall hope that we may hear more such lectures in Lamoni.

We desire to get a complete file of Autumn Leaves from volume one to volume thirteen. Who has them?

GOD'S COUNTRY.

In your issue for December 3 I notice your editorial on "No Refuge Except Under the Law." By the reply of Assistant Commissioner Richards to the Doukhobors, we see they will no more have immunity from the responsibilities of government in the United States than in Canada.

This is interesting to a Canadian, and your remarks thereon are fair, with one exception.

As a Canadian, I can not grant that in the United States or any other nation there is greater immunity from civil or religious oppression than we possess.

You say on second page of that issue: "The laws of the United States are, if possible, more liberal in regard to the exercise of the right of conscience than those of the Dominion."

Will you kindly state wherein such conditions prevail? We who live here fail to see them, and so do American missionaries who labor here.

What do you call liberty? Is it license? We think not! What is freedom? Webster gives it as, "Exemption from the control of another; separation; liberty." Nationally, exemption from control is all right, yet even here with some limitations, as in the case of Spain in its late war with the United States; or the Boers with Britain. The citizen of no land can make such a claim, except in his recognized rights. "This is a free country," says the mobocrat. His victim denies it.

Is freedom of speech allowed? "This is a free country," cried Mr. Valandingham in Washington, the time of the Civil War, when his seditious utterances were called in question by the United States marshal. "This is not a free country," the same man cried when arrested for preaching the principles of secession and State rights, within sound and hearing, almost, of the halls of liberty.

While I was in Kentucky in 1862, some young men, among whom was the nephew of ex-Governor Beriah Magguffin of that State, were arrested for shouting on the street, "Hurrah for Jefferson Davis." They were discharged the next morning, as it was only a boyish freak, and their people were noted supporters of the Union. "This is not a free country," they said. Is it? Certainly it is, but free to do right. Men are not allowed to make seditious speeches, although some have in Canada, as was a celebrated Fenian agitator named O'Donovan Rossa in Toronto, some years ago, and who was allowed to go as a harmless bravo.

With regard to religious liberty, what rights have you in the United States that we do not possess in Canada? Let me call your attention to the decision of Chief Justice Armour, of the High Court of Justice of Canada, in the Dickhout marriage case, and concurred in by Justices Street and Falconbridge. In part, it was as follows: "The fundamental law of the country makes no distinction between churches and denominations. Every person is at liberty to worship his maker in the way he pleases. We have, or ought to have in this country, perfect freedom of speech and freedom of worship."

Certainly we should; the law allows it.

The Doukhobors, or Christian Community of Universal Brotherhood, find themselves under constraint and compulsion in Canada. They say: "We can not obey the laws nor conform to the institutions of any country, or become the subjects of any sovereign, because we are the subjects of God." They will do no military service of any kind, and they will marry and divorce themselves as they please. They will not pay taxes in any form. That is their religion. Our laws interfere with this people. Yours would as well. Where is the difference? This is not liberty; it is license to grant such.

If you have more liberty of worship in the United States than we have, it must be of that kind, and, for curiosity, I would like to hear some one take advantage of it.

Before me I have a clipping from a HERALD of September 20; that is, the letter is so dated, but I have not the year. It is from Elder Gomer Wells, written from Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, from which I give the following: "I have just received and read with pleasure, 'Talmageau Criticism, No. 1.' I can heartily approve of all it contains except the statement concerning religious liberty. I, too, 'thank God for American freedom, where the serfs of European dynasties can come and think; and thinking, worship God according to conscience's dictation, with no fear of molestation.' But I can not go so far as to say, 'It is in America alone where mind may soar, and intellect delve and return with disclosing light from realms above or speaking stones from earth below, and none can say it nay.' I believe I know this to be too exclusive a statement. I think the brother will pardon my pointing it out; and also recognize that my opportunity to observe justifies this criticism, or rather this correction. I enjoy the superior advantage of four years residence under the bright ægis of the British crown and flag; and though I am a bred and born citizen of the United States of America, I have never felt freer, in every sense, under my own flag than here in these British Colonies. I am in a position to say that America is not the only country in the world where mind may soar, intellect delve, and serf worship almighty God according to the dictates of conscience. The oppressed of European dynasties find as welcome asylum in the lands known as the British Empire, as they do in the United States."

He further says: "I speak the truth when I say that I have enjoyed better police protection here than at home, when the same was needed, in the propagation of the truth."

You will fail to present evidence in support of your assertion, as given with regard to the laws of the United States being more liberal than in the Dominion. You presuppose it correct on the grounds that "there is a sort of tacit consent to the idea that Episcopalianism is the church of the state." If that is so, we have been and are very dull scholars in this respect. In refutation of this, let me again quote the words of Chief Justice Armour: "The fundamental law of the country makes no distinction between churches or denominations." Their social status in upper classes may have a more distinctive recognition, but this is through courtesy and not by any provision in the law.

At one time the state church of England was recognized here, and large grants of land were set apart for the maintenance of the clergy of that church. They were called the "Clergy Reserve Lands." When responsible government was granted to Canada, there being no state church recognized under the laws of Upper and Lower Canada, the "Clergy Reserve Lands" were secularized by law.

By what tacit consent can the Episcopalian Church be the state church? Even if there is, which I fail to see, in what way does it affect the law so as to, in any way, even in the slightest, curtail the right of conscience in the worship of God? If your statement is correct, in Canada, in comparison with the United States, there must be restrictive measures by law. What are they?

From the point of view of a Canadian, it appears as if our church organ likes to take a fling at British institutions as revealed in this country and other parts of the great empire. Surely this church is not strictly American! Does membership therein make one an American citizen? If so, I would not have united with it. I pray you, dear Saints, do not misunderstand me. For the American Republic, I have the most profound respect and admiration, and, were I living there, I would cheerfully become a citizen. But in Canada, I am a British citizen, and I love my country.

Now, dear HERALD and Saints of the great and glorious American commonwealth, do not, I pray you, make unkind allusions to our country and its institutions. Your remarks, dear HERALD, this time, to which I have made some criticism, are not unkind. Indeed, your language is more of a flattering nature than otherwise.

What we have to complain of is (and you will allow me to refer to it in the kindest spirit, and, as God is my Judge, free from any prejudice whatever towards a country I have always admired, and where I have lived) that some writers in the HERALD and Ensign express themselves as if this church were organized for the special benefit of Americans, and that foreigners are simply tolerated as an act of clemency. "This is God's country," they will say, and we agree, but kindly ask, Is Canada not God's country as well? A great many Americans do not think so. What is God's country? Is it not a land where there is an abundance of civil and religious liberty? Freedom from oppression? "Thank God for liberty," said Silas Henson, the origin of Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom, as, with his wife and family he stood on British ground in Canada, as he fell on his face and kissed the earth he could tread as a free man. "Thank God for liberty" was also the fervent breathings of Anderson, the fugitive slave, as he fled from Southern slavery, pursued by officers of the state, when he also stood on Canadian soil. All this is changed now; but to that poor slave, which was God's country?

Two American miners were in a very serious and bitter quarrel in the Klondyke. One said to the other, "Wait till I get you in God's country, and I'll blow the top of your head off." To the threatened man, in fear, possibly, of his life, which was God's country?

Dear brothers and sisters of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, wherever you may be, wherever our lots be cast, let us seek to make it as much God's country as we can. Let us each endeavor to conform himself to the essential demands of the gospel, so that the beautiful life of the Master may be manifest in us. By so doing, our influence will widen, like the stone thrown in the water, the waves circling out in wider and wider rings till the effects are felt on the other shore. That is "God's country" where good men are protected and evil men punished; where justice is administered without fear or favor. Both Briton and American can heartily sing,

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing:

.....
"Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King!"

We can all sing this hymn, every word. Let us be free from all overweening pride in national superiority in all things, and, like Shakespeare, see "books in the running brooks; sermons in stones, and good in everything." There is much evil to eliminate from our land before it can properly be God's country; so let us continue to pray for that day that is, we believe, near to us, when he shall come to be glorified in his Saints.

Allow me to also refer to another matter, and I also do so in the same spirit of loving kindness that has characterized the foregoing.

In the Autumn Leaves of some months ago, the particular issue of which I have forgotten, a writer makes the claim that the United States is the great supply market of the world. That it is the world's great money market, etc. In proof (?) of this the writer stated that England had to borrow money from the United States to carry on the war in South Africa. Will this writer kindly inform us who the bondholders are? No government lends money. They may guarantee a loan, as Russia did with China recently.

Why has the American Government made so many calls on the British capitalists for loans, if the United States is the great money market of the world?

Now, what are the facts of the case that caused the writer of the article in Autumn Leaves to make the statement he did?

No government keeps a large cash surplus on hand. Some continental nations have, of course, a large amount of money laid away for the emergency of war, but no British government does so. When such arises, with that power, their bonds are placed on the British market. In the South African war, there was required several hundred millions of pounds. I refer to one case, as they were offered more than once. This sale of bonds, as with the others, did not go begging. They were all taken in two hours by the Bank of England. This bank has a branch in New York City, United States, and they, the branch, made request of the parent in London for the privilege of carrying one million pounds (about five million dollars) of those bonds. Not bonds that had been bought by the bank in New York, but by the parent concern in London.

To this, the management of the Bank of England had no objection, but they could not go out of the country except by the consent of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and he being agreeable, the transfer was made. If this is borrowing money, then the statement of the writer in Autumn Leaves is correct, but we have grave doubts of any one seeing it in such a light as the present, and it is far from being a dim one.

The United States may yet come to be the great Bourse of the world, and I might live to see it, and it would do no violence to my love for my country as I have such confidence in God who is bringing to pass his great work among the nations for the establishment of his kingdom upon earth. The nation that is true to itself in God's righteous demands will receive the divine approbation, and can lend to all and borrow from none. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Brethren, "the land shadowing with wings," as ye say America is, and which I believe, North and South, must not cover up, hide and protect that which is a reproach to any people. It must defend black and red, as well as white men. It must mete out swift and sure punishment to all who are guilty of violating the law of righteousness.

Of one thing we can be sure; the wealth, power, and direction of the world is in the hands of the Anglo-Saxon race, and if true to our best interests, as seen reflected in the gospel of Jesus Christ, it will so continue till he comes. Then will fly the blood-stained banner of our King to which we will all pay loving homage.

Such a grand heritage being ours, let us free ourselves from that narrow prejudice that seeks to make the gospel a part of the government we so much admire.

As a missionary of thirteen years of labor, I have met with some of the ultra or radical ones, and some have charged us with being a Yankee church. This has been, no doubt, the experience of other Canadian missionaries. Of course, we most emphatically deny such an allegation, and put in the claim to be the democracy, or government by the people of Christ on earth, and waiting for his coming, when he will establish his theocracy. I am afraid that if our accusers were to see some of the articles referred to, they would be confirmed in their views, or would claim they were.

Dear brothers and sisters of the same blood with us, this great latter-day work is committed to the Anglo-Saxon race irrespective of national boundaries. Let us be faithful to our traditions, and with a cosmopolitan spirit, in the sense of freedom from local prejudice, in the words of the poet:

"In freedom's van together lead
The world to freedom's perfect day,
With highest thought and noblest deed
The Anglo-Saxon way.

"And His eternal benison,
Whom stormy winds and seas obey,
Shall smile on duty bravely done
In Anglo-Saxon way."

This is God's work, and also ours, but let us not try to make it American or British and narrow its influence so that many of God's sheep will be shut out. He is seeking for them, and has commissioned his servants to "hunt them from every mountain and from every hill and out of the holes of the rock." Yes, as Julia Ward Howe says in her beautiful and graphic "Battle Hymn of the Republic:"

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me;
As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free While God is marching on."

"Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." God's country will be the redeemed world. At present, the prince and power of the world is the controlling and governing force in all nations.

From newspaper reports of the exploits of criminals in the United States, we can easily see that the courts of justice should be kept very busy,

An infidel once said to the writer: "Do not go hunting for heaven away beyond the stars, but seek to build it up here, and posterity will bless you." "Amen!" I replied fervently. May we all learn the lesson, see God's country in the midst of his people wherever they may be, and with a heart full of love for all of his children, black or white, dark, yellow, or copper, with charity for all weak ones, and malice toward none.

"CHURCH FINANCES."

Under the above caption in HERALD for November 26, occurs an editorial comment upon the article of Bro. Joseph Flory, said article appearing in HERALD of same date.

In the first paragraph of the editorial are found these words:

"It seems to us, however, that when men are put in charge of any special work in the church their rendition of the law, or rules of the church under which they are supposed to serve, should have the preference; and unless the liberties of the people are subverted, there should be general acquiescence in their conclusions."

As to the correctness or incorrectness of the position taken by either the editor or Bro. Flory, as to the subject matter under consideration, I wish to be understood as having nothing to say, but wish, rather, to make the quotation from the editorial a text from which I might deduce some thoughts that to me are of vital interest to us as a people.

No department of church work, to my mind, is of so little importance, or rather no work in any department of the church, is of so little importance, that it does not impose upon every individual member, who is required to subscribe in the least way to its demands, the necessity for the same knowledge and understanding concerning every detail, as upon those who may stand as the official heads of the department. Certainly, this is requisite to an intelligent following, based upon the hypothesis that to follow aright is of as much importance as to lead aright. Indeed, we believe no truly great leader will be content to have his subordinates follow in any other way.

It is to this end that I wish to write; for the purpose of impressing the mind of the reader of the supreme importance of a personal understanding of what is written in the standard books of the church, relative to the duties of its membership, so that when those who are put in charge of any special work in the church, come before the people to teach and instruct them, they will be in a condition to sit as judges in the matter, as to the correctness of such teaching. And, when the common people begin to thus qualify themselves, and demand of their teachers and leaders that they give them such instruction and understanding as required above, then, and not until then, will our teachers realize the great responsibility that attaches to them as servants of the people. So far as I am concerned I feel that the difference between going just right and a little wrong is so great that none of us can afford to become careless or indifferent toward matters wherein our eternal welfare is at stake.

I think in the past the church has had many blind followers, and altogether too many blind leaders, and as a result of this, some have fallen into the ditch. It will be well, then, for us if we can be awakened to the necessity of changing our methods somewhat, that we might present a better appearance before the world of mankind as well as unto the Lord.

It is not to be presumed from the above, that the writer expects that the common people will be in advance of their teachers, but this is the thought he wishes to convey, that no member is required to subscribe to the teaching of any man until he first understands that such teaching is in accord with the law of God. Anything less than this would be a blind following, and in the most effectual way "putting our trust in man and making flesh our arm."

Now while I do not think the editor intended to convey the thought or idea that members were justified in being careless and indifferent as to the manner in which they accept the teaching of those who are set apart as teachers in the various departments in the church, yet I do believe that many will think that such statements as made by the editor, and quoted above, are a standing rebuke to those who have, for the sake of arriving at the truth, seen fit to question the positions taken by some of the teachers who have been chosen to teach in the various departments of church work, and to those who have seen fit to criticise such teaching. I am quite certain I understand the position assumed by the editor of the Herald in matters of this kind, having been a reader of that paper almost from the beginning of his editorial connection with it, but I can not help feeling that such statements as the one referred to in the editorial quoted, are often misleading to those who, through their lack of understanding, fail to catch their true import. I believe the danger of being thus misled is due to the belief that our eldership has some superior advantage in securing the truth, through divine assistance of the Spirit; or in other words, they fail to see that there is no "Holy of Holies" into which those holding priesthood authority can go; that every other honest seeker after light has not the same right to enter. We ought to remember that to have truth in its highest and best sense, requires us to have a personal insight into it, and "whoever abandons the personal research for truth, abandons truth."

In the last paragraph of the same editorial these words occur: "Is it not better to have each department at liberty to carry on its work according to the law and the light, wisdom, and direction of the Spirit to which as officers of their calling they are entitled? We certainly think so."

This statement, coming as it does from one high in authority, and as a leader, without qualification, I fear will be made to do duty for more than it is worth, by those who are not so well informed as they should be. It will be used as a weapon of defense against those who, like Bro. Joseph Flory, desire first to have a personal insight into things before subscribing to their demands.

Now the question might be asked, and indeed it ought to be asked and answered in the mind of everyone, What is the work of the officers of the financial department of the church? Is it to define the law of finance with the thought in mind to have the people comply with it without seeking for an understanding of it for themselves? Hardly. But I fear that many of your readers will think this is what you mean, and when the officers of that department come among the people, they should receive their rendition of the law, because as officers of that department they are entitled to a sufficiency of the Spirit of God to enable them to understand aright.

Notice, I do not say this was your intention to have the people so understand you, but I believe many will infer as much. It is not enough for the officers of our financial department to understand the law, and the people to recognize the fact that they do so understand it, any more than it is enough for a schoolboy to see that his teacher knows how to solve his mathematical problem. The boy needs to see it as his teacher sees it. Just so in spiritual matters, we ought to be able to perceive that our teachers perceive, but before we can comply with the law intelligently we must be able to perceive for ourselves.

Let us have a perception for ourselves, then, and not be content with a "perception of a perception." I can not comply with the requirements of a principle of law in the highest and best way until I understand and comprehend it. I must first see it as it is, as it stands related to other principles of the law of which it as a principle forms a part. This I could never do simply because I followed the instructions of my fellow man, though I knew he understood it and was right. Am I right in this? If so, certainly I am entitled to as much of the spirit of God in my research for truth, if I am honestly and earnestly seeking, as any holding office or priesthood authority, though I myself am only a layman.

Never will the church arise to the dignity of its profession until its membership, one and all, wake up to the fact that it is just as necessary for the humblest citizen to have a full and complete knowledge and understanding of all the laws of the church, and kingdom of God, as it is for those who stand high, so far as relates to priesthood authority.

If we would be less concerned about what the consequences will be in neglecting to follow the teachings of those in authority over us, and more concerned about finding the truth through their assistance and thinking of what the consequences will be if we fail to find it, we will be doing more for ourselves and the work.

No man, no matter how much truth he may have, or how high he may stand as a teacher and leader among men, can speak with authority to others until they are convinced of the truth as he has it. The moment I am convinced of the truth, justification or condemnation begins with my acceptance or rejection of it.

I believe, then, if we would have truth in its highest and richest form we should acquire the habit, and cultivate our faculties for selecting it at first hands.

HOLDEN, Missouri January 9.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother: Yours of the 5th instant, relative to withholding from publication my article, wherein I criticised your editorial in HERALD for November 26, is before me. In reply will say, I only used the quotation as a text from which to make an argument in favor of a principle which to me was of vital interest to the work in which we all are engaged. If I failed to follow my text, but reasoned well upon the theme or principle under consideration, then it seems to me no serious objection could be urged against the article.

The most essential thing to consider in deciding whether the article should be published, is not what your words, when properly understood, would convey, or what they would mean when viewed from the widest possible range of implication, but what principles does the article discuss, and will the subject matter contained therein justify its publication.

My thought was not to criticise the statement as it appeared in itself, but rather the meaning which I considered might be given to it by implication. If I was wrong, and such fears were not well founded, it does not necessarily follow that the article or reasoning as set forth is void of merit, hence, should not become a bar to its publication.

In my article I endeavored to present a theory concerning the best possible way to render obedience to, and make personal application of, any principle being taught by those in authority. The central thought was that without the exercise of our personal liberty in accordance with our highest intelligence and fullest energy, no matter if the act was right in the abstract, there was something lacking to give it life; the letter would be there, but not the spirit, hence as

Paul says, the act taken as a whole would be dead.

Would the work of the various departments of the church be held in abeyance, or in any way paralyzed, if those having authority to teach the people would insist on the people understanding what they were teaching before complying with it. Are the interests of the church in any sense, being jeopardized by my failing to follow our teachers until I reach an understanding of the principle they are endeavoring to convert me to if I am earnestly seeking to understand? Certainly not. In my article I was aiming to safeguard these fixed and fundamental principles of understanding and progress; this and nothing more.

I have long since thought that if there was any one thing, more than another, that hinders more rapid progress of the work, it is due to the fact, that we do not, as officers and laymen, seek to obtain a personal knowledge of the work in which we are engaged.

If you do not see fit to publish my article, please return it to me and I will most certainly think none the less of you.

Very truly yours,

D. P. YOUNG.

J. W. M'GARVEY AND J. A. BEATTIE VS. D. H. BAYS.

In D. H. Bay's book on "Mormonism" eleven pages are devoted to church organization repeatedly denouncing the Bible authority for a "First Presidency."

The following question to and answers from two prominent educators in the Christian or Disciple Church show that Bays is out of harmony with his brethren who understand "Greek," hence he must be counted wholly unreliable.

Question: Would it be improper, in speaking of Peter, James, and John, whom Paul called "pillars" (Galatians 2:9), to call them presidents or a first presidency of the Christian church?

Reverend J. W. McGarvey, the venerable president of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Kentucky, replied November 24, 1902, as follows: "I do not think it would. A pillar is that which upholds the roof of an edifice, while a president is one who rules an assembly. There may be many pillars in the same edifice, but there can be but one president of a single assembly. We are always safe in retaining the metaphors of Scripture, and when we substitute some of our own we are apt to make a botch of it."

Mr. J. A. Beattie, the honored president of Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, answered, December 5, 1902: "It has always seemed to me that the teaching in this passage is that these men being the chief men are represented in this place as the support—as upholding the church—as those who stood under it and held it up. The figure of speech which causes the use of 'pillars' seems to press this as the idea rather than the idea of office. It is true that they guided, controlled, and in this way it is natural enough to look upon any one of them as a president and the whole as constituting the presidency or a presidency. I do not see anything especially improper in calling them presidents, and yet I do not think the writer intends to hold them up in this light, but rather as the supporters, the upholders, the sustainers of the church."

Mr. Bays is wrong in his teaching, while the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is right.

THE POPE'S ENCYCLICAL ON THE SCRIPTURES.

The Pope's latest encyclical, formally instituting the new Biblical Commission, is regarded as more than usually significant in view of the fact that it is a recognition of the influence of the "higher criticism." In this document the members of the commission, who have already met in Rome and selected Father David Fleming as chairman, are definitely instructed as to their duties. From the London Tablet (Roman Catholic) we quote the following summary of the guiding principles laid down:

"The Holy Father lays down under three heads the leading ideas which are to serve as a guide to the members of the commission in their work. In the first place they must take advantage of the fruits of modern research. Any help to biblical exegesis they must take up without hesitation and by writing make it matter of common knowledge. Philology and the kindred branches of knowledge must be sedulously cultivated. Almost all the attacks on sacred Scripture have arisen from these studies, and we must seek our weapons there if the struggle with error is not to be carried on at a disadvantage. We must not let non-Catholics outstrip us in the knowledge of the ancient oriental languages and in familiarity with the early manuscripts. In the second place, the authority of the sacred Scripture must be maintained in its entirety. They must guard against the spread amongst Catholics of the reprehensible practice of allowing too much weight to the opinions of non-Catholics, as though the proper understanding of the Bible depended on a display of extraneous erudition. God has not delivered it over to the private judgment of the learned, but has intrusted its interpretation to the church. . . . It is not the laws of hermeneutics, but the divinely appointed guide and teacher, the church, that can throw light on the obscurity of the divine books; the legitimate sense of Scripture is not to be found outside the church, nor can it be given by those who reject her teaching and authority. The members of the commission, therefore, must do their best to induce those who are taken with an excessive admiration for non-Catholic writers to give a more devoted adherence to the church. If the Catholic interpreter seeks help in his critical studies from outside authors, he must use caution and discrimination. The critical faculty is of the greatest help in penetrating the sense of the sacred writers, and may be sharpened by the opportune use of heterodox authors, but Catholics must beware of being infected by the intemperance of judgment into which the higher criticism frequently degenerates. In the third place, the commission must give special attention to the positive explanation of sacred Scripture, as it is of the greatest benefit to the faithful. With regard to those texts where the sense has been authentically declared either by the sacred writers or by the church, it is hardly necessary to say that this interpretation is the only one that can be in accord with the canons of sound hermeneutics. The many passages which the church has not definitely explained are left to the judgment of individual scholars to interpret as they please, as long as they are faithful to the standard of the analogy of faith and Christian doctrine. The keenness of the discussion, however, should not lead to breaches of mutual charity. It will be the duty of the commission to regulate the chief questions in dispute among Catholic scholars, and decide them as far as their judgment and authority can reach. One advantage to be gained from this will be that questions will be matured for the declaration of the Apostolic See as to what must be inviolably maintained by Catholics, what reserved for further investigation, or left to the judgment of each individual."

"This looks like prescribing in advance what the commission shall discover as the result of its investigations," observes the Chicago Advance (Congregational); "but even so, the appointment of the commission is noteworthy; for popes have in the past yielded to the Protestant spirit of investigation and private judgment by processes not severely logical, and the holy father in this instance is but following in the course of his predecessors in adapting himself to progress somewhat at the expense of logic." The Chicago Interior (Presbyterian) comments, in similar vein:

"Pope Leo's encyclical appointing a commission 'to devote their entire energy to insure that the divine words may receive the explanation demanded of them by the times,' does the utmost possible to make the labors of the commission utterly sterile by adding this qualifying instruction: 'That must be held to be the true sense of holy Scripture which has been and is being held by the holy mother church.' There is not a minister anywhere in Protestantism who would not agree that that sentence contains the gist of the reason why the Catholic Church is so nearly a failure as a witness to living, saving Christian truth. And yet we have known even Presbyterian ministers who, whenever theological professors were appointed to do for our church what this commission is to do for Catholicism, have insisted that they must put on just such clamp-locks as the Pope has commanded these scholars of his to wear. It is sometimes necessary to discountenance some professor who has used his liberty to bad advantage for himself and the church; but the danger of such a result in isolated cases will never persuade the Interior to consent to weigh our theologians with papistic ball and chain before turning them loose to seek the truth."

The Springfield Republican says:

"It is a commonplace that the reformation substituted an infallible book for an infallible church. But the ancient church has always held that an infallible book can only be interpreted by an infallible church. And nothing could be more reasonable. If God has given an absolutely perfect revelation, he must have provided an absolutely perfect interpreter. This he has done in the church, with the divinely ordained vice-regent of God in the seat of Saint Peter as its head. Between this and the untrammelled freedom of the scholars, and thinkers, and every man and woman, there is no place for pause.

"The results of the Pope's special commission, which is to apply scholarship so far as they dare, and to preserve all the dogmas and proof tests uninjured, will not be awaited with any great anxiety, though a certain curiosity will attach to the findings. It is as much as saying: Find out what you can, but keep it close."—Literary Digest, December 27, 1902.

A little church in Pennsylvania recently celebrated the one thousand millionth minute since Christ's coming to earth. In an article on "Pierpont Morgan, His Advisers and His Organization," John Brisben Walker mentions that Mr. Rockefeller is popularly supposed to control one thousand million dollars, and that one thousand million dollars would represent the labor of ten thousand men since Christ's coming to earth, calculated at the average scale of wages paid during the past two thousand years. In the same number of the Cosmopolitan, a very interesting calculation is made as to what the one thousand millions could accomplish in the hands of a thoroughly ambitious man.

The introduction of school gardens into the educational system of our country is an event of larger significance than is generally recognized. It is a growing fact. In some cities this work is being encouraged by municipal and civic clubs, college settlements, factories, and a very few schools. Interest in the movement is growing rapidly. The agricultural and horticultural progress of Europe is largely due to the efficiency of the school gardens. In Belgium, the study of horticulture is compulsory. Each school must have a garden. In Austro-Hungary there are more than eighteen thousand school gardens. In Russia the school gardens include two hundred ninety-six acres, vineyards, one thousand two hundred fruit trees, and a thousand beehives. School gardens are not regulated by law and encouraged in Germany, but in France, according to a decree of December 11, 1887, no plan of a school building in the country to which the state contributes shall be accepted unless a plan for a garden be attached. Miss Miller, dean of the Lowthorpe School of Horticulture, tells about school gardens under the title, "An Experience and a Lesson," in an illustrated article in Home and Flowers for January, 1903. This is a graphic, up-to-date account of what is being done all over the world by children in the way of practical gardening. The article shows the educative influence of this work, and its splendid effect upon the characters and health of the children.

Home Department of the Sunday-school.

(Paper read before the Little Sioux Sunday-school Convention.)

In coming before you I do not consider it necessary so much to enter into a discussion of the plans or methods of the work as to try to impress the utility and necessity of the work being done. Most of you have the leaflet on the Home Department, and can study the plan for yourselves and thus gather an understanding of it, but as to the necessity and practicability of the work, some are not altogether converted. Many who believe in it as a principle, do not think that they can do anything in the matter. Let us, therefore, look into the matter for a little while from the standpoint of utility, necessity, and practicability.

First, as to the NECESSITY.

What is the mission of the Sunday-school? Most assuredly it is to bring about a better education in the things pertaining to the law of the gospel upon the part of the Saints—children and adults, but primarily the children. This being true it follows that the work should be extended to those who are for any reason not permitted to share in the benefits of the Sunday-school by attending the regular sessions. If we believe that a knowledge of the law is necessary and essential to salvation in the celestial kingdom (and we all believe that, I presume, because we can not obey the law until we have first understood it), we must also believe that one can not understand it without an intelligent study of it. The most effectual study of it will evidently result from systematic effort. The claim is made, therefore, that the Sunday-school is a very effectual help in this necessary study of the law. I say, therefore, without equivocation, that the strong probability is that those who do not make a study of the law as revealed in the books for themselves will not be prepared for the highest degree of glory. Why did the Savior say, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me"? Again, "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled." The people do not, many of them, do much studying of the word in their homes about their firesides, and hence the necessity of lending our influence so far as we can do so to bring it about more generally than it is done at the present time.

UTILITY.

It goes without saying that what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and if some one does not make it his business to see that a more general and effectual study of the word is made by the people, no one will do so, except incidentally. This department is instituted for the express purpose of making it somebody's business to encourage and assist in this part of the work of gospel education, and it at once opens up to hundreds of the young who are desirous of finding something useful to do, a field that is unbounded both in extent and fertility. It is therefore useful both to those who minister and to those ministered unto. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Do we believe it? I trust that we do. I believe that we do. This work is twice blessed; it blesses them that give and them that receive.

Third,

IS IT PRACTICABLE?

Unquestionably, yes. Is the preaching of the gospel practicable? Without purse or scrip? Somebody must make sacrifices that it may be preached. Yes. Somebody must make sacrifices that this work may be done, too. Some one must be willing to forego the comfort and pleasure of a quiet evening at home now and then in order that some of the cheer of gospel teaching and influence—the association of the "Comforter" may be enjoyed by somebody less highly favored than themselves. Are we willing to do it? Let us ask ourselves, "Which is the greatest commandment?" and then answer in the words of the Master, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Dear Sunday-school officers and teachers, do we believe when we call attention to these immortal words of the greatest Teacher that ever taught that they apply to us as well as to those whom we teach? Do we believe further that it is required of us that our teaching shall be made effectual by our examples? Do we believe that now is the day of salvation? Do we believe that in every life there comes the supreme moment when a decision is to be made whether service is to be rendered to God or to mammon? Have we thought that in the lives of some of our boys or girls that decision may be made to-day? Do we know that sometimes only a word is sufficient to turn that decision in the right direction? Are we willing to make the effort to be there, and strive to say just the right word? Think, I pray you, on these things. If we can not be there in person, shall we make the effort to put the word of God there so that God may speak the word when the supreme moment comes? If we believe in the two commandments upon which "hang all the law and the prophets," it is decidedly practicable. But it will cost some one effort. If we were sick or sorely in need, we would try to provide that which would administer to our comfort and necessity, if we could. Why should we not do as much for our neighbor, yea, more, our brother, if we shall find him in need? We should not hesitate to administer to his temporal wants if we found him sick or suffering; why not administer to his spiritual wants and comfort just as readily? This is the practical side of this question that I desire all should consider. It is the practical side of the gospel that so many people fail to get hold of, but the only side which will bring salvation.

Let us look at

for a little while. Your district superintendent is to be district superintendent of the Home Department, if his other duties will permit of his doing the work. If he can not do it by reason of being so occupied with other duties, then the superintendent and assistant of the district are to appoint a Home Department superintendent. He is to have charge of this department in the district, to be the directing head, to give information and advice to all inquiring for it or needing it in his district. He is to have personal charge of territory in his district outside the jurisdiction of any local Sunday-school, in which territory he may appoint local Home Department superintendents. It is his duty to hustle local superintendents and to see the work is pushed in connection with the local schools. He is largely the responsible person for the work in his district whether in local schools or in unorganized territory.

THE SUPERINTENDENTS

of the various Sunday-schools are to act as local superintendents of the Home Department, in case their other duties will permit of their thus acting. Otherwise, the superintendent and assistants are to appoint the Home Department superintendent. He is to have charge of the work in connection with his school, including all territory within reasonable reach of his school. He is to appoint the visitors, keep a record of the work, and make reports as required. He is to work under the district Home Department superintendent and advise and counsel with him. He should see that every individual in the community is visited by the visitors and induced, if possible, to take up the work and become a student of the word of God.

are to be appointed by the local Home Department superintendent. They are to visit the houses of all stay-at-homes and try to induce them to join the Home Department and take up the work. They are to visit the members of their classes as often as necessary to assist them in their work, supply them with literature, collect their contributions and records and supply them with new Quarterlies and envelopes.

They are to keep the Home Department members posted upon the doings of the school, invite them to attend the sessions of the school when practicable, encourage them to avail themselves of the use of the school library, and in short, to be all in all to them so far as their ability and opportunity may permit. It may be seen at once that the work opened up by this department is limitless in its extent, and yet not unpleasant or irksome, and can be done by the boys and girls, young men and young women, ladies or gentlemen. Any one with average sense and judgment and a willingness to assist what he can in the work is qualified and eligible.

Now, let me say in

that I think the time is fully ripe for the districts and local schools to take hold of this work and push it forward. The convention is the place to begin it, and this convention should not adjourn without recognizing this department and making provision for it to be introduced and prosecuted with vigor. Remember, the Lord said the "organizations for good" should be blessed "even as they bless others of the household of faith." Here is a chance to "bless others of the household of faith" and by so doing claiming the promise of blessing to ourselves. Do we need more spiritual power and blessing in our work? Ah yes. Then let us be up and doing in this, and in all other good works.

May the peace of the Most High meet with you in the convention and assist you to a righteous conclusion in all matters affecting your work, so that your light may actually go out to all within the radius of your influences, including all the stay-at-homes, and so that many may in years to come rise up and call you blessed, and so that when your labors of love are over the welcome plaudit may salute your ears, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Should parents be ready and willing at all times, to answer, as best they can, the questions of their children in regard to spiritual matters? What is likely to be the effect on the child of indifference in these things, also on the part of the parents? In reply to the first question, the answer must be in the affirmative, because the word of the Lord advises parents to "Train up a child in the way he should go" (Proverbs 22: 6), and the Apostle Paul advises that they be brought "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." (Ephesians 6: 4.) Thus we see that our heavenly Father has laid upon parents the solemn responsibility of educating children in spiritual matters, and this work should commence in the early days of childhood. In Doctrine and Covenants 17: 19, we find, "Every member of the Church of Christ having children, is to bring them unto the elders before the church, who are to lay their hands upon them in the name of Jesus Christ, and bless them in his name." And thus the effort of the parents is to be seconded by the blessing of the Lord, through their faithfulness in the promises of the Almighty.

The Lord never intended to relieve parents from the duty of instructing their children in spiritual matters. Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, "And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." By this revelation of God's word, parents are left without excuse, for it is herein made the imperative duty of parents to teach their children spiritual matters, and the Sunday-school is not intended to relieve them from this solemn obligation, but it is and should be one of the "helps" organized to assist parents in the spiritual education of their children, and because of this, parents should devote some of their time and means to the support of the Sunday-school work, for their homes and their children and themselves are to be benefited thereby.

So our answer to the question, "Should parents be ready and willing at all times to answer as best they can the questions of their children in regard to spiritual matters?" is that the word of God answers yes. The future well-being of our children answers yes. The peace of our homes answers yes. The experiences of the past by those who have neglected this duty answer yes. The hope of the realization of the promises of God to the faithful answers yes. And to this we can all say yes and amen. What is likely to be the effect on the child of indifference in these things on the part of the parents? The facts of history, recorded in the past, are the best answers that can be given to the question. The neglect of these duties by the parents by which their children have grown into a spirit of "indifference" to-day fills the world with sin, misery, and woe. And, as a result, many parents have ended their days in sorrow and distress.

In 1 Samuel 3: 13, 18, the Lord appeared to the boy Samuel, and told him what would befall Eli and his house "because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not." When Samuel told Eli, he said, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." He made no complaint because he knew the saying of the Lord was true, and the time for correction was past. It should have been done sooner. In Doctrine and Covenants, section 68: 4, "Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for . . . their children are also growing up in wickedness;" Doctrine and Covenants, section 90: 6, "But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth;" and he said to Frederick G. Williams, "You have not taught your children light and truth, according to the commandments, and that wicked one hath power, as yet, over you, and this is the cause of your affliction. . . . You shall set in order your own house, for there are many things that are not right in your own house," and, in the seventh paragraph of the same section, the Lord says to Sidney Rigdon, "that in some things he hath not kept the commandments, concerning his children; therefore, firstly set in order thy house," also in ninth paragraph, same section, "My servant Newell K. Whitney, also a bishop of my church, hath need to be chastened, and set in order his family, and see that they are more diligent and concerned at home, and pray always, or they shall be removed out of their place."

With such reproofs as these, both ancient and modern, should there not be an awakening in all our homes to the solemn responsibility that rests upon us, so that we, who have not begun the work of correction, may not hesitate any longer but do it now, and save our homes and our children and ourselves from the stern, but kind rebuke of our heavenly Father? It is far better to be able to say of our children as it is said in 2 Timothy 3: 15, "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus," also the saying of the wise man in Proverbs 20: 11, "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right." So our answer to the question "What is likely to be the effect on the child of indifference in these things, also on the part of the parents," is the "effect" will be bad for the child, and a source of sorrow and grief to the parents.

Editors Herald: On Sunday, the 4th instant, Bro. Le Roy Wood handed me a little tract of the "Anti-Mormon" series, number 4, part 2, by R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Kentucky, in which the first quotation is as follows: "Joseph Smith: I have got the damned fools fixed, and will carry out the fun. The world owes me a good living, and if I can not get it without, I'll steal it; and catch me at it if you can."

On the 5th instant I wrote to Mr. R. B. Neal stating that as he was a minister he would, of course, not use that language in his tract unless he was sure that Smith used it and that if he would let me know where in Joseph Smith's writings that language could be found he would confer a favor on the writer and might save a soul, or words to that effect. I had of course read the statement before but had forgotten just where it occurred. However, I was sure that he could not find it in any of Joseph Smith's writings, for I have read too many of the Seer's words not to know that such language was not his. To-day I received the inclosed letter from R. B. Neal, also the December number of the Helper, and tract number 6 of the "Anti-Mormon" series. I have sketched the above-mentioned tracts and all I care to say about them is as follows: If the spirit that directs the writing of these tracts and the general spirit of these tracts and the comment therein contained is the spirit of the ministers of the so-called Christian Church, it is not, in my estimation, the Spirit that characterized the blessed Master. I have not so learned Christ and I thank God for a different training in spiritual things. Fairness, truth, honesty, and love should be a characteristic of every minister in conversation, preaching, writing, lecturing, or debating.

"I know that my Redeemer lives."
What comfort that sweet sentence gives!
He lives to plead for me above;
He lives to save me by his love.

O longing soul, lift up thine eyes,
To where he rules beyond the skies,
And see the glory of his face,
And be partakers of his grace.

O see the tokens of his love,
Still shine in glory up above;
His wounded hands, and pierced side,
Are still the living Christian's pride.

He lived for you, and died for me,
And how could I forgetful be?
Or cease to love him as I should,
When he to us has been so good?

He is our hope, our staff, our stay;
He leads us safely all the way.
From day to day, his love I feel,
When humbly at his throne I kneel.

"C. E. BUTTERWORTH,

"Omaha, Nebraska,

"Dear Sir: Your note is before me. I have a book before me, 'History of Mormonism,' by E. D. Howe, published in 1834. On page 236, in the sworn testimony of Pete Ingersoll, a near neighbor and intimate of the Smiths, you will find this statement: 'Now,' said Jo, 'I have got the damn fools fixed and will carry out the fun.'

"Ingersoll made affidavit to that December 9, 1833.

"I have also before me volume 1, 'Mormon Portraits,' by Doctor W. Wyl, a careful and conscientious writer. In that you will find the rest and more of a like nature, both by Smith and Brigham Young. All I desire is the facts about Mormonism. I have studied it pretty thoroughly and I am strong in the conviction that it 'was conceived in sin and born of iniquity.'

"I expect to reply to your letter in the Helper, as it may help others like you who seem not to have certain facts at your command.

Yours for truth,

THORNTON, Rhode Island, January 10.

Editors Herald: I believe I have not troubled your (our) paper since some time before the last General Conference, but I have not lost interest in the HERALD or in the cause it represents.

I presume some of my friends wonder where I am and what I have been doing all of this time. I have been working against some difficulties of a physical character, but have been able to keep comparatively busy just the same. I had the pleasure of remaining in the city of St. Louis for one week on my way home from General Conference, and preached for the Saints there in their beautiful church, and felt the Spirit of the Master in so doing. Altogether it was a week spent that I shall not soon forget.

I could not pass by the Philadelphia Saints without stopping, so preached for them before spending a few days at Bridgeton, New Jersey, where we have one sister and a few friends. Back to the city again to say good-bye to the Saints who have become dear to me by association, then home. The missionary in charge appointed me to labor in Providence and Fall River for a short time. Owing to sickness and death, the time was necessarily extended until November 1, on which date I left home for Boston, and preached to the Saints there on Sunday. A nice lot of Saints in Boston; all growing.

On November 4 the writer left for South Durham, Maine, where my cousin William B. Young, wife, daughter, and son-in-law live. All of the above persons in the church. Arrangements had been made to hold meetings, and the "new preacher with a strange doctrine" began to preach. The local pastor of the Quaker church said, "Watch him; he is a Mormon, and when he goes away will take somebody's wife with him." I preached for nearly a month as opportunity and weather permitted, and strange to say did not take anything away with me but my grips and, I hope, the respect of those who heard me preach. Quite a number were interested and I trust some may obey in the future.

I had intended to visit other places in Maine, but the weather was so bad it would not have been practicable at that time. Brn. "Will and Bert" can hold the fort until the writer or some other brother can visit them again.

Christmas found me in Providence, where I received my share of candy along with the other children, and a present or two of a more substantial character. By the way, just before I left for Maine our genial young Bro. Daniel Joy put a roll of bills into the writer's hands, contributed by a number of Saints, which was very thankfully received, and the spirit prompting gifts of this character is appreciated far more than the intrinsic value of the gift.

I preached for the Saints in Providence on the Sunday before Christmas, and for the Fall River Saints the Sunday after. I contracted a severe cold while in Maine, and it has failed to leave me entirely as yet, interfering somewhat with my labors.

I have received word from Bro. Sheehy to join Bro. Lentz in Western New York as soon as possible, so I presume in a few days if all is well, I will be on the road again.

This day I preached the funeral sermon of an aged sister in Johnston, Rhode Island, to quite a large gathering most of them strangers to our faith. We feel assured that good was done.

I forgot to mention that I spent some time with Bro. I. M. Smith in the tent at Haverhill, Massachusetts, in July, where we were kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. Thayer. We had a nice time, but there was not very much interest on the part of the world. I was called home from the reunion at Silver Lake, after two or three days of joy, to the bedside of a dear mother, who lingered until October and then passed over the river.

While in Providence in September I baptized my son, George, and another boy, the son of Sr. Eva Glover.

With good wishes,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

AURORA, Illinois, January 10.

Editors Herald: I expect to return to Cleveland, Ohio, to make my home there where I first learned of the Latter Day Saints. When I resided there the work was not established, but since I have met with the Saints on two occasions for about eight weeks last summer and the same length of time two years before this; so I have become somewhat acquainted with the Saints there and the efforts they are putting forth. Now I entertain a hope of meeting with them again shortly and becoming a member of the Cleveland Branch. This seems to be coming about providentially. I desired to move back there last summer, but my folks would not consent. So returning home I accepted the position that I formerly held. After a few months I learned that the factory was likely to move to Cleveland, and wanted me to go with them. This was agreeable, and now I am waiting for word to get ready to go.

The past twelve years I have attended meeting in Chicago and Plano mostly, as well as elsewhere in the district, which has been a great help to me along life's journey in this latter-day work. The HERALD and Ensign have been very valuable to me, also, and should I fail to testify to this help I should omit an important part of my testimony that has come to me when I could not attend meetings. I prize the church papers with other works of the church above all else in my possession, and have noticed that where these are lacking in the homes of the members there is also lacking a large degree of the spiritual life and energy that others are enjoying. We must keep in touch with Christ and the spiritual life which he imparts. A quotation from John might apply here as well as to the world: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." These are trying times to those who would keep in touch with this latter-day work. There must be sacrifices made for the gospel, that we may receive and abide in the Spirit that Christ said the world could not receive.

I am still in the faith and trust to continue. This I know can only be accomplished by obeying the doctrine of Christ and keeping his commandments, and pure love for God, and his work will be manifest only in proportion as we love God, keep his commandments, and demonstrate that we believe that God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

I trust that the Spirit of Christ may be manifest in your gatherings of the Saints and abide with us in all our efforts to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness.

F. T. HAYNES.

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Australia, November 4.

Dear Herald: It is some time since I have written anything to the readers of this excellent paper. I write a few thoughts to elicit more knowledge by an abler pen than mine.

What is man, and what was he at his creation, is an important question that has been asked by the learned and unlearned in all ages. But with all the wisdom and learning that this world hath attained unto, men are still unable to give a satisfactory answer to the question. The Psalmist says that man is "fearfully and wonderfully made," that he is a little lower than the angels. He not only possesses a different organization, but powers and capacities of mind, distinct and of a far more exalted character than the animal creation around him. We can form some conception of his formation in the womb, the progress of his organization, and the development of his nature, until the time of parturition when he emerges into the world. We then can witness the dawn of his mental powers from their earliest manifestation until maturity; recognizing at each advancement increased strength, vigor, and capacity to his advancement appears there is no limits.

Had man an existence before he appeared in this world?

According to the Bible it appears that his spirit existed before the formation of this earth. The Lord said of Jeremiah, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee." There can be no knowledge of an object without its existence, therefore, the spirit of Jeremiah had an existence before the body was formed. Paul is called a chosen vessel. The redeemed are said to be chosen or elected. The time of its being done is said to be before the foundation of the earth. Christ is called the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the earth. It would be just as impossible for God to choose them, if they had not an existence, as it would be for a person to choose fruit from an empty basket.

It is said that when the foundation of the earth was laid all the sons of God sang together and the morning stars shouted for joy. The reason that they were filled with joy was that they looked forward to the time when they should be permitted to go upon it, and take a tabernacle, that they might attain unto the like power and glory as their heavenly Father. That it is possible for man to attain unto that power and glory is evident from the saying of the Savior when he prayed that his disciples should be one with him as he was one with the Father.

From the foregoing we may conclude, that he possesses powers and capacities of mind that are susceptible of increase, even unto a fullness. Therefore, when Adam was created in the image and likeness of God, he was pronounced very good by him who created. Now the question is, Were they created mortal or in an immortal state? We read that they were in the garden of Eden and had access to the Tree of Life and ate of the fruit of it whereby they could live for ever. But some maintain that they were created mortal because they died, but I maintain that death is the result of disobedience to law; and if no law had been given then there could be no transgression, then death could have no dominion over them. We read that they partook of the forbidden fruit, then the Lord God sent them from the garden, and placed a cherubim and a flaming sword to guard the Tree of Life. Thus we find a change had taken place from a state of mortality to a state of immortality, but had they fulfilled the law, death would have had no dominion or power over them. They were capable of enduring for ever and ever in their organization if they had fulfilled the law and kept within certain conditions and bounds, their tabernacle would never have been seized by death. Death entered entirely by sin, and sin alone. It is a fact they have fallen, and there is a redemption, but some may consider that the redemption only redeemed us in part, that is, merely from some of the effect of the fall. That is not the case; every man and woman must see at once, that a redemption must include a complete restoration of all privileges lost by the fall, and that redemption is as broad as the fall, in order that man may be restored to his primitive state. When speaking of man's primitive state it goes to confirm that when the restitution of all things spoken of by the holy prophets, which will take place at the second coming of Christ, the environments that surrounded Adam will be removed in Christ through gaining the victory over death. Indeed, I may close with the saying of Paul, "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O, death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 15: 54-57.

RICHARD ELLIS.

ORIOLE, Indiana, January 12.

Editors Herald: Brn. Porter and Flinn have been holding a series of meetings here at this place. They came here Christmas day, closed last night. Baptized five January 4 and have six more to baptize when they return. We have had large audiences and the people seem to be very much interested. Some few have done all they could to shut us out of the schoolhouse, but have failed. Think there is yet a good work to be accomplished here.

The M. E. Church commenced a protracted meeting on last Monday night, January 5. The church is located right by the side of the schoolhouse, but we held the congregation. The M. E. minister called on Bro. Porter to preach in the church Wednesday and Friday. On last Friday when he began to preach several of their members got up and left. They said they were going to lock up the house and were not going to let that old Mormon in there any more, but they became reconciled before night and opened the house. Bro. Alexander, the minister of the M. E. Church, seems to be honest in his religious work and he treated Bro. Porter with Christian courtesy during the series of meetings. We were also visited by the U. B. preacher. Bro. Porter called on him to preach. He took his text where it says the sheet was let down before Peter, and as God was no respecter of persons, he indorsed all churches as a part of the body. Bro. Porter made a reply and showed that was what he had been teaching the people—that God was no respecter of persons, but only recognized one body.

Bro. Porter leaves here this morning. He has been invited to preach in a private house about three miles from here and is going to preach there to-night. From there he is going to Mt. Pleasant to hold a series of meetings, then on to Derby and Mill Stones and return back here if it is the Lord's will. There have been thirty-five baptized here since last spring and a goodly part of them are workers in the cause of Christ.

May God add his blessings to all the Saints, is my desire.

Your brother in the one faith,

JOHN N. BERNARDI.

WATERVALLEY, Kentucky, January 11.

Editors Herald: I would be pleased to have space in our paper for a few thoughts. I say our paper because I understand it belongs to the body. I have been a little offended at our editor two or three times because he did not put in print just what I wrote to the paper; but I am very glad that our brother did not publish everything I was simple enough to send. I sometimes realize after sending a letter that I did not write in the proper spirit. I believe some of us are too quick to get out of the way with the editor for refusing to give place to every article and letter sent to him. We should believe that if it is God's work, God will rule in his house, and that he overruled in putting a man or men to edit the organ of his church, men who would do things well, to the honor of his cause on the earth. It would be a disgrace to the cause, indeed, to publish everything that is written. This we do not doubt.

I am yet in the faith of Christ and desire to do what I can to the honor and glory of him and the advancement of his holy work on the earth, yet I fail on many occasions through weakness. I have been sorely tried, yea, most severely to me for the past twelve months, but I thank the Lord I am being delivered I believe, and I hope I may soon be made free indeed.

I received a supplement to the HERALD over two months ago, requesting me to get a new subscriber to it for six months if no longer. I went to a brother who owned a home, and asked him to subscribe. "I would love to do so, but I am not able," and at the same time that brother was spending ten or twelve dollars per year for coffee, besides using enough tobacco to pay for the paper once or twice each year, and all this before a large family of children.

I went to another Saint who also used coffee and tobacco. He had a large family but a good little home, and money out. I asked him to subscribe for the Herald, but he said, "No, I do not care to just now." So to-day I thought I would try it once more. I asked a brother if he did not want to subscribe for the Herald a little while to assist in paying for the press. He, of course, wanted the paper, but was not able to pay for it, though at the same time had enough home-raised tobacco stored away for chewing to pay for it more than once. He probably spends a great amount for coffee.

I do not like to see a brother care no more for the cause than that he would rather damage and poison his body, and choose darkness rather than light. "For whatsoever doth make manifest is light," and neither the church papers nor the prophets can make known very much to them if they will not receive them. Any one who does not want a thing can always find an excuse for rejecting it. But where there is a will for the church papers there is a way to obtain them. I can not see how such Saints can, with any degree of faith, ask God to bless and prosper them on the earth; or either to give them wisdom or the Spirit.

Hoping this will arouse repentance in every such brother or sister,

Your brother in the cause,

J. W. WILLIAMS.

CLAVERING, Canada, January 12.

Editors Herald: I feel it my duty to write to your columns in regard to the Sunday-school work. When our school was organized by Elder John Shields about fifteen months ago there were only four Saints living here, and they lived from one to two miles apart; but they have a nice little school here now. The average attendance last summer was about twenty, but since the cold weather has set in the attendance is from ten to fifteen. There are just three families beside the Saints that send their children to the school, but they come pretty regularly. I read in the HERALD some time ago of a school that was organized either two or three times and carried on for a time and let fall through. So I thought it might be a little encouragement to them to hear from some other schools.

It is a great work for us grown people as well as children, and I trust that the Saints in other parts will feel it their duty not only to attend Sunday-school regularly, but to come prepared to take some part in the lesson, if it is only to answer a question and assist in the singing. I am far from being what I might be, but I trust that it may be as seed sown on good ground that it may spring up and bring forth good fruit.

It is my desire to live the life that God would have his Saints live, and I trust by God's help that I may grow strong in his work.

Your sister,

MAGGIE PERKINS.

HUMPTULIPS, Washington, December 26.

Editors Herald: There are at this place five members of the Latter Day Saints Church whose names remain on the records at Kinmundy, Illinois, as members of that branch. We are located twenty-five miles north of Hoquiam, Washington. There are a number of honest-hearted people here who seem to be interested in the gospel of Jesus Christ, who I believe would accept it if it were preached to them by an able minister. There is at present no church organization here of any sect, and if the missionaries of this district are looking after the best interests of this latter-day work they should do their best to get the first foothold here. At present there are Methodists, Baptists, Christians, Presbyterians, and Salvationists. We have a union Sunday-school at our house, also a union prayer-meeting every Sunday and Wednesday nights. The schoolhouse is open for all denominations, and we could get a good audience in a few hours notice. Elder D. P. Brown is now nearing his eightieth birthday and is not able to do much, but is willing to do what he can.

Elders coming to this place will have to come from Hoquiam by stage, there being no railroad.

Yours respectfully,
EARNEST E. FISHEL.

GROW, Oklahoma, January 12.

Editors Herald: Two years ago last fall we left Kansas to find a home in Oklahoma. We are located in Day County, but there are no Saints near us that we know of. We miss the society of the Saints very much. Bro. and Sr. D. S. Crawley stopped over night with us last fall, and we enjoyed their visit very much. The first of December Bro. S. S. Smith came and preached ten good sermons. There were few that attended, but the most of them that did come thought it was the best preaching they had ever heard. I think some are almost convinced that the gospel as preached is true. One man is reading my Book of Mormon and another has asked for it to read, but some are very prejudiced. One man came two nights and he thought he preached splendid the first night, but the next night he came Bro. Smith preached on the Book of Mormon and he found out he was a "Mormon." That was enough for him. Others have said they would come next time one of our elders came to preach.

The lumber is on the ground to build a schoolhouse, so we expect to soon have a place to hold meetings. We would like to have any of the ministry stop and preach for us at any time. We are on the road from Red Moon to Seiling. Saints, stop and see us when you pass through.

Your sister,
SARAH SCOTT.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, October 13.

On October 9, 1902, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, I saw the following beautiful vision. A part of the earth in its sanctified condition, a lake of clear water with most beautiful pebbles all around the outer edge, and two large, round and handsome stones which a man was placing side by side close to the pebbles. The man was dressed in very light apparel, wearing a small light gray hat. He had a very peaceful, joyous countenance, and was performing his duty with apparent ease and pleasure. To the left of the lake were two rows of the most beautiful evergreen-trees, far more perfect in shape, color, and verdure than any I have ever seen. The carpet of mossy green all around the same was very rich. Still farther to the left and in front were fine bushes with lovely green boughs, inlaid with rich verdure. Most beautiful scenery of varied kinds met my view for some distance around.

Soon another man with a happy countenance was seen training the vines and caring for the plants. He wore the same kind of apparel as the other one, which was perfectly clean.

Right beyond this was a shrubbery garden, beautifully ornamented on the borders with lovely flowers of varied hues and kinds, and within were tall, silver-colored posts beautified with silver drapery and finely perforated. Several women were passing around in this grand place with perfect ease. As their feet pressed the velvet carpet of green and their hands cared for their precious charge, joy and peace was depicted upon their countenances. They were dressed in very light apparel, though clean and pure, with light bonnets which were alike upon their heads.

Just beyond and a little to the left was a company of children, hand clasped in hand, in a circle, at play. They varied in age from one to eight years, and their little faces beamed with mirth and glee. Every minute one of the little ones would loosen his hands, always slipping within the circle, not out, and never falling. Every move was gracefully performed. The scenery around them was charming and and their joy seemed complete. Just beyond and to the right were girls engaged in performing light duties. These were surrounded with the beauties spoken of before and how grand it was to behold the silver posts with rich ornamentation, and beautiful flower beds which were filled with rich, fine flowers which was at their right. Being anxious to learn what they were doing, I looked closely at one and found she was entwining fine silk thread, of a pale blue shade, around a shuttle or part of a loom. They were dressed delicately and were attired in pure, clean clothing. Happiness beamed from their faces, and their hair was puffed and combed so evenly, with no other covering upon their heads.

Just beyond the beautiful scenery that surrounded them were a number of boys who were within a garden of fruit and vegetables. I saw a row of large, ripe, luscious grapes. The beauty and perfection of this garden I can not cause you to comprehend unless you are inspired by divine power. I beheld with joy, wonder, and satisfaction this vine and the way it was trained; also the beautiful ridges upon which the vines were; also the potatoes,—not a weed. Nothing was imperfect and all was serene peace. These youths were also attired with light apparel, and wore the same joyous expressions upon their countenances as the maidens. Then I saw one boy cut a large bunch of grapes from the vine.

As I looked beyond quite a distance I beheld scenery far surpassing in beauty any I had seen before in the vision. Extremely tall, silver-colored posts, decorated in rich trimmings and ornamentations of many kinds, made the scene grand, beyond description. I beheld people moving gracefully around preparing the beautiful surroundings in perfect order. The joy and happiness I felt surpassed that which had been experienced before.

I then said, May I behold in vision my Savior? I then saw a lovely walk of white satin being lowered from the posts and as soon as lowered, that precious being stepped upon it, followed by two attendants, one on each side and a little to the back of him. He was dressed in rich, light—almost white apparel, having a crown of pure richness resting upon his head. The attendants, who had no crowns upon their heads, were dressed quite similar but not in such rich apparel. When he stepped on the walk, I saw his good and beautiful face which gave me joyous and peaceful satisfaction, and filled my soul with pleasure and thankfulness. His face was a side view to me. After ascending a most beautiful pavilion, he passed out of sight, also his attendants and people. As I still beheld the beautiful scenery, I exclaimed: "If this is the earth in its sanctified state, what must be the celestial glory?" Immediately the scene passed away and the most grand and beautiful ornamentations of gold color, very brilliant and of various kinds, passed before my eyes as a vision for a few moments and then disappeared.

PIEDMONT, Missouri, January 14.

Editors Herald: Since coming to this county some two months ago we have had no serious trouble getting places to preach. Yesterday, however, the monotony (if such it may be called) was certainly broken. On Monday night we went to our appointment as usual. It was a clear, moonlight night; a little cool, but not so much so as to keep anxious churchgoers away. As but two persons came out we thought best to close the meeting.

Yesterday morning bright and early we went in search of another schoolhouse in which to present the gospel of Christ. About ten o'clock we found Mr. Taylor, a school director, who said he had consulted with one other director and they had concluded we could not have the use of the house. After warming a little we were off for another schoolhouse some two miles further. We were informed that a Mr. Dale lived near the schoolhouse; so on coming to his place stopped to warm and to inquire if the schoolhouse was open for preaching. Soon after entering the room Mr. Dale came from the barn, and before we could tell who we were and our business he abruptly told us to leave, showing us the door and saying he had no use for "you fellows." We picked up our things and left. While we were putting on our overshoes I asked the man, who still stood in the door watching us, if he knew anything bad against us. He replied, "No, not for certain."

This was a new experience, not only for Bro. Thomas, but also to the writer.

The schoolhouse being near, I called and asked the teacher if it was open for preaching. He answered in the affirmative, but wanted me to see the trustees before announcing an appointment. The first director called on informed us that the people there believed we taught false doctrine and that he thought if we preached there no one but children would come out to hear us. He also thought we had no need to see the other directors. While there the school director and wife had quite a conversation with Bro. Thomas on the gospel. The former being Missionary Baptists tried to assert that the church had been on the earth since the days of Christ, while Bro. Thomas said there had been an apostasy from primitive Christianity. I sat still and listened.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

Dear Herald: The HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves are welcome visitors at our home. We are always glad to receive them and scan their pages for familiar names and places. My husband, S. J. Hinkle, and I attended the quarterly conference of the Oklahoma District, December 6 and 7. He is Bishop's agent for Oklahoma. There are few branches in the district as the Saints are scattered, so he decided to visit the Saints at their homes and talk and instruct them on the law of tithing.

We first stopped at the home of Sr. Lou Mitchell, daughter of Bro. Fowler, of Lamoni, then on to Bro. Furgus Mitchell's, near Goff, in Grant County. He is quite feeble, having been sick all summer. We next called on Jacob Crofford near Pond Creek. Afterwards we visited Sr. Effie McCullough, who lives in Pond Creek, and stayed over night with Bro. A. M. Crofford, near that place. He is a prosperous farmer, and was formerly in the furniture business at Pleasanton, Iowa. Others visited on our way were Bro. Hemingson, Sr. Nettie Archer, Bro. and Sr. F. J. Brewster of Helena, and then on to conference. Arrived in time to make the Bishop's agent's report and have books examined before adjournment of the business session. There was not a large attendance, only three being present outside of the membership. They have a nice little church. It is the first to be erected in Oklahoma, and they expect to have it dedicated in March. Those of the ministry present were D. S. Crawley, W. P. Pickering, H. F. Durfey, S. J. Hinkle, R. M. Maloney, J. Scott. This is not intended as a report of the conference, yet I have seen no report up to the present time.

It would be too tedious to enumerate all the Saints' homes we visited. They have two good-sized branches there only about six miles apart. One branch I understood had eighty members. That is away out in Western Oklahoma too, in Dewey County.

While there, we called on Frank Vrooman, who left our church and lectured against us. We were acquainted with him a few years ago and heard him bear his testimony then to the truthfulness of the work, but it seems he is more in disfavor with the members than the doctrine of the church.

There are some noble Saints living out there, as well as many we met on the way.

After spending a week or ten days in Dewey County and taking two subscriptions for the HERALD, we started on our way home, stopping the first night with Bro. H. B. Hart, and had a meeting in his house. His father-in-law, old Bro. Landen, had gone to his rest only a couple of weeks before. The next night we stopped with Bro. James Bullard, who lives a mile east of Bro. Hart, and held one meeting there. Bro. Bullard is from Council Bluffs, and is a wide-awake Latter Day Saint.

On December 18 we chanced to stop with a Mr. S. J. Braden, and found he was a cousin of Clark Braden. He does not feel flattered over his relationship.

The last Saints we called on before reaching home were Bro. and Sr. Cheney, who live near Dover, then on for home, sweet home.

We were gone just three weeks. How can the missionaries stand it when they are away for months and sometimes years if on a foreign mission?

We are expecting Brn. W. M. Aylor, H. O. Smith, and W. P. Pickering here next week to hold meetings at our schoolhouse as long as interest is good.

It seems to me if the Saints fully understood the tithing law, and how badly the church is in need of money in order to keep missionaries in the field, they would respond more readily. It is a part of the law that is not inquired into very much by those not thoroughly understanding it. I fear there are too many of us who pray that more "laborers be sent into the vineyard," and at the same time withhold the tenth that should go to send them. Dear Saints, what good will that money do us when we are called away from this world? We are only stewards over what we possess, and I hope we all may lay up treasures in heaven where moth and rust do not corrupt.

Yours in the faith,

MRS. ANNA HINKLE.

LANDER, Wyoming, January 13.

Editors Herald: We never see any of our elders, as we are one hundred fifty miles from a railroad, and have not heard a sermon for many years. The Saints who have the privilege of meeting the Saints are blessed. I am trying to keep the faith and hope the Saints will pray for us that we may be faithful to the end.

Yours in the one faith,

JOHN G. HALLAM.

GLADSTONE, Illinois, January 6.

Editors Herald: I am glad to see the progress of the truth throughout the world, as it seems to be advancing; and as it advances, prejudice gives way. I have often thought I would like to be a traveling elder; but since I have become better acquainted with the conditions and trials they have to pass through in order to get the people to see the truth, I fear I would be too weak to stand such trials as some have had to pass through. Not that I am any better than they are, or to be compared in goodness in any sense with them.

How strange it is that the truth should be so unpopular in all ages of the world, and have to be besmeared with the blood of all the martyrs. How unpopular was Jesus, the Son of God, in the generation in which he was in the flesh with his apostles. Who can tell of all the persecutions they suffered for the sake of the truth, that man might be brought back from his fallen state? And then the people in after generations would loudly proclaim, "Oh, if we had lived in that day, we would not have done such things." But if another prophet should be raised up among them they would turn and persecute and kill him, as did their fathers.

The saints in all ages of the world have been brought before earthly courts and tribunals and many refused deliverance. It is strange that earthly courts and tribunals of principalities and powers have not long ago learned that they had no jurisdiction over the planets in space, or the eternal decrees of Jehovah. Did the power or authority of any earthly tribunal bring Jesus from the dead? No, but they tried to keep him from coming to life again. But it was not possible that he should be holden of it for God the Father had decreed that through the suffering of death he who has power over death should be destroyed. What is man or the son of man that thou art mindful of him? Has he not said how he delivered Israel of old with a mighty outstretched arm? Then watchman, what of the night, or the darkest hour just a little before day? "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" What, by some theological seminary? No, but sent of the Lord, as was Aaron. O, contemplate with me the love of the Father for all the world, he who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Think of it! How willingly would one of us give up our only son, and that, too, for his enemies, to die such a cruel death? What nation would grant such a gift? I think I see why David said, "Let them be ashamed."

O how apt are we to err in spirit, individuals as well as nations; and from whence has come great wars and bloodshed, division and strife. If all such could have been avoided this world might be Eden; every man, woman and child might have a mansion home with all the good things that heaven and earth could produce. The spirit of the gospel is the only hope for the nations of the earth.

JACOB L. RUST.

SWEET HOME, Missouri, January 11.

Editors Herald:

"Come, let us anew
Our journey pursue,
Roll round with the year,
And never stand still till our Master appear.
His adorable will Let us gladly fulfill,
And our talents improve
By the patience of hope, and the labor of love."

Dear Saints, let us each take this verse for a resolution for this the beginning of the new year. We surely are in danger if we are standing still, waiting for our Master to appear. Then let us have our lamps trimmed and burning for the Bridegroom when he comes. Let us endeavor to learn his will and gladly in our weakness try to do it, and thereby improve our talents.

Sisters, as mothers we sometimes think our talents are limited and we have not much of a chance, but who is doing a nobler work than the mother who is trying to raise her family up to love and fear the Lord? So let us unite our efforts and labor in love.

Pray for me, that in the day of His coming I may have it said, Well and faithfully done, enter into thy joy.

Your sister,

MRS. MARY HAWLEY.

WATERLOO, Iowa, January 17.

Editors Herald: There are only seven members of the Reorganization in Waterloo that I know of, and one of these is away at college. We are members of the Oran Center Branch, but live about twenty-eight miles from there, so can not attend meetings very often.

Bro. Robert Smith of this city was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood last fall, and we commenced holding prayer and testimony-meetings at our homes every two weeks on Sunday afternoons. It seemed quite an undertaking there being only six of us; but God certainly has verified his promise, that where two or three are gathered in his name there he will be. We were afraid our meetings would lack interest because we were so few, but felt determined to do the best we could and trust God for an increase. Two brothers from Cedar Falls, Bro. Peter Hinds and his father, whom we had never met, heard of our meetings, and now attend. Members from Oran Branch attended one meeting, also Bro. Rudd of Dow City was with us once.

I saw in a letter from a brother living in Dakota that they were lonely without church privileges, and I have felt impressed to tell them that if they have not church privileges, make them. The brother said there were twelve members, if I remember rightly, twice our number. I have come to the conclusion that it is not numbers, but a determination to do the best we can under the circumstances that surround us, that makes a good, live meeting.

Bro. Rudd said if we could get a place for preaching he would come and hold meetings; and as there never has been any preaching here, except a sermon or two at a private house some time ago, we were anxious to get a place. After trying several "union" chapels in vain, we have just got the promise of the use of the Christian church, so have written Elder Rudd to come and occupy as soon as he can. We are in hopes we may be successful in these meetings and that our numbers may be increased.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may live faithful to our professions, and that a number of the honest-hearted may be led to see the true light of Christ our Lord. This city is growing very rapidly. Five new factories will be built this season, possibly more, which will greatly increase the population, which is already over fifteen thousand. A bright, wide-awake class of people. Surely among so many we ought to have a large branch of Saints.

May the Lord bless his people and direct his work, here and everywhere.

MRS. J. A. GOODRICH.

KIBBIE, Illinois, January 14.

Editors Herald: During this winter my labor has been mostly in Wayne County, and a few have obeyed the gospel in connection with my efforts, assisted by other brethren. Bro. J. W. Paxton has labored with me, and he lately baptized four near Johnsonville. During our reunion and since, there have been forty baptisms in the district and the meetings have been very interesting. Bro. Ammon White has been with us and has rendered valuable aid to the work by introducing the Religio work and organizing societies here and there. This is one of the organizations for good, and will be the means of strengthening and educating the young as well as old along spiritual lines if carried out according to its rules. And like every other department of church work, those who engage in it must work if they receive the good results which are promised the faithful.

As Bishop's agent my report for last year has just been sent in and many of the names of our brethren and sisters were not in it; yet, am glad to say that the district has done better in a financial way this year than ever before, which is an evidence that many have realized the necessity of observing the tithing law, and we hope this interest may increase until the name of every member may be found upon record as having complied with the law. Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. With the above promise before us, why hesitate any longer? The Lord is true to his word, therefore, we should never doubt or fear.

In the year, we have received several challenges for discussion, but so far only one debate has materialized. All of the above matters have been referred promptly to the missionary in charge. We have stood in defense of the work when necessity demanded and we hope to be worthy of all the great blessings promised to the faithful. I have a great desire to live humble so that I may feel worthy to enter into rest when the conflict is ended. We expect to hold a few meetings here, thence to Bellair, where we expect to be joined by Bro. R. T. Walters and hold a protracted effort at that place. I have a great desire to become more spiritual and also get a better understanding of the work so that I may be better prepared to advance its principles among the people in the future.

Pray for me that my knowledge may increase.

Yours in hope and love,

F. M. SLOVER.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 17.

Dear Herald: The new year opened with church work advancing in our district. There is a renewed consecration on the part of many of the Saints to be more active in church work. The missionary force of the district has been especially active. J. F. Mintun has just finished his discussion with D. H. Bays at Baxter. The first of the month H. A. McCoy went to Washington County to present for the first time our faith to the people of that county.

The district conference meets in Des Moines, February 21 to 22, with the Religio and Sunday-school conventions on the 19th and 20th. It is six months since the last conference was held, and a large attendance is expected at the coming conference.

The work in the city of Des Moines is progressing. Greater activity is shown on the part of officers and members. In addition to the regular services held at the church, preaching services are held every Sunday in the east part of the city. The Sunday-school is prospering and has a good interest, especially on the part of the younger members. During the past three months, a Sunday-school library of fifty volumes has been put in. One third of these books are church publications, and the remainder, books adapted for the junior members of the school. The church publications are being used by the older people, especially the Church History, and the children are using their books, and thus we know to some extent the character of reading with which their minds are being fed.

The interest taken in the Religio work since the coming of the Quarterly is very marked. In fact it could not be otherwise with such an interesting volume as the Quarterly is. The lessons are taken up in such an interesting manner and the historical matter and the prophetic utterances of the first chapters of the Book of Mormon are so plain that certainly any Latter Day Saint with a particle of living faith can not fail to be interested in the Book of Mormon study.

There has been a marked increase in the membership of the Des Moines Branch recently, over twenty Saints placing their letters here. Opportunities open for work along many lines in the city. Laboring for the advancement of church work in all its departments and fully realizing that the blessing of heaven rests upon those who labor earnestly in the Master's cause.

Your brother,

A. A. REAMS.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, January 15.

Editors Herald: I arrived here on the 9th inst., without meeting with any special incident on the way. There was but little snow to be seen anywhere. It is quite cold this morning, for this place, so said, as it is some below zero. Our meetings at the church on the 11th were quite well attended and satisfactory. The Saints seem to be cheerful and hopeful, moving along as best they can.

The outside excitement just now is the election of a senator. The President has advised the Legislature of this place not to send an "apostle" to Congress, so there is a humming in the hive. It looks as though the "apostle" was going anyway. The Smoot blood is not the kind that downs at trifles, so the senator question will likely be fought at Washington, as was that of Brigham Roberts. The President has made friends as well as lost friends by this move, so when rounded up it may be for or against him politically. Anyway may it conduce to the hastening of events for the better,

Fraternally,

WM. H. KELLEY.

NORTH TOPEKA, Kansas, January 17.

Dear Herald: The way is opening up in this place, so we believe, for better work to be done. The Saints have rented a store building that will seat seventy-five or one hundred people, and expect to buy it soon. It is nicely located on Kansas Avenue in North Topeka. It was already seated with chairs (rented and borrowed), having been used by the Comeouters and others for a mission. We have needed something of the kind here for years, and we believe with wise labor a good work will be done. Hall rent is high, and if there is one place in the district where they need a building more than another it is this place.

The Saints here have made sacrifice for the work, and are willing to make more as they intend to purchase the lot and building now rented. The Saints are poor in this world's goods, laboring by the day for a living, but rich in faith. Any one who reads this and feels to give in a good cause, it will be gratefully accepted.

Send all moneys to F. B. Tigner, Station A., Topeka, Kansas.

This branch extends an invitation to any of the ministry passing through to call on them. Bro. Tigner lives at 1173 Kansas Avenue, North Topeka, and John Robinson at 214 Gratton Street, Spirit and Results in School-Teaching.

From the deduction stated the inference is natural: "If the superintendent is responsible for the spirit of the schools, why is he not also responsible for the results?" If the superintendent wishes to develop a good school spirit, it is necessary for him to work for spirit. If he is desirous of accomplishing results of a higher order, it is necessary for him to work for results.

In view of what I have stated, the aim of supervision is clearly a double one. In the first place, the superintendent must see that a wholesome spirit is developed in the schools; and, secondly, it is also his duty to see that due attention is paid to results. This again gives rise to an important question: Is it possible to keep the results in view without at the same time crushing the spirit? Or, conversely, Is it possible to develop a delightful class-room atmosphere without at the same time destroying the results?

Judging by my own impressions, acquired by a two-fold study of the question, spirit and results are in no way incompatible. The criticism aimed at the modern school spirit, that it means a milk-and-water system, a weak sentimentality rather than mental discipline of a wholesome kind, does, perhaps, apply to the schools of those localities where the mere utterance of the word "results" is looked upon as sacreligious—schools that are in a transitional stage, just emerging from an antiquated system, and not yet accustomed to their new surroundings. But the criticism does not apply to localities where a good spirit has already become an established fact, and additional aims can be held in view without losing sight of the fundamental proposition. In itself, a good school spirit does not indicate weakness any more than a poor spirit is an indication of strength. In some of the delightful schools, it is true, the results are by no means praiseworthy; but, on the other hand, the results are frequently of a very inferior order in typical schools of the antiquated kind.

There is, indeed, no logical reason why results may not be kept in view without in any way neglecting the spirit; for "subjects" are taught in the modern as well as in the antiquated schools; and the time devoted to the formal studies is, in most instances, ample to lead to satisfactory results. If the modern idea should stand for the abandonment of the three R's, it might be deemed unworthy; but it does nothing of the kind. The matter simply resolves itself to a question like this: "All other things being equal, will forty-five minutes a day devoted to arithmetic in the schools in which the pupils are active and responsive accomplish as much as forty-five minutes devoted to arithmetic in the schools where the pupils are repressed and passive?" The facts compel us to answer this question in the affirmative. Therefore, there is no reason to doubt that a good school spirit and satisfactory results may without difficulty go hand in hand.—Doctor J. M. Rice in the January-March Forum.

Man delights to play with the mighty forces of nature; this is well illustrated in T. S. Brown's account, in the February Autumn Leaves, of the peculiar sport of rock-rolling, as practiced in the mountains of California.

Convention Minutes.

Chatham.—A joint session of the Sunday-school and Religio convened at Wabash, Ontario, December 27, 1902. Bro. W. L. Ross was chosen chairman, and Sr. A. M. Kettlewell, secretary. Visiting Saints were granted all the rights and privileges of the convention. The evening was devoted to an entertainment. Adjourned to meet just prior to the convening of the fall conference.

Elders' Financial Reports.

To this date the following elders have sent in their financial reports for the year just past. All those who have not reported, please take notice and send in report at once. The rule requires reports from all. No elder should require of his brethren what he will not do himself. Let as have a full list this year or rescind the resolution requiring elders to report.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 15.

Editors Herald: Bro. R. H. Wight, of Delta, Colorado, wishes me to request the Prayer Union to remember him in their prayers, that the will of the Master may be fully accomplished in his case. Bro. Wight has been a sufferer for many years; is confined to his couch much of the time; is patient and confiding in the good pleasure of the Master through the prayers of his people; is truly a worthy petitioner.

HENRY C. SMITH.

Notices.

The members of the Quorum of Twelve, as many as conveniently can, will be expected to meet at Independence, Missouri, on March 20 next, at 10 a. m. at the home of Bro. Joseph Luff, to consider business relating to the General Conference to be held in April following, and any other business that may properly come before them. Brn. Luff and I. N. White will please arrange for a permanent place of meeting. Wm. H. Kelley, president of quorum.

Conference Notices.

The matter of time and place for the next conference having been through the secretary submitted, all branches but one have reported, one leaving the whole matter to the officers, the others naming the desirable place to be San Jose, leaving the time to the officers. We therefore announce that the Central District of California will convene in conference at 162 South First Street, San Jose, California, on Friday, March 6, 1903, at 10 a. m. We are authorized by Bro. J. Swenson, president, and Sr. E. Carmichael, secretary, to announce that during the conference the Sunday-school district convention will be held. Delegates to each respectively should be appointed. The usual delegate expense to General Conference and convention is again to be met. Let this be attended to, each branch furnishing its quota and sending by delegates to San Jose. In 1901 the Lord spoke on representation, and said: "My servant was directed to present rules of representation." That servant, as "directed," presented rules for districts as well as for the general body, and they should prevail. One or more branches failing to appoint or send does not change the Lord's will. He also said: "The only qualification for delegates chosen by the branches or districts should be members in good standing." The Lord asks for delegates; will you furnish them? Any inquiries directed to J. B. Carmichael or self to 54 Colfax, San Jose, California, or on Sunday-school matters to J. Swenson, 662 Willis Avenue, San Jose, California, will receive prompt attention. Let us meet in faith and unity and the Lord's favor will attend. R. Etzenhouser, J. B. Carmichael.

The semiannual conference of the New York District will convene on February 21 and 22, 1903, in Saints' hall, 199 Saratoga Avenue, Brooklyn, New York. Business session February 21 at 6.30 p. m. District president desires that missionary in charge be present. He and all others of the ministry who can come are heartily invited. Written reports should be sent to secretary three days before conference. It is desired that all who can will attend, and that a good conference be had. Samuel Guilfooy, district secretary.

Kirtland District conference will convene with the New Philadelphia Branch, March 7, at 10 a. m. Bro. J. A. Becker, district secretary, requests the branches to mail branch reports not later than March 1. Address him at Byesville, Ohio. V. M. Goodrich, district president.

The Kewanee District conference will convene at Kewanee, Illinois, on Saturday, February 7, 1903, at 10:30 a. m. All reports or other documents sent by mail must be addressed to Joseph Terry, Millersburg, Mercer County, Illinois, or to my address, 630 North Walnut Street, Kewanee, Illinois. John S. Patterson, district president.

The conference of the Little Sioux District will convene at Little Sioux, Iowa, Saturday, February 7. Joseph D. Stuart, clerk.

Des Moines District conference will meet in the Saints' church in Des Moines, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, February 21 and 22, 1903. Saints of the district take notice. A. A. Reams, district secretary.

Nodaway District conference will meet with the Bedison Branch on February 7, at 10 a. m., as per adjournment of last conference. E. S. Fannon, president.

Convention Notices.

Northern Nebraska District Sunday-school Association will meet in Omaha, Nebraska, January 31, 1903, at 2.30 p. m. Election of officers and other very important business to transact. Alice R. Watkins, secretary.

The Kewanee District Sunday-school association will convene at Kewanee on February 6, 1903, at 10.30 a. m. A large attendance is solicited.

The Fremont, Iowa, District Sunday-school association will meet with the Tabor Branch, Iowa, February 5, 1903. Let every Sunday-school worker in the district feel it his duty to make an effort to be present. Emma Hougas, district superintendent.

Religio Convention Notices.

The Des Moines District association of Zion's Religio Society will convene at Des Moines, Iowa, February 19 and 20, 1903. It will be held jointly with the Sunday-school convention. We hope the district will be well represented and the spirit of its willing workers made manifest. Alice Kramer, district secretary.

The Kewanee District Religio convention will meet at Kewanee, February 6, 1903, at 7.30 p. m. Local secretaries please send reports to Sr. Louise B. Suman, Moline, Illinois, William R. Norris, district president; Louise Suman, secretary.

Religians of Little Sioux District will convene at Little Sioux, Iowa, February 5, 1903, 7.30 p. m. G. Henry Shearer, president; Nellie E. Ballantyne, secretary.

Died.

Cook.—On January 6, 1903, at Galesburg, Illinois, Sr. Susan E. Cook, aged 72 years, 6 months, 2 days. She married Thomas G. Cook, March 19, 1848. He and three sons and three daughters survive their loving wife and mother, two sons and two daughters having preceded her to the better land. Funeral services in the Saints' church in Dahinda, January 8, in charge of J. S. Patterson, assisted by J. H. Hopkins. Elder Patterson preached from the text: "And I heard a voice from heaven saying with me, write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." In her strong faith the sister was able to welcome death.

"Pale, withered hands that for nearly fourscore years
Have wrought for others, soothed the hurt of tears,

Rocked children's cradles, eased the fever's smart,
Dropped balm of love in many an aching heart,
Now stirless, folded, like wan rose-leaves pressed
Above the snow and silence of her breast,
In mute appeal they tell of victory won,
And well-earned rest; now mother's work is done."

JONES.—David W., son of Bro. and Sr. John D. Jones, was born at Alma, Illinois, July 14, 1861. Died at his home in Kewanee, Illinois, September 24, 1902. He leaves a loving wife, who is a sister in the church, two daughters, father, mother, and one brother with other relatives to mourn his untimely death. Obedied the gospel in childhood but manifested some thoughtlessness during youth. Charges were preferred and he was expelled. This offended him and he hardened his heart against the cause. Though mild persuasion was used, he would not reënter. He defended the truth, but took no delight in the attempt to live it. Was bedfast over a month with typhoid fever and pleurisy, caused by working excessively in black, damp, foul air and water in the coal mines. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him, but more especially by the different leagues of united labor, as he seemed to be ever in the lead, encouraging them onward. Right against might as he called it. These different orders in their marching lines attended the obsequies with a host of others in their kind manner to listen to the funeral discourse by Elder D. S. Holmes, on September 26, 1902.

BETTS.—Sr. Joseph E. Betts, Sr., died at her home in Belleville, Illinois, Thursday, December 25, aged 76. She was born in England, December 21, 1826. She came to America in 1856 with her husband, Robert Groom. United with the Reorganization, at Belleville, June 28, 1869. Her first husband died in 1884, and in 1891 she married Joseph E. Betts, Sr. He and her sons, James and John Groom, fourteen grandchildren, and sixteen great grandchildren survive her. Funeral service December 28, 1902, in charge of Elder R. Archibald, Jr. She is one of the old, faithful members, and will be missed greatly.

HOVENGA.—Luppe Hovenga, of Dekalb County, Missouri, died January 3, 1903, at his home, after enduring much suffering, at the age of 78 years, 1 month, 17 days. He leaves an aged companion and twelve grandchildren to mourn his departure, but not as those without hope. He united with the church in 1873, near Burlington, Iowa; was one of the most zealous and faithful members of the German Branch. Funeral sermon by T. T. Hinderks, assisted by Elder Wildermuth.

SIMMONS.—Sr. Jane Nicklay Simmons was born in Lenawee County, Michigan, in 1843. Died December 31, 1902, from Bright's disease and enlargement of the heart. She stood firm in the faith to the last and just prior to her death said: "Do not shed tears for me. I tell you now while I can, my work is done; no help for me but God." She leaves one child, Frankie, two sisters, a grandson, a granddaughter, and a large circle of friends to mourn her departure. Funeral sermon by Elder S. W. L. Scott.

AMES.—Sr. Mary Abbey, wife of I. B. Ames, was born January 14, 1836; baptized April 9, 1869, by Elder Thomas F. Eldredge; died January 2, 1903, at Brockton, Massachusetts. She leaves a husband, one daughter, many relatives and friends to mourn her departure. She died firm in the faith, believing she had done the best she could. Funeral sermon at the home, conducted by Elder F. O. Coombs, assisted by Elder R. Bullard. The remains were laid to rest in the Swanlake Cemetery.

MORTON.—Bro. Edward Morton was born August 7, 1845, at Burlington, Bradford County, Pennsylvania; baptized February 16, 1890, by Elder T. J. Martin; died December 28, 1902, at Fergus Falls, Minnesota. Leaves a faithful and devoted wife and five children to mourn. He was a kind-hearted husband and went to rest with the blessed assurance of coming forth in the resurrection of the just.

DOVE.—At Lander, Wyoming, December 18, 1902, Sr. Mary A. Dove, aged 78 years last April, passed peacefully into the vale beyond. In 1855 she migrated from England with her husband and other Saints, and settled at Council Bluffs, Iowa. After her husband's death in 1895, she moved to Lander where she has since resided with her adopted daughter, Mrs. F. E. Cheney. Funeral December 20, by Reverend John Roberts, of the Episcopal Church.

Industrial Woman.

There isn't any "new" woman. The components of womanhood, and especially of gentlewomanhood ever have been and must ever be the same. Different times, different places, different social structures put to different tests and uses the fundamental femininity, but the principle is always the same. She is the same good, true-hearted woman whether she is battling with men in the business world, or tending to domestic affairs at home; and anyway, in most cases, she veers around to the latter state in the end. In such a manner Miss Clara E. Laughlin, in a paper in the February Delineator, considers some of the problems of womanhood, especially the industrial problem; and the paper is well worth reading.

Municipal Corruption.

A gentleman of Boston, when asked who could remedy the illegal joints and the possible crookedness of the police department, said, "The lazy good people of the Back Bay." The location of the city is of very little importance. The sentence must stand as a condemnation of the "lazy good people" the world over, whether they live in a little, ill-managed city in Ohio, or in a big, worse-managed city in the East. To two things is municipal corruption due—laziness and cowardice on the part of the so-called best citizens. They know that evil exists. They even put up with some inconvenience rather than stir themselves in the behalf of good. It is moral laziness. On the other hand, lest they should in some measure injure a business interest by admitting that their city is not what it should be, coward-like, they sit with their hands folded. They grumble, perhaps; they lament, with lifted eyes, their ills, but they make no move to remedy. And the thing which makes it all the more shameful is that a real move on their part means success. There is a practical, if not a moral, excuse for a man hanging back when he may expect failure, but there is mighty little with which to salve his conscience if he sees only success; and nothing is truer than that the good men may rule, if they will. Goodness has been, and always will be, a strong, two-edged sword in itself. You can explain this how you like, but people rally to it against evil if good only lifts its head. The majority of weak, indifferent people, who tip the balance, are sure to follow the leading of good men. And so we come back to the indictment that the "lazy good people" have themselves to blame for evil in the world; evil that they don't like to think of, evil that perhaps they have just heard of. It is in their hands that the matter rests.—January Woman's Home Companion.

More or less romance always clusters around the ancient ruins of any land. This is especially true of the ruins of Scotland, famous as they are in song and story. The readers of the Autumn Leaves we feel sure, will find much of interest in "Bothwell Castle," by J. W. Rushton, in the February number.

Love's Way.

I built me a mansion stately and grand,
 Richest of dwellings in all the land.
 Wide were its portals and fair to see.
 Love, I would take her to dwell with me.

Love she gathered her cloak of brown,
 Said me a "Nay" with her eyes bent down,

Went her way to a lowly door
 One had fashioned whom we call poor.

There she goes out and in with him,
 Brightens his heart, while my own is dim.
 Wee heads crowd 'neath the doorway vine,
 Never the laugh of a child from mine.

—Cora A. Matson Dolson, in Home and Flowers for January.

"Gathering In" is a poem by Anna Salyards, in the February Autumn Leaves, that will appeal to all Latter Day Saints.

CHURCH HISTORY.

Volume four of the Church History is now being prepared and over four hundred pages of it have already been stereotyped. The business department expects to have it ready for delivery sometime between April 1 and May 1. Those who desire to receive this volume as soon as published, and also help bear the burden of publishing it, may send in their orders at once, accompanied by remittance. It can thus be determined about how many of each style of binding will be demanded. Prices will be the same as on the others: Cloth, $1.50; leather back and corners, $2.00; full leather, $2.50; full leather, gilt edges, $3.00.

THE Church Library needs whole or parts of volumes 1 to 8 of the Literary Digest, especially volumes 1 to 3 inclusive. Also volumes 1 to 3 inclusive of the Review of Reviews, American edition. Saints or friends having any of these, kindly write the Church Librarian, Bro. F. E. Cochran, lock box 345, Lamoni, Iowa. A prompt response is kindly requested.

Editorial.

A DIFFICULT TASK.

Not long ago the HERALD made an editorial allusion to a religious sect existing in the northern part of upper Canada, one of the colonial possessions of his majesty King Edward VII, now reigning on the throne of his excellent mother, the late honored Queen Victoria. This sect had removed, as we gather it, from Russia or one of its dependencies, in order to have a fairer field for the exercise of their religious faith. They discovered, however, that notwithstanding the well-known liberality of English laws toward those who would worship God, some of their peculiar views of faith and practice could not be tolerated under the colonial rule; they therefore sought an asylum on United States soil under United States laws. They appealed to the authorities for permission to settle on government lands and be suffered to pursue their religious ways unmolested, under protection of United States laws. They were answered by Commissioner Richards that lands belonging to the Government were reserved for occupancy by citizens by the Government, and their request could not be granted.

In writing on the topic the editor wrote in substance that the laws of the United States were if possible more liberal toward the exercise of the right of conscience than those of the Dominion.

To this statement a brother on the thither side of the Detroit River, a subject of his majesty King Edward, with commendable zeal and patriotism takes exception, and writes a good article in defence of freedom for religion in Canada, rather challenging the production of an instance in which liberty of conscience is greater or the advocates of religion safer under the laws of the United States than under the laws of the Dominion of Canada. We have no disposition to take up such challenge, and fail to see how what we wrote of this Doukhobor sect in Assiniboia and its appeal to a reception upon Uncle Sam's domain should have drawn out such a challenge.

Our whole effort was to show that notwithstanding the well-known and long established reputation of British laws favorable to the exercise of liberty of conscience in religious matters a sect, affecting belief in an absolute freedom from allegiance and subjection to any sort of human government, including the submission to state and municipal duties, obligations, and regulations the same as govern other citizens, would not be favored or protected in a demand for the exercise of such liberty, neither in the Dominion nor in the United States, as no such liberty could either be granted or guaranteed by either government.

The brother failed to give us credit for the statement made in the paragraph immediately preceding the objectionable one.

"The laws of the Dominion of Canada are but the reflex of the rules for human government that have grown into use from public necessity, and the safeguarding of the liberties of citizenship. The exercise of the worshiping instinct, or created sentiment in man, is provided for in such enactments as will permit a proper respect for Deity and regard for his commands as found in his word and known as revealed religion. And, while these rules are so framed as to secure the right of conscience to the individual, the rights of the citizens and the safety of the state are at the same time preserved."

We here paid the highest tribute to the laws of the Dominion, for the reason that our American laws are based upon the Common Law of England; and if there are any differences between the statutory enactments of the States and the Dominion, those differences have been the result of necessity caused by the environments in which the experiment of a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" has been carried on so far; and the fact that in the United States, the people are sovereign; in the Dominion, the king. And we write this without a thought of disparaging the government of the Dominion.

That men have been mobbed and slain for advocating their religious convictions in the United States is true; but this has not been because the laws were in fault; it was because misguided zealots and sectarian bigotry led the van of those who disregarded the law. It is true (and shamefully true) that men were held to involuntary servitude, and cruelly maltreated under laws providing for such a condition of things. The Nation paid for the wrong in blood and treasure. It was one of the coincident evolutions from the darkness of past ages to the better consideration of human rights, a governmental agreement between the precept of the Declaration of Independence and the practice of the people under it.

We had not a thought of making a disparaging comparison against the laws of the Dominion, or of exploiting any degree of patriotism; though we see no just reason why an American-born citizen of the United States may not have and hold the opinion that his country is the best, its form of government the best, its laws the most beneficent of any human government on the earth, and may not say so, in proper words, without subjecting himself to rebuke for undue exhibition of offensive patriotism.

We confess to a prejudice in favor of American institutions; but do not hold such prejudice to the extent of an odious partisanship which refuses to see and acknowledge the good and the beautiful in other lands, the true and noble in the citizenship of other countries, the justness and beneficence of the laws of other governments.

Our idea was this, that in neither the Dominion nor the United States would a religious sect be permitted to settle, be fostered and protected by law to grow and increase, whose formula of faith recognized no human government and whose practices were detrimental to and disregarding of the rights of other citizens, and the rules of government to which all other citizens were held to be subject.

At the time of writing the editorial referred to, we had in mind the thought, Would the Dominion government permit the Utah Mormons settling in Alberta to practice plural marriage, or to live in a state of what is known in Utah as "unlawful cohabitation," should such a dogma and such practices be taught and attempted in that province under the plea for religious toleration? Are the laws so carelessly framed as to permit the building up of a polygamic community on the soil of a British colony? We were impressed that it would not be so done, and the thought gave us confidence to feel that the officers of both the Dominion and the United States were dealing justly with the Doukhobors.

As a citizen of the United States we can love and honor our country and its flag, and also take off our hat in respect and honor for the cross of Saint George, the emblem of the mother country whence our forefathers came.

We agree with the brother as to the destiny of the Anglo-Saxon race, and give his article room with pleasure and without a thought of jealousy, or suspicion of motive. Nevertheless it seems a difficult task to avoid giving occasion for criticism if one writes freely.

AZTEC TREASURES RECOVERED.

The following, taken from the San Francisco Chronicle for November 14, 1902, is a sample of what went the rounds of the press about that time:

New York, November 13.—A special to the Sun from Hermosillo, Mexico, says: "A remarkable authenticated story of the discovery of hidden Aztec treasure has just been reported to the government authorities at Tepic by Pablo Mertino, the parish priest of Yesca. The priest makes the statement, which is concurred in by several reliable witnesses to the occurrence, that a party of Americans, headed by an archæologist who gave the name of Heverick, arrived at Yesca several weeks ago and went from that place into the mountains, accompanied by three Mexican guides.

"The archæologist got bearings by means of a chart which he said he copied from an Aztec stone tablet in the National Museum in the city of Mexico. They found a large cavern in the mountain near Yesca. Immense stone images stood about this chamber. In one end was a handsome altar, above which burned a bright flame, supplied by natural gas from a crevice in the wall. It has probably been burning for centuries.

"In a chamber adjoining was found a great store of ornaments and utensils belonging to the Aztecs or some other race. Twelve burros were required to transport the articles taken from the cave to San Blas, where they were shipped to San Francisco, accompanied by the Americans. It is said to be the largest and most valuable collection of relics ever discovered in Mexico.

"Such articles can not be removed from Mexico without the consent of the Government and an investigation is in progress."

ANCIENT AMERICANS CREMATED THEIR DEAD.

In the Kansas City Journal for January 18 there appeared an article under the heading, "Cremated Their Dead," which is of considerable interest in an archæological way. The article begins by speaking of Lansing, Kansas, having been for some time past quite a center of interest for anthropologists and scientists. In February, 1902, a skull was found there which bore evidences of great antiquity, and since the discovery many noted scientists interested in archæology and anthropology have visited the little Kansas town. After mentioning many others, the article speaks of George J. Rensburg, a Kansas archæologist, and his work in Kansas and Missouri archæological fields. Mr. Rensburg claims to have discovered evidences of a mound-building people who were distinct from the great Mississippi Valley race of Mound-builders. Within fifteen or twenty miles of Lansing he has discovered mounds which furnish evidences that the builders practiced cremation of their dead. Mr. Rensburg has in preparation a book in which he will publish many of his archæological discoveries in Missouri and Kansas. He is quoted by the Journal as follows:

"The burial, or crematory mounds, usually crown the high points of land, and vary in size from twelve to twenty-five feet in diameter, and not to exceed four feet in height," said Mr. Rensburg in reviewing his most important discoveries. "On the lowlands, above high water mark, generally on the second terrace of the creek beds, are occasionally observed elevations similar in external appearances to the burial mounds. These are especially noticeable where they have not been deteriorated by cultivation or other encroachments of modern civilization. Excavation reveals that they are the rubbish of the Indian lodge or hut, their contents, or rather composition, being a mass of charcoal and other burned substances, bones of animals, potsherds, and various objects of domestic utility. Near the base of one of these lodge sites at Iatan, Missouri, I found the largest fragment of pottery that I have ever found in the mound region in question. It was nearly a fourth of a vessel of perhaps one-half gallon capacity. I mention this incident in view of the fact that the pottery of the primitive 'Missouri bottomite' was apparently of a fragile quality, and exists now only in a fragmentary condition. I have never succeeded in finding a vessel intact, although potsherds are numerous on all camp and village sites along the Missouri River.

"The burial mounds are constructed largely of stone, invariably lime rock and generally carried from the outcropping ledges along the sides or base of the hill on which the tumuli are situated. I have, however, noted instances in which the stone had evidently been carried from a considerable distance, there being no stone in the immediate vicinity of the mounds. Several wagon-loads of stone are sometimes contained in a single structure. Huge wedge-shaped rocks, many of them weighing as high as a hundred pounds each, firmly embedded with the larger end downward, make the penetration of these mounds a difficult task. The human remains, sometimes the bones of several persons, calcined and badly decomposed, and scattered about in confusion, are inclosed in rudely constructed stone cairns, the walls and contents generally showing unmistakable signs of crematory funeral rites. Mounds of this character along the Missouri rarely ever yield relics of any kind. The only objects I have found in them aside from the human bones, were several rude flint implements and some chert spalls in an Atchison County, Kansas, group of mounds. These deposits, I believe, were accidental, rather than intentional. Despite their dearth of relics to enrich the collector's cabinet, these mounds in themselves are interesting, and afford an inviting subject for the studious and investigating antiquarian.

"In several instances the disclosures of these incinerary sepulchers have been of exceptional interest. On the famous old 'Major Bean farm,' in the vicinity of the Missouri lakes, within a stone's throw, yes, almost within the shadow of the old war-time hostelry which has sheltered such notables as Jefferson Davis, General Albert Sidney Johnson and others, I opened a mound in which a number of prehistoric Missourians had been incinerated long before the pioneer Major Bean had ever dreamed of settling on the placid shore of the lake which bears his name, and perhaps long before this doughty Missouri soldier, or his parents, came into existence. And perhaps Major Bean lived there all those years unconscious that the ashes of his red skinned (?) predecessors were resting at the very threshold of his pioneer home.

"This mound contained the remains of perhaps a half dozen skeletons in a confused, calcined mass, fragments of skulls and jaw bones being visible in every part of the mound. A noteworthy feature of this discovery was the unusual thickness of the cranial fragments. The whole mass of burned bones, charcoal and other burned substances, was covered with a layer of burned earth—baked almost to the consistency of brick—and then the regulation stone and black loam on top of this, making a mound fifteen feet in diameter and three feet high. A mound on the farm of Mr. James Palmer, at Iatan, Missouri, disclosed one of the phalanges of a human foot with the toe-nail still adhering to it. This, considering the fact that the rest of the remains were badly decomposed, and the mound evidently of much antiquity, is a remarkable discovery, and one, I believe, that has never been duplicated. Mr. Cy Smith, formerly police sergeant of Atchison, Kansas, now toll keeper of the Atchison bridge, and a reliable witness, was present when the find was made, as was also Mr. Palmer, a trustworthy citizen. The interesting specimen may now be seen in my private collection of antiquities. In this same mound was found a charred portion of a humerus about midway of which is a perfectly round perforation extending vertically into the hollow center of the bone. This perforation is about the circumference of a thirty-two caliber bullet hole. Perforation of the humerus is common among the remains of prehistoric people, but it invariably exists in the coronoid and olecranon fossa of that particular bone, and not in the cylindrical shaft as is the case in the Missouri specimens. Hence we have here something of an entirely different character from what is commonly known ethnologically as perforation of the humerus.

"The mound in which these curio-osseous conditions existed bore every indication of great age. A large white-oak about four feet in diameter originally grew on top of it. It was cut down in 1866 and converted into ties for the Kansas City, St. Joseph, and Council Bluffs railroad, which passes the place.

Mr. Palmer, who had lived on the farm on which the mound was located, since 1845, more than half a century ago, informed me that the mound looked as old then as it did at the time of its exploration. Mr. Palmer gave me an iron tomahawk which his father found on this farm in the forties.

"Although these mounds, both isolated and in groups, exist at intervals along the Missouri River between Omaha and Kansas City, I find that they are especially numerous in the immediate vicinity of the chain of lakes on the Missouri side of the river between Leavenworth and Atchison. The Missouri and Kansas mounds, adjacent to the Missouri River basin, are exactly similar in construction and contents, and were, in all probability, built by the same people. I have excavated these structures on Sugar Lake, in Missouri, and at the mouth of Owl Creek, in Atchison County, Kansas, and found that the same general characteristics prevailed throughout. Hence the Missouri River can not be considered a dividing line between two distinct mound-building districts as some writers have asserted. The late Judge E. P. West, who was actively interested in archaeological matters, explored some of these mounds in Western Missouri, and writing for the Kansas City Review of Science several years ago, concluded that they were the work of the great Mississippi valley race known as the Mound-builders, and that the comparative smallness of the Missouri River mounds with the great earthworks of Ohio, Illinois, and other Mississippi basin territory, was due to the fact that the former were hastily constructed, this being the outskirts of the Mound-builders' civilization."

Mr. Remsburg does not agree with Judge West's theory. He says that while the intrinsic evidence of the Missouri River mounds sustains their claim to a considerable antiquity, they reveal nothing above the capacity or achievement of the typical North American Indian. "That the Indians constructed mounds in various parts of the country, and that certain tribes practiced cremation of the dead, is a foregone archaeological conclusion," says Mr. Remsburg, "and in studying the life habits of the 'red race,' and the burial customs indicated by these mounds, and the relics found closely associated with them, I can see no necessity for attributing them to the agency of a distinct or superior race when they express so unmistakably the known status of Indian intellect."

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, January 22.

Editors Herald: In HERALD for January 17, in answer to the question, "What would have become of us if Eve had not eaten the forbidden fruit," some one answered, "Nothing. We would not have been." I understand the record to say that when God gave Adam the woman in the garden, he accompanied the gift with a command to multiply and replenish the earth. It is fair to presume that they were able to carry out the command, or do you hold that the entire animal world would have been unable to multiply if Eve had continued obedient? Of course when Eve fell and had to leave the garden, it became necessary for Adam also to place himself on her level if he was to carry out the law of multiplication, but I am of the opinion that if she had remained in the garden they would not have remained childless. What do you think?

And now I want to ask you a question: When "the Lord took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood, also," what portion of the priesthood was it? If, as some of our elders believe, it was the Melchisedec priesthood, were the elders and others who held that priesthood at that time deprived of the authority they held on the death of Moses? And if it was all the authority of that priesthood, under what law did Lehi and his descendants, also the prophets of Israel, from Moses to Malachi, who are not of the tribe of Levi, officiate at the altar? You will see from my questions that the solution given by the elders has not been satisfactory, so I bring my query for more light.

J. CHAS. JENSEN.

For reply to part one of the foregoing letter, see Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi, chapter 1, paragraph 8, page 58, small edition, "Adam fell that men might be." Our reply to the former question was, "We do not know;" and was based upon the idea that we and all of Adam's posterity, so far as we know, were born out of the garden of Eden. We presume that had both remained in the garden, they would have had children, but by what rule can we say we would have been among those children; when the penalty put upon Eve was, "I will greatly multiply thy conception"? We do not care to affirm that we would have been of the fewer number born in the garden.

The question in the latter part of the letter may be answered later.

CORRECTION.

In the editorial, "An Illustrative Incident," on page 50 of HERALD for January 21, 1903, second sentence of second paragraph, for "It has ever been assumed," read, "It has never been assumed," etc. An error in the types makes us to say quite to the contrary of what we wrote.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of December 25, 1902, Bro. Wight wrote from aboard the steamship Allinga, on high seas: "Twenty have been baptized since Mr. Blair first began debating with Bro. Mackie, eighteen of them since I began with Blair. In mean statement he is worse than Braden. Need I tell you more? The branch in Melbourne now numbers fifty, with prospects for a continued increase. Bro. Butterworth and I are on our way to Sydney for the conference there, and he may go home, America, starting in January via steamship Sonoma. Bro. Ellis has had a slight paralytic stroke. My mission address will be G. P. O., Sydney, New South Wales, Australia."

On January 22 J. Charles Jensen wrote from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "Bro. and Sr. C. A. Beebe have gone to Hot Springs, Arkansas. We all hope for the best. Elder L. E. Hills, a conductor on the Milwaukee Railway, preached for us Sunday morning and evening, January 11, very acceptably. We hope to have him locate here. At our semi-annual election of branch officers, all were reelected with good majorities. Saints here are well, excepting for slight colds."

By letter from Bro. W. R. Pickering, of Kansas City, we learn that he and his wife will sail from New York on February 3, for a trip to the East. He says: "We expect to make most all the Mediterranean ports, going as far east as Jerusalem and Damascus, also to Alexandria and Cairo, returning through Italy, Switzerland, France, and England, arriving home again about the middle of June."

Writing from Tiffin, Iowa, January 22, F. A. Smith said: "Bro. Mintun did well in the debate, and made friends for the cause. We will go to Iowa City the 24th. We are going to hold some meetings here if we can."

In sending in a contribution to the College debt fund, T. C. Kelley wrote: "I do not know whether you approve of the elders taking the liberty to donate any of the means given them for personal expenses, but I like to contribute a little once in a while, even if it is 'more than they all.' (See Luke 21: 3.) I used to think some of the brethren of means would, like the judge referred to in Luke 18: 2-5, become weary with the continual coming of the 'widow' of request for money; but it seems that their patience holds out longer than that of the judge. Perhaps it is well, for it gives all the poor Saints a chance to give 'more than they all,' and if they do it, will they not have a greater reward?"

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

W. H. Smart reports that he and Bro. J. T. Riley, who is a great sacrificer for the work, have been laboring together of late.

F. A. Smith in reporting for last quarter reports twenty-eight baptisms in his field. He says the elders find a general indifference to religious matters, hence they have poor hearings. The brethren are working together in harmony. He has ordained Bro. Orman Salisbury second counselor to the president of the Fourth Quorum of Deacons, as per resolution of General Conference.

Bro. Dana P. Brown, writing from Humptulips, Chehalis County, Washington, states that there are five members of the church at that place who are desirous of being visited by some of the eldership; namely, Proctor Brown, Sarah Brown, Ernest Fishel, Lizzie Fishel, and himself. He does not know whether they are in a district or not, but they would be pleased to welcome an elder in their midst. Humptulips is twenty-four miles north from Hoquiam. Any one going there will need to leave the railroad at Hoquiam and ride over with the mail-carrier. Bro. Brown was seventy-nine years old last October. He came from Central Illinois. Bro. G. H. Hilliard may know him.

By the Nebraska City News, of Nebraska City, of late date, sent by Bro. J. W. Waldsmith, we note that William N. McLennan, with whom we studied law for years at Nauvoo, Illinois, had a rather narrow and thrilling escape from drowning, in an attempt to cross the Missouri River on the ice with a horse and buggy. The ice gave way over deep water, the team was drowned, the buggy lost, but Mr. McLennan clung to the edge of the ice long enough to be rescued by a Mr. Cook, who ran to his rescue. Mr. McLennan is eighty-four years of age, but is still vigorous and tenacious of life. We thank Bro. Waldsmith for copies of the News. Mr. McLennan suffered no permanent injury by his involuntary cold bath.

Heman C. Smith reports forty-eight baptisms in his field for the quarter just closed. These baptisms were by the missionaries and he says local men baptized a goodly number. He reports general conditions of the mission good.

D. W. Dutton, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, was in Lamoni Saturday last, in the interests of the Anti-saloon League. He made the HERALD a call, and as a result, the Dial of Progress, the Iowa official organ of the League, will reach us as an exchange.

We note by the daily press that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is engaged in efforts to secure the passage of an anti-polygamy constitutional amendment. They will also make a fight on the seating of Reed Smoot in the Senate.

Bro. J. M. Terry writes us from Oakland, California, that he is not having good health there, and that he finds the mission a difficult one in which to accomplish much work.

In a recent number of his paper, Leaves of Healing, Dowie says that the days of prosperity for the farming community may not end this year, nor next, but there will soon be a change, a period of drought is coming, he says.

Sr. O. B. Arnold, who is sixty-six years old, recently wrote from Namao, Alberta, Northwest Territory, renewing for HERALD. Her children are all married but one, a daughter, who is with her. The three live alone, and Mr. Arnold is sixty-nine years old. Sr. Arnold joined the church when the doctrine was first preached in Ontario. She likes the Alberta country quite well, and says it is being settled rapidly.

Elder J. M. Baker, Dow City, Iowa, January 24th, reports that everything is moving along in a hopeful way in the Gallands Grove District. He and Bro. Crippen had closed a series of good meetings at Deloit, and were opening up at Dow City.

Of the many callings and vocations in life, none, perhaps, is more high and noble; and none through which God and his salvation can be more blessedly revealed; and none in which God and his holy cause may be more shamefully disgraced, than in the ministerial calling. God's ministers are ambassadors from the courts of heaven to represent the kingdom of God to this world. He who labors in such a calling, by mouth or pen, for pleasure, support, or honor of self, is a dark and corrupted spot on the unrolled scroll of God's creation.—Gospel Trumpet.

SIXTH DAY OF APRIL.

In Exodus 13: 3, 4 we read, "And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day in which ye come out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the Lord brought you out from this place; there shall no leavened bread be eaten. This day come ye out in the month Abib."

Smith's Dictionary of the Bible informs us that the month Abib corresponds with our month April. Then the month of April can only be positively fixed as the first month in the year; for as we read in Exodus 12:1, 2, "And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying, This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you."

It seems that God informed his people in regard to dates and months when he delivered them out of their Egyptian bondage; and like the restoration of the gospel in our day, after authority was conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, the organization of the church was postponed until the sixth day of April, so it was with the Israelites' deliverance.

Next we wish to call your attention to the birthday of Christ: The twenty-fifth day of December is now celebrated as his birthday. This date has not always been thus celebrated; but his birthday has been changed three times. The last time it was changed to suit the conveniences of those who had in charge the arranging of dates and seasons of the year, and they arranged that midwinter be the beginning of the year. Hence there is no evidence that Christ was born December 25, in the winter, but by reading Luke 2: 8, "And there were in the same country, shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night," the evidence is that his birthday was not in the winter, but in the spring of the year; and more likely on the sixth of April than the twenty-fifth of December.

Now comes the atonement for the human family. Christ come forth triumphantly over death and arose from the grave; and when did this happen? Easter Sunday is celebrated. It is a movable holy day always coming on the first Sunday after the full moon after the equinox, which is the twenty-first of March. This year the moon will be full April 11; consequently Easter is on the 12th. It can vary from March 23 to April 20. Thus we see the meridian is April 6.

Turn now to Book of Mormon, Nephi 4: "And now it came to pass that according to our record, and we know our record to be true, for behold, it was a just man who did keep the record; for he truly did many miracles in the name of Jesus; and there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus, save he were cleansed every whit from his iniquity. And now it came to pass, if there was no mistake made by this man in the reckoning of our time, the thirty and third year had passed away, and the people began to look with great earnestness for the sign which had been given by the prophet Samuel, the Lamanite; yea, for the time that there should be darkness for the space of three days, over the face of the land. And there began to be great doubtings and disputations among the people, notwithstanding so many signs had been given." This prophet had predicted the time, and also events which would transpire at the time of Christ's crucifixion and resurrection. Quoting again from Nephi 4: "And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month [April], in the fourth day of the month [Friday when Jesus was crucified], there arose a great storm, such an one as never had been known in all the land; and there was also a great and terrible tempest; and there was terrible thunder, insomuch that it did shake the whole earth as if it was about to divide asunder," etc. This same event which occurred on the fourth day of the first month of the thirty-fourth year of Christ's age is also recorded in the Bible. "And it was about the sixth hour, and there was darkness over all the earth."—Luke 23: 45. "And behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent."—Matthew 27: 55. Thus Christ arose from the grave on the sixth day of April.

It is stated that God directed the establishing of the government of the United States in raising up wise men to that end. How did God direct in regard to the time of its beginning? The St. Louis Globe-Democrat states: "The last Congress under the Confederation adopted a resolution declaring that the first Wednesday in January, 1789, presidential electors should be chosen in the several States; that on the first Wednesday in February the electors should choose a president, and that on the first Wednesday in March Congress should meet, the president be inaugurated, and the wheels of government begin to turn." The first Wednesday in March, 1789, fell on the fourth of the month. This is the reason why congressional and presidential terms begin and end on March 4.

But though the government was born on March 4, 1789, it did not begin active existence until several weeks later. Steamboats were not dreamed of then, and railroads did not come into existence until a half century later. Traveling was a slow, tiresome work, and Congress was long in coming together. The House of Representatives did not get a quorum until March 30, twenty-six days after the date set apart for its opening. The Senate did not organize until April 6. Congress then counted the vote and declared George Washington elected president and John Adams vice-president.

The last event concerning this notable day, the sixth day of April, is the organization of the church.

It happened much the same as the beginning of this government; notwithstanding the authority or ordination of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by the angel of God (Revelation 14:6) was May 15, 1829, yet the church was not organized until much later. In regard to this, Joseph Smith, Jr., said: "In this manner did the Lord continue to give us instruction from time to time, concerning the duties which now devolve upon us, and among many other things of the kind, we obtained of him the following, by the Spirit of prophecy and revelation; which not only gave us much information, but also pointed out to us the precise day upon which, according to his will and commandment, we should proceed to organize his church once again here upon the earth."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 928, 929.

Now, with all these events which have transpired on the sixth day of April, it will not be much of a conjecture, to think that some time in the future, as the Saints will meet together on the sixth of April in conference capacity, and as the president shall tap the table with his gavel to call order, that at that day and moment, we shall hear the trump of God, when the righteous dead shall come forth and the righteous will be changed in the twinkling of the eye to meet the Lord in the air.

F. C. WARNKY.

"ADAM FELL THAT MEN MIGHT BE."

It almost invariably happens that when an individual, honest in motive, sets out to investigate what we term "the great latter-day work," he is sooner or later brought in contact with what appears to him to be direct contradictions and inconsistencies in our standard works; and oftentimes confusion and discouragement ensues. If these obstacles can be removed successfully, what faith may have arisen in his mind will undoubtedly be greatly strengthened, and the chances are favorable that the investigator will become a believer; if not, the opposite will be the result; it will be destroyed and he will be found among those who oppose the work.

One of the greatest of these obstacles, and one most frequently met with, is found in the declaration placed as the heading of this article, "Adam fell that men might be." Immediately on reading this statement, the mind of the reader is carried back to Genesis 1:28, where the creation of the man and woman is recorded and where God gives them an explicit command to "multiply and replenish the earth."

And now comes the trouble. This command can not, according to the caption of our article, be carried into effect until Adam fell, hence to obey one command he had to disobey another; that is, to carry the command to "multiply and replenish the earth" into effect, he had to disobey the command not to partake of the "forbidden fruit." Such a requirement of Adam would be very dishonoring to his Creator.

The only attempt to reconcile this difficulty, that the writer is aware of, is the following one: The command of God in Genesis 1:28 was applicable to them (Adam and Eve) before their fall. Eve having fallen, involved a separation between her and Adam, and consequently an impossibility to carry the command into effect. Adam loving Eve, gallantly stepped forward and partook of the forbidden fruit that he might go with her. That this declaration of Nephi, "Adam fell that men might be," was spoken of Adam alone, and is not to be applied to Eve at all. That Eve was only idly talking when she said, "Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed."—Genesis 4:11 I. T.

The writer can not accept this theory as being the correct one, for the following reasons:

It is in opposition to the facts, and does violence to the language as recorded in both King James' and Inspired Translations of the Bible. This declaration of Nephi undoubtedly does apply to Eve as well as to Adam. It makes Eve utter an untruth, when we have every reason to believe that she was speaking by the power of the Holy Ghost. It makes the King James Translation contradict itself, makes it and the Inspired Translation conflict, and the latter with itself. It leaves one of the strongest arguments known to infidels against the inspiration of the Scriptures, untouched and unanswered.

That Adam loved Eve we have no reason to doubt, but that he partook of the forbidden fruit simply for the sake of that love and that he might go with her, we have every reason to doubt. We have not the slightest hint or intimation given in the record that Adam knew there would be a separation of himself and Eve. All that had been spoken to him in regard to disobedience was, "For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The "casting out" was an after consideration. (Genesis 3:22, 23.) Suppose Eve had been thrust from the garden and Adam had remained, what evidence have we that their separation would have been final? None at all.

Adam's conduct when accosted by his Creator is in direct opposition to the theory we are opposing. When the dread question was asked him, "Hast thou eaten of the tree?" what does he say and do? Does he gallantly step forward and say, "The woman thou didst give me partook of this fruit and didst fall. I love her and wished to go with her, so I partook also? No indeed, far from it. But his answer is characteristic of a great many of our modern Adams when they wish to shield themselves in wrong-doing at the expense of their wives: "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat."—Genesis 3:12.

The Lord in giving his reason for pronouncing the curse upon the earth for Adam's sake, says:

“Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife.”—Genesis 3:17. This makes it perfectly plain that it was Eve who induced Adam to transgress, and if there was any gallantry displayed upon the occasion at all, Eve should certainly have the honor of it. The facts in the case are simply these: Adam partook of the fruit for the same reasons Eve did, viz., she saw the tree “Was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise.”

We will now briefly examine the language of Nephi from which our text is taken and see if it can consistently be applied to Adam alone, “And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed, he would not have fallen; but he would have remained in the garden of Eden. And all things which were created, must have remained in the same state which they were, after they were created; and they must have remained for ever and had no end. And they would have had no children; wherefore, they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery: doing no good, for they knew no sin. . . . Adam fell, that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy.”—2 Nephi 1:8.

If Eve had already fallen, how could all things remain as when created after her act of disobedience and its effects upon her? And how could they remain in a state of innocence, when Eve had already sinned? The simple meaning to the whole matter is, the word Adam must be applied to both himself and Eve. The plural pronoun they, having both Adam and Eve as its antecedent, proves this beyond a doubt.

“And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying, Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient.”—Genesis 4:11, I. T. These are the words of Eve of which the advocates of the theory we are opposing, say, she was simply talking, and that we should take her words only for what they are worth.

Are we to suppose for a moment that Eve was idly talking in regard to her seed, when she followed up the declaration with three as grand truths as were ever uttered by mortal lips? No, we can not do this. It is the same truth as declared by Nephi: “Adam fell, that men might be.” Adam and Eve were both in favor with God at this time. (See fourth verse.) Adam was filled with the Holy Ghost and prophesied concerning all the nations of the earth, fervently praising the name of God for permitting his transgression, for his eyes were opened, and that he should share the joys of the resurrection. Eve catches the inspirational flow, and also thanks God for permitting their fall, and in the height of her uncontrollable joy exclaims, “Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed.” Surely no idle talking here.

The theory we are opposing would compel us to believe that the second chapter of Genesis is a repetition or rehearsal of the first. This we can not consistently do, except in case of the first five verses, for the following reasons: The most of the second chapter treats of new matter. There are nearly a half score of direct contradictions between the two chapters.

In Genesis 1:28 is an account of the creation of man and woman; then in the second chapter, fifth verse, after giving a summary of all God had created, it is declared that there “was not a man to till the ground.” Here the infidel steps in and declares that God had either forgotten that he had made man, or made him twice.

In Genesis 1:24-26 we are informed that God made the beasts of the field before he made man. In the second chapter we see that man was made first, then the beasts, which when made were brought to the man to name. The Inspired Translation confirms this last statement by declaring Adam to be “the first flesh upon the earth.” Both translations, in the first chapter, declare that the man and woman were created on the same day, the sixth. Both, in the second, place a long period of time, probably years, between them. Adam was first made and enlivened, the garden of Eden planted, the trees made to grow out of the ground (and we have no right to suppose any other way than naturally) the fruit to grow and ripen, the beasts and fowls made and named, and Adam then put to sleep and Eve made.

In Genesis 1:11, 12, the earth brought forth grass, herbs, and trees the third day of creation; then in Genesis 2:5, after everything had been finished, we are told that there were no plants or herbs upon the earth, for it had not rained yet. The last quotation from the first chapter (Genesis 1:11, 12) makes the grass, herbs, and trees come forth three days before man was made; the second informs us that man was made first. (Genesis 2:7-10.) In first chapter, verses twenty and twenty-one, we are told that the waters brought forth the fowl, or were commanded to bring them forth. In second chapter, verse nineteen, God made the fowls out of the ground.

In the first, God gave every tree to man for food. (Genesis 1:29.) In the second, he forbids the tree in the midst of the garden. In the first, the command to “multiply” was placed upon the man and woman in blessing. In the third, the declaration that Eve should have children was placed upon her in condemnation. (Genesis 3:16.)

Looking at the question from our opponent’s standpoint; that is, that the command to “multiply” was applicable to Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, there can not possibly be any reasonable explanation of these differences between the two chapters, and the infidel takes advantage of the fact, rolls these contradictions as a sweet morsel under his tongue, and exclaims, "Aha! how are these for the inspiration of the Scriptures?"

The reader may, by this time, be anxious to know what theory we advance in explanation of the difficulty, if the one examined be not the correct one. Our solution of the problem is a very simple one indeed; but simple as it is, it sweeps away every obstacle, brings harmony and consistency between our standard books and completely silences every infidel battery.

The command given in Genesis 1:28 was not given to Adam and Eve in their Edenic state, but at their spiritual creation, hence inapplicable to them. We are well aware that the idea of a spiritual procreation will be new to many, that it will grate harshly on the ears of others, while to a third class it may smack tartly of Brigham Youngism; but that is neither here nor there. It should make no difference to us who it surprises or offends or who may have originated the idea; the great and important point with us is, or should be, is it reasonable? Is it consistent? Is it tenable? Is it true? To all of these questions we answer in the plainest terms, We believe it is.

Every firm believer in the Scriptures, especially in the Inspired Translation, understands that everything God created and made exists in dual form, the spiritual and the physical; that is, everything in the spiritual realm has its type or likeness in the physical. The Apostle Paul in Romans 1:20 declares, "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." We quote also Hebrews 9:23: "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these." Moses was commanded to make the tabernacle strictly to the pattern shown him in the mount, because it "served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." (Hebrews 8:5.) It will be the union of these two, the spiritual and physical, which effects the perfection of both.

Now, as the physical is an exact type or reproduction in grosser form of the spiritual, let us determine if we can, what system God has employed to bring the physical into existence. When we thoroughly investigate his works, as revealed through the laws of nature, we make the important and startling discovery that the procreative system prevails throughout every branch of his vast creations. It is the system by which the human race is perpetuated. It exists throughout the animal and vegetable kingdoms, and our scientists inform us that it extends even into the mineral kingdom. It seems, then, that in physical perpetuation God knows no other than the procreative system. Now, if this be true (and we presume no one will doubt it), are we beyond reason or consistency in presuming that God employed the same method in bringing the spiritual into existence? We think not.

Again, we are informed in numerous places throughout the Scriptures that God is our Father, in fact, we are commanded to worship him as our Father. Very well. Now let us inquire in what sense he is our Father? The answer is simple; he created our foreparents, endowed them with procreative powers and we were thus brought into being. In Hebrew 12:9, God is called "The Father of spirits," which, if true, places him in the same relation to them, that the word "Father" places him to us, which means, that he is the "Father of spirits" through the procreative system.

The objection may be raised here that God told the man and woman to "replenish the earth," contending that this language would not be applicable at their spiritual creation, hence must apply to their Edenic state. We answer, the spirits were created with a view to their taking bodies upon the earth; as a fact, they could not do this until the spirits were brought into being, hence the faster they multiplied the sooner the earth would be filled up with bodies. As another proof to the position we have assumed that Adam and Eve had to fall before they could have offspring, we introduce the fact that no attempt was made to carry the command into effect until after the fall, however favorable the circumstances were to that end. Now why was this? It certainly was not for the want of time, opportunity, or favorable conditions. Adam (according to our opponents' view) was in the prime of new-born manhood. The fresh, rich blood of a man in perfect health and physical vigor coursed his veins. Eve, as "an helpmeet," had been given him, purer and fairer than the tenderest flowers that bloomed and blushed at her feet, a perfect model of female beauty and loveliness.

They ate the rich, ripe fruit from the new-grown trees, drank the pure, crystal waters, breathed the soft, mellow air perfumed with the odor of a thousand virgin flowers, while they listened, with emotions of joy, to the merry twitter and heart-charming melody of the golden plumed birds as they sailed and circled through the soft, blue air—

The doves cooed love in the willow trees;
The bees went humming by,
The leaves moved softly in the mellow breeze,
And gaily flew the butterfly.

All this, and yet no attempt to carry the command into effect. Strange indeed! It could not be that they had forgotten, it surely. Eve remembered the other command not to eat the forbidden fruit when accosted by the serpent, and we can not believe that they had forgotten this time. God in placing the curse upon Eve, turns the great searchlight of facts upon the matter, and all is plain as day. Listen: "Thy desire shall [now] be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee."—Genesis 3:16. Pretty plain language that up to this time she had had no desire for her husband.

We will now briefly consider one or two objections that may be raised against the position we are occupying, and then leave the matter to the reader's consideration:

1. If Eve was not Adam's wife in a true sense before the fall, where is the consistency or propriety in God calling her Adam's wife? (Genesis 2:25.) We answer, the creation of Eve as a wife to Adam was done with a view to the fall. As the plan of redemption was devised before and with a view to man's fall, so Eve was given to Adam as a wife. The book states that she was to be "an helpmeet" for Adam. Now did you ever consider what kind of a helpmeet would have been useful to Adam before the fall? What was his condition or circumstances at that time? According to the accounts given he was just as a little child. He knew no good, consequently, could do no good. He knew no evil, therefore, could do no evil.

Nephi in discoursing upon this point, says, "For it must needs be that there is an opposition in all things. If not so . . . righteousness could not be brought to pass; neither wickedness; neither holiness nor misery; neither good nor bad. Wherefore, all things must needs be a compound in one; wherefore if it should be one body, it must needs remain as dead, having no life, neither death nor corruption, nor incorruption, happiness nor misery, neither sense nor insensibility."—2 Nephi 1:6.

That was the condition Adam was in before the fall, and we will ask again, What kind of a helpmeet did he need at that time? We can easily imagine what kind he would need after the fall, but not before. Simply because Eve was called Adam's wife before the fall is no good reason that she was his wife in reality. The history of the affair was written hundreds of years afterward (twenty-five hundred), and the historian, Moses, calls her his wife before the fall, for the reason that she was his wife afterward. To illustrate, the writer has often made this remark, "When I first saw my wife, she was only eight years old." Now, no one would understand from this remark that she was my wife at eight years of age. By no means. I simply call her my wife when eight years old, because she became so afterwards. And this is the sense, and only sense, in which Eve was Adam's wife before the fall. This idea is further corroborated by the language of Adam in Genesis 2:24: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." Adam had neither father nor mother to leave, so as a matter of necessity had his eye on things after the fall.

2. The Lord says in pronouncing the curse upon Eve, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." If Eve had no conception or had not the power of conception before the fall, how could the Lord multiply them? He can not multiply that which does not exist.

We answer, the Lord could multiply Eve's conceptions in the same sense that he could multiply her sorrow before she ever had any sorrow, or in the same sense that he could multiply the seed of Jacob before he ever had any seed. (Genesis 28:3, 4.) The Lord is not speaking to Eve as an individual alone in this case, but is speaking prophetically of her posterity. That this view is the correct one is evident from the fact that the curse was not carried out individually upon Eve. Her conception was not greatly multiplied. She did not have any more children than the average women of her time.

When God promised Abraham that he would multiply his seed to the number of the stars of heaven or to the sands of the seashore, he did not mean that Abraham should have that many children of his own, but that it should come through his posterity. And so it was in the case of Eve.

NEED OF ATTENDING MEETINGS.

The following conversation overheard not long since caused me to think how as a people we might reflect on it to our profit:

"Unless we have a revival or something of the kind to awaken us I do not know what will become of our churches. There seems to be no responsibility on the part of church members as to their duties regarding church services. If they happen to get up in time and the day is fine, and they feel like it, having made no previous engagement, then they go to church; but if for any of these reasons they want to stay home, they do so, and justify themselves in so doing."

You who read, will think that Latter Day Saints never get to this condition; and yet when we go to church Sunday after Sunday and sometimes, yes always, there are some seats, and alas, too many, that we see empty that ought to be filled, we wonder why it is. Are we like the saints in Ephesus that are mentioned in the second chapter of Revelation,—have we left our "first love"?

Possibly this letter will not reach those who might be reminded of their neglect and help them to answer the question, Am I doing right by absenting myself from the house of God? For very often those who fail to attend church fail also to subscribe for and read the church papers. We are told in Doctrine and Covenants not to forget to assemble for worship. There was wisdom and a purpose in it, when given by one who said, "No idle word proceeded from his mouth." It is from listening to the servants of God that we become more acquainted with God's laws governing us as a people, of our duties toward one another, and of our obligations to God and his work. How can we hear unless we are where this counsel is being given by those whom God has appointed, that by the foolishness of preaching, he might save them that believe? I know that you will think this means outsiders or those not of our faith, but of what profit is it to us to have our names enrolled in the church books, if we do not follow on and keep all the commandments of God? Nay, rather our condemnation will be greater because we knew the will of the Master and did it not.

Many say, I love this gospel and I know it is true, and want to grow in it. But be assured we will never grow in this work unless we learn to take the first steps, and are willing to take them when we learn what they are. You show me a Saint who faithfully attends the services in the house of God, not once or twice, but always is at his post of duty, and I will show you one who is growing; and trials and obstacles will not hinder him rising higher, because he is learning all the time, and his devotion to right and his humility will find favor with God.

But on the other hand, when members neglect their meetings and make their duties second to their own will, those members are in the same place they were when they started in the race; or what may be worse, have fallen out and ceased to do anything. This condition will be like that mentioned of the people in Ephesus and "they will be removed out of their place."

There are conditions and circumstances which make it impossible to be present; but usually where these conditions prevail the ones who are deprived feel the loss and mourn it. But too often it is neglect, or lack of interest, or some other interest that comes between us and our whole duty to God, that finds us on Sunday morning or on Wednesday night away from our place.

It should not be with us, How few meetings can I get along with, but, How many times can I render this small and feeble service to my heavenly Father, who has made it possible for us to grow nearer to him, and more like him by observing these provisions? No trival thing can excuse us from such service, and let us fear, that because God has so arranged it that six days are for work but the seventh is his day, when we are to worship him, that we do not claim too much of it as our own, and do those things which we would not dare do to an earthly master, but which we indulge ourselves in because God is long-suffering and merciful.

Some claim physical weariness, and overwork, when Sunday comes. There is a saying, "A change is as good as a rest," and I think this will apply here. I have seen few people who have worn themselves out in overwork of this kind, but many cases where they have become disheartened by the cares of life, without this support that is offered in the gospel, because they could not find any time for God and his work. "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness and all things will be added unto you." I believe God will give us physical health above what we have if our zeal is to work for him. When you are tired and discouraged, tell the Lord that you want to be with his people. Ask for strength to be given, and I firmly believe that you will seldom find that an excuse for staying at home.

It is the testimony of many that they have been rested in meeting and healed of sicknesses that were preying upon them when they attended. Certainly we find encouragement, strength, instruction and spiritual blessing by attending the services of God's house.

Let us, then, not excuse ourselves, or try to get away from the fact of our privilege and duty in this matter, but let us with the coming year enter more fully upon this, our part of the Lord's work, and by our presence and prayers sustain the servants of God, who seek to break unto us the word of life.

A NEW-TESTAMENT GAUGE OF OLD-TESTAMENT VALUES.

After the higher criticism has had its way, after we have readjusted our thought of the Bible in accordance with the fullest knowledge of to-day, what place shall be assigned to the Old Testament in its relation to Christian belief? This question is a vital one in religious circles to-day. It is occupying the minds of eminent German theological scholars and forms the subject of much of the most debatable matter in Doctor Cheyne's newly published "Encyclopedia Biblica." A notable address on this question was recently made by Professor Francis Brown, of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, and is now published, together with addresses by two of his colleagues, in book form under the title "The Christian Point of View." Professor Brown endeavors to estimate "The Religious Value of the Old Testament," not so much by the usual critical methods as by the application to the Old Testament of New-Testament standards. He writes:

"What is the test of the Old Testament as a religious authority? It can surely be no other than the universal Christian test. . . . If Jesus Christ is the supreme revelation of God so that all doctrines, opinions, rules, and practices which claim to be of God must conform to his teachings, life, and Spirit in order to establish the claim, then the teachings, life, and Spirit of Jesus Christ are the only touchstone by which we can recognize the religious value of the Old Testament, among the rest. Whatever accords with the teachings, purpose, and Spirit of Jesus Christ has religious value for us. Whatever does not accord with these lacks religious value for us, whether it stands in the Old Testament or in day before yesterday's sermon."

Professor Brown proceeds to a practical illustration of this principle:

"In the field of doctrine we may illustrate the matter by the character of God as shown in the Old Testament. When we sum up the impressions and teachings about the God of the ancient Hebrews, the general result is very definite. We find a personal Being, of great majesty, dignity, and power, the Creator and Ruler of men; a Being of holiness and transcendence; a Being of righteousness, who promotes righteousness in others and punishes every breach of it, whose government is a moral government, and from whose decisions there is no appeal; a Being of kindness, tenderness, and helpfulness, with gracious care for those who confide in Him, whose plans are at length to be worked out and His desires realized in the unity of men under His benevolent sway, amid the exhibition of the divine glories of righteousness and universal peace. With each stroke of this drawing the New-Testament picture is in accord. To this extent the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ indorse the older revelation.

"But when we study certain portions of the Old Testament by themselves, the impression is somewhat different. We find that, over a large area of the history, God appears to care for one small people alone. The region of His power is simply the region of that people's communal and national life. Elsewhere other gods are ruling. Moreover, for a time, the function of Yahweh is not so much to secure His people's righteousness as to give them success in war and prosperity in times of peace. Both the universal and the ethical are long in the background. Further, the beginnings of His worship in Israel, as far as they are not obscure, are very rudimentary. Polytheism lies back of monotheism. From our standpoint we feel the imperfection of the Old-Testament views. We explain them by the principle of development; the Old-Testament view of God is passing from the lower to the higher—from the conceptions common to men to the unique conception of the inimitable King of kings. This means that when we apply our test at certain separate points the Old-Testament doctrine of God is found wanting."

Considering next, the authority of the Old Testament precepts, we are reminded that "some are distinctly corrected or repudiated by the New, such as the law of divorce and the law of the oath." In the eyes of Jesus "the authority that controls moral life is not at all the authority of a statute; it is solely the authority of an inward principle." And the strength of the religious feeling that finds expression in the Psalms and religious lyrics of the Old Testament lies chiefly in the fact that "the God whom we worship in the Hebrew literature of religious experience is the God revealed in Christ." To take a widely different illustration:

"If the Song of Songs is to be saved to the canon of Scripture—if, that is to say, it is to appear conformable to the standard of Jesus Christ—it will be, not by revamping the traditional view which finds in it an allegory of Christ and the church, but by expanding the thought of Christ till it consecrates all love, human as well as divine.

The Old Testament, then, is not, in Professor Brown's opinion, the primary source of the Christian religion. It is the embodiment of a genuine religion, which as far as its elements have permanent vitality, Christianity has taken up into itself. Its promise of universality proves to be "conditioned on its merging into that which was destined to spring from it, to supersede it, to envelop it, to discard the perishable in it, and to give new glory to that in it which could endure."—Literary Digest, December 13, 1902.

WAYS OF COOKING MEAT.

To broil steak, set the gridiron over a clear, hot bed of coals, grease it and have it very hot when the steak is laid on. Turn the steak as often as it broils. Constant watchfulness is required to keep it from being blackened by smoke from the burning drippings. It should be lifted the moment the fat flames up and held until it dies down again. Ten or twelve minutes will cook a steak an inch in thickness. When done lay on a hot platter, sprinkle with salt and pepper, lay bits of butter on it and set in the oven a minute or two before serving. For delicate stomachs leave off the butter.

Broiling is the most approved method of cooking steak, but there are times when the fire is not right for this, and at such times what is called "dry broiling" may be resorted to with almost as good results. Heat the frying-pan smoking hot, grease lightly with a piece of fat and lay the steak in it. As soon as one side is seared turn and sear the other. After this the heat need not be so intense, but it must be sufficient so that no juice will escape until the steak is done. Frequent turning is necessary to prevent this. The steak is spoiled if the juice is allowed to simmer out of it. Just before taking up sprinkle with salt and pepper, turn, season the other side, turn again and in a moment it is ready for the hot platter. Add butter if desired.

Broiling is as good for chops as for steak; but the former being thinner it takes less time for them than for steak.

Frying in grease in the ordinary way is unwholesome. Much of the good of the meat is lost by the juices being allowed to escape, the fibers are rendered hard and indigestible, and thus from an expensive cut of meat poor food often results.

There seems to be no acceptable method of cooking veal cutlets other than frying in fat, first sprinkling with salt and pepper and then dipping in flour or cracker crumbs, eggs, and again in cracker crumbs. Before being thus prepared each piece may be pounded and a little lemon juice squeezed over it. Or the meat may be minced and formed into small cutlets, a few drops of onion and lemon juice and a little parsley being added to each. To secure the best results the fat should be very hot at the start. Lay the cutlets in it, brown one side, turn and brown the other, then lessen the heat and cook slowly until thoroughly done. Cooked in this way they are delicious but should be eaten only by those whose digestion is good and then only occasionally. Veal is very indigestible when underdone, and like pork and poultry should never be served the least bit rare.

To roast meat the oven should be very hot at first. After the outside of the roast is seared the temperature of the oven may be lowered. If there is doubt about the oven being hot enough to start with, sear the meat in a hot frying-pan, or set on the stove the dripping-pan in which it is to be roasted and when very hot turn a few times in this and then put it in the oven. Twenty minutes for each pound of meat will roast it thoroughly. For an underdone condition allow from twelve to fifteen minutes, according to the state desired. No water is needed in the dripping-pan for roasting beef, mutton, lamb, or fat veal.

For the foregoing recipes the best cuts of meat are undoubtedly to be preferred but we have learned that the less expensive parts contain an equal amount of nourishment and if properly cooked may be made very palatable. We turn our attention now to some of these.

One of the best uses that can be made of round steak is in what is sometimes called "Norwegian Stew." Cut the steak in pieces of suitable size for serving, sprinkle with salt and pepper and dip in flour. Sear each side in a frying-pan with hot fat. When all the pieces have been treated in this way pour over them enough boiling water to cover. Simmer gently for two hours or until very tender. Add water if needed to leave enough for a good gravy when done. Chuck steak may be treated in the same way, or seared without flour, and stewed.

Braising is a combination of roasting and stewing by which meat and vegetables with various herbs are cooked together. A braising-pan has a closely fitting cover for the purpose of retaining all the steam generated during this process of cooking. If one has not a braising-pan two roasting-pans that will fit together exactly, one over the other, may be used. By braising, inexpensive, coarse portions of meat may be made tender and juicy. The following recipe for braised beef is taken from the Delineator.

"Put on the bottom of the braising-pan four or five slices of fat salt pork. Cut into dice two carrots, two onions, a turnip and a stalk of celery and mince finely a sprig of parsley. Place half of these over the slices of pork. Dredge well with flour and a little pepper, a piece of the round of beef weighing about four or five pounds, lay it on the bed of pork and vegetables, and place it in a hot oven for from twenty to twenty-five minutes, at the end of which time the heat of the oven may be allowed to moderate. A pint of good stock is then poured over the meat and a few slices of pork and the remaining half of the vegetables laid on top of the beef. Add to these four or five pepper corns, two or three cloves and a couple of bay-leaves. Put a teaspoonful of salt in the bottom of the pan. Fasten the lid down tightly and let all simmer quietly for from three and a half to four hours, remembering that this slow, gentle process of cooking alone will render the meat tender and enjoyable. When the beef is done the gravy is strained, the fat or grease skimmed off, and salt and pepper to taste added. . . . The vegetables are to be placed on the serving platter around the meat, over which may be poured a portion of the gravy, the remainder to be sent to the table in the sauce boat. . . . If the gravy becomes greatly reduced while the meat is cooking, a little more stock may be supplied. A little more flour may also be needed to bring the gravy to a creamy consistency."

Beef tongue is excellent braised. It should first be boiled for a few minutes and then simmered for two hours or until tender enough to remove the skin. When this is done roll it up and tie securely, roll it in flour and place in the braising-pan. Pour over it the following gravy:

"Put into the frying-pan three tablespoonsful of butter; when this sizzles, add an equal quantity of flour. Stir together smoothly. Add a quart of the water in which the tongue was boiled; and the usual cut up vegetables and herbs. Pour over the tongue and allow all to simmer in the covered braising-pan for two hours. The juice of half a lemon may be added to the gravy. Set the tongue in the oven uncovered while straining and thickening the gravy."

The use of the braising-pan gives very satisfactory results in cooking poultry.

For pressed beef, boil in not overmuch water a shank of beef until it will fall from the bones. Carefully pick the meat from the bones and chop or grind fine; then put it back into the kettle with the water in which it was boiled, season with salt, pepper and a little mace. Let it boil for a minute or two, then turn into a deep dish and let it stand to set. It is a good plan to lay on it a small plate with a weight on top. This causes it to set more firmly and it is more readily sliced. If there is too much water left after boiling the meat, let it boil down before putting in the chopped meat, for it must not be too thin.

The following hash may be made from cold roast or steak or even a boiled piece of meat. It is well to look ahead a little for this hash and save a little gravy for it. Take meat that is not very fat and chop fine. If one has a meat-grinder so much the better, for then it is easy work. Put a good-sized piece of butter in the frying-pan and while it is browning over the fire mix salt, pepper, and enough flour to thicken the gravy, with the chopped meat, stir it into the browned butter, and pour in boiling water sufficient to make a soft hash, not forgetting to put in the cold gravy left from the roast. While this is simmering on the back of the stove, prepare some squares of toast, lay on a warm dish and pour the hash over it, being careful to have it all nicely covered.

Another kind of hash is made by adding potatoes. Chop cold boiled meat, carefully picking it free from bones or bits of hard gristle. If pieces of roast or steak are to be used, first stew until tender. When the meat is finely chopped, add nearly twice the quantity of cold boiled potatoes, and chop until fine. Put in the frying-pan a piece of butter and enough stock or boiling water to make the hash quite moist. Add the meat and potatoes and season well with salt, and pepper if desired. A chopped onion may also be added. Cover and simmer for fifteen minutes, then uncover and cook for fifteen or twenty minutes longer, carefully keeping it from sticking to the pan, and adding a little more water if it becomes too dry.

Our space does not admit of advice concerning soups and savory stews, which are at once economical, appetizing, and wholesome, if properly prepared, more than to give a reminder that no part of the meat needs to be wasted. The bones and trimmings from steak (which should be removed before cooking), all other bones and any left-over pieces of roast or steak not otherwise utilized, should be put on in cold water, cooked for a long time, and the stock made use of in soup or stew, or for other purposes where stock is required.

Prayer Union.

As an elder is not accessible, Mrs. Susan Everett Quinn, of Wabash, Indiana, requests the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her young son, who has sustained an injury of the back.

Of the many purposes in the lives of men, none can be pursued in such wisdom, consistency, and integrity; and be attended with such wisdom, consistency, and integrity; and be attended with such success and happiness, as those purposes which hold high over all, the honor of God and the manifestation of the glory of his salvation.—Gospel Trumpet.

LYDIA, Texas, January 17.

Editors Herald: We are still trying to travel the straight and narrow path, though we meet with many discouragements. But, amid all our trials, God gives us his Holy Spirit as a beacon light to lead us on to Zion.

I had the pleasure of attending district conference which convened December 6, at Wilburton, Indian Territory. Met several of my brother laborers and also had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Joseph Smith and heard him tell of the angel's message. This filled my soul with joy, for I know by God's divine Spirit it is true.

From Wilburton I came to Coalgate with Bro. H. O. Smith and remained there a week. It rained nearly the entire time we were there so we did not get to do much preaching. Baptized two at this place but had to attend to it in the rain. Brn. H. T. McClain, J. W. Huffesed, and A. G. McPherson have built a nice church at Coalgate. I know God has some people here. May the Lord's blessing attend these Saints that they may live faithfully so the work will go forth.

From Coalgate I returned home, stopping a few days in Lamar County. I spent the holidays with loved ones at home, thence to this place to look after the work.

Last evening I led a noble young man into the waters of baptism, and I believe he will be of much use to the church.

It has rained in Eastern Texas for two months, and the roads are worse than ever was known. About one tenth of the cotton is in the fields and the farmers can not pick it. Times are very hard and money scarce. I go east to-day to tell others of the beautiful gospel.

May God bless his people this year.

E. A. ERWIN.

WILLOW CITY, North Dakota, January 17.

Editors Herald: I have had an experience not altogether pleasant, and my main object in writing is that this may be helpful to others, both ministers and lay members in the church, and I appreciate the wisdom of a recent editorial in the HERALD in which it was shown that debates may be of doubtful good. However, my recent debate was forced upon us by a challenge, publicly read from the Presbyterian pulpit, in which we were invited to meet them "with an open Bible."

Brn. George Day and J. B. McLeod, who were in the meeting at the time, thought that sounded fair and agreed to furnish a man. Sequel: After six weeks vexatious delay, considerable hindrance to my missionary labor, expense of two visits, etc., I either had to sign the following resolutions or leave the brethren to meet the charge, "Your man backed out." "Resolved that the Book of Mormon is a divine revelation and equal to the Bible or Holy Scriptures."

Two nights; first night was external evidence, second night, internal. "Resolved that baptism and laying on of hands as taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are necessary to salvation." Affirmed by W. Sparling, and denied by Reverend J. C. Wilson.

The building was small but was packed full, the majority being Presbyterians, as only three Saints were present. I started out with archaeological evidence, using Baldwin mostly, and followed it up with history and the usual Bible evidence familiar to all Latter Day Saints. I humbly acknowledge the goodness of God in the bestowal of his Spirit throughout. But when I came to Isaiah 29: 13, I was filled with the Spirit, portraying the apostasy; and also in the nineteenth verse, showing the joy and comfort of the meek and lowly of heart.

The negative started out with a few criticisms on Jacob's and Moses' blessings. Found fault with my geography and asked me how I could prove they had gone west instead of east, etc. He was plainly confused, and after a few minutes left the Bible altogether. He then spent perhaps five minutes on archaeology, admitting that in the main my statements were correct. He now produced Linn's "Story of the Mormons" published by Macmillan Company, reading long extracts about the plates and a machine that was found in the stone box and used for stereotyping, called Moroni's spectacles, the whole weighing several hundred pounds, but he finally compressed them into Joe's hat. But his statement of the plates was mild compared to Joe himself and pen fails to portray the scene in that house, a laughing, jeering, crowd, many of them professing to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. The speaker waxed more and more eloquent as the cheering and clapping increased, and finally said the whole thing was a damnable fraud. He knew it. The audience knew it. "And that man," pointing to me, "knows it too!" Loud and prolonged cheers and clapping of hands.

On the second night I showed the way the divinity of the Bible is usually proved from the contents of the volume itself and applied the same test to the Book of Mormon by showing that its teachings on the godhead and salvation through Jesus Christ by obedience to the six principles, giving several references for each principle separately, and supplemented by the Book of Mormon on the duties of prayer, chastity, morality, benevolence, etc., then I compared each with the same subjects in the Bible, and I finished with praising God that he had given us line upon line, precept upon precept.

My opponent started out by trying to jump the fence of internal evidence, but I lassoed him quickly. He wiggled and twisted and vowed it was unfair—he could not examine those eleven witnesses. I told him I knew that by his examination of "Joe" the night before. His supporters in the hall grunted a little, but I called for the ruling of the chair and my point was sustained. And now permit me to say I was greatly encouraged. I had seen the whole thing in a dream two nights before the debate commenced, and as it was shown to me, it was minutely fulfilled. My opponent weakened more and more and finally excused himself by saying that he could not be expected to be as expert as Elder Sparling with the Book of Mormon.

The third night on the second proposition we clashed a little on the use of Greek, but finally I told him to talk Greek a whole hour if he chose but I preferred to use a language the audience understood. I started out by a clear statement that the resolution did not say that baptism and laying on of hands was all that was necessary to salvation, but faith and repentance were prerequisite and the graces of the Spirit as enumerated in 2 Peter 1: 5-7. My foundation argument was based on 1 Peter 1: 18-25. We are redeemed with the "precious blood of Christ," through "obeying the truth . . . being born again . . . by the word of God."

By using the Instructor I was able to use scripture very rapidly, giving reference to every quotation, and I noticed my opponent peering over and evidently wondering how I rattled off the Bible, and remarked to Bro. McLeod that Latter Day Saints were certainly acquainted with its contents. He used about fifteen minutes of his time on the Greek root bapto and its derivatives, but finally drifted on to "faith" as being essential and talked well for about thirty minutes. Then he tried "laying on of hands," but was evidently out of his depth, for he repeatedly asked the chairman what time he had left, and, when told, struggled on, filling his hour.

In my closing speech there was an attempt by his supporters to interrupt, but the chairman insisted on the strictest order and at the conclusion, I challenged him to continue the same subject or the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, but he respectfully declined, and the meeting dismissed in good order.

In conclusion I wish to say I do not think there was as much good done as though I had kept at my regular missionary labor. There are a few who stood out boldly for us and I wish to return thanks for their hospitality. To the Saints of South Dakota who are urging me to come I would say, I shall be pleased to do so if the Lord opens the way. In the meantime, please do not withhold the tithes and offerings. Bro. Oscar is striving manfully to do his duty and his family are worthy of support. Remit to me at Clifford, North Dakota, and receipts will be forwarded.

Yours for success,

WILLIAM SPARLING.

LUCAS, Iowa, January 22.

Editors Herald: I am occupying each night with good liberty, but not large audiences. I will go to Cleveland, Iowa, to-day, to remain over Sunday. I am announced for next Monday evening to speak on the Book of Mormon at Lucas.

Bro. Bert Barrett is with me and assisting creditably.

In bonds,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

KAITANGATA, New Zealand, December 23.

Editors Herald: Some perhaps may want to know what their missionaries are doing in this isle of the sea. We have not converted all New Zealand yet, neither are we liable to do so, for it is not our intention to take the country by storm; but we think best to move slowly and surely. Our labors so far have been confined almost entirely to the town of Kaitangata. Bro. Hanson has preached two sermons in a schoolhouse twenty miles distant.

Our baptisms so far are three, honorable people. This makes eleven, all told, who have their names on the record, but not all active. Whether there are any others in this island we know not as yet. We have organized a Sunday-school with twelve or thirteen members, but will not report it to the association till we see how it continues. As soon as the holidays are over we will move out and see what we can do elsewhere, for we now have a basis to work from. Besides we go with papers signed by the leading men of the town.

Very truly,

D. E. TUCKER.

WALLSEND, N. S. W., Australia, December 24.

Editors Herald: I returned home from Victoria at the beginning of November and am now preparing for our annual conference.

We have been able to carry on the Gospel Standard for the first year and can report a slight credit balance. It will be much harder to keep going next year than it has been this, for we will be without some of the large donations from America which have helped us so much this year. However, we hope for the best and that all of our American subscribers will renew their subscriptions, and also that others will favor us with their assistance. Will you, dear reader, if not already a subscriber, send us a subscription to help us along in this far-off land. We asked for five hundred American subscribers at first, but so far we have only two hundred. Will you be one to help make up the other three hundred? If so send your subscription either to Bro. J. R. Epperson, 1723 Walker Street, Des Moines, Iowa, or the HERALD Office. Do not wait, but subscribe now, or you will be sure to forget. The Standard is doing a good work out here, going to places where the missionaries have never been, thus opening up the way for them. Will you help us to keep our little missionary at work?

Bro. Leon Gould has a supply of our pamphlet, "Valid Christian Baptism," which are for sale at twelve cents each, post free. Address him at Lamoni, Iowa.

About two years ago we published a pamphlet entitled, "The Book of Mormon on Trial," for the benefit of the Wallsend church building. We have not as yet sold enough copies to pay back the money expended. The church is not yet paid for and needs the money that would accrue by the sale of these pamphlets. Besides, the writer has about fifty dollars which he urgently needs (being a missionary) bound up in these booklets. Surely among forty-five thousand members we can sell one thousand of these books. If you have not one already see that you get one immediately. The price is only fifteen cents, and you can order of us through either the HERALD or Ensign offices. We shall be pleased to let book agents and missionaries take a supply to sell for us, and will allow ninety days credit. Will missionaries and book agents write us about this matter? Payment can be made through the HERALD or Ensign offices when the books are sold. Can we not sell these pamphlets within the next few months? Lend us your help and we will see. Address all communications to the Gospel Standard, Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia.

The work here is moving along nicely, becoming more firmly established every day, and if the Saints faithfully discharge their duties we will have thousands in this land rejoicing in the truth as we see it.

Your brother in Christ,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

ROCKFORD, Illinois, January 21.

Dear Old Herald: I say old HERALD, for you are, like the writer, growing old; but you are very dear to me, and I would greatly miss your weekly visits should they cease. I have been intimately acquainted with you ever since you first started out in 1859. You were, like the Reorganization at that time, quite small; but from that small beginning you have increased in size and circulation until now it is very gratifying to know that your useful pages are read with pleasure by some nearly all over the world.

It was in the little log schoolhouse on the hill beside the sparkling waters of the Pecatonica River, on the seventh day of October, 1855, that I was ordained an elder in the First Quorum of Seventy.

I often think how the work of the Lord has spread out until at the present time our missionaries are being heard in the far distant lands and upon the islands of the sea. To me, dear HERALD, this is very gratifying.

I rejoice that I am still able to travel and lift my voice in declaring the message of the restored gospel. I am preaching in private houses in this wicked city. Of course there are plenty of churches here, large, costly ones, too, but they are closed against the true message of Christ. So we are compelled to use more humble places to reach the honest in heart.

I came here December 4 and began holding meetings at Bro. Cushman's. A few of the neighbors came out to hear and seemed interested. I then went to Bro. James Fulks', on School Street, and began meetings. A few interested neighbors came, so I preached to them the best I could, the good Lord blessing me with his Spirit. Then I returned home for the holidays, but came back again January 2.

After I had been here about a week, Elder F. M. Cooper joined me. We continued our meetings, changing from Bro. Fulks' to Bro. Cushman's. Unfortunately, Bro. Cooper was taken sick with an attack of la grippe and returned home, leaving me to fight the battle alone. Last night a lady who had been attending our meetings, whose husband is a nightwatch in one of the large shops, opened up their large sitting-room for preaching, so we spoke there. Thus we see the work is gradually beginning to get a hold, and I feel sure if this could be followed up, some would be reached. I was told by a reliable person last night that an elderly lady, who has been attending our meetings, said she was satisfied that we had the truth and she was going to be baptized in the near future. This is encouraging.

I feel that an elder ought to be stationed in Rockford to look after the gospel interests. I expect to remain over another Sunday, then go to Poplar Grove. There are a few Saints at this place who are zealous in good works.

May the Lord bless his people and help them to be faithful in good works. Success to the dear old coworker, the HERALD, is my prayer.

ELI M. WILDERMUTH.

McFALL, Missouri, January 20.

Editors Herald: I came here on the 10th instant and commenced meetings in the Heath chapel, located about five miles east of McFall. On Monday, the 12th, Bro. J. C. Vaughn came to my assistance and we have continued up to this date, preaching sixteen sermons in all,—thirteen at the church and three at a schoolhouse. The interest has been good all through. A few in this section are very favorable to the work, and by and by we hope to see them gathered into the true fold of God.

The schoolhouse where we held meetings last winter is closed against night-meetings, but open to day services, so we preached there at half past two o'clock Saturday afternoon and at eleven o'clock Sunday forenoon. We were kindly cared for by Mr. E. Goldsbury and D. W. Plowman. Many of the neighbors disapprove of closing the house against religious services at night, and it is thought it will be open again by vote in the spring.

At the Heath Chapel it has been very difficult for any of the churches to hold meetings on account of so much rowdiness and poor order among the young men, but the Lord and the good people have been on our side this time. At the beginning of our meeting there seemed to be a desire for order, if it could be had, so Mr. Brown took the part of janitor and Mr. William Heath, one of the directors of the church, gave his assistance to maintain order. Hence we continued along a number of evenings with fairly good order and a good crowd most of the time. After a while some of the young "bloods" got filled up on "spirits" that makes them unruly, so friend Heath visited town and swore out warrants to arrest nine of them, and the officers were after them last night at the close of the meeting.

I am pleased to meet such men as Heath, Brown, and others, who have shown at these meetings a desire for right and support of law and order at religious gatherings, even if it should be Latter Day Saints holding them. If Missouri and some of our Southern States would do likewise at some points it would be an honor to the neighborhood and all good thinking people. It is claimed by some that our meetings have been the best, longest, and most orderly of any meetings held here for years. We close to-night and go to Beth Chapel three miles southeast of McFall. Have been kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. Joseph Doty and others.

While presenting the gospel, we have been graciously remembered by the Lord and felt the peaceful influence of God's Holy Spirit. "It is good to be a saint in latter days." May the Father open up the way before us.

Yours in the gospel,

D. C. WHITE.

BARTLETT, Iowa, January 21.

Dear Herald: Perhaps it may interest some to hear from the Fremont District. The work is steadily moving forward, slowly, but gradually gaining ground. The unseen power of heaven is pushing it along to its final accomplishment in the destruction of all powers in conflict with righteousness, and the setting up of the kingdom of God on the earth in these the latter days, where Jesus of Nazareth shall be King of kings and Lord of lords. Our worthy Brn. Henry Kemp and Charles Fry are right in it for good. May the Lord bless them.

I am at present holding meetings at Bartlett, and my defending the truth seemed to arouse Reverend Charles Aitkin, of the Christian Church, so he gave vent to his feelings by challenging me for a public discussion. But after considering the matter he met me at the home of one of the Saints, where we talked over the work, and then withdrew his challenge, saying he thought it was the wisest plan not to have any discussion. However, he created quite a little stir, which caused the people to come out, and I had the privilege of presenting the work to them. I stated that I had referred the matter to the missionary in charge, and if it met with approval, would publicly discuss the doctrinal tenets, if propositions could be arranged satisfactorily to both concerned, but he is still of the opinion that it is best to withdraw.

I am thankful to God for the restored gospel and the liberty given me in its defense.

What we as Saints need is to live close to God; live so that the influence of the true gospel spirit within us can be felt by those with whom we come in contact; then this work will roll on.

With good wishes to all, and for Zion's triumph, I am,

Your brother,

ADOLPH E. MADISON.

ORIOLE, Indiana, January 21.

Editors Herald: Bro. Porter went to Mt. Pleasant and held a series of five meetings but was directed to come back and arrived last Saturday. He delivered five sermons and baptized nine, six last Monday and the others on Tuesday. One of them is a merchant of one of the largest establishments in town. The merchant's wife, the local M. E. preacher, his daughter and wife desire to be baptized soon. Many others are convinced, but are holding back for some cause. Babylon trembles for fear of her loss. The members of the M. E. church, the few that are left, are persecuting the Saints. They have threatened to whip us. Called us almost everything but good people; saying we were soft-headed fools. We now have a strong branch, and nearly all take part in the social meetings. Some are letting their lights shine and the people are beginning to see it. Bro. Porter left here this morning for Derby, Indiana.

Most of those who do not belong to any church are friends, and they can see how patiently the Saints are enduring the persecutions. Think there were not less than three or four hundred people at the baptism last Monday. The Saints enjoyed the Spirit of God wonderfully while attending to the ordinance of baptism. Have had large crowds at our meetings with good interest.

May God bless the Saints everywhere is my desire and prayer.

JOHN N. BERNARDI.

FARNAM, Nebraska, January 8.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad; Greeting: I was sixty-seven years old September 2, 1902, and was born in Ohio County, Kentucky. My parents became identified with the church at Nauvoo, before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

My mother was at the conference held in April, 1844; the prophet being killed the following June. As my memory now serves, she stated that upon that occasion the prophet stated or prophesied "that if Brigham Young ever led the church he would lead it to hell."

On July 2 or 3, 1846, I was baptized near Council Bluffs, Iowa. At this place the Saints had gathered and remained about four years preparatory to the exodus for the West. It was at this place that Brigham Young was chosen as leader in Joseph Smith's place. Some claimed that the voice of Joseph was impersonated in Brigham, and that the mantle had fallen upon him.

My father's family as well as my father-in-law's were going with Brigham across the plains to Utah. Well do I remember a number of localities and incidents along the route, but space forbids a recital. In about two months after we left Council Bluffs, we found ourselves at Salt Lake, arriving there about midnight. This was in September, 1850. We remained there about one year and went to California, returning in the year of 1857 or 1858 to Salt Lake, where I married Sr. Rebecca Jane Hoops, in 1859, and remained there until 1865. Two children were born to us. After that we made our home in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

While in Utah, and before my marriage, that people tried hard to induce my wife to enter into polygamy, and to avoid this, she accepted my hand at the age of fourteen. Among the many other things that transpired while we remained in Utah was that upon a given time while Brigham Young was preaching; and in my hearing, he laid the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants before him, and said, "they are not worth the ashes of a rye straw."

To my knowledge they taught the doctrine that Adam was their God, and that it was necessary to kill some people to save their souls, or in other words, blood-atonement, the same as destroying angels. But with all these trials, we obtained a knowledge of the work by obedience to the principles of the gospel, and are firm believers that the Reorganization is the true church of God.

WILLIAM DODSON.

MASON CITY, Nebraska, January 2.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of your valuable pages for many years, and feel that I can not get along without the HERALD, and if the Lord is willing, I will continue to take it the few days I remain here.

There are no Latter Day Saints at this place, consequently, we do not have the gospel preached in its fullness. I feel to thank my heavenly Father that I was brought to the light of the truth of the latter-day message as proclaimed by the angel flying in the midst of heaven. Although I am deprived of the privilege of meeting with the Saints, yet I am with them in spirit and ever pray for the welfare of Zion.

Your sister,

E. A. ALLISON.

LITTLEBLUE, Missouri, January 20.

Editors Herald: I came here first of last week. Was at this place last fall with the tent. Had a good hearing then and baptized one. I am preaching now in the Burr Schoolhouse, with a good hearing notwithstanding the dark and cloudy nights. Bro. J. D. White preached Friday and Sunday as I had special appointments in the city. I returned Monday. Some are favorably impressed. Am enjoying good liberty in preaching.

F. C. WARNKY.

WAYNE, West Virginia, January 22.

Editors Herald: I arrived here on the first of this month, and found Elder John Alfred Davis here down with lung fever. I am still here waiting on him. He has been very low, almost at death's door, but is a little better at this writing. But his lungs are affected. He suffers terribly at times. He asks the prayers of all who may read this in his behalf that he may be restored to health. He will go home as soon as he is able to travel.

W. R. ODELL.

Mintun-Bays Debate.

Editors Herald: The discussion between Bro. J. F. Mintun and Elder D. H. Bays has closed. I was privileged to attend seven of the twelve sessions, and write as a disinterested party so far as speaker is concerned. I was especially anxious to attend this discussion for the reason that I was baptized by Mr. Bays into the Reorganization about twenty-two years ago and confirmed by him and Bro. Nathan Booth. Partly as a result of that baptism and confirmation I have received many spiritual blessings. My life has been made better and my faith greatly increased in the Creator, because of the influence of the Holy Spirit. Having received the knowledge, therefore, of the divine authority once exercised by Elder Bays, I was anxious to hear the man for himself and see how one thus blessed would attempt to reply to that which I had received from him as true.

As I entered the hall Bro. Mintun was speaking and I began to look for Elder Bays. But look where I would or to whom I would, I could not see any one who looked like the man I knew years ago. There was a man sitting at a table whom I took to be Mr. Bays' moderator. Imagine my surprise when that man arose as the speaker; even then I supposed another man for some reason had been chosen in Mr. Bays' place. Even his voice was not natural, and his manner of speech was not that of the gentlemanly man I once knew. I could not refrain from thinking that his later associates or else his recent religious training had robbed him of much. Perhaps both had united to accomplish this result and impelled him to heap slander and vituperation upon the heads of those whom for over thirty years he had lovingly called brothers. His habit of ridicule to make the boys laugh impressed me with insincerity. I can only answer for myself, but that is the impression it left.

As the discussion continued and he frequently misstated the faith of the Saints, which he must have done either willfully or ignorantly, I was confirmed in my former impression, especially when he boasted in every speech that he knew the faith of the church perfectly.

In this connection I will mention two instances where he misrepresented the faith of the church. In replying to the doctrine of laying on of hands for the blessing of little children, he said: "Yes, I've done that same fool thing myself. Only Jesus blessed the children. Only he and God can do that. It is foolishness to think that one man can bless another." Bays knew very well that the church has never made any such claim. He knew that we recognize that power rests alone with God and that we are only instruments in his hands to bless children or others. It is a great consolation to know that one who had represented us for twenty-seven years, and who, as he said himself, had "sat in their private councils and in their public councils and in their general councils," is compelled to misrepresent us to make a point. How will he harmonize his effort to misrepresent, with sincerity? If he is really honest, let him represent our faith as it is and attack that. If, as he said, he had been "like a pup but now had his eyes open," it was a great misfortune to him to get his eyes open. If he can not tell a man of straw from a real man, then he better get his eyes open again.

Another misrepresentation was concerning the healing of the sick. He never allowed any other impression to be gained from his talk but that we claimed to heal the sick, and in one speech he said: "If they can heal the sick, let them heal Grandma Hyde here in town, and then everybody would believe." He knows we make no such claim, and I dare say he has resented that false charge many times himself while in the many debates for the church, and now for him to turn and be the false accuser himself is a queer way to get his eyes open. I make these criticisms honestly, knowing that Mr. Bays as a subscriber to the HERALD will see them. The last of all things that Mr. Bays will admit is that he does not know all about the church in the slightest detail. If he knows so much, then why does he misrepresent? Is that getting one's eyes open? These are only two of the many misrepresentations stated by Mr. Bays.

In this discussion I presume it was as it is in all discussions, that is, there are persons on each side. Some wish it this way or that and will see nothing else. I tried to look at the matter impartially, and I believe I state the facts when I say Bro. Mintun gained many lasting friends for the truth as we see it. Elder Bays by his uncalled for denunciations lost friends. In my humble opinion we need fear no lasting injury from Elder Bays where we can follow up his work.

One thing I noticed is that in all Mr. Bays' efforts he continually bears testimony to our work. I could see the people were learning more of the Latter Day Saint work than they knew before. In one speech he said, "I want to say one thing that is due to the Reorganized Church. I have sat in their private councils and in their public councils and in their general councils, and I know how they feel on the question of polygamy. I know they loathe it with disgust. They are good citizens." During the last session when Bro. Mintun asked all those who knew for themselves that Jesus had fulfilled his promise, "These signs shall follow them that believe," to stand, Elder Bays in reply said, "No doubt every Latter Day Saint stood up. I think they all did, but it only shows their credulity and duplicity." I could see some who seemed to be puzzled how the Latter Day Saints could be good citizens and practice duplicity; and when Bro. Mintun called their attention to their Latter Day Saint neighbors and asked how many believed the statement of Elder Bays concerning their duplicity, there were many whose actions said they did not, and some said so afterward.

Elder Bays presented about the same arguments as in his book. In fact, he dare do nothing else or it would spoil the sale of his book. I expected to hear something new, but was disappointed in that. At the close of the debate Elder Bays said "I want to say a word; I think it is due Bro. Mintun. I have had twenty-seven debates [I think he had made that statement a dozen times before,—J. W. P.] and several of them with the Latter Day Saints, and Bro. Mintun has been the most gentlemanly of any of them. He is a gentleman and defended his cause in meekness. I think this statement is due Bro. Mintun." These are his words as I remember them. After the debate was out I heard one man say to another as they passed down the street, "His last little speech is what cooked me."

Bro. F. A. Smith and I commence here to-morrow evening. May hold a week or so, and we may get frozen out.

Yours stronger in the faith,

TIFFIN, Iowa, January 22.

J. W. PETERSON.

NOCKENUT, Texas, January 15.

Editors Herald: Bro. John Harp just closed a series of sermons here, with good interest and fair audiences. I think some are almost persuaded that we have the primitive gospel. Several were heard to say, "It was the best sermon I ever heard." Bro. Harp presents the gospel plainly, so that the small and great may readily understand it. His preaching, together with an exemplary life, as presented by him under the influence of God's Holy Spirit, will bring conviction whether conversion or not. I think if the believers in Texas could all be baptized there would be an ingathering that would cause rejoicing. I wish everybody could realize the truth that convinced means convicted unless obedience follows. I will endeavor to water the good seed sown here, leaving the result with Him who giveth the increase.

Bro. Harp is in fine health. I think we only raise one vegetable that he dislikes, that is okra; he will soon like that if he stays in the South.

I ever pray for the kingdom triumphant.

C. JACKSON.

DEEPWATER, Missouri, January 24.

Editors Herald: In the early part of the month, in company with Elders W. H. Mannering and J. N. Stephenson, I visited Polk County, where the brethren have labored for some months. I find that it is a hard field, but by persistent labor they have made some effectual openings. They baptized three at one place and at some other points others are interested; but I learned that much of the seed had fallen on stony places; and when persecution arose because of the word, the feeble plants perished. I left the brethren working away as earnestly as if they expected to convert the whole county.

While in Polk County I was impressed to visit the Wheatland Branch. I did, and found division existing in regard to building a house of worship, principally in regard to the size of the house. I held eight meetings; a good degree of the Spirit was given; and on the Lord's Day we administered the sacrament and had prayer and testimony-meeting, and the peaceful, refreshing Spirit that prevailed will long be remembered by all. I requested the president of the branch to call a business-meeting for Monday evening. They came, and unity prevailed. The size of the house was compromised, and nearly all agreed to go to work and build the house. I think they will now succeed. The branch officers are presiding with dignity and wisdom.

I stopped at Lowry City, Wednesday evening, and enjoyed a peaceful, quiet prayer-meeting with the faithful few. The Sunday-school and Religio there are progressing nicely, though there are but few who are assisting in the work.

I came here yesterday to hold meetings for a week or ten days. I have been waiting nearly all winter to find a time when there were no protracted efforts going on; but even now the Methodists are in full blast, and consequently they draw the crowd. Only a few were out to our meeting last night. Expect to continue over Sunday night, and if the Methodists do not close I will move on.

The latter part of February I expect to deliver a series of lectures at Taberville on the Christian Church. They have at different times publicly assailed us there, and they have so far refused to discuss fair propositions, and I shall try to show up their inconsistencies.

The Saints at Nevada are arranging to build a chapel there. Brn. White and Silvers are in Morgan and Camden Counties unfurling the gospel banner.

Two days after Christmas I was reading Bro. R. M. Elvin's article in the HERALD in regard to Graceland, Christmas gifts, and extravagance, and I felt impressed to make an inventory of the Christmas gifts and offerings of a family with which I am fairly well acquainted. It was as follows: Husband for Christmas tree, ten cents, for Graceland, two dollars and fifty cents; wife for Graceland, two dollars and fifty cents; little daughter, present for little brother, ten cents, Christmas offering thirty-five cents; little boy six years old, book for sister, ten cents, Christmas offering twenty-five cents. I thought if all of the members had directed their gifts and offerings accordingly possibly their stomachs would have been as well off and Graceland some better.

Our district conference convenes at Coal Hill, March 7. We are generally united and at peace in this field. I am feeling well in the work, and expect to continue to the end. May peace abide with the church, and fruits of righteousness appear in our lives.

JAMES MOLER.

LENA, Nebraska, January 22.

Dear Herald: In my last communication I mentioned Elders Fred A. Smith and S. D. Payne having been at our place, Minatare, Nebraska. On December 23 I left friends and home to join Elder Payne in his labor of love and sacrifice to preach glad tidings to those who feel disposed to hear. Having gone as far as Whitman, Nebraska, on the cars, we were met by Bro. Stewart Godfrey, who took us some thirty miles southwest in a buggy to the home of Bro. Nathan Bassett.

Arriving here at dusk, we found all things in readiness for the marriage of two of Bro. Bassett's daughters.

On the morning of December 25 we went some thirty miles to Tryon, Nebraska, arriving in time for evening service. Soon the court-house was well filled with people from all sections of the country to enjoy the Christmas entertainment in which the Saints took a prominent part and acquitted themselves well. We feel to say, God bless those dear young Saints who had the courage to withdraw from the world in order to be with God's own chosen people.

From here we went to North Platte City, visiting Saints and friends, and holding meetings by the way, until we finally by the kindness of Saints, for we had no team of our own, arrived at the home of Elder S. D. Payne, finding all well. We held meetings at the Mount Hope and Stoner Schoolhouses, where we formed the acquaintance of friends among whom were some of our Dunkard friends (the church of my former choice) and was kindly treated by them. This was almost more than I hoped for, but they attended our services and listened attentively while we presented the claims of Joseph Smith and the origin of the Book of Mormon. We left a good interest and felt blessed in the effort. We left on the morning of January 14.

I am of the opinion there is oftentimes too much waste of time and money in bringing our claims before the world; and also in executing our church business. Come brethren, let us deny ourselves a little more, and ye, branch officer, see that the law is kept. Do not let the poor lambs and sheep suffer but feed them. If the blessings or the gifts of the gospel are to be enjoyed, we must live for them. Do not forget your secret and public prayers, do not forget to read God's word, do not forget to fast and give alms and do not forget to live just as near to God as you can, and he will bless you all.

D. W. SHIRK.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, January 26.

Editors Herald: We have a flourishing Sunday-school, with twenty-six enrolled members. Several who are not church members are members of the school. We frequently have visitors. Have had as high as thirty-six in attendance. The school was organized last November. We think its sessions are very interesting. Two of our teachers are not as yet church members, but are investigating. We hold prayer-meeting each Wednesday evening.

As we have no church building all services are held in private houses. Our Sabbath-school is held two Sundays in the month in town, and one at Sr. Christenson's three miles west, the other at Bro. Hanson's three miles north of town. Of course this makes it a little inconvenient, as it is a very long distance for those outside of town to go. But they attend regularly. Bro. Larsen and Bro. Wheeler are obliged to go nine miles one Sunday in each month. They arrange to take the Saints in town, which is indeed appreciated.

Elder S. D. Condit has labored here more or less for the past four years. Elders Layland and J. H. Condit visited us last fall. Elder Wheeler resides here, and is always on hand to help the good work along.

We expect a conference here in February, and hope to have a branch organized soon.

May the Lord bless all his people is the prayer of

Your sister,

MRS. LARS P. LARSEN.

SLOAN, Iowa, January 1.

Editors Herald: There are a few at this place who are not afraid to defend the gospel. How glad I am to hear those out of the kingdom say they have never heard such preaching before, as is presented by the Latter Day Saints, but nevertheless it is the truth that such testimonies have been given in public places as well as the homes. Last spring we held tent meetings and many became interested and expressed a desire of hearing more of the gospel. As some seemed near the kingdom, I continued to visit them whenever I felt it wise to do so, always leaving the church papers with them. Everything went along smoothly until these dear souls requested me to organize a Bible study, then the evil one began to work with greater power than ever before. One woman in her rejoicing went to the M. E. minister's wife and told her our plans, to which she replied that it would not be best as it might interfere with the minister's work; at this time he was at conference. Before he went to conference he gave me a letter from the M. E. church of which I had been a member for eight years. Several times during the past three years, I had asked for it but he never was willing to grant it, until now. When he handed it to me, he said he believed the elders that were here in the spring were servants of God, and that he had said many things he ought not to have said. Further, he knew now that the Reorganized Church is not the same as the Utah church, and would tell his people if he returned. Then he invited me to attend church and take my accustomed place, uniting with them in all their services as their church doors are always open to me. To this I replied that I would do as the Lord wished, for I knew too well what that invitation meant. The following Thursday I attended the prayer-meeting. The minister was absent for two weeks and everything went smoothly until the day after his return.

I entered into their services as much as I could and be true to the covenant made with God, but the oftener I met with them, my desire was that they might hear the gospel once more. I prayed and asked God to prepare the way to send one of his servants, that would be received by this people and I promised the Lord to do as he directed. I did not have long to wait. The evening the minister came home I was directed by the Spirit to go to him and ask for the church. After committing myself into my Father's care, I retired for the night. Was soon sleeping peacefully and dreamed that my husband had returned home, as he had been absent for a few days. In my dream, a little cat followed him into my room, walked up to the foot of the bed, and jumped upon the bed. I thought it such a beautiful cat as it purred and sang, but when it set its eyes on me, its countenance changed and its whole being was filled with frenzy. Before I could speak it sprang at me. I tried to ward it off with my right hand but it sank its claws into my hand. Then I prayed God for deliverance and my husband came rushing in and tore the cat away just as it had sprung at my throat. I awoke filled with rejoicing that God was with me.

The next morning I could hardly wait for the proper hour to come when I might go and ask for the church. I did not expect to get it, but I knew the Lord wanted me to ask for it so I went to the minister's home and was admitted by his wife. She told me the minister had returned from conference but had gone to Sioux City that morning, asking if she could do anything for me. I answered that she could, as I desired the use of their church for a few nights. Thereupon she wished to know who would preach and I answered, W. H. Hansen. To which she replied that she would like to hear him again and told me to call in two days, as she would speak to the minister about it. Accordingly, I went back but the minister had returned and gone again to Sioux City; but as he left no word regarding the matter she told me to call when he returned.

As I was about to leave she said, "I would like to ask a question and it is this, Have you gotten into a condition where you do not believe in the convicting Spirit of God?"

I answered, "No, I have not."

"Then I pray you, be not deceived."

To which I replied, "I have greater faith in the convicting Spirit of God since meeting you, knowing that you have heard the truth and learned to know the way, but doeth it not."

She then became angry, saying, "You are not of the sweet Spirit of Jesus; you are of the Devil. You are a deceiver. I can read you like an open book. You can deceive my husband, but you can not deceive me; you are a liar. You claim to be of Christ and receive from him, when you know you follow Joe Smith rather than Christ. You are the Devil. You are bringing doctrines and dogmas into our church. What did you pray last prayer-meeting night, and what did you testify?"

I told her I could not recall it but that I knew my testimony was not my own but his that sent me.

Then she replied, "I must say to you, I can not bow with you in prayer any longer, and I can not bear your testimony."

I answered, "You judge me."

She said, "I have a right to judge you as a servant of God, and I want nothing to do with you. You will have to get your answer from the minister."

The Sunday following I attended services, and as I passed out the minister invited me to come to his home the next day. I did so, and he told me they had decided not to let us have the church, as they had refused the Holiness people, and they would be obliged to treat us all alike. I thanked him and told him I was not disappointed.

Not seeing his wife, I asked if she were at home to which he answered yes, and called her. As she came into the room I offered my hand, which she took very reluctantly. I said, "I am sorry I came to your home a few days ago and disturbed you in such a manner as to make you angry." She did not answer. The minister broke the silence and wanted to know what was the matter. I told him some of the conversation; but before I could tell him all, she interrupted, saying, "I am not sorry for what I have said. If Jesus ever wants me to come to you, then I will come and ask your pardon, but not until then." And pointing to the door she told me to go.

I said, "Very well; may God bless you inasmuch as you are willing to serve him in truth and righteousness."

He followed me to the door, and as I passed out he said, "Sr. Driggs, I am not responsible for what my wife has said and done, and I want you to remember the church doors are always open for you."

On the following Thursday I attended the prayer-meeting, but she kept her promise. She became angry and left, then followed a severe sick spell which the doctor pronounced nervous prostration. On Sunday he announced that revival meetings would begin the next Thursday. Some of the members knowing conditions thought their revival would not be successful until wrongs were made right. I told them I was ready to do whatever the Lord required of me, so I wrote to her a few days after their meeting began, and they tried to make the people believe I had written a letter to the minister that was not fit to pass through the mail; but they were compelled to present the letter and own that some very sad mistakes were made. They have done all in their power against the work, by trying to make the people believe more than ever that we are the same as the Utah church—even the minister after the promises he has made.

Oh, how much we need to remember our promises to God. He is true to his promises, dear Saints if we are true to ours.

MRS. MARY DRIGGS.

LEAVENWORTH, Indiana, January 24.

Editors Herald: A few of us in this branch are trying to do what we can for the Master's cause. I fear we do not do all that is required of the Lord in keeping the commandments. Our branch president is doing all he can, when here, in trying to teach the Saints how to live. We have had good preaching in this branch in the last year by Elders George Jenkins, M. R. Scott, Jr., and others.

LIZZIE FLINN.

GOODERHAM, Ontario, January 19.

Editors Herald: We have a small branch here but hold Sunday-school and prayer-meeting every Sabbath; and though few in number I feel the promise is true where two or three are gathered there He will be in their midst to own and bless. We must obey God's commandments if we expect to be blessed. I rejoice in this latter-day work, for I know it is true, for as it is written "if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." What a blessed privilege to know for ourselves. I have been blessed many times. And though it took some time to exercise faith, and did not accomplish it until my little one was afflicted with a sore on her neck. When Bro. Tomlinson saw the child's neck he advised us to apply the oil and in a short time after doing so, she was healed. So it is oftentimes through trials and afflictions that we are blessed. As parents we should exercise faith in our homes and set the example before our children and friends.

I feel a great responsibility resting upon me in training my little ones as well as to have a conscience void of offense, for I can not be spiritual and be under condemnation at the same time. We must be humble if we expect to be blessed.

It is fifteen years last summer since I was baptized by Uncle John H. Lake. He was the first elder who visited this north country, and I am so thankful that the way was opened up for the preaching of the restored gospel.

Elder S. Tomlinson and T. A. Phillips were here last summer.

The former gave the Saints some wise counsel which I will never forget. He is a good missionary and well liked because of his wise counsel and brotherly love which helps the weary traveler on his way. His timely advice has done much for this branch and may he prove faithful and endure all things which he may be called upon to pass through, for he is useful, and I thank my heavenly Father that I was privileged to meet him.

Ever praying praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

HATTIE M. LAKE.

Country Life in America for February.

Country Life in America for February takes one to California and Florida and to many pursuits of the outdoor world during the month. Among the leading articles, superbly illustrated, "Camping in Florida" is the personal experience of the naturalist, A. Radclyffe Dugmore, along many of the best rivers and lakes. "The Renter in a Country Town" is the true story of the making of a home, written by a successful novelist, and "Shelburne Farms" describes Doctor W. Seward Webb's seat, an ideal country place on Lake Champlain; while "The Orange in Florida and California," together with numerous other articles, shows the profitable side of a delightful horticultural pursuit for amateur and professional growers. Other charmingly illustrated articles tell of "Carnations and How to Grow them," "The St. Bernard Dog," and how the Alpine mastiff was discovered to Americans, besides a fund of timely information and suggestions for plant-growing, sport, poultry-raising, and kindred subjects that interest the country lover. An announcement is made for a "Gardening Number," which will be a double issue for March, and eight prizes of thirty dollars each are offered for "experiences" of readers who follow the suggestions for vegetable and flower-growing, landscape-gardening, village improvement enterprises, and other matters of which the magazine will treat. No magazine illustrates the things of the outdoor world so well.

The Effect of Tobacco.

The subject of tobacco is necessarily included in this chapter. Like all elements which have an effect upon the nerves, it differs widely in its action upon different individuals and no sweeping statements can be made. Upon most constitutions its action is deleterious. It is always injurious before the period of complete development, and can not be used before the age of twenty-five without harm. Doctor Seaver, Director of the Physical Laboratory of Yale, tabulated the record of the students entering that university during nine years, when all the young men were examined and measured. The smokers averaged fifteen months older than the non-smokers. They were also shorter in stature. Nicotine interferes with growth, and its effect in that regard is very measurable. At Yale during the four-years' course the non-users of tobacco, although taller when they enter, gain 24 per cent more in height and 26.7 per cent more in girth of chest than do the habitual users. Doctor Hitchcock of Amherst College found even greater differences. The difference in the lung capacity is very striking in the two classes and has been noticed by all observers. It shows the effect of tobacco on the respiration, nicotine being a potent depressor. As regards the effect of nicotine on the mental processes, it is more difficult to interpret the meaning of statistics. Out of the highest scholarship men at Yale only five per cent use tobacco, while of the men who do not get appointments, sixty per cent use it. It is not necessary to interpret this as meaning that mental decrepitude follows the use of tobacco by young men, for there are other factors to be considered; but it is certainly not conducive to the best work.—Doctor F. M. Crandall in the World's Work.

Several years ago a suggestion was made to President Eliot, of Harvard, that, inasmuch as the first thing a young man ordinarily did on graduating from college was to choose his life-work, it was important that each student should have presented to him a thorough discussion as to the advantages, disadvantages, and temptations of each of the leading professions, so that in determining his life-work he might act with the fullest knowledge attainable. The Cosmopolitan has begun this discussion in its January issue by taking up the legal profession. Besides pointing out what the young man has to encounter in entering upon a lawyer's career, The Cosmopolitan considers at length the revolution which has taken place in the legal profession because of the reorganization of business in great aggregations like the United States Steel Corporation, and modern business instruments, such as trust companies, title and guarantee companies, and fidelity insurance companies, Conference Minutes.

Spring River.—Convened at Joplin, Missouri, December 12 to 14, 1902; J. T. Davis president, assisted by F. C. Keck; M. S. Frick secretary. Ministry reporting: Elders J. T. Davis, F. C. Keck, J. T. Riley, F. L. English, W. H. Smart, W. E. Haden, W. S. Taylor, Otto Baumgartel, H. E. Jones, J. H. Thomas, J. L. Lancaster, J. W. Thorp, T. S. Hayton, A. H. Hirke, T. G. Christie, E. D. Bailey, W. E. Westervelt. Priests R. E. Martin, William Kirk, M. A. Love, W. B. Hillan. Teachers G. M. Rhonemus, M. S. Frick, J. C. Powell, A. P. Free. Ninety-four delegates were sent from the following branches: Joplin, Missouri; Angola, Columbus, Pleasant View, Galena, and Weir City, Kansas; Fairland and Miami, Indian Territory. Travis, Missouri; Indian Creek, Kansas; Maysville, Arkansas; Lamanite, Indian Territory, not reported. Total district membership 1029. Officers of above reported branches preached 234 sermons; 15 baptisms. Bro. Cromwell, Webb City, Missouri, was recommended for ordination as deacon. Bro. A. Greek granted a letter of removal from Galesburg Branch (disorganized) to Bandon, Oregon. Branch of fifteen organized at Miami, Indian Territory. Officers: Stephen A. Briggs, elder; J. B. Warren, priest; J. W. Gilbreath, teacher; J. W. Roach, clerk. Petitions from Pittsburg, Kansas, and Chelsea, Indian Territory, asking for branch organization, referred to district and mission authorities. Treasurer's report: Total receipts, $10.24; expenditures, $8.88; on hand, $1.36. J. T. Davis elected district president, with power to choose associate; M. S. Frick, secretary. Conference adjourned to meet at Webb City, Missouri, March 13, 1903.

Little Sioux.—District conference convened at Moorhead, Iowa, October 4, 1902, H. N. Hansen and F. A. Smith presiding. Statistical reports from all branches excepting Missouri Valley showed a total membership of 1,462, which included one patriarch, 5 high priests, 2 seventy, 43 elders, 24 priests, 27 teachers, 19 deacons; a gain of 23 by baptism, 2 by certificate, and 5 by letter; a loss of 6 by letter and 4 by vote; a net gain of 20. Spiritual condition of branches reporting, improved. Ministerial reports showed 698 services held, 328 sermons preached, 1 marriage solemnized, 20 children blessed, and 86 sick administered to, besides many who reported in a general way. The Bishop's agent's report showed receipts of $709.71; on hand, $240.92; total cash $950.63; disbursements $752.70; balance cash $197.93. The debt of the district was fully met in all funds. Nearly a thousand dollars had been raised in all for the Grace-land debt. The brethren in charge of the district tent rendered itemized accounts of receipts and expenditures and balanced accounts. Mr. D. H. Stoker, of Yorkshire, Iowa, donated a substantial tent to the district through Bro. Sidney Pitt, the tent and freight costing him upwards of $80.00. Bro. Sidney Pitt donated his time in buying and selecting, his railroad fare, and two gasoline torches, a cash outlay of $5.60 in addition. All was presented in new, first-class condition, and accepted with thanks with the understanding that whenever Mr. Stoker or his family desired meeting in their neighborhood the tent and a competent minister be sent there with as little delay as possible. The committee was sustained in its conclusion that a church building could not be erected at Missouri Valley at present. The Samuel Wood's case was reported on by the committee, which recommended that his license be not restored and his membership be referred to the Woodbine Branch, of which he was a member. Sustained. Sidney Pitt, on recommendation of the Persia Branch, was ordained a priest. The ordination was attended to October 5, F. A. Smith, H. N. Hansen, and J. C. Crabb officiating. James R. Wight and Joseph Turman were recommended for ordination to the office of priest. Recommendation adopted and referred to the respective branches of which the brethren were members, with recommendation to ordain. A communication from Patriarch Charles Derry in explanation of the duties of his office, together with advice to the Saints, was read and ordered spread on the minutes. Conference adjourned to meet at Little Sioux, Iowa, February 7, 10.30 a. m. James D. Stuart, clerk.

Church Secretary's Notices.

Delegate Credentials to General Conference.—Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents, or secretaries, of the various districts, also to officers of branches not in districts. Said officers of districts and branches are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches in the coming General Conference to the Church Secretary as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of district or branch appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of holding of conference or business-meeting, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary. Please insert total membership, in all cases.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast a full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference;

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts." However, at the General Conference of 1900 the chair rules "that a branch of more than twenty-five members is entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five of its membership, the same as a district."

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Book of Rules, chapter 16.

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 26.

Notice of Amendment to Book of Rules.

Formal notice is hereby given that at the next session of the General Conference, to be held at Independence, Missouri, beginning April 6, 1903, amendments to the Book of Rules will be offered as follows:

First, to provide for and include rules for the organization, regulation, and government of Stakes. These to be submitted by anyone interested to the General Conference for action and subject to amendment and adoption as new matter.

Second, amendments to rules already printed, consisting of correction of errors in grammatical usage and also rearrangements of special headings.

It is not possible at this time to set out the exact wording of the proposed amendments, but we deem it advisable to give general idea of necessary additions and amendments to be added before issuing new edition of Book of Rules.

F. M. SMITH.

R. J. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 23, 1903.

Notice to Fourth Quorum of Elders.

Will the brethren of this quorum who have changed addresses since last spring, please notify the secretary, Bro. F. E. Cochran, Lock Box 345, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, at once.

Sunday-School Secretaries.

Special attention is called to the new system of reporting. Hereafter schools are expected to report to the district secretary, at the end of each quarter, viz., the last of March, June, September, and December, regardless of the time of holding conventions. Secretaries of districts are to report for the full calendar year. Schools not in districts report to me quarterly. New blank forms for both schools and districts have been issued and mailed, and these only should be used. If you have not received same, please notify me at once. D. J. Krahl, General Secretary.

Conference Notices.

Gallands Grove District conference will convene February 14, at 9 a. m., at Deloit Iowa. Send reports early to Sr. Nellie Rudd, secretary. A full representation is desired. District officers and delegates to General Conference are to be chosen. J. M. Baker, district president.

Southern California semiannual conference will convene February 28, 1903, at Los Angeles. A full attendance of officials, ministry, and delegates desired. Written reports are expected from every official. Those serving in a branch capacity will report through their branch president; all others direct to Maggie Pankey, secretary, 2802 South Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, California. Location of reunion; advisability of purchasing and conducting a tent the coming summer; appointment of General Conference delegates will be considered. Those coming please report early to John Haxton, 315 Winston Street, Los Angeles, California. T. W. Williams, district president.

The conference of the Nodaway District will be postponed to meet with the Bedison Branch on March 14 and 15. The scarlet fever here is of a very malignant and fatal type, and we do not feel safe in convening at the date as published last week. The schools are all closed and public meetings suspended for the present. E. S. Fannón.

Conference of the Eastern Colorado District will be held in Denver, Saturday and Sunday, March 7 and 8, 1903. Send reports to secretary at Wray, Colorado. John B. Roush, president; A. E. Tabor, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Gallands Grove District Sunday-school association will convene at Deloit Iowa, February 12, at 3 p. m. Religio association on February 13, at 10 a. m. Election of district officers and choosing of delegates to General Conventions will take place at these conventions. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

Pittsburg District association will convene at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, February 28, at 9.30 a. m. There will be election of officers and delegates appointed to General Convention. Louis A. Serig, secretary.

The Far West District Sunday-school association will meet with the Zion's Star school, St. Joseph Branch, St. Joseph, Missouri, Friday, February 20, 1903, 10 a. m. As this is the time for electing officers, we should like a full representation from each school in the district. W. H. Worden, superintendent, Grace E. Constance, district secretary.

Southern California District Sunday-school and Religio associations will meet at Los Angeles, California, February 27, 1903, at 9.30 a. m. Religio work will occupy the morning session; Sunday-school, afternoon and night. Programs will be sent the various schools and societies. Full delegation of workers desired. T. W. Williams, district superintendent and Religio president.

The Sunday-school convention of the Nauvoo District will convene at Montrose, Iowa, February 6, at 10 a. m. Madge M. Craig, secretary.

Eastern Colorado District Sunday-school association will meet at Denver, Colorado, Friday, March 6, 1903, at 10 a. m. All Saints in the district who have taken up the Home Department study will report on the amount of work done, to the district secretary not later than March 1, 1903. Secretaries please send in your reports early. It is anticipated that a district Religio will be organized. Mrs. L. A. Schmutz, district superintendent, Mrs. Louisa Fishburn, district secretary.

Northeastern Illinois Sunday-school association will convene at Plano, Illinois, February 13, 1903, at 1 p. m. Election of district officers will take place at this convention. On account of local duties, the present superintendent feels that he can not serve longer. Mamie C. Williamson, secretary.

The Lamoni Stake Religio convention will convene Thursday, February 5; 3 p. m., reports of officers and locals; 4 p. m., election of officers and delegates to General Convention; 7.30 p. m., addresses and discussions.

The Lamoni Stake Sunday-school association will convene Friday, February 6; 9 a. m., prayer-meeting; 10.30, reports of officers and schools; 2 p. m., question: "Who shall represent us in the General Convention?" question box; 4 p. m., election of officers and delegates to General Convention; 7.30 "Graded Text-books; correct use of "Senior Quarterly." This is a delegate convention and all locals and schools should appoint and send delegates and full reports. J. A. Gunsolley.

The Des Moines District Sunday-school association will convene at Des Moines, Iowa, February 19 and 20, 1903. It will be held jointly with the Religio convention. We trust that all workers interested in this department of God's work will put forth a special effort to attend and have a voice in electing their district officers for the coming year. Elsie E. Russell, district secretary, 503 High Street, Grinnell, Iowa.

Born.

SMITH.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 8, 1903, 2.12 a. m., standard or central time, to President Joseph and Sr. Ada Rachel Smith, a son, named Reginald Archer.

Died.

MILLER.—At Victor, Montana, January 6, 1903, of pneumonia, Sr. Rachel Miller; was born September 27, 1850, at Woodstock, McHenry County, Illinois; baptized April 16, 1899, at Woodside, Montana, by Elder A. B. Moore; married July 30, 1872, at Crystal Lake, Iowa, to Ezra Miller. To them were born three children, two of whom survive to mourn her departure. Funeral at the Presbyterian church, attended by a large gathering of friends; services conducted by Elder G. Reese.

YERGIN.—At Kansas City, January 16, 1903, of typhoid fever, Mr. John S. Yergin, husband of Sr. Mary Monson Yergin, passed away. Leaves a loving wife and two children to mourn. He was a good man morally, but never deemed it necessary to obey the gospel. Funeral services at the residence by F. C. Warnky.

HAWS.—Elder Albert Haws was born November 15, 1830, in Ontario; baptized May, 1867; died November 22, 1902, at Oakland, California, of heart disease; ordained January 1, 1870, to the office of an elder. For many years, he was an active missionary, but for some time before death his bodily infirmities rendered him unable to do active missionary work. He did long and faithful service as a minister, and was always willing to devote his best energies to the interest of the cause he loved.

TILTON.—At San Francisco, California, January 13, 1903, of paralysis, Sr. Emma, wife of Bro. H. L. Tilton, aged 56 years, 9 months, and 20 days. She was born at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1846, and united with the church May 4, 1873, being baptized by Bro. Joseph Smith at Plano, Illinois. Married Bro. Tilton twenty-one years ago. They moved to Los Angeles in 1894, thence to San Francisco in 1900. Her body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Bro. Henry C. Smith had charge of the arrangements, Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon, and Bro. J. R. Lambert assisted.

SERVIS.—Sr. Anna Servis departed this life January 15, 1903, at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Bro. and Sr. Lucious Streater, Raglan, Harrison County, Iowa. She was born September 22, 1818, in Maryland, and came to Iowa in 1865. She became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1884, being baptized and confirmed by Elder Phineas Cadwell. Sr. Servis was a faithful follower of the Master and passed away with the hope of eternal life. Service at the Saints' church at Magnolia by H. N. Hansen, assisted by R. C. Chambers.

EPARD.—On January 18, 1903, Avenue City, Missouri, Hyrum, infant son of Bro. E. S. and Sr. Cassie Eppard, aged 11 months and 22 days, was transplanted from earth into the glorious kingdom of our blessed Redeemer. Funeral January 21, by Elder M. Shaw.

The February number of the Arena opens with a timely paper by Edwin Maxey, LL. D., of Columbian University, one of the special contributors, on "The Attack on Venezuela." Professor Frank Parsons, Ph. D., presents some startling facts and figures in an article on "Public Ownership." Horace Mann, M. S., discusses "The Labor Problem," and the Reverend Adolph Roeder has a most suggestive essay proposing a "School of Civics." Frank Emory Lyon, Ps. D., considers "Psychology and Crime," and Colonel William Hemstreet writes interestingly on "Agrarian Revival." Clara Bewick Colby has a most appreciative paper on the late Elizabeth Cady Stanton, which is followed by a sprightly description of "The Woman of the Period," from the pen of Marie Merrick. Henry F. Harris has a thoughtful article on "Marriage and Divorce," and George H. Shibley, in a "conversation," discusses "The Victorious March of Majority Rule." "The Tyranny of Servants" is the title of a significant fable by Carl S. Vrooman. Editor Flower's departments of "Topics of the Times" and "Books of the Day" are vitally instructive, as usual. Editor McLean announces a paper by Justice Walter Clark, among other interesting features, for the March number.

The World's Work for February.

A large and unusually varied number of articles on important subjects appear in the World's Work for February. By much the most striking article is that on the United States Navy at Work, by Lieutenant Commander Albert Gleaves, illustrated by twenty pages of remarkable photographs. A series of investigations of the professions begins in this number with an article by Harry D. Nims on "The Law;" George Iles is the author of a well-illustrated story of Herbert Spencer's work; and Arthur Goodrich finds good things to say about the United States Steel Corporation's Profit-Sharing Plan. Owen Wister's review of Frank Norris's last book, "The Pit," is fitting and has a unique interest. Among the illustrated articles, which are always made features of the World's Work, are Marrion Wilcox's story of how the finest Cuban tobacco is being grown in the United States, an article by Sylvester Baxter about the railroads controlling trolley lines, and Herbert G. Ponting's description of a wonderful Japanese workshop. Libraries, their great growth and work, make up the subject upon which Miss Helen Haines writes; Doctor Floyd M. Crandall gives interesting suggestions for the "Prevention of Physical Breakdown;" Louis James Magee tells of various methods Americans can learn from German business men. And this is only part of the contents. There is an article about American skilled workmanship as shown in watch factories by P. P. Frost, some thirty-five short editorial articles in the "March of Events," and twenty more in "Among the World's Workers." The portraits for the month include Secretary Moody of the Navy, Judge Alton B. Parker, General F. V. Greene and Doctor J. E. Russell.

The events which are leading up to "The Passing of the American Indian" are recorded by Mr. Thomas F. Millard in the January-March Forum. Within one year, says the writer, the Indian will finally disappear from among the nations of the world, his identity for ever lost under the broad mantle of United States citizenship.

Mr. H. Litchfield West's review of "American Politics" in the January-March Forum discusses the Congressional elections, the Democratic leadership, the growth of Socialism, the President's attitude to the trusts and the tariff, the "Lily White" movement, Speaker Henderson's resignation, and the proposals for reciprocity with Cuba.

The hawks belong to a great bird family known as Falconidae, which also includes falcons, eagles, kites, etc., and which has three hundred and fifty branches, or species, distributed all over the world. Of these, about thirty-five species are found in North America. Some are migratory, while others remain in one locality the whole year round. Except in the migratory seasons, when certain species may be seen flying in scattered flocks, which sometimes extend for many miles, hawks are solitary birds, as a rule flying singly or in pairs. They become greatly attached to particular breeding-grounds, and return year after year to the same bit of woodland, often to the same tree, where they will patch up the old nest, which has perhaps been occupied by squirrels during the winter. They are, moreover, very constant in their affections, some species being known to mate for life. The food of hawks consists in the main of small mammals, insects, reptiles, and batrachians, which they capture and hold with their powerful claws, and tear to pieces with their hooked bills. As destroyers of mice and noxious insects they are of great value to the farmers, and even the species which occasionally carry off game and poultry have a handsome balance of good deeds to their credit. Intelligent men are now beginning to recognize this fact, and with other thoughtful people are losing patience with the thoughtless ones who still persist in killing these winged servants, many of which are saving for their murderers at least twenty dollars a year.—February Woman's Home Companion.

AN EXAMINATION OF OBJECTION TO EDITORIAL ANSWER.

In our article columns this week is an article under the caption, "Is Section 99 Revelation," from which it appears that our reply to question found on page 1243 of HERALD for December 24, 1902, and the quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants in support of the reply have met with a ready opposition.

We answered the query according to our understanding of the provisions of sections 99 and 104, Doctrine and Covenants. We are still of the opinion covered by our reply.

We do not call the authority of section 99 in question. It contains the rules of the church to govern the action of the High Council in its procedure.

Paragraphs 11, 12, and 13 provide for the calling of a council of high priests abroad for the purpose of settling controversies and adjusting difficulties occurring in the fields where the high priests may be laboring. Paragraph 12 contains a provision restricting the calling of such a council to "the most difficult cases of church matters," and gives to the "traveling or located high priests abroad, power to say whether it is necessary to call such a council, or not."

One of the objections stated by the brother who takes exception to our answer is that it puts too much power in the hands of one man, the President of the church, upon the general ground that "it looks unjust to claim that such power is vested in one man, and appears contrary to the law of common consent."

Paragraph 13 does pretty much the same thing, for it provides that the "traveling or located high priests abroad," indefinite as to number, are invested with the "power to say whether it is necessary to call such a council or not." If the one provision confers too much power on "one man," who is specified, and who is known to the church always, and for whose impeachment in case of malfeasance in office there is a special provision of the laws, why does not the other which places identically the same power in any "one man" of a great number, not specified, who in the discharge of his duty moves according to the dictates of his own judgment. And, further, when the council called by such high priest is in session, either himself, or "one man" of equal authority is to act in all things in accord with the provisions given to govern the "one man" of paragraph 14. Is it possible that the objection lies against the "one man" because he

SELFISHNESS is darkness. It shuts us up in the tight little box of our own lives. Unselfishness gives us a wide circle of interest and delight. What we do for others has as much to do with our happiness as what we get for ourselves. Just think how many joys a man may have who is not confined to his own reasons for rejoicing! . . . is the president and subject to an improper bias for or against an alleged offender, in favor or against a specific subject in question, and for that reason is not to be trusted; while the other "one man," being more specifically "of the people" is more worthy of confidence?

Again, paragraph 9 puts even a greater degree of power into one man's hands, when it provides that after the trial is over this one man shall make a decision which must be approved by the whole council; unless it can be shown by some of the members that there is an error in the decision, in which case a rehearing shall be had, and even then a majority of the council shall be sufficient to confirm the decision. The right of decision is with the president.

If paragraph 14 applies only to "such cases" as those referred to in paragraph 11, for which an appeal to the High Council is provided then it is clear that paragraph 14 provides that the "president, or presidents shall have power to determine whether any such case, is justly entitled to a rehearing," for the rehearing referred to in paragraph 11 is to be before the High Council. If, therefore, none but the "most difficult cases of the church" are to be brought before a council of high priests to be summoned by a traveling or local high priest, he having the "power to say whether" such council is or is not necessary, what reason is there to object to the "president or presidents" of the church determining whether any case that may be appealed from the Bishop's court or an elders' court to the High Council is entitled to a rehearing before that council, such objection to rest on the ground that it invests "one man" with too much power?

The brother sets forth the mode of procedure after the council is called to sit on the trial of a cause, and states that it is not till then that any decision of the matter may be reached. And to support this objection he states that it is evident that "the law of common consent is here intended to govern in all cases where satisfaction has not been given the parties appealing."

If it had been intended that the law of common consent should apply in manner and form that this objector states, then the rule given in paragraph 14 has no application and is void of meaning, as it distinctly provides that the "president or presidents of the seat of the First Presidency of the church, shall have power to determine whether any such case, as may be appealed, is justly entitled to a rehearing, after examining the appeal and the evidences and statements accompanying it." Here the duty of examining the appeal, and accompanying evidences and statements is imposed upon "the president, or the presidents," and this duty is to be performed before the matter goes to the council for final trial. It can not refer to an examination by the council, or in the presence of the council, but is to be done by the "president or the presidents" with the direct view of determining whether the case is "entitled to a rehearing," and should go to the council for such rehearing. It would be a waste of time and effort for the matter to go before the council, be heard and then the president to declare that it was not entitled to a rehearing. The paragraph has no meaning upon such a construction as that; and the wisdom of the men who formed the council and who framed the rules of section 99, which the objecting brother so highly lauded at the beginning of his article, is sadly in fault for adopting a rule without intent or purpose.

The council when convened to sit in trial of a cause determines whether the cause which has passed under the examination of the president or presidents and been found to be "justly entitled to a rehearing," is a difficult one or not, and the council is divided by numbers into those who speak for the accuser and accused two, four, or six as the council may determine, and then proceed to hear the cause upon its merits, not to ascertain if it is justly entitled to a rehearing but to reach a decision in the cause itself. There is not a word in all this description of the procedure in the case of a trial before the council that touches the work referred to in paragraph 14. When is it that the president or presidents make the examination of the appeal, evidences, and statements provided for to determine whether an appealed cause is entitled to a rehearing, if it is not prior to such a rehearing? If the president has, or presidents have, the power to determine that any case is entitled to a rehearing, it follows that he or they may decline to present such case before the council, if upon the examination of the case it is found that it is not entitled to a rehearing; the paragraph is useless if rendered otherwise.

It must be remembered that the person charged with wrong-doing and against whom an inquiry is urged in the courts of the church is not the only one in interest. There is another party to the cause equally in interest and whose rights are no more to be ignored or disregarded than the rights of the accused. It is all well enough to talk and write about mercy and justice for the accused, and by appeals to the sympathy of the readers and hearers create prejudice in favor of the one accused of wrong, and the right he may have to a fair trial; and against the church whose duty it is to bring wrong-doers to answer for the wrongs done by them. But what of the church and its fellowship? What about the right the church has to expect the good, upright, honorable, and righteous speech and conduct of its membership? What of the man who by word and deed violates the good order and rules of the church; and then when the officers of the church call his attention to his wrong-doing is defiant, and refuses either to acknowledge his wrong-doing, or to make suitable restitution? What about him, who, when required to appear before a court provided for in the rules of the church properly called and constituted treats such court with contempt, refuses to submit to its decision made upon due inquiry, and then relying on his right to appeal makes such appeal upon the plea of dissatisfaction with the action of the elders' and Bishop's courts and demands that his case be heard by the High Council? Is there no place where the work of a mischief-maker in branch or district shall find his mischief-making tactics stopped? Shall every peevish, restless malcontent be at liberty to annoy, trouble, and vex members and officers of a branch, or a district by wrong-doing, or disorderly and insubordinate walk and conversation, and when his conduct is called in question he be allowed to disregard the result of a proper inquiry by the elders' court, and the Bishop's court, and force his cause into the High Council, a court especially provided for the "most important business,"¹ and "most difficult cases of the church?"² Is every case of alleged personal misconduct an important, or difficult case? Is there none which comes under the clause, "and no common or ordinary case is to be sufficient to call such a council;" referring to the one provided for in paragraph 12, section 99? If, as our objecting brother argues there is no difference between the principles governing in the council provided in paragraphs 11, 12, 13, and the High Council, is it not equally correct to conclude that "no common or ordinary case is to be sufficient" to go before the High Council?

There is absolutely no provision in the law by which every case must of right go before the High Council. Sections 99 and 104, both define the character of the cases which may go before either the council of high priests abroad or the High Council. These cases are to be "the most difficult cases of church matters," or "the most important business of the church, or the most difficult cases of the church," upon which there is not "satisfaction upon the decision of the Bishop, or judges." The importance or difficult nature of the case is not determined by the dissatisfaction of any parties affected by the decision of the Bishop, or judges. This determination is left to "the traveling, or located high priests abroad" in the one case, and to "the president or presidents of the High Council" in the other.

It is absurd to hold that every case of difference of opinion in regard to church law or rule, or every case of alleged personal misconduct is difficult or important, within the meaning of the rules of sections 99 and 104. The difficulty or importance of the case must first be determined before the calling of the council of paragraphs 11, 12, 13, section 99, or the presentation to the High Council of section 99, and paragraphs 35, 36, 37, of section 104.

The objecting brother states: "Note, the power to accept or reject is not left to one man as president, nor one man as councilor, but the council in this case as well as the former case has the right to determine."³

This objection is a curious one, for it insists that the council is the one that determines whether the case is of sufficient importance to call itself together. There is nothing in paragraph 12 which defines whether it requires one, two, or fifteen high priests to be a proper number to authorize the calling of this council of high priests abroad. It makes no provision for any definite number, and hence the objection is not valid.

This objecting brother states: "The President or Presidency is not an appellate court." No. But the High Council over which they preside is. And before this court can be reached it must be shown to this presidency that the case appealed is of the "most difficult" class of cases or "most important business of the church," before he is authorized to convene this high court. "No common or ordinary case" will justify the convening of such court. The terms, "Inasmuch as there is not satisfaction," do not give a case importance; it must be of importance at the start, and in itself.

The objecting brother writes: "As a member of the official body, I discovered an 'error' in the decision of the president in his claim that section 99, paragraph 14, was his authority for accepting or rejecting cases of appeal, which the law provides should come before the High Council."

"As a member of the official body," the objecting brother is not invested with any right of discovery. It is only when the council is in session, the case has been called, the evidence heard, the pleadings and statements of both sides been heard, and a decision has been rendered by the president, in the case being heard before the council, that this objecting brother or any other member of the council is by the rule invested with the right of discovery, and may call the decision in question. The decision of the president which may be called in question must be one made in the course of the hearing of a cause before the High Council, and not an answer to a query made by the editor of the HERALD in the columns of that paper. The objector has simply made a discovery outside of his sphere.

The brother objector states that he has "as a member of the church" "discovered an error in the decision of the president and editor of the HERALD in his claim," etc.

Paragraph 14, of section 99, is a resolution of the members of the High Council, organized February 17, 1834, having direct application to the president or presidents and defines the duty and power of these officers in regard to their procedure in the matter of cases appealed to the High Council. Paragraph 35, of section 104, does not strengthen the brother's objection but weakens it, for the reason that it defines the class of cases that shall be laid before the High Council, and this is "the most important business of the church, and the most difficult cases of the church," in agreement with paragraph 12 of section 99, which defines the class of cases upon which the high priests abroad may call a council; and "no common or ordinary case is to be sufficient," and the one or two who may be asked to call this council are to determine whether such council should be called.

If there is to be no preliminary inquiry, or examination of any case offered to the High Council, on appeal, how shall it be determined whether it is a difficult case or an important matter? If such examination is to be made, who shall make it? Shall the parties dissatisfied decide, or shall it be the officers named in paragraph 14 of section 99? If the high priests, or high priests abroad, or located, one, or more, who may be requested to call a high council as provided in paragraphs 11 and 12 of section 99, are not to determine upon examination of the matter, or case, in order to ascertain whether it is "a common, or ordinary case," or one "most difficult" or "most important," who shall determine this fact clearly provided for in both section 99 and 104? Is the one who makes the request, or the two who make the request of the located high priest to determine this question? The rules make provision in both cases; in the one, it is the high priest or high priests, either traveling or located, who are required to call the council; and in the other, it is the president or presidents of the High Council.

It is evident to us that the intent and purpose of the restrictions in paragraph 12, of section 99, providing that the council of high priests abroad is to be called only on the "most difficult cases of church matters," and that "no common, or ordinary case is to be sufficient" to justify such calling of a council; and the one defining the class of cases that may be taken up before the High Council to be "the most important business of the church, and the most difficult cases of the church," that the one council should not be called, nor the other convened, except on important affairs; and to restrict the bringing of unimportant, trifling, or vexatious matters of controversy before a tribunal so important as a council of high priests abroad; and to prevent the convening of the high tribunal of the church and the wasting of the time of such council upon the common, or ordinary cases, the settlement of which before the elders' courts, and the Bishop's court should be accepted and acquiesced in. It is for this purpose that the questions of difficulty or importance must be first settled, before either a council is called in the one case, or the High Council convened in the other.

The provision found in paragraph 36 does not apply as used by our objecting brother, for it does not say that all offenders must be tried by the High Council, but simply that none can legally object to answering to the tribunal thus referred to. This is easily seen by reading paragraph 37, for in that paragraph there is a direct exception, and one or more officers are exempt from trial by the High Council, in the fact that a special tribunal is created before which a "president of the high priesthood, if he transgress, shall be tried by the "Common Council of the church;" which common council is understood to be the Bishop and his counselors, according to paragraph 33, of section 104. When this common council sits to try a president of the high priesthood, he shall call to his assistance twelve of the high priesthood, who with the Bishop and his counselors, shall constitute a council before which a president of the high priesthood must answer. This council is evidently given the same powers as a tribunal and is to proceed in case of the trial of an offending president of the high priesthood, in the same manner as the High Council, as shown in section 99. It would be manifestly improper for the High Council to sit to try a president of itself and it is open to some inquiry whether the council should try any of its members in case of transgression. We make no affirmation in regard to it.

"As a member of the church," the brother has discovered "an error in the decision of the president," but as a member of the church, of the official body, the High Council, and one of those referred to in paragraph 14 of section 99, we see no merit in the alleged error; nor do we see any propriety in the objector classifying the answer of the Editor to an inquiry in the HERALD as a decision, of the nature of the one referred to in section 99, which if made and discovered is to be followed by a "rehearing."

Whether the officers who are named in the rules are the proper ones to make the inquiry and determine what cases are common, ordinary, difficult, or important, it may not be becoming for us to state; but it is written; and upon this writing we have made our deductions and formed our conclusion, and upon this we believe that the answer we gave to the question in HERALD for December 24, 1902, was and is correct.

"PREACH RELIGION, NOT THEOLOGY," SAYS DOCTOR ABBOTT.

Doctor Lyman Abbott, the well-known editor of the Outlook, has recently been delivering a series of lectures before the students of the University of Chicago. In one of these lectures he pointed out to his listeners the need of preaching more religion and less theology than do the ministers of the day. He advocated the idea that the ministers should know theology but should preach religion, instead of preaching theology and leaving out religion. He declared that the tendency of the ministers of the present day was to preach theology and not religion. If we can depend upon the reports of some of the daily papers of Chicago, in speaking along this line he said in part:

I am both a minister and a layman, and I speak to you as a layman and in behalf of laymen. What I have to say to you is that theology is a different thing from religion. Both are important, but they are widely different. Religion is the life of God in the soul. We must of necessity think about it and formulate our thoughts, but these thoughts are theology and not religion. Botany is a different thing from flowers, astronomy is a different thing from the stars, and so theology is a different thing from religion.

Flowers remain the same, but botany may change; the stars remain the same, but astronomers may change. And so religion, the life of God in the soul, remains the same in every age, though there may be new theologies. Religion is, in fact, both old and new, as old as Christianity and as new as the last conversion of a sinner. The Bible is not a book of theology, nor even a book about religion, but a book of religion.

Now, when we laymen go to church we go to get not theology but religion. It is necessary, understand me, for the preacher to know theology; but what we want of him is religion, and we are disappointed if we do not get it. If I ask a carpenter for a box and he presents me with a lot of tools, if I ask a farmer for wheat and he presents me with a reaper, if I ask the hotel keeper for breakfast and he gives me a book on bread-making, I have reason to complain. So it is when I go to church for religion and the preacher gives me theology.

What I wish to impress upon your minds is that the professors in this seminary are not giving you wholesale what you are to give to your future parishioners retail. If you preach the theology you are taught here, your people will grow tired of you, no matter what sort of theology it may be. I am a liberal myself, and I can assure you that they will weary of liberal theology even sooner than of any other.

A WORD ABOUT TRACTS.

From what is now and again transpiring we take it that there is some misunderstanding about tracts, that is, pamphlets and sermon leaflets, etc., for distribution.

As we understand the order in reference to tracts in other languages, and indeed in the English language, the class of tracts that was to be submitted to the Presidency and the Board of Publication, was that class which was to be issued by the church and authorized for general distribution; and was not intended to refer to that class of literature which elders, ministers, writers might see fit to write, publish, and circulate on their own motion and responsibility; including extracts from speeches, and sermons duly reported.

There is no disposition nor intention on the part of the Presidency to construe the revelation in regard to tracts in such a way as to hamper or cripple the efforts of missionaries in charge, elders in the field, or local officers who may by voice or pen advocate and defend the church and the truth. Men of the church are and must be at liberty to use their talents and means to their best advantage at their discretion, and answer for the same to God, without improper, unjust, or malicious interference upon the part of any of their fellow servants. There could not have been any intention in the direction given to foster an improper censor of the opinions and speech of the men of the church, the object being only to secure unity of intent and uniformity of testimony in the tracts to be issued by the church officially, and for which the general officers of the church would be expected to stand. Tracts of this class should be submitted to the Presidency, thence to the Board of Publication, according to the agreement in the joint council of 1894; though the Board is not mentioned in the revelation of 1901.

The Presidency have no objection to read and examine what may be submitted to them for examination, and which is to be published and circulated by individuals or associations; but do not propose to become responsible for the subject matter of such tracts, books, pamphlets, leaflets, etc. They are personal ventures, written and published as the views, conclusions, opinions, and arguments of those who write them; and the Presidency can no more be responsible for these opinions and arguments than they can be for the sermons and speeches, statements, testimonies, and prophecies, etc., of the elders in the field, or the branches; and it would be the height of absurdity to ask or expect the Presidency to supervise, sanction, and approve of the sermons, lectures, and testimonies of the ministry, before the same were uttered, through fear of some one being guilty of heresy. However, it is within the range of possibility that tracts on the doctrines of the church can be read and examined by the Presidency, if the same are to be issued by the church to be of an official character, and to secure uniformity of statement so far as is practicable from the ability of those officers.

A number of books have been published by members of the church, as personal ventures on the part of their authors. The Presidency had no part in writing, arranging, or editing these books, and can not be held responsible for the views expressed in them. Some of them the Presidency did not have the opportunity to read until they were in print. Some of those of which the manuscripts were submitted for perusal were the individual property of the authors who were publishing them for the gospel's sake and the profit there might be in them. The church had no claim to them either as propagandists or as money-makers; and as a consequence the Presidency had no right to indorse them nor suppress them. They had to be left to the judgment of the public and the ordéal of those who bought them.

Some of the tracts in circulation were not submitted to the Presidency until they were in print. These the Presidency neither approve nor disapprove in an official way. They have done good in all probability.

The Presidency would be doing wrong in interfering with them. And certainly it can not be expected that the Presidency will stand for them if they are already before the public and have been for months and years.

Take as an instance a sermon by Bro. Joseph Luff, "Why I became a Latter Day Saint." This was a public sermon, taken by a stenographer, and doubtless submitted to Bro. Luff before being put in type. What could the approval or disapproval of the Presidency signify in such a case? The sermon was an excellent one; in some of its parts inspired in its delivery; and involving much of the personal history of the man. What would the Presidency have to do with it?

The Bishop is carrying a tract fund for the purpose of supplying to the missionaries numbers of tracts on demand. Those desirous of aiding this fund in a general way would do well to send their contributions direct to the Bishop, so that he can supply the needs on demand.

All tracts written for the purpose of general distribution of the sort, and which are intended to be submitted to the Presidency, should be sent to them before they are published. After a tract has been published and put in circulation it will be useless to send it to the Presidency either for approval, disapproval, or revision; as it would be quite improper for that body to undertake to change or suppress what had already been put in circulation as a personal venture; especially so if differing views on material points had been taken by different writers.

"WASHINGTON'S VISION."

We have been requested to publish "Washington's Vision." It appeared in the columns of the HERALD in 1874, issue of December 1. We herein reproduce it as it appeared in that issue:

WASHINGTON'S VISION.

The last time I ever saw Anthony Sherman, was on the Fourth of July, 1859, in Independence Square. He was then ninety-nine, and becoming very feeble; but though so old, his dimming eyes rekindled as he gazed upon Independence Hall, which he had come to gaze upon once more before he was gathered home.

"What time is it?" said he, raising his trembling eyes to the clock in the steeple, and endeavoring to shade the former with a shaking hand, "What time is it? I can't see so well as I used to.

"Half past three?"

"Come then," he continued, "let us go into the Hall—I want to tell you an incident of Washington's life, one which no one alive knows of except myself; and, if you live, you will before long see it verified. Mark the prediction—you will see it verified!"

Reaching the visitor's room, in which the sacred relics of our early days are preserved, we sat down upon one of the old-fashioned wooden benches, and my venerable companion related to me the following singular narrative, which, from the peculiarities of our national affairs at the present time, I have been induced to give to the world. I give it as near as possible in his own words:

"When the bold action of our Congress, in asserting the independence of the colonies became known in the Old World, we were laughed and scoffed at as silly, presumptuous rebels, whom British grenadiers would soon tame into submission; but undauntedly we prepared to make good what we had said. The keen encounter came and the world knows the result. It is easy and pleasant for the present generation to talk and write of the days of '76, but they little know, neither can they imagine, the trials and sufferings of those fearful days. And there is one thing that I much fear, and that is, the American people do not properly appreciate the boon of freedom. Party spirit is yearly becoming stronger and stronger, and without it is checked, will, at no distant day, undermine and tumble into ruins the noble structure of the Republic. But let me hasten to the narrative.

"From the opening of the Revolution we experienced all phases of fortune, now good and now ill, one time victorious, and another conquered. The darkest period we had, however, was, I think, when Washington, after several reverses, retreated to Valley Forge, where he resolved to pass the winter of '77. Ah! I have often seen the tears coursing down our dear old commander's care-worn cheeks, as he would be conversing with a confidential officer about the conditions of his poor soldiers. You have doubtless heard the story of Washington going to the thicket to pray. Well, it is not only true, but he used often to pray in secret for aid and comfort from God the interposition of whose Divine Providence brought us safely through those dark days of tribulation.

"One day, I remember it well—the chilly winds whistled through the leafless trees though the sky was cloudless and the sun shining brightly—he remained in his quarters nearly all the afternoon alone. When he came out I noticed his face was a shade paler than usual, and that there seemed to be something on his mind of more than ordinary importance. Returning just after dusk, he dispatched an orderly to the quarters of the officer I mention who was presently in attendance. After a preliminary conversation, which lasted about half an hour, Washington gazed upon his companion with that strange look of dignity, which he alone could command, said to the latter:

"I do not know whether it is owing to the anxiety of my mind, or what, but, this afternoon as I was sitting at this very table engaged in preparing a dispatch, something in the apartment seemed to disturb me. Looking up, I beheld standing opposite to me, a singularly beautiful female. So astonished was I, for I had given strict orders not to be disturbed, that it was some moments before I found language to inquire the cause of her presence. A second, a third, and even fourth time did I repeat my question but received no answer from my mysterious visitor, except a slight raising of the eyes. By this time I felt strange sensations spreading through me. I would have risen, but the riveted gaze of the being before me rendered volition impossible. I essayed once more to address her, but my tongue had become powerless. Even thought, itself, suddenly became paralyzed. A new influence, mysterious, potent, irresistible, took possession of me. All I could do was to gaze steadily, vacantly at my unknown visitant. Gradually the surrounding atmosphere seemed as though becoming filled with sensations, and grew luminous. Everything about me seemed to rarify, the mysterious visitor herself becoming more airy and yet even more distinct to my sight than before. I now began to feel as one dying, or rather to experience the sensations which I have sometimes imagined accompany dissolution. I did not think, I did not reason, I did not move; all were alike impossible. I was only conscious of gazing fixedly, vacantly at my companion.

"Presently I heard a voice saying, "Son of the Republic, look and learn;" while at this same time my visitor extended her arm eastwardly. I now beheld a heavy white vapor at some distance, rising fold upon fold. This gradually dissipated, and I looked upon a strange scene. Before me lay spread out in one vast plain, all the countries of the world, Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. I saw rolling and tossing between Europe and America, the billows of the Atlantic, and between Asia and America lay the Pacific.

““Son of the Republic,” said the same mysterious voice as before, “look and learn.”

“A second time the angel dipped water from the ocean, and sprinkled it out as before. The dark cloud was then drawn back to the ocean in whose heaving waves it sunk from view. A third time I heard the mysterious voice, saying:

“I cast my eyes upon America, and beheld villages, towns, and cities spring up, one after another, until the whole land from the Atlantic to the Pacific was dotted with them. Again I heard the mysterious voice say:

““Son of the Republic, the end of the century cometh, look and learn.”

“At this, the dark, shadowy angel turned his face southward, and from Africa I saw an ill-omened spectre approach our land. It flitted slowly and heavily over town and city of the latter, the inhabitants of which presently set themselves in battle array against each other. As I continued looking, I saw a bright angel, on whose brow rested a crown of light, on which was traced “UNION,” bearing the American flag, which was placed between the divided nation, and said:

“Instantly the inhabitants, casting from them their weapons, became friends once more, and united around the national standard. And again I heard the mysterious voice, saying:

“At this the dark shadowy angel placed a trumpet to his mouth, and blew three distinct blasts, and taking water from the ocean, sprinkled it upon Europe, Asia, and Africa.

“Then my eyes beheld a fearful scene. From each of these countries arose thick, black clouds, that were soon joined into one. And throughout this mass there gleamed a dark red light, by which I saw the hordes of armed men, who moving with the cloud, marched by land and sailed by sea, to America, which country was enveloped in the volume of the cloud. And I dimly saw these vast armies devastate the whole country, and burn the villages, towns, and cities that I beheld springing up. As my ears listened to the thundering of cannon, clashing of swords, and shouts and cries of the millions in mortal combat, I again heard the mysterious voice, saying:

“When the voice had ceased, the dark, shadowy angel placed his trumpet once more in his mouth, and blew a long, fearful blast.

“Instantly a light as if of a thousand suns shone down from above me, and pierced and broke into fragments the dark cloud which enveloped America. At the same moment I saw the angel upon whose head still shone the word “UNION,” and who bore our national flag in one hand, and a sword in the other, descended from heaven attended by legions of bright spirits. These immediately joined the inhabitants of America, who I perceived were well-nigh overcome, but who immediately taking courage again closed up their broken ranks and renewed the battle.

Again amid the fearful noise of the conflict I heard the mysterious voice, saying:

““Son of the Republic, look and live.”

“As the voice ceased, the shadowy angel for the last time dipped water from the ocean and sprinkled it on America.

Instantly the dark cloud rolled back, together with the armies it had brought, leaving the inhabitants of the land victorious. Then once more I beheld villages, towns, and cities springing up where they had been before, while the bright angel, planting the azure standard he had brought in the midst of them, cried in a loud voice:

““While the stars remain and the heavens send down dew upon the earth, so long shall the Republic last.”

“And taking from his brow the crown on which blazoned the word “UNION,” he placed it upon the standard, while the people, kneeling down, said “Amen.”

“The scene instantly began to fade and dissolve, and I at last saw nothing but the rising, curling vapor I had first beheld. This also disappearing, I found myself once more gazing on my mysterious visitor, who in the same voice I had heard before, said:

““Son of the Republic, what ye have seen is thus interpreted. Three perils will come upon the Republic. The most fearful is the second, passing which, the whole world united, shall never be able to prevail against her. Let every child of the Republic learn to live for his God, his land and the UNION.”

“With these words the vision vanished, and I started from my seat, and felt that I had seen a vision wherein had been shown me the birth, progress, and destiny of the United States.

“In UNION she will have her strength, in disunion her destruction.”

“Such, my friend,” concluded the venerable narrator, “were the words I heard from Washington’s own lips, and America will do well to profit by them.”—Wesley Bradshaw.

MANCHESTER CHILDREN AID GRACELAND.

If all the Saints, especially those who are able, would manifest the same zeal towards helping Graceland College that some Latter Day Saint children in Manchester, England, have, the college debt would be wiped out in a hurry. The following is a letter recently received by us:

MANCHESTER, England, January 17.

Dear Editors: Our four children, Bessie, Charlie, Evelyn, and Sam, earned prizes for 1902 at the East Manchester Sunday-school, and requested in lieu thereof that the value of the same be given them so that they might forward it as a “gift” to Graceland College. The request was readily acceded to, and I therefore beg to forward same, five shillings or one dollar and twenty cents, for that object. Can I ask you to pass it on to the proper quarter?

We thank you in anticipation, and extend best wishes for God’s work in all its departments.

In gospel bonds,

SAM. F. MATHER.

15 February Street, C. on M.

We commend the example of the Mather children as being worthy of emulation. May they be rewarded for their sacrifice.

You may decide to do a kind and knightly deed next December, but it would be better to decide to do it to-day—it will bring a larger interest; indeed, its interest will be principal before December.—Christian Standard.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

W. H. Kelley, writing from Salt Lake City, Utah, January 24, said: "I intended to go to Provo to-day, but the smallpox and scarlet fever are prevailing there now; schools closed and many houses quarantined, so shall postpone my visit there. Will be here to-morrow again. I am feeling quite well, physically and otherwise."

Will S. Pender wrote from Malad City, Idaho, January 23: "It has been raining and snowing here for several days, which makes the farmers rejoice. Church work is moving very satisfactorily here."

Under date of January 25, Bro. H. T. Watson wrote from Mound City, Missouri: "Bro. Stead is here unfurling the gospel banner to the breeze, making it so plain that people on the run can see it."

A. M. Chase wrote from Sagle, Idaho, January 23: "There is quite an interest here. Elders H. L. Holt and D. L. Harris have each held a few meetings here and there seems to be quite an appetite for the gospel message developed and we are doing our best to feed them. We expect to return to Utah about February 1."

Bro. Ammon White wrote from Edgerton Junction, Missouri, January 26: "Ended a two-week meeting here last evening. Yesterday I baptized four, two of them colored, and four more were ready but stood back because of the colored people. God is no respecter of persons, and hence I received all who came repenting. I am sorry that some allow themselves to be led as the world is led, by the popularity god. Time will show that "our Father" erases all colors and leaves all white. I ever pray for these prejudiced souls."

U. W. Greene reports twenty baptisms in his mission last quarter. He says: "The quarter has brought many anxious hours, and some of the experiences have been of a nature never before encountered. But divine assistance has been granted at times, causing my heart to rejoice."

F. M. Sheehy in reporting for the quarter says: "On the whole we are not discouraged, but anxious to continue the fight, although the trial of faith 'more precious than fine gold' is still on."

In a letter dated February 1 at Independence, Missouri, Joseph Luff wrote: "A telegram has just come announcing that my sister in Toronto, Mrs. Hartley, is breathing her last; can live but a few hours; pneumonia. My wife and brother will start for there to-night, and if called I may need to go to-morrow morning. My mother is very poorly and Mrs. Hartley was her sole dependence in the way of care and treatment; hence a double fatality is possible if not probable. I do not feel able to undertake the trip, but will try if called. This is as a thunderclap from a clear sky; but it must be best or it would not be allowed; for if ever there lived a Saint whose life was wholly spent for others, Sr. Hartley was surely one. My heart feels crushed, but God can not be unkind or unwise, and through my tears I will try to praise him. May he give us grace to abide and learn in the way he pleases." On the outside of the letter Bro. Luff had hastily written the following words: "Sister dead. I leave this afternoon."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received from Bro. George F. Weston, of Buchanan, Michigan, a copy of his map of Arabia, which is advertised in another part of this issue. He designed it for the February Religio lessons Nos. 7 and 8. Religians and others interested in Religio lessons will find Bro. Weston's map of considerable interest. Thanks, Bro. Weston.

We have received the copy of the Ulster County Gazette mentioned by Bro. Thomas Matthews in his letter in this issue, and find it as he states. Thanks, Bro. Matthews.

Brn. Adam J. Keck and F. A. Russell, two members of the auditing committee, reached Lamoni, Monday morning, February 2. Bro. A. Carmichael, the other member, reached here the evening of the same day.

I. N. Roberts, missionary in charge of Southeastern Mission, is in Lamoni this week attending the meetings of the Lamoni Stake Council, of which he is a member. He probably will not return to his mission before General Conference.

In Illinois an active fight is being made against the unlicensed sale of cocaine. The cocaine habit has become alarmingly widespread, and it is thought the habit can be checked to a great extent by restricting the sale of the deadly drug. It is said to be worse than morphine, and holds its victim in a more relentless grasp.

For the present the HERALD will give no more space for articles on the question of church finances. We have a number on hand,—more than will likely be used.

With Zion's Ensign coming to our exchange table from Independence, Missouri, the Gospel Standard from Australia, Sandheden's Banner from Norway, the Canadian Messenger from Canada, the Saints' Advocate from Philadelphia, the Gospel Echo from Denver, the Glad Tidings from Michigan, and the Prophetic News from Rhode Island, we feel that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is being quite well represented in the printing world. These together with the periodicals issued from this office, namely, HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Hope, Gospel Quarterly, and Book of Mormon Quarterly, are doing much to present the restored gospel before the people. Let us not, however, weaken our efforts by scattering our energies. Centralization of effort and means is the rule of the day, and why not good for us?

IS SECTION 99 REVELATION?

Section ninety-nine of the Doctrine and Covenants is regarded by some as not being a revelation; but the rules therein contained bear the marks of divinity, and the men selected to form the first High Council of the church were preëminently men of wisdom in setting forth the powers and duties of those who should afterward compose the standing High Council of the church.

There are a few items in this section which appear to have been misunderstood as to their proper meaning and application as I understand it.

I have asked quite a number of officials the same question that I saw in the SAINTS' HERALD of December 24, viz., Does the President of the church, who is also president of the High Council, have the right to decide what cases shall or shall not come before the High Council? With quite a number the answer was yes, while a few answered in the negative. To me it looks unjust to claim that such power is vested in one man, and appears contrary to the law of common consent that runs through all the teaching of the books, where the law of God is supreme.

In this section is found provision for two distinct council organizations, both to be conducted on the same general principles. The one a permanent and standing high council, the other a temporary one, organized for present emergency. The standing High Council for the church is composed of the First Presidency and twelve high priests set apart and accepted by the church; and as yet we have found nothing to show that either the president or any or all of the councilors have the power to reject or refuse any appeal that comes from either the elders' or the bishops' court. The president has no pre-eminence over the twelve councilors, and can not legally and justly act independently of them, for the law requires both to form the High Council. There is no provision in this section that gives the president or any one man the power to reject an appeal until the case has been heard and then councilors are required to set forth the merits of the case in its true light, and every man must speak according to truth and equity. After the evidences are heard, the President shall give a decision according to his understanding of the case, and then call upon the councilors to confirm it by vote. But if any of the councilors can throw additional light upon the matter, or discover an error in the president's decision, it can be changed, otherwise it shall remain unquestioned. If the president must have the sanction of the councilors to make valid his decision, on what rule or law does he hold the power to accept or reject any appeal to the standing High Council of which he is simply the presiding officer.

It is evident the law of common consent is here intended to govern in all cases where satisfaction has not been given the parties appealing. They are according to the rulings in this section justly entitled to a rehearing. There is no bar to their appeal. The High Council as a body has the right to determine whether it is a difficult case—and whether it will require a full council or not; but neither president alone or councilors alone have power to reject any appeal of importance that may be presented for adjustment before the High Council of the church.

The second council provided for is found in paragraph eleven of the section, and is for temporary local service. Here is authority for a council of high priests, organized according to the foregoing pattern. They have power to appoint one of their number to preside, then proceed to try the case. The same rules are to govern that apply to the High Council, when the case is heard. They must send a copy of their decision, with a full statement of the evidence and testimony, to the High Council of the seat of the First Presidency, the council of the church. Should the parties or either of them be dissatisfied with the decision of this local court, they may appeal and have a rehearing, as though no decision had been rendered. No ordinary case is sufficient to call such a council. The local high priests have power to say whether it is necessary to call such a council. Note, the power to accept or reject is not left to one man as president nor one man as councilor, but the council in this case, as well as the former case, have the right to determine. And, when the case has been submitted to the seat of the High Council of the First Presidency, for this is the council of the church, they are then authorized to act in a council capacity on any important case. The President or Presidency is not an appellate court.

As a member of the official body, I discovered an error in the decision of the president in his claim that section 99:14 was his authority for accepting or rejecting cases of appeal, which the law provides should come before the High Council. Section 104:35 clearly defines the powers and duties of this council of the church, "inasmuch as there is not satisfaction upon the decision of the bishop, or judges, it shall be handed over and carried up unto the council of the church, before the presidency of the high priesthood; . . . And thus the presidency of the high priesthood, and its councilors shall have power to decide upon testimony according to the laws of the church." In paragraph thirty-six, "there is not any person belonging to the church, who is exempt from this council of the church," and paragraph thirty-seven, "Thus none shall be exempted from justice and the law of God;" no matter how high his standing or how low he may have fallen, and there is nothing in these sections of the law that gives the president or presidents preëminence over his councilors.

The reader will readily discover that paragraph fourteen is no proof of the claim presented and does not in any sense exclude or prevent cases of appeal to the High Council. As a member of the church, I have discovered an error in the decision of the president and editor of the HERALD, in his claim that section 99:14 was his authority and guide for accepting or rejecting cases of appeal that the law provides should come before the High Council. It is only a partial or abbreviated statement of what is called in paragraph eleven, the High Council of the seat of the First Presidency. Section 104:35 is my authority for this statement. I offer the above deductions from reading the pattern of the High Council as set forth in section 99, also section 104:35, 36, 37, revelation on priesthood in the interest of justice and equity between man and man. The pattern defined and set forth in these two sections is represented as nothing less than the law of heaven by which, when administered by men of truth and equity, justice, and equal rights can be obtained by man upon earth.

GEORGE DERRY.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 16.

THE WORD OF WISDOM.

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding.—Proverbs 4: 7.

For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.—Proverbs 8: 11.

Blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors. For whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord. But he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul: all they that hate me love death.—Proverbs 8: 34-36.

Wisdom is all essential to the well-being of man and to his success in all that is good and noble, and hence the Father has always seemed willing and anxious to give to man wisdom on all subjects that relate to his moral, spiritual, physical, and mental development and salvation. All men of all past ages who have loved the Lord, have pleased him by seeking that wisdom that comes from his hands, because it is man's everlasting safety, substance, success, and understanding of all that relates to his good in this life and that which is to come.

Its lack is darkness, ignorance, unsettled ways, weakness and loss both in time and in ages yet to be. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Wisdom was the success of all the worthies of past ages; and disaster and failure have ever followed its rejection. The man of wisdom builds on the rock, and the man who does not is foolish. Wisdom is the eternal rock, and disaster comes to all who build not on it.

He whose mercy never changes has graciously given wisdom to his people in these as well as in past ages. Wisdom, not only relating to the moral and spiritual, but touching their physical being, also. And it is to the consideration of the latter we desire to invite attention. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 86.)

As to the exact date of the giving of the Word of Wisdom, it matters but little, since the principles embraced in it are eternal, and of universal application. According to the Lords preface to it, it is adapted to "the weakest of all saints," and this being true, the strong ought to comply with it gladly to be consistent. It is not only for the benefit of the officers of the church, "the saints in Zion" also, but for the "church." We proceed in this paper on the hypothesis that this word of wisdom originated with God.

Would it be consistent for us to place our wisdom up against God's in order to take license to gratify our unnatural, abnormal appetites? In order that we may be properly understood, we observe that we note the difference between the temperate use of all commanded and permitted of God, and that which is prohibited. It is the prohibited and the forbidden that provokes the greater controversy, so far as the Word of Wisdom is concerned. To the forbidden we invite attention.

The basis of the negative controversy here, are the words, "To be sent greeting, not by commandment or constraint." But it is divine revelation, and divine words of wisdom, and opens with "Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you," and gives God's reasons for giving the revelation. It sets "forth the order and will of God." And what says the Lord? Answer: "And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And, again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And, again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly." How is this to be evaded?

The Master here speaks with the warning voice, saying, "I have warned you, and forewarn you," and this because of evils that "do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men." A warning always indicates danger. In this great matter the health and well-being of the Saints are in danger. Is it designed that the signal shall be heeded by the Saints? Certain things in common use among the Saints are to be rendered more enticing to them by adulteration. He declares in words not to be misunderstood, that the things warned against are "not good for man," and their nature is such that danger increases with their continued use. Can they move along heedless of warning and not suffer loss? The things warned against in their native, unadulterated state "are not good for man," and when adulterated are much less fit for his use. Therefore the idea sometimes expressed, "If we can just get these narcotic poisons in their unadulterated state, we can use them with impunity," is not well taken, is delusive. Can we continue to use them, then, and please him who gave the warning? How great his condescension to send this word of "greeting" to his Saints so recently, a word of wisdom relating to their physical and mental well-being and temporal salvation. How shall this divine greeting be received and treated by his people? What of that earthly friend of yours who would treat your greeting as some Saints treat this heavenly greeting?

But the question is asked by some, "Did not God create tobacco, tea, and coffee and pronounce them very good?" Yes, he says tobacco is good "for bruises, and all sick cattle" but "is not good for man," neither "strong" or "hot drinks." What more do you want? They were not ordained for man, neither that from which hot drinks are made.

Nor did he create in man the appetite for that which he says is not good for man. This appetite, if we have it, we create, and that to our hurt and in violation of the divine law ordained for our good. Our nature, in relation to the things designed for our physical and mental well-being, and healthy existence, is the expression of God's law and will. And to create the false, artificial appetite is to transgress his law, as well as to use, though forbidden, those things that satisfy this unlawful appetite. Paul must have had reference to something of this nature when he wrote to the Philippians (Philippians 3:19), and of the Cretians, who were "slow" of appetite. They would not become regenerated readily. Their appetites for forbidden things claimed too much of their attention. (Titus 2:12.) With some in the world the appetite and the mind walk closely associated (Job 15:2, 35), and such associates when perverted seek excuses for the use of the forbidden.

The artificial, rather the unlawful appetite is formed and fed at the expense of cleanliness, health, and pocket. "All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature and use of man, every herb in the season thereof." Wholesome herbs, mind you, not those unwholesome, as tobacco, tea, and coffee. And in the season thereof. But these unwholesome herbs, some insist on using in all seasons. Why? Because the unlawful, abnormal and artificial appetite craves them. Can we say of the Word of Wisdom as David of old said of God's word? "I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word."—Psalms 119:101. Or, as Micah says, "do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly"?—Micah 2:7. "Thy word is very pure: therefore thy servant loveth it."

Strong drinks as here referred to are those containing alcohol, are narcotics, are poisonous, and hot drinks include tea and coffee. All are an injury to the digestion. They render the blood impure. Coffee as a poison is used to counteract other poisons.

All weaken the organs adjacent to the heart, also the heart itself.

If any are inclined to question that tea and coffee are meant, let me ask, Does God countermand the use of that which man is not using or will not use? Why?

We need not enter on a play of terms here. Hot drinks include tea and coffee. Heated, mixed intoxicants are not excluded by us. God has revealed himself to the Saints "after the manner of their language, that they may come to understanding."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:5. Hot drinks like strong drinks are made of that which evil designers will adulterate or vitiate.

Strong drinks, tobacco, tea, and coffee are all adulterated. But if they were not, why are we told they are "not for man," neither "good for man?" These are all debasing in their nature. Their use lowers the standard of human health and spirituality. God's reason for prohibiting their use is to enable us to escape the danger that their use will surely bring. If this be not true there is no real purpose in the Lord giving the Word of Wisdom. It is wise to avoid the use of the injurious, the poisonous, that which operates against our spirituality, dulls the mind, paralyzes the being, is unclean, and leads to insanity in many cases if persisted in. That which hinders the attainment of good health, clear mind, power, and spirituality, the use of that not ordained for man.

It is declared to be God's "order and will" for the Saints to observe the teachings of the Word of Wisdom. It is his pleasure that they observe it. Are we willing to carry out the divine pleasure by strictly observing the "order and will" of God here?

But here you come again, saying, This word of wisdom is not given by "commandment or constraint." God does not constrain you by commandment to eat bread or meat, or to drink water, and yet you are constrained as though it were a command to do so or die. It does not make a thing right or wrong for God to prohibit or command it, but he commands or prohibits a thing because it is inherently right or wrong. If the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," had never been given, yet it would be just as wrong for me to secretly steal that one-hundred-dollar horse of yours. You instinctively feel that this is true.

If we insist on going contrary to what is revealed in the Word of Wisdom, are we not violating God's revealed will? And is not that sin? You must answer yes or no. If "yes," why persist? If "no," then why did God give the revelation, wisdom, "order and will?" Just for us to toy with and treat lightly or indifferently? There are promised rewards to be bestowed on those who in righteousness observe this word of wisdom; health of body, strength, wisdom, and treasures of knowledge, which those who fail to observe it will most surely fail to receive. If it is not designed to warn the Saints of dangers that lurk by the way, by using those things forbidden, of what use is the warning? Are the weak Saints expected to observe "the word" for their good and to observe God's will, while the healthy and spiritually strong are to disregard it? Is that it? Is not the divine pleasure on both sides of this question? Is that the consistent position? What are we to judge by in this case, theory or action?

Experience, observation, and science have to date given us many of the reasons why alcohol, tobacco, coffee, and tea are not ordained for or adapted to man's use. Who ever knew the dyspeptic to recover from his ailment while using all or any one of these poisons? Who ever knew of the inebriate to overcome his inebriety while using them? As long as they are used their appetite remains. Their use only irritates the sore their use has created. They intoxicate and weaken the flesh, forming cells in the human body, and thus destroy the corpuscles of the blood, and result in weakness of the body, dull the brain and slow up the ability to think readily. I am not now referring to the first, temporary effect, stimulation, but to their permanent effects. They burn the oxygen so necessary to the sustaining of the strength and health of the body and brain. If their temporary effects are temporarily lost to those who use them, how restless they are, how unfit they are to continue their avocations until they are braced up again by a new supply. Their use, by rushing the blood through the blood vessels in too large currents, enlarge those vessels to an abnormal degree, and thus derange the system, rendering it more liable to disease. The blood vessels of the brain and eyes, are enlarged to such an extent, and so remain that the subject thinks things look like, and are snakes, and the effect is so abnormal that he imagines they are in his boots, or there are other animals threatening his life. The poisons and narcotics now under consideration are foods to the body and mind in no sense of the word. Their use causes us to expend more rapidly the strength they leave remaining with us. They therefore deceive us, making us claim for ourselves that which we really are not.

Doctor Parker, a learned English physician states that his experiment shows that one pint of gin used per day will quicken the pulsations to one fourth more daily than it is normally. Quickened action of the heart weakens it, and hurries life away. Their use inflames the lungs and stomach, interferes with digestion, and produces ulceration of the stomach. You never knew a person to "taper off" permanently, especially the use of alcoholic drinks, or tobacco. It has to be done by a "stop short never to go again." "Strong alcohol has a deadly effect upon all living things," says one writer of ability, and gives instances where it killed dogs, pigs, and fish almost immediately after they were forced to drink it.

Wine, beer, and cider have alcohol in them, and their use calls for something stronger, invariably, and leads to as fatal results. A wound enlarged only affects a larger area, and so long as the cause remains never heals. And it is just so as to the effects of using narcotic poisons.

Three drops of nicotine, pure, extracted from tobacco, will kill a man if swallowed by him.

Doctor Kellogg says in his Child's Physiology, "Place a piece of tender beefsteak in a saucer and cover it with alcohol. Put it away over night. In the morning the beefsteak will be found to be shrunken, dried, and almost as tough as a piece of leather. This shows the effect of alcohol on the tissues which are essentially like those of lower animals. Break an egg into half a glass of alcohol, stir the egg and alcohol together for a few minutes. Soon you will see that the egg begins to harden and look just as though it had been boiled."

When it is noted that alcohol and tobacco in some form are almost universally used, and their increased use among women also, and see their effects, need we wonder that cancer and other new diseases are increasing to such an alarming extent? Who can tell to what an extent their use, with that of morphine, has to do with the increase of crime?

That which creates and sustains abnormal and unlawful appetites, whether physical or mental, deadens and hinders spiritual development. They pander to the propensities of the flesh. They lead away from God and holiness. "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh. . . . For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye can not do the things that ye would."—Galatians 5: 13, 17.

"For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Romans 8: 13.

"Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."—1 Peter 2: 11.

It is denied by no intelligent person that narcotics as used in the world causes a large percentage of its crime. Why, then, should that which results in so much evil be allowed to intrude itself to even the least degree into the church? Tobacco is poisonous, costly, and unclean. Its evils are seen in an increasing ratio, as its use increases. Insanity often comes of the use of these narcotics. The public school teachers' association of the state of Iowa takes note of the evils to boys, in the use of the deadly cigarette, and have recently called public attention of the parentage of the State to the evil. Occasionally we learn of the insanity of school boys coming from this evil, and of their being sent to the insane asylum from using cigarettes.

Alcohol and tobacco, when used, produce dullness of mind, nervous irritability, hinder the healthy growth of children and disturbs the family in a great many instances. And who is able to say to what extent they influence the cause of divorce? Inebriety in the world is frequently the cause of divorce, and who can calculate the extent to which it is so in the church? Once admit the causes and their effects will inevitably follow. The annual strong drink bill of most civilized nations equals their bread bill. Add their tobacco, and the amount equals their bread and clothing bill. Just think of a man living in a civilized country and paying as much annually for whisky and tobacco as his board and clothing bill amounts to! The cigar and cigarette bill is increasing at an enormous rate in the United States, and the end seems not yet.

Alcohol, nicotine the extract of tobacco, caffeine from coffee, and tannin from tea are all more or less poisonous. The two latter are used to tan leather. As they color and render leather tough, so they harden the albumin of food and render it harder to be digested. Cigarettes are largely flavored with opium. Nicotine extracted from tobacco remnants and stalks by boiling, is poured over tobacco and other leaves with which it is adulterated in the manufactory, and absorbed into the human system when used.

No marvel that boys, some girls, and young men become reckless at times by the use of cigarettes and those other poisons and engage in doing that which they would otherwise be ashamed of. By their use the moral instincts are gradually deadened, and the propensities of the animal nature become dominant until sin reigns.

All have injurious effects upon the body as well as the mind, yet parents will use these poisons before their children, setting them the example so detrimental to good. Their evil effects are transmitted to their offspring, whose natures are vitiated and perverted, then wonder why they are nervous, so irritable, and are astonished at their youthful waywardness. Their opportunities for this inheritance complained of are twofold—inherited from the parents, and their own use of that which causes it.

Is it any wonder that in the increasing degeneracy of this age the Lord would warn his people against these common causes of that degeneracy? Saints can no more use these poisons and escape their destructive effects than they can elude their shadows when walking in the gleaming sunlight.

When these narcotics are used they act in increasing degrees. The stages are three, as observation will reveal. First, they rush too much blood to the head, and set the tissue forming cells into too rapid operation. This is the stimulating stage. Then, the cells act in an uncertain manner causing unbecoming conduct on the part of the individual. Thirdly, the cells become benumbed, act slowly or may entirely cease to act. "This is the stage of paralysis," says science. Should all these stages be often repeated, not only is the body injured, but the will is weakened, the judgment also becomes deranged. The senses being blunted, these effects are unavoidable. The narcotics above named all act similarly, when used separately, though not to the same extent. This being true of these things when used in their pure state, how incalculably worse must they be when adulterated? They are not foods. They tear down but do not build up the body or mind. There is no place assigned in God's menu for man, for alcohol, tobacco, tea, or coffee. The Word of Wisdom does not reveal it. The revelation denies them a place there. It says: "I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly."

These things must have been productions of the curse, after the earth was cursed. At best their use brings only a curse to man now when used by him. If these evils to man, or any of them are adapted to the use of the lower animals, then their use by man will only lower the scale of his being, and this will reverse the operations of evolution. God's purpose in the creation of man is his elevation to a higher sphere. A sphere wherein he may glorify him. And he has always tried to impress man with the great truth that it is for man's good that he be elevated to a moral and spiritual sphere of glory and honor. To continue the practice of that which God says is not for man's good, is to dishonor him, and ask him to honor and elevate man, while continuing to go contrary to his will will degrade himself. But God has plainly informed us thus: "For God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."—Doctrine and Covenants 2:1. According to this statement, that which God says to-day "is not good for man," never was designed at the creation for man, nor will it ever be.

Are there Saints who use any or all of those things said "not to be good for man," who are unable to have the Church History now published? It is all important that it should be in our homes for the information of both ourselves and our children, that we be informed in regard to the rise and progress of the church of God in these last days. Do any of them use these evils while claiming to be unable to take the church organ, the SAINTS' HERALD, or the Gospel Standard, published at Wallsend, Australia, or Zion's Ensign, or the Glad Tidings, or Autumn Leaves? These all publish the everlasting gospel, as restored through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith, also give the history of the advancement of the church and accounts of the labors of the ministry in the different parts of the world visited by them, and of the dealings of God with his people and of his great and manifold blessings bestowed on them. Are you interested in the great work of the redemption of Zion, now at hand? Are you expecting to share in the blessings to be bestowed on Zion redeemed? If so, you will lay aside all sin, together with all that God has said is "not good for man," "neither meet in his sight," if using them, and seek by a faithful observance of all the commandments, and, seeking all the information possible through the means above named, and the faithful study of the divine records of the church, to be prepared for those blessings. Surely he "that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Brother, sister, old, middle-aged, or youthful, on which side of this question do you stand? Jesus speaks in Doctrine and Covenants, section eighty-six. In another place he says, "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Is your gospel example and light bedimmed in the presence of your family, your neighbors, the church, and the world, by use of those poisonous, filthy, expensive, and forbidden things? Wherein are you justified in thus doing? Can you with a clear conscience justify yourself in walking contrary to this word of wisdom, warning, and divine revelating? This word designed for "the temporal salvation" of God's people in the last days? It took one hundred and twenty years of warning, and hard labor, and the building of the ark in Noah's day to effect "the temporal salvation" of the obedient in the days of the flood. The faithful and diligent watching and heed to the Savior's teaching and warning to secure "the temporal salvation" of the saints when Jerusalem was destroyed A. D. 70. (Luke 21:19-22.) Can the Saints of these days violate the Word of Wisdom, and at the same time claim of God the promise accompanying it to the obedient, of "temporal salvation"—the mercy of the destroying angel that passes over?

To live in violation of it brings evil to our minds and bodies in many ways as we have seen, both physically, mentally, and spiritually. But of those who faithfully follow its teachings, the word of God is thus pledged. "And all Saints [not merely the weak ones.—C. S.] who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health to their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and shall not slay them. Amen." C. SCOTT.

We'll Understand.

Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, sometime, we'll understand.

We'll catch the broken thread again,
And finish what we here began;
Heav'n will mysteries explain,
And then, ah, then, we'll understand.

We'll know why clouds instead of sun,
Were over many a cherished plan;
Why song has ceased when scarce begun;
'Tis there, sometime, we'll understand.

Why what we long for most of all,
Eludes so oft, our eager hand;
Why hopes are crushed and castles fall,
Up there, sometime, we'll understand.

God knows the way, he holds the key,
He guides us with unerring hand,
Sometime with tearless eyes we'll see;
Yes, there, up there, we'll understand.

Then trust in God through all thy days:
Fear not, for he doth hold thy hand;
Though dark thy way, still sing and praise;
Sometime, sometime, we'll understand.—Sel.

Kindness in Unanswered Prayers.

There are some of our prayers which God loves us too well to answer. If he did what we plead with him, sometimes agonizingly, to do, he would withdraw from us great blessings. But he would rather resist our pleading and disappoint us than impoverish our life by letting us have what we want.

In one of Saint Peter's epistles is a little phrase of three words which casts a world of light on many things in life which seem hard. The writer is speaking of trials and says: "Now for a little while, if need be, ye have been put to grief." "If need be" is the illuminating clause in this sentence. It shines like a star with heavenly light upon the darkness of pain and sorrow. There is a divine reason for the trouble which we long to get rid of. There is a blessing in the thing which is so hard to bear. To take it away would be to take a good, a divine gift out of our life.

A marginal reading of an oft-quoted promise tells us the secret that our "burden" is the gift of God to us. This thought changes the meaning of the experience in our life which is hard for us to endure. A burden is something heavy, something hard to carry. It weighs us down, crushes us, so that we feel as if we must faint beneath it. It is natural for us to want to get rid of it. We say we could go on much more easily, with much more celerity, if only we could lay off our heavy load. So we pray God to take it away from us.

But just then our eye catches sight of the alternative reading, "gift"—our burden is God's gift to us. This unlovely, uncomfortable, heavy, crushing thing, under which we are bowing in weakness—it is a gift from God to us. A gift from God! Then it must be good; there must be something gracious and loving in it. God would not give us anything merely to make us suffer. He does not take pleasure in making our life hard for us. This unwelcome thing, this that causes us so much pain, enfolds in its unattractiveness a secret of blessing. It is something we could not afford to have taken away. If only we could see the hidden treasure of good there is in it we would no longer cry to God to have it removed.

The promise, therefore, about our burdens is not that when we bring them to God we will lift them away. Very graciously does God tell us to cast them upon him. This is one of the privileges of trust—we may take everything to God. But we are not told that we will be relieved of the heavy load we take to him, or that it will be lightened by even so much as a feather's weight. Here is where many good people lose their faith. They thought that when they brought their troubles to God he would take them away. Now they cry to him in their distress, from the midst of their difficulties, as they wait under the shadow of imminent sorrow, but nothing is changed, the bitterness does not become less bitter, the load gets no lighter, the torturing trouble is not removed. "God does not hear my prayer," the trembling heart says.

When we remember Peter's "if need be," and the psalmist's "Thy burden is a gift from God," a new light falls upon the mystery. There is a meaning for this suffering, this sorrow, this hard struggle, this time of pinching want—it must stay until its work is done. This gift of God which seems so empty of good, so full of evil, wraps up in its rough crust a diamond of divine love and grace. A man picked up a large, round pebble. It seemed only a coarse-grained stone. But his trained eye saw something shining beneath the roughness and coarseness. He held in his hand a treasure which proved to be worth thousands of dollars. The experiences in our life which we look upon as most undesirable, which are so hard to endure, which we cry to God to have taken away—they have hidden in their unloveliness rich gifts of God.

It would be unkind in our Father, therefore, to take away these things with which we plead with him to remove. His kindness is shown rather in refusing our prayers. We cast the burden upon him, as he bids us do, but it is still on our own shoulder—he does not carry it for us. Yet the prayer is answered, answered, too, in a far better way than if a heavy weight were lifted off. "He shall sustain thee," is the promise. Instead of bearing the load for us, he gives us strength, so that we can bear it ourselves. Thus we get the blessing of the "need be," and we do not lose the gift of God which came in the burden.

Besides, we are divinely strengthened, and rise to new power as Christians. For it is a great deal better for us if God makes us strong, so that we can carry our own loads, than if he had carried them for us. It was better that Peter and John at the beautiful gate should make the lame man well, so that he needed no more to beg, than if they had given him alms enough to provide for him for a whole year. God is much more eager to make something of us than he is to give us an easy time just for a few days.

It will help us better to understand the divine method in answering prayer if we carefully study this phase of the subject. Saint Paul's remarkable prayer for the taking away of his "thorn" illustrates this teaching. This thorn was something which the apostle thought was an insuperable hindrance to him in his life and work. It caused him great distress. If only he were free from this torturing trouble, how much stronger he would be, how much more he could do! So he took it to the Lord in prayer. He prayed very earnestly—three times he made his supplication. To his surprise, however, the thorn was not removed. He must still keep it.

But a blessed, heavenly light was poured upon his trouble, and it appeared in new meaning. Instead of merely a rough, sharp thorn, it was a shining gift of God. Instead of a hindrance to his usefulness, it became a new secret of power and blessing. The suffering would keep him lowly, save him from spiritual pride, and anything that does that for a successful and honored servant of Christ is an incalculable blessing. Besides, it drew down with it into the apostle's life more of Christ, a greater measure of the strength of Christ. So Saint Paul learned that his seemingly intolerable burden was indeed a gracious gift from God. If his prayer had been answered he would have been a great loser, his life would have been impoverished. It was not answered, and he found in his heart new blessing, with which he would not have parted for the world's best treasure.

So we get our lesson. Things are not what they seem. We allow sense to interpret for us what is good and what is not good. If we remembered always that the things which are seen are only temporal, while the things which are unseen are eternal, we should see good in what now seems only evil. After all, it is safest to let the will of God rule in our life, bringing our own will always into quiet submission. God knows what is best for us, and we need not be afraid to trust him with the final decision regarding every prayer we make.

"Yesterday, when I said, 'Thy will be done,'

I knew not what that will of thine would be,
What clouds would gather black across my sun,
What storm and desolation waited me;
I knew thy love would give me what was best,
And I am glad I could not know the rest.

"Thy will be done,' I say, and to the scroll

Of unread years consenting set my name;

Day after day their pages will unroll

In shining words that prove thy love the same,

Until my years are gathered into one

Eternal, sanctified, 'Thy will be done.'"

Dear Sisters: As soon as the HERALD arrives I always look it over for the poetry. I hope in future to see more in it. I do so enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD and I like to know whose letters I am reading. With the blessings of God to help me in my efforts, I hope to do some good, and help by writing some for publication.

There is no branch near enough for me to attend and I have not heard a sermon by a Latter Day Saint since I came from Lamoni. Have had the pleasure of reading two that were published in the HERALD since I commenced taking it and hope to be prospered so that I can take more of the church papers ere the coming year closes.

I wish to acknowledge for the benefit of those that are suffering, or do suffer with sick headache, that I was administered to nearly a year ago and I have not been troubled with it since.

Let us all be faithful and do our best and God will bless us.

Your sister in Christ,

M. HISCOCK.

Editors Herald: Elder Alvin Knisley and I are laboring in a small post-office hamlet named Leadburg. A Methodist church is there, but we began our meetings at an opportune time for us, as they are unable to sustain a minister. Consequently the church has been shut up. Our meetings in the schoolhouse are well attended, and we are being blessed with good attention and order; with good liberty as well. We also distribute church literature among them, which is read and returned for exchange. We have great hopes of seeing some fruits of our labors in the near future. Pray for us.

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, January 15.

Editors Herald: Permit me to say a few words concerning Sandhedens Banner through the HERALD. Your readers are aware that we have started that paper again. We have done so because we thought it necessary, and considered it one of the best means that could be employed by us few missionaries now struggling to establish our work in Scandinavia. A few have accepted the work and are rejoicing in it, others are investigating, and the work of sowing the seed and enlightening the people is being pushed constantly. I think we are advancing about as rapidly as could be expected, taking all things into consideration. But for some time to come our financial aid must come from America. If all members and friends of the church who can read the Danish-Norwegian language will subscribe for the Banner, we shall have no trouble in paying our way. And this, it seems to me, is asking a very small favor. Certainly, the Banner is worth one dollar per year to all who are interested in seeing the work prosper in this field. I am aware that most of you are able to read English and do not need the Banner; but this is not and should not be a question of what you need, but rather a question of what you can do for the Lord's work. Remember that it is more blessed to give than to receive. I doubt that any of us truly and fully appreciate the opportunities now afforded us of "laying up treasures in heaven."

For twenty years I have been called upon to leave all for the Master and his work, and labor mainly on the outposts and among strangers in order to establish and build up the work. So have many of my brethren, for a longer or shorter time. This we do, not for our own salvation or special needs, but for the work's sake and the salvation of others. And yet—I think I can speak for all—we do not ask or want any honor or reward for so doing that we are not willing to share with the least of God's children who labor in any capacity for the advancement of the work as best they can.

The Banner appears twice a month. Some have thought that one dollar a year was too much, others that seventy-five cents was rather cheap. Let us figure a little. Volume five will run until January, 1904, and contains twenty-eight numbers. To send these twenty-eight numbers to any address in America separately would cost krone 1.40, or about thirty-eight cents. At seventy-five cents, we would then have thirty-seven cents left for the paper. Should the subscription list increase to the extent that we could furnish the Banner for that, or enlarge the paper soon, it would please us very much. Who will labor to that end? We should have the needed assistance at once, and I hope that all will send in their subscription at once to Bro. Peter Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway, or notify him that you will do so as soon as practicable. I can hardly believe that any of the Saints would refuse us this much-needed support just because it involves the outlay of an extra quarter. In this country the Banner costs krone 1.50, or about forty-one cents.

The first numbers of the Banner contain a brief account of the labors of Bro. Enge in this country, whom we may call our pioneer missionary to Norway; also an excellent article by Bro.

Muceus on "Personal responsibility." We have also commenced a series of articles entitled "Important and interesting events in the History of the Church," which will be continued for quite a long time. It will contain accounts of the most important events in the history of the latter-day work, extracts from the revelations relative to doctrine, organization, and church government, also a refutation of the false stories circulated about the work, the Book of Mormon, etc. The Banner can yet be obtained from the first by writing to Bro. Muceus. Shall we appeal in vain for help, or will you come to our assistance at once and help us continue our efforts in this important field? Remember that it is our time to work only while it is called "to-day," and that, ye "shall be blessed," even as ye "bless others of the household of faith."

PETER ANDERSEN.

SYRACUSE, Ohio, January 26.

Editors Herald: In looking over the issue of SAINTS' HERALD for December 24, 1902, page 1261, I noticed a letter by Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, dated December 19, replying to the would-be critics and enemies of Joseph Smith objecting to the names of "Sam," and "Mormon," as found in the Book of Mormon, etc., etc. Bro. Forscutt stated that he had a copy of the Ulster County Gazette of January 4, 1800, wherein is found the name "Mormon." I also have had a copy of the same paper for a long time. I do not remember how I came in possession of it; but thinking it may be of some use to the HERALD Office, I will send it with this letter. On page two and second column, you will find the name "Mormons," as Bro. Forscutt stated in his letter. Now I ask, What have the enemies of Joseph Smith to say to this? Joseph Smith was born December 23, 1805, five years after this paper was printed. Hence we ask, Was the name "Mormon," as his enemies say, originated by Joseph Smith?

Yours for facts,

THOMAS MATTHEWS.

SYDNEY, New South Wales, December 29.

Editors Herald: We have just concluded the New South Wales conference, so far as the business is concerned, and it was a profitable meeting. In fact, taken all in all, I never attended a better district conference. Some came more than three hundred miles to be present. What would some of the Saints who feel that they can not go forty or fifty miles to a conference do under like conditions? Good reports were had from both the bishop and the Board of Publication, each showing a balance in hand, all of which is encouraging under the conditions prevailing from the drought. Am glad to say that the most copious and general rains had for years have recently fallen, and the country is rejoicing as a result.

Bro. Butterworth and I arrived from Victoria in time for this conference, the conference of that district having been convened one week earlier to give us opportunity to attend there. Reports at both conferences show substantial gains in baptisms. In fact the prospects are very bright for an ingathering. The brethren in New Zealand report having baptized three, so that the work has started there. The crying need is "more laborers." If we had at least twenty young and active men here we could easily place them. The Australians are very devoted in their worship and friendship and a very self-sacrificing people. They do not believe in seeing the minister unsupplied. Thirty-eight have been baptized already by the latest American elders. Two reporters were present at the New South Wales conference, unsolicited, and the papers contain a fair report this morning. We have added three locals to our missionary list, and yet we are lacking.

Bro. Butterworth has received passage money from the Bishop and will likely sail for San Francisco via Sierra three weeks from to-day. I hope some of the Frisco Saints will be sure to meet the boat on arrival. Through missionary diligence he has injured his health and now needs care. This I know he will receive at the hands of the Saints; but if he can be met and the burden incident to too much of a physical load be taken from him it will be better. He has well earned this much-needed visit home and the privilege of meeting with his quorum brethren and in General Conference. He should go to Southern California for a rest and to get acclimated before going on to Independence. I am sure that the California Saints will arrange this matter.

Our debate with Mr. Blair resulted in fifteen baptisms in Melbourne, and twenty since Bro. Mackie first debated with him. The prospects are bright for an ingathering in both Sydney and Melbourne. If fifteen to twenty young men could be sent to this mission we would rejoice. Bro. Barmore is following the example of his predecessors in paying homage to Hymen if indications are worth anything. He is doing a splendid missionary work.

Editors Herald: Inclosed find the testimony of Sr. Mary Bozarth, who was healed as referred to by her mother, Sr. Dalton, in HERALD of a few weeks ago. Some are interested in hearing her testimony, and having it, so I send it for publication, she stating in it that I could do with it what I might think best.

I am now on my way to Chelsea.

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

St. JOHN, Kansas, January 18, 1903.

J. F. MINTUN.

Dear Brother in Christ: I received a card from you asking me to give affidavit to my healing at the time D. H. Bays administered to me. There were two others with him, Brn. T. J. Franklin, and A. J. Blodgett. The doctors, and every one I guess, had given me up, thinking there was no cure for me. I had never seen any healing in the church. I did not want to be administered to like lots of other young people, and old too. If some see any one do something wrong they lay it on the church; that was about the way I was. I will tell you I never had a testimony of the work until then. It was at conference I got so bad I knew I could not live long. Mother was up-stairs with me; the rest were still at conference below. She asked me if I did not want them to come and administer to me. I nodded my head, yes. She had them come up. They administered to me. The pain stopped and that awful misery I had in my throat, and I went to sleep. As soon as I awoke, the first thing that came to me was to go down and see if I could talk aloud. I did and I could talk as good as I can now. I came up and went to bed. No sooner did I lie down than two personages, old dirty-looking things, came to me and said, "You aren't healed." I spoke out and said, "Am I not mother?" And they all said, "Yes." Then they prayed for the evil spirit to depart, and it did; and I tell you we all rejoiced together. And Bro. Bays said he was glad that he was there and witnessed such a healing. Bro. Litz spoke in tongues the night before that and said that there were great things going to be done, and one would speak that never had, and as one raised from the dead before the conference closed; and it was all true, every word of it. I never saw any one seem to be any more rejoiced in the blessing of God than he (Bays) was. He said he knew it was from God, and not from man. Many times I think about this and wonder if anything ever will come up to make me deny what I have witnessed in this church. I do not think I ever will. I think as Peter did, I bear my testimony to this church, that it is of God. I have many testimonies; not only this one, but many. I am now here alone. There is none of our faith here. I go to hear all. I tell you it is thin stuff for me. There is a church of the Brighamites here. We just have it every time we get together.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that my family and I may live faithfully to the covenant we have taken. I tell my children to get a testimony for themselves. Mine will not do for them nor any one else. That is what is the matter with too many,—they depend on the testimony of others. I pray that we all may keep in the right way, and live and let our light shine that others may follow thereby. This is my testimony.

I pray the Lord will bless all of his children in the one faith.

MARY E. BOZARTH.

P. S.—Do what you like with this. It is every word the truth. I bore my testimony to it then, and I bear my testimony to it now, and Bro. Bays bore his testimony to the healing that day with the rest. It was wonderful!

RUSHVILLE, Illinois, January 26.

Dear Herald: While down in the vicinity of New Canton from the 13th of November until the 23d of December, we had much rain and much to contend with, some sleet, and in fact but very little good weather while there. We did what we could, preaching at the Prairie Schoolhouse, near New Canton, and all the schoolhouses in the river landing community, called the Cincinnati landing. We found some thirty-one or two members of the church in that vicinity and of course they were like sheep without a shepherd; some gone wild for want of care and some one to feed them with spiritual food; but about all that we had opportunity to visit and converse with manifested a spirit to try to commence anew in the work. Our advice and teaching while there encouraged them very much, and there were several very much interested in our work who will, we think, receive it and obey our next visit there. My colaborer, Bro. R. T. Walters, lectured from his chart some two or three nights, and all seemed very much pleased with his efforts along the line of the apostasy and restoration.

While down there I was pleased very much to have the opportunity to baptize the two sons of Bro. and Sr. George Johnson. We were called in to administer to a number of sick and afflicted, among them was Bro. Bennie Smith, who had been sorely afflicted for nearly three years with disordered liver, so severely at times that his life was endangered. Much of the time he was unable to leave the house. Just after I arrived in the neighborhood, I was told of his condition, and Bro. Walters and myself were called to administer to him. He had resorted to medicine previously, but without avail. But our God came to his aid and healed him. In less than three days, pain, swelling, and soreness had all gone, and he did not have to go for any more doctor's aid or help, and since about the 20th of November has been able to do a good day's work when the weather would admit of it. I helped him some in the corn husking after this healing, and he stated it was the only time for about three years that he felt like he could do a day's work.

From this point we went to Taylorville and enjoyed the time over the holidays with the Saints and friends there, holding a few meetings, and on the 3d and 4th attended the conference of this district, which was enjoyed by all present.

The following week Bro. Walters went to Clinton, thence to Bellair to assist Bro. F. M. Slover of the Southern Illinois District, in a series of meetings. I go to Beardstown for a few days, then on to this place, called Sodom Schoolhouse, some six or seven miles west of Rushville, in Schuyler County, where I commenced services on last Saturday night, the 17th, with increased interest. Many that never have heard the gospel before are in attendance.

On the night of the 24th I received word that we could not have the use of the house any longer; so at the close of the service I announced time and place of baptism, which took place at two o'clock on yesterday, Sunday. This man was one of the best citizens here. There are several others believing and two expressed themselves on yesterday that in all probability I would baptize them before I leave. I will preach at Bro. Curry's private residence until other arrangements are made.

So I feel well in the work; may it progress till it accomplishes what our Father has designed it should.

Still working for the right,

T. J. BELL.

LAKEVIEW, Oregon, January 14.

Editors Herald: My husband and I joined the Reorganized Church over thirty years ago in Nevada, being baptized by George Smith, confirmed by him and Stephen Wood. Our eldest three children were baptized in Nevada. We then moved to Iowa; belonged to the Manti Branch. Did not stay long, but went back to Nevada. It seems we have been wandering ever since like lost sheep.

I take the HERALD; it does my soul good to read it. In my isolated condition I do not see how I could get along without it. It is a great comfort to me.

Dear brothers and sisters, my health is poor and I want you to pray for me that I may be healed. Think of one who has not heard the gospel preached for over thirty years, and pray for me. I rejoice in this latter-day work and would to God I could do something for it; I hope and pray that I may yet see the day that I can. I have helped to raise a large family and the most of them never heard the gospel preached. I would like to see them all obey it and go to work for the Lord. That is my prayer, day and night. I do not say that I have lived as I should all these many isolated years; I have had many troubles and trials, but my desire is to live the life of the righteous.

Prejudice runs high here, but, praise the Lord, the more I hear said against this work, the stronger my faith is. I got some tracts some time ago and was distributing them in the Sabbath-school, when the Christian minister said to me, "You are working for Satan."

I replied: "You can not make me think so."

He replied: "If you are working for Brigham Young, you are."

"Thank you, I am not working for Brigham Young," was my reply.

"Then Jo Smith," he said.

"You prove it," was my answer.

"Come to church next Sunday and I will prove it," was his reply.

That week he advertised in the paper that his sermon on the next Sabbath would be, "Mormonism, the work of the Devil." Quite a few came to hear him. I listened to him and wondered how a man could preach as he did. How I wished an elder could have been here to defend the cause of the Lord.

Your sister,

S. C. YANCEY.

MIAMI, Indian Territory, January 25.

Editors Herald: We are moving to Tolsa, Indian Territory, and desire to know if any Saints live there. We shall be so lonely without Saints. Any elders will confer a favor if they will please look us up. They will always find a welcome at our home. This is a standing invitation to all the traveling ministry.

BRO. AND SR. W. H. SHERWIN.

SAC CITY, Iowa, January 22.

Editors Herald: I do not know how so many of the Saints get along without the church papers. I take both, and could not get along without them, as they are about all the preaching we hear. We live so far from any branch we can not go very often.

Bro. Kephart was here nearly a week and held meetings in our house. We invited some of our friends and neighbors in; but it seems that people do not want to hear the truth. Bro. Kephart gave us lots of good advice. Come again, brother, Sac City is a very difficult place in which to labor, as very few come out. But I think there were some truths made plain and some friends made to the cause.

I hope Bro. Kephart may live to open many new places and spread the truth.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may live so as to bring no reproach on the church, for I know it as all right. If I live all right all will be well.

Your sister,

A. C. LANE.

COLONY, Oklahoma Territory, January 27.

Editors Herald: We are having good meetings at the above place. Attendance increased from start. A number to appearances interested. One Baptist minister out last night. He took the stand after I finished on the subject of the Book of Mormon and gave a tirade of slanderous objections. Glad to say I proved them illegal and proved his assertions groundless. Doctor W. H. Farmer during his talk arose under the Spirit of God and gave a strong testimony for this grand latter-day work, which seemed to balk him in his speech. Expect more to follow to-night.

S. S. SMITH.

WAYNE, West Virginia, January 29.

Editors Herald: Believing that the Saints will be interested in knowing the result of the trial of the mobocrats that stoned Bro. Odell and myself on January 24, 1902, I write this. The trial was set for yesterday, and when the mobocrats saw we had a case against them they begged for mercy by asking us to let them confess to an assault and battery to which we agreed. We had not employed a lawyer, and were out nothing, and we thought it best for the Saints where the mobbing occurred to show them all the mercy we could. It will cost them about seventy-five dollars each, so the lawyers say, so it will teach them a lesson.

Bro. John A. Lewis is down here at Bro. J. W. Trout's with lung fever, but is improving rapidly. He will be able to go home in a few days. Bro. Odell will care for him and take him home if necessary.

There has been but little missionary work done in West Virginia this winter, owing to bad weather and sickness.

G. H. GOBBY.

MINGO, Iowa, January 23.

Editors Herald: The debate between Bro. J. F. Mintun and D. H. Bays closed last Monday evening at Collins. I believe it has done much good. I have talked to a number of outsiders. I find a good impression left on the part of truth as we believe it. A member of the Methodist church told me to-day that Bro. Mintun had made many friends around Clyde.

I know of no new argument presented by Mr. Bays. It seemed to me a repetition of the argument made in his "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism." Many of his evidences against the Book of Mormon were old stale arguments which I expect Elder Bays has exploded many times, when in the Reorganization.

I do not believe the gospel has suffered any loss in the estimation of the people through the attack Mr. Bays has made on it. The Saints all seem strengthened in the faith, more alive to the work, and I hope will continue to show more interest. We believe more than ever that no instrument formed against this work will prosper.

We are in hopes to go forward in the fear of the Lord and labor as a branch to add to our faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity that we may be able to "come up higher" and enjoy those spiritual blessings reserved for those who love the Lord and keep his commandments.

We have lately enjoyed much good preaching in the branch, Clear Creek, by the missionaries, Elders F. A. Smith, J. F. Mintun, M. M. Turpen, and J. W. Peterson. Bro. Mintun is now preaching in the schoolhouse evenings. Last Sunday Bro. J. W. Peterson preached in the morning and gave us a delightful lecture on his experiences and observations while in the South Sea Islands.

We are in hopes in the near future to make arrangements for a series of meetings to be held by Bro. Mintun at or near Clyde, as the people seem anxious for him to do so. We are cheerful in the conflict and hopeful for the future.

I think the Reorganization has nothing to fear from the "Anti-Mormon Missionary Society" as long as they will meet us fairly, if Elder D. H. Bays is a fair example or representative.

Yours in the hope of Zion,
W. C. EARHART.

APPLEDORE, Ontario, January 27.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I have observed a letter in the HERALD from this part of God's vineyard. I thought I would keep quiet and let those more talented take the lead; but it seems almost impossible to keep still when one's spiritual life yearns for progression. The cry is, "Onward, onward!" and if we stop we lose ground then others occupy that which should have been ours, for as we work so our Master will reward us.

How often we have heard a brother or a sister say, I have felt discouraged, at times I have felt like giving up, and I would if only God and myself knew about it; but then there are others as weak as I am, there are those whom I have conversed with, to despise the evil and choose the good; they will not be benefited if I faint by the way; so turning our thoughts upwards, praying to Almighty God for strength, let us renew our efforts and press on.

Press on to the mark of eternal perfection,
Determined to reap the celestial reward,
That we may come forth in the first resurrection
And feast at the supper with Jesus, the Lord.

Bro. Moroni Traxler occupied the stand here last Sabbath, assisted by Bro. Walter Badder, while Bro. George Green went to comfort and preach to the Saints at Cooperville. Bro. James Baggerly is holding forth at Wallaceburg. Kind regards to my brothers and sisters in the gospel.

Your sister,
MARY M. GREEN.

ADRIAN, Illinois, January 30.

Dear Herald: At time of last communication, we were trying to tell the gospel story at Keokuk. The attendance was so small on account of a cold wave and the prolonged siege of sickness and death, that it seemed improbable that anything would be accomplished to advance the cause among the people. The branch there is weak in numbers, and only a few of them seem to be concerned as to the life and success of the cause. The only hope for the continuation of our work in that city, from my viewpoint, will be the locating of a minister at the general church expense. By so doing, the few faithful would be renewed in courage, some of the careless might be recovered and revived, and some of the world brought to the knowledge of the truth. No fault is here lodged with the work or workers of the past, as it would appear that they have labored under disadvantage, and by times most discouraging hindrances. Regular and persistent efforts are what count for good, and the increase of our gospel work.

Went to Farmington to assist Bro. McKiernan with a series of meetings in his home branch. We were having a fair attendance, with a manifest interest, when of a sudden we were foiled in our efforts by a calamity that befell the town on the 19th ultimo, wherein George J. Stillwell, deputy game and fish warden for that part of the State, resisted arrest and shot Robert Coulter, the city marshal, and Alfred A. Musgrave, the justice of the peace. These men both died of their wounds the following Sunday. Stillwell was killed by a posse. Excitement ran high, and the tragedy was, seemingly, the only topic of thought or conversation. It was therefore thought best to close and wait for a more opportune time. As I see the work there, it appears that it would be a wise move to locate Bro. McKiernan as the pastor there so as to have regular Sunday services.

Next I spent almost a week at Keokuk on account of the sickness, death, and funeral of Sr. Ferris.

The most lonesome Christmas of my life, as I walked those cold, thronged streets alone, stranger to all, my mind saw pictures upon the walls of memory of other and more happy days, when with the companionship of loved ones, and means to supply the good cheer. But all is gone and is now only a part of the dead past. We pine not without hope, and seek comfort in the promises of a loving Father, so that when our feet shall stand upon the golden strand, our soul shall bask in well-earned peace, our hands shall pluck from the never failing tree of life the savory fruit, and our association shall be all that our longing, loving hearts shall desire.

On the 28th ultimo, we occupied at Burlington, and was greeted with cheer and a fair attendance, and withal liberty in ministering the work of truth. Here is another place that needs an active, all-the-time-worker, otherwise we may not expect to do more than hold our own. It seems to me that at places where we have organized branches, and houses of worship, the effort should be to make progress in the divine life, and augment our numbers.

I then made a trip to Aledo, Illinois, to visit my son, and rest for a few days. There being a partial family reunion at Bro. John C. Epperly's at Millersburg, was one of those invited. The Saints learning of my presence, found wherewith to use me. Preached three times, conducted sacramental service, and blessed a sweet little babe.

Returning to Burlington, occupied over two Sundays, sealing the effort with the baptism of Lillian N. De Muth, and the organizing of a promising Religio.

Obtained the use of the font in the Christian church, and in so doing discovered that the "Anti-Mormon" faction of that church is actively at work. Personally I prefer peace with all mankind, but never feel to lower the flag of truth, or compromise with opposers. We have no reason to fear, if we are but humble and faithful to God and his cause.

Came here the 20th and preached at the Rock Creek chapel till last Sunday evening. Attendance not large, but quite attentive and orderly. Considerable sickness, religious disinterestedness, cold weather, and bad roads, all combine to make our work a conflict.

This week we have the use of the Christian church in Adrian. A January thaw, muddy roads, and dark nights are against us; nevertheless the attendance is fair, order good, and a manifest interest in our explanation of gospel duty. Time will tell if any of the good seed falls upon good ground.

Have done some little for our publishing departments, collected some tithing, and failed not to call attention to the wants of Graceland College. I wish we could have the patronage of all children of Saints who attend college! What a boom it would give our work! If Zion languishes, her inhabitants are the responsible party.

Have great reason to be thankful to the Saints for their kindness to me. Health has been reasonably fair, and time fully employed for the advancement of our church work. I am hopeful for final results beneficial to some of Adam's widespread offspring.
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

"THE Educational Outlook" is the topic of a paper, in the January-March Forum, by Mr. Ossian H. Lang. It pays special attention to President Eliot's addresses to New England teachers, the federation of Chicago teachers with the trades unions, and the enlargement of the social responsibilities of the common school.

Conference Minutes.

Northwestern Kansas.—District conference met at Baker School-house near Osborne, November 15, 1902. Elder Samuel Twombly chosen to preside; J. C. Vaughn secretary pro tem. Elders Samuel Twombly, T. E. Thompson, L. F. Johnson, J. C. Vaughn, Jay Hoffman, and Priests John A. Teeter, F. S. Ward, E. H. Ebert, H. J. Jemison, reported. Bishop's agent, F. S. Ward, Gaylord, Kansas, reported received $98.95; expenditures $52.59; balance $46.36. District treasurer, L. F. Johnson, of Gaylord, reported: Received 75 cents; paid out 75 cents. Adjourned to meet at Gaylord, March 14 and 15, 1903.

Southern Nebraska.—Conference was held at Nebraska City, on January 11 and 12, 1903, Jacob W. Waldsmith presiding, and Mark H. Forscutt, secretary. On Sunday, the 11th, three preaching services were held, Edmund C. Briggs occupying morning and evening, speaking in his usual interesting and pleasant manner, and Charles H. Porter speaking in the afternoon with convincing power, and quite logically. On Monday, the 12th, business session was held. The usual formalities were gone through, which we omit. A resolution of the last conference was called up, and is here sent for publication, with some others for the benefit of absentees, that all may be advised. Resolved that this conference considers it to be the duty of all officers, especially elders and priests, who live within this district, and, who are not especially engaged in branch work, to seek for opportunities to preach the gospel, to make appointments and to fill them. That all officers in this district are expected to report in writing the work they have done to each district conference. That all reports of branches to our district conferences shall be made out on the blank forms provided by the church for this purpose. Delegates appointed to the next annual convention are hereby instructed to raise the question and seek for an answer to it as to whether district Sunday-school conventions should report to the district conferences with which they are locally identified. The following named ministers reported: High Priests J. W. Waldsmith and Mark H. Forscutt; Seventies C. H. Porter and W. M. Self; Elders J. Thomson, R. O. Self, W. Savage, and J. B. Gouldsmith; Priests R. White, J. L. Spurgin, J. F. Lippincott, S. Broliar, E. Robertson, and R. Meredith. The Hebron Branch did not report. Blue River has 208 members, Nebraska City 189, and Shelton 78; 501 in the district. The Bishop's agent's report shows receipts to have been $354.04, and expenditures, to families of Elders Waldsmith, Porter, and Self $276.00, to agent and expenses $19.84, leaving on hand $58.30. District Superintendent W. M. Self reported the district Sunday-school association as containing 5 schools, having 30 officers, and about 200 scholars. The district convention was held day and evening before conference, and was a very pleasant affair. No other branch having asked for the next conference, it was resolved that when this conference adjourns, it does so to meet at Nebraska City in May next, on such date as the president shall appoint. The following officers were sustained as district officers: J. W. Waldsmith, president and Bishop's agent. Mark H. Forscutt, secretary. Lena J. Meyers, assistant secretary. Charles H. Porter, district historian. All was peaceful from opening to close of conference. Not a jar disturbed the harmony of the session. The attendance from other branches, however, was lamentably small, there being but one delegate outside of the Nebraska City Branch. Adjourned to meet at Nebraska City, in May, at call of president.

Church Secretary's Notice.

Enrollment in Quorums.—The law makes provision for enrollment in quorums of all church officers, including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, in harmony with rules adopted by the General Conference, which provide that all applications shall be sent to the Church Secretary. Blanks, containing instructions, will be forwarded on request to the undersigned.

Until such time as the growth of the church warrants the organization of quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons in missions, stakes or districts, all applicants can not be provided for, under the present system of enrolling without reference to location; but vacancies in existing quorums are constantly occurring, and all not enrolled should send in applications.

The secretary can not enroll any one. Quorum officers obtain applications from him, said applications being subject to action of the quorums.

All applications should be in hand not later than March 31, that reports thereof may be made up for the General Conference.

R. S. SALYARDS,

Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 31, 1903.

Notice to the Members of the High Priests' Quorum.

Greeting: A hall has been secured and arrangements made for our quorum to hold a number of sessions during the convening of next General Conference, at Independence, Missouri, at which we hope there will be as general attendance of the members as practicable. We desire to make these meetings attractive and profitable. Papers will be read on the following topics: Should evangelical ministers of necessity be high priests? How can we maintain our position that both the higher and lower priesthoods are in the church at the same time? How can we best reach the people with the gospel? Can a plaintiff take an appeal; if not, is it as it should be? If the Melchisedec priesthood was taken away in Moses' time, how were there high priests in the Aaronic order? What about the continuous residence of John and the three Nephites on the earth? Order of church services, how best conducted? Duties and responsibilities of the district president? City work; its scope and needs. All these papers are to be followed by discussion.

The following are some of the questions sent in to be answered or discussed in the quorum meetings: How harmonize sections 93: 4 and 102:3, 10? Is there a contradiction between paragraphs 31 and 40 in section 104? Is the law of consecration in section 42: 3-10 in force now? Does section 122: 6 include all intended in the law of consecration? What is the best plan to secure best result among branch officers? What measures should the teacher adopt to fulfill his duties to see that the church meet together often, when members continue to absent themselves from meetings? At what intervals should the priest visit the house of each member? Is it best to use unfermented wine in sacrament? Should the president of the branch visit the members? What is the meaning of last clause of paragraph 10, section 17? Should the deacon be the Bishop's agent's solicitor in the branch? Does the deacon sustain the same relation to the branch that the bishop does to the district or stake? Should teachers be called upon to preach in the branch? What should be done with members who have absented themselves from the branch to which they belong until their whereabouts are unknown, and they are to all practical purposes dead to the church? How should we deal with those holding the priesthood who refuse to discharge the duties of their office? Should the branch and district presiding officers be wholly elected or subject to nomination by superior officers and ratification by the body over which they are to preside? presidents of districts by the First Presidency; presidents of branches by the district president? How should priesthood meetings be conducted? how often held? who should attend? who should preside? The quorum may not be able to fully consider all these questions, but will doubtless be able to throw some light on them. We expect to arrange a program, something in the same form as last year, which the secretary will send to each member, provided he has your address. These together with this published notice should aid the members in coming prepared to answer questions. Those who may not be able to come and feel like answering one or more of these questions, may do so in writing. Only be careful and make your answers short and to the point. F. G. Pitt, president of quorum.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Missouri District; Greeting: With great pleasure I express my appreciation of your kind favors the past year in imparting of the means with which the Lord has blessed you. It is encouraging to know I have been able to meet the expenses of this district without the aid of Bishop E. L. Kelley.

The work of God is both spiritual and temporal, and it can not accomplish the ends and purposes designed, without the observance of both spiritual and temporal laws. Because our heavenly Father foresaw this, he established a system which is termed tithing and offering, and this system or law is binding upon all his subjects. The Apostle Paul says "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor, for we are laborers together with God." While it is true that we are not all preachers, yet we are preaching in an indirect way when we aid, with our temporal means, to roll on the angel's message; hence we are laborers together with God, striving to build up his kingdom, and to prepare the bride for the Bridegroom. Then our rewards shall be according to our own works. To those who have done so nobly in imparting of their temporal means the past year, I will say in the language of Paul "your labor is not in vain in the Lord." May God's favors and blessings continue with you during this coming year. I also urge those who are less interested in the law of tithing and offering to begin this year and try the Lord on his own proposition. Read Malachi 3. And let those who have started to pay tithes and offerings not forget the Bishop's agent. We all know the work in this district is growing, the territory is large, the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Let us all cast in our mites whether they be small or great, and we shall be rewarded proportionately.

The Bevier Sisters' Aid Society has been a great help financially in this district; and though few in number, yet they are not discouraged and their work is worthy of commendation. Let the good work go on. Do not forget Graceland College, which is another incumbent duty upon the Saints in general. Let this district also do its portion towards removing the debt. Do not forget the church publications. I think that every Latter Day Saint family should subscribe for the HERALD for it keeps them in touch with the work. It is the duty of every family to subscribe for it, especially this year, as the office has purchased a new press and needs all the support possible. Wishing your coöperation throughout the Northeastern Missouri District this year, I remain, Your brother in Christ,

J. T. WILLIAMS, Bishop's Agent.

Married.

CODDINGTON—WILLIAMS.—At the home of the bridegroom's parents, at Malad City, Idaho, at 6 p. m., January 21, 1903, Mr. Harry Coddington and Sr. Stella Williams. Elder W. S. Pender officiated. A few relatives and friends assembled, an inspirational prayer, a brief ceremony, a sumptuous repast, hearty congratulations, and another matrimonial bark unfurled sail and set forth with promise of health and prosperity. So may it be.

WILKIN—HAYER.—At eight o'clock on the evening of January 28, 1903, at the home of Bro. Oliver Hayer, at Lamoni, Iowa, his daughter Clara E. was married to Mr. Frank Wilkin, of Eagle Grove, Iowa. The rite that united in one the two, was solemnized by Elder C. Scott, and in the presence of an assembly of some fifty persons, mostly relatives of the bride. Compliments, sweet music, and the social in general enlivened and rendered pleasant the evening. All their friends wish the married couple good will, and a successful journey up the royal way of life. They will make their home at Eagle Grove, Iowa.

Died.

WEBBER.—Frederick E. Webber, native of Bangor, Maine, a member about four years, and a constant sufferer, died January 17, 1903, aged 53 years. Funeral services by C. A. Parkin, at San Francisco, California.

DAVIS.—Bro. Hiram Davis, of San Jose, California, died at San Jose, January 19, aged 72 years and 10 months. Bro. Davis formally lived at Irvington. Funeral by C. A. Parkin, at San Jose and Irvington.

GITTINGS.—Richard H., born July 8, 1858, Boomer Township, Pottawattamie County, Iowa; baptized October 29, 1893, by Elder Charles Derry; ordained a deacon February, 1898; married Emma Elizabeth Smith, October 14, 1888. One son preceded him to the spirit land. Leaves to mourn a faithful companion, two daughters, and one son, relatives, and a host of friends. He died December 20, 1902. Our brother was for several years a sufferer from consumption. The church lost a faithful officer, the neighborhood an esteemed citizen, the household a beloved husband and parent. Funeral from Boomer Cemetery Church, by Elder F. E. Cohrt.

Seven important men are discussed in the February number of the Cosmopolitan: "The Young Napoleon," by Field-marshal Viscount Wolseley; "Leo Tolstoy: An Interpretation Done in Little," by Elbert Hubbard; August Belmont, by R. Price.

How to Prune Shrubs.

We prune shrubs to regulate their growth and make them graceful, pretty bushes, to accentuate their natural character, to invigorate weak growth or check overluxuriance, or to increase the profusion or enhance the quality of their blossoms. We prune a privet hedge with a hedge-shears in a closely-sheared, straight artificial line or rounded form; but this sort of pruning, in the case of spireas, deutzias, weigelas, mock oranges, and other garden favorites grown in shrubby masses or as isolated specimens for beauty of form or blossoms, would be desecration.

All kinds of garden shrubs may be pruned between the times when the leaves drop off in late fall and before the bud starts to burst into growth in earliest spring, but I do not like pruning in very frosty weather. A stout, sharp pocket-knife, as Saynor's pruning-knife, or a pair of seven-inch, eight-inch, or nine-inch spring pruning-shears are the handiest implements for pruning. For cutting out the stoutest shoots and the bigger old wood a parrot-bill is excellent, or a pair of lopping-shears with handles three feet long.

In pruning shrubs of any kind, have an eye to regulate the growth of the plant and give it an easy, graceful, natural outline, always trying to keep the branches well down to the ground. Thin out old and gnarled stems and stunted or enfeebled wood, and endeavor to preserve a fair fullness of healthy shoots with plenty of firm, well-ripened spray twigs for flowers. In pruning small twigs always cut back close to an eye or joint, and in pruning branches, large or small, always cut close back to a joint or stem. Never leave a snag, and whenever you find an old snag cut it off close to the living wood. Never use hedge-shears on a shrub. We not infrequently see shrubs bare at the bottom and with tall stems and broad-spreading heads, but they are repugnant to the eye. When the shrubs begin to crowd each other in the bed, don't try to remedy matters by pruning; instead, thin the mass by removing a number of the bushes—dig them up carefully and plant elsewhere.—William Falconer, in Country Life in America.

The Venezuelan and Panama Canal situations are editorially discussed in the Review of Reviews for February. In addition to his comments on these very prominent topics of the hour, the editor gives his usual valuable survey of the month's important happenings, at home and abroad. Among the contributed articles there are two character sketches of exceptional interest; "Abram S. Hewitt, a Great Citizen," is the subject of a discriminating tribute from the pen of Edward M. Shepard, the New York lawyer and politician, who knew Mr. Hewitt intimately, while Mr. George Perry Morris reviews the too brief career of Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, the former president of Wellesley College and a leader in many intellectual movements. The art treasures of the late Henry G. Marquand, many of which were sold recently in New York at almost fabulous prices, are described in an illustrated article by Ernest Knauff. The latest developments in wireless telegraphy are recounted by Professor A. Frederick Collins, while Mr. Thomas C. Martin describes the new Pacific cable lines—the all-American and the all-British. Professor Frank A. Wilder gives much interesting information about the coal deposits of our great Northwest. The fullest statement yet published of the impending land reforms in Ireland is furnished by Mr. Walter Wellman, who has just returned from that country. The recent Taff Vale Railway decision in England on the rights and liabilities of labor unions in connection with strikes is reviewed by Mr. A. Maurice Low. "Some Taxation Problems and Reforms" is the subject of a comprehensive article by Secretary Commons of the National Civic Federation. "Some Cartoon Comments," "Leading Articles of the Month," and the other regular departments, round out the number.

Whoever is interested in educational matters will find considerable food for reflection in some criticisms of modern pedagogic methods that are advanced by H. G. Wells in the February Cosmopolitan. "The tendency of the present time," he says, "is enormously to exaggerate the importance of school in development, to ascribe to it powers quite beyond its utmost possibilities, and to blame it for evils in which it has no share. And in the preposterous invasions of the duty of parent, clergyman, statesman, author, journalist, of things which are in truth scarcely more within the province of the schoolmaster than they are within the province of a butcher, the real and necessary work of the school is too often marred, crippled, and lost sight of altogether."

The Power of Thought.

Beware of what you think; for what you think, quite as much as what you do, molds your character. Wrong acts persisted in will wreck any life, but wrong thoughts have just as sure an effect. It not infrequently happens that people who live fairly good lives, so far as their actions go, do not feel it necessary to set so close a guard on their thoughts. These are hidden, and of what harm is it to occasionally cherish a vulgar thought if one does not allow it to escape in action? Of what harm to hate if one does not show it? To imagine one's self committing wrong acts if one does not actually commit them? But the laws of life say that every thought affects the whole being. As a man's heart is, so will he be. Evil thoughts gradually undermine the character, and some day these thoughts will burst into action which is irremediable. Therefore, look to your thoughts; keep your mind swept and garnished. And more than that, make the furniture of it beautiful and true; for if bad thoughts persisted in ruin a character, so the best of characteristics may be cultivated by keeping the mind constantly on good things. Very often one is called on to act in an emergency, and then one acts along the line of one's previous thought. No act is spontaneous; the seeds of it have been for a long time taking root in the brain. Of two men who have lived practically the same lives outwardly, and are suddenly called on to face a danger, one may play the coward and the other rise to heroic effort. The result is no matter of chance. Little by little the motor-tracts of the brain of one have been weakened by wrong thinking; little by little the brain of the other has been strengthened because he thought bravely. When the strain comes, one unconsciously acts along the line of least resistance. It is then that the hidden thoughts tell. We should see to it that we think heroically, think purely, think charitably. Then in action we will find ourselves doing the brave thing; we will act cleanly, and sanely; we will be kind and helpful.—February Woman's Home Companion.

Forests of the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1903.—Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, has returned from the Philippines, where he was sent last August by Secretary Wilson, at the request of the Secretary of War, to report on the forest policy of the islands.

A personal examination of the Philippine forests and a study of market conditions have convinced Mr. Pinchot of the value of the timber and of the very great opportunities on the islands for government forestry. "Both for forestry and for foresters," he says, "the Philippines offer the finest field I know of. The Forestry Bureau of the islands, under Captain George P. Ahern, has charge of the development of valuable forests composed of trees the names of which are mostly unfamiliar to Americans and of whose habits we know comparatively nothing. An unlimited field for profitable study is offered the young foresters now entering the Philippine service. The objection that the islands are dangerously unhealthy is a mistaken one. I believe that a man who takes care of himself may work with entire safety in the Philippines."

On a gunboat placed at his disposal by Governor Taft, Mr. Pinchot, in company with Captain Ahern, made a trip of three thousand miles among the islands. The sailing was done at night, when possible; landings were made in the day and the forests of all the larger islands and of many of the smaller ones were examined.

"Probably more than half the area of the islands is in forest," says Mr. Pinchot. "The best timber I saw was in Mindanao, on the road built by the army from the coast to Linao, where the fighting with the Moros has been going on. There the best trees are one hundred fifty to one hundred seventy-five feet high, with clear lengths of ninety to one hundred feet and diameters of three to six feet. The forest is dense and interwoven with creepers, and progress through it is often impossible without cutting a way. The islands contain large areas without forest, as along the railroad from Manila to Dagupan. Nearly the whole island of Cebu and parts of Panay are without forests. On the other hand, Mindanao and Paragua are nearly all in forest.

"The pine of the Benguet province is about the only tree which an American in the Philippines will recognize. Although nearly seven hundred species have been described and classified, doubtless many Philippine trees still remain unknown. Very many of the timbers are fine cabinet woods; nearly all are heavy, and many sink in water. At present their use is limited entirely by their ability to withstand the attacks of the teredo and the white ant.

"Lumbering is a problem on the islands. The death of nearly all the caribou has in some places reduced the industry to the employment of hand labor entirely, which is scarce and unsatisfactory. What lumbering is now going on is of the most primitive sort. I have seen heavy logs hauled with tackles by hand. A considerable part of the timber used on the islands is imported from the United States."

Mr. Pinchot journeyed to the Philippines by way of Russia, where he found an efficient and highly developed system of government forestry. He visited the forest schools of St. Petersburg and Moscow, met the forest officials and made trips with them into the woods. He also observed the planting on the steppes.

Of the Russian forests Mr. Pinchot says: "They are very good, as a whole, though not to be compared with those of our own Pacific coast. Across Russia and Siberia, from Moscow to the borders of Manchuria, one is never out of sight of trees."

Mr. Pinchot will make a complete report on his observations in the Philippines.

That the people of our great Northwest are in no danger of such a fuel famine as the East has suffered from during the present winter is clearly demonstrated in the Review of Reviews for February by Professor Frank A. Wilder, of the North Dakota Geological Survey, who describes the remarkable coal and lignite deposits of that region.

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

IT is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:

"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

INAPT APPLICATION OF SCRIPTURE.

There has been with some in the past a disposition to make application of passages of Scripture to men and events of modern times that are inappropriate, and in some instances decidedly inapt.

For instance; many years ago an attempt was made to make it out that "the man of sin," of 2 Thessalonians 2: 9, was the Pope, as an ecclesiastical ruler. The curtailing of the temporal power of the Vatican seemed to defeat that proposition.

Again; we used to hear occasionally the name of President Brigham Young connected with the same passage. That too went by the board before broader thought.

We have seen very ingenious calculations made with the view to show that the members 666 pointed to Napoleon as the one whose name filled the "number of a man." But the result of the Franco-German war disposed of that claim.

Bro. Carl W. Lange, now deceased, a most excellent brother, once had a bit of sport with the Editor and some others of the brethren during a conference at Plano, Illinois, by insisting that the Editor had no part nor lot with modern Israel, was in short an interloper, and that he could "prove it by scripture." Upon being challenged for the proof he cited 1 Samuel 13: 9, which reads: "Now there was no smith to be found throughout all the land of Israel." His argument was, "If there were no Smith in Israel at that time, how came this man in here now?"

This, of course, put the laugh on the Editor; but the application of the passage was, to us, as logical as some others we have heard. As an instance; those above referred to making the "man of sin" to be the Pope, or President B. Young; Napoleon to be the one referred to in Revelation 13: 18. The revenue stamps once used by the United States Government to raise the needed money for war expenses, was said to be "the mark of the beast," etc.

And yet another, we have heard the passage in Isaiah 54: 16, applied to Joseph Smith of modern times. The word smith comes from the word smite, and means one that shapes with a hammer, literally by smiting. The secondary meaning given by Webster, "one who makes or effects anything." In short, a worker. It used to be applied to workers in metals, as white, or silversmith, a worker in iron, or

At the meeting of the American Association and kindred societies in Washington, the following professors of the University of Iowa were honored by official positions: Professor Calvin was chosen vice-president of the Geological Society of America; Professor Macbride, vice-president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; Professor Nutting, vice-president of the American Society of Naturalists; Professor Weld, secretary of the Mathematical Section of the American Association. Surely the University of Iowa has little of which to complain in the matter of science honors. Indeed, we doubt if any University of the West can show a record such as stands at this moment to the credit of the State University of Iowa.

The Providence Evening Telegram for January 26 contained a brief report of a sermon by F. M. Sheehy. It spoke of him as the noted debater of Boston.

a blacksmith, coppersmith, and so on, applying to those occupations in which striking, or smiting with the hammer was the method of making things. It was in such a sense that the writer used the term; "Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy." The smith of the passage is any worker that uses the fire, the bellows, and the hammer; in the same sense that the waster is any element that may be used as a destroyer, the lightning, the army worm, the caterpillar, the drought, the storm, and the earthquake. The word smith does not apply to Joseph Smith as a person designated by the passage any more than the word waster refers to Attila, Nero, Napoleon, or any other warrior that has made havoc as a destroyer. Of course some of those who use the passage seem to weave a specious theory about it, but the final effect on the hearer is not good, but otherwise.

William Galbraith claimed to be the one named in Revelation 21:7, without a tremor of lips, or eye; was he? No.

To make such applications, may display ingenuity but the lack of the spirit of propriety as well.

We have also heard of an attempt to make out that the Jesus was a carpenter, hence a worker, and as the word smith meant a worker, hence the name of Jesus was Jesus a worker, or Jesus Smith.

Such applications as these may show a degree of ingenuity but can not fail to hurt the spiritual influence of the member or elder that does it. It is juggling with words to no profit. There is plenty in the gospel economy to talk about without attempting to make scripture to apply to modern times by wresting it to improper meanings.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

In view of this inspired statement, "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch."—Doctrine and Covenants 12:02. A branch in business-meeting reaches the order of the election of officers. Elders are nominated for president, but severally decline; a teacher is nominated and unanimously elected. When the result of the vote is stated from the chair, it is: "Bro. — is elected presiding teacher of the branch." No mention made or nomination for presiding priest, or for presiding teacher. Question: Was the brother elected president of the branch, or presiding teacher of the branch?

He is the presiding officer of the branch, of right, by the vote so taken, until another is chosen to preside holding a higher office.

"Also the duty of the president over the priesthood of Aaron, is to preside over forty-eight priests, and sit in council with them, to teach them the duties of their office, as is given in the covenants. This president is to be a bishop; for this is one of the duties of this priesthood."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:40. Does the presiding Bishop of the church preside over forty-eight priests, or all the priests of the church? Has the church any quorum of priests that is presided over by "a bishop"? Is this paragraph of the law now in force? Do we as a church live up to, and comply with the instructions of the above-cited law?

The presiding Bishop at present presides over the body of priests. This paragraph is in force as other parts of the section. Presidents of each forty-eight priests not yet so ordained. Yes, so nearly as we can.

THE Kansas City Star for February 2 contained some news items from Independence, Missouri, among which appeared the following:

For several hours yesterday afternoon a large number of the members of the Independence Branch of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ discussed arrangements for the coming church conference. The meeting was held at the big stone church, committees were appointed and the work of preparation begun. The conference will be held at the Independence church in April, and will be the largest conference ever held, having representatives for the entire church. It was estimated yesterday that not less than two thousand guests would be present during the conference, and these will be entertained by the local church. Many think that at this conference the headquarters of the church will be transferred from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, which is now claimed to be the strongest church in the organization. There are more than twelve hundred members of the Independence Branch.

We judge from the foregoing that either some of the Independence Saints or the Star's reporter have been indulging in some groundless speculations. We have heard of no probability of the headquarters of the church being moved from Lamoni, and the branch at the latter place is still the larger.

TROUBLE FOR ROME.

In a recent number of the New York American, issue for January 25, there appeared an article dated from Rome, Italy, in which the health of Pope Leo is discussed. The views of his physician, Doctor Laponi, were given, from which it appears the Pope is enjoying most excellent health, and that his habits have been and are such as to strengthen the belief that though past ninety years old now, prospects for many years of usefulness are yet before him.

Near the close of the American article the following appeared:

The authorities of the Vatican are greatly disturbed over a series of events that have happened in different parts of Italy during the past few weeks.

They began in the Church of Santa Maria Degil Angeli by a man pulling out during mass an anti-clerical newspaper containing cartoons against the clergy and studying it in evident enjoyment.

Yesterday a mob attempted to make a demonstration in Saint Peter's while Cardinal Rampolla was officiating.

The evening before a mob of anti-clerical students appeared in the Vatican Basilica with copies of anti-clerical cartoons, which they loudly began to compare with the decorations of the high altar. The sacristan who interfered would have been mauled by the students except for the intervention of the police. Yesterday's demonstration was ostensibly meant as a protest by the friends of the students against the action of the police, but the prelates of the Vatican are reported to believe there is something more behind the business. They are convinced it is the first step in a plan of the Italian Government to declare Saint Peter's is henceforth to be regarded as Italian territory. According to the law of guarantees the Vatican and Saint Peter's are extra territorial, and the Pope is as much monarch there as he ever was, and no agent of the Government has the right to exercise his authority within the holy precincts unless called in by ecclesiastical authority.

It is now feared at the Vatican that the most radical section of the present Government is endeavoring to create a number of incidents of the sort mentioned in order to render the intervention of the Italian police more frequent and more necessary in order that the extra territoriality of the Vatican and Saint Peter's may ipso facto cease to exist.

It is regarded as ominous that the movement should have been inaugurated a month before the closing ceremony of the Pontifical jubilee, which will be attended by the Pope and forty cardinals.

WILLIAM HOOPER YOUNG'S TRIAL BEGUN.

The following item concerning the beginning of the trial of William Hooper Young at New York City on February 4 appeared in the Kansas City Journal for the 5th instant:

NEW YORK, February 4.—The trial of William Hooper Young for the murder of Mrs. Anna Pulitzer was begun before Judge Herrick to-day, after the justice had refused to grant a postponement at the request of the prisoner's counsel. The warden of the Tombs at first declined to permit Young to be taken to court, on the ground that the latter was ill. The judge finally ordered the accused man brought into court. When he appeared, Young was in a pitiable condition. His face was ashen white, his hair and beard long and unkempt, and his eyes rolling. He collapsed when placed in a chair and then, straightening up, made an attempt to address the court, saying: "I'm not crazy now." He was silenced and a conference was held between court and counsel, when it was decided that the prisoner would be examined by two physicians. When recess was called, Young either could not or would not walk, and had to be carried from the court room.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of February 2 Hubert Case wrote from Richmond, Oklahoma: "I closed my meetings here for the present with three names for baptism. Many warm friends and quite a number near the kingdom."

W. E. La Rue wrote from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, February 1: "I am en route to my post of duty. Father was some better when I left." Bro. La Rue's address will be 156 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Alvin Knisley wrote from Seaforth, Ontario, January 31: "A. E. Mortimer and I are here preaching nightly at Leadbury to crowds ranging from twenty to fifty. Good interest. Have preached sixteen sermons. May conclude next week."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

For a number of years the water level of Great Salt Lake has been gradually lowering. Recently the St. Louis Republic contained an article in which this fact was mentioned and attention called to some of the results which would follow a total drying up of the Lake. Such a contingency is not likely we think from the fact that several streams pour their contents into the Lake while there is no visible outlet. In seasons where the evaporation from the surface of the Lake is greater than the amount of water poured in, the level will fall, and vice versa. Such bodies of water as Great Salt Lake have such varying water levels. It is possible, however, that the demands made upon the streams tributary to Great Salt Lake for irrigating purposes will be such at periods of considerable length as to cause (together with evaporation) a decided lowering of the Lake level. Because of the wide-spread interest in Great Salt Lake as one of the rare natural wonders of America, the probability of it drying up becomes a matter of general interest and concern.

A new tract recently issued by the church is entitled, "The Church of Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; only the one church of Christ." It is now on sale at the HERALD Office, and is catalogued as No. 209, and can be had for twenty cents per dozen or one dollar and fifty cents per hundred. It is a tract of eighteen pages and is very ably written. It is a tract which should be widely circulated. Send for a few copies and distribute them and see what it will do.

At a recent visit to the Lamoni Religio local,—we are not a member,—we found a busy lot of interested young Saints. In company with the secretary we hastily visited the various classes, and found the Book of Mormon students ranged in age from six to fifty. From the secretary we learned that nearly two hundred names were on the roll, with seven officers and twelve teachers. A goodly number, indeed.

BISHOP FALLOWS ON THE "MORMON MENACE."

The following article by Bishop Samuel Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has appeared in a number of the daily papers of late. We reproduce it from the New York Herald for January 25.

The Herald's comments preceded the article, and they appeared, together with the article as follows:

President Roosevelt's recent warning and protest to the Utah Legislature against the election of Mr. Reed Smoot, a Mormon apostle, to the United States Senate has again directed national attention to the Mormon question. Although little notice is taken of it by the general public, Mormon proselyting was never more active than at the present day. Within the last few months Mayor Low has issued licenses to five Mormon missionaries to preach nightly in the streets of this city. It is said there are now more than five hundred Latter Day Saints in Manhattan and Brooklyn.

This proselyting is by no means confined to New York. For a number of years the church has kept some two thousand men constantly engaged in the work of propaganda. Some seven hundred missionaries are in this country and an equal number in Northern Europe. Several hundred are scattered through the Pacific islands and the Orient. They are all energetic, and converts are constantly being shipped to Utah. This source of increase and the fact that Utah has the highest birth rate of all the States in the Union account for the rapid growth of the Mormon population. The last census gives it at more than three hundred thousand.

Bishop Fallows, who has made an exhaustive study of Mormonism, has written his views on the subject for the Sunday Herald. They are of especial interest to all thinking people at this time.

BISHOP FALLOWS' ARRAIGNMENT.

Mormonism is a standing menace to the civilization which the United States has been building up for more than a century. It has existed for more than seventy years in spite of the bitter opposition it met in its earlier days and the strenuous efforts we ourselves have made in recent years to root it out.

The great mass of the people have been lulled into false security, believing that the dangers of Mormonism had passed, while to-day they are as great as ever.

In Salt Lake City, Utah, I saw hanging upon the walls of the tithing room the photographs of the men who have made Mormonism famous. The somewhat burly figure of Brigham Young indicated very clearly the master spirit of the polygamous Utah system, with all its unclean mysteries, its deceptions and defiance of law.

It was suggestive of a man of medium stature, coarsely and stoutly built, with a square mouth and heavy jaws denoting inflexibility of purpose; with deep set eyes not devoid of a play of humor in them, but speaking unmistakably of greed of money and power; with a neck and cerebellum revealing an insatiable animal nature and with a forehead denoting a great organizing intellect.

It is a singular fact that all the rest of the fathers of this misnamed "Church of Latter Day Saints," save Joseph Smith, were stamped with the same characteristics. Nature proclaimed in her loudest tones, "These men are polygamous both in principle and practice." Joseph Smith's picture was that of a man cast in a lighter mold, but with a cerebellum which the phrenologist would declare was an expression of extreme amativeness and of the domination of the lower passions over the superior sentiments.

ANIMALISM THE FOUNDATION STONE.

The animalism shown so unmistakably by these leaders has been one of the chief foundation stones of Mormonism. It is the religion of the baser nature. It was founded on a lie, built up on a lie and is a living lie to-day.

I met with a forcible illustration of the Mormon's subtle method of deception in the great Utah Tabernacle, where thousands were gathered to hear their two most eminent apostles expound its tenets, Elder Charles W. Penrose and President George Q. Cannon. The discourse of Cannon was one which, with a change or two in words, might have been delivered in any Christian pulpit. It was a scriptural appeal for the recognition of the gifts which the Apostle Paul enumerates in his epistle to the Corinthians. This is the staple of the Mormon gospel which is preached to the world. Penrose, however, in his talk showed the cloven hoof. He betrayed the essential nature of this dangerous delusion.

He declared that communication with the skies had been cut off until Joseph Smith appeared; that then the silence of ages had been broken; that angels came again from the courts of glory; that the apostles appeared to Smith and ordered him to the apostleship; that the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ required all to repent of their false faiths and false forms of worship and to be baptized by one having authority from Joseph Smith, and then they should receive the Holy Ghost, the Comforter. All this is studiously concealed by the Mormon missionaries in their proselyting crusades.

SMITH, "MOUTHPIECE OF THE ALMIGHTY."

At my own door and the doors of my neighbors Mormon literature has been left by a band of young men, who have been sent by the Utah presidency to convert Chicago. It is apparently as evangelical as though coming from the Moody Bible Institute.

This is only a sample of the subtle, deceptive way in which they work to swell their ranks from an unsuspecting public. No such deluding men and methods have been known before to foist upon people "cunningly devised fables" in place of the pure word of God, making Joseph Smith the only mouthpiece of the Almighty to an apostate world.

And who was this Joseph Smith, this inspired apostle, this one lone soul who brought down the angels and James and Peter and John and started the only true religion among men? Unless every rule of evidence is to be declared utterly unreliable he was one of the rankest impostors of all history.

Over forty of the most reliable and respectable residents of Wayne and Ontario Counties published a statement while the Smith family was living in that region, setting forth the character of its members, and especially of Joseph, the pretended prophet. In the most unequivocal terms they declare that the members of the Smith family were low, untrustworthy, of bad repute in general, and in this statement they represented the unanimous sentiment of the entire community.

Joseph Smith, they declare, was a notorious liar and immoral in speech and deed. General Bennett, the commander of the Nauvoo Legion, and other persons who were the former intimate associates of Smith, made affidavits before the death of the prophet regarding his truculent and lecherous life.

The whole Mormon fabric, based on the doctrine of polygamy, is responsible for the convention of the Utah prophet's thousand direct descendants which recently met in Salt Lake City, for the crying abuse of the "sealed wives" of the Mormon horde, for the breaking up of hundreds of families, and for untold volumes of marital wretchedness and misery! Such is the religion that has been trying insidiously to weave itself into the fabric of our national life.

The deception in which Mormonism began has never left it. Sometimes, in defense of its system, its followers have been represented as the pioneers of civilization, enduring incredible hardships.

A PURE FABRICATION.

The great Salt Lake Valley has been pictured as practically an alkaline desert when they took possession of it and made it to "blossom as the rose." But this is pronounced a pure fabrication by those who knew it before the advent of Brigham Young. J. R. McBride, leading member of the Salt Lake Bar and one of the oldest pioneers of the West, avers in the Salt Lake Tribune of October 21, 1879, that it was a beautiful, grass-covered meadow, waiting to be appropriated.

One might as well talk of subduing or reclaiming the prairie soil of Illinois or Iowa as of subduing or reclaiming the lands of Utah. There were miles upon miles of meadow lands where even irrigation was not needed. There were not a hundred Indians in the vicinity of "Zion." The Mormons did not make the roads to the "Promised Land," for no less than fifteen thousand people and three thousand wagons had passed through Utah to the West before a single Mormon ever set foot in Salt Lake Valley. While they were poor and isolated they endured only the ordinary hardships of their poverty and isolation. Their condition and surroundings were far better than those of the early pioneers of the Mississippi Valley.

While Mormons continually try to deceive Christians as to their real tenets, they aspire to fellowship with them in order to subvert the Christian church itself. The Presbytery of Utah, composed of able and intelligent men, familiar with all the facts of Mormonism, has declared in a carefully prepared document ten cogent reasons why it is impossible for the Christian churches to have fellowship with its adherents.

First. Because the Mormon church asserts, as I myself heard George Q. Cannon, in the Mormon Tabernacle in Utah, aver, that there was not left one person in all the world to receive the Holy Ghost and be clothed with authority to ordain and baptize but Joseph Smith; that all communication with the skies had ceased until the angelic ministry was again received through him. Thus all Christians were outside the covenant of grace unless they were reinstated through Smith's successors. Thus the Mormon church is the only true church.

DESTROY THE BIBLE.

Second. Because Mormons destroy the Bible by their so-called revelations. Brigham Young says: "Every priest in the church (Mormon) has the right of receiving revelations. It is the very life of the church of the living God in all ages of the world."

Third. Because they make belief in Joseph Smith as a prophet of God an essential article of the faith.

Fourth. Because they make their prophets and priests infallible.

Apostle John M. Taylor, at the great conference of the Mormon church, April 5, 1897, said: "Wilford Woodruff is the prophet and seer of this church. Joseph Smith was a prophet, Brigham Young was a prophet, and I know that he has a great many prophets around him, and he can make scriptures as good as those in the Bible."

Fifth. Because in their "God-man doctrines" they teach man may become God.

Elder B. H. Roberts says: "Men who hold the priesthood possess divine authority to act for God, and by possessing part of God's power they are in reality part of God. Men who honor the priesthood in them honor God, and those who reject it reject God."

Sixth. Because they teach that Adam is God and that Jesus Christ is the Son of God by natural generation. On April 9, 1852, Brigham Young in the tabernacle announced: "Now, hear it, oh, inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is Michael, the archangel, the ancient of days, about whom holy men have written and spoken. He is our father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do. Every man upon the face of the earth, professing Christian or non-professing, must hear it and will know it, sooner or later."

THEIR MATERIAL GOD.

This doctrine has been repeatedly affirmed and reaffirmed by the Mormon prophets. This material God is set forth in number 349 of a Mormon hymn-book:

The God that others worship
Is not the God for me.
He has no parts or body,
And can not hear and see.

Brigham young, with the rest of his class, constantly declared that Jesus Christ was the natural son of Joseph and Mary. "He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. Mary was duly married after the betrothal by the angel Gabriel."

Seventh. Because they teach polytheism, that there are many gods, men becoming gods by plural and "celestial" marriage.

Joseph Smith said: "You have got to learn how to be gods yourselves, the same as all gods have done before you." Brigham Young said: "Joseph Smith will be the chief god." And Mormons are still learning how to become gods by having as many women as "wives" as can be secured and by procreating a numerous posterity.

Eighth. Because they teach that sin is a necessity. "Adam fell, but his fall became a matter of necessity after the woman transgressed. No wonder Adam fell! It was that he might become the father of an innumerable race of beings, who would become capable of becoming gods." And while they claim to teach that Christ atoned for original sin—whatever that might be, since sin is a necessity—they hold that man must be saved from personal sins by his own good works.

Ninth. Because they have believed, and still believe, in polygamy. The prophet, Woodruff, when the hand of the United States Government was heavy upon him and his fellow sinners for polygamous practices, had a revelation that it was to be discontinued. But what the discontinuance meant was clearly indicated by the declaration made to me by the head of the Mormon tithing system in Salt Lake City. He said, "We have had a revelation against polygamy, but we believe in it just the same."

POLYGAMY STILL FLOURISHING.

Men who know the innermost workings of Mormonism unhesitatingly declared to me that polygamy was secretly practiced to-day fully as much as before Utah was admitted to statehood. Mormons will continue to be polygamists in spite of all political revelations by polygamous prophets against plural marriages so long as they hold to their cardinal doctrine, that Jesus Christ himself was a polygamist; for they maintain that he had many wives, among them Mary and Martha and other women who followed him to the cross.

And tenth. The Presbytery holds that the Christian church will never fellowship the Mormons as Christians, because they hold that God the Father also was a polygamist; for they teach that God had a female deity, from whom sprang by celestial generations countless gods of both sexes. Then as Adam, the human god, he enjoyed connubial intercourse with multitudes of the other sex.

Can any Christian believer have church relationship with such people—who worship Adam, who teach polytheism, who elevate men to godhood by the gross indulgence of their sensual natures, who hold that the only true prophets, those continually receiving divine communications superior to the prophets and apostles of old, are the most noted for their "filthiness of flesh"?

And when we consider what is involved in the following revelation on celestial marriage with what is indisputably true regarding "blood-atonement" and the like Christians must shrink further back from giving them church recognition. In that heavenly communication it is declared:

"If a woman refuses to give other wives to her husband it shall be lawful for him to take them without her consent, and she shall be destroyed for her disobedience."

No denials or disclaimers will ever away with the awful disclosures of the workings of iniquity when Mormonism was in full sway, having no fear of the United States Government before its eyes.

POLITICAL SIDE OF IT.

Tammany as a political organization is a baby in arms compared with this Mormon giant. It is reaching out to Idaho, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Nevada, by its colonizing schemes, and will control the Territories by holding the balance of power if they are admitted as States.

Its deliberate plan is to control enough States to prevent the ratification of an anti-polygamous amendment to the constitution of the United States. It will surely do this unless unceasing vigilance is exercised by the American people. As a compound of impudence and ignorance, lust and lunacy, depravity, and disloyalty, it has shown in the past what its spirit is by its "Danites," "Avenging Angels," and the like.

That spirit has not changed, whatever may be said in private or in public meetings outside of Utah. It is to carry out the truth revealed from heaven to John Taylor, once the head of Mormonism, its prophet and seer, that the Mormon priesthood is the legitimate rule of God—"and is the only legitimate power that has a right to rule on the earth."

Mormonism can be met only by curbing its political power by proper political methods. Its religious despotism must be fought not with carnal but with spiritual weapons. The Christian church of all faiths must unite by its ministry, its press, its multiplied social organizations, to save the people deluded by the Mormon heresy and prevent the further spread of the "unfruitful works of darkness."—Samuel Fallows.

OBEDIENCE.

SERMON BY FREDERICK M. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA, JANUARY 25, 1903.

(Reported by Bro. Leon Gould.)

There was once an old man; that is I judge he was old; and by the stories that are told of him, he must have been eccentric, having had many experiences, experiences enough to make him quite independent of what people thought, or of what people said. He had a peculiar notion or idea that he was especially called of the Deity to perform certain work, and that he was gifted with certain powers. So odd was he that one time when there came into the community where he was, a man of considerable repute who had a disease fastened upon him, this old fellow got the idea into his head that he could heal him, or do him good. And when the man went to some of the prominent persons of that country and demanded that something be done for him, there was consternation. This old fellow happened to hear of it and he sent up word. Send him down to me, I think I can take care of him for you. When the afflicted man came he was told to do something that sounded so silly that he was disgusted and went away. But afterwards he got to thinking about it. He thought, Well, may be the old fellow was right in what he said to me. I will do what he told me to do. So he did what he was told to do, and the story goes that he was healed.

There was another old man. This time I know that he was old, because the story says so. He had formed the opinion that he was in communication with Deity himself. And one time he came in to his wife and said, Wife, the Lord has told me to leave all my possessions in this country, and go into a new country, and make a new start. Now mind you, he was an old man; but he went. The story goes that he succeeded.

This same old man, one day, was working in his field,—at least I judge he was working in his field,—and he thought that the Lord told him that he was to kill his son. And he went to the house straightway, and made preparation to take that son into the woods and sacrifice him to this whimsical notion of his. He did this; to all practical intents and purposes he murdered that son; he took him into the woods and prepared everything, even to getting the knife ready, and was about to slay his son when his fanatical mind said he ought to stop right there, that he had done enough. And his son was saved.

I have told these little stories for the purpose of drawing a lesson, and for fear some of you may not believe that I have grounds for telling the stories, let me read:

Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honorable, because by him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man in valor, but he was a leper. And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife. And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy. And one went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel. And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment. And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy. And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? Wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me. And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.—2 Kings 5: 1-8.

Now, you remember the story. You remember how Elisha told this man to go and dip seven times in the river Jordan, and that he should be cleansed of his disease, and Naaman went away disgusted. But after he had gone back and had complained that the eccentric old man had not told him something wonderful to do, this little maid reminded him again that possibly if he did what he was told to do, he would be healed. Well, he obeyed; he went to the river Jordan. And the record tells us that his flesh became again as the flesh of a little child, and he was clean.

Now for the other story. Possibly some of you have discovered who the other man is that I have referred to. We find it in the twelfth chapter of Genesis: "Now the Lord has said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee."

You remember the story. It is recorded of Abram that he obeyed; that he went. It is also recorded that he was a man seventy-five years of age, and nothing doubting he went and did as he was commanded, and you all know the results.

Now then, as to the time this man thought he was told to kill his son.

And it came to pass after these things that God did tempt Abraham [mind you, the word tempt is used here in the sense of "try, prove, or test," the definitions, I believe, that are given by Webster], and said unto him, Abraham: and he said, Behold here I am. And he said, Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and went unto the place of which God had told him. [Note the complete preparation, if you please, for carrying out this command.] Then on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off. And Abraham said unto his young men, Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and come again to you. And Abraham took the wood of the burnt offering, and laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife; and they went both of them together. And Isaac spake unto Abraham his father, and said, My father: and he said, Here am I, my son. And he said, Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the lamb for the burnt offering? And Abraham said, My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering: so they went both of them together. And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and laid him upon the altar upon the wood. And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son. And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham; and he said, Here am I. And he said, lay not thy hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me.—Genesis 22: 1-12.

Now I want to ask you a question. Suppose you knew an old man that had an only son, and that old man would come to you and tell you that he had been commanded of the Lord to kill that son, as a sacrifice unto the Lord, what would you think? I told the stories in the first place in the way I did, simply to bring this matter home to you. It is often the case that we can look back into the misty past and read those things, and think, O, well, that would have been very easy to do. Abraham did that because he saw that everything was going to be all right. But did he? Did he see the object of the Lord in thus commanding him? And even if he did not, and I believe he did not, he hesitated not.

There is one thought that I wish to draw from the three stories; and if I can get that one thing, or one lesson, before you, I shall be satisfied; and that is the lesson of obedience, obedience which is the result of absolute faith or confidence in God. When Abraham went out into the new country as we have told, he did it in obedience to a command, and, as he believed, a direct command from God. He saw not where he was going. He knew not why the Lord told him to go. And yet, relying absolutely upon the faith that he had in God's justness, he went. And Paul, in after years, in writing of this event says: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went."

Think you not that that took faith, a confiding faith, to promulgate and to institute such absolute obedience? Now, then, have you ever heard the statement made, or has it ever occurred to you, that you would not obey a command of God unless that command appealed to your intelligence? I want to ask you here, Did this command of God appeal to Abraham's intelligence in any way? When he was told to leave the land where he had been raised, where he had settled down, and where the most of us would think that he would be likely to spend his days, do you think that statement appealed to his intelligence when he was told to move and go into a new country and make a new start? And again when he was told to kill his son, or offer his son as a burnt offering, do you think there was anything therein that appealed to his intelligence, that it ought to be done? Yet Paul speaking of this event says: "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promise offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called: accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure."

To all practical intents and purposes, as I stated before, Abraham killed his son. There had not been the least reservation on his part. He had made every preparation to make the sacrifice complete. He had even cut the wood, and placed it on the shoulders of Isaac, and carried it to that place to which he was going to offer him up as a burnt offering. There was absolutely no reservation in his obedience; he obeyed implicitly.

God places a high estimate on obedience, that is, faithful obedience, obedience that comes from the heart, or that is impelled by faith, and not simply by this intelligent compliance that we have sometimes heard of.

Let me read a few passages that will support this, I believe. In the 5th of Acts, 29th verse, we find this language: "Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men."

And again in Jeremiah 7: 21 to 23, we have this language:

Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh. For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices; but this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward.

Note that when they obeyed not, or refused to obey the voice of God they went backward and not forward.

And again we read, in Isaiah 1: 19, the following language: "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." This promise in Isaiah is especially significant to us to-day from the fact that we believe and teach that some time the day will come when we as a people will redeem Zion. And we also contend and believe that as we redeem Zion the curse shall be removed from the land, and the land will produce in abundance, more greatly than it had otherwise.

In Leviticus 26: 3-12, there is somewhat on this same order:

If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; Then will I give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit. And your thrashing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely. And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid; and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land. And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. And five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight; and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword. For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you. And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new. And I will set my tabernacle among you; and my soul shall not abhor you. And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people."

And again let us read from Exodus 23:20, 21: "Behold, I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of Him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him."

There is one feature of this that I wish, especially to call your attention to. That is, that here we have a being, though he is an angel, we have a being that is commissioned of the Lord to do a special work, and perform a special mission, and the Lord has said, Obey his voice. Now the point I wish to call attention to is that when the Lord has commissioned a certain person to do a certain work, so long as that person is in discharge of that work, his voice should be obeyed, when it is given in his name, as though it was from the Deity himself. Mind you, I say that so long as he is in the office of his calling, that person in discharge of that work should receive the same implicit obedience, by those who are presumed to obey, as though the Deity himself were speaking.

Let us turn once again, and this time to 1 Samuel 15:22: "And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." I repeat "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

Now, let me refer you to Abraham and his son. For some reason that one instance in the history of old Israel has always stood out, to me, as one of the most prominent examples of obedience.

If you notice what Paul says of this I think you will see somewhat of the strength of the obedience that Abraham manifested at that time. "By faith, Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac." He offered him up. "And he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten Son." What were those promises? "Of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called; accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure."

Now note: Abraham was an aged man, and he had acquired what in this life ought to have satisfied him in a worldly way. That is, he was wealthy. He had all the riches that any man could ask for; and he was a man whose age probably prohibited him making another start and winning anything in the way of worldly honors in the future. He had won all the worldly honors that was possible as his own, and yet there had been given to him the promise that, "In Isaac, thy only son, shall thy name be called." And there were promises made to Abraham that were to culminate through that son that would make Abraham stand out prominent in all subsequent history of the world. And yet Abraham received the command.

Take thy son and offer him for a burnt offering. Did he hesitate? Did he stop and reason, Well now Lord you have given a command that I can not see the benefit of; I can not understand why it is that you ask me to give up that son. And if I do, if I kill this son, where are the promises that you have made to me, that shall culminate through this son, Isaac? What becomes of them; and how will my name be glorified, and how will Isaac be glorified, if he is offered up for a burnt offering?

But did he hesitate? No, he went with blind faith and blind obedience, and fulfilled that command to the very letter, so far as all practical purposes are concerned. And that is why, to me, it seems that this is one of the most striking examples of obedience. And what was the result? Abraham to-day stands as a figure scarcely paralleled by any other man except the Christ man, in all the history of the world either sacred or profane. And why? Simply because in him was manifested some of the most implicit obedience that the world has ever known. And I am of the opinion that only in so far as we manifest obedience somewhat similar to this, will we be profited or benefited in our religious life. It seems to me that this faith that shall impel always to obedience is the one chief principle that shall finally win for us eternal glory and bliss.

Did you ever sing the song:

Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb?

And then did you ever sing:

Let us then be valiant soldiers,
In the army of the Lord?

Did you ever think what that meant, when you were singing it? What does it mean to be a soldier? Let us look at the army for one brief moment. We see an army commanded by one man who represents a country, a principle, a power. Under him we have other men, such as generals, major-generals, colonels, and a number of officers that I could not now enumerate. They run right on down until we find captians, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, and privates. The main body of the army are the privates, of course. "Let us then be valiant soldiers, in the army of the Lord." What does it mean? Does it mean that when we receive a command we should say, "I do not know whether or not to obey that command. It does not appeal to my intelligence; that man did not know what he was talking about." Is it the right of the soldier to rebel and say, "I will not do that, because I know that the consequences will be bad?" No. He simply goes ahead and does it, and in doing what is the mistake of another man he wins glory. But if he rebelled it would cost him his life, that is if he persisted in that rebellion. He has no right to say, "I do not feel that I can comply with that command, because it does not appeal to me;" but if he considers that that officer has made a mistake, what should he do? Go to those who are in charge of that officer and complain; or enter that complaint in the proper way, and bring it before the proper authority. Have you ever sung:

Oh, for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe?

Did you ever think that this is the faith that is most needed, of all others, right to-day, by Latter Day Saints? Has it not occurred to you that there are before us things that are going to try our very souls, and that there is nothing in the gospel that will take us through those trials but that faith that will not shrink though pressed by every earthly woe? This is the faith that we need. I believe the Lord knew what he was talking about, when in the Doctrine and Covenants, he made this statement in what is called the "Fishing River Revelation," given in 1834:

Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and the afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.

There we are told directly, and most explicitly, that we must learn obedience, even if by suffering. And now why not prepare to place ourselves in the line of obedience, strictly, or must the Lord again chasten us until we shall be forced into the line of obedience.

You have been called upon within the past few months to do a little more in a financial way than possibly you ever were before. And this idea of consecration has staggered some people; it has staggered them earnestly, because they were in earnest all the way through, and they have staggered when they have received the very command for which they have been looking for years. Now why? Abraham when he was called to sacrifice his everything,—that one thing, it seems to me, in which his whole being might be centered, he hesitated not a moment. And yet there are some of you who will hesitate because you are asked to go into your pockets to sustain the work now. And you hesitate on the ground, "Well, I do not believe that those men that are placed in charge are doing just exactly right; those men do not know any more than I do about those things; and I do not believe I am compelled to render obedience to them until I see it just exactly my way. Did Abraham talk like that? Is it well for you to talk like that?"

Some time ago our nation was called upon to mourn the loss of one of our greatest men. And while the funeral rites were being held over his body, over all this broad land there arose an anthem that was said to be a favorite of that man. All the churches in the country, at most, were singing that song. What was it? It was, "Lead Kindly Light."

Now let me read a stanza or two of this and see if we can discover why this man liked it:

Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom,

Lead thou me on,

The night is dark and I am far from home,

Lead thou me on.

Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that thou

Shouldst lead me on,

I loved to choose and see my path, but now

Lead thou me on.

I loved the garrish day; and in spite of fears,

Pride ruled my will: remember not past years, etc.

I have wondered why that man liked that hymn. And yet when I think of him as a master soldier and as a master statesman and as a great leader of men, I believe I can see. He saw within those lines the sentiment of that obedience that every truly great man loves to see manifest on the part of every one. He had learned from the lessons of life that he could not say to his Lord, "I must see every step, I will not take a step unless I see." "I was not ever thus, nor prayed that thou shouldst lead me on; I loved to choose my path; but now, Lead thou me on."

You can talk of intelligent compliance all you please; you can talk of intelligent obedience all you please; but there comes a time in the life of every man, there come times in the life of every man, when he can not rely one moment on his intelligence, nor on his mental force, nor on his reason. There are times in the life of every man when he must be led absolutely by faith, blind faith; and it is then that he renders obedience that makes him truly great in the eyes of the Redeemer. And I would to God that the time would hasten when we, as a people, as Latter Day Saints, would realize the lessons to be learned from the obedience of Abraham, and place ourselves so strictly in the line of duty, that we can express the sentiment: "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."

Now it seems to me that if Abraham could sacrifice his all, could sacrifice his son, the one that had been promised unto him, and step strictly into line of duty, though he saw no reason why that would not destroy all the promises that were made unto him, I see no reason why, by patterning after this, we can not step quickly and positively into line of duty under present calls, and say we will trust Him still; trust Him as a child trusts a father.

THE DOWIE THAT WAS.

Since much has been said in the HERALD and other papers concerning John Alexander Dowie, something more may not be amiss. Most of the foregoing is in reference to what he now is. What we offer is an item relative to his past. As the HERALD readers know, he originally came from Australia. In his early ministry he was the humble pastor of the Congregational Church at Newtown, a suburb of Sydney. Several of the Saints here knew him in those early days. They say he was then a meek, unassuming man, very much in contrast with the pomposity that has since characterized him. However, he began to manifest his present disposition before he left this country. Why will men practice humility when in obscurity and then manifest egotism and bombast when success crowns their efforts? Evidently because many men (and women too) can not stand prosperity. It disturbs their equilibrium. They should know that healthy, continued, spiritual prosperity always results from humility. Arrogance may produce, result from, or accompany temporary success, but is sure to bring about ultimate ruin. "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall."

Sr. M. A. Seaberg, of this place, once belonged to Mr. Dowie's church. Her name was then Miss Blom. I herewith reproduce a letter she received from him just after she joined. Please notice the difference between the spirit of this letter and that he manifests now:

Newtown Congregational Church.

Devonshire House, NEWTOWN,
SYDNEY, September 28, 1876.

Dear Miss Blom: At a meeting of the members of this church, held yester-night, you were very cordially and unanimously received into our fellowship and communion.

This event in your life is one of the greatest importance: for its influence upon yourself and others is certain to be of the most enduring kind. And to me it is a matter of deep thankfulness to God, when I am privileged to receive into the membership of the church those who have been trained and taught in its various services during many years. In this result, I rejoice as your pastor, the members of the church rejoice as your sincere friends, and your parents rejoice with a very solemn gladness, I am sure; for no Christian parents could be other than glad to see their daughter give herself wholly to the Lord and to his church.

Allow me now to remind you of the sacred duties and privileges which now devolve upon you as a follower of the Lord Jesus. You are to "live to him" in everything; you are to remember ever whose you are and whom you serve; you should ever have in memory the self-denial, meekness, purity, and zeal set before you in Christ's example, and ever strive to adorn the doctrine of God your Savior in all things. Let me exhort you to watch as well as pray, to study diligently the word of God every day, to make your direct spiritual work for the Lord Jesus in the Sabbath-school, as elsewhere, a subject of careful preparation and faithful prayer, and to aim ever at bringing every power of your whole being into a cheerful and loving obedience to God's declared will. Thus shall you glorify your Savior, be a blessing to all around you, a strength to the church, and secure true happiness on earth, and eternal blessedness in heaven.

Do not fear that you can aim too high; for you are to "aim to be like Jesus," who is the Highest; but do not forget that "Those who would rise to be the highest,

Must first come down to be the lowest;
And then ascend to be the highest
By keeping down to be the lowest."

In true humility of spirit, in simple faith in Christ, and in fervent love to him, you will find safety and peace. All God's promises encourage you to confide in him; they never fade or die, and he has promised all you shall ever need. Remember Jesus' word; it is an exhortation to you, "Be not afraid, only believe."—Mark 5: 36.

I inclose your communion card and shall be glad to receive you at the Lord's table next Sabbath morning.

With Christian regards to your parents, I am,
Your friend and pastor,

JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE.

I am pleased to say Sr. Seaberg has practiced the good advice here given. The result is she is now a Latter Day Saint. How is it with Mr. Dowie? Has he taken his own medicine? Possibly he thinks he has already "ascended" and has no further need of of humility.

GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1903.

The time of the General Conference of 1903 is fast approaching, hence we as Saints need to make the necessary preparation for that event. When I say necessary preparation I mean much. We should consider well the purpose for which we expect to attend. Do we intend to go simply for an outing, to make a show of fine apparel, to crack jokes, and have a good time generally? Or is it to serve God and transact business pertaining to his kingdom on the earth?

I believe if we live as we should each General Conference will be as good if not better than the preceding one. When we note the history of the church in these last days, as well as its history in the past, and note from the signs of the times that the coming of Christ is so near, surely we can see there is much to be done in a short time.

The sessions of the Twelve Apostles prior to the sitting of the General Conference to appoint the ministry to their various fields of labor is truly an important work, and one, too, in which much inspiration is needed. To spend money and time sending a missionary where the Lord does not want him would be bad indeed. Ten days or two weeks at General Conference is a short time to transact the business that will come before the body. Therefore that brain and nerves be not overtaxed in that work let us while wisely pursuing the work in the several fields of labor prayerfully prepare for the work of the coming General Conference, that it may truly redound to the honor and glory of God. "ADAM FELL THAT MEN MIGHT BE."

In SAINTS' HERALD, issue January 14, I notice a question asked, "What would have become of us had Eve never eaten of the forbidden fruit?" Answer, "Nothing. We would not have been. 'Adam fell that men might be.'"

I hope my comment on this answer will not be counted presumptuous, and crave the indulgence of my superiors; as I reason and "speculate," for the elucidation of truth, so that wrong impressions will not be formed in regard to God's dealings with his creation—man.

The first part of the answer, "Nothing." Does not the Bible inform us "be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth?" This command coming from a just God, presupposes the capability of humanity to fulfill, and to my mind does not necessitate the fall as a means to bring into being the progeny promised.

I can readily agree that God knows the end from the beginning; but to make it necessary that man transgress, in order to keep his Maker's command, places a club in the hands of the sceptic; man becomes a mere machine, not a free agent, and charges God with being the author of moral evil. I believe as a church we do not wish to help the sceptic, unless towards reconciliation to Deity; and also that man is a free agent, and God does not create moral evil, are standard teachings of the church, recognized by all.

In Genesis 3:16, the language of God addressed to the woman after the fall declares, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and conception." Does this not strongly indicate there was or could have been conception before transgression?

I believe the second part of the answer, viz., "Adam fell that men might be," does not prove the position, and the conclusion is based upon a wrong interpretation of the language of the Book of Mormon. On page 57, paragraph 8, that book declares, as quoted above. I believe this, but do not consider that it was necessary for both Adam and Eve to sin that man might be. Let us reason. Eve was in transgression first. What was the penalty? Separation from her home, the garden, and also from Adam; presuming he had not partaken of the forbidden fruit, the result would have been divorce, no intercourse and thus necessarily no progeny. For proof see fifth line from bottom of page 57.

Notice, Adam fell. He alone is spoken of here. Yes, realizing the consequences, not being deceived, he transgressed knowingly, that he might be with the helpmeet God had given him, and as a natural consequence progeny would result.

It seems to me this view offers a solution that clears God from being a merciless dictator and allows man his agency in Edenic conditions as well as now.

ALEX. McMULLEN.

WIARTON, Ontario, January 26, 1903.

[If "Adam fell that men might be," would men have been if Adam had not fallen? In answering the question, "What would have become of us, had Eve never eaten of the forbidden fruit?" as we did, "Nothing," we answered it in the Spirit in which it was asked. All that it is permitted us to know aside from revelation is what has and does transpire; the rest is speculation, a sort of reasoning from supposed cause to a hypothetical result.

Adam and Eve were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth when placed in the garden, and before the fall. And it is fair to presume that they would have had children had they remained in the garden. But, who can tell how many, and who would they have been—mortals like we are—and would we have been of the number? It would be the merest supposition to say, yes.

After the fall and in the conditions obtaining outside the garden, Eve's conception was multiplied and we who are born out of the garden are within the supposed possibilities.

Questions of this sort are absolutely profitless. So far as God's dealings with man are concerned, whatever he has done has been the work of design, the end to be attained carefully worked out from the beginning; hence, no room for supposing any other and opposite act or result.

The question as asked presupposes the existence of the "us," "what would have become of us," as if the effect to result to us were in the now. Our answer was based on the fact that we are because Eve did transgress, and ate of the fruit. We are a part of the result of that act of disobedience; being that, we have no basis for supposition that we would have been from the occurring of any other event, as we can have no knowledge that we would have been upon any other event. Hence, if the events by which we are had not occurred, we would not have been.—EDITOR.]

It is easier to see a fault in another man's course than to perceive his good qualities. Hence a man measures himself by his measure of others. The fault-finder and the sneerer is commonly a small man. As a man approaches greatness, he grows generous and gracious. Not what he thinks of himself, but what he sees in others, shows what he really is. It is well to have this truth in mind as we pass judgment on our fellows.—The Sunday-School Times.

WHO ARE CHRIST'S DISCIPLES?

Quite a number of the ministry contend that individuals who neglect church services and duties can not be expelled from the church; that such expulsion is a penalty to be applied only when some egregious wrong or crime has been committed through which the church is disgraced or brought into open shame. Hence many times when branch officers prefer charges of "unchristianlike conduct" against certain persons who do not attend the regular church services, upon this charge being investigated and proven by an elders' court, the court in presenting its verdict often recommends that the guilty one be left alone, providing he does not commit any act by which reproach is brought upon the church. Thus implying that members can not be expelled for simply absenting themselves from church meetings. I frankly admit that such recommendation would be proper and in harmony with the law, where circumstances which can not be controlled; such as, for instance, where a sister, whose unbelieving husband forbids her attending the church services, or sickness, and in some cases poverty obtains. However, such conditions and circumstances should be known to the branch officers, and the court formulate their verdict according to the testimony of said officers. The writer assumes the position, that persistent, willful neglect to attend church services is a sin, i. e., transgression of God's law (see 1 John 3:4). And, we are informed, God can not look with the least degree of allowance upon sin. (Doctrine and Covenants 1:5.) Therefore, to condone or excuse sin, great or small, is an action unwarranted by God, and is itself sin. For, it is willful neglect on the part of the officers (elders) upon whom God has imposed the duty to see that his law is kept. "Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessing; ye that hear me: and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest of all cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me. And I will be your Ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine."—Doctrine and Covenants 41:1, 2. This excerpt shows us, firstly, that God gave a law to govern his church, that things might be kept right before him. Secondly, the elder's duty is to enforce this law. Thirdly, he that receiveth this law and doeth it, the same is God's disciple. Fourthly, he that saith he receiveth his law and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you. James says, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."—1:22. Paul says, "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."—Romans 2:13. Jesus says, He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them is wise, he that doeth them not is foolish. (Matthew 7:24-27.)

There is one conspicuous feature of God's law we must not overlook; and that is, every integral item of that law must be observed. There is no discrimination, as greater and lesser, or important and unimportant. We argue that to neglect the command of baptism, or repentance, or faith, is sin, and the wages of sin, (any or every sin) is death. (Romans 6:23.) Then James in chapter 2:10 shows us plainly that all laws given by God are equally important and imperative. Upon these premises, we contend that to willfully absent ourselves from church services is a sin, and rebellion against God an evidence of nondiscipleship. The penalty, says God, is they "shall be cast out from among you."—Doctrine and Covenants 41:2. In a revelation given to the church in August, 1831, God says; "Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shalt be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer."—Doctrine and Covenants 59:2, 3. Here is a command every bit as imperative as any in the decalogue, or the past principles of the oracles of God. "Thou shalt" occurs three times in connection with his command. To obey this command is evincing true discipleship, to refuse to do so is evincive of rebellion. Now, let us consider the Lord's reasons for commanding our attendance at the house of prayer. Firstly, to offer a sacrifice unto the Lord in righteousness, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Secondly, "that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world." If all this could be done at home acceptably to God and with profit to ourselves, God would not have issued the command as given above. Is not this revelation a standing rebuke to those who excuse their indifference and neglect to and of divine service by saying they can serve God just as well at home as they can at church. God says they can not! One other reason given by the Lord why his people should assemble in public worship is that we should offer our oblations and sacraments (Lord's supper) unto him. I now desire to point out that only those who partake of the sacrament can receive of spiritual life and continue in Christ. In order to partake of the sacrament it is necessary that we attend the house of prayer, where sacrament is administered. "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up in the resurrection of the just. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. This is that bread which came down from heaven; not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead; he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever." John 6: 53-58. Those regarding this command of the Lord, partaking of sacrament, receive the bread of life and dwell in Christ and Christ in them. To have this "life" continued, we must continue in obedience to this command. Our discipleship is predicated upon this continued obedience. "If you continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed," says Jesus.

In John, fifteenth chapter, Jesus using the illustration of the vine draws an analogy between our relationship with him, and the relationship of the branches to the vine.

"I am the vine and ye [the disciples] are the branches." As life, vigor, and fruition are only possible in the branches of the vine so long as they continue in communion with the vine, that the sap may be transmitted and diffused throughout the entire whole, so is it just as necessary that we, who are branches of the true vine, which is Christ, receive of and continue to receive that spiritual life, vigor, and power of producing spiritual fruit, which is the Holy Ghost flowing to us through Christ (the vine). If by some cause the communion or association with Christ, the vine, is severed, the branch (disciples) must wither and become dead. Jesus, the great expounder of the science of botany, which he originated, says the inevitable consequence is they shall be cut off. Why? Because they not only disfigure the tree (the church) but they encumber the vine and prevent or retard the development of the branches. How sorrowfully is this true of those who willfully absent themselves from church services, neglect these duties and privileges by which our communion with Christ is sustained. They can only wither and die. And in their spiritual drooping and death if allowed to remain as lifeless branches (disciples), they must impede the progress of the whole, for, when "one member suffers all the members suffer." Just as the diligent gardener cuts off and prunes out the dead from the living, so Jesus would have his gardeners, elders, prune his trees, churches, and cut off these lifeless members. The command is "They shall be cast off from among you" as dead branches.

In cases, then, where it is proven that members willfully and persistently neglect the means of grace provided for in those services, after having been kindly labored with by the branch officers, the elders' court should bring in their verdict harmoniously with the instructions contained in the foregoing revelations, thereby sustaining the teacher in his duty, which is to see "that the church [members] meet together often."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11. Besides conserving the best interest of the whole and proving faithful to the God-appointed mission to see that the law (the whole law of God) is kept.

I know of many cases where the teacher with other of the branch officers have visited and labored with delinquent members in this regard endeavoring to get them to attend their church meetings, very often the neglectful person will promise to do so; but, also the promise is never realized. This procedure is continued for years in some instances, but with non-effect until the officers become tired, and quit visiting altogether. Still all the time these delinquent and lifeless members are reported year after year as being in good standing. Once in a while a teacher is found sufficiently courageous to prefer the charge of unchristianlike conduct against members absenting themselves from church meetings so persistently. When, however, the matter comes before the elder's court (whose duty it is to see that God's law is kept), the verdict often is "that such members be left alone unless the officers can prove that they have either been drunk, or committed adultery, or apostatized, or done something criminal," stating there is no law warranting expulsion of members for nonattendance at services. I have examined some branch records with the officers where I have found from twenty to thirty names reported thereon, who never attended service, and when I inquired the reason why such members were not expelled, the answer was that nothing could be proven against them besides neglecting to attend. I also learned of cases where some of these members had not partaken of the sacrament for years, paid no attention to the church whatever, and paying nothing for church expenses, as required in the law. Is it not evident to the intelligent mind that such persons are not disciples of Christ because they do not the things of the law? Why not the elders carry out the law which says that such members shall be expelled, bringing in their verdict in accordance therewith? (Sec. 41: 1-2.)

The writer is of the opinion that if the law was faithfully carried out a larger degree of spirituality would be the result and our branches would flourish far beyond what they have done in the past. The teachers and deacons, whose duty it is attend to this part of the law, would labor not only more assiduously, but more cheerfully, because being supported by the eldership. I do not believe God would make it the imperative duty that the teachers are to see that the members attend to their duties by attending to their meetings often, unless he had also intended that they should be sustained by the elders (whose duty it is to see that God's law is kept) in the performance of their duties. What use is it for the teachers to labor if the elders neglect or refuse to perform their duty in harmony with them according to law? Therefore I conclude that those who believe in and do the things contained in the law are disciples of Christ; and, those who do not believe and perform the things of the law after being labored with kindly and firmly should be cast out, as directed by the Lord. As a natural consequence the remaining branches would receive more vitality and produce more abundant fruit. Jesus says "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples."

THE HOLINESS MOVEMENT.

A party in Indianola, Iowa, has received from some source a copy of the tract, "The Latter Day Saints, Who are they?" Result? A letter addressed to me. This party says, "I see by reading one of your pamphlets that you do not understand the Holiness. You stated that the Holiness Movement preached they could not sin. Now this is altogether false. They preach that the bent to sin is removed in sanctification and they have no desire to sin but are as liable to sin as Adam was before the fall."

My statement in the tract is, "We are opposed to the so-called Holiness Movement the votaries of which declare they can not commit sin, men are 'justified' by obeying the truth; they are 'sanctified' by the word of God."

Our friend criticises this statement. According to this critic God takes out of their heart all desire to sin, and yet they are as liable to sin as was Adam. Did God take out of Adam's heart all desire to sin? No. If all desire to sin is taken away, then we can not sin. A desire to do always preceded the deliberate performance of an act; hence if all desire to sin is taken away we can not sin in the absence of said desire, sin being a deliberate rejection of the right because of a carnal desire to do wrong. Christ said, "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." I have investigated the "Holiness Movement," and they affirm that through the process of spiritual sanctification God works a complete revolution in their lives: that where hitherto they have erred and desired to err, now their will is subdued and all their future actions are not the result of their own volition but God willing in and through them. Then it is clearly seen, if their own will is dormant and God's will in them supreme, there is no possibility for them to sin.

As a church we believe in holiness and sanctification. Holiness comes through a constant application of the whole law of Christ. Holiness is the goal for which we strive and not the swaddling clothes of our spiritual infancy. Holiness is a growth and not an endowment. It is from within out and not from without in. Holiness is the moral and spiritual attainment of the true followers of Christ, and not a divine protectorate against sin. No man can be considered holy until his own will has so wrought until there is unison between the will of God and his own.

Christ prayed that the Father would sanctify the disciples through the truth. It is the truth which sanctifies. The "Holiness Movement" is an anomalous one and will not bear examination in the light of the word of God. I append a few quotations in refutation of their plea.

"And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."—1 John 2: 1.

"If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us: If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us."—1 John 1: 8-10.

The passage in 1 John 3: 9 should read: "Whosoever is born of God doth not continue in sin; for the Spirit of God remaineth in him; and he can not continue in sin, because he is born of God, having received that Holy Spirit of promise."

So likewise the passage in chapter 5, verse 18: "We know that whosoever is born of God continueth not in sin; but he who is begotten of God and keepeth himself, that wicked one overcometh him not."

In keeping with this rendition, verse 16 says: "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." This shows that the Saints can sin and be forgiven.

In the instructions relative to healing the sick the statement is made, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

Paul in the seventh chapter of his Roman letter gives a clear elucidation of the fact that with all people there is always more or less an ever-present desire to sin so long as we are in the flesh. Please read.

"Them that sin, rebuke before all, that others also may fear."—1 Timothy 5:20.

In view of the foregoing it is folly to affirm either that we can not or do not sin or that God has taken away from us all desire to sin. How can God reward us "according to our works" if he interposes and abrogates our agency to the extent that our works must be according to his will and not our own? Virtue lies not in a divine protectorate from sin but rather in our own developed will-power to resist it. From the cradle to the grave Christ was tempted by the world, the flesh, and the Devil; and, as with Paul, evil was present with him. He possessed the power to repel the Devil and he departed from him.

Unfortunately I have been privileged to associate with quite a number of men and women who claimed to be wholly sanctified, and who had not sinned for a long period of time. It all rested on what they called sin.

I know of one old man in Pennsylvania who had not sinned for ten years (?) who upon our advent into his part of the country was the most willing one of our enemies to circulate false statements against us. One day he was in the field plowing, and the animal which he was driving, being a provoking creature, his temper got the better of him and he up with a singletree and knocked the creature down. I suppose he was acting upon that statement of Paul, "Be ye angry and sin not." But this loophole is too small for him to get through, as the better translation says, "Can ye be angry and not sin? Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

This same man's wife stood in the doorway and called to him to desist from his brutality and he yelled back at her: "Go into the house and shut your mouth or I will do the same to you." And he had not sinned for ten years!! If that is correct, very few of us will be lost. I have known people wholly sanctified but who were so quarrelsome that even their companions in wedlock have been compelled to leave them. I have known some so penurious that they would haggle for an hour with a poor washer-woman over a few pennies.

No, it will not do to lay claim to so much personal virtue. The better way is to live as pure as we can and allow God and our fellow man to determine the character of our virtue or holiness. Sounding our own praise is not Christlike, for when one approached him saying, "Good Master," he gave reply, "Why callest thou me good? none is good save one, that is God."

The Holiness people, like all other extremists, have taken a doctrine, which if properly applied, is all right, and have carried it to extremes. The great purpose of the gospel is to develop character; to call out the latent forces of good within the man and developing them until they will overbalance and crowd out the evil. It is the supremacy of the mind and the soul over the flesh, the body. It is the coöperation of the divine with the human. God supplies the tools, we must do the work. The principles of truth emanates from God, we must apply them before we reap the harvest. Holiness and sanctification are the end, the consummation of service, and not the beginning.

Yours for an exalted faith and service,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

THE NEED OF A NEW APOLOGETIC.

The most serious religious problem of to-day, as viewed by the Reverend William P. Merrill, of Chicago, is bound up in "the fact that the church is a factor of lessening importance in the lives of good people—morally good, helpfully good, aggressively good people." The greatest need of the church, he adds, "is such a presentation of Christianity as shall make it the chief object in the hearts of such people." He says further (in the Biblical World, January):

"Of course, I know that some surface indications are the other way; church-membership has grown five times as fast as the population of the country, benevolence four times as fast as the country's wealth, and all that. But this is more than a matter of figures. It is a question of the place of the Gospel and the church in the hearts of leading men and women, leading in ethical standards, in helpful activity, in thought. And I believe that there is an increasing number of such leading men and women whose membership in the church is not the chief thing to them, means little if any more to them than their membership in the art institute, or the orchestral association, or the women's clubs."

There are many questions, continues Mr. Merrill, on which the light of a new and practical apologetic is needed. He mentions, in particular, the subjects of "salvation," "the spiritual life," and "the social value of the church." We quote again:

"The first need is to show that salvation is something definite, practical, and vital. I use the word 'salvation' in a loose sense, to denote that which is offered in the Gospel, that which we present to men in our preaching. The man who has 'accepted Christ,' the man who 'is a Christian' has something. What is it? . . .

"Do you clear the matter up by saying that salvation is 'from sin'? That sounds well, but what does it mean? That the Christian is always moral, and the unbeliever always immoral? The facts are against such a statement. That the Christian is not counted as a sinner in the sight of God? That does not appeal to the ethically sensitive man of to-day, who cares little what he is counted, and everything for what he is. Do you make the matter much clearer when you say that salvation means 'character'? Can you put any sharp, strong meaning into that? Has it any vital connection with the person and work of Christ, and the truth of his Gospel, and with faith in him? Is the preaching of the Gospel anything more than the teaching of ethics? If so, what? Shall we fly with Doctor McConnell to the theory of conditional immortality? Shall we find the answer in the life of fellowship with God?

"These questions may indicate the deeply felt need of a new statement here, a conception of salvation definite enough, practical enough, vitally important enough, to attract to Christ those before whom it is set. I believe many besides myself are waiting for the man who can give that question, 'What is salvation?' not a final answer (for that is impossible), but the answer we need in and for our own time."

The second great need, affirms Mr. Merrill, is a clear statement about the whole matter of the spiritual life:

"Here is the very core of Christianity as we apprehend it to-day. We differ in our creeds, but evangelical Christians are agreed as to the reality and importance of the spiritual life. We are turning more and more from the legal, formal presentations of Christianity to the vital and spiritual. The Holy Spirit, the indwelling Christ, fellowship with God—these and like phrases are used in this day as never before. One of the first things in amending the confession of faith of the Presbyterian Church was to insert a chapter on 'The Holy Spirit,' and the spiritual life. . . . Yet here, too, is not the strong, keen-sighted apologist needed? He must discriminate against counterfeits, loose unworthy notions of spiritual life. Occult and mystic systems abound. It is needful to heed John's exhortation, and 'try the spirits whether they be from God, for many false spirits are come into the world.'"

The third need Mr. Merrill deems "perhaps the greatest and most apparent." It is "to make clear that the church has a function in society, a part of supreme importance to play in human progress and well-being." The writer declares on this point:

"I believe the church is not indifferent to the masses, but only uncertain. It realizes its failure to reach those most in need more bitterly than do the masses themselves, or the critics of the church. But it waits to know what to do, what path to take. Are the settlements pointing out to us the true way, and is the institutional church the right response to make to the need? Is something more radical necessary, a Protestant order of St. Francis vowed to poverty and service of the poor, serving in a new spirit and form of consecration? Professor Harnack hints that this is needed, that missionaries and mission workers should take the tenth chapter of Matthew as their rule of life. Do we find the right guides in the ministers who are going to factories and other great business centers, and there preaching to the working men and reaching them personally? Is Doctor Strong the true prophet, and does he point out what is truly to be the 'next great awakening'? This at least is clear to us, that the ministry and the church must be consecrated as never before to real social service; there must be less following Christ for selfish reasons, and more taking up the cross. But who will show us the way?

"I believe the heart of the church would gladly respond to the right call. And I believe the world would respond to such a ministry. Bishop Winnington Ingram, of London, is the greatest living apologist in this line. By his work, by his sacrifices, he has found great influence, not only in winning the masses, but in winning the cultured, the indifferent, because they see in him the representative of a Christianity that is a social force. The church must become, not in name, but in fact, the greatest brotherhood on earth, the greatest instrument for truth, righteousness, and love in society. That will best commend Christ and his gospel to a world keenly alive to social conditions ethically sensitive, and indifferent to religion largely because organized religion seems dragging behind rather than leading, in the effort to realize the brotherhood of man."—Literary Digest, January 31.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"And if in thy life on earth,
In the chamber or by the hearth,
'Mid the crowded city's tide,
Or high on the lone hillside,
Thou canst cause a thought of peace,
Or an aching thought to cease,
Or a gleam of joy to burst
On a soul in sadness nursed;
Spare not thy hand, my child;
Though the gladdened should never know
The well-spring amid the wild,
Whence the waters of blessings flow."

Friendship.

Dear friend, I pray thee if thou wouldst be proving Thy strong regard for me,
Make me no vows, lip-service is not loving;
Let thy faith speak for thee.

Swear not to me that nothing can divide us—
So little such oaths mean—
But when distrust and envy creep beside us,
Let them not come between.

Say not to me the depths of thy devotion
Are stronger than the sea;
But watch lest doubt or some unkind emotion
Embitter it for me.

Vow not to love me ever and for ever,
Words are such idle things,
But when we differ in opinion, never Hurt me by little things.

I am sick of words; they are so lightly spoken
And spoken are but air.

I'd rather feel thy trust in me unbroken,
Than to list to words unfair.

If all the little proofs are heeded,
If thou art always kind,
No sacrifice, no promise will be needed
To satisfy my mind.

LAPORTE CITY, Iowa, January 24.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: I have never seen anything from this part of the country and thought I was entirely alone in the faith, but in my last HERALD I saw a letter from a sister, Mrs. J. A. Goodrich. If the sister will send me her address I will try to find her sometime when I go up to Waterloo. I inquired for Saints when I was staying in Waterloo over a year ago, but could not hear of any.

I take the HERALD and Ensign; and after I read them I would be glad to send them to some one who is not able to take them and would like to read them.

I have not seen any one ask for the Autumn Leaves or Hopes that Sr. Jane Heaton offered. I would be glad to get them to read, and would then send them to any one who would like them.

I enjoy reading the letters and rejoice that so much good is being done. And again it makes me sad to read the opposition some of the elders have to contend with and can get no place to preach and tell the angel's message.

Your sister,

R. F. D. No. 4.

MRS. MARY JOHNSON.

Dear Sisters: I have been a silent reader of the different views on the flower missions, and would like to tell my story too. I believe the flowers themselves have a mission regardless of by whom or how they come to us. Not long ago a poor mother crushed and nearly heartbroken by the sudden and terrible death of an only son, was prostrate on her bed for weeks. Words failed in her awful bereavement to bring her comfort, and it seemed the gates of heaven were closed against her, and that God had forgotten her in her sorrow. She had tried to serve him nearly all her life, but when the tempter came and said, "God is cruel." Oh, what a struggle was going on in that poor heart! But one day a neighbor (but the poor mother never realized just who brought the first) came with a bouquet of lovely flowers, the same dear little flowers that had been gathered so many times for "Mamma" by the loving hands that death had stilled, and to the mother it seemed that the dear one spoke to her through the flower that they both loved so well, and he seemed to say, "God careth for the dear flowers through the cold winter, only to give them life on the glad spring morning. So, too, will he care for me and in the glad resurrection morn I shall greet you again, He has promised that 'though, we die yet shall we live again.'" Think you not that those dear flowers had a mission of their own, and that we should accept them for the lesson they teach us? God grant that every flower mission girl may not only bring comfort to the afflicted but take the flower lesson home to herself.

A MOTHER.

WHILE reading the above we have been pondering seriously upon the question, as to why so few of the sisters enter in and occupy the space gratuitously offered them in the Home Column? That it is not for the want of talent we have long been convinced, and if the many who are capable of so doing were only to contribute their mite, it would take but a portion of time so small that few indeed would be able to plead "want of time" as an excuse. Is not the injunction, "Help one another and be kind," a divine and loving one? In the "Home Column" the opportunity of doing this is offered in so many ways that we often marvel they are not embraced with gladness and alacrity such as would forever exclude the necessity of filling the space with selections. What do you think of it sisters? —Ed.

MIAMI STATION, Missouri, February 2.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote to the church paper. I am busy in gospel work, preaching in new places where they never heard the angel's message. I preached about fourteen sermons at this place, in Sr. Kay's house. Went to Dewitt, next town below, on the Wabash Railroad. Tried to get a church, but was told a revival was going on. No one received me, so went on to Dalton, Missouri. Succeeded in getting the Presbyterian church at this place. Preached one night, large crowd out to hear, but could not get the church any longer. Was told that they had no coal for fuel. I came back to Miami Station, borrowed a horse, and rode over frozen roads, thirteen miles, to Jamaica Bend Schoolhouse and gave out meetings, beginning on Friday night. Had a full house. The people told me that they had had no preaching for two years or over. They were glad some one had come to preach for them. I will continue until I see what can be done.

I am here in the "regions roundabout" Zion, just across the Missouri River from Independence Stake. This is a peculiar field. I have gone into small towns with as many as two church buildings in them, where the people told me they had not heard a sermon preached in six months, of any kind. Glad to have me come and occupy. The people come out splendidly but do not obey the gospel for some cause. They do not oppose it, but treat me well. Several believe in nearly every place, but no baptisms; only three since I have been in this field.

I believe the Lord is opening up the way for us to reach the people in the "regions roundabout." So many people all over this country never heard a sermon by our people. I meet very little persecution in these parts, only in the way of small talk and rumor.

Dewitt, the town that refused to receive me, burned up, about half of it, a few days after I left.

I believe a great work will be done in these parts yet.

In bonds,

J. D. ERWIN.

PAWHUSKA, Oklahoma, January 29.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the Latter Day Saint Church for about five years, but the first year was all the Latter Day Saint meetings that I ever got, and our ministers went to Iowa, and I have not been to a Saint's meeting since. Down here there is nothing but Methodists or Catholics, so I do not go very often. The Lord has seemingly forgotten this part of the wicked earth. The people seem to think of nothing but money. I long for the day when I can again hear the true gospel preached in its fullness. If any minister passes this way, he would be made welcome at my house, one and a half miles west of Pawhuska, Osage Nation. The nearest meetings are at Topeka, Kansas.

With the hope that I may soon be among the Saints, and by asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints, I will close this letter.

Your brother,

JAMES FARMER.

OGDEN, Utah, January 31.

Editors Herald: We are still in the conflict and keeping busy. The needs of our present missionary work have been partially met by the use of a horse and buggy which a couple of our members here have placed at our disposal for the winter. We are putting out appointments in the country roundabout and driving out to fill them. We find some interest, some opposition, and what is the hardest to meet, a good deal of indifference among the members of the dominant church here. Still we think we are making some progress. We are trying so to present the gospel message that the "good will toward men" may be felt by all who hear us.

By request of Bro. W. H. Kelley we have lately made a trip to the extreme northern part of Idaho, to Kootenai County, where Brn. Holt and Harris have each had a hand in planting the work. Sagle is the name of the postoffice, and our meetings were held in the schoolhouse. The interest and attendance was good, and two were baptized there this time, making four Saints now in that neighborhood, and many friends. We held twelve preaching services and many were the wishes expressed that we might soon return and give them another series of gospel meetings. That portion of the Rocky Mountain Mission known as the Panhandle of Idaho should be disassociated from the Rocky Mountain Mission and made a part of the Washington District or Pacific Slope Mission. Or else there should be a missionary from this mission given that as his especial field. It is a promising field, but not easily accessible from the southern portion of this mission.

We were surprised at the mildness of the weather there, as we expected to find it very cold. Sixteen degrees above zero was the coldest weather while we were there. Snow was plentiful, and we had a sleigh-ride every day; and, now listen while we say it, fresh venison or fresh fish for nearly every meal. Now does not some one want that field? The mountains are quite heavily wooded, and game and fish are plentiful. Well, while we were hunting for men we did enjoy the fruit of some one's hunting for venison and fishing for whitefish. But what was better, we were made to rejoice by the presence of the Spirit while presenting the gospel message.

We wish the HERALD God-speed.

COALGATE, Oklahoma, January 28.

Editors Herald: God has given the Christ to us for a witness, a leader, and commander. (Isaiah 55:4.) We should observe with all diligence all that Jesus taught, and be willing to follow where he leads. We should always try to please our great Redeemer, letting the world, that are not of us, speak what it may concerning our creed, for our creed is all truth. Jesus says, "If ye do the will of the Father ye shall know of the doctrine, whether I speak of myself or whether it is of God." This is clear enough to cause us to press forward all the time and do what we can for the Master's cause. It may seem hard when the evil one tempts us, but we should never give up to our temptation, lest we would be discouraged. The Devil, the great master of all evil, is always seeking to overthrow the Master's work.

Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be able to defend this great and noble work that God has given in these last days.

It is somewhat discouraging to see how the world is trying to use us, but so it was in the days of our Savior. We should keep pressing forward and not be discouraged. Let us be humble and prayerful before God.

MALLARD, Iowa, January 30.

Editors Herald: I am preaching and lecturing to some of the people who attended the Shamberger-Hunt debate, held here last October. I have been assured that had the HERALD editors heard the scoring and low estimate that a prominent member of the Brethren or Dunkard Missionary Board gave O. J. Beaver, during the time of the debate, for his dishonorable methods used in arranging for, and the conducting of his side of the discussion as a moderator, his (Beaver's) false article which appeared in the Gospel Messenger, would not have been copied into our publication. (See HERALD, November 24, 1902.) I assure you that Brn. F. A. Smith, J. M. Baker, D. King, and others would gladly bear witness of the above.

Of the debate, Mr. Beaver wrote: "The Brethren at Mallard are much built up, and I think it will be a great help to the cause at that point." Does the following statement from one of their members indicate that their work is "much built up"? He said, "We have held but one preaching service since the debate, over three months ago."

I will not intrude with a full reply to Mr. Beaver's article, but will say that only a few true sentences can be found in his entire "writeup."

Bro. W. J. McKim, of Deloit, Iowa, is here in the interest of the Sunday-schools, and he has filled two appointments very acceptably. This field is ripe for gospel work, and I truly hope careful laborers may be sent here the coming conference year.

C. J. HUNT.

SEILING, Oklahoma, January 27.

Editors Herald: Will you please publish the following as an apology to the Saints of the Oklahoma District for the loss of the conference minutes, held at Seiling, December 5 to 7, 1902. I regret the matter very much, though not altogether to blame. I wrote the minutes up very carefully, and handed the letter to the mail carrier, as had been my custom, as I lived two and one half miles from the office and directly on the route. It was carefully addressed, with my own private stamp on the upper left hand corner, and this is the first time a letter has ever been lost that I have mailed in that way.

I watched anxiously for the report and wondered why it was not published. Fearing something was wrong I wrote a letter of inquiry to the editors on January 18, and am just in receipt of a letter informing me that the report has never reached the office.

I have since moved from the place where I then resided, and my notes got destroyed. I thought to write a synopsis from memory but find that I am unable at this late date to do so. So I write this as an explanation. I trust this may be a satisfactory explanation.

H. F. DURFEY.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, February 1.

Editors Herald: To-night Brn. Allen Tannehill, Emmett Palmer and myself attended the Christian Endeavor meeting at the Christian church, corner of Twentieth and Penn Streets, this city. We sang their songs, prayed and spoke with them. We were benefited by the association with them, and trust they received some good from us.

After the young people's meeting we stayed for preaching by the pastor, Mr. B. M. Easter, with whom we had a short conversation in which we told him that after the services we would distribute our literature at the church doors. We gave him a copy of HERALD of January 21 with the McGarvey-Beattie-Bays article in it; also gave him "The Reply," "One Baptism," "Laying on of Hands," "The Voice of the Good Shepherd," and two or three other tracts. He was frank and courteous to us, and expressed a desire to learn more about the Latter Day Saints.

We also gave a set of tracts and the HERALD to Mr. Allan, who is an associate of Mr. Easter in his church work. Mr. Allan was glad to get the literature, and desires to meet us again.

After the preaching Bro. Palmer went to one door and Bro. Tannehill and I to the other door, each with a bundle of HERALDS, Ensigns, and tracts, of which we gave from one to six to each person as they passed out. None were refused, but all seemed moved with a spirit of investigation and curiosity, for we had given out a few before the preaching services and told them we would give out the rest after the meeting, and that the reading would be of great interest to them.

There were distributed about one hundred copies of the "Reply," twenty HERALDS of January 21, and about three hundred other Ensigns, HERALDS, and tracts. It was all done quietly and with good feeling, not arousing any personal antagonism. We hope the impression of truth may be lasting with those who received it.

In walking home with Mr. Easter after dismissal he said one of the chief objections he had to us was our doctrines of a carnal nature, that interfered with the spiritual teachings of Jesus Christ. When asked for an explanation of what he meant, he said: "Well, polygamy is one of them."

Then we handed him a copy of "The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy," and talked some, with the result that Mr. Easter admitted that perhaps he held a wrong opinion of us, and stated that he would read our literature.

We parted friendly.

JOHN C. GRAINGER.

LOS ANGELES, California, January 30.

Editors Herald: One Tatsuo Yamazaki, a Japanese Buddhist priest, has recently arrived in San Francisco, on his way to Salt Lake City, Utah, whither he is going to study "Mormonism," with a view to better "equip himself to fight the spread of the doctrines of Mormonism in Japan."

This priest comes with the royal sanction; in fact he comes with the delegated authority of the emperor himself.

The emperor has several wives, but he has decreed that his son shall marry but one; he is opposed to the spread of the pernicious doctrine of polygamy in his country. Incidentally, I learn that the "Mormons" have been making numerous converts in Japan and this commission is to counteract, if possible, any further growth.

This, to my mind, is an opportune time for our people to set themselves right with the leading minds of Japan preparatory to the opening up of that country to our missionaries.

I have written to this gentleman referring him to our headquarters and suggesting that he will not do justice to the question of "Mormonism" until he has a personal interview with our worthy president.

We are having lovely rains here. Health of the Saints fairly good. We are still hopeful, though struggling against some obstacles.

Your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

2802 South Grand Avenue.

HUNTINGTON, Arkansas, January.

Editors Herald: This finds me on the hills of Arkansas preaching the gospel of the Son of God to the people. Before coming here, I visited the town of Fanshaw, Indian Territory, and preached four times. The Saints seemed strengthened and some friends were made to the cause. The Saints urged me to come again. I promised to come again when the weather was better, for the roads were in very bad condition.

I then came to this place, a coal mining town, where about five hundred miners work. But I could not get a house in town, so had to take the country for it. I secured the Pine Grove schoolhouse, about four miles from Huntington. Had fair crowds and good order until some one started the story that I had seven wives. So after I had preached five sermons, as I was leaving the schoolhouse I got a shower of eggs. My nephew about nine years old, was hit more than I. Our clothes were badly soiled. But I have secured a schoolhouse two miles nearer town, and commence preaching to-night. Eggs or no eggs, this gospel must be preached for a witness before the end comes.

I rejoice to see through the HERALD that "Bonny Scotland" has two branches of the church organized again. When I left Scotland forty years ago, when the church prospered in Fifeshire, the East of Scotland. The Saints then came to meeting, walked for miles, and brought pieces of bread in their pockets and stayed in the meeting-house all day, speaking of the coming of the angel to Joseph the Seer. But what a change took place when the Utah elders came. I remember the first thing was to preach polygamy. Many of the Saints left the church at that time. I remember my father telling the Utah elders that he for one would have nothing to do with polygamy. My father and mother both renounced polygamy, thank God. They both united with the Reorganized Church. The next thing the Utah elders did was to teach the Scotch Saints to dance the American dances. They called a ball and commenced dancing, and danced all night. I was young at the time, but remember it well.

So that was the breaking up of the church in "Bonny Scotland." But may the time soon come when the church will flourish again in Scotland, and all other lands; and may the words of the Prophet Isaiah soon be fulfilled: "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God."

I ever pray for the redemption of Zion, the welfare of the Saints of God.

PETER ADAMSON.

GULFORD, Missouri, February 4.

Editors Herald: Where is a stopping place in this work that one may rest and have a little recreation? I do not ask this question with a view of stopping, but I would that many would ask themselves this question, and echo will surely answer, Where? In the language of Peter, To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. There is, dear Saints, no place to stop this side of the grave. There is recreation in being actively engaged in labor for our Master. When the Spirit of our Master is given, our burden is lightened, and when the work is done we rest from our labor. Then there is recreation.

Forasmuch, then, as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; for you who have suffered in the flesh should cease from sin, that you no longer the rest of your time in the flesh, should live to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

Sometimes the way may seem dark, trials hard to bear, temptations formidable. Yet the still small voice whispers, On! Christian soldier. Faith, activity, persistence, and wisdom is mighty to save. The victory is sure. As Christ suffered the reproach of the world for us, we should be of the same mind, willing to suffer reproach for the cause of Christ, which is the salvation of men.

As I trudge along on my weary way, sometimes alone, so far as human sympathies are concerned, I think Jesus is cognizant of the good we do. I see labor for all. The Sunday-school, Religio, Gospel Literature Bureau, etc., furnish ample work for all who do not hold the priesthood, and also for many who do. The fact that we should "warn our neighbors" opens up a large field which needs laborers. We often hear the cry, like the Macedonian call, from isolated Saints and friends, "Come over and help us." Young men and maidens, prepare yourselves, get ready for the call. The Lord needs many laborers for the great field, ripe unto the harvest. (Doctrine and Covenants 6:2.)

But now for the present; the time now is ours. Let us hope for the future, for the future largely depends on the present. The Sunday-school, Religio, and General Literature Bureau, furnish opportunities for your education and training. Get into the ranks, young men, young women, and train. Soon the Lord will call from such regular army those who are to represent him abroad. Yes, there is work for the young women as well as the men. There are other places to fill, such as the ones that Srs. Burton, Peterson, Anderson, Palfrey, Frances, Etzenhouser, Stebbins, Clark, Curtis, Hulmes, and a host of others are now filling.

Scandinavia, Germany, China, Portugal, Japan, India, etc., are yet to be opened to visitation of the gospel. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11; Matthew 24: 14; Revelation 4: 6, 7.)

Let us, dear Saints, go on to perfection.

Your brother,

W. B. TORRANCE.

CHICAGO, Illinois, January 19.

Editors Herald: Things here look encouraging, although we have baptized but one the past year. But I have had plenty of other missionary work to do. Things look brighter for my work to prosper in the very near future than ever before. New doors are being opened to me in other churches and missions the latter part of last year and in this the new year. The upper-crust colored people are looking at our tracts and pamphlets and often new faces come to our mission and talk with me about the work. And there is a very noble lady who about two weeks ago sent to my mission a very fine organ worth sixty dollars. She is a very fine organ-player, and hereafter will take the lead of all singing for the mission. May the God of heaven bless her. I am sure that our work will boom here the present year. Our work is onward. I am quite busy with the sick. Quite a number are sick at present. Pray dear Saints all over the land, that Zion may be built up among our race of people.

GEORGE H. GRAVES.

MARYVILLE, Missouri, February 2.

Editors Herald: While renewing for HERALD must say a few words in regard to its valuable pages. It seems the HERALD grows better week by week, and indeed grows dearer to us, as it is the only preacher we have, we being among the isolated ones. We are the only Saints in this vicinity, yet we are trying to let our light shine, that the honest-hearted may see the benefit of, and embrace the genuine gospel.

I sometimes feel impatient and provoked when I hear people asking such questions as, "Do you worship Joe Smith or Jesus Christ?" "I do not see how you can worship Joseph Smith as your God," etc. But when we think of the ministers of various denominations teaching for doctrine, the commandments of men, we are reminded of Paul's saying, "the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Dear Saints, how thankful we should be, that we have been permitted to understand and obey this glorious gospel.

I am indeed glad that it was my lot to be reared by Christian parents who did all in their power to lead me to the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal. And by the help of my heavenly Father I intend to walk in that narrow path until at last it shall be said of me, she has fought the good fight, and has kept the faith.

I have not been as successful as some in getting subscribers for the HERALD; have only succeeded in getting one. But I feel I have done all I could under present circumstances.

Would be glad to have the missionaries call on us at any time. Drop us a card, Bro. Stead, telling us when and where to meet you, and we will not labor under mistake of phone messages again. May God's blessings be with the Saints everywhere, is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

SOPHIA POWELL GUNSOLLEY.

AKIN, Illinois, January 31.

Dear Herald: For the benefit of others I will tell my experience in giving out our church papers at the schoolhouse. I laid my plans and started on Thursday to be there when the school was out, so the children would be sure to take them home. I got there on time and the children came around the buggy. I could not hand them out fast enough. On Friday I went again, with good success. Monday it was still very muddy, and I put it off and did not go. That night I dreamed that I was sitting on the edge of the porch, and people came from all directions and just kept coming, and I had not prepared anything to eat. You can imagine how I looked as they were all expecting something. The interpretation, the Lord had prepared the way for my work, and I had not done my part as it had been planned. I see the necessity of promptness.

I have been wondering what has become of our missionary. He was within three miles of here last June, and has never been back in these parts since. I see from his letter that he has been in Wayne County all winter.

Brn. Ammon White and J. W. Paxton were here a few days and gave us a few sermons and baptized one. I want to say to all who have church papers there are people everywhere who will read them. Try it and see.

Your sister,

MELVINA ULMER.

TUFF, Texas, January 28.

Editors Herald: The work here is a moving slowly. Plenty of opposition to hinder the cause. Bro. John Harp has just closed a series of meetings here; one baptism; others near the kingdom.

At the close of our meeting last night, L. D. Ferguson, of the Christian Church, made a challenge. The propositions were drawn up, and if Bro. H. O. Smith approves the propositions there will be a chance for the honest in heart, and those who are not prejudiced, to get their eyes opened. Mr. L. D. Ferguson commenced a debate here once before, with Bro. T. J. Sheppard. It was never finished, as Bro. Sheppard took the chills and was not able to finish. Mr. Ferguson told Bro. Harp that he did not want him to take a chill.

Bro. Harp is a good worker. We need a dozen such men in our district. He never gets tired of telling the gospel story. We hope that he will be sent back here next year. The work needs building up; it will take a rustler to do it.

I hope to live to see the day when all the Saints will do their part, each and every one be willing to make sacrifice for the Lord. Then the work would build up and not go down. May the Lord bless each effort that is put forth for his cause, is my prayer.

O. L. ADAMS.

JAMAICA, Iowa, January 26.

Editors Herald: I received the Photo Album all right, and can say I am well pleased with it. It is well worth the sixty-five cents. I would not take double the price of it, if I could not get another one; there are so many familiar faces in it that I knew years gone by, when I first came into the church, some that I never expect to see again till we meet on the other side.

I am striving to so live that I may be able to meet my sisters and brothers in Christ in the great by and by. I am one of the isolated ones and sometimes think my lot is a hard one. But when I read of others that are in the church and have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for three or four years, I think I ought not to complain, for I do have the privilege of going to the reunion every fall and enjoying the good sermons and associating with my sisters and brothers in the faith. The Lord has blessed me with means to be able to take the church papers, and I enjoy them so much; I would be very lonely without them. I do not see how a true Latter Day Saint can get along without the church literature and keep pace with the church. I read my papers, then loan them to my neighbors. Some will read them and some do not seem to care about reading them; but I try to let my light shine and try to live so as to bring no reproach on the cause I love so well.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that I may ever be faithful and hang to the rod of iron and be saved in His kingdom.

Your sister,

MRS. R. L. GOREHAM.

ALEDO, Illinois, February 2.

Dear Herald: While perusing your pages in the past, seeking for spiritual food, I have feasted at your table, laden with that which enriched the soul, gave the needed cheer and comfort to the faint-hearted, enabled the weary traveler on the rough and rugged highway, through the forest of opposition and uncontrollable events, and over the stormy ocean of life.

This repast we have found on your fair pages from childhood till the present time. May the richest blessings of the omnipotent Jehovah rest upon all who contribute to your pages, in the glory of his name and honor of his cause.

I have been made to comprehend the truth of the prophetic statement that God is no respecter of persons, but that he will honor and love all those who obey him, be their number many, or the chosen two or three. He hideth not his face, but like a mantle of peace does the Spirit of God rest on those who worship him with a holy heart and a contrite spirit. Our duty may call us far from home and loved ones, meeting opposition on the right and on the left, enduring the scoffs and the frowns of the world. But in the midst of all our difficulties and afflictions God is there, everywhere, around and about us is the all-seeing eye of the great I Am.

I can testify of his goodness, that when despair seemed to fasten itself upon me and prayer seemed a vainful repetition, true to his blessed promise, that we shall not be burdened above that which we are able to bear, came the needed peace from above through the voice of his Holy Spirit, full of instruction and hope, or by dreams at night.

While reading an account of Sr. M. J. Head's vision in HERALD of January 21, my eyes moistened with tears of joy as it brought vividly to my mind the blessed revelation I had in a dream a few years past, that peace that passeth understanding, that heavenly joy of which I tasted, when earth shall be as Eden and we shall know as we are known. I will prize it as a sweet memento while this life shall last.

I dreamed that I was in company with other Saints. We were pressing our way through a forest. There were traces of weariness and fatigue depicted on our countenances, as we had burdens which were hard to bear. Now and then we picked treasures from the underbrush and shrubbery that lined our pathway that we thought were too precious to pass by. In so doing we were oftentimes very weary. Our physical strength would be almost gone. Gathering courage anew, we pressed our way onward, sometimes looking about us for a resting place, but none could be found. There was naught for us to do but move steadily onward.

Finally there lay before us a large body of water, and we embarked on its bosom. Our little bark, after riding many a foamy billow, landed safely on the other shore. Dear Saints, how I wish it were possible to command language that would give you a comprehension of the rest and joy that came to us, and of the glory of God that pervaded the atmosphere where we were transferred from this boat into as it seemed a car of exquisite workmanship.

Smoothly, and without one jar, we glided along over a carpet of beautiful verdure, such as was not earthly. We were clothed in soft, white apparel.

We gazed on the beauty of our surroundings; and far as the eye could see waved boughs and foliage of grandeur, intermingled with beautiful flowers of delicate tints and exquisite whiteness.

We moved slowly and smoothly along. Oh! the joy and delight that filled my being as I reached out my hand quite frequently and plucked those snowy white flowers by the wayside. The soft, rich, mellow light of the glory of God rested in holy benediction on every face and everything was surrounded with it.

We were still moving onward when the morning light awoke me from my slumber.

Now with love to the loyal household of God, whom ye are my brethren and sisters in Christ, after this voyage over the tempestuous sea of life, may we through the grace of God anchor our frail barks safely on the other shore, is the prayer of your humble sister,

MINA HARNEY.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, February 2.

Editors Herald: I closed a week's meetings two weeks ago to-night at Akron, where I baptized one, and left others near the door of the kingdom.

I returned here then and commenced meetings in the suburbs near McCook in South Dakota, just across the line. Bro. Oscar Case had left a good interest there. I expect to continue the most of this week. Saturday night about twenty-six were present. We have a good interest, and I think that some will accept the truth soon.

We have a nice little hall here in the city, on West Third and Kansas Streets. I am proud of our little band of Sioux City Saints, and of our brother who is branch president, Bro. M. P. Berg. He is a safe man in the work of the Lord, and he has the esteem of all the Saints, and is worthy of it, too.

I have made my home while here in the city at Bro. Townsend's and Bro. Harris'. The former place has been a home for the elders for years.

I expect to go to our quarterly conference at Little Sioux the 7th and 8th, and from there I expect to go to Sandy Point for a short time. I have more calls for labor than I can fill. I lost two months last spring on the account of my mother's sickness, and I am not yet caught up with my work.

The outlook for the work looks good in this district. The Lord has blessed me of late in my efforts for the truth.

116 Bluff Street.

W. A. SMITH.

MISSOURI VALLEY, Iowa, January 26.

Dear Editors: I recently sustained severe injury. My knee was split about four inches clear to and into the bone by a tree falling against it on January 16th, and I have since been in bed.

I feel this morning like writing to your columns. I am well pleased with your effort to establish and maintain "the work of the Lord" against such strong opposition. I appreciate the "History of the Church," which is an indispensable collection of facts. I have been comparing "Beadle" and some others' statements with the "History." The results are very gratifying.

I have not done much for some months. My health is not the best. I have had to remain at home for nearly five months by reason of sickness in our family. Our oldest boy, nine years, cut off one of his fingers in a corn sheller in August. In November the other boy, seven years old, had an abscess under his ear, which lasted for six weeks in all; and lastly, here I am with almost a broken limb. It has closed up the way for the present, but my highest ambition is for the prosperity of the work.

Our branch business-meeting convenes Saturday, the 31st. We have not been able to hold meetings regularly for some time; but I feel that many of the Saints are beginning to feel more keenly the need of keeping the important command, "Meet together often." May the Lord bless us with his Spirit until we all become fully alive to the necessity of living by every word that proceeds from his mouth.

I have looked forward to the coming conference for a long time with the happy thought that I might attend, but the way has closed up, from present outlook.

May the Lord sustain and guide all to the obtaining of the desired results, is my prayer. C. F. PRATT.

PARRY SOUND, Ontario, January 30.

Dear Editors: The good work moves onward here amidst the opposition of the enemies to our grand cause. On the 14th of last month three were added by baptism, two of whom were heads of families. On the 27th instant two more were added,—a young lady, a member of the Church of England, and a Mr. Hodge, the husband of a sister who was baptized on December 14 last, thus making five baptized since I came here on November 18. Bro. R. J. McKenny has been a great help to me and the work here, in supplying me with tracts and pamphlets for free distribution, as well as financially. He is a whole-souled boy, and a credit to the church.

I organized a Sabbath-school here on the evening of the 28th to be held at Sr. Cronk's house. It will be called the Parry Harbor School. We had quite a gathering at the service and organization. Bro. Robert McKenny was elected superintendent and Bro. Hodge assistant. We intend to begin the class-work on February 8. We expect to start out with twenty scholars, divided into three classes. Sr. Cronk has a splendid house for school work, having three large, separate rooms, which will avoid confusion in class-work.

We are having very cold and stormy weather. I opened up a new place last night seven miles out of town and had to return to-day through a terrible snow and wind-storm, one of Manitoba's blizzards. Not very good medicine for one just getting over an attack of la grippe. SAMUEL TOMLINSON.

Church Secretary's Notice.

Reduced Railway Rates to General Conference.—The Western Passenger Association has granted the usual reduction in rates, certificate plan, to the General Conference and Conventions, to be held at Independence, Missouri, in April next. Particulars later, on completion of all arrangements. R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary. Lamoni, Iowa, February 9, 1903.

Notices.

To Missionaries in Kansas, Missouri, and Southern Illinois: I desire all the ministers in my field—which comprises Kansas, Missouri, and Southern Illinois, to report to me on the first of March, the following items: Whole number of services attended, times preached, number baptized, number ordained, branches organized, districts organized, marriages, children blessed, and the number of sick administered to. State if you desire to have an appointment to do missionary work for the coming conference year; what field is your preference, and why. (Although your choice of field cannot always be granted, as it may not be expedient and wise to do so, when taken under prayerful consideration by the appointing quorums.) Report the number of dependents, such as wife, and number of children, boys or girls, and age; also what amount will be absolutely necessary to supply these dependents with the necessities of life, while you give your time to preaching of the word, "without purse and scrip." Let all of your reports come through the hands of the sub-missionaries, as far as is practical. Every report should be in my hands not later than March 10. Fraternal yours,

I. N. WHITE.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 5, 1903.

To the Saints of the Nodaway District: Are you really interested in the spread of this latter-day work? If so, read and act. "Study to show thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." If you would like to have gospel literature to read during the long winter evenings, or to distribute among your friends and neighbors, or if you know of any isolated Saints who are not privileged to attend the church services, or are not able to subscribe to the church papers, or if you have any literature that you would be willing to donate to the good of the Bureau or a free-will offering with which to purchase good tracts for distribution, please write to me and let me know what you want or what you are willing to give in the way of literature or money. The mission of the Bureau is to collect and distribute good literature where it will accomplish good. Help it in its grand mission by sending me names and addresses of those wanting literature, also the literature, or means with which to supply the demand. W. B. Torrance, superintendent of district.

To the Missionary force in Wisconsin: As we are now nearing the close of the conference year, the time for annual reports draws near, and as I am expected to summarize the reports of the missionary force and place the same in the hands of the missionary in charge by March 15, it is necessary that your individual reports be in my hands by March 1. Please do not forget this, so that my report may not be delayed. As a whole during the year now drawing to a close you have been quite prompt in sending me your quarterly reports, for which I thank you and hope you will not be less so in this case. This being the last one of the year, you will make your reports inclusive of all labor performed in the State during the conference year from March 1, 1902, to March 1, 1903. Charles H. Burr, Plano, Illinois, Box 254.

Conference Notices.

The Independence Stake semiannual conference will convene at Holden, Missouri, March 7, 1903. At the conference of September, 1901, a resolution was passed that all of the priesthood be required to make a written report of their labors at least once a year. Some have not yet reported. At the conference of September, 1902, a resolution was passed asking that all branch and ministerial reports be sent to the stake secretary at least ten days before the convening of conference, so that the secretary can present a concise report to the committee on credentials at the first session of conference. If the ministry and officers of branches will send in their reports promptly it will assist the secretary in performing his duty as requested by the resolution referred to. Now, brethren, do not wait until you come to conference to bring in these reports but mail them in as requested. Ministerial report blanks can be obtained from your branch officers or by addressing E. Etzenhouser, stake secretary, 510 East Fifteenth Street, Kansas City, Missouri.

The Clinton District conference will convene with the Coalhill Branch, Missouri, March 7, 1903. Prayer services at 9 a. m. Business session 10 a. m. James Moler, district president; A. C. Silvers, district secretary.

Pottawattamie District conference will convene in Council Bluffs, Iowa, at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, February 28. Please send all reports, petitions, etc., one week before conference to the district secretary, J. Charles Jensen, 102 Broadway, Council Bluffs.

Northwestern Kansas District will convene at Gaylord, Kansas, March 14, 1903. A full attendance of officials and delegates is desired. Every one holding the priesthood should be present. Reports should be sent to the secretary. Let us keep the law and draw blessings from the Father. James F. McClure, district president.

Oklahoma District will hold conference at Seiling, Oklahoma, March 6, 1903, at 10 a. m.

Convention Notices.

Oklahoma District Sunday-school association will hold convention at Seiling, Oklahoma, March 5, 1903.

The Independence Stake Sunday-school association will convene at Holden, Missouri, Friday, March 6, 10 a. m. The reading of reports of officers and schools, also election of stake officers and delegates to General Convention will occupy the morning and afternoon sessions. Let all the schools, also all who have taken up the home department study, send to me full reports as early as March 2. Special attention is called to notice to Sunday-school secretaries as found in HERALD, page 93, current volume. Mrs. Abbie A. Horton, stake secretary, No. 117 Bowen Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Died.

PARROTT.—On January 23, 1903, at Stevenson, Ontario, of inflammation, Sr. Mary Mageline Parrott; was born November 14, 1875, at Oxford, Kent County, Ontario; baptized September 21, 1902, at Romney Township, Kent County, Ontario, by Elder Samuel Brown, and confirmed the same day. Though her suffering was intense at times, yet through administration she received help and passed peacefully into the vale beyond. She leaves a husband, two children, and several brothers and sisters to mourn. Funeral services by Samuel Brown. The remains laid to rest in the Shanks Cemetery.

SAVAGE.—Sr. Lydia Alice, wife of Elder Wilber Savage, and daughter of the late Elder Levi and Meriba Anthony, died at Wilber, Nebraska, February 1, 1903, after a short but painful illness of what appeared to be neuralgia of the head. Deceased was born at Blue Springs, Nebraska, October 20, 1863; was baptized and confirmed into the church at Wilber, June 22, 1879, by Elder R. J. Anthony; was married to Wilber Savage, at Wilber, September 3, 1882. Funeral service at the house February 3, in charge of Elder C. H. Porter, assisted by Elder James Caffall. Her death came as a great shock to her numerous relatives and friends. She was a faithful wife and affectionate mother, and an energetic worker in both church and Sunday-school. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

VINCENT.—At his home, 129 West Costella Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado, January 25, 1903, at 10 p. m., William Henry Vincent passed away. He was born February 25, 1845, at Easton, near Wells, Somersetshire, England, coming to America in 1866. Was married to Mary Vinson, February 27, 1872. To them were born eleven children, eight of whom survive. United with the church in 1877; was ordained a priest June 18, 1882, and May 2, 1885, an elder. He died firm in the faith, having previously made all arrangements for funeral. Funeral sermon by Elder W. C. Duncan, assisted by J. E. Lalonde.

LOESCH.—At Nauvoo, Illinois, January 30, 1903, Miss Luanna Kate Loesch, aged 20 years, 8 months, 25 days. Funeral service at the residence at 10 a. m., February 1, in charge of and sermon by Elder William T. Lambert, and at 1:30 p. m. at the Powellton Hall, in charge of Elder William T. She was favorable to our work.

The contents of the American Journal of Sociology is exceptionally strong in both illustrated and unillustrated articles. "Around the Island of Cebu on Horseback," is an illustrated article by Samuel MacClintock; and Katherine A. Chandler has an illustrated article on "A New Idea in Social Fraternity." A. J. Roewade discusses "The Cradle of the Trust," and Albion W. Small answers the question, "What is a Sociologist?" "Introduction to Sociology," by G. DeGreef is the first of a series of papers on that subject. Frank L. McVey tells of "The Social Effects of the Eight-Hour Day," and Frank Tolman has his fourth paper on "The Study of Sociology in Institutions of Learning in the United States."

In the February McClure's appears another very striking picture of conditions in the Hard Coal Regions. It is called "Children of the Coal Shadow," and is written by Francis H. Nichols. Of chief interest is Mr. Nichols' account of the "junior" unions formed by the boys working in the mines, and by their sisters, who work in the mills that have come to "Anthracite" on account of the cheap labor there. These child unions have the same organization, the same aims, the same methods, and often accomplish the same results as the men's unions, on which they are modeled. Their hatred of the "scab" is even more intense. Some of the stories Mr. Nichols tells, in this connection, show very significant that the sentiment of young America in the Coal Regions is a force to be reckoned with.

The New American Pacific Cable.

In its contract, signed with President Roosevelt, the Commercial Pacific Cable asks and receives no favors, no exclusive franchise or concession; promises to employ only Americans; will operate independently of foreign companies; and is entirely at the service of the country in time of war. As on the Atlantic Mr. Mackay's competition brought low rates and higher efficiency, so in the Pacific the rate from the Golden Gate to China will be cut down to one dollar a word. To Honolulu it is only fifty cents, and will be but thirty-five cents two years hence. A speed of transmission to Luzon is guaranteed of twenty-five words per minute. There is only one thing to regret, and that is the purchase of the cable abroad. Although the United States now manufactures $25,000,000 worth of insulated wires and cables annually, or perhaps as much as all Europe in the same classes of material, that amount does not include very much deep-sea cable. But we shall surely change that some day by the superior cheapness and quality of the American product.

When Morse had painfully finished his first telegraph line, young Miss Ellsworth sent over it that beautiful initial message, "What hath God wrought?" At San Francisco, last Christmas-tide, little Miss Gage, the Governor's daughter, in sight of all the school children of the city, christened the land splice of the new cable which means so much to the peoples facing across the western waters. Thus John W. Mackay completes nobly, for coming generations along the Pacific, the grand task begun by that other typically great American, Cyrus W. Field. —Thomas C. Martin, in Review of Reviews for February.

The contents of the North American Review for February show a variety of strong articles. Thomas F. Ryan has an article on "The Political Opportunity of the South," while "Christian Science," by Mark Twain, is his third paper on the same subject. W. L. Scruggs, formerly United States Minister to Venezuela, discusses the "Origin and Import of the Monroe Doctrine." "The Art of the Dramatist" is treated by Brander Matthews, and Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens gives her reasons "Why the Army Canteen Should not be Restored." The other articles are: "Macedonia's Struggle for Liberty," by Charles Johnston; "The Industrial Crisis in the Philippines," by Brewster Cameron; "The Monarchs of the Triple Alliance," by Sydney Brooks; "Out of the Shadow," by Louis Morgan Sill; "Phillip Brooks," by Reverend Doctor Washington Gladden. W. J. Gaynor discusses "A Government of Laws, not of Men;" and H. S. Gans writes on "As to Lawlessness of the Police: A Reply." The second part of "The Ambassadors," a novel by Henry James, supplies the demand for fiction.

The March Autumn Leaves contains an interesting review of Max Nordau's recent article on "Zionism." A perusal of this article will give one a better understanding of the aims and methods of "Zionism."

GARBLING THE EPITOME OF FAITH.

In the Semi-weekly Deseret News for Monday, February 2, there is a purported copy of "Articles of Faith," having the name of Joseph Smith attached.

The fourth article is made to read as follows: "We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are: First, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost."

The Epitome as written by Joseph Smith, the Seer, and furnished to Mr. John Wentworth, editor and proprietor of the Chicago Democrat, and published in that paper; and also in the Times and Seasons, volume 3, number 9, and dated March 1, 1842, page 709, gives this fourth article thus: "We believe that these ordinances are: first, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost."

In the "History of Religious Denominations in the United States," published by I. Daniel Rupp, in 1844, there is a chapter furnished by President Joseph Smith. This Epitome of Faith is given. Article four reads thus:

"We believe that these ordinances are: First, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost."

What right have the officers of the Utah church to garble that declaration of Articles of Faith?

We may not object to the church in the valley putting out any list of articles of belief they may choose to subscribe to; but we have certainly a right to object to their making Joseph Smith responsible for the subtle reservation couched in the first clause of article four, as they give it in the Deseret News from which we quote. Joseph Smith was not responsible for this change, i. e., not Joseph Smith, the Seer.

We have a group of thirteen cards handed us by as many different elders of the Utah church at different times. On nine of these cards the Articles of Faith printed on the backs are like the one in the News, in article four, in the other four it is like the one in Times and Seasons.

SOCIETY ISLANDS VISITED BY DESTRUCTIVE TIDAL WAVE.

In the papers for Monday, February 9, there appeared an account of a tidal wave which swept portions of the South Sea Islands. From the accounts given in the associated press news, we fear that some of our South Sea Island brethren may have suffered. We shall watch with considerable anxiety for definite news from there. We give herewith the associated press account of the disaster:

SAN FRANCISCO, February 8.—News of a fearful loss of life in a destructive storm that swept over the South Sea Islands last month, reached here to-day on the steamer Mariposa direct from Tahiti. The loss of life is estimated at one thousand souls. On January 13 last a huge tidal wave accompanied by a terrific hurricane attacked the Society Islands and the Paumotu group with fearful force, causing deaths and devastation never before equaled in a land of dreaded storms, a verification of man's inability to contend with wind and sea.

The storm reigned several days, reaching its maximum strength between January 14 and 16. From the meager news received at Tahiti up to the sailing of the Mariposa it is estimated that one thousand of the islanders lost their lives. It is feared that later advices will add to the long list.

The first news of the disaster arrived at Papeete, Tahiti, January 26, on the schooner Eimeo. The captain of the schooner placed the fatalities at five hundred. The steamer Excelsior arrived at Papeete the following day with four hundred destitute survivors. The captain of the Excelsior estimated the total loss of life to be eight hundred. These figures comprised only the deaths on the three islands of Hao, Hikuera, and Makokau, whose ordinary population is eighteen hundred. On Hikuera Island, where one thousand inhabitants were engaged in pearl-diving, nearly one half were drowned. On an adjacent island one hundred more were washed out to sea. Makokau and Hao are depopulated. Conservative estimates at Tahiti place the number of islands visited by tidal wave and hurricane at eighty. All of them are under the control of the French governor at Tahiti.

The surviving inhabitants are left destitute of food, shelter, and clothing, all having been swept away by the storm.

The French Government, upon receipt of news of the disaster took prompt measures to relieve the distressed district and dispatched two warships, the Durane and Zelee, with fresh water and provisions. The Italian man-of-war Calabria accompanied the two French vessels on their errand of mercy. As the supply of fresh water and provisions was totally exhausted by the storm it is feared that many lives will be lost before the relief ships arrive. As far as is known eight white people were among the drowned.

Included in these were Alexander Brander, N. P. Plunkett, of Oakland; T. D. Donnelly, formerly a fireman on the steamship Australia, and the local agent of C. Coppenrath, a merchant of Papeete. Added to this number was an unknown woman, who committed suicide from fright. As the islands were barely twenty feet above sea level and not surrounded by coral reefs it was necessary for all the inhabitants to take to the cocoanut-trees when the tidal wave began to cover the land. These trees grow to an immense height, many reaching an altitude of one hundred feet. All of the lower trees were covered by the raging seas which swept with pitiless force about and over them. The natives in the taller trees were safe until the cocoanut-roots gave way, and then they too were swept onward, far out into the sea.

The four hundred survivors brought by the Excelsior to Papeete gained the ship's side by swimming three and four miles from the tops of the cocoanut-trees. The Eimeo, though badly damaged by the storm also brought off as many persons as could swim to her sides, she, like the Excelsior, being unable to run close to the shores because of the fearful violence of the ocean swells which continued to run abnormally high for a week after the tidal disturbances. Another schooner, the Gaulois, from the Marquesan Islands, six hundred miles from Tahiti, encountered the hurricane while en route to the latter place, and only the timely action of the captain in having the cargo, consisting of thirty head of cattle, thirty-five pigs, and thirty tons of cotton, jettisoned, saved the little craft from destruction. Even with this precaution the life of one man was lost by waves sweeping the decks.

One of the many acts of heroism reported is that a woman who climbed one of the tall cocoanut-trees and lashed her little babe to the trunk, hanging on to the body of the tree beneath the little one as best she could. There they remained for ten hours suffering great torture until finally rescued.

Thousands of tons of copra and over two hundred tons of mother-of-pearl shells are known to be lost. The pearl shells are valued at eighteen hundred dollars per ton, and many valuable pearls may now be lost to the world for ever, as these were considered some of the best pearl islands in the world.

The islands are located in latitude fifteen degrees south, longitude one hundred fifty degrees west.

After reading the foregoing we were of course very anxious, and watched the mails eagerly for some word from or concerning our missionaries there. On Friday morning, February 13, we received the following from Bro. Burton, dated at Papeete, Tahiti, January 26:

Last night a schooner arrived from the Paumotus bringing the sad news that on the 17th instant a tidal wave had overflowed portions of all the islands heard from, namely: Makatea, Tikahau, Raroia, Arutua, Apataki, and Fakarava. The island of Makatea is about two hundred feet high, but the village was built on a low piece of land near the beach. The brother writes me that the sea has destroyed all the houses of the village. The people went up on the high portion of the island and were there seven days, and as one man, they continued in prayer until the sea receded and left the place of their former homes bare and desolate.

A brother writes from Tikahau that the sea rose twenty feet above its usual level and destroyed thirteen houses, their copra and pigs. Many of the people went on board of their boats.

In Fakarava the sea cut a new channel through the village from the sea to the lake near the government house, which is injured by rocks and coral washing through it.

The French man-of-war is going up immediately to discern the condition of the islanders and to render assistance if needed.

We would be somewhat uneasy about Bro. and Sr. Gilbert, but they are about four hundred miles directly to the eastward of here, while the tidal wave, so far as we have heard, is to the northward, and here it was only a little higher than the usual spring tides and not nearly so high as last spring. And the little steamer "Excelsior," which runs up to the islands, left here three days after the tidal wave up north, and would arrive in Hikuera about the 23d and would have returned if anything more serious had occurred there than at the other islands.

So far as we have heard no lives were lost on any of the islands.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

On the 27th Bro. Burton wrote another, as follows:

PAPEETE, Tahiti, January 27.

Editors Herald: The mail leaves this morning, and I hasten to write the morning news. Before six o'clock in the morning the brethren were here with the sad news that about four hundred people were drowned at Hikuera, and ninety at Marokau, an island near there. It is stated that only one white man was drowned; but when the post-office opens this morning we will probably learn more of the conditions and will then finish this.

The Excelsior has arrived, and, O joy, Bro. and Sr. Gilbert on her; they report a dreadful disaster in Hikueru. Three hundred seventy-eight persons were killed or drowned there; among them Bro. Hermann Janssen, and not many other brethren except some of Hao. About three hundred of those lost were from Hao. Bro. Alfred Sanford's little girl, Lucy, was among the lost.

Bro. and Sr. Gilbert were on the highest part of the island and yet were in water up to their waists, and finally had to climb up a tree for safety and stayed there for sometime. All the houses are washed away. Not even the government stone house is left, which was put up in cement, and of our new chapel not a stick is left. The Excelsior returned without landing her cargo at Hikueru, and brought it back again.

Everything is in commotion in Tahiti to-day, some mourning for lost ones, some rejoicing for saved ones, and all gloomy because of the disaster to the islands.

We of course feel sad, and can not write otherwise, but we uttered a heartfelt psalm of thanksgiving to our heavenly Father when we heard that Bro. and Sr. Gilbert were on board the Excelsior, and now they are in the missionary house in Papeete, which you may see in the Autumn Leaves of January. Thank God from whom all our blessings flow. And may he bless those who are made to mourn.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

P. S.—I write in haste and among the confusion of the occasion. The mail soon closes and I must be off with this to mail.

J. F. B.

TRANSLATION OF EGYPTIAN HIEROGLYPHICS.

Bro. George S. Lincoln, of San Francisco, sends us a copy of the Globe, of late date, from which we clip what will be interesting. It may be some one of our young sisters may like to study the hieroglyphics:

A new and lucrative profession for young women—a profession as fascinating as a puzzle—has been inaugurated by Miss M. A. Murray.

Miss Murray is an American, is one of the assistants of W. M. Flinders Petrie, the great Egyptologist, and the profession that she has opened up to her sex is the translation of Egyptian and Babylonian hieroglyphics.

Year by year the excavations of the buried cities of the East grow greater, and year by year the world's untranslated store of inscribed tablets and bricks increases. Over fifty thousand unread bricks from Nippur, for instance, lie in the vaults of the University of Pennsylvania, and over one hundred thousand lie in the vaults of other American and European universities and museums. All these must be translated, but very few are they who are able to undertake the work. The demand for translators is greater than the supply.

Hence Miss Murray has established a school of hieroglyphics for women. She has issued a hieroglyphic primer, and she is teaching by correspondence how hieroglyphics may be read. She can not teach in person, for she is now in Egypt with Professor Flinders Petrie, helping him there to excavate a royal tomb of the nineteenth dynasty. This tomb has an entrance two hundred feet long, each side of which is closely covered with inscriptions that extend from the stone floor to a height of five feet. These inscriptions—two thousand square feet of them—Miss Murray is to translate.

She has a good number of pupils in America and in England, and there are other young women who, having learned of the opening for translators that the tremendous excavations in the East have made, are taking courses in inscription reading at Harvard, Cornell, and Pennsylvania.

In the museums of these seats of learning it is possible every day to see the charming picture of a young girl of twenty, pencil and paper in hand, bent in grave absorption over an Egyptian tablet three thousand, or a Nippur brick six thousand years of age.

These young women, as soon as their courses shall be finished, will have no difficulty in obtaining interesting employment. So many private persons and so many governments are digging in the East, so much unintelligible writing is being brought to light, that they who can puzzle out this writing are in great demand.

Professor Herman V. Hilprecht, the most successful excavator the world has ever seen—for Professor Hilprecht's spade has turned up a civilization over eight thousand years old—thinks that it is an excellent thing for young women to study hieroglyphics. He is now on the way back to Nippur, the place of his great success, and in Nippur he will remain two years, leading an army of three hundred Arabs in the uncovering of that old, old town. Before Professor Hilprecht sailed he said:

"The world needs more students of the past. It needs more translators of the ancient inscriptions and more interpreters of the ancient relics. For there are many things still to be learned of the prehistoric civilizations. To the accurate worker in this field wealth is not assured, but lucrative and interesting employment is, and there is furthermore a prospect of lighting, at a lucky moment, upon great fame. For a new light, a new and striking meaning, may be found in some old text; or a tablet may come to hand inscribed with an unimaginably wonderful secret of the past—well, he who gives these things to the world may be sure of lasting renown.

"To get a working knowledge of the translation of hieroglyphics takes about a year. Young women are quite as quick as young men in acquiring this knowledge. In the actual practice of translation each year improves the translator. She must, to succeed, keep working all her life."

The story of the modern world's mastery of the hieroglyphics of the past is interesting. These inscriptions, up to 1799, could not be read, and no attempt was made to read them. But in 1799—at Rosetta, in Egypt—a Frenchman found a stone of black basalt that had three inscriptions on it—one hieroglyphic, one demotic and one Greek.

In each tongue, it was guessed, the inscription was the same, and this guess proved to be accurate. Hence the Greek inscription formed a key to the other two, and hence the yard-square Rosetta stone—a cast of which is to be found in every archaeological museum—unlocked to the modern world the door of the ancient past.

Thomas Young, an Englishman, learned much from the Rosetta stone, but Champollion is the man who gave hieroglyphic reading to the world. Champollion worked with certain ovals; each containing a number of signs; these ovals represented, it was thought, a royal person's name. He took, on an obelisk written in Greek and in hieroglyphics, the Greek words Ptolemy and Cleopatra and compared them with the two ovals in the hieroglyphics.

Three signs were alike in each oval. The first, the third and the fourth sign in the first oval agreed with the fifth, the fourth and the second sign in the second oval. Champollion assumed that the first represented Ptolemy and the second Cleopatra for the three signs, supposing them to be P, O, and L, warranted this assumption. Again, the sixth and ninth signs of the Cleopatra oval were alike; therefore, he concluded that each was an A. Champollion, in a word, discovered at one stroke the meaning of twelve hieroglyphics, and keeping up his work, which fascinated him, he built up in the course of his life an alphabet of two hundred signs. He had a pupil, Salvoline, who added one hundred other signs to his, and in 1857 Lepsius, a German, classified this great number of hieroglyphics, showing how only thirty-four of them corresponded to the letters of our modern alphabets, the remainder being compounds, or syllables, such as "us," "un," "an," etc., while there are still other signs that represent whole words.

The science of hieroglyphics has continued to advance since the days of its pioneers, and there are now few inscriptions that can not be translated as accurately as a piece of French. Miss Murray's primer makes everything in the science seem simple and interesting. The book tells, first of all, what the word hieroglyphic means—that it is a word compound from two Greek ones, and signifies "sacred carving."

Among the syllable signs of hieroglyphics—the signs that stand for syllables—a few are:

"A crouching deer—aa.

"A pair of horns—ap.

"A leaf—am.

"A scroll—as.

"A jar—num.

"A crane—sa.

"A star—seb.

"A fish—cha.

"A bull—chen.

"A cat's head—ha.

"A hook—hek."

In another group of hieroglyphics each sign is a word, an idea. Thus:

"A circle, with a dot in its center—The sun, light.

"An asterisk—A star.

"A line shaped like the jagged edge of a saw—A hilly, mountainous country; mountains.

"A man's head—Strength, superiority, intelligence.

"An eye—To see, to awake, to spy.

"An eye with a tear in it—Grief.

"An egg—A woman, womankind, the female sex.

"A knife—Slaughter."

Everything seems to be very easy. The hieroglyphics that to the uninitiated look so complicated take on, after a little study, an air of quite primitive simplicity. They are to be read usually from right to left—opposite to our way of reading—but sometimes they run the other way, the heads of the various birds and fish and men guiding the translation, for these inscriptions read the way the head points.

Miss Murray tells how interesting the inscriptions are—how much that is new and startling the slightest one of them may reveal.

She shows how it has lately become known that the outer wall of Babylon was three hundred thirty-five feet high and eighty-five feet wide, and there were two inner walls of equal bigness.

The city was two hundred square miles in area, or ten times greater in size than London.

The palace of Nebuchadnezzar had a wall seven miles long encircling it. In the temple of Bel there was a statue of the god made of pure gold forty feet in height, and there were ten other golden statues twenty-five feet high and a table of pure gold forty feet long and fifteen feet wide.

The translation of inscriptions, it will be seen, is neither difficult nor dull. The demand for workers in this field is great, and the supply of them is small. Hence it is not strange that Miss Murray should have started a school and that several hundred young women should have begun the fascinating study of the hieroglyphic.

"THE MANUSCRIPT FOUND."

The following appeared in the Toledo Weekly Blade for February 5, in a department entitled "Question Bureau:"

THE MANUSCRIPT FOUND.

Can you give me any information as to where I may get a copy of "The Manuscript Found," by Reverend Spalding? I am writing a series of articles on Mormonism and have understood the matter I inquire about has been printed and have been referred to you for information.—W. W. B., Buckhannon, West Virginia.

We are under the impression that the Mormons themselves printed Spalding's "Manuscript Found," as a means of controverting the argument that the Book of Mormon is based on it. If any of our readers know whether this is so, and where the book is published, we shall be glad to have the information.

The writer has never put much faith in any attempt to show that the Book of Mormon originated from Spalding's work, for the reason that the class of people from whom the Mormon converts come are not highly educated, as a rule, and can not be reached by an appeal to the critical faculty.

We have sent the Blade's "Query editor" a catalogue of our publications.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Are oblation moneys to be sent to the Bishop's agent for missionary work, or to be kept in the branch funds to meet with branch expenses?

An oblation is an offering, it may be of money, thanksgiving, or prayer. Answering the question as asked, however, if the moneys offered on the sacramental days are presented without specification as to what use they are intended to be put, they should go into the Bishop's agent's hands for the general work. If it is specified before collection what the offering is to be for, or if the parties making the offering state what it is they give for, then that is the object to which it should be kept, or paid.

Will you please explain through the HERALD how the dragon can give power unto the beast; the difference between them, etc.? (Revelation 13:4; also Revelation 16:8-18.) When do you think this will be fulfilled? Also Daniel 7:9-25?

We have both heard excellent sermons and read excellent articles on the subject matter of the foregoing query, but are still in doubt whether we can give an explanation that would satisfy the querist. We are more in doubt because that we have not taken the interest in tracing the relationship alleged to be existing between prophecy in the old scriptures and the apocalypse that many of the elders who have had plenty of time at their disposal and a taste for researches of the kind.

According to the ninth verse of the twelfth chapter the dragon was, or is the "old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan," and that by his subtlety and hidden machinations he "deceiveth the whole world." It is quite clear that at some time in the past there was such a jointure of church and state that the church was submerged in the political grasp of the world "the dominion and glory" of which this adversary offered to the Lamb from the pinnacle of the Temple, and was met by that powerful rebuff, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." According to Luke 10:18, and John 12:31, this dragon was the "prince of this world."

As to "how" the dragon could, or did give power to the government symbolized by the beast of Revelation 13:4, it is hardly necessary to undertake to state; suffice it to say, that from the time the church became allied to the state, and her power and spirituality finally overcome by the pomp, display, and corrupt administration of earthly governments until now, when, even in the apparently soundest and best there is a sufficient amount of speculation, trickery, treachery, and corrupt wire-working, to make the effort to secure a just administration of laws, almost a farce, the ways of giving the exercise of power have been similar, and the Devil has remembered his own.

Rome was a seven-hilled city, and from the rise and fall of the kingdoms, or governments, succeeding the Alexandrine-Macedonian, unto the dividing into the ten which some trace even yet, the beast of political power has usurped the place of rule and both the dragon and the beast representing him have been the objects of worship and submission.

The passages in Daniel 7:9-25, evidently refer to the scenes at or near the end of the long controversy between the governments of this world, including the adversary as the hidden and spiritual force of them, and the Lamb and his saints.

There can be no difference between the dragon, Satan, the Devil, the adversary of one part of Scripture and the same personage of another. These typical representatives of governmental power on the earth are much alike in their characteristics, differing perhaps as to the time of their appearing and their reign. Both of the powers named in Daniel 7:25, and Revelation thirteenth and fourteenth chapters, whom the Lamb with his saints were to overcome, may manifestly be the same; but what present existing government of a kingly nature, or of a republican nature as a political power we do not care to attempt to locate; for the reason that we are assured by revelation to us that "in time we are to have no king on this land," until Jesus comes; and that until then we are to keep the law of the land.

EXTRACTS AND ITEMS.

Joseph Luff wrote from Independence, Missouri, February 9: "Have just returned to-night from Toronto. Left my wife there to care for my mother for awhile. Mother's only support, in the way of present human care and attention, went when my sister, Mrs. Hattey died. It was a sad blow; but He who permitted it must surely have a purpose therein, and he alone can unravel it."

Bro. D. B. and Sr. Maggie Perkins, of Clavering, Ontario, make the following pertinent statement in sending remittance to Graceland College: "We are but young in the work, but thankful to God for this glorious gospel. We can not see how we are going to lose anything by paying our tithing and helping the good work along. These are but necessary commands to test our love. If faithful, they bring the promised blessing."

James M. Baggerly wrote from Chatham, Ontario, February 12: "Am very busy here in gospel work. Had out a good crowd of outsiders last night. We have distributed one thousand 'dodgers' with good results. Bro. Tyrrell is doing all he can towards making the meetings a success. Bro. Lamont, the branch priest, is also doing excellent work in getting outsiders to attend. Very good interest. May keep it up here till end of month. Chatham has a large Religio now, and is up to date in gospel progress. They are keeping me busy over on this side."

J. C. Foss wrote from Santa Ana, California, February 10: "I baptized a young Lamanite yesterday at San Bernardino."

Bro. William Ecclestone wrote from Leicester, England, January 30, stating he had been called home from the field by the sickness and death of his daughter, who succumbed to diphtheria and heart failure. Concerning the work he writes: "Church work moves rather slowly in this part of the mission. We have to meet with many odds in striving to perform duty as servants of God; but I hope the day will soon dawn when all his servants will work together with one common aim to build up the church. Brn. Griffiths and Rushton are busy in the mission, doing all in their power to set the work in order in the branches. We trust all will take their counsel and advice."

On January 27 D. S. Crawley wrote from Seiling, Oklahoma: "I am laboring near home because of the very cold weather we have had. Wonderful excitement here to-day. At sunset, the 24th, two mining claims were staked on Brn. James E. Yates' and R. M. Maloney's places, who join claims. Monday many claims were staked out. Tuesday a town site was laid out by the business men of the county-seat, and to-day most of both claims are staked off in mining claims. Lead, gold, and silver are said to be found."

On Thursday evening last Hubert M. Skinner, of Chicago, delivered a lecture in our church building in Lamoni, on the subject, "An Old Poem Restudied." It was the second lecture in the Graceland Lecture Course, and the old poem which Mr. Skinner "restudied" is Poe's "Raven." The subject was handled in a masterly way, and the analysis of the mysterious poem was scholarly to a wonderful degree, and showed a depth of research and study which was certainly stimulating to the listeners. Mr. Skinner's interpretation of the poem is original and apt, and to the audience Poe's masterpiece took on a new significance. We can not but feel that Mr. Skinner's visit to our town will be prolific of good.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Anna Coon wrote from Neligh, Nebraska, February 6: "I have a brother named Edward Kester, who left Antelope County, Nebraska, about nine years ago and went to Harrison County, Iowa, where he stayed one year and then went west. I have never heard from him since, and thought inquiry through the HERALD might bring me information as to his whereabouts if he is living."

J. Arthur Davis wrote from Kewanee, Illinois, February 10: "Our district conference on Saturday and Sunday at Kewanee was a splendid one. Three were baptized. Brn. F. G. Pitt and J. W. Peterson were with us."

Sr. S. W. Likens wrote from Paris, Ontario, February 8, renewing for HERALD. She wrote: "It is indeed a Godsend to me, isolated as I am from all church privileges. We are the only Saints in Paris. The churches here have been holding revivals. I went twice. It made my heart ache to see how they tried to explain the beautiful gospel. I try to do what I can in giving reading matter. May God give people a desire to investigate his beautiful truth as taught by those whom he has sent. I have great reason to be thankful for the tender way God has led me these many years. I can truly say, I 'praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"

J. G. Vickery wrote from Garland, Alabama, February 10, that he and his wife recently visited a family of Saints who had become lukewarm. They visited and prayed together, and the result is renewed interest on the part of the family. He adds: "Bro. I. N. Roberts has done a noble work down here, and the people like him. I think the Saints are feeling better spiritually now than for some time past. We hope Bro. Roberts will soon return with some good help to carry on the good work in this country."

Henry T. McClain wrote from Coalgate, Indian Territory, on February 6, renewing for the HERALD, of which he speaks in high terms. He says they are striving to live in such a way as to spread the gospel. He says: "We have our church-house completed and paid for. Three families of us built it, or had it built. It cost about three hundred sixty dollars. We now have a good little house in which to worship, and we ask an interest in your prayers that we may live worthily."

 EDITORIAL ITEMS.

One of our earnest, active sisters in Indian Territory recently sent a check for ten dollars to Bishop Kelley to apply on the college debt. The remittance was accompanied by these terse words: "Yesterday I was struck very forcibly with the thought that it was more than probable that I was one of the many to whom the Lord was speaking when he said pay the debt." We wish that thought would strike more of the "many."

A. C. Miller, professor of history at Central College, Fayette, Missouri, has recently requested a set of "Church History" for the shelves of their college library. The three volumes have been sent him.

J. F. Mintun wrote from Truro, Iowa, February 12, ordering Book of Mormon for a traveling man who had become interested from hearing Bro. Mintun conversing with another person. The traveling man's father, Robert Borrell, now living at Costalia, Ohio, joined the church in England.

William Hooper Young on February 9 pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree, and was sentenced to life imprisonment. He was on trial for the murder of Mrs. Anna Pulitzer, of New York, and in pleading guilty he followed the advice of his attorney and, it is said, his mother.

F. P. Taylor wrote from Sayonburg, Kansas, February 13, that there were some Utah elders in that part of the country who are freely telling that there is a difference between the church they represent and the Reorganization. "Much to our credit," adds Bro. Taylor.

Sr. Mary Flagg wrote on the 3d inst. from Grand Manan, New Brunswick, that she would rather go without some of the necessaries of life than do without the HERALD. She says she would be glad to see an elder in that place, as she believes there are some who would obey. She asks God's blessings on all the Saints and workers.

We have received an atlas of Western Canada, sent us by N. Bartholomew, 306 Fifth Street, Des Moines, Iowa, who is Canadian immigration agent for Iowa. The book contains maps of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and various parts of Canada, and is of considerable interest to any one interested in that part of the country. We thank Mr. Bartholomew for the atlas.

We call attention to the notice of the Church Secretary, R. S. Salyards, to the matter of railway tickets to April conference and the system of certificates to be carried into effect to secure reduced rates of fare. Let every one who intends to go to conference at Independence, take notice of what Secretary Salyards has written, keep the HERALD containing it handy, and consult it frequently before starting, act according to its directions, and be safe.

William Hooper Young, the son of John W. Young, and grandson of President Brigham Young, who confessed in open court to the murder of Mrs. Anna Pulitzer in New York last year, was taken to Sing Sing, New York, on February 13, to begin a term of imprisonment for life, for murder in the second degree. Medical experts declared him to be sane. He plead guilty in the second degree to avoid a death sentence.

J. S. Hommes, Chico, California, wrote February 8, that the work is slowly making progress there, and that prejudice is giving way to investigation.

GOSPEL WORK IN LARGE CITIES.

When our Lord gave his great commission to the apostles, and sent them out into the world with the message of "peace on earth, good will to men," they made the large cities centers of activity in gospel work.

In Paul's missionary journeys, the large cities were his objective points: Antioch, the capital of the Roman Province of Syria; Thessalonica, the metropolis of Macedonia; Athens, where the learned philosophers of Greece gathered; Corinth, the capital of Achaia, and a great mercantile center; Ephesus, the capital of Roman Asia; Rome, the imperial city; all are cited in the Bible as principal points of his activity.

Paul did not go to these large centers of population because he thought the people deserved to hear the gospel more than those in the smaller communities, or that they would more readily receive it. Publicity of his work was his object. He knew of the commercial relations that existed between these large centers and the smaller ones surrounding them; he knew the news would be spread rapidly, as the commercial pilgrims, students of the sciences, and others who sought these centers of trade and learning turned their faces homeward. Nor was he mistaken, as there is abundant evidence that his coming was often anticipated, his fame having preceded him.

These cities were not only busy marts of trade and the haunts of the learned and the wise, but were, in some instances, the capitals of the governments in which they were located, thus bringing their message to the notice of the various rulers.

In prosecuting the missionary work to-day, we should not overlook the benefit to be derived by following the example of those missionaries, and strive to develop the work in all large cities. No effort should be spared in utilizing those tremendous engines of publicity, the printing-press, electricity, steam, and the post-office, with all that grows out of them, for the enlightenment of the general public.

We ought to have stationery stores in every large city where a branch is located, and in connection with the regular business of that kind, have the church publications for sale. It would not require a large amount of capital for such enterprises; a stock company could be formed and some worthy and competent brother or sister could have steady employment taking care of it. The amount of good done would be incalculable. It is done by other societies, why not by us?

Why should it be necessary to send half-way across the continent to get what we should have at our doors?

The following tables will show, by comparison, what can be done by supplementing preaching with a generous use of printers' ink, the post-office, and personal enterprise:

TABLE NUMBER ONE.

Missionary and family expense to church and to the branch for one year.....	$600 00
The probable number of strangers that will visit the branch in one year, two hundred.
The average cost for each visitor to hear the doctrine....	$3 00

TABLE NUMBER TWO.

Missionary and family expense to general church and branch.....	$600 00
Four thousand tracts.....	60 00
Postage.....	40 00
Four thousand cards, invitation to service.....	20 00
Four thousand cards, advertising church publications....	10 00
Miscellaneous expense.....	20 00
Total.....	$750 00

Average of two persons to a family makes a total of those who have an opportunity to know of the doctrine, eight thousand.

The total number that have had a personal invitation to attend church, eight thousand.

Cost for eight thousand to hear the gospel, nine and three eighths cents each.

The old-time argument, that people will not come if you do ask them, or will not read what is sent to them, has lost its force. The church does not stop sending out missionaries because they are refused a hearing. Why should we stop sending out reading matter because some will not read it?

It should be our concern to perform our duty as expressed in the law, leaving the result to the Master's care, who, on one occasion said: "Because I seek not my own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me."

The city and school directories could be used for obtaining names.

One advantage of sending reading matter by mail is that it would go to the homes, where it is more likely to receive consideration than if passed out upon the streets, or handed to persons during business hours.

A record could also be kept, thus supplying the same persons with a variety of publications.

MONUMENT.

A few weeks ago James H. Tillman, Lieutenant-governor of South Carolina, shot and killed Narcisse G. Gonzalez, editor of the State. Two weeks later the people of Columbia decided to erect to the memory of Mr. Gonzalez a monument by public donations, and on the first day there was subscribed five thousand dollars.

June 27, 1844, or almost sixty years ago, Joseph and Hyrum Smith were shot and killed in the jail of Carthage, Hancock County, Illinois, by a mob.

Some three years since there was started a fund upon the principle of free-will donations, for the purpose of erecting to the memory of these noble dead (men who gave testimony to the truth of the restored gospel, and the seal of their earthly mission was their life-blood,) a monument. Something less than three hundred dollars have been subscribed, which sum is held in trust by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

Last June, in company with Brn. Thomas J. Bell, of Lamoni, F. M. McDonald, and Thomas J. Simpson, of Montrose, I visited the lonely, neglected spot where these true witnesses rest in unmarked graves, and my heart was sad, and I could not repress the inquiry, Are we thoughtless, careless, or ungrateful in our duty to those whom God raised up, and called to such a great work as the restoration of the gospel, and the reestablishment of the true church?

I feel that the time has fully come when the body in General Conference should take action, and either from the funds of the church erect such suitable monument as becometh our duty to men of their standing, or for the conference to appoint a commission, or board of trustees, who shall be authorized to raise the money and erect said monument.

Let not this year go by without accomplishing this task.

My motto is: At it, and keep at it, till the work is completed.

For success,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

THE BOOK OF MORMON AND THE INSPIRED TRANSLATION.

DO THEY AGREE?

Continuing the above subject upon which we treated in Herald for October 8, 1902, we desire to present some additional discoveries that we have made since that time.

Our former examination was confined mainly to quotations made from Isaiah, by Jacob and Nephi, and we found one hundred two corrections or revised readings that were in exact harmony with the Inspired Translation; thirty-two omissions from the King James and Inspired Translations; seventeen corrections found in neither the King James nor the Inspired Translations; one transposition of words, and two instances reading exactly as the King James and differing from the Inspired Translation.

In this, our last examination, we began with Abinadi's quotation from Isaiah as found in Mosiah 7: 17, 21 and 8: 3, 4 (small edition). Then we made a comparison of the teaching of Jesus to the Nephites which was similar to his discourse in the "Sermon on the Mount," and found recorded by Matthew, and also in the Book of Nephi 5: 9-13 and 6: 1-5. Also the quotations Jesus made from Isaiah, Book of Nephi 7: 4 and 9: 10, 11; his quotations from Micah, Book of Nephi 9: 12; and again from Isaiah Book of Nephi 10: 12, and from Malachi, Book of Nephi 11: 1-6, resulting in the following discoveries:

I found forty-seven corrected readings agreeing with the Inspired Translation; thirty-five instances where readings differed from both the King James and the Inspired Translation; twenty-four omissions from readings found in both King James' and Inspired Translation; three readings transposed, and twenty-four instances wherein the Book of Mormon reads as does the King James and differs from the Inspired Translation. I was a little astonished at the last figures mentioned; but upon careful examination I found that nearly all of the differences are merely in the verbiage and seldom affects the sense of the language.

There is only one instance in which there seems to be a direct disagreement between the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Translation, and this is found in what is commonly called "the Lord's prayer," this difference we desire to give especial consideration. It is sometimes said that the prayer as recorded in the Book of Mormon is "just as it is found in the King James Translation;" but this is a mistake, as will be seen by referring to the following comparison as given in the three books:

KING JAMES.	INSPIRED TRANSLATION.	BOOK OF MORMON.
Our Father which art heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come.	Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come.	Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name.
Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.	Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.	Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread.	Give us this day, our daily bread.
And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.	And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.	And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.
And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil:	And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil.	And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.
For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen.	For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen.	For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen.
Matthew 6: 9-13.	Matthew 6: 10-15.	Book of Nephi 5: 12.

It will be noticed that in the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon the personal pronoun who is used instead of the relative pronoun which, as found in the King James, and "on" is used instead of "in;" also the sentence, "Thy kingdom come," is omitted entirely; also the sentence, "Give us this day our daily bread." Regarding the first sentence omitted, we may find a reason in the fact that when Jesus taught this prayer to his Jewish disciples, the kingdom of God had not as yet been organized; the apostles even had not been chosen; but both Jesus and John had declared that the kingdom of God was at hand. (See Matthew 3: 2 and Mark 1: 15.) And it would be in accord with his own teaching, as well as with that of John the Baptist, so to teach his followers to pray. But his appearance to the Nephites was after his death and resurrection, and the conditions were vastly different; he had already begun the organization of the kingdom of God in the land of Jerusalem, and organized the church among the Nephites at this appearing. With the exception of those differences referred to the prayer is about the same as in the King James Translation.

Now we come to the main point of difference, and the only instance I have been able to find wherein the Book of Mormon disagrees with the Inspired Translation. "Lead us not into temptation," while the Inspired Translation says, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation." We believe that the Inspired Translation is correct, for James says, "God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—James 1:13. But, says one, how are you going to account for the difference between the two? We answer: We believe that the Inspired Translation represents the words which Jesus actually taught his Jewish disciples to pray. We further believe that he taught the Nephites the same words. But it will be remembered that the Book of Mormon nowhere makes for itself the claim of perfection or that it is free from errors; but on the other hand its writers admitted the possibilities of errors in their writings. (See pages 44 and 500.) The weaknesses and failures to which humanity is subject are much the same in every age of the world. We believe that much of the teachings of Jesus, both at Jerusalem and on the land of Joseph, were written from memory; and hence the possibility of making errors, though unintentionally. According to the Inspired Translation the Jewish writers, or, perhaps the copyists, made a mistake in the sentence under consideration. It was possible, and we think reasonable to believe, for Nephites to make the same mistake. Under the same circumstances and with the same matter, they would be liable to make the same mistake made by Jewish writers. It is likely that both writers wrote from memory, and it would be easy to make the mistake referred to. However, they preserved the leading thought in the sentence, which was to pray that temptation might be averted. The translation of the Book of Mormon does not claim to be a correction of any of the errors made by Nephite writers, but to be a literal translation, by the power of God, into its English equivalent; hence their mistakes would appear in the translation. But the Inspired Translation does claim to be a correction by the spirit of revelation, and thus we have the words, or thoughts, as Jesus really gave them. It is not claimed that the Inspired Translation was made from any original Hebrew or Greek, but that it represents the truth as God gave it. This is the most reasonable solution of this matter that has as yet come to my mind.

We notice that though some of the teachings of Christ to the Nephites was similar to his teaching to the Jews, it was especially adapted to the environments and conditions that existed. As, for instance, to the Jews he said, "I give unto you to be the light of the world;" but to the Nephites, "I give unto you to be the light of this people." Those Nephites to whom Jesus was talking were separated from the rest of the world, and could only be the light of that people. Again, to the Jews he said, "Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing;" but to the Nephites, "Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost senine."

It would be very strange indeed if, as some say, the Book of Mormon is a fraud and gotten up by an ignoramus, that there is such complete harmony with itself in all its parts, and also with the Bible. The translating and writing of the book, or much of it, was done under trying and opposing circumstances, and in different places; and yet we find perfect harmony in its chronology, history, and doctrine. All these considerations are in favor of its divinity and truthfulness.

Now to sum up our comparisons. All told we have the following totals as a result of our search, and we think we have covered the entire ground of quotations made from the Bible, but are not positive: One hundred forty-nine corrections agreeing with the Inspired Translation; fifty-six omissions from both the King James and the Inspired Translation; fifty-two corrections or improved readings not found in the Inspired Translation; four transposed readings; and twenty-six instances reading like King James and different from the Inspired Translation. But the Palmyra edition agrees with the Inspired Translation in one instance where the Lamoni edition does not, and this would leave only twenty-five. I have not had access to the Palmyra edition in this last comparison, or we might possibly have reduced the number still more. But this is sufficient to show that the Book of Mormon does not read just as the King James Translation of the Bible in quotations made from the Jewish scriptures. We are safe in saying that there is as much difference between the Book of Mormon and the King James Translation, as there is between the King James and Inspired Translations.

It is a great pleasure and satisfaction to us when we find upon a careful examination of apparent discrepancies, that they vanish away, and the Book of Mormon stands out in bold relief as a true record containing the word of God. The truth can not be overthrown. With W. W. Phelps we feel like singing,
 "Praise to the Lord for the great restoration,
 Brought by the angel to Joseph, the Seer;
 Blessed to open the last dispensation,
 The church to establish, the gospel declare."

H. E. MOLER.

LIMERICK, Ohio, February 4.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—In order to show that Bro. H. E. Moler's comparison has been fair, we give the readings of the Lord's prayer, as found in Matthew and Luke respectively:

Our Father which art in heaven,
 Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.
 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.—Matthew 6: 9-13.

Our Father which art in heaven,
 Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth. Give us day by day our daily bread. And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil.
 —Luke 11: 2-4.

Restless Heart, Don't Worry So.

Dear, restless heart, be still! Don't fret and worry so;
God hath a thousand ways his love and help to show:
Just trust and trust and trust until his will you know.

Dear, restless heart, be still; for peace is God's own smile,
His love can every wrong and sorrow reconcile.
Just love and love and love and calmly wait a while.

Dear, restless heart, be brave! Don't moan and sorrow so.
He hath a meaning kind in the chilly winds that blow.
Just hope and hope and hope until you braver grow.

Dear, restless heart, repose upon his heart an hour.
His heart is strength and life, his heart is bloom and flower.
Just rest and rest and rest within his tender power.

Dear, restless heart, be still! Don't toil and hurry so;
God is the silent One, for ever calm and slow.
Just wait and wait and wait and work with him below.

Dear, restless heart, be still! Don't struggle to be free.
God's life is in your life; from him you may not flee.
Just pray and pray and pray till you have faith to see.

—Edith Willis Linn, in New York Observer.

But for the Grahams.

"This is a dear home, Evelyn! I am going to be a better traveler along duty's dusty highway for having known its sweet sanctities."

"Yes," answered Evelyn without enthusiasm; "yes it is a dear home."

But she spoke languidly, as if not greatly valuing its particular dearness.

Miss Joliffe threw a keen glance across the grass to where her friend sat under the elm-tree, paring peaches for marmalade. Her look had such a questioning power that Evelyn looked up uneasily and colored, as if she were being put on the witness stand.

"Of course, Patty," she said, "I know it is everything one could ask for in comfort and happiness—that is, the happiness that comfort brings."

The silver knife slipped from her slender hand and rings of fuzzy parings clung forgotten to the peach, while Evelyn threw herself back in the rocker and clasped her fingers behind her head.

"But it is a narrow life, you know," she went on after a moment. "We see the same country people, week in and week out; there are no new books, no lectures, we hear no good music, see nothing. Oh, Patty"—and now there was a passionate sound creeping into the girl's voice—"you don't know how hard it is to feel your life slipping away without ever having had a chance at anything! I don't mind so much not having things or not seeing them, but it almost kills me not to do anything! How would you feel if you had never had a chance to make any impression on your circle for good—if you felt that you had to die like a worthless weed by the roadside and leave the world no better or happier because you had been in it?"

Evelyn's gloomy words came to a sudden halt, for the pastor of Tinkling Creek church came out to the shady lawn and joined his daughter and their guest. The pastor was not a man whose presence encouraged fume or fret. Strong, grave, earnest, there was yet about him a sunny tenderness which compelled cheer; one would no more violate it by fretfulness than bring noisy disturbance into some cathedral sanctity.

"You've had an interrupted morning, father," said Evelyn, with a sudden change of tone; "I'm afraid our Sunday morning sermon has suffered."

"I wouldn't be surprised," answered Doctor Graham, helping himself from her peach-basket, "but I often find interruption the most important work of the day."

"This morning's for instance?" asked Miss Joliffe.

"This morning's decidedly, Miss Patty. Young Conrad came to ask my help in getting work. He is about half-way through his college course and must now earn a little more money to carry him through to his degree."

"Could you help him about the work, father?" asked Evelyn, and Miss Joliffe looked at her in surprise; gone was the air of indifference and lassitude with which she had taken part in the morning's talk; Evelyn was keenly on the alert now.

"I gave him several strings to his bow," answered Doctor Graham, turning back to his study, "and there are some letters I want you to write for him. This is Evelyn's job, Miss Patty, one of her Sunday-school boys, of whom she expects to make a great man one of these days—a saint and sage."

"If he is a saint," murmured the Sunday-school teacher, "somebody's else boy may be the sage."

And then some other topic of conversation came up, and Miss Joliffe, in her brief stay at the Tinkling Creek parsonage, did not hear Robert Conrad's name again, nor did she again draw out of Evelyn the passionate discontent which seemed to lie under the quiet of her monotonous days.

But long afterward, ten years indeed, when Miss Patty Joliffe was no longer Miss Patty, but the wife of Mr. Clinton Park, a well-known city lawyer, she suddenly met the quondam Sunday-school boy of Tinkling Creek and remembered him perfectly. It was one of those meetings which story-writers hesitate to invent, being careful of their art, but which life, that greatest of all story-tellers, uses lavishly and boldly to the best advantage.

Mrs. Park was one of the receiving party at a great social function on this occasion, and if anything was entirely below the line of memory and consciousness, it was the Tinkling Creek parsonage, its past or its present. Suddenly she found herself confronted with a strange young man who was claiming her acquaintance.

"I am taking an unfair advantage of you, Mrs. Park," he said, "because I have just found out who you are, while you——"

"Even as ignorant a person as Patty knows something about the new superintendent of the steelworks," said Mrs. Park's brother, and the lady's eyes brightened with a quick interest, for now she fully knew him as a wonderfully successful manager of machines and of men; "a rising man," of whom people were saying that Mr. Conrad's rising meant always the upward life of many other people and the betterment of the whole community. But she was now to feel a new interest in him.

"My claim," said Superintendent Conrad, "is on Mrs. Park's part." Then he spoke of the Grahams, and straightway, out of some unsounded depth of memory, rose the fair picture of the parsonage lawn, the girl paring peaches, the noble pastor of this country flock and the whole morning's conversation which had been so long forgotten.

"So you are Evelyn's saint and sage!" she cried.

"By no means!" laughed the stranger. Then, with a look of grave earnestness, he said: "I hope I am an honest workman, Mrs. Park, whose success, such as it is, is due, under God's grace, to your friends, the Grahams. I would go far to touch the hand of any friend of theirs and to find a listener who will echo my 'God bless them!'"

He had found his listener, and Mrs. Park suspended her gracious duties as hostess while she stood aside with the distinguished superintendent and heard his glowing tribute to those simple country friends of hers who had given an inspiration for his whole life.

If Robert Conrad was too modest to speak of his own career, he was eager to tell of the many young men and women to whom the pastor and his household had been an inspiration for time and eternity.

"Just the knowing such people with such aims, was an illuminated gospel," he said, waxing eloquent.

"And I used to think them buried—cut off from the usefulness they might have had in a city," Mrs. Park exclaimed.

"Oh, yes—a city!" Miss Evelyn's boy said scornfully, "all the world runs to a city. If you are looking for people who can be influenced for good—well—please give me Tinkling Creek, where I can find you home after home with the name 'Graham' engraved into its life and all for good."—Elizabeth Allen, in Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

His Care.

The sorrow that nobody mentions,
The sorrow no one may share,
Is the sorrow the dear Lord giveth
His sweetest, tenderest care.

He places his hand on the well-spring;
The quivering lips refrain,
And the eyes smile forth in defiance,
His love enfolding the pain.

He knows where the hurt is the deepest,
The tears of night and of day,
And, whispering softly, "I love you,"
Brushes the tear-drops away.

The sorrow that nobody mentions,
The sorrow no one may share,
Is the sorrow the dear Lord giveth
His sweetest, tenderest care.—Selected.

How to Get Out of a Routine.

"How can a tiresome routine be remedied? The panacea is revival of spiritual life in the pastor, in the superintendent, in the teachers; consequently in the pupils. Spiritual life in the heart of the Sunday-school, making every expression of vital truth magnetic, making the singing jubilant—this is the remedy for wearisome monotony in the Sunday-school. It is good for scholars to have the same teacher year after year, provided the teacher keeps alive in heart and hope. But the teacher should have a new lesson and a live lesson every Sunday. The way of endeavor, of untiring work, only seems to be the hard way; in the end it is the easy way. It is not when we take things easily, but when we put the most willing work into our Sunday-school that our school moves on its rutless road with most gracefulness and diffusive cheer."

May a great, strong, spiritual life lift us all out of dead routine in this new year. Pray for it; seek it; by freshly yielded hearts to Jesus, welcome it.

On Common Ground.

There is a world of good sense in the words of a noted educator who says, in regard to the teaching of the truths of the Bible to children: "The teacher must begin at some point where he and the child can stand on common ground. If he is attempting to teach the Bible and does that teaching in Sunday-school, he will make a great blunder if he attempts to present abstract truth in an abstract fashion, or to impart historical information which has no relation to the child's experience and no connection with what he already knows. If he is to make an impression on the child he is to stand beside the child in experience, and present some truth which the child can comprehend, in language which the child understands from its own experience. This is the method of the divine teaching of the race as disclosed in the Old Testament, and is the explanation of many of the difficulties which people of to-day, who read the Old Testament without adequate historical knowledge, find in that book."

I like this idea of simplicity in teaching that is here indicated. We know how the divine Teacher met the people on common ground, and how perfectly and simply he adapted all that he had to say to their understanding. The writer I have quoted gives expression to another important truth when he says: "In presenting to a child the great truths of life and of experience, it must never be forgotten that the child leads a concrete life, no matter how active its imagination, and that the child's first necessity is a knowledge of concrete things."

A good test of the clearness of your method of teaching is to ask yourself if, when you were a child of ten or twelve or fourteen years, you could have easily understood Bible truths as you propose to present them to children of those ages. One must go back to one's own childhood in thought and feeling if one is to do the most efficient work in the Sunday-school.—Selected.

Conventions as Encouragers.

"There are people beyond the mountain," runs an old German saying. At some time or other most of us forget that truth. We sit in Elijah's place, under the juniper-tree, and bemoan that things are going badly with us, and that we are all the Lord has left. Every man or woman who is hard at work for God, and perhaps weary in the work, needs to be reminded that his is only a little corner of God's great field. He should lift up his eyes, and behold, not only the fields white to harvest, but also the great company of reapers who are garnering the grain.

There is no better place to get such encouragement than a Sunday-school convention. The average Christian needs frequent heartening. Monotony's grip becomes strong upon him. At a Sunday-school convention he may have his heart inspired by a glimpse of God's wider work and of his many workers. By the words of the Lord's messengers one may learn of the greatness and triumph of the cause in which he is engaged. He can hear the songs of Zion sung as he does not hear them sung at home. Through association with fellow workers his consciousness of the vastness and power and joy of Christian fellowship will be quickened.

There are few things better than a good convention as a cure for small views, for monotony, for faint-heartedness, and for discouragement. Delegates go home with new ideas, new courage, new purposes, new faith. The thought of the kingdom's conquest is stronger in their hearts, and the sweetness of the communion of the saints is more than ever a reality.

Conventions pay in heart power.—Selected.

The Electrical Review, as its name indicates, is a journal devoted to a review of developments in the electrical sciences. Its weekly visits keep its readers well informed on the electrical news of the day, and its articles are full of interesting and profitable discussions and descriptions. It is published at 13 Park Row, New York, New York. An interesting article which appeared in the issue for January 31 was one on "Coal Cutting by Electricity in British Mines," in which the methods of using electrical machinery for "undercutting" or "kirving" is described, showing the saving in machine cut coal, because of the narrowness of the cut as compared to hand work. The machines cut a groove of only four or five inches. There are special electrical machines for driving headings, and others for regular undercutting. The article states that the largest member of machines used in England are for "long-wall" working. The two methods of mining, "long-wall" and "bord and pillar" or "stoop and room" are briefly described, showing the necessity for different styled machines for undercutting. It states that in some of the "large collieries in Yorkshire and Derbyshire, there are as many as twenty machines working in a single colliery, each machine cutting across a face of from nine hundred yards upward."

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, February 9.

Editors Herald: We have just closed one of the best conferences of the Little Sioux District that it has been my privilege to attend. The weather was favorable and the attendance good, especially at the preaching services. Unity, good will, and brotherly love seemed to characterize the assembly, and the Spirit that brings peace and joy to the hearts of the children of God was felt to a large degree. This was especially the case in the Sunday morning prayer-service, which was greatly enjoyed by the Saints.

Our joy would have been complete had it not been for the severe illness and death of Bro. Amos Vredenburg, whom we found very low with typhoid fever and who departed this life a few hours after the adjournment of conference. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones; and may what appears unto us as an untimely death serve as a warning to all.

H. N. HANSEN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 10.

Dear Herald: You are dear to the hearts of all who read your pages; for you bring precious news to cheer the hearts of the lonely and isolated, as well as to those that have communion with each other. How often when we read your precious pages we are cheered and comforted; the Spirit bearing witness to us to the many testimonies you bring to our fireside. Perhaps a word from me will help some one as I have been helped, so have concluded to try to do my share of feeding as well as being fed. In October last I opened meetings in Carbondale, a mining town near my home and one mile outside of the city limits. Did not appear to get up much interest, so turned the meetings over to the branch officers, as I was urgently requested to go four miles farther east to a schoolhouse where I had preached several times nearly two years before. A Methodist preacher had been preaching there every two weeks for nearly six years; had made no converts, so had closed his meetings for good, so he told me. But as soon as he saw there was an interest among the people, he began a revival. He got one convert, a man who had just moved into the neighborhood. One night he began to abuse the Mormons (there were no Mormons present), and about half of his congregation took sides with the Latter Day Saints against him, his young convert among the opposers. Now many are investigating our claims and some four or five are nearly ready for baptism and undoubtedly will be with us ere long. Two have already said they would be baptized shortly, a man and wife. They want to go together. The wife cannot be baptized at present. Another man and wife are just about ready and may ask for baptism any day. Last night the Methodist preacher closed, and to-night I will begin meetings to hold every night for two weeks. Then will preach every other Sunday. So the work moves on.

I hope for an ingathering in the near future, and pray for the welfare of Zion's cause.

Editors Herald: Here is a specimen of "free advertising" with no distinction:

"Reverend Doctor William M. Bell, secretary of missions of the United Brethren in Christ, of Dayton, Ohio, speaking before the National Federation of Church Workers at the third annual conference in this city to-day, said: "There is a vast territory in the West where we shall presently have a tremendous struggle with Mormonism. And there is no way in which we can grapple successfully with the spirit that possesses that great district unless we federate and fight it together."—Chicago Record-Herald, February 4.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, January 24.

Editors Herald: Again our mail from home comes to us bearing good tidings from loved ones, and informing us of the progress of the work in Joseph's land; for all of which we feel very grateful.

In these islands we have been having a siege of measles, and as twenty-eight years have passed since that disease visited these islands before there were many cases, and many deaths; we are about over with them here; but Bro. and Sr. Gilbert writes us that they are busy caring for the sick ones in Hikueru.

Last week we sent them the mimeograph, which Bishop Parkin of San Francisco kindly purchased for us. It will help them in the Sunday-school and Religio work. By this mail I send for camera supplies for him. He has taken some very nice native scenes, and with his new supply will take some more of them.

We have the manuscript of the Doctrine and Covenants in Tahitian ready for the printer. Translated by Mr. I. S. Henry, read and corrected by Elder John Hawkins, and then by Elder D. M. Pohemiti, the mission secretary, and again by Elder A. Sanford, the branch president here, and Metuaore has also often helped us in the work; so we expect to give the Tahitians the Doctrine and Covenants in a fairly good translation, without material errors, which will be a great help to the Saints here as well as to the missionaries also.

There probably are more privations to be endured in this mission than any other in the church, and more discouragements to be patiently borne than generally falls to the lot of missionaries; and it takes a strong constitution and a brave heart to bear up under these difficulties, especially in the archipelago or Paumotus where our members principally reside, numbering about fifteen hundred on twenty islands besides Tahiti.

But Bro. and Sr. Gilbert bear patiently their hour and burden of toil, without complaint, although the difficulties to be met with here are having their effect upon her not too strong body; but they are doing an excellent work among the people in the Paumotus. They are now in Hikueru. May God ever bless and comfort them, and give them grace and strength for every time of need.

We wish a Happy New Year to all the HERALD force, and its readers, and peace upon the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

RICHMOND, Victoria, Australia, January 12.

Editors Herald: Since last communicating to the HERALD the writer has been doing what he could to advance the cause of Christ. The mission at Wallsend resulted in three baptisms. We also organized a Religio at that place. The next thing was a mission at Hamilton, which was not a success in the way of accessions. However, the Religio was reorganized and we believe other good done.

While laboring in the New Castle District we preached in the open air on two Saturday evenings at West Wallsend. A large audience was present, a part of which was very contentious. That part was the Plymouth Brethren. They were so anxious to expose our position that I proposed a regular public discussion. The police also suggested it since they were making a disturbance by venting their objections on the street. The crowd also loudly demanded it, so it was agreed upon. A Mr. James Campbell consented to represent their side. He would discuss but one proposition, and that was, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of salvation by faith alone?" The time finally agreed upon was November 1. Accordingly we met and debated from half past seven to half past nine in the evening. The debate passed off pleasantly, no ill will being created. My opponent, however, showed his intolerance by refusing to have any devotional exercises. We desired such out of respect for the Bible which of course both used as the standard of evidence. He objected because, as he said, he had no feeling of fellowship for the Saints. This event required another trip to that section since we had returned to Sydney on October 11. We remained but little more than a week, when we went back to Sydney again. However, we made another trip to the New Castle region just before the holidays. On all these occasions we were kindly treated and our temporal wants generously supplied. The Saints of the Hamilton and Wallsend Branches know how to make the elder feel at home. Their hospitality will never be forgotten.

Most of our work in New South Wales was in Balmain. We had the pleasure of baptizing fifteen during our stay there, also that of assisting in other ways. Some unpleasant incidents occurred; among other things an elders' court, but we have learned to expect such things. Paul said the Spirit witnessed that in every city bonds and afflictions awaited him. Our experiences are similar. Many occurrences of an encouraging character were also our portion. On November 10 the Sunday-school picnic was held which in my humble opinion was the best thing of the kind I ever witnessed.

December 27 the district conference convened. It lasted until the 29th, and was held at Balmain. The chapel there was dedicated at the Sunday forenoon service. This was an event of interest to the Saints there, and also throughout the district.

The conference was an agreeable one to all concerned. Much important business was transacted. Among other things a co-operation church building fund was started, and a Religio district association organized. Bro. Butterworth and Wight were present. The former is improving in health but is not yet able to do much. In the past he has worked hard, possibly too hard for his physical good, and has endeared himself to the Saints of the entire mission. The duty of presiding in an active sense fell upon the latter, and it was well done. He shows himself master on all occasions. He speaks plainly concerning principles, and trusts to the good sense of each individual to make a personal application. There is an entire absence of display or a desire to be officially conspicuous. This is as it should be, and reminds us of the words of our Savior when he said, "Ye know that they which are accounted [worthy] to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But so shall it not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister: and whosoever among you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all."—Mark 10: 42-44.

On December 30 we left New South Wales for this State. We took passage on a fine, large steamer called the Kalgoorlie, which passed out through the Sydney Heads in the evening. The trip required two days. We were in sight of the coast part of the time. Not many passengers were on board because of it being the midst of the holiday season. Much more traveling is done at its commencement and close. New Year's Eve a concert was given in which the writer took part. The weather was fine, so there was little or no seasickness. However, a strong head wind was encountered Wednesday night, which delayed our arrival three hours. We arrived about nine o'clock in the evening of January 1, and were met at the wharf by some of the Saints. Bro. John Jones and William Mackie escorted us to the former's home, where we are pleasantly domiciled. Both of these brethren have recently received appointments as missionaries. They are spiritual, energetic, capable men, and will surely succeed. The latter left for Adelaide, South Australia, very recently. Bro. Jones and wife will go to the same place in about a month. May success crown their efforts.

We have now arrived where we expected to be before coming to this land. Here we are a missionary for Melbourne and suburbs, which means half a million people within a few square miles. Will we be able to do justice to the work? By God's help we will so far as our efforts extend; but what is one among so many? Much of my work in recent years has been in cities, and yet I am not really a city preacher. However, in the city as well as the country, only the common people accept our message.

I have no particular desire to labor among any others. The simplicity of the gospel meets all my requirements. If I ever "loved the garish day" that time is past.

January 2 we performed the sad office of officiating at the funeral of Myrtle Emma, youngest child of Bro. and Sr. C. A. Butterworth. This death was sudden as well as sad. The father had left her well but a few days before. He was near Sydney when she died, and had intended to take the next ship for America. This will delay and may prevent his trip.

I desire an interest in the prayers of all.

ALMA C. BARMORE.

SOMERVILLE, Victoria, Australia, January 10.

Editors Herald: It is somewhat comforting to me to be able to state that I have sufficiently recovered to be able to move about, and do at least a little in the line of duty. I had the pleasure of attending the Victorian conference, and was much pleased to note the fervent desire to see the work move forward, and new laborers ready to make the great sacrifice necessary to take the field. Business passed off pleasantly and in good style, with Bro. J. W. Wight in the chair. He is an added comfort to me, especially under present circumstances, and I think to all Saints.

I left my family well, and traveled to the New South Wales conference with Bro. Wight, intending to sail for America in January; but was suddenly called back seven hundred miles on account of the death of our only little girl. This will likely change my plans, and I may not reach the States before next conference year. If so I will probably bring my family with me then.

The Sydney conference was well attended, and considerable necessary business attended to, and an effort to settle up all back difficulties, and start under better conditions with the opening of the new year. Prayer services were spiritual and comforting, and the preaching of the word was instructive, and attentively listened to.

I am at the seabeach with the family at present, trying to smooth off some of the rough and rugged trials we are called to meet in our earthly pilgrimage.

In the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, Canada, February 4.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this Province. Fourteen months past we bade adieu to Saints and friends in Lamoni, Iowa, and emigrated to the great Northwest Territory. Homesteading a quarter section, and buying another quarter, we settled, with one neighbor three miles from us. Since that time a number have come in, and more are coming in the spring.

This is a beautiful country; good chances for those seeking homes. Would like to see Saints locating here, so we could enjoy our church privileges. There was no one of the faith here when we came. Since then Bro. David Walker and Srs. Edith Sandage and Minnie Hatcher have located here. We expect to organize a Latter Day Saint Sabbath-school in the spring. Although we are few in number, yet I hope at some future time others will accept the truth and obey the gospel. There are some of our friends from the States here who have parents that are members of the church and have been taught the gospel from youth, but yet who seem very indifferent to the work; yet I can not believe they would accept any other doctrine. There are persons here who have never had the privilege to hear the gospel in its purity, who remarked after reading some of the church publications I gave them, that it was new, yet old; yet it would have to become more popular before people would care to investigate. I am impressed there are some here who would be willing to investigate if they could have the privilege, and my prayer is that God may send the gospel to honest hearts here.

Being isolated from the Saints, I feel to speak a word to those who are not deprived of the church privileges. Improve every opportunity, for this earth does not afford a happier place for the Saints than the prayer-meeting. We should not be idle in this great work, for there is something for each one of us to do. I see more and more the importance of keeping God's commandments, because there is no safety anywhere else; and if all the Saints could realize this, how different we would deport ourselves in many instances, among ourselves and in the world. May each one who has accepted the name of Christ be humble, that we may be bound closer together in unity, that our influence for good in the world may be made effectual by our examples. May the work continue to prosper under the guidance of God's hand, and finally, "Zion be redeemed," is my prayer.

Your sister,

M. V. BRANTWAIT.

PITTSBURG, Kansas, February 3.

Editors Herald: The invaluable presence of the HERALD so brightens my lonely hours into seasons of gladsome praise, that it seems to me I could not maintain any degree of spiritual life if I were deprived of its visitations; and yet there are many dear brethren and sisters who can not enjoy its blessings. It is a grand privilege to have the means of knowing how the work of salvation is progressing, the efforts made and blessings realized by our brethren, becoming acquainted with one another, creating a loving interest in each other, bringing us closer together, and nearer to God.

Let us avail ourselves of opportunities presented and facilities offered to bring us to a Zionistic condition. As this condition implies purity of heart, possession of light and truth, and an intelligent exhibition in thought and deed, let us not permit ourselves to be deprived of any available means to the end desired.

Through the various departments of His work our heavenly Father has provided means to utilize every specie of talent and ability, thus making it possible for every one to employ his powers to his own salvation and the glory of God. May heaven help us to be faithful stewards.

Brn. Short and Bailey of the bishopric, came to our branch, Pleasant View, Kansas, January 17. Bro. Bailey preached a comprehensive, matter-of-fact discourse on the temporal law of the kingdom on Sunday, the 18th. In the evening of same date Bro. Short spoke about thirty minutes with a marked degree of inspiration, rendering his effort of depth of thought and eloquence of speech, after which he granted privilege to the audience to ask questions regarding the temporal law of the church. A number of questions were asked and we were gratified and profited by explanations given.

The condition and needs of some of the worthy poor were presented, which caused the sympathetic chord in the hearts of some to vibrate to a profitable and material degree. Consecrations were made by several of the brethren who had received the smiles of prosperity, and their offering cheerfully dedicated with the true spirit of brotherly love.

I rejoice to see the dawn of Zion's redemption. By the sweet bond of charity God's children are being bound together, sharing each other's joys and sorrows, bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ.

Gospel workers of our district are busy in their respective duties. Bro. Keck is having successful meetings in Indian Territory. Bro. Kaler recently held a week of profitable meetings at Nashville, Missouri. Bro. J. T. Davis is laboring as district president, aiding the local brethren in the several branches. He will be with our branch the 8th inst.

The Saints of Pittsburg, Kansas, have rented a chapel and will soon have a branch organized.*

I attended a very spiritual sacrament and prayer-meeting at Nashville, Missouri, on February 1.

Brn. B. F. Miles and B. Andes, priests, are holding regular meetings with the Saints. I was gratified to see the zealous effort made by the members to make a success of their endeavors and witness the blessing it brought upon them. If our large branches would manifest the humble interest these few Saints (only nine in number) do, we should greatly be benefited by the results.

We have some noble workers in our branch, chief among them our president.

May we be granted knowledge and wisdom, that we may be patient and careful, that our work may be compact and firm, that we may be steadfast and faithful to the end.

Hopefully,

MOLLIE DAVIS.

LORAIN, Ohio, February 8.

Dear Herald: Your columns are eagerly read that we may receive new light and strength, and we are not often disappointed. We feel that to be without the HERALD we would lose a great deal; for being isolated we do not often hear the gospel preached or have communion with Saints, as do those who live in a branch. Yet we feel firm in the faith, and thankful for the manifestations of God's love for his children. I have long felt a desire to express my gratitude to the sisters who for years have written such helpful articles in the Home Column. They have helped me in trying to bring up my children in the right way. The greatest responsibility of life rests with the mothers, and how can we discharge our duties as such without we are guided by the Divine Spirit?

Your sister,

KITTIE M. MINKLER.

SHAW, Kansas, February 5.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home. I never tire of reading its pages. I was baptized last fall by Elder Lee Quick. I know that I will never be sorry for the step I have taken; for I know that God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. I have not heard a sermon since last fall. The Saints who have the privilege of meeting with the Saints are blessed. I am trying to keep the faith and hope the Saints will pray for me that I may be faithful unto the end. We will gladly receive any of the elders passing this way.

Your sister,

ORPHA CLINE.

LONGWOOD, Ontario, February 8.

Editors Herald: We have a branch here of about forty members. We have Sunday-school and preaching nearly every Sabbath; and though few attend I feel the promise is true that when two or three are gathered together in God's name he will be in their midst. We are always glad when the church papers come in as we all take a delight in reading them. We take HERALD, Glad Tidings, Canadian Messenger, and Autumn Leaves, and all give interesting news.

Your sister,

ESTELLA M. KETTLEWELL.

TOWASH, Texas, February 6.

Editors Herald: The good work is prospering, and I am so glad that the Lord is so good to his Saints. My prayer is that the Saints will be faithful till Jesus comes to gather his people to Zion.

We had Brn. David Smith and John McKnight with us for two weeks. Six were baptized. I am glad the honest in heart are obeying the gospel, and preparing to meet our God when he comes in glory. Dear Saints, let us pray that the glorious work will go on and that we as Saints will do all we can to help spread the gospel.

JOHN BELLINGER.

HOLYOKE, Colorado, February 2.

Editors Herald: I am one of the many isolated ones and reading the HERALD is one of our greatest pleasures. My husband sent for the HERALD for me before Christmas, and the first copy came Christmas eve. I never got a present that I appreciated so much, as we have never taken it before but have taken the Ensign nearly ever since it started, and also Autumn Leaves. We have them also so I can pass a great many hours reading and pondering over the good letters and articles in each. I appreciated that piece in the last HERALD entitled "Need of Attending Meeting," and heartily indorse every word, and wish we were situated so we might be able to attend meetings. But we feel the Lord can hear our petitions if we offer them from sincere hearts.

I love the work in its many departments and I am glad to learn the Religio is doing such a good work, for I believe it will reach some who perhaps would be hard to get interested in any other way. I love the Sunday-school, and miss it so much, as I have always attended when I was where I could. We had a little Sunday-school last summer, but now the Saints are so scattered we can not but hope we may so live that we may be among those who will have oil in their lamps so that ere the Savior shall come we may with the chosen few be able to enter into the joys of the Lord. I feel thankful that I have accepted the gospel. I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people. I ever pray for the spread of the truth.

Your sister,
N. E. BELKHAM.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, February 7.

Editors Herald: The Saints here are working very hard in many ways to raise funds in order to finish our chapel which we have up and boarded and the roof shingled. There are but a few of us to work, so we make comparatively slow progress. But we feel the Lord is with us and will crown our efforts finally with success. We still have our Sunday-school running and fair interest seems to be manifested in its work. I think the greatest need of the school is library books, as we have none, and there seems to be quite a call for them.

We have our prayer-meeting every Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, and preaching occasionally by the elders and myself. There seems to be a lack of interest in our meetings. Many who could do so do not attend, even among our brothers and sisters in the church. I think we need more preaching to stir the people up and start a sort of revival; and once started possibly the interest could be maintained, especially if the officers as well as members would all do their duties as they should, which I fear is not being done now. We have had no elders with us for some time, although Bro. S. O. Foss expects to be here about the first of March to hold some meetings.

May the Lord bless all his people and lead them on to victory, is the prayer of my heart.

WALLACE A. SMALL.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, February 6.

Editors Herald: My heart rejoices to read the letters from the Saints. We have some good Saints down here in the South. The traveling elders come and preach for us sometimes. Bro. W. J. Booker comes and preaches for us sometimes and our good old president, Bro. Jesse Reeder, preaches for us when he can.

This is my first letter to the HERALD and I hope it will be of some interest to some of the Saints. I have belonged to the church for about twenty-eight years, and I have never regretted one moment of time that I ever belonged; for I know of a surety it is the true work of Jesus Christ, and it will prove to all who belong to this work, and seek for it, that it is the true work. I have been healed in and through this work by being administered to by some of the elders laying their hands on me and anointing me with oil. I feel thankful to my heavenly Father that he has spared me to see the close of another year, and the coming in of a new year. I want the prayers of all the Saints that I may continue faithful to the end and have a part in the first resurrection.

Your sister,

E. J. LONE.

BALDWIN, Wisconsin, February 6.

Editors Herald: The battle is fierce here. I have been threatened with tar and feathers. Have been assailed by two ministers; branded "Mormon" and a "deceiver." Yet many are interested and the tide is turning now in my favor. The tar and feather committees have been rebuked by the mayor, who has turned to be my staunch friend. The anti-Mormon league literature falls flat as against us when proper defense is made. We are happy in the fight, and all is well.

T. W. CHATBURN.

WILLIAMSBURG, Colorado, February 9.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith, and thank God for his goodness and mercy to me. I have been in Colorado since the last of September. Came here for my health which is wonderfully improved. I came to Swink to Bro. and Sr. John and Mamie Brennan, and found a Saint's welcome indeed; also a branch of Saints united under the name of the Rockyford Branch with Bro. John Brennan as president, holding services each Sunday from house to house. It is a beautiful country where they live, and Bro. John turned from a miner to a farmer of the first quality. I stayed with them five weeks and enjoyed many good meetings among the Saints there. When I came to Williamsburg where my son had gone before to obtain work in the mines, I was kindly welcomed by old friends there also, but not Saints; and how much I missed the meetings at Brennan's, for I had not the privilege of hearing the word by Saints until two weeks ago when Elder J. F. Curtis, of Colorado Springs, came here and has preached every evening since, but to very poor crowds, as the people here seem to be satisfied in a religious way.

I pray to God for his Holy Spirit to keep me firm in the faith even unto the end.

Bro. Curtis has gone to Coal Creek this morning to see if there is an opening there for him to preach. There is a family of Saints living there. He found one sister in Florence about two miles from here.

I ask the prayers of the Saints in my behalf, that I may be faithful, and that my family may unite with the church, and that we may do some good here.

Your sister,

MRS. MOSES DAVIES.

WILTON JUNCTION, Iowa, February 11.

Editors Herald: With profound sorrow I read of our probable loss in the Society Islands. In the reports thus far there does not appear any great loss to our people; but knowing those islands as the missionaries do it is hardly possible in such a storm, with waves sixty or seventy or even thirty feet high, that any church building should be left, and doubtless one third of our membership there suffered horrible fright, exposure, and finally death. All of our white missionaries were there, I think. A letter from Bro. Gilbert and wife from Raroia in November said they expected to go to Hikueru (not Hikuera as in the associated press dispatches) in a few weeks, and doubtless they were there for the Christmas festivities. From Bro. Burton's last letter in the HERALD, he and Emma expected to be there also before Christmas-tide. You doubtless understand that once in three years the able-bodied natives of all the coral islands in the French possessions gather at Hikueru to dive for pearl-shells. The island was opened for diving last October and will continue until next October, so that they are all there now. They all aim to be there at Christmas-time. There being no opportunity for the missionaries to do any work elsewhere at that time, they, too, go to Hikueru. Wife and I were there the last diving and remained seven months. Lillie was the only white woman there, and I presume Srs. Gilbert and Burton were the only ones there this time. By the papers I see that one white woman committed suicide from fright. I hardly dare conclude who it was and yet it is hardly possible for it to be other than Sr. Gilbert or Sr. Burton. The nine hundred natives who were saved swam three to four miles to ships standing off shore. It is hardly possible that either Bro. Burton or Bro. Gilbert could swim so far in such foaming billows. I hope for the best, but will fear the worst, especially for Bro. and Sr. Gilbert; for if they were not at Hikueru they were in the Paumotu group somewhere, and the paper states eighty of them were depopulated, and they could hardly have escaped; while it is possible that Bro. and Sr. Burton were yet in Papeete, though I hardly think probable. If you did not get a letter from Bro. Burton on the last steamer, then it is certain that they were either at Hikueru or on their way, for he certainly would have written you of their great calamity if he had been in Papeete.

We had about twenty branches on the coral islands, and most of them had churches built throughout with flooring and roofed with corrugated, galvanized iron, ranging in cost from four hundred to four thousand dollars, besides their cocoanuts were all destroyed and it will be ten years before they can inhabit those islands again. Poor people! About half the population of the coral islands were our people or their children so you can see that we have suffered great loss. I doubt if those people will again attempt to inhabit those islands. The government will have to provide for them. The greatest desires our people have are to come to America. I wish it were possible for us to charter a vessel and bring them now. They certainly would be willing to come. But that is only a small expense compared with getting them located and feeding them until they learn to be self-supporting.

About twenty-two years ago they had a similar storm that nearly depopulated two islands, and the natives always refer to that as the saddest in the history of their nation. What must this one be when eighty or more islands were swept by doubtless a sixty or seventy foot wave, as the papers state only those in the tallest coconut-trees were saved, and some trees grow to a height of one hundred feet. Such awful destruction! My heart sickens at the sight, and more especially as those very ones who suffer showed us such kindness as I never before experienced in this world, often clinging to our arms and skirts when we left them and weeping as if their hearts would break, lest they should not see us again. But our heavenly Father will be good to them in paradise, I know, for their love for his servants on earth. May they rest there in peace. After all they are better off. They are out of the most wicked place in this wicked world. But those who remain! Added to their evil surroundings comes their great misfortune. Can not the church do something for them? I am sure that the Saints throughout the world would subscribe liberally. I am willing to do anything to help them and only wish I were there if no more than to weep with them for the loss of friends, mine as well as theirs.

I feel too sorrowful to write more, and perhaps I ought not to trouble you as you have enough to bear. May the good Lord direct for the best.

Kindly yours,

J. W. PETERSON.

WILTON JUNCTION, Iowa, February 11.

Editors Herald: I must say I, too, as well as Bro. Peterson, feel sad over the disaster in the islands. My mind finds no peace night or day for our loved ones there, not only for those who have gone from here but for the natives who loved and cared for us. To think that some of them have met with such ill-fated death! No one can mourn as those who know their kindness and humility. The comfort for them that are left will be with the Lord. Can not something be done? Oh, if we were only there to weep with them! Let us know the first report you get. Not to know who are gone is such a fearful suspense!

In gospel love for those who mourn, I remain,

LILLIE F. PETERSON.

GRAND MANAN, New Brunswick, February 4.

Editors Herald: There are six Saints here now; not dead, but lukewarm. If something is not done on our part or some body does not do something for us there will be no one here to be called Saints. We are getting old and soon must go to the Spirit world. We have no meetings of our own. We attend meetings of other denominations, and take part in them, bearing our testimony to what we believe to be the truth. I have felt that if some elder could come here and preach to the people there might be some obey. The name Latter Day Saint or "Mormon" is not held in derision as much as it used to be. Whenever opportunity presents itself, I talk to them and try to show them the difference between us, and the other factions of the church. But it is life I would like to see in the Saints here. Dry words do not satisfy me.

I feel that some of my children would obey if an elder would come. I think two of them would, at least. I have not much of this world's goods, but they can come and make their homes with us. They shall not want for food and care. I should like to see this work prosper, and I believe it will. Pray for us.

Your brother,

ELISHA FLAGG.

LOS ANGELES, California, February 9.

Editors Herald: I attended a ministers' meeting this forenoon, its object being the organization of a "Congress of Religions" to be held here some time in March. The noted Doctor Thomas, of Chicago, is heading the movement. Doctor Thomas spoke in considerate and friendly terms of our "Bro. Joseph."

Plans are now matured whereby I am to be privileged to address the Liberal League of this city on the subject, "The fundamental philosophy and history of the Latter Day Saints." Our church choir will render the music.

"Mormonism," so-called is receiving attention from every quarter. The missionary board of the Presbyterian church is systematizing its attacks; the Gospel Messenger, published at Elgin, Illinois, representing the Dunkards or Brethren persuasion, is out with a recent attack upon the faith; anent the Hunt-Shamberger discussion. Messiah's Advocate, of Oakland, California, speaking for the First Advent church, contains an article showing the points of similarity between "Joe" Smith and Doctor Dowie. The same paper contains a communication from the pen of John A. Cargile, of Stevenson, Alabama, who glowingly portrays the cowardice (?) of Elders Jenkins, Marshall, and Scott of our church in failing to meet him in an honorable discussion and challenging any "Mormon you see" to meet him in discussion. I have written him a personal letter calling his attention to some inconsistencies in his position. I think our brethren can care for their own side of the matter.

I have been in correspondence with Reverend McLain W. Davis, of the Santa Ana Presbyterian Church. In support of some of his contentions he presents a purported "Basis of Agreement" between Bro. S. D. Condit and an Elder Ballard, of the Utah church, in their Logan, Utah, debate, which I feel very sure can not represent Bro. Condit properly, and I know does not represent the position of the church. I am still corresponding with Doctor McMillan, of New York, and several ministers in this country. This correspondence requires considerable time and careful research, but I believe it will be productive of good. We have nothing to fear from a fair, open canvass, and welcome the strongest argument our opponents can put up. If they defeat us in an open contest we will acknowledge it like men.

From material at hand and observations taken, I am satisfied that Satan is massing his strength for the final onslaught upon the church. Our test in the controversial arena is yet to come. If we rid the work of all human accumulation we shall be able to present such a formidable front that the enemy can not take a position. I am assured the enemy can have no vantage ground save by taking up some unwarranted assumption or strained application of scripture which some of our speculative brethren have sometimes used. They may be able to note a coincidence in the text where practical minds can not. One sound, pointed, scriptural passage is of more value to us than a dozen scriptures which are capable of several applications. I have never been at a loss for one minute in defending the fundamentals or our faith or the organic character of the institution, but I must confess I have been sometimes puzzled in harmonizing positions unnecessarily taken by some of our ministers; taken solely to gain a point which in the end was not of material necessity to salvation but afforded the enemy formidable material to prejudice the minds of the general public, while it mattered little to the church which rendition was correct.

The enemy as a rule is tricky, evasive, and dishonest; as ambassadors for Christ we cannot afford to be anything but just, honorable, and upright; and should the canvass which is now on in every quarter of the land disclose any weakness in our tactics (it can never fease our philosophy) as men we should be willing to acknowledge the same and together profit thereby.

While driving through the San Bernardino Valley last week flurries of snow were particularly noticeable, and at times enveloped us. We have had very cold weather the past week; no appreciable damage to fruit, however. The mountains are covered with snow and the valleys are covered with a carpet of green, interspersed with blooming flowers. We hope to have Bro. Butterworth with us during our district conference in March. Everything moving nicely.

GRAND RAPIDS, Michigan, February 5.

Editors Herald: I arrived in this city on the 10th day of May last, and on that morning snow fell to the depth of six inches, something quite unusual, but it all vanished the next day without freezing, so that no special damage was done. I found things wonderfully changed since I was here twenty years ago, not only in the city but in the vicinity of Hopkins, Allegan County, where I first heard the gospel in 1867, under the ministrations of Bro. E. C. Briggs. This city has made rapid growth, and now numbers about one hundred thousand souls. The glorious latter-day work has found its way here and about one hundred members lived in and near the city. But alas, the adversary had separated them, having alienated them from each other, by reason of differences, real or imaginary, the effect in either case being the same, causing coldness and indifference in some and lack of confidence and estrangement that is certainly very deplorable in others, but fulfilling the prediction made by our President several years ago, to the effect that work of the adversary would be along these lines in the then near future. Strange that any called to be Saints should allow themselves to become subject to the influences that he put forth in this direction. Three able elders reside in the city or near it, and are surely capable of doing much good if their labors were wisely directed. While there has been considerable improvement made, the desired conditions have not been as yet attained.

Bro. C. E. Irwin, using the tent that belonged to the branch, opened meetings August last in Sparta, where some of the members of the branch resided, and was assisted at different times in preaching by Brn. W. E. Peak, G. A. Smith, E. K. Evans, W. D. Ellis, and myself. As a result five have been baptized there and four in an adjoining town, by Bro. Irwin, and on the 12th of October they and several who previously had been members of the Grand Rapids Branch were organized into a branch known as the Sparta Branch, with Bro. F. T. Field, priest; J. J. Erhart, teacher, and Bro. Charles Dresser, deacon. Sr. Field is secretary, and writes me they are getting along nicely and are very happy in their work.

By a letter written by Bro. S. W. L. Scott to the editor of Glad Tidings, I learned that some Utah elders were in the city and they had visited the Alpine Saints, and were anxious for discussion, so I visited them at their room, found them all in, four in number, and conversed with them for two hours or more, mainly on differences existing between the church in Utah and the Reorganization. They presented several arguments on the polygamy question that I had heard before, and some that were new to me. They claimed the Lord had revealed or given the plural marriage covenant three times, in Old Testament times, in Book of Mormon times, and in the latter days. I told them that as I understood it, it was not true in either of the cases mentioned, called their attention to the fact that in the cases of Adam, Noah and his sons, and those who were led to this continent, all were monogamists, and that if it was ever essential that their peculiar ideas of the marriage covenant should prevail it was in the instances cited.

Their reply was that in all these cases a righteous seed was raised up, and that only in the times of great wickedness was it necessary for the Lord to reveal this covenant that such seed might be raised up and referred to the present time as being very wicked. They had claimed that but a small per cent of their people ever practised polygamy, and that no new marriages of the plural order were being performed now. I called their attention to the fact that prior to the flood there existed a time of great wickedness, and that according to their argument, if there had ever been a time when a righteous seed was necessary it was then, and that if any attempt was being made in that direction it was frustrated, for they must have all been drowned by the flood, for only monogamists were saved; and as it was in the days of Noah so it would be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man. I gave them three tracts written on these subjects by the three sons of the Martyr. They expressed the thought that the only question that should be debated was that of authority; that they were right because the majority of the Twelve went west, and it was their right to ordain and set in order all the other officers in the church, and they had selected a presidency in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 104:11 (our book).

I assured them that the position of the Reorganization was that the church had been rejected prior to the choosing of a presidency by them, and that such rejection was evidently "collectively and not individually," because of the displeasure of the Lord, just as he expressed himself concerning the church as originally organized (see Doctrine and Covenants 1:5), and that the Lord never gave the Twelve the right to appoint a presidency, and that they had never had a presidency in the Utah church since it had an existence that was legally appointed and ordained, and that they could be accommodated with a chance to discuss the subject of authority any time and place when and where proper arrangements could be made. They did not think a discussion would do any good.

I visited the Saints of the Alto Branch on the 18th of January. Found them enjoying the gospel truths, and zealous in the good work.

Self Protection and Building of Zion.

For the interest of those who are looking forward to the time when conditions will be such as to justify the gathering of the Saints in accordance with divine instruction, and that the experience of the early pioneers, in attempting to carry out some of the work thus undertaken may not be ours to encounter, we respectfully call attention through the following report to our purpose, efforts, and progress in establishing a necessary link in the accomplishment of the greatly desired end.

Realizing that the time is at hand when an effort should be made to further the financial condition of the church and the Saints in general, and, if possible, to place them upon a self-sustaining basis, free from the evils of worldly prejudice and greed, on March 22, 1902, a number of the Independence Saints met together for the purpose of discussing the best and most practical means of procedure. After several long-continued meetings of this character, committees were appointed to investigate the general condition of affairs and the conclusion was almost unanimously reached, that in order to obtain the desired results, it would be necessary to coöperate and establish an organization such as is now our pleasure to present for consideration.

We have purchased ten acres of ground along side of two railroads, which not only gives us ample ground room for development, but affords the very best railroad accommodations.

The manufacturing plant which is now practically finished, is an elegant, substantial structure, sixty-four by ninety-six feet, three stories high, with a floor space of 18,434 square feet. The first story is built of stone; the second and third stories are of brick, with metal roof, and this makes the building practically fire-proof.

The machinery, which consists of the very latest improved machines on the market, has now been shipped, and we are expecting its arrival in a few days.

In connection with the manufacturing interests, we also wish all to note the progress being made in the mercantile department. We have purchased the store-building and merchandise stock of J. W. Layton and the stock of groceries of C. H. Woodford, which, in connection with a fresh meat market is now being run at the old stand of J. W. Layton on West Lexington Street. We have also purchased the large business lot, one block west of the public square, known as the Morgan property, where it is expected the business will be extended at as early a time as the interests will warrant. The lot is one hundred thirty-five by one hundred sixty-five feet, and faces on three streets, making one of the best and finest business locations in Independence. A proposition of several other business firms to unite with us is also now being considered by the Board of Directors.

Further, as we are desirous of making this department of the company one of the most complete of its kind in the West, we will, for the next ninety days, consider an offer of any of the Saints now engaged in the mercantile business and who are wishing to change their location to unite their stock with the mercantile interests upon a cash basis. The twenty-five thousand dollar capital stock provided for in the corporation having been, with the exception of a small amount, taken, it will be necessary with the increased business to increase the capital stock to the amount of fifty thousand dollars, and subscriptions will be taken for this purpose between this and the first of June, 1903.

We feel that we are beyond a point of speculation and can assure the Saints that their investment with us will not only bring good returns, but will be safe and profitable to those who invest and beneficial to the Saints in general. To the local Saints and friends who purchase in this department, a rebate will be given on all cash purchases, whether they are stockholders or not. Also, as a great many of the present stockholders have transferred a part of their stock to the use and benefit of the church, so that the church to-day holds one tenth of the entire stock in this way, we feel that we may justly solicit your aid and support, and trust that each and every one will subscribe, as much as one share at least, between now and June 1, 1903.

The election of the Board of Directors for the ensuing year, held on the 6th of January, 1903, resulted in the election of Ellis Short, R. May, P. Peterson, B. F. Resch, W. D. Roberts, Frank Criley, A. E. Elliott, A. L. Yingling, and Alma R. White.

Ellis Short was reelected president; R. May, vice-president and treasurer; Alma R. White, secretary, and A. L. Yingling is the present business manager.

For further particulars or copy of by-laws, address A. R. White, secretary, Independence, Missouri.

Soliciting the consideration and patronage of the Saints and friends of the enterprise, we are, Yours truly,

THE INDEPENDENCE MANUFACTURING AND MERCANTILE CO.

Present Extent of Wireless Telegraphy.

At the present time, there are no less than eight companies prepared to build and install "cableless" telegraph apparatus; these are the British Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Company (Limited), the Marconi International Marine Communication Company, the Canadian Marconi Company, the Marconi Company of the United States, the General Electric Company of Berlin, the Siemens & Halske Company, of Berlin; Queen & Company, of Philadelphia, and the De Forest Company, of New York City.

The various Marconi companies have equipped six stations in the United States, including the most powerful one in the world, at South Wellfleet, Massachusetts, their other stations throughout the world are at Table Head, Glace Bay, Nova Scotia; three stations are in course of construction in Alaska; five stations are in operation in Hawaii, while in Great Britain there are twenty stations, including the powerful one at Poldhu; in Germany, there is a Marconi equipment on Borkum Island, with its complementary apparatus on Borkum lightship, one in Belgium and another in France complete their list of land stations.

Of steamships carrying Marconi apparatus, there are eighteen vessels, represented by eight lines. The English Admiralty have land stations at Malta, Gibraltar, Tientsin, Hongkong, and Bermuda, and thirty-two men-of-war have Marconi installations; the Royal Italian Navy has five land stations and twenty ships equipped with the same system, bringing the total number of sets of instruments purchased by this company up to one hundred and seventeen.

In the course of 1902, over fifty stations and vessels were supplied with the Slaby-Arco system by the General Electric Company of Berlin, the countries supplied including Germany, Sweden, Norway, Portugal, and Chile for the Marine; in Russia, for the Postal Telegraph, and in Denmark for lightship purposes. The Braun-Siemens & Halske Company have over thirty installations in active service. The Fessenden interests have equipped several stations for the Weather Bureau, and the De Forest Company has land stations at Coney Island, Staten Island, Chesebrough Building, New York City, and Block Island and Point Judith, Rhode Island; the United States navy has adopted their system, and equipments have been supplied to the United States Army and Signal Corps, Annapolis Academy, and the Washington Navy Yard, besides several vessels plying between the ports of New York City and Central America.—A. Frederick Collins, in February Review of Reviews.

Fear, Anxiety, and Grief in Childhood.

Health in maturity is largely dependent upon proper care in childhood. The physician and the medicine chest represent one side of the care of a child; an even more important phase is the supervision of mental development. Fear is the most distressing element of childhood; fear of the dark, imaginary illusions, fear of animals and calamities, terrors engendered by alarming tales and superstitions. These, improperly controlled, do more toward wrecking the nervous constitution of the child, impairing the disposition and even the character, than anything else. Anxiety, as manifested in self-consciousness, is another harmful agent. Mrs. Theodore W. Birney in a paper in The Delineator for March gives some eminent practical suggestions as to how to control these mental phenomena. The article should be of intense interest to parents.

Conference Minutes.

New South Wales.—Conference convened December 27, 1902, in Saints' church, Balmain, Sydney; adjourned December 29. Apostles J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth presided; J. D. Imrie acted as clerk of conference. Branches reporting: Balmain 164, Hamilton 100, Wallsend 48, Nambucca 65, Tun-curry 89, scattered Saints 76. Total membership 542, gain 32, baptisms in district 41. Priesthood reports from Apostle J. W. Wight; Seventies A. C. Barmore, W. J. Haworth, G. R. Wells, D. E. Tucker, and P. M. Hansen; Elders J. D. Imrie, G. Lewis, G. Ballard, E. J. Haworth, T. Gregory, and A. Seaberg; Priests C. A. Davis, J. Jones, J. Potter, and D. Lewis; Teacher F. Whaler; Deacons G. Stewart and E. Davis. The bishop of Australasia, George Lewis, reported: Balance last report, £116 3½d; receipts, £34 16s 1½d; total receipts, £362 13s 6½d; expenditures, £281 10s 5d; balance in hand, £81 3s 1½d. Audited and found correct. The treasurer of press fund reported: Total receipts, £34 16s 1½d; expenditures, £15 14s 6d; balance £19 1s 7½d. The board of publication reported on the Gospel Standard: Total income, £79 17s 6d; expenditures, £70 10s 4d; cash in hand, £9 7s 2d. The board urged the Saints to continue their support of the paper during ensuing year. The following preambles and resolutions were adopted concerning the united church building fund: "Whereas, the expense of building churches has heretofore been unequally borne by the various branches, and has not been to the best interests of the work as a whole; and whereas we believe there should be coöperation in these matters, therefore be it resolved that we approve of the united church building fund proposed by the bishopric of Australasia and published in the November issue of the Gospel Standard, and we recommend that every member pledge 3d per week, those who can not afford 3d to pay 2d, those who can not afford 2d to pay 1d, and those who can not afford 1d to pay ½d. Resolved, That we approve of this fund being perpetual; that is, existing as long as there shall be need of church extension work in this mission. Resolved, That we approve of this fund being drawn on for the purchase of one or more tents and for sustaining such tents as shall be agreed by the missionary in charge and the bishop, it being understood that no church building or buildings being erected or unpaid for at the time shall suffer thereby." The Religians present asked for and received permission to organize a district association. Their organization was ratified. The following rule was adopted: Any person having important business, which will affect any custom or usage, to bring before the conference, should notify the district secretary two months previous to the annual session and said secretary shall notify the several branches of any such business. The members elected for board of publication for ensuing year are G. Lewis, G. R. Wells, W. J. Haworth, J. W. Wight, J. D. Imrie. The board is to be elected annually and shall consist of four beside the bishop. The officers of the district elected for the year: President, G. Lewis; vice-president, G. R. Wells; secretary, J. D. Imrie; assistant secretary, A. H. Ford. The delegates chosen to represent district at General Conference: J. Kaler, J. F. Burton, A. H. Smith, L. A. Gould, C. A. Butterworth; those present to cast full vote of district, and in case of division a majority and minority vote. The mission appointments: A. C. Barmore, Melbourne; G. R. Wells, Newcastle; W. J. Haworth and C. Avery, Richmond and Nambucca Rivers; J. D. Imrie, Brisbane; D. E. Tucker and P. M. Hanson, New Zealand; J. H. N. Jones and W. Mackie, Adelaide. The next conference to meet in December, 1903, at Hamilton, and reunion on Easter at Wallsend. On the Sunday the Balmain church was dedicated, sermon by J. W. Wight and prayer by C. A. Butterworth. Other preaching by J. W. Wight, C. A. Butterworth, A. C. Barmore, and J. D. Imrie.

Fremont.—Conference met at Tabor, Iowa, February 7, with district president Amazon Badham in the chair, assisted by Henry Kemp; Charles Fry, secretary, assisted by Joseph Roberts. Branches reporting were: Tabor, Riverton, Bartlett, Thurman, Glenwood, Henderson, Shenandoah. Hamburg and Emerson failed to report. Ministerial reports were read from all the active brethren. The district Sunday-school association reported having held a convention just prior to the conference, with good results. President Badham reported that he had investigated the matter of insuring the district tent, and that it could be done, but must be done by the trustees. The following question was introduced, "Is it necessary to insure church property after it has been dedicated to the Lord?" and by vote was opened for general discussion. Both sides were maintained by different brethren in a kindly way, with profit to all. A motion was made that the trustees be directed to secure insurance on the district tent, which after further discussion was lost by a vote of six for and twenty-one against. Local historian reported having completed the history of the district to the close of 1902, and having made an index of the whole all of which had been forwarded to the church historian, a copy being preserved in the district. Officers elected for the year were: A. Badham, president; Charles Fry, secretary; C. W. Forney, assistant secretary. The following delegates to General Conference were elected, and were authorized to cast a majority and minority vote in case of a division. C. Fry and wife, A. E. Madison, H. Kemp, T. A. Hougas and wife, A. J. Davidson and wife, Mamie Pace, Ethel Skank, A. Badham, Moses Gaylord and wife, G. Kemp, F. Redfield and wife, William Gaylord, William Leeka and wife, Lula Kemp, J. Comstock and wife, D. Hougas and wife, Ella Vanderpool, G. F. Walling and wife, Lena Gaylord, F. Becksted. The following officials were sustained: William Leeka, bishop; A. J. Davidson, first counselor; S. Orton second, counselor; H. Kemp, patriarch. Charles Forney was authorized to solicit means to defray the expenses of missionaries to General Conference. Organization of Leeds District.

A special meeting was held in Saints' meeting-room, Oldfield Avenue, Leeds. Apostle G. T. Griffiths presided. W. R. Roberts was chosen secretary pro tem. The meeting was opened by prayer. A few timely remarks as to district work were made by G. T. Griffiths. The district was then organized, comprising the Oldfield Lane and Barley Branches. Elder Thomas Taylor was chosen president; F. Roberts, vice-president; S. H. Warren, secretary; W. Rudd, treasurer and Bishop's agent. The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we accept the Book of Rules to govern district.
Resolved, That all members in good standing be entitled to voice and vote.

Resolved, That our conference be held quarterly, and in the different branches alternately.

Resolved, That the conference convene every second Saturday in each quarter, and that the mission conference have our hearty invitation.

Resolved, That Brn. G. T. Griffiths, James Caffall, E. L. Kelley, and H. C. Smith be our delegates to the General Conference of April, 1903.

Sunday morning a very timely and interesting address by G. T. Griffiths, from Zechariah 7: 9, 10, showing that by a united effort we can make the work of God grow and increase. The afternoon meeting was one of an informal character. At the close of this meeting a vote of confidence and appreciation of the administration, counsel, and advice of our beloved brother while laboring among us was taken and was carried unanimously. The evening was opened for testimony, some twenty-two testimonies were given, and all felt the Spirit of God. It was a real spiritual feast for us all and a time not to be easily forgotten. Thus ended our first conference. May God bless our work. Let all the brethren of this district live worthy and humble lives that we may receive the blessing of God, for the blessings are only promised according to our faithfulness. Samuel Henry Warren, secretary district.

Church Secretary's Notice.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS—WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Western Passenger Association has granted a rate of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to the General Conference and Conventions to be held at Independence, Missouri, in April, 1903. The general rules governing said rates will be observed, as heretofore, among which the following are stated:

1. The territory included in this reduction is: from Chicago, Peoria, and St. Louis, etc., on the east, to Cheyenne, Wyoming, on the west, including all points in Colorado, and over such railway lines as are named below; intermediate points in all said territory being included.

2. Going tickets may be purchased from April 1 to 7, and return tickets from April 8 to 23. Full fare must be paid on going trip; a certificate corresponding to every ticket purchased, showing payment of full fare by regular railroad lines to Independence, Missouri, must be obtained, to secure reduced fare of one third regular rate on return trip. Failure to secure certificates corresponding to each person's tickets will invalidate any claim for reduced return fare. "No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single trip ticket."

3. Take Special Notice: The journey between Kansas City and Independence, Missouri, must be made by regular steam railroad—over the Missouri Pacific or Chicago and Alton, and not over local cable or electric lines running between those points; also that parties repurchasing tickets from Kansas City to Independence, to complete journey, must obtain certificates showing completion of journey to place of meeting. Railroad agents can not always sell tickets beyond their own lines, but when possible it is better to purchase through tickets from starting point to Independence. Agents or General Passenger Agents of local lines will furnish information concerning routes, fares, etc., on application.

4. Going tickets are limited or unlimited, according to rules of roads selling them. Return tickets are unlimited, over same route as going trip. A joint agent of the Association will be present April 8, 9, and 10 to sign and stamp and return certificates personally to holders, for which he will charge a fee of twenty-five cents for each certificate. Holders must be present on one of those dates to receive their indorsed certificates from said agent. Certificates should contain holder's name, plainly written, and be handed promptly to the Church Secretary, who will indorse and deliver to joint agent. Reduced rate is conditioned on the attendance of one hundred or more; but certificate holders present have always exceeded that number in recent years.

5. Clergymen holding Clergy Credentials which entitle them to lessened rates are not entitled to this special rate, nor children traveling on half-fare tickets; and rate applies only where going tickets cost over fifty cents. Local excursionists to said meeting, if any, whose going fare exceeds fifty cents, are included in the enumeration, hence should report their number to the Secretary for proper credit to the church in behalf of this meeting and others.

List of roads in Western Territory: Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe; Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern (from Pana to Beardstown inclusive certificates will be of Central Passenger Association form); Burlington and Western; Chicago and Alton; Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy; Chicago and Northwestern; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul; Chicago, Peoria, and St. Louis; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha; Frisco System; Great Northern Railway. Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

This is to certify that Bro. William Rudd, of 9 Carberry Road, Burley Lawn, Leeds, England, is appointed my agent for the Leeds District. Said brother was recommended by the assembly at the time the district was formed. I trust the Spirit of the Master may ever be with him in the discharge of the duties, and that the Saints will not forget the purpose of his appointment.

THOMAS TAYLOR,
January 31, 1903. Bishop of British Isles.

Reception Committee.

The reception committee appointed by the Independence Branch is now ready to locate those who intend attending the April conference at Independence. The branch has made no provision for free board for any one. Three dollars per week will be charged to all except those who have private arrangements with friends. Those who desire entertainment please write Bro. Kearney Kelley, 1116 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri, advising him of your wishes, and the committee will locate you, and notify you. The committeemen will meet each train, and will be known by their badges. Preserve your location card and hand to them on your arrival.

A. H. PARSONS, Chairman.
KEARNEY KELLEY, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 9.

Notices.

SECOND QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Dear Brethren: The time of our General Conference is near at hand, and we desire as full attendance of the members as possible; and we are anxious for a full report from every member. Tell us what you have done in the past year, and what your prospects are for next year. How much can you labor next year? Do you desire a conference appointment? Our secretary will send out report blanks to every member. Please fill out and send them to F. C. Warnky, 2422 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. The secretary informs me that many have not remitted twenty-five cents as per resolution of the quorum, and that the quorum is in debt. Will those who have not remitted please do so with report? Brethren, let us all labor together to bring our quorum up to the highest standard of efficient labor in the Master's cause. W. P. Pickering, president.

To Members of the Second Quorum of Seventy: I am sending blank reports to all the members in America, and would have sent to our brethren who are in foreign missions, but I did not get the blanks in time. However, we trust all will send reports in time even if they have no blanks. Send all reports with remittance for quorum dues to the subscriber, at Holden, Johnson County, Missouri. H. E. Moler, secretary and treasurer.

Colorado, Pacific Slope, and British Columbia Missions: It is desired that all the missionaries in above fields shall have their annual reports, including items for entire year, in the hands of sub-missionaries in charge not later than March 1, and that the sub-missionaries in charge shall embody the same in their reports to me and have them in my hands by March 10. Please give this attention. Addresses of those in charge: J. B. Roush, Wray, Colorado; J. C. Foss, Santa Ana, California; R. Etzenhouser, 231 Castro Street, San Francisco, California; C. E. Crumley, Bandon, Oregon; J. W. Roberts, Spokane, Washington. Joseph Luff.

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

Daughters of Zion secretaries who have not already done so, please inform the recording secretary of any change in membership since last report, giving full names of any lost or gained. Please do this now. New societies please send full list of members. Also prepare annual report to the general society for the year ending March 15, and send to her as soon after this date as possible. Address Mrs. Callie B. Stebbins, Lamoni, Iowa.

Interment in the Williams Cemetery.

BUTTERWORTH.—Myrtle Emma, the only loved daughter of Bro. and Sr. C. A. Butterworth, aged 11 months and 12 days, died December 31, 1902, at the home of her parents, Somerville, Victoria, Australia.

Pure and bright as a sunbeam,
Fair as the driven snow,
Too frail for the cares of earth-life,
She passed from her home below

Up to the courts of glory
Safe in her Father's care,
There to await the loved ones
And meet them in the air.

BACON.—At Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 16, 1903, Sr. Margaret Bacon passed peacefully away at the ripe age of 71 years. She has long been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and her testimony to the last was "the gospel is true." She leaves four children, who with their families mourn her departure. Funeral sermon by G. H. Smith.

MOREY.—At Reach, Maine, December 30, 1902, of consumption, Charles E. Morey, aged 24 years. Leaves a wife, three children, many relatives and friends to mourn. Funeral at the home in charge of J. J. Billings and H. Conerway.

CULP.—At Haywards, California, January 9, 1903, of bronchopneumonia, Sr. Emily M. Culp, aged 62 years, 10 months, 2 days. She was born in Booneville, Indiana, in 1840, and united with the church August 17, 1886, being baptized by Elder Heman C. Smith at Watonsville, California, and confirmed by Elders Heman C. Smith, Daniel Brown, and J. H. Lawn. She was a faithful follower of the Master and passed away with the hope of eternal life. Services at the Congregational church, Haywards, by Elder George S. Lincoln, of San Francisco.

ECCLESTONE.—May Elizabeth, third child of Bro. and Sr. William Ecclestone, of Leicester, England, died January 14, 1903, aged 6 years 9 months. She was taken sick with diphtheria, and died twelve days afterwards with heart failure. She was a most affectionate child, indeed a light in the home, but it pleased the Lord to take her to himself, to dwell with spirits blest around the throne. She was laid to rest in Gilroes Cemetery, Leicester. Funeral services were conducted by John W. Rushton.

Points on Lawn Making.

A rich soil is one of the essentials to success. No matter what the extent of the lawn, it should be evenly moist and well drained. The general slope should be away from the residence on all sides. Seeding the lawn yields better results than sodding. Kentucky blue-grass is the most satisfactory known seed for the majority of locations, but in the South, Bermuda grass, St. Lucia and Texas blue-grass are extensively employed. April is a good time in the North, to sow, before the usual light showers. The ground should be raked as nearly perfect as possible before sowing. Best results are obtained by sowing thickly. Four bushels to the acre is the usual allowance, but in small plots double the proportion may be used to advantage. After sowing work seed into the soil with a rake. No clipping should be done till the grass is above three inches in height, and it should be kept at about this height during the first summer. Avoid clipping at all soon before frost is expected.—From the Delineator for March.

"The love of a father for his daughter is, I think, the very purest love that earth can know, the love that comes the nearest to what we all imagine the divine love to be. The love of a husband for his wife when it endures the storm and stress which mark the period of mutual adaptation, is wonderfully beautiful; yet it had its birth in passion, and the memories of its early years remain to keep it very human. The love that is given to a father or a mother is strong and deep and lasting; yet it lacks the exaltation and supreme emotion which are necessary to the love that has no flaw. The love of a father for his son is intense and overmastering; yet there is a touch of personal pride, of almost conscious egoism, in it, which renders it not wholly selfless and serene.

But the love of a father for the girl child who has been born to him is more than any other love on earth, in its purity, its unalterable constancy, its power of self-sacrifice, its profound delight, and infinite tenderness."—H. T. Peck in the February Cosmopolitan.

Peary's Own Predictions.

Robert E. Peary's article, "The Last Years of Arctic Work," which is printed in the February McClure's, is splendidly optimistic over the outcome of the siege of the pole. The author not only predicts that the pole will be won, but states precisely how. This is characteristic of Lieutenant Peary, and the same enthusiasm infuses every line of his article, which is a narrative of the expedition on which he discovered and founded the north cape of Greenland—with little doubt the northernmost land in the world. Here he lets himself out, indeed, and his description of how it feels to set one's eyes on land no human being has ever seen before, is one that readers of Lieutenant Peary's story will not forget.

August Belmont to-day occupies a remarkable position in the world of finance. He is president of the greatest urban transit company in the world, and is known chiefly for the tunnel he is building in the city of New York and the gigantic deals through which he is to unite the underground and elevated railroad systems of the city under his own control. The Cosmopolitan this month publishes an interesting sketch of the man who took advantage of the opportunity to raise the millions required for the Rapid Transit Subway, and is now endeavoring to persuade the city to build a complete system of tunnels with money borrowed from him and his associates. The same issue of the magazine contains an admirable article on Henry M. Whitney, who controls the street-railroad system of Boston, and a sketch of William Andrews Clark, the Montana Copper King.

No city in the East presents more charming pictures of Oriental life and color than Damascus; and no other city contains so many magnificent private houses, whose shaded courts and luxurious chambers take us back in fancy to the enchanted period of Oriental splendor celebrated in the "Arabian Nights." But, however luxurious the houses, the gardens of Damascus have even greater charm, and they are not only profusely scattered throughout the city, but they stretch for miles around, where the waters have rescued almost a province from the desert. "Damascus," says a writer in the February Cosmopolitan, "has had a longer continuous existence than any city that is standing in the world to-day. Over this garden spot of the desert there has been eternal conflict. Bloodshed has been its portion, and century after century has witnessed battle without and massacre within its walls." The article quoted is entertainingly written, and it is illustrated with a striking series of photographs.

At Nauvoo and elsewhere where the Saints have sojourned in times past there are still many interesting relics that attest their industry. Time and the elements are slowly destroying them, so it is best to preserve such record of them as we may, while we may. Acting upon this thought Vida E. Smith writes a series of articles for the Autumn Leaves dealing with the history of three of the old historic buildings of Nauvoo. These buildings are the "Mansion House," the old "Homestead," and the "Nauvoo House." The first of the series will be in the March Leaves, and each article will be illustrated.

OPPOSITION TO THE SEATING OF MR. SMOOT AS A UNITED STATES SENATOR.

There is a rumor current in the press that when Mr. Reed Smoot leaves Utah for Washington, an effort will be made to defeat his being seated as a senator of the United States, upon the ground that he is a believer in polygamy and has aided and fostered the practice in Utah. The effort is to be made in the shape of a petition setting forth the statement above referred to, with some other things, such as for instance, that some prominent men, including the present president of the church in Utah, are polygamists and now living with more than one wife each, because of former marriages performed prior to President Wilford Woodruff's manifesto in 1890.

Would it be of any avail to remind these objectors of the fact that Congress, including the Senate of course, in adopting the enabling act by which Utah became a State, and ratifying the constitution under which statehood was to be carried into effect, managed in such a way as to make the polygamy which was to be "for ever prohibited," to mean the ceremony of marriage, or the being married to two or more women at the same time, or marrying a second wife while the first was living; and left the practice of polygamy, or the living in wedlock with two or more women as wives to be treated as a misdemeanor under legislative enactments and punishable by a fine on conviction; this conviction to be had, of course, by prosecution in state courts by local authorities? This being true, what force will there be in the statement that certain men in Utah are living in actual violation of State laws? May not the Senate properly reply to these petitioners, if those men are living in violation of your statute enactments, as you state in your petition, why do you not proceed against them in the courts and enforce the penalties for such misdemeanor?

Is it reasonable to ask Congress to disregard its own action and set aside the statutory regulations of the state of Utah, partially going back on its own action, because certain citizens petition it to do so? To us it seemed quite unlikely. If Mr. Smoot himself is not a polygamist, it may not be consistent for the Senate to question him as to his personal belief, or refuse to give him his seat though he should avow it to be in favor of plural marriage. Nor would it be pertinent to ask the Senate to disregard the action of the state of Utah in choosing Mr. Smoot to represent them in Congress, because other men in Utah, belonging to the same church that he does, were transgressing the laws of the State, himself being innocent.

We agree with Bro. O. B. Thomas as reported in the Cleveland Leader of February 9, wherein he says:

The writer has no apology to make for the corrupt practice of polygamy, or belief in it, but where is the paragraph in the Constitution that draws the line between one who only believes in it, but does not practice it, and the man who still believes that slavery was right, and does not practice it, only because it was abolished by the force of arms?

Our warfare is not upon men, but upon dogma and wrong principles.

WHICH IS IT, "CATHOLIC" OR "PROTESTANT?"

HENRY, Illinois, February 14.—(Editor of the Tribune.)—Your editorial in the issue of February 8 contains words to which I take exception. Speaking under the heading of "Protestant" or "Catholic?" concerning the "Protestant Episcopal Church," you say:

"Its parentage seems to be dubious. Is it a child of the reformation or a child of the old church? Until this point is decided it will continue to be a kind of ecclesiastical waif, sans progenitors and sans surname."

I answer briefly, it is neither. It is the old church itself. The question at issue is not, and never has been, in regard to the fact that the church is the true portion of the apostolic church having jurisdiction in these United States, but in regard to the name which will best describe it.

While Romanist and sectarian will doubtless continue to reiterate the ancient canard that the Church of England was founded by Queen Elizabeth or her much-married papa, the thirty million members of the English-speaking branch of the church are not at all doubtful that she is, as the Encyclopedia Britannica says, "Legally and historically continuous with the church of the ancient times."

The church is essentially Catholic, but incidentally Protestant; Protestant by accident, but Catholic by design; Catholic towards God, but Protestant towards the Devil; Protestant in time, but Catholic in eternity.

ARTHUR E. GORTER.

It is curious, this persistent claim to a primitive ancestry on the part of both Catholic and Protestant Churches.

The Catholic, i. e., the papal Roman Catholic Church, claims to have been existent under Peter and to have kept within the definite lines of succession in authority and in fact from Peter's time until now. The Protestant churches claiming a loss of authority in the Catholic Church by reason of lapses in virtue and spirituality sufficient to vitiate both authority to act in Christ's name as the great head of the church on earth, and in the lines of church existence in succession. And the "Protestant Episcopal Church" is an intermediate protesting body having an English origin in the days of King Henry the Eighth, whose right to be considered the head of the church was declared by act of Parliament about 1531, when he became the puissant head of the church and "Defender of the Faith."

The sovereigns of the British Empire have all subscribed to a bitter oath of renunciation of allegiance to papal authority, until such oath was shirked by the present incumbent of the English throne.

An effort made not long ago to bring about a possible unity between the Anglican and Romish churches failed, as is well known, and now an effort is being made to change the name of the English church, to make it fit the claim now made as the continuous "church of the most ancient times."

We hope that the name may be secured, but it would seem that both the Catholic Church and Dowie's organization as the Universal Catholic Church are in the lead as to time of application.

"SMOOT, THE MORMON."

Under this heading the Christian Herald for February 4, 1903, has the following virulent screed, for we can not call it less than virulent, and give it any standing in journalism.

Once again, the Mormons have come knocking at the doors of Congress, demanding admission and recognition. Reed Smoot, an apostle of the Mormon church, has been chosen as United States senator from Utah, and his election is hailed as a great Mormon triumph. What the conservative element in Utah think of the choice may be gathered from the language of those who opposed Smoot's election in the State Legislature. Representative White said:

"If we send this man to Washington we dishonor the State, and if he goes to Washington, he, too, will be disgraced. Shall we insult our President by defying him in sending an apostle to the Senate? A great storm of public opinion or a benefaction of peace is about to be launched by the nation. If we launch the storm, God pity poor Utah!"

When Utah was admitted to statehood, it gave a sacred pledge, as an essential condition of admission, that it would suppress the vile system of plural marriages. That pledge it flagrantly violated. Polygamy was practiced under cover, throughout the State, and is still practiced there. There are many cases known where the offense is openly and defiantly avowed. It is flaunted contemptuously in the face of the American people.

We believe that no Mormon apostle should be permitted to sit in the halls of national legislation, or to take part in making laws for this moral and enlightened land. There is such a thing as decency in American public life. There is such a quality as self-respect in our highest legislative bodies. There is—and we are heartily thankful for it—a sturdy and resolute recognition of the moralities among those at the head of the nation. From the President down to the humblest citizen, we stand, as we have always stood from the foundation of this republic—for the purity of the home, the integrity of the family and the protection of American womanhood. Utah, which now for the second time will send a Mormon to Congress, is the sole offender in the sisterhood of States against the nation's code of morals. It is honeycombed with polygamy. It is dominated by the Mormon church, which is unrepentant, unregenerate, unclean—the open sore, the one foul blot on our country. Notwithstanding all its protestations of reform, that church clings to-day to the same old lecheries that made it a nightmare in the days of Brigham Young and Joseph Smith.

Four years ago last month, the Honorable George F. Edmunds, the distinguished senator from Vermont, author of the Anti-polygamy Act and the leading constitutional authority in the country, reviewed for the Christian Herald the case of Brigham H. Roberts, a notorious Mormon, who had been elected as representative from Utah, and pointed out the means at Congress' disposal for protecting the national honor. He recalled the fact that, in a constitutional convention, assembled for the purpose of paving the way for Utah's admission to statehood, a formal ordinance was adopted, declaring that "polygamous or plural marriages are forbidden in Utah." He showed how Utah had broken that promise. The constitution of Utah, while prohibiting the ceremony of plural marriage, did not prohibit polygamous relationships. But Senator Edwards pointed out that there is, in the hands of Congress, a reserve power which, when all other expedients fail, it may still use to rid itself of the presence of an undesirable member. Under the Constitution, and after a member has taken his seat, the House has the authority, with the concurrence of two thirds, to expel the member. There is no limitation in the exercise of this right, and for sufficient reason it can be brought into operation at any time.

This applies equally to the Senate. Will that body purge itself of the reproach upon its dignity and its good name, by rejecting Reed Smoot, Mormon apostle, as the House of Representatives, in the exercise of its constitutional privilege, and in behalf of the honor of the nation, and for the protection of the American home, rose in its dignity and thrust forth the self-confessed Mormon and polygamist, Brigham H. Roberts?

In its spleen against Mormonism the Christian Herald forgets a thing or two that should be remembered. First, that Utah as a State is made up of citizens of the United States, a good many of whom are not Mormons, but pass in the State as Gentiles. These are constituents of Mr. Smoot, and some of their representatives in the Legislature of Utah voted for him to represent them in the Senate. Second. There is no more just reason why a Mormon, he being not a polygamist, should not be permitted "to sit in the halls of national legislation, or to take part in making laws for this moral and enlightened land," than there is that a Presbyterian, a Catholic, a Baptist, a Christian and supporter of the Christian Herald, or a member of any other denomination of religionists, he not being a polygamist, should not be permitted to do the same thing. To exclude any man upon the ground of his religious belief would be a sad infringement of the rights of American citizenship guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution adopted under it. No church is to be trusted, as a church, with the reins of governments, itself being in the possession of dominant numbers and power Mr. Smoot if he be permitted to take the place in the United States' Senate to which the people of Utah have chosen him, will be quite powerless to enact by himself any hurtful laws, being in so large a minority. Besides this, the people of Utah, who, like himself, may be members of the church to which he belongs, are none the less citizens of the State than those in the State who may be members of other churches than the "Mormons," or who are unbelievers and are not members of any church. These citizens will be affected by any legislation in Congress that may be had with reference to the interests of the State, and it is only just that those who are to be affected by legislation should have representation in the body in which it is had. What sort of justice would "Mormons" get if men of the spirit manifested in the article taken from the Christian Herald should be entrusted with power to make laws for them?

Third. Utah, while a territory, had a delegate for many years. Doctor John M. Bernhisel, formerly from New York, was sent year after year to represent the people of the Territory, then much more "Mormon" than now. John T. Caine also represented them. We believe these men at the time of thus acting as delegates were not polygamists. Did the counsels of the national legislators suffer deterioration by reason of these men being there? Hardly.

Fourth. When Mr. B. H. Roberts was sent as a representative, just objection was made to his being seated. The fact of his being a practical polygamist was known, and urged against him at the start. He avowed his belief and his practice of the dogma. He was not permitted to retain his seat. We believed then as we believe now, that the action of Congress in refusing him his seat was right. Mr. Roberts was a confessed violator of law. Mr. Smoot is not.

Fifth. The Christian Herald should know that if members of the church in Utah are now practicing polygamy, as it charges in the article, this same "Honorable George F. Edmunds, the distinguished senator from Vermont, author of the Anti-polygamy Act, and the leading constitutional authority in the country," was we think the framer of the Enabling Act under which Utah became a state; and that the constitution of Utah, of which Mr. Edmunds, in the review which the Herald refers to, complains, contains the very wording of the Enabling Act, to-wit, "polygamous or plural marriages are for ever prohibited in Utah."

Whoever framed the act left a peculiar loophole for an evasion of the almost exact provision intended to prevent men from living in the practice of polygamy, i. e., the having and living with two or more women as wives at the same time in Utah, and by such prevention to remove the contention waged in political circles in regard to the church in Utah and its ways. "Polygamous marriages are for ever prohibited," has been construed to mean that the ceremony of marriages classed as polygamous shall not again be performed in Utah; that is, no marriage shall be celebrated in Utah in which the man or woman being married already has a husband or wife living. This construction left all those who had been married and were living in polygamy at liberty to continue living with their polygamous companions so far as the Enabling Act and the State Constitution are concerned. If the bill was the work of John T. Caine, delegate from Utah, it may be that this faulty wording of the Act was the result of design; if the framing of the bill was the work of another not a Mormon, such faulty wording was the result of carelessness, a sort of unfortunate reliance upon the common understanding of what was meant by the term "polygamous marriages."

It is certain that at the time the manifesto of President Wilford Woodruff advising the abandonment of polygamy, it was the understanding of both Mormon and Gentile that both the marrying in polygamy and living in the practice of it were meant. And if the subtle taking advantage of this peculiar wording in both the Enabling Act and the Constitution is what is referred to by Mr. Edmunds when he wrote that "Utah had broken" her promise, and thus betrayed the trust of the nation, we can agree with him; but, what a "lame and impotent a conclusion" it is after all. The practice, the open disregard of law, the living in a state of unlawful marriage relations, the very thing aimed at, and over which Congress had the right to take cognizance and jurisdiction, was left untouched. Can not the Christian Herald see this?

Sixth. The resort to the exercise of the arbitrary right to expel Mr. Smoot, which the Christian Herald italicizes and credits Mr. Edmunds with having stated, is of extremely doubtful propriety, and does not remedy the main difficulty. The trouble is further back than the application of Mr. Smoot to be admitted to the Senate. To refuse him a seat, or to unseat him after he is admitted, simply puts the question off until another occasion of a similar nature arises, and then the same peculiar conditions will have to be faced, and the exercise of the same sort of arbitrary right be resorted to. Need the Christian Herald be reminded that it is asking too much, and that aside from his religious belief there is no justifiable objection to Mr. Smoot. He is an apostle in the church of his choice, and is for that reason no more ineligible to the United States Senate, than an elder of the Christian Church, a presbyter of the Church of England, or a bishop of the Methodist Church.

THERE has been received from the Gospel Standard office, Australia, bound copies of the Standard, volume 1, at the following church offices: Historian's, Secretary's, Recorder's, and Church Library. Such thoughtfulness on the part of the Standard is highly commendable, and well worthy of emulation. The recipients extend hearty thanks to our brethren of the Standard.

INSPIRATION AND REVELATION.

(By a corresponding editor.)

"The inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32:8.

"A breathing or infusion into the mind or soul; an awakening or creation of thought, purpose, or any mental condition, by some specific external influence; intellectual exhortation; and inexplicable cognition, as the knowledge of an axiom according to a priori philosophers."

"In a theological sense, an influence directly and immediately exerted by the Spirit of God upon the soul of men . . . divided into, (a) verbal inspiration, the immediate communication or dictation to the writer of every word written; (b) plenary inspiration, inspiration which is full, complete, entire; involving the doctrine that the Bible was inspired in all its parts, and the writers in all their faculties, so that every statement of the inspired writers, whether moral or religious, or only chronological or scientific is to be accepted as true and authoritative; (c) moral inspiration, inspiration only for a definite purpose, viz., the moral and spiritual redemption and development of the race, so that the Bible is to be accepted as authoritative only in matters of religion, faith, and practice; (d) dynamical inspiration, inspiration regarded as acting upon and through the natural faculties in contrast to; (e) mechanical inspiration, inspiration regarded as an influence which merely uses human organs as an instrument for expression."

Plenary and verbal inspiration as thus rendered, we are not guilty of indorsing, to say the least. The others may each take their place among us. Section 28, paragraph 9, Doctrine and Covenants says: "All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which is temporal . . . for my commandments are spiritual." The above answers the purpose of moral inspiration. Dynamical are common among us.

Revelation is defined as "such disclosure, communicated by supernatural means, of truth, which could not be ascertained by natural means. . . . Revelation differs from inspiration, the latter being an exaltation of the natural faculties, the former a communication to or through them of truths not otherwise ascertainable, or at least not otherwise known." The church has had experience on the line of revelations, and as ought to be known, in a general way, by us that it is the "unexpected that is always happening." The manner of presenting the revelation to the conference of 1901 was a surprise, in that it came to the conference by verbal statement, instead of written document, as had been the custom, and it was given to the conference first, rather than being submitted to the quorums first. The object of all communications from God to man are educational. Man receives as he is ready and fitted for them. The method indicates the condition of man as the recipient. The methods used at Sinai were somewhat on the kindergarten plan, doubtless because of the low state of the people. The contrast between Moses and the people is evident. With Moses he could speak face to face; not so with the multitude. The highest form of inspiration is doubtless dynamical, where man is attuned to the divine harmonies, that the communication is assimilated by him and becomes a part of his consciousness, rather than the mechanical where the communication passes through him without his knowing fully its import.

The President of the church seemed to be in the former state, as evidenced by the revelation of 1901. He assimilated it so thoroughly it became a part of his conscious state that he did not need to write it, it was engraven upon the tablets of heart and memory. It was a delightful showing of his personal attainment at that time, being so receptive to communion with God. The instrument was in a high and advanced state.

At the conference of 1902 another manner was in use, which showed an advanced state this time on the part of the people, they needed only suggestion, and as a body readily responding thereto.

The pupil that has attained proficiency so that he responds to a suggestion is more advanced than when he needs much explanation, objective or otherwise. Both of these incidents show that as a people we have "come up higher."

There is probably no bolder statement made by the young Seer, Joseph Smith, or one that caused more enmity than the following, given at the commencement of his work while he was still a boy of fifteen: "My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner, therefore, did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right, (for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong,) and which I should join. I was assured that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight."

Evidence has constantly accumulated since that time, sustaining his statement. We now put upon the stand no less a personage than Reverend Josiah Strong, author of several learned works, such as "Our Country," "The New Era," etc. Mr. Strong is recognized as one of the most eminent men now before the public. His works are often quoted, and used as texts by ministers of religion. He is an avowed enemy of Joseph Smith, hence would not willingly testify in his favor. In his new book, "The Next Great Awakening," pages 51 and 58, we read:

There is taking place a rediscovery of Christ, which is of profound significance. This return to the Master means a clearer conception of his character, a truer understanding of his teaching, a larger comprehension of his mission, a more loyal surrender to his authority. It means also the gaining of Christ's point of view. . . . It is clear then, that to misunderstand the doctrine of the kingdom is to misunderstand the message of Jesus, it is to misunderstand Christianity, it is to misunderstand the mission of the church. It is to misunderstand Christ's interpretation of life; and the doctrine of the kingdom has been misunderstood for centuries. The conception of the kingdom of God, even among Christians, is generally vague, and very commonly erroneous. Thus appears the profound significance of the return to Christ, the rediscovery of the kingdom of God. I venture to think it is the most thought-compelling, the most zeal-inspiring, the most world-transforming of all the great movements of this wonder-crowding age. From the point of view of this rediscovered kingdom the Bible must be restudied, and our conception of Christianity must be reconsidered, and history must be reinterpreted, and theology must be rereasoned, and our philosophy of life must be reconstructed, and church methods must be readjusted, and the industrial system must be reformed, and society must be reorganized. All this is involved in the new Christian renaissance.

The foregoing use of the prefix "re" by the learned writer will fit nicely with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and answer all his requirements, for the work the church is doing means all of his "re's."

We can not go into details now to apply the Doctor's testimony, for in a general way it is seen at once by those who read the "signs of the times." What an arraignment this is of modern churchianity which told the young Seer that his work was uncalled for, but are now forced by the logic of time and events to admit the need of a demand for which it is an adequate supply!

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

E. F. Shupe wrote from Denver on the 15th inst: "The weather at this writing is very cold, twelve degrees below zero. Bro. George Shupe and Sr. Ada Powers are to be married at the chapel Wednesday evening next. All is well."

Louisa M. Oliver wrote from Cottage Grove, Oregon, February 15: "I am not well. I want the prayers of the church, if it is God's will that I may be healed. It is a trouble in my breast; am also troubled with deafness."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

M. M. Nantais, 37 Dyer Avenue, Cranston, Rhode Island, desires the address of Arthur Barker, formerly of St. Thomas, Ontario.

By a marked copy of the Omaha World-Herald of February 16, we learned that Bro. H. J. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska, died at his home on February 15. Bro. Hudson has passed a long and useful life, and was past eighty years of age at his demise. For many years he has been a sturdy member of the Reorganized Church. The genial brother will be greatly missed. An obituary notice will be published later.

Bro. E. Keeler, of Oakland, California, has changed place of residence. He is now living at 1624½ Seventh Street.

On February 9 at a meeting of Methodist preachers, at New York, Doctor Thompson, of the North-western Christian Advocate, enthusiastically declared that the Methodist Church had made one and one half million converts during the past ten years. Doctor J. H. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate, of New York, disputed the figures, and declared that statistics showed that Methodism is actually declining in some eastern conferences. He believed in looking at facts, and thought it a serious mistake to be overly optimistic.

Our readers will find in this issue a letter from Sr. Mamie Suttles, formerly of Omaha, but now in the far North. We found Sr. Suttles' letter very interesting, and feel sure our readers will.

In the recent debate in the Senate on the statehood question, the discussion turned on the subject of polygamy, and many senators took part. Senator Hale, of Massachusetts, is said to have characterized the debate as interesting, valuable, and startling, because it disclosed a powerful religious organization "exerting itself as a dominant, potential force," over the mind and action of its followers, which should be taken into account in future legislation.

A few days ago we received a copy of the Star, published at Johannesburg, Transvaal, South Africa, January 10. On page 9 we noticed the following in the advertising columns: "Elder J. Matthews of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, will preach at 128 Eloff Street, to-morrow (Sunday), January 11, 1903. Afternoon, 3.30. Evening, 7.30." We believe Bro. Matthews is the first of our elders to do work in that country.

Sunday morning the pulpit at the Saints' church in Lamoni was occupied by Acting-President Barber, of Graceland College. He was greeted by a very large audience, and all seemed pleased to hear him take such decided positions relative to the efficiency of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Professor Barber's influence among his students in a religious way is good. His work in Graceland will be prolific of good.

The Athenian Literary Society of Graceland College has decided to issue a monthly magazine, to be called the Athenian Arena. It will first appear about March 15. Those interested in Graceland College will welcome the magazine.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

When all the branch officers are present at sacrament-meeting, whose place is it to take up the oblations?

Those persons who are the usual officers handling the branch finances. If no one is designated otherwise, it would be the deacon's duty to receive the money oblations, and either hold them, or pay them over to the Bishop or his agent to be used for the purposes for which they were paid in.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

In view of antagonizing influences, a decision of character is requisite for a practical demonstration of self-government.

A fullness of righteousness is guaranteed to those thirsting for righteousness, which at once reveals the necessity for a corresponding abhorrence of all that is unrighteous which is only possible to those who have either acquired self-government, or despite confronting exigencies are aspiring to position.

The everlasting gospel is Christ's perfect law of liberty. (James 1: 25.) Its advocacy is only effective when done under the auspices of God's government; Christ taught the gospel of the kingdom (Mark 1: 14), which may be construed to mean a government. And to Pilate Christ declared, "My kingdom is not of this world."—John 18: 36.

Abraham believed God and it was imputed unto him for righteousness (James 2: 23). Thus we learn faith in God is the road to righteousness; this faith demonstrated by works; hence the following: "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?"—James 2: 22.

How conspicuous, then, was human folly in essaying to add to or detract from Christ's words; but in such a procedure, this folly would be more conspicuous in view of the solemn fact that in a denial of Christ's revealments, either ancient or modern revelation, such a denial was tantamount to a denial of Christ, in which event a lack of self-government would be made visible, to say the least.

Being a perfect teacher, Christ taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes and Pharisees; always knowing whereof he affirmed. Hence emblazoned as with the fire of inspiration, could declare, I have not spoken of myself, etc. The words I have spoken shall judge him at the last day. (John 12: 48.)

Therefore antagonism to Christ's words, whether by priest or people, saint or sinner, means antagonism to Christ, God, and the Holy Spirit, which in individuality are three; but one in power, purpose, and design.

The non-indorsement by Christ of the existing sects and dogmas prevalent at his appearing among men, is seen in the fact of his establishing a church and revealing a specific method of salvation in opposition to that taught by these conflicting sects under the phase of religion. This ought, to the sober thinker, to be proof positive that God is not the author of confusion. Then, too, the evidence of God's approval of Christ's ministerial work among men in receiving him into heaven, seated at the right hand of his Majesty, as the only appointed and God-recognized mediator between God and man, from whence (his mediatorial throne) he shall come to judge the quick and the dead, put down all rule and authority, take the curse from off mankind, raise those who have passed through a probationary condition with a sound mind, and have so far acquired a proficiency in self-government as to not have been ashamed of Christ and his words before men, raising such to honor, immortality, and eternal life.

The first practical evidence of efforts to acquire a proficiency in self-government is a practical thirst for righteousness, being stimulated with the promise of being filled therewith. (Matthew 5:6.) For in the exhibition of this thirst he is made conscious that however ardent his desires to reach or aspire the good and become the recipient of its blessed effects, unless guided by a higher power, becoming a partaker of the divine nature, his efforts will prove futile. And because of a consciousness of this thirst for righteousness is a result attributable to efforts to evidence or evince self-government in so far that he has subjugated a thirst for all outside of Christ's gospel, purporting to be religion. And while he feels a corresponding joy in his soul, in his triumph thus far over the flesh, he is not oblivious to the fact that this decision of character thus practically demonstrated in becoming thus proficient in self-government as to take the requisite preliminary steps toward the ultimate, must be perpetuated. Nor is he blind to the fact that this perpetuity of the relationship with Christ must be the result of an intensification of this love for righteousness as the years go by, which prompted in the preliminary work. So the work of subjugating the flesh must be continuous with a view to an increase of proficiency in self-government; for in the absence of this proficiency, he who has been made the recipient of divine grace may be tossed to and fro with strange winds of doctrine. Christ who never taught in vain or so taught as to impress the Bible student with the thought that his teachings reflected a double meaning or that those teachings could be invaded, revised, or rejected with impunity, taught his disciples thus: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5:46.

There is, I think, a striking significance in the foregoing, and yet I can not claim that this perfection of Christ imposed on his disciples, and God's absolute perfection are identical; because God giveth here a little, line upon line, etc. Thus is it that the spiritual development is quite similar to the development of the body. And man being dead in trespasses and in sin, needed a quickening power which necessitated a new birth, and a growth subsequent to the birth. So this saving method is perfect; hence degrees of perfection. The laws to govern subsequent to birth are perfect; hence as we are born and progress, we reach and evince degrees of perfection; and this evidence of thus progressing from one degree of perfection to another, the finality they reached is the receiving and enjoying God's absolute perfection, by which those having wrought well will see God as he is. (John 3:2.) It is therefore by becoming perfect in our respective spheres, by being subject to perfect law, that we are perfect as God is perfect in his sphere.

Self-government is essential in a twofold sense. For a practical demonstration of an intention to aspire to a God-imposed spiritual rectitude by teaching, reproving, instructing, etc., according to the gifts and calling unto us without partiality or deceit. Stimulating others to aspire to a like rectitude, thus furnishing evidence of being worthy of others' confidence and affections. For a lack of confidence in each other's integrity, loyalty, etc., is an effective preventive to Christ's guaranteed peace, gospel unity, and spiritual progress.

Again, as despite efforts to prevent, offenses sometimes come, involving the necessity for bringing into requisition the method of adjudication which Christ's work reflect and impose with equal authority and inspiration as is his word in imposing the method of adoption for if otherwise then God's words reflective of the adoption were inflexible and those words reflective of the method of adjudication flexible—to revise or change, to suit the caprice and whims of vascillating men; perchance to vex foes or please "friends;" which would be more abominable in the sight of God than a direct denial of his word. I write as I understand, with due deference to all concerned.

"Every elder, priest, teacher, and deacon is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him; and he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost, which is in one who ordains him."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:12. If ordained according to the gifts and calling of God, etc., it is, I think, quite fair to presume that all should work and act according to the gifts and calling of God in teaching and enforcing given and accepted law. Hence they would give evidence of self-government, whether elder, bishop, seventy, high priest, or apostle in acting in the light radiating from given law to meet confronting exigencies with a manifest desire to rise above the demoralizing practices against which the priest and judges were warned under the law given to Moses.

"Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous."—Deuteronomy 16:19.

Who have attained to the dizzy heights of self-government, as to practically refrain from these contaminating, God-forbidden evils? Surely it must be a solemn affair to reprove the world of sin, righteousness, and a judgment to come. Surely, surely, frequent self-examination would hinder the spiritual progress of none, especially not those who make loud claims of "being in the faith." And it might stimulate those who essay the manifestation of gospel modesty, of which it is possible there are too few.

In conclusion, a proficiency in self-government might prove a preventive to a too hasty move in giving publicity by the tongue to that to which the heart could respond, for moderation in this line is suggested in the fact, that among other traits that should shine out in the character of Christ's ambassadors, is, "The speaking the truth in the heart."

JAMES CAFFALL.

RIGHT, OR "TOO PARTICULAR," WHICH?

When something is said about us or against us, especially if it comes from a supposed enemy, we are usually so affected by it that we overlook the more important question, Is it true? We should be prepared to admit that in many cases it may be, and proceed at once to investigate; for certain it is that we often fail to recognize and comprehend our own idiosyncrasies and fruits of weakness. Hence the urgent necessity of giving due weight and proper consideration to every criticism made against us, whether it comes from friend or foe. One may often derive material benefit from unfriendly criticisms, made on his belief and acts, though their statements be mostly false.

I do not feel bad because I have been repeatedly accused of being "too particular." I would feel much worse had I been accused of being too careless. However, if the charge is true, it is my duty to correct the error. It will be admitted, I think, that it is an excellent thing to be particular. Very well. Is it not true that in some things a man can not be an extremist? To illustrate. When an obligation becomes due, financial or otherwise, can it be discharged too prompt? I think not. There is too much carelessness right here, by Latter Day Saints as well as others. It destroys confidence. It destroys, rather than develops, true character. It furnishes Satan with abundant opportunity to get in his work, and he seldom, if ever, fails to do it. If for any reason we are not able to meet our obligations when they become due, we should go at once to those to whom we are obligated, and make a full and frank statement of the situation, giving evidence to them by our words and acts that it is our fixed determination to meet these demands as soon as possible. I claim that it is not my right, after debts become due, to use money in pleasure trips, luxurious living, or extravagant dress; for in so doing, I am using that which really belongs to another, without his consent.

Again; when the church adopts any rule of action governing church work or any formula which is to govern any specified part of our services, whether these rules and formulas are human or divine, are they not binding on the church, just as they were when adopted? Can the ministers of the church be too particular right here? Or is every one left free to adopt his own forms and rules, departing little or much at his own discretion? For instance, in blessing the emblems in the administration of the sacrament, is it necessary to use the exact words furnished in the formula, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 17:22, 23? I think it is. Concerning the manner in which this section was given, the Seer wrote as follows: "In this manner did the Lord continue to give us instructions from time to time, concerning the duties which now devolved upon us, and among many other things of the kind, we obtained of him the following, by the spirit of prophecy and revelation; which not only gave us much information, but also pointed out to us the precise day upon which, according to his will and commandment, we should proceed to organize his church once again here upon the earth."—Church History, volume 1, page 67.

The foregoing statements being true, the paragraphs referred to have come to us by revelation; and, as the reader certainly knows, they have been indorsed by the church for just what they purport to be. Now, here is a pertinent query: Where can we find equal authority for using a different formula, altogether, or in part?

Referring to the paragraphs cited, we find the following directions given to "the elder or priest" who shall administer the sacrament:

"He shall kneel with the church and call upon the Father in solemn prayer, saying." Then follows the prayer to be offered over the bread. In case of the prayer to be offered over the wine, the instruction is equally plain and definite: "He shall take the cup also, and say."

We can not justly excuse ourselves by saying, "If we do the best we can, the Lord will certainly accept the prayer," for the reason that the printed form is found in the Doctrine and Covenants, which all may use who are able to read, if they will.

Another objection to the position I am contending for, was mentioned in a priesthood meeting some years ago by a high authority in the church. It was new to me, at the time, but since then I have given it some investigation, and I am compelled to decide that the objection is not a valid one. It is this:

The formulas given in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants do not agree. Therefore, if we are required to follow the exact wording given in the Doctrine and Covenants we will be found in conflict with the wording of the Book of Mormon.

We answer, first, there is a difference between a portion of history, furnished us in the Book of Mormon, and a direct command given to us in the Doctrine and Covenants. If any conflict in wording exists between the two formulas, it does not justify us in vitiating or in any wise changing the commandment which has been given to us. That commandment is binding. If God has seen fit not to trust man with responsibility of wording these sacramental prayers, then, clearly, it was the duty of the ancient Nephites to adhere to the formula given to them, and it is our duty to adhere to the formula given to us. We can understand how God might use somewhat different words in the two formulas, without any danger or loss; but would this be good authority, and sufficient for man, without any commandment from God, to go and do likewise? Hardly.

But in the second place, the truth is there is no conflict worth mentioning. The order in which the words are arranged and the parts of speech are exactly the same. There is a slight variation in the form of one small and unimportant word, found near the close of the prayer which is to be offered over the bread. The variation is on the word "has." In the Doctrine and Covenants we have the verb given, preceded by its auxiliary has, "has given." In the Book of Mormon the same verb, preceded by the same auxiliary, in the solemn style, that is, hath, "hath given."

Surely this is not sufficient ground to justify any departure from the formula given, much less the wide departures which are sometimes indulged in. Careful observation shows that just to the extent that we adopt a form of our own, instead of the one given of God and accepted by the church, we detract from the sacred and spiritual character of the sacramental service. It never fails to bring to us loss.

What we have said concerning the manner of blessing the sacramental emblems will apply to the marriage ceremony, though, perhaps, not with the same degree of force and importance. Section 111, Doctrine and Covenants, tells us how "all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized," and just what the minister "shall say" when they (the contracting parties) are united in holy wedlock. Here is the formula as found in paragraph 2:

"And if there be no objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: 'You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives.'"

There seems to be a tendency with some of our ministers to use words of their own choosing when they pronounce the ceremony; and I have been informed that when requested to do so some use the Quaker or the Presbyterian ceremony. Is this the proper thing for the minister to do? The writer thinks not.

The formula furnished us is a good one; no sensible man or woman who wants to do right in or out of the church will object to it. But were it not a good one, it should be exchanged for one that is, or all formulas dispensed with and the minister left wholly to his own choice. It does not read, "after this manner shall he address them," but "he shall say." Say what? The words which follow and are inclosed in quotation marks, or something else?

I believe that the same Spirit which assisted the prophet to formulate the sacramental prayers, and designated the exact words to be used when baptizing also authorized the exact wording found in the formula of the marriage ceremony. It covers the entire ground in few words, and in a much better way than human wisdom alone could have devised. It represents the will of God concerning the marriage covenant, and in my opinion should be strictly and always adhered to by the ministers of the church.

When Moses was about to build the tabernacle, God said to him: "And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount."—Exodus 25:40,

The same God said to the Saints in 1831 (Doctrine and Covenants, 42:5): "And they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit," etc.

Does not this statement apply to all "covenants and church articles" which had at that time been accepted by the church, together with all others which should be given and properly indorsed after that date?

I do not claim that the emblems are not blessed unless the exact words found in the formulas are used, nor do I claim that parties are not married unless the exact words of the prescribed ceremony are said. But I do claim that the best results are secured when we strictly follow the directions given in the book. Am I "right, or too particular? Which?"

J. R. LAMBERT.

FORGIVE.

Jesus has taught us to pray, "Forgive us our transgressions as we forgive those who transgress against us." We often hear the prayer, "Remember not against us our transgressions, O Lord"; or "Forgive us our sins," meaning also "remember them not." Yet how often in private conversation do we hear related some sin our brother or sister has committed against the speaker. Or we hear statements like this: "Well, I can forgive, but I can not forget;" or, "It cut deep, and I cannot forgive it."

Jesus has said that "If we do not forgive men their transgressions, neither will our Father forgive us our transgressions;" and again that if our brothers sin against us seventy times seven, we must forgive him. In the Doctrine and Covenants we read that we are not worthy of taking the sacrament if there is aught—not much—in our heart against our brother. Then if we partake of this holy ordinance, when these unholy remembrances come, they should be instantly discarded and exchanged for better ones; and by no means should they be spoken.

The tongue is indeed an unruly member, but it can be no worse than its source, the heart, or mind, or spirit.

"Greater is he who is master of his own spirit, than he that taketh a city." As we are able to control our thoughts, so we are able to control our mind, heart, feelings, or spirit, these being synonymous. Thus, because "as we think, so we act," meaning that thought is the incentive to action, the proper mode of conduct in life, for the lover of God should be first to lay a proper foundation of right or righteous thinking, and thus shall we be able to master our spirit, and when approaching the throne of grace can consistently pray to God to "forgive us our transgressions as we forgive those who transgress against us."

JUDAISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

BY H. W. THOMAS.

Reproduced by permission from Open Court, Chicago, Illinois.

History and science have to deal with what has been, and is. Accepting the existential, philosophy and science essay the larger task of analysis and classification; of finding the nature and order of things: their places and relations, meanings, uses and values.

The magnitude of such a task is immeasurable. Not strange that it has filled all the long past; nor strange that it has grown larger with each age, and never seemed so almost bewilderingly great as in these wonderful years of the present.

This does not mean that little if any progress has been made; the gains have been very great; but at each forward step the vision has expanded, the fields have grown larger, and are now seen as reaching on and out into the illimitable.

Such is man amidst his mighty surroundings. Man as a self-conscious being with improvable powers, conditioned in and related to the eternal order of the rational and the good. And what we call world-progress is the growth or progressive becoming of man in his power to know, to do, and to be.

In this slow process, the errors, mistakes, and prejudices have been many, and had to be eliminated; but beyond these has always been the reality of the real. The errors, mistakes of mankind have been about something, not about nothing. Beyond astrology were the stars; back of alchemy were the elements and forces of nature. Traditions, legends, and myths have a meaning; they did not rise up out of nothing. Cosmology and ontology are greater than mythology; the real transcends the imaginary; the laws of gravity and motion are greater than the mighty animals that stood beneath the earth.

Reason has come along and corrected the errors of the senses, and in this has immensely enlarged the vision of the soul. Science has revealed the reign of law and the order of the heavens. The higher natural has taken the place of the old law-violating miraculous.

In all this, it would not be possible to write a history or a philosophy of our world and leave out the religious; and for the reason that religion has filled so large a place in the thinking and doing of mankind. In all lands and ages along with homes and industries, schools of learning and art and the temples of justice, are the temples of worship. Governments and religions, histories, literature, and Bibles have moved along together; and philosophy has found the paths of thought leading on and up to the great questions of the soul and God. It is not possible to have a great literature or philosophy wholly apart from the thoughts and emotions of religion.

In the farther East, the Brahman, the Buddhist, and the Confucian religions were powerful factors in the civilizations of those lands. In the middle East, Judaism rose up and stood alone in its sublime conceptions of one God, of a religion of righteousness, and the brotherhood of man. Not perfect were these conceptions at first; but the germs were there, and the great prophets went forward and ethicized—put moral qualities into the very heart of the monotheistic idea. God was called the "Holy One of Israel;" "Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy."

These were the central ideas of Judaism; hence its power to make men holy; and in this is the explanation of the persistent life and power of this most wonderful of all the peoples of the world. And it was most natural that from such a race and religion the Christ should be born. And natural too, that Christianity should fill so large a place in the history of the later civilizations of Europe and America.

If what has been, had not been, we do not know what might have been; but we do know that Christianity has moved along as a mighty power in the affairs of our world. Romanism and the Holy Roman Empire; the long wars of the Crusades; the revival of learning, the Reformation of the sixteenth century; the growth of liberty and the rise of constitutional monarchies and republics, are epochs, events, and phases of our so-called Christian civilization.

That Judaism was not perfect; and that in many things Christianity has been not only very imperfect, but in spirit and deed very unchristian, are not—can not be denied. But the facts also remain, that these two forms of religion have lived and wrought mightily through the long centuries of ancient and modern history. They have appealed to the deepest centers of thought and feeling; to the spirit-side of man and the universe.

Religion is not an anachronism; is not a survival of the slaveries and superstitious fears of a dark past; though it has been affected by them, and has not yet come into the full freedom and power of the divine truth and life. The foundations of religion are in the nature and needs of man and the answerings of his vast environments. In the last analysis it is the soul and God; the life of God in the soul of man.

It is only in very recent years that the study of comparative religions has come into the foreground of thought; and the study of religion in the light of the universal has hardly yet found a place in the public mind. Ignorance and prejudice have held the field, have blinded and blocked the paths of progress. Great nations and peoples have been looked upon as pagans, and their religion denounced as little if any better than "devil-worship."

And not only this; Judaism and Christianity have stood apart as strangers, and often been arrayed one against the other as enemies. History has no sadder pages than the persecution of the Jews by Christians; and even to-day, outside of England and America, this ancient noble people must suffer the insults of race and religious prejudices and in many places are denied the common rights of citizenship. And this in spite of the fact that in all countries the Jews are generally among the most industrious, intelligent, economic, and law-abiding of all the people.

A most opportune, needed, and helpful work has just appeared from the pen of Harris Weinstock, entitled, "Jesus the Jew." ["Jesus the Jew, and other addresses," by Harris Weinstock. Funk and Wagnalls Co., New York. Price $1.]

The wonder is that this book, or something like it, was so slow and late in coming; that some one had not taken up the subject before. The explanation is that the time had not fully come. Many must "run to and fro and knowledge be increased" to prepare the way; the old ignorance and prejudices must be at least partially overcome by the growth of a larger intelligence and a more generous catholicity.

All thoughtful minds will rejoice that the better day has dawned; that the great subject of religion is finding its place and interpretation in the light of the universal. It means the beginning at least in our day of the end of doubt and negation; of the too common negative attitude of indifference or denial of the Divine in the life to come. It means that henceforth religion will be looked upon, not from the narrow standpoint of names and isms and sectarian dogmas, but from the larger vision and thought of the real; of the soul and God; of brotherhood and righteousness.

And it means, thank God, that these two great religions, Judaism and Christianity—mother and daughter—shall be seen as one in spirit and in the great law and life of love shall dwell together as one family, as brothers and sisters in the one Father's home for all the children of earth.

Our author emphasizes the fact that Jesus was a Jew; that he observed the ceremonial forms of worship, and taught the great spiritual truths of One God, of righteousness and brotherhood, holiness of heart and life, and that he lived and died in the Jewish Church.

The place and value of Paul are also fully recognized; his vision of the spiritual as the essential, and the emancipation of religion from the burdens of the ceremonial, and in this way making it universal. But for this larger interpretation and the inspirations of a new life, Christianity, or Christianized Judaism, could not have gone forth as a vast and world-conquering power; and in this sense Paul gave shaping and potency, and by removing the narrowing limitations universalized religion.

And, it may be said, but for the accretions of the Latin theology that made the larger acceptance of Christianity impossible to Judaism, there would have been no ground for the wide separation between the two. But with these accretions, and the union of Church and State, the fall of the Empire and the decline of learning, came the dark night of ignorance, superstition, and persecution.

When the scattered Jews were banished from their homes, their property confiscated, every civil right denied and the most dreadful cruelties inflicted in the name of Christianity, it was only natural that they should hate the very name of Christianity. And coming ages will more and more admire the unconquerable courage and fidelity of this suffering people, and gladly confess their great service to humanity in standing for the religion of monotheism and righteousness.

The accretions of the old Latin orthodoxy are dropping out of present beliefs. This is no longer a lost world to be redeemed in some substitutional way; but an imperfect world in the process of higher becoming. Man is at center, Divine; is to be filled with God, as God was in the Christ. Our age is returning to the earlier Greek interpretation; and there is the glad coincidence that the Jews are coming to see Christianity in this its real meaning; and that progressive Judaism and the new theology are finding they are substantially at one on this common ground, and hence are joyfully worshipping together as occasion may offer.

This does not mean that Judaism will cease to have its temples and special forms of worship, nor that Christianity will be Judaized. It means that they will be more and more one in the great law and life of love and in the larger faith and fact of the life of God in the soul of man as the one and only real religion.

It is of interest to note that the author is a layman, a business man, and not a Rabbi. It means that the people are beginning to think for themselves, and that the preachers must go forward with the growth of truth, or be left behind. Mr. Weinstock discusses the questions of present practical interest, such as: "What is the modern Jewish idea of Jesus? Do the Jews look forward to the coming of a Messiah? Do they continue to look upon themselves as God's chosen people? Does the modern Jew approve of inter-marriage?" He makes no pretention to great learning, but it is apparent that he is easily at home in the wide field over which he travels. His vision is large and clear and his spirit most reverent and beautiful.

I most earnestly wish that this timely and helpful book could be read by every Jewish Rabbi and Christian preacher in this land, and by the people in all the churches. It would be a help to the religious life of all; there would be less prejudice and vastly more love.

The Arrow.

Straight from the Mighty Bow this truth is driven:
"They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."

Fly far, O shaft of light, all doubt redeeming,
Rouse men from dull despair and idle dreaming.

High heaven's evangel be, gospel God-given:
"They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."

The Warrior's Prayer.

Long since, in sore distress, I heard one pray,
"Lord, who prevailest with resistless might,
Ever from war and strife keep me away,
My battles fight!"

I know not if I play the Pharisee,
And if my brother after all be right;
But mine shall be the warrior's plea to thee—
Strength for the fight.

I do not ask that thou shalt front the fray,
And drive the warring foeman from my sight;
I only ask, O Lord, by night, by day,
Strength for the fight!

When foes upon me press, let me not quail,
Nor think to turn me into coward flight;
I only ask, to make mine arms prevail,
Strength for the fight!

Still let mine eyes look ever on the foe,
Still let mine armor case me strong and bright;
And grant me, as I deal each righteous blow,
Strength for the fight!

And when, at eventide, the fray is done,
My soul to Death's bedchamber do thou light,
And give me, be the field or lost or won,
Rest from the fight!

—Paul Laurence Dunbar, in Independent.

Elements of Success.

Neatness of dress is one of the essentials to success, whether in business or in the home. With this comes neatness in other habits and all help to mark the commercial value or its opposite, in the young man or woman who wants to make a living, at home or with others.

"I had rather board three men like Frank than one girl like his sister Anna," was the statement of a boarding-house keeper.

I was curious, as usual, to know the "why" of this.

"It is just because Frank is as neat as wax, about the house and in his room, in his person and in his dress, while his sister is just the reverse; and she therefore makes both my girls and self a great deal of work. I never like to introduce her to my friends, while I am always proud of her brother."

That helped to settle the value which they put upon themselves, as well as upon neatness. One was benefited by his way, while the other was simply tolerated, for hers. And there is a vast difference between the degrees of "welcome" and "toleration" in any home or office.

In the matter of neatness in dress and person it there speaks for itself and is a mute testimonial which has been known to carry, as against written recommendations in the hands of other applicants for positions, to more than one office-boy, shop-girl, or teacher who was looking for a place. In a recent examination for teachers two stood equally well and led all the rest. They were both called before the board of education for personal examination and the one whose gloves were soiled, shoes unpolished and skirt pinned to her waist, was not selected; while the more neatly attired candidate was given the place.

It sometimes happens that a very little thing will decide your case, for or against; and it is well to have the little things in your favor. Neatness is one of the things which you alone can control for yourself. See to it that teeth, nails, and skin are kept spotlessly clean, hair well brushed, shoes and clothing in order. And even a boy may learn to mend, and neatly, rather than go untidy because his mother has not time to look him over every day and see that he is rightly equipped for his work or business.—Selected.

Strength-Giving Sympathy.

It has been said that nothing shows the quality of a man so much as the source to which he turns for comfort. It is equally true that nothing shows one's estimate of another more than the sort of comfort one offers him. This is shown in the way different persons deal with a child that is hurt. One talks about the hurt, exclaims over it, caresses and pities. Another apparently disregards the hurt or makes light of it and seeks at once to occupy the child with something else, until he forgets his pain and laughter takes the place of tears. Often the child would hardly think of his hurt were not his mind fixed on it by supposed "sympathy." But that is the truest sympathy which seeks to spare him, not so much the suffering of the hurt as the suffering of thinking about it and the emotional disturbance and nervous weakening which come from cries and complaints and fears.

That is the truest sympathy which feels for the child, not simply as undergoing now the smart of a burn or a sting or a cut, but as one who is sure to meet much suffering in the world and whose success and happiness depend largely upon his being able to rise above it, or apply himself to other things in spite of it.

A little girl had to be taken to the surgeon for a brief but painful operation. The surgeon sought to relieve her fears by assuring her that it would not hurt much. Distrusting him, she turned to her grandfather, who accompanied her, asking: "Will it hurt, Grandpa?" "Yes, my child, it will hurt badly," was the reply. Instantly she put out her arm and submitted to the operation without a murmur. It was false sympathy which prompted the surgeon to give the false assurance. It was actually true sympathy which led the grandfather to declare the truth—sympathy with her strength and courage.

True sympathy seeks not the sensibilities and the emotions, but the mind and the will. It seeks the latent strength rather than the manifest weakness.—Selected.

Pearls from the Depth of Intellect and Heart.

GOD'S ESTIMATE NOT MAN'S.

We estimate a man by what he is, or by what he has done. God estimates a man by what he desires to be and is striving to become. If one, in his heart of hearts, longs to be one with God, to honor God in his doing or not doing and to serve God faithfully in serving others, even though that one be hindered or kept back and kept down by obstacles or opposers, God sees the mark at which he aims and the ideal to which he aspires, even though one's fellows note only that which has been already realized. We have indeed reason to be grateful that our judgment is with our ever-loving and our all-seeing Father and not with our imperfect and short-sighted human fellows.—Sunday School Times.

So live to-day that, when to-morrow comes,
Thou shalt not cloud the sun with vain regret;
But let thy hand and heart commit those deeds
That love for man and faith in God beget.

—Osgood Elliott.

“Gladness is God's ideal for his children. He means them to be sunny-faced and happy-hearted. He does not wish them to be heavy and sad. He has made the world full of beauty and full of music. The mission of the gospel is to start songs wherever it goes. Its key-note is joy—it is ‘good tidings of great joy to all people.’”

When some beloved voice that was to you
Both sound and sweetness, faileth sudden,
And silence against which you dare not cry,
Aches round you like a strange disease and new,
What hope? what help? what music will undo
That silence to your sense? Not friendship's sigh—
Not reason's subtle count, not melody
Of viols, nor pipes that Faunus blew—
Nor songs of poets, nor of nightingales,
Whose hearts leap upward through the cypress-trees
To the clear moon; nor yet the spheric laws
Self-chanted, nor the angel's sweet All hails, Met in the smile of God. Nay, none of these,
Speak thou, availing Christ! and fill this pause.

Suggestions to the Sunday-School Senior Scholar.

Ofttimes the duty of the different Sunday-school officers, and, especially the duty of the Sunday-school teacher is written upon and discussed at conventions. I am going to leave the officers and teachers out of it this time, and direct my paper to the senior scholar.

Will suggest a few things that from my way of viewing it, will be beneficial to all concerned.

In the first place the scholar

SHOULD HAVE

a Quarterly, Bible, and other books, if needed, that he may be well equipped for the work before him. He should begin to study the lesson the first part of the week, and improve every opportunity to study it during the week, even though it be but a short time each day. So when the time comes to recite the lesson, it will be so impressed on the mind, that intelligent, correct answers may be given, without searching the Quarterly or reading from the Scriptures.

If so impressed upon the mind the lesson will be a benefit not only for the present time but in the future.

I would suggest that he be

and never be tardy—unless circumstances over which he has no control prevent. And always take part in responsive reading.

He should answer the questions in an animated, lively manner, in a distinct tone of voice that teacher and all the class may hear. He should be able to answer questions in review—and do it, too—thereby showing that the lesson has been well learned, and he is anxious that the superintendent know that it has been. To my mind, he should take a kindly interest in the welfare of the whole school as well as self. How can he do this better than by setting a good example for the intermediate and primary classes? And in what better way can he encourage the officers of the Sunday-school, and the teacher the class has selected?

The teacher of the senior class may be ever so earnest in the work and may try ever so hard to instruct and interest the class, but if the scholar does not feel the necessity of real study, or the little benefit will be derived. But if the scholar does his duty, then teacher and scholar are working together, and are a real benefit to each other, and the good work goes on. For you know 'tis said, “United we stand, divided we fall.” I would suggest he be liberal in supporting the Sunday-school with his pennies, even if he does have to sacrifice tobacco, chewing-gum, candy, new fads, and vanity. For 'tis written:

“Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.”

Sunday-School.

I believe the Sunday-school is a work that will advance the cause of Christ as much as any other one work. It is in the Sunday-school we first get the work before the children. It is the teaching in the Sunday-school that fastens impressions upon the little minds that are never erased.

It is not because the work is any better advanced in the Sunday-school than in the preaching services, but because it is more direct and more personal. We can hold their attention better, and thus get the principles of the gospel stamped upon their minds.

Teachers teaching children should not confine themselves exclusively to the Quarterly, but should thoroughly study the lesson, so they can reach beyond and bring in similar teachings, such as would be in harmony with the lesson.

Teachers should try to impress upon the minds

so they will not conceive the idea that it is only spiritual. I remember when a child I looked upon the Bible as being only spiritual in its nature, and I found it was hard to get out of the old rut. And it has only been since I have become connected with this work that I have been able to overcome that idea. And there are thousands of people to-day, and good people too, who have the same conception. It has only been about two years ago that in conversation with a young lady I was asked if the Holy Land and the place where Jerusalem once stood, was in reality a place in existence, or was it only a “spiritual” land. After informing her it was a land now inhabited by thousands of people, she expressed a great desire to visit the place. She was a sister in good standing in one of our most popular churches, and a regular attendant at their Sunday-school.

If we have those in our class who are not acquainted with our work, we should take every precaution not to poison their minds by trying to get them to believe at once, the part of our doctrine that is called a strange and dangerous doctrine by those that know not the "God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," but worship a God that is "without body, parts, or passions." But we should teach them the unchangeableness of God. Get them to understand what God is, that that which he has promised to one people he has promised to all; for he is no respecter of persons. And, if we will but meet the conditions, he is in duty bound to send the promised blessings.

The Sunday-school is, I believe, a work of God and expressly for the children. Not that the adults should not attend and gain a better understanding of the Scriptures, but they are more developed in mind and a speaker addressing a congregation can hold their attention, while many of the little ones will be asleep. And besides, a short, plain, simple Bible story will be remembered by a child, where a public speech would not.

I find the Sunday-school Quarterlies make a pretty thorough canvass of the Scriptures, consequently they will be a great help in obtaining eternal life.

OUR PRESENCE IN THE SCHOOL-ROOM will be encouraging to our children. A great many people think they have done all that is required of them when they get their little ones ready on Sunday morning and send them to Sunday-school. I think it is a great mistake, for the little ones will be inclined to follow the example set before them. If we want our children to attend these services, we should teach them it is necessary and right, by going and taking an active part ourselves.

The Superintendent should try to be and to be at the place of meeting ten or fifteen minutes before time to begin services. He should always welcome the patrons with a bright and smiling countenance and words of cheer and love. His habits should be such as would be worthy of their imitation.

The assistant superintendent should use every means possible to gain the love of the school. Thus the superintendent, assistant superintendent and the teachers should work together in love and kindness so as to keep the unity of the spirit.

If we can do the work in the spirit of Christ we can establish it in the hearts of the honest.

So come, brothers and sisters, put on the whole armor of God, and revive the work if it is on the decline. By so doing, when he comes to select his jewels we will hear that welcome voice, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The Pilgrim and the Voice.

The Pilgrim.

The year is done: my soul is sad
For wasted golden days;
How can the new year make me glad,
Or tune my lips to praise?

The Voice.

Forget the things that are behind,
Lift up thine eager eyes;
Reach forth, press forward—thou shalt find
Each day a wondrous prize!

The Pilgrim.

The way is rough: my weary feet
Have often stumbled there,

And steeper slopes my vision greet,
Where I must onward fare.

The Voice.

Fear not, for God shall hold thy hand,
His loving clasp is sure;
On mountain steep or wave-beat strand
Thy feet shall press secure.

The Pilgrim.

The work unflinching strength demands,
Unnumbered voices call;
What are my weak, unskillful hands
Where mighty workers fall?

The Voice.

Fear not: each day thou shalt receive
The strength which thou shalt seek:
Thy song shall cheer the hearts that grieve.
Thy hands lift up the weak.

The Pilgrim.

O heavenly Voice, thy message clear
With joy will I obey;
With courage greet the dawning year,
With hope pursue my way.—Selected.

Letter Department.

DAWSON, Yukon Territory, January 14.

Editors Herald: We are in the midst of an Arctic winter, with its long drawn-out nights, its stinging cold, and fierce blizzards. The snow piling high on our roofs and creeping up the sides of our moss-chinked cabins, causes our habitations to assume the appearance of daily settling to the frozen earth. Every scrap of iron, every nail-head, is heavily embossed with frost. The thermometer in a most fitful manner registers forty to sixty degrees below zero. The weather here is very changeable; but these conditions do not dismay us; we are getting accustomed to this most uncompromising land.

We, on coming to Dawson this fall, purchased cabins and are now living on the banks of the Klondike River; about a mile from the confluence of the stream with the mighty Yukon. Here lies Dawson with her restless inhabitants. The city has electric lights, water-works, a goodly sprinkling of churches, theaters, and dancing-halls. A city combining the characteristics of a western mining camp, and a respectable city of the East. There are several department stores, where almost any article wanted may be purchased. There are also some fine jewelry shops, where native jewelry is wrought in many artistic designs. On one large nugget beaten flat was portrayed a mining scene, a shaft, a bucket of gravel, and windlass with rope of delicately-spun gold; also a log-cabin with the sun rising over the mountain top, the sun represented by a diamond with corrugated lines radiating from the jewel, every detail perfectly and daintily executed. There are many things in this isolated city of the Northwest to arrest one's gaze and awaken an interest; and as we look from our double-paned window, we see white canvas-covered stages pass, warmed with stoves; the protruding stovepipe and trailing smoke, together with its windows gives one the impression of a runaway house. And one can not fail to note the dog-teams, some having as many as eight dogs hitched tandem; others plodding along with one. A well-trained team moves swiftly, readily answering to the call of "Whoa and Gee" and dexterously rounding a passing team, pushes steadily forward. Some of the owners of these useful animals are very humane. Others the opposite; but one of the latter class must look well to his way, if any of the police are near, for they arrest any one found cruelly punishing his beasts, either horses or dogs.

Provisions of all kind are very expensive; but if one has the "dust," he is all right in one way at least, no change here less than a quarter. One does not see a nickel or dime in this country, only in gold-dust.

Dear Saints, I presume you would like to hear how we put in the summer at the gulch. Briefly, we had a hard time of it. The men went to work in good spirits, but the work was most arduous, and Bro. Suttles' health failed, and he weakened daily. Then in the latter part of July Bro. Hollingsworth left and went to Scroggy Creek, two hundred miles distant. My husband bravely tried to keep to his post, but gave up at last and had to go to bed. There was no one but Bro. Rawlins to work then; and in our trouble how I prayed to the Father, and what promises I made, will only be known to him "that doeth all things well." We were in sore straits. I knew, and so understood the rest of our party, that it was quite necessary that we should be in Dawson the coming winter and the money that we would have to meet coming expenses with must be extracted from that rocky gulch, and that journey of three hundred miles by water, also the eighteen mile walk to the "Jam" was to be accomplished. How, we could hardly tell!

One day I appeared by my husband's bedside dressed in his clothing, even to his heavy rubber boots. I told him that I would take his place in the mine and help Charley. He protested in vain. Bidding him not worry, I gave him the Book of Mormon and hurried forth. Charley at first was reluctant to receive my proffered assistance; but at last set me to work, and for the remainder of the time we were at Dublin I worked every day, supporting the hydraulic nozzle, in shaking boxes, panning, etc. Bro. Rawlins, like the chivalrous son-in-law that he is, tried to make it as easy as possible for me. My husband began to recover his health, and the first of September we started for the McQuestion, the men carrying heavy packs, the dogs also carrying their portion. We were three days walking those eighteen miles. The moss was so water-soaked we would sink in ankle-deep every step; but for all this we were a rather merry party; for was not Bro. Suttles almost well again? And we were going to get our mail, and see new faces, and converse with other people again, and were running away from all that hard work. Of course we were a bit jolly.

We tarried a week at the "Jam," the men going duck hunting; and when at last on a chilly, foggy day we took our places in the boat, I prayed silently for God's protecting care, for on this strange, wild river are many dangers from rocks and "sweepers," tall pine-trees that have fallen across the stream, where in high-water the banks have been undermined, allowing the trees a support no longer.

One day we came near getting on one of these obstacles, or under, Bro. Suttles called out sharply, "We are gone!" There laid the huge bulk ahead of us, the water surging and boiling over it in a most terrifying way. Jack bent to his sweep and Charley to the oars, as I fancy they never did before, and we were saved, it seemed, by a hair's breadth.

We camped at Bear Creek, and Bro. Suttles got a moose. They loaded it in the boat on a bed of willows, and a few hours afterwards they killed a bear that was swimming in front of the boat. He, too, was overtaken and hauled aboard and afterwards sold in Dawson.

After we arrived at Dawson, Bro. Suttles returned again to the gulch, with some experienced miners. They went on the steamer.

On returning, he informed me that our cabin had been entered and five hundred dollars worth of provisions stolen. He is away now, trying to recover his goods. As they took a tarpaulin and ax, he surmises they intended to cache them until snow would aid them by sledding. So thieves even in this land of gold take property that does not belong to them; but woe betide them if caught. The law is very strict in this land for any crime. Fournier and Labelle, two Frenchmen, evidently did not count the cost when they slew their three companions, and threw their bleeding bodies in the Yukon; but, they must pay the penalty with their lives the 20th of this month.

I must now tell you of my little Alaskan grandson. He was born the 17th of November, and in honor of the one that baptized my husband and I we have named him Elvin. We are all very anxious to return to our own land again, where we can see and dwell with the Saints. We have not forgotten our faith or grown cold in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. We have talked to many concerning the gospel. Who can help it, convinced of the truth as we most certainly are? Bro. Suttles is not back yet, still in the wilderness. MAMIE SUTTLES.

MORTONS MILLS, Iowa, February 14.

Editors Herald: Bro. Madison and I commenced meetings here at the Mayflower Schoolhouse last Tuesday, and notwithstanding the roads being muddy or else rough, the house has been fairly well filled each night with prospects of still larger attendance next week. Bro. and Sr. H. O. Redfield are the only Saints living here and by their lives of integrity have commanded the respect of the community so that it is a pleasure for the missionary to come and represent the gospel in word. We shall continue here a week or two longer and are hopeful of good results.

I have had varying experiences this winter in the gospel work. Many joys and blessings have come to cheer me, and many difficulties and disappointments to discourage; but no doubt these are the experiences of all the ministers of God. Nearly a whole week was spent in the early part of January in unsuccessful attempts to get an opening. Prejudice and sectarian revivals constituted the main difficulties. I have thought sometimes that our present methods of work are to a great extent a failure, and yet I have not been able to devise any better. In this district we have a prosperous class of farmers who, as a rule, are busily engaged in the things of the world, and have little time or concern for religion of any kind. Those who do belong to the various churches, have in most every community one or more places of worship which are, as a rule, closed against us. There being so many churches, the use of schoolhouses for religious service is generally a thing of the past, and people will hardly come to them when they have been accustomed to a church. So many of the schoolhouses are without lamps or organ, all adding to the difficulties of using them. But we have kept busy and preached to the few or the many as we could.

The Lord has been with me by his Spirit in preaching and talking to the people, and in dreams, and I have been assured that a number have been fully convinced of the truth. But what of baptisms? There are none on my report so far this quarter. I have felt grieved that persons who were convinced of the gospel, did not, for some reason, obey, and have wondered what would become of them. I have wondered, too, if perhaps I had converted their minds without reaching their hearts; and in one place I prayed for special power to reach the hearts of the people, and God's spirit came to my full satisfaction, but still none obeyed. One morning shortly after I dreamed I saw a man whom I knew was convinced of the gospel, and who was by nature a jolly and happy man, whose peace or pleasure the cares of life interfered with but little, but I saw him in a dark room in an extreme condition of mental distress, so great as I had never witnessed before. I discerned the cause—he had neglected to obey the gospel until now it was too late. I tried to comfort him but he would not be comforted. Such anguish of mind was terrible; and as I turned away I saw two women who also had been convinced of the gospel come in and sit down. I awoke discerning the import of the dream. I have resolved to sow the seed as best I can and let the Lord provide for the harvest, remembering that he has said, "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of mouth: It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it."—Isaiah 55:11.

Our conference held with the Tabor branch last week was an occasion of joyful strengthening for all present. A movement is on foot there to build a much needed chapel, and if the Saints continue to be as united as they have been there is no question but what it will be completed early next summer.

The influence of the anti-Mormon movement is felt in this district in a more general and open opposition than before, and this from all sects. I believe we have nothing to fear, but by prayer and diligence we shall be able to meet the stronger opposition, for by the opposition the controversy is raised and many honest people are led to investigate. I believe the work of God will yet have its friends and defenders among those of the world. May God prosper his work.

CHARLES FRY.

TALLYHO, West Virginia, February 13.

Editors Herald: I am not a Latter Day Saint, though my husband is. When the elders come around here they make our house their home. Elder L. R. Devore was here in February of last year, and stayed two weeks. He preached several times at the schoolhouse and at our home. People are asking me when he will return. Elders Goodrich and Harder have been here, also G. H. Godbey, who has been here several times.

I made a visit to Pittsburg sometime ago, and was at the home of Bro. Godbey's son, James; and although I was a stranger and not a Saint, he and his wife made me very welcome.

I lived at Braddockfield forty years ago, and there has been a great deal of improvement since then. Where I had a garden it is now laid out in streets with brick pavement. Where General Braddock fell, that valley is now occupied by nice buildings.

When in Pittsburg I visited the old blockhouse down at the point, where Fort Pitt stood, and where so much fighting was done many years ago. The old blockhouse is in good condition, and is now in charge of the Daughters of the Revolution, who have a janitor to tend it and the grounds and show visitors around. A fancy iron fence surrounds the building.

Editors Herald: I just read an article from a sister who spoke of the need of attending meeting. Yes, sister, I think there is great need of attending meeting, although I have heard Saints say they could live their religion without going to meeting. I am too weak to live without going to meeting. We have prayer-meeting every Sunday, and if I miss one Sunday, I feel that I have not done right. Besides, we are told in Doctrine and Covenants not to forget the assembling of ourselves together. The Bible says to meet together often and so fulfill the law. If we meet with a sister or a brother and talk of things pertaining to God and heaven, we will receive a blessing from heaven without fail. God has promised it to us. Fifteen years ago I went to a place where there were only three Saints, all sisters. One of these lived next to a dear old Methodist lady. This sister had taught the old lady the gospel. She believed it; believed that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I said to the sister, Let us meet in this lady's house and have prayer-meeting. We did so; met every Wednesday. We prayed earnestly that God would open the way whereby an elder might come and preach, that there might be a branch of the Saints raised up in that city. To our astonishment our sister rose to her feet and spoke to us by the gift of prophecy and said that inasmuch as we were living faithful we should have the desire of our hearts. There should be added to our number three, five, yea, fifty dear Saints. In less than one year there were fifty Saints in that city, and this old Methodist lady, her son and daughter were the first to be baptized. So you see if we had not met together, lived humbly and prayerfully, these people would not have come into the church then.

I believe that when we want to do a work for God we have to do it as he wants it done, or it will never be done. All this was done by our meeting often. I could tell you of several instances where weak Saints who could not get to meeting, were built up by those who could go to them.

So, dear sister, let us keep right and go to meeting, helping others to go and we will get our reward.

Hoping the Saints will all go often to meeting, and enjoy the blessing of God, I am, as I have been for twenty-three years, a firm believer in the gospel and blessings of God.

Your sister,

A. M. GOODWIN.

Editors Herald: Once more have I been permitted to receive health and cure that has been lying dormant to many millions of our race who are passing down to the dark charnel-house this side of the resurrection, to await the final doom when called forth by the great archangel. But, after death, eternity, that unending place fixed by God, begins. My greatest aim is to have part in the first resurrection and dwell with Christ a thousand years upon earth, where there will be no night, but eternal day; where the sable curtains blot from existence all dark and gloomy forebodings. But man in his finite state of being is so trammelled by the fascinating charms of this life that he becomes absorbed in the dark gloom, so that when disaster overtakes him he falls down in the gloomy wreck and crash of worlds to rot in the sepulcher of despair. How many thousands are now proselyting the true and original faith that sends health and cure from aches and pains in this mortal nature. My health is so improved that I can walk around.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a line from this corner of the Lord's vineyard may be interesting to your readers. I have lately attended the two conferences in this vicinity. One at Little Sioux in charge of Bro H. N. Hansen, assisted by J. C. Crabb, at which there was a goodly attendance of Saints and quite a number of outsiders. The additions during the last quarter in this district were few, but the elders had been diligently sowing the good seed both in the branches and where there are no branches. Reports of the branches showed a desire with the Saints to progress in the life divine. Of course there will always be room for improvement. A good spirit prevailed in all the sessions, and was manifest in the preaching of the word. Brn. Hansen, Smith and Cohrt preached the word. We had an excellent prayer-meeting when all felt the divine influence which made glad our hearts. From there I went to Pisgah and preached three nights to attentive audiences until cold in head and lungs compelled a cessation.

Our Bro. Amos Vredenburg, son of Charles and Angeline Vredenburg, passed away on the 8th and was buried from Pisgah church on Tuesday. Elder W. A. Smith preached the funeral, assisted by Bro. Hansen. The church was crowded and Bro. Smith was blessed, and I trust the bereaved ones comforted.

I went to Galland's Grove conference at Deloit on the 13th. Here again the Spirit of the Lord met with us both in conference and prayer-meetings. By request of the general missionary in charge, by letter, Elder C. E. Butterworth's ordination to the evangelical ministry was voted upon and unanimously recommended and approved. The ordination is to take place in the near future.

The officers in charge at Deloit conference were J. M. Baker, C. J. Hunt, and Leonard Butterworth. The preachers were C. E. Butterworth, J. Sutton, and the writer. Here the Saints seem in earnest. Only a few had been gathered in during the last quarter, but the laborers had diligently sown the seed and are looking forward to the harvest. The writer has tried to do what he could to strengthen the Saints and invite sinners to repentance, but he has not accomplished much. How true it is, "The night cometh when no man can work!" How brief the day, and how necessary that each one should use diligence lest the night fall upon us and cut off our golden opportunities and we be found unfaithful servants. I want to be understood as one who is not much in favor of blind obedience, at least so far as man may command, but when God speaks, through whatever medium he may choose, I shall try to follow the divine lead.

CHARLES DERRY.

ORIOLE, Indiana, February 14.

Editors Herald: Bro. Jenkins came to this neighborhood February 6, delivered a sermon at the Buckeye Schoolhouse that night, about one mile and a half from this place. Many of the Saints from here and surrounding country attended the meeting. He came to Oriole, Saturday, February 7, delivered a series of meetings, closing here on Tuesday night, gave two more discourses at Buckeye Wednesday and Thursday nights. Started for Plainville on February 13. The Lord is wonderfully blessing Bro. Jenkins.

Despite the stormy weather and bad roads we had large crowds out at our meetings; the very best of attention and order. The people are beginning to see the light and are realizing that God is just, and that he never changes.

We are contemplating building a church-house in the near future at this place. We have had some little trouble in getting the house, but have succeeded so far. Bro. Porter has an appointment for this place Saturday night, February 14, also Sunday and Sunday night.

May God add his blessings to the Saints everywhere, is my desire and prayer.

JOHN N. BERNARDI.

EAST SANGERVILLE, Maine, February 12.

Dear Saints: How good it is that when separated from those of like faith, we can still keep in touch with the work by means of the church papers and books. Only those who, are like myself, alone can realize how eagerly the papers are looked for.

There are no other Saints here, but the people are very kind to me, and asked for my help in the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor. A lady who has read some of my books and papers told me we were in advance of the times, and that it was a pity those who opposed the work could not know what they were fighting against. Another told me, with tears in her eyes, that the Lord would bless me for daring to follow what I believed was true. I feel she is right, and that the Lord does bless me inasmuch as I obey him. My desire to serve and honor him grows stronger each day, but I fail many times.

I am delighted with the Religio Quarterly. Surely those who are alone are not deprived of all privileges. I think no one can faithfully do the work marked out in the Quarterly without developing both spiritually and mentally. If we neglect these opportunities so easily within our reach, I wonder if the Lord will hold us guiltless. Is it not our duty to learn all we can, especially along these lines?

There is much being said about the Word of Wisdom. I do not know how many times of late I have seen just such teaching in numerous household papers, warnings against tea and coffee and eating meat during warm weather. If we are not careful we may find the world giving better heed to these things than we do. They do not hesitate to condemn tea and coffee. I heard a noted Boston physician say that tea and coffee do as much injury to the health among women as strong drink and tobacco among the men. Since they are injurious, why spend time in seeking to justify ourselves in using them, and in questioning whether they in particular are meant by "hot drinks?" Suppose they were not specially meant in the revelation, would we even then, as Saints, have a right to take that which is known to be harmful to mind and body?

MARY E. LELAND.

MALTA, Idaho, February 3.

Editors Herald: The following rather significant dream was related to me by Sr. Ann Croshaw, of Pocatello, Idaho. She said: "Some twelve or more years after my baptism in Oxford, but before my faith had become fully established, and being constantly harrassed by the Brighamite people, I made special prayers to receive light as to which one of the churches was acceptable to God. As I believe in answer, I had the following very realistic dream or vision: There appeared to me on my right hand my husband, who had also joined the Josephite church, and on my left his brother Charles, who was still a staunch Brighamite. They each had a canvas in their hands which unrolled would be about two by four feet in size. As they began to unroll them there appeared on each a beautiful tree in full bloom, with the most lovely foliage and blossoms. I asked them where they got such beautiful trees. Both spoke and said, 'These are to represent the two churches, and you are to judge for yourself which is right.' My husband's tree did not seem so bright as they were unrolling, so I said, 'We must be wrong; the other church must be right, as the luster of their tree seemed brighter.' My brother-in-law smiled very pleasantly at this; but when I turned again to view my husband's picture he had fully unrolled it. There appeared the most lovely tree my eyes ever beheld; in full bloom, and with splendid roots in fertile, rich soil; roots extending north, south, east, and west, with young shoots growing between. I said, 'This must be the right church, as the tree has roots, and the church will roll on to a mighty work. But the other is without roots, and a band around its limbs; it will wither and die.' As I said this each rolled his chart and disappeared. I never saw them come or go."

January 18 we were permitted to lead Bro. George Chaffee and wife into the cold, watery grave, and the Pocatello Saints were revived to begin anew the duties of Saints to make public demonstrations of their faith. The 25th we met with the Saints in Blackfoot and found them still laboring against many difficulties to keep up their meetings and Sunday-school. They deserve great credit, but they can also testify to the Lord's goodness toward them in healing, etc. In company with my sister, Addie, I came here last week and held two meetings Sunday, though extreme cold kept some from coming.

Like all other parts of Idaho, this locality needs labor performed, but is neglected for lack of workers. I hope we may have more laborers ere long.

AKRON, Iowa, February 15.

Dear Herald: I am always feasting on the good things I gather from reading the HERALD each week.

I can not find words to express my joy in this great latter-day work, because it is God's work, and all good comes from God. Every time we are prompted to do a good act, it is from God. When we are impressed to pray it is of God, and if we act under the impulse of the moment we shall be blessed. I have proven it many times.

There are seven Saints living here, which gives me great encouragement, as I have lived here many years without a Saint. I begin to see the promises beginning to be fulfilled. As all God's promises are on conditions of obedience and faithfulness, I realize the responsibility that rests upon me for their fulfillment. Dear brothers and sisters, pray for me that I may have strength to do my part and always be found doing those things which please our Father in heaven. That there is a work to be done in this place, I am assured. Hope Bro. W. A. Smith will be sent back to this district, for he has done a good work, as all can testify, and left some rejoicing in the truth, and I trust others near the kingdom. I have spent over thirty-two years in this work, and have a greater desire this new year to do more to aid the work than ever before. The promises are to the faithful and the reward is to those who hold out faithful to the end.

Your sister,

M. A. CHRISTY.

CADEVILLE, Louisiana, February 11.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. F. Grimes and myself are together preaching in Louisiana, when we can get a chance. It rains so much here that we can not preach more than half the time. And when we do the people will not turn out to hear us very well, because of their prejudice and other things that are common to the South. It seems that to try to work in the country in the winter season is almost a failure at the present time. I think in the summer season we can reach the people better. There are some noble-hearted Saints in Louisiana who are trying hard to establish the work in their vicinities. There are twenty-six members in this community. I think they will have a branch organized here sometime in the near future. They intend to build a church-house next fall. That will be a good thing, as we can not use the schoolhouse to preach in. Bro. J. J. Hawkins, from Alabama, with his numerous posterity, is located here. He is a man of push and energy and is quite a profitable addition to the work in this part. I shall begin to work my way northward about the first of March. If any one between here and Joplin, Missouri, would like me to visit them on my way up, please inform me at once. Address me at my home address, 2228 Empire Street, Joplin, Missouri, and it will be forwarded to me.

Editors Herald: Since January 6 I have visited Montpelier, Wardboro, Dingle, Bloomington, St. Charles, and Paris, preached in Wardboro twice, Dingle three times, and in St. Charles nine times. In the other places, I visited from house to house among those who would receive me. I believe good will result. Storms and contagious diseases hindered me considerably. Part of the time it has been intensely cold, ranging from zero to forty degrees below. The snow is deep, averaging two feet or more. However, I feel that all must work together for good to those who zealously labor and patiently wait for the results.

Editors Herald: I came here to help Bro. T. J. Sheppard hold a series of meetings. We have been here a week. The weather has been so rainy that we have held but five meetings since I came. Had good turnouts and interest. We expected to hold meetings at several places in this section, but Bro. Sheppard received a notice to come home at once on account of one of his little boys being very sick with typhoid fever. I do not expect to stay here many days, as I have to attend district conference on the 28th inst., in Houston County.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote I have been attending to the work in Newark each Sunday, preaching twice on said day. While there are but few who attend, I have tried to encourage them, and I feel hopeful and quite encouraged to go on. We had a notice in the Newark Sunday Call, but as they misrepresented us I sent a letter to the editor requesting him to put same in the paper. He was kind enough to put it in the paper, and those who saw same, that knew anything about us, were quite pleased. I wanted the people to know what we really are, and it was put in the paper just as I wrote. I was pleased for this because I wanted the truth to be known.

SEILING, Oklahoma, February 8.

Editors Herald: We have only a small branch here, and are considerably scattered and the spiritual condition nothing to boast of. Some of our members seem to have lost interest in the work, while a few are apparently doing the best they can.

We have our church almost completed; expect to have it dedicated at our coming conference, March 6, when we expect Bro. H. O. Smith and some others of the missionary force to be here.

Nearly two years ago we were much persecuted and it seemed as though we were about to be driven out of the country. Then we clung close together and enjoyed more of the Spirit of God, and we were prospered in every needful way; but soon the outside persecution ceased and now Satan is trying to get on the inside and is succeeding to some extent.

At present the Presbyterians are holding a protracted effort here in a vacant store, though a notice published in the paper to the effect that our church door was open to all Christian worshipers. Their minister gave notice that he would not argue scripture with any one. We have been expecting an attack, but so far he has said nothing directly against our faith.

May God hasten the day when peace and unity may prevail, and the honest in heart be gathered and numbered with God's people, is my prayer.

H. F. DURFEY.

MANIMO, British Columbia, January 24.

Editors Herald: A word from this isolated quarter of God's footstool may be welcomed. While we have nothing flattering to report, yet we are striving to keep ourselves identified with Israel. In reading Bro. Terry's letter I am led to believe that we are not the only ones who are beset with indifference, but truly it is astonishing, how little the people think of the gospel, and yet we should not be so surprised when we consider how much the various pastors object to the message.

I sent Bro. Luff's tract, "Why I became a Latter Day Saint" and also Bro. William's tract, "The Latter Day Saints, and Who are They?" and Bro. Roth's tract, "The Personality of God." "What We Believe," "Two Ways Illustrated," and some others to both Methodist pastors, the Church of England pastor, an evangelist who is laboring here at present, and also to Mr. Knowlton, the high school teacher. I had some talk with the evangelist, (Coleman by name) afterward, but he said it was too narrow for him. He said the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints was not broad enough in sentiment for him.

I met with the few Saints of Vancouver on the 18th inst., which was refreshing to me and also to them, as was indicated by their testimonies. We broke the sacrament to them which was partaken of with the necessary humility seemingly. They meet at the comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. Clark. They have Sabbath-school each Sunday evening, and are ably taught by Sr. Rainey of New Westminster. May God in his infinite love watch over and protect them and Israel everywhere, is my prayer. Prosperity to the HERALD and all the messengers of truth.

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

LEROY, Ohio, February 16.

Dear Herald: I have often thought I would love to write a few lines to you, to tell you how welcome you were in my home, how many times I have been comforted, cheered, and encouraged to press onward, by reading your pages and to tell those who contribute to your pages they are doing much good, and not to think it time ill spent in bearing their testimony and trying to encourage others.

I am about fifteen miles from the branch I belong to, and I feel very lonely many times, and your coming is looked forward to each week and greatly appreciated. I have had many trials, but God has comforted and helped me to bear them all, and my heart is filled with loving trust in him. Oh, may he help us ever to trust him! I feel there are better times ahead than I have seen in the past; and how much I shall appreciate the Lord's loving favor. The love of God is not a selfish love. We can not forget all our dear brothers and sisters, and so we pray that they may receive the needed blessing that will help them on their way and make them strong, to endure all the trials that are brought to bear against them. It is very little I can do, but I can pray, and I have been greatly blessed by so doing. My testimony is that this work is true, and I feel this will be a bright and prosperous year for the church. Let us be strong in the Lord, helping one another and doing all the good we can, remembering that our Father will not require of us something we can not do, but what we can do. May he bless the coming conference. Let us pray especially for this.

That God may help us each to be faithful, is my earnest prayer.
JENNIE A. HOLT.

CHICAGO, Illinois, February 9.

Dear Herald: I have often thought I should like to write to your columns, but have desisted from doing so, fearful that my communication would not meet with favor, knowing so well that there are others in the church whose letters would be far more interesting and worthy of space in your pages; but I am most desirous of telling of an experience in my life which has been the means of placing me in the condition which I now occupy, as a member of the body or church of God, and I feel that as it has been such a help to me, it might be equally as effective to some other soul whose light has been darkened by the precepts and teachings of men.

When I was a young woman, living with my father in the sunny South, he having gone there for the especial purpose of writing a book which he claims to have been directed to write through a power which he could not resist.

While we were living there one of our neighbor ladies called in to give us a basket of oranges. As she came in, my father turned around from his writing, and after greeting her, he mentioned something relating to his essay, on "Christ and his Mission." His remark called forth a great storm of debate on her side, against the divine mission of Christ. She was a great reader and therefore quoted many arguments which to me seemed beautiful. I had never studied the subject, and easily fell in with her ideas, and believed that my father was deluded.

Of course I never doubted that Christ set a noble and good example to mankind, and that he certainly was a great and powerful man, if the Bible were true; but for him to be "conceived by the Holy Ghost," she had shown me that this was preposterous. In consequence of the seed which was planted in my heart that day, I lost my childish belief in the divinity of Jesus, the Son of the living God.

That very night this same dear Jesus appeared to me in dream. Words are inadequate to express the solemn beauty of the dream, or my wonder and sadness as I beheld it. I was shown that he would not acknowledge those who failed in this life to acknowledge him.

All the next day I was bowed down with grief. I had truly repented, and in the evening I received evidence that I was recognized by a Father's patient love and care.

Since that time I have studied the scriptures more; have loved God and Christ with truer and better love than I ever did; though from childhood I was brought up in the admonition of the Lord, yet I never felt any desire to work in his service until after I had this blessing. Since that time I have longed with all the yearnings of my soul to do something for my dear Master; to be an instrument in his hands for good.

It was in the sunny South, under the teachings of my father, that my soul first hungered for the truth, and it was there that I began to drink into my being the first dim ray of a great light.

Those beacon lights which came to me through the instrumentality of my father, were of a high order, a means to the end, in other words, as a moving power to lead me into a higher light. Those rays, though dim, set me to work, as it were, to seek the fullness of the light.

I might here add that my desire was then, and is still, to do all that lies within my power toward the upbuilding of the apostolic faith.

While then I received only the reflections or rays of the light;

now I have the light in its fullness; while then I understood only a part of the truth, now, through obedience to Christ's great law and commandments, the "perfect law of liberty," I have come into the fountain of life, which is "all truth."

Like a child born of the flesh, is nourished upon milk, so, likewise, those born of the Spirit must first be fed upon the "sincere milk of the word."

As yet, I am a young babe in the arms of the Bride. I desire to continue "onward and upward" in this new life, so that I may grow and eventually become a strong and healthy child in the work, and thus prepare myself to receive and retain the "strong meat" which is only ready and fit for those of full age and capability.

And now I desire your prayers, dear Saints, for of myself I am nothing. I feel weak, and sometimes grow discouraged. I want more patience to bear the trials of this life, that I might be able to press onward through the storms and tempests which may come upon me.
MRS. ETHEL A. HICKS.

OMAHA, Nebraska, February 19.

Bro. Joseph: No doubt ere this you have received papers announcing the death of our loved Bro. H. J. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska. Bro. James Galley told me he would send you the particulars. On last Monday I was called to the telephone and requested to attend his funeral on Wednesday, at half past one in the afternoon. Tuesday evening I went up and met Bro. Galley and gave what comfort I could, and preached the sermon over the remains of our aged brother. A large gathering of relatives, i. e., children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren was present, and the services at the Congregational church were impressive. The church was filled, and the best of attention. The Odd Fellows society was out in force. After the services at the church the society took charge and our brother was buried by the rites of the society of which he had been so long a consistent member. The whole community seemed to be in mourning for the loss of so grand a man and citizen. They miss Bro. H. J. Hudson. Sr. Hudson is bearing her loss bravely, a fitting companion for so grand a man. May God abide with her.

I shall attend conference at the Bluffs next week, and after that come home. Have been blessed by the Spirit in my labors.

With kind regards to all, I remain, as ever,

Your brother,

ALEXANDER H. SMITH.

Editors Herald: Since my last letter to the Herald, I have labored at South Scott, the Tarr Schoolhouse, and Flint, Indiana. Bro. Story, priest of Clear Lake Branch, has been with me to assist. He was also visiting the branch members officially. He is an efficient branch officer. Bro. Emrich, branch president, is busy visiting branch members, with Bro. Shaub helping him.

I was called home from Flint on the fourth instant on account of sickness of our son. He was getting better, and I was making arrangements to go back to Flint, when I received two letters from different points requesting me to come and administer to sick ones. I had just telephoned to go to one place when Bro. Shaub brought me word that a telegram was waiting me at home to come to this place and preach funeral of a young lady. Her father said she made her selection of ministers. This is where I occupied the United Brethren church a few times a year ago last fall, and baptized one. Several came to me after the interment and urged me to come to town about two miles away and hold some meetings, which I promised to do. I suppose we will hold some meetings as soon as the weather permits. We are in the midst of a severe blizzard commencing Saturday. I was invited to occupy the Disciple church and accepted. I will wait a few days if the prospects are good; then I want to get back to Flint, Indiana, and visit and encourage every member as much as I can.

I suppose Bro. Peak will visit Clear Lake before General Conference. The Saints were urging Bro. Lake to come there on his way to conference and labor among the Saints and bless all who were ready. I want to be at home when he comes.

May the Saints be able to discern the signs of the times in which we live, is my prayer.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write a few lines. I am young yet, both in years and in this latter-day work; but I love to read the grand letters and testimonies in your columns. I was baptized June 16, 1901, by Bro. James Yates, and I am trying to do right. I go to church nearly every Sunday. One of our neighbor's babies was sick, and they came for mamma and sent for the elders, and the child was healed. I am only twelve years old. This is my first letter for publication.

Your sister,

BESSIE L. WILLIAMS.

DURANGO, Colorado, February 6.

Editors Herald: I came here from Delta the 23d of last month; and after a brief stay I took the stage for Aztec, New Mexico. There I found Bro. E. N. Beach and wife desirous to have the people of that place hear the gospel; so we secured a small school building in the town and held meetings till the crowd, that was small, left us. After that I held one meeting at Bro. Beach's house.

Bro. Beach and I visited the Saints at Flora Vista, but no building could be had, and they did not think any interest could be aroused, so I did not go there to preach. I returned here day before yesterday and began meetings in Bro. Farley's house, as no public building could be secured. Only a few came out, but I hope some good may be done.

Aztec is noted for ruins and many traces of that ancient people who have long since disappeared. But there is one man who might be called an ancient, though not of the Aztec race, still living there. He is nearly one hundred three years old, and in fairly good possession of his faculties. He was born in England in 1800. He became greatly interested in me and the gospel, and told some of the folks there that he would have liked if I could have baptized him: but he is so old, and feeling so poorly, that he could scarcely get out of the house; and the weather was so cold, he did not feel like undertaking it. Mrs. Beach thought some of being baptized, but finally put it off.

While at Aztec I visited a couple of the largest ruins in that section. One building must have had five hundred rooms or more when it was complete. The other was not so large. It may have had three or four hundred rooms. Part of the walls of the larger one are still standing three stories high of at least twelve feet to the story. The fallen walls and the few remaining rooms that are not filled with stone and dirt, form a mound some larger than the building was, and in places as much as eight feet high. The buildings stood in shape of a square, surrounding an open court. South of the court there is a ridge of ruins, possibly of a wall. North of the court was the main part of the building, the larger one had four or five rooms in width and, I think, twenty rooms in length. The wings extended south, probably ten rooms farther and were three or four rooms in width. The buildings were three stories high and probably four. I was in a number of the rooms that are still preserved in the lower story. Owing to the debris, explorers have dug their way in from the top, and hence the idea has obtained that there never were any other entrance to the rooms, but from the top. This is a great mistake. They entered the rooms from the court. All the rooms that I found in either building, that seemed originally to have had any entrance at all (some seem never to have had any till the explorers dug into them) had doorways, like window-holes about two and one half feet from the floors, opening to the next room south.

The outside walls had no openings, but little window holes about twelve by sixteen inches. They were about six feet from the floor and in either corner of each room.

I have written for the Autumn Leaves a full description of of these ruins and have given a drawing that will help the readers to understand how they are.

IOLA, Kansas, February 16.

Editors Herald: As I never see any news in the HERALD from this part of God's field, I thought I would let the readers of this splendid paper know just how badly an elder is needed here. We came here last October and saw our first elder last Saturday evening. Bro. Henry Smart of the Indian Nation, happened, shall I say? No, was directed by a higher power, to come through here. He stayed over Sunday with us, preached Sunday evening to a few Methodists in our house—one skeptic. Bro. Smart gave us a good talk. After services ended, this skeptic and two others remained and talked of this glorious latter-day work, and seemingly wanted to hear more of it. Truly the field here is white, ready to harvest. The laborers are too few for the good of Zion.

How much we isolated Saints enjoyed the talk of this consecrated man, is only known by us and our heavenly Father.

ELIZABETH.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, February 15.

Dear Herald: Our district conference which convened here on the 6th inst., under the supervision of Bro. John Harp, our district president, was quite a success. Others of the missionary force present were Brn. Charley Harp and L. L. Wight. Those of the local ministry were Brn. W. H. Davenport, T. J. Jett, J. P. Neal, and David Parmer. The latter delivered a discourse Sunday night to a large audience, and all seemed greatly pleased with the effort.

On Sunday, at three o'clock in the afternoon, we had one of the best prayer-meetings the writer has ever had the pleasure of attending. Among the testimonies given was one by a boy eleven years old, Orlando North. It was a rebuke to those who use tobacco. I am sorry to say there are some in our branch who use the obnoxious weed, and my daily prayer is that the Lord will give them strength to lay it aside.

Bro. John Harp delivered three discourses, which were both edifying and instructive. Our aged Bro. L. L. Wight delivered one discourse for us. He requested that I write for the benefit of some who might feel interested in regard to his treatment and cure. The brother was apparently blind, caused by a cataract that had grown over the sight. He went to Dallas, Texas, for treatment and remained for about three weeks, and he can now see as well as he ever could, for which he feels very thankful. He left here for Beeville to visit his daughter.

On Wednesday night at Bro. G. Gifford's the Saints met for prayer-meeting, as it was the last night Brn. John and Charley Harp were to be with us. The house was crowded, there not being seats enough to accommodate all. The Lord's Spirit was present and we felt that "it is good to be a Saint in latter-days." Notwithstanding that, we could not help feeling sad, for on the next morning our brethren would leave us. The Saints and friends had learned to love them, and they will indeed be missed from our number. We can truly say that they never ate the bread of idleness. Bro. Charley did a great deal in helping to construct our new church building, and Bro. John did all he could by way of soliciting for the same, as he labored mostly out of the city. We wish the brethren God-speed on their journey, and hope that conference will see fit to return them to this field.

The Saints are thankful they have a neat little church, a home they can call their own. We have organized a Sunday-school, and we have a nice new organ, and Sr. Laura Lasitter is organist. We feel greatly encouraged at the prospect of the work at this place. I ever pray for the speedy redemption of Zion.

RUTH GIFFORD.

Llanelly, South Wales, February 2.

Editors Herald: Another word from Wales may not be out of place, and seeing I have feasted for months past on your ever welcome pages without sending anything, perchance you may find space for my brief letter. I am very much pleased and interested in Bro. Charles Derry's article in HERALD of January 14. I only wish we had it in tract form. It would be the thing to meet the demand in England and Wales where Protestantism and church bigotry reign supreme. The greatest opposition we meet in this land is generally from those who call themselves Christians. Those who have come here to labor all agree this is a hard mission, yet we are in no way discouraged, because we know He who has for the last time started his work, is going to see it through even unto the consummation of all things decreed by the prophets since the world began.

The conference of this district, the Western Wales, is to commence here in Llanelly on Friday and Saturday next, February 6 and 7. Brn. G. T. Griffiths and John Rushton will be here and we hope to have a good time. Brn. William Lewis and F. J. Pierce have done a good, faithful work here for some five months past, but we have not yet seen the outcome of their labor, yet we are willing to leave the results with the Lord of the harvest, even him who sealed the testimony of Noah in days of old.

Lest some may think Wales has six active missionaries, I beg to here say we only have four. Two of these who were duly appointed by the church authorities have not entered the field. Bro. William Lewis' suggestion in late letter is a real good one. I think one missionary home (more if possible) should be established in each country in this land. I will not go into details. Perhaps Bro. Lewis has hit the mark, but I do not think these lands should be despised for a bit any way, as I am persuaded that many, yea, numbers who now help to make America what she is to-day, the freest country under the heavens, emigrated from these shores, and it always interests me to hear the old-time folks, Latter Day Saints and others, tell how the truth won its way in the days gone by. One man was telling me the other day about the trouble existing in Llanelly here when he was a boy, between the Josephites and the Brighamites, and how each one disputed the other's right into the chapel building some fifteen years prior to the Kirtland Temple suit. The court of justices in this case decided that the Josephites are the true and lawful continuation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that the other faction had departed from the faith. I can assure all your readers it was a sad thing for these lands that Brigham ever had charge of the work here or that ever he came here on a mission, as the name of Latter Day Saint through their corrupt practices has been a stench in the nostrils of hundreds of honest souls here for years past.

The church recorder will be glad to know that we hope to get the records of this district right ere long. He states they have been wrong for years, but if Bro. Pierce continues they will not be wrong many more weeks, as he has done a remarkable work in helping to get them right. May God remove all the obstacles that lie in front of his work, is my prayer; and may he qualify his servants here for the work whereunto he has called them.

As Bishop's agent for this district, I am glad to be able to say that the Saints have done fairly well until now in honoring the temporal law, and unto such as have kept his laws in this respect he will ratify his promise and open the windows of heaven and pour them out blessings as he has said.

I will not intrude more on your space at present, but extend heartfelt thanks in behalf of the Llanelly Branch and the missionaries now laboring here for the help we have received financially from various members of the church; and among others, Sr. Martha Woods, of Lamoni, sent five dollars. May peace be with the children of Zion everywhere, is my prayer.

SHALL WE STAND AT HIS COMING?

Music by Mrs. Emma J. H. Kling.

Author of words unknown.

Andante.

1. Shall we stand at his com-ing, his glo-ri-ous com-ing, When the sum-mer is o-ver and the har-vest is past?
 2. When the arch-an-gel's trum-pet shall rend the broad heav-ens, And the mil-lions who slum-ber im-mor-tal a-rise,
 3. When the loud la-men-ta-tion breaks forth from cre-a-tion, That the day of God's wrath and his fu-ry has come,
 4. Then the hope of pos-ses-sion will not be pro-fes-sion, For the lov-er of self will his mo-tives be-hold;

Rit.

When the sheaves of his choos-ing he takes for his us-ing, To that glo-ri-ous king-dom for-ev-er to last?
 Shall we stand with the ho-ly, the meek, and the low-ly, Who in glo-ry tri-um-phiant meet him from the skies?
 Shall we join the sad cho-rus while death hov-ers o'er us, Or in ter-ror un-bound-ed stand trem-bling and dumb?
 On-ly they, who o-bey-ing have strived, toil-ing, pray-ing, Shall then dwell with the Saints in that cit-y of gold.

Report of British Isles Bishopric.

To the Membership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the British Isles; Greeting: We have pleasure in herewith placing before you the first annual statement of our stewardship ending December 31, 1902. At the opening of the year 1901 we had in our possession a balance from the bishop's agents of £346 17s 5d; during the year 1902 we received in tithes and offerings £245 18s 9½d; making a total of £592 13s 2d. Our expenditures have been as follows: To families of missionaries, £254 3s 8d; personal expenditure of missionaries, £118 8s 1d; to poor, £4 4s; expenses of mission conference, £12 16s 7½d; bishopric to postage, traveling expenses, printing, etc., £10 7s 10d; loan for tracts, £10; total expenditure, £406 2½d; balance in hand January 1, 1903, £186 16s, a net decrease on the balance of the previous year of £160 1s 5d. The income of the year bespeaks volumes for the zeal and self-sacrifice of the Saints located in these islands, and proves more than mere words could do the great love you bear in your hearts for God's work as revealed to us in the latter-day message.

The income and expenditure as we present it is exclusive of any amount received privately by missionary laborers, none of which has so far been reported to us. We are not complaining of your liberality in this direction, nor of the brethren receiving, but we believe it to be the duty of the missionary staff, whose families are supported by the bishopric of these islands, to report faithfully to us whatever moneys they may receive from the Saints over and above the legal allowance we pay to their wives and families, according to the instructions of the Presiding Bishop of the church; and we further believe that all moneys sent here from the Presiding Bishop of the church, or any other person in America or elsewhere, in aid of the work here, should be paid through the bishopric here, so that a proper and official account may be kept by the bishopric, who alone are responsible to the church for the conducting of the financial business of the church, in the territory over which they have been appointed to preside.

We have reason to believe that complaints have been made by members of our missionary staff, through one of the missionaries in charge, to the Presiding Bishop of the church, representing that we have refused to refund legitimate expenditure to missionary laborers, when it has been applied for. We should be very glad if such brethren would either personally, or through the missionary in charge, state their grievances to us, before presenting them to the Bishop of the church. Or in the event of such complaints reaching him before they have been placed before us, we should be glad if the Bishop would furnish us with a copy of the complaint made so that we may be able to give such explanation as we consider to be required, before further action is taken. We write thus freely to all concerned without malice or fear, believing that with candor and straightforward dealing we shall be commended to the confidence and respect of each other in all right-doing, thereby advancing the work, and more firmly establishing the church in the hearts and affections of all Saints.

We beg to call your attention to the fact that the financial outlook for the present year is hardly so encouraging as it was at the opening of the year whose close we have so recently noted. If we are to keep pace with current expenditure, we must increase our exertions so that if possible we may renew our supplies.

We therefore appeal to the Saints of the British Isles, one and all, to use every legitimate effort to increase the means at our disposal, so that every requirement may be met promptly, and every obligation honestly fulfilled, the church prospered in this as well as other lands, the pure in heart increased, and Zion be more fully established.

Ever praying that the blessing of God may rest and abide with his church, and people, we remain,

Your servants for Christ's sake,

THOMAS TAYLOR, Bishop.

Second Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: I send to each member of the quorum a blank report. Please fill out and send to me, so that I may get it by March 20, so I can have our quorum report ready for the General Conference. Please do not fail to give heed to the counsel of our president, W. P. Pickering, as given in the HERALD a few weeks ago. F. C. Warnky, secretary, 2422 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

First Quorum of Priests.

Will all members of this quorum kindly send me complete reports for this conference year on the adopted blank, together with their quorum dues at the earliest possible date, so that a general report may be compiled before General Conference. James Christensen, secretary and treasurer, Wood Street, Dallas, Texas.

Convention Notices.

The Nodaway Sunday-school convention will convene with the Bedison Branch, Friday, March 13, at 2 p. m. Schools please take notice and send delegates. Anna Ivie, district superintendent.

Died.

WATSON.—Sr. Ann Watson was born October 6, 1827, at Galgate, Lancaster, England; died October 7, 1902, at her home, 2308 East D and Twenty-third Street, Tacoma, Washington. Her husband, William Watson, preceded her six years. She was the mother of seven children six surviving her, namely: Mrs. Rebecca Smith, Mrs. Annie Knowels, John, George, William, and James, eleven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. She came to America in 1865 or 1866 and shortly after joined the Reorganized Church at Nebraska City, Nebraska. A good loving mother, a kind Christian friend, has passed away firm in the Lord Jesus.

SWEET.—Bro. Richard C. and Sr. Alice L. Sweet were called upon to give up their darling infant son, Rogers, in death, which came to him January 27, 1903, at the home, eight miles from Livermore, California. The precious bud was with them but three weeks and one day. J. M. Terry preached the funeral sermon at the home of the grandmother, Sr. Young, on the 29th.

NUTT.—Sr. Catherine Nutt, wife of Elder Thomas Nutt, died at Spickard, Missouri, January 2, 1903, aged 78 years. She was a sufferer for years, and perfectly helpless for seven years. She leaves an aged husband, two daughters, and several grandchildren to mourn. She joined the church in Nottingham, England, and with her husband started for Utah. Her husband died at Kansas City in 1854. Married Bro. Nutt in Utah in 1856. They became dissatisfied and joined the Reorganized Church, being baptized by James Badham at the Plum Hollow Branch in 1869. She made all arrangements for her funeral, and passed away as if going to sleep.

"MORMONISM" is receiving much attention in the press of to-day. Good will result from the agitation.

RECENTLY we made a call for volumes of Autumn Leaves from volume one to volume thirteen. We have secured most of them, but desire volumes ten to fifteen inclusive. Address Editors HERALD. We prefer unbound volumes.

GEORGE P. FRISBIE AND THE "NAUVOO EXPOSITOR" IN "EVENING AND MORNING STAR."

IMPROPER EVIDENCES NOT PROOF.

Our contemporary religious association at Independence, Missouri, known as the Church of Christ, (sometimes called Hedrickites) has seen fit through its organ, the Evening and Morning Star, to give an airing to the affidavits published in the Nauvoo Expositor of June 7, 1844. This paper was published by Messrs. William Law, Wilson Law, Charles Ivins, Francis M. Higbee, Chauncey L. Higbee, Robert D. Foster, and Charles A. Foster; all of whom had been members of the church, and had dissented and been expelled. These men employed a non-Mormon, by the name of Sylvester Emmons, a lawyer, as editor. In the prospectus provision was made that "the productions of all correspondents being subject to the decision of the editor alone, who shall receive or reject at his option."

There was but the one copy published. The city council declared the establishment to be a "nuisance" and ordered the mayor to abate it. We have lying before us a "reprint" of this one copy, one of an edition published under the direction of Charles A. Hall, who was at the time of its being reprinted the president of the Church of Christ, at Independence, Missouri, but who subsequently left that church and united with the Utah church, where we believe he still remains.

In this paper there are a preamble and resolutions, introduced by the editor in the following manner:

We give place this week to the following preamble, resolutions and affidavits, of the seceders from the church at Nauvoo. The request is complied with on account of their deeming it very important that the public should know the true cause of their dissenting, as all manner of falsehood is spread abroad in relation to the schism in the church. In our subsequent numbers several affidavits will be published to substantiate the facts alleged. Hereafter no further church proceedings will appear in our columns, except in the form of brief communications.—Ed.

The effect of this notice would forestall any defence sought to be made by the church side of the controversy. There is nothing to show by whom the request to so publish was made.

No signatures are attached either to the preamble or the resolutions, and hence no one is made responsible for them before the public.

The third paragraph of the preamble read as follows:

As for our acquaintance with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we know no man or set of men can be more thoroughly acquainted with its rise, its organization, and its history, than we have every reason to believe we are. We all verily believe, and many of us know of a surety that the religion of the Latter Day Saints, as originally taught by Joseph Smith, which is contained in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Covenants, and Book of Mormon, is verily true; and that the pure principles set forth in those books, are the immutable and eternal principles of heaven, and speaks a language which, when spoken in truth and virtue, sinks deep into the heart of every honest man. Its precepts are invigorating, and in every sense of the word, tend to dignify and ennoble man's conceptions of God and his attributes. It speaks a language which is heard amidst the roar of artillery, as well as in the silence of midnight; it speaks a language understood by the incarcerated spirit, as well as he who is unfettered and free; yet to those who will not see, it is dark, mysterious, and secret as the grave.

Elder George P. Frisbie, whose name precedes the introduction of the quotations from the Nauvoo Expositor for June 7, 1844, made in the issue of The Evening and Morning Star, for January, 1903, shows both the animus of his article and his ignorance at the same time. On page 5, middle paragraph he writes:

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some should depart from the faith giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." I want here to say that the very things that was so vigorously opposed by the Nauvoo Expositor are the doctrines of devils, and the very parties that gave heed to them was once in the faith, for none but those that had been in the faith could have departed from it, and in order that you may not misunderstand me, I wish to say that plurality of wives, plurality of gods and baptism for the dead are doctrines of devils and Joseph Smith taught them, why do I say so? The answer is this: the word of God says, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses SHALL every word be established, and herein we have three witnesses who testify that such was the case. Their testimony was subscribed and sworn to before a magistrate, and as you will see all was done right in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, and in his own town.

In his haste to condemn Joseph Smith and maintain the contention of the Church of Christ, to which he belongs, Elder Frisbie makes the affidavits which he has quoted from the Expositor to state that Joseph Smith taught "plurality of wives," "plurality of gods," and "baptism for the dead." Any one who has the Star for January, 1903, who will take the pains to read without prejudice toward the memory of Joseph Smith, will discover that neither of the three witnesses makes any statement in regard to plurality of gods, or baptism for the dead. And neither makes an affirmation that Joseph Smith taught them or anybody else the dogma of plurality of wives. Neither of the "three witnesses" to whom Elder Frisbie refers as filling the "word of the Lord," makes any statement in those affidavits that Joseph Smith at any time ever said a word to them, or in their hearing in regard to either of the three doctrines which he so strenuously denounces as "doctrines of devils." Even whatever there is in either of the affidavits in which the name of Joseph Smith is mentioned is entirely hearsay.

Neither Elder Frisbie nor any other has either the right or the power to identify the men who were the actors in the scene and responsible for the resolutions following the preamble from these documents, or what appears in the Expositor. The three persons making the affidavits, are not connected with the preamble and resolutions. Their names do not appear attached to them. In both the original and the reprint of the Expositor there is the usual printer's dash rule between them and the notice following, which shows a separation. This Elder Frisbie failed to notice, and hence he has made the witnesses to testify to the things asserted in the preamble and the resolutions, and that by implication only.

Those who wrote and adopted the preamble and resolutions affirmed in them only their opinions and beliefs. We neither find fault with, approve, nor condemn them. Doubtless the men believed that the things affirmed by them as good, were worth believing; and that the things disapproved in them were bad. At this late date we neither rail at them nor bow to them, nor do we by any means accept those affirmations in proof of wrong-doing on the part of Joseph Smith.

The principle affirmed in the fifth resolution, we commend and apply to the case in point:

Resolved, fifth, That while we disapprove malicious persecutions and prosecutions, we hold that all church members are alike amenable to the laws of the land; and that we further discountenance any chicanery to screen them from the just demands of the same.

If Joseph Smith was guilty of the bad things which are hinted at and alleged in the Expositor, why did not those who were seceding from the church because of those things prosecute him in regular course of the law, and be contented with the results of such prosecution, if they knew of his guilt. In the Expositor, on third page, is a notice of some of the proceedings pending in the circuit court of Hancock County, in the May term for 1844; among them were the following: On the civil docket, A. Sympton vs. J. Smith, for false imprisonment, change of venue to Adams County; F. M. Higbee vs. Joseph Smith, for slander, C. A. Foster vs. Joseph Smith and J. W. Cooledge, for false imprisonment, and A. Davis vs. Joseph Smith and J. P. Green for trespass, were transferred to McDonough County. Two charges against Joseph Smith, on the criminal docket, one for perjury and one for fornication and adultery. Joseph Smith delivered himself up on the first charge and demanded trial; but the State, i. e., the prosecution, was not ready and the case was continued to the October term for 1844.

Whatever there may have been in these charges, the first four being civil suits for damages for some alleged acts of Joseph Smith, possibly in his official character as mayor of Nauvoo, as in one case J. P. Green, who was city marshal, is named with him as a codefendant; the other two charges were for criminality. The first and fourth were by change of venue removed to the counties of Adams and McDonough respectively for trial, the latter charges were pending before the court at the May term for 1844, and Joseph Smith was demanding trial. Thomas Gregg, on page 239 of his work "The Prophet of Palmyra," wrote of these charges that one was "for adultery and one for perjury;" the Expositor differs from this. Gregg is likely correct and adds, "To the surprise of all, on the Monday following these presentments, the Prophet appears in court and demanded trial on the last named indictment."

This trial was never accorded to Joseph Smith. Nor was he suffered to face his accusers before the judges of the courts of the State. These charges were never heard in court and Joseph Smith permitted to answer them. He was ready, his prosecutors were not. He had made arrangements to answer to the civil suits by taking change of venue from Hancock to Adams and McDonough Counties. Had he been permitted to live the results of the trials would have been known. The trials for the criminal charges were deferred to the October term of court, but by an act of lawlessness, men who declared "the law will not reach him, but powder and ball will," presented themselves and took for the accused man and his brother a change of venue to a court before which no man will be permitted to swear falsely, or charge another with guilt, except on proper and sufficient proof.

Neither Elder Frisbie nor any other man has the right to pronounce judgment upon Joseph Smith on the charges made in those civil suits and criminal cases, and declare him guilty of the crimes and misdemeanors therein named. Had Joseph Smith been permitted to meet his accusers in the courts before the judges whose duty it would have been to see that the defendants in the civil suits and the accused in the criminal cases had a fair and impartial hearing, the result would have been that the guilt or innocence of Joseph Smith would have been made to appear. In the entire absence of the evidence that a trial might have developed, it is contrary to all rules of justice, equity, and fair dealing to assume that Joseph Smith was guilty, as the presumption in law, and the common dictates of human prudence and safety is that every man is innocent until he is proved to be guilty. This common and well-known rule of jurisprudence debars Elder G. P. Frisbie and others like him who may think it to be to their spiritual interest to adjudge Joseph Smith guilty of crime or wrongful teaching upon the evidence they seek to find in the Nauvoo Expositor from doing so unjust an act.

The dissenting church members who were the ones who adopted the resolutions failed to heed the principles of resolution five, in that while they decried malicious prosecution claiming that all should be amenable to the law, assailed others for wrong-doing and did not proceed to prosecute in the courts. It is not to be believed that Joseph and Hyrum Smith could not have been made to answer to charges of wrong-doing and crime by due process of law. It is not true that the State was not strong enough to enforce its statutes, had men been willing to appeal to them. It is not true that Joseph Smith held himself to be above the law. The fact that he was in the custody of the officers of the law, including the Governor of the State, is proof positive that he held himself amenable to the law. Had these dissenters prosecuted him and his brother in accordance with resolution five, their attitude would have been more consistent.

To show the value of the Expositor we quote from a statement made by Mr. Andrew Jensen, a sort of historian of the Utah church, and his associate ministers Edward Stevenson and Joseph S. Black:

Mr. Sharp was kind enough to show us a bound volume of the Warsaw Signal for 1844, and by looking over the file we soon found that extra number issued in June, 1844, in which the editor called upon the old citizens of Hancock County to exterminate the "Mormons." The readers of the News will remember that it was this article which was read to the Saints in Nauvoo, June 18, 1844, on the occasion when Joseph delivered his last public address, speaking to the Nauvoo Legion from the frame of an unfinished building.

Bound together with the Signal was a copy of the Nauvoo Expositor, that infamous sheet which was published by the apostates in Nauvoo, June 7, 1844, and which three days later was declared a nuisance by the city council and abated as such. We had long desired to peruse a copy, but never saw one until to-day, when we were permitted to see the one in Mr. Sharp's possession. After reading some of its filthy contents, we could not blame our friends who sat in the Nauvoo city council for doing what they did. It was indeed a nuisance. But nasty as the sheet was, it nevertheless contains something which now can be used for altogether a different purpose to that which was originally intended.—Supplement to the Historical Record, 1889, page 58.

The "use" to which Mr. Andrew Jensen proposed to put the "infamous sheet" was to show that Joseph Smith gave "the revelation on the eternity of the marriage covenant, including the plurality of wives," which was published to the church in Utah, August 29, 1852. He would resort to the testimony of a "sheet" so "infamous" that after reading some of its "filthy contents," he has no blame for those who ordered it abated as a nuisance; a sheet published by avowed "dissenters," whom he calls "apostates," and for whom Utah Mormons have never used other than condemnatory epithets since President Young assumed control. The men who furnished the means to start the Expositor, all opposing one-man power, put at the head of their publication as editor, a man who was not a member of the church and was an avowed enemy to Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and made this man Sylvester Emmons, the sole judge of what should be received and published or be rejected. The "apostates" called so by Mr. Jensen, were very strongly opposed to the one-man power in the person of Joseph Smith, over whose conduct they, as members, had by the church constitution and rules of government a remedial appeal and control, if he transcended proper bounds; but very willingly put "one-man power" into the hands of a man who was not a church member, and who held no religious convictions in common with the sentiments expressed in the resolutions said to have been adopted by those "dissenters." Further than this, due notice was given that after that one issue "no further church proceedings" would appear in the columns "except in the form of brief communications," of which the editor was the sole judge as to whether they should go into the paper or not. Had the editor been one of the dissenting brethren, perhaps no complaint would lie against his having such excluding power, but being an outsider and an avowed opposer for political reasons, it was inconsistent.

This "infamous sheet" was revived and reprinted by Elder Charles A. Hall while he was the acting president of the "Church of Christ," for the selfsame end for which Mr. Jensen proposed that it could be used. This Elder Charles A. Hall undertook to bolster this "infamous sheet" by making an appeal to the testimony of witnesses put on the stand for him in Utah by the authorities of the church there. But their evidence proved to be inconclusive when viewed by the court and failed of its intended effect. And now Elder G. P. Frisbie comes to the front with the same "infamous sheet," and "nasty as the sheet was" when looked at by Mr. Jensen, of Utah, Mr. Frisbie attempts to use it for the same purpose for which his whilom brother and president reprinted it, and either ignorantly or viciously states that it testifies to things not to be found in it from persons to be identified as responsible for them, and alleges that the witnesses testify under oath to things that are not so much as hinted at by them in that same Nauvoo Expositor.

"WAS A DOWIE SUBJECT."

On reading Bro. Barmore's short article concerning Dowie, which appeared in a recent number of the HERALD, Bro. W. E. Messenger recalled a letter which appeared in the Adams County Free Press, of Corning, Iowa, issue for November 22, 1902. He sent us the clipping, which is as follows:

WAS A DOWIE SUBJECT.

CORNING, Iowa, November 8, 1902.

Editor Free Press: When we returned to Corning last spring I was asked to write an article for your paper, something about my experience with Mr. Dowie and his organization. I did not feel clear then to write anything and have not till within the last month. I write now in the fear of God and to glorify his name. I would not like to go through with what I have, but if I had to, to learn what I have I would say "amen" to all the will of God. (Romans 8: 28.)

I believe Mr. Dowie was a man called of God to work for him, but he began to go wrong when he started his religious organization; then the founding of that city with his worldly lace factory. The Devil has two ways to deceive people—one is keeping them back from doing God's work, the other in running ahead and doing more than God ever ordered. I think Mr. Dowie is deceived in the latter. I could tell facts and prove the work was of God, then again I could tell facts and prove the work was of the Devil. I excused and looked over till I could no longer. I was so surprised when I went to Zion City, Illinois, to find so much going on there that was ungodly, and felt then Mr. Dowie was ignorant of it all, but I found out better by the first of December. A difference arose there among us on the doctrine of social purity more than anything else, and Mr. Dowie and some of his leaders acted very unscriptural and unchristianlike about it which put me to deep thinking.

The doctrine of social purity is as dear to me as that on divine healing. I did say "amen" from the depths of my heart to all of Mr. Fuller's articles in the press last winter, but the divorce question is only a part of purity. The word of God and his Holy Spirit are our guides. (Psalms 119: 105; and John 14: 27.) I have not discarded any of the word, but have accepted more of it. I confess I had been deceived by wrong spirits and false interpretations of the Scripture. I pray for Mr. Dowie and his followers for they are deceived by the enemy.

There are many good people among them as there are in all organizations. I feel their hearts are right while their heads are wrong. Mr. Dowie never invented the doctrine of divine healing, for it is as old as the Bible, and he has no "corner" on it either. There are many humble servants of God, preaching the doctrine, and God is confirming the word with signs following. (Matthew 16: 20.)

Some five or six years ago God let enough light on my heart of what his church was, and also enough of sectism, but three years ago last spring I was persuaded by a "Zion" elder, (who since left for about the same reason I did) that Mr. Dowie's organization was not a sect. When I began to think seriously and read earnestly I saw I had sinned against light by going in with them. I also saw that Mr. Dowie's claims were all unscriptural. I saw also in Matthew 24: 24 and Revelation 13 what I never saw before. There is a professed Elijah located at Shiloh, Maine, doing just as great things as Mr. Dowie is. Surely they can not both be right.

Some ignorant people have classed the "Zion" people with the Christian Science. They are no more alike than Christian Science and Spiritualism. They are not the only deception either. I have just as much fellowship now with the "Zion" organization as any other. I believe God is calling his people out into the one body of which Christ is the head. Ephesians 1: 22, 23. Our Savior's prayer in John 17 is so clear, besides many more. Ever since my conversion I have seen the light on restitution, and have, by God's grace, made restitution as far as I could. But during the last few months I have seen sin as I never saw it before, and I see also in God as I never saw before. I have in the past dealt with some people, I fear, not in love and wisdom, and felt a bitterness in my heart towards some who had not treated me right, have permitted people to come to me and tell what others said about me, and discussed people's faults and sins behind their back, which any one living in the attitude of the fifteenth Psalm can not do. Any one reading this and I have acted towards in the above manner I ask to forgive me. Since my conversion I have given more than one tenth and often wished for more to give, but now I see the most good I can do is to live a pure and holy life, by God's grace. God has been very good to me and given me everything I ever asked in faith and I am now leaning on him more than I ever did. I have held up for Mr. Dowie sometimes when I should not. There has been many false reports of him from time to time, but many things that are true have been kept back.

Yours for truth and righteousness,
SUSIE McCOLLUM.

"COLUMBUS TELEGRAM" ON A. H. SMITH.

In the Columbus Telegram for February 20, there appeared the following:

Time is a marvelous physician. It can heal the passions of men and make them give way to sentiments of charity and good sense. This was nicely illustrated in this city last Wednesday, when the pulpit of the Congregational Church was vacated by the regular pastor, who gave it in charge of an elder of the Latter Day Saint denomination, a sect which only a little while ago was considered part and parcel of the Mormon church, but which utterly repudiates many of the doctrines of the orthodox Mormons in Utah. Fifty years ago the Mormons were considered so wicked by other grades of Christians that many of that sect fell martyrs to their faith. If any one in the congregation which attended the funeral service at this church last Wednesday in honor of the late Judge Hudson anticipated that aught would be said or done offensive to Gentile eyes or ears, they were doomed to disappointment. The speaker, Elder Smith, a relative of the Mormon martyr, is a scholarly gentleman. He pleaded the cause of Christianity like a true evangelist, pleading always for Christ, and never for creed. He left a good impression upon his hearers, and many compliments were bestowed upon him as man and as minister.

REMEDY FOR LEPROSY.

Robert W. McWade, United States Consul at Canton, China, reports that Doctor Adolf Razlog, a citizen of the United States, has successfully treated three out of four cases of leprosy from a village some six miles east of Canton. The fourth case was far gone and will not be successful though still under observation. We hope this is correct and the remedy become universal.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

"The church is losing ground spiritually on account of seeking to defend it against the world scientifically." "A man may as well be physically dead as to be spiritually dead." Are the foregoing statements scriptural?

If they are we do not know where the texts are to be found. We think it likely they are the deductions drawn and stated by some speaker or writer on the subject of spiritual life.

WORDS OF PRAISE FOR BRO. H. J. HUDSON.

The following concerning the death of Bro. H. J. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska, appeared in the Telegram, of that city, February 20, and is an evidence of the high esteem in which our worthy brother was held:

THE PASSING OF A PIONEER.

In the death of Honorable Henry J. Hudson the state of Nebraska loses one of the pioneer settlers. He came to this trackless plain in a day when the ability of the white man to exist here was yet an experiment. He knew and was known by practically every family among the pioneers. He came with determination to make this new land his home, and to do his full share to brighten and to bless the lives of his fellow pioneers. And he did well his part. He had every opportunity to become a man of wealth, and yet he never rose above what would be termed comfortable circumstances because he never had ambition in the direction of riches. He was more than an ordinary man in many respects. In the early days he acquired the confidence and respect of the settlers, and he so lived as to retain that confidence on to the end of his earth life. His best gifts were a splendid optimism, cheering personality, a generosity limited only by his purse, a hospitality which made his home a mecca for those who needed a helping hand, in a material or a spiritual sense. He leaves as heritage to the State he loved and helped so much to build an honored name. To his children, all of whom are credit to the circles where they move, he leaves a life-record to which they may point with pride through all the years.

DOWIE INDIGNANT.

John Alexander Dowie, in a diatribe published in his paper, Leaves of Healing, waxed quite indignant over somebody's classing him and his work with Mormonism. The attack is from Doctor Buckley and is seen from the following:

A WICKED CLASSING OF ZION WITH MORMONISM.

"The cry is raised in alarm about the spread and growth of Mormonism, Dowieism, and other forms of delusion and superstitions. These spread and thrive because the genuine religious life of our people is so vague and unspiritual."

What right had Doctor Buckley to reprint an attack upon the Christian Catholic Church in Zion and class it with Mormonism?

Have I ever advocated Mormonism?

Audience.—"No."

General Overseer.—Has that ever been permitted in any form?

Audience.—"No."

General Overseer.—Why does he dare to attempt to dishonor me by speaking of me in association with that thing?

Because he is letting Satan make him mean, wicked, and sinful.

If there is only one family out of ten in the Methodist body that has family worship, there is not known to be one family in Zion that does not have family worship.

Therefore the Christian Catholic Church in Zion stands nine times better than the Methodist Church.

Yet he has the audacity to insult us by speaking of us as a "delusion" or a "superstition."

I desire to say, in closing, that I take no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but if Doctor Thompson is not in a literary sense "utterly dead" I do not know where you will find one who is.

That bitter little whip Doctor Buckley is alive yet; but he is a living incarnation of anti-Christian meanness and shameful wickedness.—Leaves of Healing, February 14.

If Mr. Dowie could realize as do those whom he attacks in his senseless rage against everything not conformable to his way of thinking, he would not be so boisterously indignant because Doctor Buckley chose to compare him and his procedure to Mormonism. Doctor Buckley is a Methodist, a conservative follower of the theories of John Wesley as now held in the popular Methodist Church. This church with others has come in for a portion of the liberal abuse by Mr. Dowie as general overseer of the "Christian Catholic Church" and as Elijah II, and it is but natural that Doctor Buckley in defense of his own particular faith and people should meet Mr. Dowie on some of his own grounds; though it would appear that Doctor Buckley only presented what Doctor

Thompson had already written about the modern Elijah.

While we can not see any very marked likeness between the work of Doctor Dowie and Mormonism in any form, we can easily see how men like Doctors Thompson and Buckley in the peculiar spirit of the saying "Stand aside, I am holier than thou art," should classify Doctor Dowie with what they have misconceived concerning Mormons and the Mormons so-called.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

On February 16, G. C. Tomlinson wrote from Kimball, Ontario: "I am holding forth to very attentive audiences at a place called Ladysmith, a new opening. Bro. Phalen Shaw, a very noble brother, drives me out, and although the roads have been almost impassable, a good gathering of smiling faces greets us every night, and we are hopeful of good being done."

Under date of January 19, in a letter to Bishop Kelley, D. E. Tucker wrote from Dunedin, New Zealand: "The weather has been so unfavorable we have done but little preaching, though we spoke twice on the streets in the city of Invercargill, the southern-most city in the world; of some thirteen thousand inhabitants. We also spoke on the street one night in the town of Gore, three thousand inhabitants; thrice in Matauri, four or five hundred inhabitants. Nearly all our preaching will be on the street. The country is sparsely settled, and nearly all the towns and cities are on the coast, and there is so much rain along the coast it prevents us from holding meetings often. And another thing, we go into a town or city and are compelled to pay board and lodging till we can make some friends. We are willing to sacrifice upon our part all we can. I am willing to live on one shilling per day; that gives us two meals per day in some places, and some places one meal. But I am willing to live on that in order to get the gospel before the people. It is one shilling for a bed in most places; but we have rented a room in Dunedin, for six shillings per week. The Saints at Kaitangata have done well, but they are all poor. Now what we want is a suitable tract in pamphlet or book form. We would also like to have some Chinese tracts. I attended their meeting last night and the speaker gave me the privilege of speaking when he was through. Then he interpreted my speech for them. If we had some Chinese tracts we might be able to reach some of them occasionally."

W. A. Smith wrote from Mondamin, Iowa, February 12: "I am at Sandy Point. Have held meetings since last Sunday night, with good interest and good attendance. I was called upon last Tuesday to preach the sermon at the funeral of Bro. Amos Vredenburg, at Pisgah. He was respected by all who knew him."

Sr. Christina Rasmussen wrote from Weston, Iowa, February 14, that Bro. F. E. Cohrt had been holding meetings there, and that he had encouraged the Saints and done much good. She writes: "God is blessing our little branch here, and if the Saints will do their duty others will be added to our number." She also wrote of a dream which impressed her with the necessity of the Saints being prayful before God.

Sr. Jennie A. Holt, Painesville, Ohio, February 23: "I realize as I never have before that we ought to help one another, and there is surely something each can do, be it ever so little. I mean to try not to leave undone the littles I can do. I feel so encouraged and would so love to help encourage others, but I feel unable to express myself as I would like. May we each realize the day and age in which we are permitted to live."

Srs. Alice and Abigail Hills, of Palermo, New York, recently remitted money to apply on college debt, and wrote: "Feeling that the strength of the church in the future depends on the education of the youth to-day, we wish to do all in our power to help on the good and just cause. There is hardly any branch of the church work that is doing more in the present time in fitting and preparing young people for the active duties of life in the church and world than that of Graceland College."

H. R. Harder wrote from Redfork, Indian Territory, February 17: "I go from here south for a few days. Just closed a series of meetings which lasted eight days. Eleven were baptized, three children blessed, and the sick administered to. There are twenty-one members here now unorganized."

Sr. Ann Johnson, of Little Sioux, Iowa, wrote on February 19: "Will you please inquire through the Herald if any one can give a receipt for curing cancer? It will greatly oblige an aged sister who is suffering from one."

W. S. Pender wrote from Fanning, Kansas, February 28: "William Gurwell died this morning at eighteen minutes past seven. Funeral Sunday, sermon by I. N. White."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

T. J. Bell reports three baptisms at Irwin, Illinois. Many more believing.

As per item in last week's HERALD, the Athenian Literary Society has taken steps to have their publication, the Athenian Arena, make its first appearance about March 15. It will be literary in character, will be printed on heavy book paper, illustrated by half-tones, and will have twenty-four pages, about the size of Autumn Leaves. Julian Butterworth is editor-in-chief, and John Garver business manager. It will sell for ten cents per copy, or fifty cents for the school year and we trust it will be well supported. Those interested in Graceland and its development will find the new publication of great interest, as it will be filled with things of interest connected with Graceland College, and will contain some good pictures of the building, outside and in, also portraits of those connected with the college.

Mrs. E. Elston, 312 Velasco Street, Houston, Texas, writes, February 22, that she is living with her daughter and invites the elders to call on her.

We acknowledge the receipt of an exceptionally neat calendar from the "Equitable Life Insurance Society," of 120 Broadway, New York. It is composed of six large pages, each page illustrating a phase of the history of our loved "Stars and Stripes."

Bro. Henry C. Danielson, of Lamoni, now a student in the civil engineering course at the State University of Iowa, has been honored by his class by being elected business manager of the "S. U. I. Hawkeye," an annual published by the junior class. Bro. Danielson is also an assistant editor on the Transit an engineering magazine published by the engineering department.

By a copy of the Gate City, of Keokuk, for February 18, we note that Bro. Elvin was holding services there then.

Cryus J. Peters had a letter in the St. Charles Hawkeye, St. Charles, Iowa, February 19, in which he sets forth some of our beliefs.

On February 27 Lee Quick wrote from Wellsford, Kansas, that he had just closed a series of meetings. Good attendance throughout, and four baptisms as a result. Others well interested. He says there is a good, active little band of Saints there.

By printed invitation and program sent us we note that on February 22 Bro. T. W. Williams delivered an address in Brent's Hall, Los Angeles, on the subject, "Fundamental Philosophy and History of the Latter Day Saints." It was under the auspices of the "Liberal Club."

Bro. C. F. Riley, of 206 Broadway, Council Bluffs, Iowa, has sent us a portrait of Patriarch A. H. Smith. It is one of the finest photographs of our Patriarch we have ever seen. Bro. Riley's work as a photographer is certainly very excellent. Thanks for the remembrance, Bro. Riley.

William Chapman writes from Higbee, Missouri, that the conference held there February 14 and 15, though the attendance was small because of the storm, was a very peaceful one.

President Joseph Smith has been confined to his home part of last week and the fore part of this, suffering from an attack of la grippe. At present writing he is improving. It is hoped that he will be able take up his office duties as usual in a few days.

Sunday was a day much enjoyed by the worshipers in Lamoni. The preaching services morning and evening were good and well attended, while the auditorium was filled at the afternoon sacrament services.

POINTS AND PITHS.

Pearson's Magazine for March, 1903, contains the following analysis of coffee: "Coffee contains eight thousandths of caffeine (M. Payen's analysis, accepted as standard). Twelve grains of caffeine is a fatal dose (medical authorities). A grain is one seven thousandths of a pound, avoirdupois, (Webster's Dictionary). In ten pounds of coffee there are eight hundredths pounds or five hundred sixty grains of caffeine. Divided by twelve this equals more than forty-six fatal doses of this deadly drug."

The St. Mary's Journal, Ontario, in a number for January last, contains an account of a find in Syria, to which time may yet attach considerable importance. It is a manuscript comprising the Pentateuch and bearing date of 735 A. D. "The newly discovered manuscript contains immediately after the decalogue a passage of about fifteen lines that does not exist in the Authorized Version. It is claimed that this passage is likely to clear up several long disputed points."

A late number of the Progressive Thinker (Spiritualist) contains purported letters from Frances Willard and Henry Ward Beecher. It is scarcely admissible that mediums have the power to call back the departed who have passed away and been assigned a place by the Lord, but it is too late all the same to deny that intercourse is had with moving spirit intelligences, who may not only give information respecting the departed but may impersonate them sometimes. The testimonies are overwhelming. No judicious mind who keeps abreast the times can longer deny that there are things wrought and performed by spiritualistic mediums beyond the power of mortality in the flesh. It has its honest devotees as well as all other religions. If it is a fraud, it is a reality nevertheless. It doubtless comes in fulfillment of certain prophecies, and my conviction is that it has a mission to perform, that is far from being mature, if not in its infancy. In the city of Hamilton, Ontario, I met a very intelligent spiritualist in friendly conversation. He holds in his possession certain paintings and a photograph professed to have been the production of spirit entities. He says that he had shown the paintings to various artists of accomplished skill and they told him that neither they nor any artists they knew were equal to the work. I did not get this information from him personally, but he gave it to Elder Mortimer, who had an interview with him at another time. He said he had looked the canvass out of all human reach. He visited it occasionally and saw each time a little more of the figures which finally developed into shape and a mysterious completeness. It will not do to say these are all pretenses simply because some cases have been discovered to be such. Pretenses have been known to take place among the Latter Day Saints. Tongues have been given, superinduced, which were neither of God nor of the Devil. That does not prove that all tongues are so given. There are sights, experiences, visitations going on in this work behind the scenes of the world that are unknown to them. The most remarkable occurrences are passing unnoticed by them, but that detracts not an iota from their reality. And I tell you, behind the scenes of the stage of spiritualism is something going on not to be disposed of with a sneer; something which may yet draw out with its receding tide the minor sects of Christendom and carry them afloat into the dark waters of infernal wonders, of anti-Christ. Let us watch the progress of spiritualism; it may be our last and worst enemy.

I would advise any of the brethren who have anything to do with Clark Braden to supply themselves with "Kind of a man Braden is," by B. F. Underwood. It can be procured by sending fifteen cents to the Truthseeker Company, 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Jesus said that neither he nor the angels knew the day or the hour of his second coming, neither any man. On more than one occasion I have heard the statement made that while former-day saints did not know the time of his coming, Latter Day Saints may; that they will know the year if not even the day. Doctrine and Covenants 49:2 will hardly permit of this, for it says, "But the hour and the day no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven, nor shall they know until he comes."

Those who accept modern revelation need have no doubt on the subject of those who arose about the time of Christ's resurrection. I have heard it asserted that they arose to mortality like Lazarus and others. The Doctrine and Covenants will not permit this, for it says they "arose and were crowned at the right hand of the Son of Man."—Section 36:11. And in 108:10 it is made very plain that the parties who had part in that resurrection were those who were worthy of it from the creation down to that time.

Book of Mormon, page 416, informs us that there was also a resurrection of "many of their dead" on this land at the time of that great catastrophe described in the fourth chapter of Nephi.

Some who must be ignorant of what the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants say on the subject will insist that Judas will not be saved. Doctrine and Covenants 28:3 says that "mine apostles, the twelve which were with me in my ministry at Jerusalem, shall stand at my right hand, at the day of my coming . . . to judge the whole house of Israel." Judas was as much one of that twelve as John or any other. In Book of Mormon, pages 22 and 487, we find again that the first twelve whom he chose at Jerusalem are to judge the twelve tribes; that the first twelve in this land are to be judged by them, and that they in turn are to judge all the Israelites who came out here. Thus the Lamanites and Nephites will be judged by the twelve whom Jesus chose in the land Bountiful, which twelve will be judged by the twelve of Jerusalem, including Judas, which twelve will have the judging of the twelve tribes.

Brethren, has it occurred to you what book is meant in Revelation 20:12 where we read that "another book was opened, which is the 'book of life?'" It says previously "the books were opened." In Doctrine and Covenants 110:6,7 we have this explained, that the "books," first, and "book of life," second, refers respectively to the records to be kept of the baptisms for the dead. The "books" has reference to the records kept on earth; the "book of life" has reference to the record kept in heaven.

Doctrine and Covenants 36:4 informs us that the curse with which Cain was smitten was a curse of blackness, although the Authorized Version nowhere says so.

"ARE WE IN EARNEST?"

Some may think this is a strange question, but how will many of us answer it?

When we observe the interest people take in their business, get up early and work late, we are not surprised but rather expect it, if any one desires to make a success of business. Yet when we see a member of the church, who apparently is just as conscientious regarding his Christian duties, many are struck with astonishment and say, "Oh, I do not think it is necessary to spend so much time with church work, do not think the Lord requires it, as we surely need some rest." We read, "Variation of work is recreation," so our Christian duties should be a pleasant change from the six days of routine.

Some of us will be at the office or store on time six days in the week, and endeavor to please our employer in every possible way. Why? Not altogether because we want to earn a good salary, but to make improvement, and have a good reputation in the vocation we have chosen. If something should occur to cause us to change our positions, we would not desire our employer to be compelled to stretch the truth in order to give us a fair recommend; no, we would blush for shame at that.

Possibly some are in business for themselves. Would we permit our store or office to remain closed one day out of the six because there was a terrible storm raging, we had company at home, or some member of the family was not in good spirits and needed our company? Why, we would scoff at such a business man, and our verdict would be, "He will not stay in business long, as his customers can not depend upon him; sometimes when they want goods his store is closed."

How many think this is a good comparison to our Christian duties? Do you think any of the above excuses should be sufficient to keep us away from Sunday-school or other services? Yet how often have the officers been approached with just such excuses, and even more flimsy than those?

There is one branch in America with a resident membership of over two hundred, and yet sometimes when the weather is disagreeable, twelve and fourteen have attended prayer-meeting. How many earnest workers would you think there were at that place? Of course we realize that some are old people and not able to get out in stormy weather; some have to work in the evening frequently, and some have to take care of the children at home, and if we have another excuse which we can conscientiously give to our Lord and Master, all well and good; but if we have not, are we earnest workers? What if we do work hard all day, has not the Lord commanded us to "meet together often," and has given the assurance that "his strength is made perfect in weakness"?

How many of us, if there is a wedding, something out of the ordinary, have special meetings, a new preacher, or conference is in session, can be there bright and early, and make our visitors believe our hearts and souls are in the work? But when some local man occupies the stand, and we know it, one that we would rather not hear preach, we think, "Oh, well, I believe I will not go to services this morning, they will not be entertaining, and very few will be there." Possibly there is a little work you would like to do about the house if a lady, or there is an interesting book you would like to peruse, not a church publication, and you like many others stay at home. What is the result? Part of the choir absent, and very many empty seats for the minister to look at, for there are others who are "fair-weather" Christians like you. Should a stranger unfortunately drop in, he must wonder, "Is this church almost dead? I thought many people worshiped here."

If we are earnest Saints we should always rally to the support of the inexperienced ministers, as they are the ones who need our prayers more than the others. We should always endeavor to do our duty, come what may, or we may be lacking the reward at the end of the race.

How many homes are there all over this land of ours, where tea and coffee are always found, possibly fifty cents or more are expended per month, and yet they are too poor to take the church papers, their names never appear on the tithing list, and sometimes not more than twice a year on the branch treasurer's report. Let us examine ourselves to ascertain whether we are in the faith or not. Some of us may belong to a class that the busy bee would name "drones."

How many of our young ladies, and older ones too, must have a hat that costs from five to ten dollars, to wear in the proper season, yet never consider it their duty to pay their tithing or assist in the expenses of the branch, or if they should help a little, the amount looks so small compared to the cost of apparel? Remember, what does the good book say about our adornment? Let us be prayerful and thankful, that we have the privilege of belonging to a church, whom God deigns to recognize, and our hearts are caused to rejoice many times because of his goodness. Are we really earnest Christians or just have our names on the church roll to make people believe we are a great deal better than we are?

Think what the Saints in early days were willing to suffer for the cause of Christ, and how they were blessed also? Why are so many sick and discouraged among our number? Is it because we are not living as the Lord has given instruction? Many times can we not trace our miserable feeling to some careless act of our own, we did not pray enough to have the Lord's Spirit to guide us in the way of righteousness?

There should not be the constant calls for money from every source, and why is it? The answer comes, many of the Saints are not earnest, they think so much more of their precious selves than the Lord's work, and consequently their purse-strings are closed tight, when the representatives of the church call on them for money. Part of it rightfully belongs to the Lord, and are we thieves (that is a terrible word to apply to people who call themselves Christians) to want to keep his portion? Let us each one answer.

We notice by observation of events that so many of our young people marry out of the church. Whom do we love the most, the Lord or the one we marry? In the majority of cases the Lord's work suffers, and the participants pass through severe trials, yet there are many who will not heed the admonition, and they are brought to feel what they would not see. "Experience is a bitter school, but fools will learn in no other;" and how many of the Latter Day Saints are members of this school for an unusually long time?

When we see the wickedness of the world and the hypocrisy of the churches who are "fighting the Mormons," how willing we should be "to lay aside every weight which doth so easily beset us" and "put on the whole armor of God." "Stand firm, quit ye like men, be strong."

I pray for all honest mortals, and have best wishes for all Saints.

A CONTROVERSY OVER THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

Reference was made in our pages last week to a conflict between the Reverend Doctor Lyman Abbott and the evangelical Christians. An even more vital controversy, involving the very central facts of Christianity, was precipitated on Christmas Day by the Reverend Doctor Minot J. Savage, and has been raging ever since. During the course of his Christmas sermon in New York Doctor Savage declared:

"There is no reason in the New Testament, or in the early church history, for the belief that Jesus was God. I believe, and I assure you that all the best, the unbiased scholarship of the world is back of this statement, that Jesus was born in Nazereth, that his father was Joseph and his mother Mary, about the year 4 B. C. The month, the date of the month, nobody knows. There is not time now for me to explain how it happened that the 25th of December was decided upon, but it was decided upon after much controversy and was not generally accepted throughout the church until sometime in the fourth century.

"I believe that Jesus was man; I believe in the divinity of man; I believe in the humanity of God; I do not believe that there is any gulf of separation between the divine nature and ours that needs to be bridged by any unnatural and stupendous miracle. The doctrine of the deity of Jesus is part of a scheme the characteristics of which are pessimism, disaster, despair. It is part of a scheme of theology that begins with the Fall of Man, the curse of God, and ends in the eternal loss and woe of the immense majority of the race.

"Why should we go back and burden ourselves with the discredited horrors of the ages of the world's ignorance and barbarism? We know now—it is no question of dogmatic statement—that there has never been any fall of man, and that there is no need in the nature of things for any such thing as the coming of God into the world by unnatural methods to deliver man from a condition which does not exist."

These sentiments, which are, of course, in harmony with the tenets of the Unitarian Church, were reported in the New York Sun, and have evoked quite a flood of correspondence from readers of that newspaper. Arguments are freely made on both sides of the questions at issue, and the participants in the controversy include a Roman Catholic priest and two Baptist clergymen. One of the most forcible opponents of Doctor Savage's position writes as follows:

"Looking at the subject coldly, the arguments of Doctor Savage would seem to me to call for a new trial for Jesus Christ.

"There is no use evading the question. Jesus was crucified on the specific charge that he was an impostor. He was guilty, or not guilty. Before the court of Pilate the people said, 'We have a law, and according to the law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God.' Before the court of Caiphas, the high priest, the question was put to him directly, 'I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us if thou be the Christ the Son of God.' And Jesus said, 'I am. And you shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of the power of God, and coming with the clouds of heaven.'

"Jesus is God, the light of the world, or a loathsome liar. The Jews have ever since regarded him as an impostor, the Christians adore him as God incarnate. If the Jews are right, Doctor Savage is wrong, and the Christians also are wrong. It is not only interesting, it is fascinating, to study every incident of the passion of Jesus, in the light of the cross, as well as in the light of exact science."

Doctor Savage has written several letters to the Sun in defense of his views. In one of these he challenges scholarly contradiction of his statements (1) that "Jesus nowhere claims to be God, and no person in the New Testament, whose name is known, makes any such claim on his behalf;" and (2) that "there is no text in the New Testament which is authentic and whose authorship we know, which can be properly interpreted as teaching that Jesus is God." This challenge was promptly accepted by Father Lambert, the editor of the New York Freeman's Journal, who devotes two lengthy editorial articles to a rebuttal of Doctor Savage's arguments. A writer in the Sun declares:

"In answer Doctor Savage's double challenge . . . I venture to send herewith, straight to his head and heart, two small pebbles chosen from the Gospel, evidences of the truth he flouts:

"First—the testimony of Jesus himself: 'I and my Father are one.'—John 4:26. [John 10:30.]

"Second—the testimony of Saint Paul: 'Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God.'—Philippians 2:6."

This controversy has overleaped the bounds of the newspaper in which it was started and become the subject of pulpit discourses. On a recent Sunday, the Reverend Doctor David James Burrell, of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, referred to Doctor Savage in the following very uncomplimentary terms (as reported by the New York American and Journal):

"If any man denies the divinity of Jesus Christ, he is Antichrist, and the doctrine he teaches is Antichrist.

"No heresy ever dies. The denial of the divinity of Christ was taught by the agnostics, and, since their day, by many other heretics under many different names.

"John pronounces this denial of Christ's divinity a lie, and for the man who denies he has another word

—John calls him a liar. The reason he denounced this heresy is that it strikes at the root of Christianity. You find me a man who denies the divinity of Christ, and you will find a man who denies every one of the fundamental truths of the Christian religion."

The Reverend Doctor Thomas R. Slicer, the well-known Unitarian minister of New York, has also taken part in the discussion, contending for the more radical interpretation of Christian doctrine. The Sun editorially sums up the purport of the whole controversy in these words:

"The discussion as to the historic Jesus, at this time pushed into prominence, is a natural consequence of the unsettling of religious belief which comes inevitably from a scientific examination of the narratives of the Bible: from the critical analysis of the Christian evidence which has been introduced at this period. If the Bible is not accepted dogmatically as the word of God and therefore unquestionable; if its accounts of the dealings of God with man; if its solution of the problem of existence, its miracles and its narration of events, even though contradictory of natural possibility, are not believed in, simply because they are in the Bible, the whole structure of Christian theology falls to the ground. Whether the historic Jesus asserted or denied his supernatural origin and birth does not matter. Even if Doctor Savage admitted that the Gospels attributed divinity to Jesus he would reject it, all the same. He denies their infallibility, even their authenticity and credibility as historical documents of authoritative value. To discover infallibility, he might argue, requires infallibility in the discoverer, and he knows no such power in man or in any assemblage of men. To him, a dogma is nothing more than a human opinion. With those who start out with belief in the supernatural authority of dogma as an inspiration of the Holy Ghost, he can have no argument and they none with him. The two sides can only affirm and deny, without convincing.

"The great question now agitating the Christian world is not as to the historic Jesus, whether the Gospels ascribe to him divinity, or agree or disagree in regard to his character, but whether the Gospels themselves are to be treated as historically indisputable, because supernaturally infallible, or are to be viewed as merely human documents of doubtful authorship and, chiefly, of no original historical authority.—Literary Digest, February 7.

The Garden.

Have you thought how, cheerily, day to day,
The thankless air perfuming,
Though often stripped of its blossoms gay
The garden keeps on blooming?
How never it stops when its choicest rose
From its very heart is ravished,
But richer and fuller its buds unclose,
And its incense sweet is lavished.

How Sweet to Live.

How sweet to live, to know that God's loved hand
Is marking out our life from day to day;
To know that with his kindness so complete,
We can not, if we love him, go astray.
And when through life our paths look steep and bare,
And, feeble, we seem falling by the way,
We may send upward but a whispered prayer
To find our loving Father near alway.

We would not murmur when the trials come,
Knowing they're sent to win our hearts to thee,
To draw our souls away from earth's bright glare,
And make them fitted for eternity.
Thou wouldst not send the shadows long and deep
If we as well could bear the radiant light.
Thou knowest best; we pray our souls to keep;
Help us to walk by faith, if not by sight.

Eggs and Their Uses as Food.

The information given in this reading is nearly all from Farmers' Bulletin No. 128.

"Perhaps no article of diet of animal origin is more commonly eaten in all countries or served in a greater variety of ways than eggs. . . .

"The appearance of an egg—the shell with its living membrane, inclosing the white and yolk—is too familiar to need any discussion. The physiological structure of the egg is perhaps less familiar. A fertile egg contains an embryo and is at the same time a storehouse of material for the development and growth of the young individual from the embryo, until it has reached such a stage that life is possible outside the narrow limits of the shell. The embryo is situated quite close to the yolk which furnishes the nutritive material for its early development, the white being used later. . . .

"Since in all cases the egg is designed to furnish the sole source of material for growth and development of the young individual for a considerable time, it is evident that it must contain all the elements required; that is, that it must be a perfect food for the purpose intended.

"Milk is another familiar example of animal food containing all the elements of a complete food for the young and growing individual. Milk and eggs are frequently spoken of as perfect foods on this account. The designation is, however, misleading, for although it is true that they contain all the required elements for the growth and maintenance of the young bird or the young mammal, as the case may be, the elements are not in the right proportion for the sole nourishment of an adult individual. . . .

"The methods of serving eggs alone or in combination with other food materials are very numerous. Cooked in various ways they are a favorite animal food, taking the place of meat to a certain extent, while raw eggs, usually seasoned in some way, are by no means infrequently eaten. Boiled eggs are often used for garnishing or ornamenting different foods. Eggs are combined with other materials in various ways in many made dishes. They are used in making cakes and such foods to improve their flavor, color, and texture, while in custards, creams, etc., they thicken the material and give it the desired consistency. . . . Well beaten or whipped egg white is used to leaven many forms of cake and similar foods, as well as to improve their flavor. The beaten white encloses air in small bubbles, which become distributed throughout the mass of dough in mixing. The heat of cooking expands the air and makes the walls of the air bubbles firm, so that the porous structure is retained. The power to inclose and retain air when beaten varies, being greatest in the fresh egg and much lessened in packed or old eggs. Convenient leavening powders have lessened the number of eggs used for this purpose. Sponge cake however, [also angel food] is a familiar example of food so leavened. This use of eggs explains some of the recipes in old cookery books which call for such large numbers of eggs. These uses are all familiar; the reasons for them are doubtless seldom thought of. . . .

"The total number of methods of preparing and serving eggs is very large, but in nearly every case it will be found that the method of preparation is only a more or less elaborate modification of one of the simple methods of cooking. . . .

"As ordinarily applied the term 'boiled eggs' refers to eggs cooked in the shell in hot, though not necessarily boiling, water. Perhaps the most usual household method of boiling eggs is to immerse them for a longer or shorter time in boiling water. An egg placed in boiling water not over two minutes will have a thin coating of coagulated white next the skin, the remainder will be milky but not solid, while the yolk, though warm, will be entirely fluid. This stage may be called 'very soft-boiled.' If the egg is kept in boiling water a little over two minutes, the white becomes entirely coagulated. The egg, thus cooked, may be termed 'waxy.' If the boiling is extended to three minutes or so, the egg shows a tendency to rise in the water, and will be solid throughout, i. e., 'solid boiled.' If the boiling is continued up to ten minutes or longer, the 'hard boiled' egg results. The white of such an egg is hard and elastic, and the yolk crumbles readily. All these changes are due to the more or less complete coagulation and hardening of the albumen of the egg by heat. If egg white is gently warmed, white fibers will appear, becoming more numerous until at about one hundred sixty degrees Fahrenheit the whole mass is coagulated, the white almost opaque, yet it is tender and jelly-like. If the temperature is raised and continued to two hundred twelve degrees Fahrenheit (the temperature of boiling water), the coagulated albumen becomes much harder, and eventually more or less tough and horn-like; it also undergoes shrinkage. . . . The yolk of egg coagulates firmly at a lower temperature than the white.

"The hardening and contracting of egg white at a continued temperature of boiling water explains the curdling of custards, shrinkage and toughening of omelets, souffles, meringues sponge cake, and similiar mixtures. It also explains the use of egg white for clarifying coffee, soup, or other liquids. The albumen, which is mixed with the liquid before boiling, coagulates and incloses the floating particles, leaving the liquid clear. When egg-shells are used for this purpose, the clarifying properties are due to the egg white still adhering to them, and not to the shells.

"The changes in the albumen noted above suggest the idea that it is not desirable to cook eggs in boiling water in order to secure the most desirable product. Those who have given attention to the science as well as the practice of cookery recommend 'soft-cooked,' 'medium-cooked,' and 'hard-cooked' eggs, all of which are cooked at a temperature lower than two hundred twelve degrees Fahrenheit. In soft-cooked eggs, properly prepared, the white resembles a soft, thick curd, while the yolk is fluid. Except for a suggestion of rawness, there will be little flavor, provided fresh eggs are used. Medium-cooked eggs are more thoroughly cooked than those just mentioned. . . . The white is soft and tender and the yolk slightly thickened. The flavor (which is developed by cooking) is more pronounced than that of a soft-cooked egg and is generally considered more agreeable. When an egg is covered with boiling water in a double boiler, and the temperature of the water in the outer vessel maintained at one hundred eighty to one hundred ninety degrees Fahrenheit for thirty to forty-five minutes, the hard-cooked egg results. In this the yolk should be dry and mealy and the white solid yet tender."

Very delicate stomachs can sometimes assimilate such hard-cooked eggs when no other food can be retained.

An egg dropped in a pint of boiling water and placed on the back of the stove for six minutes will be soft-cooked; or for eight minutes medium-cooked.

Bearing clearly in mind the end desired, each cook should experiment for herself, in order to secure uniform results. The amount of water used, the number, size, and freshness of the eggs, and the kind of vessels used are important factors.

"Poached or dropped eggs are removed from the shell and then cooked in water. Theedichum recommends the use of salted water, to which a little vinegar has been added. The reason for this is, perhaps, that ascetic acid (vinegar) tends to precipitate albumen; that is, to prevent a loss due to some of the egg being dissolved in the water. Flavor may also be one of the objects sought."

Eggs may also be poached in milk, using one cup of milk to half a cup of water, for six eggs. When boiling drop in the eggs and place where they will cook slowly for ten minutes. Serve on toast. In poaching, eggs may be held in nice shape by placing muffin rings in the pan, and dropping the eggs in them. To steam eggs break into egg cups and steam for ten minutes.

"The omelet is generally regarded as one of the most appetizing forms in which eggs can be served. It consists of the beaten egg, with a little milk, water, and cream or melted butter added, quickly cooked in a little fat or butter in a suitable pan, and folded over so that it may be turned out of the pan in a half-round form. Some cooks insist that the best omelets are made by using hot water instead of milk or cream. The hot water is stirred into the egg yolk in the proportion of one tablespoonful to an egg. Scrambled eggs resemble an omelet in preparation, but no effort is made to preserve the characteristic form and appearance of the omelet. Generally speaking, lightness is desired in an omelet and thorough mixing in scrambled eggs. The former is secured by beating, the latter by stirring."

Omelets may be varied by adding in the fold, chopped ham or chicken, green peas or corn; or jams may be used in this way.

"Eggs are especially rich in protein (the nitrogenous ingredient of food). This material is required by man to build and repair the tissues of the body. Some energy is also furnished by protein, but fats and carbohydrates supply the greater part of the total amount needed. . . . As shown by analysis eggs consist chiefly of two nutrients, protein and fat—in addition to water and mineral matter or ash. Carbohydrates are present in such small amounts that they are usually neglected in the analysis. . . . In composition eggs resemble such animal foods as meat, milk, and cheese, more than such vegetable foods as flour and potatoes. The cooked egg does not vary materially from the raw. The yolk and white differ greatly in composition. The yolk contains thirty-three and three tenths per cent of fat, while the white is practically free from fat. The yolk contains fifteen and seven tenths per cent of protein, while the white has twelve and three tenths per cent.

"There is practically no difference in composition between hens' eggs with dark shells and those with white shells, although there is a popular belief that the former are richer. Experiments justify the statement that the eggs of one breed, whatever the color of the shells, are as nutritious as those of another, provided they are of the same size and the fowls are equally well fed.

"One of the constituents of egg albumen is sulphur. The dark stain made by eggs on silver is doubtless correctly attributed to the formation of silver sulphide."

Raw eggs or eggs only slightly cooked are commonly said to be very digestible, the idea being obviously that they digest readily without giving rise to pain or other physical discomfort. Another meaning of the term digestibility refers to the thoroughness of digestion, that is to the total amount of material which any food gives up to the body in its passage through the digestive tract.

"Jorisseune . . . states that he regards the yolk of raw, soft-boiled and hard-boiled eggs as equally digestible. The white of soft-boiled eggs being semi-liquid, offers little more resistance to the digestive juices than raw white. The white of a hard-boiled egg is not generally very thoroughly masticated. Unless finely divided it offers more resistance to the digestive juices than the fluid or semi-fluid white, and undigested particles may remain in the digestive tract many days and decompose. It is obvious that thorough mastication is a matter of importance. Provided mastication is thorough, marked differences in the completeness of digestion of the three sorts of eggs will not be found. . . . The length of time of cooking eggs has less effect upon the thoroughness of digestion than upon the time required for digestion. In a healthy man the latter consideration is probably not a matter of much importance. In the diet of sick persons and invalids it may be more important.

"Eggs are nutritious food, and are valuable for giving variety to the diet and for furnishing a light, easily digested, nitrogenous food, especially suitable for breakfast or other light meal, an important item for those of sedentary habits.

"Many families of moderate means make a practice of buying fresh meat for but one meal a day, i. e., dinner, using for breakfast either bacon, drier beef, codfish, or left-over meats, etc., and for lunch or supper, bread and butter and the cold meat and other foods remaining from the other two meals, with perhaps the addition of cake and fresh or preserved fruit. It is the thrifty housekeeper who uses all her material as economically as possible in some such way, who is likely to fall into the error of excluding eggs at higher prices almost entirely from her food supply. If her economy was directed principally to restricting the use of eggs in the making of rich dessert dishes, cake and pastry, one might not only refrain from criticising but welcome the circumstances which necessitated the making of simple and therefore more wholesome desserts. But usually the housekeeper economizes by the more obvious method of neglecting to serve them as a meat substitute.

"The statement so frequently made by housekeepers that eggs at twenty-five cents per dozen are cheaper than meat is true in one sense. Not, of course, with reference to the total amount of nutrients obtained for the money expended, but because a smaller amount of money is needed to furnish the meal. That is to say, whereas at least one and one fourth pounds of beef-steak, costing twenty-five cents, at twenty cents per pound, would be necessary to serve five adults; in many families five eggs, costing ten cents, at twenty-five cents per dozen, would serve the same number and probably satisfy them equally well. If the appetites of the family are such as to demand two eggs per person, doubling the cost, it is still twenty per cent less than the steak. . . . These statements must not be understood as advocating the free use of eggs at any price, but merely as pointing out that even at the higher prices the occasional use of eggs in place of meat need not be regarded as a luxury.

"Recently in Germany twenty methods of preserving eggs were tested." More or less of the eggs treated by all of these methods, with the exception of three, were unfit for use. "Of these three, preservation in a solution of water glass is especially recommended. For this purpose dissolve one part of the syrup-thick, commercial water glass in ten parts by measure of water. Only pure water should be used. It is best to boil and cool it before mixing with the water glass. The vessels in which the eggs are to be packed must be sweet and clean, and the packed eggs should be stored in a cool place, as they will not keep well where it is too warm."

A thousand questions man may raise,
And answering one, spend all his days.—A. J. Keck.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

The following is from the Literary Review published by the Union Press, Philadelphia. It is a publication chiefly of very brief reviews of books suitable for the Sunday-school library. We give the reviews not for what there is in them only, but more particularly because it suggests what seems to us to be a very good plan to work on to get a book catalogue for our own use. But who will review the books? Who has time at their disposal for this work? Speak up.

Is There no Need for the Sunday-School Library?

It is a truth many booksellers will vouch for that the sale of books for Sunday-school libraries has declined, until now the demand is so small that they can not afford to carry stock. It is also a truth that many children refuse to take books from the Sunday-school library, who seek after and succeed in getting the ephemeral novels of the day, almost all of which have a taint of coarseness and immorality, which they read with avidity. Books intended for the entertainment of adults may do no harm to the men or women who read them; but who can tell the harm that may be done to the child of twelve or more years who reads these novels, in which subjects are touched upon that should not even be whispered in the presence of children? It was not so in your childhood, father or grandfather; nor was there the lack of respect between the sexes that is apparent now.

Can it be that the liberal education of the age, of which we hear so much, is responsible for the lack of taste for pure and safe literature exhibited by the young? We hope not; for we believe sincerely in progress. Yet we would welcome again a return to that condition in which purity and chastity would be held up before the eyes and minds of the young as a condition to be sought after and retained.

Or can it be that the great increase in public and free libraries has opened to children avenues of literature that satisfies them more than the books containing moral or religious teachings which they would find in the Sunday-school library?

If this is the case, should not great care be exercised by the librarian and his assistants in such institutions to ascertain truly the character of books called for by the children of various ages, and to take measures to direct in their reading those children who evince a liking for literature that may be harmful to them?

If the children of the land are debased by their use of public and free libraries, then the money devoted yearly to the establishment and sustenance of these institutions should be diverted to other uses.

The Sunday-school library should be distinctly an educator in good morals, purity of life, and Christian character. The books suitable for such a library need not necessarily be dull and uninteresting; and the librarian or committee that brings the right kind of intelligence to the work can easily make a selection of books that will be safe to place in the hands of the young, and which will include books of spirited adventure and stirring scenes for the boys, as well as the particular classes of books girls want and will have.

It is as much the parents' duty as it is the duty of the officers of the Sunday-schools to arouse themselves to these facts, and to make a determined effort to furnish through the Sunday-school library the best, safest, and purest books for their children and scholars to read.

Look at it that you do your whole duty to the children and to God!

"The Awakening of Anthony Weir." By Silas K. Hocking. 12mo, cloth, 431 pages. Seven illustrations. Price $1.08, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

Anthony Weir was the popular pastor of a city church of which it was said, "Martyr Gate is the most select social club in Workingham." More wealthy parishioners rolled to its doors in carriages than to any other church in the city. The young pastor was paid to minister to their desires rather than to their needs. He preached eloquently, to tickle their ears without disturbing their consciences. Of course, the good-looking, eloquent, and popular minister was a social favorite. He must marry a rich girl, to gratify his desire for success, even if a genuine love be sacrificed. His schemes for accomplishing this object of his ambition were met by counter schemes, culminating in a mysterious and dastardly plot that nearly proved his undoing. Through manifold tribulations he is at last "awakened" to the true meaning of life and its opportunities. The story gives idyllic pictures of true love enjoyed by other clergymen less worldly, but more truly wise than the unsatisfied hero; for we may call him a hero at the end, although he is quiet otherwise in his early ministry. The writer is keen and almost merciless in dissecting motives and exposing shams. There is a masterly word-picture of the fascinations of gambling at Monte Carlo, where the minister goes for the benefit of his health, under the escort of some wealthy parishioners. Genuineness, purity, self-sacrifice, "other worldness," spirituality, love, get their recognition after a while. It is a fascinating book for older scholars and adults, to be pondered as well as read.

"Belshazzar." By William Stearns Davis. 12mo, cloth, illustrated. Price, $1.08, net; postage extra, 11 cents.

This story was published as a serial in Everybody's Magazine, and it is said to have contributed largely to the success of that journal. It is a story of the reign of Belshazzar, king of Babylon, and its principal characters are persons mentioned in the Bible. Among these are Darius, afterwards king of Persia; the Prophets Daniel and Isaiah, all of whom stand out vividly in the course of the story, which ends with the mysterious writing on the wall during the great feast, and the overthrow of the city by Cyrus, king of the Persians. It is exceedingly interesting, and will hold the attention of the older readers.

"Castleton's 'Prep.'" By Charlotte Murray. With six illustrations by Florence Reason. 12mo, cloth, 292 pages. Price, 90 cents, net; postage extra, 10 cents.

To boys, in schools, the "Prep" is quite familiar, being a short designation of the preparatory school in which they fit for college. Castleton did not feel that his education was finished when he left the university. As a prospective member of the British Parliament, by right of his noble birth, he meant to fit himself for those high duties by taking another "Prep" course. And it was a curious school he chose—no less than keeping a stationer's shop in a provincial seaport town, adopting for the time being the name "Strange," in order that his identity might not be revealed, nor his purpose to study life from the level of the common people thwarted. The young stationer believed in the gospel of helpfulness, and carried it out so generously that the rector, although not knowing his helper's social position, was led to respect his character. The rector's daughter, Clare, is a quaint little angel of mercy, although she insists that the newcomer shall call her "Miss," lest he lose influence with the people by seeming disrespectful. Soon an awful grief shadows the rector's home, and "Strange" and his sister proved friends in need. Of course awkward complications arise, and the young nobleman awakens the suspicions of Clare's cousin, a clergyman of great sincerity, but scant knowledge of the world.

"A Frigate's Namesake." By Alice Balch Abbott. 12mo, cloth, 204 pages. Price, 75 cents, net; postage extra, 8 cents.

The story of a little girl called Essex Thurston, who was interested and well-informed in naval history. Our story follows Essex through childhood to college days, and, before closing, gives us a glimpse of Essex as she has the honor of christening the warship "Winegan", which duty she performs very beautifully.

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 23.

Dear Herald Readers: The district conference convened here on February 21 and 22, with the Sunday-school and Religio conventions on the 19th and 20th.

Thursday afternoon the Religio met, the seven locals of the district reported, and with the seventy-eight Home Class members makes a total of one hundred and ninety-seven Religians in the district. A resolution of appreciation of the Religio Quarterly was adopted. The full number of delegates to which the association is entitled in the General Convention was chosen. The Religio will make an effort to place ten thousand tracts in the district during the coming year.

The District Sunday-school Association met on Friday. Nearly all the schools of the district reported. Six dollars were voted to aid in the distribution of literature in the district. Officers elected for the coming year were: Superintendent, Wardell Christy, of Dallas Center; assistant, W. C. Earhart, of Mingo; secretary, Elsie Russell, of Grinnell; treasurer, Ida Wert, of Newton; librarian, Mattie Hughes, of Rhodes. The full quota of delegates to the General Convention was chosen. Announcement of the South Sea Island disaster was made on Friday. Resolutions of condolence were adopted in behalf of those people, and a collection of twelve dollars was taken for their relief.

The district conference convened on Saturday, the 21st inst. District officers all present. The eleven branches of the district reported, and all but one had chosen delegates. Sixteen of the twenty-one elders of the district reported, fourteen of the twenty priests, nine of the thirteen teachers, and five of the ten deacons. Committee on reunion reported in favor of Rhodes, and August 15 to 25 as the time for the reunion of 1903.

On Sunday, the 22d, Sunday-school session met at nine o'clock, in charge of the district officers. At a quarter to eleven Elder T. F. Jones was the speaker. At half past two the Saints assembled for prayer service. The church at this hour was filled beyond seating capacity. In the hour seven prayers and thirty-eight testimonies were given, and four children were blessed. The prayer service was one of the most spiritual ever witnessed in the district. After the season of prayer had ended and a number of testimonies had been given, Elder M. M. Turpen, who was in charge of the service, arose and began to exhort the Saints in a very earnest and impressive manner. The Holy Spirit rested upon him in power and he spoke in an unknown tongue. He immediately gave the interpretation, which was an exhortation to the Saints of the district to be more faithful, that we had been neglectful of duty along different lines, with the promise that God would pour out his Spirit in greater measure upon the Saints of this district, and that Christ would soon appear. At the close of the interpretation Sr. Cora Earhart arose and with sobbing voice began to bear her testimony. She occupied thus a few minutes and then ceased to speak, still occupying the floor. Then with a voice calm and sweet, her face beaming with brightness, and the tears removed from her eyes, she began with "Thus saith the Lord." She gave a lengthy exhortation to the Saints along several lines, of chastisement, of counsel, of promise, and finished with "thus saith the Spirit and sat down. A number spoke in quick succession acknowledging neglect of duty with resolutions of more faithfulness. Elder J. F. Mintun then arose and with "thus saith your God" told the Saints that space was granted for repentance, but for some the time had passed, with promise of greater blessings from heaven. He spoke at length. Individual speaking continued, and twice again did the Spirit speak to individual members, to one in the severest manner of chastisement, and to another in the form of great promise. Every Saint present was deeply moved by such a manifestation of God's power and love for his children. Saints could not wish for days agone when God's blessing was poured out upon his people, but rejoiced in the living present, and praised the most high God.

The Religio met at six o'clock in the evening of Sunday, and Bro. Mintun was the speaker of the evening. Thus closed one of the best conferences ever held in the district. Nearly all parts of the district were represented, and those attending went out from the conference better prepared for the work before them. The next conference will be held at Boone, June 13 and 14.

A. A. REAMS.

ENGLAND, February 11.

Editors Herald: Since our last communication we have been looking after the interests of the work in this land and attending to the various duties incidental to missionary life. We are pleased that we can report progress, while not able to report a long list of baptisms; still we have had an appreciable number added to the church within the last year. Missionary work is not prosecuted similarly as it is in the United States, for the reason that we can not obtain schoolhouses or halls, and we do not have the numbers to preach to that our brethren have in most places in the States. If we are successful in getting out three or four strangers on an average we feel that we have reason to congratulate ourselves. While it is not often we have opposition of a virulent order, yet we have what is worse and more discouraging, that contempt and almost impenetrable indifference which is very common in this land. We are also attacked openly and surreptitiously through the press and then refused a hearing when we assay a reply, hence our principal work in proselytizing is by tracting and open air preaching when weather permits. Still in spite of every obstacle the work is developing and assuming proportions and permanency that will be apparent to all in the near future.

We have organized four branches in the last six weeks in the following places: Glasgow, under the presidency of Elder James Wilson, assisted by Bro. W. Plunkett as priest, William Carney as teacher, and John Hepburn as deacon. There are very bright prospects in the city. Several are investigating who will in all probability be numbered with us in the near future. If the church will give us two more missionaries in the land of Scotland, we hope to effect some good work, as we have two good branches there now.

Warrington, in Lancashire, not far from Liverpool, was next organized. Brn. John Schofield, Grundy, and Fish are in charge of branch affairs, all of whom are able, spiritual-minded men. We have expectations of this branch becoming a power for good in that part of the mission. Stockport Branch under the guidance of Brn. George Baty, Nadin, and Usherwood. Quite a few outsiders are interested and there is a bright future before the work there. Bro. G. Baty is an experienced minister, wise and diligent in the performance of his duty.

The Enfield Branch, London, was organized on January 30, and is under the presidency of Brn. T. J. Sheldon, Kemp, and Judd. We have a number of energetic and intelligent young men, who, if faithful, will prove by and by able defenders of the truth. We organized a district in Leeds, January 10. Bro. Thomas Taylor was elected president, T. Robert vice-president, Samuel Warren clerk, William Rudd as Bishop's agent. Leeds is one of the flourishing commercial centers of this country, the leading city in Yorkshire, the largest shire or county in England. There are very many towns surrounding, which can be reached easily and under persistent and judicious labor there are prospects of many branches being established in this county. If the brethren are faithful in discharging their duty many will ultimately be gathered into the fold.

On January 31 we organized a district in London to be known as the London District, which takes in an area of fifty miles, all within the sound of the famous Bow Bells. The Spirit of God was felt in great power in the organization of this district, and also in the organization of the Leeds District, evidencing God's approval of what was done. The London District has upwards of twenty officers and a large number of active members. Bro. Sheldon was elected president, Bro. Kemp secretary, Bro. Cliff Bishop's agent, and A. Bradshaw treasurer. Bro. Sheldon has done a good work during his sojourn in this city. He is respected, and his efforts highly appreciated. He has manifested much executive ability, and his efforts have been ably supplemented by the local ministry. We were much pleased to note the deepening of spirituality in this large city among the members of the church. Truly, a wonderful change for the better has been wrought here during the last eighteen months. If the church can keep two traveling missionaries in this the metropolis of the world for some years there could be much good work done, and surely London with nearly five million of inhabitants should have our attention.

The organization throughout the entire mission is in good shape, and we feel that the command of God to set in order the affairs of this mission has been complied with. A bishopric, evangelical ministers, have been set apart to occupy in their respective places, a quorum of elders and a quorum of priests have been organized. The spiritual status of the work generally is encouraging. Love and harmony prevail among the ministry, both missionary and locally, and there seems to be a fervent desire on the part of all to get the work on a firm and permanent basis and gather in the honest in heart. It is gratifying to us to be able to report sincerely that the missionaries, without exception, have done their best to magnify their calling, and that we have been heartily supported in all our efforts by the local ministry and that they have our unlimited confidence and esteem. The secretary of the mission, Bro. William Armstrong, has rendered faithful service in his capacity. He and his wife have prepared a permanent home in Manchester, for the missionary, supported by the Saints of the Manchester District. They have done all within their power to make us welcome while domiciled with them. Wishing all God-speed and success universally to the cause we love,

Your brethren servants,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, February 20.

Editors Herald: Myself and family are all well and happy in the Lord. I am busy in my labors here in this city. God has blessed me marvelously in preparing the way before me so that I could reach the people. Heretofore it has been quite difficult for us to reach the people, but it seems that the hastening time has come and God is preparing the way. This year I have been invited to preach four times for the Holiness people, twice for the Baptist. On last Friday evening I had a most excellent time at the Baptist church; after the minister talked a little while, he said, "I am going to call on Elder Warnky, and I feel impressed that he will give us a real Holy Ghost sermon." And sure enough I did. At the close I received an invitation by a Baptist lady who had heard me once before to come and preach at her house 605 East Seventeenth Street, to which I consented. Will preach there Saturday night. I am informed her minister is invited to be present. Last Tuesday night I preached at 817 Missouri Avenue, at the house of Mr. Hedrick where I have a regular appointment weekly. Two ministers were present, one a Holiness the other a Methodist. They received the word gladly. Mr. Hedrick gave his name for baptism, and will wait for the return of Elder W. A. Smith to baptize him, as Bro. Smith is the first Latter Day Saint through whom his understanding was opened. Next Sunday I will preach at 921 Charlet Street by invitation. I have also an invitation to come and preach at 562 Holmes Street. It is quite a marvel to me to see the change that has come over the people desiring to hear; and in preaching I never enjoyed better liberty in my life. Bro. William Brown has been of excellent assistance to me.

F. C. WARNKY.

OSKALOOSA, Iowa, February 17.

Editors Herald: I have just closed a meeting at Gracehill, Washington County, of five weeks duration, resulting in six baptisms and the making of many friends to the work, or as the Moravian minister puts it, "Mormon sympathizers." One good friend brought his organ to the schoolhouse and the young people took entire charge of the singing. I began the meeting on January 12. Bro. J. F. Mintun came on February 4 and stayed until the 12th. I remained until this morning, when I came to this place.

Last night a Bro. Morris, who lives about six miles out in the country, was thrown from his wagon and severely hurt, how seriously it can not yet be determined, but he seems some better this morning. Bro. C. B. Brown here is also on the sick list, but thinks he is getting better.

Bro. and Sr. E. L. Moorman, by whose call I went to Gracehill, expect to go to their farm in Douglas County, Missouri, early next week. If all isolated Saints were as anxious for the spread of the gospel as are Bro. and Sr. Moorman, more new openings could be made in this district.

H. A. McCoy.

From Over the Border.

Editors Herald: Sheltered from the raging storm and freezing temperature without, I write. Your columns never lose their fascination for me, notwithstanding we now have a mission paper of our own this side the border.

Bro. A. E. Mortimer and I are holding services nightly, preaching to audiences mostly composed of Saints, whereas only recently we were preaching to large, attentive audiences of outsiders at Leadbury. At the latter place, our efforts were the first proclamation of our peculiar philosophy, and our twenty-four long sermons aroused them some. Interest was good and an exceptional spirit of investigation was manifested. Numerous invitations were accorded, some of which we complied with, according to our limited possibilities. We stayed about five miles from the seat of operations, and were compelled to do much driving, some of it none too pleasant.

Last week we baptized and confirmed three. Possibly others may obey ere our departure for another point, about thirty miles distant.

A few days ago while visiting at a home in Leadbury, a man of wealth entered the room. He said: "O! you're one of these preachers that's preaching in the schoolhouse, are you?"

"Yes, sir," was my prompt reply.

"Why don't you fellows go and preach to the heathens? Why preach to people here where they are nearly all Christians and have two good churches right within their easy reach?"

Taking into consideration the object of my visit and my surroundings I disposed myself not to be too abrupt with one of whom I knew absolutely nothing but what I read in the few minutes conversation between him and others preceding. I answered: "We have a congregation only a few miles from here, about five, and I certainly am unable to see that we are unreasonably out of our latitude in coming, in stepping so short a distance to give a mission. And then I am not aware that all the people in this community are members of the two churches. On the contrary, I have been informed by those who ought to know that quite a percentage of them are not church members, and that some who are, are tired of the old theologies and want something better. Then, we sustain not a very large missionary force in Canada; we prosecute missionary work in foreign countries and in heathen lands, in the islands of the sea."

"Well," says my opponent who began to manifest a spirit of antagonism, "we are all missionaries."

"Yes," I answered; "I can conceive of a certain sense in which we may all be said to be missionaries since it is the duty of every man to interest himself in the welfare of his fellow beings to the extent of inducing them to accept of the gospel and be saved. But as for everybody having an equal right to administer the ordinances and stand beside the sacred desk and deliver the word I should take exception to that." He rejoined: "Jesus said, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'"

"Indeed, my friend, but he did not say that to you."

"Yes he did, and it applies to me as much as anybody."

I saw he was bound to fight and I said with a force that rather surprised him; "I deny your statement, sir; it is a downright falsehood, and we'll thrash it out. I call upon you to prove your assertion. You have made an assertion and you are the proving party; the burden of proof rests upon you."

He refused to do so and insisted that I was obliged to disprove his statement. I took my Bible and turned to Mark 16. I read the verse he quoted. He listened patiently. "'Go ye.' 'Ye;' who does this mean? Let us read the preceding passage: 'Afterward he appeared to the eleven as they sat at meat. He is now in the company of the eleven, no one else. No other character is introduced before the occurrence of these words: 'Go ye therefore' which proves conclusively that it refers only to them. And now you have no more right to apply that language to yourself than you have to steal the papers of some dead constable and go and make arrests thereupon. Again, if it is a fact that the 'Go ye therefore' in question was a sufficient qualification for all ministers throughout future ages, why was it necessary for ministers after that to have a 'Go ye therefore' of their own, an individual 'Go ye therefore.' Why was it necessary for Paul and Matthias and Timothy to have personal or separate qualifications if the qualification of the Twelve was all-sufficient for all others in time to come?"

I judge that he began to think that instead of jumping on a helpless boy as he probably expected, he had underestimated his prey, and finding himself unable to repel an avalanche of argument and scriptural citations he sought refuge in some insinuations about the Book of Mormon. I was determined to run him down and spank him till he gave up; not for his particular good, but for the satisfaction of the family who were interested in ascertaining the truth of some of the yarns afloat, and which he was trying most desperately to propagate.

"What do you know about the Book of Mormon?" I asked.

"A good deal; I have read it."

"Will you please tell me something concerning its teachings? Does it say anything concerning Christ?"

"No, Christ is not mentioned in it."

"How many books does it contain?"

"I don't know."

"Give me the names of some of the books."

"I can't."

"That just convinces me, sir, that you never read the Book of Mormon at all. It abounds with the teachings of Christ from beginning to end; Christ's name is frequently mentioned; and have we not delivered, at least, three sermons on the subject over here in the school" (addressing the family), "and did I not read from it to show how Christ came here and established his church after his ascension from the Eastern Hemisphere?" "Yes," they said.

"But it is twenty years since I read it, and I can't remember all it contains."

"Suppose a man were to come to you and affirm that he had read the Bible twenty years before and would positively testify that it contained nothing about Christ; that Christ's name was not mentioned in it; could not give the name of a single book from Genesis to Revelation; would deny some of its greatest characteristics. Would you believe he had read it?"

"No."

"Exactly; and on the same ground I do not believe you ever read the Book of Mormon."

Becoming fully convinced that he was not equal to any issue he confessed his weakness and asked me to meet their preacher. I asked his name and where I would find him. He told me; said that he would take me to him on the following Tuesday if I would meet at a place he named. But when I took out my memorandum book to write name, etc., he backed squarely down. He at length left amidst the laughing of those to whom I was eagerly trying to show the true way that leadeth to the fount of life.

Elder Mortimer and the writer administered to a girl not long ago upon whom the doctor was proposing an operation for appendicitis. Thanks to God, she recovered without the cruel knife and was soon afterward baptized into the church.

Last Sunday a prophecy was given through my colaborer in the prayer-meeting. One was called to the eldership and words of admonition were addressed to the branch.

OMAHA, Nebraska, February 25.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Northern Nebraska District, held at Omaha from the 30th ult. to the 1st inst., passed off very pleasantly and we believe profitably. The two-week protracted meeting which followed was well attended, and a good interest was manifest. Bro. Alexander H. Smith did the greater part of the preaching, as all seemed desirous of hearing him. A good portion of the Spirit was present during the entire effort, and we think much good was done. Bro. A. H. Smith is still with us and is at work in the discharge of his duties; but perhaps I should not say anything farther with reference to his work, as the Saints understand what it is. The writer has much enjoyed his efforts and the pleasure of his company and fatherly advice.

Everything seems to be moving along fairly well, and there is still work within the reach of those who like to be busy in the service of the Lord.

Perhaps I should have written sooner, but have neglected to do so until now.

We are still interested in the work, feeling that God is the author of it and that the Holy Spirit is given to all those who work for its advancement that souls may be saved and God glorified.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

ATCHISON, Kansas, February 23.

Editors Herald: Since coming to this city, January 15, I have found it a good field for work in more ways than one. I have found good Saints, and whatever the officers have been in the past, the present force are alert to their duty, having come to a better understanding of the law through their experiences and the experience of the church in this place.

A part of the work necessary to be done here, as in many other places, is the enforcing of the law against offenders, thus to purify the church and prepare it for its great mission. The gospel standard must be unfurled and made honorable by the exemplification of righteousness among the Saints. "The old leaven" must be purged out; that that has accumulated by laxity and slothfulness on the part of officers who have not known, or having known have not done their duty. While the purifying work within is going on, the missionary work is also moving, and I predict numerous accessions in the future.

One week ago to-day, amidst the blizzard, I baptized four (two being heads of families) in the waters of Deer Creek, two miles north of town. Others are interested.

Conference of the Northeastern Kansas District was held here last Saturday and Sunday and was highly spiritual and profitable. Brn. I. N. and Ammon White gave us some splendid sermons, I. N. continuing with us till the 19th.

Yesterday, Saturday, I attended the Seventh-day Adventist Sabbath-school at their church on North Fifth Street, and being invited to occupy the pulpit after Sabbath-school, did so with fine liberty on the first principles, "laying on of hands with the rest." Was invited to come again, I asked for the church to hold a series of meetings in, and am to know next week when the request shall have been put before the church.

To-night I commence meetings at a schoolhouse three miles southwest of town. With branch work, missionary work, etc., I rejoice in having enough to do and in seeing no place to stop or stand still.

By the way, my conscience does not trouble me in temporarily presiding over a branch as I feared it might. I never felt better spiritually and am thankful for improved physical health.

Yours in the conflict,

711 North Ninth Street.

Editors Herald: The time is passing very fast and it is very precious to us and we must keep busy every day of our lives. I want to do all that I can to push this work on, because I know that there is something in it. I know that there is a power behind it; and it is the power of the Lord. I have not been in this work very long, but I am very glad I took the step.

At this place there are only a few Saints, but if all would meet together and take an interest in the work it would not be so easily overthrown. Bro. Rush has moved here from Tennessee. A prophecy has been uttered here concerning the upbuilding of the work. It was that there should be Saints come here to help carry on the work. It seems to me like the Devil has stopped working on the outside of the church entirely within the last year or two, and has commenced on the inside. I know that is the way he is doing here, but that does not weaken me any in the faith. I want to live right and do my duty toward the church.

This year is the first that I have attended school since I came into this glorious work, and the Lord has blessed me wonderfully in my studies; he has helped me in many different ways. Let us all live so that we can enjoy that thousand years of reign with Christ. There is a wonderful blessing awaiting us in the next world if we only live for it, but we can not sit down and do nothing and get those blessings. We will have to keep going forward because there is no standing still.

My father is making a great sacrifice to send me to school, and I am going to put in my time to advantage.

We have not had any preaching here for a good while, and when this bad weather is over we would like to have some one come and refresh our minds.

I ask the prayers of all that I may hold out faithful until the end.

CORMORANT, Minnesota, February 21.

Editors Herald: The letter department of the HERALD and Ensign are of much interest to me. In fact, both papers fill a very important part in our spiritual welfare. Hope that my finance will hold out to continue taking them both, as I have been a constant subscriber since I came into the church about eighteen years ago. As the years have been passing I feel that I have been strengthened.

Bro. T. C. Kelley held forth five times in S. A. Halgren's hall recently, with good result. One baptized and Saints strengthened. Hope General Conference may deem it wise to return him to Minnesota again, for there were quite a few interested in the way he presented our cause. May the Lord add his blessing.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, February 21.

Editors Herald: The Religio work is on a decided advance in this city, onward and upward. The junior members are at work in spiritual and intellectual ways, which betray progress.

Sunday-school matters are still progressing under the direction of Brn. John Suttill and Otis Toombs. We have a fine library in our local school, and hope by mutual work to make it effectual for good as also every other department of God's work.

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

FULTON, Kentucky, February 22.

Editors Herald: I embraced this gospel the 14th of last May. We have prayer-meeting every Wednesday night. There are just a few Saints here, and we meet much opposition. We should always try to please our great Redeemer, letting the people of the world who are not of us speak what they may concerning our creed, for our creed is all truth. Jesus says, "If ye do the will of the Father, ye shall know of the doctrine, whether I speak of myself or whether it is of God." This is clear enough to cause us to press forward and do what we can for the Master's cause.

I have three little children, two boys and one girl. I want to raise them so they will be pleasing in the sight of God.

My husband is not a believer. I want the prayers of the Saints and the Prayer Union, that he may come into the church before it is too late.

I scarce could do without the HERALD. I do not see how any Saint can. I like to read the letters and sermons; they do me so much good. I wish more of the Saints would write from this place. I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may ever be found faithful to the end and have a home in Zion.

Your sister,

ALICE PEEPLES.

THALIA, Texas, February 15.

Editors Herald: It does me so much good to read the letters and testimonies of others. I am also one of the isolated ones; our closest branch is about thirty miles. I do so much long to meet the brothers and sisters; but it seems that we can not have that privilege, so I try to be patient and live so that I can receive the Lord's blessing. The Lord has been merciful toward me. I have been healed by his power; I will make a note of one great blessing I received. I was then living at Maysville, Arkansas. I had been sick for several days, and was administered to several times, but would only get relief for a short time. One evening I was taken with severe pain and cramping. Bro. Skinner went for Elder Sims, but found him sick. He came back and said we would have prayer. He knelt by the bedside in humility and sought the Lord that he might give me relief. While he was praying I went to sleep. When I awoke I was healed. This is one of the many blessings that I have received. Oh, so many times the thought comes to me, "the Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." When I pick up the HERALD I first look at the letters, hoping to find one from some one I know. I did so much enjoy Sr. McKnight's letter. I heard her bear her testimony to this work before I came into the church.

Bro. Skinner and I are still looking forward to that visit Bro. E. A. Davis promised us when we came back to Texas. We are located in a new country. Since coming here we have had some preaching which resulted in five baptisms. Elders who chance to come this way will be welcomed; would be glad to have any come. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may be faithful. Your sister, MRS. ALICE SKINNER.

CENTRAL LAKE, Michigan, February 15.

Editors Herald: I received a card dated February 4, 1903, stating that my subscription had expired and kindly asking me if I wished it continued; also stating I could not afford to be without the official paper of the church. No, no! Without the paper I would not be able to tell anything about the advancing movements of the church. So I renew my subscription; and with it I send a new one. This pleases me, for I have been the only one in this place for some time who has taken the HERALD. Still we have a branch here, and a priest, teacher, and deacon, and a number of good Saints that I truly love. I think I am the poorest one here. But blessed be nothing. I am too poor to do without the HERALD, also the church books. I am better able to do without meat. In fact, I could not tell just how poor I was if it were not for those standard measures that are given. If I had no church books or no church papers, how could I tell that I was a poor Saint? If we measure ourselves by ourselves or compare ourselves among ourselves, then we are not wise.

Dear Saints, we can know the word only by obedience to the same. The time is at hand when every Saint should be able to rightly divide the word of truth and give a reason for the hope within him. How can we tell if we believe the same as the body we represent, if we do not study the beliefs of the body?

Our branch in this place is very much scattered. We are often hindered from meeting because of bad weather. But we make a special effort to meet the first Sunday in every month, when we have preaching and prayer-meeting and partake of the sacrament.

God has truly blessed us for all the feeble efforts we put forth to serve him. I have been to our Wednesday night prayer-meetings three times this winter, when I was the only one there. I have three miles and a half to go to get to meeting, but I have nothing to regret; the Lord has blessed me wonderfully. One of those times I had in some way failed to bring my key, so I could not get in. But I knelt on the steps and prayed to my God for help that I might ever be faithful to this great cause, and God blessed me. I know this work is true. And when we have done all we can, we have nothing to boast about, for we have done nothing but our duty. Pray for me, your weak brother.

J. R. SOPER.

LYONS, Kentucky, February 23.

Editors Herald: I came here from Athertonville, where I went to hold some meetings, but the weather was so bad that we could not. But I went from house to house and talked the gospel to them. I have preached five times here, with increasing interest, although the weather was bad. They have a large new church here and it is not plastered yet, and it was pretty cold in it. They want me to come back when the weather gets better. We have had so much rain here that the river overflowed the railroad and pike. Now we have a big snow breaking up that will still keep the road past traveling. One can hardly travel on horseback now, it is so bad in the country. When it gets warm enough to preach in this new church there can be a good work done here. It is a union church.

Yours hopefully at work,

J. W. METCALF.

CHRISTIANA, Norway, February 10.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few remarks relative to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants as published by the Utah church in the Danish-Norwegian language might interest your readers.

In the HERALD last year I made the statement that I would not advise our people to circulate those books, giving as my reason that they had been perverted by the Brighamites.

The first editions of the Book of Mormon, published by Hansen and Snow, could not be seriously objected to; but the third edition was changed after the manner of the late English Utah edition; the punctuation in Jacob's statement being changed and reference made to the so-called revelation on celestial marriage.

Lately a fourth edition has been published, it having been prepared by Andrew Jensen and Fjeldsted, and published by Seancky, their present Scandinavian president, all three polygamists. Some time ago, in speaking of this forthcoming edition, one of their members intimated that a change would be made in it relative to the subject of polygamy. Recently I had an opportunity to examine the new book. The Lord's denunciation and condemnation of polygamy through his servant, Jacob, has always been a difficulty in the polygamist's way. Orson Pratt admits that unless they had new revelation on the subject, the Book of Mormon would condemn them. No wonder, then, that they should attempt to moderate the statement! Jacob 2: 28, large edition, begins with the word and, instead of wherefore.

By reading the twenty-seventh verse the reader may learn the reason why. Verse thirty-two reads: "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, then I will command my people it, otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things." Retranslated so as to convey the meaning fully the sentence would stand thus: "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, then I will command my people to practice it" (polygamy). Then follows a reference to the document on polygamy, which latter has been inserted in their late edition of their doctrine and covenants published in Salt Lake City about two years ago. In this edition the section on marriage was taken out to give place to the above document.

This latter edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, by Mr. A. H. Lund, is a better translation in several respects, but some of the imperfections of former editions have been retained, of which we may mention that the word general, in section 17: 17, has been left out, also the word head, in section 107: 18, speaking of Joseph's posterity. Is it a mere incident that those omissions should occur just in this connection?

For their own sake I am sorry that the Utah people have made those changes in the books, for in due time they will surely turn to their own shame and sorrow.

Respectfully,
P. ANDERSEN.

Editors Herald: Collier's Cyclopedia and Compendium of Profitable Knowledge, edited by H. Irving Hancock, and published by P. F. Collier & Son, New York City, New York, says on page 360: "1845.—Joe Smith, the Mormon Prophet, killed, and the Mormons driven away from Nauvoo City, Illinois, by the mob."

This book is considered a book of reference by lawyers, doctors, and professional men in general, but you can see how inaccurate men are when copying from sources that are not authentic.

Yours for truth,
S. S. SMITH.

DERWENT, Ohio, February 19.

Dear Herald: After reading the beautiful dream or vision of a sister in this week's HERALD and also of a brother's a few weeks previous, and meditating upon such testimony as I have had, I wonder if we could ever doubt the truthfulness of this glorious work of God, while so many brothers and sisters have testimonies of the same meaning who have never seen each other and are many miles apart. How glorious, how grand! We never had such blessings in other churches. I gave this vision and some more literature to a lady who is investigating the work, and she thought it was grand.

My heart is oftentimes saddened by the opposition we have to bear. The Lord made the way so plain to me before coming into the church and while reading his blessed word I received such light as I never had before. I was filled with a season of rejoicing such as I can not express, and my heart saddened and my eyes filled with tears to think the beautiful road that leads to life eternal would be pictured out to us by the world as being so corrupt and bad; but the good Father led me into his work, for which I ever thank and praise his name. I am not living close to any branch, but am trying to get others interested in reading. I want to send and get some tracts for my neighbors to read. I hope and pray that others may be led into the light.

A sister in the faith,
D. S. GREEN.

LOOKINGGLASS, Oregon, February 5.

Dear Herald: I would say a few words to our mothers and fathers especially the scattered ones who do not have the opportunity of attending our church and Sunday-school. All our children know about the gospel is what they learn at home. We should tell them of Jesus and his goodness to us, as soon as they are old enough to want stories of any kind. And if there are others to tell different "stories" to them we should never refuse to tell them a little story about Jesus whenever they ask for it. Even if we are very busy we can tell them of the baby Jesus in the manger, or the "lost boy" Jesus at the temple. That one interests my boy especially, as it was told in Autumn Leaves. By the way, we can get a great deal of help just that way, from the church papers, besides food for ourselves.

It will pay in the end to even stop in the middle of an interesting story you may be reading, to tell them such, and explain such things to them that they may have something good to think about while they play. Especially if they are boys and there is outside influence to bear upon them. I know what I say; I have two little ones of my own, the oldest only four years old, but he never tires of stories. And if I am not there to tell him one and papa is, he asks him for a "hunting story." I think the Bible stories are of more benefit. So if we can get them interested in the life and work of Jesus, the other influence will not be so great, will it? Perhaps some think it a great deal of trouble, and valuable time wasted to teach the Sunday-school lessons to the little ones. But how are they going to come unto Jesus unless we teach them about him? The lessons in the Quarterly can be learned by the least of them if mamma will interest herself in the lesson and her boys, too. My boy keeps up with the lessons, and learns the golden texts; reviews them all every week. Perhaps some would hardly learn so quickly, but it will pay you to teach them anyway, and let God do the rest. Then he will not tell you it is your own fault if your child is not in the kingdom. I hardly think they will ever entirely forget what they learn while with mamma. My little one goes round in his play saying the golden text.

Please do not think they can not understand the Bible when you read it to them. Here is an example: My boy was putting his coat on to go up to the post-office to get mail. He said: "An evil tree brings forth evil fruit. That means a bad person, don't it, mamma?" The chapter containing the words had been read to him the night before, or perhaps longer ago than that. But it came in his mind, and he understood it as well as the ones who heard Jesus say it. They will think of such things instead of some other things they may hear outside, if you will read to them and keep it in their minds. How will they be ready to come into the kingdom and really to obey Christ, unless they are taught the way and wherefore of our belief? They might be baptized because we wanted them to; but will they really know why, or what they will miss if they do not? It is the scattered and lonely ones who need to teach their little ones, when we have no opportunity to hear the gospel preached. Our children may never come into the kingdom while they are small and when they leave home and go out into the world they will never learn any more about Jesus, and may never come to him. O, the many anxious moments the dear ones at home spend praying and worrying over the "wandering boy," when it might have been different! Who will be to blame? Pray for us.

SISTER L. W.

THALIA, Texas, February 21.

Editors Herald: The HERALD and Ensign are welcome visitors every week; their contents are noted time and again, then given out to be read by outsiders. Brn. Renfro and S. W. Simmons held meetings for ten days in this neighborhood last August. While some were favorably impressed, others were opposed. About the time they were holding meetings I received a large roll of Ensigns. The sender has no idea how many read and reread those papers. Some took them, read and returned them. I am greatly in sympathy with the missionaries and if only I could, would do a great deal to help them, but God knows best.

Dear Saints, who gave us this beautiful gospel, God or man?

Who gave us an understanding, an intelligence that we may read, and know what we read? And if we pray, do we expect man to answer our petitions? Invariably no! Then if we expect the required blessings from God, let us try to do God's command. We should not try to correct our mistakes by criticising our brethren. I am not good; I am not perfect; but try to be myself at all times, as near as possible. I know I have many faults, and make many mistakes, but by God's help I hope to attain perfection enough to be counted worthy of the first resurrection. One thing I know of a surety, this latter-day work is divine, for I have had knowledge of its divinity revealed to me in more ways than one. I have had my children healed by administration; I have seen others healed; I have had dreams and seen visions that have been fulfilled. Some were given, as I believe, for warning against the adversary. While I myself have not been healed by administration, I know it is the lack of faith for myself. I can not exercise faith in my own behalf as I can for others.

Our dear aged Sr. Pittman, whom Bro. Renfro baptized last August, passed from this life to paradise January 22. Though she was quite aged, she attended meetings last August. She was glad she had been spared to accept the truth. She delighted in hearing Bro. Simmons preach, as she knew him when a lad. We also were glad to hear him, as it had been fifteen years since we heard him.

Your sister,

MRS. LIZZIE SKINNER.

BUTTE, Montana, February 26.

Editors Herald: I have been in the grip of la grippe for nearly two weeks; but under the kind care of the Saints at Bozeman, especially Bro. and Sr. J. H. Wells and Chloe, where I make my home principally, while there. I am up and on the move, getting along, only for coughing, sneezing, and spitting, annoying to myself and others. The brethren at Bozeman advised me to return home and let the further engagements at this end take care of themselves; but I could not get the consent of my mind to do so; hence came this far yesterday on the way to Blackfoot, Idaho, to attend the conference there next Saturday and Sunday. To-day I am well cared for at Bro. and Sr. Schroder's and Sund's.

The Bozeman conference, held last Saturday and Sunday, was a good one. An excellent feeling prevailed all through. The Saints felt rewarded for their efforts; and there are some good witnesses and workers for the cause in Montana. The young people are beginning to appreciate its worth more and more and are trying to be useful in its service. There is a good deal of merit connected with the little center of the faith about Bozeman, as well as at other points, and the Saints are resolved to hold the fort and go ahead. They have had a mild and pleasant winter here, the snow is said to be deep on the mountains which bodes good for summer crops. Hence it is thought there will surely be good crops in 1903.

Fraternally,

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

JASPER, Tennessee, February 20.

Editors Herald: You will find inclosed a clipping from the Toledo Blade, Thursday, February 12, which indicates the churches are bent on the overthrow of the latter-day work. But such efforts only bind us closer together. As the Saints come closer to a unity of the faith, Satan sees the need of a combined effort of all his forces to meet the work of God. When I see the enemy approaching our camp, I feel like saying, Come, brethren, let us lay down our little differences and put on the armor of righteousness, and live so we may always have the Spirit; then we can wield the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and we have nothing to fear. I believe the most of our differences are a lack of properly understanding one another.

I see the HERALD for some time has been criticised by some, and I might say I have come in for my part of it. But after a prayerful reflection I have thought best to leave the management of the church papers to the ones who have been put in charge of them. Let us pray for them that they may be able to help on the work with their labors. I am sure no Latter Day Saint can afford to do without the church papers.

There has been on my mind for several weeks a few thoughts in regard to the paying off of the college debt. I have had the misfortune to be in debt nearly ever since I came into the church. I will tell how I have managed to pay my debts for the last ten years. I found myself in debt some over two thousand dollars, and nothing much to pay with; only a farm partly paid for. So I put the matter before the Lord and asked him to open the way for me to pay my debts, and I would pay them; and be more careful in the future and not get in debt. So I was soon decided as to the proper way to meet my obligations. I determined to begin paying as fast as I could get the money. So when I got some money on hand I would pay some of my debts, not forgetting tithes and offerings. So in this way I kept on till I have paid all of them but a small amount, and I have the money in the bank to pay the last one off as soon as I go home again. In the time I have paid some over seventeen dollars on the college debt, and I will have enough money left after paying all of my other debts to make another payment on the college debt. So I shall continue to send in some money as I am able, till the debt is paid off; for I understand this college debt is a just one, and if all the Saints will not come to the front and pay their part of it, then we who will pay, must continue to do so, till the debt is settled in full. So brethren, do not think because you have paid in one time, you are released from the debt; no indeed, not till the last dollar is paid. So let us make a strong effort to pay off the debt by the close of the April conference.

I have been laboring hard for the last ten years to get out of debt and now I am almost out with all but the college debt, and I am going to pay all I can possibly spare by the close of the conference, April 6, 1903. Help me, brethren, to get in that condition that I have been laboring so hard to reach, where I can say I do not owe any one.

Am feeling well in the work. Many hard things to contend with in East Tennessee. The conference at Oakland, Kentucky, the 7th, was a success, though not entirely free from grumblers. But I suppose there will always be such. So let us all get hold of the same end of the rope and make a hard pull together the next conference year, and see the results. United we stand is the watchword. With a good will for all, and ill will to none, I remain as ever, strong in the faith,

C. L. SNOW.

The March "Arena."

The Arena for March opens with a lengthy but interesting and timely discussion of "Law and Human Progress," by Walter Clark, LL. D., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina. This is followed by an opinion on "The Moroccan Question," contributed by Edwin Maxey, LL. D., of Columbian University. "The Passing of Church Influence" is pointed out by Duane Mowry, LL. B. B. O. Flower has an instructive biographic article on Giuseppe Mazzini, the Italian patriot. W. S. U'Ren describes the operation of "The Initiative and Referendum in Oregon." An essay of unique interest and significance is "Zionism and Socialism," by Bernard G. Richards. A discussion of "The Rights of Children," by Carrie L. Grout, concludes the list of essays. An interview with Henrik G. Petersen, M. D., on "Hypno-Suggestion as a Therapeutic Agent," will especially interest students of advanced thought. Dr. Leander S. Keyser contributes a charming story entitled "The Impassable Gulf." Editor Flower's "Topics of the Times" and "Books of the Day" are instructive and entertaining, as usual. Editor McLean announces some excellent features for the April number.

Church Secretary's Notice.

RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE—TRANS-CONTINENTAL AND ROCKY MOUNTAIN TERRITORY.

The Trans-Continental Passenger Association has not granted the certificate plan rate to General Conference and Conventions, Independence, Missouri, April, 1903. However, the chairman makes the following announcement:

"I refer therein to a regular nine months' round trip rate from Pacific Coast points in California, Nevada, Washington, and Oregon, to Kansas City, which approximates two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and one third for the round trip.

"Tickets are not sold at two cents per mile in each direction, but round trip tickets are sold from Pacific Coast common points to Kansas City at round trip rate of $80.00. As stated, this approximates two cents per mile in each direction, or one fare and one third for the round trip. Single trip tickets are not sold on that basis eastbound to Kansas City or westbound from Kansas City. Your delegates will be required to purchase round trip tickets at the initial Pacific Coast point at the regular nine months rate of $80.00 as stated.

"This rate is in effect from Pacific Coast common points only. Should it happen that your delegates apply at a station on Pacific Coast from which the nine months rate is not in effect, which may be the case at very small unimportant stations, the agent will cheerfully ascertain and advise them the nearest point to his station from which such rate does apply.

"The states of Montana, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico are not within the territory of this Association, and I am unable to advise you of the rates which would apply from there to Independence for your convention."

Our people in the foregoing "Pacific Coast Territory" may be able to obtain even better rates than the above, by inquiry at large railroad points. Those living at remote stations should make inquiry from local or general passenger agents.

Those in Montana, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico, should inquire of agents of individual lines on which they live concerning rates. However, such (also those in Pacific Coast territory) may pay full regular fare to some point in Western Association territory, such as Denver, Cheyenne, etc., and purchase from said point to Independence, Missouri, obtaining certificates covering all tickets bought in Western Association territory. See previous notice in HERALD or Ensign covering said territory.

SOUTHEASTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Chairman of the above-named Association, which Association includes thirty-three railroads in the territory south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi Rivers, notifies us that because the attendance from the South is so slight, not one ticket being viséed by the joint agent at the General Conference of 1902, its lines do not feel justified in according the reduced rate. It is to be hoped that the growth of our work in the South will justify a better attendance therefrom in the future. When it does, there probably will be no trouble in obtaining the reduction, judging from the past treatment and statements of the railroad people therein.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 26, 1903.

RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS—CENTRAL PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Central Passenger Association has concurred with the Western and other associations in a rate of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to General Conference and Conventions to be held at Independence, Missouri, April, 1903.

1. Territory of Central Association: "Bounded on the east by Pittsburg, Salamanca, Buffalo, and Toronto; on the north by the line of, and including points on, the Grand Trunk Railway, from Toronto to Port Huron, thence via Lakes Huron and Michigan to Chicago; on the west by Peoria, Keokuk, Quincy, Hannibal, St. Louis and Cairo; and on the south by the Ohio River, but including points on either side of that river."

2. Going tickets may be purchased from April 1 to 6, in this territory. "If through tickets can not be purchased at the starting point, tickets should be purchased to the nearest point where such through ticket can be obtained, and there purchase through to place of meeting, and a certificate from the ticket agent at the point where each purchase is made should be requested." Reduction in this territory applies only to tickets costing seventy-five cents or over. Failure to obtain certificate showing payment of full first-class fare to Independence, Missouri, will invalidate any claim for reduced fare of one third of regular rate on return trip. Return tickets may be purchased as late as April 23.

3. Certificates should contain holder's name, and be delivered to the Church Secretary promptly on arrival, at the conventions or conference. When filled and signed and stamped by the secretary, and the joint agent of the Western Association, the holder is entitled to limited return ticket, over same route as going ticket, at one third regular fare. Joint Agent will be present April 8, 9, and 10, and certificate holders must be present on one of said dates to receive certificates from Joint Agent personally.

4. Passengers buying tickets from Kansas City to Independence, to complete journey, must obtain certificates showing purchase to place of meeting over regular railroad lines, and not over local cable or electric roads running between said points. For further particulars, see Western Association notice, in previous number of HERALD and Ensign.

5. Transportation lines included: Ann Arbor R. R., B. & O. R. R., B. & O. S. W. R. R., Bessemer and Lake Erie R. R., C. & O. Ry., C. & E. I. R. R., Chicago & Erie and Erie R. R., C. I. & E. Ry., C. General High Council.

The High Council of the church is hereby called to meet at Independence, Missouri, on Wednesday, April 8, 1903, during the ensuing General Conference, for the purpose of trying one or more cases on appeal to said Council. As many of the Council as can conveniently be present are requested to report for the consideration of the matters stated.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 26, 1903.

JOSEPH SMITH,
For Presidency.

Notice to the High Priests.

Please take notice that paragraph 1 of questions, as found on page 3 of "Program," should read 98:4 instead of 93:4 as printed. Also paragraph 3 should read 42:8-10 instead of 42:3, 10. Am unable to say where or how the error originated. If any have failed to receive copy of blank report form and copy of program please notify me and others will be sent. Last year two or three were lost in transit, or by forwarding. H. A. Stebbins, secretary of Quorum.

Third Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: General Conference will soon be here, and we shall be pleased to meet as many of the members as can conveniently attend. Will you kindly send us full reports of your labors in the past conference year? Many of our active laborers are drawn from our quorum to fill higher positions in the church, and we are thankful we can furnish these from time to time. Thus our worthy president was selected last conference to occupy higher, leaving this quorum without a president. In the past you have labored faithfully and I trust this year when your reports are read we will find you have not been behind in good work. Please send your reports. Charles P. Faul, secretary, Stewartville, Missouri.

Notices.

To all the Saints in the British Isles Mission: We the undersigned hereby give notice that, according to resolution of the last mission conference held in August, 1902, at Birmingham, the next annual conference of the mission will be held in the city of Leeds on the first Saturday, Sunday, and Monday of August, 1903, beginning at 6:30 p. m. Saturday. Particulars as to hall, committee arrangements, etc., will be announced later. Gomer T. Griffiths, John W. Rushton, W. R. Armstrong, secretary, 10 Rye Street, C.-on-M., Manchester, England.

This is to again notify the Saints concerned that the Mt. Grove and John's Mill Branches have been disorganized, and that you are requested, as per General Conference resolution, to unite with the nearest or most convenient branch to where you now reside. Please write me for letters of removal, with instructions. J. C. Chrestensen, district secretary, Beaver, Douglas County, Missouri.

Conference Notices.

St. Louis District quarterly conference will convene in the Rock Church, 1240 Glasgow Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday evening, March 21, 1903, at 8 o'clock. John G. Smith, district secretary.

Southern Missouri conference will convene with the Springfield Branch, Saturday, March 21, 10 a. m. Reports, petitions, and communications, should be in the hands of the secretary, 728 Garfield Avenue, Springfield, Missouri, on or before March 18. Remember last conference resolutions, and come prepared to choose delegates to General Conference. A. M. Baker, district president; J. C. Chrestensen, district secretary.

Died.

SPRINGER.—At Republic City, Kansas, February 19, 1903, Sr. Mary A. Springer, aged 78 years, 3 months, and 21 days. She was baptized near Far West, Missouri, May 21, 1837. United with the Reorganized Church in 1861. She kept the faith all through the years and passed peacefully to rest at the home of the daughter and son-in-law, Mr. Seth and Sr. Eudora Jones. Funeral services were held at Republic on Sunday afternoon, February 22, by request of the family, Bro. H. A. Stebbins spoke in memory of her and her life at the service in Lamoni the same afternoon.

JONES.—At the home of her daughter, near Delta, Colorado, August 29, 1902, Sr. Elizabeth Jones, aged 87 years, 9 months, 23 days. Was born in Wales and came with her husband to America in 1858. He died in 1876 in Harrison County, Missouri. She was baptized June 6, 1886, by H. A. Stebbins. She was a woman of gentle grace and loving spirit, meek and patient. Funeral services by Bro. M. L. Schmid, and on request of family, a memorial sketch of her life and character was given at Lamoni, Iowa, by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, on February 22, 1903.

BODEN.—At her home in Centerville, Iowa, February 17, of paralysis, Sr. Ann Boden, aged 58 years, 2 months, 2 days. She was a faithful and devoted Saint, and it can well be said of her, "She hath done what she could." Funeral February 19, with sermon by Elder John Smith.

HUDSON.—At Columbus, Nebraska, February 15, 1903, of apoplexy, Bro. Henry J. Hudson; was born November 28, 1822, London, England; baptized July 30, 1865, by Z. S. Martin; ordained an elder July 30, 1865, by Elder H. S. Smith, and a high priest April 11, 1870, by W. W. Blair, Josiah Ells, and E. C. Briggs; married November 10, 1844, at London, England, to Miss Sarah Shefford; emigrated to America in 1851. To them were born thirteen children, eight of whom survive, namely, Mrs. J. H. Galley, Mrs. J. C. Echols, Mrs. Richard Jenkinson, Mrs. C. E. Pollock, Mrs. W. H. Winterbotham, Charles, Horace, and James. He filled many public positions of honor and trust, and it may well be said of him, "He lived to brighten and to bless the lives of his fellow men." Burial service conducted by the Odd Fellows of which order he was a member for more than sixty years. Sermon by A. H. Smith.

BUTTS.—Elton Alma, son of Bro. and Sr. J. E. Butts, born at Decatur, Nebraska, December 12, 1901, and died February 14, 1903, being 1 year, 2 months, and 2 days old. Buried February 16, 1903, at Decatur, from the Methodist church. Sermon by Elder James Caffall, assisted by Elder James Huff.

HOWARD.—Sarah Sulgrove was born in Montgomery County, Ohio, November 14, 1815; married Samuel Howard in 1836; died at her home in Sac City, Iowa, February 21, 1903, aged 87 years, 3 months, 7 days. Eight children, twenty-four grandchildren, fourteen great-grandchildren, and seven great-great-grandchildren survive her. She united with the church several years ago. The church books and papers were her daily companions. Her daughters, Srs. Avis C. Lane and Rachel Howard, are faithful Saints and gave her much comfort in her declining days. Funeral from Baptist church in Sac City; sermon by C. J. Hunt.

In the World's Work for March half a dozen articles of unusual and timely importance stand out from a well varied list of contents. Lawrence Perry describes his own personal experience in the Marconi Station at Cape Cod when Marconi was sending messages to England, and shows clearly what commercial wireless telegraphy will mean; Charles M. Harvey has written a stirring article about Ohio after 100 years, instinct with the spirit of American progress; Frederic C. Howe has characterized Chicago as a municipal and social organization; Teaching as a Profession, by William McAndrew, gives a really national view of the attitude of teachers toward their life work; Doctor A. T. Bristow, the president of the New York Medical Society, describes interesting recent advances in medicine and surgery; and John Callan O'Laughlin writes of some of the international questions the Venezuelan dispute has raised. Beside these six striking features may be mentioned two fully illustrated stories, one on the Modern Hotel by Albert Bigelow Paine, and the other by Overton W. Price about Saving the Southern Forests, and briefer articles about the Carnegie Institution—by Doctor D. C. Gilman, its president,—A Statement of the American Aim, Widening the Use of the Public Schools, Why Shakespeare Is Not Understood, and German Tendencies in South America. In a particularly long and varied March of Events a series of editorials on the Negro problem need special mention, and in Among the World's Workers a series upon "Adapting Our Exports to the Foreign Trade."

The Cosmopolitan magazine for March contains a number of noteworthy articles. "The Police Systems of Europe," by Avery D. Andrews, formerly Police Commissioner of New York, embodies many of the results of the investigations of the author on his recent official visit to Europe, where he went to study the police systems of the leading countries. It is capably illustrated. "The Selection of a Home," by Clarence A. Martin, Professor of Architecture at Cornell University, is the first of twelve articles on the general subject of "How to Administer a Household." Louise Parks Richards contributes an interesting personal sketch of the great painter, Von Lenbach. Two other character sketches deal with James Brooks Dill, the prominent corporation lawyer, and Edward Henry Harriman, the Western Railroad Czar. Elbert Hubbard, in an article on "A Gladiatorial Renaissance," makes out a strong case against football as it is Watson; "An Appeal (by a Buddhist)," by Charles Bainwell; "Idea Prior to all Things," D. E. Wagenhals. The Metaphysical Magazine is published quarterly by the Philosophic Company, New York.

Making a Garden.

The home-garden is for the affections, says Country Life in America. It is for quality. Its size is wholly immaterial if only it have the best. I do not mean the rarest or the costliest; but the best,—the best geranium or the best lilac. Even the fruit-garden and the vegetable-garden are also for the affections: one can buy ordinary fruits and vegetables—it never pays to grow them in the home-garden. When you want something superior, you must grow it or else buy it, at an advanced price, directly from some one who grows from quality and not for quantity. If you want the very choicest and the most personal products, almost necessarily you must grow them: the value of these things can not be measured in money. The commercial gardener may grow what the market wants, and the market wants chiefly what is cheap and good-looking. The home gardener should grow what the market can not supply, else the home-garden is not worth the while.

Sending Wireless Messages with Marconi.

Marconi opened the door, and we entered a room where few have been. The center of this place was filled with great box-like Leyden jars; while at the easterly side was the magnetic-detector which has replaced the coherer in receiving messages; on the south side was the induction coil and great zinc and copper tanks of oil. Over the Leyden jars, which occupied the greater portion of the room, were four huge sheets of zinc bound with copper. On the concrete floor were rubber mats, and the walls and low ceilings were of hardwood. Here some important devices were completed late in January and some important discoveries made. Queer instruments, stored in all parts of the room, evidently played their part in the general scheme. On a northerly wall over a platform were tables with a brass sending key and a great wooden lever also used for sending. Marconi stood on this platform, his hand resting near the sender.

"Now," he said, "when I signal to the electrician, fifty thousand volts will come into the room. Stand up here by me and don't touch anything. Keep away from those jars, because the current does not wait for you to touch it. It will jump to you."

I confess I stood as close to Marconi on the little platform as I could.

This scene is indelibly stamped in my memory; the room, packed with its queer, mysterious instruments, of some of which the electrical world knows nothing, and that slight, youthful figure of Marconi, with his eyes fixed on the indicator, his sensitive hands on the key.

"All ready!" he cried to the electrician who stood in the power-room watching the inventor through the long connecting hallway. A lever was pulled and a dim hum filled the room. The indicator of the volt-meter began to race past all sorts of high figures on the face of the dial.

"Now I'll send to Poldhu." He pressed the key.

There was a blinding flash of bluish light, for with each movement of the key great sparks jumped two inches between the two silvered knobs of the induction coil. One knob of this coil is connected with the earth, forming the ground connection, the other with the wire leading to the aerial wires. Each spark means an oscillating impulse from the battery to the aerial wire, and from the wire the oscillations of ether occur which carry through space at the speed of one hundred eighty-seven thousand miles a second. With the blinding flash accompanying each movement of the key occurs a report to be compared accurately with the noise attending the discharge of a Krag-Jorgenson rifle. It was terrifying—the light, the noise, and in the midst of it all the inventor calmly pressing the key, making more noise, more light. Imagine a company of infantry firing at will in a tunnel and you can understand the sound that accompanies sending a message. Marconi, who stuffs cotton in his ears when sending, is now experimenting to deaden this sound. But somehow, to one impressed by the fact that here, in this very room, a message was being sent through the air across that gloomy stretch of three thousand miles of ocean, the noise and the light seemed fitting—gave the proper touch of the superhuman, of force, of intensity.—Lawrence Perry, in World's Work.

Country Life in America.

The March number of Country Life in America marks the highest achievement of the most beautiful magazine published in this country. Like the "Christmas Annual" the "Gardening Manual" is a double number of about one hundred pages which sells for fifty cents.

The pictures are superb. Every department of gardening is covered by practical and inspiring articles. Professor L. H. Bailey the editor and leading horticulturist of the country, writes of "The Home Garden." Colonel Verbeck tells how he made his charming Japanese garden. Warren H. Manning, the noted landscape gardener of Boston, explains "How to Make a Formal Garden at Moderate Cost." "School Gardens" and the work of the Philadelphia Vacant Lots Cultivation are strong features. "The Home Vegetable Article" contains novel ideas for doing away with drudgery. The Sargent Estate shows the finest American example of natural landscape gardening ever pictured. "Why and How I Made My Country Home" tells the evolution of Mr. W. C. Egan's home at Highland Park, Illinois, which has an international reputation for its floriculture. Other interesting features are "The Improvement of the Back Yard," "Wild Flowers for the Home Window" and "How to Save a Tree in the Road."

Forests in Nebraska's Sand Hills.

WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, February 18, 1903.—The task of growing valuable forests on the barren sand-hills of Nebraska will begin this spring, when the Bureau of Forestry will seed about one hundred acres of the Dismal River Forest Reserve near Halsey with Red Cedar and Jack Pine. If the seeding succeeds and is done with economy, the Bureau will seed and plant the following year probably one thousand acres in cedar and pines and will ultimately extend the forest by gradual plantings over a large part of the two hundred eight thousand acres in the Dismal River and Niobrara reserves.

A nursery has been established at Halsey, in the valley of the Middle Loup River, with a half-acre seed bed protected by laths. A tool house and office buildings have been built. Nearly six hundred pounds of seed, principally Western Yellow Pine, Red Cedar, and Jack Pine, has been collected for planting in the spring.

The sand-hills are unfit for agriculture. If large forests can be grown on them, the timber will be of very great value to a country now without trees, where lumber brings high prices.

AN UNTRUE STATEMENT.

Some of those who have written on the subject of Mormonism, in referring to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in Carthage Jail, Illinois, June 27, 1844, make the statement that Joseph Smith and his companions, his brother Hyrum, Doctor Willard Richards, and John Taylor, were armed; one writer going so far as to state that the mob instead of meeting men professing to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior were met by men well armed with revolvers. This is a great mistake, Joseph Smith and his three companions took no arms of any kind into the jail with them, unless a common walking stick, carried by Hyrum Smith, or Doctor Richards, may be called a weapon. The only firearm in possession of the four at the time of the attack upon the jail was a small Allen's five-barrelled revolver, a weapon some four inches in length and familiarly called "one of Allen's pepper-boxes." This was handed to the prophet by Philo Dibble, one of the few visitors permitted to visit the men in the jail after their incarceration there not more than two or three hours before the tragedy. This was done by Bro. Dibble, as he stated with a view to the idea that he thought it possible that the Prophet might be subjected to a personal attack while passing to and from the jail in attending the sessions of court during his trial, if he should be allowed a hearing.

It is stated that with this weapon Joseph Smith fired through the half opened door as the mob rushed up the stairway; and that only two of the charges exploded, the other three failed to explode. The Prophet declined to accept the weapon, but on bidding him good-bye at the door Bro. Dibble slipped it into his hand and was gone.

Joseph Smith was not a "nonresistant." He believed it to be the duty of man to defend his family and home from unlawful aggression, and himself from personal injury under certain conditions; and it is only fair to his memory to believe that under the sudden attack of the mob the spirit of self-defense prompted the use of the only weapon at hand. Neither he nor his companions carried arms, or went to Carthage carrying concealed weapons. Those who state that they were armed know nothing of the facts in the case, and those who find fault with Joseph Smith for an attempt to defend himself and comrades NEVER hesitate to do a good action when moved to do it by an occasion where you may help some one to a better idea of human sympathy and helpfulness. Never ask God to do for you what you can do for yourself. Never ask him to prove a truth to you twice. It is a waste of time and dishonors him.

do not know, or forget the conditions of peril and excitement prevailing at the time, and fail to credit the men attacked with the element of ordinary human bravery, hopeless as the case must have appeared to them when they saw the nature of the attack made upon them.

THE PASSING OF THE POPE.—LEO XIII.

Few men have lived and filled so important and exalted a position during a period of so much interest and worth to the world as has the present occupant of the papal chair at the Vatican, Rome, Italy.

Forty-two of the fifty-seven cardinals who will form the college whose duty it shall be to choose a successor to Pope Leo, are already gathered at Rome ready to engage in the work assigned them. Of this remarkable man an editorial in the Chicago Tribune for February 21, 1903, had the following in regard to his position and the church he has so long presided over.

ONE OF THREE.

Yesterday Vincent Joachim Pecci arrived at a distinction which only two other men in the history of the world have been able to claim. St. Peter was one of these men, according to the Catholic contention. Pius IX was the other. Vincent Joachim Pecci, as Leo XIII, now joins St. Peter and Pius IX in being able to look back over twenty-five years as head of the Holy Roman Church. The man put in any office, no matter how light its duties may be, when he is nearly sixty-eight years old hardly can expect to retain it for a quarter of a century. Yet the pope has done it. He has outlived all the men save one who were cardinals when he was elected. He may outlive that cardinal, for, though he will be ninety-three years old next month, he has a wonderful hold on life. He has a frail body, but his mental powers are unimpaired. He can still write Latin verses which his juniors can not equal.

The position which Leo XIII fills has in itself, quite apart from the character of the man who occupies it, a totally sufficient amount of grandeur and glamour. To be the infallible spiritual guide of a multitude of people, perhaps a sixth of the population of the world; to derive from the chief of the apostles through two hundred fifty-five intermediaries a primacy of honor and of authority among Christian folk; to be seated in this ineffable honor in the city of Rome, imperial and eternal; to operate a governing machinery of patriarch, metropolitans, archbishops, bishops, priests, and innumerable orders of monks, friars, and nuns, a machinery which in delicacy and efficiency is the wonder of the world; to have interests and duties in connection with every nation in either hemisphere; to watch all things, political and ecclesiastical, on behalf of an organization which has its tendrils in every cranny and crevice of the social structure of all Europe and America, and many parts of Asia and Africa—what position has earth to show which can compare with this for eminence of standpoint, breadth of view, and reach of power? To have occupied such a position for the flicker of a single moment would be worth a lifetime of preparation. To have occupied it for twenty-five years is an achievement on which Vincent Joachim Pecci may look back with almost as much natural fear as righteous pride. His responsibilities and his honors have been equally great.

What a book could a man who has been pope twenty-five years write! Mr. Bryce described the operation of the machinery of the American commonwealth. No one has yet described in the same way the operation of the machinery of that much larger and much more complicated organization, the Roman church. To observe the wheels, chains, bands, rods, pistons, and levers of that machinery and then to describe them for the information of the world would be to accomplish a thing second in interest to no literary labor that has ever been undertaken. The Roman church, as a going concern, has never been adequately written up. There is the journalistic fact in journalistic language. But only a statesman and a philosopher will ever be able to scan, mark, and draw the stupendous outlines of such an edifice as that of which Leo XIII is to-day "the head of the corner."

"THE FOUNDER OF MORMONISM."

Under the above caption there was issued from the press of Dodd, Mead, and Company, of New York, last fall, a book written by I. Woodbridge Riley, with an introduction by George Trumbull Ladd, professor of psychology in Yale University. The "study" was offered to Yale University as a thesis for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. In his preface the author says:

The aim of this work is to examine Joseph Smith's character and achievements from the standpoint of recent psychology. Sectarious and phrenologists, spiritualists and mesmerists have variously interpreted his more or less abnormal performances,—it now remains for the psychologist to have a try at them.

He opens his first chapter as follows:

To read the flux of books on the founder of Mormonism, one might think there were no middle course between vilification and deification. To sectarians Joseph Smith appears an ignoramus, a fanatic, an impostor, and a libertine; to his followers—a prophet, a seer, a vicegerent of God, and a martyr. While two generations of writers have been presenting Smith's character in its mental and moral extremes, they have been ignoring the all-important physical basis of his personality. If a solution of his perplexing individuality is wanted, the pathological grounds must be examined. The state of his body goes far to explain the state of his mind, and his ancestry to explain both. Like the distorted views of his grandfather "Crooked-necked Smith" Joseph's mental abnormalities are to be connected with physical ills.

With this introduction and indication of what his line of attack will be, the author delves into history, having had at his disposal the Berrian collection of works on Mormonism, and attempts to show that there was in the Smith family a strain of epilepsy so marked and apparent that he remarks on page 19:

"The study of the Mormon leader's ancestry is more than a study in atavism: nature has not skipped a generation. The erratic tendencies in Joseph's mind appear constitutional because they are continuous."

Somewhat of the author's plan of developing his subject can be discovered from the headings of the various chapters, which are as follows: "Ancestry and Dreams." "Environment and Visions." "The Book of Mormon: The Documents." "The Book of Mormon: The Sources." "The Author's Mentality." "Prophet, Seer and Revelator." "Joseph the Occultist." "Joseph the Exorcist." "Joseph the Faith Healer." "Final Activities."

There are five appendices to the book, as follows:

"Contents of the Book of Mormon," in which the contents of the Book of Mormon is briefly summarized. "Epilepsy and the Visions," in which the author discusses how the visions of Joseph Smith are due to the diseased epileptic brain inherited from five generations of ancestry. "The Spalding-Rigdon Theory of the Book of Mormon." "Polygamy and Hypnotism." "Bibliography."

The appendix devoted to the second subject opens as follows:

The diagnosis of an apparent epilepsy in Smith's visionary seizures is difficult for three reasons:—first, the descriptions come from incompetent observers; second, the paroxysms present great diversity of form; third, there is an absence of definite pathological stigmata. There are no photographs extant from which cranial malformations might be observed; yet all the portraits of Smith show an inferior cranial angle, and an overdeveloped cerebellum.

But the prognosis is assured from the antecedents of the patient. The case is not idiopathic; there are known causes furnishing grandfather an almost complete etiology. Foremost is heredity. Joseph's maternal had "fits." The hallucinations of Solomon Mack at the age of twenty-six, have been already traced to temporary causes, such as rheumatism.

And so he goes on to trace the epileptic strain, and closes the chapter in this way:

Finally, as to Joseph's relief from these seizures: there seems to have been a spontaneous cure in his twenty-third year. This recovery was facilitated positively by the infrequency of his attacks, negatively by the fact that the seizures were of the non-vertiginous variety. Whether these youthful experiences seriously affected his mind is to be determined only from a view of his whole public life from the time he was tarred and feathered by a mob to his last days of colossal egotism. The prophet's mental soundness is a question for the alienist to decide. Nevertheless parsimony demands a cautious judgment, for in decided reaction against the opinion formerly maintained, it has been proved by statistics, that alienation occurs only if the epileptic seizures follow in unusually rapid succession.

Mr. Riley's theory is a new one, and will be received with a smile of amused unbelief by those who knew Joseph Smith, the Martyr, as a man in robust manhood's health, and never had a fit in his life.

It may be a scientific assertion that where the manifestation of revelation is claimed, or had, that the one passing under the influence of inspiration is an epileptic, and the manifestations the result of a diseased body; but such a scientific deduction lacks verification in the case of Joseph Smith.

It seems easy for a professor who is hard pressed for a topic on which to air his acquirements, or to secure a little notoriety as a writer, to turn to the subject of Mormonism or the Mormons, or Joseph Smith. One of the latest of these is the above-named I. Woodbridge Riley.

The period of Joseph Smith, Jr.'s, activity was fourteen years, and one project a year would be but fourteen in all not a very serious number for any ordinary man of business.

Many of the Prophet's projects were correlative and so interdependent that they were practically one in consideration, and an action in one would be the type or example for others, and none would demand the whole of his time to the exclusion of all the rest.

The United Finn and Safety Bank, lived for a brief time only and were not renewed after the exodus from Ohio to Missouri in 1837. What Professor Riley may mean by the United Finn may be explained in the book, but the review does not state.

What sort of an ancestry and environments must have existed in the case of such men as Riley and others, who are so industriously misrepresenting and lying about Joseph Smith and Mormonism? "Ye are of your father, the devil" might well apply in several of these cases.

It is well that Mr. Riley and Mr. Linn disagree as to the part Sidney Rigdon played in the religious movement inaugurated in the instituting of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in 1830; for, upon the idea that a "lie well stuck to is as good as the truth half told," that Spalding-Rigdon manuscript story has not been well stuck to by any means. It would not be a suggestion amiss that the several advocates of that theory as to the origin of the Book of Mormon and the faith of the Latter Day Saints, should get together and agree as to the ingredients of that lie and the form of its being told, in order not to injure its efficiency by a conflict in its telling. An epileptic indeed! We are left to wonder if Isaiah, Malachi, and all others of the ancient prophets were epileptics, also. Would so-called scientists thus dispose of the Bible heroes for whom revelations and prophecies are claimed, in order to dispose of the things stated by them?

There is a spice of comfort in this new idea, it does away with Mr. Thurlow Weed's theory that Joseph Smith was "a crazy man or a shallow imposter."

We wonder if Mr. Riley is a Presbyterian.

THE following editorial appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer for March 4, and was probably called out by President Joseph Smith's article in the March North American Review:

A MORMON ON POLYGAMY.

It is a rather interesting fact that the weak spots in the anti-polygamy legislation should be pointed out to us by a Mormon. Joseph Smith, President of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, son of the founder of Mormonism, has performed this task in a most interesting way. That he has done so calls attention to the fact, not very generally understood, that there are two Mormon churches, one which is practically that of Brigham Young, whose corner-stone was (if not is) polygamy, and another, much smaller, which was a revolt against Young and his pretended revelations concerning plural wives.

This President Smith is not to be confounded with the President Smith of what might be called the "regular organization," though both lay claim to that position. He is against polygamy and always has been. Indeed there was a much larger secession from the church when Brigham Young had polygamy "revealed" to him than is generally supposed. It is not much to the credit of human nature and good morals that the Youngites grew much faster than the secessionists.

It appears, according to the reactionary Smith, that the responsibility for polygamy rests on Congress and not on the Mormon church in either branch. The Mormon faith prescribes that the law of the land shall be obeyed, but inasmuch as no attempt was made until recently to enforce the law, it fell into contempt. The trouble arose from viewing polygamy as a religious rite and not as a crime. Even the Edmunds Law, the enabling act to permit Utah to attain statehood, and the Constitution adopted under it are so worded that polygamy has flourished and will continue to do so until drastic measures are taken. At present those who contracted polygamous marriages before statehood or in States other than Utah are practically unpunishable under the law, while those who at present contract plural marriages escape because the only punishment is a fine so light as to be nominal, while the actual proof of polygamy is difficult to obtain. No Gentile is permitted to enter the Temple, yet there most of the polygamous marriages are celebrated. About the only proof that is accepted in the courts is birth of children, and the punishment is less severe than in any other State.

President Smith says that polygamy exists and will continue to exist in Utah until Congress passes laws to prohibit it, which is not the case at present. He thinks the Mormons fooled Congress, and it is going to be very difficult for Congress to accomplish its purposes now that Utah is a State. All of which is very interesting taken in connection with Elder Smoot's statement that there are about eight hundred confessed polygamists in the church at present.

THE ICARIAN COMMUNITY AT NAUVOO.

The following by A. Linge appeared in the Nauvoo Independent for February 18. It will be of interest to our readers, as it shows a phase of the history of that interesting town not generally known:

As our beautiful city of Nauvoo has often been written about for its historical events, about the Mormon era, and as another historical event took place in the early fifties, it may not be amiss here to give the details as authentic as possible, and as he was a member it may interest those who will peruse this article.

Icaria was a French community organized and experimented to practice by Cabet, the Utopian. It took place shortly after the Mormon era in Nauvoo. I must say first that many citizens of this present time, living in Nauvoo and surroundings then, are familiar with its existence; besides I must say that very accurate details have been written by the able pen of our friend, Mr. E. Vallet, and were published through the columns of the Gate City, of Keokuk, Iowa. He was also a member with his family.

But as I contrast the existence of man as he is and compare the great Utopian communistic dream, I am constrained to say that this world would have been a heaven on earth if it could have been made practicable.

In the early fifties my good parents left their native country, Gien, France, to come to America, coming directly from New York to Nauvoo to practice Cabetism. Now as I have the date of our new venture I must confess that I was very young, hence as a youth, I was at the mercy and destiny of this great social community. As I became old enough I became a close observer and as I was placed at school, I remember well yet its training, rules, and regulations. I will therefore give here its system of education. First, pupils were not permitted to go home until Sunday, as the Institute contained lodging and dining apartments. Girls were on one side and boys on the other. When school was out the girls and boys had access to their respective yards. The schoolhouse was the stone building owned by Mr. Knaust and Mrs. Bossler to-day. It was built by the Icarians out of the ruins of the Mormon temple. As school would be called the scholars had to be prompt getting to their seats, and all the branches of education that were taught consist of what goes to make up a pretty well educated adult. Spelling, grammar, reading, penmanship, arithmetic, geography, natural history, singing, music, drawing, and even the art of sculpture were taught. To illustrate the system of our professors to encourage the students to excel in all studies taught, I herewith explain its formalities and principles. On every Saturday bulletins would be issued, upon each sheet being printed at the heading, "Bulletin." Then each department or branch of learning was named also by print. On the last day of each week every scholar was given one of those bulletins. They were filled out by the professors who denoted the progress made by each student in each. This I must say was for the learning part. Now comes the beautiful part of the object lesson, but perhaps not always to the satisfaction of the pupil. On the second part of the bulletin, the scholar's conduct would be defined. That is, as to behavior in the many different dispositions of character. It reads thus: Yes, or No,—Attentive, Studious, Docile, Sincere, Polite, Fraternal, Clean, etc. Ye scribe must confess that he had his share of Noes as well as Yeses. It is needless to say here how a fellow felt when he saw many Noes, as he went home greeting his parents, with this little complimentary bulletin that he had to present them.

On the third of February of every year the Icarian community would celebrate in honor of what they called the Avant-gard. The celebration consisted of a great banquet at their city hall. The hall was situated where John Haas' city hall stands to-day, only it extended clear to the corner with a wing addition that was the kitchen department. A sumptuous dinner was prepared in which all members participated, us kids not excepted. The exercises consisted of toasts, songs, and all that goes to make a merry, gala-day. But the principal feature that time of my recollection, was a great theatrical play given by the scholars of the school, to complete the night festivities, accompanied by a grand ball. The play was entitled Vatel. Our teachers selected the required personages for the play, and as in the caste of characters it required an ambassador, I was chosen to fill the rôle of that distinguished officer. Being nine or ten years old then, I may add here that I was undoubtedly the youngest ambassador of foreign affairs ever appointed. Before the usual time for the opera, the manager would always have a certain amount of tickets admitting free the citizens of Nauvoo and vicinity who wished to participate in the festivities. They naturally availed themselves of the opportunity. The spectators enjoyed immensely the juvenile comedy, by manifesting compliments to us all for the caste each rendered so well.

The Icarians were a jovial as well as an industrious people, and above all, they had a great fondness and faith in the Golden Rule. It is true they had no church in which it was taught, yet its manifestation was displayed in their hall by readings, painted in artistic letters, the natural precept of Christianity. During their existence of ten to twelve years in Nauvoo, I never heard of a single uncivil offense committed. They had no marshal, police, or jail. They had no use for them. They were a great people for music. Their band at one time consisted of thirty-five pieces, and it was led and trained by an expert professor of Paris. I remember well, on several occasions they were invited by the citizens of Nauvoo to participate with them in celebrating the glorious Fourth of July. They with their band headed by their old friend, Major Bidamon, with his patriotic costume and cavalry horse, and others, marched, followed by a line of two by two cavalry troupe, their families in wagons completing the parade. Carriages and buggies were almost unknown in those days.

In conclusion I must say that the cause of dissension was on account of lack of financial prosperity. But I believe that the moral and intellectual theory proved highly commendable.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it compulsory for a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to place his letter in a branch where there is trouble existing? Is it wisdom?

Is it legal and just for a branch to pass a standing resolution granting to members of the church not members of the branch, but residing in the vicinity the right and privilege of voting, and taking part in the transaction of such business as generally comes up before a branch meeting? Point to some law prohibiting the passing of such resolutions.

In adopting resolutions requiring members to place their letters of removal, or certificates of membership in branches nearest, most convenient to them, no such contingency as "trouble existing in the branch" was thought of or provided for; the proper supposition being that the branches ought to be and are in normal, that is, in proper running conditions. It is not wisdom that branches should be in a troubled condition.

A branch may at any time invite members of the church not members of the branch to take part in their business affairs, by a vote of courtesy. There is no rule in regard to it. It would hardly be just, however, for members of the church living in the jurisdiction of a branch to accept of such act of courtesy, take part in the business affairs of the branch, and refuse to put their letters in as members, it would hardly be an act of good faith either to the branch or the church at large. There is no specific rule upon the point.

During the millennium period, will measures be taken for instructing, in all branches of knowledge, children and those who have died comparatively ignorant? In short, will the millennial period be one of learning and instruction; or does the teaching that we shall know as we are known imply that we shall be filled with a fullness of knowledge at the beginning of that period? If instruction is to be given, will there be schools as we have them now; if not, why not?

To reply to this question to any length would be to present a series of thoughts or opinions largely speculative. However, the belief of the general ministry is largely in effect that the millennial period is to be one of increased and marked acquirement of knowledge, that the removal of the restricting influence attaching to the life in the flesh opens up before the sentient being, the reunited spirit and its body given it of God, the boundless universe, into which in any and every direction the freed man may venture in search of knowledge, his faculty for acquiring what he seeks perfected by the transition from the fleshly existence to the spiritual condition beyond death.

Whatever means may be requisite over there to aid the inquiring spirit, we may rest assured it will be effectual for the end sought after. But what the way and manner we can only conjecture. The child may grow up without sin; and if so it will increase in physical and intellectual development.

We believe in unbroken progression so far as the acquirement of knowledge is concerned; and that at the resurrection the quickened spirit and body will have reached the height of perfected being, in which the faculties of development are completed and full. Whether there will be schools and colleges, or teachers, we have no absolute means of knowing. We are impressed, however, that what a man may acquire here will better fit him for an advancement over there. So we are decidedly in favor of education here.

Is there any knowledge to be had at present in regard to when the propagation of the human race will cease? Is there any teaching to show that it will continue into the millennial period?

None of which we are informed. Some affect to believe that a certain class, the quickened, will propagate their species, the resurrected not. The Utah folks seem to hold that unless men and women are celestially married here they can not be hereafter, and hence remain isolated from companionship on the other side; while those "married or sealed" after the "celestial order" are to build worlds, propagate their kind, build up their kingdom and inhabit the worlds made by them. But so much of all this is built upon that disputed revelation which is held to be the basis for human polygamy in the church, that we do not accept either the basic principle or what is built upon it. The Scriptures have but little teaching on which to base the belief, and that is principally from inference and some legendary teaching.

Does the church hold that Christ preached to the spirits in prison during the time his body was in the sepulcher? If so, why?

The church has assumed no position on the point questioned. But the consensus of opinion among the ministry is that the preaching to spirits in prison was done while the body lay in the tomb. Because the preaching was done in the spirit; there being no sufficient proofs that Christ in his resurrected body went into the confines of the prison.

THE following clipping from the Daily Mail, of London, for January 17, is sent us by Bro. Rushton. It may be of interest to our readers:

OLDEST BIBLICAL MANUSCRIPT.

One of the most important and valuable biblical discoveries of recent years has just been made in Syria, says our Cairo correspondent.

All who are interested in the Holy Scriptures will be pleased to learn that one of the oldest—if not the oldest known—of Hebrew manuscripts of the Bible has come to light. The document has been brought to Cairo from Syria, and purchased by Mr. Khaleel Sabra. It consists of the five books of the Pentateuch, written in Samaritan characters on gazelle parchment, in the year 116 of the Moslem era, which is equivalent to 735 A. D. It is, therefore, far older than any of the Hebrew manuscripts of the Bible to be found in the libraries of Europe and America.

A comparison with the present Hebrew Bible shows several important differences. Directly after the decalogue there occurs in the manuscript a passage of about fifteen lines which does not exist in the actual version of the Bible. This alone is likely to clear up several important disputes which have for long existed.

Mr. George Zeidan, a member of the Royal Asiatic Society, and a well-known Arabic author and historian, has been temporarily intrusted with the custody of the precious manuscript in Cairo. Any one interested may inspect it.

Inquiries from a high authority at the British Museum yesterday, where no information of the document had been received, elicited the statement that if the date has been accurately translated there is every reason, as our Cairo correspondent states, to characterize the discovery as remarkable. It also transpired that quite recently a Samaritan version of the Talmud, the Book of Numbers, and several prayers written in Hebrew have been acquired by the Museum authorities.

These documents bear the date of 1166 of the Hejiran era, or A. D. 1339, and were considered to be the oldest extant. But the news of the latest discovery has caused the greatest surprise, particularly as it had been thought that no similar document of a greater age would be found so soon.

Official inquiries into the discovery are being made.

BANK FAILURE.

The private bank of Boughton, Ford & Company, at Chardon, Ohio, has failed. Liabilities eight hundred thousand dollars; assets only two hundred seven thousand dollars. More than a thousand depositors, churches, schools, lodges, township funds, trust funds, and agricultural associations all suffer by this bank failure.

A few years ago a little bank down near the lake not far from Chardon, Ohio, failed, involving the loss of a few hundreds of dollars, and including no such long list of depositors, churches, societies, etc., yet of that failure a great ado was made, because Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were parties in the failure. This failure many, many times more disastrous will hardly cause a ripple in the news currents of the day. How curious!

THE Christian Herald has a department called "Our Mail Bag." This catches a lot of odds and ends. In the one for February 25, 1903, was the following from Bro. W. E. Clark, Bow, Washington:

Apropos of the controversy over the case of Smoot, the Mormon, who has been elected Senator from Utah, William E. Clark, of Bow, Washington, writes that:

"The church Brigham Young founded or led in Utah was not, and is not, the 'Church of Christ' as restored to the earth in 1830, on April 6, through Joseph Smith. Joseph Smith taught that 'there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none.' If you can find anywhere in any copy of this book any teaching of polygamy, please publish it."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

J. W. Wight wrote from Sydney, New South Wales, February 7: "Eighteen baptisms, ten children blessed, two ordinations, one marriage, one Sunday-school organized, is the last month's report. Thirty-five baptisms by me since my arrival. The work is moving well all along the line."

Francis and Christina Wilson, of Cedar Rapids,

Iowa, send tithing and contribution to Graceland College debt, and write: "We trust the Saints everywhere will rally to the front with their tithes and offerings, and our Father will surely bless them, as he has done us."

Frank Stilwell wrote from Rosendale, Missouri, March 3: "I am a subscriber to the Saints' Herald, but do not belong to any church. I like the Saints' Herald for its liberality and fairness."

T. A. Phillips wrote from Port Bruce, Ontario, February 26: "Since last June I have been laboring in Haliburton and Victoria Counties, about one hundred miles northeast of Toronto, and have done the best I could for the Saints and others. I have two new openings keeping me busy at present, Aylmer and Port Bruce. They are about ten miles apart. Good interest. I hope some will obey soon."

Bro. G. W. Hull, of Chauncey, Ohio, February 26, in remitting money to apply on College debt, writes: "I have three boys and I may never be able to send them to Graceland, but the mite I give may be the means of helping some young man to become a power in the hand of God for his work. Our people must be equipped to meet the world, and surely we have taken the right step in sustaining our Graceland. May God bless it in every department. If ever I get able to send my boys to college, I will send them; if not, I will continue my mite, that others may receive this blessing of obtaining the blessing of an education under divine influence."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

R. W. Tarrell, of West Sullivan, Maine, desires some church literature to distribute. Here is a chance for some of our "Good Literature Bureaus."

President Joseph Smith, the Senior editor of the HERALD, has an article in the March North American Review, which will be of considerable interest to the readers of the HERALD. It is entitled, "Polygamy in the United States: Has it Political Significance?" Its appearance in the North American Review is calculated to do much good in setting the minds of the reading public straight on the differences between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah. President Smith points out wherein the United States government has failed in dealing with the question of polygamy. The readers of the HERALD have long been familiar with his attitude on this question, and we are glad that the readers of such an excellent magazine as the Review should have the chance to understand his position thereon.

President Joseph Smith has recovered from his attack of la grippe sufficiently to be about his office duties, though he has not fully recovered.

A number of the missionaries are returning from their fields.

NAHUM'S CHARIOTS.

IN THE DAY OF GOD'S PREPARATION.—NAHUM 2:3-6.

I read from "The New American Cyclopaedia," by George Repley and Charles A. Dana, volume 14, page 728, the following in substance:

The Liverpool and Manchester Railroad was commenced in 1825. It was designed for a rapid transit for passengers; and horse-power being too expensive they expected to pull the carriages by long ropes with stationary engines at intervals. The company finally offered £500 for a locomotive that would do satisfactory specified work. Robert Stephenson and Booth built the first satisfactory locomotive and presented it for trial in October 1829. It was awarded the prize. The next year steam-carriages were first in regular operation on this road. "Thus was established a new system of locomotion, vastly exceeding in capacity all others." Again I read that the first railway for passengers was the Stockton and Darlington, built in 1825, a horse-power road. Thus it appears that the first horse-power passenger railroad was constructed after the angel Moroni told Joseph of the plates, and before the plates were received. And in the very year that the angel John ordained Joseph and Oliver, the first successful locomotive for rapid work (twenty-eight miles per hour) was constructed; and that the very year that the church was organized and the higher priesthood conferred upon men, the first modern passenger train was put in regular operation.

Let all Israel make their own comments.

KINGS MILLS, Arkansas, February 17.

PREHISTORIC CIVILIZATION IN AMERICA.

The Gospel Messenger, the official paper of the Brethren or Dunkard Church, published at Elgin, Illinois, in its issue for January 10, 1903, presents the following which may be credited to its editor:

Most of our readers have wondered where the American Indians came from. Then they have puzzled themselves about the Mound-builders, and still more about the intelligent races that built great cities in Mexico and Central America long before the time of Columbus. Many books have been written on these subjects, and still the learned world is searching for more light. Only recently has a man been found who could read the picture writings on the ruins of Mexico, viz., Professor Eduard Seler, of Berlin. He is regarded as the greatest living authority on American antiquities. The following article was dictated by him for the Independent. Religiously it has no bearing, only as it relates to the origin of the very ancient people of America. Since man originated on the Eastern Continent, we can not understand how he could have appeared in America if he did not at some remote period come from Asia. Probably the Professor did not mean to discuss the real origin of the ancient American races, but what he says will be read with interest and profit.

Yes, my Dunkard friends, it is true that "most of you readers have wondered where the American Indians came from," and they with the rest of the world will continue to "puzzle" themselves "about the intelligent races" who built "great cities in Mexico and Central America long before the time of Columbus" unless you accept the Book of Mormon, which is the only book giving the intelligence you publicly confess that you need.

We thank you for the acknowledgment that you really need just what Latter Day Saints can furnish in that God-given record, the Book of Mormon.

From the two-column article which the Messenger said would "be read with interest and profit," I excerpt the following:

Where the various prehistoric peoples originally came from no one knows. I do not think that they came from Asia in comparatively recent times. Man is very old in America, I think; perhaps he antedates the glacial period.

As I have said, the knowledge of erecting their superb edifices, of making astronomical calculations, of weaving clothes and fashioning metals and many other things—this knowledge, it is my opinion, was developed without contact with any people in Europe or Asia.

The Prophet Isaiah made no mistake, as is plainly seen by the above when he wrote that "the wisdom of their wise [worldly wise] men shall perish," for it is plainly seen and unwittingly acknowledged in their public speeches and writings.

How very thankful to the Lord every Saint should be for the light and wisdom the Book of Mormon reflects, and how earnestly the Saints should read and study every sacred book given to the church, that all might grow in grace and in the knowledge of His work.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"They are such fond, frail lips
That speak to us; pray, if love strips
Them of discretion many times,
Or if they speak too slow or quick, such crimes
We may pass by; for we may see
Days not far off when these small words may be Held not as slow or quick or out of place, but dear,
Because the lips are no more here."

Not a Burden.

"He's only a burden—coming on us that have plenty of burden already."

It sounded hard, but so much hardness had come into Aunt Susan's life as to crust over the real softness which lay at her heart.

"O no, don't say that, Susan." Grandma gazed with tenderness in her eye at the six-year-old boy playing outside the open door.

"Yes, a burden," insisted Aunt Susan. "His father never did anything to help us and now he's left this boy for us to take care of, when goodness knows we have hard enough work to take care of ourselves. He won't be good for anything for years. Though, of course, I don't lay it up against the child. He couldn't help it."

But, although never unkind, "burden" was written all over

Aunt Susan's manner, and the shy boy read it with clear eyes. He avoided her when he could, when obliged to be near her shrinking from her with downcast eyes in a way which led her to exclaim in irritation:

"Really, he behaves as if he wasn't more than half bright."

Caleb's happy times came in Aunt Susan's absences, which fortunately occurred very often, for she was in great demand among her neighbors for helping in house-cleaning, fruit-canning, sickness, or other seasons of emergency. Her only regret in answering such demands on her, always well paid for in things which went far in their small housekeeping, was the necessity for leaving her mother, who was feeble and little able to wait on herself.

"But Caleb's company for me," said grandma, when Aunt Susan took her leave with a doleful fare. "And he's a real help, too. You'd be surprised to see how much he does for me."

"Such a baby good for anything!" sniffed Aunt Susan, refusing to acknowledge even to herself that it was something of a comfort to know that the small boy, with alert eye and willing hands and feet was with her mother.

There came a day when Caleb felt for a while that he was indeed only a useless burden. Grandma was weaker than usual, and under her close directions he was doing more than ever before. As dinner-time came, he laid the fire and brought a match. There was no cooking to be done, for Aunt Susan had left everything ready except a cup of tea to be made for her mother.

"No, Caleb, I can't let you light it, dearie. You might set your clothes afire."

"I can do it just as well, gra'ma. I'll be as careful——"

But the old lady took the match and leaned from her chair. She lit it and then, losing her balance, fell to the floor.

In his fright Caleb did not at first see that the lighted match had set her apron on fire. When at length his frightened eyes caught sight of it, he crumpled it up in his hands and put out the small blaze, then stooped close to grandma's face.

"Gra'ma, gra'ma—can't you get up if I help you real good and hard? Can't you, gra'ma?"

But the old lady had fainted and Caleb was wild with terror at sight of her white face. At the top of his speed he ran down the short lane leading to the road, screaming with all the strength of his small lungs.

A man and a woman were passing in a spring-wagon and in answer to Caleb's excited motioning turned in to see what was the matter. Caleb kept on to the house of the next neighbor, at which he knew Aunt Susan was busy that day.

"Gra'ma's hurt! Gra'ma's fell down!" he cried with the last effort of his breath.

The one great soft spot in Aunt Susan's heart belonged to her mother. With a scared face she rushed towards the door.

"Jimmy, you go for the doctor and tell him to come as quick as ever he can," said Mrs. Hart and then she followed Aunt Susan.

So it came that plenty of help was near within a very short time, and it was found that grandma was not seriously hurt.

She was put to bed in her room off the kitchen and Aunt Susan did not leave her side, keeping water on her bruised head and cool bandages on her wrist, which had been sprained in her fall.

"Well, Caleb, did you get scared so bad?" said Mrs. Hart, as the confusion quieted down, and she turned to the small boy, who sat at one side with compressed lips and tears in his eyes, holding before him his two small hands. "No, don't you be frettin' about grandma—why, what's the matter, little one?" She examined his hands, finding them black and blistered.

"What done it?" in great surprise.

Caleb pointed to the burnt apron, which had been thrown aside as grandma was cared for.

"And you put it out!"

She tenderly dressed the poor hands and then went home, leaving Caleb to bear the smarting as best he might for the rest of the day.

After supper she came over again. Aunt Susan was still waiting on her mother. Caleb had eaten what was left for him and had gone to bed.

"Little boy asleep?" said Mrs. Hart. "How are his burns?"

"Burns?" said Aunt Susan.

"Yes, his hands that he hurt puttin' out the fire."

"What fire?"

Mrs. Hart held up the apron, showing its blackened holes.

"She set herself afire and Caleb put it out with them little hands o' his. She'd a burnt to death. And the doctor says she'd a likely died anyway if she'd a laid that way all the afternoon till you come home. 'Taint many babies like him that it can be said of that they've saved a life."

With one swift movement Aunt Susan was at Caleb's bedside, with another she had him in her arms. He was restless with the pain of his burns and wide awake in a minute.

"Oh, Caleb, I'm glad, glad you're here. You're not a burden, Caleb, and you never were and never will be—never, never."— Sydney Dayre, in Sunday-School Times.

When School is Out.

"When school is out, I shall go home," she said,

"And all my heartache will be comforted."

"When school is out," she said, "once more I'll rest
My tired head upon my mother's breast,
And feel her tender cheek against it pressed,
And there, at last, I shall find perfect rest."

"When school is out," she said, "I know I'll meet—
Dancing for joy along the golden street—
My little child, my babe so stainless sweet,
Who went to heaven before his dimpled feet
Had ever learned in earthly paths to go,
Nor pressed the violets, nor trod the snow!
Oh, I will clasp him close, and I shall know
Those kisses that I taught him long ago!"

"Life's weary lessons are all learned," she said,
"And school is out." We bent—and she was dead.—Sel.

To the Flowers.

A gift to earth, sweet, lovely flower;
Bestowed by God, a precious dower;
With drooping head as in pity bent,
You seem to say "To cheer I'm sent."

You cheer alike the rich and poor,
And bring sweet smiles at every door,
And give to all your fragrance rare,
Like incense wafted on the air.

Each sorrowing heart 'tis yours to cheer
When robbed of all earth holds most dear.
And may not Christ have felt less care
While gazing at earth's lilies fair?

The mountains high, in lofty pride,
Nourish upon their rugged side
These gems of beauty from God's hand
In every clime, in every land.

When earth is swept by autumn's frost,
We mourn for you, as with the lost,
And gladly hail the coming spring,
Which your treasured wealth is sure to bring.

A palace grand with wealth, and power,
Or a humble cot, with shade, and flower;
Give me the cot where in sweet repose,
I breathe the perfume of wild rose.

Your mission to earth is pure and grand,
Though brought perhaps by thoughtless hand.
Beauty unstained and fragrance sweet,
Bestowed alike on all you meet.

Then go sweet flower, where you may!
Sent to your work, God speed the way!
Sweetly you come to the aching heart,
Softly you whisper "I'll do my part."

Prayer Union.

Henry Mock, of Knox, Indiana, requests prayers. He has been afflicted for many years with nervous prostration, spinal trouble, rheumatism, and heart disease, and is totally blind, all the result of military service. On March 11 and 18 some of the Saints will meet at his home to pray. He desires to be remembered then.

Mrs. Sarah Thompson desires the prayers of the Prayer Union, that the Lord will heal her, for she is badly afflicted.

"The Little Colonel's Holidays." By Annie Fellows-Johnston. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 232 pages. Price, $1.08, net; postage extra, 13 cents.

Many of our readers will not need an introduction to the Little Colonel. This is a wholesome, interesting story, suitable for both boys and girls. The kindness shown by the Little Colonel and her friends to Mollie, the poor little maid, who has lost her little sister in a large city, and the efforts made by all to help find the little one, lend interest to the book. The story closes when little Dot is found in one of the hospitals of the city by the Little Colonel.

"King for a Summer." By Edgar Pickering. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 400 pages. Price, 70 cents, net; postage extra, 13 cents.

This is a story of Corsican life and adventure, and to many boys will be intensely interesting, as it tells of much fighting and thrilling experiences, and how the hero was driven from his uncle's home because that uncle was desirous of becoming possessed of his inheritance. The hero casts his lot with three banditti, and, after a series of adventures, they take part in the revolution of 1735, the effort of which is to break the tyrannical rule of the Genoese. This revolution leads up to the proclamation of a German adventurer as Theodore I, King of Corsica. After a reign of three months King Theodore is deposed. This short reign gives the title to the book.

"Maggie McLanehan." By Gulielma Zollinger. 12mo, cloth, 319 pages. Price, 75 cents, net; postage extra, 9 cents.

Though the death of her aunt, Maggie McLanehan, a young girl of fourteen, is left alone, with no means of support. A little cousin, three years old, is dependent upon her. With a sinking heart she realizes the seriousness of her position, but bravely determines to do well and thoroughly anything, no matter how humble. This determination to do her best is recognized by those who employ her, and they soon learn to respect and trust her. Her varied experiences and the final adoption of herself and her cousin by a kind-hearted man make a very pleasing story for young girls.

"Tilda Jane." By Marshall Saunders. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 287 pages. Price, $1.08, net; postage extra, 14 cents.

A charming story for children. "Tilda Jane makes many mistakes, but at heart is a sincere, earnest child, living up to the teaching she had received in the orphan asylum in which she had been brought up. She runs away from the asylum to search for a home for herself and her poor little old dog, whom she loves with a passionate devotion.

"Dutch Life in City and Country." By P. M. Hough, B. A. 12mo, cloth, 287 pages. Price, $1.20, net; postage extra, 11 cents.

An interesting and instructive description of Holland, dealing particularly with the people, their social and religious life, etc. To the large majority who must gain their knowledge of life in other countries from books, this will prove a most delightful volume.

"The World Before Him." By Horatio Alger, Jr. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 383 pages. Price, 30 cents, net; postage extra, 13 cents.

The hero is a noble boy with splendid principles. His mother dies and his stepfather robs him of his inheritance. He determines to leave home and make his own way in the world. He has many experiences, but surmounts all his misfortunes, and in time his mother's money is restored to him. It is an interesting story for boys, teaching them both honesty and integrity. It shows that right-doing always pays; wrong-doing never.

"Those Black Diamond Men." By Wm. F. Gibbons. 12mo, cloth, 389 pages. Price, $1.08, net; postage extra, 13 cents.

Life among the anthracite coal miners of Pennsylvania is depicted, with all its vicissitudes; their hard and dangerous labor; their home life, with few joys and many privations. Many heroes are among these men, as to quote from the preface: "Coal can not be obtained except at the cost of life. If one is in danger of death, his comrades will risk their own lives for him, and that is all there is about it. But he who leads the rescuing party is no hero in his own eyes; just an average sort of man who may need to be 'bought out' himself to-morrow." For those who know nothing of the miner's life, and find it so hard to sympathize with him in his needs and temptations, this book has been written.

"Holly Berry Series." By Anna Burnham Bryant. Consisting of "The Fairy Sister," "The Toll-Gate Children," "The Rainbow Game," "Kitty Wink's Lesson," "Three Little Kittens," and "Playing Minister." 16mo, cloth, illustrated. Price, per set, $1.10, net; postage extra, 25 cents.

A series of six attractive books for very young children. Each book contains a number of bright, interesting stories, conveying some valuable moral lessons. Especially suitable for the primary library.

"The Young Ship Builder." By Sophie Swett. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 354 pages. Price, 90 cents, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

A book for boys and girls, detailing the struggles of a family of children to keep their home and continue the business of ship-building. Success comes at last through the genius of the stepbrother, who, before, had been considered an "alien," and was not taken into the family confidences. True merit will always reap its reward, even though recognition is sometimes delayed.

"A Colonial Maid." By Lucy Foster Madison. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 412 pages. Price, 90 cents, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

A most interesting story of Revolutionary days. The Colonial Maid is Virginia Pendleton, the adopted child of Colonel Ralph Pendleton. Colonel Pendleton, a loyal subject of King George, owned a fine plantation in the colony of Virginia. The little maid, Virginia, became imbued with the wrongs of the colonies through intimacy with the children on the neighboring plantations, who were loyal to the cause of the colonies, and was, therefore, a staunch little patriot. There is a mystery surrounding the birth and parentage of Virginia, which Colonel Pendleton for years refuses to divulge. There are many thrilling scenes pictured in the story; the great risks run by Virginia in carrying aid to our soldiers encamped at Valley Forge; the capture of Virginia, first by the British, then by the Indians, and the terrible massacre at Wyoming. The book closes with the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

"The Little Citizen." By M. E. Waller. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 324 pages. Price, $1, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

A story of a waif of New York City, who received such injuries in an accident that he was compelled to use crutches, and was restricted to a life of inactivity. A kind-hearted farmer and his wife consent to receive him in their Vermont home. They become much interested in Miffins, and are very patient with him. Miffins is gradually transformed from a rough street Arab to a manly, honest boy. He learns, in his new environment, to love study. He has the honor of having the title of "The Little Citizen" conferred on him by the people of Barnet and Hurdyville for an act of bravery, performed by him, that saved the lives of many at the risk of his own life.

"Little Cousin Series." By Mary F. Wade. 4 volumes (each illustrated), cloth, 12mo. Price (each), 45 cents, net; postage extra, 7 cents.

Pleasantly written descriptions of customs, manners and enjoyments of Japanese, Indian, Borneo and Russian children, in separate books, entitled, "Little Japanese Cousin," "Little Indian Cousin," "Little Brown Cousin," "Little Russian Cousin." Written in any easy style for young children, yet they will prove entertaining to many older readers, because of the great amount of information each volume contains.

SACRAMENTO, California, February 25.

Editors Herald: In this part of the Lord's vineyard the work still is gaining, and prospects appear bright for the energetic laborer who may sow the seed of gospel truth in the future. Last December was the time selected by a certain couple here to begin life's companionship in that closest bond of mortal duration, and the writer was requested to perform the ordinance which made them one. So infectious was the affair that a modest brother called a few days later and blushingly admitted that he had secured the consent of the "best" girl in all the world to share his joys and sorrows, and accordingly the writer pronounced the magic words that made him and the "best" girl one.

At Fairfield some preaching was done, and Bro. and Sr. Kraschel supplied home comforts for the time, after which a series of meetings was held at Santa Rosa, where Bro. and Sr. Cooper cordially extended a home for the preacher. Some of the Saints here are faithfully trying to do what they can, and Bro. George Daley attends to their wants for the bread of life; but others are cold and indifferent to the work and only persistent labor will, we believe, avail to bring the branch up to the condition that we are told it once was in. At Yountville services were held for about ten days, much to the disgust of the Christian minister of that place, who succeeded in having more falsehoods circulated concerning our work than we ever heard before in the same space of time. But those who appreciated truth were not greatly deceived. One man informed a woman who was attending our services that Joseph Smith was the leader of the Mountain Meadow Massacre, that he would not tell her so if he did not know it. As the affair occurred more than a dozen years after Joseph's death, she was not to be deceived by such falsehoods. Another man told her that when he was about eighteen or twenty years of age he was an official on a steamboat and saw Joseph Smith attempt to walk on the water at Nauvoo, but that one of the planks which had been placed under the water having been removed, Joseph fell in, etc. He raised his hand and said: "I'll swear to that." He was asked, "How old are you?" He replied, "Sixty-three." The woman informed him that as Joseph Smith was killed in 1844, she did not believe him if he did swear to it. Notwithstanding all these things, she bravely went forward into the waters of baptism to arise in newness of life with Christ. She had been a member of the Christian Church, so-called.

Some labors were performed at Calistoga, where Sr. Gibbs resides, being the only member of our faith there, so far as ascertained. Also at Middletown, where Bro. McKinley and family live, an attempt was made to accomplish something, but without success. At Lower Lake is a small branch and there should be an effort made there for several weeks if possible. Bro. Graumlich's presides there and feels a deep interest in the work, as do also some others there.

Bro. Askew and wife, at Eldorado, have been trying to live their religion amidst discouragements that come in a place where no one cares for the gospel. Some meetings were held there with a small attendance, Sr. Allen being present also.

After some preaching at Centerville (Butte County) and Chico, two more were added to the band of Saints there on yesterday afternoon. About seventy-five people gathered on the banks of Chico Creek at half past one o'clock, where the writer felt led to discourse a short time on gospel principles before performing that sacred ordinance which binds on earth and in heaven. After baptism, the holy rite of confirmation was performed at Bro. Hommes' house a few rods distant from the creek. Only a part of those present could find room inside, and therefore arranged themselves on the piazza where they could hear or see to the best advantage. It was a beautiful day outside and a heavenly time was enjoyed, even by those not of our faith. Numbers of those present remarked that it was the most wonderful meeting they had ever attended. A short discourse was presented at this service also. I earnestly desire God's blessing toward all.

A. B. PHILLIPS.

ADAMSTOWN, West Virginia, February 24.

Editors Herald: Bro. Durand has been with us several weeks, and has been preaching some. I have succeeded in opening our schoolhouse for worship. Last Sunday evening Bro. Durand spoke to quite a large assembly. The people gave him splendid order and attention. And he was feeling well for the work.

I have recently another letter from State Superintendent of Schools T. C. Miller. He says that he had two conferences with the Attorney General on the subject, and that General Freer had noted the difference between the two denominations. He said that the recent discrimination against the Mormons as to the use of the schoolhouses for religious services was only intended for "that sect which had practiced polygamy." Said that he would see the Attorney General again and that I might expect something more conclusive and definite than this or his former letter.

The work here is in a more promising condition than for some time in the past. I think now that we will hold the schoolhouse permanently or until we obtain a better place of worship.

The Reverend Mr. Burton, editor of the M. E. Times, Buckhannon, West Virginia, is writing a series of chapters, as editorial matter on the question, "What is Mormonism?" It is much the same as all other anti-Mormon literature. I have written him an explanation of the differences between Utahism, Mormonism, and Latter Day Saintism, and challenged him to let me have a chance to turn the other side of the question to the people in a face to face or newspaper discussion. He wonderfully overthrows "Joe Smith" and the whole outfit and bitterly denounces the church as a great menace to our civil institutions and dangerous to our liberties.

He gives us something new. The Spalding Story was sent to a printer in Pittsburg, but Mrs. Spalding had retained an exact copy, which Joe Smith stole while digging a well for a Mr. Stroude; and Rigdon copied the one left in the printing-office at Pittsburg. (Their tales do not hang together.) If the truth would answer the purpose, it would not take so much press and pulpit lying to down Mormonism.

Ballard S. Dunn, some years ago, confessed that mobbing and lying had proved a failure. As Mormonism spread farther, and became stronger "the more opposed." There seems to be no other resort, and the merchants of Babylon are everywhere throughout the whole city raising their holy (?) hands and crying "Alas! alas! that great city" is in danger!

Under the pretense of informing the people, the preachers are filling their minds with a lying story of "Mormonism" and traducing the character of its "founder," to engender prejudice which they know to be the only successful warfare they can wage at this late day.

I am confined at home, but not dead. I am always striving to do some good in the cause of truth. If I can not travel and preach something will develop hereabouts ere long. My companion seems to be improving and I trust the opening spring will bring her better prospect for living a while longer. She is a dear companion and a patient, faithful child of God. I ask for the prayers of the Lord's family.

D. L. SHINN.

LOS ANGELES, California, February 24.

Editors Herald: I inclose herewith a copy of a program which explains itself. This is a victory for the cause, you appreciate (as some do not seem to do) how hard it is to get a good large promiscuous gathering to hear one of our elders talk on the gospel theme, and Los Angeles is no exception to the rule.

As you no doubt know, Bro. Williams has at different times addressed audiences on foreign subjects, and made many friends by his efforts and by confining himself strictly to the subject assigned, not abusing the privilege by intruding his own religious views, so it was comparatively an easy matter to present the situation in that light, and secure the privilege of an evening for an address to set forth the doctrines of the church which he represents. The Liberal Club is composed of intelligent, educated people, who for the most part are dissatisfied with the popular religions of the day; they are freethinkers, not to say, infidels. The meeting was well advertised by the Club and an audience of about three hundred greeted Bro. Williams who set forth the fundamental and general teachings and practices of the church, making the distinctions between us and the Salt Lake people very clear and emphatic.

At the close of the address about forty-five minutes were given to answering questions, which were freely given, and for the most part in good faith, and showed that the people are not ignorant of the church, and that tracts which had been given out were read and studied. Questions were asked concerning the Book of Mormon and its translation, and the archæological evidences of its truth; the inspiration of Joseph Smith; his life; the temple lot; the teachings of the church on conditions in the future life; the second coming of Christ, and other matters. Several questioners were spiritualists; all were answered with kindness and consideration.

Altogether I think it was very successful, and will result in good and possibly open the way for more work to be done.

The church choir furnished the music and did remarkably well for only having practiced a few months, and the music was well received.

Services at the church were dismissed for the evening and the members attended the meeting in a body, thus making a good impression and giving much encouragement.

Your brother in the work,

R. T. COOPER.

P. S.—Mr. George T. Bruce is president of the Liberal Club and we are under obligations to him and the Club for courtesy and privileges extended to us.

R. T. C.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, February 24.

Editors Herald: While perusing a sermon of Frederick M. Smith in HERALD of the 11th inst., and while reading one of his quotations from Saints' Hymnal, viz.,

"Let us then be valiant soldiers,
In the army of the Lord,"

I was led to serious meditation viewing retrospectively some of my experiences during the past summer, and while so doing felt a desire to relate one of the many evidences I have had relative to the high and holy calling of our brethren of the ministry.

While at my work, and somewhat sadly, yes, mournfully, considering some things attaching to my life by reason of being a missionary's wife, my thoughts ran about as follows: Well, now that James' (that is my husband's name) health is so much improved and still growing better, as I thought, I wondered if the time would ever come when he could be at home and once more take up manual labor for our support, and assist in the raising of our children, for I felt incompetent for such a task alone, for the world is so full of evil and contaminating influences. I seriously viewed the growing tendencies of evilly-disposed persons, and felt an intense interest to direct and guide them in the golden path of rectitude and honor. A silently uttered prayer was in my heart thus: God's will, not mine, be done. And that beautiful sentiment of the inspired poet,

"God is marshaling his army
For the rescue of his truth," came as a new revelation to me, and, as if God by his Holy Spirit spake for my edification and comfort, simultaneously with this infusion of inspiration I began to sing those words with ecstasy and with an understanding I never realized before; that God it really was and not man, and that a failure was not possible in his divine arrangements; and that the ultimate of the great restoration work would witness a final victory for God's army. I sang on until the words,

"'Tis a war that calls for valor;
'Tis a conflict with the world;"

gave me another burst of light and confirmation in the fact that God was calling men who would stand and not weaken, or yield to the trying ordeals of life, but who would buckle on the whole armor and on to the battle. And I came to the words "For the order is for ever;" and as if God spake to settle the matter once for all, I understood: not just for a little while, then to give over and become sleeping soldiers, but for ever. Then on in song and revelation until like an irrevocable sentence from God came the words:

"There can be no furlough granted;
Never must the flag be furled.
We can never cease the conflict,
Till the summons home be heard."

By this time I was weeping under the Spirit's power and rejoicing to know God once again had answered my prayer, and given me understanding of that heartfelt prayer; "Not my will but thine be done." I felt completely reconciled to my task and duty, feeling assured that God would give me strength for each step, for so have I been guided since coming into this work.

At one time preceding this, I felt that I must pay my tithing, and began to reckon the amount, just before our move to a strange country, and the conditions of such a move seemed to say: you will need that money, but only once, for I knew it was God's command based on a never failing promise. After it was sent I felt that I had done my duty, that I knew that I could not reach on the possessional side of the question. I always feel under the hand of adverse circumstances that God's all-seeing eye is over us, and his hand of protection ever extended. My earnest and heartfelt desire is for the furtherance of the cause, so often confirmed to me as the marvelous work and a wonder of latter days. It does surely seem that the time of day in which to work is near the close for us. So let one and all put on, and keep on, the whole gospel armor and push the conflict on to victory.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. C. E. MORGAN.

NORWICH, North Dakota, February 25.

Editors Herald: On January 20 Bro. William Sparling came here.

As we had helped the Presbyterians in building their church, we thought we could get the use of it to preach in, so Sr. Lulu Hornung asked the minister for it; but he said he had nothing to do with it and sent her to the trustees. When he saw me go to them he followed after me as fast as he could, and when I asked the trustee he would not say yes or no. The minister then said we could not have it, because his church was utterly opposed to such doctrines, and that they send missionaries "out there where that doctrine is promulgated." I asked him where? He said to Utah. I said so do we; and we had quite a conversation for a few minutes.

We got the schoolhouse and commenced meetings on the 23d and held forth until February 7, to good audiences. Had good attention; distributed some tracts and are lending books to investigators. We desire an interest in your prayers.

Yours in bonds,
J. WAHLSTROM.

PICKERING, Louisiana, February 23.

Dear Herald: We have labored this year in Louisiana trying to establish the work in new fields almost altogether, the first three months being spent almost entirely in this place. How much good we have accomplished remains to be seen; but we have done what we felt was best for the advancement of the work; but are far from being satisfied with the efforts or results. From July 28 until November 5, Bro. Macrae was our colaborer. We did most of our work in the northern part of the State, baptizing some ten or twelve persons. I find some noble people in Louisiana, some of whom will, we think, obey the gospel later on if the effort is kept up as it should be. I hope conference will send as many as four good, live men to this part of the vineyard another year.

January 10 Bro. E. L. Henson and I began operations in and near Rocky Mound, Louisiana; but bad weather, indifference, and prejudice kept us from accomplishing much. From there we went to Dorcheat, where Bro. Macrae and I introduced the work last August, baptizing one, a Sr. Lofton, who is proving to be a faithful Saint; two others were baptized the first of August at Dixie and another later on, making four Saints at that place. While there we were kept out of the schoolhouse, but a warm friend of ours opened his doors and asked us to occupy, which we did. He and his wife are firm believers, but could not make up their minds to unite with us just now.

From Dorcheat we went to Cadeville. While there we were the guests of Brn. Fuller and J. J. Hawkins. Bro. Hawkins is lately from Alabama, a member of the Lone Star Branch. He is an energetic farmer and knows how to handle this southern soil to make the most out of it. Although his time is nearly all occupied just now in getting his farm ready for planting seed, yet he finds time to talk the gospel to his neighbors. He is alive to the interests of the cause he represents and will, no doubt, be able to clear away some of the mists that now hang over the work by reason of the Utah elders being in there and failing to tell the difference. There are twenty-six members settled near Bro. Hawkins and should be organized into a branch as soon as possible. Bro F. M. Fuller is a priest and Bro. Hawkins a teacher, and they have material for a deacon. Bro. Hawkins is (in connection with the other brethren) going to erect a church building this fall. Some who oppose the work there are wanting to sell now that the Saints are getting a foothold there. May the Lord send all such a buyer, we humbly pray. The Utah people have a branch organized with about sixty members twenty miles from Cadeville. We wanted to visit them while in that part, but could not as the weather was too bad for us to make the drive across the country. The more I see of their work, the more thoroughly convinced I am that they should be followed up by our people and the differences told in no uncertain sound.

Yours in bonds,
J. F. GRIMES.

VAN ALSTYNE, Texas, February 26.

Editors Herald: I am the only Latter Day Saint who lives here. In my isolated condition, I have been made to comprehend the truth of the statement that God is no respecter of persons, but that he will honor and love all who obey him, be their numbers many or the chosen two or three. He hideth not his face, but like a mantle of peace does the Spirit of God rest on those who worship him with a holy heart and a contrite spirit.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that I may live faithfully and be saved, with all of my household; that I may be strong enough to overcome the filthy habit of the use of tobacco and coffee, which I am living to overcome.

Let us all strive to live up to every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

May the Lord bless each effort that is put forth for his cause is my prayer.

If the Saints will send to me tracts or church literature of any kind, I will distribute the same.

ROBERT KEITH.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 3.

Dear Saints and Editors Herald: It is a long time since you have heard from us by letter and had I not perused the columns of our interesting church papers I would not have been able to receive such instruction and important information as I have from many of you.

There have been over fifty additions to our branch the last year making our membership nearly thirteen hundred. General Conference will soon be at hand, and what a large assembly of the Saints there will be here. Much extra work will have to be done as we are expecting so many more than usual to wait on and entertain.

The verger's work increases daily. Then we have added to our church features one of "the best pipe-organs in the country," and that will necessitate much care and attention. It will have to be kept well dusted and will require a stout man to pose at the pump, there being seventy-five pounds weight of pressure needed each stroke, up and down. The branch will no doubt have the air pumped through the pipes of this big wooden and metal brother by means of electricity; but of that I can write nothing at present. We have heard there is little prospect just now of obtaining "a day circuit," so it will be necessary to use the pumping-by-hand process. It will be hard work, and the Lord's pay, for some generous soul, no doubt, for some time, as we have on hand quite an outlay for repairs, renovating, improving, and enlarging.

The Saints in their work are ever advancing and continually coming up higher; howbeit they must through great tribulation and long continuance obtain the blessing and reach the goal.

Here in the center place we have much to do by way of pressing onward in a temporal sense: towers to erect and power-room to finish, sidewalks to lay, walls to rekalsomine, and together with much painting and varnishing, the seating to newly adjust, and carpets to renovate. All this calls for money, good promises, perseverance, pluck, and faith in the ultimate.

To take a general view of the work to be done here and also feel the pulse of the Saints in Zion, one can hardly calculate on its being readily accomplished without a jar.

Sickness has of late been resting heavily on many of our families, and several of us, both old and young, have felt the heavy hand of affliction, while some have "fallen asleep."

There have been many improvements made among us as citizens of a progressive city, and mercantile and manufacturing interests have been advanced of late. A few have sold out and built residences in other localities near by, while the poorer brethren shift about from place to place like New York movers in the month of May.

Our societies are certainly making good headway. Of course the Sunday-school and Religians, Gleaners and Hawthornes are forging ahead and the Daughters of Zion, Willing Helpers, and Prayer Union close well the busy ranks.

We have had the good fortune to hear many excellent discourses, and the inspiration and power attending the preaching of the word have not been lacking. In the early part of the winter the chief patriarch was with the Saints here and together with many rich and comforting blessings conferred he delivered one of the grandest sermons preached on the subject, "He hath made of one blood," etc., giving a soul-stirring portraiture in glowing words of the Saints in the far-off islands of the sea.

Bishop Kelley occupied the stone church pulpit on February 1, exhorting and edifying from the text, "Contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints," and again the words sounded in our ears, "Have faith in God," a little later on, from a younger yet as eloquent a tongue. A few Sundays ago President G. H. Hulmes, animated and enthused with love for the gospel work and desirous to accord a meed of praise to the man God had chosen as a humble instrument to bring to pass the restoration, and the glorious promises made through his servants of old, chose for his theme, "Joseph Smith."

But ability, time, and space fail us to write of all the instruction and comfort imparted by the ministry both local and from abroad to the Saints here. Yet after all is written the main and all-absorbing topic with many is "the great pipe-organ" and its dedication to-night, Mr. Edward Kreiser being organist. It is not one instrument, but three: great organ, swell-organ, and pedal-organ, with sixteen speaking stops, three couplers, three accessories, and four pedal movements. Its depth and quality of tone, its builders tell us, are rarely met except in the old English Cathedral organs, and the instrument is entitled "to a place among the best organs of the country."

We query if as great a one has been heard by us even when we listened to the tremulous vibrations from Music Hall's famous instrument played long years ago.

At that time Ralph Waldo Emerson, Theodore Parker, Wendell Philips, and Lloyd Garrison, who were then enshrined almost as divinities in the hearts of all Bostonians, burned with desire to bring about a state of peace on earth and good will to men by means of benevolent and reformatory work. Noble-hearted women there were too to be heard, voicing their sentiments on this line, like Harriet Beecher Stowe, Mary Livermore, Lucy Stone, and scores of others. But in the light of more recent days these once great personages and their bright surroundings lose much of their brilliancy while still lingering on memory's tablet.

More than a superficial veneer is the living, ever present witness to the written word of God; and where the everlasting gospel is proclaimed to the people by those having authority from him, eloquence and beauty and music, stirred by the Holy Spirit's power, enchain and indelibly impress the human heart.

Let our elegant new church organ that is awakening such interest, with its nine hundred pipes and richness of mechanism, its depth of diapason and sweetness of dulciana sound forth the praises of Jehovah and let all the people sing with it, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." For "remember that Saints, should be cheerful in their warfare, that they may be joyous in their triumph."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

TUNNELHILL, Illinois, March 4.

Editors Herald: On account of so much rain and mud this winter our audiences have not been so large as they might have been if conditions had been otherwise; yet we have been very busy in looking after the interest of the work. Since our conference at Springerton we held a meeting in Akin and one was baptized by Bro. J. E. Bozarth. We then met Bro. Hilliard at Parrish where we held a few meetings and found the Saints there trying to keep the faith. We then went to Westend, where we held an interesting meeting with the assistance of Bro. F. M. Davis, and he baptized one at the close. I find that Bro. Davis and Bozarth are willing workers, ready to push out and do what they can for the work. The Saints in this branch as a rule seem to be alive to the interests of the work and they have a live Sunday-school and also a good Religio with Bro. P. G. McMahan as president. He is also a willing worker, and ready to give his time and means to advance the cause. Such men will be a success in the work and will reap a rich reward in the sweet by and by. The duties of the Saints have been made very plain this year through the excellent advice given by brethren who have labored in the district as missionaries. We feel greatly encouraged with the outlook and we are still hoping, laboring, and praying for better conditions. The Saints at Springerton have received an uplift through the efforts of Bro. Ammon White and Paxton and they now have a Sunday-school, and we hope they may never get weary in well-doing. If we have been faithful we will have much to be thankful for when the conflict is ended. The committee has decided to hold the next reunion at Dryfork, from August 1 to 10. Our reason for setting the time and place so early was in order that the minds of the Saints might be settled, as some had been making inquiry in regard to the matter.

F. M. SLOVER.

BELGROVE, West Virginia, February 24.

Editors Herald: Allow me to drop a word by way of warning to the young of the church. The saloon-keepers of Ohio held a convention not long since, and among other things that were discussed was how to create the drinking habit among the rising generation; as their success depended on it. They decided to make candies and put something in it to create the drinking habit, and hand them out to the boys as they pass the streets. And so could the coffee dealers do to create the coffee habit; and also the manufacturers of tobacco. I am credibly informed that they do put opium in some of their tobacco already. So we can see the wisdom of God in giving his children the Word of Wisdom in these last days on account of designing men. I would say to the young of the church to touch not, handle not the unclean thing, and then you will not have to punish yourself like the writer and many others to quit the filthy habit. I once asked the Lord if my using tobacco was displeasing to him to manifest it to me in his own way. I was lying on the lounge. I went to sleep and dreamed that my body was covered with large black bugs, and they were tickling my body creating the most miserable feeling I ever felt. I awoke knowing how detestable the use of tobacco was to God among his Saints.

I hope some one may take warning from these few lines and escape the snares that are being set for the young.

We have had very bad weather for ten days in West Virginia. The work is moving in these parts.

Yours for the angel's message,

G. H. GODBY.

LOS ANGELES, California, March 3.

Editors Herald: I send you herewith the remainder of the McMillan correspondence:

"The New York Presbyterian Church, Seventh Avenue,
"One Hundred Twenty-eighth Street, January 22, 1903.

"MR. T. W. WILLIAMS,

"Los Angeles, California.

"Dear Sir: Your letter of December 27 is at hand. As you have done me the honor to admit, virtually, the main point in the controversy, it will not be necessary or desirable to consume either my time or your patience in producing the evidence. You admit that 'Joseph Smith avowed that he was the "Author" of the Book of Mormon' as 'found on the title-page of the Palmyra edition, which was inserted simply to comply with the copyright laws and prevent infringement on their copyright.' Furthermore you give the consideration which induced him to lie, viz.: that he might secure the copyright of the book. That is more than I thought of charging him. You thus assign a baser motive than I would have assigned. I am afraid that I shall have to come to the rescue of the reputation of Joseph Smith and defend him from the calumny of his pretended friends.

"You ask for further proof. If you will promise not to use it to further defame him, I will give it. You will see it in the Certificate of the Clerk of the District of Northern New York, on the next page to the Title-Page to which you refer, where Joseph Smith presents his 'claim as the Author.' Again you will see it in the Preface to the first (Palmyra) edition where he signs as 'The Author.' Here it was not 'to comply with the copyright laws,' but to mislead 'The Reader' to whom the Preface is addressed.

"Then, as to the 'Testimony of the Eight Witnesses,' you are certainly a very careless reader if you have not seen it in the last page of the first (Palmyra) edition. It is true that it does not appear in subsequent editions, for some sacrilegious hand must have garbled that testimony as it ever after appears, 'Art thou a teacher in Israel and knowest not these things?' You furnish a striking example of 'the blind leading the blind,' (if, indeed, you are leading anybody).

"You do me injustice when you say, 'You draw your own conclusions that the original manuscript is not a correct translation and therefore there were no plates to translate and Joseph Smith was an impostor.'

"Read my article again and you will see that there were alternate conclusions, one or the other of which must be true. Your deductions are unwarranted and my logic is sound.

"You are far astray when you accuse me of desiring 'to take them off to a study where no third party can hear.' Where do you find that? If you always follow your fertile imaginations such free play in your reading I do not wonder that you are a Mormon. You ask, 'How would it do for me to attack the Presbyterian Church and malign the memory of Knox and Calvin, etc.' Why you may do so to your heart's content. No one would care a fig. It would be like a boy attacking the Rock of Gibraltar with a pop-gun. It would only afford a little momentary amusement to any one who might care to witness the performance.

"You furnish proof of your queer mental make-up when you say, 'When the parties aggrieved demand that the same jury (the public) which heard the testimony of the plaintiff shall also be allowed to hear the arguments of the defendant you say, Oh, no,' etc., and you go on to accuse me 'of refusing a public examination of the facts on our side of the case.'

"When have I ever placed so much as a straw in the way of your appeal to the public? You have the same access to the periodicals of the country that I have, fire away. Give the public all you have to give. You are in a land of free speech,—that is, when you are away from the special territory dominated by the Mormon hierarchy.

"My friendly invitation you have misconstrued and denounced as an 'act so utterly devoid of Christian courtesy among gentlemen that I can not condone it.' Then drop the correspondence at once, and give your righteous soul a little peace.

"In garbling my letter and my article, dealing in such free easy fashion with facts, and bringing against me an unwarranted charge you have proved yourself unworthy of the courtesy which I extended, and an unfit antagonist in any fair discussion.

"May the Holy Spirit enlighten your mind, purify your heart, and lead you in the ways of truth and righteousness and eternal life.

Sincerely yours,

"DUNCAN J. McMILLAN."

I replied to this as follows:

"LOS ANGELES, California, February 18, 1903.

"MR. DUNCAN J. McMILLAN, D. D., New York City.

"My Dear Sir: Your favor of the 22d ult. received. Other matters have precluded a reply until now. I must say for evasion and quibbling your letters stand without a parallel in all my experience in correspondence.

"When any one would take the explanation which I gave as the reason for Joseph Smith using the term 'Author and Proprietor' and make it do service in implicating him in mercenary falsification he surely is impervious to argument and entirely oblivious of facts.

"Wherein did I assign any base motive to Joseph Smith? Was he financially benefited by this transaction? Not one dollar. The further proof which you offer as evidencing his duplicity was the certificate of the clerk of the district of Northern New York. This is the strongest proof in his favor.

"If any human being had claims upon the Book of Mormon it was Joseph Smith. I he was the 'author,' as you seem to delight in making him, all copyright claims were surely legitimate. That he was the custodian of the work you would not ever care to dispute.

"You play upon that word 'author' as though it had but one meaning. A man can be an 'author' and still not a creator. To make an individual culpable and guilty of wrong-doing you must show an ulterior motive. What motive would Joseph Smith have in claiming authorship other than in the sense in which I have portrayed? You know that, at the same time, and in the same volume and almost on the same page he gives a modification to this term 'author' in certifying that he 'translated' the work. You must not forget that in your first article you used the term 'author and proprietor' 'meaning, evidently, that he had received by inspiration in some manner the substance of the book and had written it or caused it to be written much as Moses composed and wrote the Pentateuch or Jeremiah the prophecy which bears his name.' With this understanding of the term 'author' from your own pen why all this claim of contradiction or charge of lying for revenue, etc.?

"Laying before me is a copy of the Palmyra edition. I find the term 'Author and Proprietor' on the title page: said title page having been deposited with the clerk of the court in order to secure the copyright: the clerk practically testifying on the opposite page that only in this way would he be entitled to the right to protect the work against interpolaters and basely inclined men and women when he says, 'Joseph Smith, Jr., of the said district hath deposited in this office the title of a book, the right whereof he claims as author,' and farther when he sets forth specifically in quoting the 'Acts of Congress' that such rights could only be secured to the 'author and proprietors.'

"In our examination of every human act we must take into consideration every contributive cause. Joseph Smith had been intrusted with the custody of these valuable documents. God had revealed the purpose of the enemy to eventually use the work, if possible, to frustrate the plan of God: they had once attempted it and been foiled; this thing actually occurred when Joseph Smith went to the printer's office and found a man copying from the 'forms' extracts from the Book of Mormon which he intended to publish in his 'Dogberry Papers,' and was only enjoined by threatening prosecution for infringement upon the copyright.

"My dear sir, you make capital of this fact that Joseph Smith signs his name 'the author' and what does he say in this statement subscribed to?"

"To the reader:

"As many false reports have been circulated respecting the following work, and also many unlawful measures taken by evil designing persons to destroy me, and also the work, I would inform you that I translated,' etc.

"This very preface which you refer to is the strongest justifiable cause to show why Joseph Smith should claim 'authorship' as well as 'proprietorship.'

"Pray enlighten me, Doctor McMillan, if somebody was the author of the Book of Mormon, and Joseph Smith was not, who was? In supplying the information, please produce evidence which would be admissibly in court.

"Legally, Joseph Smith was 'author and proprietor.' The people then living had never heard of the plates or the book before; they knew nothing of the American aborigines save through the perverted traditions of deteriorating tribes and, omitting the divine claims, they were his by the right of discovery and if divine rights were infringed upon no one but Divinity could prosecute, the omission of which evidences legitimate use.

"From the plates Joseph Smith produced a book never known among men before, containing facts never before disclosed to the people of this age. In view of this his claims to be the 'author and proprietor' as well as 'translator' were perfectly legitimate under the circumstances.

"And now as to the testimony of the 'eight witnesses.' Did they testify that Joseph Smith was the 'author and proprietor'? By no means. The testimony runs as follows (I copy from the Palmyra edition):

"Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, Jr., the author and proprietor of this work, has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken which have the appearance of gold: and as many of the leaves as the said Smith had translated, we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient workmanship and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record, with words of soberness, that the said Smith had shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety, that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world that which we have seen: and we lie not, God bearing witness of it."

"Then follows the signatures of the eight witnesses. The only point which they testify concerning was 'to witness unto the world that which we have seen;' they testified that they had seen the plates; they had the appearance of fine gold; they handled what had been translated; they saw the engravings thereon; they testified that Joseph Smith had translated all the plates they handled. Their testimony confirms the testimony of Joseph Smith in every particular.

"Doctor McMillan, your arguments are 'like a boy attacking the Rock of Gibraltar with a pop-gun.' It does afford a 'little momentary amusement' to those who are acquainted with the history of this latter-day work while at the same time a wave of pity sweeps over us in viewing your unenviable condition while our hearts are filled with supreme joy that no more formidable argument can be presented against this movement.

"How do you know this testimony was garbled by sacrilegious hands? That the term 'translator' was substituted for 'author and proprietor' I admit, but what warrant have you that this was done without the consent of the 'eight witnesses'?"

"All but one of the eight witnesses were alive when the Kirtland edition was published in 1837, Christian Whitmer having died November 27, 1835. There is nothing on record evidencing a protest from any of them; but rather they remained always loyal to their testimony concerning the Book of Mormon.

"The term 'sacrilegious' is defined as 'violating or profaning sacred things,' and when you charge that some 'sacrilegious hands must have garbled that testimony as it ever after appears' you commit yourself to the affirmation that the original testimony was sacred: keep on you will eventually become an excellent witness for Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

"The change in this particular was made as soon as the work was thoroughly before the public for two reasons, undoubtedly: First, the words, 'author and proprietor' were misunderstood by the enemy of the church and made to do service where not intended as you are doing now, and second, the possibility of the doing what God had forewarned them they would try to do, had passed.

"As to your not desiring publicity in our investigation, I have only to quote your letter wherein you say, 'However, my study is a quiet place where we would not be disturbed in our conversation.'

"Your sarcasm as to Knox and the Presbyterian Church in no sense answers my argument. You went before the readers of the Assembly Herald; you vilified and maligned the memory of Joseph Smith and when I, in justice to his memory, demanded that you meet the allegations publicly made you said you would privately consider them. If that is either justice or Christianity may I be delivered therefrom. Maligning the memory of the dead constitutes criminal slander as much as defaming the living.

"I challenge you to produce, sir, as much as a line in vindication of your imputation that the church organized by Joseph, the Seer, and continued by his son ever infringed upon the rights of free speech.

"There are a number of things that I called to your attention which you have utterly failed to notice.

"You did not tell me when the eight witnesses 'testified' that Joseph Smith was the 'author and proprietor' other than what I said.

"You entirely ignored my second question.

"When I asked where in a fuller and more explicit statement Joseph Smith said that he did not translate the plates at all, that he never read a word that was on the plates and did not understand a single character and that no man on the face of the earth ever did, you were as silent as the grave.

You made the statement in your published article, 'The Book of Mormon was, according to Mormon belief, the word of God himself, therefore perfect, and that every change was a departure from the divine translations and so must be an insult to God, and absolutely untrustworthy and the editions now in use fraudulent; or if the ones now in use were correct then the originals upon which they, together with the whole fabric of Mormonism rests, must have been imperfect and Joseph Smith a liar when he said it had the divine approval through "Urim and Thummin."'

"My statement agrees therefore with your last conclusion. Granting as you say, that the English Bible, in every version was the work of confessedly uninspired translators, though the most eminent scholars that could be employed, and that each revision was an attempt to get back more accurately to the earliest manuscript, I suppose that you would not care to deny that the original texts of the books now comprising the Bible were inspired and in fact the word of God then would not your statement as applied to the Book of Mormon be equally applicable here and would not every change be a departure from the original and an insult to God and absolutely untrustworthy and the editions now in use fraudulent?"

"Sir, you have practically committed yourself to a repudiation of the present translation of the Bible; you have gone farther than I would have dared to go. Should you take the other argument and justify the efforts of the various translators of the Bible in their endeavor to make the Bible conform in thought more fully to present idioms and expressions why censure those who have tried to adapt the thought of the Book of Mormon writers to present day expressions. I defy you to find one change in the text of the Book of Mormon in any edition published by the true church which does violence to the text or in any material sense changes the meaning. Until you do so all this hubbub about the present editions being untrustworthy is but a soap-bubble and will burst owing to too much inflation.

"You know, sir, that your statement, 'You have the same access to the periodicals of the country that I have' is not borne out by the facts. Are you sincere when you say practically that I have the same access to the Assembly Herald which you have? You know they would not publish an article from my pen. Until you use your influence to secure me this privilege your statement counts for nothing.

"No, sir, when it comes to modern sectism of which you are an individual type we are not in a land of free speech and, if the Presbyterian Church was in the ascendancy, the opportunity to publicly express ourselves would be largely curtailed. It has ever been the plan of the sects to malign our people and misrepresent our philosophy and when we cried for justice, free speech, and fair play, they have said 'Away with him, kill him, kill him.' History repeating itself, my dear sir. Modern Pharisaism is but slightly removed from what it was in Christ's time and said removal does not speak well for the modern article.

"You ask me to drop the correspondence and give my righteous soul a little peace. Never: 'While water runs and grass grows' as Joseph Smith once said, 'I or my posterity will be found pleading the cause of injured innocence.'

"My arraignment of your article and subsequent correspondence is: First, you assert that 'hundreds of thousands have discarded Mormonism and become as other men' you give no proof. Second, in one breath you say that 'Mormonism is only one form of unbelief' and shortly present it as a system where Mormon missionaries always feed the credulity of their perverts a 'lie seventy years old.'

"Again, you asserted that a Mormon priest has been converted but failed to supply either name or address.

"According to your own standard you have been weighed in the balance and found wanting and I would recommend as an incentive to more righteous treatment of your fellows that you study this text, 'As ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them' until the spirit of this command shall take possession of your soul enabling you to see the good and the pure in other men's faiths. Men generally find what they are looking for. It is not always true that the blemish which they discover is an attribute of the thing criticised; it frequently occurs that the lens of the search-light is distorted and colored.

"With the kindest of feelings towards you but thoroughly in earnest, Respectfully submitted,

"T. W. WILLIAMS."

LAMONI, Iowa, March 6.

Editors Herald: I desire to submit a few lines to your columns in advocacy of our Danish-Norwegian paper Sandhedens Banner. Its support and the support of the Scandinavian mission will likely depend largely on the financial assistance rendered from this country, while the work there is yet in its infancy. The work has been undertaken there a number of times, but has had no permanency, owing, possibly, to two causes, insufficient available missionary material and insufficient financial assistance. Taking these two causes into consideration, and in connection with the fact that the missionaries there have no access to schoolhouses and churches under any consideration, as they are under the control of the local pastors of the state church (the Lutheran), and that is equivalent to a refusal every time, hence throughout the country districts missionary work would be mostly fireside work and from house to house canvass, unless some liberal, broad-minded men should consent to letting his residence be used for preaching.

This little paper, the Banner, can reach homes and localities where the missionary perhaps could not, and pave the way for the missionary; its contents would be read, discussed, talked about, and thoroughly digested, and it is bound to set the people to thinking. Lots of them are disgusted with the old Lutheran parrot-like sermon, founded on the theology of salvation to only a few elect and eternal damnation and misery in the lake of fire and brimstone, to the great majority of mankind.

Scandinavian Saints, do you not think it worth your effort to send this little missionary to your relatives and friends on the other side of the Atlantic? It is a good paper, full of good news, clear and pointed, and it will bring spiritual life and sunshine wherever it goes? It has now the history of the church running through its columns. It is interesting for all, even though we may have read it a number of times. This silent missionary is dependent upon its subscribers for its existence; it can not be supported from the tithing fund, but must seek its maintenance elsewhere; and in consideration of the amount of good it may do, the many homes in which it may become a welcome, semimonthly visitor to cheer and gladden the hearts of those who sit in spiritual darkness, we sincerely make this appeal to you to send in your subscription, not only for those whom you may desire to send it to across the ocean, but become subscribers yourselves, so as to keep posted on the work back there, and thus assist it financially.

I just noticed in the last Herald a letter from one of our brethren in the New Zealand Mission, who was willing to get along with just enough to buy one meal per day, in order to get the gospel before the people.

Saints, let us consider these sacrifices which many of our brethren are making; and those who are permitted to stay at home, let us not forget to assist the work in every way we can.

The present age is a progressive one in many ways. The press and the mail system are some of those commodities that we perhaps appreciate the most. Why should we not use it in every legitimate way to advance the cause of Christ, where only a few cents or dollars may be the means of doing much good? Bishop Kelley will receive your remittance, and please write name and address plain. The Banner will cost you to this country one dollar; in Scandinavia one krone and fifty öre, or about forty-one cents; or it can be sent direct, if more convenient, to Peter Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway, who is Bishop's agent for Scandinavia, and also assistant editor of the Banner.

It is an old saying to strike while the iron is hot. This may possibly also be applicable to missionary work.

The people are getting dissatisfied with their old creeds; continually finding fault with them; one evidence of their imperfection and each fault-finder testifies to the truthfulness of the statement made to the young seer that their creeds are all wrong and an abomination in God's sight. The different sects are at unrest among themselves, but as a unit against the Saints. What does that mean? Is it possible that such a thing as union among the sects is possible on church lines, in order to more completely work against the Saints? Whatever will be the outcome, one thing is certain, that old Babylon is like an old volcano, with continual roarings and groanings in the midst of her, and once in a while an eruption takes place and her internal corruption is made known.

The churches of to-day are nothing more or less than places of entertainment, social amusement, theatrical performances, and in order to be right up to date in social circles one must belong to a church, have an eloquent preacher, a fine church building, soft, easy pews, a fine organ, and a select choir. That contains the principal points of the religion of to-day. But where is the spirituality? Well, that is a thing of the past. Wesley said in his day that the Christians had turned heathens again. I am inclined to think he was right, and perhaps you will think so too when you read the following which I translated and copied from a Danish paper. It was spoken by a minister in one of the Chicago churches and reported in the paper from which I took it. It is as follows:

"Why do not the churches combine in a trust? Yes, why not? Nowadays when nearly everything is swallowed up by one trust or another, it would be well worth considering.

"The Methodists have just collected twenty million dollars. With this they could commence buying up, for instance, the Congregationalists; also could they arrange with the Baptists and get John D. Rockefeller, who belongs to this church, to add a portion of his Standard Oil money and gather in a flock of the Protestant churches. They could then hire a competent business manager and by creating a strong clergymen's union to take care of their interests, could thereby secure continual good wages. There is nowadays so little difference in teaching and practice that it ought not to cause any unconquerable difficulty, and the advantages would be many and of vast signification.

"The clergy could, as before stated, secure their wages, as the trust would have sufficient money, of course places could not be found for all, but quite a number of them could be dispensed with anyway, and the most incapable with the old and worn-out receive a pension.

"One church would then be enough for most of the small towns, where now four or five lead a cumbersome existence. The sale of the balance would bring a considerable quantity of money and help considerable in clearing other expenses, such as finer organs, soft cushions in the seats, etc. Church debts could be reduced or entirely obliterated, and mission stations be established among the heathens both at home and abroad. The great expenses connected with the clergy seminaries would also be saved and a great national seminary could supply the trust with new recruits according to need. It would also have this advantage, that all theological strife and discord, so much in existence now, would cease; for the management would require unity in teaching, or discharge from office. Much study would also be saved in regard to sermons; for the management would likely have the oversight of their make-up, so that nothing was preached that could hurt or bring the rights of the trust in question, and the preachers main work would be to read those with suitable declamation and feeling.

"In case the trust demanded too much work the preachers could go on a strike or require an arbitration committee to regulate the differences in an amicable way. Yes, why not?

"The different church organizations of to-day are carried on on the same principles as other business affairs. It depends upon getting a large membership, build large and fine churches, hire able preachers, and have large funds. As in temporal business so also here competition gets sharper every year, and something must be done so that the large fish shall not devour the little ones.

"The children of the light can learn a lesson from mammon also here. What Morgan and Rockefeller have accomplished in the business world, can possibly a preacher's talent accomplish in the church world. Concerning the spiritual life it is of course not taken into consideration. The principal point is how one can continue building fine churches, get large membership, and procure the necessary money.

"A church trust is the conclusion, with a Morgan as manager."
—Folke-Vennen, February 5, 1903.

Whether the foregoing was intended as a joke or otherwise, I could not say, but it evidently reveals the mind of some who would like to see such a condition brought about. What next?

Hoping for the final triumph of God's truth to the overpowering of false and mistaken religious ideas by which mankind has been in bondage and darkness, lo, these many years,

S. K. SORENSEN,

JOPLIN, Missouri, March 7.

Editors Herald: I have been much blessed in preaching the word in various places in Jasper and Barton Counties since first of the year. Several noble souls have obeyed the glorious gospel of Christ and a goodly number are near the kingdom, who declare they will yet be numbered with the Saints of latter days.

Much rain and muddy roads, also sickness in my family has compelled me to move slowly at times, but we can see improvement all along the line, in Spring River District, and a glorious future before the district, and all those Saints in it that continue faithful.

My debate with O. M. Thomason is postponed till latter part of April, so I will visit Saints and friends at Knobnoster, Missouri, before General Conference.

OWAKA, New Zealand, February 7.

Editors Herald: I now write that the church may be informed of the conditions surrounding her missionaries in New Zealand. Individuals, and bodies too, can move along better when they do so intelligently, or with understanding. Conditions here are altogether difficult from those in Iowa where I formerly toiled and elsewhere throughout the United States so far as I know. On all sides we are confronted by forces that weigh heavily against us and for that reason the church need not in this mission, for a long time, expect great results in the matter of founding branches, or even getting many members.

New Zealand has a population of only about seven hundred fifty thousand all told. When such a slender population is scattered over all her territory it will be seen at once that outside of towns and cities successful missionary work is almost impossible, for the country consists of large farms of from two to five hundred or one thousand acres or more, and some of the big sheep ranges are much larger. One very serious difficulty in the rural districts is that most of the people have no accommodation for travelers, only enough room for themselves. That failing may not exist when the country is older. But the chief difficulty in the southern part of the South Island is that the Presbyterians predominate and use their power to further their own interests no matter whether the liberty of others is involved or not. They are Highland Presbyterians, of the old school and, if possible, tenfold harder to reach than the Catholics of America. They wear a coat of mail that is imperious to instruments of reason. Perhaps Bro. Rushton, of Scotland, is acquainted with the class of whom I speak—the Highlanders from Scotland.

Places in which to preach are obtained only rarely and with the greatest difficulty. The directors of the schools are usually staunch defenders of the prevailing church of the community and they exercise their power to the exclusion, oftentimes, of any one of different faith, holding meetings in their schools. They want "nothing controversial," something simply "purely evangelistic." They wish nothing taught that would ruffle, in the least, the feelings of the community. And if one is granted the use of the school, and they learn one's faith is different from their own they want a little rent, just to pay expenses, as they say.

In the country the people being so far apart from each other and interested only in their "father's and mother's" religion, meetings would there be a failure.

I may here make known four serious obstacles to the expansion of our work in New Zealand: The great difficulty of getting a place to preach in. People having no accommodation only for themselves by reason of which we are not enabled to tarry in a place, though a house in which to preach has been secured. Frequent, heavy rains. The intense satisfaction of the people with their accepted religion, thus inducing them to stay away from all services not their own. The last is the most serious of all. It puts them behind a mountain which prevents them from being reached by us.

Another difficulty. Itinerant preachers are very scarce and one who thus travels is not only not much respected, but almost despised. The pastors of the various churches are well paid. If it made no difference what a person believed or taught, one of the best paying professions I know of would be to be a Presbyterian preacher in New Zealand. Since the ministers throughout the country are rolled in luxury, the people think we too, are burdened with money, and great demands are made of us.

Bro. Tucker and I have labored in various towns and cities, but nothing seemingly has been accomplished by reason of the conditions I have above mentioned. The past year here has been an unusually wet one, almost unprecedented. Street preaching for that reason has not been possible. Halls are too expensive to rent. All we could do was to distribute tracts and in a few days call for them; but absolutely nothing, so far as we could see, was done in that way.

It is an alarming fact that the world is running after their idols. Harken to what Nephi has said about the Gentiles: "Woe be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of hosts; for notwithstanding I shall lengthen out mine arm unto them from day to day, they will deny me; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto them, saith the Lord God, if they will repent and come unto me; for mine arm is lengthened out all the day long, saith the Lord God of hosts."—2 Nephi 12: 5.

New Zealand seems to be settled by a fine race of people, but the gospel as taught by Christ they do not want.

Kaitangata, where we opened our work in New Zealand, is the only place where we have a fairly good hold. But even there Satan has hindered. We have many friends at that place, but an abiding place where we can go when weary and tired we have not. After the opposition against us at that place by the "Church of Christ," three of their best members united with us. A small Sunday-school has been organized there and is doing well.

If only the religious denominations thought enough of their religion to fight for it it would be far better for us. They would then see the weakness of their own and the strength of ours.

Mr. M. W. Green, the Long Tom who came against us in public lecture at Kaitangata and who publicly agreed to meet both Bro. Tucker and myself in public debate, backed out before a large concourse of people as disgracefully as he courageously agreed to meet us.

Two distinct shocks of earthquake were felt January 26. They were accompanied by loud subterranean noises, like the rumbling of distant thunder. Only those who have felt an earthquake can realize the unpleasant feeling. It will take more than an earthquake to jar people loose from their moorings who clasp error to their bosoms and rejoice and reject the servants of the Lord. The Lord spoke truly when he said concerning the earth that there should be "groanings in the midst of her" after his testimony went forth.

Lord, send forth thy work to victory; but may my hands be clean, my heart pure, and my ways thy ways!

May the church realize we need to be sustained by their prayers, for only God knows what our lot is at times. We are ready to spend and be spent for the Lord. Bro. Tucker I find to be a man ready to be sacrificed if necessary for the cause he loves.

May Zion awake and put on her beautiful garments, for the time has come. Your brother in the true faith, KAITANGATA, New Zealand.

PAUL M. HANSON.

LETCHER, South Dakota, March 1.

Editors Herald: In the past three months we have had much very cold weather and snow, but the good work is progressing nicely. I have baptized thirteen in the past three months with five more names given, besides many near the kingdom. One baptized to-day. My heart has been made glad to see those honest souls go into the ice-cold water on a cold day with a blizzard from the east.

We have had opposition this year, but so far as I can see it has resulted in good to the cause in some places and seems the good work is destined to move on. When we see the many groping in blindness we are anxious to see the work progress faster than it does. But prejudice in this country runs high and our only success in future lies in a long patient effort to get the gospel before the people of this State.

I got the work opened pretty well in several new places in this State this year. I wish an interest in the prayers of Saints that I may have divine guidance and be able to meet the enemy.

The Methodists at Springfield are soliciting money to get an imported man to tell them of what they call "Mormonism." I told them I would try to be there when their money was gone.

Ever praying for Zion's redemption, I am,

Yours in gospel bonds,

OSCAR CASE.

COHOCTON, New York, March 2.

Dear Herald: Leaving Henderson, Iowa, about the first of June my wife and I started for Greenwood, New York, my field of labor. We stopped at Bridgewater, Iowa, and stayed over Sunday with my father, and reached Greenwood, New York, on the next Thursday morning, where we found a kind-hearted band of Saints whom we have learned to love. They had a Sunday-school when we came and were having weekly prayer-meetings. In the summer we organized a Religio, which is still running and I hope they will keep it in good running order, for the lessons in the Religio Quarterly are instructive.

In September I held some meetings in East Pharsalia, Chenango County; but owing to so much prejudice the people did not turn out very well. After returning to Greenwood I went to Allegany County and held some meetings and visited a number of relatives, returning to Greenwood a short time before Christmas.

Bro. Robley came during the latter part of January; but owing to his physical condition stayed only two weeks, in which time we held meetings in our chapel at Greenwood. On January 17, I had the pleasure of baptizing two (Charles York and Merrel Stephens) into the church and they were confirmed by me on Sunday the 22d. Bro. Stephens has been a believer for two or three years and Bro. York was converted by reading our church literature loaned him by Saints at Greenwood.

Last Thursday evening we said good-bye to the Saints and friends at Greenwood who had been so kind to us during our stay with them, making our work while there much lighter than it would have been otherwise. It was hard to give the parting hand, but we hope to meet them again. If not in this life, then in the life to come. Leaving there Friday morning we went to Hornellsville, where we stopped over night with Sr. Knight, coming up here on Saturday, where I expected to hold some meetings in a union church; but being refused the use of the house we will soon start on our way to General Conference.

Fraternally,

J. B. LENTZ.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, March 4.

Editors Herald: It seems as though I can not wait for the HERALD and Ensign to come, there is so much spiritual food in them. I feel very lonely when at home alone with my little ones, as my companion is in the missionary work so we are separated most of the time, which is a great trial for me to bear, for I feel as a missionary's wife we have a great responsibility resting upon us. But I desire to be a true mother and a true Saint, one that God is not ashamed of; want to be the means of doing some good in this grand work, if nothing more than to bring my little ones up and have them ready to accept the gospel when old enough. May God add his blessings and prosper the Saints everywhere.

Your sister,

J. H. CASE.

ARCADIA, Nebraska, February 23.

Dear Herald: I have been laboring in Howard, Center, and Valley Counties. I first went to Walback and tried to hold meetings, but was frozen out. I went from there to the Spring Creek Schoolhouse and held five meetings with fair interest. This was a new place for our work. From there to Howard County. This is a new place also. Held meetings there a week with fair interest; I think the attendance would have been better had the weather been good. From there I went to Comstock, Center County, and met with the Round Park Branch. There I preached eight times; had good turnout considering the weather, which was very cold and stormy. From there I went to the Dunham Schoolhouse, where I had good attendance at both meetings on Sunday. On the 23d I left for home to attend to some business matters.

R. O. SELF.

CANTRALL, Illinois, February 27.

Dear Herald: I am all alone among unbelievers, but I bless God for the knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I feel thankful that I had the privilege of hearing and obeying the same. My husband died the fifth day of July last. He was eighty-four the 3d, I am eighty-two past. I do not know what I would do without the HERALD and church books, which are a comfort to me. I live with my children. They have never heard the gospel, only what they hear about the Salt Lake people, but they will not look at my books or papers. I am trying to keep the faith, and hope the Saints will pray for me, that they may be brought to the knowledge of the gospel before they die.

I am your humble sister,

MARTHA KEENE.

ADRIAN, Illinois, February 26.

Editors Herald: I have been holding a series of meetings here in the Rock Creek Church. But the roads got so terrible they are almost impassable, and I had to close last night. I had intended holding a series of meetings south of Elvaston, where Bro. Tripp has a splendid opening, but the measles and bad roads prevented me there also. Then Sr. Gibson tried to get the Presbyterian church for me to occupy, but the answer was very emphatic, "No. The Latter Day Saints criticise other churches too much to use our church." So, of course, we did not get it.

I will go to Burlington for a time and preach there.

My health is still improving slowly. I hope I may be fully restored again, so that I can do a better work for the Master. I lost three months this winter by sickness. I am anxious to see the work move onward to the final consummation.

Still battling for the truth,

J. S. ROTH.

1011 Summer Street, GRINNELL, Iowa.

THEODORE, Alabama, February 26.

Editors Herald: Our two-day meeting held on the 21st and 22d was an enjoyable time indeed. The preaching was done by Bro. G. W. Sherman, and all seemed to be deeply interested, the Spirit being present to a marked degree. At present all seem to be doing fairly well.

Bro. I. N. Roberts has done lots of good in this part of the South. Wish we could have him back again. Pray for us.

In the love of the gospel,

FRANK HUVER.

OMAHA, Nebraska, February 18.

Editors Herald: On reading the letter department I feel to express my gratitude for the good I receive. I distribute Heralds, the Hope, and other church publications where the people will accept them. I desire to do all the good I can for the cause. I ever pray for the cause of Zion.

P. L. STEPHENSON.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, March 6.

Editors Herald: Our work in this district is not as flattering as it might be; but still we are not by any means discouraged. The Lord has been with us, his Spirit has attended our labors, causing the hearts of the Saints to rejoice, and those who have not obeyed to have a clearer and better understanding of our work, and we are hopeful for the future, feeling assured that the Master will crown our humble efforts with success, and that many precious souls will be gathered in, and be made fit for the Master's use.

"O what shall the harvest be?" Grand and most glorious, we are sure; and we hope to be numbered with the true, and stand in our place with the faithful in the great day of rewards.

Brn. Fry and Madison are pushing the work to the best of their ability on the frontiers of the district, with very fair success. Roads have been bad, and seemingly plenty of opposition, and some discouragement, but onward they go, looking for the victory through Christ our Master.

All as we believe are doing the best they can.

Yours for the final triumph,

HENRY KEMP.

BELMONT, Nebraska, March 1.

Editors Herald: C. W. Prettyman has been with us during the latter part of January and preached a series of stirring gospel sermons. The few Saints here have been encouraged in the work and strengthened in the faith and the Evergreen Branch has again been put into working order as a result of his labors.

May the Lord bless his servants in preaching the word that the honest in heart may be gathered out and be made pure in heart through the gospel, is my prayer.

R. S. MENGEL.

POCOTELLO, Idaho, March 2.

Editors Herald: The conference held at Blackfoot yesterday and day before was a pleasant and profitable meeting. Ample preparation was made by the few Saints residing there to entertain, and an excellent spirit and good fellowship prevailed all through. The court-house procured for the occasion proved to be a commodious place of meeting. Those in attendance felt amply rewarded for their efforts to attend, and returned to their homes cheered and encouraged. In company with Brn. S. D. Condit and J. E. Vanderwood, I left there this morning for Ogden, and while tarrying over here a few hours waiting for the train, I write. In the meantime dine with Sr. Roller, where we had a pleasant visit, and also met Brn. Croshaw and Benson.

Nothing preventing I will attend the conference at Ogden next Saturday and Sunday and then start east.

It is growing warmer, the snow is melting, and mud in sight. It is thought by some the cold weather is about over here. I am getting the better of la grippe.

WM. H. KELLEY.

SEILING, Oklahoma, January 27.

Editors Herald: Reading in HERALD of January 21 regarding differences between J. W. McGarvey and Davis H. Bays and Company of the "Anti-Mormon League," reminds me of many other troubles said league will have in "reconstructing" such men and getting them in harmony with their unscriptural doctrines. None know better than Bays (I know by three years acquaintance in the early seventies) that the very foundation of what they are pleased to call Mormonism is based upon the promises of God to Abraham and the prophets concerning literal Israel, and their fulfillment, which they so bitterly oppose.

In the Kansas City Star of July 7, 1902, is an article headed, "The future of the Jews, etc."

A sermon on the Jews, as the chosen people of God, was preached at the Sixth and Prospect Avenue Christian church yesterday by J. W. McGarvey, president of the Bible College of Kentucky University, the Jews, he said were destined to survive every other people on earth, because of God's promise to Abraham to make of his descendants a great nation.

"Mr. McGarvey was brought prominently before the public not long ago by a controversy between himself and James Lane Allen, the Kentucky author. Mr. Allen reflected upon the theological dogmas of the college in his 'Reign of Law.' Mr. McGarvey replied and considerable correspondence followed in the Kentucky newspapers. Mr. McGarvey—he declines to be called 'Doctor' although offered the degree—is one of the editors of the Christian Standard, which has the largest circulation of any denominational paper in the world. He is besides the author of several theological works. He belongs to the conservative school and is bitterly opposed to anything that smacks of higher criticism or does not conform to a literal interpretation of the Bible. His strictly literal interpretation of the promise to Abraham gave his sermon yesterday an almost sensational positiveness.

"The speaker traced the persecutions through which the Jews had come. He declared that the Egyptians, the Assyrians, the Medes, the Persians, and all the other peoples who were contemporary with the early Jews, had perished. Yet the Jew survives.

"'It must be,' he said, 'because almighty God has preserved them. Nothing else could have done it. Despite all these efforts to exterminate them the Jews are more numerous now than they were in the days of Solomon, and some of them have got more gold than Solomon ever dreamed of having. They are powerful in both the lines of wealth and intellectuality. In Europe, it is said, war can not be declared without the consent of the Rothschilds. Benjamin Disraeli, a Jew, was prime minister of the greatest empire now on the face of the earth. When, as a young man, he entered parliament, some one jeered at him because he was a Jew. He answered the jeerer: 'The gentleman jeers at me because I am a Jew: but let me remind him that my forefathers were worshiping the true God in a temple of gold when his ancestors were naked savages, roaming the forests.'

"Some time ago I read a magazine article by Mark Twain on: 'Why is the Jew Still with Us?' It is a question that no man will ever be able to answer unless he knows the Bible better than Mark Twain knows it. The promises made by Jehovah through the Prophet Jeremiah are being fulfilled in the Jews. If the Jews were not here we would not know whether God had kept his promise, but they are here and every nation that has oppressed them has perished.

"Men who stand in pulpits and high places and say there is nothing in prophecies should be spurned by the people. They should hang their heads in shame in the presence of such evidence as this. Centuries hence the future historian will find the Jews the backbone of civilization. If there should happen then to be any Americans, or any Germans, or Spaniards or Russians left—and I doubt it—the question will not then be "Why is the Jew Still with Us?" but it will be "Why are we yet with the Jews?"

"All the silly philosophy of our modern skeptics becomes as naught in the face of such testimony. It is dashed back as the rock of Gibraltar dashes back the waves."

Whoever heard a better "Mormon" sermon, as Bays and Company would call it if they should hear it, or see it in Latter Day Saint papers; or a more scriptural one? Just such teachings as that cost the great Seer of the nineteenth century his life; and would have done the same for President McGarvey, perhaps, had he lived and so taught in 1830. But thanks be to God, as wise Daniel wrote, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."—Daniel 12: 4. "But the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand."—Verse 10. Manifestly true in the case of President McGarvey. Why not stop such teachings among their own great men? as he is stated to be in the Star. What he teaches in the above quotations, that the promises of Jehovah through the Prophet Jeremiah, are being fulfilled in the Jews, is manifestly true; which promises are so numerous that space forbids mentioning but few of them. In chapter 16: 14, 15 in speaking of the wonderful power of God displayed in bringing Israel from the north countries, the Prophet says, "Therefore, behold the days come saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers." Something new being begun by the Zionist movement, and to be finished by such manifestations of God's power that it may be mentioned as evidence of his power instead of their wonderful deliverance from Egypt. And, "In the day of affliction [that shall come upon the nations of this time], the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.—Verse 19. Such "vanity," etc., as Bays and Company are now indulging in, that they are going to thwart the purposes of the eternal One, in doing as he promised through the prophets. Why not persecute President McGarvey for such teachings, as well as the Saints?"

Again, "And I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive."—Jeremiah 29: 14. "For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him. . . . For lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob [both Israel and Judah] shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whether I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee."—Jeremiah 30: 8-11. Just what is speedily coming on all nations as President McGarvey says, who oppose this great work of the Lord. The Lord says, "I will burst thy bonds and strangers will no more serve themselves of him." And as "The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border [just what they did after the destruction of Jerusalem A. D. 70]. Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompense upon your own head: And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah."—Joel 3: 6-8. Fulfilled to the very letter to-day. Not a nation on earth with a bond, but the Jews own their bonds. Of over nine hundred million dollars worth of bonds of this government, national, state, and municipal debts, the Jews hold over seventy million dollars of the bonds; and our sons and daughters are sold into the land of the children of Judah.

Again in Jeremiah 30: 18-24, "Behold I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, . . . and the city [Jerusalem] shall be builded upon her own heap [as being done to-day] . . . their children also shall be as aforetime, . . . and their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; . . . in the latter days ye shall consider it." As the studious, the honest in heart and President McGarvey are now doing. In Jeremiah 31: 8, 10 the Lord says, speaking of Israel, "Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth. . . . Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock." "And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord."—Verse 28. "Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, . . . the Lord of hosts is his name. If those ordinances depart from me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. Thus saith the Lord: If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done saith the Lord. Behold the days come saith the Lord, that the city [Jerusalem] shall be built from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner. . . . It shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more for ever."—Verses 35-40. And in chapter 33 we read: "And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first. . . . And it [Israel] shall be to me a name of joy, a praise, and an honor before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they ['all the nations of the earth'] shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it."—Jeremiah 33:7, 9. The Lord then asks of Jeremiah, "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen [Israel and Judah], he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, [saying] that they should be no more a nation before [or preferred before] them."—Verse 24. Just what the Gentile nations are saying to-day. Now hear the Lord's answer, "Thus saith the Lord: If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them."—Verses 25, 26.

The destruction or full end of all nations who oppose the restitution of Israel, as foretold by the prophets, is most plainly foretold in Jeremiah 46:27, 28. "But fear not thou O my servant Jacob, . . . for behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid. Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord, for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all nations whither I have driven thee, but I will not make a full end of thee," etc. Speaking of Jerusalem, when it shall be rebuilt, Isaiah says, "And the sons of the strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: . . . Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish: yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."—Isaiah 60:10-12.

Well did President McGarvey say that, "Men who stand in pulpits and high places and say there is nothing in [these] prophecies, should be spurned by the people. They should hang their heads in shame in the presence of such evidence as this." It is dashed back as the rock of Gibraltar dashes back the waves, and his teachings are strictly in harmony with the Saints, whom the "Anti-Mormon League" is organizing to oppose: and I would suggest to them first to reconstruct their own household, as Jesus says, A "house divided against itself can not stand."

I am laboring at present near home because of the very cold weather we have had. As ever, your colaborer, in bonds,

D. S. CRAWLEY.

Use Short, Familiar Words.

The man suffers from a bodily ailment.

The man is sick.

Is there any doubt which is the stronger?

The short, familiar word is the one most readily understood, and the one that has most force. The principle would appear to be so obvious as not to require stating, yet experience shows that this error is one which beginners very often make. They seem to think that the words of ordinary speech are not good enough for writing, so they hunt for long and unfamiliar words, putting their thoughts up on stilts, so to speak, where they move very awkwardly. Years ago Lowell called attention to this vice of style as shown in some newspapers, where reporters try to make little items seem important by telling them in big words. A fire is no longer a fire, it is a conflagration, or even a holocaust. If a building is burned, the reporter solemnly writes that "the edifice was consumed." If a crowd gathered to watch it, we are told that "a vast concourse assembled to witness the conflagration." Thus simple thoughts masquerade in pompous diction, puzzling to simple readers, laughable to educated ones. This is not saying that one should never use a long word; there are times when a long word and no other will answer; but when there is a choice between a short, familiar word and a long, unfamiliar one, the short word is usually to be preferred.—From "Words, Sentences, and Paragraphs," by Benjamin A. Heydrick, in The Chautauquan for March.

Church Secretary's Notice.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS—TRUNK LINE ASSOCIATION.

The Trunk Line Association has also concurred in rate of fare and one third, round trip, certificate plan, to General Conference and Conventions, Independence, Missouri, April, 1903.

1. Territory: From Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, and Salamanca, New York; Erie and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Bellaire, Ohio; Wheeling, Parkersburg, and Huntington, West Virginia, and points east thereof, except in New England.

2. Passengers pay full fare, and tickets may be purchased from April 1 to 6, on going trip, in this territory; a certificate corresponding to every separate ticket purchased must be obtained, showing payment of full fare to Independence, Missouri; and which, signed and stamped by the Church Secretary and Joint Agent at the meeting, will entitle holders to return ticket at one third regular fare. Tickets must cost seventy-five cents or over to entitle to reduction from this territory. "Certificates are not kept at all stations. If, however, the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can inform the delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained. In such a case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there take up his certificate and through ticket to place of meeting."

3. Passengers who buy tickets to Kansas City, must repurchase from that point to Independence, and secure certificate with every ticket, showing payment of fare over regular steam railroads—either the Missouri Pacific or the Chicago & Alton—and not over cable or electric roads running between said points. Attention to this point will save trouble and loss of reduced fare. See that certificates contain names of holders before handing in. Deliver to Church Secretary on arrival. Joint Agent of Western Association will be present April 8, 9, and 10, to sign and deliver certificates to holders personally, and will charge a fee of twenty-five cents for each certificate. Holders must be present to receive same on one of dates named.

4. Going tickets are limited or unlimited, according to rules of separate roads; return tickets, sold from April 8 to 23, to be used on date of purchase, are limited to continuous passage, and over same route as going trip. "Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable." Do not accept a certificate covering more than one ticket—each ticket must show its separate certificate.

List of roads making the reduction: Baltimore & Ohio (Parkersburg, Bellaire, and Wheeling, and east thereof), Buffalo & Susquehanna, Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg, Central of New Jersey, Chesapeake & Ohio (Huntington, West Virginia, and east thereof), Chesapeake Steamship Company, Cumberland Valley, Delaware & Hudson, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, Erie (Buffalo, Dunkirk, Salamanca, and east thereof), Fonda, Johnstown & Gloversville, Jamestown & Chautauqua, Lehigh Valley, New York Central & Hudson River, Main Line and Branches, including R. W. & O., Adirondack, and Pennsylvania Divisions, but not including stations on the Harlem and Putnam Divisions; New York, Ontario & Western, New York, Philadelphia & Norfolk, Norfolk & Washington Steamship Company, Pennsylvania, including Buffalo and Allegheny Valley Division (formerly W. N. Y. & P. and Allegheny Valley Railways), Northern Central, Philadelphia & Erie, Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore, Washington Southern, West Jersey & Seashore, Philadelphia & Reading, West Shore.

If necessary and provisions can be made therefor, a business session may be held early Monday morning. Several changes may be necessary in this program, which will be made in further notice. Watch for the further announcements.

Your credentials should reach the general secretary, Bro. D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa, before April 1, as it will be very inconvenient for him to include later ones in his list to the committee on credentials. Only those received in time can be reported at the opening of convention. Others will be acted upon as soon as practicable after organization.

Yours for the work,

T. A. HOUGAS,

Supt. Gen. S. S. Association.

Religio Credential Committee.

The following have been appointed a committee on credentials for our annual convention, so that they may make up their report and have it ready at the opening session. Any one desiring to communicate with them please take notice: W. A. Bushnell, 615 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri. Marie H. Clark, 1210 Short Street, Independence, Missouri. John C. Grainger, 2124 East Street, Kansas City, Missouri.

Correction.

In the sixth line from the top of page 196, first column, in HERALD for February 26, between the words could respond, "not" should appear, making it read, to which the heart could not respond.

Notices.

A. M. Baker, of Springfield, Missouri, R. F. D. No. 2, desires to know the address of Bro. W. T. Roach. Any one knowing it will confer a favor by notifying Bro. Baker.

It is quite necessary for those who anticipate attending General Conference to notify the committee at once, as it is going to be difficult to find places to board. Those who do not make arrangements before going must expect trouble in finding places. The branch has made no provision for free board. Three dollars per week will be charged. Address the committee's secretary, Kearney Kelley, 1116 Electric Street, Independence, Missouri.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion of the Southeastern Illinois District will be held from August 1 to 10, 1903, at Dryfork Church, Wayne County, Illinois. All those who want tents please write to J. F. Sims, of Fairfield, Illinois, at least ten days before the meeting begins. Everybody is invited to come. I. A. Morris, F. M. Slover, F. M. Davis, Reunion Committee.

Died.

BRONSON.—At Kansas City, February 25, 1903, of heart failure, Elder Hiram C. Bronson; as born October 9, 1840, Hancock County, Illinois; baptized in his youth; was ordained an elder and preached the gospel faithfully for many years; his first wife, by whom he had two children, died in 1892; in 1899 he married Miss Alice Dodge, who with his daughter and family survive. Services from Wagner's chapel, sermon by F. C. Warnky, assisted by W. H. Garrett. He was laid to rest in the Union Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

JEPSON.—Sr. Sarah A. Jepson was born at London, England, April 11, 1825, died from la grippe at Frazee City, Minnesota, at the home of her son, Matthew Jepson, February 22, 1903; baptized June 29, 1902, by Elder F. D. Omans, and led a consistent life. Funeral sermon by Elder T. J. Martin, assisted by Elder E. A. Stedman.

WATSON.—Sr. Nettie Margaret Watson (Thompson) born May 9, 1878, at New York, New York; died February 22, 1903, at Brooklyn, New York. Sr. Nettie embraced the latter-day work September 20, 1892. Her demise is doubly sad in that she leaves three small children for her already widowed mother to take care of who has well-nigh reached the allotted time of man, "three score and ten." May the good Lord remember her and bless her commensurate with her added task.

NELSON.—At Nottingham, Pennsylvania, February 26, 1903, Morris Anna Nelson; was born at Winchester, Kansas, October 5, 1877; baptized and confirmed July 26, 1890, by Joseph A. Stewart. Her sudden death resulted from her clothing catching on fire from a hard coal burner, around which she was working. Her modest, pure, holy, and unselfish life won for her many friends. Her father, mother, and sister preceded her to the better land. A large concourse of relatives and friends attended the funeral at the Presbyterian church, February 28. Sermon by W. E. La Rue, assisted by Reverend J. M. Jenkins.

HALVERSON.—At Fontanelle, Iowa, February 27, 1903, Carl Edwin, the infant son of Bro. and Sr. M. Halverson; aged 1 month and 10 days. Funeral sermon by Elder S. Butler at his home on the 28th.

KELLEY.—At his home at Indian River, town of Addison, Washington County, Maine, Bro. Samuel M. Kelley, of consumption; aged 73 years, 9 months, 14 days. He had realized much of hardship and trouble, but received much comfort through faith in the restored gospel which he received and obeyed January 20, 1873, being baptized by Bro. J. C. Foss. Funeral services by Bro. C. H. Rich.

A Daisy Air Rifle for the Boy

The lad who desires some fun can get an air rifle from the KANSAS CITY JOURNAL as a present.

The name of this gun is "THE DAISY," and it is well named. This gun is thirty inches in length from the end of the barrel to the end of the stock. Here is a gun that the boy can have fun with.

This Air Rifle is the finest rifle on the market, as it is modeled after the latest target rifle. It has a genuine walnut stock, and is provided with improved sights, a feature every one will appreciate. The barrel and all working parts are made of steel, and the metal parts finely nickel-plated. It is simple in construction and shoots the strongest. All parts are interchangeable; shoots B. B. shot by compressed air, with sufficient force to kill sparrows, rats, etc., at a considerable distance. The rifle is safe in the hands of a child. It weighs over two pounds.

Our proposition: Any boy who will get TEN new subscriptions to the Kansas City Weekly Journal at 25 cents each, making a total of $2.50, and will send us a list of the names together with the money, we ship to his address, express charges prepaid, this handsome air rifle. Send money by post-office or draft and advise us of the name of your express office.

Boys, here is a chance to get the fun of your life. Rustle a little and get this gun as our proposition only holds good until June 1, 1903.

Address all communications to THE KANSAS CITY JOURNAL, Kansas City, Missouri.

Send for sample copies of the Weekly for canvassing. 10-2t

Two of the brethren, J. Charles Jensen and T. J. Sheldon, are of the opinion, apparently, that the answer given in the HERALD for January 14, in regard to the eating of the forbidden fruit by Eve is a wrong conclusion. We have already given place to Bro. Jensen's note in regard to the question and willingly insert Bro. Sheldon's.

We are not aware that the church as a body has determined what the line of decision and argument based on the supposition that there was no transgression of the command given of God, "Thou shalt not eat," should be.

We may have reasoned from a false premise as suggested by Bro. Sheldon; but what was the premise?

It is true that the command "to multiply and replenish the earth" was given while Adam and Eve were in the garden; the inference is fair then that children would have been born to them had no change of condition occurred through transgression. Bro. Sheldon argues from the premise that our answer implies that there would have been none. If our premise was wrong, what is the matter with Bro. Sheldon's? Is it better than Lehi's, who in Second Book of Nephi, chapter 1, paragraph 8, page 57, small edition Book of Mormon, says: "And I, Lehi, according to the things which I have read, must needs suppose." Then follows his reasoning in regard to the fall of an angel who became a devil because of disobedience, etc.

It would seem that the understanding presented by Bro. Sheldon is to the effect that had Eve not eaten of the forbidden fruit our parents would still have kept the commandment and the earth would have been peopled, and as a consequence we should have been all the same.

The commandment the breaking of which brought transgression into the garden, resulting in sin and death, was that of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil "thou shalt not eat." They did eat and did know. "Who told thee that thou wast naked?" "Has thou eaten of the tree?"

When we wrote the answer we did we had no thought of laying down a "doctrine" by inference, or of attempting to argue the question as to whether the transgression of Eve was a necessity foreseen and

It is safer to believe than to disbelieve. He who believes and remains steadfast will find friends in both good men and God.

THERE ought to be many Saints who have books which they would be willing to donate to the Library. What about it, Saints, are you remembering the Library as you should?

predestined of God that "men might be." We had the opinion then as we have now that it is not within our province to know what would have been had things at the creation and subsequently been different than what they were. The question involved entering into the realm of supposition with a view to the thought that some other processes might have resulted just the same as did those employed. It is certain that had there been no transgression of the command both parents would have remained in the garden, and the number of children would have been much smaller; or there is no force to the language, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception," found in Genesis 3:16.

To say that "we would have been," that the same results would have followed to the race, and to us as a part of it, upon the supposition that Eve had not eaten of the forbidden fruit and so transgressed breaking the command is more than we know. It was and is safer to say as we did, that we would not have been, in accord with Lehi's reasoning in 2 Nephi 1:8.

It is because of, or by reason of Adam's fall, and Lehi calls it a fall, that "men are, and men are that they might have joy." We have no warrant that we are aware of, to say that we would have been in spite of the fall, or without reference to the fall. If Eve had not sinned Adam would not have fallen. If Adam had not fallen man had not been. Granted the fall, the premise is correct; and the reasoning is good and the result is correct also.

We looked for some of the brethren to get after our reply; for of late it has become so prevalent for some to make us say by implication what does not appear in our statements, that we took it for granted this would not escape. We are pleased to note that brethren are on the alert and propose to examine what is written. No offense is meant to be given, none will be taken. It is an open question and must remain one until the hindering trammels of the flesh are removed and men see more clearly what they are and why they are. If Bro. Sheldon, or any other brother, can show us what would have happened to us if Eve had not transgressed, we shall be pleased to learn. In the meantime let us not go "heresy hunting."

MARK TWAIN ON MORMONISM.

Mark Twain has appeared in the North American Review recently in a series of articles on "Christian Science." In the December number he gives a number of requisites a religious movement must have to be successful, as follows:

The past teaches us that in order to succeed a movement like this must not be a mere philosophy, it must be a religion; also, that it must not claim entire originality, but content itself with passing for an improvement on an existing religion, and show its hand later, when strong and prosperous—like Mohammedanism.

Next, there must be money—and plenty of it.

Next, the power and authority and capital must be concentrated in the grip of a small and irresponsible clique, with nobody outside privileged to ask questions or find fault.

Next, as before remarked, it must bait its hook with some new and attractive advantages over the baits offered by the other religions.

Then by way of illustration he says:

A new movement equipped with some of these endowments—like spiritualism, for instance—may count upon a considerable success; a new movement equipped with the bulk of them—like Mohammedanism, for instance—may count upon a widely extended conquest. Mormonism had all the requisites but one—it had nothing new and nothing valuable to bait it with; and besides, it appealed to the stupid and the ignorant only.

You see, he could not refrain from taking a shot at "Mormonism." It is popular nowadays to shoot at the "ignorant Mormons."

MRS. MILLER'S VERSION OF MORMONISM.

The following appeared in the Portland Oregonian for January 24:

INTEREST IN MISSIONS.

That there is an increasing interest in home and foreign missions throughout the country seems evident from the various reports of missionary work given Tuesday afternoon at the meeting of the Woman's North Pacific Board of Missions, held in the parlors of the First Presbyterian Church. Mrs. W. S. Ladd, president of the board, presided. Mrs. S. T. Lockwood arranged the home missionary program, which occupied the first part of the afternoon. The first speaker was Mrs. Miller, of Westminster Church, who gave an interesting sketch of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon church, which is, Mrs. Miller said, far-reaching in its influence, and is a more dangerous body than the people are accustomed to think.

"Joseph Smith, when a boy," said Mrs. Miller, "had a very vivid imagination, intensified by reading the adventures of Captain Kidd.

"He was the leader of a crowd of boys, whom he influenced to dig for Kidd's buried treasure. When the boys became discouraged he had a way of holding his hat before his eyes and urging them on by declaring that he saw the treasure just a little deeper down.

"He was an indolent and worthless boy, always dreaming and having visions. When he was twenty-one he said that an angel had appeared to him in a dream and had taken him to his old tunnel, where the Kidd treasure was supposed to be, and had helped him dig up plates having on them the book of the Mormon gospel. He hung a curtain across his mother's kitchen, and to five scribes, who wrote down everything he said, he translated what he claimed to have in writing on his plates. This was the beginning of the Mormon church."

Mrs. Miller's description of the character of Joseph Smith has an added interest from the fact that she collected her information from people who knew the Smith family well.

How well Mrs. Miller knew the Smith family is seen from the wonderful (?) new things she has given us! It is really strange how intelligent people can believe and propagate such untruths as Mrs. Miller has given her hearers.

THAT "ULSTER COUNTY GAZETTE."

We have received the following letter from Bro. R. Etzenhouser, dated at San Jose, California, March 4:

To your mention, "We have received the copy of the Ulster County Gazette mentioned by Bro. Thomas Matthews in his letter in this issue, and find it as he states. Thanks, Bro. Matthews," I wish you had added location of that county. Please do so yet. After four brethren referring to it, no one can locate the county, so it seems to me. Presumably it is in England, or perhaps in Ireland; but in such references we should know and be able to give it in the field of controversy.

One of our leading and most excellent writers has again very recently quoted from the "Christian System" and not given edition, of which there are several. That work has undergone changes, it is necessary to have edition and in matter for use in controversy it should always be given, for any work may pass into the feature of later and changed editions.

Why not use in HERALD as a short space filler, something like this when a small space is to be filled in: "In quoting books give title, edition, page, and paragraph. In quoting papers name date of issue, also the year. Matter for evidence is thus made of fuller value."

The heading of the paper in question is as follows: "Ulster County Gazette. Published at Kingston (Ulster County), by Samuel Freer and Son, Saturday, January 4, 1800. Vol. 2, Num. 88." Bro. Etzenhouser has as good a right to guess where that county is as have we. Our guess is that it is in New York, from the fact that Kingston, New York, is the only Kingston listed in the "Postal Guide" as located in Ulster County. We notice in the advertising columns several notices signed by Peter Ten Broeck, Sheriff of Ulster County, and from them we also gather that Kingston is in Ulster County, New York.

"BENEFITS OF ABSTINENCE."

The following editorial from the Kansas City Journal for February 27 is interesting to read while thinking of the Word of Wisdom:

THE BENEFITS OF ABSTINENCE.

Regarding whether there is a religious obligation to observe the Lenten season, the people of different sects and churches do not agree; but that the body, the mind, and the morals may be benefited by practicing the abstemiousness which some churches enjoin as a duty at this time of the year can not be successfully questioned.

Most of us eat too much, and many of us drink too much for the good of our health. Our alimentary organs are commonly the most abused parts of our bodies. We rest our muscles and brains on Sunday, and many of us celebrate holidays and take annual vacations to give them recreation; but few of us ever grant our stomachs similar furloughs. We habitually give them more work than they can well do; if they fail to do everything we demand of them, we increase their exertions by stimulating them with medicines or liquors, as cruel men beat their overworked and emaciated horses to make them pull excessive loads; and then we wonder why we have not rugged health.

A cult has sprung up in recent years which recommends fasting as a specific for all diseases. Its doctrine is not a new one, but merely an old one carried to an extreme. Abstinence has been advocated by sages and physicians in every age as a remedy for many bodily ailments. It has also been recommended as a help to high thinking and virtuous living. It improves the health, removes noxious humors from the blood, clarifies the brain, and thus increases mental activity and strength. A full stomach and an empty head usually go together, as most brain workers know. The tendency of intemperate drinking to debase the morals is generally recognized and admitted. It is not so generally realized that intemperate eating has a similar tendency; yet it becomes clearly evident, on a little thought, that this is true. By clouding the brain excessive food renders a man less capable of mentally distinguishing right from wrong. By producing a bilious temperment or indigestion it makes him irritable and irascible. Dyspeptics seldom commit outrageous crimes; or, at least, such crimes can seldom be traced to dyspepsia as their cause, as they can to intoxication. But dyspeptics, apparently the most harmless, by means of their peevishness and irascibility often cause a great deal of pain and misery in the world, and a large proportion of those who commit suicide have been victims of this exasperating disorder.

Undoubtedly it is better for a man or woman to practice abstemiousness constantly than as a religious observance during only a few days of the year. But even the forty days abstinence of Lent—provided the system is not filled up meantime with other things that more than supply the place of the meat and liquors refrained from—will do good, and may be beneficially practiced as well by those who do not regard it as a religious obligation as by those who do.

"KIRTLAND TEMPLE."

The Four Track News for March contained a short article descriptive of the Kirtland Temple. A short historical sketch accompanies the description, and among other things is the following:

In the year 1860, part of the church, offended by the teachings of Brigham Young, met at Nauvoo [Amboy], Illinois, and reorganized the church, with Joseph Smith, Jr., the son of the Prophet, as president. In 1880, the courts decided that the Kirtland Temple belonged to them, so they took possession and restored it, as nearly as possible, to its former condition, since which time the "Saints" have been respected members of the community. Services are now held regularly in the Temple.

The practice of polygamy, which Brigham Young introduced, and which has brought the Mormon church into such disrepute, has always been repudiated by the church at Kirtland.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

E. F. Shupe wrote from Denver, Colorado, March 9: "Our conference just closed was a grand one. The little church was crowded all day Sunday. Five meetings were held on that day; viz., Sunday-school, two preaching services, sacrament, and Religio meetings. The business passed off without a jar. All left at the close feeling that it is good to be a Saint in latter days. The preaching was by Elders Emsley Curtis, J. B. Roush, and J. M. Stubbart; all the sermons were excellent and the Religio program was grand."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Among our exchanges is the Kansas Boy, a little four-page monthly published by E. R. Hart, who lives on a rural route out of Liberty, Kansas. He is editor, proprietor, and manager. Considering the youth of the editor, it is really a worthy little sheet. Its subscription price is fifteen cents per year.

In the obituary column this week will be seen notice of the death of Bro. Noah Karahoo, one of our Lamanite brethren. He has done considerable work as a minister and missionary, and no doubt will be missed greatly by our brethren in the Indian Territory.

Bro. Evan Lewis, in a letter to Bro. W. B. Kelley, from Lucas, Iowa, under date of March 11, wrote that himself and family arrived at Lucas on Monday, from Wales. Very stormy voyage, but plenty to eat and drink. He speaks very highly of the Cunard Line.

W. E. La Rue had access to the columns of the Bulletin, of Philadelphia, issue for March 10, on the polygamy question.

Sr. Ann Johnson, of Little Sioux, Iowa, who recently requested receipts for cure of cancer, has received so many letters that she says she can not answer all. She thanks the brethren and sisters who have thus shown interest in her.

Bro. A. S. Cochran has an article in the Grand Rapids Herald, Michigan, for March 8, under the heading, "Not 'True' Church. Utah Mormons Depart from Teachings of Smith." He quite clearly sets forth the differences. The Post, of the same city, issue for March 2, also contained an article setting forth the differences. The articles will do much good towards setting our position fairly before the people of Grand Rapids and vicinity.

Don Campbell, son of Bro. Duncan Campell, of Pleasanton, Iowa, who has been attending the Iowa State Normal School at Cedar Falls, Iowa, has received honors from his classmates which are evidences of his worth. On March 3 he was chosen editor-in-chief of the Normal Eye, a paper published by the school; and last fall he was elected captain of Company D, of the cadet corps. He was also chosen manager of track athletics. We are always glad to see our young brethren developing into positions of honor.

It may be of some benefit for those of the brethren passing to and from Lamoni, to know that there is a little hotel at Chariton, Iowa, on the main line of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railway, where passengers change from Lamoni, kept by Hugh McCallay, whose wife is a sister of Bro. Lovell, of the Greenville Branch, near Davis City. It is just across the street from the station, and would be a pleasant place for staying between trains. It would be convenient for those who had to take the four o'clock morning train south to Lamoni.

Substantial aid for Graceland College was received recently by the Bishop from a brother in Australia amounting to five hundred forty-seven dollars and ten cents. This is a fine example set by our Australian brother. We would like to give his name but he preferred that no publication of name be made unless unavoidable. Bro. J. W. Wight conveyed the sum and reports excellent success in his work in that country.

Elder J. E. Meredith, of Birmingham, England, gives an encouraging report of the work in that country. Bro. Meredith sails for America on March 11 to attend General Conference at Independence and visit a few places and friends in the United States. He is the proprietor of the dynamo works, Birmingham.

Elder H. R. Harder reports eleven baptisms at Redfork, Indian Territory, for last month. He is encouraged with the progress of the truth.

J. M. Bandy, editor of the Baptist Flag, in a recent issue, after telling somewhat of his doings, etc., said: "In addition to this we always hold ourselves in readiness to skin a Campbellite, Mormon, or any other errorist that needs it. Done and got everything laid by in Missouri."

Reports of the missionaries are nearly all in, and it is expected the tabular report will be printed in our next issue. Those who have not mailed their reports to Bro. Salyards should do so at once.

Sr. Walker, editor of Autumn Leaves, is once more in her Lamoni home, after an absence of several weeks. Her Lamoni friends are glad to see her home once more.

A number of the missionaries who live in Lamoni are home from their missions, preparing for General Conference and looking after home interests after their long absences.

"The Passing of the American Indian," is the title of an interesting article by Thomas F. Millard in the January-March number of the Forum. It opens with these significant words: "After four centuries, during which he fiercely resisted, sullenly resented, and at last passively acquiesced in the gradual encroachments of civilization, the American Indian now finds himself face to face with the always inevitable, but long deferred, absorption by the white race. The hour of his elimination is at hand. It is practically certain that another year will see his final disappearance from the nations of the world, his identity for ever lost under the broad mantle of United States citizenship."

We have received from the Iowa Engineering Company, of Clinton, Iowa, a neat little book of fifty-nine pages, entitled, "Municipal Public Work," in which many subjects connected with public municipal works are discussed from an engineering standpoint. It is a valuable little work, containing some excellent suggestions on sewers, sewerage disposal, etc., showing their relation to healthy and beautiful cities and towns. It is illustrated by half-tones and woodcuts.

Both the Gospel Quarterly and Religio Quarterly were mailed last week. Those failing to receive their numbers, notify the business department.

Original Articles.

"WHAT WOULD HAVE BECOME OF US?"

In the HERALD for January 14, 1903, there appeared a question as follows: "What would have become of us had Eve never eaten of the forbidden fruit?" The HERALD answers: "Nothing. We would not have been;" justifying this answer by quoting "Adam fell that men might be."—Book of Mormon. I am very sorry that I have to take up my pen and correct what to me seems a very pernicious doctrine. Never since I have been in the church has anything so jarred upon me as this. The HERALD is the "official organ" of the church, hence it is representative of the church thought. I have to say that this answer does not represent me at least. It seems to me that if it is right to ask the elders to teach tithing and other subjects, just as the church has defined them, then when the editors of the HERALD answer a question, they ought to answer it as the church has decided the question. If the church has decided that the fall of Eve was necessary that man might be, I for one would like to know where that is recorded. If it is only the opinion of the editors, I hope to be permitted to say wherein I think that opinion is out of harmony with the facts. I do not think this error intentional, but arises from reasoning from a wrong premise. The premise being wrong, the conclusion must be erroneous. The matter resolves itself into this: Was it necessary to break one of God's commands in order to keep another? The HERALD infers that it was. That would be doing "evil that good might come." Now for the commandment. God commanded man to "be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth."—Genesis 1: 28 (Inspired Version Genesis 1: 30.) The King James, the Revised, and the Inspired versions all show this command to have been given before the fall of man. God said, "Do not eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil;" and here we have Eve being compelled to break that command in order that they might bring forth children. Why? Did the fruit of the tree supply some physical, mental, or spiritual deficiency? Had not provision for generation been fully made? What was necessary? The fruit? Or the mere act of transgression? Was either necessary? Surely not. God saw that all he had made "was good." So we really think that it was equal to the end for which it was created. But no, this slinking, cunning serpent comes along and says, "Eve you can not know anything of good or evil till you eat of the tree." And are we in addition to this required to believe that they did not even know enough to bring forth of their kind unless they sinned? It would seem so. I would much prefer to believe that "the devil was a liar from the beginning," than that he really gave our first parents a piece of good advice. Let those believe it who can.

Now what are the facts of the case? Adam and Eve came here perfectly organized, but lacking experience. God gave them a commandment to produce of their kind, and this according to law. In the meantime the Devil came and deceived Eve. She lost her position. Adam knew this; he was not deceived; he knew (had knowledge) what would happen, that he would be deprived of a companion, and so could not bring forth his children; and knowingly he stepped down from his position (not fell as we understand the term fell "accidentally stumbled") but deliberately stepped down to Eve's lowered plane that he might still retain her, and by her, people the earth. The HERALD attributed to Eve the necessity for her transgression, that Adam deemed was the most desirable step for him to take under the circumstances. If Eve had not fallen the Book of Mormon statement with reference to Adam's fall would not have been written. Our existence here, then, was not determined by the fall of Eve, but by the decree of almighty God. Otherwise we are children of transgression, by unalterable decree; and as our sectarian friends would say, fit subjects for infant baptism. But I maintain that the decree of the Almighty did not need the sin of a poor weak woman to make it effective; and while Adam thought that there was only one course open, i. e., his deliberate breaking of God's commandment with reference to the tree (in order that they might be fruitful and multiply). I have yet to find one sentence or word of God's indorsement of the act. To the contrary we find God's curse upon the earth and God's punishment on Adam, for he says, "In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." It would have been as easy for God to have made another woman for Adam, as to have made Eve. I do not say what his plan would have been; but that would have been no more than he did when he chose Saul, then rejected him and set David in his place. Is it not better to leave this an open question than to say that God is so unwise and so unjust as to give a commandment that man shall not do this or that, if at the time man was to break the command with reference to his being "fruitful and multiplying" or else that with reference to the "eating of the fruit of the tree?" According to the HERALD he could not keep both commands, and whichever he broke he was to be punished and that is justice.(?)

Again: "No one is authorized to say what would have resulted had there been no transgression: other than the one idea man would have remained without the knowledge of good and evil." "All else is speculation." Who told us man would have remained without the knowledge of good and evil? Only the Devil, the "liar from the beginning." He only told a half truth. Man would have had no experimental knowledge, that is, he would not have gained knowledge by actual transgression; but is that the only source of knowledge? Surely not! Transgression does not give the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ. God said, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." How had he become as God? By his knowledge, not by his transgression, else God has transgressed. Doubtless transgression showed them something, for they gained knowledge; but the same knowledge from other sources would have taught them the same truth, and they would have been like unto God in this respect. Could not God have given the knowledge in another way? Must one steal, commit adultery, or murder to know they are evil? Surely not. Surely transgression is not the only source of knowledge. "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them them understanding." Was this untrue before the fall? Did Adam name all the animals and yet have no knowledge? Did he eat the fruit without being deceived and yet have no knowledge? And what of the following: "The Lord said unto Enoch, Behold these your brethren? they are the workmanship of mine own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge in the day I created them, and in the Garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency."—Doctrine and Covenants 36:7. I will close here. If I am wrong give me the law that will set me right. And as you read this remember that I love the brethren, and have not written this to hurt but to help.

Yours in the one hope,

T. J. SHELDON.

ABOUT CUMORAH.

In the agitation and inquiry as to the location of the hill Cumorah, a number have taken a part. Several lectures, also articles, besides other public attention to the question, as also individual study and correspondence have obtained.

The setting forth of additional evidences that came to view in support of the long-accepted location, stirred up a new or enlarged interest in a developing theory of different location. This article is an attempt to successfully answer the query, not assuming defense, however, for the committee, whose work has been attacked. They no doubt will arise in their time. This, if failing to settle the query, may call out the evidence (if it exists) they will be needed to do battle against. As the parties hitherto taking part have been so numerous, no reference to names will be made, and but few to matter presented by any.

Quotations are made from small edition.

If the late assumed southern location be finally established, then Moroni evidently made the long journey to where Joseph Smith obtained the plates. On the other hand, if the long-accepted New York location is the fact, then Coriantumr made the long journey. Such a journey by either or both of these men, has been adjudged all but, if not, impossible, not only by opposers but (strange to say) believers and advocates of it (our work) as well. Either being true God had a purpose in it, and could capacitate accordingly the individual and establish suitable conditions. Believers in the Red Sea miracle, crossing of Jordan, Jonah and the whale, Elijah being fed by ravens, and many similar, or the appearance of Moses at the transfiguration, when God needed him, should not have much difficulty. Coriantumr being wounded, increases the difficulty to some. God had said he should receive burial by another people (527:2), and hence his responsibility to fulfill it. There is a man residing where this article is being written, who for years has been paralyzed from his hips down, yet handles horses much. Though wounded, Coriantumr with horse, elephant, camel, or cumom could have made the journey, taking effects with him on pack-animals or otherwise. He could also in such manner have reached the Allegheny River, and then by boat have reached Central America. There were no enemies to defeat him, and God was pledged to fulfill the promised burial.

These were excellent conditions for success. If by the southern location obtaining it became necessary for Moroni to make the journey in order to carry out God's purpose, defeat could not ensue. If the southern location be the fact, then the arguments made for it show as conclusively that present United States territory was not occupied by either Jaredites or Nephites; for all lived, fought, and died down by the hill Shim and the unknown southern Cumorah, not farther north than Mexico. In that case, who built the mounds of the Mississippi Valley? Who mined copper in the Lake Superior region? Surely it was not the Lamanites, who even to exterminate the foe they had all the hatred for they were capable of, would not penetrate a cold region to accomplish. The Lamanites at such time of their history, too, had dwindled to idle Indian art.

They go so far, where it was so cold, and do so much, so very contrary to their nature? Oh, no. The southern location theory thus and otherwise belittles the historic and geographical story of the Book of Mormon, as also the knowledge of the Seer who translated it, as we shall see.

In the thirty-seventh year of the Judges, five thousand four hundred men with their wives and children departed out of the land Zarahemla, into the land which was northward. (378:2.) Hagoth built an "exceeding large ship," "many Nephites" sailed "with much provisions." In the thirty-eighth year "this man built other ships." "And the first ship did also return, and many other people . . . took much provisions, and set out again to the land northward."—378:3. All of this would hardly be done just to reach Mexico. "Set out again to the land northward," implies distance. These who went last were never heard of more. The fifth paragraph tells us: "Corianton had gone forth to the land northward, in a ship, to carry forth provisions unto the people who had gone forth into that land."—378:5. "To the land northward," and "into that land" again implies separateness, distance. There had been communication, too, or why send provisions? This was in the thirty-ninth year. Pioneers had gone two years before beyond limits occupied and needed assistance. Seven years later, the year 46, communication no doubt having been kept up, a notable migration occurred: "An exceeding great many . . . out of land of Zarahemla . . . unto the land northward to inherit the land; and they did travel to an exceeding great distance, insomuch that they came to large bodies of water and many rivers."—385, 384:1. In the light of the former migrations by land and sea, the "exceeding great distance" of this last-mentioned migration, and by a people from another world (continent), could not mean less than the northern part of present United States territory. From a central point of northern South America to Mexico would by no means answer. Changed conditions, too, mentioned; timber scarce, and building with cement, indicates something different. It is worthy of thought, too. Central America, first occupied by the Jaredites, still abounds with stone structures; later and the farther northward timbers seem to have been used, the indications of it are scarcity of timber as the Nephites found the country, and the lack, then and now, of such structures as abound in Central America and Mexico, while evidence of mining and of agriculture, the mounds, and numberless attestations to civilization at the same time abound of very ancient times. "Shipping and their building of ships," (384:4) may easily include and imply navigation of the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio, and thus easy access be had to the most fertile lands.

Seventeen years later Nephites and Lamanites intermingled everywhere in land northward and land southward, "and thus they did have free intercourse one with another."—393:26. About three hundred eighty-seven years later, by treaty, Nephites had land northward and Lamanites land southward (485:6). So for over three hundred years Lamanites had been in land northward, intermixed with Nephites: "Many records of every kind, and they have been kept chiefly by the Nephites."—384:4. They were well mixed, yet I read in Ensign for July 3, 1902, page 5, column 1, last paragraph: "The Lamanite nation has inhabited this land of South America many years; it was the land of their inheritance; here in the tropics, was where they and their forefathers had always made their home." Was there ever plainer assumption in the face of fact? "Had always made their home?" No. Not by more than three centuries. Then we are informed those Lamanite soldiers of the tropics could not endure the frigid north. Three centuries and more of acclimating reduces all that philosophy.

Then, again, the unearthing of tropical products in Benton County, Missouri, in 1840, by Doctor A. Koch, may well be taken into account and consideration. (Shorts American Antiquities, pp. 116-121.) "The next stratum is from three to four feet in thickness, and consisted of a brown alluvium of the Eocene region, and was composed of vegetable matters of a tropical production. It contained all the remainder of the skeleton. Most of these vegetables were in a great state of preservation and consisted of a large quantity of cypress-burs, wood and bark, tropical cane, ferns, palmetto leaves, several stumps of trees, and even the greater part of a flower of the strelitzia class which, when destroyed, was not full bloom. . . . These various matters had been torn up by their roots and twisted and split into a thousand pieces, apparently by lightning combined with a tremendous tempest or tornado; and all were involved in one common ruin."—Ibid. 118, 119. Was this the continental convulsion time, when "the whole face of the land was changed"? (Book of Mormon.) Why not? It was tropical in Missouri some time anyway according to that. Why not? God who created has not ceased to be, nor has his power abated and according to his sovereign will has wrought changes according to his wisdom.

The Jaredites had been (in the time of their wickedness) "destroyed exceedingly" by dearth, famine, and serpents (518:4). Again: "Many famines and pestilences" (521:9). Returning to God, his favor came again. So also with Nephites and Lamanites: "And their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white."—424:9. This was in the opening of the Christian era, the thirteenth year. Note the marked blessings recorded on pages 478 and 479. Many miracles, including raising of the dead, "multiplied exceedingly fast," "spread upon all the face of the land," "exceeding rich, because of their prosperity in Christ."

At the time of the crucifixion of Christ, "the whole face of the land was changed;" why not in this the golden age of all of Book of Mormon times, a period of two hundred years of faithfulness, even a climatic change have been? or prior to or including it. Why not? The foregoing evidence as to a tropical era north as far as Missouri, is presented incidentally, but not in an essential sense, for centuries before and since the discovery by Columbus the Indian—Lamanite—occupied the whole United States territory. So that supposition, tropical Lamanites would not occupy the frigid north or enter it in war times to exterminate a foe is utterly defeated, whether or not there was a tropical era. To assume and assert that the "exceeding great distance" was less than present northern boundary of United States does not make it so. To limit it to suit the southern theory, leaves unexplained yet existing Mound-builders' works, Cliff-dwellers' works, the extensive mining works, and the skulls of peoples more ancient and diverse from the red man, and much else.

In the twenty-first year of the new era, Zemnahiah, the commander of the Gadianton robbers, an old and wide-spread organization, at the time we refer to besieging Nephites at Zarahemla for seven years, gave command "that they should withdraw themselves from the siege and march into the furthestmost parts of the land northward. (429:10.) An unsuccessful effort of seven years, argued, perhaps, "distance lends enchantment to the view," but, for sure, safety. So the "furthestmost parts" of land northward had been explored and occupied. Nowhere and by nothing was there a material break or a northern boundary, till the ample lake system would be reached. Geographers, unfortunately for the southern theory, did not put on the maps an equal complement of waters south, to compare with those considered in northern location. We are told, however, that we can apply (or they do for us) the Pacific, Carribean Sea, etc., forgetting that it was a land of many waters. The waters within the land, you see, not surrounding.

Of these many waters of that land, Ripliancum (Ontario) was large to exceed all (of land of Cumorah—Western New York). The hill Ramah (Cumorah) was south of it (Ripliancum—Ontario). (531:6.) According to the southern theory, Ramah (Cumorah) has no location, only that it is south of Ripliancum; and as that exceeds all, therefore is the Pacific; hence, somewhere, evidently beyond Patagonia and south of the Pacific, that land of much war ages ago, must be.

Advocates of the southern theory better come back north on solid ground, take a glance at ruins so extensive and so much older than the overthrow of Nephites, and so diverse from Indian constructions, and then conclude "they were here after all." "The whole face of the land was changed, the change being more great and terrible in the land northward." Here in California, where mountain tops are shell-heaps, and river beds crown other mountain summits, this has vivid fulfillment, as also elsewhere, within the domain of the nation to whom the record made its appearance. The Nephites knew of such and recorded it. They were here.

There was no occasion whatever to confound, "a land among many waters; having discovered a land which was covered with bones of men, and of beasts, etc., and was also covered with ruins of buildings of every kind" (158:9); the scene of the finding of the twenty-four Jaredite plates, with the other land of many waters. Whether or not, having traveled in a land, among many waters, means that they traveled among the waters, or that the land was among the waters, the ruins of buildings of every kind, mentioned in connection, at once locates it in Central America, where discovery has shown ruins to be most abundant, "covered with ruins." Central America is among many waters. That supposed five-thousand-mile journey after the twenty-four plates is an assumption of only five thousand miles, the plates and the ruins being found together, and no one has claimed either for New York.

These many waters being located by the buildings (ruins) in Central America region, whether the waters are inland or surrounding, the "exceeding great distance" of the others stand out the better, for from Zarahemla to Central America is still less, by far, than to Mexico, as some of the advocates of the southern theory would have it.

That "exceeding great distance" will not down. Ramah (Cumorah) south of Ripliancum, the large to exceed all, if somewhere, is similiar to deal with. The New York hill has such a location. Nothing is said where the twenty-four Jaredite plates were left, only that Ether hid them (533:9). They were, as seen, left in Central America, and purposely, to be found later as they were, all of which is reasonable. God had preserved both Ether and the plates and could transport them anywhere, as Philip reached Azotus, or, Christ the tempest-tossed disciples on the sea.

Subtracting 420, the date of Mormon's commitment of the plates, from 1827, the date of Joseph Smith's finding them, leaves one thousand four hundred seven years. According to the southern location theory, neither Jaredites, Nephites, nor Lamanites had been north of Mexico up to the destruction of Nephites, complete and final, the period since, of one thousand four hundred seven years, or about that, will not answer as the age of ruins extant. When the facts of agriculture, etc., accorded to Mound-builders are taken into consideration together with Indian customs, it again fails. What is more? Indian tradition is their forefathers found them when they came to the country. "Nowhere, however, is it claimed that the Indians were the first people who occupied the country, or that their ancestors were the first race who built the mounds."—Peet, see Additional Report of Committee on Archæology, page 24. Consult also pages 130 to 140 of McLeans "Mound-Builders." Those pages are an elaborate account of age of Mound-builders, their commercial, agricultural, mining, and other arts bespeaking their civilization and separateness from the Indian mounds. Both Jaredites and Nephites were agriculturalists, miners, artisans. (520:7 and 393:27.) Such history explains relics of the past of North America. Jaredites and Nephites occupied it. In the absence of evidence, that since Nephite extinction, Lamanites constructed all of which ruins remain, north of Mexico, the main proposition of the southern location fails, for according to it no people were here while the mute yet unimpeachable witnesses, the works remaining, testify triumphantly to the contrary. "Began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south, to the sea north, from the sea west to the sea east," (384:2) does not admit of such limitation as Central America, for while such a strained application would include Central America, it would exclude Mexico which extends far north of that specified boundary, "the face of the whole earth." Mexico is earth, and directly connected, yet left out by that unfortunate boundary. "All the face of the land" (479:7, also 512:8) could not be cut off at northern line of Mexico and have fitting application. Neither could "into the furthestmost parts of the land northward," (430:10) have a sufficient extent in Mexico, to say nothing of cliff-dwellings, mining exploits, and Mound-builders' works. That would be wandering from facts so far as to locate Zarahemla elsewhere than centrally in northern South America. Mormon says: "I being eleven years old, was carried by my father into the land southward, even to the land Zarahemla."—483:1. Yet several have persisted in locating it in Central America. One prominent in Book of Mormon study for years, (now dead) held that view. "Into the heart of their lands to attack that great city of Zarahemla." "Greatest strength was in the center." "Durst not come into the center of the land . . . but they had come into the center of the land and had taken the capital city which was the city of Zarahemla." All the foregoing statements are on page 381, and in connection with the one on 481 last cited, settle effectually that point, yet, aimless wandering for years has been indulged in; so it is when ideas held are the principal thing, all that agrees therewith is assimilated. Much more that has no bearing is often applied, and the real facts and conclusive evidence are overlooked.

In Ensign of July 10, 1902, page four, we find considered few generations, consequently few people, seeming to some short distances, that to others are of necessity long, etc., all from page 516. The northern Cumorah and Ablom to the east are disposed of supposedly in short order. As to the few generations, it can, I suppose, only be counted by the succession of kings. The supposed about three or possibly four generations is answered in the fact that Omer was the fourth king and fifth generation. First king Orihah being a son of the pioneers. Of Orihah the first king it is said: "Whose days, were exceeding many."—511:6, 7. Kib, his son, in captivity under his son Corihor, lived to become "exceeding old" (512:7). Shule, the son of Kib, third king, during his reign had "all the face of the land." Such was his empire. "For the people had become exceeding numerous." This argues clearly long generations, so far as the kings lives are concerned, and also the more rapid succession of generations, because of the exceeding age of kings mentioned. Shule, like his predecessors, lived to be old. (512:10.) Omer died: "Having seen exceeding many days."—517:2. Having been in captivity half his days (513:11). Of Emer, the fifth king, nothing is said conclusive as to his age, but it is mentioned that he reigned sixty-two years, and lived four years after he appointed Coriantum (517:3). Coriantum, sixth king, had sons and daughters when "exceeding old" and died at one hundred forty-two years of age (517:3).

They evidently married young, even doing so at twenty. Coriantum seeing people twenty married, and at forty having considerable families, his one hundred forty two years, afforded his witnessing three such successive families, or generations overlapping. If the succession of kings tells the generations, it was the fifth. If counted the other way, probably many more.

The matter of distances, likewise of page 516, may seem short to some, but many days of travel to a people who had crossed the broad ocean admits of more. "And the Lord warned Omer in a dream that he should depart out of the land" (516:1) did not mean to settle in an adjoining land. If his forces were strong enough to defend themselves or for conquest, he need not have fled. When necessary to flee for safety, a near by place would not afford it and hence have no charms.

Long distance is thus again established. Is it not amusing and ridiculous, too, especially after making the quotation, "And the Lord warned Omer in a dream that he should depart out of the land," for those of our faith to ask as to his return? Did they have a telephone? or what means of communication did they use by which they were enabled to communicate to this man thousands of miles away that all his enemies were dead? God was interested in his departure and telephoned him in reference to it by dream. Why would not that same means work well as to his return. Missing clearly prevalent facts and to discount faith is an accompaniment to error.

For all this travel the dispatching of messengers when necessary, etc., it should not be forgotten, "they also had horses and asses, and there were elephants; and cureloms and cumons; all of which were useful unto man, and more especially the elephants and cureloms and cumons (517:3). Our present knowledge of the usefulness of the horse will emphasize the "useful unto man and more especially the elephants and cureloms and cumons." They were splendidly equipped for travel.

Doubters of the long distances and journeys, should consider the hand-cart journey, of already travel-worn, emaciated, and very, very scantily supplied people, including aged, as well as mothers with infants, beside the other children, over a thousand miles across burning sands, or, if belated, bitter winter storms on the mountainous path to Utah. Let them consider, too, emigration from almost any point in the Mississippi Basin, of parties, large or small, well or ill-equipped, through wild lands, hostile tribes, and across the arid wastes to California. Wintering en route about impossible, hence the journey to be made in far less than one year.

These experiences of our day and knowledge should chase away all such doubts and silence such arguments as have been made, dispel the whole illusion.

PLATES.

Tracing plates, we find: Ammaron had deposited all the sacred engravings concerning this people. (481: 11.) He instructed Mormon: "Ye shall take the plates of Nephi . . . the remainder ye shall leave."—482: 1. Having done so he says: "And upon the plates of Nephi I did make a full account . . . upon these plates," others, abridgment was made. This was in year 345 (484: 5). Ammaron had buried them in 320 (481: 11). They had been buried twenty-four or twenty-five years. Thirty years later, in 375, Mormon says: "I did go to the hill Shim, and did take up all the records which Ammaron had hid up unto the Lord."—489: 3. This was about fifty-five years after Ammaron had buried them. Why, when safe and not needed, take them up in troublous war times, to commit them in the supposed to be close by Cumorah?

Taking them up under such conditions, implies migration to another part, distant, and so it was. Mormon who was commander-in-chief, had as a boy made one somewhat distant journey. Had traversed, with his father, part of Mexico, from somewhere about hill Shim, through Central America and down to Zarahemla; all this in his "eleventh"—"same year." (481: 1, 2.)

That was about half as far as to Cumorah in New York, for which the retreating forces on their death-march had nine years, all told.

In the stationary condition of the long siege of seven years, at Zarahemla, the Nephites used "horses, and cattle, and flocks of every kind."—428: 5. Why not, when on the march, when horses, at least, would be more needed. While the speed of the armies must be gauged by those on foot, the helpless and equipage being otherwise conveyed, speed would be consequently greater.

Mormon, like Ammaron, was custodian of all; their predecessors had also been, why not Moroni in his turn? Whether he got them all at once, or by installments, as his father Mormon had. Mormon says: "I made this record out of the plates of Nephi [abridgement from them and seemingly then complete] and hid up in the Cumorah all the records which had been intrusted to me by the hand of the Lord, save it were these few plates which I gave unto my son Moroni."—492: 2. How much or many, were "these few plates"? Just enough for current history?

The times were even more critical, less Nephites left, why carry about more than actually needed. To our argument it matters not whether "these few plates" meant enough only for current history, or included abridgment and plates abridged from. More would hardly be claimed by any opposers of it. Some time later, Moroni abridged Jaredite history from the twenty-four plates. (501: 1.) Mormon had not been permitted these till removal of all were necessary, and they certainly were not included in the "these few plates" received of Mormon at the time before referred to. Moroni had received another installment. He had access to the Cumorah repository, where Mormon had hid all. Now let us see what more Moroni must finally have become possessed of. He delivered enough to Joseph Smith to form the present Book of Mormon, some of it being from plates of Nephi (after the episode of lost manuscript) the greater part, from Mormon's abridgement plates, the rest from plates used in Moroni's writings including the Jaredite abridged history. We are informed the unsealed part, Book of Mormon was only one third, two thirds sealed yet to come forth, and therefore returned to the angel; but Moroni had it, so did Joseph Smith. We learn it contains "a revelation from God from the beginning of the world, to the ending thereof," "shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness . . . of the people," hence, returned to the angel. This same wonderful account is to come forth in the "own due time of the Lord," (100: 17). Nothing more, to my knowledge, is anywhere even hinted at, so far as this continent is concerned, unless it be of Lost Ten Tribes, and that is not in present issue. The whole record thus complete, accounted for, having passed from Moroni to Joseph Smith, and to the angel, therefore was not left in a supposed southern hill Cumorah repository, —a dissolved illusion.

And now in conclusion, but not least in importance, in 1827, before Joseph Smith received the plates, so could not have been informed by their contents where Cumorah was, or that it was at all, he said: "'Stop, father, stop,' said Joseph, 'it was the angel of the Lord: as I passed by the hill of Cumorah, where the plates are, the angel met me, and said that I had not been engaged enough in the work of the Lord; that the time had come for the Record to be brought forth; and that I must be up and doing, and set myself about the things which God had commanded me to do. But, father, give yourself no uneasiness concerning the reprimand which I received, for I know the course that I am to pursue, so all will be well.' It was also made known to him, at this interview, that he should make another effort to obtain the plates on the 22d of the following September, but this he did not mention to us at that time."—History by Lucy Smith, chapter 22, last part. "The time had come," and "another effort," on "22d of following September," gives us the year 1827. He had met the angel at the sacred repository each year the four previous years. What is more probable or reasonable that its name, "hill Cumorah," should have been told him by the angel Moroni; the repository of his father's day as well as his. The conclusive evidence before the tracing of plates, the likewise conclusive evidence of that tracing, and this statement of the Seer of God, received from the angel, makes it thrice complete. Cumorah is in New York.

Selected Poetry.

[The following poem was handed us by Bro. Charles Derry. We do not know where it was first published, or who its author is, as the clipping was handed to Bro. Derry and he does not know the paper it was taken from.]

St. John, the Aged.

I'm growing very old. This weary head
That hath so often leaned on Jesus' breast,
In days long past that seem almost a dream,
Is bent and hoary with its weight of years.
These limbs that followed him, my Master, oft
From Galilee to Judah; yea, that stood
Beneath the cross and trembled with his groans,
Refuse to bear me even through the streets
To preach unto my children. E'en my lips
Refuse to form the words my heart sends forth,
My ears are dull, they scarcely hear the sobs
Of my dear children gathered 'round my couch;
My eyes so dim. They can not see their tears.
God lays his hand upon me—yea, his hand
And not his rod—the gentle hand that I Felt, those three years, so often pressed in mine,
In friendship such as passeth woman's love.

I'm old, so old! I can not recollect
The faces of my friends, and I forget
The words and deeds that make up daily life;
But that dear face, and every word he spoke
Grow more distinct, as others fade away,
So that I live with him and the holy dead
More than with living.

Some seventy years ago
I was a fisher by the sacred sea.
It was at sunset. How the tranquil tide
Bathed dreamily the pebbles! How the light
Crept up the distant hills, and in its wake
Soft purple shadows wrapped the dewy fields!
And then he came and called me. Then I gazed
For the first time on that sweet face. Those eyes
From out of which, as from a window, shone
Divinity, looked on my inmost soul,
And lighted it for ever. Then his words
Broke on the silence of my heart, and made
The whole world musical. Incarnate love
Took hold of me and claimed me for its own.
I followed in the twilight, holding fast
His mantle.

Oh! what holy walks we had
Thro' harvest fields, and desolate dreary wastes.
And oftentimes he leaned upon my arm,
Wearied and wayworn. I was young and strong

And so upbore him. Lord! now I am weak,
And old and feeble, let me rest on thee!
So put thine arm around me. Closer still!
How strong thou art! The twilight draws apace;
Come, let us leave these noisy streets and take
The path to Bethany, for Mary's smile
Awaits us at the gate, and Martha's hands
Have long prepared the cheerful evening meal.
Come James, the Master waits, and Peter, see,
Has gone some steps before.

What say you, friends?

That this is Ephesus, and Christ has gone
Back to his kingdom? Ay, 'tis so, 'tis so.
I know it all; and yet, just now, I seemed
To stand once more upon my native hills
And touch my Master! Oh! how oft I've seen
The touching of his garments bring back strength
To palsied limbs. I feel it has to mine.
Up! bear me once more to my church—once more,
There let me tell them of a Savior's love;
For by the sweetness of my Master's voice
Just now, I think he must be very near—
Coming, I trust, to break the veil which time
Has worn so thin that I can see beyond
And watch his footsteps.

So, raise up my head.

How dark it is! I can not seem to see
The faces of my flock. Is that the sea
That murmurs so, or is it weeping? Hush!
My little children! God so loved the world
He gave his Son, so love ye one another;
Love God and man, amen. Now bear me back.
My legacy unto an angry world, is this.
I feel my work is finished. Are the streets so full?
What call the folk my name? "The holy John?"
Nay, write me rather Jesus Christ's beloved,
And lover of my children.

Lay me down

Once more upon my couch, and open wide
The eastern window. See! there comes a light
Like that which broke upon my soul at eve
When, in the dreary Isle of Patmos, Gabriel came
And touched me on the shoulder. See! it grows
As when we mounted toward the pearly gates.
I know the way! I trod it once before!
And hark! It is the song the ransomed sang
Of glory to the lamb! How loud it sounds!
And that unwritten one! Methinks my soul
Can join it now. But who are these who crowd
The shining way? Oh joy! it is the eleven!
With Peter first; how eagerly he looks!

How bright the smiles are beaming on James' face!
I am the last. Once more we are complete
To gather 'round the Paschal feast. My place
Is next my Master. Oh, my Lord! my Lord!
How bright thou art, and yet the very same
I loved in Galilee! 'Tis worth the hundred years
To feel this bliss! So lift me up, dear Lord, Unto thy bosom. There shall I abide.

Nobility.

True worth is in being, not seeming—
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by-and-by.
For whatever men say in blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,

There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure—
We can not do wrong and feel right;
Nor can we give pain and gain pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But alway the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.

'Tis not in the pages of story
The heart of its ills to beguile,
Though he who makes courtship to glory
Gives all that he hath for her smile.
For when from her heights he has won her,
Alas! it is only to prove
That nothing so sacred as honor,
And nothing so loyal as love.

We can not make bargains for blisses,
Nor catch them, like fishes, in nets;
And sometimes the thing our life misses
Helps more than the things which it gets.
For good lieth not in pursuing,
Nor gaining of great nor of small,
But just in the doing—and doing
As we would be done by—is all.

Through envy, through malice, through hating,
Against the world, early and late,
No jot of our courage abating—
Our part is to work and to wait.
And slight is the sting of his trouble
Whose winnings are less than his worth;
For he who is honest is noble,
Whatever his fortunes or birth.—Alice Cary.

The Absence of Little Wesley.

Sence little Wesley went, the place seems all so strange and still—

W'y, I miss his yell o' "Gran'pap!" as I'd miss the whipperwill!
And to think I ust to scold him fer his everlastin' noise,
When I on'y rickollect him as the best o' little boys!
I wisht a hunderd times a day 'at he'd come trompin' in,
And all the noise he ever made was twic't as loud ag'in!—
It 'u'd seem like some soft music played on some fine instrument,
'Longside o' this loud lonesomeness, sence little Wesley went!

Of course the clock don't tick no louder than it ust to do—
Yit now they's times it 'pears like it 'u'd bu'st itself in-two!
And, lét a rooster, suddent-like, crow som'ers clos't around,
And seems 's ef, mighty nigh it, it 'u'd lift me off the ground!
And same with all the cattle when they bawl around the bars,
In the red o' airly mornin', er the dusk and dew and stars,
When the neighbors' boys 'at passes never stop, but jes go on,
A-whistlin' kind o' to theirse'v's—sence little Wesley 's gone!

And then, o' nights when Mother's settin' up oncommon late,
A-bilin' pears er somepin, and I set and smoke and wait, Tel the moon out through the winder don't look bigger 'n a dime,

And things keeps gittin' stiller—stiller—stiller all the time,—
I've ketched myse'f a-wishin' like—as I clumb on the cheer
To wind the clock, as I hev done fer more 'n fifty year'—
A-wishin' 'at the time hed come fer us to go to bed,
With our last prayers, and our last tears, sence little Wesley's dead!—James Whitcomb Riley.

The Course of True Love.

For aught that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood,
Or else misgraffed in respect of years,
Or else it stood upon the choice of friends;
Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say, "Behold!"
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion.
—Shakespeare, in "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Resignation.

God will not always chide us.
He will comfort, cheer, and guide us.
When the toilsome journey's done
And the victor's crown is won,
Earthly cares and joys all ended,
Life and death together blended,
In that home so bright and glorious,
Over all our foes victorious,
You and I some day shall stand,
With the seal of God's forgiveness, hand in hand.

Pearls From the Depth of Intellect and Heart.

"We shape ourselves the joy or fear
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future's atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade."

Take off this load of responsibility from the human race and we might be happy, but we never could be great.—Lyman Abbott.

"There is sometimes a period of waiting and perplexity before prosperity, like the dense darkness that precedes the dawn."

The will of God be done; but, oh, the unspeakable loss for us if we have missed our opportunity of doing it!—Brooke Foss Westcott.

Small service is true service while it lasts.
Of humblest friends, bright creature, scorn not one.
The daisy by the shadow that it casts,
Protects the lingering dew-drop from the sun.
—Wordsworth.

The bravest men and women commonly live and die without special notice because they make no fuss about troubles and dangers which send weaker souls into hysterics.

"Nothing affects our happiness more closely than a right mental attitude toward circumstances, for they surround us continually and touch us on every hand at every moment."

When Joy goes forth and leaves us desolate,
We plead for her return, ofttimes in vain;
Yet oh, how soon unto the heart's closed gate
Comes back, unbid, her sad-faced sister, Pain!
—Charles Hanson Towne.

If you are inclined to feel the thorns on every rose which you find lying in your path, think of the many who have nothing but stones and dust with never a flower to brighten the long and toilsome journey and you will forget about the thorns and remember only the fragrance.

"Love Ye One Another."

God in his infinite mercy has given each individual an intellect and by constant use it becomes strong, a power for good or evil. Are we each building for the good, and thus lifting ourselves and benefiting humanity, or are we simply using it for selfish ends? Are we diligently seeking God, or are we satisfied with the crumbs that fall from the table of those who have found him? "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Which are we seeking first, the kingdom of God, or the things added thereunto?

Do we want peace—that peace that feareth no evil? That peace which enables us to see our neighbor as another child of God and answerable to him for his conduct? Do we love the broad sunshine of hope, or the obscurity of doubt? Have we love in our hearts? Divine love casteth out fear.

Charity, forgiveness, forbearance, nobleness of character, sweetness of disposition, mercy, and justice? If so, can this same love bring to us distrust, discord, and disloyalty? Never. We may, with firmness, search and find love, but never will we find it through antagonism. When we are filled with this infinite love, then can we understand this peace and good-will. Then do we know what it is to really live. Then, and then only.

It was divine love that brought Christ into the world, and bore him patiently through scoffs, scorns, and contempt, and back to the Father. We need "Love ye one another," emblazoned on every stepping-stone, and God grant that we are not following the stepping-stones down stream because they are the larger, but fearlessly crossing on the smaller ones. They are firmly imbedded, for Christ laid them.

To be sure we find the current strong through the center—does it make us dizzy? We have forgotten and are looking downward. Let us raise our eyes heavenward and while we are being guided by an unseen hand we shall feel the divine love all about us.

Our neighbor who has, through nervous fear, endangered our safety has taken courage in seeing our confidence and hope, and now walks firmly beside us, or has dropped back and troubles us no more. We must not look back or we lose our own position of safety; but we may call out hopefully though quietly—lest we startle the timid ones—telling of the strength and firmness we are gaining. Patience brother, patience sister. We near the end. The end of life? No, the end of the beginning.

Have we been seeking the kingdom? Have we found God?

NELL.

Dear Sister Nell: Just a few more pens like yours enlisted and fewer selected articles would need to appear in our column. We trust you will not grow weary in well-doing, but will from time to time share your thoughts and experience with others of the household of faith until they in turn shall feel the obligation they are under to "let their light shine." There is power in words—whether written or spoken—to accomplish much good when the Spirit of the Master breathes through them, for that Spirit can speak through voiceless tongues and reach the heart through all intervening obstacles.—ED.

Dear Column: I enjoy the articles that appear in your columns, and realize that if all felt as do I their inability to write anything very edifying, and never tried, soon your column would be a failure. So by the help of God I will endeavor to write to the mothers. We surely have a great responsibility resting upon us, as the characters of future men and women are being shaped, and we ought to be very careful in deportment so as to shun the very appearance of evil.

We should strive to live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, that we can indeed know that we as a people are living near to all the commandments of God, and that in so doing, our lives will reflect the same so that the world can see we are indeed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

How often we as brothers and sisters become so intimately acquainted that, while no evil even enters our minds, yet to the world, we seem to forget the divine command to shun the very appearance of evil; for as the world is always looking for evil they sometimes take the appearances for the deed. I have seen elders who with no thought of evil in their minds, sit for hours visiting a sister while her husband is not at home. They perhaps are talking all the while on gospel themes, yet in will come a neighbor, who being of the world, and perhaps, prejudiced to our faith, will go away, more fully convinced in her own mind, that what the world says about the Saints in regard to polygamy is true.

Again, Saints should never attend horse-races or dances, for in so doing we in a sense seem to approve of such things, for the old adage that the partaker is as bad as the thief comes to the mind of the young, that while the Saints are onlookers at such places, perhaps even keeping time to the music in the hall by patting their feet, that they are as bad as the partaker, and should we not be very careful about the language we use before the young? What they hear the older Saints say they may imitate, and the world will often call a byword used by a Saint swearing, and repeat to some one else that Bro. — is not much of a Christian, as he swears; while in reality it was only one of those idle words we are told we will have to give an account of. In my opinion we should also teach our young that the house of the Lord (church) is sacred and that nothing of a worldly nature should be allowed in it, such as fairs, oyster-suppers, or anything that causes the sacredness to be forgotten. We surely have an illustration where Christ drove the money-changers out of the temple, and we all know we have money-changers at such times, and where young people are left free to use light and funny speeches they forget the sacred place they are in, also that they should prepare their bodies to be the temples of God, for the Lord will not dwell in unholy temples. They must keep themselves pure and holy, not using tobacco or strong or hot drinks, nor profaning the things of the Lord; and if they can be so raised, when they become men and women they will help roll the little stone cut out without hands until it will indeed cover the whole earth.

Let us also remember as we journey along that what is good for the young, is also good for us older ones, and to reverse this saying, and read that what is not good for the young is not good for us, as where a father will do and use things on the sly, not wanting his child to know, for he knows they are not good for him. Surely that father does not stop to think that he can not hide such actions from his heavenly Father and that he will have to give an account of all such things in that great day of reckoning. May we all purify ourselves, and not be hearers of the law only, but doers of it, too, and that in all things we may strive to shun the very appearance of evil, is the prayer of your humble sister,

HATTIE WILLIAMS.

"How a Great City is Kept Clean" is interestingly told in the March number of the Woman's Home Companion. New York has eleven hundred miles of streets cleaned every day by an army of eighteen hundred men, and thousands of dollars are spent annually for this purpose.

"Deborah." A Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabæus. By James M. Ludlow. Cloth, 12mo, 406 pages. Price, $1.08, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

The times between Malachi and the Gospels are a blank even to many intelligent students of the Scriptures. The books of the Maccabees are reckoned canonical by the Roman Catholic Church, but not by Protestants or Jews; hence they are quite generally neglected. In the story of Deborah we are first introduced to King Antiochus, self-styled Epiphanes, the "Glorious." Deborah, the heroine, is the daughter of a wealthy Jew in Jerusalem, thoroughly loyal to her own people, and so performing the perilous duties of a spy. By a secret passage from her father's house, ending beyond the walls of the city, she is able to appear and reappear so mysteriously as to baffle foes and friends alike. The momentous battles fought under the lead of Judas Maccabæus are vividly portrayed, and a reader feels prompted to go to the original documents in the Apocrypha for first-hand information. Of course, there is a love story, for love thrives in war; and how a Greek captain is fitted for a Hebrew maiden you could never imagine until you read. Stories are a popular medium for getting into the spirit of historical epochs. While Deborah fascinates the reader by her adventures, he is gaining fresh insight into the character of that most marvelous people of all the ages—the Hebrews.

"Lost on the Orinoco; or, American Boys in Venezuela." By E. Stratmeyer. 12mo, cloth, illustrated. Price, $1, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

This is the first volume of the Pan-American series. Five American boys, with their tutor, make a trip to Venezuela. They sail from New York to La Guayra, touching at Curacao on the way. They visit Caracas, the capital; Macuto, and other places. At last they reach the great Orinoco. The description of their visits to the coffee and cocoa plantations and the gold and silver mines is very entertaining and instructive. They have some exciting experiences, of the sort that will fascinate boys.

"The Green Door." By Margaret Compton. 12mo, cloth, 197 pages. Price, 70 cents, net; postage extra, 11 cents.

A simple story of the doings and experiences of a number of boys. A touch of adventure adds to the interest of the story. The lessons taught are adapted to boys, and told in a manner that can not fail to be impressive.

"A Life of St. Peter." For the young. By George Ludington Weed. Cloth, 12mo, 292 pages, 50 illustrations. Price, 60 cents, net; postage extra, 10 cents.

Mr. Weed has won a reputation as a teacher and writer for the young. This book is the fourth in a series of Christian biographies written for them. He has studied the development of child mind under many favoring conditions. He has learned the art of putting an old truth into a fresh form, and in clear and simple language.

Mr. Weed begins this life of Peter with a word-picture of the Sea of Galilee and the fisher-folk on its shores. Twenty-three chapters are devoted to the life of Peter with Christ, and the remaining eight to the work of the apostle from the day of Pentecost in Jerusalem until he suffered as a martyr during the Neronian persecution. Though the place of his death has long been disputed, the author is of opinion that he died at Rome—a view held by many besides the Roman Catholic Church. We can not be certain of the date of his death. The general belief of the early church was it occurred under Nero in A. D. 67 or 68. It has been claimed that Peter and Paul suffered martyrdom on the same day.

The author fully sustains the interest he has awakened by his previous works in this series—namely, "A Life of Christ for the Young," "A Life of St. Paul," and "A Life of St. John."

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." By Alice Caldwell Hegan. 16mo, cloth, 153 pages. Price, 75 cents; postage extra, 7 cents.

Much can be learned from this philosopher of a neighborhood in which poverty reigns that will be of benefit to all persons. Mrs. Wiggs sees good only, and gets good only, out of everything; and the person that can say heartily with her, "Somehow, I never feel like good things b'long to me till I pass 'em on to somebody else," and "Looks like everything in the world comes right, if we jes' wait long enough," will find that life is worth living, and that there is real pleasure and enjoyment to be had if our blessings are looked for and acknowledged.

"In the Wyoming Valley." By Everett T. Tomlinson. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 356 pages. Price, $1, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

A thrilling tale of the second massacre in the Wyoming Valley during the time of the Revolution. Our boys and girls will read this book with both interest and profit. Enos Baker will be admired for his sterling, manly qualities.

"Boys of Other Countries." By Bayard Taylor. 12mo, cloth, 166 pages. Price, 90 cents, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

This new edition of "Boys of Other Countries" will prove a welcome addition to the juvenile books of to-day. It is a collection of bright and attractive stories of boy-life in Sweden, Iceland, Germany, and other countries. The author writes of scenes and adventures with which he was personally acquainted. The characters are interesting, and the whole tone of the book is pure and elevating.

"Her Willful Way." By Helen Sherman Griffin. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, 360 pages. Price, 90 cents, net; postage extra, 12 cents.

This is an interesting story of a girl's life at boarding-school. Though a very lovable, bright girl, Lucile is also a willful, spoiled child; after many lessons, in which the lack of self-control causes much trouble and sorrow to her friends and herself, Lucile learns that her own way is not always the best way. By the exercise of both tact and patience, Lucile's stepmother at last wins her love and confidence.

Editors Herald: I shall send you by mail with this letter another article for publication in the HERALD, which if you will publish, without comment or criticism, I will drop all that has occurred in the past between us in this matter. But if it is refused publication I shall then feel myself fully justified in seeking redress from the wrongs imposed by you by an appeal to the Board of Publication, etc., or else seek to set myself aright before the Saints by the use of printers' ink which is not controlled by the editors of the HERALD.

Yours for equal rights,

JOSEPH FLORY.

GUERNSEY, California.

Editors Herald: In HERALD for January 21, page 51, is an editorial in which the general trend of the reasoning is to maintain the idea that the officials of the church should be better qualified than any one else to interpret the law of God as related to the special work in which these officers may be engaged. And presumably to give weight to the arguments presented the following language was used: "There are hundreds of Latter Day Saints who will not even take the pains to own the books of the church; and some of those who have them more frequently rely upon what others say to them than upon the texts in the books. Is there any probability that such persons would have as just conception of the duties of specific offices as the men who are called to act in those offices?"

No one has ever thought or claimed that "such persons" as mentioned in the above extract from said editorial were expected to understand those things better than those who had been called to act in those offices. But how about those who have made it almost a lifetime study, and not only own and study the church books but have read and studied everything within their reach on the subject of "Church Finances" as connected with the church. Is it not possible that they may know something along those lines that even those who have charge of such work may not be familiar with, and why should they be criticised and seemingly an effort made to prejudice the readers of the HERALD against what they may have to say on the subject?

The writer of this article was the first one in the present agitation of the subject to write upon the question of "Church Finances," and hereby begs leave to state that he does not belong to the class alluded to in the extract we have above quoted.

We believe in equal rights and fair play in the discussion of any and all questions that may come under our notice. And that we should, as taught by the President of the church, be "patient enough and honorable enough to give to every man the same privilege that we demand for ourselves; the right of free speech without prejudice." (HERALD, volume 47, page 246.) We do not believe that anyone has the right to criticise another's writings publicly, through the church paper, and then refuse them, as we have been refused, the right to answer said criticism, through the same medium.

We quote again from editorials: "Again, it is stated in the law that it should be the duty of certain persons to teach the revelations." True, so we understand and so it should be. But can one teach intelligibly upon a subject, as the revelations, he confessedly does not understand?

"Church Finances," the "Gathering," and "All Things in Common," being very closely connected let us see what some of those who should be able, and whose legitimate right it is to teach, have to say in reference to them. In Ensign for January 3, 1901, pages 4 and 5, in a sermon delivered by President Joseph Smith, he is reported as saying: "There are commandments existing touching the gathering, touching the consecration of the properties of the people, touching what is commonly called 'all things in common,' but there are no specified details as to how any of these particularly mentioned systems or schemes may be carried into execution under present conditions. If anybody knows of such a revelation or any such commandments, I am a patient listener, anxious for the delivery of the people, and I will gladly welcome the reception of the plan."

God said in 1831: "Ye shall hereafter receive church covenants, such as shall be sufficient to establish you, both here, and in the New Jerusalem."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18. Did he do so? We think so, but the speaker above quoted seemingly had not understood that God had said after the church was driven out of the land of Zion, "Let these commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 10. And was desirous of finding a plan for doing what God evidently had not intended to do. Carry out the laws given for Zion in her gathered and organized condition before Zion was redeemed and organized. Again we quote from the above sermon: "But how about this gathering and having all things common? Well, I confess I do not understand it exactly. I do not know of anybody that does. It seems like we get into difficulty, and get farther away every time we begin to talk about 'all things in common' and this equality." Here the speaker again acknowledges that he does not understand the subject, and yet criticises those who do write upon it and then refuses them any further explanation on the subject.

While we admit that the books do teach that certain ones are authorized to teach the revelations, we also have read that God has commanded saying, "You shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom, teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21. It is true that this was to be accomplished in the school of the prophets and the manner of its accomplishment was to "appoint . . . a teacher and . . . let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken, that all may be edified of all, and that every man may have an equal privilege."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 37. Query: Who is it that needs teaching any more than those who confess and admit that they do not understand the subject?

This school of instruction was to be for "all the officers of the church . . . beginning at the high priest, even down to the deacon."

Inasmuch then as the school of the prophets is not yet organized, why not do the next best thing and let us discuss all those things "pertaining to the kingdom of God, that it is expedient for us to understand" through the church papers, and let "every man have an equal privilege" and not be subjected to editorial criticism and then be debarred from further discussion of the subject as has been done?

We have been taught in a sermon by President Joseph Smith in HERALD for August 20, 1902, page 814, "That whatever others of our neighbors may gather from the work, . . . the people whom I am addressing and in whose behalf I speak as a minister among them have no excuse. . . . They have been enlightened as to the character of the testimony of Jesus Christ and the Spirit which accompanied him, and as a consequence they can not plead ignorance when the judgment shall sit upon them, and if they have failed to understand the testimony which he has borne, it is because they have lived, whether consciously or unconsciously, in an unfaithful condition, and have not given due credence to that which the witness has testified to and have not read with sufficient attention those things which have been testified of."

Would it be asking too much of any one to insist on them taking their own prescription when the symptoms in their case were the same as those for whom they had prescribed?

Yours for equal rights,

JOSEPH FLORY.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, March 1.

Editors Herald: As I read the letters in the HERALD I thank my heavenly Father for his love and goodness in bringing to light and promulgating this blessed latter-day work, feeling that, as in my individual case, it has been the means of bringing light and peace, even that peace which passeth all understanding into the hearts and lives of mankind. As I compare my past life with my present life, I feel again to lift up my heart and voice in thanksgiving to God for this great work which has been the means of saving my soul from death.

I was once an active member of the Methodist Church and Sunday-school, and very bitterly opposed to the Saints here; so much so in fact, that I would attend none of their meetings or have anything whatever to do with the church except to work in opposition to it. But thanks be to God who has given me light to see my false and dangerous condition and who made known to me to unite with this church. I have enjoyed more spiritual blessings since coming into the Saints' church than in my entire life before. If those who are persecuting the Saints, the Lord's chosen, would only stop to think and throw away their prejudice and investigate, how much better it would be for them and others, not only in this life but in the life beyond. That this end may be brought about I am constantly and prayerfully working, looking to the great Captain to give the final victory.

The work here is progressing slowly, and there seems to be a lack of interest concerning spiritual things due no doubt to a lack of love among and for the members of our church. Wherever such a condition exists there is more or less of a separation usually and therefore the best results can not be obtained. Some of us are already looking ahead to the conference which will convene at Stonington about May 1. We are hoping that when it convenes here again we may have our chapel, which we are now building, in readiness.

With a prayer for the advancement of the Lord's work and the final victory, I remain,

Your brother,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

OUT ON THE OCEAN DEEP, February 28.

Editors Herald: Our blind Sr. Taylor and her two sons, aged twelve and sixteen respectively, destination, Lamoni; Sr. Sarah Hughes, Terre Haute, Indiana; Sr. Green, Minneapolis, and a Miss Rebecca Whitfield, for Kirtland, Ohio, a niece of Bro. and Sr. Gillespie, and the writer, set sail February 18, on the steamer Celtic, the said steamer, seven hundred feet long, seventy feet wide, fifty feet deep, forty-five thousand horse-power, has about two thousand passengers on board, and can carry about four thousand passengers, besides a crew of between four and five hundred men. She is a magnificent boat, but not a fast traveler, as her best speed is only seventeen knots an hour in smooth seas, but in rough seas she is very slow. We have been out ten nights already, and the present prospects are that we will not land till Sunday, which makes it about eleven days we have been on our voyage. We have encountered terrible seas, the worst I have ever experienced, and never want to witness such scenes again. We have had an awful time of it for over a week; the sea rose mountains high. They often washed over the ship. Those of the passengers, who were not confined with seasickness, had to remain indoors for days, and I never saw so many sick people before on board ship. On Wednesday the sea raged with such fury that the ship only made one hundred forty-six miles in twenty-four hours; hence it is that we will arrive in port about three days late, and we will feel grateful to our heavenly Father that we are so near the end of our voyage. It is beyond the power of tongue or pen to describe the fury of the waves when in one of those terrible Atlantic storms. I thought I had witnessed rough seas in years past, but they were only infants in comparison with the present. I really felt nervous once or twice, and sought the Lord earnestly in prayer to quell the storm as the ship shrieked and quivered as those do in the last struggles of death; therefore we truly feel thankful to Him who by his matchless power rules over sea and land. We are all enjoying the blessing of health, and as many have requested us to write them of our arrival, we take this means to comply with their request. With love to all.

Yours hastily,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

[NOTE.—Bro. Griffiths and others landed on March 1. This letter was mislaid, hence did not appear sooner.—ED.]

MONDAMIN, Iowa, March 9.

Editors Herald: I write with heartfelt gratitude for the comfort received and knowledge obtained from perusing the HERALD. I am proud that I have found a church that has written as its creed "all truth," one that is willing to investigate and have its claims investigated.

The enemy of all righteousness is not slumbering, using the power of pen and press his deadly aim to wield. The King of all righteousness is calling his generals, they have sounded the alarm of war. Tact displayed by the adversary has been discovered, and is being met in a very logical manner by the servants of Christ and his God.

A parallel of the days of Christ and the apostles is upon us, and we must "fight the good fight of faith," and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered unto the Saints," for it is our all! As Christ and the New Testament is the outgrowth of what Moses and the prophets said should come so is the great latter-day work the outgrowth of what Moses, the prophets, Christ, and the apostles said should come.

The agitation put forth by pulpit and press against so-called "Mormonism" is calling forth from our rank and file, occasionally, a David to meet this modern Goliath. Too often these modern Goliaths "cry aloud, and spare not," in localities where a David is not in sight or sound; and when he does come, they have made their exit, slung so much mud, that it has marred the minds of many, "to cause the way of truth to be evilly spoken of."

The statement from Ram's Horn I believe it was, is very fitting to so many efforts put forth nowadays: "A mud-slinger is a mud-seeker." And some go so far into the mire to get the mud that they lose their identity as men of honor, truth, and veracity. The blood-stained banner of King Immanuel will never lose a battle under disciplined soldiers of the cross. "He was given as a leader, and a commander." The voice from heaven acknowledged him, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." In former and latter days, "This is the way, walk ye in it," will help us gain the victory.

I feel better, stronger, now, than when I entered the race; while I have not made as good a run as others, I can help others who are just entering, or preparing to enter, I am still willing to compete for the prize that lies at the end. While at times I have grown faint, and faltered, yet my extremity was used as an opportunity to spur me on. This world is but the dressing-room in which we prepare ourselves to play our part in that great drama, the marriage supper. May we so prepare to enter as a welcome guest.

I ever labor and pray for the Israel of God, with the efforts of the ministry, Sunday-school, and Religio. Surely much good is coming forth.

"Let us then be valiant soldiers,
In the army of the Lord!"

"Onward and upward" is our aim. May we go on until we reach the position of Enoch of old, and obtain our reward, is the fervent prayer of a brother and colaborer,

F. E. COHRT.

MONTRÖSE, Iowa, March 6.

Editors Herald: The few figures that we are permitted to present to the General Conference representing a years' active and faithful service in the ministering of the gospel, have been submitted to the proper authorities.

We who sacrifice every worldly ambition in the interest of the spreading of saving truth, and forego the comfort and pleasure of home, yielding to the present rule of reporting, wherein our individuality is totally eclipsed, may find a consolation in the promise of Christ to the ancient ministry, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father knoweth it. And the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows."

We as a church have no time for details! They are too tedious and expensive!!

"So mote it be," while our heavenly Father has ample time and thoughtfulness to grant consideration unto the stammering word, and humble act of the most feeble child that calls in faith believing upon his name.

Of a deed and of a truth we may be thankful for, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

It is profitable for us to consider ourselves as the latter-day Israel of God, and to carefully study his dealings with his people in the ancient times.

When I penned you my last communication I was holding the fort in the Christian church-building at Adrian, Illinois. The attendance was fair, considering the condition of the roads, and my pen is too feeble to depict the roads of Illinois when they are m-u-d-d-y. The attention and order was excellent; in fact, all the people seemed to be kindly disposed; even the minister, Reverend Shiplett, cheerfully and kindly gave assistance one evening.

On the 6th ult. I came here to be present at the Sunday-school convention and the district conference. We were cheered by the presence of Brn. Fred M. and Fred A. Smith. There was a good representation present for the time of year and this district, and all passed off to the uplifting of our cause and the comforting of the Saints.

Bro. Fred A. continued here a few days in telling of the hope and faith of the Saints, and the undersigned remained till over the 15th ult. A cold wave with snow was almost an overmatch for us, as the closing meeting had but a baker's dozen. However, we did not feel nearly so blue or cast down upon hearing that the most wealthy and popular church of the town had only four out.

On the coldest evening of the winter I began a series of meetings at Keokuk, and spoke eighteen times. It seemed to be a game of ups and downs; such a changeable congregation, new faces at every meeting. There are but few resident Saints in Keokuk, and but a few of that few are alive to the work; and age and ill health hindered some of the few of the few. More than ever am I satisfied that to build up our work there it will be necessary to furnish that people with a pastor. A young man came up to the stand to purchase some of our literature; he stated that my sermon, the difference between "Utahism" and our work was a revelation to him from opening to close; that he had read a great deal on Mormonism, but it was all on one side—against the faith—and now he wished to read something from the other side. Some of the people present talked of having me repeat the subject as a lecture in one of the city halls. These people were certainly kindly disposed toward us, as the collection netted ten dollars.

One thing permit me to whisper to you: so far as contributing to support of the missionary in this district, Keokuk carries the banner.

The daily papers were quite liberal with us, and I believe they could be made useful in spreading our work.

Without doubt there is a religious undercurrent against us, and perhaps for a time may hinder some from hearing our glad story of salvation.

Add to the foregoing the lodge influence, and worldly pleasure, and the increasing apathy upon the part of so many, our way is hedged, and our success limited for the time being.

The anticipated visit to Farmington to fulfill a conditional promise was side-tracked.

This may prove to be a farewell to the people of Nauvoo District; and if so, I wish to return thanks to all for their uniform kindness to me. This is to many not numbered with us, as well as to those of the household of faith. And as far as known I take my leave without the ill will of any.

Have not been very active of late in urging the importance and necessity of Graceland College. Be it known unto all that we still need aid.

During this winter it has been quite an effort for me to keep active in the field, my anxiety for the spread of the gospel is just as strong as in my youthful days; but I begin to feel the weight of years, as also body! Our changes are quite rapid, and might be described as from,

"Greenland's icy mountains,
To India's coral strand," and from the "feathery beds of ease," to the unpicked shakes of hay or straw.

In all experience we are to be thankful, for by times the humblest care or smallest gift is bestowed by the most cheerful and earnest of Saints or friends.

Will be here for a few days, and thence westward with an objective point in mind, where I expect to meet the army of the Lord, for active business in the General Conference of the church.

Still on duty,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

DAYTON, Ohio, March 7,

Editors Herald: I will just tell you briefly a small part of my experience. I had tasted of the mercy of our Lord seven years ago through conversion. Had no one to encourage me in a deeper work, so I, like the prodigal son, have been living on husks until lately I was reconciled, and the truth I believe I have found, through reading, prayer, and as revealed to me through one of your brothers here. There are only five members of your church here so far, but I trust that the time will soon come when this number will be multiplied several times. Your brother has sown seed here which I hope has fallen on good ground. I am trusting in the Lord to send some one here to baptize me soon.

Your brother in belief,

JOHN E. DAVIS.

PACKARD, IOWA, March 9.

Dear Herald: There are about eighteen Saints here, in a disorganized condition, and somewhat scattered at that, part being the remnants of the Powersville Branch, which was disorganized last summer by Bro. Rudd, it being in his field. We were greatly strengthened by a visit from Bro. J. R. Sutton, who preached twice in the Methodist Episcopal church-building at this place, arousing a fine interest. One man said when he joined a church this would be the one. Many are investigating, and we hope to reap a harvest here in time to come. The people here say that Bro. Sutton is the best and deepest preacher they ever heard. One man, a Methodist for nearly twenty years, said he heard more in one sermon than in all the rest of his life. Now we would earnestly request that Bro. Sutton be placed in this district for the coming year, if the Lord so wills, as he understands the situation so well here, and as this part of the district has never been worked by those having it in charge we think it our turn. Hoping the powers that be will see this humble request we close.

FRED FARR.

OGDEN, Utah, March 9.

Editors Herald: We are all feeling very happy in spirit this morning. A light snow fell here last night, and the air is cool and bracing to-day.

The Utah District conference closed here last night. There was not a large attendance, but those present seemed to enjoy every service. Everything moved along in the best of order, each manifesting an appreciation of the value of the faith. An ample entertainment was provided, and all present seemed aglow with fervent zeal and earnestness in the work. The conference was a splendid success.

If the spirit of unity and good fellowship prevails throughout the entire church that characterized the Bozeman, Montana; Blackfoot, Idaho; and Ogden, Utah, conferences, then the church is on the upward tendency and is moving ahead.

Brn. H. L. Holt, of California, and S. D. Condit, of Idaho, were with us as visitors, also Sr. Addie Condit, each lending a helping hand.

The death of Bro. Solomon Campbell, of North Ogden, brought a feeling of sadness to many. He was buried yesterday, Brn. Amos M. Chase and H. L. Holt and others officiating at the funeral. Bro. Campbell was highly respected by all who knew him. I leave for home to-day. W. H. KELLEY.

LACARNE, Ohio, March 10.

Editors Herald: We have been giving the wavering public an opportunity to get acquainted with the position of the latter-day work before the anticipated clash of arms between myself and Reverend Smith, United Brethren, which was to have occurred May 10 to 16, current year. But wonders never cease, it seems. Arrangements were made, propositions formulated, rules agreed upon, and date fixed, and the whole instrument signed December 19, 1902. And almost three months passed, when suddenly the public is to be disappointed with the authoritative cry, "there will be no debate," issued from headquarters—the United Brethren defender. What a contrast. December, 1902, Reverend Smith was to "mop the earth with Scott;" March 1, 1903, "there will be no debate," "we object to rule 6," which provides authentic history, and archaeology as standard evidence along with the Bible," and, too, "Scott will not debate fair, and honest," all of which was announced to the public from the United Brethren stand, at Nina, Ohio, and repeated to myself by Reverend Missamore over the "phone" this forenoon. Thus the "dear people" at Nina and vicinity are treated to an unassailable proof of the truth and divinity of the system which the United Brethren ministry have thrust upon them, and another demonstration that their "clergy is called of God" (?) to—"crawfish" from an honorable agreement to investigate principles. And still adding sin to transgression, the Reverend tries to commit God to this work of "backing down," by stating that he prayed for courage to make public the declination, and he "got it." Oh, yes, Mr. Smith had heard from Bishop Dillon, and there is where this "unfair" and "dishonest" debating of Elder Scott creeps out; nay, there is where the entire "back-out" on Smith's part originated, if you please. But we informed the people that the "board of moderators" was half Latter Day Saint and half United Brethren, and it governed the debate at Sugar Grove, Indiana, admirably. It called Bishop Dillon down twice, to my recollection, and Scott, no time. And once, almost the entire audience stood on their feet against the Bishop. It was at this juncture the Bishop almost lost his religion. Well they "set" and adjusted the trap, and they are the parties "caught." Already some of the thinking class say, "that is a tacit concession that the 'Mormons,' so-called, have the truth, and these United Brethren champions can not meet the issue." The "leaven" is working. The calling off the debate on their part, is doing a vast deal of harm for them, and is favorable to the truth. But Babylon with all of her abhorrent concomitants must sink beneath the weight of her own ponderous perversity, and before the advancing battalions of truth.

We are quietly presenting the merits of the gospel nightly to those who can get through the mud to our hall; and judging by the effort to get there, the interest is fine.

May God speed the right. Ever hopefully,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

WEST BRANCH, Michigan, March 7.

Editors Herald: I wish to ask that the presidents of branches, as also the presidents of locals of Zion's Religio-Literary Society in Northern Michigan District write me from time to time as to the condition of the work in their respective branches or locals. The district is large and if we spent but a few days in each branch and local, it would take nearly a year to visit all. We wish to keep in touch with the work, hence we ask this favor. If I have to write to each branch every time I wish to hear from them, it would cost me about one dollar and a quarter, whereas it would only cost them three cents each to write to me. Brethren will you kindly remember this request, and let me hear from you, as to the progress of the work; and if we can assist you in any way we will gladly do so. I would say to the various locals in our district that Bro. Lewis, superintendent of the Good Literature Bureau, informed me that the good literature committees are very delinquent in reporting to him. I think he said he had only heard from four locals. I trust that we may all awake and labor in all diligence in the office in which we have been appointed, so that when the Master comes we may have done something to be rewarded for, and thus be found worthy to enter into his rest.

The work as a whole, in our district is moving along fairly well, both spiritually and financially. Bro. Cornish informed me that he had received over a thousand dollars more tithes and offerings this year than he did last. This is encouraging; I hope it may continue so until the names of all the Saints in the district will be placed upon his book.

Bro. Berve and the writer organized a branch at Rose City the first inst., to be known as the Rose City Branch. Its officers are L. R. Ingleright presiding priest, H. M. Nichols teacher, and Sr. Emma Nichols clerk. We are holding forth at present in a schoolhouse two miles out from the above-named town, with a house full of attentive listeners each evening. Our stay here will be governed somewhat by the weather and roads.

I wish the work of our blessed Master success in all its departments.

DANFORTH, Missouri, March 1.

Dear Herald: Wife and I are still striving against many great obstacles that come across our pathway. We are the only Latter Day Saints in this place. There is no church here of any sect, but we have a hall owned by the miners of this place where all the different denominations meet to worship. We had Bro. J. D. Erwin with us last fall for a while, but the hall was in use when he came, and it seemed as though they tried to freeze him out. He only got to preach one sermon and left for other parts. There are many here who never heard a Latter Day Saint preach. I try to get the gospel before as many as I can through conversations. As I have been warned myself I think it my duty to warn others.

We have been called to pass through some severe trials in sickness and the loss of two of our darling little children, a little girl and boy, only eight days apart, one year ago this month. It was hard to part with them, yet we believe that God doeth all things well, so we strive to serve our Master while this earth life shall last, so that we may be gathered safely home at last, when Christ shall come to reign.

Your brother,

T. E. PERRY.

SPILLERTOWN, Illinois, March 2.

Editors Herald: I have been cheered many times when reading the gospel news. I desire to do something to help spread the glorious angel's message the best I can. I have loaned my HERALDS, and if I had some literature I would give it out to those I thought would read it. We are here where we never have church privileges; we hardly ever see a Latter Day Saint. We live one mile from Spillertown; one half mile from the Spillertown depot; second house on the left-hand side as you go north from the depot. We would be glad to have any of the elders or Saints coming this way to stop and stay all night with us. Bro. M. F. Gowell was here about two years ago, and we had a nice crowd out to hear him. Bro. J. E. Bozarth came last fall, but we did not know that he was coming in time to get a place for him to preach. We are striving to keep the faith and to let our lights shine that others may see our works and glorify our Father in heaven. I hope the Lord will hasten the time when we can be with the Saints. It has been impressed upon my mind that I ought to do something to help spread the glorious gospel before those people who live near us. If I knew how to send and what to send for I would send for literature and distribute it over the neighborhood. It seems to me that I ought to do this.

We have seven children; only one in the church. We pray the Lord will help them to understand the gospel and come into the fold. I can bear testimony to the church, for I have been wonderfully blessed.

Your sister,

M. A. SIMMONS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 7.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Des Moines District is past, but the blessings we received are still with us in a great measure. As Bro. Reams has written you a good report of these blessings, I will only mention one particular of the prophecy given through J. F. Mintun. It was in regard to persecution, the Spirit warned us about, and also said we would not be permitted to be persecuted beyond what we would be able to bear if we were faithful. Monday, Bro. V. Boatwright and the writer went east of the city where I had been holding meetings in the neighborhood where Bro. Boatwright was raised, and four, all heads of families were baptized. We continued meetings until Thursday when Bro. Boatwright went home. I remained the rest of the week, and on Sunday night after I closed the meetings a preacher of Campbellism called the house to order and announced that he would begin on Monday night and tear down the doctrine that I had been preaching. He invited me to be present and offered me one half of his time to reply. Of course a hungry man will always accept an invitation to dine, so on Monday night I appeared around the festal board, but O, what a feast! Nothing but dead men's bones and the same old Campbellite hash. I replied in two speeches of fifteen minutes each (all I could get). His brother got up and smacked his fists for about ten minutes, then a Methodist preacher they had appointed as chairman and timekeeper, arose, and for about ten minutes gave the Saints in general, and "Joe Smith" in particular, a name not to be envied, and wound up by denouncing us as Salt Lakers and making a proposition to drive us out. I asked for privilege to reply to the two last speeches and was given one minute. The results are that some eight or ten are investigating. This man continued two more nights, but none of the rest took any part further than to post their man. Some of the people say they believe the Latter Day Saints are right.

So the work goes on. God's words are verified; his instructions to his Saints are proven often times sooner than we expect, and causes us to rejoice in the knowledge that our God is still mindful of his children.

I will, by the help of the Master continue to preach there all summer. In bonds,

W. F. CLARK.

LOGAN, Utah, March 3.

Editors Herald: In your issue of the 18th ult. is a letter from Bro. T. W. Williams from Los Angeles, California, from which we excerpt the following: "I have been in correspondence with Reverend McLain W. Davis, of the Santa Ana Presbyterian Church. In support of some of his contentions he presents a purported 'basis of argument' between Bro. S. D. Condit, and an Elder Ballard of the Utah church in their Logan, Utah, debate, which I feel sure can not represent Bro. Condit properly, and I know does not represent the position of the church." We would have been pleased if Bro. Williams had stated what that purported "basis of argument" was.

The moderator of that debate, Reverend N. E. Clemenson, of the Presbyterian Church, sent a brief synopsis of the discussion to their organ in Salt Lake City, the Kinsman, and also published the same from that office in a little tract, entitled "The Great Debate," in which he groups the outlines under the two heads: The things about which the Mormons and Josephites agree. Things about which Mormons and Josephites disagree.

Under the first heading Mr. Clemenson presents really his views as to points of similarity. There was no position taken by me as to points of agreement, especially as to our estimate of other Christian churches. Whatever excuse Mr. Clemenson had for the points under that head were probably gathered from a few moments of Elder Ballard's first hour which was devoted along these lines, but was given no consideration by me. Whatever reasons there would be for making us parties to that agreement would be in our failure to publicly deny that report, and not in any statements or concessions made in the debate. I do not know whether this tract was what Bro. Williams was referred to with or not, but it is all I have seen from that source.

We just closed a profitable session of conference at Blackfoot. Two elders ordained, Brn. Adolphus Hendrickson and John Vanderwood. We expect good reports from both. Preparatory work is being done towards organizing a branch at Blackfoot. The Saints felt honored by having Bro. Kelley with them, and the two sermons from him were greatly appreciated. Six counties were represented by visiting Saints, and more general reports from all points in Idaho, and as a rule of a very encouraging nature.

Trusting that the Master may abundantly bless all departments of church work, I remain in the conflict.

S. D. CONDIT.

GRAND RAPIDS, Michigan, March 10.

Editors Herald: I sent you yesterday a copy of Grand Rapids Herald containing my article on differences between the Utah church and our own; more particularly on the subject of polygamy. The compositor inserted the word "only" in my first quotation from Doctrine and Covenants; otherwise they published the article as written. I mention this so that you may know that I am not responsible for the addition, and so that I would be on record as to the addition of the word, and not open to the charge of changing the text.

The press of Grand Rapids has treated us very nicely; and it appears that there is a good field for labor here. Prospects are fair for additions to the church in the near future. Two were baptized at Englishville recently by Bro. W. D. Ellis. They will be members of the Sparta Branch. I expect to leave here the 16th for southern part of the State, en route for home.

A. S. COCHRAN.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri, March 7.

Editors Herald: In your last issue I notice an inquiry for a receipt for the cure of cancer.

Mix one fourth ounce of sulphite of zinc in four ounces of water. If the cancer is in the pimple state wet it for a few days with this lotion and it will kill it. If the cancer has become an open sore dip the middle finger in the lotion and put it around the edges of the sore. Do not put it upon the sore itself, as the pain it will cause will be unbearable. Do this steadily and the sore will diminish and finally be healed up. This was the instructions I received from Doctor King, of Oregon, Holt County, Missouri. This is my own personal experience with this receipt. I obtained it from the Doctor while mine was in the pimple state, before it became an open sore, and this has repeated in the last twenty-five years more than six times; three upon my jaw-bones, three times upon my nose, and once upon my eyebrow. Once being very busy, I neglected to give it proper attention, and it was six months before I got rid of it. The facts are my grandfather on my mother's side died of a cancer, and when my mother was about thirty-five years of age she was attacked with one, but the family physician conquered it. Of course as I advanced in years I began to watch, and when I was about fifty years of age I had my first attack. Have thus far always kept the lotion on hand, and by the blessing of my heavenly Father I have thus far escaped.

I am your brother in hope,

1717 Center Street.

WILLIAM HAWKINS.

OLETA, Oklahoma, February 27.

Editors Herald: As the year's work is completed, I present to the HERALD readers a sketch of the work done. I have visited all the States and Territories included in my charge; and while my stay in each has necessarily been brief, I think I have formed quite a correct idea of the work done and needing to be done in the various localities. My first visit was to Southwestern Texas, where in company with Brn. Hilliard, R. Wight, John and Charles Harp we held a ten-day meeting at Pipe Creek, in Bander County, and while it was not so successful as some I have attended, yet nine precious souls will count their entrance into the kingdom from that date. Bro. Wight and I continued our journey farther up into the mountains, and held what was pronounced as the best-attended meeting ever held in that neighborhood. Only one was baptized here, but we left several who seemed near to the kingdom.

On July 2 Bro. Wight and I by the kindness of Bro. Love's son, George, were taken to the nearest railway station, Ganahl, and went to San Antonio, where we found that according to previous arrangements a fine hall had been hired in the center of the city, and on the night of the 5th I began a series of lectures on the Book of Mormon. My audiences were not large, but my liberty was excellent, and I left the city happy in the thought that I had at least left my testimony with them.

Southwestern Texas is an inviting field and Bro. John Harp has occupied well and is liked by all. But, as everywhere else, we need more laborers.

From San Antonio Bro. Wight and I went to Hearne, Texas, where we held forth in conference and reunion for ten days. Meetings were well attended and good was done. Our laborers are very few, too few here. Brn. Nunley and Hays, with an occasional sermon from Bro. Bryan and others, have kept the work alive here. Two were baptized by Bro. Nunley.

We went from there to Dallas. Found Bro. Sheppard at Bro. Sands'. He had arrangements completed for a discussion with a Christian minister by the name of McIntyre, discussion to take place about eight miles east of Dallas. Bro. Wight and I separated there; he accompanied Bro. Sheppard to act as his moderator, and I continuing in Dallas. We seated a vacant lot near Bro. Sands' place and I preached seven discourses to very good and attentive audiences. Two policemen volunteered to attend the meetings and keep order. One of them came forward at the close of the services, bade me good-bye, and expressed himself as highly pleased with the teaching and invited me to come again. Others did the same. These, I believe, were the first meetings ever held in Dallas, but I hope they may not be the last.

From Dallas I went to Wilburton, Indian Territory, to attend to some matters there and then to Arkansas to attend a conference and reunion that had been arranged to be held with the Jacksonville Branch, near Euclid. Found a very zealous, earnest company of Saints, nearly all the results of the labors of Brn. J. D. Erwin and J. W. Jackson. I learn that since the reunion they have lost their church building by fire. Circumstances point to the fact that it was set on fire; by whom or how I did not learn.

From there I had to return home to witness the marriage of my only daughter to Bro. John A. Gardner, of St. Joseph, Missouri, and to move my family, what was left of it, to Independence. This occupied the whole of September and ten days of October, when I again began my journey southward, visiting a part of the field that had received but little of my attention hitherto, Northeastern Texas. Bro. E. A. Erwin has been comparatively alone here for some years, but Bro. Henson has been associated with him recently and they are doing a good work. Some places here they eagerly hear the message, at others they are indifferent, and at still others it is fought with all the zeal of religious fanaticism. My brother, Heman C., was of the number who did pioneer work in this region, and he is remembered kindly by many to-day.

I remained there from October 11 to November 15, preaching in all twenty-four discourses in various places. The adversary was so stirred up that I and my faith were viciously attacked by a presiding elder of the Methodist church at Lydia. This not sufficing, the people had to have one J. W. Chism of that branch of the Christians or Campbellites known as primitive or non-progressive Christians to come in and make a bitter attack, and challenge us for a discussion, which will take place some time this year, I expect.

On November 15 I went to Pickering, Louisiana. Circumstances were such that but little could be done at this place. However, a good work has been done in other places in Louisiana by Brn. Macrae and Grimes, and quite a number have been baptized and the gospel preached where it has not hitherto been known.

On the 29th Bro. Grimes and I started for Wilburton, Indian Territory, to attend district conference of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District. We had one of the best conferences I ever attended in the South. The Saints were cheered by the presence and wise counsel of our worthy President Joseph Smith, who preached three excellent discourses. After conference Bro. E. A. Erwin and I went to Coalgate, Indian Territory. The Saints here have a nice little chapel built and paid for. A Sunday-school, and good prospects for progress all along the line.

I left Coalgate on Christmas Eve, and Christmas morning found me at Oklahoma City where I was to meet Bro. Pickering, with whom I was to make a pilgrimage through Oklahoma by horse and buggy to look after scattered Saints and organize some branches and do such other work as our hands and hearts might find. We have a few Saints in this city who are trying to do what they can to keep the work going. I was here for two weeks and did what I could to cheer and help them; but the lock of a public house of worship materially hindered the getting of the people together. From here Bro. Pickering and I went to Norman where we found a few more Saints who were keeping up a Sunday-school; but the same cause hinders here as in the last place. On January 10 we returned to Oklahoma City and the 11th went to the small town of Britton seven or eight miles north to preach the funeral of Bro. George Landon. The sermon was preached in the Methodist building and the people were so pleased with it that they gave me an invitation to remain and preach at night, as their pastor was away. I did so, and to show their appreciation they made up a small collection and presented it to me.

A Mr. Riley lives there who was once a citizen of Lamoni or vicinity. Our people are in good repute here, thanks to his effort, as he has but kind words and praises for the Christian character of the Saints at Lamoni. I stayed with the doctor of the town whose wife is an intimate acquaintance of Sr. Mamie Allen. Her maiden name was McCollum.

The 12th Bro. Pickering came up from the city and we drove to a Bro. Thomas Kent's, formerly of Illinois, now living nine miles south and east of Guthrie. Staying one night with him I took train the next morning for Stillwater, leaving Bro. Pickering to hold some meetings at Bro. Kent's. He found this a fine opening, preached nine times and baptized two. I went to Bro. Hinkle's east of Stillwater, and began services and preached to very good and attentive audiences for eight nights. Was joined here by Brn. Aylor and Pickering. Leaving Bro. Aylor to hold the fort and with Bro. Pickering went to Oak Grove Branch where is an earnest band of workers. They have their prayer and preaching-meetings, Religio and Sunday-school and are not hiding their lights under a bushel. Preached there a week, confining my discourse entirely to the Saints.

On Monday, February 2, we took up our journey again westward. A fine day, but the ground-hog saw his shadow and got under cover again; and well for him that he did so, as the next day was as disagreeable as it well could be. A strong northwest gale and cold, Oh my! We were glad to reach the home of Bro. Brewster where we spent Tuesday night. Wednesday was not so bad, but keen and cold. We only had sixteen miles to drive that day, but made it twenty-one by getting out of our way. We stopped with Bro. James Furguson, formerly of Nebraska, whom I knew the first year of my ministerial work. Drove to Alva next day, and found a welcome with Bro. and Sr. Doty, stayed with them for the night and drove to Bro. Will Gamet's next day through quite a snow-storm. They had an appointment out, and so I occupied three times, staying over Sunday. Small but very attentive audiences and many invitations to return and also to visit neighboring places; but we had to go on. Monday we drove to Bro. Parsons, a brother to A. H.; found a welcome at his house, and found them anxious for preaching; but we could not tarry and drove next day to Bro. Alma Kent's. Stayed there that night and drove to Bro. Henry Bivens' near Brule post-office. Met Bro. J. H. Baker; and leaving Bro. Pickering I accompanied Bro. Baker to a place called Buffalo Flats. He had done some preaching there and we began meeting the same night, it being Saturday. Sunday was very stormy and we had no meetings. Preached Monday and Tuesday nights to all that could get in the house. There are no Saints in that place, but the interest is fine and I never was treated better anywhere and felt as much at home as though I was with the Saints, and am quite sure some will obey soon.

On Wednesday we returned to Bro. Bivens', where we had been petitioned to organize a branch; but circumstances were such that we did not think it best at present. On Thursday Bro. Baker went to Bro. Parsons', and Bro. Pickering and I took our journey to a place called May, to hunt up some more scattered Saints. Found Bro. C. H. Blakesley about four miles south and five miles west of May Post-office. Began meetings there Friday night in Bro. Blakesley's house, and continued over Sunday. Organized a branch on Sunday with fifteen members, and two or three members not present at the organization to come in later. I find in Bro. Blakesley's family the effects of the work of my cousin, David Wight. The songs he taught them and the counsel he gave are yet cherished as mementoes of his worth as a Christian teacher and worker. His memory is dear to them. They have a Sunday-school and have a fine chance to do a good work for the cause of Christ. I am very hopeful that they will prove true to their trust. From there we visited Brn. William and Jerry Hagar, near Shattuck, who while isolated, are strong in the faith.

We drove on the 24th to this place, where we found Bro. and Sr. A. H. Morrow; and here we are and likely to remain for a few days at least. We were to stay but one night, and then on to Bro. Pickering's home, where there are sufficient Saints to organize a branch; but it began to snow and has kept it up until to-day. The roads are impassable. It is the worst storm for years in this country. And so my labors for the year end. I expect to get to Seiling conference March 6, 7, and 8, then home to prepare for General Conference.

I am convinced that Northwestern Oklahoma is a fine field and should be occupied at once. Many seem anxious to hear the word. In many places they have no preaching at all and in many places as one man told me at Bro. Blakesley's they have such poor preachers sent them that it is a treat to have some one come along that can tell them something. I had the largest congregations at Bro. Blakesley's I ever had in a private house, and the intense interest shown in my preaching convinces me that judicious work will bring many into the church. We should occupy in all this new country as fast as possible. The men in the field this year have done remarkably well and the work is far in advance of past years. Wherever the Saints honor the gospel law by living it, it is honored by their neighbors and hence much rests upon them.

As I make a summary of my work for the year I find I have preached one hundred seventy-four sermons, not as many as last year but have been hindered by changing my place of residence from St. Joseph to Independence and the cares incident to building a new home. My liberty has been as good as I could wish, and treatment by the Saints and people all that I could hope for. May peace and prosperity attend all of God's people everywhere is the prayer of,

Your servant for Christ's sake,

H. O. SMITH.

MILTON, Florida, February 28.

Editors Herald: While renewing for HERALD will say that it is a welcome visitor at my home, for I am glad to get it and learn of the progress of the church. I am sorry that I could not get a new subscriber for you; but from several of the Saints here I got the answer, "Not able." I love the work and want to do all I can for it. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Southern California.—Sunday-school convention convened at Los Angeles, February 21, at 1.45 p. m. with Bro. T. W. Williams in charge. The following officers were elected: T. W. Williams, superintendent; A. Carmichael, assistant superintendent; Pearl Pankey, secretary; Maggie Pankey, treasurer; George Wixom, librarian. Delegates to General Convention: T. W. Williams, George Wixom, Celia Wixom, A. Carmichael, J. C. Foss, Daniel Hougas, Blanche Andrews, and C. W. Earle. Delegates empowered to cast a majority and minority vote. Pearl Pankey, secretary.

To the Saints of Western Nebraska.

Being one of those responsible for the tent fund being started, for use in Western Nebraska, I wish to say that this day I received letters from E. D. Payne and C. W. Prettyman stating that we have seventy-seven dollars subscribed, it being just seventy-two days since fund was started. How is that for the West? And my experience with the Saints and friends for the last twelve years out there tells me that means seventy-seven dollars or more paid in when called for. Now to all who have not been permitted to contribute, please accept this invitation and send your offering for this fund to S. D. Payne or C. W. Prettyman, at Farnham, Nebraska, at once. We should have one hundred dollars to purchase a tent of suitable size and equipment to begin with.

March 3, 1903.

J. L. DETRICK.

First Seventy.

The first meeting of our quorum will be April 6, at 7.30 p. m., at which time we hope to meet a large representation of the quorum, all if possible. Any business to come before the quorum should be in the hands of the secretary as soon as possible. James McKiernan, president; J. F. Mintun, secretary, Box 384, Woodbine, Iowa.

First Quorum of Elders.

We have sent blank reports and circular letters to all members of the First Quorum of Elders. Those who have not received the blank, should write the secretary at once, and another will be sent. We very much desire reports from each member. A failure to report for two consecutive years will cause your name to be dropped from the quorum record. But we wish to hear from all. Look carefully through the circular letter and if there are any corrections you may be able to make in names or addresses, or any items of deaths that may have occurred, please report same to the secretary. We shall be pleased to see a large representation at the forthcoming General Conference. May the Lord bless his servants. T. A. Hougas, president of quorum; John B. Lentz, secretary, Henderson, Iowa.

Reception Committee.

The reception committee appointed by the Independence Branch wishes to emphasize the fact that it will be hard to find places to board during the conference in April, and that all who aim to attend should notify the committee at once, as we can not agree to be responsible for the entertainment of those who may come without having made arrangements. The branch has made no provision for free board for any one. Three dollars per week will be charged to all except those who have private arrangements with friends. Those who desire entertainment please write Kearney Kelley, 1116 Electric Street, Independence, Missouri, advising him of your wishes, and the committee will locate you and notify you. Preserve your location cards and hand to the committeemen on arrival. A. H. Parsons, chairman; Kearney Kelley, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Alabama district will meet with the Flat Rock Branch on Saturday before the second Sunday in April. The ministry of the Mobile and Florida Districts are cordially invited to attend. J. R. Harper, secretary.

Married.

RHODEN—LARIMORE.—On March 2, 1903, Bro. Levi L. Rhoden and Sr. Nancy J. Larimore were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at the home of Bro. and Sr. C. H. Warn, at Dayton, Ohio, E. E. Long, of Springfield, Ohio, officiating. The young couple will make their home in Dayton, and we trust their journey through life may be pleasant.

Died.

MORTIMORE.—At his home in Hamburg, Iowa, March 2, 1903, Adam T. Mortimore; was born in Ohio, December 3, 1820; married Sallie Gardner in 1849; baptized May 15, 1870, by Thomas Nutt; ordained an elder May 11, 1873, by Wheeler Baldwin. Eleven children with his life companion survive. He passed into the great beyond with the bright hope of coming forth in the resurrection of the just. Funeral services conducted by Henry Kemp, assisted by Charles Fry. The remains were laid to rest in the Presbyterian cemetery near his old home.

ARCHIBALD.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, February 27, 1903, Russell Archibald, Sr., aged 70 years. He was born at Airdrie, Lanarkshire, Scotland, January 14, 1833; baptized when 12 years old. He came to St. Louis in 1845, where he first met his future excellent and loving wife. On December 24, 1856, he married Helen McIndoe. Four sons and five daughters were born to them, who together with thirty-seven grandchildren were present to join in the last earthly tribute of respect to his honored name. The deceased was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Belleville, Illinois, May 11, 1873, and subsequently he was ordained a priest by H. A. Stebbins, and an elder by Mark H. Forscutt. The funeral services were conducted in the Saints' chapel, at St. Joseph, Missouri, by Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, on March 1. The remains were buried in the beautiful cemetery of Mount Mora, the adjoining spot being purchased in reserve for his loving and beloved wife.

In Midwinter.

In warm, sweet comfort swift we glide
Beside the frozen river,
And leafless trees on either hand
In the chill breezes shiver;
The fields are white with rime and show,
The little streams are sleeping,
And far and wide Mid-winter holds
All things in his grim keeping.

But, cushioned soft, and snugly warm,
O'er the steel road we hurry,
And watch the landscape; read or dream,
With not a care or worry.
Oh power of steam, and skill of man,
To guide its every motion,
And bear the traveler, safe and sure,
From ocean unto ocean!

The Size of Alaska.

When we say that the area of Alaska is about six hundred thousand square miles, only a vague idea is conveyed to most minds. In order to visualize the statement, we must have the outline of the Territory superimposed upon the map of some country with which we are familiar. . . . Mr. Brooks [of the United States Geological Survey] has drawn upon the map of the United States a map of Alaska in solid black, in order to show the relative areas most effectively. The scale used in both instances is the same.

As pointed out by Mr. George B. Hollister, of the Geological Survey, in the Popular Science Monthly for December, when Point Barrow, the most northerly extremity of Alaska, is placed upon the Canadian border in Northern Minnesota, Mount St. Elias falls near the Ohio River between Western Kentucky and Indiana, and the main portion of the Territory covers almost the entire area of the Great Plains and Mississippi Valley as far south as Arkansas. The extreme south-easterly portion of the narrow strip of Alaska, upon which Sitka and Juneau are situated, would extend to the Atlantic Ocean at Georgia; the celebrated Nome district would fall in Western South Dakota, near the Wyoming line, and the most westerly of the Aleutian Island group would lie upon the Pacific coast line near Los Angeles, the intermediate islands touching the Mexican border in Arizona and New Mexico. In other words, the territory of Alaska is sufficient in geographical extent to reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to Mexico. Placed in this position on the United States, Alaska would cover, in whole or in part, twenty-three States and Territories, and the western third of Lake Superior.—American Review of Reviews.

The Need of Creedless Associations.

The present stage of the mental and moral development of our people demands associations, especially in our towns and smaller cities, where men of all creeds and classes may meet in close fellowship, feel their common humanity, talk freely and intelligently on matters of general interest, and, as opportunity presents, cooperate for local improvements and welfare. The lives of most men in an average American town are extremely isolated; they tend to narrowness and selfishness of aim; there is a want of the human touch and cosmopolitan spirit; and there is a tendency to separate into little coteries. The several secret fraternities incline to form close groups, there are also religious groups, and the working people feel themselves cut off from all the other sets. Men live as strangers to an astonishing degree. The citizens generally are not friends in any intimate sense, as, according to Aristotle, they should be in order that friendship may form the nexus between ethics and politics and so guarantee the safety of the state. Social and financial differences make chasms of increasing depth and wideness. Such clubs, therefore, as bring large numbers of men together, without distinctions of wealth, religion, politics, culture, or caste, may serve a large purpose in modern life.—Calvin Dill Wilson, in Chautauquan for March.

Timber Wealth of the Far West.

In the United States the heart of the lumber belt has moved westward. At the beginning of the last century almost the entire wood supply came from the then untouched forests of the Penobscot River region of Maine. As the woodsmen cut deep into the heart of the wood the industry was forced to find other fields from which to draw its supply, and the virgin forests of the South and of the States bordering on the Great Lakes were cut into. Although these regions are by no means depleted to-day, the Pacific coast is rapidly becoming the heart of the lumber trade. And what wonder, for in the three States of California, Oregon, and Washington, there is at least one third of the entire supply of standing timber in the United States. In figures, it amounts to more than 600,000,000,000 feet of uncut wood.

The forest reserves and national parks set apart by the United States Government within the limits of these three States aggregate an area of 32,428 square miles, or more than 22 per cent of the total wooded area of the States. In the state of Oregon alone, where a careful examination has been made, the national census officials have estimated the standing timber on these reservations at 55,000,000,000 feet, or one fourth of the States total supply.—Alvin Hovey-King, in Review of Reviews for March.

"The Price of Trust Building."

Miss Tarbell's History of the Standard Oil Company will probably run in McClure's Magazine well into next fall. Miss Tarbell is still gathering material for her great work, and spends a portion of each month in the Oil Regions and in Cleveland. The current installment, in the March number, is one of the most eventful chapters yet put forth. It is called "The Price of Trust Building," and takes the Standard on its triumphant career of "benevolent assimilation" of independent refineries down to its big fight with the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Empire Transportation Company, in 1877. A certain sworn affidavit of Mr. Rockefeller himself in regard to his transactions with the widow of a small refiner in Cleveland, and the woman's answer thereto are printed in full, and furnish a significant insight into the methods of the Standard in those days. A feature of all the numbers has been the illustrations, especially the portraits, which have been gathered with as much care and pains as the written records in the case. Several portraits of Mr. Rockefeller, hitherto unpublished, will appear in future numbers.—Ida M. Tarbell in March McClure's.

Developing Better Seed.

Every farmer knows, of course, that one of the worst mistakes he can make is to plant poor seed, but every farmer does not know the difference between the very best seed and that which is not so good. Poor seed is a bad investment, because if it makes a difference of only a few bushels to the acre it is a loss of many dollars. Some of the most interesting experiments of recent years has been the work of breeding better seed and improving it, just the same as live-stock has been improved by intelligent breeding.

The Twentieth Century Farmer is publishing a most interesting series of articles by Thomas L. Lyon of the Nebraska Agricultural Experiment station on breeding wheat and corn. These and other articles along the same line should be carefully studied by every farmer who uses his brains in making his farming pay.

You can get a free sample copy by sending your name to the Twentieth Century Farmer, 2385 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska, but it would be worth your while to send in one dollar for a whole year's subscription, or twenty-five cents for a three-months' trial subscription.

BRO. SALYARDS informs us that some of the districts have not sent in credential reports. It will be well for those districts that have not done so to send them in at once, so that the credentials report to conference may be made up before conference begins work.

AMONG the illustrations in the April Leaves will be found a good likeness of Elder H. J. Hudson, and a picture of the "Nauvoo Mansion," the home of Joseph Smith's family at the time of his death.

Editorial.

GEORGE P. FRISBIE AND THE "NAUVOO EXPOSITOR" IN "EVENING AND MORNING STAR." NO. 2.

Elder George P. Frisbie has a second article in the Evening and Morning Star for February, 1903, in regard to the affidavits in the Nauvoo Expositor, in which he attempts to show a similarity of contents between the so-called revelation on celestial marriage as published in the Utah book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the statements of the parties whose names are attached to those affidavits; and makes this attempt by publishing extracts from the affidavits and from the revelation in parallel columns.

Elder Frisbie lays great stress upon the idea that these affidavits were made and published before the death of Joseph Smith. He writes: "Let it be remembered that these people gave their testimony, and made their public printed charges in the lifetime, and in the home town of Joseph Smith."

Yes, the affidavits were made "in the lifetime" and "in the home town of Joseph Smith." They bear the date of May 4, 1844, and were made public in the Expositor, June 7, 1844, just twenty days before the death of Joseph Smith.

No date as to the time when Hyrum Smith let Mr. Law read what he said was a revelation, and none nearer than the "early fall of 1843 when Hyrum Smith essayed to read" a paper in the High Council. It may be supposed that these men who made the affidavits knew of the wrong-doing of Joseph Smith eight months before the making of the affidavits, if they knew personally anything about it. They should have proceeded against him long before June 7, 1844.

It is fair to presume that whatever these men knew against Joseph Smith would have come out in the trial of the charges for riot upon which Joseph and Hyrum Smith and sixteen others had been arrested and had given bonds for appearance, based upon the destruction of the Expositor plant.

The points of similarity as arranged by Elder Frisbie are quite inadequate to establish an identity; and in one of them he reads into paragraph 32, the word polygamy which is not found in the text. Elder Frisbie does this in order to make his attempt to seem of force. He quotes from section 32, of the revelation published by the Utah church thus: "Go ye therefore and do the works of Abraham, enter ye into my law [polygamy] and ye shall be saved." In juxtaposition he places this from William Law's statement: "It said this was the law and commanded Joseph to enter into the law."

Elder Frisbie wrote: "By taking the separate testimony of these three persons, William Law, Jane Law, and Austin Cowles, WE HAVE THE ESSENCE of the revelation (so-called) on a plurality of wives as it appears in section 132 of the Utah edition (1890) book of Doctrine and Covenants and under which polygamy was practiced by the Utah Mormons."

Elder Frisbie wrote further: "Take the so-called revelation as it now appears in the Utah book of Doctrine and Covenants, and stripped of the mass of argumentative verbiage, it is identical with the so-called revelation that these witnesses so bitterly assailed in 1844, charging in their complaint that Joseph Smith was its author."

The witnesses aforesaid make no charge upon their own knowledge that Joseph Smith was the author of the document read by them. William Law said that Hyrum said he was with Joseph when it was received. A. Cowles said that Hyrum said it was given through the prophet. Neither makes assertion for himself as to the authorship, as any one will see by reading the affidavits.

The "essence" of the Utah basis for plural marriage may also be found in the rumors flying about the city at the time known as Doctor J. C. Bennett's spiritual wife system.

There has not as yet been a definite and legal identification of the document presented by President B. Young August 29, 1852, as having been given through Joseph Smith to the church. It would seem to be time enough to attempt identification of the two when either had been properly authenticated.

Elder Frisbie wrote further: "Reorganized people have been fond of giving out the impression that polygamy was never known, or taught, during the lifetime of Joseph Smith."

This is news to us. The "Reorganized people" have distinctly affirmed that no revelation authorizing polygamy was given to the church by Joseph Smith; that it had not been proved that Joseph Smith was himself a polygamist, or had taught it to others. That it was not until Joseph Smith had been dead over eight years that a revelation was produced, and that then its identification was faulty and unsatisfactory; that notwithstanding the many wives both his whilom friends in Utah, and his enemies in Utah and out of it, have bestowed upon him, no children were born to Joseph Smith in polygamy, a most significant denial of the charges of both friends and enemies. That the organic and fundamental laws of the church as established by command of God under the administration of Joseph Smith made no provision for polygamy, but for ever debarred it as a rule of faith and practice, and that it had not and could not become a church tenet, no matter by whom introduced or taught.

This contention of the Reorganized Church has stood the test of forty odd years; and it can not be broken by this vicious revival of the Nauvoo Expositor.

Referring to the so-called revelation published by the Utah people, Elder Frisbie urges: "Now then if it had been taught to the extent claimed by these witnesses, and corroborated by two of the early fathers of the Reorganization, namely, William Marks and Isaac Sheen, to say nothing of the testimony of thousands of Utah Mormons, one is driven to conclude that whatever its source, its authors stood high in the estimation of the church, in order for it to have gained the great hold it did upon the body at Nauvoo."

Of the thousands of Utah Mormons whose testimony Elder Frisbie refers to above, the Utah leaders at the request, or instigation, of the Church of Christ, put their best on the stand in the suit for the Temple Lot, to prove just what Mr. Frisbie is trying to prove by the Expositor, but under the fire of a cross-examination, the effort signally failed. Lorenzo Snow, Joseph C. Kingsbury, Lyman O. Littlefield, Joseph B. Noble, Samuel W. Richards, Wilford Woodruff, Cyrus H. Whelock, Lucy W. Kimball, Bathsheba Smith, Priscilla M. Staines, Mercy R. Thompson, Melissa Lott Willis, Mary Ann West, and Emily D. P. Young. If they had those who knew, why did they not put them on the stand, especially if there were thousands of them.

To show the vicious nature of the method employed by Elder Frisbie, it is only necessary to insert what those "early fathers," William Marks and Isaac Sheen, did really say about it.

In October, 1852, Isaac Sheen, then living at Cincinnati, Ohio, upon hearing that President B. Young had publicly promulgated the dogma of polygamy, wrote to the Saturday Evening Post a strong letter denouncing polygamy, and quoting Book of Mormon against it. Near the close of his letter Isaac Sheen wrote as follows:

The Salt Lake apostles also excuse themselves by saying that Joseph Smith taught the spiritual wife doctrine, but this excuse is as weak as their excuse concerning the ancient kings and patriarchs. Joseph Smith repented of his connection with this doctrine, and said that it was of the devil. He caused the revelation on the subject to be burned, and when he voluntarily came to Nauvoo and resigned himself into the arms of his enemies, he said that he was going to Carthage to die. At that time he also said, that if it had not been for that accursed spiritual wife doctrine, he would not have come to that. By his conduct at that time he proved the sincerity of his repentance, and of his profession as a prophet.

It is possible that if there was anything of the kind going on Joseph Smith may have had some knowledge of it, without his being implicated in it.

In this there is not a suggestion as to what was the connection of Joseph Smith to the dogma, or practice of polygamy. Isaac Sheen was not a resident of Nauvoo, and was not a leading man in the church in 1844, and possibly had never more than seen Joseph Smith, and could have known nothing personally about it. He is in error about the prophet causing the revelation to be burned, or, if not, he makes the case better for Joseph Smith in connection with that paper; for if he burned it, or caused it to be done, no one had the right to revive it, or reproduce even a copy of it.

Again, he makes Joseph Smith to say it is an accursed doctrine and "of the devil," a thing incredible upon the assumption that he had a revelation authorizing it which he believed to be from God.

The statement made by Isaac Sheen does not implicate Joseph Smith as either teaching, or practicing polygamy. It is left for such minds as Elder Frisbie who are bent upon smirching the memory of Joseph Smith in order to carry their own ends, to cast blame upon Joseph Smith by innuendo and insinuation in that which as it reads with fair minds carries no such inferences.

Here is William Marks' statement:

A few days after this occurrence, I met with Bro. Joseph. He said that he wanted to converse with me on the affairs of the church, and we retired by ourselves. I will give his words verbatim, for they are indelibly stamped upon my mind. He said he had desired for a long time to have a talk with me on the subject of polygamy. He said it eventually would prove the overthrow of the church, and we should soon be obliged to leave the United States, unless it could be speedily put down. He was satisfied that it was a cursed doctrine, and that there must be every exertion made to put it down. He said that he would go before the congregation and proclaim against it, and I must go into the High Council, and he would prefer charges against those in transgression, and I must sever them from the church, unless they made ample satisfaction.

What is there in this that shows Joseph Smith to have been a polygamist? Not a thing. The very spirit of the article shows that if there was anything like polygamy, or spiritual wifery being taught or practiced, Joseph Smith was not a party involved as a transgressor.

Joseph Smith has been charged with being a fraud, an impostor, spiritual mountebank, a deceiver, a libertine, a polygamist, a corrupt, ambitious adventurer, but we have not known of his having been charged with being a fool. Take William Marks' statement as a whole and it shows that Joseph Smith proposed to employ radical measures to put a stop to the practices of polygamy, or spiritual wifery, (and Elder Frisbie and the Expositor to the contrary notwithstanding there was no polygamy). To do this he proposed that William Marks, who was the president of the High Council should proceed against those in transgression, he, Joseph Smith, himself, to prefer the charges upon which such procedure was to be based. Besides this Joseph Smith proposed to take the stand in denunciation of the doctrine and thus by public ministration and official discipline against the offenders root out this evil which "was of the Devil."

Elder Frisbie has introduced these witnesses William Marks and Isaac Sheen in connection with the Expositor, and being his witnesses he is not at liberty to deny just deductions made from their testimony.

Joseph Smith was not a fool. He knew the character of William Marks. He knew the extent of the power of the High Council, authorized to try even the highest in the church. He knew that William Marks had every opportunity to know whether he was a party with those whom he called transgressors. He knew that William Marks and others in the Council would not shield him if he was one of the guilty ones. He also knew what the denunciation from the stand meant. And if he was guilty he knew how disastrously such course would result to him. Would anybody not a fool undertake such a self-destructive course? There is no evidence that Joseph Smith contemplated religious suicide at the time.

Who were the persons that would have been affected by charges made against them before the High Council by Joseph Smith? Would Hyrum Smith, his brother, have been one? Hyrum was killed at the same time his brother Joseph was. And, notwithstanding that since his death it has been said of Hyrum Smith, he too was a polygamist and equally as guilty as his brother Joseph, no children were born to him in polygamy, that we have ever heard, or seen evidence of. Whoever they were, the arrest of Joseph Smith and his murder while awaiting trial, only twenty troubled days after the appearance of the Expositor containing the affidavits made so much of by Elder Frisbie, neither of which charges Joseph Smith with personal immorality, or breach of the law of the land, prevented such charges being made. President Marks in explanation of the reason why this procedure of charges by Joseph Smith against those in transgression before the High Council, was not carried into effect, said in the same article in HERALD, number 1, volume 1. "The mob commenced to gather about Carthage in a few days after (June 1), therefore there was nothing done concerning it."

From June 1, 1844, to that fateful 27th, was a troubled and boisterous time for Joseph Smith and the church. A bitter strife was being urged between the two leading political parties; and in the fall before an anti-Mormon party had been organized, a mass-convention being held September 7, 1843. Among the resolutions passed was one "requesting the Governor of Missouri to make another demand for Smith, and pledging aid in the execution of the writ."

Elder Frisbie closes his article thus: "Law, Cowles, and others boldly charged Joseph Smith with being the author of the revelation on polygamy. If what was being circulated and referred to in the public press was not of God, nor from the hands of Joseph Smith, one wonders why a revelation, proclaiming against it was not forthcoming as in the Page case, instead of resorting to mob law and Missouri tactics, in the destruction of the 'Expositor' whose chief offense seems to have been its opposition to this polygamic revelation."

In this Elder Frisbie errs either ignorantly or purposely. The purposes of the Expositor as stated in the prospectus were: "The unconditional repeal of the city charter; to correct the abuses of the unit power; to advocate disobedience to political revelations."

It is clear that Elder Frisbie has attempted to use the Expositor as evidence to sustain the claim of the Church of Christ that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy, and gave a purported revelation authorizing the practice. We have shown that while the evidence has in the minds of some a degree of value circumstantially it is not proof, and the inferences he has drawn from the statements made both in the body of the paper and in the affidavits are not legitimate and would not stand in a court of justice; being improper.

There was no need for a revelation to be given to meet the accusations and charges which Elder Frisbie alleges to have been made. Being untrue, having no foundation in fact, neither God nor Joseph Smith was under obligation to attempt settlement by revelation. Messrs. Law, Cowles, and others referred to by Elder Frisbie, had all the time from the early fall of 1843 to June, 1844, in which to have arraigned Joseph Smith on their charges of immorality, if they had knowledge of them. The courts were open to them. Why did they not prosecute? Oh, says Elder Frisbie, if the charges were slanders then Joseph should have proceeded in the courts for slander. He had twenty stormy days between the publication of the Expositor and his death to do this. At the time of his death he was before the courts demanding trial. His prosecutors were not ready. He gave bonds to appear for trial on other charges which were never tried, upon which no one has the right to say he was guilty.

We have shown further that there was a strong opposition against Joseph Smith of a political character and that the Expositor was the medium through which this was to take shape; that the anti-Mormon party authorized further prosecution against Joseph Smith on the part of the governor of Missouri, and that this added to the difficulty of Joseph Smith's effort to prosecute against transgressors before the High Council.

Elder Frisbie is an officer of the Church of Christ, (commonly called Hedrickites,) at Independence, Missouri. That church assumes to build upon the work of Joseph Smith as a prophet and revelator in common with all other so-called Latter Day Saints. It differs from the Utah church in this; the Utah church claims that Joseph Smith was a polygamist because it was commanded of God by revelation; the Church of Christ claims that Joseph Smith had a revelation and was a polygamist, but that the power of God was withdrawn from Joseph Smith about February, 1834, and hence Joseph Smith became a fallen prophet whose works and words were thereafter of no value or validity; to prove this contention this resort to the Nauwoo Expositor is made. In the position of the Utah people there is a degree of consistency, for it does not provide for such a condition of spiritual darkness on the part of the prophet as to make him to be apostate and fallen, nor outside of the spiritual pale of uprightness and safety wherein he did the work assigned him, but makes even his acts as a polygamist to be a virtue and an additional reason to hold him to be a servant of God. The contrary is true of the position of the Church of Christ. That position vitiates the character of Joseph Smith as a servant of God in less than four years from the organization of the church, and makes all his acts and revelations after that time false and void, and as a consequence his character bad. This position is illogical and inconsistent and the elders of the Church of Christ ought to know, if they do not, that for them to go before the world with such a claim as that is to destroy the confidence of those to whom they preach, both as to the gospel they claim to have been restored through Joseph Smith by revelation and their sincerity and honesty in making their contention and maintaining their cause. They ought to see that the position taken by them is detrimental to their progress and destructive in its tendency. No cause so maintained can prosper unto final triumph.

The position taken by the Reorganized Church is far more consistent and logical. The revelations given to the church through Joseph Smith, all of them known during his lifetime and the term of his ministration, are directly opposed to polygamy, spiritual wifery, or adultery in any form; hence he could not have received from God any revelation setting former revelations aside. The teachings of the Bible and of the Book of Mormon, are, also, against the dogma and practice referred to. Joseph Smith knew this, and, hence, another reason why he could neither have taught nor practiced as charged. And if he did, neither teaching nor practice was binding on any of the church, as neither was presented to or accepted by the church during his lifetime. In this position there is no provision for a fallen prophet, whose lapse from God's grace is to be condoned, explained away, or lamely accounted for, to avoid the inevitable conclusion that he was from the start, at best, an unprofitable and false teacher unworthy of confidence or following. The position of the Reorganized Church is against that of either the Utah church, or the Church of Christ.

Elder Frisbie in his zeal has but adopted the improper method of the Utah polygamist, in the use of the "filthy contents," of an anti-Mormon sheet; and has struck hands with an unholy alliance, which condemns alike the Church of Christ, the Utah church, and the Reorganized Church, for which singly or alone it has neither sympathy nor respect. The legend written across the face of this latest effort to defeat the latter-day work in its primitive intent and purpose is Ichabod. Once again is fulfilled the prediction made by the angel to Joseph Smith that his name "should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues." "Your name shall be known among the nations, for the work which the Lord will perform by your hands shall cause the righteous to rejoice and the wicked to rage; with the one it shall be had in honor, and with the other in reproach."

In this controversy we prefer to stand with the righteous and hold the name of Joseph Smith in honor, let others do as they may.

OBJECTION TO GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTION NO. 284.

We have received from Bro. H. E. Jarvis, clerk of the Burlington Branch, Iowa, a copy of a "Petition for Amendment of General Conference Resolution No. 284." As this petition will bring the matter up at next General Conference, Bro. Jarvis thought it well to publish the substance of the petition that those interested might have time for due consideration. Together with a number of paragraphs introduced by "whereas," the following resolutions were adopted by the Burlington Branch on March 12:

Resolved that it is the sense of this branch that some provision should be made, whereby persons in good standing who desire to sever their connection with the church may be permitted to do so in an orderly manner, and without being compelled to submit to the disgrace of expulsion, being thereby placed in the same category with those who are expelled because of actual wrongdoing, such a course being unjust on the part of the church and unfair to the persons involved, and naturally but unnecessarily antagonizing them. To practically compel a person who desires to withdraw from the church to remain in it, or incur the ignominy of expulsion, which also subjects him to reproach in temporal affairs, is an action unworthy of the church, and tends rather to incur the hatred of such a person and to make of him an active enemy, than to reconcile him; and we believe that such a course tends to bring reproach upon the church and to bring it into discredit, as being unfair, unjust, and unchristian; and that it is opposed to the principle of the free agency of the individual, under which he should be permitted to act upon his own judgment, and to take the consequences of his own acts. We believe that the individual has rights, as well as the church, and that those rights should be respected.

Resolved further that we respectfully petition the General Conference to consider this matter, and to so amend the rules as to permit persons in good standing who so desire, to withdraw from membership, after due investigation and effort have been made, and that the president and clerk of this branch be and they are hereby authorized and directed to transmit to the church secretary a duly attested copy of these resolutions, with the request that they be submitted to the next General Conference.

NEW EVIDENCE.

"And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."—John 21: 25.

"I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now."—John 16: 12.

"The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and to teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen."—Acts 2: 1, 2.

In the year 1883 there was discovered and published at Constantinople by Bryennios, metropolitan of Nicomedia, a work called "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles." The original was written between 120 and 160 A. D. The work has been known for centuries. First cited by Clement of Alexandria in his First Stroma; by Eusebius History 3, 25; and by Athanasius in No. 39 Festal Epistle. Clement thought it ought to be included in the New Testament collection.

The following passage is found in it. "On the Lord's Day of the week assemble ye together and give thanks and break bread, first having confessed your sins, that your sacrifice may be pure."

This partakes more of the nature of a command than some of the New Testament references, such as: "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together," etc.

The noted passage found in Justin Martyr ("See Ante-Nicene Fathers" The First Apology of Justin, chapter 67). Added to this newly-discovered evidence from the teaching of the twelve apostles throws some light on the Sunday question. It is as follows:

The wealthy among us help the needy, and we always keep together; and for all things wherewith we are supplied, we bless the Maker of all through his Son Jesus Christ, and through the Holy Ghost. And on the day called Sunday, all who live in cities or in the country gather together to one place, and the memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read, as long as time permits; then when the reader has ceased, the president verbally instructs, and exhorts to the imitation of these good things. Then we all rise together and pray, and, as we before said, when our prayer is ended, bread and wine and water are brought, and the president in like manner offers prayers and thanksgivings, according to his ability, the people assent, saying, Amen; and there is a distribution to each, and a participation of that over which thanks have been given, and to those who are absent a portion is sent by the deacons. And they who are well to do, and willing, give what each think fit; and what is collected is deposited with the president, who succors the orphans and widows, and those who, through sickness or any other cause, are in want, and those who are in bonds, and the strangers sojourning among us, and in a word takes care of all who are in need. But Sunday is the day on which we hold our common assembly, because it is the first day on which God, having wrought a change in the darkness and matter, made the world; and Jesus Christ our Savior on the same day arose from the dead. For he was crucified on the day before that of Saturn (Saturday); and on the day after that of Saturn, which is the day of the Sun, having appeared to his apostles and disciples. He taught them these things, which we have submitted to you also for your consideration.

Justin in this statement, "For He was crucified on the day before that of Saturn (Saturday) and the day after that of Saturn, which is the day of the Sun, having appeared to his apostles and disciples. He taught them these things, which we have submitted to you also for your consideration." "These things" certainly included the keeping of Sunday.

Justin is writing to the Roman emperor, the Senate, and the whole people, representing the position of the Christian church at that time. He lived close enough to the apostles' time that he must have known many who had been associated with the apostles. He was born about 114 A. D., in Palestine.

During the forty days of the sojourn of Jesus with the disciples, he, according to Acts 1:3, had been "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Justin says: "He taught them these things which we have submitted to you also for your consideration" concerning Sunday, and that he did between his resurrection and ascension. "The things pertaining to the kingdom of God" that were taught by Jesus the Christ during the time he was with them between the resurrection and ascension doubtless were essential to the establishment of righteousness, and as we see by this new evidence from the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles."

MORE NEWS FROM THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

On March 16 more news received from Papeete concerning the devastation of the Islands was sent out by the associated press. We excerpt therefrom the following:

PAPEETE, March 4, via San Francisco, California, March 16.—The latest intelligence relative to the hurricane in Tuamotu of the Pearl Island group, indicates that the fatalities will number six hundred. The loss of property will be five hundred thousand dollars. Relief measures have been instituted. The hurricane and high water lasted during January 14, 15, and 16.

On the night of January 15, when in the darkness and in a driving downpour of rain that stung their faces and naked bodies, the parents tied their little children to their backs and sought safety. Over their heads rolled the mighty wave, and when the surges retreated the infants and half-drowned boys and girls succumbed. The father and mother would vainly endeavor to retain the corpses of their dead, and at length had to abandon them. They tied themselves to cocoanut trees, and some at last fell with them; others escaped, clinging to trees temporarily and at other times were able to catch hold of something else, and so between the breakers reached safety after many hours of hardship.

About twenty natives, including a young girl, swam across the lagoon, and, after five or six hours battling with the waves, succeeded in landing safely on the leeward side of the island. Those who perished in their attempts, however, were far more numerous than those who succeeded.

Messrs. Sheffield and Allen, elders of the Mormon church, and Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert, of the Latter Day Saints' mission, in a report to the United States consul give greswome details of the disaster. The Gilberts lost one shelter when a cocoanut tree fell, but secured another in a high stump of a booran tree. The water, which had all but submerged them completely, now only reached their feet. The wind threatened to tear them from their position again and again, and so these Americans passed that awful night. In the morning the scene of horror that met their eyes on every side was harder to endure than the terrors of the night. Corpses frightfully mutilated were strewn about, and there were living beings with unsightly and most painful wounds. In some instances only one out of a family survived. Out on the surface of the deep the sharks were seen to devour many bodies, while in the lagoon bodies were floating upon the debris.

The story of fatality in Marokau, where ninety-five out of one hundred inhabitants perished, is likewise extremely sad, and so, also, with regard to the other islands where deaths occurred. It is likely that one fifth of the entire population of the Tuamotu group succumbed.

To aid the injured, a temporary hospital was constructed, and Doctor Brunati, acting administrator of the group, rendered medical aid. From the debris were secured tins containing foodstuffs, but naturally there was a scarcity of such as was not spoiled. To eat fish out of the sea or lagoon would doubtless have been suicidal, considering the danger from poison, as there were hundreds of corpses floating about in the water, upon which the fish were preying. From drinking brackish water the natives became afflicted with dysentery.

Of the sixty-six sailboats all but one or two had been totally destroyed, and these could not be sent to Tahiti, a distance of nearly four hundred miles. About one thousand survivors were in danger of starvation or perishing from thirst or disease. Shelterless, nude, weak, and discouraged, it is not to be wondered at that a few of the natives became looters of their neighbors' goods. However, on the whole, the order was commendable.

It is to the lasting credit of the Americans that the relief from thirst came in the form of condensed water. Mr. Gilbert secured the consent of Doctor Brunati to distill water. Two tanks and some frames of an iron bed for tubes and some tubes were erected. With this primitive machinery two hundred gallons of fresh water were distilled daily for several days.

The stench at Hikuera and the destruction of all the buildings and the lack of food rendered it a dangerous place for further residence. About nine days after the disaster as many of the people as could be taken were sent away on the steamer Excelsior to other islands of the group or to Tahiti. Others followed on the Durance and Zelee.

To relieve the natives, who have sustained losses aggregating five hundred thousand dollars in gold, the government has ordered a subscription to be taken in this colony, in which France is expected to join. With the money raised it is understood that diving-machines will be purchased and given to the destitute survivors. Machine-diving will be allowed during a year more on several islands which have been closed hitherto to machine operations.

Supplies amounting to twenty tons, sent from San Francisco and carried free by the steamship Mariposa, have been transferred to the French gunboat Zelee to be transported to the destitute natives.

The impression prevails here that it would have been better to send money to the natives instead of supplies. United States Consul Doty states that while he feels sure the government appreciates the kindness of those who contributed supplies, he thinks that unless money is sent for diving machines for the natives the subscriptions had better cease in the United States.

On March 20, we received the following letter from Bro. Burton. We had been watching for it anxiously:

PAPEETE, Tahiti, February 26.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote you, news has been received in Papeete of the destruction caused by the storm and high tides from places within a distance of nine hundred miles east and west, and six hundred miles north and south. Of course many conflicting stories are told; but by letters received from various islands, and from the government report we learn the following facts.

The storm and high tides swept over the whole extent of the Society Islands; being felt most severely in the Tuamotu Islands to the eastward of Tahiti, although it destroyed some few houses in Raiatea, which is to the westward of Tahiti. And on account of about thirteen hundred people having gathered from different islands to Hikuera, for the purpose of diving for the pearlshells, there were more persons perished there than on other islands.

The islands consist generally of a large number of motus, or small low islands surrounding a lagoon or lake, which may be from ten to thirty miles long and from five to fifteen miles wide—the lake being like a great saucer filled with water, with low islands at its rim—the villages being established on the highest or largest motus; thus at Hikuera, the people who lost their lives, with very few exceptions, were across the lagoon from the village of Hikuera, diving on that side of the lake, and living on some of the low motus there, the high tide completely submerging those low islands and sweeping the people over the reefs into the ocean or into the lake.

There are many pathetic stories told of the separation of parents and children, of friends and relatives, some saved, some swept away to their death, but all sad by reason of the suffering of those three days of tempest, and of the great deep heaving itself beyond its bounds.

On one of the islands across the lake from Hikuera, was Bro. Rua and his wife Togi, with their two children. When the sea began to cover the island the people gathered on the highest point, and about midnight the sea was waist deep there; then a rope was fastened to two cocoanut trees and nineteen grown persons and thirteen children were holding to it from midnight until just at day-dawn—the sea being up to their shoulders then—there came three heavy seas; the first one swept them off their feet, but they held fast to the rope; but the second one broke the rope and they were all swept away. Rua still held his two year-old babe, a girl, to his breast after it had passed; but their little eleven-year-old boy was swept away from their sight when the rope broke. When the third wave broke over them, rolling them over and over repeatedly, Rua was nearly drowned, and in the confusion lost his babe. Shortly afterwards he saw his child for a few seconds only. He started to swim to her when another breaker buried her from his sight for ever. He then swam to where his wife was, and joining hands they battled for their lives with the raging sea until about two o'clock in the afternoon, when the sea receded sufficiently for them to grasp a cocoanut-tree, and thus they were saved; but with hearts saddened for the loss of their children. She is nearly heart-broken; and as they live near us now, we frequently hear her repeat her tale of sorrow to listening neighbors.

Elder Piga, of Hao, lost six of the nine children which constituted his family; he and his wife left to mourn the loss of six children; sad surely.

Bro. Herman Janssen was also among the lost. He was a Swede, a most humble and conscientious man, an elder, ordained by Bro. T. W. Smith, I think. He was always an indefatigable helper to the white missionaries.

The number of persons who lost their lives during the violence of the storm is as follows on the following islands: Hikuera, 373; Marokau, 95; Takume, 15; Raroia, 12 (this is the island where Bro. A. H. Smith held his first conference in this mission); Amanu, 3; Hao, 5; and Napuka, 12. Thus five hundred fifteen persons perished if the three thousand or possibly four thousand which constituted the population of the Tuamotus according to the account of the government. There are about forty or fifty islands inhabited, of the Tuamotu group proper, or the archipelago of low islands, and the majority of our members reside upon twenty of them. Therefore the loss of five hundred fifteen residents takes quite a large proportion of their inhabitants; and sixty members from our membership of this mission, of perhaps one thousand or twelve hundred persons will cause mourning in every branch for the loss of relatives or friends. This year there were only a few of our church members in Hikuera from Makatea, Tikahau, Raroia, Arutua, Apataki, Manihi, Takapoto, Takarua, and Niau, consequently the proportion of our loss in membership is not so great as it otherwise would have been.

Besides the loss of life, there was much property destroyed, consisting of houses, traders' goods, boats worth from three hundred to seven hundred dollars each, bufa or dried cocoanut, canoes, etc., etc.

Every house in Hikuera was destroyed, including the traders' stores, their goods being swept into the sea or scattered about. Our new chapel was completely destroyed. It was built and dedicated in 1897 while Bro. and Sr. Case were here with us, and it was largely through their instrumentality that it was built, and they will feel sad to learn of its destruction. In Makatea twenty-three houses were destroyed, thus leaving but one or two houses there. Several small houses were destroyed in Tikahau, and one large boat. In Tiputa several houses were destroyed, and in the Catholic cemetery there many graves were uncovered by the fierce raging of the sea; so also in Arutua, Takarua, and Takapoto, and Fakarava, several houses were washed away. In Raroia most all the houses were demolished, and also the stone walls and ends of a chapel which was commenced in Bro. Devore's time, as was also the new tabernacle in which Bro. Alexander Smith worshiped while here. So also in Taenga, Makemo, Amanu, and Hao, many houses were destroyed; and the low island of Ravehere was swept clean of all its trees and even the sand, so that nothing but the bare coral rocks remain. Utterly desolate in the midst of the great deep.

And thus by tempest and the raging ocean are men made to feel the chastening hand of their Creator, until they shall know that there is a God who will not always suffer unrighteousness to reign on earth. And these things also cause the Saints to look towards Zion a city of refuge from the overflowing scourges of these latter days.

The governor of Hikuera when making his report to the governor of the colonies here, reported that "a condenser was made which furnished sufficient water for nine hundred people," not mentioning Bro. Gilbert's name in connection with it, although he refused to give him the necessary help when he sought it, saying "there is nothing here with which a condenser can be made," and not until after Bro. Gilbert had made a condenser with an oil-can and a few pieces of piping, and had condensed a bucket of water, some of which was taken to the governor, did he heed his request, and grant him permission to confiscate anything on the island that he needed for his condenser, after which Bro. Gilbert soon had the condenser in operation which furnished them six barrels of pure water the last day it was used, besides what was drank during the day. But being an American it would not do to give him any public recognition. Neither must it be supposed that Bro. Gilbert is seeking such. The Honorable C. Goupil, the president of the colonial legislative council, has published the facts in his paper, giving Bro. Gilbert the credit due him for his skill and perseverance in supplying the thirsty people with water in their extremity.

I have written a statement of the facts to the American consul, with an account also of the unkind usage they received on the Excelsior on the passage from Hikueru here, when they were forced to stay on deck with scanty food, although they offered money for the privilege of going below, or of having nourishing food, which was granted to all French people who wished them. Sr. Gilbert was weak and nervous of course from the terrible experience of the three days of tempest and raging sea, and the sight of the dead bodies on the seashore or by the lakeside, and the piles of debris of houses, trees, and goods of all kinds; and Bro. Gilbert with a company of men gathering the dead and burying them, and working day and night nearly; Sr. Gilbert carrying such food to him as she could obtain, that he might continue his work with the condenser and supply drink to the thirsty multitude who were spared from the storm; and then to be so ill-used seemed at least ungrateful; but here in the estimation of some an American is as an outcast.

There are two vessels missing; the government gasoline-engine schooner Perle, and the trading schooner Leon. The French man-of-war Durance has been several days searching for them. She returned to-day and reports having gone so far as the Gambier Islands, and stopped at many islands on the way, but neither saw nor heard aught of them.

The American consul informed us, that doubtless when a more full account is received of the number of persons who perished during the storm, it will reach fully six hundred, or one fifth of the population of the Tuamotus; and he states that this is also the opinion of the government officials, as they have the names of the five hundred fifteen reported, and doubtless some were drowned who are not yet reported, and there are several islands yet to be heard from.

The following is a list of the islands to which the people belonged, who were in Hikueru, and are now missing. It will be observed that there are four more in this account of the missing, than in the account of names given to the Governor.

Those of Hao, 262; Amanu, 17; Takapoto, 16; Marokau, 22; Makemo, 14; Kaukura, 12; Raroia, 9; Hikueru 9; Tahitians and Europeans, 8; Takaroa, 4; Katiu, 3; Taenga, 1.

Bro. and Sr. Gilbert are with us now and are well, as is also Emma. None of the brethren are suffering for the want of food, but will miss their boats, for they were as the highways by which they visited their relatives, or traveled from village to village.

May the blessing of God rest upon us all, and peace be upon Israel.

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. BURTON.

PRIZES FOR IOWA RESIDENTS.

We have received the following from Thomas H. Macbride, of Iowa City, Iowa, who is president of the Iowa Park and Forestry Association:

By the generosity of friends the Iowa Park and Forestry Association is happy to make the following announcement of prizes offered to residents of Iowa who may be interested in the work which it is the purpose of the organization to promote:

1. The Robert Douglas prize, twenty-five dollars, to be paid to the person presenting the best account of the native forest trees of the State, their present distribution and condition.

2. A not-yet-named prize of twenty-five dollars, to be paid for the best essay on "Trees for Iowa farms."

3. A similar prize of twenty-five dollars to be paid for the best paper on the subject, "The ornamentation of school-grounds, both in city and country."

4. A prize of two years' membership in the Iowa Park and Forestry Association to each high school in Iowa, to be awarded to the member of the senior class presenting at commencement the best essay on the theme, "What can we do to make more beautiful our own town?"

These prizes will all be awarded at the next session of the Association in December. Instead of single prizes of twenty-five dollars each in the first three cases, first and second prizes may be given of fifteen dollars and ten dollars, respectively. The prizes may be paid in cash or in trees ready for planting.

Papers must be submitted to the secretary of the Association prior to November 30, 1903.

For further particulars address Thomas H. Macbride, President Iowa Park and Forestry Association, Iowa city, Iowa; L. H. Pammel, Secretary, Ames, Iowa.

We are indeed glad to see this movement, and would be much pleased to see some of the readers of the HERALD capture some of the prizes; not so much because of the prizes themselves, but because of the interest in trees and forestry they will acquire in the competition. There is no greater friend to man than the tree, and we doubt if there is in Iowa a better friend to the tree than Thomas H. Macbride. We certainly wish success for him and his associates in the Iowa Park and Forestry Association.

EXTRACTS FROM AN OLD CHAPTER IN AN OLD BOOK.

"Here then, is the law, and the only law by which Zion and its stakes can be built up. The 'standing law' for the priesthood, as well as the people, 'for ever.'"

First. The Saints are to be tithed of their surplus.

Second. Those who have paid their surplus are to pay one tenth of their "interest, [which is their gains] annually."

Third. The tithing and consecrations are to be used for the relief of the poor, "for their support," also for the building of the temple, laying the foundation of Zion, for the priesthood, etc.

Fourth. The tithings and consecrations should be laid before the Bishop and his counselors; and, therefore, not be put into the hands of the President of the church.

Fifth. Those who gather to Zion or her stakes, and will not obey this law, "shall not be found worthy to abide among you."

Sixth. Every man is accountable to God, "a steward over his own property," whether he gained that property by his own labors, or received it by gift (consecration) from the Bishop.

"The fact is this, a man is bound by the law of the church, to consecrate to the Bishop, before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this, he can not be acknowledged before the Lord, on the Church Book; therefore to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge how much he should receive, [back, after he has consecrated his property,] and how much he should suffer to remain [of his property] in the hands of the Bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and families, [the individual consecrated all his property, giving an inventory to the Bishop, and then took back what he needed, and this he did by right, though with the consent of the Bishop; and this was the manner of receiving inheritance by consecration.] The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties; for to give the Bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be obliged to comply with the Bishop's judgment, is giving the Bishop more power than a king has; and upon the other hand, to let every man say how much he needs, and the Bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the Bishop. The fact is, there must be a balance, or equilibrium of power between the Bishop and the people; and thus harmony and good will will be preserved among you."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

W. J. Murray, Camden, Stephens County, Washington, desires that an elder call on him and family. He thinks much good could be done there. He lives two miles from Camden.

"A Practical Corn Manual" is the title of a pamphlet sent us by the Iowa Seed Company, of Des Moines, Iowa. According to their statement, strange as it may seem, there have been only two books published in the United States on corn-growing. Attention is also called to the fact that there is no plant more susceptible to change by the hand of man than is corn, and hence farmers and corn-growers can very profitably spend time in studying the corn plant.

By a clipping from the Evening Bulletin, Philadelphia, for March 7, sent us by Bro. W. E. La Rue, we note that the women of Philadelphia are agitating an anti-polygamy crusade, to work up a public sentiment favoring a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy.

We have received a copy of a pamphlet issued by the Chicago American, in which are reprinted several editorials on timely topics, some illustrated by Mr. Davenport's cartoons. Some of Davenport's cartoons on intemperance are veritable lectures in themselves. The American's work in the interests of temperance is commendable.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Through life's dark shadows your path may be leading,
Torn by life's conflicts your heart may be bleeding,
But ever a voice that is tenderly pleading,
Calls unto you:

"Some day the pathway of care may be brighter;
Some day the heart's load you bear may be lighter;
Some day the robe that you wear will be whiter,
If you are true."

The Young Girl in the Home.

It makes no little difference to the girl of fifteen whether or not she is the oldest daughter, or occupies the place in the middle of the household where she touches hands with the young people who are grown up and with the little ones below her, or again, is the baby of the group. In the last position, that of the youngest daughter in a household of several children, she is considered and treated as a mere child, and petted as such, when, in the reverse situation, many duties would fall to her lot and she would be regarded as almost a woman. The middle daughter has certain advantages and certain handicaps which neither the oldest nor the youngest girl in the family may possess or disclaim. Unless her people are very well-to-do she must contentedly wear the left-over garments of her sisters while Phyllis at twenty and Dorothy at eighteen are busy in taking their college courses. She is only Jeanie, who helps her mother at odd seasons with the housekeeping, mends her father's gloves, plays basket-ball and tennis with her brothers, and relieves the nurse of the care of the wee ones on the nurse's afternoon out. Only Jeanie, with her hair still worn in two braids and tied with a ribbon at the ends, her bright eyes, her long limbs yet pushing their way to her future height, her angularities, her eager, impulsive disposition, and her frank liking for sports and sweets. She is fifteen and the middle girl, a sort of clasp of the family.

But Phyllis and Dorothy in their respective turns were fifteen, too, and as the elder daughter and second daughter have had their share in the mother's intimacy and their novitiate as they slipped out of childhood's land of dream and phantasy into the realm of the practical, which is woman's kingdom. An elder daughter and sister at fifteen, or an only child at fifteen, has her peculiar and individual questions to settle, and her environment is a matter of no slight importance. What she is now forecasts what she may be; what, indeed, she will be twenty years hence, when life with its broad opportunities and its insistent obligations have made her its own.

She stands to-day where the little limpid brook with its narrow, silvery thread and flower-bordered banks meets the brimming, full-bosomed river, and it is impossible not to love her, not to be wistful for her, not to pray for her, if one has in her own heart the memory of the sweet days she lived when she was herself fifteen and a daughter of some happy home.

Winsome and clever, or thoughtful and brooding, merry or quiet, according to her temperament, the girl of fifteen is in some phases a problem to her mother and in many ways a puzzle to herself. She is no longer a child to play freely with her mates in the games which delighted her at ten, and she is not yet a young woman, though she may have womanly tastes and aspirations. On certain subjects as for instance her dress, her amusements, her studies, she has very decided views and she is daily gaining in breadth and independence, though still under her mother's wing and accustomed to refer all questions at issue to her for settlement as the final authority. Just now she needs more than ever the mother's loving guardianship and the wise mother keeps her daughter very close to her side in confidential affection, in daily intercourse, in the purest and most intimate association. For the little woman is passing through a transitional period in her development and she can nowhere else be as safe and as sheltered, as in the sweet seclusion of the home. Should the mother decide to send her away to school, then the choice should be a matter of careful thought and personal investigation, the atmosphere of the institution, the character of the teachers, and the social plane of the pupils, being all passed under review. The associations formed in school may be of life-long tenure and it is well that a young girl's friendships be made among those who are the product of refined and Christian homes.

At fifteen a young girl is full of enthusiasm. She adores her favorite teacher; she worships the classmate who seems to her ideally beautiful and faultless, she makes any sacrifice for her chum, and, chameleon-like, unless she be of very strongly marked individuality, she takes on the color, absorbs the manner and reflects the opinions of her companions.

She expresses herself in superlatives and exaggerates both likes and dislikes. It is far more important that a girl at this formative stage of her being shall be thrown with high-minded and gracious-mannered persons, than that she will be thoroughly drilled in Latin and mathematics, though this too is a worth while thing.

She resents the curb and must be taught by example rather than by dictation. Her physical life is subject to well known alternations and perils, and if she is to become physically a strong, well-poised woman, with firm health and serene vigor, she must now have the good food, the sound, abundant sleep, and the wholesome outdoor exercise which build up the body, and make it the fit instrument of a noble mind.

Looking forward is the natural employment of this child-woman, who is not as yet sure of herself nor aware of her own powers. If she desire the finest intellectual discipline available to-day, she may be prepared for college at home or in a good preparatory school, but she should not enter college itself until she is at least eighteen years old. No harm will be done her, but on the contrary a great and very positive good, if she drop all study of books for a year or more, at this stage of her progress, and learn some lessons in practical housewifery, in the best school of domestic economy in the whole world, a mother's own kitchen and drawing room.

Trust.

O love divine, that stooped to share
Our sharpest pang, our bitterest tear;
On Thee we cast each earth-born care;
We smile at pain, while Thou art near.

Though long the weary way we tread,
And sorrow crown each lingering year,
No path we shun, no darkness dread,
Our hearts still whispering, Thou art near.

When drooping pleasure turns to grief,
And trembling faith is changed to fear,
The murmuring wind, the quivering leaf,
Shall softly tell us Thou art near.

On Thee we fling our burdening woe,
O love divine, for ever dear;
Content to suffer while we know,
Living or dying, Thou art near!

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Patience.

One of the sweetest virtues that adorns the Christian's life is patience. It is not so easily cultivated in view of the weakness of human nature. The human body is a great network of nerves. They can easily be unstrung. When thus affected impatience becomes natural. It is a wonderful triumph of will power and divine grace when, under such circumstances, patience, like some wonderful flower, reveals its beauty and loads the air with its rich fragrance. It is the design of the gospel of Jesus Christ to make men patient. To quiet the waves of unrest that may arise within the heart. To hush the passions that may be aroused by the provocations and temptations of life. When the storm rages without to witness the exhibition of quietness and patience is most charming. Such a spirit has great value. The patient souls can not be too highly praised. They deserve a place of prominence in the galaxy of the world's heroes. No virtue can outshine the virtue of patience. We are exhorted in the word of God "to let patience have her perfect work." It is to be cultivated. It is a rare flower in the wilderness of briers. What an aroma goes out from such an example of patience as is furnished in the life of our Lord Jesus Christ!

It is in the home where this virtue is put to a severe test and also manifests itself in the most remarkable way. Our mothers, how patient they were! Like a flood-tide our memories are filled with the hundred and one instances when the calmness of their actions and the sweetness of their dispositions left an indelible impression on our minds of the true nobility of their lives. The grace of God should sweep out of hearts everything that is ugly. It will do it if we only let it have the right of way. While we can not be angels, we "are called to be saints," and saints should be saintly in disposition and life. Reader, try and overcome by the aid of divine grace the impatience that has long disturbed your peace and left an unfavorable impression on those about you. The world expects better things of us. They place a high estimate on the religious life. We should not disappoint the reasonable expectations of those who are strangers to the heavenly influence that has come into our hearts and lives. But on the other hand, our manifestation of those qualities that are inseparable from godly living should be both clear and convincing.—Selected.

Graded Text-Books for Sunday-Schools.

The petition that introduced the above question to our last General Convention gave three reasons therefor: convenience of form; a more perfect system of gradation; cost.

CONVENIENCE.

Wherein our lesson helps could be made more convenient in form we are at a loss to know. Certainly a pamphlet is more convenient to carry and handle than a large book. The only suggestion we have ever heard upon the mechanical work of the Quarterly was to cut it into still smaller forms. That is, to make it into leaflets containing not more than one or two lessons; this on account of so many in the city schools that come only for a Sunday or two. They are given a Quarterly, and after a Sunday or two drop out and the unexpired part of the Quarterly which the child had is lost to the school. It would seem the convenience would weigh the other way.

COST.

Another object was to lessen the cost of helps to the school. Let us figure for a moment. The Senior Quarterly contains about fifty pages per quarter. The pages are about one and one fourth times as large as the pages of the Church History. Thus it would require about sixty-three Church History pages to be equal to one issue of Senior Quarterly, or two hundred fifty-two for one year. It is not probable that less than a three-year course would be issued, and if so the text-book would contain about seven hundred fifty-six pages, or about the size of the second volume of Church History. The lowest priced binding of the Church History at one dollar fifty cents, the cost of a three-year course in senior grade text-book. The Senior Quarterly for the same time would cost sixty cents. But you say, you would have the book left to use again. Possibly you would, but probably not. Our experience with the question books and compendiums was that we had to replace about one third of them every year. Larger books would go sooner. The cost of the book would pay for the Quarterly for seven and one half years. And it would be miraculous if your book lasted that long used every week and carried to the church fifty-two times a year. And when you allow for the lost, strayed, or mislaid ones, you will find a balance in favor of the Quarterly.

But a more serious phase of the question that all this is the fact that so many schools could not possibly start for want of funds to buy the books. You would be surprised to know how many schools the General Association has furnished free Quarterlies to get them started and till they got able to pay their way. The average school of forty would need thirty books to start with and that would be a short supply. Think of that school having to raise from thirty to fifty dollars to start with. Impossible. Not one school in ten could do it. If so, how? We do not favor letting money matters stand in the way of progress; but when the lack of money renders movement impossible, we are obliged to recognize the power of money, or, in this case, the lack of it, whether we like to or not. The lack of funds is a great hindrance to many schools. There are many places that are not yet organized simply because they can not raise two or three dollars for a supply of Quarterlies. And any movement that would make this condition any worse would be a serious mistake. And the text-book would certainly be one thing that would make it worse. Think about this. Could your school raise the money to purchase your first supply of books? Half of the schools of the Association can not get money enough ahead to pay for a year of the Quarterly in advance, to say nothing of seven and one half times the amount. This would seem another reason that would weigh the wrong way.

GRADATION.

One of the strongest arguments in favor of a graded text-book that will be offered at the forthcoming convention is that it will render the grading of a Sunday-school possible. I wish I could think it would. I would hail with delight that which would render grading in the Sunday-school on a proper basis possible. But that will never be. The very nature of the work and the conditions under which we work are against us. I do not hesitate to go on record as saying that in nine tenths of the Sunday-schools of our times it simply can not be done. I am aware that this is only an individual opinion, but it is shared with a majority of the Sunday-school workers of to-day both in and out of the church. But why can it not be done? The and the grading is generally on a proper basis and thoroughly done. Then why not the Sunday-school? The principles of teaching are the same in one as in the other. A successful teacher in one is very liable to be a successful teacher in the other. We give several reasons why.

CONDITIONS ARE DIFFERENT.

The basis of gradation in the public school is knowledge. It does not matter what the age or size of the pupil is he goes into the class of equal knowledge. In the Sunday-school this can not always be done. You will have a six-year-old, a twelve-year-old, a youth, a middle-aged, and a man of three score years and ten and all are exactly on a par because none of them know anything about the gospel. Put them together? No, it is simply impossible to have a class so varied in ages. Then you must have a beginning class for each age. This will make five beginning classes. And to carry out this plan of grading, you must have an advanced primary of each age, five more. You will need two classes of each age in the intermediate, two in the senior. This will make you thirty classes in all. In a few weeks some more pupils will come in who never attended Sunday-school before. They must begin at the beginning, wherever that is. This will give you some more classes. In a few more weeks the same is repeated. How many classes will you then have? Solve the problem. We carry the illustration thus far to show the extreme impossibility of starting everybody at the beginning. Where would you get your teachers for all the necessary classes? It is hard to get enough as it is.

THERE IS NO BASIS OF GRADATION IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

1. You can not grade by knowledge because that would either throw persons of all ages together or make so many classes that we could not provide for them.
2. You can not grade by size, for a ten-year-old may be larger than its fifteen-year-old brother or sister. We have seen thirteen-year-olds larger than their mother.
3. You can not grade by age, for the child may be farther advanced than the old grey head. No, you can not grade at all, in the true sense of the word, in the Sunday-school. You can come nearer grouping according to age and size than you can according to knowledge. But at best it is only in a very general way graded, if, indeed, you can call it graded at all. I have seen many so-called graded Sunday-schools but have never seen one graded in an extent that would approach the public school.

PUBLIC SCHOOL—SUNDAY SCHOOL.

In the public school you have five hours per day five days in the week. In the Sunday-school you have one half hour one day in the week.

In the public school we can compel scholars to go and stay where they are put. In the Sunday-school this power of compulsion is almost if not entirely wanting. The person will go where it suits him or he will stay away.

The public school has paid and trained teachers. The Sunday-school teachers are volunteers and largely untrained.

The subjects taught in the public school are popular with the masses, that of the Sunday-school is not.

With these thoughts in view, it seems that the impracticability of grading the Sunday-school to the extent that the grading would be of service in teaching and promotion, is very apparent.

TECHNICAL GRADING NOT NECESSARY IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Educators recognize this fact, that in the "thought studies" such as mathematics, grammar, etc., technical grading is necessary, while in the "memory studies," such as history, geography, etc., "no such technical grading is necessary." The studies of mathematics and language require that we study elementary principles, for upon them depend that which follows. But in the study of geography or history one part does not much depend upon the other. What matter if I study the geography of Germany or England first? What matter if I study about the French revolution or the American revolution first? What does it matter whether I first learn the lesson of faith from the fact of good Elisha praying for rain or from the woman who touched the hem of the Savior's garment? There is no choice in either case. And the whole of the Scriptures is a volume of history and geography, etc., and the technical grading necessary to make the teaching of mathematics successful is not necessary for the subject matter to be taught in the Sunday-school.

EFFECT ON TEACHERS' MEETINGS.

It has been urged that the adoption of text-books will improve the teachers' meeting, and the reason given therefor is that more time can be used for the study of methods and less to the study of the lesson. How it would be any harder to devote the time to the study of methods now than when the text-book was in use is not clear to me, unless it be that it is hard to get people to desert a better thing,—and of more benefit to the average teacher, and that is a united canvass of the lesson. This would be the condition in three fourths of the meetings. There would be five teachers of five grades having five different lessons. They have nothing in common. A senior teacher can not advise a primary teacher, or vice versa. We meet to study methods, but one is interested in the kindergarten work and another in the juvenile or senior. And it is hard to get persons sufficiently devoted to the work that they will make any preparation not necessary for their individual work. They try the work in theory for a few weeks and a rain storm, or a little sickness, or tiredness serves as an excuse for not attending what they have no interest in. I wish there could be more method study, more enthusiastic meetings, for we need them badly, but that taking out what seems to be the only incentive to the large majority to attend teachers meeting,—to get a unity of thought and understanding, and the benefit of others knowledge and study—will improve the matter, is hard for me to think. What should be or what we would like to see is one thing and what is or can be is another thing. We must look upon the practical side of all these matters.

THE MISSION OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The mission of the Sunday-school is not trial now unless it be shown that the true mission can not be filled under the Quarterly plan and that it can be filled under the text-book plan. The question of what we are teaching has nothing to do with the question before us. The point at issue is which is the better plan to adopt for our Sunday-schools, the Quarterly or the text-book? I do not see how that a certain subject could be handled in one and not in the other. It is a question of method and not of matter. If you wish to teach how the church is organized now and that the ancient church was organized after the same pattern, you can do so as well in the Quarterly as in the text-book. The only difference being that in the one case all would study it the same day and in the other it would be studied by somebody every Sunday. A difference in the means and not the end.

THE FINANCIAL SIDE.

We have referred to the cost of the text-book. Figure it out and satisfy yourself. But we wish now to call your attention to a question of far more import than that. Some of you may not be aware that the publication of the Quarterly has sustained the General Sunday-school Association for more than ten years, has paid into the church treasury fourteen hundred dollars in cash. Now if you think it wise, destroy our sole source of revenue. "Kill the goose that laid the golden eggs." I may look at the "almighty dollar" too longingly; but when in three cases out of four that I meet to organize new districts the question, "How much does it cost" is asked; and when after explaining that it is not probable that they would be called upon for years to come if ever, that they openly doubt your judgment on the matter; yes, when I meet these things, as I do often, I am very strongly persuaded that if we were in a condition financially to necessitate calling upon the districts for support, we would soon lose a portion of our membership, beside we would get few or no new districts into line. Many of the districts are scarcely able to run their own affairs, much less to help support the General Association. If you discontinue the Quarterly, you cut off our sole source of revenue except charity.

It has been suggested that a small margin on each book sold would furnish revenue. It is a well-understood fact that we as a people are unable to put out books and sell them at what seems to us as a reasonable price. We compare them with the books of the world and they are much more costly. Add to this a margin, though small, and see where the price will be. But the greatest difficulty of all is, we have never been permitted to put out a book for ourselves. We sought at one time to put out a Sunday-school secretary's record and class-books, and after purchasing the plates therefor, were not permitted to issue the book. We have since furnished the plates and the office has issued the book and received the margin if there is any.

And while this is only a dollar and cent phase of the matter, we must not forget that it takes dollars and cents to keep the Lord's work moving. Let us think carefully before we act.

IN CONCLUSION.

We would say that we have not treated on all the subjects, or on any of them as we would like, but two things prevent,—lack of space and other more important duties. But we have tried in a very terse and brief way to suggest a few thoughts. And as it is but a few short days now till we shall have this under discussion, let every one interested in the success of the Sunday-school give it a very careful thought. Picture in your minds the conditions as they would be and as they are. Think:

1. How the Association would go about to get up a text-book that was nearly enough correct in doctrine to be made permanent, when many of the leading minds do not agree on many points.
2. Who would finance the first edition of fifteen thousand books necessary to start with?
3. How your school will raise the money to get its first set of books.
4. How you will get a teacher for each new class that comes in during the year if all must "begin at the beginning."
5. What will become of your general review.
6. How you will like the same old lessons for year in and year out.
7. You can have a surprise party for every missionary and visitor that ever comes to see you. He will not know where any of the lessons are.
8. What basis of grading can I use for my school?
9. And after all, what have we gained?

Christ, the greatest teacher of mankind, used no system in his teaching. He taught one subject here and there another. He taught just what seemed necessary and desirable at the particular time. Why did he not have a "beginning point" and an "ending point"? He could have had. But the very nature of what he had to teach did not demand it. It did not matter which lesson came first. All had to be learned and none were dependent upon the other. I know that many pedagogues will simply hiss at this thought, but "though it be madness, there is method in it." The thought is not original with me. I have heard it before. And while I am willing to concede that so far as the historical part of the lesson is concerned there is at times something lost by not having the lessons in consecutive order. I am not ready to concede that so far as the central truth of the lesson is concerned, that one is in the least dependent upon the other. The history and geography may help to fix the truth upon the mind, or may help to make it clearer, but it does not add one thing to its strength. Christ taught miscellaneous lessons and did well. Why should we borrow trouble over an alleged lack of system?

No, it is not best to "let well enough alone when we can do better." But that this move is or would be doing better, is the serious question. Certain it is that we have prospered almost miraculously as an association. There is some reason for this. What is it? In my opinion the one important reason or condition is the very one which we will destroy as soon as the Quarterly system as at present is changed, and that is the uniformity of lesson study. And the very day that we take a step that will tend to destroy our uniform lessons, just that day we have taken a step backward. I am strongly persuaded that of all the human agencies or plans that have borne success to this great work; of all the silent influences that have wrought upon us a people and have buoyed us up and on to more and better work; of all the unseen powers that have drawn us toward that "oneness" to which we must all eventually come, the "unity" and "oneness" of thought and study brought about by the uniform lesson has done the most. Let us think seriously ere we contemplate a change that will remove us from the very system that has carried us almost to the zenith of success. Will you do it? Would it be wise? Wherein we lack wisdom, may the good Lord supply.

Yours for the good of the work,

T. A. HOUGAS.

ABERAMAN, Wales, January 12.

Dear Editor: Revelations 14: 6, 7. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

Dear Saints, we are told through inspired writers in Holy Writ that the true gospel should diminish from the face of the earth, as in Isaiah 24: 1-6 the Lord says that he would make the earth empty because of the people and their iniquity. Isaiah 29: 9-10 the Lord says that he would pour out upon the people a spirit of deep sleep, and closed the eyes of the prophets, that is his spiritual eyes, and also the seers. As in Amos 8: 11, 12, God says that the days would come when there should be a great famine, not for bread, nor water, but for the word of the Lord, and that people should travel from sea to sea and north to the east in search of the word of God, but they shall not find it, and we are told according to history, that the Saints of old were persecuted under Nero, the cruel emperor, and many other cruel persecutors; thus fulfilling the work of the Lord. When the Saints were destroyed there was no one to present the gospel; thus making the prediction of the prophets literally fulfilled. We are told that under Domitian from 81-96 A. D. It was during this persecution that John the Revelator was banished to Patmos, and when Nerva became emperor, he was released. John, whilst on the Isle of Patmos, wrote the book of Revelation, that is, he had a foresight of things to come. According to the words of our text, he saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven, and in Revelation 1: 1, we are told that an angel signified to John, things that should shortly come to pass. Therefore, we can see the necessity of a restoration of the gospel, because we are told according to Holy Writ, that the gospel should be taken from the earth, and it should be restored by means of an angel.

God predicted through his ancient prophets that the gospel should be taken away from the earth. Thus it was necessary for another angel to bring it back to earth again. God is a spiritual Being. Therefore it needs a spiritual messenger to bring back that which he had taken away. We all agree that spiritual messengers are angels. Therefore we can see the necessity for an angel to bring back that which was taken away. Jacob (Genesis 28: 10-12) dreamed he saw angels ascending and descending upon a ladder between earth and heaven. What a glorious sight it must have been! Even earlier than the days of Jacob, Genesis 16: 7-11, an angel appeared to Hagar and conversed with her. We are told also in Genesis 19: 1 that Lot saw two angels in Sodom. In Genesis 22: 11, 12 we are told that an angel conversed with Abraham whilst offering Isaac. We are told also that Jacob met the angels of God and when he saw them he said, this is God's Host. (Genesis 32: 1.) We are told also in the same chapter of Jacob's encounter with an angel.

We have many more illustrations where angels visited mortal man. Peter was visited in prison. (Acts 12: 7, 8.) And why not an angel to restore this gospel of Jesus Christ? Well the point or question arises now as to whom the angel appeared with the restored gospel in this last dispensation. We are told that God is unchangeable and that he admitted angels to administer or to appear with good news to man in days gone by; and why not to-day? God is unchangeable and therefore by this means there is a possibility of angels conversing with man in latter days. We as Latter Day Saints claim that an angel appeared with the restored gospel in this last dispensation to mortal man, and it is only in harmony with God's plan in all ages. The reformers were good men, but never claimed to restore any gospel; if they did, it would not be in harmony with the word of God as stated in Zechariah 2: 1-4. In the vision which Zechariah had, he saw an angel going to meet the angel with whom he had been conversing, saying, "Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls, for the multitude of men and cattle therein." Therefore, we can see at a glance that it was a young man that was to restore the gospel by means of an angel instructing him. Joseph Smith, Jr., was the young man who claimed to restore the true gospel, as no one else made such a statement. He was between fourteen and fifteen years of age, thus being in harmony with the words of the prophet Zechariah. The only way in coming to know these things, is to be obedient to the plan of redemption, and being prayerful; and God has promised all who will obey, a knowledge of the truth.

We are going onward with the work of God at Aberaman, although through great difficulties. Bro. John Davies, missionary, visited us here a few weeks ago, and he is quite a noble preacher. He has enlightened us greatly on different topics of the gospel. Thank God for such noble men.

HOWELL JONES.

CHELSEA, Michigan. March 11.

Editors Herald: I am trying to arouse an interest here in this restored gospel. The people seem to be very earnest and sincere, and some have expressed themselves as being dissatisfied with the spiritual food they are receiving. I have distributed a great deal of church literature. I came here about ten months ago, a total stranger, but have been able by God's assisting grace to win the confidence of the people, even the Baptist pastor. I shall endeavor to live faithfully so the way may be opened for the preaching of the gospel. I am feeling well in this latter-day work, and wish to endure to the end.

E. A. MEHLISCH.

CAMDEN, Illinois, March 6.

Dear Herald: While thinking of this grand work this morning I thought I would tell of the late experience I had since I wrote on January 26. After I was closed out of the Sodom Schoolhouse I held a few meetings at Sr. Nancy Avery's and Bro. William Curry's, putting in the time as best we could until we got the opportunity of making a further trial at the little town of Irwin, and there we were refused the schoolhouse upon the claim that I was a Mormon. This raised some excitement, and then certain parties from the outside neighborhood began to circulate lies and to accuse and persecute me in many ways. Amid this persecution Bro. Charles Morrel opened up his dwelling and there I held thirteen meetings to a congregation of from forty-five to fifty-eight. Three more were baptized, which caused further threats to stone the house and to mob me out of town. Twice the news came to me that some thought they ought to run me out of town, because of the kind of stuff I was preaching. I paid but little attention to such, thinking it only a scare. Several others wanted to be baptized, but could not under conditions surrounding them.

The threats that were made and the persecution only made us more friends. I am informed that some of my friends are going to place the matter of closing or opening the schoolrooms before the patrons at the spring election, and if they succeed in opening them it will give us a better opportunity in the future.

In the midst of the persecution there were some wonderful manifestations of power in administering to the sick.

Bro. Moses Vail, one of the men I baptized recently, had rented a farm here within two miles of Camden, and moved here some eight miles to the northwest. He is the principal cause of my being in this vicinity. He brought me here the 3d, and by the willingness upon the part of the directors we are having meetings nightly to a good attentive congregation, and though the last three days have been foggy, rainy, and muddy, yet the people come just the same, and a more sociable people I have not found for some time. They have not heard very much of us in this section as none of our elders have been in this part. I have the promise of the house as long as I want to stay.

I hope to move onward in the work. On leaving here expect to go by way of New Canton, Taylorville, en route for St. Louis and Independence. Still feel to labor for the cause I love.

T. J. BELL.

LOS ANGELES, California, March 12.

Editors Herald: In the last six months I have been privileged to thoroughly canvass the entire district, and can safely say the work was never in a better condition. I know of no trouble in any of the branches. The branch officials, as a rule, are alive and active, and the prospects are surely bright for the future.

I labored with the San Bernardino Branch early in February and returned there on the 13th. Having secured the use of the Dunkard hall at Colton, we commenced meetings Friday evening. The weather was extremely cold for California, the mercury running down as low as nineteen degrees above zero; the mountains a few miles to the north were covered with snow and a terrific northwest wind was blowing, bringing forcibly to mind the cold "nor'wester" of Iowa and Missouri. Interest at the meetings was only fair. On Sunday I preached morning and evening at San Bernardino and in the forenoon addressed a full house at Colton; a car-load of Saints from San Bernardino among the number.

We succeeded at this meeting in organizing a Sunday-school, late accounts of which are very flattering. Sr. Addie Matthews, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Burton, is superintendent. We hope to effect a permanent opening at this place.

The Brethren or Dunkards are quite in evidence here. Forming their conclusions from the biased reports in the Gospel Messenger relative to the Hunt-Shamberger encounter, they seem brave. From the way they talked I think them aggressive enough to provoke a repetition of that affair in California. Shamberger is here and intends to permanently locate in this land of sunshine. I sent him a circular letter and tract recently. I mail, to-day, over one hundred tracts and circular letters to the ministers of Southern California, and this practically completes the ministerial list for this part of the State. I expect to reach the other professional men later. The "Mormon boys" are squirming under our fire and, as heretofore, are resorting to misrepresentation. I visited Eltero and Santa Ana.

The recent Religio and Sunday-school conventions and district conference held in Los Angeles were, in point of numbers, by far the largest and best we have held. Large delegations were present from the other branches. The Los Angeles Saints were equal to the emergency and all were provided for. The Spirit of God was markedly manifest and words of cheer and comfort were given the ministry and the Saints. Bro. J. C. Foss was associated with me in the presidency of the conference, preaching on Sunday morning and leaving with his family for his home in Independence on Tuesday, March 3.

Realizing the lack of opportunity on the part of our Sunday-school workers to be in touch with the General Association, I took advantage of the presence of Sr. Blanche Andrews and enlisted her services. As a result I believe much better service will be rendered.

Bro. and Sr. B. F. Durfee of Tillimuck, Oregon, Bro. and Sr. D. Hougas of Henderson, Iowa, Bro. William Leeka, wife and daughter Sadie, of Thurman, Bro. and Sr. Lee of Independence, Bro. Clapp, of Lamoni, and Sr. M. H. Forscutt, of Nebraska City, were in attendance.

Provisions were made for conducting tent services the coming summer; fifteen delegates were selected to represent the district in General Conference, and provisions made for defraying the expenses of the district president. A collection of thirty-three dollars was taken up Sunday morning.

I truly appreciate this evidence of liberality and confidence. Personally, I am loath to spend so much money in travel, but hope to secure enough benefit from the conference that my future service may compensate, in a measure, for the outlay. Should the Holy Spirit designate my removal to another field of church service then I trust that others may receive the benefit.

I have found helpful and loyal people in California. The Saints have rallied to our support. In taking a retrospective view I note many changes. Five years ago the Saints in Los Angeles met in a poor hall, over a livery stable, in an undesirable part of the city; now they have a large, commodious church costing over three thousand dollars. The present indebtedness is only about eight hundred dollars and the prospects are good for wiping this out before fall.

They now have a good choir under the able management of Bro. R. T. Cooper. This branch needs more local help. I must not speak disparagingly of the workers they have, yet most of them are so tied up in business that they can give but little time to church work. All members should be visited by the branch priest once in three months; the teacher should visit all who absent themselves from the church or fail to partake of the sacrament. When this is not done coolness and death follows.

Bro. Foss has labored considerably during the year in the Garden Grove Branch, helping the local workers there in the absence of Bro. Carmichael. Bro. A. E. Jones, of San Bernardino, has the forces there well in hand and is doing a good work. This is one of the oldest branches in the State and the records are burdened with a number of "lost," "strayed," or "missing."

The Santa Maria Branch was disorganized at the conference. We hope to organize these Saints with a center at Arroyo Grande.

In looking over the Bishop's agent's report I note that the gross receipts last year was thirty-nine hundred thirteen dollars ninety-six cents. Quite a showing for our district.

Expect to leave for Phoenix, Wednesday, after that to Bisbee, then East.

I never felt better in the work in my life. Have been specially blessed of late. May we all be prepared for that which God has in store for us, is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
T. W. WILLIAMS.

2802 South Grand Avenue.

LLANELLY, Wales, February 27.

Editors Herald: At our recent conference we had a good series of meetings, with much interest. We are looking forward to the time, not far distant we hope, when our esteemed and beloved president will visit this shore. We hope we shall not be disappointed, for we truly thank God for a prophet. Brn. William Lewis and F. J. Pierce have labored here for the past twenty-four weeks, and thousands of tracts have been distributed; but so far we have not added to our numbers by baptism. We are still hopeful and praying that God will remove the spiritual darkness and blindness from the minds of the people. Bro. Lewis has written a very able tract. Very truly, he has said, there are many churches of men. Some of them are popular, too.

The needs of the work are great here; there are upwards of thirty thousand souls in this town and only one active branch officer. Within a radius of twelve miles there are upwards of fifty thousand inhabitants more, a few if any of these have ever heard the angel's message. How shall we get it before them, is the question. Some enthusiastic and zealous young men are needed, men who will place their all on the altar and say, "Here am I, send me." It is required that men shall make a persistent effort in one locality for at least two or three years; and if this were done, our church would make a greater record in this land. We have now a few good missionaries here. Four in Wales, but some of them who come from the west have a desire to return thither again as soon as possible; and I do not wonder at this, because a man does not get much encouragement here. You can readily see that to send men here and take them back again is costing the church considerable money. Bro. Evan Lewis and family are sailing from Aberaman for the States on the 23d of February; but instead of our folks going away from here we want many more to come, as we have reason to believe their work is not yet done here.

We note the work is onward in Australia and we would like to know it was the same everywhere, where the gospel is preached.

Bro. F. J. Pierce is now laboring at 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff, tracting, etc. Bro. William Lewis and wife and Ruth are still here. Sr. Lewis has been quite poorly of late, but is a little better now. We are having a fearful lot of wet weather; almost every day it rains. Heavy gales and great loss of life on land and sea.

HENRY ELLIS.

29 Hicks Street.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, March 10.

Editors Herald: Once more I am a free man; have been in bondage to the law of quarantine since January 24 until the 8th inst. Cause, said to be scarlet fever. We had the doctor once only, and he said there was no use for medicine; a light form, and so it was. But it seems that the law governing in the cases of contagious diseases is cold and stiff; so relentless and rigid that the mildest form has no commending feature to cause or permit a deviation. But thanks to Him from whom all blessings flow, he blessed our children, three in number, through administration, and the suffering was very light, and once more normal health and happiness is a part of our life's possessions. I have now packed books and clothing in satchel, and to-morrow I start down the Arkansas Valley. Pueblo, Rocky Ford, and Lamar are points along the route. I am glad the way is opening to the presentation of our work in this valley, and at Trinidad, Raton, and other mining camps in the great coal region of that section of country. Like the opening springtime that presages the inevitable harvest of summer-time, and we look for an ingathering, ere long, of precious souls into the fold of the good Shepherd.

Bro. J. I. Young, who lives at Raton, New Mexico, is anxious to warn all the ungodly of their ungodly deeds, and is doing what he can to advance the cause. Also Bro. John Lamb, who has been living twelve miles east of Raton at a private mine and who will locate in some camp soon, is a pusher and will not be idle. Also our cause is gaining at Pueblo, Canon City, and towns adjacent. At Swink, a station about midway between Rocky Ford and La Junta, there is a growing and prosperous branch, and Saints all along the valley are making openings in many places. Our work is calling for more laborers all through this section of the state of Colorado. Bro. J. B. Roush has done a good work in directing the ministry and in general supervision. I hope we may be fortunate enough to have his official presence and labors yet many years. Though failing seemingly in health, or at least not gaining any, yet his faith and hope for Zion's cause fail not. Bro. J. F. Curtis deserves much credit for the manner in which he has labored to open the work in Eastern Colorado. Our present condition is largely due to his indefatigable and well-directed word of exhortation. Also Bro. Kemp, who, though growing old has, and is yet, doing the work of the Master in a creditable and exemplary manner. His spirituality is a comfort to the Saints and a commending feature to the sinner. Bro. Bullard also has labored to build up the cause and all the ministry together with all the laity, with but a slight percentage of indifference, has done a work through the past year which, to the mind of your colaborer, will be the foundation-stone for a future structure of success.

Bro. Alma Hansen, who is now president of the Colorado Springs Branch, is doing a good work in the Religion cause. He is one of the pioneer missionaries in the Arkansas Valley, and is often inquired about both by the Saints and people who heard him present the work in his genial and comprehensive way.

ALPENA, Michigan, March 12.

Dear Herald: The history of our blessed Savior contained in the December 3 number of HERALD is worth more to my family than the small price that is asked for it. I hope I will never see the year when I can not have the HERALD. I was baptized thirty-one years ago the 7th of this month, and am still in the faith.

I am still living in Alpena where I can put my humble place in order, and have family prayers in the morning and at night, which is so strengthening.

I wish the HERALD success, and may it inspire many hearts to be faithful to the Lord, who bought them with a price.

Your sister,

MRS. ELIZA A. LESTER.

DENNISPORT, Massachusetts, March 11.

Dear Saints: I obeyed this gospel about three years ago. Bro. George W. Robley baptized me. He has not been here since, but we hope to see him some time in the near future. Bro. I. M. Smith has been here lately and held meetings over two weeks, and it was meat and drink to our souls. He explained this glorious latter-day work so plainly that there was no chance for any to deny it. We had the worst snow-storm for the winter while he was here, but the attendance was good just the same. I was able to attend all the meetings but two. It was as a growth to my soul. The work is not as I would like to see it here. Some of the dear Saints are striving hard to carry on this work, but I would like to see each and every one let go of the things of a worldly nature and be more earnest and zealous in the work of the Lord. There is all the pleasure that we need in this gospel if we live aright. We are to be as light and salt to the earth. I have received many blessings since I came into this gospel. I have not a doubt if we live humble and prayerful we shall receive what we ask for. I have proven it.

We have our prayer-meeting at a sister's house who has been sick some time. We desire the prayers of all the Saints in her behalf that she may be healed. My heart rejoices that I am in this work with you and hoping I will always be found faithful, I remain,

Yours in the faith,

NELLIE S. PIERCE.

ROSETTA, Idaho, March 9.

Editors Herald: I see in the HERALD of February 11 that Bro. A. M. Chase has lately made a trip into this part of Idaho. He thought this portion of the Rocky Mountain Mission, known as the Panhandle of Idaho, should be added to Washington District instead of being a part of the Rocky Mountain Mission, or there should be a missionary given this mission as his especial work. I think the latter would be the best, for the reason that this part of Idaho is hard to reach, but once here the elders will be kindly cared for. There are seven Latter Day Saints here, all within a radius of seven miles, but no organized branch. We are very anxious for some elder to come to this part. He will receive a kind reception.

I was ordained a priest two years ago last fall by Bro. Albertson. I have tried to do what I could. I am no speaker, but have had prayer and testimony-meetings once a week until the last five months. There has been so much sickness that we could not get together. We will renew our meetings soon. The Saints here are all doing the best they can. I think there could be a good work done here if one of our elders could come here. We have looked for Bro. Layland to come, but we have been disappointed. We hope the coming conference will remember us. We are isolated here and it makes me feel like we were cast off; but when I read of so many that are living where they do not hear any preaching I renew my courage. There is one blessing, we take the church papers, and it does my heart good to read them. I do not know what we would do without them. I have been a member of this church for the last thirty-four years, and never have regretted the step I took. I was baptized by Joseph Clapp. I often see his letters in the HERALD. I wish him God-speed. We are not acquainted with many of our elders, and when we see a letter in the Ensign or HERALD from one of those that we are acquainted with, it makes us rejoice to know that God has remembered them. I feel to rejoice in this latter-day work. I know it is the work of God, and the promises are to those that serve him in spirit and truth. God bless the coming conference.

JASON R. BUTLER.

BRADY ISLAND, Nebraska, March 16.

Editors Herald: I am writing this on board a Union Pacific train, being delayed here by a wreck that has just occurred. The doctors are still on board examining and caring for the injured. We left North Platte at ten minutes past seven in the forenoon. The fog was very dense. All went well until about eight o'clock; then we felt the air-brakes suddenly applied, and immediately a collision occurred that jerked us out of our seats. Looking out of the windows we saw several men in various positions along the side of the track, who had jumped from the engines and baggage-cars. Excitement was great. As soon as we could we alighted from the coach and found that our train had collided with a freight. Our engine was badly damaged and the baggage-car was completely demolished. The front end of the smoking-car was also greatly damaged; and worst of all, the newsboy was killed. He was sitting with the conductor in the front end of the car. The conductor felt the air-brakes applied and knew that something was wrong. He at once sought to leave his seat, but found one foot pinned fast. The newsboy said: "Oh! help me." The conductor replied, "My poor lad, I am fast and can not help myself." Soon after he said, "My boy, how are you coming?" He received no answer. A few minutes later men were there with axes to extricate them. They found the conductor with his head upon that of the boy, and both of them held fast by the debris of the broken car. The newsboy was dead, the conductor not seriously injured. A few of the trainmen were more or less seriously injured, but all of the passengers escaped unhurt. The passenger-train was on time and it seems that the freight had run slowly owing to the dense fog, and had failed to make the side-track at Brady Island in time to leave the track clear for the through passenger, hence the collision. They have pulled us back to this place to await the clearing of the track. A wrecking-train with a numerous crew of men has already passed to the scene of action.

I feel sure that I have traveled more than fifty thousand miles by railroad and I have never before been caught in a serious wreck. I have also crossed the ocean three times, and all my travels both by land and sea I have been preserved. Not a hair of my head has been injured. I feel that God has been kind and good unto me and I feel very thankful for it, and hope that I may be able to "acknowledge Him in all my ways that my paths may be directed of him." The only loss to me in this is a few hours time and a pair of spectacles that I already seriously miss. I had just finished reading Bro. S. W. L. Scott's tract on the "Restoration of Israel," and think it probable that I left the car wearing them and lost them without missing them.

Later, it took the wrecking crew seven hours to clear the track, and we were all day making the distance of one hundred thirty-eight miles, arriving at Grand Island at seven o'clock in the evening, tired but thankful.

C. H. PORTER.

PORT BRUCE, Ontario, March 10.

Dear Herald: When last I wrote I was holding meetings in the old Methodist church in Port Bruce, which had not been used for some time. On March 1, in the evening, there was the best meeting we ever had; but on Monday, March 2, the Reverend J. E. Millyard came from about eight or nine miles with horse and buggy, got the key, locked the church, gave a formal notice to hold no more services in the church, and went his way. Some people were angry, and some glad. That night some unknown persons did considerable damage to the building, and carried out some things which were individual property.

The people asked me to go to the schoolhouse. I did one night. Some did not want this; so Mr. Joseph Stephens, a wealthy farmer, gave us the use of an unused house. We seated it, got lamps, cleaned the place up, and held our meetings there. Twenty-six souls came out to hear. Last Sunday we held two services. There was quite a turnout, for the kind of a day we had. There are many investigating the work. To-day I am notified by letter to leave this town within three days or be brought before the courts or be mobbed. My time is up to-morrow night. I preach the same as usual, God willing. Many of the people tell me to go on, that they will stand by me. I hope God will be with us and frustrate the power of the enemy.

T. A. PHILLIPS.

KIBBIE, Illinois, March 9.

Editors Herald: Though I am not a subscriber of the HERALD, I have been a reader almost ever since I have been a member. The dear sister that used to furnish me the HERALD is now beneath the sod. Since her departure a brother in the church, whose hand is stretched out to help the poor, loans the church literature to me. I have been comforted and strengthened many times by reading the sermons and encouraging letters from the dear brothers and sisters.

I was baptized January 22, 1893, by Elder E. Curtis. Since then I have received many blessings, and have been trying in my weakness to do the will of the Father; though we have trials and disappointments, the Lord has promised to be with us as long as we keep his commandments.

Among the hardest things for me to say was, "Thy will be done," on December 10 when the Lord called from me my youngest daughter, a bright jewel of seven years. While my heart aches with sorrow, my eyes dimmed with tears, I thank God for this gospel that enables me to say, "the Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

There are yet a few Saints here who are trying to hold the fort and keep the banner afloat, though sometimes we feel like sheep without a shepherd, as we do not get to hear much preaching. But, dear Saints, may we be alive in this work, for we read we are to be rewarded according to our works.

May the Holy Spirit guide us all, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, MARY CAMPBELL.

BAY CITY, Michigan, March 12.

Editors Herald: We are yet alive and interested in this latter-day work. Are having good meetings, though not largely attended. Bro. David Smith, of Standish, Michigan, was with us last Sunday, March 8, and gave us a good sermon. Quite a number present, and good attention. Bro. J. A. Carpenter and myself made a special effort for over three weeks to awaken an interest and get the pure gospel before the people, but were unable to attract the attention of very many, yet there was some interest manifested by some, which we believe will terminate in good for the cause. I think the most of the Saints are feeling well in the work; but there are some who bear the name of Saint that have no feeling at all, unless it might be a feeling of remorse of conscience. I visited some who have been in the city for three years and never attended one meeting. So it seems to me such ones are about twice dead, and plucked up by the roots. However, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Bro. J. A. Carpenter has a good opening in Reese and another opening near Munger. I was pleased to learn by letter of Brn. Griffiths and Rushton, from over the sea, of the progress of the work in that far-off land.

Church Secretary's Notice.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS—NEW ENGLAND PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The New England Passenger Association has just given notice of concurrence with the Western, Central, Trunk Line, and Southwestern Passenger Associations, in a rate of fare and one third, round trip, certificate plan, to General Conference and Conventions, Independence, Missouri, April, 1903.

Territory: New England, including a few connecting points in the Province of Quebec. Roads included: Bangor & Aroostook; Boston & Albany; Boston & Maine; Central Vermont; Grand Trunk; Maine Central; New York, New Haven, & Hartford; Portland & Rumford Falls; Rutland Railroad; Washington County Railroad.

Certificates are issued only at certain stations. "If the ticket agent at a station from which delegates or others are expected to come is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to the place of meeting, he may inform the delegate or person of the nearest important station where the certificates and tickets can be obtained, in which case local ticket should be purchased to the point and there obtain certificate and through ticket. It must be understood, however, that persons should arrange to arrive at the station where the certificates and tickets are procured in ample time to allow agent to execute same."

The same general rules announced heretofore will govern. Going tickets in this territory may be bought from April 1 to 6. Passenger pays full fare to destination, and must obtain certificate corresponding to every ticket purchased. Those who repurchase tickets from Kansas City to Independence must obtain certificates, and travel over regular steam railway lines—the Missouri Pacific or Chicago and Alton—between said points. A fee of twenty-five cents will be charged for every certificate signed by joint agent, who will be present at the conference April 8, 9, and 10, and holders must be present on one of said dates to receive certificates from him. Such will be entitled to return tickets at one third regular fare, over same route as going trip, subject to continuous passage, from April 8 to 23, on any of said dates. Certificates should be handed to the Church Secretary promptly on arrival. Names of holders should be plainly written on certificates, to identify them. Going tickets are limited or unlimited, according to rules of roads selling them.

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 23, 1903.

Notices.

The Reception Committee of General Conference at Independence, Missouri, as prepared to entertain all who attend; but those who apply first always receive the best. Come, we will do the best we can for you. Ammon White, secretary pro tem.

Died.

HOGABOAM.—At Burlington, Iowa, March 13, 1903, Sr. Evaline A. Hogaboam, aged 79 years, 5 months, and 20 days. She was born in 1823 in Erie County, Pennsylvania. In 1840 her parents removed to Pike County, Illinois, where in 1850 she married Alphonso Hogaboam. Of three children born, two died in infancy, but a daughter survives her.

MORGAN.—At Cleveland, Iowa, February 8, 1903, Sr. Elizabeth Morgan, aged 50 years, 2 months, 26 days; born November 13, 1852, in Dowlas, Wales; married to John J. Morgan, January 31, 1867, at Sharon, Pennsylvania. Of this union twelve children were born, of which seven are left to mourn. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church, February 1874, by Elder James Brown at Sodom, Ohio. She lived and died in the cause of Christ. The husband has lost a devoted wife, the children a kind and loving mother. Funeral sermon February 10, by Elder John Jervis.

LACY.—Sr. Emma Lacy united with the church in 1877, being baptized by Bro. W. W. Blair. At her request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached her funeral sermon, service being held on Sunday, March 15, at Burlington.

CAMPBELL.—Solomon L. Campbell was born August 29, 1825, at Hanby, New York. He heard and believed the gospel in the early days and was baptized in 1850 while on his way to Utah. He settled at North Ogden, and on May 27, 1883, was baptized into the Reorganization at Ogden City by Joseph Wheeler. June 3, 1883, he was ordained an elder by W. W. Blair. While visiting with his son at Lake Point, Utah, was taken with pneumonia fever and died March 5, 1903. The funeral was from the ward meeting-house at North Ogden.

WILLIAMS.—William Alvin, infant son of W. E. and Mary Jane Williams, was born at Cleveland, October 31, 1901; died March 11, 1903; aged 1 year, 4 months, 11 days. Funeral sermon by Elder John Jervis, March 12.

TYRON.—At Pekin, Illinois, March 12, 1903, of dropsy, Sr. Susan, wife of Gilbert Tyron, was born April 16, 1833, in Marion County, Ohio. Two children and several brothers and sisters are left to mourn. She was a faithful Saint for over forty years. Funeral services conducted by Elder J. S. Patterson.

TRAUTER.—John Trauter was born in England in 1819; united with the church some time during the fifties and emigrated to America in 1855. Four years later went with a number of others to Utah; became dissatisfied at the condition of affairs and returned to Iowa City, where he spent his remaining days. Has always advocated the doctrine of the church. Died on March 9, 1903. Funeral in charge of Elder O. H. Bailey.

BROOKS.—At her home near Lamoni, Iowa, on March 6, 1903, after great suffering during eleven years, Sr. Phebe M. Brooks (formerly Corless), aged 56 years, 2 months, and 8 days. She was born near Coldwater, Michigan, and was baptized there in 1864 by Elder James Blakeslee. Married Mr. Henry Brooks in 1868. He died in 1895. Of six children, five attended the funeral, two coming from Indian Territory and one from Kansas. She was a cousin of Sr. S. V. Bailey of Lamoni. Sermon at the house by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. Nephi Lovell.

BOOTMAN.—David H. Bootman was killed February 20, 1903, while in the employ of the Frisco Railroad Company; aged 22 years, 1 month, 17 days. Had never united with the church, but was ever ready to defend its cause. Was a noble, hard-working young man. Six brothers, a sister, and other near relatives mourn his sad departure, also a broken-hearted young lady (Miss Emma Reese) to whom he was to have been married in about one month. His remains were interred by the side of his parents, seven miles south of West Plains, Missouri, Sunday, the 22d. Funeral sermon by J. C. Chrestensen.

KARAHOO.—Noah Karahoo was born March 14, 1860; died at his home near Ottawa, Indian Territory, March 2, 1903; aged 42 years, 11 months, 19 days; was baptized September 21, 1898, by W. H. Smart; was ordained and elder October 22, 1899, by A. J. Moore and S. W. Simmons. After his uniting with the church he kept the faith till the end and was highly esteemed by his brethren and neighbors. Funeral March 3, by Elder H. J. Thurman; assisted by Elder J. T. Riley.

HIDY.—At Collins, Iowa, March 2, 1903, after a long illness, of dropsy, Joanna Hidy; born June 9, 1835, Jeffersonville, Ohio; married Joseph L. Hidy April 10, 1852; she leaves a husband, five sons, and thirteen grandchildren. She and her husband were baptized June, 1871, and their home was always open to the traveling ministry. She was a friend to the poor and needy. By faith she was healed many times. She suffered severely during her last illness, but bore it patiently, and fell asleep peacefully. Though her family will miss her sadly, yet they feel it is for the best. Funeral services in Christian church at Collins, Iowa; sermon by W. C. Nirk.

GRIFFITHS.—At Brookfield, Missouri, February 18, 1903, Sr. Mary A., wife of Edwin Griffiths; was born in Temperanceville, Pennsylvania, April 18, 1867; married December 29, 1883. She was a woman of sterling qualities and devoted to her home and family. She leaves a husband, two daughters, one son, many relatives and friends to mourn. Funeral sermon at the house by Elder F. T. Mussell then afterwards the Knights and Ladies of Security took charge.

GURWELL.—At Fanning, Kansas, February 26, 1903, of pneumonia and neuralgia, Elder William Gurwell; was born January 23, 1831, in Crawford County, Ohio; married Sarah L. Kimble March 4, 1862. To them were born four sons and six daughters; all but one survive to mourn. He was baptized August 11, 1868, by Elder D. H. Bays. Bro. I. N. White was called to his bedside and he informed him he wished to make a statement before he passed over the river of death. He stated he was baptized by Elder Bays, by which he had received a peace to his soul that had never grown dim, and at this time bore his dying testimony to the truthfulness of the work and wished all to know that he died a firm believer in the angel's message brought to Joseph Smith, and hope was brighter than ever to him as he stood at death's door. At this juncture he looked up into his eyes and bore one of the most heartfelt testimonies to the divinity of this work. As he passed away said: "Is this death?" Then close his eyes to earth-life. Funeral services from the Saints' church on March 1. Sermon by I. N. White.

LIVELY.—At St. Clair, Michigan, February 15, 1903, Sr. Mary Edith Lively; aged 18 years, 4 months, 15 days; was born at Prairie Siding, county of Kent, Ontario, October 22, 1884; was baptized September 6, 1893, at St. Clair, Michigan. She was a niece of Sr. and Bishop R. May of Independence, Missouri, and was just entering the bloom of young womanhood, having graduated from the high school in June 1902. She was a great help to the work and will be missed. She leaves a father, mother, three brothers and one sister to mourn. Funeral from the Baptist church by Elder George Green.

SNELL.—At Redickville, Ontario, January 26, 1903, Minnie E. (Mary Elizabeth), daughter of Bro. Martin and Sr. Margaret Snell, aged 20 years, 10 months, 21 days; baptized July 23, 1893, by Elder Frederick Gregory and confirmed July 24, by Elder A. E. Mortimer. Father, mother, three sisters, three brothers, and a large circle of relatives and friends mourn.

WILLIAMS.—Elizabeth, wife of Daniel T. Williams, died at Cleveland, Iowa, February 16, 1903, aged 49 years, 11 months, 27 days. She was baptized at Keb, Iowa, and remained a faithful, devoted Saint until her death. She will be greatly missed by the immediate relatives and the church. She has gone to rest with a glorious hope of a part in the resurrection of the just.

BLACK.—Lizzie J. Christian was born May 12, 1878, in Clinton County, Missouri; was married to Alyabed Black, January 19, 1898; departed this life August 23, 1902, at Hemple, Missouri, and her remains were laid to rest in Mt. Carmel Cemetery in Clinton County, Missouri, to await the resurrection of the just. She leaves a husband, two children, her parents, many relatives, and friends to mourn her departure. Funeral by J. W. Adams, assisted by A. W. Head.

JETT.—At Knoxville, Arkansas, January 24, 1903, Mrs. M. C. Jett; was born January 28, 1823; married to Thomas Randolph Jett in 1843. She united with the church in the early days in Benton County, Tennessee, and though opposition was strong her faith was never shaken in the latter-day doctrine.

Conference Notices.

John Dyche, Hawthorne House, Stone Road, Stafford, one clear week before conference convenes. We expect to have Bro. John W. Rushton with us. William Ecclestone, district president.

Ancient Prophecies.

From the earliest times transportation has been an important feature in the development of the church. You will remember what serious times St. Paul had in his travels, and it is curious to note how clearly various forms of transportation of to-day were outlined in the Old Testament scriptures, and especially in the prophecies of a thousand years before the beginning of the Christian era.

For instance, Nahum, in the fourth verse of the second chapter of his prophecy, evidently refers to automobiles, as follows: "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings."

He no doubt had in mind the crowded condition of the street cars and the elevated railways in New York, when, in the eighth verse of the second chapter, he says: "Stand, stand, shall they cry, but none shall look back."—From "Ancient Prophecies Fulfilled," by George H. Daniels, in Four-Track News for March.

A Daisy Air Rifle for the Boy

The lad who desires some fun can get an air rifle from the KANSAS CITY JOURNAL as a present.

The name of this gun is "THE DAISY," and it is well named. This gun is thirty inches in length from the end of the barrel to the end of the stock. Here is a gun that the boy can have fun with.

This Air Rifle is the finest rifle on the market, as it is modeled after the latest target rifle. It has a genuine walnut stock, and is provided with improved sights, a feature every one will appreciate. The barrel and all working parts are made of steel, and the metal parts finely nickel-plated. It is simple in construction and shoots the strongest. All parts are interchangeable; shoots B. E. shot by compressed air, with sufficient force to kill sparrows, rats, etc., at a considerable distance. The rifle is safe in the hands of a child. It weighs over two pounds.

Our proposition: Any boy who will get TEN new subscriptions to the Kansas City Weekly Journal at 25 cents each, making a total of $2.50, and will send us a list of the names together with the money, we ship to his address, express charges prepaid, this handsome air rifle. Send money by post-office or draft and advise us of the name of your express office.

Boys, here is a chance to get the fun of your life. Rustle a little and get this gun as our proposition only holds good until June 1, 1903.

Address all communications to THE KANSAS CITY JOURNAL, Kansas City, Missouri.

Send for sample copies of the Weekly for canvassing. 10-2t

By notice of the business manager, Bro. F. B. Blair, found in another column in this issue, it will be seen that the business management has established a book-station in England. This will greatly facilitate the work of the publishing department, and our British brethren can secure their book supplies much more quickly than when they were compelled to order all their books, etc., from America. It will be in charge of William R. Armstrong, at Manchester.

A FORGOTTEN CHAPTER ON DUTIES.

In looking over some muniments of the past we found the following chapter of instructions concerning the duties of a president of a district or branch. It is worth reproducing, if for nothing more than the purposes of contrasting with present advanced conditions:

First. The presiding officer of a district should seek to obtain the good will of the congregations and the individuals of which his district is composed.

Second. In securing this good will, he should be humble, faithful, and diligent.

Third. His first duty toward those under his charge, is to seek unto the Lord for wisdom, that he may be aided and instructed to direct the affairs intrusted to him successfully.

Fourth. He should be a firm friend to the truth. His duty under this head would imply that he must speak the truth himself, encourage it in others; and reprove the disregard and the want of it in others.

Fifth. He must be gentle. In this light he must not be heady, highminded, or obstinate, neither in his preaching to the world nor in his demeanor to the Saints.

Sixth. He must be an open, avowed, and honest enemy to wrong, oppression, false doctrines, and false practices. Under this rule of conduct he is authorized to silence elders preaching in his district, transcient or local, if they preach false doctrine, or if they transgress the rules of morality which are known to obtain in the church, and by which the members should be governed.

Seventh. He should preach and secure the preaching of others within his district. If at all practicable, he should travel in his district constantly, opening new fields of labor; filling stated appointments; and securing by a guarded, careful walk and conversation, the favor of the people, that they may be induced to listen to the preaching of the word.

Eighth. He must realize that upon him to a great extent rests the entire moral responsibility of the district. He is supposed to be the representative of the Saints comprising the district. As such a representative, if he is dirty in person, and disorderly and unclean in his dress, so will it be understood are his constituents. He must therefore be clean. If he be rough in language, profane, light, using foul and indecent language in private, and uncouth language in public, of just such material will it be understood is his congregation of Saints composed. He must therefore be chaste and clean in his conversation.

Ninth. He must be impartial as a judge. Upon this rule he must be closely discriminating in his choice of elders to take charge of congregations upon special occasions. He must not assume a right which is not his. He may preside at branch meetings, but it is not his right so to do. He may preach in a branch, and may call upon the branch authorities to call special meetings. It is their duty when requested by him to call meetings to do so at once, without delay. He has a right to inquire into the standing of any member in the branch, but it is his duty to make his inquiry of the officers of the branch. It is his duty to notify officers of branches of that which he requires of the branch; of all baptisms and confirmations to which he attends in their respective branches.

Tenth. He should give official notice of all specific changes in the business of the district conferences and other matters of general importance. He should see that all branches under his charge are properly instructed as to time and place of holding conferences, and should himself attend the sessions of conference.

Eleventh. It is his duty to encourage the talent in the various officers of the various branches, and upon all suitable occasions call out and uphold those who are of lesser priesthood and talent.

Twelfth. It is his duty to hear every official and proper complaint. It is his duty to discourage and refuse to hear every unofficial and fault-finding complaint; more especially should he do this in the priesthood, more especially still in the elders.

Thirteenth. It is his duty to keep his opinion of the merits of individual quarrels and differences to himself, except when called upon to decide officially; in fact, he is not fit to preside in the trial of any cause concerning the merits of which he has expressed an opinion.

Fourteenth. He should be a thorough Christian. Under this rule we embrace the following list of duties: It is his duty to be a good son, if he have parents; a good husband, if married, if not married he should be a gallant but virtuous gentleman; a good father, if he have children. It is his duty to be courteous and friendly to all, remembering this rule more especially "to the household of faith." Remark: No natural churlishness of temper will make this rule any less imperative. It is his duty to be studious, active, energetic, unflinching: true as a brother, friend, neighbor, citizen, and child of God. It is his duty to be frank, kind, and firm; neither swerving from direct duty by entreaty of friends, nor threats of enemies. It is not his duty to be eloquent and a great speaker, though if he possess these gifts it will be to his advantage. It is his duty to be sober. No drunkard or dram drinker is fit for this position, and should neither be chosen, nor sustained. It is not his duty to boast or wrangle with those placed under his authority, nor assume dictatorial power. It is his duty to be outspoken against vice. He should give it neither countenance nor quarter; nor while he condemns it, should he rail at individuals. It is his positive duty to refrain from hearing and retailing slander, nor should he circulate evil tales though they be true.

In addition to these duties above recited, we give a "few," from a contributor by him obtained from "they say." We give them insertion though not giving them additional nor official sanction:

"A presiding elder of a district (or branch for that matter) is to know all about everybody in his district (or branch)."

"It is his duty to be up first in the morning, and to kindle every official fire in the district. He is morally and physically, as well as officially responsible for all the doctrine taught in each branch of his district; as well as the moral, physical, social, and official standing of every elder, priest, teacher, deacon, man, woman, and child in the district."

"It is his duty to know everything appertaining to every man's duty, and to see that every man lives up to that duty as he understands it."

"It is his duty to listen to every story which any one in his district may want to tell him, and is to be able to tell at once what the matter is, who is to blame, and what the proper remedy is. In this connection, he is supposed to be able to enforce his decision any how, whether all parties are willing or not. Still further, when he hears what Bro. Timothy says about Bro. Jacob, he is to conclude, of course, that the story has but one side, and he must give his opinion accordingly; in fact, he must not be supposed to have any opinion only according to the first tale which is told." "It is his duty, when visiting a branch, to be sure to go to all the houses in the branch first. The reason for this rule is, if he goes to any one of them first, he is partial to the Saints in that house and the rest may be offended." ("Traveling elders will do well to make a note of this.")

"He must make it a rule to retail in every house which he visits, and he must visit all in his district, everything which he has heard said about the inmates of that house, by those of every other house that he has visited. You see if he does this, he will have ample room to exercise his authority as presiding elder, by empaneling courts of elders to try offenders, etc."

"It is his duty to consult his own feelings in all his official acts, and is to remember that he is the one in authority, and the people must submit."

"It is his duty to be eyes, hands, head, heart, lungs, legs, and tongue for all the officers of the dis-strict." "He is to bear the blame if any of them refuse or neglect to preach, when called upon or not." "As often as possible he is to ask all of them to occupy the stand at once; and if he find a good, reliable, faithful, willing man in the district, or in a branch, he is to let appointments remain unfilled, and make no new ones for this man to fill, if there is a seventy, or high priest in the district, no matter whether the seventy or high priest can not or will not fill said appointments." "He is to preach upon all and every possible occasion;" "must never be tired in body or mind; must bear all his own traveling expenses, work all the daytime with his hands, sit up nights to study the Scriptures, must go at calls of the sick in every direction, in all kinds of weather, and at all hours of the night; must have all power over sickness in his own person, and must cure in every case, or he is in fault and is not living right."

"It is his duty to be as eloquent as Paul, as persuasive as Peter, as patient as Job, as wise as Solomon, as meek as Samuel, as strong as Samson, as loving as John, as faithful as Daniel,—in short, just think of all that the ancients were and all that they were not—and that is the man."

"Now readers of the HERALD, we have been considered by many as lacking in the learning of the law, as the earlier sages of the work held its construction; but we have offered the foregoing instructions upon the duty of a presiding officer of a district, with the view of carrying some definite idea to the minds of those who might be wishing to provide themselves against their day of need."

If any of you find any duty named above which is not in accordance with law, do not obey that rule. If on the contrary, you find any or all of them to be according to law, go and discharge them if you be a president of a district or branch.

And if not an officer in charge of either branch or district, take into consideration what has been suggested by some writers that it is the duty of every Saint to make himself acquainted with the whole law that he may be in condition to know the duties, privileges, and prerogatives of every officer in the church that he may advise, admonish, check, or reprove any who may need it; and also be able to act in any respective calling, or office in an acceptable manner to the church and to God, according to law.

WAS IT SACRILEGE?

On January 23, 1903, Doctor Edward Everett Hale, of Boston, a well-known minister of the Unitarian denomination, partook of the sacrament at the altar of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Bishop of Western Massachusetts offering the bread, the Bishop of Maine the cup.

Of this act of Dr. Hale, the Living Church, of Milwaukee, the High-Church Episcopal organ, after eulogizing the Reverend Hale states: "But he is not a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America; nor of any church in communion with that church; he is 'not confirmed, or ready and desirous to be confirmed;' and more than all, he openly denies the Deity of our blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, whom Christian folk, ever since Saint Thomas, the Apostle, have worshiped as the Lord and their God. Bearing this in mind, we unhesitatingly avow that the act was sacrilege, and we deplore it inexpressibly."

This is strikingly curious coming from the source it does. If Doctor Hale, philosopher and litterateur as he is known to be, of a lovely character as a man, and a believer in one God, is not the religious peer of the High-Church ritualist who believes that Jesus and God were and are but one Lord and God, and should be worshiped as such, we fail to see the supposed fitness of the sentiment obtaining among the various denominations of so-called Christian worshippers, that each is an integral portion of the body of Christ, no one of them all having a preëminence over any other. Hence, though Doctor Hale is a representative of one extreme of opinion on the subject of the Godhead and the Protestant Episcopal churchman may represent another extreme, both should be permitted to stand at the same table and partake together of the emblems which ought to mark their unity. If both extremes discern, each in the other, the Lord's body, why should they not meet on an equal footing at the same table? If those sage religious teachers, the Bishops of Western Massachusetts and Maine, were willing to offer the emblems of the sacrament to Doctor Hale, though he was not of their way of belief, the Living Church has no call to style Dr. Hale's act as sacrilege.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Do you think it is right to make a practice of administering the sacrament to little children who have not yet reached the years of accountability?

The rule given in regard to the qualifications of those who are to be permitted to partake of the sacrament is that they shall "discern the Lord's body" and that none shall partake unworthily. Children under eight years, except in vary rare instances, are to be accounted as worthy; but it is not held that they discern the Lord's body. It is not a practice of the officers who pass the emblems, as a rule, to offer the emblems to children, though we have known of an officer now and then who did not think it out of place to permit children to partake.

Should it be considered a test of fellowship, for a member to be an actor on the stage of a theater, as an occupation?

We think not. Branches may have adopted such rule, though we have not seen any. There is no church rule upon the subject.

How can we explain the difference between a stage performance in a church entertainment and the common theater, where admission fees are charged for both?

We do not know. The morality of the one is about the same as that of the other. A great difference may lie in the character of the play itself. We do not know that an explanation is necessary.

Should it be considered any worse for a member to be an actor on the stage, than for another to go and see him act?

We think not.

In what light shall we consider members who place their names on other church records, and withdraw from the associations of the Saints?

It depends upon the circumstances. The general supposition would be that they had lost interest in the church from some cause; or had changed in belief.

Should we consider going to balls, and dancing, to be unchristianlike conduct?

There are two conference resolutions on the subject, numbers 317, 377.

"That the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that the members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice, as being one likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel?" "That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming to true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints."

How should a member who is the head of a family, be dealt with, who uses bad language, absents himself from the meetings, goes hunting on Sunday, uses tobacco and gambles? Should such a person be tolerated in the church on account of his family who may be good members?

We suppose such a member would be liable to a charge of walking disorderly or unchristianlike conduct. The worthiness of the family would be part of the circumstances of the case.

Will the parable, "let the tares and the wheat grow together," apply in this case?

The application is of doubtful propriety.

Should it be considered unchristianlike conduct, or test of fellowship, for a man and wife to separate, and divide their property, when they find that they can not live agreeably together?

No. Better to separate and live decently and in peace, than to live and behave disorderly together.

After such separation and division of property, shall the wife have claim upon the husband for support, where there has been no divorce granted?

It would depend largely on the conditions of the separation, and the circumstances. The liability for support would be a question for the courts of the land.

Should a faithful minister for Christ be considered unworthy to preside in the assemblies of the church, because one or more of his family choose to turn away from the church and follow after the world?

No; he should stand upon his own record and merit. If in good standing himself and he be otherwise qualified to preside he may do so with propriety.

Is it proper to apply the "mark of the beast," and "bundles of tares," to labor organizations?

That depends upon the viewpoint and the occasion. Some labor organizations are exercising a great deal of despotic power in places. It is a question of private opinion of the speaker; and it is of doubtful propriety. There is no common understanding, or rule of the church on the subject, and it is not likely there will be.

In consideration of the fact that in large cities where labor is so organized that a mechanic, and very often common laborers can not get work without joining some labor union, is it wrong to join such organization?

That is a matter of individual judgment. On general principles, it is not wrong. The principle by which such a condition of things exists, as to make such action of the individual necessary, is wrong, being an interference with the exercise of personal freedom and rights, and will finally be so held in the courts. The commission before which the parties involved in the late strike in the anthracite coal regions were lately heard, has already found that such interference with individual, personal action is wrong and can not be tolerated in law or justice.

One of those sending these questions writes, "These questions are asked with true purpose, and for the benefit of all that want to keep God's law." To this we add that we answer them without reference to any knowledge we may have of the local conditions at the point whence the questions come. The questions are answered without any intention that the answers shall be taken as decisions upon the persons who may possibly have been in the mind of the questioner when he wrote; nor are they intended as bases on which actions against those whose conduct may not be in strict accord with the opinions expressed, may be planted and prosecuted. The right of judgment in regard to personal conduct may not be rudely interfered with. Cast iron rules can not make the mind and heart of the believer better.

Right conduct is the result of right thought and intention, not of the rigid enforcement of another's opinion. Some general rules may be made, but none is of such a nature as to apply to every phase of human thought or form of action. The church has not attempted to reenact the Mosaic code, and we sincerely hope it will not, but leave the office work of the Spirit to be wrought out in the life of the Saints. "Whatsoever things are lovely and of good report; think on these things," and do them.

PUBLIC HOUSES IN ENGLAND.

A possible clue to poverty in England is afforded by the following:

Leeds has one public house for five hundred fourteen inhabitants, Manchester one for two hundred fourteen. Birmingham and Liverpool have about the same proportion, less than one in three hundred, while Dudley, Southampton, and Chester have one each for less than two hundred. There are more than fourteen thousand licensed houses in London and the average is one to four hundred forty-six inhabitants. The taxable value of these houses is nearly six times that of all the schools in the same area and one twentieth of the whole valuation of the British metropolis.

PALMYRA EDITION BOOK OF MORMON RARE.

We have received from the Chicago Historical Society a pamphlet in which credit is given for various donations to the society. It gives a list of books donated which "are of particular interest," and in that list is the following:

"The Book of Mormon," Palmyra, New York, 1830; first edition; very rare. William Gowans said of this work: "A copy of the original 'Book of Mormon' is, without doubt, the scarcest book published in the nineteenth century, which has obtained any kind of a reputation. Of all the volumes I have seen, handled, and sold, and they are millions, I have never seen [more than one copy]."

SYDNEY "TELEGRAPH" GIVES BRO. GILBERT CREDIT.

The Daily Telegraph, Sydney, Australia, in its issue of February 19, contained an account of the disaster in the South Sea Islands, in which account the following appeared:

The principal trouble was the shortage of water, all the water tanks being destroyed, and the water holes being spoiled by the salt water. However, here the ingenious Yankee came forward in the person of Mr. Gilbert, an American missionary. This gentleman, with great trouble and very poor assistance from natives, rigged up a condenser from tanks and a piece of tubing from an iron bedstead. With this crude apparatus Mr. Gilbert was able to distill enough water to keep the inhabitants from perishing from thirst.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Sr. Emma Bell wrote from Spokane, Washington, March 21: "The 'silent messengers' are welcome visitors at our home every Monday. Husband and I joined the church last April, and desire to live true to our covenant. I want to do some good in this grand work, if nothing more than to bring my little ones up ready to accept the gospel when old enough. There is none of our relatives in the church. Pray for us, Saints."

By clipping from the Muscatine Journal, Iowa, we note that Bro. J. W. Peterson has been doing some baptizing there, and that he has also been making plain the differences between us and the Utah people. A fair report of some of the meetings is given by the Journal, accompanied by our epitome of faith. Of the baptism the Journal, after telling how Bro. Peterson led the way into the chilly water, said: "Cakes of ice, some of them many feet across, floated by a few feet away and were wafted lazily down stream past the spot where the religious rite had taken place, and within a few moments after the ceremony had been finished the place where Reverend Peterson had stood was filled with pack ice."

J. H. Camp writes from St. Joseph, Missouri, that he is enjoying the blessing of God, in health and comfort, and that he is seeing God's power "made manifest in the protection of his people."

On March 16 Alvin Knisley wrote that he and Bro.

Mortimer were holding services nightly at Elimville, Ontario, and expected to do some baptizing.

In the Bay City Times, Michigan, for March 15, Bro. William Dowker has an article in defense of the work.

Sr. M. C. Hannah, of Anaheim, California, writes appreciatingly of the HERALD, and does not see how in the face of all that has been published people can be ignorant of the fact that there is a difference between the Reorganized Church and the Brighamites. She also admonishes the wives of our missionaries to be cheered in their lonesomeness by the fact that their absent companions are engaged in a noble work.

The "Bulletin of Iowa State Institutions," volume 5, number 1, as published by the Board of Control, has reached us, and we find in its contents many things of interest, there being many able articles therein, by competent writers, on subjects which ought to be of considerable interest to the average citizen. Unfortunately, however, much of the matter published by the State is too often considered useless by many. A glance only at the contents of the "Bulletin" just issued, ought to convince any one of its value.

Bro. Lester Passman, 24 Baden Street, Rochester, New York, would be pleased to have any of the Saints call on him.

R. C. Evans reached Lamoni March 25, to participate in the consultations of the First Presidency. He reports church affairs in Canada in fair condition.

There will probably be quite a large delegation of Lamoni Saints in attendance at the conference in Independence, Missouri.

By clippings sent us by J. L. Edwards, taken from the Boston Globe for March 16 and 17, we learned the sad news that Sr. Julia E. Toombs, of Providence, Rhode Island, was killed on her way to church Sunday, March 15, by W. S. Morse, a demented United States navy man recently discharged from the United States steamer Wabash. The murderer knew her custom of attending the Latter Day Saint Church services, and laid in wait. He fired three shots from a thirty-eight caliber revolver into her back, each shot sufficient of itself to cause death. She lingered only about ten minutes. We deplore the sister's untimely death, and our sympathy is with her family and the Providence Saints.

Public Opinion contained a concise review of President Joseph Smith's article in the March North American Review on the polygamy question.

We acknowledge receipt of a most beautifully illuminated invitation to attend the "celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the acquisition of the Louisiana Territory to be commemorated by the dedication of the Louisiana Exposition, St. Louis, April thirtieth and May first and second, nineteen hundred and three."

GRADED TEXT-BOOKS FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

It is just a little amusing to see how some opposed to the graded text-books have set up "men of straw" and then proceeded to pommel them and knock them out. One said we proposed to use the text-books instead of the Bible, and proceeded to show up in very eloquent style the fallacy of such procedure. Has any advocate of the text-books ever hinted at such an idea? On the contrary we urge a closer study of the Bible, and not the Bible only but also the other scriptures as well. One said, "We tried the Question Books and the Compendium, and we do not want to go back to them." Neither do we, and we have not said so.

One objector has said these books would be as large as the Church History and would cost one dollar and a half, and it would be unhandy to carry around. Who said we would have such ponderous volumes? We have not hinted at such an absurdity. All the suggestion as to size and cost made by the affirmative has favored small volumes at small cost.

Now as to gradation. "Can not be done." As if that settles it. Does it? We have not said what the basis of gradation should be. We do not insist that technical gradation to the extent of the public school is practical; that we should have written examinations and rigid per cents. But we do insist that there might be more grading than at present, and that a basis could be worked out both practical and beneficial. Because no one has as yet given us in detail such a system does not justify the statement, "can not be done." The Sunday-schools are different from the secular schools, and the system would have to be materially different. Of course it would. But can we not have something different. By the way, who said it should be like the public schools?

One said there is no interdependence in gospel subjects, not a question of how I learn faith, "by Elisha praying for rain," or "touching the hem of his garment." Of course it is not a question of how one shall learn faith; but it might be a question worth considering as to when. Should faith as a principle be taught before eternal judgment or after it? Is there no sequence in the order in which it would be better to teach the principle of truth? Or is it better to have a little bit on faith to-day, and a little bit of resurrection next Sunday, and then some second coming of Christ the next, followed in haphazard by baptism, the gathering, laying on of hands, and so on? This is the real question.

"Christ used no system," says one. The greatest of all teachers used no system? Then the author of the above statement says he taught just what seemed necessary and desirable at the time. Ah! that would be system, the grandest of all. The opposite to that would be to teach something marked out for a certain

Sunday whether either necessary or desirable. The same author then continues, "Why did not he have a beginning point and an ending point?" He did. The beginning point was the knowledge already possessed. He always began at a point of comprehension based upon something known; and the ending point was when the lesson was learned. Our fondest wish is that we might learn to be as systematic as he. If he perceived one had faith he did not teach faith, but lead on to the advanced principles. We teach the lesson of the day without due regard to what may be already known relating to it, and pass on without determining sufficiently whether the lesson is learned or not.

If teachers will come to the teachers' meetings for no other reason than to get the lesson, it is a sorry thing for the school. Such teachers will not as a rule give further thought to the lesson. What a time this ought to be for the superintendent to sound the depths of the teachers, to find out what they know, and to help them in their individual perplexities—the true leader getting acquainted with his subordinates, planning for the campaign and the like—"the power behind the throne." Considering the financial side of the question, we agree that we should not "kill the goose that laid the golden egg." We agree that money is necessary to carry on the Lord's work, and that we should guard closely the goose referred to; and if our association could not be self-sustaining by such a change then it would be unwise to change. I say self-sustaining. I deny that we ought to make any effort to accumulate so we might give to the college and church at the expense of doing our best for our children in the way of gospel education, and I do not charge that any one has said we ought to do so. But while gold is desirable and necessary in its place, there is something of vastly more value than that. It is above price, more precious than rubies, a gift from God bestowed as a reward for diligent search and humble effort. Wisdom! There is nothing compared to it in this world, and it is the priceless boon which alone will qualify us for the better life.

"WHEN A MAN HAS NOT A RIGHT TO HIS OWN OPINION."

Canon Knox Little gave the first of a series of Lenten addresses in Saint Ann's Church, Manchester, yesterday. He said it was sometimes maintained that men were not responsible for their belief, and that every man had a right to his own opinion. In one sense that was true, but in another it was false. A man had no right to a doubt as to the truth of Euclid's axioms and postulates, because such a doubt would be founded on moonshine, and he had no right to an opinion about eternal things unless that opinion was grounded on the revelation of God. The church was, after all, the teacher in regard to intellectual difficulties touching high things.—Yorkshire Evening Post, March 3, 1903.

The above is significant and of value as denoting the trend of current thought, and marks advance in the views of some at least in authority in high places.

Canon Knox Little is to be congratulated on the stand he has taken, and we wonder what the result will be of the clear and emphatic limitation of human speculation in relation to divine concerns, coming as it does from this well-known and recognized authority in the Anglican Church.

The principle couched in the language of the Canon is just what we as a church have held and laid down as an inviolable and rigid principle: religion as a science has its own standard of evidence framed and fashioned by God, the author of the science of spiritual evolution. Hence, whatever speculation or opinion is ventured, no matter from whence it comes, or purports to come, must be carefully and faithfully analyzed and contrasted with the accepted standard. If found to fall short of or contradict any principle or law contained therein, to accept and indorse such opinion is injurious if not disastrous to the interests of mankind both now and hereafter.

If it be considered equally as foolish to doubt the eternal verities and principles of God's revelations, as to doubt the axioms and postulates of Euelid, why not accept the inevitable conclusion, which is equally axiomatic as the premises?

That a church, or sect, or person teaching opinions contrary to, or short of the accepted standard, is not only vanity and foolishness, not merely a passive stumbling-block to the end in view, but is actually potential in frustrating the grace of God, producing disappointment and atrophy, instead of peace, joy, rest, and life.

It is not consistent to raise the cry of bigotry, nor contraction or narrowness of mind, when such a position is taken. Just as consistently could the charge of narrowness be raised against any of the sciences within the range of our knowledge to-day; yet it is never done nor would it be heeded if it was raised. The relation of cause and effect is the foundational and elementary law of science in all aspects and phases. To produce any effect an adequate and corresponding cause must be found. The method by or according to which that result or effect is produced is recognized as the law or science of that particular specie of phenomena. Opinions and speculations contrary thereto are always rejected.

It is a matter of surprise, that men whose lives have been spent continually in investigating physical phenomena and endeavoring to discover the cause, and failing that, the method of its production daily treading the avenues of erudition offering to redundancy fruits and flowers of education and instruction, should have been blind so long to the fact, that not only are the phases of modern theology in many aspects in opposition to the revelations of God communicated to man, but are also outstanding anachronisms in this era of advanced scientific research. It is not to be wondered at that such men as Professor Hackel, Alfred Wallace, and many others, should be astonished, that compared with the astounding revelations and discoveries in physical, psychological, chemical, and mechanical sciences and their practical application to technical science, industry, and commerce, the affairs of sociology and ethical evolution are in a state of elementary crudity. They more or less emphatically ascribe this to the serious and disastrous errors of ecclesiastical polity and creed; "the irrational superstition that lays the foundation of a perverted Christianity."

It is useless to invite men acquainted with the law and method of God in the physical and metaphysical realms to take hold of, believe, and adhere to a religion that does violence to every known principle; to turn aside from a universe of law and order, cause and effect, and accept a realm of chance, necromancy, and chaos. Sincere belief, heroic faith in a wrong principle, can not convert the wrong into right; neither can the most implicit faith in a wrong method produce correct results. It is a primary law in all relations of life that in order to produce a right and proper result, there must be sincere and practical faith in a proper and correct method.

Yet while in temporal and commercial pursuits men fervently and religiously believe and practice this as far as possible, when they turn to religion and spiritual development; reason and common sense seemingly are abandoned and they enter into the region of esoteric occultism; leave science and enter into the tortuous labyrinths of human speculation.

Law, method, and rationalism have been excluded from religion for centuries; spiritual evolution has been regarded as phenomenal and casual, instead of a scientific result, the product of obedience to law. In the language of Henry Drummond, "While all natural phenomena has been brought and classified within the realm of law, religion has been the great exception." Here is the reason why men of culture and science have looked upon religion with doubt and suspicion. The "Reign of Law" has so widened, extended, and comprehended, that all is now within its influence and embrace. Why should religion be exempt?

If the startling and lucid statement of Knox Little had have been known and understood earlier, many doubtless would have been saved from the cold, icy embrace of infidelity, or the despairing doubts of agnosticism.

The question we ask with increasing curiosity is, "Will the masses profit by this simple, common-sense exposition of the situation?"

It cannot be regarded as a modern discovery, that spiritual phenomena was subject to law. Centuries ago David, in the rich eloquence of inspirational simplicity enunciated the fact that spiritual conversion came as the result of obedience to God's law; "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul,"—Psalms 19: 7

Can anything short of perfect method produce a perfect result? Could anything but a perfect method be introduced by God whose salient characteristics are perfect love, perfect wisdom, and perfect power? Can finite man even hope to prove a successful competitor with God in the production of a more perfect or efficient law, method, or process by which a perfect salvation is to be obtained? If not, then why jeopardize our eternal welfare by giving credence (whether resulting from sentiment or prejudice, no matter,) to a confessedly inferior and self-evidently imperfect method or law? No matter how sincerely we believe and conform to an imperfect method, only imperfect results would be acquired.

There can be no allowance, no acceptance of anything just as good. It must be the one perfect, God-given means, or the end can not be reached. There can be no toleration of the foolish, popular sentiment, "It does not matter what you believe, just so long as you are sincere." In the language of Canon Knox Little such a statement is "moonshine." Not only must there be the establishment of a perfect law or method, but there must be faith in that law, and also continuous obedience to its principles. Until the law is practiced it is simply the negative, but when joined or coöperated with the faith and obedience of a human soul as the positive, it becomes a power—the power of God; the result—salvation.

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1:25. Cause, method, and effect stand out marvelously conspicuous in this scripture.

Cause: Investigation, faith, and obedience.

Method: God's perfect law; that is, the gospel; doctrine of Christ.

Effect: Liberty, blessing, salvation.

"The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Romans 8:2. Could we have a clearer scientific exposition than the foregoing?

Instead of salvation being produced phenomenally, casually, esoterically, it comes scientifically, is casual and rational.

We earnestly indorse the sentiment of Canon Knox Little, and trust it is the harbinger of better times and deeper thought in religious concerns, and will assist in dispersing the clouds and mists of prejudice, that we may hail the dawning of a brighter day, luminous with the rays and beams of truth and life.

Not lightly, rashly would I speak,
Nor waste the words, though purpose weak,
But e'er sincerely would I say,
The truth I live from day to day.

Selected Poetry.

The following poem we clip from a paper that credits the poem to Sam Foss. It is well worth reading:

"The Calf Path."

One day through the primeval wood,
A calf walked home as good calves should:
But made a trail all bent askew,
A crooked trail as all calves do.
Since then two hundred years have fled,
And, I infer, the calf is dead.
But still he left behind his trail
And hereby hangs my mortal tale.
The trail was taken up next day
By a lone dog that passed that way.
And then a wise bell-weather sheep
Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep,
And drew the flock behind him too
As good bell-weather always do.
And from that day, o'er hill and glade,
Through those old woods a path was made.
And many men wound in and out
And dodged and turned and bent about,
And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path.
And still they followed, do not laugh,
The first migrations of that calf.
And through this winding woodway stalked
Because he wabbled when he walked.
This first path became a lane
That bent and turned and turned again;
This crooked lane became a road
Where many a poor horse with his load
Toiled on beneath the burning sun
And traveled some three miles in one.
And thus a century and a half
They trod the first steps of that calf.
The years passed on in swift fleet
The road became a village street.
And this before men were aware
A city's crowded thoroughfare.
And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf.
And o'er his crooked journey went
The traffic of a continent.
A hundred thousand men were led
By one calf near three centuries dead.
A moral lesson this might teach
Were I ordained or called to preach.
For men are prone to go it blind
Along the calf paths of the mind.
And work away from sun to sun
And do what other men have done.
They follow in the beaten track,
And out and in and forth and back,
And still their devious course pursue
To keep the path that others do.
But how wise the old wood-gods laugh
Who saw that first primeval calf.

Come, Play Me That Simple Air.

Come, play me that simple air again
I used so to love in life's young day,
And bring, if thou canst, the dreams that then
Were wakened by that sweet lay.

The tender gloom its strain
Shed o'er the heart and brow,
Grief's shadow, without its pain—
Say, where, where is it now?

Sweet air! how ev'ry note brings back
Some sunny hope, some day-dream bright,
That, shining o'er life's early track,
Filled even its tears with light.

The new found life that came,
With love's first echoed vow,
The fear, the bliss, the shame—
Say where, where are they now?

But sing me the well-known air once more,
For thoughts of youth still haunt its strain,
Like thoughts of some far fairy shore
We're never to see again.

Still, those loved notes prolong;
For sweet is that old lay,
In dreams of love and song,
To breathe life's love away.—Thomas Moore.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Prepared Reading for April Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

The following reading is prepared from Bulletin No. 112, United States Agricultural Department. Parts of it are quoted in the language of the Bulletin, while other parts are extracted from, or condensed to suit our purpose, namely, to set forth in as concise a manner as possible the value and necessity of good bread in our homes.

"There is hardly any food except milk which is so universally used as bread; and not only is it now used almost everywhere, but since history first began, it has in some form or other made one of the staples of diet among all but the most savage peoples.

"Except among the lowest savages and the extremest climates some kind of grain is recognized as necessary food, and bread furnishes it in one of its most convenient forms—that is, a form in which it yields the greatest amount of nourishment for the least labor and cost. No wonder then, that the more intelligent a people the better bread they make.

"The reason for this importance of bread is very simple. Ever since the far-off days when our forefathers first found the wild cereals, or began to cultivate them, men have known that food prepared from them would support life and strength better than any other single food except milk. The diet of the poor in India and China often consists almost entirely of wheat or millet cakes or rice, and although in our own land the ease with which we can get other foods, makes bread seem less important. There are still many districts in Europe where the people eat very little else. To a large part of mankind it is still the staff of life, and if they pray for their daily bread they mean it literally.

"In regard to its ingredients, bread is one of the simplest of our cooked foods, but in regard to the changes which the raw materials must undergo to produce a finished loaf, it is one of the most complicated. Flour, water, a pinch of salt, and a little yeast, are all that is necessary to make good bread. The principal steps in the process are as follows: Beginning back in the mill the grain is ground into powder, the coarse parts of which are sifted out as bran, while the finer constitute our flour. The baker mixes the flour with water and a little yeast or something which will produce the same effect. When the dough is put in a warm place the yeast begins to 'work' as we say, and the dough to rise; in other words, the yeast causes a change known as alcoholic fermentation to set in, one of the principal results of which is the production of carbon dioxide gas. If the dough is well mixed, this gas appears all through it, and expanding leavens or raises it. After the yeast has worked sufficiently the dough is shut up in a hot oven. Here the heat kills the yeast and prevents further alcoholic fermentation, causes the gas to expand and stretch open the little pockets which it forms between the particles of dough, and changes some of the water present into steam, thus raising the loaf still more during the process of baking.

"Flours, as every one knows, are made by grinding the grains of the various cereals, wheat, rye, barley, oats, maize, millet, rice, etc. Of these, wheat is the most important partly because it can be cultivated in any temperate climate, but chiefly, because it yields the flour best suited to bread making, the aim of which is to produce the most appetizing and nutritious loaf at the least expense.

"While the various cereals differ largely in their chemical composition most of them are very similar in the structure of their grains, so that if we study the formation and milling of wheat, we can easily understand the production of flour from others." "The wheat grain has six outer layers which are known to the miller as bran, the total weight of which is about thirteen per cent of the whole. Of these outer layers the first five contain very little except cellulose, a woody, fibrous substance forming the cell walls. When burned, the ash of bran is found to contain a fairly large proportion of phosphoric acid, potash, and small amounts of other mineral matters."

The cereal or innermost layer of the bran, is of all parts of the grain the richest in nitrogenous substances, the chief of which is the cerealine from which it takes its name. The endosperm or inner part of the grain contains, besides the cellulose of its wall-cells, large quantities of starch, a little sugar, and a nitrogenous substance known as gluten. The germ contains nitrogenous substances, sugar, and a very large proportion—nine to twelve per cent of fat.

"Different kinds of wheat, vary as to the amount and quality of the gluten they contain. As gluten is one of the most important constituents of the wheat, the baker should know the character of the gluten in the flour he uses. The so-called 'hard' wheats are rich in gluten of a strong, tenacious character, while the 'soft' wheats contain less gluten and proportionately more starch. The gluten of hard wheat can be mixed with large amounts of water, and produce a large loaf from a comparatively small quantity of flour. Soft wheat, on the other hand, while it does not yield so large a loaf, makes a bread containing less water, and having a milder and more agreeable flavor. It is useful for those interested in milling to know what parts of the grain will be most valuable in yielding a nutritious flour, capable of making a white, well-raised loaf. In considering the nutritive value of flour let us remember the principal kinds of nutrients which the body needs; first, the nitrogenous substances, called protein compounds, or proteids, typified by the white of egg and the lean of meat, and chiefly represented in the wheat by the cerealine and the gluten. These are the tissue-building materials of our food, though they also furnish energy; second, the carbohydrates, principally starch and sugars, found mainly in the endosperm and serving the body as fuel to produce energy for warmth and muscular work; third, the fats occurring principally in the germs of the grain and being valuable to the body as fuel, and fourth, mineral matters seen in the ash, especially that of the bran, and producing materials for the bones, teeth, etc. We must also bear in mind that it is not only the chemical composition of a substance, which determines its food value, but also the amount of nourishment which the digestive organs can extract from it—in other words its digestibility.”

The abundant cellulose and coloring matter of the bran, if left in the flour, as is the case in graham flour, tend to give it a coarse, dark character, very detrimental to the appearance of the bread. Accordingly, until recently, that flour was quite generally considered best which had the least of the bran in it. Lately, however, much stress has been laid on the nutritive value of the mineral matters of the creatin of the bran, and consequently a great effort has been made to get a fine flour which shall include the entire wheat grain. This effort has resulted in what is known as “entire-wheat flour,” and it differs from the graham flour in that the three outer layers of the bran are removed before grinding, while the supposedly valuable cereal layer is retained in the flour. Such flour can not produce as white a loaf as the fine flour, but that is of little consequence if it is as palatable and more nutritious, but its superior nutritive quality has not yet been proven by experimental tests and it is doubtful whether the cereal of the bran is thoroughly digested by the human stomach; moreover, the sharp, rough particles of the cellulose of the bran are said to irritate the membranes of the alimentary canal, and thus to hasten the passage of the food through the intestine. This would tend to diminish its digestibility, although it might be advantageous in counteracting a tendency to constipation. It would seem then that the value of the bran in flour, unless it can be ground more finely than at present, is at least questionable, and, although there are numerous persons who, judging from their own experience, think it the only fit bread for the human stomach, each one may be left to judge for himself, as in other cases of diet, which bread suits him best. The germ also, though rich in fat and ash, is of doubtful value to the flour, as it tends to darken the color, and its fat occasionally grows rancid and spoils the taste of the flour.

“The endosperm, or inner portion of the grain, is by far the most important contribution to the flour. In its starch lies the chief nutritive ingredient of bread. The gluten, as the principal nitrogenous constituent is called, is equally necessary, and as regards the claim that the bran containing flour furnishes valuable mineral matters and fats, it should be stated that as yet no experiments have been made to test the digestibility of the substances, and until that is done nothing positive can be said on either side. Too much stress should not be laid on the importance of the extra amount of phosphates and other ash constituents of the bran. Fine flours also contain these same constituents, and it is not unlikely that they are more available than in the bran if finely ground. These substances are of undoubted value, but there is little experimental data to show the amount of different ash constituents necessary for maintaining the body in health. It is doubtless safe to say that the ordinary mixed diet of children and adults furnishes abundance of mineral matter.”

Sister Walker: Permit me to say through the “Column” that we all were much cheered and entertained also on Saturday last with the generous handful of letters that came to us that morning, and thank the dear Saints in America for their kind remembrance of us. Yet am not able to answer only a very few at present. Conference and convention work is rushing us, more so on account of much that was prepared having been swept away with the sea at Hikuera.

This missionary house might well be called “The Hive,” all are so continuously busy. Occasionally some native brother or sister comes in and looks forlornly first at one and then another; but none cease their work to talk with them, as much as they desire, and after sitting awhile they quietly walk out again. And in a day, or perhaps a few hours, try it again with no better success. After conference we will give them and our correspondents more time and attention.

Our sacrament meetings have of late been seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Spirit of the Lord, in words of comfort and assurance, causing us to feel sensibly his mercy, and also his power to save in all parts of the world. A cheering thought indeed to the missionaries who must go forth in all nations in these times of trouble. Yet these are the times when the Saints of God are told to “lift up their heads and rejoice, for their redemption draweth near.”

We are thankful to say that all here at the missionary house are well, cheerful and hopeful, and trying to be faithful also; that we may be prepared to meet the sainted mother, and all who have passed on to the other shore and now bask in the light of their Redeemer.
